'10. Officers' Training.

That a two weeks' officers' training course for high school seniors be provided under the direction of the supervising military officer immediately preceding the opening of the schools in September.

'11. And be it further RESOLVED, that an appropriation of sixteen thousand five hundred dollars ($16,500) be and is hereby made to meet the expense to the board of education of the inauguration and installation of said course in military training.'

"On Monday, August 19, 1918, Resolution No. 7822, 'Adopting Official Uniform and Designating The Halle Bros. Company as the official uniform outfitters of this board,' was passed and adopted as follows:

'WHEREAS, in accordance with and by virtue of the authority given in Resolution No. 7693, bids from manufacturers for the furnishing of standard uniforms to pupils in the Cleveland High Schools, who are to take military training, were received under date of August 7, 1918, and,

'WHEREAS, the bid of The Halle Bros. Company, low bidder in accordance with the specifications is as follows:

Unit prices per uniform as provided in Item No. 5 (breeches and leggings)	$21 85
Unit price per uniform as provided in Item No. 6 (long trousers)	20 50
Unit price per coat	12 00
Unit price per breeches	7 50
Unit price per trousers	7 50
Unit price per cap	1 50
Unit price per leggings	1 40
Unit price per belt	45

now, therefore,

'Be it Resolved, by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland that the uniform described in Item No. 5 of the specifications, consisting of coat, breeches, cap, leggings and belt be, and the same is hereby adopted as the official uniform for the purpose above indicated, and, further,

'RESOLVED, that The Halle Bros. Company be, and is hereby designated as the official uniform outfitter until December 31, 1918, and, further,

'RESOLVED, that the clerk be instructed to notify The Halle Bros. Company accordingly.'

"On January 6, 1919, Resolution No. 9067, 'Continuing Military Training,' was passed and adopted as follows:

'WHEREAS, this board by Resolution No. 7596, adopted June 3, 1918, provided for military training for male pupils in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth years of the high schools, as an extension of the course in physical training, and

'WHEREAS, the signing of the armistice in the world war has raised a doubt in the minds of the public as to the permanency of military training in the Cleveland public schools; therefore be it

'RESOLVED, by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland, that military training be and is hereby declared to be a permanent part of the curriculum of the Cleveland high schools; and be it further

'RESOLVED, that said military training shall be conducted for pupils in the tenth, eleventh and twelfth years during the remainder of the present school year, in accordance with the provisions of said Resolution No. 7596, except that military training may also be taken voluntarily by male pupils in the ninth year, during the second semester of this school year; and that beginning with the school year 1919-20, in September next, military training shall be compulsory (save as exemptions may be made under paragraphs a, b and c, of Division 3 of said Resolution No. 7596) for all male pupils in the ninth, tenth and eleventh years, and shall be voluntary for all male pupils in the twelfth year.

'Submitted and approved by the Acting Superintendent of Schools.'

"Query: Can the board of education of the city of Cleveland require all male students of the ninth, tenth and eleventh years of the public schools of the city of Cleveland to provide for themselves uniform dress as prescribed by the board and designated in Item No. 5 of Resolution No. 7822, the same costing $21.85 for suit, unless exempted under paragraphs a, b and c of division 3 of said Resolution No. 7596, and if the pupils mentioned above fail or refuse to provide for themselves the prescribed uniform, can the board of education refuse to permit such pupils to participate in this military training and further refuse to grant them promotion because of such failure or refusal?"

In seeking further information upon this subject, the board of education of the city of Cleveland was communicated with, and the secretary to the Superintendent of Schools of that city furnishes the following statement:

> "At present about twenty-eight hundred pupils in the ten senior high schools of Cleveland are taking military training. These pupils are included in the 10th, 11th and 12th years of the classes of 1918-19, for whom military training is compulsory under the action of the board on Resolution No. 7596, and also some pupils in the 9th year who are permitted to take military training during the remainder of this school year under Resolution No. 9067. You will note that Resolution No. 9067 provides that with the beginning of the next school year military training will be compulsory for pupils in the 9th, 10th and 11th years, and will be optional with those in the 12th year. This training is made a part of the curriculum for the high schools, and is intended to supplement the regular physical training or to be correlated with it."

As this military instruction is based on physical training, the section of the statutes governing such training is here given and reads as follows:

> "Sec. 7721 G. C. Physical training shall be included in the branches regularly to be taught in public schools in city school districts, and in all educational institutions supported wholly or in part by money received from the state. Boards of education of city school districts, and boards of such educational institutions must make provisions in the schools and institutions under their jurisdiction for teaching physical training, and adopt such methods as will adapt it to the capacity of pupils in the various grades therein. Other boards may make such provisions. The curriculum in all normal schools of the state shall contain a regular course on physical education."

Any instruction in military training contemplated under Ohio law must come from the language of this section, for this is the only enactment on physical training. This section was passed and approved by the Governor on April 25, 1904, at a time when this country was at peace with the world and it has existed without change or amendment for fifteen years. It was passed at a time when gymnasiums and courses in manual training were being advocated and introduced, and it is clear that no thought of compulsory military training in the public schools was in the mind of the General Assembly at that time, nor has any law ever been passed since then, indicating that the law-making body of the state desired compulsory military training in the public schools for which they legislate.

The question before us is not upon the merits of military training, but simply the question as to whether under existing law in Ohio any board of education can do the following things:

1. Establish military training under section 7721 G. C. which covers physical training, or section 7649 G. C. which governs the course of study.
2. Make such military training compulsory on any pupil.
3. Make such military training a part of the "prescribed course" of study, which all pupils are required to take for promotion or graduation.
4. Require parents of pupils to make an oath of any kind as to their dictates of conscience.
5. Require the pupils to wear certain designated wearing apparel in order to avail themselves of the public school facilities.

6. Require the parent to make an expenditure of $21.85 to a certain firm for apparel for such pupil.

7. Limit the participation in a study in the curriculum to one sex, or part of the pupils.

8. Expend any school funds for rifles and ordnance under existing laws.

9. Expend $100 for each instructor's expenses in a military training camp away from the school.

10. Refuse a pupil any part of the physical training granted under section 7721 G. C. unless such pupil provides a suitable and specified uniform.

11. Refuse promotion or graduation to a pupil who fails to either provide certain dress or participate in military training.

As all male pupils in the high schools in question are required by the resolution of the board of education to take military training unless specially excused, or their parents take a certain oath as to conscience, it is entirely proper to examine the rules governing such military training and affecting in more or less degree the entire male student body.

A thorough examination of the printed "Regulations" of the Cleveland High School Cadets (which is the male student body, except those specially excused) shows the following drastic excerpts taken briefly from the fifty-one sections in such regulations:

"6. The board of education will provide the necessary blank forms for reports and records for each of said High School Cadet Companies.

13. Each cadet shall keep himself supplied with the regulation uniform which he must maintain in good order. During the school day he shall wear no other dress except by permission. * * *

17. The general standing of a cadet (pupil) shall be determined by combining the academic standing, the military standing and the deportment, the weight given each standing being as follows:

Academic—Fifty per cent.
Military—Thirty per cent.
Deportment—Twenty per cent.

18. * * * violations of these regulations committed by any cadet shall be triable by court martial * * * according to the nature of the offense. * * *

19. The organization, procedure and records of all court martial shall conform to those prescribed by the United States Army Regulations.

22. At the beginning of each semester each cadet shall receive a credit of one hundred merits. Any cadet who exhausts his full credit of merits during the semester, shall forfeit his half credit for the term. * * *

23. * * * It must be borne in mind that a demerit materially affects a cadet's standing in the school. * * *

24. No cadet shall address an officer or cadet who may have reported him for a delinquency on the subject of such report, unless specially authorized by the principal or commandant to do so, and no officer or cadet who has made a report against a cadet shall hold any conversation with him in regard to it unless by permission of the commanding officer.

31. * * * Any cadet who in concert with others under pretense of procuring redress of grievance adopts any measure, or signs any paper * * * or does anything to the prejudice * * * of military discipline * * * shall be dismissed or otherwise punished according to the nature of the offense.

43. No cadet should appear in uniform on the streets or in any public places with his hands in his pockets, nor should any uniformed cadet appear except in proper uniform. Never wear a mixed civilian and military dress or leave buttons unbuttoned.

51. * * * Ignorance of a regulation will not be accepted as an excuse for violation of the same."

The above are part of the regulations promulgated by the Superintendent of Schools, with the knowledge and consent of the Board of Education, as an extension of physical training under section 7721 G. C. and are in addition to the requirements of the three resolutions of the board of education heretofore quoted. Every male pupil in the high school of the city must be a cadet unless (1) he is physically unfit, (2) his parents have made an oath as to their belief, and (3) or specially excused by one person, the Superintendent of Schools. The natural result, where it is compulsory, is that those pupils who do not dress a certain way become marked by civilian attire, which indicates at once either physical defect, views of conscience, or special excuse, and there is attendant questioning and embarrassment not contemplated by the constitution or laws, in giving to every child equal opportunity for the mental education for which the public schools were established.

Pertinent parts of the Ohio Constitution are:

Article I, Sec. 4:

"* * * and the military shall be in strict subordination to the civil power."

Article I, Sec. 7:

"* * * nor shall any interferences with the rights of conscience be permitted. * * * Religion, morality and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws * * * to encourage schools and the means of instruction."

Article I, Section 11:

"* * * and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech. * * *"

Article I, Sec. 20:

"* * * and all powers, not herein delegated, remain with the people."

The General Code of Ohio has provided for the curriculum of high schools in the following language:

Section 7649:

"A high school is one of higher grade than an elementary school, in which instruction and training are given in approved courses in the history of the United States and other countries; composition, rhetoric, English and American literature; algebra and geometry; natural science, political or mental science, ancient or modern foreign languages, or both, commercial and industrial branches, or such of the branches named as the length of its curriculum makes possible. Also such other branches of higher grade than those to be taught in the elementary schools, with such advanced studies and advanced reviews of the common branches as the board of education directs."

Nothing in such section provides for military training as a branch in Ohio high schools.

The enactment of the board of education in question goes farther than many laws or ordinances subject to a referendum in that, among other things, it inaugurates a study not named in section 7649 G. C., it regulates mode of dress, its operation is limited to one sex, it demands an oath from parents over whom boards of education have no jurisdiction, it lays an additional tax on the parent who has already been assessed his school taxes by law, and abridges his right of contract in purchasing his son's wearing apparel for the public schools, when and wherever he chooses, rather than from one designated firm, called the "official outfitter."

In the case at hand the board of education put into force in its large geographical jurisdiction, by resolution, an enactment that was compulsory in its nature and effective upon passage, without warrant of law; and an ultra vires enactment that carried the penalty of a denial of promotion and proper rating in the public schools, unless it was complied with, including certain limited exceptions.

Military training in schools is a subject as large, or larger than physical training itself, for the former has been the subject of law by Congress, passed June 3, 1916, and creating voluntary courses of training in both colleges and high schools for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. But this is purely voluntary as to whether an institution or school unit shall avail itself of such act, in those states which have provided for it. On the other hand there has been no federal enactment on physical training, but the Regulations on Military Training, issued by the War Department following such act of June 3, 1916, make "3. Physical Drills" as but one out of twenty-one subjects in Military Training (Army General Order 49) and such "physical drills" shall be "calisthenics, bayonet practice and combat fencing." It would seem, therefore, that military training is a larger subject than "physical training" in public schools as contemplated in section 7721 G. C. Here the instructors were sent, at the school board's expense, to the number of ten or fifteen, to various military training camps to qualify them in teaching military training in the public schools on their return and as the Cadet Regulations say the "court martial shall be as prescribed by the United States Army Regulations," seemingly the military training contemplated would also follow army regulations, and if so, then these are the standard subjects:

1. Infantry Drill Regulations.
2. Manual of Interior Guard Duty.
3. Physical Drills (calisthenics).
4. Military Hygiene.
5. Military Policy.
6. Small-arms firing regulations.
7. Administration and Organization.
8. Map Reading.
9. Field Service Regulations.
10. Marches and Camps.
11. Signaling (semaphore and flag).

Can any one say that the legislature had in mind, when it passed Section 7721 G. C., the above subjects as "physical training," or did it mean the "physical culture" gotten in the gymnasium, as so many schools for fifteen years have interpreted it? Clearly they meant the latter and not military training.

Much can be said in favor of military training in public schools, but its merits or demerits is not the question before us; the question is whether, under existing Ohio law, a board of education can inaugurate any military training under the head of "physical training" mentioned in section 7721 G. C. While a board of education has broad powers in its management of the public schools under its control, it cannot go beyond those things contemplated by the legislature and until further legislation is had on the subject, a board of education has no authority to establish military training in the public schools (Sec. 7649 G. C.) or compel its student body to dress in a certain manner during school hours, with the attendant expense on the parent. The public schools of the state are intended to be free in the fullest sense of the word; they are civil institutions and not military, and will always remain so, the state, while granting wide powers to charter cities in other matters, has ever kept control of the public school system and all boards of education are operating under the laws of the state, and a board of education that spends school funds for a course in military training, does so without authority under existing law, and against the prohibition in section 7649 G. C.

A board of education cannot add to its study curriculum a branch for which there is no warrant of law, and then compel pupils to take such branch; neither can it deny physical training privileges established under section 7721 G. C. to any pupils who fail to buy a certain uniform; nor can failure to take military training by any pupil be made to militate against his general standing in the public school as regards promotion. There is no authority for a board of education to establish military training under section 7721 G. C., as "physical training" and expend money therefor from their own funds, or compel parents to buy uniforms for pupils, and the branches taught in Ohio high schools under section 7649 G. C. do not include military training.

Under existing state law a board of education cannot include military training in its course of study and compel students to furnish uniforms, the penalty for failure to do so being a loss of standing for promotion in the school. And before boards of education in Ohio have power to establish such military training or expend money for rifles and ordnance, there must be further legislation on the subject. The subject is larger than the "physical training" contemplated in section 7721 G. C., which section also means that the "physical training" open to one pupil shall be open to every other pupil; instructors in physical training can be paid for such training under section 7721 G. C. and their salaries increased during employment, but a board cannot expend money from school funds to send them away to be further educated any more than they could send the music teacher to a conservatory at public expense.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney General that:

1. Boards of education cannot establish military training in public schools under section 7721 G. C. of existing law.
2. All courses of study in high schools shall be in compliance with section 7649 G. C.
3. A pupil cannot be discriminated against in his general standing in school because he does not join a military unit in such school.
4. There is no provision in law for a board of education to purchase military ordnance or pay expenses of physical training teachers at a military camp.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO JOIN WITH MUNICIPALITY FOR IMPROVEMENT OF STREET FORMING NO PART OF STATE OR COUNTY HIGHWAY.

Section 6949 G. C. does not authorize county commissioners to undertake the improvement, or to join with a municipality in undertaking the improvement of a municipal street forming no part of a state or county highway.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1919.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication submitting for opinion an inquiry which may be summarized as follows:

> The board of county commissioners of Jefferson county has been requested to undertake the improvement of a part of Adams street within the city of Steubenville. Such section of street, which for convenience may be referred to as the newer part of Adams street, was laid out and dedicated to the city in 1890, as shown by plat of an addition accepted by ordinance of council passed in that year a highway known as Inter-County Highway No. 7 leading from Bridgeport to Wellsville enters and leaves Steubenville on Third street, while another highway known as Inter-County Highway No. 26 enters the city on Market street. The older section of Adams street intersects Third street at right angles; but neither the older or newer part of Adams street intersects Market street or Inter-County Highway No. 26, Adams street, speaking generally, being parallel to Market street and connected with the latter street by cross streets, among which is Lawson avenue. The particular part of Adams street which it is now sought to have improved leads from what is known as the old city property up the side of a hill to more recent additions.
> The question is whether the county commissioners may legally undertake the improvement of such part of Adams street, or enter into an agreement with the city to make the improvement in conjunction with the city.

With your inquiry you submit a plat of the city of Steubenville showing in detail the location of Adams street.

The particular statute involved in a consideration of your inquiry is section 6949 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners may construct a proposed road improvement into, within or through a municipality, when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said council. If no part of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement is assumed by the municipality, no action on the part of the municipality, other than the giving of the consent above referred to, shall be necessary; and in such event all other proceedings in connection with said improvement shall be conducted in the same manner as though the improvement were situated wholly without a municipality." (107 O. L. 107)

Previous to its amendment as appearing in 107 Ohio Laws said section 6949 did not contain the word "within," the earlier form of the statute reading simply that the board of commissioners "may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality," etc. As it stood in this earlier form, the section was passed upon by this department in an opinion appearing in Volume I, at page 313, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, wherein it was held in substance, as shown by the head-note:

"The county commissioners and the council of a municipality are not authorized to co-operate in the improvement of a part of the inter-county highway system of the state, where the part to be improved lies entirely within the limits of the municipality."

The situation dealt with in the opinion just referred to was that an inter-county highway had been constructed to the corporation line on both sides of a village, leaving a gap in the improvement. It was noted in the opinion that the legislature evidently did not consider that the county commissioners had authority to construct a road improvement lying wholly within the corporate limits of a village, even though such proposed improvement might form part of a continuous inter-county highway improvement, and that the seeming purpose of the amendment then under consideration by the legislature and afterwards appearing in 107 Ohio Laws was to meet the very situation discussed in the opinion.

In considering the effect of this amendment, we must bear in mind that while the word "road" as a generic term is no doubt broad enough to include "street," yet our legislature has for many years past made use of the word "road" in dealing with improvements outside of municipalities and the word "street" in dealing with improvements within municipalities. In fact, as a matter of common usage, the word "street" is understood as referring particularly to public ways within municipalities and the word "road" to like ways outside of municipalities. Hence, we find in the series of statutes providing for improvements by county commissioners (sections 6906 to 6953 G. C.) that the word "road" is used to the exclusion of the word "street" except in section 6952, hereinafter referred to.

It is therefore quite evident that the legislative intent in amending section 6949 was not to confer general power on the commissioners to improve any street within a municipality, but merely to give them power to enter a municipality with the consent of the council thereof for the purpose of such road improvement as might be necessary to connect or complete county or state road improvements. In section 6949 the terms "into, within or through" are used conjunctively, and in that sense are certainly plainly to the effect that the proposed road improvement must be such an improvement as the commissioners are authorized generally to construct, special power being conferred in certain necessary instances to conduct the improvement into, within or through the municipality. Further support for this construction, if any is needed, may be found in the last sentence of section 6952, reading as follows:

"The word 'road,' as used in sections 6906 to 6953 inclusive of the General Code, shall be construed to include any state or county road or roads, or any part thereof, or any state or county road or roads, and any city or village street or streets, or any part thereof, which form a continuous road improvement."

This sentence means that sections 6906 to 6953 are to be give a broad enough meaning to include either a state or county road or roads, or part thereof, which form a continuous road improvement; or a state or county road or roads, and a city or village street or streets, or any part thereof, which form a continuous road improvement.

It is hardly necessary to add that in our municipal code we have very comprehensive provisions for the improvement of municipal streets by the municipality itself. Certainly the provisions of section 6949 are to be treated as exceptions to the general rule that the municipality shall have charge of improvements within its limits, rather than as conferring any general power on the commissioners to take up the improvement of streets within a municipality not connected with state or county highway improvements.

This construction of the law, of course, leads to a negative answer to your question, unless it appears that the part of Adams street proposed to be improved is part of a state or county highway improvement. The facts show that not even from the broadest viewpoint may said section of street be so considered; for even if Adams street were improved for its entire length from Third street to Lawson avenue, and then Lawson avenue improved from Adams street to Market street, the result would be simply an additional connecting link of improved road between Third street and Market street; because, as above noted, Market street intersects Third street and hence there is formed a direct connection between Inter-County Highway No. 26 and Inter-County Highway No. 7.

You are therefore advised in answer to your inquiry that the commissioners are without power either to undertake the improvement or to enter into an agreement with the city to make the improvement in conjunction with the city.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY—HOW MEMBER OF BOARD APPOINTED—SEE ALSO OPINION NO. 417, DATED JUNE 20, 1919.

Under section 1296 G. C., it is not necessary that an appointment by the governor of a member of the state board of pharmacy be confirmed by the senate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 16, 1919.

State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "Under section 1296 of the General Code is it necessary that an appointment to the state board of pharmacy be confirmed by the Senate?"

Section 27, Article II, section 21, Article IV and section 2, Article VII of the constitution of Ohio and section 1296 G. C. are pertinent. In part, section 27, Article II, supra, provides:

> "The election and appointment of all officers, and the filling of all vacancies, not otherwise provided for by this constitution, * * *, shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law; * * *."

It is to be noted that the appointment of officers, except as otherwise provided by the constitution, shall be made according to law.

Section 21, Article IV of the constitution provided for the appointment of a supreme court commission, which appointment was to be made by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate.

Section 2, Article VII, is in part as follows:

"The directors of the penitentiary shall be appointed or elected in such manner as the General Assembly may direct; and the trustees of the benevolent, and other state institutions, * * *, shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate; * * *."

The last two quoted sections of the constitution are the appointments referred to in section 27, Article II, supra, as being "otherwise provided for by this constitution," and there is no other or further provision in the constitution for the confirmation of the appointment of a member of the state board of pharmacy, for it must be at once apparent that such board is not a state institution within the contemplation of section 2, Article VII, and the solution of your question lies in consideration of the manner of appointment as provided by law.

A brief history of what is now section 1296 G .C. is as follows: The original act regulating pharmacy applied only to Cincinnati and was passed in 1870 (70 O. L. 287). This law was amended by the creation of city boards of pharmacy in 1873 (72 O. L. 16).

The original act creating the state board of pharmacy was passed in 1884 and is found in 81 O. L. 62. This act provided for the appointment of a state board of pharmacy by the governor, with the consent and approval of the senate, and provided that each year thereafter the governor should appoint one member with the consent of the senate.

In 1898 (93 O. L. 181), this law was amended and that part which related to the annual appointments was changed by the omission of that part of the statute which provided for the senatorial confirmation and that is the form in which it remained after further amendments in 1908 (99 O .L. 503).

It is to be noted that after its amendment and in its present form, section 1296 G. C., relating to the annual appointments to such board, provides:

"* * * The Ohio state pharmaceutical association may annually submit to the governor the names of five registered pharmacists, and from the names so submitted or from others, at his discretion, the governor each year shall appoint one member of the board for a term of five years and until his successor is appointed and qualified."

To give meaning and purpose to the act of the General Assembly in omitting the requirement of consent and approval of the senate in the amendment of 1898, no other conclusion can be reached except that the method of the appointment to such board was intended to be changed by that amendment, and from this it follows that the opinion of this department is that confirmation by the senate is not necessary to the valid appointment by the governor of a member of the state board of pharmacy.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—ACTIONS UNDER SECTION 2667 G. C. TO ENFORCE LIENS OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS AGAINST REAL ESTATE BY COUNTY TREASURER—PROCEEDS OF SALE HOW DISTRIBUTED—LANDS SOLD FOR AMOUNT NOT SUFFICIENT TO PAY COSTS, TAXES, ASSESSMENTS, ETC.

1. In an action under section 2667 G. C., by the county treasurer, to enforce liens of taxes and assessments against real estate, the proceeds of the sale thereof should be distributed in the following manner:

(a) To the payment of costs.

(b) To the payment of the state's claim for all the taxes (including penalties and interest) which have become a lien on the property.

(c) To the payment of special assessments, in the order in which the liens therefor attached.

No part of the taxes should be subordinate to assessments, although the lien of the latter may have attached before that of the former.

2. In the event that said lands or lots or parcels thereof are not sold for enough to pay the costs, taxes, interest, assessments and penalties, in full, the entry confirming the sale may direct the county treasurer to apply the amount received to the various liens according to the priority thereof and then to clear his duplicate of any deficiency remaining charged against said lands or lots or parcels thereof so sold. Such entry should further contain the recital that the purchaser is subrogated to all the rights of the state, and that the orders, findings and judgments therein are made without prejudice to the right of the treasurer to proceed against any party personally liable for any of such assessments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1919.

HON. MILO L. MYERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You advise that you have some foreclosure suits pending in your court of common pleas, under section 2667 G. C., and that in some of these cases you have had the real estate advertised and sold, but have not had the sales confirmed, and request my opinion on the following questions:

> "First. In the event that said lands or lots or parcels thereof are not sold for enough to pay the costs of sale, taxes, assessments and penalties thereon in full, how should the balance from the proceeds of said sale, after paying costs as provided in section 2670, be applied as to priority of claims, that is, taxes, assessments, penalties, etc., and should the date of the lien for taxes levied and assessment made be taken in consideration?
> Second. In the event that said lands or lots or parcels thereof are not sold for enough to pay the costs of sale, taxes, assessments and penalties in full, or any of said items in full, would it be proper to contain in the journal entry confirming the sale an order directing the county treasurer to apply the amount received to the various liens as to priority thereof and then balance and clear his duplicate of any deficiency remaining thereon charged against said lands or lots or parcels thereof so sold, and if not, state what procedure to follow so that duplicates may be cleared and started anew?"

Section 2670 G. C. is in part as follows:

"Judgment shall be rendered for such taxes and assessments, or any part thereof, as are found due and unpaid, and for penalty and costs, for the payment of which the court shall order such premises to be sold without appraisement. From the proceeds of the sale the costs shall be first paid, next the judgment for taxes and assessments, and the balance shall be distributed according to law. * * *"

The same language appears in 107 O. L. 738 (Sec. 16). Section 10 of this act is as follows:

"The state shall have a first and best lien on the premises described in said certification, for the amount of taxes, assessments and penalty, together with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, from the date of delinquency to the date or redemption thereof, and the additional charge of twenty-five cents for the making of said certification, and sixty cents for advertising. If the taxes have not been paid for four consecutive years, the state shall have the right to institute foreclosure proceedings thereon, in the same manner as is now or hereafter may be provided by law, for foreclosure of mortgages on land in this state, and there shall be taxed by the court as costs in the foreclosure proceedings instituted on said certification, the cost of an abstract or certificate of title to the property described in said certification, if the same be required by the court, to be paid into the general fund of the county treasurer."

As the statute plainly states and your questions suggest, the costs are to be first paid from the fund realized from the sale.

The syllabus of the case of Security Trust Co. vs. Root, 72 O. S. 535, is in part as follows:

"By virtue of section 2838 R. S. the lien of the state for taxes is paramount to all other liens. * * *"

In Treasurer of Athens County vs. Dale, Rec'r, 60 O. S. 180, where the receiver of a railroad questioned the priority of the state's claim for taxes, it was said by the court (p. 186):

"The right of the state to the receipt of its taxes is paramount to that of all others; without the protection of the state and its laws, the road could not be run and operated, and the property would be of little, if any value; so that it is apparently of as much importance to the road, that the taxes due the state, on which all rights of property depend, should be paid without delay, as that wages, salaries and other expenses of running and operating it, should be paid."

In McCollum vs. Uhl, 27 N. E. 152, the Supreme Court of Indiana said:

> "The lien of the state for taxes is paramount, and is superior to the lien of the ditch assessment."

Section 5671 G. C. provides that the lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes in each year shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, and continue until such taxes, with any penalties accruing thereon, are paid.

The statutes providing for the collection of assessments begin with section 3892 G. C., which is as follows:

> "When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

Section 3897 G. C. provides that special assessments shall be a lien, from the date of the assessment, upon the respective lots or parcels of land assessed.

Section 3898 G. C. provides for the collection of assessments, with a penalty of five per cent., in suit, before a justice of the peace or other court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the corporation, against the owner or owners.

Section 3906 G. C. is also pertinent and its language is as follows:

> "Sec. 3906. The lien of an assessment shall continue two years from the time it is payable, and no longer, unless the corporation, before the expiration of the time, causes it to be certified to the auditor of the proper county, for entry upon the tax-list for collection, or causes the proper action to be commenced in a court having jurisdiction thereof, to enforce such lien against such lots or lands, in which case the lien shall continue in force so long as the assessment remains on the tax list uncollected or so long as the action is pending, and any judgment obtained, under and by virtue thereof, remains in force and unsatisfied."

In Central Ohio R. R. Co., et al., vs. City of Bellaire, 67 O. S. 297, it is said in the syllabus:

> "After an assessment for a street improvement has been certified to the county auditor and placed on the tax list as provided in section 2295, Revised Statutes, the right of action for the collection of such assessment rests alone in the county treasurer."

Burket, C. J., speaking for the court, said (p. 301):

> "So that when this action was begun by the city it had no lien to enforce, and had no right of action for the collection of the assessment by judgment and execution, that right, if it existed at all, being vested in the county treasurer from and after the time said assessment was so certified to the county auditor.

It is therefore clear that the city of Bellaire had no cause of action against said defendants below and that the first ground of demurrer should have been sustained."

I have directed attention to sections 3897 and 3898 G. C. and to the case of Central Ohio R. R. Co., et al., vs. City of Bellaire, supra, because they afford some inference that there might be a claim maintained against the parties who were the owners of the property at the time the special assessments were levied, and I think it wise, therefore, in the disposition of these cases, not to foreclose that right if any exists, although that question has not been submitted to me.

So far as the priority of assessments is concerned, the rule seems to be that, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, liens therefor take precedence in order of the times of the levying of the assessments. See note to Baldwin vs. Morency, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 767.

Answering your first question, then, it is my opinion that after payment of costs the state's claim for all the taxes (including penalty and interest) which have become a lien on the property in question should next be satisfied, and then the balance should be credited on the assessments, in the order of their priority. No part of the taxes should be subordinate to assessments, although the lien of the latter may have attached before that of the former.

You do not call attention to any other incumbrance upon the property and I presume there are no questions presenting any such difficulty in these cases.

Section 2667 G. C., which authorizes the foreclosure of tax and assessment liens, provides that this shall be done "in the same way mortgage liens are enforced."

Clearly then, under this statute and on general propositions of equity, the purchaser takes the title free of the state's claim and is subrogated to its rights. There would seem to be no good reason why the common pleas court should not in its entry of confirmation direct the treasurer to clear his duplicate of any deficiency, as you suggest. But to save any possible claim of a personal nature, which might be asserted against any owner of the property at the time any assessment was levied, I would further advise that this entry not only contain the recital that the purchaser is subrogated to the rights of the state, but also that the orders, findings and judgments in such entry of confirmation are made without prejudice to the right of the treasurer to proceed against any party personally liable for any of these assessments.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—FEMALE MINOR CHILD UNDER AGE OF TEN YEARS CANNOT LEGALLY BE COMMITTED TO GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL —SECTIONS 1652 AND 1352-5 G. C., PROVIDE HOW DISPOSITION IS TO BE MADE.

(1) Because of the age limitation imposed by section 1653-1 G. C., a delinquent female minor child under the age of ten years cannot legally be committed to the Girls Industrial School by the probate court, in the exercise of its juvenile jurisdiction.

(2) Disposition of such a child should be made in one of the ways provided by sections 1652 and 1352-5 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1919.

HON. FLOYD E. STINE, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of your letter of May 29th, reading as follows:

> "Will you kindly advise me whether or not a delinquent female minor child under the age of ten years, to-wit, nine years of age, can be sent by the probate court to the Girls' Industrial School, and if not, what disposition the court should make of her?
> Under the sections relative to the juvenile court, the court seems to have jurisdiction over delinquent children; the term delinquent child including any child under the age of eighteen years, there being no minimum age limit stated, although section 1653-1 provides that no child under ten years of age shall be committed to the Girls' Industrial Home."

Section 1642 G. C. provides, in substance, that a probate court, when the judge thereof has been designated under section 1639 G. C. to exercise the powers of a juvenile court, "shall have jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years." As your letter states, no minimum age limit is prescribed, in so far as the jurisdiction of the juvenile court over a minor under eighteen years of age is concerned.

Section 1653-1 G. C., to which you refer, is the only section of the juvenile act which imposes a minimum age limit as to persons committed thereunder. This section reads as follows:

> "Section 1653-1. The provisions of section 1652 shall not apply to the girls' industrial school, or the boys' industrial school, so far as the same allows the commitment of a child under ten years or over eighteen years of age to such institution. In no case shall a child found to be a dependent or neglected child be committed to such institution, nor shall any child under ten years or over eighteen years of age, be committed to such schools except as provided in section 2111 of the General Code."

Section 2111 G. C., reads thus:

> "A girl under the age of eighteen years sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary, county jail or other penal institution, at any time after such sentence and before the expiration thereof, may be transferred to the girls' industrial school, on the written order of the Ohio board of administration, to serve the unexpired part of the sentence. Such transfer shall be made, if it shall be made to appear that it will be conducive to her reformation, and not prejudicial to the school. The chief matron of the school shall receive such girl so transferred, and if she finds at any time that the best interest of the school requires a return of such girl to the penal institution from which she came, she may so recommend to the board, which is empowered to order the return of such girl."

The language of section 1653-1 G. C., is plain and unambiguous and clearly prohibits the commitment of a girl under ten years of age to the girls' industrial school.

Under the provisions of section 1652 G. C., disposition may be made of a delinquent child under ten years of age, in any of the following ways:

(1) The judge may continue the case and commit the child to the care or custody of a probation officer, allowing such child to remain at its own home subject to the visitation of the probation officer, or otherwise, as the court may direct; or

(2) The judge may place the child in a suitable family home, subject to the supervision of the probation officer and the further order of the judge; or

(3) The judge may authorize the child to be boarded in some suitable family home in case provision be made by voluntary contribution, or otherwise, for the payment of the board of such child until suitable provision be made for it in a home without such payment; or

(4) The judge may commit the child to any institution within the county that may care for delinquent children, or be provided by a city or county suitable for the care of such children; or

(5) The judge may commit the child to the care and custody of an association that will receive it, if such association is approved by the board of state charities as provided by law.

Attention is also directed to section 1352-5 G. C., which says:

"The board of state charities may when willing to do so, receive as its wards with all the powers given it by section 1352-3 of the General Code delinquent children committed to it by a juvenile court or from any institution to which such children may be committed by the juvenile court or assigned by the board of administration. Such children shall be placed by it in homes in accordance with the provisions of section 1352-3 of the General Code. Before making such commitment the court may make an order that the parent or parents of such child shall pay the board of state charities, periodically, reasonable sums for the maintenance of such child which orders upon the disobedience thereof, may be enforced by attachment as for contempt. The money so obtained shall be used for payment of such child's board and maintenance. If originally committed to such institution by the juvenile court, that court must first consent to the transfer of such child to the board of state charities. Said court may in such cases make an order that the parents or guardians pay for its maintenance in the same manner as if such child had been originally committed to said board.

Provided that if the board of state charties find it impracticable to so place such child, it shall at its discretion have the right to surrender such child to the court, institution, or board of administration from which it was received."

Replying directly to your question, I am of the opinion that a delinquent female minor child under the age of ten years can not legally be committed by the probate court, in the exercise of its juvenile jurisdiction, to the girls' industrial school, and that disposition of such child should be made in one of the ways provided by sections 1652 and 1352-5 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY—OPINION NO. 398 AS TO APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS TO SAID BOARD MODIFIED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1919.

State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Referring to Opinion No. 398, bearing upon the question of the necessity for the confirmation by the senate of the annual appointments as members of the State Board of Pharmacy, permit me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, containing supplementary information and which letter is as follows:

"Supplementary to the facts stated in the recent request of the State Board of Pharmacy for your opinion as to the necessity of confirmation by the senate of annual appointment of members of such State Board of Pharmacy, I desire to furnish you with these additional facts:

1. Since the amendment in 1898 (93 O. L. 181), by which that part of the original section was changed by the omission of the specific provisions for senatorial confirmation of the annual appointments, the legislative practice has been that each annual appointment of members of the State Board of Pharmacy has been confirmed by the Senate.

2. On June 19, 1919, relative to the appointment of Mr. F. D. Christian as a member of the State Board of Pharmacy, the following proceedings were had, namely, that the senate standing committee on rules made the following report:

'The committee recommends that the senate do advise and consent to the following appointment: F. D. Christian, Shelby county, State Board of Pharmacy, for the term ending March 31, 1922.

F. E. WHITTEMORE,
M. B. ARCHER,
FRANK C. PARRETT.

Upon vote, the senate advised and consented to the appointment of the governor by a vote of twenty-four (24) to nine (9).

W. E. HALLEY,
Clerk.'

Believing that this information may be considered necessary to the proper solution of the question involved in that request, it is therefore submitted at this time."

Opinion No. 398 was based on the theory that section 1296 G. C. is ambiguous and that in order to ascertain its real meaning in relation to the point in controversy it was necessary to look to the history of the evolution of the law, and from that history it was gathered that it was the intention of the General Assembly to take from the senate the power of confirmation of the annual appointees of the Governor on the State Board of Pharmacy.

In searching for the intent and purpose of an ambiguous law, it is necessary to look not only to all laws relating to and bearing upon the one in question, but to the course pursued by officials charged with the construction and administration of the act itself.

The information contained in your supplementary letter shows that there has been impressed on section 1296 not only an administrative construction by one of the coordinate bodies which enacted it, but a long-continued acquiescence by the legislative and executive departments in the custom of senatorial confirmation of such appointments, as is evidenced by the uniform practice of confirming such appointees, notwithstanding the amendment of 1898 referred to in the opinion. The latest expression of such acquiescence and construction occurred yesterday in the action of the senate in confirming the appointment of F. D. Christian as a member of the State Board of Pharmacy for the term ending, as stated in your letter, March 31, 1922.

Therefore, in view of the supplementsl information furnished in your letter of this date, and in order that he work of your board may not be interfered with, it is the opinion of this office that the conclusion reached in Opinion No. 398 should be modified, and that unless a contrary holding is made by a court of proper jurisdiction in the meantime, the appointment of Mr. Frank Trentman should be regarded as incomplete until it is confirmed by the senate.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHING OF GERMAN LANGUAGE IN SCHOOLS—CONSTRUCTION OF SENATE BILL No. 137—NO PROVISION PROHIBITING CATECHETICAL INSTRUCTION IN SUCH LANGUAGE IN SUNDAY SCHOOLS—SUMMER SCHOOL GOVERNED BY SAME LAWS AS SCHOOL WITH REGULAR TERM—GERMAN LANGUAGE SHALL NOT BE TAUGHT BELOW EIGHTH GRADE IN ANY SCHOOL.

1. Sections 7762-1 and 7762-2 of the General Code, which become effective in September, 1919, contain no provisions which prohibit catechetical instructions in the German language in Sunday Schools conducted by religious denominations.

2. A summer school which is held when another term of school is not in session is governed by the same laws which govern the regular term or session of school.

3. The German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools, private or parochial schools, or schools maintained in connection with benevolent or correctional institutions in this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

HON. VICTOR L. MANSFIELD, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion of the Attorney-General upon senate bill No. 137, known as the Ake bill, and which was signed by the governor June 5th and will be effective in approximately ninety days thereafter.

You ask that the following two questions be answered:

"1. Whether or not said bill prohibits the giving of catechetical instructions in Sunday School on Sunday in the German language?

2. Whether in summer school, which is held when other school is not in session, catechetical instruction may be given in the German language, and the German language taught together with the English language? All other subjects are taught in the English language."

The act in question (amended senate bill 137), reads as follows:

"AN ACT.

To supplement section 7762 of the General Code, by the addition of supplemental sections to be known as sections 7762-1, 7762-2, 7762-3 and 7762-4, and to repeal section 7729, concerning elementary, private and parochial schools and providing that instruction shall be in the English language.

BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO:

Section 1. That section 7762 be supplemented by sections 7762-1, 7762-2, 7762-3 and 7762-4 to read as follows:

Section 7762-1. That all subjects and branches taught in the elementary schools of the state of Ohio below the eighth grade shall be taught in the English language only. The board of education, trustees, directors and such other officers as may be in control, shall cause to be taught in the elementary schools all the branches named in section 7648 of the General Code. Provided, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools of this state.

Section 7762-2. All private and parochial schools and all schools maintained in connection with benevolent and correctional institutions within this state which instruct pupils who have not completed a course of study equivalent to that prescribed for the first seven grades of the elementary schools of this state, shall be taught in the English language only, and the person or persons, trustees or officers in control shall cause to be taught in them such branches of learning as prescribed in section 7648 of the General Code or such as the advancement of pupils may require, and the persons or officers in control direct; provided, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any such schools within this state.

Section 7762-3. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined in any sum not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, and each separate day in which such act shall be violated shall constitute a separate offense."

This act repeals section 7729 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

"Boards of education may provide for the teaching in the German language in the elementary and high schools of the district over which they have control, but it shall only be taught in addition, and as auxiliary to, the English language. All the common branches in the public schools must be taught in the English language."

A careful reading of section 7762-1, 7762-2 and 7762-3 G. C., which sections constitute the important parts of the new law, indicates that the measure is for the government primarily of those schools within the state of Ohio below the 8th grade, and provides that all subjects and branches taught therein must be in the English language only, and further, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools of the state.

There is no reference made whatever to any instructions that may be given in Sunday Schools by any religious congregation on that day, for section 7762-2 provides that all private and parochial schools and all schools maintained in connection with benevolent and correctional institutions, shall be taught in the English language only and clearly a Sunday School would not come within the scope of section 7762-2 G. C.

The act in question is in a measure for the government of schools in which children receive instruction in the branches named in section 7648 G. C. and cannot be construed as having any reference to church or religious proceedings that are not directly connected with such private or parochial school mentioned in section 7762-2 G. C.

Bearing upon your second question, as to whether catechetical instruction may be given in the German language and the German language taught together with the English language in a summer school, it is advised that if such summer school is under the control of a board of education, then such summer schools must be conducted under the same laws as the regular so-called winter term of school and there can be no deviation because it is a summer school; and if such summer school were conducted as a private or parochial school, and had as its pupils those below the eighth grade, and who had not completed a course of study equivalent to that prescribed for the first seven grades of the elementary schools of the state, such summer school shall be taught in the English language only and the branches shall be those mentioned in section 7648 of the General Code, or such as the advancement of the pupils may require, and the persons or officers in control may direct.

It is noted that both sections 7762-1 and 7762-2 end with the same sentence, providing that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools, or private or parochial schools, of the state.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that sections 7762-1 and 7762-2 of the General Code, which become effective in September, 1919, contain no provisions which prohibit catechetical instructions in the German language in Sunday Schools conducted by religious denominations; that a summer school which is held when another term of school is not in session is governed by the same laws which govern the regular term of session of school; and, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools, private or parochial schools, or schools maintained in connection with benevolent or correctional institutions in this state.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

COURT HOUSE—BUILDING COMMISSION—HAS AUTHORITY UNDER SECTION 2335 G. C. TO EMPLOY NECESSARY CLERICAL HELP—LIMITATION OF SECTION 2339 G. C. AS TO EMPLOYEES DISCUSSED—COUNTY AUDITOR KEEPS RECORDS OF SAID COMMISSION—DEPUTY AUDITOR AND CLERK OF BUILDING COMMISSION NOT INCOMPATIBLE.

1. The authority conferred upon the building commission by section 2339 G. C. to employ "other necessary employes" is limited to such employes as are necessary in and about the work of erecting the court house or other building under course of construction and does not include clerical and office help.

2. The building commission is warranted by section 2335 G. C. in employing clerical help necessary in conducting its correspondence. The amount of such help will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

3. The duty of keeping the records of the proceedings of the building commission, and of preserving plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of costs pertaining to the building commission, is imposed upon the county auditor by section 2342 G. C., and not upon the building commission, and the auditor is authorized by section 2563 G. C. to appoint a deputy to aid him in the performance of such duty.

4. There is no incompatibility between the duties of a deputy auditor and of a correspondence clerk employed by the building commission under section 2335 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date making certain inquiries concerning the powers of a building commission created under authority of section 2333 et seq. G. C. for the purpose of erecting a court house or other county building, was duly received.

(1) The only clear express authority of the building commission to employ is conferred by section 2339 G. C. which provides that > "the commission may employ architects, superintendents and other necessary employes during such construction and fix their compensation and bond."

The general words "other necessary employes," as used in the foregoing section, are restricted in meaning under the well known ejusdem generis rule of construction to such employes as may be engaged in or about the work of erecting the court house or other county building under course of construction, and do not include clerical and office help.

(2) Implied authority to employ clerical help necessary to enable the commission to conduct its correspondence, is conferred by section 2335 G. C., which provides that:

> "The necessary expenses for stationery, postage, correspondence and travel out of the county required in the discharge of the duties of the commission shall be paid from the county treasury on the order of the county commissioners and the warrant of the auditor."

The amount of such help will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

(3) The duty of keeping full and accurate records of the proceedings of the commission is imposed upon the county auditor, and not upon the commission. See section 2342 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Full and accurate records of all proceedings of the commission shall be kept by the county auditor upon the journal of the county commissioners. He shall carefully preserve in his office all plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of costs in detail and in the aggregate pertaining to the building."

In State vs. Edmondson, 12 N. P. (n. s.) 577, the Hamilton county common pleas court was called upon to construe certain sections of the building commission law, and also certain other statutes applicable to the county auditor and county commissioners, and one of the conclusions reached by the court was stated as follows:

> "The legislature therefore provided that the auditor should act as recording officer of the building commission. For these additional duties he can adequately provide by the appointment, if necessary, of a deputy under section 2563. The recording officer of the building commission is therefore the county auditor, or a deputy appointed by him for such purpose."

(4) There is no incompatibility between the duties of a deputy auditor, and of a correspondence clerk which the building commission is authorized to employ under section 2335 G. C., and there appears to be no objection to the same person holding both positions.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

AGRICULTURE—LICENSE FEE FOR SEED DEALERS—NO AUTHORITY TO PRO-RATE FEE—SENATE BILL NO. 11. (108 O. L. 52.)

There is no authority in amended senate bill No. 11 (108 O. L. 52) for prorating the annual license fee therein provided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "1. Section 13 of the amended senate bill No. 11, beginning sixth line, reads as follows: 'he or they shall pay each year a license fee to the secretary of agriculture of five dollars, and shall receive from said secretary of agriculture a certificate to sell agricultural seed until the first day of January next following.'
> 2. As it seems to be the intention to require a license fee of only $5.00 a year, we would be pleased to learn whether or not it would be necessary for us to collect from each seed dealer a fee of $5.00 covering the period from September 1st to January 1st, or can the amount be prorated?

3. We understand that the shipment of seeds during the fall of the year is negligible and for that reason we are desirous of learning if the $5.00 must be paid by each seed dealer of the state.

4. There is a seed testing course at the Ohio state university the early part of next week which will be attended by seed dealers of the state, and for their information we would like a ruling on the above within the next few days."

Amended senate bill No. 11, referred to in your inquiry, is an act to regulate the sale of agricultural seeds, as indicated in its title and was the subject of an opinion from this department rendered at your request May 10, 1919, No. 280.

Section 10 in part provides:

"The secretary of agriculture shall maintain a laboratory with necessary equipment and may appoint such analysts, inspectors and assistants as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act."

As to the purpose for which the license fee is exacted, section 13 definitely states this purpose to be:

"For the purpose of defraying the costs of inspection and analyses of agricultural seeds under the provisions of this act * * * before any person * * * shall sell, offer for sale or expose for sale in this state, any of the agricultural seeds, except as provided in section 6 * * * of this act, he or they shall pay each year a license fee * * * and shall receive from said secretary of agriculture a certificate to sell agricultural seeds until the first day of January next following."

It may be observed that the act itself does not contain any explicit provisions whereby the legislative intent may be directly ascertained as to the amount of the license to be charged from September 1, 1919 (when the law goes into effect), and December 31, 1919, other than the fixed fee "each year."

The purpose for which the liccense fee is exacted being definitely stated in the act itself, section 10, supra, becomes pertinent in considering the expense which may be created in the enforcement of this law. It is to be noted that the act provides for the maintenance of a laboratory with necessary equipment and the appointment of analysts, inspectors and assistants, all of which it may be suggested the legislature had in contemplation in not providing for a prorated license fee for the first year.

House Bill No. 536 (appropriations), enacted at the same session at which Senate Bill 11 was enacted, appropriates for such laboratory equipment, appointment of analysts and inspectors, approximately $7,300.00.

By personal conference with you, it is learned that your department estimates that approximately 1,500 of such licenses will be issued. At the rate fixed in section 13, this would amount to an annual income of $7,500,00.

Thus it would appear that the legislature had in mind the first expense of installing and equipping the necessary machinery for the enforcement of law and advisedly omitted any provision for prorating the first annual license fee.

Taking these facts into consideration, with the plain provision of that section that such dealers "shall pay each year" a license fee to the secretary of agriculture of $5.00, this department is unable to find any warrant in law for prorating such fee.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—AUTHORITY TO APPOINT TEACHERS GIVEN TO SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS—ASSIGNMENT OF TEACHERS ALSO IS VESTED WITH SUCH AUTHORITY.

Where a board of education has given the power of appointment of teachers to its superintendent of schools, the authority to assign such teachers follows such power of appointment vested in the superintendent of schools.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts submitted to your department by the superintendent of one of the city school districts of the state. Such statement of facts is as follows:

"The laws enumerating the powers of the board of education in city school districts are found in sections 4749, 5656, 5657, 7620, 7624, 7690, 7715 and 7722.

Section 7690 provides that 'each board of education shall fix the salaries of all teachers,' but does not provide for their assignment to duty.

Section 7703, regarding the powers and duties of a superintendent of a city school district and how the board of education may re-employ any teacher whom the superintendent refuses to appoint, does not provide for the assignment to duties of teachers by the board of education. This section makes mandatory as follows the duties and powers of the superintendent: 'Such superintendent shall visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils, and perform such other duties as the board determines.'

In September, 1918, there was organized a junior high school in the city school district in accordance with the law, the approval of the state superintendent of public instruction and adoption of recommendation of superintendent by the board of education of said district.

On September 14, 1918, a letter by the superintendent of the city school district to the state superintendent of public instruction, indicating the qualifications of junior high school teachers, was approved by him in a letter dated September 18, 1918.

Miss S——, a seventh grade teacher (1917-18) in the S—— city school district, was not appointed as a teacher in the junior high school.

Owing to the death of Miss G——, a vacancy existed in the junior high school in May, 1919, at the time when the appointments, according to the rule of the board of education were due. On May 8, 1919, when other appointments were made, a suitable, strong, efficient man teacher had not been secured. The superintendent of schools desires to place a man in this position.

The board of education at a regular meeting on May 22, 1919, after appointments of superintendent had been confirmed and salaries fixed by the board of education, another resolution was offered by Mr. B. and seconded by Mr. S., which reads on the minutes of the board as follows: 'On motion by Mr. B., seconded by Mr. S., Miss S. was assigned to the vacancy in the junior high school. On roll call votes stood, Ayes, three, Nays, two. Carried.'

The superintendent protested against such motion to assign Miss S. to the junior high school. * * * * * * * * * * *

The following questions are submitted by the superintendent of the S. city school district:

QUESTION OF POWER OF ASSIGNMENT.

1. In the absence of a statute giving the power of assignment or direction to teachers by the board of education, can any board of education in a city school district assign any teacher to specific duties at a specific school or building?

2. What is the interpretation of that portion of section 7703 which reads 'such superintendent shall visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils.'?

3. What is the interpretation of that portion of section 7703 which reads 'and perform such other duties as the board determines,'?"

The question here seems to be as to whether the superintendent of the city school district in question has the power to appoint and assign teachers or whether such power rests with the board of education. Attention is invited to section 7703 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Upon the acceptance of the appointment, such superintendent, subject to the approval and confirmation of the board, may appoint all the teachers, and for cause suspend any person thus appointed until the board or a committee thereof considers such suspension, but no one shall be dismissed by the board except as provided in section seventy-seven hundred and one. But any city board of education, upon a three fourths vote of its full membership, may re-employ any teacher whom the superintendent refuses to appoint. Such superintendent shall visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils, and perform such other duties as the board determines. He must report to the board annually, and oftener if required, as to all matters under his supervision, and may be required by it to attend any and all of its meetings. He may take part in its deliberations but shall not vote."

It is noted that this section confers upon the superintendent of schools, after he has been appointed, the power to appoint teachers, although the section reads "may appoint all teachers," which would indicate that if a board of education desired, they could limit his power to appoint all the teachers or a portion of them. It is found that the general rule in cities which have appointed a superintendent of schools, is to permit that official to appoint all the teachers, subject to the approval and confirmation of the board, largely on the basis that the superintendent comes nearer knowing the qualifications of the teachers as a whole than any one else connected with the school affairs in that particular district, because it is his duty to exercise supervision over them, visit the schools under his charge and direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties. The fact of the matter is that he has been retained in most cases as superintendent for the very reason that he is presumed to have more or less executive experience in school affairs and is in that sense the representative of the school board in the management of the teachers.

The board of education, by section 7703 G. C., has the power to confirm or reject the names of the teachers whose names have been submitted to it for its confirmation and it can continue to reject any or all of the names submitted by the superintendent until means are reached which are satisfactory to the board.

The section further says that upon a three-fourths vote of its full membership, the board of education may re-employ any teacher whom the superintendent refuses to appoint. This language, following the beginning of section 7703 G. C., practically —indicates that the superintendent is presumed to make the appointments or return the recommendations to the board of education, otherwise he would not "refuse to appoint," which is the language used in the section.

Bearing upon this particular case in hand, briefly the facts are that the superintendent desired to appoint a male teacher to fill a vacancy in a junior high school and before he was permitted to make such recommendation, the board of education, by motion, assigned a female teacher from one of the grade schools to a position as teacher in the junior high school, and the question is whether a board of education has power to assign teachers here and there as it sees fit, disregarding the rights of the superintendent of the schools of that district who has been employed to do certain things and who has certain rights granted to him under the statutes. It is true that the superintendent of schools in the district is the employe of the board of education of that district, but in a larger sense he is the employe of the people of that district and the school public has more to do with a superintendent of schools in a school district than it has with the board of education itself and the primary issue in every case of this kind is whether the public is being benefited or not.

In a proper discussion of the question at hand it is important to note that while section 7703 G. C. says that the superintendent may appoint all teachers many school boards throughout the state in their rules and regulations for their particular district have changed the word "may" appoint to "shall" appoint. Where a board of education has adopted a set of rules and regulations, and has had them printed for general distribution, such rules and regulations have all the force of law on school matters in that particular school district and the school board is expected to obey their own rules as well as all others concerned. A school board has the right to amend or change its rules and regulations at will by a majority vote but as long as such rules have not been changed by a board of education, all concerned should be governed by the rules and regulations of the board as they exist at that particular time. In the particular case at hand it is important to note that the board of education of the city school district of S. has in force a set of printed rules and regulations bearing upon the matters under its jurisdiction, and the pertinent parts are herewith quoted:

> "20. It shall be the duty of this committee to report to the board such recommendations regarding salaries of teachers as may be deemed advisable when appointments are made by the superintendent of schools. At the first meeting of the board in May of the school year in which their terms respectively, will expire, the committee shall recommend to the board suitable persons for appointment of superintendent of schools and truant officer and examiners of teachers."

The above question 20 refers to the committee on education and discipline which receives from the superintendent the list of names of teachers to be employed and such committee then recommends the salaries of such teachers to the board. This section indicates that the appointment of teachers is to be made by the superintendent of schools.

Quoting again from the rules and regulations of the board of education of the S. public school, section 24 reads:

> "A director of schools shall be elected by the board at its first regular meeting in Janauary * * *. He shall have the appointment, subject to the approval and confirmation of the board, of all employes except teachers, assistant teachers, supervisors, principles, superintendent of instruction, truant officer and clerk of the board of education. * * *"

The above section indicates that the board of education of the city district in question has given out by its own rules and regulations the power to appoint all employes saving to itself only the power of confirmation on the list submitted by the director of schools and reserving certain other appointments itself which reservation however does not include teachers which are covered in another section.

The above quotations are from the rules of the board of education and the following quotation is from the rules and regulations of the S. public schools all of which are printed together in a manual for the government of the school officials in that particular city district. Under the head TEACHERS, section 14 of such rules and regulations reads:

> "14. The teachers shall be appointed by the superintendent at the first regular meeting of the board in May and at the second meeting in this month the board shall confirm or reject these appointments and fix salaries."

This regulation, which has been approved and printed by the board of education itself, and using the word "shall" instead of the word "may," as in section 7703 G. C., leaves no doubt that the superintendent shall appoint the teachers and such regulation reserves to the board of education only the power to confirm or reject these appointments, and their salaries.

It might be said that the matter of appointment has little to do with the matter of assignment, but it is entirely apparent that if the superintendent shall be the appointing officer, he also should make the assignments which follow appointment, for the reason that assignments of teachers come more nearly under the duties of a superintendent in bringing about proper results than do the appointing of teachers.

In the case at hand the teacher was a female, teaching in the grade schools, which are absolutely distinct from the junior high school, and it would seem that the qualifications of a high school teacher would be different from those of a grade school and certainly the superintendent of schools could pass upon that point with more accuracy than the board of education, which has little direct contact with the teachers in their school work. So if a teacher who was employed in the grade schools was given a position in the high schools, it would be a new appointment, as a high school teacher, rather than a re-employment as a grade teacher, and since the superintendent of schools in the district in question has been given the power by the board of education to appoint all teachers by its own rules and regulations, a board of education which sought to make appointments, which power it had assigned to the superintendent, will be doing what its own rules and regulations forbid.

The superintendent of a school district, as indicated before, has been employed primarily as the executive officer of the board of education in its dealings with teachers, parents and pupils. In a great many matters he is the agent of the board of education and it is through him that complaints are received from the public. The appointment of teachers is an executive function and it follows that the assigning of teachers is also an executive function.

Relative to your second question, as to the interpretation of that portion of section 7703 which reads: "Such superintendent shall visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils," it is advised that the language therein cannot be improved upon, being very plain and has very little relation to the main question at issue herein.

Relative to question 3, which reads: "what is the interpretation of that portion of section 7703 which reads 'and perform such other duties as the board determines,' this means that the superintendent, as an employe of the board of education, shall perform any other duties that the board places upon him that are reasonable and within the scope of school affairs and which are not prohibited by statute.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a board of education has given the power of appointment of teachers to its superintendent of schools, the authority to assign such teachers follows such power of appointment vested in the superintendent of schools.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PLUMBING CODE—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER OF COUNCIL OR BOARD OF HEALTH TO REGULATE SAME—IN CASE OF CONFLICT WHICH GOVERNS.

In a city not having a building department or otherwise exercising the power to regulate the erection of buildings, boards of health are authorized and empowered to regulate the location, construction and repair of plumbing and drains within such city.

1. Where such city, by an ordinance of its city council, has regulated the installation of plumbing without the consent or approval of the board of health, and such ordinance conflicts with a later regulation of the board of health of such city, relating to the same subject, legally adopted and published in compliance with section 4228 et seq. G. C. and

2. where such regulation is not arbitrary, unnecessary or unreasonable as against such ordinance, it will prevail, but must conform to sections 1261-1 et seq. and 12600 et seq. G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion of this department on the question stated in a communication from Mr. Curtis M. Shelter, City Solicitor of Alliance, Ohio, as follows:

> "On April 12, 1908, the council of the city of Alliance, Ohio, duly passed an ordinance as required by law, in which the state plumbing code was practically reenacted, to provide for plumbing rules and regulations governing installation of plumbing in the city of Alliance, Ohio.
> Some time in the year 1918, the board of health of the city of Alliance, acting under authority of section 4413 of the General Code, passed a resolution containing conflicting provisions in reference to the installation of plumbing, in this, to-wit: That all back venting should be eliminated and that in place thereof siphon traps might be installed; abolished the use of cast iron pipe for sewer drains in cellar basements permitting the installation of sewer pipe instead of cast iron pipe, and other provisions in conflict with the ordinance as passed by council in 1908.
> I desire to know whether or not the board of health of a municipality has the authority to pass rules and regulations in reference to the installation of plumbing, and, if so, if they have the power and authority to repeal existing ordinances passed by the city council."

Responding to the request of this department for additional information, you also have forwarded another letter from Mr. Shelter, as follows:

> "Answering your communication of June 10th, in reference to future

(further) information for the department of the Attorney-General, I desire to say that at the time of the passage of the city ordinance relating to plumbing the city of Alliance did not have a building department or in any way regulating the erection of buildings.

Answering your second inquiry I desire to say that the city did not have such building department or otherwise exercise power to regulate the erection of buildings at the time of the enactment of the board of health regulation. Further, the board of health did not approve the original ordinance."

It may be noted that the resolution of the board of health, above referred to, is later in point of time and the question presented is as to which of the conflicting provisions in the resolution of the board of health and the city ordinance should prevail,in the consideration of which, from the facts stated, it is assumed that the board of health resolution was legally adopted and properly published in the same manner as a city ordinance.

Sections 3616, 3646, 4413 and 4420 G. C. are pertinent. Section 3616 in part provides:

"All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter."

Section 3646 (in the same chapter), in part is:

"To provide for the public health."

Section 4413 in part is:

"The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary * * * for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations * * * intended for the general public * * * shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances."

It is to be observed that the power given to the city, under section 3646, is, as described in section 3616, a general power, and it may be observed also that the terms of section 3646 are very general in their nature, whereas section 4413, in committing the matters therein described explicitly to the board of health, is, on the contrary, quite special in its nature.

Section 4414 makes it an offense, punishable by severe penalty, to disregard or disobey the regulations of the board of health by providing that such regulations shall have the same force and effect in all the courts of this state as city ordinances, and as said in Keyser vs. Walsh, 4 N. P. (n. s.) 509,

"It should be said here that the resolution of the board of health has the same effect as an ordinance, by virtue of section 1536-731 R. S. (4413 G. C.)."

Concerning the powers of a municipal board of health, in Walton vs. City of Toledo, 3 O. C. C. (n. s.) 300, the court observed:

"It is needless to say that the powers of the board of health are very large. If you read the whole statutes of the state of Ohio on the subject you will find that the powers that are given to the various board of health * * * are about as broad as language can make them."

As reflecting on what might be termed the specialness of the board of health statutes, the opinion of Judge Donahue, in Board of Health vs. Greenville, 86 O. S., 29, while not considering the exact question presented here, may be quoted:

> "The health of the inhabitants of the city is still a matter of concern to the state, and of such vital concern that the General Assembly has not thought proper to commit it exclusively to the control and discretion of men who may or may not have any particular ability or experience in sanitary affairs."

The controversy in that case was rather between the state board of health and the city of Greenville and the opinion above quoted dealt with the power of the state board in such matters when there was a conflict between it and the city council on a health or sanitary matter. But the language is particularly appropriate to the proposition that the state in enacting section 4413, supra, had not thought proper to comit the matters therein enumerated "exclusively to the control and discretion of men who may or may not have any particular ability or experience in sanitary affairs, viz., the city council.

For the reasons above given, it may be concluded, then, that section 3646, G. C., is general in its nature and that section 4413 is special in its nature.

The construction of conflicting, general and special statutes has been frequently before the courts of this state and the rule in such cases appears to be clearly settled.

In Commissioners vs. Board of Public Works, 39 O. S., 632, it was held:

> "Repeals by implication are not favored. So, particular and positive provisions of a prior act are not affected by a subsequent statute treating a subject in general terms and not expressly contradicting the provisions of the prior act, unless such intention is clear."

In this connection it may be observed that section 4413 was passed prior to that part of section 3646, which gives the municipal corporation general powers to provide for the public health.

In Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S., 115, the court, in adopting the rule laid down in 19 Vt., 240, quotes from that decision with approval, the following:

> "I know of no rule of construction of statutes of more uniform application than that later or more specific statutes do, as a general rule, supersede former and more general statutes, as far as the new and specific provisions go."

And in Doll vs. Barr, 58 O. S., 120, it is held that under a familiar rule of construction the special must be regarded as in the nature of an exception to the more general provisions, and as controlling them in the special classes of cases.

And in Endlich, on Interpretation of Statutes, in section 216, the rule is stated to be that:

> "Where there are in one act specific provisions relating to a particular subject, they must govern in respect to that subject, as against general provisions in other parts of the statute, although the latter, standing alone, would be broad enough to include the subject to which the more particular relate."

So that from these statutes it would appear that in the legislative mind boards of health have been more closely associated with matters affecting the public health than the city council. This is so from the very nature of the former agency as well as from the plain terms of the statutes.

Whatever apparent conflict they may seem to indicate between the board of health and the city council with reference to plumbing regulations, is eliminated by section 4420, which in part provides:

> "The board of health * * * except in cities having a building department, or otherwise exercising the power to regulate the erection of buildings * * * may regulate the location, construction and repair of * * * plumbing and drains. In cities having such departments or exercising such power, the council by ordinance shall prescribe such rules and regulations as are approved by the board of health, and shall provide for their enforcement."

It is very clear that in cities referred to in the first part of this section, the plumbing regulations therein referred to are placed under the control of the board of health. In cities referred to in the latter part of the section, such regulations are to be prescribed by the council, subject to approval of the board of health.

Of vital importance to the application of section 4420 to your question is the information contained in the last letter from Mr. Shetler, from which it is definitely established that the city of Alliance, not having a "building department or in any way regulating the erection of buildings" as therein stated, is a city of the character described in the first part of section 4420.

From this it follows that in Alliance "the board of health * * * may regulate the location, construction and repair of * * * plumbing and drains."

What has been said heretofore concerning general and special statutes applies with equal force to the effect of this last quoted section, from which it appears that at the time of the passage of the Alliance city ordinance in 1908, section 4420, being in full force the power and authority to regulate the matter herein involved was lodged in the board of health of that city. It might be maintained that by its acquiescence in such ordinance the board of health has explicitly thereby approved it. This is not considered tenable as the statutory approval implies an affirmative act on the part of the board of health.

In consideration of the special manner in which the matters involved herein have been committed to the board of health, this department is of the opinion that the later plumbing regulations adopted and promulgated by the board of health must, as against the ordinance, prevail.

To avoid misunderstanding of this opinion, it is suggested (1) that the necessity and reasonableness of the regulation is not herein considered, nor (2) is the question of the legality of publication of the resolution involved considered, and (3) that this opinion is confined to the single question of conflict between ordinances and municipal board of health regulations, as stated in your letter, without consideration of or reference to the state building code contained in sections 12600 to 12600-282 and the state plumbing inspection law in sections 1261-1 to 1261-15 G. C., to which as a matter of precaution, the attention of the municipal board of health may be directed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF CITY OF COLUMBUS—EXECUTION—OF BAILIFF'S DUTY UNDER SECTION 1558-83 G. C.—COLLECTION OF JUDGMENTS ON EXECUTION—FEES FOR SERVING WRITS OF RESTITUTION BELONG TO CITY TREASURY.

1. Under section 1558-83 G. C. (106 O. L. 377) the sole duty of the "execution bailiff" of the municipal court of the city of Columbus consists in the collection of judgments on execution, and he is without authority to serve writs of restitution in actions for forcible entry and detention.

2. Fees for the serving of such writs belong, under section 1558-79 G. C. to the treasury of the city of Columbus, and if received and retained by an "execution bailiff," a finding may be made for the recovery of same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication reading as follows:

> "We are enclosing herewith copy of blank form of writ of restitution of the city of Columbus and are calling your attention to section 1558-83 G. C. (105-106 O. L. 377) and respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> 1. May the execution bailiff receive and retain fees for serving writs of restitution in actions for forcible entry and detention?
> 2. Having received and retained said fees, if illegal, should findings for recovery be made in favor of the party paying the same, or in favor of the city of Columbus, or in favor of a trust fund to remain in the city treasury to be paid out on demand of the party making payment, and if not demanded to revert to the city treasury?"

In order to answer your questions, it becomes necessary here to quote in full section 1558-83 G. C. (106 O. L. 377), reading as follows:

> "Section 1558-83. The judges and clerk of the municipal court shall appoint a bailiff. The bailiff shall appoint not exceeding four deputy bailiffs, unless a larger number shall be authorized by the council of the city of Columbus. The bailiff and deputy bailiffs shall hold office during the pleasure of the appointing power, and shall perform for the municipal court services similar to those usually performed by the sheriff and his deputies for the court of common pleas and by constables for justices of the peace. They shall be governed by all laws pertaining to sheriffs and deputies, and shall serve all process of said court in the manner provided by this act, the laws relating to sheriffs and the rules of the court. The bailiff shall receive as compensation the sum of eighteen hundred dollars per annum, the deputy bailiffs each the sum of twelve hundred dollars per annum, which compensation of the bailiff and deputy bailiff shall be payable in monthly installments out of the treasury of the city of Columbus. Before entering upon the duties of their office, the bailiff and deputy bailiffs shall each give bond to the city of Columbus, the bailiff in the sum of two thousand dollars and the deputies each in the sum of one thousand dollars, with surety to the approval of the presiding judge, for the benefit of the city of Columbus and of any person who shall suffer by reason of any default in any of the conditions of such bond. Whenever the bailiff or deputy baliffs shall give a surety or bonding company bond the premium thereon shall be paid out of the treasury of the city of Columbus.

In addition to the deputy bailiffs above provided for, there shall be two deputy bailiffs to be known as execution bailiffs, who shall be appointed and dismissed in the manner prescribed for deputy bailiffs and shall have the same powers and give the same bond as other deputy bailiffs; their sole duty shall be to collect judgments on execution. They shall receive as their sole compensation the fees and poundage on the judgments they collect. The same fees and poundage shall be charged for their work as constables now are, or hereafter may be, authorized by law to charge for like services.

Each deputy bailiff and execution bailiff hereinbefore provided for shall receive from the treasury of the city of Columbus, in addition to his compensation, not to exceed the sum of three hundred dollars per annum to cover necessary expenses in serving process of the court, payable monthly upon the order of the presiding judge."

You will notice that as regards the function and authority of "execution bailiffs," the section just quoted says that such bailiffs "shall have the same powers and give the same bond as other deputy bailiffs;" and further, that "their sole duty shall be to collect judgments on exceution." Unless the first statement be limited to mean that execution bailiffs shall have the same powers in respect to collecting judgments on execution as deputy bailiffs have, the two statements are inconsistent; for by the language of the first part of section 1558-83 G. C., deputy bailiffs are given powers more extensive than merely collecting judgements on execution. Notice these provisions:

"The bailiff and deputy bailiffs * * * shall perform for the municipal court services similar to those usually performed by the sheriff and his deputies for the court of common pleas and by constables for justices of the peace. They shall be governed by all laws pertaining to sheriffs and deputies and shall serve all process of said court in the manner provided by this act, the laws relating to sheriffs and the rules of the court."

By reason of section 1558-51 (8), the municipal court has jurisdiction in all actions in forcible entry and detention of real property. The form of this writ is prescribed by statute (Sec. 10460) and is as follows:

"Whereas, in a certain action for the forcible entry and detention (or the forcible detention, as the case may be), of the following described premises, to wit: _____, lately tried before me, wherein _____ was plaintiff, and _____ was defendant, _____ judgment was rendered on the _____ day of _____, A. D. _____, that the plaintiff have restitution of said premises; and also that he recover costs in the sum of _____ You therefore are hereby commanded to cause the defendant to be forthwith removed from said premises, and the said plaintiff to have restitution of the same; also that you levy of the goods and chattels of the said defendant, and make the costs aforesaid, and all accruing costs, and of this writ make legal service and due return."

Section 1558-85 G. C. authorizes fees to be taxed in connection with the service of such process.

In view of the fact that the writ in such case includes a judgment for costs and authorizes a levy on goods and chattels for the purpose of making said costs, it may be argued that said writ is a "judgment on execution" which section 1558-83 G. C. makes it the duty of the execution bailiff to collect.

The main purpose of the writ in question is, however, the restitution of certain premises, and the collection of costs is merely incidental. The "execution bailiff" described in section 1558-83 G. C. has no authority to effect the main purpose of such writ. The bailiff and deputy bailiffs have such authority, being authorized by the section just cited to serve all process of the municipal court. Is it to be supposed that the legislature intended that the services of two officers of the court should be necessary to serve this writ—the regular bailiff to effect restitution of premises and the execution bailiff to make the costs?

Again, suppose the writ were one authorizing a levy against personal property and also the arrest of the judicial debtor in the event that sufficient property subject to execution could not be found. In such case, the execution bailiff could be only partially efficient, since he has no power to arrest.

While the matter is not entirely free from doubt, I am of the opinion that the words "to collect judgment on execution," found in section 1558-83 G. C., apply to writs whose function is limited to one particular purpose, that purpose being the collection of money judgments.

With reference to your first question, you are therefore advised that the execution bailiff of the municipal court of the city of Columbus is without authority to serve writs of restitution in actions for forcibly entry and detention.

Where the eexecution bailiff in fact serves a writ of restitution and receives and retains fees therefor, should findings be made against him, and if so, in whose favor should the finding be made? This, in substance, is your second question.

It is noted that when the writ in question is served by the regular bailiff or his deputies, the fees in connection with such service are payable, not to such bailiffs, but to the treasury of the city of Columbus, the bailiff and his deputies being paid a specified compensation in lieu of fees. Sec. 1558-83 G. C. The disposition of such fees is provided for by section 1558-79 G. C., which says in part:

> "He shall pay over to the proper parties all moneys received by him as clerk; he shall receive and collect all costs, fees, fines and penalties, and shall pay the same monthly into the treasury of the city of Columbus, and take a receipt therfor, except as otherwise provided by law."

Our argument, then, brings us to this stage: That writs of restitution issued by the municipal court of Columbus should be served, not by the execution bailiff, but by the regular bailiff or his deputies, and that the fees connected with such service should be paid, through the clerk of said court, into the treasury of the city of Columbus. Such fees thus become public money within the purview of section 286 G. C.

It now remains to consider whether a finding in favor of the city of Columbus for the fees mentioned in your letter is legally possible. The only circumstance that raises any question as to such a finding is the fact that the fees are for a service which, as we have just seen, was not legally performed by any one.

In an action brought by the person required to pay such fees, to recover same, such a circumstance might be important; but as between the city of Columbus and the execution bailiff serving or attempting to serve the writ, it would seem that the fees in question may be regarded as public money for the recovery of which, in favor of said city, a finding may be made. We are influenced in this conclusion by the case of State, ex rel., vs. Maharry, 97 O. S. 272, holding that sections 274, 284 and 286 et seq. G. C. are remedial statutes and require liberal construction.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT FALLS BELOW THIRTY TEACHERS—COUNTY BOARD MUST REDISTRICT—WHEN SAME BECOMES EFFECTIVE—SEPTEMBER FIRST—CONTRACT OF DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT NULL AND VOID WHEN NEW DISTRICT GOES INTO EFFECT.

1. Where a supervision district in a county school district falls below thirty teachers in number, caused by closing of schools or transfer of territory, the county board of education must re-district such county school district into new supervision districts containing not less than thirty teachers.

2. Under section 4738 G. C. such re-districting by the county board of education can be effective on no other date than September first.

3. The contract of a district superintendent, in a district which is changed and which contract runs beyond the date such re-districting is effective, is null and void when such new district goes into effect and an election of a district superintendent in such new district can be but for one year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 23, 1919.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following question:

> "The Miami county board redistricted the county, arranging, of course, the districts so that no district superintendent had less than thirty teachers. Suppose the closing up of schools or a transfer of territory to another county this spring should reduce one of these districts to less than thirty teachers, say twenty-five or twenty-six teachers as a total, would such a district automatically cease to exist? If so, would the county board be thereby compelled to redistrict the county, or would it be compelled to redistrict by petition? If the district superintendent is serving under a contract made last year and said contract will not expire until a year or two hence, would that alter the situation any, or would his contract become void when his district falls below thirty teachers?"

Attention is invited to section 4738 G. C., which says:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

It is noted that any redistricting of the county school district is not effective until the first day of the following September—that is, the beginning of the next school year—the idea of the school code being that conditions existing with the beginning of a school year, as regards supervision and territory, should be disturbed as little as possible during the school term. The county board of education under existing law can not form a new supervision district with less than the minimum of thirty teachers, and when such district is formed it is effective until the first of the following September, even though the minimum number of teachers should, through contingencies unforseen, fall to twenty-nine or twenty-five.

One of the good reasons for this is that frequent changes in supervision should not be encouraged, especially during the school year, and if a supervision district containing exactly thirty teachers, created under the law in regular form, should be reduced to twenty-nine teachers, because of transfer of one district to another county district or an exempted village district, or the closing of a district school from various causes, then would every school in the county be disturbed in its supervision by automatic redistricting forced during the school term. The law contemplates the school year, which begins on September first and ends on the following August thirty-first, as a unit to be used by boards of education in their educational and financial arrangements, for it has provided in section 4738 G. C., supra, that the supervision districts shall be changed as effective only with September first following.

Transfers of school territory are now made by the county board of education and it has official knowledge of the territory in each and every school district in the county, including supervision districts. When it makes a transfer of territory from a supervision district to an adjoining county school district or an exempted village district, it knows to what extent it is reducing the number of teachers in the supervision district from which such territory is transferred.

Having such official knowledge that one of the supervision districts in the county has fallen below thirty teachers in number, it is the duty of the county board of education to redistrict the county school district into new supervision districts which shall contain not less than thirty teachers in each such newly created district and to be effective on and with the first of September following as provided in section 4738 G. C. Being the clear duty of the county board to redistrict, no petition is necessary from three-fourths of the presidents of the village and district boards, though they are not prevented from filing the same. A county school board which entered upon a new school year beginning September first, with knowledge that any one of its supervision districts contained less than thirty teachers, would be violating section 4738 G. C.

You ask if a district superintendent's contract, having a year or two to run, would become void when his district falls below thirty teachers, through certain contingencies occurring during the school year, and you are advised that inasmuch as the district he is supervising must be superseded by a new district effective the following September first, his contract becomes null and void, for his district has passed out as of that date, for no new district can take effect on any date prior to September first, or once each year.

In Opinion No. 94, issued by the Attorney-General on March 9, 1917, and appearing at p. 211 of Vol. II, Opin. of Atty. Gen. for 1917, and holding that the district superintendent has no such vested right in a contract for more than one year as will prevent a redistricting or compel a continuation of such contract, the Attorney-General said:

> "So that the term of the district superintendent being for at least one year, and the time designated for the division of the county school district into supervision districts being fixed at a particular time in the year, it is fair to presume, I think, that the legislature intended such districts and such supervision to extend over each school year without change, and that being true the contracts with your superintendents who were elected for the first year in any supervision district would not be affected by any change of the district lines during said year. But, suppose the district superintendents had been re-elected in the same supervision district and for a term of more than one year, but not to exceed three years, and suppose the district lines were changed during any one year, to take effect the first of the following September, and during the term not yet completed of a district superintendent, the question then is, how would such redistricting affect the position of the district superintendent?
> I am of the opinion that the county board of education has power to divide the county school districts into supervision districts in any year, but the same must take effect on the first day of September in each year and that the district superintendents of such districts have no such vested right in a contract for more than one year that would defeat such redistricting legislation, or, in other words, that they cannot hold over."

Attention is invited also to Opinion No. 1252, issued June 3, 1918, and appearing at p. 767 of Vol. I, Opinions of Attorney-General, 1918, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "The county board of education of a county school district may redistrict such county school district into supervision districts any year.
> When the county board of education redistricts the county school district and changes the district lines of a supervision district which supervision district had employed a district superintendent for more than one year, such change in the supervision district will cause a termination of the contract of the district superintendent, which contract extended beyond the school year in which the redistricting was made.
> Where the county board of education has redistricted the county school district, and has changed the lines of any supervision district therein, the district superintendent of such newly created supervision district can be employed for but one year at the first election held in such newly created supervision district."

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. Where a supervision district in a county school district falls below thirty teachers in number, caused by closing of schools or transfer of territory, the county board of education must re-district such county school district into new supervision districts containing not less than thirty teachers.

2. Under section 4738 G. C. such re-districting by the county board of education can be effective on no other date than September first.

3. The contract of a district superintendent, in a district which is changed and which runs beyond the date such re-districting is effective, is null and void when such new district goes into effect and an election of a district superintendent in such new district can be but for one year.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE FOR ROSEVILLE VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, MUSKINGUM COUNTY, OHIO — FOR FIRE INSURANCE, SCHOOL SUPPLIES, COAL, ETC.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 25, 1919.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Roseville Village school district, Muskingum county, Ohio, in the amount of $7,500 to pay existing valid and binding obligations of said district, being fifteen bonds of $500 each.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Roseville village school district relating to the above bond issue, and am unable to approve the validity of said bonds for the reason that the transcript shows that a considerable portion of the indebtedness which the board of education seeks to refund by the issuance of bonds does not constitute valid and legal obligations of the district.

The certificate of the clerk reveals that a considerable portion of this indebtedness is for fire insurance, school supplies, coal and items other than salary and compensation for teachers, officers and school employes.

The bonds in question are issued under authority of section 5656 G. C. under authority of which a board of education may borrow money to change but not to increase its indebtedness.

Under section 5658 G. C. the indebtedness which may be refunded is limited to "existing valid and binding obligations."

Under section 5660 G. C. a board of education is not authorized to enter into "any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money," etc., unless the clerk first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied, placed on the duplicate and in the process of collection, and not appropriated for any other purpose.

Section 5661 G. C. provides that all contracts, agreements or obligations entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. are void, excepting any contracts for the employment of teachers, officers and other school employes.

It therefore follows that the several items of indebtedness set forth in the clerk's certificate, excepting such as were incurred in paying teachers, officers and other school employes, are not valid and binding obligations of the school district within the meaning of the section of the General Code above referred to, and hence, cannot be refunded by the issuance of bonds under section 5656.

The board of education is authorized to issue bonds to refund any indebtedness for salaries and compensation of teachers, officers and other school employes whose services have been engaged by contracts authorized by other provisions of the General Code, and if the board will, by further proceedings, limit the amount of bonds to be issued to an amount sufficient to meet these legal obligations, the bonds will be approved.

Under the present proceedings, however, the amount of bonds which can legally be issued is not separable from those which the board is not authorized to issue.

I therefore advise you not to accept the bonds as now authorized.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF OIL AND GAS LEASE BETWEEN STATE AND THE OHIO CITIES GAS COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent letter wherein the supplemental agreement between the state and the Ohio Cities Gas Company, relative to oil and gas lease for part of section 16, was transmitted to this department for its approval.

Section 3209-1 G. C., as amended in 105 O. L., page 6, provides in part:

> "The auditor of state is hereby authorized to lease for oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, any unsold portions of section sixteen * * * upon such terms * * * as will be for the best interest of the beneficiaries thereof."

This section vests the power of leasing such land in the state auditor and as to the terms and conditions upon which the lease shall be made is entrusted to the discretion of such state auditor.

Consideration of the terms of the original agreement, which as stated in your letter did not contain any stipulation for rental or royalty to be paid to the state for the gas used, as proposed in the lease submitted, as well as the other facts stated in your letter, and further consideration of the provisions of section 3209-1, supra, convinces this department that the within lease is in conformity to law and as to the form thereof is hereby approved and returned herewith.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—OFFICERS OF UNION CENTRAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY NOT WITHIN PROVISIONS OF THE ABOVE ACT—WHEN OFFICERS WHO ALSO ACT IN ADDITIONAL CAPACITY AS EMPLOYE ARE WITHIN ITS PROVISIONS—GENERAL AND SPECIAL AGENTS NOT WITHIN PROVISIONS OF ACT.

The officers of a private corporation are not, as such, its employes, within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act; but the fact that a person is an officer of such corporation does not preclude his acting for the company in some additional capacity which may make him an employe.

The general agents of the Union Central Life Insurance Company are not its employes within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

The special agents of such company are not its employes within the meaning of that act.

All these questions are questions of fact, to be answered ultimately by the industrial commission upon such evidence as may be available.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter requesting the opinion of this department upon certain questions submitted by the vice-president of the Union Central Life Insurance Company, has been very carefully considered in this department.

The questions so submitted are as follows: Are the persons standing in the following named relations to the Union Central Life Insuarnce Company "employes" of the said company under the workmen's compensation act (Sec. 1465-61 G. C.):

1. The general officers of the company.
2. Its general agents.
3. Its special agents.

No statement of facts has been submitted as to the exact character of the relation of the company's general officers to the company. It will be assumed, for the purposes of this opinion, that that relation is such as ordinarily exists between a corporation and its general officers.

The facts submitted respecting the relation of the company to its general and special agents, respectively, are, however, quite complete, forms of contracts entered into between the company and these classes of agents having been submitted for my examination.

All these questions arise under and involve the interpretation of the second paragraph of section 1465-61 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L. 159, which provides as follows:

> "The terms 'employe,' 'workman' and 'operative' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean:
> 2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer.

The third paragraph of the section may also have some application to one of the questions submitted but the ultimate question to be resolved in any event, as to each of your inquiries, is the same under the third section as it would be under the second. For the purpose of clarifying the problem of statutory interpretation, which must be solved before the statute can be applied to specific cases, the following abstract of the above quoted section is submitted:

> "Every person in the service of any person * * * employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, * * * but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

This is a definition both by inclusion and by exclusion. It is clear, from even a cursory reading of it, that a person need not be a "workman" or an "operative" in the usual or ordinary sense, in order to be an "employe" within the meaning of the act. It is enough that two conditions concur:

(1) That the employer have in his or its employment five or more persons who are "workmen or operatives "

(2) That the person in question be in the service of such an employer under an express or implied contract of hire.

It may be objected that an assumption is involved in the statement last made, to the effect that the phrase "under any contract of hire" modifies adjectively the noun "service," or adverbially the word "is," understood. That is to say, the assumption is that the sentence paraphrased would read:

> "Every person who is, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, in the service of any person * * * employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business," etc.

It may be claimed, with some show of reason, that the position of the phrase "under any contract," etc., in the section, indicates that it modifies the participle "employing," so that the paraphrase of the section would read:

> Every person in the service of any person employing five or more workmen or operatives under any contract of hire, etc.

It is believed that it is not necessary to choose between these two possible meanings of the section. The word "service," the meaning of which will be presently considered at some length, necessarily involves the idea of a hiring. In fact the phrase "under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written" is believed to be mere surplusage. It can not modify either the word "service" (as a part of the idea predicated upon the understood verb), or the word "employing," because both of these words, when used alone, would involve a contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written. Therefore, the natural meaning of either one of these words is not changed by adding the clause in question.

For the same reason it makes for clearness to read into the word "service" the idea expressed by the phrase "under any contract of hire," etc., whether that phrase, as used in the statute, grammatically modifies that word or not.

We have it then, that by inclusion the statute extends to every person in the service of another.

The idea of exclusion in the statute, which must be read as an exception to the inclusive words, is found both in the last clause of it and in certain parts of the first clause. The first idea is one which relates to the employer, rather than the employe, and with it we have no greater concern than to point it out. It is that an employer who actually employs five or more workmen or operatives, but not (1) regularly (2) in the same business or (3) in or about the same establishment is not one the persons in whose service are to be regarded as employes within the meaning of the act.

The second idea of exclusion in the section is that fully expressed by the last clause, viz.: that an employe whose employment is (1) but casual and (2) not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer, is not an employe within the meaning of the act, whether the other employes of his employer have that status or not. It is to be noted in this connection that there is a material difference in the form of expression used to exclude employers, from that used to exclude employes. Any of the conditions named in the first part of the section is sufficient to exclude an employer, and with him all of his employes, from the category defined by the law. That is, if the five or more workmen or operatives employed by an employer are not regularly employed by him, that is enough. None of his employes are within the law. So also, if his five or more workmen or operatives are not employed in the same business or in or about the same establishment, etc,

But when we come to the last clause of the section, we find that it is not enough that the employe, in order to be excluded, should have an employment which is but casual. It must also appear that such casual employment is not in the usual course of business, etc., of his employer. Both elements must concur. That is to say, a person casually employed in the usual course of business of his employer would be such an employe.

This much is established by the cases decided under the British workmen's compensation act, from which the form of expression, now found in our statute and placed there by amendment of 1917, was borrowed. Whether the converse of this proposition is true, and a regular employe, not in the usual course of business of his employer, such, for example, as a private chauffeur or a domestic servant, would be an employe within the meaning of the act, is not so clear and need not be considered for the purposes of this opinion.

These general observations clear the way for the consideration of the specific question submitted. They make it at once apparent that the general officers of a company, if they can be held to be persons in the service of the company, are "employes" within the meaning of the act, provided the company regularly employs five or more workmen or operatives in connection with the same business.

Is such an officer in the service of the corporation? I find that the commission has passed upon this question in a case entitled, In re Moseley, Jr., 2 Bull. Ohio Ind. Com. 19, and has there laid down the following principle which I quote from Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation, 3rd Ed., p. 239:

> "An officer of a corporation, as such, is not an employe, within the meaning of the Ohio Act. But where an officer of a corporation who, in addition to performing the duties imposed upon him as such officer, renders other service to the corporation and is paid an annual salary by it, such salary being paid for the rendition of such services rather than for performing duties devolving upon him as an officer, he is an employe within the meaning of the Ohio Act."

This statement is believed to be substantially correct. Some discrimination is necessary. On the one hand we may start from the proposition that an officer of a corporation, properly speaking, such as a member of its board of directors, which it must have under the laws of the state, or its president and secretary, which it probably will have by virtue of its regulations, are not in the service of the company. As heretofore pointed out, the word "service" necessarily implies a contractual relation—a hiring. Officers are, however, not hired or employed under contract, but elected or appointed. They can not complain of breach of contract as such, if they are supplanted or ousted before the expiration of their terms of office. Their objections to such procedure would have to be grounded upon an entirely different set of legal principles. This alone is sufficient to justify the first proposition laid down in the statement of the commission's decision which I have quoted.

On the other hand, it is equally clear, as intimated therein, that a person may actually be a servant or employe of a corporation and at the same time one of its officers. This is very frequently the case. The president may be the general manager and his position as general manager would be rather that of an employe than that of an officer. The president of a mercantile company might very well be its sales manager, and its secretary its buyer. They would be none the less employes or servants of the company because of their distinct relation to it as officers.

Again, officers of a corporation usually are stockholders in it, but this fact is immaterial. For such purposes the idea that a corporation is a distinct entity, apart from its stockholders, controls. See generally, Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation, Sec. 80.

Before disposing of this question, note must be taken of a contention to the effect that, though within the letter of paragraph 2 of section 1465-61 G. C., the general managers and superior employes of a corporation, who are also its officers, should not be regarded as within the scope of the act as an entirety, because they do not receive wages and because also the maximum weekly payment under the law, which is but twelve dollars, would be so ridiculously inadequate as compensation to them, in case of injury, that it could not have been the intention of the general assembly that they should be included within the scope of the law. This claim is equivalent to saying that a person who receives a salary instead of weekly wages can not be an employe; and that where the salary is high enough so as to produce an incongruous relation between it and the amount of the maximum weekly award, this result must follow. These considerations must be rejected, however.

It is the uniform holding, under workmen's compensation acts, that the method of payment in and of itself is immaterial as reflecting upon the character of the person as an "employe" for the purposes of such laws. If it were otherwise, only those paid by the day or week would be entitled to its benefits. Wages, in the strict sense, constitute but one method of compensation in common use for the payment of various kinds of service. Commissions, piece-payments, bonuses and salaries are all in common use for this purpose. The word "wage," when used in the law therefore, must to give it any reasonable scope and effect, be read in a generic, rather than in a specific sense.

The other argument is equally inadmissable. It is possible in these times for a skilled laborer, employed by the day, to receive compensation at a rate greatly in excess of twelve dollars per week. It would not do to deprive him of all benefits under the law, simply because the maximum compensation would not in his case be full compensation.

From another point of view, of course the answer to all such arguments is that the maximum compensation is fixed on the theory that those receiving wages, salaries, etc., at higher rates will be able to protect themselves by privately obtained insurance to the extent of such excess.

It is believed, therefore, that the commission has been acting on correct principles in deciding questions of this kind, and though the precise facts respecting the Union Central Life Insurance Company are not before this department, it is not necessary to call for them, but merely to advise the commission that it may proceed to the determination of such facts as may be brought to its attention respecting the officers of this company, upon the same principles that it has heretofore followed with respect to other companies and their officers, subject, however, to what may be hereinafter stated as to the character of relation that may constitute "service."

The second question submitted by the company can not so easily be disposed of It is raised by the following facts respecting the general agents of the company: Such agents are employed under contracts which contain among others the following provisions:

> "1. * * the party of the first part (the company) hereby appoints the party of the second part as its general agent to procure applications for life insurance, to deliver policies, to collect premiums when furnished with the policies or receipts; and to perform such other duties as may be required in connection therewith.
> 2. * * the parties to this contract have executed * * for the term of ten years.
> 3. * * the party of the first part assigns to the party of the second part the following territory in which to operate: (For example, the City of Columbus in Franklin county)————————————————but the party of the first part reserves the right after three years, to establish other independent agencies therein, or to withdraw such portions of said territory from the provisions of this contract as the party of the second part fails to organize and operate to the satisfaction of the said first party. * * *
> 4. * * the party of the first part will pay to the party of the second part, as compensation for services rendered, first year and renewal commissions in accordance with the following table of rates: (Here follows a table of first year commissions classified according to type of policy and a less complicated table of renewal commissions) * * *.
> * * all commissions shall be payable when the premiums are paid in cash and reports audited at the home office by the party of the first part. * *
> * * a lien is hereby reserved on all commissions of the party of the second part * * to secure commissions due sub-agents, and any indebtedness of the party of the second part * * to the party of the first part. The party of the second part shall at the end of each calendar year * * furnish a receipt showing that all commissions due sub-agents have been paid in full.

5. * * the party of the first part will furnish to the party of the second part * * such of its publications and stationery as may be necessary to transact the business.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

THE PARTY OF THE SECOND PART AGREES AS FOLLOWS:

8. * * he will furnish and maintain with the party of the first part a good and acceptable bond * * *

9. * * That he will act exclusively for the party of the first part, so far as to tender first to it, all applications of insurance obtained by him. That he will pay any fees required by state and local laws for the authority to solicit insurance within his territory. That he will be governed by the rules and instructions contained in the Agents' Manual and Rate Book, as well as all other rules and instructions which he may receive from time to time from the party of the first part.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

15. * * That this contract shall be null and void, at the election of the party of the first part * * if the party of the second part shall fail to perform any of his agreements as herein expressed, or shall give his time or attention to any other business or employment; * * *."

The letter of the vice-president of the company states that:

"The general agent receives his compensation from the company in the form of commissions on the insurance written through his agency, including that written by his special agents. The company does not compensate the special agents direct, but only through the amounts sent to the general agent. The company keeps no account of the amount of commissions due the special agents and has no way of telling how much of the compensation paid to the general agent is in turn paid by him to his special agents.

* * how would it be possible for this company to determine the compensation of any general agent? * * the fee to be paid the state fund by us is based upon the premium, which in turn is based upon the compensation paid. It would be obviously unfair to pay a fee upon the entire compensation paid to a general agent, as most of his compensation is again paid by the general agent to the sub-agent."

(The reference to a "fee" is due to the fact that the company does not contribute to the state insurance fund, but, availing itself of section 1465-69 G. C., is thereby required to pay only to the surplus of such fund in the manner provided by section 1465–54 G. C., as amended).

It therefore appears that the general agents of the company are required by the terms of their contracts to give their entire time to the business of the company. Their first loyalty is due to the company, in that they must offer all applications for insurance secured by them first to the company. On the other hand they are not required to work at any one place, to keep any particular hours, or to conduct their business in any particular way, except that they are to be guided by the manual of instructions. Their compensation is payable in the form of commissions, out of which they pay sub-agents or special agents. It is obvious that the chief object of their employment is the securing of applications for insurance policies. Such activities constitute the bringing of the company into contractual relation with third parties. Aside from the collection and handling of moneys and the rendition of accounts, they perform nothing that might be characterized as "work," in the narrow sense, for the company.

On these facts, are the general agents in the "service" of the company?

An effort has been made to find out what the terms of the "Rules and Instructions contained in the agents' manual and rate book," etc., may be. While no manual bearing such a title has been seen, what are taken to be similar books issued by this company and several others have been examined, and it is felt that their context may be taken as a safe guide to indicate the general character of the limitations placed by the companies on the conduct of their agents in such form. Suffice it to say that such publications are found to contain mortality tables and the like with rates for each policy and each age, together with lists of prohibited and doubtful risks and instructions relative to terms, etc. None of these books purport to direct by rule or otherwise how the agent shall employ his time, nor do they relate to any other matter or thing than the extent of the agent's authority in making contracts on behalf of the company.

It appearing, therefore, that nothing in the agent's manual of rates and instructions in anywise alters the general scope of the contract as above quoted and analyzed, we may return to the principal question.

Having regard to the manifest spirit and underlying purpose of the workmen's compensation act, it would appear that the answer to the question now under consideration should depend upon whether or not the insurance company, as employer, sustains toward its general agents anything more than the mere relation of a principal, or, stated conversely, whether or not the general agents sustain toward the company any closer relation than that of a mere agent.

It is believed that the law came into existence as the expression of a protest against what were deemed to be the socially unjust results of the application of the ordinary rules of negligence to industrial accidents. Without going deeply into the situation, it is sufficient to state what is familiar to all, namely, that an industrial workman injured in the course of his employment and thus suffering direct loss of earnings, and indirect loss of earnings through impairment of earning power, and the dependents of a workman killed in the course of his employment and thereby deprived of the support accruing to them through his earnings and earning power, would find under the former law an insuperable barrier to the recovery of compensatory damages from any one on that behalf, unless he or they might be able to fasten fault of some kind upon some other person.

So in all cases of mere accident and in all cases where the injury resulted solely from the negligence of the injured party, the law was impotent to afford any relief, no matter how great the distress in the individual case might be. But even when such parties might be able to trace the causation of the injury to fault on the part of the employer or some other person, at least three technical barriers would lie in their way and have to be surmounted, before such damages could be recovered. These were:

1. The defense that though the injury resulted from the negligence of some one representing the employer, such person was a fellow servant of the injured employe.

2. That though fault might have contributed to the employer, the proximate or concurring cause of the injury was the negligence of the injured workman himself and

3, That though the employer might by the exercise of great care have prevented the condition out of which the injury arose, yet such condition was one of the risks inherent in the employment and appreciated by the workman when he entered it, so that he must be deemed to have assumed such risk and to have taken his chance of injury when so entering the employment.

Even where these difficulties did not exist or were successfully overcome, the amount of recovery was uncertain, being left to what might be, and perhaps often was, the caprice of a jury.

The point of view from which these rules of law and the resulting conditions were regarded as unjust, might be best expressed by the statement that the industry in which the workman was engaged was after all the cause of any injury that might happen to him in the course of his employment. This view casts aside all nice and technical rules and principles and even more plain and substantial ones by which particular culpability of definite persons or corporations is to be weighed and determined and on the fundamental principle of insurance, which is that of the general average, by which all losses happening in the course of a common undertaking are to be ratably apportioned among those interested in the enterprise, casts the burden of repairing the effects of industrial accidents upon the industry itself, thus to be ultimately borne by all who are engaged therein.

The workman's compensation act is fundamentally an expression of this point of view and an attempt to make it the law of the land in an effective way. It is therefore bottomed upon the idea that the workman is but a human cog in the great machinery of industry and subject to the play of forces generated by the industry. To regard him as such, however, we must premise such a relation between him and the industry as to make him actually subject to such forces. We can not do this unless his employment is of such character as to place him under outside control of some sort.

Of course any one who undertakes any business enterprise finds that if he would be successful therein his activities must be conditioned by the necessities of the enterprise. So any man who agrees in the course of his business to do something for another, finds himself under the necessity, if he would abide by his agreement, of so conducting himself as to render likely his success in the undertaking, though the time and the means may be left to him to determine. Such a circumscribing of the will is, however, too slight to afford ground for the application of the principles which have been discussed. A tailor from whom a customer orders a suit of clothes must do or procure to be done the necessary cutting and stitching; yet his relation to the customer is not such as to make whatever risk to him may be involved in the doing of the work one that pertains to the customer's business. It is a risk of his own business. He sustains toward the customer the relation which is known in law as that of an independent contractor. This is one extreme.

At the other end of the line lie the cases in which the person for whose benefit work is to be done by another person, so far controls the manner in which the work is to be done, the disposition during working hours of the time of the person who is to do the work and other factors in connection with the doing of the work, that it is clear that the workman is in substance and in fact a mere instrumentality of his employer for the doing of the work. In other words, the work is substantially done by the employer through the workman, whose relation to the former is somewhat aptly expressed by the colloquial term "hand." Here, the law declares the relation to be that of master and servant.

Now, it may be stated, without citing authorities, many of which are available, that the term "service" as used in the workmen's compensation acts imports the relation of master and servant and excludes that of independent contractors. In each case in which the question as to the relation of a person injured in the course of carrying on an enterprise arises, therefore, it must be determined whether the relation between the parties is essentially that of master and servant on the one hand, or essentially that of independent contractors on the other hand.

It is obvious that there will be border-line cases to be decided as questions of mixed law and fact. An examination of some of the decided cases will show the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of drawing a line upon any abstract or a priori principles.

In the case under consideration, there is an element not thus far taken into account in the foregoing analysis of the legal possibilities arising upon this phase of the workmen's compensation act. That is the fact that the relation of principal and agent exists between the insurance company and its general agents. Before proceeding further, therefore, it is necessary to determine whether or not the existence of this relation in and of itself conclusively determines that the case lies on the one side or the other of the line of division to which reference has just been made. On the one hand it may be conceded that there is a legal distinction between an independent contractor and an agent. That is to say, one who is the agent of another can not be an independent contractor as to him for all purposes—perhaps for any purpose, in the exact sense.

Does it therefore follow that the fact of agency stamps the relation for present purposes as analogous at least to that of master and servant? This question must now be answered, for if it is answered affirmatively, we are at the end of our analysis, so far as the general agents of the company are concerned; and if it is answered negatively, we must look further into the relations of the parties, to see whether they present features, aside from that of mere agency, which bring the case within the principles of master and servant. For it is clear that there is no such legal contract between the relations of master and servant and principal and agent, as is presented when we compare either with that of independent contractors. In other words, a servant may be an agent, and an agent a servant; or, the relation between the parties may involve both an agency and a service.

For our purpose, therefore, the question is whether, the fact of agency being established, such fact is conclusive in favor of the existence of the relation of master and servant, is a material fact bearing upon the existence of that relation, or is a perfectly immaterial and irrelevant fact to be laid on one side in determining whether that relation exists.

Still forbearing to enter upon a discussion of the authorities, I venture the statement that agency as such consists of the representation, as it were, of the mind of one person by and through the mind of another; whereas, service is essentially a use of the body of a person, i. e., his physical powers, by the controlling mind of another.

There are available many learned dissertations bearing upon the distinction which has just been suggested. Reference may be made to:

> Mechem on Agency, 2nd Ed., Chap. I, and Labatt on Master and Servant, Chap. III, Secs. 65 to 67, inc., with notes.

for historical treatments of the subject. See particularly the articles on "Agency" by Mr. Justice Holmes, 4 Harv. Law Review, 354, 5 Id. 1, in which the learned author advances the thesis that historically "agency," as we now understand it, developed out of the primitive relation of master and servant. Indeed, this statement is accepted by all writers and must be true in the very nature of the case. All primitive law omits reference to any such legal concept as agency. The reasons for this are admirably set forth in Chap. I of Mechem, supra. It is therefore true, as stated in Sec. 11 of Mechem on Agency, supra, that:

> "The title agency, as the name of a distinct subject, belongs to a comparatively recent period in our law."

After his exhaustive historical review, Professor Mechem in the second chapter of his work advances the following definitions:

> "The word agency, when used in its broad meaning * * indicates the relation which exists when one person is employed to act for another. In this aspect, it has, in our modern law, three chief forms: 1. The relation of principal and agent; 2. The relation of master and servant; * *; 3. The relation of employer or proprietor and independent contractor. All of these have some points of similarity but, at the same time, many aspects of real distinction.

> Of the three forms here suggested, the one with which this work has chiefly to do, is the first, or the relation of principal and agent. At the same time the three relations, and particularly the first two, are so closely related, and the actor in these first two forms so frequently acts in both capacities or so largely combines them both in his own person, that it is convenient and often desirable to consider them side by side. * * *.
> The relation of principal and agent, or the relation of agency in the narrower sense * * is the legal relation which exists where one person, called the agent, is authorized—usually by the act of the parties, but occasionally * * by operation of law to represent and act for another, called the principal, in the contractual dealings of the latter with third persons. The distinguishing features of the agent may briefly be said to be his representative character and his derivative authority."

Somewhat happy examples of the difference between agency and service are afforded by the cases in which abnormal status imposes a relation of master and servant upon the parties by operation of law, such as the relations of husband and wife and parent and child. Even under our modern married women's act, the relation of master and servant to a limited degree exists as between husband and wife; and of course that relation has always existed as between parent and child. Yet no agency is inferable from these circumstances unless in exceptional cases, as in case of abandonment. In thees relations reciprocal duties exist, such as the duty of support. But a husband and father may by his will, express or implied from conduct, constitute the wife or the child as his agent. Here, then, is an instance in which the one relation is admitted to exist but does not necessarily prove the existence of the other. Logically, at least, the converse may well be true and the relation of agency, as defined in a narrower sense by Professor Mechem, be admitted to exist; and yet additional facts have to be shown in order to establish the other relation of master and servant between the parties.

The temptation is to quote copiously from authorities, but confusion might result from so doing, as well as the lengthening of this opinion; for it must be admitted that the courts have been far from discriminating in the use of terms and the attempted framing of definitions for one purpose or another. It is believed that enough has been said to show that the true relations are logically exclusive, so that proof of one, as subsisting between two parties, does not establish the other between the same parties. This is as far as it is necessary to go at the present time, for it follows from this that we must look at the facts of the present case to see whether the relation of master and servant—or some relation sufficiently analogous thereto, to satisfy the purposes of the workmen's compensation law—exists between the Union Central Life Insurance Company and its general agents; and in conducting this investigation we may lay on one side, as a fact of slight, if any, value, as tending to prove the affirmative of the question, the admitted relation of principal and agent which exists between these parties.

In the investigation upon which we now embark, we are looking for what might be termed "manual acts" to be performed by the agent on behalf of the company in such a way as to constitute the agent a physical instrumentality of the company. Looking first at the initial paragraph of the contract, we find that the powers and duties of the agent are specified as follows:

> "To procure applications for life insurance, to deliver policies, to collect premiums when furnished with the policies or receipts; and to perform such other duties as may be required in connection therewith."

The procuring of applications for life insurance is clearly not an act of the character last mentioned. It is an activity designed to bring the principal, or the company, into contractual relations with a third party, the applicant.

The collection of premiums, which, when collected, are to be (according to the eleventh paragraph of the contract) immediately deposited "in such bank as may be designated by the party of the first part to the credit of and without expense to the Union Central Life Insurance Company; to be subject only to the check of the party of the first part." is something that is more in the nature of a physical act. Indeed, it has been held that a collector is an employe within a workmen's compensation act, though he chooses his own time to make the collections and otherwise conducts his activities according to the dictates of his own will.

> Schooler vs. Greenberg, 1 Calif. Ind. Acc. Com. Dec. 146, cited in note to Powley vs. Vivian, 169 App. Div. (N. Y.) 170, as reported in 10 Neg. Comp. Cas. Ann. 835-841.

However, such a holding is not conclusive. No one will dispute the fact that a bill collector, employed, say, by the proprietor of a mercantile establishment, would sustain the relation of a servant to his employer. There would not be much difference between such a case and that of a messenger who might be employed to carry money from the safe of the proprietor to a bank for the purpose of depositing it. But here it is clear not only from the terms of the contract itself, but also from the well known usages of the business, that the phrase "to collect premiums," as used in the first paragraph, is not employed for the purpose of describing a duty, so much as for the purpose of creating a power or authority. Indeed, the function of the whole first paragraph of the contract seems to be of this character. The party of the second part is thereby appointed an agent to solicit, to deliver and to collect; that is, he is authorized to do these things, rather than commanded to do them, which would be the case if the intention were to make him a servant.

Consideration of the fundamental character of a life insurance policy re-enforces this view. Such a policy is a unilateral contract, binding on the insurer, but not on the insured. That is to say, under the terms of all policies now in use the policy is not to be delivered until the first premium is paid. See section 9412 G. C., prescribing the form of the Ohio standard life insurance policy.

There can not, therfore, be a duty to collect in the same sense that there is in the case of an ordinary bill collector, for the very simple reason that there is no duty on the part of the applicant or policy holder to pay.

These considerations also dispose of that language of the first paragraph of the contract which deals with the delivery of policies. The collection of first premiums and delivery of the policy being synchronous acts, the performance of which is dependent upon the will of the applicant, whatever manual act may be involved in the delivery or in the collections, for that matter, is merely incidental to the main purpose of the transaction, which is the formation of a contract. This much is rather conclusively demontrated by the celebrated case of Paul vs. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, in which the supreme court of the United States held that the business of insurance does not constitute interstate commerce, though it consists of entering into contracts for the complete performance of which the delivery of a policy, requiring interstate transportation of it, may be involved. The transportation is merely incidental it does not inhere in the essence of the transaction.

So also with the physical acts that heve been discussed.

When to these considerations is added the obvious one that such physical acts as have been discussed are not performed by the general agent under the direct control of any officer of the company, the element of service, if any, in the relation which their performance involves, tends to disappear, if it does not completely disappear.

Another physical act referred to in the contract is that of keeping an accurate record of all transactions on behalf of the company (paragraph 10). This is clearly a duty, being in the form of a promise made by the agent of the company. However, it is nothing more than might be stipulated for by any parties having contractural relations with each other, of whatsoever character. It may therefore be dismissed from consideration.

I come now to the one factor in the contract between the company and its general agents which most nearly savors of the relation of master and servant. I refer to that provision of paragraph 15 of the contract which stipulates that the contract shall be null and void, at the election of the company, "if the party of the second part (the general agent) * * * shall give his time or attention to any other business or employment."This is apparently a stipulation for full-time service, and as such it is a factor which is entitled to some weight on the side of holding that the resultant relation is that of service as well as that of agency.

In Labatt on Master and Servant, Vol. I, Sec. 66, the learned author draws the following conclusions from the authorities and cases discussing the distinction between agency and services:

> "* * * (1) That the element of control over the details of the work supplies a reasonably precise test by which to distinguish servants from independent contractors; (2) that this test fails when it becomes necessary to trace the line which separates agents from independent contractors; (3) that no criterion appropriate to all classes of cases has yet been suggested for the purpose of differentiating servants from agents. * * But for practical purposes the nature of the relationship created by a given contract of employment may be determined with reasonable precision by a consideration of the following elements:
> (1) The existence or absence of a right on the employer's part to control the employe as to the manner in which his functions are to be performed. This test is decisive, whatever may be the character of the work assigned to the employe.
> (2) The fact that the employe was engaged for a definite or indefinite period. * * *
> (3) The fact that the employe received his compensation, either in the form of fees and commissions or in the form of fixed wages or salary. With regard to these contrasted modes of compensation, the effect of the authorities, broadly speaking, may be said to be that, wherever the whole or a substantial part of the wages or salary of the employe consists of a specific sum payable at the end of certain stated periods, the appropriate inference ordinarily will be that he was a servant, even though the other evidential elements warrant the conclusion that the contract was one of agency. * * *. On the other hand, it is not necessary, in order to establish the existence of a contract of service, that the employe should have been paid by wages or salary. If he is shown to have been under the control of the employer in respect to the details of his work, he will be regarded as a servant, although his remuneration may have taken the form of a commission. But, having regard to the ordinary usages of commercial life, it is clear that the fact of the compensation having been paid in the form of commissions is an element which tends strongly to show that the employe was an agent, and not a servant.
> (4) The fact that, under his contract, the employe was to devote his whole time to the alledged master, or was at liberty to work for other employers as well. Proof that the former of these situations existed points strongly but not conclusively, to the inference that the employe was a servant; and if it is also shown that the employe was remunerated by fixed wages, or salary, service is perhaps inferable as a matter of law. On the other hand, the fact that he was doing work for other employers besides the alleged master will not of itself exclude the inference that his relation to the latter was that of a servant.

(5) The fact that the employe was or was not bound to furnish accounts. Evidence that the employe was subject to this obligation does not of itself prove that he was a servant rather than an agent."

The California Industrial Accident Commission seems to have regarded full time employment an evidence of service in several cases. See Skidmore vs. Brown, 2 Calif. Ind. Acc. Com. 492.

Horgan vs. Kinney, Id. 932.
Rosenberg vs. Western Mercantile Co., Id. 665.

On the other hand, the Connecticut commission in Fineblum vs. Singer Sewing Machine Co., 1 Conn. Comp. Dec. 126, held a salesman and collector on a purely commission basis, who employed various persons to help him, to be an independent contractor and not an employe, the real basis of the decision, as stated by Bradbury in his work on Workmen's Compensation, p. 150, being:

"That the man was conducting an independent business, inasmuch as he employed other people from whose services he derived a profit."

It will be noted that in this case the general agent derives a profit from the activities of the special agents who are appointed by him.

But while it is undeniable that we would have to take account of the fact of full time service, if it were actually present in the case under consideration (though the fact itself would not be conclusive either way), it appears that the precise nature of the full time service, stipulated for in the paragraph of the contract which has been quoted, is not that which the authorities generally lay stress upon for such purpose; for the negative covenant set forth in the fifteenth paragraph is merely that the general agent shall not "give his time or attention to any other business or employment." The question naturally arises as to whether this means that he shall not devote time to the interests of any other enterprise or employment than the affairs of the Union Central Life Insurance Company, or merely that he shall not give any of his time to any other business or employment than the life insurance business.

As throwing light upon the solution of this question, reference may be had to paragraph 9 of the contract, in which the general agent promises

"That he will act exclusively for the party of the first part, so far as to tender first to it, all applications of insurance obtained by him."

This makes it clear that the idea of exclusion set forth in the fifteenth paragraph is not so strict as to require full time devoted to the interests of the employer's business, in the exact sense of the word.

Taking the tests laid down in the last quoted authority, the conclusion seems to follow pretty clearly that the general agents of the Union Central Life Insurance Company are not in its "service" in the sense under discussion. There is apparent no right on the part of the company to control the general agents as to the manner in which their functions are to be performed. While the appointment is for a term of ten years, it is clear that there is nothing in the contract which binds the general agents to the performance of specific services during that period. The method of compensation, which is by commissions, is that which is more appropriate to the relation of agency than that of service.

The general agent is at liberty, to some degree at least, to work for other companies than the Union Central Life Insurance Company, and his duty to furnish accounts is one which is necessary for the purpose of computing commissions, etc., and in nowise supports the view that service, instead of agency, was contemplated.

In short, it would be only in a remote and artificial sense, if at all, that one could regard the general agents of the company as its physical instrumentalities, performing work for it under the guidance of the minds of its officers. Primarily, and almost exclusively, these general agents exercise their functions for the benefit of the business of the company by way of bringing third parties into profitable contractual relations with it.

It is therefore the opinion of this department that the general agents of the Union Central Life Insurance Company are not its "employes" within the meaning of the workmen's compensation act.

What has been said with respect to the general agents applies even more clearly to the special agents, both in their relation to the company itself and in their relation to the general agents, whose appointees they are. Between such special agents and the general agents and the company, tripartite written contracts are made. I shall not quote these contracts, which are quite similar to those made between the company and its general agents, except that there is not even the remotest inference to be drawn from such special agent contracts that they are to devote all their time or indeed any specified part or a portion of their time to the business of the company. They can not be regarded as employes of an independent contractor, within the meaning of the third paragraph of section 1465-61 G. C. (107 O. L. 159), and commented upon in the previous opinion of this department under date of December 7, 1917, (No. 834, Vol. III, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 2246), which seems to have given rise to the present question, for the short and simple reason that they are not employes of any one.

Summarizing, the conclusions of this department are as follows:

The officers of a private corporation are not, as such, its employes, within the meaning of the workman's compensation act; but the fact that a person is an officer of such corporation does not preclude his acting for the company in some additional capacity which may make him an employe.

The general agents of the Union Central Life Insurance Company are not its employes within the meaning of the workman's compensation act.

The special agents of such company are not its employes within the meaning of that act.

All these questions are questions of fact, to be answered ultimately by the Industrial Commission upon such evidence as may be available. I have assumed, in dealing with the second and third of them, that all the relevant facts were before me.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

HUSBAND AND WIFE—MARRIAGE OF WOMAN TO MAN HAVING WIFE LIVING AT THE TIME VOID AB INITIO.

1. The marriage of a woman to a man having a wife living at the time is absolutely void ab initio.

2. While the Ohio statutes authorize the courts to grant a divorce on the ground that either party had a husband or wife living at the time of the marriage from which the divorce is sought, the purpose or office of such statutes is to secure a judicial determination and record of the fact that the second marriage was void ab initio, and not to recognize the marriage for any other purpose as between parties. Such marriage, being absolutely void from the beginning, can confer no rights on either party, in the absence of distinct and positive legislation to that effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—Your letter of June 19, 1919, enclosing a letter received by you from Hon. Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of State, and requesting an opinion as to the effect of a decree entered in a divorce proceeding based upon the ground that the defendant had a wife living at the time of the marriage, was duly received.

The letter from the acting secretary of state, omitting formal parts, reads as follows:

> "This department has received an application for passport from one Anna Paulson of Dayton, Ohio, a native of Sweden, who states that she obtained American citizenship by marrying Theodore L. Lockamy, who at the time of their marriage appears to have been a resident of Montgomery county, Ohio. Subsequent to the marriage it was discovered that Mr. Lockamy had been formerly married, and that his wife was still living and that he had not been divorced at the time of his marriage to Miss Paulson. Miss Paulson then sued Mr. Lockamy for divorce and a certified copy of the order granting same has been supplied to this department, and a copy is enclosed herewith.
> The question of the citizenship of Miss Paulson now before the department seems to depend upon whether the 'marriage' of Miss Paulson and Mr. Lockamy was such a marriage as to confer citizenship upon her under the provisions of section 1994 of the Revised Statutes of the United States:
> 'Any woman who is now or may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen.'
> Since the effect of the divorce decree is a matter to be determined by the state law of Ohio, this department respectfully requests your opinion as to whether the divorce decree completely annuls the marriage and leaves the parties as though it had not taken place, or whether it simply dissolves the marriage relationship from and after the date of the decree."

The question whether or not a bigamous marriage is void or voidable is the subject of an extended note in 1916 C, L. R. A. pages 711 et seq. The American and English cases are collected and reviewed, and the authorities summed up as follows:

> "At common law and in the absence of statutory provision having a modifying effect, a civil disability, such as having a lawful living husband or wife by a former marriage, renders a subsequent marriage absolutely void ab initio, in consequence of which it is good for no legal purpose, no decree of nullity is necessary to the existence of the original rights of the parties, and its invalidity can be maintained in any proceeding either before or after the death of the parties and irrespective of whether the question arises directly or collaterally.
> And in many jurisdictions a bigamous marriage is expressly declared by legislative enactment to be illegal and void from the beginning. And the effect of such a statute is not altered by the fact that it also provides for actions to annul such marriages.
> And even where the statutes merely declare persons legally married 'incapable' of contracting another marriage under penalty, the subsequent marriage of one of the parties is an absolute nullity. So, under a statutory provision that no subsequent or second marriage shall be contracted by any person during the lifetime of any former husband or wife undivorced, a marriage by a woman or man having another husband or wife living and undivorced is void and of no effect, and not merely voidable, so that no decree of nullity is necessary. And in fact it seems that express legislation is necessary in order to render a bigamous marriage voidable only. Thus, it has been held that the fact that the legislature has authorized proceedings to obtain divorce where either of the parties had a former husband or wife living at the time of the solemnizing of the second marriage does not constructively render such second marriage voidable only, but rather simply permits the parties to have the subject judicially investigated and determined, and that to render such a marriage valid or voidable only would require distinct and positive legislation.

But notwithstanding the fact that a bigamous marriage is absolutely void, and that no judicial sentence of nullity is necessary, the courts will entertain a suit to so declare it, this right being granted in some jurisdictions by express statutory provision, and in others by making the second marriage a ground for divorce. It has been said that the reason for this lies in the importance to society of having such questions judicially determined, and not left to depend upon proof of material facts at a time when it might be difficult to make such proof, and also in the quiet and relief to the parties obtained thereby.

In a number of cases the courts, without expressly stating whether the marriage of a person having a husband or wife living by a former marriage was void or merely voidable, have annulled the second marriage in direct proceedings instituted for that purpose. And without expressly deciding whether the marriage of a person having a former husband or wife living was void or voidable under a statute providing that such a marriage may be declared null on the application of either party during the life of the other, it has been held that such a marriage should upon proper application be set aside."

It is also said in the same note that, in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, the conclusion that a bigamous marriage is void cannot be altered or affected by the good faith of the contracting parties or want of knowledge. The effect of a marriage where a former wife or husband has been absent for such length of time as to raise a presumption that he or she is dead is also discussed, but that question does not seem to be involved in the present inquiry, and I express no opinion concerning it.

The exact question was presented to and decided by the supreme court of Ohio in Smith vs. Smith, 5 O. S., 32. In that case Ruth Dennis, while her husband was living, married David Smith. During this latter coverture Smith was seized of an estate of inheritance in certain lands, and upon his death Ruth commenced an action to secure dower in the premises. Her claim was resisted on the ground that her marriage to Smith was void.

In the opinion the court, speaking through Judge Swan, said:

"It seems to be conceded by the counsel for the complainant, Ruth Smith, that if her marriage to Smith was absolutely void, she is not entitled to dower in his estate. Such is undoubtedly the law; and it is equally well settled, that a second marriage, as in this case, while the first husband was living, is absolutely void, unless the legislation of this state has rendered such second marriage voidable only.

It is said that the statute which authorizes proceedings to obtain a divorce, 'where either of the parties had a former husband or wife living at the time of solemnizing the second marriage' (Swan's Stat. 325, section 1), does, constructively, render such second marriage voidable only. The fact of a prior marriage may be one of doubt; and hence this provision permits parties to have the subject judicially investigated and determined. Another object of this provision was, probably, to give alimony to the second wife of a man who had a former wife living. Besides, to render such second marriage valid, or voidable only, until decree of divorce, would require distinct and positive legislation."

In Wright vs. Lore, 12 O. S., 619, the court protected the innocent children of a bigamous marriage in the enjoyment of certain rights secured to them by a statute specially applicable to such cases, "although," as the court said, "the marriage must be deemed in law a nullity."

In Kennedy vs. Cowle, 4 N. P. 105, it appears that the complainant had innocently married a man who had a wife living at the time. The court, following Smith vs. Smith, supra, held the marriage absolutely void.

In the opinion, at page 108, the court said:

"In this case the plaintiff was in no way to blame for the unlawful union, she entered into it in good faith, and had a lawful right to contract the marriage relation. She was the innocent victim of deceit and fraud. But if we read this opinion of the supreme court aright, to render this marriage voidable merely would require distinct and positive legislation, and until we have such legislation such marriage is absolutely void. * * *

The supreme court says in substance that the reason for making this unlawful marriage a ground for divorce, was to permit either party to have the subject judicially investigated and determined. And that another reason 'was probably to give alimony to the second wife of a man who had a former wife living.' In short, to settle the question as to the validity of the marriage, and to give the wronged woman, if he were guilty, compensation and damages out of his property.

A man can have but one lawful wife living. For the sake of convenience we sometimes speak of a man as having two wives, or wife number one and wife number two and of wife number three, but legally a man can have but one wife living. No matter how innocent a second woman may be of any wrong-doing, no matter how much she may be deceived in entering into the marriage relation, if the man has at the time of his marriage with her, a wife living, she cannot be his lawful wife."

In State vs. Moore, 1 O. D. (Reprint) 171, it was held that

"The marriage of a person having a former husband or wife living, is void ab initio, and not merely voidable, by the common law."

In Fultz vs. Fultz, 21 O. D., 159, a married woman believing her husband to be dead, married another man. In an action against the latter for divorce on the grounds of gross neglect of duty and cruelty, her application for temporary alimony was denied, for the reason that

"The second marriage was absolutely void and the plaintiff is not, and never was the wife of defendant."

An examination of the Ohio statutes fails to disclose any distinct and positive legislation making the second or bigamous marriage valid or voidable only (as required by Smith vs. Smith, supra), so as to take the case out of the common law rule declaring such marriages to be absolutely void. The furthest the legislature of this state has gone in that direction has been to permit illegitimate children to inherit and transmit inheritance to and from their mother, etc. (section 8590 G. C.); to declare children born of parents whose marriage is null in law, to be legitimate (section 8591 G. C.); to authorize courts to grant a divorce on the ground that either party had a husband or wife at the time of the marriage, and to pronounce the marriage contract dissolved, etc. (section 11979, 11986 G. C.); to provide that the granting of a divorce shall not affect the legitimacy of the children (section 11987 G. C.). To which also may be added that relief may be obtained in equity as to property accumulated by the joint efforts of the parties. See Fultz vs. Fultz, supra.

It would seem that if a second marriage is absolutely void ab initio, the purpose or office of the Ohio statutes authorizing the courts to grant a divorce on the ground that either party had a husband or wife living at the time of the second marriage is to secure a judicial determination and record of that fact, and not to recognize the marriage for any other purpose as between the parties, and that such marriage can confer no rights upon either party, in the absence of distinct and positive legislation to that effect.

Whether or not such a marriage will support a claim of citizenship is a federal question, upon which I express no opinion.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS—DAYS OF REGISTRATION IN QUADRENNIAL REGISTRATION CITIES—HAVE AUTHORITY TO PAY FOR ACTUAL WORK OF REGISTRARS—FOUR DAYS MAXIMUM—SUBMISSION OF CONSTITUTONAL AMENDMENT OR REFERENDUM IN MUNICIPAL ELECTION; DOES NOT MAKE STATE ELECTION UNDER SECTION 4900 G. C.

1. In quadrennial registration cities the days of registration in uneven years are Friday and Saturday of the third week prior to the November election and payments made to registrars for registration on other days is illegal.

2. Boards of deputy state supervisors of elections in quadrennial registration cities have authority to pay registrars for actual work performed by such registrars under the statutes, outside of the two registration days in uneven years and, considering the nature of the duties put upon such registrars outside of registration days, an allowance of four days' pay in all, at four dollars per day in quadrennial registration cities in uneven years, would be fair and not excessive.

3. Registrars are entitled to compensation for making alphabetical lists of electors, transferring electors, and calling for supplies, the amount to be set by the board of deputy state supervisors.

4. The submission of a constitutional amendment or referendum in a municipal election does not make such election a state election under section 4900 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgement is made of your letter requesting an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"Covering the registration for election of November 6, 1917, the city of Portsmouth, Ohio, made up a pay-roll for two registrars for each precinct of the city, and for your guidance we are copying pay-roll of one precinct as follows:

Precinct A 1st Ward Names	Days of service. Oct.	Nov.	No. of Days	Per day	Total due.
Fred Brodbeck	4—11—19—20	5	5	$4	$20.00
Frank Duplain	4—11—19—20	5	5	$4	$20.00

We also have a letter from State Examiner Heck under date of November 2, 1918, as follows:

'I again enclose you voucher No. 206, representing the pay-roll of registrars for the election of November 6, 1917. Under date of November 11, 1918, you state that we should make findings for recovery jointly against the persons drawing the excess, the board of elections authorizing, and the city auditor paying. You further state that the city of Portsmouth, being a city in which general registration is required at presidential elections only, the law as found in section 4900 G. C. would govern and that the registrars should have been paid for two days instead of five.

For this reason I submit the proposition for your further consideration and ask you to read in connection with section 4900 G. C. the provisions of section 4894, which seem to be in conflict.

You will note that section 4894 stipulates that the days for registration of electors in cities that have quadrennial general registration and yearly registration of new electors where general registration is required only in presidential years, shall be Thursday in the fifth week, Thursday in the fourth week, and Friday and Saturday in the third week next before the day of general election in November of each year.

The part underscored applies to cities where there is general registration only in presidential years, and hence applies to Portsmouth and all other cities of the state having a population of less than 100,000.

It would seem from section 4894, that four days were stipulated for registration.

Now we turn to section 4900—which stipulates that in all except annual registration cities, the registration of new voters or electors, for other than presidential and state elections, shall take place on Friday and Saturday in the third week before any such election, or but two days set apart for such reggistration.

Question—How do you reconcile the apparent conflict in these two sections? If the conflict exists, which of the two sections govern? I wish you would fully consider this as the question will be raised if a finding is returned.

Again, I refer you to section 4901, which requires the registrars, after registration is over, to make a thorough canvas for the purpose of ascertaining whether any of the electors registered have removed or died and to make a report to the board of elections.

Question—Under this section may the board of elections allow the registrars' time outside the regular registration days?

Again, under section 4916, the registrars on Monday in the week preceding the November election are required to prepare an alphabetical list of all electors registered in their precincts. Said list to be furnished the board of elections for the purpose of having three copies printed, two of which shall be posted at the polling places.

Question—Can the board of elections allow the registrars pay for the Monday on which they are required to prepare these lists?

Lastly—I refer you to section 4944 which states:

'The registrars of each election precinct in such cities (meaning all cities less than 100,000) shall be allowed and paid for their services as registrars four dollars per day and no more for not more than six days at any one election.'

Now I wish you would fully consider these sections to which I have called your attention, and after consideration give me your opinion as to whether the board of elections were legally warranted in authorizing the registrars to be paid for five days for the November, 1917, election. I hope that you will find that they were not so warranted, as it looks to me like a useless expense.

Since writing you I wrote several of the city auditors of the state to ascertain what the board of elections was doing in their cities as to registration on other than state elections. The replies indicate the following information:

REGISTRARS FOR ELECTION, NOV. 6, 1917.

City	No. of days.	Amount paid Registrars.
Canton	2	$1,792.00
East Liverpool	3	420.00
Sandusky	4	980.00
Steubenville	6	776.00
Springfield	3	1,556.00
Lorain	4	672.00
Zanesville	5	1,400.00
Lima	4	1,216.00
Newark	4	946.00

You will note that of the nine cities only one had but two days registration for the November election of 1917, and that the city of Canton.

Please let me hear from you at your very earliest convenience and return enclosed voucher.

Yours very truly,
WILL E. HECK.'

We should like your written opinion in answer to these questions. Mr. Heck's preceding letter asked the question whether more than two days of registration could be paid for."

Bearing upon the same matter in a subsequent communication you say:

"In connection with our request for opinion relative to election and registration charges in the city of Portsmouth, Ohio, in which request we embodied in detail copy of letter received from State Examiner Will E. Heck, under date of November 23, 1918, we desire to call your attention to one point as follows:

In the election of November 6, 1917, which was a municipal election, a vote was taken at the same time covering a constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors.

We are desirous of furnishing you this information, as we are not satisfied in our own minds whether this will have any bearing or not, upon the questions involved."

Fom the above statement of facts, it would seem that the deputy state supervisors of elections of Scioto county conducted a registration in the respective precincts for four days prior to the municipal election of 1917, such days being October 4, October 11, October 19 and October 20, or in other words, the Thursday in the 5th week, the Thursday in the 4th week and Friday and Saturday in the third week next before the day of the general election in November, 1917.

In the proper analysis of the sections of the statutes which bear upon registration in cities, matter that is pertinent to the inquiry herein is found in sections 4871, 4872, 4879, 4893, 4894, 4900, 4901, 4903, 4916, 4917, 4918, 4919, 4921 and 4944, all of which treat in more or less degree on the duties of the registrars and the times and manner in which they are to perform their work.

Section 4872 reads:

"In cities which now or hereafter may have a population of eleven thousand eight hundred and less than one hundred thousand, when so ascertained, a general registration of all the electors therein shall only be had quadrennially at each and every presidential election, at the time and upon the days hereinafter specified. At all other state or public elections those electors only of such cities shall be required to register as may be new electors or who have moved into any precinct of such city since such general registration."

Section 4879 reads:

"On or before the first day of September each year, the board of deputy state supervisors shall appoint for each election precinct in such city two electors of the city to act as registrars of the electors and also as judges of election in such precinct, On or before the first day of October each year, the board shall appoint two additional judges of elections and two clerks of elections for each precinct of such city."

It is noted that you call attention to the presumed conflict which seems to exist between section 4894 and section 4900, and it is advised that section 4894 refers to the registration of electors which takes place in those years in which a state election is held, that is, in the even years. The section which governs the days of registration, in the uneven years, in cities which have quadrennial general registration, and in which class the city of Portsmouth belongs, is section 4900 G. C., which reads as follows:

"In cities in which a general registration of electors is required at presidential elections only, at all other state or other public elections, those electors who have been duly registered at such general registration and have not removed from the precinct in which they then registered at such general registration in such city shall not be required to register. But at such state or other public elections, at the times hereinbefore provided for registration days, only those electors of such city shall be required to register as may be new electors or who have moved into a precinct of such city since a general registration and have not been registered therein, except that at such public election, other than presidential and state, such restristration shall take place on Friday and Saturday in the third week before any such election. * * *"

From the above section it is apparent that for the actual work of registration in uneven years the days of such registration shall be Friday and Saturday in the third week before any election, unless the year in question is one in which there is a state or presidential election, when such days named in section 4900 G. C. do not apply. It is entirely proper, however, to call attention to the fact that the two days provided for in section 4900 G. C., for the registration in precincts of new electors in other years than the state election years, is not the only work which devolves upon the registrars who have been appointed by the deputy state supervisors of elections. Thus one of the first duties which such registrars have to perform, even before the two days set aside for registration of new electors in the several precincts, is set forth in section 4893 G. C., which reads as follows:

"On Wednesday in the fifth week before the November election, each year, the registrars of each precinct in such city shall apply for such lists and such registers and the map of their precinct, and such printed instruction for the discharge of their duties as the board of deputy state supervisors may lawfully prescribe."

Again, in section 4916 G. C., it is noted:

"On the day following each registration day, unless such day be Sunday or a registration day, in which event on the next succeeding day, each year, the registrars of each election precinct shall make and deliver to the board of deputy state supervisors at its office in such city a true list of the names of all electors registered by them in their respective precincts on the preceding day or days, arranged in the alphabetical order of their surnames, followed by their full Christian names and residences, and having the registry number of each prefixed. * * *"

It will be seen from the above section that on the day following each registration day, unless such day be Sunday or registration day, it is mandatory upon the registrars to prepare a true list of the electors whom they have registered in the precincts during the registration days, which, as before shown, were Friday and Saturday, and as section 4916 provides that this shall not be done on Sunday, the preparation of this list is contemplated as being made on Monday following the Friday and Saturday stated as the two registration days in cities of this class. The preparation of this list of electors for the board of state supervisors is a matter of great importance, as indicated in sections 4916 and 4917, and must be made alphabetically so the same can be printed for posting at the polling place of such precinct within five days after such boards receive such list from the registrars, and in addition there shall be delivered to the controlling committee of each political party or authorized committee of each set of candidates nominated by petition, a printed list which shall include all the names registered in such precinct. It is further provided that upon the completion of such registration the board of deputy state supervisors in such county containing a registration city, shall cause at least fifty additional copies of such list to be printed and bound in pamphlet form for immediate distribution, such being the language of section 4917 G. C. Registrars should be allowed credit for the proper preparation of such precinct list for the board of deputy state supervisor and should be given ample opportunity.

It will be seen from the above section that on the day following each registration day, unless such day be Sunday or registration day, it is mandatory upon the registrars to prepare a true list of the electors whom they have registered in the precincts during the registration days, which, as before shown, were Friday and Saturday, and as section 4916 provides that this shall not be done on Sunday, the preparation of this list is contemplated as being made on Monday following the Friday and Saturday stated as the two registration days in cities of this class. The preparation of this list of electors for the board of state supervisors is a matter of great importance, as indicated in sections 4916 and 4917, and must be made alphabetically so the same can be printed for posting at the polling place of such precinct within five days after such boards receive such list from the registrars, and in addition there shall be delivered to the controlling committee of each political party or authorized committee of each set of candidates nominated by petition, a printed list which shall include all the names registered in such precinct. It is further provided that upon the completion of such registration the board of deputy state supervisors in such county containing a registration city, shall cause at least fifty additional copies of such list to be printed and bound in pamphlet form for immediate distribution, such being the language of section 4917 G. C. Registrars should be allowed credit for the proper preparation of such precinct list for the board of deputy state supervisors and should be given ample opportunity to do it correctly, for aside from the use to be made of such lists, as contemplated in the statute, the voters in the precinct are entitled to know the names of any who are illegally registered that they may be challenged in the election, and such printed duplicate lists might be later used as an exhibit in a court proceeding wherein a recount may have been demanded on some particular office or issue.

As to the further duty of the registrars, aside from the two days of actual registering of voters in uneven years, attention is invited to section 4919, which reads:

> "On Monday, the day preceding the November election in each year, the registrars of each election precinct shall meet at two-thirty o'clock afternoon at the polling place appointed for holding elections therein, and there remain in session until five-thirty o'clock afternoon central standard time. At this meeting, they shall receive and act upon any application for either granting or receiving certificates of removal or correction of mistakes, as herein provided for. * * *."

Section 4921, bearing upon the same Monday as indicated in section 4919, also reads:

> "On Monday, the day preceding the November election in each year, the registrars, as judges of election and the other two judges of election in each precinct shall meet at the polling place appointed for holding the election therein at seven o'clock afternoon, punctually, and then and there organize as a board by electing one of their number by ballot as chairman. * * *."

From these two sections it is noted that on the day preceding the Tuesday on which elections are held in Ohio, the registrars are mandatorily told to meet in their respective precincts and remain in session until 5:30 o'clock for the purpose of granting or receiving certificates of removal and that a short time after, at 7 o'clock, they are to meet punctually with the other two judges of elections and the two clerks, who are to be on duty on the following day, and organize as a board for the election of the following day.

"The registrars of each election precinct in such cities shall be allowed and paid for their services as registrars four dollars per day and no more for not more than six days at any one election. * * * No registrar, judge or clerk shall be entitled to the compensation so fixed except upon the allowance and order of the board of deputy state supervisors made at a joint session, certifying that each has fully performed his duty according to law as such, and stating the number of days' service actually performed by each. Such allowance and order shall be certified by the chief deputy and clerk of the board to the city or county auditor."

This section provides the maximum pay that can be allowed by a board of deputy state supervisors in any registration city to the registrars for all duties performed prior to such election day and such pay is limited to six days and actual duty must be shown on each and every one of the days in question for which pay is demanded.

From a reading of the sections quoted herein, bearing upon registration times, duties and pay, it will be noted briefly that there are actually five days prior to the election in such municipality having quadrennial registration in which the registrars are required to perform some duty pertaining to the city registration. These days are, first, on Wednesday in the 5th week before the November election; second, the registration days on Friday and Saturday in the third week before such election; third, the Monday following such registration period of two days for the making of registration lists; fourth, the Monday immediately preceding the November election on which afternoon the registrars shall meet in their precincts to grant or receive certificates of removal, etc.

Bearing upon the question of the number of days for which registrars may be paid prior to any election, attention is invited to Opinion No. 1985, issued by the Attorney-General on October 18, 1916, Vol. 2, page 1692, wherein it was held that

"Registrars of electors in registration cities are entitled to compensation for one day for applying to the deputy state supervisors of elections for lists, registers and maps and making and delivering the alphabetical lists of registered electors where such compensation is allowed, and ordered by the deputy state supervisors of elections according to the provisions of section 4944 G. C., and the total number of days for which compensation is so allowed does not exceed six."

This opinion was rendered by the Attorney-General to the secretary of state upon a question which came from the city of Youngstown as to the number of days for which registrars could be paid. Quoting from such opinion:

"From the language of the foregoing provision (4916 G. C.) it is clearly not contemplated that it shall be the duty of the registrars to make the alphabetical lists of registered electors therein required on the registration days named in section 4894 G. C., supra. On the contrary, these lists are required to be made on a succeeding day with the exceptions mentioned."

Again the opinion says:

"I am led to conclude that it was intended that there should be conferred upon the deputy state supervisors of elections authority to allow to registrars compensation, if not in excess of one day, for or in lieu of their services in making application for supplies and in making the alphabetical list of registered electors. So that in the even numbered years the aggregate number of days of service, making an allowance of one day for making application for supplies on the Wednesday in the fifth week before election, and in making the aphabetical list of electors, will be six.

While the board of deputy state supervisors of elections may in the exercise of its discretion allow compensation to registrars for six days * * * this opinion may not be construed to hold that the provisions of section 4944 G. C. impose upon the deputy state supervisors of elections any duty to allow compensation for the maximum number of days therein prescribed."

Your attention is also invited to an opinion of the Attorney-General, dated April 19, 1910, and addressed to Hon. Horace L. Small, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio, found on page 974 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1910-1911, and the question therein raised is pertinent to the one herein as to whether registrars could be paid for Thursday in the fifth week preceding the day of election, as was done in 1917, in the case before us. Such opinion says:

"In the fall of 1909, the deputy state supervisors of elections for Scioto county, under mistake of law, undertook to hold a registration of new voters, etc., on Thursday in the fifth week preceding the day of election. The mistake of law was discovered and no further registration of electors was had until Friday and Saturday in the third week preceding the election. Said deputy supervisors have now drawn vouchers for the compensation of registrars and clerks and for the other expenses of such registration, including that of the first day above referred to, and the same have been presented to the city auditor for allowance. Shall the city auditor allow the same, particularly such portion thereof as relates to the expenses incurred and compensation alleged to be payable on account of said first day's registration?"

Commenting upon such registration held in Portsmouth prior to the Friday and Saturday in the third week preceding the election and held on Thursday in the fifth week preceding the day of the November election in 1909, and corresponding to the facts herein stated as regards the November election of 1917, the Attorney-General said:

"In my opinion the auditor should not issue his warrant for any expenses incurred or compensation alleged to be payable on account of said first day's registration. It is conceded, of course, that there is no authority for holding such registration on the day named in the odd numbered years in quadrennial registration cities; this is clear under former section 2926h Revised Statutes."

It is pertinent to remark here that the section construed, 2926h Revised Statutes, was placed in the General Code as it now appears in section 4894 G. C. without any change whatever as regards the days mentioned therein. That is to say, the days occurring in the General Code under section 4894 G. C. are the specific days which occurred in section 2926h R. S., upon which this opinion regarding the Portsmouth election officials, was issued. Concluding, the Attorney-General said:

"I am, therefore, of the opinion that the board of state supervisors of elections being without authority to order registration to be had on the day in question, none of the expenses and compensation could be lawfully charged against the public funds. * * * Public officers may be paid from the public treasury compensation for such services only as are expressly required to be performed by law."

Your table of Ohio cities which have quadrennial registration shows considerable variation as to the number of day's pay allowed to registrars in such cities, such table showing that the payments have been made all the way from two days in Canton to six days in Steubenville for the year 1917. It may be said, however, that as regards Canton, the statement that payment was made for two days is error, as the clerk of the board of elections of Stark County advises that they have uniformly allowed four day's pay for municipal election year. You also say in your later communication that at such municipal election a vote was taken at the same time on a constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors and indicate that such vote on the amendment in question might have something to do with the registration payments as to whether the election in question was a state election or a municipal election. On this point you are advised that the mere fact that the constitutional amendment was submitted at the time of the municipal election and constituted a separate ballot at such election does not take the election of November 6, 1917, out of its class as a municipal election held in an uneven year.

The law contemplates that local boards of elections shall pay for not to exceed six days to each registering officer "for services as registrar" (section 4944), but such six days' pay could be granted in quadrennial registration cities only in even years when state elections are held, for in those years section 4894 G. C. establishes four registration days, while section 4900 G. C. limits the actual registration days to the Friday and Saturday in the third week before any election in quadrennial registration cities where such election is "other than presidential and state," that is, a municipal election in uneven years. As heretofore shown, the work of the registrars is not all done on the two days of actual registration, for supplies must be called for, a half day for transfers is provided, as well as the preparation of duplicate alphabetical registration lists. But in taking care of any single one of these items it can hardly be shown that such duty takes an entire day; thus, the duty on the Wednesday in the fifth week prior to election is a mere calling for the supplies at the board of elections and takes only a fraction of a day; the preparation of the alphabetical duplicate lists on the day following registration would hardly take a full day's time of two registrars working undisturbed, for in practice in many registration cities, the registrars use their spare minutes between callers and their two hours off between two and four o'clock in the afternoon, for bringing the lists near completion, and then remain after nine o'clock in the evening when registration closes to complete the work and deliver the alphabetical lists to the deputy state supervisors of elections. In other words, they have performed by extra labor what the law says can be done by them the following Monday in quadrennial registration cities, and surely they should be compensated therefor. Similarly, there is another fractional day beginning at two-thirty in the afternoon of the Monday preceding the Tuesday election, when transfers are granted till five-thirty P. M. At seven P. M. the two registrars meet with the other two judges of election and organize for the following day's work, but this is part of the election judges' work and registration in precincts ends at 5:30 P. M. The registration day is a long day's work for it begins at eight A. M. and ends at nine P. M., with two hours off from two to four P. M., or eleven hours of actual questioning the persons desiring to register. For this period four dollars is allowed for each day and if this is a day's work then the mere calling for the supplies is not a day's work, nor is the three hours on Monday afternoon prior to election a full day's work, but the combining of all the service in calling for supplies, preparing the alphabetical duplicate lists and making the transfers could very logically be called an additional two days' work, if the board of deputy state supervisors decided that services are rendered by the registrars.

Seemingly, then, the rule should be in quadrennial registration cities that since there are two days less of actual registration in uneven years than in even years when state elections are held, the pay of registrars in uneven years should be two days less than in even years. So if the maximum of six days was allowed in a state or presidential election year, it follows that not to exceed four days could be allowed in an uneven year when registration days are reduced in quadrennial registration cities from four to two in number. It is for the board of deputy supervisors to decide if the extra work mandatorily placed on registrars outside of registration days is sufficient to allow full compensation for the two days above indicated, parts of which days are used (1) in preparing alphabetical lists, (2) transfers on the Monday prior to election, giving consideration also to the first call for supplies, but such compensation would hardly exceed four days in all for all registration services in a quadrennial registration city in an uneven year, and such compensation is first, for two days' registration on the Friday and Saturday in the third week prior to election; second, for the additional work placed on the registrar in sections 4916 and 4919 G. C. Your survey of Ohio quadrennial registration cities shows that in Springfield and East Liverpool the deputy state supervisors allowed but one day for this additional work or three days in all in 1917, but conditions are not necessarily the same in all precincts or cities in making lists or transfers, and four days' compensation could be granted under the law in uneven years, if services commensurate were performed; under section 4944 G. C. the board must act on such compensation in joint session and certify the same to the city auditor by its chief deputy and clerk.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. In quadrennial registration cities the days of registration in uneven years are Friday and Saturday of the third week prior to the November election and payments made to registrars for registration on other days is illegal.

2. Boards of deputy state supervisors of elections in quadrennial registration cities have authority to pay registrars for actual work performed by such registrars under the statutes, outside of the two registration days in uneven years and, considering the nature of the duties put upon such registrars outside of registration days, an allowance of four days' pay in all, at four dollars per day in quadrennial registration cities in uneven years, would be fair and not excessive.

3. Registrars are entitled to compensation for making alphabetical lists of electors, transferring electors, and calling for supplies, the amount to be set by the board of deputy state supervisors.

4. The submission of a constitutional amendment or referendum in a municipal election does not make such election a state election under section 4900 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—NO AUTHORITY FOR USE OF "MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR" FUND IN HIGHWAY WORK.

HELD, under the facts as stated in the opinion, that there is no authority for the use of "Maintenance and Repair" fund in highway work. Opinion of August 17, 1917, adhered to.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Department, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication of recent date, reading as follows:

> "The much mooted question as to latitude and limits of the use of repair funds in reconstructing and repairing highways has given this department a good deal of worry and uncertainty as to just how far we may go in the use of such funds. A general opinion was rendered by your predecessor on the use of such funds, but more or less uncertainty arises when we attempt to construe this opinion in application to so many specific cases. A few days ago a request came to the department for aid in Geauga county and on two roads in Huron county, on the initiative of the commissioners in each case, asking for the repair of:
> 1st.—Geauga County, Section "D" I. C. H. No. 15. By widening and adding a reinforced concrete top to an original concrete road, the surface of which was not reinforced in the beginning. You will note in this case the particular deviation from the original plan is widening. The basis of cost of this proposed improvement is 25 per cent. county and 75 per cent. state.
> 2nd.—Huron County, Section "C," I. C. H. No. 455. By widening and adding bituminous macadam top course, the original surface of the road being waterbound macadam. In this case the departure from the original improvement is both in character of the paved roadway and the widening of the pavement. The ratio of cost for this improvement is $16,500.00 state funds and $11,000.00 county funds.
> 3rd—Huron County, Section "N," I. C. H. No. 290. By constructing a monolithic brick surface on a surface originally constructed of concrete, and widening the traveled or paved portion of the roadway from 12 to 16 ft. the entire new surface to be of monolithic brick. The departure here from the original improvement is a change in the character of pavement and width of pavement. The basis of co-operation in the cost is $22,000.00 state and $22,000.00 county.
> "I have been directed to request an opinion as to whether or not this department may co-operate with the counties in the use of maintenance money as above indicated."

Doubtless the opinion to which you refer is that dated August 17, 1917, appearing in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. II, page 1553, wherein the department reached the conclusion, as shown by the head note:

> "Where an improvement changes the width of the improved part of a highway from ten feet to fourteen feet, that part of the cost of such improvement to be borne by the state cannot be taken from the 'Maintenance and Repair' fund of the state."

An opinion along similar lines had also been rendered by this department under date of March 12, 1917, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. I, page 231, the head note reading as follows:

> "The funds derived from the registration of automobiles creating what is known as the 'maintenance and repair' fund can be used only for the upkeep of the intercounty and main market roads of the state and not for the reconstruction and rebuilding of the same."

It is realized that instances arise wherein there is difficulty in distinguishing between an "improvement" and a "repair," since after all a "repair," speaking generally, is an "improvement." This subject is dealt with in some detail in the two opinions above referred to. The following is quoted from said opinion of August 17, 1917:

> "In the improvement under contemplation the width of the highway is to be increased from ten feet to fourteen feet, thus making practically a new and different improvement from that which was originally made.
> It does not seem to me that such a change could be brought under the term 'maintenance and repair,' and thus be paid for out of the fund which is particularly set aside for maintaining and repairing improved highways of the state.
> My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in Vol. I, of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, at page 990, called attention to this fact in an opinion rendered by him. On page 991, Mr. Turner uses the following language:
> '* * * Some substantial part of the original improvement must remain, and in order to constitute a repair the proposed operation must contemplate the use of that part of the old improvement still remaining and must further contemplate a completed work that will be substantially like the original. It will not, however, rob a contemplated operation of its character as a repair merely because it is proposed to so conduct the operation that the highway when repaired will possess certain improvements as compared with the original work. In the specific instance referred to by you, it is my opinion that the fact that some slight alterations are to be made in the grade of some parts of the road, that the margins are to be straightened up and that the roadway is to be widened in places will not change the character of the proposed operation as a repair. The present cuts and fills will be utilized, substantially the present grade will be followed and the old macadam not worn away will be used as a base. * * *'
> It is my opinion that the rule laid down by Mr. Turner in the above opinion should not be extended at all beyond the language used therein and the facts to which it was applied."

It is quite clear that the three specific cases described in your letter come within the scope of the opinion of August 17, 1917, rather than within the purview of the opinion of 1915; for it is noted that in the three cases you mention, widening is proposed.

Inasmuch as the statutes in point are still effective in the same form as existed on August 17, 1917, it is concluded in conformity with the opinion of that date, that there is no authority for the use of the "Maintenance and Repair" fund in the three instances stated in your letter.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

BANKS AND BANKING—MONEY PAID TO BANK FOR LIBERTY BOND IS A SPECIAL DEPOSIT AND TRUST FUND—RIGHTS OF SUBSCRIBER IN CASE OF FAILURE OF BANK—PREFERRED CLAIM.

1. Money paid to a bank by a subscriber for a liberty loan bond, to be transmitted to the United States government for such bond, is a special deposit and a trust fund in the hands of such bank.

2. In the event of the failure of the bank, without delivery of such bond to the subscriber, the latter is entitled to have a trust impressed for his benefit upon any property or assets coming into the hands of the liquidating agent, into which he can trace and identify such payment, either in its original or substituted form. As to other property or assets, his claim is only that of a general creditor.

3. The rights of such subscribers inter se or in funds actually transmitted by said bank to the United States government not considered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. PHILIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You advise me that an insolvent bank in process of liquidation by your department had accepted subscriptions (and payments thereon), to the various liberty loans and also to the fifth or Victory loan, and that only a portion of the earlier bonds and none of the Victory loan issue have been delivered to the respective subscribers.

You inquire whether claims filed for the amounts so paid on such subscriptions are to be considered as general or preferred, and have furnished me with forms of applications for bonds for signature by subscribers, used by the bank in the transactions. From these it appears that the bank was the subscibers' agent, whose duty it was to transmit their funds to the United States government in payment for the bonds.

Clearly, the deposit of the money with the bank was for a specific purpose and did not give rise to the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties. On the contrary, the amount thus paid became a trust fund in the bank's hands.

Ryan vs. Phillips, 44 Pac. 909.
Boone County Nat. Bank vs. Latimer, 67 Fed. 27.
Met. Nat. Bank vs. Campbell Commission Co., 77 Fed. 705.

The claims of these subscribers are therefore prior to those of general creditors, providing the facts are such as to bring them within the rule relating to the tracing of trust funds, which I shall now discuss. I assume that the subscibers made their payments to some officer of the bank who was acting within his authority in accepting them, so that there is no doubt as to the bank's liability in some form.

The first inquiry is, does the mere fact that the bank received this money give the subscribers who paid it a lien on its assets generally? Or, stating the question in another form, is it enough to impress a trust upon the property in your hands to show that the bank's assets were at one time increased by the addition of these funds? The answer must be in the negative. A few older cases are found, particularly in Wisconsin, which would support an affirmative conclusion, but they have all been overruled.

A very fair general statement of the proposition applicable is found in the syllabus of Metropolitan National Bank vs. Campbell Commission Co., supra:

"The rule permitting the owner of a fund, which has been misappropriated by one who held it in trust or for a specific purpose, to follow the trust property in the hands of the trustees, or of a receiver, in case of insolvency, does not extend beyond permitting such owner to pursue the fund in kind, or in specific property into which it has been converted, or, if the fund has been mingled with the trustee's other property, to establish a charge on the mass of such property for the amount of such fund, and it does not give to the owner of such fund any rights, in preference to other creditors of the trustee, in property into which the trust fund has in no way entered. Bank vs. Latimer, 67 Fed. 27, reaffirmed."

In Smith, et al., Trustees, vs. Fuller, et al., Assignees, 86 O. S. 57, the court, after finding that a certain deposit in an insolvent bank was special, said in the syllabus (fifth branch):

"Where, in such case, the bank fails and makes as assignment for the benefit of creditors before such fund is withdrawn, and it appears that the bank, upon receiving such deposit, had mingled the trust money with its own funds, money paid out from such fund for its own purposes will be presumed to have been paid from its own money, and not from the trust fund. And if it be shown that at all times from the making of the deposit to the time of the assignment by the bank, there was in its vaults money of amount and value equal to the amount so deposited, a court of equity may engraft a trust upon such money, and the trustee will become a preferred creditor to the amount of such deposit."

A leading case, decided by the United States circuit court of appeals for this circuit, is Board of Commissioners of Crawford County vs. Strawn, Receiver, 157 Fed. 49; 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1100. There a county treasurer had illegally deposited county funds in a bank which afterward failed. The law of the case is well stated in the third, fourth and fifth branches of the syllabus appearing in the L. R. A. report, as follows:

"3. The extent to which trust funds blended with general moneys of a bank have been dissipated, or can be identified, when the cash in the bank has sunk below the amount of the trust fund, is to be determined, not by the cash balance when the bank closes its doors in insolvency, but by the lowest cash balance after the trust fund deposits are made, to which are to be added the subsequent trust fund deposits.

4. Trust funds blended with general moneys of an insolvent bank cannot be identified in the shifting balances carried in reserve or in correspondent banks, made up of collections and proceeds of rediscounts, and sometimes of funds remitted by the insolvent bank, where the trust fund is not traced to any of the rediscounts or collections; the presumption as to the funds remitted being that they were not trust moneys.

5. The fact that some of an insolvent bank's commercial paper, consisting of many separate instruments acquired at different times, may have been purchased with the general funds of the bank with which trust moneys have been mingled, is insufficient to fasten a trust upon it, or upon the proceeds of a part of it."

See also Macy vs. Roedenbeck, L. R. A. 1916C, p. 12, and the annotation on the subject of "Identifying misapplied trust funds to follow and recover them." The subject is elaborately discussed in 39 Cyc. 528, et seq.

Similar questions have arisen and been considered by the courts of practically all of the American states and by a number of English tribunals, and the rule may be safely announced in the language of 39 Cyc. 529:

> "It is well settled that in order that a trust fund or trust property which has been misapplied or wrongfully dissipated may be followed in equity and the trust enforced as against the trustee or one who has acquired the property with knowledge of its character, it is necessary that it shall be clearly traced and identified, either in its original or a substituted form."

The statement of this proposition would constitute an answer to your inquiry, but I desire to call your attention to certain other rules and presumptions which may become important in the practical liquidation of this bank. If the fund can be traced into the general mass of property in the possession of the liquidating agent, it is not necessary that its exact identity should have been preserved; in other words, the identical pieces of coin or articles of property need not be found. The money received may have gone into the assets on hand, and if so, a trust may be impressed on the subsituted property.

When it has been shown that these funds were placed with the bank's assets, subsequent disbursements will be deemed to have been made from money belonging to the bank, upon the presumption that the latter used its own money first. If the payment made can be traced into and identified as part of the assets on hand, it is not fatal to the claimant's right that he can not segregate it from the general mass. On the contrary, the whole mixed fund or property becomes subject to his lien. But the burden is upon him to trace and identify his money or property in its original or substituted form and if it appears that it could not have gone into any of the assets taken over by the liquidating agent, or was never placed in the bank by the officer receiving it, no trust can be asserted. The mere fact that it has been expended or dissipated by the bank's officers or even used to pay expenses, debts or salaries, would not be sufficient, nor could a trust be impressed on moneys in the bank's vaults at the time of its discontinuance of business, if subsequent to the date of the payment by the subcriber its funds had been entirely depleted. To illustrate: If the bank had received from the subscribers, in the manner indicated in your inquiry, ten thousand dollars, and thereafter the amount of its funds had fallen to one thousand dollars, and had risen again to ten thousand dollars, only the smaller sum would be subjeet to the trust.

The situation may become further involved by the fact that these subscribers made their deposits with the bank at different times, or that a portion of the amounts paid by them may have been turned over to the government. These questions will not be considered now, but can be disposed of if they arise.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—LANDS OWNED BY SUCH A BOARD ARE NOT SUBJECT TO ASSESSMENT FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Under existing statutes, lands owned by a board of education are not subject to assessment for road improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. V. W. FILIATRAUT, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for opinion the following:

> "A road is improved in the usual manner and the half mile assessment plan is agreed upon. Property owned by a board of education is within the half mile zone of the new improvement.

Question: Is the school board of the township under section 5349 or section 4759 or any other section exempt from the payment of this paving assessment?"

As was pointed out in an opinion of this department of date April 13, 1916, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1916, page 663, our Supreme Court has held in Lima vs. Cemetery Association, 42 O. S. 128, that there is a well recognized distinction between an assessment and a tax, and that a statute exempting lands from taxation does not of itself mean that such lands are also exempt from local assessments. Inasmuch as there was considered in said former opinion, the question of assessment against school property in connection with the improvement of a municipal street, the following quotation from said opinion is not out of place here:

"In the case of the city of Toledo vs. Board of Education, 48 O. S., 83, the court evidently had in mind its interpretation of the above provision of section 3571 R. S. in the case of Lima vs. Cemetery Association, supra, and, in holding that school property is not liable to assessment for a street improvement, it is manifest that the court based its decision on the above provision of section 4759 G. C., that 'real or personal property vested in any board of education shall be exempt * * * from sale on execution or other writ or order in the nature of an execution,' applying said provision of said statute the same as it applied the similar provision of section 3571, R. S.

It was further held by the court, however, that a judgement could not be rendered against the board of education for the payment of said assessment out of its contingent fund to be raised under provision of section 3598 of the Revised Statutes as then in force, and that the amount of said assessment should be paid out of the general fund of the city."

The concluding paragraph of said opinion is as follows:

"In view of the foregoing provisions of the statutes and the authorities cited I am of the opinion that no part of the cost of the improvement in question can be assessed against the school property referred to in your inquiry and that the board of education of Wauseon village school district is neither required nor authorized to pay any part of the cost of said improvement out of its contingent fund or to levy a tax for said purpose."

In view of the broad provisions of section 4759, which exempt real and personal property vested in any board of education, not only from taxation but also from sale on execution or other like writ or order, it would seem that the conclusion reached in the opinion referred to is applicable to the situation stated by you, unless the legislature has indicated in clear and positive terms that an exception is to be made from the general rule, and that authority is conferred for the making of assessment against public school property for road improvement. You do not indicate the particular plan of road improvement involved; but an examination of the statutes relating to improvement of roads under the supervision of the state, county or township authorities fails to disclose any reference to the matter of assessing school property.

You are therefore advised that under existing statutes, lands owned by a board of education are not subject to assessment for road improvement.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—SECTION 1208 G. C. CONSTRUED—SURETYSHIP ON HIGHWAY BOND—NO CLAIM AGAINST STATE UPON STATEMENT OF FACTS SUBMITTED.

1. Under facts appearing in opinion, held, that no claim has accrued against the state, and that the state is not to proceed against surety.

2. Section 1208 G. C. considered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. CLINTON COWAN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your request in connection with section E, I. C. H. No. 61, Miami county (Dayton-Troy road), for opinion upon a matter which as appearing from your communication, supplemented by personal conferences at your department, may be stated as follows:

On April 28, 1916, one W. made to the state in the form prescribed by its highway department a proposal to do certain highway improvement work, which proposal was accompanied by a "Proposal and Contract Bond" containing the following condition

> "Now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such, that if the said proposal be accepted and said principal shall, within ten (10) days after receiving notice thereof, enter into proper contract with said state of Ohio, for the construction and completion of said improvement, and shall well, truly and faithfully comply with and perform each and all of the terms, covenants and conditions of such contract, on his (its) part to be kept and performed, according to the tenor thereof; and will perform the work embraced therein, upon the terms proposed and with (in) the time prescribed, and in accordance with the plans and specifications furnished therefor, and to which reference is here made and the same are made a part hereof; as if fully incorporated herein; and shall fully pay all direct or indirect damages that may be suffered during the construction of such improvement by reason of the negligence of the contractor in the construction thereof, and until the same is finally accepted; and shall pay all claims of sub-contractors, material men and laborers arising from the construction of said improvement; and shall save the state of Ohio and the county of Miami free and harmless from the payment of any claim or claims of sub-contractors, material men or laborers on account of the construction of said improvement; then this obligation shall be null and void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue in law."

The contract was awarded to said W. and he entered upon its execution. In the course of his work, and beginning on June 18, 1917, one B. furnished him labor and equipment. W. thereafter defaulted on his contract with the state as well as upon his contract with B. to pay the latter a stipulated sum for such labor and equipment. B. then on June 2, 1918, filed with the highway department a verified statement of the amount due on his claim. He is now insisting that inasmuch as he is unable to recover the amount of his claim from W. because of the latter's insolvency, the state should endeavor to collect the amount from the surety. The state has no funds in its hands due the principal contractor on the contract in question,—the cost of the work to the state having exceeded the contract price.

The question is, what course should the highway department pursue.

Your inquiry involves a reference to section 1208 G. C., which as it became effective on the first Monday of September, 1915, and as it stood at the time of the giving of the above mentioned bond, read as follows, (106 O. L. 634):

"The state highway commissioner may reject all bids. Before entering into a contract the commissioner shall require a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned that the contractor will perform the work upon the terms proposed within the time prescribed, and in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof, and that the contractor will indemnify the state, county or township against any damage that may result by reason of the negligence of the contractor in making said improvement. Such bond shall also be conditioned for the payment of all material and labor furnished for or used in the construction of the road for which such contract is made, and which is furnished to the original contractor or sub-contractor, agent or superintendent of either engaged in said work The bond may be enforced against the person, persons or company executing such bond by any claimant for labor or material, and suit may be brought on such bond in the name of the state of Ohio on relation of any claimant within one year from the date of delivering or furnishing such labor or material, and such bonds or sureties thereon shall not be released by the execution of any additional surety, note or other instrument on account of such claim or for any reason whatsoever, except the full payment of such claim for such labor or material. In no case shall the state be liable for damages sustained in the construction of any improvement under this chapter."

Quite plainly, the fact that B. furnished labor and equipment to the principal contractor does not, by reason of the conditions of the bond or the provisions of the statute, give rise to any contractual relation between B. and the state. It follows that your department cannot treat B.'s claim as an obligation against the state. It certainly follows, also, that the state is under no duty, and in fact is not in position to proceed against the surety on behalf of B. The statute quoted is quite plainly to the effect that any action on the bond for labor and material furnished is to be brought by the claimant in the name of the state. So far as concerns the filing of the verified statement, it must be noted that at the time the bond was given, there was no provision, such as was inserted in section 1208 by amendment, 107 O. L. 126, that the terms of sections 8324 et seq. G. C. (mechanics' lien statutes) should be applicable to contracts of the state highway department. Hence, it is difficult to perceive any theory upon which the state might hold the surety for the amount named in the verified statement.

In the presentation of B.'s claim to your department, reference has been made to the cases of Surety Company vs. Raeder, 15 C. C. 47, affirmed 61 O. S., 661, and Roofing Company vs. Gaspard, 89 O. S., 185.

The views above expressed make unnecessary a discussion of these cases; but it is worthy of note that in both of these cases the action was brought by the claimants themselves and not by the obligee of the bond.

You are therefore advised you are without authority to recognize B.'s claim as an obligation of the state or as furnishing the basis for an action by the state against the surety.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE—LINSEED OIL—SECTION 12791 G. C. PROHIBITS SALE OF BOILED LINSEED OIL WITH MINERAL OIL—SALE OF RAW LINSEED OIL REGULATED BY SECTIONS 12790, 12791 AND 12793 G. C.

1. Sections 12791 et seq. G. C. specifically prohibits the sale of boiled linseed oil mixed with mineral oil.

2. Raw linseed oil, if so mixed with mineral oil or other substances, must conform to the standards fixed in section 12790 and section 12791 and be labeled and stamped as required by section 12791 and section 12793 G. C. and unless of such standard and so stamped and labeled, its sale in such mixture is unlawful.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 28, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion of this department as follows:

> "Will you please advise me if linseed oil mixed with mineral oil or other substances can be legally sold if labeled 'adulterated linseed oil' and containing no statement of percentage of pure linseed oil or the extent of adulteration maintained in compound."

By personal conference with Mr. Gault, it is learned that the sale of linseed oil, to which your inquiry relates, is that under section 12790 et seq. G. C., the pertinent parts of which are:

> "Section 12790: Whoever * * * offers or exposes for sale raw * * * linseed oil, unless it is wholly obtained from the seeds of the flax plant and fulfills all the requirements recognized by the eighth decennial revision of the United States pharmacopoeia, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than ninety days, or both."

Section 12791 makes it a misdemeanor for any one to offer or expose for sale.

> "boiled linseed oil unless it has been prepared by heating pure raw linseed oil to a temperature of 225 degrees Fahrenheit and incorporating not to exceed four per cent by weight of drier. * * * Such boiled linseed oil must also conform to the following requirements: 1st. Its specific gravity at 60 degrees Fahrenheit must be not less than 0.935 and not greater than 0.945. 2nd. Its saponification value (Koettstorfer figure) must not be less than 186. 3rd. Its iodine number must not be less than 160. 4th. Its acid value must not exceed 10. 5th. The volatile matter expelled at 212 degrees Fahrenheit must not exceed one-half of one per cent. 6th. No mineral oil shall be present and the amount of unsaponifiable matter as determined by standard methods shall not exceed 2.5 per cent. 7th. The film left after flowing the oil over glass and allowing it to drain in a vertical position must be free from tackiness in not to exceed twenty hours, at a temperature of about 70 degrees Fahrenheit."

Section 12792 G. C. makes it a misdeameanor to sell, expose or offer for sale linseed oil.

"unless it is done under its true name, and each tank-car * * * or other vessel containing such oil has distinctly and durably painted, stamped, stenciled or marked in ordinary bold-faced capital letters * * * the words 'pure linseed oil—raw,' or 'pure linseed oil—boiled' and the name and address of the manufacturer thereof."

Section 12793 also makes it an offense for falsely stamping or labeling vessels containing such oil or knowingly permitting it to be done.

Section 12794, as amended in 107 O. L., 494, makes it the duty of the secretary of agriculture to enforce the provisions of those sections.

Your letter does not inquire particularly as to boiled linseed oil or raw oil, but the same general considerations affect either kind of oil, except as hereinafter noted.

This department is not aware of or aided by any judicial construction of these statutes in the solution of your question, which must be solved by consideration of the purpose of this act and the examination of these several statutes.

It must be observed that the purpose of the act is to prevent deception and fraud in the sale of an inferior or an adulterated oil, as section 12790 fixes an inflexible standard for raw oil below which no raw linseed oil may be legally sold.

Section 12791 likewise fixes such a standard for boiled linseed oil and makes it an offense to sell such oil below that standard.

Under section 12792 it is an offense to sell such oil unless sold under the true name thereof and each vessel containing such oil must be distinctly labeled in the manner provided in that section, while under section 12793 it is an offense to falsely stamp or label any such oil vessel or permit the same to be done.

Do these sections prohibit the sale of linseed oil which is mixed with any other oil?

Giving these sections the construction properly required of criminal statutes, it must be concluded that the sale of linseed oil in a mixture and as an adulterated oil, is not of itself explicitly prohibited.

On the other hand, it is also to be noted that sections 12790 and 12791, supra, absolutely prohibit the sale of such oil of standards lower than those therein fixed, and indirectly prohibit such sale if the mixing of such oil lowers the standard thus fixed, and that section 12791 provides that "no mineral oil shall be present" in boiled linseed oil. It would go without saying that the oil which is mixed must, of course, be of that standard.

It occurs to this department that the result of mixing such oil with another oil or substance, as affecting the identity and standard of the linseed oil, would be a question in chemistry and your letter not indicating particularly the mineral oil with which the linseed oil is therein supposed to be mixed, or the chemical result of such mixing, your question is answered in this general way.

Consistent with the above considerations, it is concluded that the sale of linseed oil mixed with other oil or substance, except as above noted, is not, of itself, explicitly prohibited by law, but the sale of boiled linseed oil, containing any mineral oil, is unlawful and neither boiled nor raw linseed oil can lawfully be sold in any mixture unless it be of the respective standards and stamped and labeled as required by these sections.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION—SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYES—WHETHER PAYMENT SHOULD BE MADE FROM STATE OR FEDERAL FUNDS.

1. Money appropriated to the state under authority of the act of congress, approved March 16, 1906, commonly called the Adams act, may be applied to the payment of the salaries and compensation, in whole or in part, of officers and employes of the Ohio agricultural experiment station for the portion of their time occupied in conducting such original researches and experiments as have been approved by the federal department of agriculaure. But officers or employes who devote none of their time in connection with the conduct of original researches or experiments, such as the bursar and other purely administrative officers of the station, are not entitled to be paid any part of their salary or wages from the fund referred to.

2. Where the same officer or employe divides his time between researches and experiments, under the Adams act, and other work connected with the station, a fair and equitable division of his salary or wages between the two classes of work should be made, and the Adams fund only charged with the fair and reasonable value of their research and experiment work.

3. The salaries of the bursar and other purely administrative officers of the station may be augmented from the annual appropriations made under authority of the act of congress approved March 2, 1887, commonly called the Hatch act.

4. Before any part of the annual appropriations made to the state under authority of the Hatch and Adams acts are applied to the payment of salaries or wages of officials or employes of the state, the safer and proper course will be to submit to the United States secretary of agriculture for his approval the names of the officers and employes and the salaries or wages poid to them by the state, together with a statement of the amounts proposed to be paid to each from the respective funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 3, 1919, in which you propound certain questions relating to the payment of salaries of officers and employes of the Ohio agricultural experiment station from the appropriations authorized by congress under the act of congress approved March 16, 1906, was duly received, and reads as follows:

> "We desire to call your attention to the act of congress approved March 16, 1906, 34 Statute at Large, 63 (being the same act referred to in your opinion No. 101 rendered to this department), which act authorizes and provides for annual appropriations of $30,000.00 to each state and territory 'to be applied only to paying the necessary expenses of conducting original researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States.' The money received by the state from the United States is placed in what is known as the Adams and Hatch fund and is under the direction and control of the Ohio agricultural experiment station.
> The legislature of Ohio, in its biennial appropriation bills, appropriates certain moneys under the designation of "Personal Service" for salaries of the various employes of said experiment station, and we find that in addition to such moneys so appropriated by the legislature of Ohio the experiment station augments the salaries set forth herein by moneys drawn from the Adams and Hatch fund referred to. For example, the legislature of Ohio in 1917 appropriated for the year beginning July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919, the sum of $2,200.00 for 'Bursar' and the sum of $780.00 for 'Photographer' (107 O. L. 285). In addition to such salaries so fixed the agricultural experiment station pays out of the Adams and Hatch fund to the Bursar the sum of $650.00 per annum and to Photographer the sum of $420.00.

Question 1. Is the payment of additional salaries hereinbefore referred to within the purview of the purposes of the appropriation made by the United States government under the act of congress herein referred to?

Question 2. If the appropriations made by the United States government are so available can the funds received from the United States government be used to augment the salaries fixed by the legislature of Ohio for the purposes herein referred to?"

The history and scope of the acts of congress approved March 2, 1887, and March 16, 1906, commonly called the Hatch and Adams acts, and of the laws of Ohio relating to the Ohio agricultural experiment station, were considered in my former opinion No. 101, dated March 8, 1919, wherein, among other things, it was said:

> "It will thus be seen that the annual appropriations made to Ohio under the acts of March 2, 1887, and March 16, 1906, were made by congress and accepted by the state to be applied to the purposes authorized by the grants, namely, under the first act 'to experiments at stations,' and under the latter act to paying necessary expenses of 'conducting original researches or experiments.' * * *
> Money received by the state under both acts are trust funds, and their application to purposes other than those therein expressly authorized would be a misapplication and a breach of trust, which, under the act of March 16, 1906, would subject the state to the loss of future appropriations. The state was expressly required by congress to give its assent to the purposes for which the grants of money were made, as a condition precedent to its right to receive the same, and, having done so, it has thereby entered into a solemn compact with congress to apply the funds in the manner authorized by the acts of Congress, and to no others. * * *
> Congress, being a voluntary donor, can make its appropriation to the state on such terms and conditions it may see fit to impose, and having specified the purpose to which agricultural experiment station funds appropriated by it can be applied, and having required and received the assent of the state thereto, it is not within the power of the state to authorize the board of control to apply the fund to any other purpose."

(1) The question now for determination is, can the Adams fund be used to augment or supplement the salaries fixed and paid by the state to the officers and employes of the experiment station who are engaged in conducting original researches or experiments?

The appropriation made by congress under authority of the Adams act is, by the express provision of the act,

> "to be applied only to paying the necessary expenses of conducting original researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States."

In a letter from Mr. Charles E. Thorne, director of the experiment station, dated April 14, 1919, it is said:

"The great majority of the experiment stations are connected with agricultural colleges and from the earliest history of such stations most of the station workers have been engaged a part of their time in teaching and their salaries have been paid in part from the so-called Hatch and Adams funds and in part from other funds. The national government has been cognizant of this practice from the first, and has only interfered to prevent the payment of too large a proportion from the research funds. This cannot happen at the Ohio station, because all the members of its staff give their entire time to research. * * *

For more than thirty years the payment of salaries, both in full and in part, from these national funds has been approved by the secretary of agriculture, and has not been disapproved by congress. * * *

That the appropriations made by the legislature for the salaries at this station were made with the understanding and expectation that they would be supplemented from other funds, is shown by the following extract from the reports of the budget commissioner for 1917, page 17, on which report the appropriations for 1917-18 and 1918–19 were based. 'The reductions in salary herein recommended are made because the experiment station has available various federal moneys with which a part of the salaries are already being paid and I am recommending only that part which should be paid from state funds.' "

In a letter from Hon. A. C. True, director of the states relations service of the United States department of agriculture, dated May 15, 1915, and addressed to Mr. Thorne, it was stated or ruled that there was no objection to paying from the congressional appropriations the difference between a reasonable salary and the statutory salary provided and paid by the state, and the ruling was made to apply to heads of departments and to their associates and assistants.

Under date of April 15, 1919, I addressed a letter to the United States secretary of agriculture calling attention to the provisions of the act of congress of March 16, 1906, supra, and requested to be advised as to what construction that department had placed upon the act of congresss referred to, with respect to the payment of salaries, either in full or in part, from the annual appropriation; and also whether the federal authorities considered that salaries and compensations were included within the expression "necessary expenses of conducting original researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States."

In answer to this inquiry the secretary of agriculture, by letter dated April 24, 1919, replied:

"It has been , and still is, the view of this department that the above stated appropriation is available for salaries and compensation of persons engaged exclusively in conducting original researches and experiments at the agricultural experiment stations bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States."

Under the act of congress of March 2, 1887, commonly called the Hatch act, whereby appropriations were authorized to be applied to experiments of the station, the department of agriculture ruled that:

"In case the same persons are employed in both the experiment station and the other departments of the college with which the station is connected a fair and equitable division of salaries or wages should be made, and in case of any other expenditures for the joint benefit of the experiment station and the other departments of the college the aforesaid funds should be charged with only a fair share of such expenditures."

See—Pamphlet issued by U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Aug. 25, 1916, p. 36.

And in a circular letter of the director of the United States office of experiment stations, dated March 1, 1911, (see p. 38 of pamphlet, supra,) it was said:

"The principle which should guide is that all expenditures from the Hatch fund must be for experimental work and publication, and all expenditures from the Adams fund for the projects agreed upon in advance with the office of experiment stations.

In adjusting the salaries of station employes only such portion of their time as is occupied in connection with experimental work * * * should be charged to the federal funds of the station. * * *

The Adams fund expenditures for salaries, labor * * * should be strictly confined to those necessitated by the projects on file which have been approved by this office."

It appears, therefore, that the construction placed on the act by the secretary of agriculture who is charged with seeing that the law is properly observed, and whose special duty it is to ascertain and certify to the secretary of the treasury whether the station is complying with the provisions of the act and to report to congress on the receipts, expenditures and work of the station, etc., is to the effect that the Adams fund may be applied to the payment of the salaries and compensation, in whole or in part, of officers and employes for that portion of their time occupied in conducting such original researches and experiments at stations as have been approved by the federal department.

In 36 Cyc. p. 1140, it is said that:

"The construction placed upon a statute by the officer whose duty it is to execute it is entitled to great consideration, especially if such construction has been made by the highest officers in the executive department of the government, or has been observed and acted upon for many years, and such construction should not be disregarded or overturned unless it is clearly erroneous."

And in 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 635, the law is stated as follows:

"The contemporaneous and long continued practice of officers required to execute or take special cognizance of a statute is strong evidence of its true meaning and should not be disregarded except for cogent reasons."

In U. S. vs. Finnell, 185 U. S. 236, the court at page 244, says:

"Of course, if the departmental construction of the statute in question were obviously or clearly wrong, it would be the duty of the court to so adjudge * * * but if there simply be doubt as to the soundness of the construction * * * the action during many years of the department charged with the execution of the statute should be respected and not overruled except for cogert reasons."

Where the same officer or employe divides his time between researches and experiments, and other work connected with the station, a fair and equitable division of his salary or wages between the two classes of work should be made, and the Congressional fund only charged with the fair and reasonable value of the research and and experiment work. The safe and proper course to be followed would be for the station officials to present the matter to the U. S. secretary of agriculture for adjustment. Of course, an officer or employe of the station who devotes none of his time in connection with the conduct of original researches or experiments, is not entitled to be paid any part of his salary or wages from the fund referred to.

(2) The foregoing portion of this opinion was submitted to the United States secretary of agriculture for examination, and under date of May 29, 1919, he advised that the opinion interpreted the Adams act " as it has been understood by the United States department of agriculture since its passage." The secretary also advised that the Adams fund was not available to pay the salary of the bursar and other purely administrative officers of the station, but that such officers could be paid from the appropriations made by congress to carry out the Hatch act.

(3) In a subsequent letter from the acting secretary of agriculture, dated June 19, 1919, and in response to an inquiry as to the amount of money annually appropriated by congress and paid to Ohio for the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, the following information and advice was given:

> "The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station receives $15,000 a year under the Hatch Act of March 2, 1887. The station also receives $15,000 a year under the Adams Act of March 16, 1906.
> Out of the $15,000 paid annually to the Ohio station under the Hatch Act the station may legally pay administrative expenses. As you have been heretofore advised, the department has always ruled that the payment of such expenses from this fund is authorized.
> No part of the $15,000 paid to the station under the Adams Act is available for administrative expenses, but solely for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons conducting original researches and experiments as set forth at the top of page 37 of the pamphlet entitled 'Federal Legislation, Regulations, and Rulings Affecting Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations,' copy of which was sent you with my former letter."

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—EXPENSES OF ELECTION TO ADOPT COMMISSION-MANAGER FORM OF GOVERNMENT—HOW PAID.

Expenses of a special election by a city for the purpose of voting upon the proposition of a home rule charter commission, as well as the expenses of a special election held upon the adoption of a charter submitted by such a commission, are to be paid by the county, and the same are not to be charged back by the county against the municipality to be retained from the funds due said municipality at the next semi-annual distribution of taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of your request of recent date for an opinion of this department on the question as to whether the county or the city bears the expense of elections brought about by an attempt to adopt the commission-manager form of government in a city of the county in question.

Attention is invited to a very exhaustive opinion upon this same question, with numerous citations, rendered by the Attorney-General in 1916, and appearing at page 703, Vol. 1, of that year. In such opinion the Attorney-General held:

> "Expenses of a special election by a city for the purpose of voting upon the proposition of a home rule charter commission, as well as the expenses of a special election held upon the adoption of a charter submitted by such a commission, are to be paid by the county, and the same are not to be charged back by the county against the municipality to be retained from the funds due said municipality at the next semi-annual distribution of taxes."

You are advised that there has been no legislation adopted since such opinion was rendered that would in any wise change the manner or method of placing such expense and such view expressed in the opinion in question, in 1916, is the opinion of the Attorney-General upon this question at this time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE—POWER INHERENT IN COURTS DURING TERM AT WHICH JUDGMENT ENTERED—SUCH POWER NOT ATTRIBUTE OF COURTS OF LIMITED JURISDICTION NOT HAVING TERMS—MAY NOT BE EXERCISED BY SUCH COURTS EXCEPT AT TIME OF PRONOUNCING JUDGMENTS.

The power to suspend or modify judgments and sentences in criminal cases is recognized as inherent in courts during the terms at which the judgment is entered and may be exercised notwithstanding the sentence has gone into execution, but such power is not an attribute of courts of limited jurisdiction not having terms and may not be exercised by such courts except at the time of pronouncing the judgment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my written opinion upon the authority of certain of the lower courts in the matter of suspension of sentences, your inquiry being as follows:

> "After a prisoner has been sentenced and committed to the work house by a mayor, police judge or judge of a municipal court, has such mayor, police judge or municipal court judge authority to order such prisoner paroled or released without a re-hearing?"

You later submitted in connection with the same question citation of a number of cases from the various justice courts, police courts and municipal courts of the state wherein the practice of suspension and remission of sentences has been indulged by the courts, and the memoranda which you have furnished me indicate a very probable tendency to abuse of the practice on the part of such courts.

In a recent opinion directed to Hon. Charles R. Sargent, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio, and being Opinion No. 251, dated May 2nd, 1919, I considered the general question of authority of courts to suspend sentence at some length and am enclosing you herewith a copy of said opinion.

In that opinion I was considering primarily the authority of a justice of the peace to suspend sentence after the same had been placed in execution, and my conclusion was as follows:

> "The general power to suspend the execution of sentence, or modify judgments during the term at which they are entered, is not an attribute of the courts of limited and special jurisdiction and without terms, such as justices of the peace * * *."

The court of appeals of Mahoning county in the case of Antonio vs. Milliken, as sheriff, in a decision reported in the Ohio Law Reporter of February 10, 1919 (29 O. C. A. 305), considered the power of the municipal court of Youngstown to suspend sentence after the same had been placed in execution. The municipal court upon conviction for misdemeanor sentenced the defendamt to pay a fine of $25.00 and costs and be imprisoned for thirty days.

Later and upon payment of the fine and costs, and two days after the defendant had been committed to the county jail, the municipal court issued an order to the sheriff directing the release of the prisoner, which order the sheriff declined to honor upon the theory that the municipal court had lost jurisdiction.

Habeas corpus was thereupon prosecuted and the question adjudicated in the court of appeals, the syllabus being as follows:

> "In misdemeanor cases the trial court has power under favor of section 13711 G. C. to suspend, in whole or in part, the execution of a sentence at any time during the term at which sentence was passed, even though the defendant had entered upon the imprisonment ordered by the sentence."

A reading of the opinion discloses that the court's conclusion was based upon the doctrine that courts have control of their judgments during the term at which rendered, citing Lord Coke and several other decisions wherein that doctrine was applied. The conclusion of the court was expressed as follows:

> "Therefore, for the reasons given and upon the theory that a court has control over its judgments and orders during the term at which they are made, the judge of the municipal court had a right in the case at bar to direct the release of the prisoner."

It was pointed out that the municipal court of Youngstown, by statute "shall have four terms of court each year" and further that the action of suspension of sentence was taken at the same term at which it was rendered.

And, further, that the reason of the rule lies in the necessity or propriety of a correction or amendment of the judgment, within a reasonable time, when for good cause shown such correction or amendment is found proper.

But the court made the following observation:

> "The 'time limit' has been held to be the term at which judgment is entered and this for the chief reason that after term time a record is presumed to have been made of all orders and judgments of the preceding term; and that such record is complete, and the term having been adjourned formally or by operation of law, the record imports absolute verity, and is unalterable except as specifically provided by law."

This case obviously proceeds upon the doctrine of the inherent power of the court at common law to control its judgments during the term at which they are rendered, which doctrine was also recognized in the case of Weber vs. State, 58 O. S., 616, where the syllabus is as follows:

> "In a criminal case the court has the power to suspend the execution of the sentence, in whole or in part, unless otherwise provided by statute; and has power to set aside such suspension at any time during the term of court at which sentence was passed. Whether such suspension can be set aside at a subsequent term is not decided."

In the opinion the court said the power to stay the execution of a sentence, in whole or in part, in a criminal case, is inherent in the court unless otherwise provided by statute.

In opinion No. 251, above referred to, the inherent power of courts to control their judgments and records during the term at which entered was recognized but I reached the conclusion that such power is not an attribute of courts of special jurisdiction only which have no terms, which of course would be applicable to justice courts, mayors courts and such other inferior courts as fall within the rule.

Obviously the power to suspend or modify the sentence could not be unlimited in point of time and since the limitation recognized in the judicial decisions has been the term of the court at which the judgment is rendered, there would be no limitation applicable to the inferior courts and the recognition of the power to suspend without limitation as to time would be a recognition of a power much in excess of that exercised by courts of general jurisdiction which is not maintainable either upon reason or authority.

To summarize then briefly, I advise that the power to suspend or modify judgments and sentences is recognized as inherent in courts having terms, during the term at which the judgment is entered, but such power is not an attribute of courts of limited jurisdiction not having terms and may not be exercised by such courts except at the time of entering the judgment.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP DITCH SUPERVISOR—WHEN PROVISION OF SECTION 3386 G. C. FOR ELECTION OF SUCH OFFICER MANDATORY.

The provision of section 3386 for the election of a township ditch supervisor in a township in which county or township ditches have been located and established is to be taken as mandatory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. HAVETH E. MAU, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In a communication from your office signed by Mr. William K. Marshall, assistant prosecuting attorney, the following questions have been submitted to this department for opinion.

> "First. Is section 3386 of the General Code to be construed as mandatory in requiring the election of a ditch supervisor in townships in which have been located and established township ditches?

Second. If not, or if no ditch supervisor has been elected in such a township, what powers have the trustees to compel the property owners through which township ditches pass to clean the same?"

It is unnecessary to cite any great number of authorities for the proposition that statutory provisions, directory upon their face, are in certain instances to be construed as mandatory. In the early Ohio case of Swaney vs. Blackman, 8 Ohio ,1, the court say at p. 18:

" 'May' means 'must' in all those cases where the public are interested, or where a matter of public policy, and not merely of private right, is involved."

Again, in State ex rel. Ferris vs. Bish, 12 O. N. P. (N. S.) 369, it is said at p. 384 of the opinion:

"Where power is given to public officers by act of the legislature, whenever the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language used, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory and permits of no discretion."

State vs. Budd, 65 O. S. 1, wherein the court say at p. 5 of the opinion:

"Counsel for the defendant, however, insist that in these provisions of the statute 'may' should be read 'shall.' The cases in which it is held that these words should be regarded as convertible are numerous, and they contain much learning. The sum of it, however, is that the natural meaning of these words is not always conclusive as to the construction of statutes in which they are employed, and that one should be regarded as having the usual meaning of the other when that is required to give effect to other language of the statute or to carry out the purpose of the legislature as that purpose may appear from a general view of the statute under construction."

An examination into the history of statutes relating to cleaning out of township ditches discloses the following:

As the law stood on April 13, 1900, there was no provision for a township ditch supervisor. However, as appears from Bates' Revised Statutes, 2nd Ed. (1899), there were provisions in section 4553 and 4554, under the chapter headed "Township Ditches," making it the duty of township trustees to examine township ditches every two years, and, if necessary, order the same cleaned out, assessing the cost against owners of lands which had been assessed for original construction.

There was a further provision by section 4555, R. S., requiring each person, through whose lands a ditch was constructed, to keep open the part of such ditch on his land; otherwise to be charged with the cost of removing obstructions as such cost might be determined by the doing of the work by one of the trustees after sworn complaint filed with the trustees.

Provisions similar to those just noted existed at the same time as to county ditches (see sections 4497, et seq., Bates' 2nd Ed.; also Sec. 4496, same volume), excepting, however, that the county authorities, rather than the township trustees, were authorized to act.

A further series of statutes, known as sections 4584-1 et seq., R. S. (Bates' 2nd Ed.), authorized the commissioners to clean out county ditches on the plan of an acreage tax, as distinguished from the assessment plan.

These two distinct phases of ditch maintenance, namely, (a) cleaning out by public authorities, and (b) keeping open through his premises by each owner, had been a part of our legislation through many years prior to the year 1900.

We then come to the act of April 13, 1900, 94 O. L. 142. This act specifically repeals above noted sections 4496, 4497, 4553 and 4584-1 and related sections. The first two sections of the new act were almost identical with what are now sections 3386 and 3387 G. C., and for the purpose of comparison said sections 1 and 2 are here quoted in full (94 O. L. 142):

> "Section 1. That in any township in which there have been located and established county or township ditches, or in which county or township ditches may hereafter be located and established, there may at the time and in the manner provided by law for the election of township officers, be elected a township ditch supervisor, who shall serve for a term of three years, and until his successor is elected and qualified. In case a vacancy occurs in this office, by resignation or otherwise, the township trustees shall fill said vacancy by appointment, until the next annual election.
> Section 2. Before entering upon the duties of his office the township ditch supervisor shall take an oath of office, and shall give bond, with sureties approved by the trustees, in such sum as they determine, payable to them, and conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such ditch supervisor, and said bond shall be recorded by the township clerk, and filed with him, and be carefully preserved."

Further provisions of the act defined the duties of the township ditch supervisor, among these duties being the division of both county and township ditches into "working sections," and to notify interested land owners to clean out sections assigned them. Section 12 of the act retained the principle previously embodied in sections 4555 and 4496 R. S., to-wit: Each land owner to keep the ditch free of obstruction so far as his own premises was concerned.

The general purpose of this act of 1900 seems to have been to vest in a township ditch supervisor, both as to county and township ditches, the duties theretofore falling on county and township authorities in the manner of cleaning ditches.

We next come to the act of April 15, 1902. The title to this act recites the repeal not only of the act passed two years previously (April 13, 1900), but also of the sections of the Revised Statutes which had been repealed by the last mentioned act. However, the repealing clause of the act of April 15, 1902, makes no mention of any repeal save the repeal of said act of April 13, 1900.

This act of 1902 does not provide for a township ditch supervisor. No further mention need be made of it here than to say that it provides for both phases of ditch maintenance as above mentioned, namely, (a) keeping open by the land owners as to the section of ditch on his own premises, and (b) cleaning out by the county commissioners, if a county ditch, and by township trustees, if a township ditch.

By act of April 2, 1906 (98 O. L. 280) the act of April 15, 1902, was repealed, and the general plan of the act of April 13, 1900, was re-incorporated into the statutes, not only in substance but in form. A township ditch supervisor was provided for in language almost identical with that above quoted as sections 1 and 2 of the act of 1900.

While there have been some further amendments, we may say, speaking generally, that the act of 1906 is the basis of the law as it exists today. However, we must note that the act of 1906, as amended in some particulars, was, when carried into the General Code divided into two parts, the first part becoming sections 3386 et seq., G. C., the subject of your present inquiry, and the last part becoming sections 6691 et seq., G. C.

Sections 3386 et seq., G. C., appear now under the head "Ditch Supervisor," in the division of the code relating to townships, Sections 3386 and 3387 read as follows:

> "Section 3386. In any township in which county or township ditches have been located and established, at the time and in the manner provided by law for the election of township officers, there may be elected a township ditch supervisor, who shall serve for a term of four years. The township trustees shall fill any vacancy which occurs in such office, by resignation or otherwise, by appointment, until the next proper election, when a successor shall be chosen for the unexpired term.
> Section 3387. Before entering upon the duties of his office the township ditch supervisor shall take an oath of office and shall give bond, with sureties approved by the trustees, in such sum as they determine, payable to them, and conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such supervisor. Such bond shall be recorded by the township clerk, filed with him, and be carefully preserved."

On the other hand, sections 6691 et seq. appear under the head "Cleaning and Repair of Drains and Water Courses," under the title of the code relating to drainage.

In an opinion of this department as to said sections 6691 et seq. of date February 4, 1913, Reports of the Attorney-General for 1913, Volume I, page 273 et seq., there is brought clearly into view the legislative policy of making provision on one hand for a general cleaning of ditches by the public authorities, and on the other hand for compelling a land owner to keep free from obstruction that part of the ditch on his land,—a policy retained by the enactment of sections 6691 et seq. as the successors of the last part of the acts of 1900 and 1906.

Nothing in our statutes other than sections 6691 et seq. has been found which offers a method of carrying out this long-existing policy of our legislature. In view of the fact that as neither the general cleaning nor the individual duty of the landowners may be enforced without the intervention of the services of the supervisor, and as his authority and duties are so intimately interwoven with the proceedings in both cases, it would seem entirely clear that as consistent with legislative intent and applying the rules of construction laid down by our courts as stated above, the answer to your question must be in the affirmative,—a conclusion which is reached not only from considering the context of the statute, but is fortified by reference to the history of legislation as above outlined.

Additional force is lent to this conclusion by the fact that the statutes relating to ditches make no provision for the determination by any board or official of the question whether or not there shall be a township ditch supervisor.

The views expressed make unnecessary the answering of your second question.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—BOARD OF CONTROL WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO BIND CITY TO PAY EXCESS PRICE FOR MATERIAL ALREADY CONTRACTED FOR BUT NOT DELIVERED.

Where a city has entered into a contract for the purchase of a quantity of material to be paid for at a given price per unit and delivered in installments, the board of control is without authority to bind the city to pay as to the portion of such material not yet delivered, a price in excess of that specified in the original contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—The receipt is acknowledged of a letter from your bureau, submitting the following statement of facts and inquiry:

> "The city of Akron on the 8th day of June, 1916, made a contract with the General Chemical Company for sulphate of alumina, f. o. b. cars at contractor's works at East St. Louis, Ill., at $1.10 per 100 lbs. The contract further provided for the furnishing of such supplies from July 2, 1916, to July 1, 1919, not less than 600 nor more than 720 net tons per annum except at seller's option. Later under a resolution of the board of control of October 22, 1917, a change was made from 720 tons per year to 850 tons per year and the price modified from $1.10 to $1.25 per hundred, and payment has been made in keeping with such resolution. We are respectfully requesting your written opinion as follows:
> Question: Are such changes made by the resolution of the board of control and such increased payments legally made?"

With your letter is enclosed a copy of the resolution referred to as having been adopted by the board of control on October 22, 1917, which resolution, as shown by such copy, reads as follows:

> "Whereas, it has been shown to the satisfaction of the board of control of the city of Akron, Ohio, that the great war in which the United States has become involved, has and will interfere materially with the output of sulphuric acid and with the supply of other raw materials from which sulphate of alumina is produced; and whereas, the government of the United States is making demands upon General Chemical Company for these materials far in excess of what said company had anticipated, making it necessary for said company to purchase raw material at a cost much in excess of what they had anticipated to fill contracts which thay have with parties other than the government of the United States, and that these conditions are likely to interfere materially with the delivery to said city of Akron of the alumina necessary for its use, and that the contract with the city of Akron by the General Chemical Company by which said company is to furnish said city specified quantities of alumina during the life of said contract is unjust to said chemical company on account of said war conditions; and whereas said General Chemical Company agrees to extend a maximum quantity of alumina to be furnished to the city of Akron from 720 tons per year as stated in the contract to 850 tons per year.
> Therefore, be it resolved by the board of control of the city of Akron, that the said contract price be changed and that said city pay to said chemical company the sum of and the price of $1.25 per one hundred pounds for alumina furnished under said contract, for and during the remainder of said contract time; this price to cover the annual requirements of the city of Akron up to and including 850 tons, unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said board that the reasons for said increased price shall have been removed; it being expressly understood and agreed that the action of said board in increasing said price and said maximum quantity to be delivered does not in any way change, modify or annul said contract above referred to in any other respect whatever.

Be It Further Resolved, that a certified copy of this resolution be forwarded to the General Chemical Company and their acknowledgment and assent thereto be obtained in writing."

Sections 4328 and 4371 of the General Code, relating respectively to the making of contracts on behalf of a city by the director of public service and director of public safety, read as follows:

"Sec. 4328. The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city.

Sec. 4371. The director of public safety may make all contracts and expenditures of money for acquiring lands for the erection or repairing of station houses, police stations, fire department buildings, fire stations, cisterns, and plugs, that may be required and for the purchase of engines, apparatus, and all other supplies necessary for the police and fire departments, and for other undertakings and departments under his supervision, but no obligation involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars shall be created unless first authorized and directed by ordinance of council. In making, altering, or modifying such contracts, the director of public safety shall be governed by the provisions of the preceding chapter relating to public contracts, except that all bids shall be filed with and opened by him. He shall make no sale or disposition of any property belonging to the city without first being authorized by resolution or ordinance of council."

These statutes, so far as they concern contracts involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars, are to be read in connection with sections 4402 and 4403, which read as follows:

"Sec. 4402. The mayor, director of public service and director of public safety shall constitute the board of control. The mayor shall be ex-officio president. The board shall keep a record of its proceedings. All votes shall be by yeas and nays and entered on the record, and the vote of a majority at all the members of the board shall be necessary to adopt any question, motion or order.

Sec. 4403. No contract in the department of public service or the department of public safety in excess of five hundred dollars shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract. The members of the board shall prepare estimates of the revenue and expenditures of their respective department to be submitted to the council by the mayor, as provided by law."

Under the law, well settled in Ohio, that the powers of municipal officers are such only as are given by statute, expressly or by necessary implication, the several sections quoted must be looked to as the source of power, rather than as a limitation upon powers. With this principle in mind, we are at once led to the conclusion that as to those contracts required to be let on competitive bidding, the contract passes beyond the power of the director of service, the director of safety and the board of control, in the matter of a change in the terms of the contract, once the contract is entered into, unless another statute is found which gives power to make such change; for of what avail in the public interest is competitive bidding if a contract entered into on that plan may be changed as to price or other requirements by the action of such officers or of a municipal board? And as to those contracts which may be entered into without competitive bidding, it is certainly to be presumed that the officer acting for the city will perform his sworn duty and make the best contract he can in the city's interest; from which it follows that when the transaction is closed, there is to be no change in the terms of the contract unless there is statutory authority to make such change.

These observations bring us to the point of inquiring whether there is any statute which authorizes a change in a municipal contract. Section 4331 reads as follows:

> "When it becomes necessary in the opinion of the director of public service, in the prosecution of any work or improvement under contract, to make alterations or modifications in such contract, such alterations or modifications shall only be made upon the order of such director, but such order shall be of no effect until the price to be paid for the work and material, or both, under the altered or modified contract, has been agreed upon in writing and signed by the contractor and the director on behalf of the corporation, and approved by the board of control, as provided by law."

The form of the resolution adopted by the board of control in the instant case indicates that section 4331 was believed to furnish authority for the resolution. But does said section go to that extent? Upon its face it applies only to those contracts involving work or improvement. Furthermore, its necessity in that connection is readily perceived; for it is well known that cities often enter into contracts calling for complicated construction, the details of which may require change as ascertained during the progress of the work, thus from a practical standpoint requiring a method of authorizing a change. However, from what has been said above as to the powers of municipal officers, and in view of the fact that the public interest demands strict adherence to the terms of a contract on the part of those who deal with municipalities, whether the contract be made after competitive bids, or not, said section 4331 is certainly not to be given any broader meaning than is justfied by its plain terms. While the resolution now being considered purports on its face to call for a modification only of the original contract, it certainly in practical effect would seem to call for an entirely new contract; and of course power is not lodged in the board of control for the making of a contract. But if we treat the resolution as involving a modification only, there is ample reason for saying that the modification is not such a one as is contemplated either by the letter or spirit of section 4331.

No other statutory provision having been found which permits of a change or modification, it is concluded that the modification purporting to have been made by the resolution of October 22, 1917, is without legal effect, and that consequently any increased payments made under supposed authority of such resolution are illegal.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN APPLICATIONS SHALL BE FILED FOR STATE AID FOR WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICTS—WHEN SCHOOL DISTRICT NOT ENTITLED TO STATE AID—SECTION 7595-1 G. C. GOVERNS DISBURSEMENT OF TUITION FUND FOR JOINT HIGH SCHOOL OPERATED BY TWO OR MORE SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

1. Applications for state aid for weak school districts shall be filed with the state auditor between the first day of September and the first day of October, 1919, for the school year beginning September 1, 1919, and such applications must be governed by the provisions of House Bill No. 406 (Freeman Law), appearing in 108 Ohio Laws.

2. A school district which pays its teachers either more or less than the scale of salaries set out in amended section 7595-1 G. C., shall not be entitled to state aid.

3. The high school committee in charge of a joint high school, operated by two or more school districts, must be governed in its disbursement of moneys from the tuition fund by the limitations set forth in section 7595-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. D. H. PEOPLES, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "A rural school district and a village school district have united for high school purposes.
> Suppose they pay their teachers the following salaries: $130.00, $110.00, and $100.00 per month.
> The rural district pays $.6948 of this expense, or an average of $78.74 per teacher per month.
> Under these circumstances would the rural district which is not able to meet this expense with money received by taxation, be entitled to receive aid from the state according to section 7595 of the Ohio school laws?"

In reply to such query it is advised that state aid to weak school districts will be governed for the coming school year by the provisions of the new Freeman law on state aid (House Bill 406), which is in effect on and after August 17, 1919.

Section 7595-2 G. C., as it will appear in 108 O. L., reads:

> "The application to the state auditor for state aid shall be filed between the first day of September and the first day of October for the then current school year, and upon demand of the state auditor the books or any records of the school district shall be transmitted to the auditor of state. The application shall be accompanied by the copy of the distribution of the county auditor made on the preceding August settlement, and an estimate of the county auditor showing the probable yield and distribution of the taxes, state common school fund and interest on the commoon school fund to be distributed to such district on the February settlement next following, together with a copy of his balance sheet as the same appears on his school fund distribution record for the school year for which such application is made."

Section 7595-1 provides that a school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund by filing with the auditor of state an application therefor in such form as the auditor of state shall prescribe, and by first complying and showing compliance with the following conditions:

"A school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund by filing with the auditor of state an application therefor in such form as the auditor of state shall prescribe, and by first complying and showing compliance with the following conditions:

1. It shall place in the tuition fund at least two-thirds of the proceeds of the levy as adjusted by the budget commission pursuant to section 7594-1.

2. It shall place in the tuition fund the whole sum of the state common school fund and interest on the common school fund received by the district.

3. It shall pay its teachers neither more nor less than the following salaries: In elementary schools, teachers without having less than one year's professional training or less than three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty dollars per month; teachers having at least one year professional training or three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty-five dollars a month; teachers having completed the full two years' course in any normal school teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, or who have had five years' teaching experience in the state, seventy-five dollars a month. In high schools, inclusive of joint high school districts, an average of ninety dollars a month in each high school. Such salaries shall be for full time and in high schools if any teacher be not employed full time, then, in computing the average, the salary for each hour of service paid such part time shall, for the purposes of the calculation, be multiplied by the number of full time hours in each month, and the sum so ascertained shall be assumed to be the salary paid such part time teacher. In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time, or at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time.

4. It shall maintain its schools for eight months in each year.

5. It shall not transfer or cause to be transferred to any other fund any moneys that may be in the tuition fund. Nor shall it expend any moneys that may be in the tuition fund except for the following purposes:

(a) Payment of salaries of teachers.

(b) Payment of expenses for attending institute.

(c) Payment of temporary loans incurred to meet current expenses in anticipation of revenue which would accrue to the tuition fund.

(d) That part of tuition payable to other school districts which represents the expense of teachers' salaries as computed pursuant to section 7736.

(e) Salaries of principals or superintendents, or additional salaries paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents. Provided, however, that if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed.

6. The county auditor in making his deductions pursuant to section 4744-3 of the General Code shall deduct two-thirds of the total sum from the two-thirds yield of the tax levy which is distributable to the tuition fund pursuant to this section, and the remaining one-third from the remaining part of the yield of such tax levy."

It is noted that one of the provisions in order to secure state aid for a weak school district is that it shall have a scale of salaries for teachers which is set by state law and the section further provides that such teachers shall be paid nothing more nor less than the amounts given in the section for the particular kind of teaching. Having in mind the joint high school, as you indicate, the section provides that the salary in high schools, inclusive of joint high school districts, shall be an average of ninety dollars per month in each high school for each teacher.

Your attention is also invited to section 7595-4, which reads as follows:

> "Whenever two or more school districts have joined pursuant to section 7669 to establish a joint high school, and one or more of such school districts makes application for such state aid to cover a probable deficiency in the tuition fund, then a condition precedent to the determination and rendering of such state aid the high school committee shall place in the tuition fund that part of tuition received from other districts which represents the expense for salaries of teachers as computed pursuant to section 7736. And the school district applying for such aid shall, in placing in a separate fund its contribution to the high school committee pursuant to section 7671, pay out of its tuition fund only that part of the total contribution which represents the needs of the high school committee for salaries of the high school teachers. And such high school committee in its disbursements of moneys from the tuition fund shall be governed by the limitations of section 7595-1 of the General Code."

It will be noted that this section, which speaks specifically of a case where two or more school districts have joined under section 7669 G. C. to establish a joint high school, provides that such high school committee, which has charge of the joint high school in its disbursements of money from the tuition fund, shall be governed by the limitations of section 7595-1 of the General Code, which limitations are given above, and one of which is that the average salary for a high school teacher shall be ninety dollars per month.

You say that the teachers in question might receive $130.00, $110.00 and $100.00 per month as their salaries for services as teachers in such joint high school, all and any of which is in excess of the ninety dollars per month provided for in section 7595-1 G. C., supra, which says that in order to receive state aid the salaries must be neither more nor less than the indicated scale mentioned in such section.

The fact that the rural district pays a fractional amount of the salary of the high school teacher, which fractional amount would average $78.74, as the par t due from the rural district, seemingly would not enter into the question, in view of the language used in section 7595 G. C., supra, which says that such high school committee, in its disbursement of money, shall be governed by the limitations of section 7595-1 G. C., one of which is the scale of wages indicated. So in view of this section, providing specifically the case of where school districts unite for high school purposes, and indicating that the salaries in such joint high school shall be governed by the same scale as in a high school that is not a joint high school, it would seem that where the rural district in question permits its high school committee, on which it has representation, to pay salaries for teaching that are in excess of ninety dollars per month, as provided in section 7595-1, the district would not be entitled to state aid, and if such salaries were paid in order to secure competent teachers and the districts in question could not take care of the same under the taxation laws, then such teachers' salaries would become a valid, existing and binding obligation, which could be cared for in an emergency, under section 5656 G. C.

It is suggested that you request the secretary of state to furnish you with a copy of house bill 406, covering state aid to weak school districts, and also a copy of the new tax law which permits school districts to increase their limit of taxation in order to take care of existing circumstances, both of which acts are at this time in the hands of the printer.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

"1. Applications for state aid for weak school districts shall be filed with the state auditor between the first day of September and the first day of October, 1919, for the school year beginning September 1, 1919, and such applications must be governed by the provisions of house bill No. 406 (Freeman Law), appearing in 108 Ohio laws.

2. A school district which pays its teachers either more or less than the scale of salaries set out in amended section 7595-1 G. C., shall not be entitled to state aid.

3. The high school committee in charge of a joint high school, operated by two or more school districts, must be governed in its disbursement of moneys from the tuition fund by the limitations set forth in section 7595-1 G. C."

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOL DISTRICT TRANSFERRED TO AN EXEMPTED VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—TAXES THEN AND THEREAFTER SPREAD OVER WHOLE OF SUCH ENLARGED DISTRICT—ALSO TAKE FUNDS AND ASSUME INDEBTEDNESS OF ADDED DISTRICT EXISTING AT THAT TIME—SEE SECTION 4696 G. C.

Where a school district, as a whole, is transferred and added to an exempted village school district, such territory becomes an integral part of such enlarged district and then and thereafter taxes in such enlarged district must be spread uniformly over the whole of such enlarged district, and at the time of transfer, under section 4696, the board of education of such enlarged exempted village district shall take the funds and assume the indebtedness of the added district existing at that time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. CHESTER A. MECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"Jackson township, Crawford county, contains two school districts. Jackson township school district and Crestline exempted village school district, the former has practically no indebtedness and the latter has a bonded indebtedness and a much higher tax rate.

There are fifty per cent. or more of the electors of the former that want to file a petition with the county board of education asking to transfer their district to the Crestline exempted village school district, but they do not like the idea of having their tax rate raised, which would be the case if they had to help pay the bonded indebtedness of the Crestline exempted village school district.

Section 4696 of the General Code of Ohio covers a procedure of this kind and speaks about an equitable division of funds and indebtedness that is to be decided upon by the board of education acting in the transfer.

Does that refer to a case of this kind and is there any way by which the people residing in the Jackson township school district could avoid having their tax rate raised or avoid helping to pay this bonded indebtedness of the Crestline exempted village school district, in case the transfer was made?".

It is understood that Crestline is an exempted village school district and hence any transfer to the Crestline village school district would fall within section 4696 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "A county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district, provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition for such transfer. Provided, however, that if at least seventy-five per cent. of the electors of the territory petition for such transfer, the county board of education shall make such transfer. No such transfer shall be in effect until the county board of education and the board of education to which the territory is to be transferred each pass resolutions by a majority vote of the full membership of each board and until an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness be decided upon by the boards of education acting in the transfer; also a map shall be filed with the auditor or auditors of the county or counties affected by such transfer."

It is noted that one of the requisites of making such transfer legal is that two boards of education must each pass resolutions by a majority vote of their full membership, which in this case would be the board of education of the Crestline exempted village school district and the county board of education of Crawford county, from which county school district such transfer of territory was to be made.

You ask if there is any way in which the people residing in Jackson township school district, who desire to be transferred to the Crestline exempted village school district, could avoid having their taxes raised or avoid helping to pay this bonded indebtedness of the Crestline exempted village school district.

In reply to such query, it is advised that where territory is transferred in regular and legal manner to another school district, it then and thereafter becomes an integral part of the district to which it is transferred and school taxes in such enlarged district must thereafter be spread uniformly over the whole of such enlarged district. There is nothing unreasonable in this, because persons in the territory to have transferred are more than likely seeking transfer to such exempted village or city school district, as the case may be, in order to be better educational advantages in the way of better teachers, better buildings and accommodations, all of which have been provided by the village school district at considerable expense to itself, following which there might be an unpaid debt or an increased tax rate. If those who seek to join a school district that has more than the usual advantages, with the view that they may partake likewise of such advantages, then it is only fair they should pay their equal share of the cost of such added advantages, for that, in the final analysis, is usually the reason that transfer to an exempted village school district has been sought.

In an opinion rendered under date of December 31, 1915, and found in volume 3, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, at page 2458, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

> "If the electors of a school district vote in favor of a bond issue under authority of section 7625 G. C., and for the purposes therein mentioned, and thereafter the county board of education transfers a part or all of another school district to such district, and upon said transfer being effected, said territory thus transferred will become a part of said district for all school purposes and will, therefore, be liable for its share of the bonded indebtedness so created."

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a school district, as a whole, is transferred and added to an exempted village school district, such territory becomes an integral part of such enlarged district and then and thereafter taxes in such enlarged district must be spread uniformly over the whole of such enlarged district, and at the time of transfer, under section 4696, the board of education of such enlarged exempted village district shall take the funds and assume the indebtedness of the added district existing at that time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SOLDIERS' BURIAL COMMITTEE—CONTRACT OF SAID COMMITTEE GOVERNS REGARDLESS OF FACT SAID SOLDIER DIES IN COUNTY INFIRMARY—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT AUTHORIZED TO BURY INMATES FROM SUCH INFIRMARY FOR LESS SUM OF MONEY WHERE INMATE HONORABLY DISCHARGED SOLDIER.

Where an honorably discharged soldier has been buried by an undertaker, in compliance with a contract entered into between such undertaker and the township soldiers' burial committee, the county commissioners are not authorized to change such contract and pay the undertaker less than the amount agreed upon, notwithstanding that such soldier dies while an inmate of the county infirmary and the commissioners had a contract with such undertaker to bury inmates from such infirmary for a less sum of money.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

HON. WAYNE STILLWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

"The county commissioners and Mr. W. F. Cary, an undertaker of this place, have requested me to ask for a ruling in the following matters:

An old soldier, at his own request, was admitted to the county infirmary and his pension money applied to his board, lodging and other expenses while in that institution. At his death the soldiers burial committee made an allowance of $75.00 for his burial under section 2950. The county commissioners, having a contract with Mr. Cary for the burial of inmates at the rate of $25.00, feel that they should allow only the latter amount, which Mr. Cary considers insufficient under the circumstances. I do not know the specifications for the several funerals and the above statement is as given to me by Mr. Cary, but assuming the above statement to be correct and all formalities to have been complied with, I request your opnion as to whether or not the auditor should issue a warrant for the larger amount.

Your opinion No. 281, of May 10, 1919, says that 'such committee is authorized to contract for and bind the county up to the maximum of $75.00, in the matter of such burial, and in the absence of fraud or collusion, the commissioners are not authorized to review their decision or to modify their contract in such matters.'

> Does the fact that the soldier was an inmate of the infirmary and that the commissioners had a contract, change or make an exception in this case?"

Your quotation from opinion No. 281, dated May 10, 1919, rendered by this department to Hon. C. A. Weldon, prosecuting attorney, Circleville, Ohio, indicates that you have and are familiar with that opinion, which held that in the absence of fraud or collusion the county commissioners are not authorized to modify the contract between the undertaker and the soldiers' burial committee, for the burial of an honorably discharged soldier.

The further question presented in your inquiry is, as stated in your letter,

> "does the fact that the soldier was an inmate of the infirmary and that the commissioners had a contract change or make an exception in this case?"

The contract referred to, as is fairly inferable from your letter, is a contract by and between the county commissioners and the undertaker for the burial of paupers, and provides for compensation to the undertaker of twenty-five dollars for each of such burials. A distinction must be drawn between the purposes of the law on the one hand, authorizing the burial of paupers from the county infirmary, and the burial, on the other hand, of an honorably discharged soldier.

Without discussing this at length—for the reason that the distinction is apparent—the underlying purpose of the law, authorizing the payment for the burial of an honorably discharged soldier, may be quoted from an opinion of the Attorney-General, found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1911-1912, Vol. 2, page 1471. The question asked in that case was, "may the county commissioners limit the amount for which a township or ward soldiers' burial committee may contract to a sum less than $75.00 in each case," and was answered in the negative.

Opinion No. 281, above referred to, rendered by the present Attorney General, concurs with that opinion of the former Attorney-General.

Section 2950, by the former Attorney-General, in the opinion above quoted, is thus characterized:

> "The statute certainly is one to be construed liberally in favor of the soldier. It is the last tribute in the way of anything of financial value that the people of a grateful republic can pay to its heroic defenders, and, too, when the legislature fixed the maximum at $75.00, prices were much lower than they are now, and this sum seems not only to be within the field of economy, but pretty well toward the center of boundary of stinginess."

As indicated in the above quoted opinion, the purpose of this statute is that to the extent of $75.00, as a mark of gratitude, and as "the last tribute in the way of anything of financial value" the state has provided for the interment of the body "of any honorably discharged soldier."

As pointed out in opinion 281, supra, the county commissioners are not vested with any discretion or authority, in the absence of fraud or collusion, to modify the statutory contract provided by sections 2950 et seq. G. C., and the fact that the soldier was also indigent and an inmate of the infirmary, and but for the provisions of these statutes would otherwise be buried in a pauper's grave, clearly emphasizes to this department that it is peculiarly such a case as these laws were intended to cover, and in conclusion you are advised that this department is of the opinion that in such a case the county commissioners have no authority, in the absence of fraud, to change the agreement between the soldiers' burial committee and the undertaker.

Your letter stated that it is assumed that "all formalities have been complied with," and from this it is inferred and assumed that the statutory provisions for entering into the contract approved by the soldiers' burial committee have been strictly complied with and this opinion is rendered upon that state of facts.

It is deemed advisable to call your attention to house bill No. 8 (108 O. L. 34), signed by the governor March 19, 1919, by which the maximum amount to be charged for such burials was increased from seventy-five to one hundred dollars, as finally amended.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL BOARD OF HEALTH—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH CLINIC FOR TREATMENT OF VENEREAL DISEASES UNTIL HOUSE BILL No. 211 (108 O. L. 236) BECOMES EFFECTIVE.

Until house bill No. 211 (Hughes health act, section 13) becomes effective, a municipal board of health is without authority to establish a clinic for the treatment of venereal diseases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1919.

State Department of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion ot this department as follows:

> "The board of health of the city of N_____is very desirous of establishing a clinic for the treatment of cases of venereal diseases but the council does not have the funds to finance such a proposition. An offer has been made by the board of health that the funds will be forthcoming from private sources if the board has the authority to administer such funds.

I should be glad therefore, to have your opinion as to whether or not a municipal board of health may receive funds from sources other than the city council and administer the same in the performance of public health work."

Sections 4404 to 4476 G. C., relating to municipal boards of health, are pertinent to your inquiry. Sections 4404 to 4419 relate to the organization and powers of such boards.

Section 4413, in part, is as follows:

"The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. * * *"

Sections 4420 to 4424 G. C., relating to nuisances, clothe such boards with power to abate and remove all nuisances within its jurisdiction and provide effective means for the enforcement of the orders of such boards.

Sections 4425 to 4451 G. C., relating to dangerous, communicable diseases, give municipal boards of health authority to enact and enforce quarantine regulations in time of epidemic or threatened epidemic of certain kinds of diseases,but in none of these sections is there any authority for establishing a clinic of the character referred to in your letter.

It may be well to observe that the word "clinic", as considered in this opinion, has the meaning, as defined in the Standard Dictionary, of "the teaching of medicine and surgery practically at the bedside or in the presence of patients; as in a hospital or dispensary." Your letter is understood as meaning the establishment of such a clinic for the treatment of cases of the disease therein mentioned.

The nearest approach to a grant of authority for the establishment of such a clinic in the laws relating to boards of health it is suggested is found in section 4452, which in part provides:

'The council of a municipality may purchase land within or without its boundaries and erect thereon suitable hospital buildings for the * * * treatment of persons suffering from dangerous contagious disease, * * *. The plans and specifications for such building shall be approved by the board of health."

It might be contended that the establishment of such a clinic is within the implied powers of the board of health. But as has been repeatedly held in the courts of this state, the implication must be clear and necessary to the exercise of authority expressly given, before it can be claimed that an officer or board may exercise such authority.

Section 4452 G. C. is pertinent in this connection, in that necessity for invoking such implied power would not exist where express provision is otherwise made for the accomplishment of the object under consideration.

It should also be borne in mind that boards exercising a part of the police power of the state are bound, as to the limitation of their authority, to the terms and extent of authority contained in the laws creating them.

A careful examination of the laws relating to boards of health does not disclose any authority for a municipal board of health establishing such a clinic, in the absence of which such board is powerless to establish same. The existence or absence of such authority would not be affected by the fact that such a clinic may be supported by funds received from sources other than the city council, and your question is therefore answered in the negative. Attention is directed to section 13 of house bill No. 211 (Hughes health act, 108 O. L. 236) which, when it becomes effective, will furnish ample authority for such clinic.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MEMBER OF SUCH BOARD CANNOT BE EMPLOYED AS TEACHER BY SUCH LOCAL BOARD—CANNOT PARTICIPATE IN CONTRACT IN WHICH HE IS PECUNIARILY INTERESTED—PRESIDENT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION WHO IS UNDER CONTRACT AS TEACHER CAN CAST VOTE FOR DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT BUT HIS CONTRACT AS TEACHER NULL AND VOID.

1. A member of a board of education cannot be employed by such local board as a teacher and any such contract made by the board would be null and void.

2. Membership in a board of education is not lost to such member by his participating in the employment of himself as a teacher and such contract for teaching services is null and void, for a member of a board of education cannot participate in any contract in which he is pecuniarily interested or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of education; cannot participate in any contract in which he is pecuniarily interested or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer.

3. A president of a board of education who is under contract with such board as a teacher, can cast a vote for district superintendent, but his contract as a teacher is null and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1919.

HON. W. B. BARTELS, Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following question:

> "Under section 4712 G. C., can a member of the board of education who is also a teacher in the district and president of his local board, participate legally in the selection of a district superintendent?"

Section 4712 G. C., which you cite, reads as follows, but seemingly has very little to do with the question at issue:

> "In rural school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law, for a term of four years."

In discussion of the above question as to whether a president of a local village or rural board could participate legally in the selection of a district superintendent, it is important first to see whether a person, who is a member of a board of education, could occupy this dual relation of member and teacher and the effect of one position upon the other.

Attention is invited to section 12932 G. C., which reads in part:

> "*Whoever being a * * * member of a board of education, votes for or participates in the making of a contract* with a person as a teacher or instructor in a public school to whom he or she is related as father or brother, mother or sister, or acts in a matter in which he or she is pecuniarily interested, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The above section was enacted in 86 O. L., p. 207, in 1889, and has therefore been the law of Ohio for practically thirty years, providing that any member of a board of education is forbidden to make a contract or to participate in making a contract with a person as a teacher to whom such member of the board is related as father, or brother, mother or sister, or acts in a matter in which he or she is pecuniarily interested. The seeming intent of this section is to get away as far as possible from any personal interest or relationship, in supplying the schools with teachers, the intent of the assembly seemingly having been that if one was as closely related as father, brother, mother or sister to some member of the board of education, then other applicants might not stand wholly on the same basis as the relative who desired the teacher's position. This section provides that any member of a board who is guilty of participating in a contract made with a teacher who is related in either one of these degrees to the member in question, shall be fined or imprisoned; if this is the law, and it was enacted to prevent furtherance of self-interest by drawing the line against blood relatives, with what consistency could a member of a board of education employ himself as a teacher in his own district? Seemingly the legislature thought this contingency might never arise, it being contrary to the principles of law that one can be both the employer and the employed. So such section does not provide for a contingency where a member employs himself, but it seems clear that if it is a violation of law to participate in a contract in which a brother or sister is interested, it would follow that where one is a member of the board of education in the district and votes for or participates in the making of a contract with a teacher, who is a member himself or herself, then the member at least violates that part of section 12972 G. C., which says:

> "or acts in a matter in which he or she is pecuniarily interested."

Here the interest is wholly pecuniary for the reason that the teacher, who is a member, receives a salary for services as teacher.

It would seem that the president of the board of education, in signing teachers' contracts as president of the board of education (see Form No. 20, Ohio School Laws, 1915) would be signing a contract with himself if he were both a president or member of a board of education and a teacher employed by the same board at the same time. The incompatibility of the two positions or employments is at once apparent for the reason that one is subordinate to the other and in certain respects a check upon the other.

But attention is further invited to section 4757 G. C., which says in part:

> "No member of the board shall have, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer. * "

Bearing upon the above section, there have been a number of prior opinions of the Attorney-General, excerpts from the syllabi of which are as follows:

> "One who has a contract * * * with a board of education, relinquishes his interest in such contract when he qualifies and takes his place on such board after being elected thereto."

"A member of a board of education who is the owner and publisher of a newspaper has no right to contract with the board to publish legal notices, even though the legal rate is charged for such publication."

Opinion 474, page 1293, Vol. 2, Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1917.

"The president of a board of education who is also a director and stockholder of a material company, which material company sells its material to the principal contractor dealing with such board of education, has such an interest in said contract as is prohibited by section 4757 G. C. * * *"

Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1915, page 267, Vol. 1, Opinion No. 139.

"A teacher may not, while employed by the board of education of a school district as a teacher in the school of said district, be elected to the position of clerk of said board."

Opinion 1025, page 229, Vol. 3, Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1915.

Attention is invited to the following previous holdings on this question:

"Section 2974 R. S. (4657 G. C.) expressly provides that 'no member of a board shall have any pecuniary interest, either direct or indirect, in any contract of the board.' The real question which arises is, are the acts complained of prohibited by this statute. To us it appears plain that the statute was intended to and does embrace in its prohibition the alleged transaction. 'No member of a board shall have any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board,' seems so plain as not to need construction. The fact that Cornelius A. Brouse was at this time a member of the firm of C. A. Brouse & Company necessarily implies that he had a pecuniary interest in the contract of sale made by the firm with the board, and being so it was a contract the board was prohibited from making and therefore one it had no right to make; nor did it have any right to allow the bill of the firm or draw an order for its payment on the treasurer of the board."

Grant vs. Brouse, et al, 1 O. N. P., 145.

The Attorney-General, in Opinion No. 911, in 1918, used the following language:

"The next question then that naturally arises is, if a person has contracted with the board and the contract is not completed, can he become a member of the board while the contract is in force.

It is within the province of the legislature to say what the qualifications of the members of the boards of education shall be.

Cline vs. Martin, 94 O. S., 420;

Mills vs. Board of Education, 54 O. S., 631: 9 O. C. C., 134.

The legislature may also say what acts shall stand as a disqualification for membership on a board of education.

At no place in our statute is found language to the effect that a person who has a contract with a board of education shall be by that act alone disqualified from becoming a member of such board. What the statute does say is that no member of a board of education shall have an interest in any contract. If, then, a person who has a contract with a board of education is elected as a member of such board, and after being so elected duly qualifies and takes his place upon such board as a member thereof, he by that act causes a forfeiture and a relinquishment of all his rights under said contract. The contract becomes void and no further rights thereunder can accrue to either the board of education or the member who was formerly a party thereto."

Continuing, the Attorney-General said in such opinion:

"It seems clear to me, from the above and many other authorities examined, that no order can be drawn by the board in favor of one of its members for any services which such member would perform, and especially in the face of a statute which specifically prohibits the board from entering into any contract with a member thereof, * * * * * but from the time he becomes such member he cannot further carry out the conditions of his contract, for a member of a board of education shall not have, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer."

Along the same line see the following cases:

Bellaire Goblet Co., vs. City of Findlay et al., 5 O. C. C., 418-429;
Bloom vs. Richards, 2 O. S., 395;
Doll vs. State, 45 O. S., 449;
Pickett vs. School District No. 1, 25 Wis., 551;
Cumberland Coal Co. vs. Sherman, 30 Barb., 553;
People vs. Township Board of Overyssel, 11 Mich., 222;
Waymeyer vs. Powell, 105 Ind., 328.

In opinion 102, issued by the Attorney-General November 16, 1915, that official said:

"You will observe that the above provision of section 4757 G. C. is still in force, and by its terms prohibits a member of a board of education of a school district from serving as a teacher of said district."

In opinion 474, issued July 25, 1917, that official said:

"It is not only unlawful for a member of a board of education to directly or indirectly have any pecuniary interest in any contract, but * * * he shall be punished therefor.

All the above sections have been considered (sections 4757, 12910 and 12911 G. C., from time to time by this department with the result of a universal holding that in whatever manner the officer was interested in the contract, such contract was void and the money paid thereunder was recoverable."

Judge Voris, in the case of Grant vs. Brouse, I N. P., 145, used the following striking language in the discussion of section 4757 of the General Code.

"We are not undertaking to censure anybody, because we believe that in this transaction the board believed that it was discharging a public duty beneficially to the public; that is, it supposed that this was a more advantageous course to take than to obey the law. I have no doubt that the member of the board, who sold these articles, undertook to make a favorable arrangement for the public. Nothing to the contrary is asserted, and it is urged in fact, by the defendants, as a reason why this court should not interfere with its jurisdiction, that no pecuniary injury in fact resulted.

But we cannot look upon it in this light. The dollar and the cent advantage is the lowest order of consideration that can be urged, when a public wrong, a vicious example is encouraged under high official sanction; the example, the public wrong, the prostitution of public virtue is vastly more than mere matter of dollars and cents. The law was made in the interest of sound public policy, and while in some cases it may appear to be more advantageous to ignore than to obey the law, yet we think no public officer can violate a direct provision of the law, directing the performance of his duty, or prohibiting certain acts, and have his conduct judicially approved, and where the matter comes before the court it ought to carefully see to it that public policy is upheld. I know of no better way of preserving the virtue of the public than to have its officers understand and act as if they were public servants, always recognizing that a public position constitutes a public trust that may be sacredly carried out."

As to the legality of a contract made by a board, wherein less than the full number of the board acted, the court held in the case of Bellaire Goblet Company vs. City of Findlay, 5 O. C. C., 418, wherein Mr. Gorby was a member of the board of gas trustees, and was also interested in a contract which his board was to act upon, as follows:

"So that this dual relation existing as to Mr. Gorby, prevented him from acting upon this so-called contract as a member of the board. * * * The records show he did not act. Yet the board consisted of five members; each one of the members was entitled to be heard, each one of the members was entitled to act, but on account of the personal interest of Mr. Gorby, he could not act, so that in fact five members constituted the board, and in law five members was a legal board, but through the personal interest of Mr. Gorby the board, for the purpose of acting upon this contract, was reduced to four, which was not a legal board, and hence had no power to act."

Following the long list of cases that might be cited, as well as those herein given it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. A member of a board of education cannot be employed by such local board as a teacher and any such contract made by the board would be null and void.

2. Membership in a board of education is not lost to such member by his participating in the employment of himself as a teacher and such contract for teaching services is null and void, for a member of a board of education cannot participate in any contract in which he is pecuniarily interested or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer.

3. A president of a board of education, who is under contract with such board as a teacher, can cast a vote for district superintendent, but his contract as a teacher is null and void.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BRIDGES AND CULVERTS—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS—SECTIONS 2352 AND 6252 G. C. CUMULATIVE—MUST COMPLY WITH BOTH SECTIONS.

Sections 2352 and 6252 G. C. are cumulative and the publication of notice to contractors under section 2352 must comply not only with that section but also with section 6252 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1919.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.
DEAR SIR:—Your letter of May 26 reads as follows:

"I wish to present a question as to proper advertisement for proposals for the construction of a bridge to be built by the county commissioners at a cost in excess of $1,000.00.

Under section 2352 G. C. the commissioners are required to publish notice for four consecutive weeks 'in two of the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein.' The question which I wish to present is this: Must notice also be published in compliance with section 6252, that is, in two newspapers of opposite politics, published at the county seat, and also in two newspapers of opposite politics provided there are other municipalities of eight thousand population in the county?

In the case in question, a compliance with section 2352 would mean to publish in two newspapers of the same politics at the county seat, but no publication in an adjoining municipality."

Reference is made by you to sections 2352 and 6252 G. C., which, together with sections 2353 and 2354 G. C., are as follows:

"Sec. 2352. When loans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications and estimates are so made and approved, the county commissioners shall give public notice in two of the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein, of the time when and the place where sealed proposals will be received for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection of such building, bridge or bridge substructure, or addition to or alteration thereof, and a contract based on such proposals will be awarded. If there is only one paper published in the county, it shall be published in such paper. The notice shall be published weekly for four consecutive weeks next preceding the day named for making the contract; and state when and where such plan or plans, descriptions, bills and specifications can be seen. They shall be open to public inspection at all reasonable hours, between the date of such notice and the making of such contract.

Sec. 2353. When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition to or repair thereof does not exceed one thousand dollars, it shall be let as heretofore provided, but notice of the letting need be given for only fifteen days, by posting on a bulletin board or by writing on a blackboard in a conspicuous place in the county commissioners' or auditor's offices, showing the nature of the letting and when and where proposals in writing will be received. Plans or specifications, or both as hereinbefore provided shall be kept on file during the fifteen days and open to public inspection.

"Sec. 2354. When the estimated cost of a public building, bridge or bridge substructure or of making an addition thereto or repair thereof does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let at private contract without publication or notice.

Sec. 6252. A proclamation for an election, an order fixing the times of holding court, notice of the rates of taxation, bridge and pike notices, notice to contractors and such other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat. In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city. This chapter shall not apply to the publication of notices of delinquent tax and forfeited land sales."

It has been the accepted view of section 6252 G. C. that it is cumulative in effect as to the matters and things governed by it. It was not intended as an alternative or exclusive method of publication but as a requirement to be complied with in the making of other publications required by law. Certain special acts of recent enactment possibly have the effect of substituting an entirely different mode of publication in particular cases. (See Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. I, page 838). But as between the two substitutes now under consideration it is the opinion of this department that both must be complied with.

In Vindicator Printing Co. vs. State, 68 O. S., 362, 366, the following language is used:

"Publication of the sheriff's proclamation is authorized by section 2977, Revised Statutes. * * * This is supplemented by section 4367, (the same being section 6252 G. C.) which requires publication in two newspapers of opposite politics."

This holding of the supreme court is consistent with the impression just described.

The result is, not that one publication is to be made under section 2352 General Code and another separate publication under section 6252 General Code; for under a proper set of facts it would be possible to comply with both sections by making one set of publications. Such facts would exist where there were no municipalities outside of the county seat having eight thousand inhabitants or more, and where the two newspapers having the largest circulation in the county were of opposite politics and published at the county seat.

Again, where such facts do not exist, but one of "the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein" is located at the county seat, compliance pro tanto with section 6252 G. C. would be effected by publishing the notice in question in a paper of opposite politics published at the county seat, if such paper were published thereat. In such a case the cumulative effect of the two sections would require publication in three papers (still assuming the absence of any municipality in the county outside of the county seat having a population of eight thousand or more), such publication to be:

(1) In one newspaper having politics and published at the county seat, and being one of the two principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein;

(2) In the other principal paper in the county having the largest circulation therein; and

(3) In another paper published at the county seat but not being one of the two having the largest circulation in the county, if such other paper were of opposite politics to either of the other two papers.

Without working out all the possible combinations applicable to counties like Trumbull county, which does contain municipalities other than the county seat having a population of eight thousand or more, it is felt that the principles laid down will enable the officials of the county to work out the minimum publication necessary to comply with both section 2352 and section 6252 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BANKS AND BANKING—SALE OF STEAMSHIP TICKETS—BOND UNDER SECTION 290 G. C. VALID FOR PURPOSES OF SECTION 183 G. C. ET SEQ. OF HOUSE BILL NO. 200 (108 O. L. 80).

Bonds given under sections 290 et seq. of the General Code will be valid for the purposes of sections 183 et seq. of House Bill No. 200 revising and codifying the laws relating to banking, etc., after such act goes into effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date, which is as follows:

"The recent act of the General Assembly amending sections 181 et seq. of the General Code relating to the sale of steamship and railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries goes into effect July 11, 1919. See H. B. No. 200 (108 O. L. 80).

Persons now engaged in the business of selling bonds with us, pursuant to sections 184 and 185 G. C. bearing date as of June, 1919.

Will you kindly advise us whether or not these bonds which so bear date antedating the act will be sufficient in law and whether we have power to accept such bonds prior to July 11, 1919?"

I presume that by the reference to sections 181 et seq. of the General Code you mean sections 290 et seq. of the General Code. These sections provide as follows:

"Section 290. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.

Section 291. Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful holding and transmission of any money, or the equivalent thereof, delivered to it for transmission to a foreign country, or conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or both if it be engaged in both of such businesses.

Section 292. The bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved, or cash may be accepted in place of surety. The bond shall be approved by the auditor of state, and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 293. The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipt, the name or names of the principals and place or places of residence, and place or places for transacting their business, the names of the surety upon the bond, and the name of the officer before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed.

Section 294. A person, firm or corporation which engages in such business, contrary to the provisions of the second and third preceding sections, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

Section 295. Nothing herein shall apply to drafts, money orders or traveler's checks issued by trans-Atlantic steamship companies or their duly authorized agents or to national banks, express companies, state banks or trust companies."

These sections are all repealed by the act referred to, which contains the following sections:

"Section 183. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, until they shall have obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.

Section 184. Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries.

Section 185. Such bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good and sufficient sureties who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved, or cash, or the securities enumerated in section 150 of this act, may be accepted surety. Such bond shall be approved by the auditor of state, and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 186. The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipt, the name or names of the principles and place or places of residence, and place or places for transacting their business, the names of surety upon the bond, and the name of the officer before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed.

Section 187. A person, firm or corporation which engages in such business, contrary to the provisions of the four preceding sections, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

But nothing in the said sections shall apply to national banks, duly incorporated and qualified railroad, steamship, express companies, banks or trust companies."

The law is declared in its title to be "An Act revising and codifying the laws relating to the organization of banks and the inspection thereof." It is manifest from the title, as well as from comparison of the two groups of sections above quoted that the legislature had principally in mind the revision and codification of the law affected by the bill, and not any radical amendments of it, much less the wiping out of an old law and the passage of a new law. For instance, section 183 of the act has exactly the same effect in law as section 290 of the General Code.

Section 184 of the act is, as it were, exactly like half of section 291 of the General Code. That is to say, section 290 of the General Code authorized and required the giving of a bond in the sum of five thousand dollars conditioned for either or both of two things, the doing of which constituted in the eye of the law separate kinds of business, viz: (1) the selling of transportation to or from foreign countries; and (2) the transmission of money to a foreign country. The banking code has separated out the business of transmitting money to foreign countries and dealt with that in sections 181 and 182 of the new law, and this is one of the changes made in the process of codification which amounts to a real and substantial amendment of the law. But it was lawful under original section 291 to give bond for the selling of steamship tickets only, and it will be lawful and mandatory under section 184 to give such bond.

Section 185 makes but one change as compared with section 292 of the General Code, viz: in authorizing the deposit of certain securities in lieu of cash or personal or surety company bonds; but this is an enlargement rather than a restriction, and a bond which would satisfy one will satisfy the other.

Section 186 of the act is in the exact words of section 293 of the General Code. In other words, no change whatever was made in this section except to repeal "Sec. 293" and to enact "Section 186."

Section 187 of the act is in substance of the same legal effect as sections 294 and 295 of the General Code considered together, excepting that there may be some difference in the effect of the exemption. If there is any, such change does not affect the question which you ask.

That question comes to this: As to whether or not a bond taken in June, 1919, under sections 290 et seq. of the General Code, which are then in effect, is a compliance with sections 183 et seq. of House Bill No. 200 as to companies subject to both the old and the new law.

In my opinion it is. As to companies of the character mentioned House Bill No. 200 is not to be regarded as a change in the law. It is well settled that the mere revision or codification of a law does not have the general effect of nullifying what has been done prior thereto and requiring its repetition after the revision goes into effect. This principle applies here.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—QUESTION OF APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION TO FRAME CHARTER CANNOT BE SUBMITTED AT PRIMARY ELECTION.

The question of the appointment of a commission to frame a charter for a city or village cannot under the provisions of Art. XVIII, Sec. 8 of the constitution of Ohio be submitted to the electors of such city or village at a primary election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEACH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You advise that the council of the city of Coshocton has under the provisions of section 8 of article XVIII of the constitution of Ohio passed an ordinance to submit to the people the question, "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter?"

You refer to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, found in Vol. II of Opinions of Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1343, holding that a primary election is not a regular election and quoting from and relying upon a similar holding in Vol. I of Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1914, p. 942. You state that on the authority of these opinions you have reached the conclusion that the question above referred to can not be submitted at the primary election to be held in the city of Coshocton in August. In this view I concur.

The language of article XVIII, section 8 of the constitution, pertinent here, is as follows:

> "* * * The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. * * *"

In addition to the two opinions of the attorneys-general referred to by you, and with which I am in accord, you will find a discussion of the distinction between general and special elections in 28 O. C. A. 10. There the court said, in the case of Yeatman vs. State, at p. 13:

> "It therefore appears that the provisions of the constitution and the General Code recognize 'regular' elections and 'primary' elections, and 'general' elections and 'special' elections. The term 'regular election' seems to be used in the same way and to mean the same thing as the term 'general election.'
> The legislature has, in section 4948, construed the term 'general election,' limiting it to the November election in even numbered years, while the language used in section 4980 would seem to indicate there might be a general election held in odd numbered years.
> A careful consideration of all the constitutional provisions and statutes cited above compel the court to the opinion that the term 'general election' was intended to apply only to the elections held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November both in the even and in the odd numbered years, and that all other elections would be special elections except the 'primary elections,' which are another class and otherwise provided for. A general election is one held throughout the state at regularly recurring intervals for the purpose of electing public officers and possibly at the same time voting upon such public questions as might be then legally submitted, while a special election is one held at some other time to vote upon public questions or to elect officers to fill vacancies."

As stated above, I am of the opinion that the primary election is not a regular election within the meaning of article XVIII, section 8 of the constitution.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE FOR LOCAL OFFICE AT DAYTON, OHIO, BETWEEN ADAM SCHANTZ AND STATE FIRE MARSHAL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1919.

HON. T. A. FLEMING, State Fire Marshal, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The lease from Adam Schantz, as trustee, to the state fire marshal, through the adjutant general, which you have transmitted to this department for its approval, has received my attention.

Consideration of section 820 et seq., General Code, clearly indicates that ample authority exists for renting offices for the state fire marshal. It may be suggested, however, that by virtue of section 820 the principal office must be located in the city of Columbus, that section providing,

> "The state fire marshal shall have his principal office in the city of Columbus."

However, it appears by the third clause of the lease that the premises are to be used, as stated therein, "as the local office of the state fire marshal."

It is also noted that the lease is for a period of two (2) years and contains a provision that the rental therein provided for shall be payable from appropriations made, thereby coming within the rule laid down in State ex. rel. vs. Donahey, 93 O. S. 414.

Consideration of the sufficiency of the lease as to form convinces this department that the lease is in proper legal form, and the consideration therein provided being within the limits of the appropriation made in H-6, of appropriation house bill No. 536, such lease is hereby approved and is returned herewith.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—WHEN MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR FUND CAN BE USED BY STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT.

HELD, under the facts appearing, that maintenance and repair funds might legally be used in connection with two certain contracts entered into by the state highway department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your communication of recent date, reading as follows:

"Relating to the attached contract No. 1495 for the improvement of section 'B,' Delaware-Marysville road, I. C. H. No. 238, Delaware county, A. B. Shaw, contractor.

The proposal upon which bids were received and which is attached to the contract calls for grading roadway, constructing bridges and culverts and paving with bituminous macadam.

Maximum grade present, 7%. Proposed, 6.49%.

Bridges, new, 1.

Culverts, new, 22.

Depth of foundation, $6\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

Depth of top course, $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

Width of pavement, 16 feet.

You will notice that the unit bid of the proposal, under the caption ROADWAY provides for 12,344 cu. yds. of excavation R-1 (see page 12). Other items bid under this caption and BRIDGES and CULVERTS, indicate new construction or reconstruction.

Under this contract the improvement, when finished will consist of a change in the grade (which, I think, will eliminate all traces of the original grade at points where grading is done) new culverts and a two-course bituminous macadam pavement, at a total average cost of $20,097.07.

Letter attached to this contract and signed by the surveyor and commissioners of Delaware county, describes the road proposed to be improved as originally constructed of macadam, but does not state original depth of metal or original width of the pavement. The department's division engineer, however, states the road was what he would call a traffic bound macadam, that is the lime stone was dumped upon the road loose and not packed by means of a road roller or otherwise. He says the width of the pavement on original construction averaged about fifteen feet, but has no way of knowing the original depth of the metal.

Will you kindly advise at your earliest convenience whether or not maintenance and repair funds can be legally applied on this improvement. In asking for your opinion in this particular case, I have in mind opinion of the Attorney-General No. 542 under date of August 17, 1917, and opinion No. 1480 under date of September 26, 1918."

The two opinions of this department to which you refer appear respectively in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. II, p. 1553; and Opinions of Attorney-General for 1918, Vol. II, p. 1233. Under authority of the first of these opinions, this department has recently held (opinion No. 439, June 28, 1919, copy of which is enclosed) that the state highway commissioner was not empowered to make use of maintenance and repair funds in three specific cases described by him. In the opinions of June 28, 1919, as you will note, reference was also made to a former opinion of this department, of date June 10, 1915, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, p. 990. In the opinion dated September 26, 1918, to which you refer, the second and third paragraphs of the headnotes read (Op. 1918, p. 1233):

2 "Upon the application of county commissioners or township trustees for state aid, in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, the state highway commissioner has authority to use the funds derived from the registration of motor vehicles to pay the state's proportion of the cost and expense of such maintenance and repair.

3. The state highway commissioner has no authority in law to use the funds derived from the registration of motor vehicles, either upon his own motion or upon the application of the county commissioners or township trustees, to repair and maintain inter-county highways which have not been improved."

The following information, obtained partly at the state highway department and partly in an interview with your Mr. J. E. Harper, state examiner assigned to the highway department, must be considered in connection with the data set forth in your letter.

The section of road in question is 5.02 miles in length. The contract for the work was entered into under date June 13, 1919, and the contractor is proceeding thereunder. The action taken by the state highway commissioner and the highway advisory board with reference to providing part of the funds for the improvement from the maintenance and repair fund, is shown by the following entry in the journal of the highway advisory board of date January 8, 1918, the subject under consideration being the road improvement program presented by the authorities of Delaware county:

"It was agreed that the 8 miles of inter-county highway No. 238 from the Delaware and Union county line to the inter-section with Gallant road, a distance of 8 miles, was the most desirable to be improved first.

A statement was presented by the clerical department stating that $16,000.00 of inter-county highway funds is available for use in Delaware county.

Commissioner Cowen set aside from the apportionment of inter-county highway funds to Delaware county the sum of $16,000.00 and from the maintenance and repair fund the sum of $40,000.00, total $56,000.00, to aid Delaware county in the improvement of 8 miles of inter-county highway No. 238, from the Delaware and Union county lines to the Gallant road, a distance of 8 miles, on condition that the county pay the remainder of the cost of the improvement, the state not to pay in excess of 50 per cent of the cost of same and on the further condition that the type of road selected meet with the approval of the highway department.

On motion of Mr. Humphrey, seconded by Mr. Kirwan, the following resolution was adopted:

'Resolved, by the highway advisory board that the action of the state highway commissioner in setting aside the sum of $16,000.00 from the apportionment of inter-county highway funds to Delaware county and $40,000.00 from the maintenance and repair fund, total $56,000.00, to aid Delaware county in the improvement of inter-county highway No. 238, main market No. XI, from the Delaware and Union county line to its intersection with the Gallant road, on the terms and conditions stated, be approved.'

Voting aye: Mr. McCulloch, Mr. Humphrey and Mr. Kirwan."

The state highway commissioner states, in an interview had with him, that the reason for his action in setting aside part of the maintenance and repair funds for the work in question, was the conviction on his part that the work is essentially of the character of maintenance and repair, and not of original construction; that the section of road in question, before being taken over by the state, had been improved by macadam construction, and therefore was not subject to exclusion from maintenance and repair operations under the principle stated in the above-quoted third headnote to opinion of this department dated September 26, 1918; that while admittedly of an extensive character, the repairs are only such as good workmanship demands; and that the project came within the terms of the statutes bearing upon use of maintenance and repair funds as construed in above-mentioned opinion of this department dated June 10, 1915 (Op. 1915, p. 990). As has been seen, the position thus taken by the commissioner was concurred in and approved by the highway advisory board.

In these circumstances, for reasons which will be hereinafter set forth, it is evident that the answer to your question is to be found, not in an expression of views of this department as to whether on the one hand the work comes within the scope of the opinion of 1915, or on the other hand within the scope of the opinions of 1917 and 1918, referred to by you; but rather in an inquiry into the effect of the action taken by the commissioner and approved by the Highway advisory board.

The opening sentence of section 1224, reads:

"The state highway commissioner shall maintain and repair to the required standard, all intercounty highways, main market roads and bridges and culverts constructed by the state, by the aid of state money or taken over by the state after being constructed."

The third subdivision of section 1221 G. C. reads:

"3. The funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be equally divided and one-half shall be applied, and used, as provided in this section, in the maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways and one-half to the maintenance and repair of the main market roads of the state. From the part of the funds appropriated for use on the main market roads the state commissioner is empowered to establish a system of maintenance to be organized in such manner as the state highway commissioner may provide."

Section 1231-9, which is part of the act appearing in 107 Ohio Laws, p. 137, creating the highway advisory board, provides in part:

"No act of the state highway commissioner * * * granting any application for aid from any appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county highways or main market roads or any other fund created by the state for highway purposes * * * shall be valid or have any force and effect until such act has been approved by the highway advisory board, by resolution duly passed by majority vote and entered upon its journal. * * *"

It is quite evident from a reading of these statutes that it is the duty of the state highway commissioner to determine in the first instance whether a given section of road needs repair work to the end of maintaining it to "the required standard," and of course that duty involves the further duty of determining in the first instance whether the work to be done is original construction or maintenance and repair within the contemplation of the statutes. The determination of the commissioner, however, is subject to review by the advisory board. As is readily understood, instances may arise wherein there is doubt as to the character of an improvement—whether original construction or maintenance. Assuredly, in these instances, the judgment of the highway commissioner, when exercised in good faith and concurred in by the advisory board, is to be accepted as final.

"The presumption is that public officers * * * have exercised a sound discretion, and the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show, with that clearness which is always necessary to move a court of equity to interfere, a state of facts which would constitute an abuse of discretion.

The courts cannot control public officers in the exercise of their discretion. It is only when the courts find present some of the equitable grounds of fraud or mistake, or find the decision or award to be wrongful, fraudulent, collusive or arbitrary, that they can set aside or restrain their conclusions or determinations."

Hence, considering the facts set forth in your letter in the light of the additional facts above stated, you are advised in specific answer to your inquiry that maintenance and repair funds may legally be applied on the improvement referred to in your letter.

Under the same date as that of your above quoted communication, you make inquiry in a separate communication as to another contract in Delaware county awarded to A. W. Burns & Co. The facts covered by the two communications, as well as those ascertained upon inquiry at the highway department, are so very similar that the views stated and conclusion reached as to one of the projects is equally applicable to the other.

INHERITANCE TAX LAW—WITNESSES BEFORE COUNTY AUDITOR —FEES—HOW PAID.

Witnesses testifying under subpoena of the county auditor acting as inheritance tax appraiser are entitled to the fees specified in section 3012 G. C. for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions. Such fees are to be paid by the party at whose instance such witnesses are summoned. If such witnesses are summoned at the instance of the county auditor, he is entitled to reimbursement for the expense incurred by him in paying such fees, subject to the allowance of the probate judge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Receipt of your letter of July 3d is acknowledged, requesting the opinion of this department as follows:

> "Section 5341 of the new inheritance tax law, known as amended senate bill 175 (108 O. L. 561), empowers the county auditor, when directed to act as appraiser in inheritance tax proceedings, to subpoena and compel the attendance of witnesses.
> Query: How are said witnesses to be paid?"

The following sections of the General Code, as amended in amended S. B. No. 175 (108 O. L. 561), may be quoted:

> "Sec. 5341. The county auditor shall be the inheritance tax appraiser for his county. * * * Such auditor for such purpose is hereby authorized to issue subpoenas and to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers before him, and to examine such witnesses under oath concerning such property, the value thereof, and the nature and circumstances of the succession. Disobedience of such subpoena, or refusal to testify on such examination shall be punished as a contempt of the probate court. The county auditor shall report his findings in writing, together with the depositions of the witnesses examined, and such other facts in relation thereto as the probate court may order. * * *
> The fees of the sheriff or other officer, serving such subpoenas, and the actual and necessary traveling and other expenses incurred by the county auditor in making the appraisement shall be certified by the county auditor on such report. If the probate judge finds such fees and expenses to be correct, he shall allow such fees, and so much of such expenses as he may find to have been reasonable, having regard to the amount of the state's share of the taxes, and certify the amount so allowed for each on the order fixing the taxes. * * *."

In connection with the above quoted provisions of the inheritance tax law, the following statutes are material:

> "Sec. 3012. Each witness in civil causes shall receive the following fees: * * *; for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions, under a subpoena, seventy-five cents, and five cents for each mile from his place of residence to the place of taking depositions, to be paid on demand by the party at whose instance he is summoned. * * *.

Sec. 3011. In all cases not specified in this chapter, each person summoned as a witness shall be allowed fifty cents for each day's attendance, and the mileage herein specified. When not summoned, each person called upon to testify in a cause shall receive twenty-five cents."

The first question which may conveniently be considered is as to whether or not the witness testifying before the county auditor in the capacity of inheritance tax appraiser is a "witness in a civil cause." In this connection the following provisions of sections 5340 et seq., including a part of section 5341 not heretofore quoted, may be considered.

Section 5340 (as amended by Amended S. B. 175):

"The probate court of any county of the state having jurisdiction (as specified) * * * shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the questions arising under the provisions of this sub-division of this chapter, * * *."

Sec. 5341. * * * The probate court, upon its own motion may, or upon the application of any interested person, * * * shall by order direct the county auditor to fix the actual market value of any property the succession to which is subject to the tax levied by this subdivision of this chapter. Such auditor shall forthwith give notice by mail to all persons known to him to have a claim or interest in the property to be appraised, * * * of the time and place when he will appraise such property. He shall at such time and place appraise the same * * *. The county auditor shall report his findings * * * in duplicate; one copy thereof shall be filed with the probate court. * * *

Sec. 5345. From the report of appraisal and other evidence relating to any such estate before the probate court, such court shall forthwith upon the filing of such report, by order * * * find and determine, as of course, the actual market value of all estates, the amount of taxes to which the succession or successions thereto are liable, the successors and legal representatives liable therefor; and the townships or municipal corporations in which the same originated. * * * Thereupon the judge of such court shall immediately give notice of such order * * *.

Sec. 5346. * * * any person dissatisfied with the appraisement and determination of taxes, may file exceptions thereto in writing with the probate court within sixty days from the entry of the order * * *. The probate court shall thereupon by order fix a time * * * for the hearing of such exceptions, * * *. Upon the hearing of such exceptions, said court may make such order as to it may seem just and proper in the premises. * * *.

Sec. 5347. At the expiration of such period of sixty days * * * the probate judge shall make and certify to the county auditor a copy of the order provided for in section 5345 of the General Code. * * *.

The county auditor shall thereupon, * * * make a charge based upon such order and certify a duplicate thereof to the county treasurer, who shall collect the taxes so charged.

Sec. 5348. An appeal may be taken by any party * * *.

Sec. 5348-3. If, after the expiration of three months from the accrual of any tax under this subdivision of this chapter, such tax shall remain unpaid, the auditor of state shall notify the prosecuting attorney * * * Such prosecuting attorney shall thereupon apply to the probate judge in the name of the county auditor on behalf of the state for a transcript of the order fixing the tax. Such transcript shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court of the county, and the same proceedings shall be had with respect thereto as are provided by section 11659 of the General Code with respect to transcripts of judgments rendered by justices of the peace and mayors * * *.

Sec. 5384-4. The prosecuting attorney shall represent the county auditor of his county in his capacity as inheritance tax appraiser when called upon by him for that purpose. He shall also represent the interests of the state in any and all proceedings under this subdivision of this chapter. * * *"

It is clear that the proceeding for the assessment of the tax is intended to be judicial in character. It is true that it is ex parte, but this is the case with many proceedings of the probate court. It will be noticed that the statute relating to witness fees is not limited in its scope to "civil actions" in the technical sense, but that it apparently extends to all judicial proceedings not criminal in character. Section 3011 G. C., which would cover the case if section 3012 did not, evidently includes non-judicial investigations.

The county auditor acts as an officer of the probate court in exercising his function as inheritance tax appraiser, sustaining substantially the same relation to that court as a referee or a master commissioner might sustain to a court of common pleas. At the same time he is a public officer whose duty it is to represent the interests of the state. He is authorized and empowered to subpoena witnesses and this may he do upon his own motion, in an effort to get at the circumstances and value of the succession, or on the precipe of the applicant at whose instance the appraisement is made, or other party. Such party, in causing witnesses to be subpoenaed, would stand in the position of a party within the meaning of section 3012 G. C.

Thus far, then, it is the opinion of this department that witnesses subpoenaed to testify before the county auditor as inheritance tax appraiser are entitled to demand the fees prescribed in section 3012 G. C. and to have such fees paid by the applicant or other interested party at whose instance they are subpoenaed; but if summoned at the instance of the county auditor, the county auditor himself must pay the fees, if demand is made. If no demand is made, the witness loses his right to claim fees under section 3012, for that section, in so far as it relates to testimony before an officer authorized to take depositions (and the county auditor is such an officer), does not provide that witness fees be taxed in the costs.

If the county auditor at his own instance has caused witnesses to be summoned and has paid their fees, he has thereby incurred an expense for which, subject to the allowance of the probate judge, he is entitled to reimbursement under the last paragraph of section 5341 G. C., as first above quoted.

It is believed that the foregoing fully covers your question.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

COURT HOUSE BUILDING COMMISSION—CONTRACT FOR RETENTION OF 10% OF CONTRACT PRICE UNTIL ONE YEAR AFTER COMPLETION—HAS AUTHORITY TO WAIVE RETENTION OF 10% AND MODIFY SO AS TO RETAIN 5%.

A county court house building commission appointed and acting under the provisions of sections 2333 et seq. G. C., in constructing a new court house under a contract which provides for the retention of 10% of the contract price until one year after the final completion and acceptance of the court house, has authority to waive the retention of such 10% and modify the contract relating to such provision so that only 5% of the contract price (as required by section 2360 G. C.) may be retained after the completion and acceptance of such new court house by the building commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department, based on the communication of Mr. C. E. Grotton, state examiner of your department. Without quoting this communication at length, it may be stated that the facts upon which the opinion is desired are as follows:

1. The contract of the new court house building commission provided for the retention of 10% of the contract price for a period of one year from and after the completion and acceptance of the new court house contracted for.

2. No payment should be made on account of this contract except upon the written certificate of the architects, certifying that such payment is due and that such payment is allowed and ordered by said building commission.

3. That said commissioners have by agreement with the contractor waived the compliance of the 10% retention clause and have agreed that this clause may be modified to the extent that only 5%. (the amount provided in section 2360 G. C.) shall be retained.

It may be observed that, as stated in your letter "the main question that we wish to have an opinion on is whether or not, when a public contract is once entered into as was done in this case, can the terms thereof be changed by agreement?"

Sections 2333 to 2366 G. C., under the head of "Building Regulations" are pertinent to your inquiry.

Section 2333 G. C. provides for the appointment of a building commission by the court of common pleas, upon the application of the county commissioners when proper proceedings have been had for the erection of a court house.

Section 2338 G. C. provides in part:

"Until the building is completed and accepted, by the building commission, it may determine all questions connected therewith and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county."

Other sections of that chapter provide for the procedure of such commission in the record of its proceedings and preparation and adoption of plans contracting for such building and for the continued supervision of such commission.

Section 2360 G. C. in part provides that the county treasurer, upon the presentation of properly certified estimates in accordance with the contract, may give "to the person entitled thereto, a warrant on the county treasurer for the amount shown by the estimate to be due, retaining 5% thereon as additional security for the faithful performance of the contract."

From the facts above stated it is apparent that the 10% retention clause is not a statutory requirement, but an additional security provision made by the building commission, and the question in its last analysis is solved by the consideration of the power of officials to waive the performance of a public contract in a matter where the waiver on the part of the commissioners will not render such contract, as modified, in violation of any statutory building regulation.

In Benedict vs. Cincinnati, 7 O. D. Rep. 261, the superior court of Cincinnati, considering a case wherein the question of the authority of municipal officers to modify a sewer contract was involved, held that to carry out a contract already entered into and to meet an emergency, the city officials had the same right and authority as individuals, as shown by the decision in that case at p. 269:

> "It is also objected that the board, under its general powers, was not authorized to make such an agreement or contract. But it is to be remembered that this agreement was made for the very purpose of carrying out a contract already entered into, and was made to meet a sudden emergency, where delay would have been fatal to the interests of the city.
> But there is another view of the testimony which sustains the finding of the referees. The testimony shows that after the break in the canal the plaintiff, for the reason already stated, refused to go on with the work and abandoned the contract. This left to the board of commissioners, or rather the city, the option to sue him for damages for a breach of his contract, or to waive the breach and enter into a new contract, or a modification of the old one. And the authorities are to the effect that the abandonment and the refusal to proceed, constitute a good consideration for the new promise of additional compensation. Monroe vs. Perkins, 9 Pick, 298; Latimore vs. Harsen, 14 Johns., 330; Rand vs. Mathers, 11 Cush., I; Dearborn vs. Cross, 7 Cowen, 48; Townsend vs. Stone Co., 6 Duer, 208; Greenleaf on Evidence, section 303; Hart vs. Lanman, 29 Barb., 217.
> And this rule applies to corporations as well as to individuals. Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 398; Meech vs. Buffalo, 29 N. Y., 198; Bean vs. Jay, 23 M., 121."

A more recent case, State ex rel. Jewett vs. Sayre, Auditor, 91 O. S. 85, while not directly in point, indicates that county commissioners (whose position as to roads may be said to be analogous to that of the building commission to a court house) have authority to modify a building contract, where its performance is impossible by reason of the non-existence of the material required by the contract, and by analogy furnishes warrant for the proposition that if the contractor in the present case is unable on account of the abnormal building conditions, to complete his contract and to avoid an abandonment thereof, the commissioners may waive the 10% retention clause, or rather modify it by reducing the amount to be retained to the 5% requirement of section 2360, supra.

The power of a hospital building commission to waive conditions in its contracts was considered in Cin'ti. vs. Cameron, 33 O. S. 336. The general powers and duties of this commission, as fixed by law, were very similar to the court house building commission, whose contract is now under consideration. The law relating to hospitals, as stated on p. 362 of the report of that case, in part provided as follows:

> "All contracts shall be made in the name of the city, and it shall be

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department, based on the communication of Mr. C. E. Grotton, state examiner of your department. Without quoting this communication at length, it may be stated that the facts upon which the opinion is desired are as follows:

1. The contract of the new court house building commission provided for the retention of 10% of the contract price for a period of one year from and after the completion and acceptance of the new court house contracted for.
2. No payment should be made on account of this contract except upon the written certificate of the architects, certifying that such payment is due and that such payment is allowed and ordered by said building commission.
3. That said commissioners have by agreement with the contractor waived the compliance of the 10% retention clause and have agreed that this clause may be modified to the extent that only 5%. (the amount provided in section 2360 G. C.) shall be retained.

It may be observed that, as stated in your letter "the main question that we wish to have an opinion on is whether or not, when a public contract is once entered into as was done in this case, can the terms thereof be changed by agreement?"

Sections 2333 to 2366 G. C., under the head of "Building Regulations" are pertinent to your inquiry.

Section 2333 G. C. provides for the appointment of a building commission by the court of common pleas, upon the application of the county commissioners when proper proceedings have been had for the erection of a court house.

Section 2338 G. C. provides in part:

"Until the building is completed and accepted, by the building commission, it may determine all questions connected therewith and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county."

Other sections of that chapter provide for the procedure of such commission in the record of its proceedings and preparation and adoption of plans contracting for such building and for the continued supervision of such commission.

Section 2360 G. C. in part provides that the county treasurer, upon the presenta-

"In this case a county in Illinois had subscribed to the stock of a railroad, and was to issue bonds in payment of the subscription, provided the work was done by a certain date. This date for completion was subsequently extended, and it was held that the county was authorized to waive this condition as to the time of completion, and that the bonds were valid."

From the general language used by the courts in these cases, they would seem to apply to the power generally of municipal corporations to waive contractual conditions, but it may be suggested that the court house building commission in this contract is not affected by the special restrictions imposed upon municipal corporations by statutes relating exclusively to contracts made by municipalities, and the case of City of Columbus vs. McCracken, et al., No. 12,821, decided without report by the supreme court, may be distinguished from the facts in the question now under consideration.

In view of the decisions of the supreme court as above shown and in consideration of the authority and discretion vested in the building commission by law, it is concluded that by appropriate procedure to secure and expediate the performance of this contract, the building commission may waive that part of its contract requiring the retention of 10% of the contract price, and so modify that part of the contract that the amount retained may be reduced to 5%, consistent with the requirements of said section 2360 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL—HAS AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE GROUNDS AND BUILDINGS FOR OHIO NATIONAL GUARD.

Under section 5238 G. C. (107 O. L. 394) the Adjutant General has authority to purchase grounds and buildings for armories, and other buildings for the purpose of drill and for safe-keeping of military property of the Ohio National Guard.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

HON. ROY E. LAYTON, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department, as follows:

"The state of Ohio is contemplating the purchase of the building known as the Camp Perry Club House and tract of land of about eleven acres, formerly owned by the Ohio State Rifle Association, which went into the hands of a receiver. The property was sold by the receiver to a trustee representing the creditors. This tract of land lies on the east of and adjoins what is known as the Camp Perry grounds or rifle range and lies between the range and Lake Erie. It is really a part and parcel of Camp Perry rifle range, and on account of its location it really ought to be taken over by the state. The building and grounds, if taken over by the state, will be used as headquarters, etc., for the purpose of drill during the encampments of the National Guard at Camp Perry and during rifle practice, etc.

I take it that the purchase of this real estate would, both from a technical and legal standpoint, come within the provisions of section 5238 of the revised military code found on page 394 of Vol. 107 of the laws of Ohio. The fundamental purpose of this section is no doubt to give the adjutant general the power to provide and purchase grounds, armories and other buildings for military purposes in general. As a matter of fact, for many years past the adjutant general, acting no doubt under the authority of this statute or similar statutes has provided for the management, care and maintenance of the grounds and buildings at Camp Perry and large sums have been expended for that purpose. The buildings and eleven acres of ground above referred to will of course be added to Camp Perry and merely become a part of the camp grounds and rifle range. The building itself would make an excellent headquarters and furnish room for a canteen such as are always found at military camps and could no doubt also be used for the safe-keeping of clothing, equipment and other military property belonging to the National Guard, especially while in camp."

Section 5, Article IX of the Constitution of Ohio, Section 5238, General Code, as amended in 107 O. L., page 394, are pertinent to your inquiry. That section of the Constitution provides:

"The General Assembly shall provide, by law, for the protection and safekeeping of the public arms."

This mandatory section of the Constitution is pertinent as it is noted that the building upon the land about the purchase of which you inquire may be used for safekeeping of military property belonging to the National Guard, as stated in your letter.

Section 5238, referring to the Adjutant General, in part provides:

"He shall provide, grounds, armories, and other buildings for the purpose of drill and for the safe-keeping of arms, * * * and other military property issued to the several organizations of the National Guard, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for such purposes when, in his judgment, it is for the best interest of the state so to do."

Other sections of the same act provide that he may receive gifts and donations, which shall become the state property; that he may construct armories and have power similar to the superintendent of public works in condemning and appropriating land, and in this connection section 5241 is very significant. In part it provides:

"And such land is hereby declared to be a public necessity."

Section 5247 provides for the creation of a state military fund for the purposes of state armories and maintenance of the Ohio National Guard.

Consideration of the mandatory character of section 5, Article IX (supra) and the manifest purpose of these statutes convinces this department that if sufficient money is available in the proper fund that the adjutant general is authorized in law to purchase such buildings, including incidental and necessary land in connection therewith, for armories, drill grounds and buildings for keeping military property of the National Guard.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL—ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER—ENTITLED TO WAR-TIME SALARY UNTIL PEACE TREATY APPROVED BY UNITED STATES SENATE.

Until the peace treaty is approved and affirmed by the United States Senate, the war-time salary of the adjutant general and assistant quartermaster will be legally payable: under section 5227 G. C. as amended in 107 O. L., 392.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as to the salary of the adjutant general and assistant quartermaster, it is noted that the question presented is, as stated in your letter, "as to when their war-time pay should cease."

Section 5227, as amended in 107 O. L., page 392, is pertinent and in part is:

> "When the National Guard is called into service the adjutant general * * * and assistant quartermaster shall receive the pay and allowance of their rank, according to those at the time prescribed for the armies of the United States * * * until the conclusion of peace."

The National Guard has been called into service and it only remains to be considered if peace has been concluded.

By clause 11, section 8, article 1 of the United States Constitution, the power to declare war is vested in Congress. There is no explicit constitutional provision relating to concluding a peace. However, section 2, article 2, provides that the president > "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the senators present concur."

While the cessation of actual hostilities, followed by the tentative peace treaty agreed upon by the peace conference, might be claimed to have ended the war, so far as actual warfare is concerned, yet no difficulty is encountered in concluding that so far as the war status relates to the question under consideration, peace has not been concluded. "The conclusion of peace," as stated in section 5227, can only be effective upon the advice and consent of the senate and until the senate so consents, you are advised that "the conclusion of peace" will not occur.

From the above it follows that the war-time salary of the officers mentioned is legally payable.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SHAWNEE VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT IN SUM OF $12,500—FINANCIAL CONDITION OF DISTRICT DISCUSSED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE bonds of Shawnee Village School District in the amount of $12,500, to refund outstanding valid obligations, being 25 bonds of $500 each.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Shawnee Village School District, relative to the above bond issue, and find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that said bonds, drawn in accordance with the bond form submitted and executed by the proper officials, will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of Shawnee Village School District.

In approving these bonds, permit me to call your attention to the financial condition of Shawnee Village School District, revealed in the transcript, which, although not affecting the validity of the bonds in question, should be considered by the commission to the end that the state insurance fund should be securely invested.

The bonds under consideration are issued for the purpose of paying teachers' salaries and obligations contracted with certain banks and individuals to secure money for the purpose of paying salaries and other legitimate operating expenses. In other words, the board of education is under the necessity of issuing bonds to pay its current operating expenses.

The transcript shows that on October 1, 1914, bonds of the same character were issued by this district, in the amount of $8,000; that in July, 1915, bonds in the amount of $7,000 were issued for the same purpose, and that in April, 1917, bonds in the amount of $12,000 were issued for the same purpose. All of these bonds are outstanding. In addition, bonds in the amount of $25,000 for the erection of a school building are outstanding.

It is therefore apparent that this school district is unable, under the limitations of the existing tax laws, to secure sufficient income to pay its operating expenses and that it is annually under the necessity of issuing bonds to meet its current obligations. Unless the taxation laws of Ohio are amended, or the tax duplicate of this school district is increased, the continuance of this practice can only result in bankruptcy and the Industrial Commission may meet with difficulty in disposing of these bonds or in collecting the interest and principal as they fall due.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAINTAINS SECOND GRADE HIGH SCHOOL—REQUIRED TO PAY TUITION OF ITS PUPILS IN FIRST GRADE HIGH SCHOOL FOR ONR YEAR.

A board of education maintaining or participating in the maintenance of a second grade high school, is required to pay the tuition of its resident pupils in a first grade high school for a period of but one year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEECH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "A special school district exists in Pike township and some few years ago the township school board and the special district board united for the purpose of maintaining a second grade high school, to be supported by the township and special district as provided by law. Certain scholars who reside in Pike township school district and within three miles of the high school, as aforesaid, have been attending high school at Frazeysburg, Ohio, which is outside of the confines of this county, and are demanding that the Pike township school board pay their tuition at such school.
> The board wishes to know if they can be compelled to pay tuition for the scholars for a longer time than one year, the time required to complete a first grade high school course after leaving the second grade high school."

Your attention is invited to section 7748 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "A board * * * providing a second grade high school, as defined by law, shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year, except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. * * *."

In the question at hand you indicate that the "special school district" which is now a rural school district, has joined with the township rural school district in the maintaining of a joint high school, which is of the second grade, and is supported by the two rural districts, as provided by law. You advise that certain scholars residing in said township district are attending a high school across the county line at Frazeysburg, but that such pupils reside within three miles of the high school maintained as a joint high school by the two districts located within the confines of Pike township.

Inasmuch as the joint high school is of the second grade and the pupils in question reside within three miles of the said high school, their attendance at the Frazeysburg high school is entirely voluntary, as they are not taking advantage of the privilege of attending the high school of the second grade which is located within their district and within three miles of their respective residences. The law plainly provides that where pupils have the privilege of a second grade high school, then they are entitled to but one year of tuition at a first grade high school, which tuition shall be paid by the board of education of the district in which they reside.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that a board of education maintaining or participating in the maintenance of a second grade high school is required to pay the tuition of its resident pupils in a first grade high school for a period of but one year.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—APPROVAL OF SYNOPSIS FOR REFERENDUM PETITION OF HOUSE BILL No. 526 (108 O. L. 720)—PROVIDING AGAINST SALE ANDMANUFACTURE OF SAME.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1919.

MR. L. H. GIBSON, MGR., The Ohio Home Rule Association, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me under date of July 9, 1919, for my certificate under section 5175-29e a synopsis to be embodied in a referendum petition against an act known as house bill No. 526 (108 O. L. 720), said synopsis being in words and figure, as follows:

"The purpose of the act known as House Bill No. 526, passed by the General Assembly of Ohio June 17, 1919, approved by the Governor June 21, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state June 23, 1919, is to provide against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage and to repeal the provisions of an act to provide for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors as found in Volume 103, Ohio Laws, at pages 216-243, being sections 1261-16 to 1261-73 inclusive, of the General Code, and to repeal all other sections of the General Code inconsistent therewith.

The act provides a penalty for manufacturing, selling, furnishing or giving away intoxicating liquors as a beverage except as permitted by the act or for the keeping of a place where intoxicating liquors are manufactured, sold, furnished or given away in violation of law or constitutional amendment; and on second or subsequent offense for the abatement of said place as a nuisance or for the giving of a bond against further violation and makes the giving away of intoxicating liquors or other shift or device to avoid provisions of the act unlawful selling. It defines intoxicating liquors to include any distilled, malt, spirituous, vinous, fermented or alcoholic liquor containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol by volume, and all alcoholic liquids and compounds, whether medicated, proprietory, patented or not, and by whatever name called, which are potable or capable of being used as a beverage. It excepts the manufacture, importation, exportation or sale of flavoring extracts, perfumes, toilet preparations or patent medicines sold in good faith for culinary, flavoring, toilet or medicinal purposes which contain no more alcohol than is necessary for the purpose of extraction, solution or preservation. It excepts gifts of intoxicating liquors by a person in his bona fide private dwelling, unless such dwelling is a place of public resort. Except in case of druggists, it makes the payment of the United States special liquor tax prima facie evidence that the tax-payer is violating the state law. It makes the placing of a sign on a building announcing the manufacture, sale or giving away of intoxicating liquors prima facie evidence of an offense; also provides that the keeping of intoxicating liquors in any room, except a drugstore, or a permitted factory or bona fide private residence shall be prima facie evidence of violation of law. The act excepts the sale of alcohol or wine at retail by a regular druggist for exclusively known medical, mechanical, pharmaceutical, scientific or sacramental purposes, also the manufacture of cider and fruit juices for vinegar or for use and sale when not intoxicating as defined, also the manufacture and sale of alcohol and wine for permitted purposes by the manufacturer or wholesale druggist, providing he obtains a permit therefor and providing a record is kept of the sales. It excepts transportation of liquors to places outside the state for purposes not prohibited at the point of destination. The act requires in the sale of alcohol or wine for medicinal purposes a prescription by a reputable physician; prescription to be used but once and cancelled. It provides what the prescription shall contain; requires a record to be kept by each druggist of the kind, quantity and price of the liquors sold, the purpose for which it is sold and the name and residence of the purchaser. It provides for the inspection of said records by a certain county, state, municipal and township officers, or by persons holding their order to inspect.

The act provides that fines and forfeited bonds shall attach as a lien upon the real property in which the unlawful act was committed. It prohibits transportation and receipt of intoxicating liquors under a false name and requires the labeling of the package as to the kind and quantity of liquor and it makes the unlawful transportation and delivery of any such liquors work a forfeiture.

The act provides a penalty upon a druggist for violating the act and for a revocation of the druggist's certificate. It also provides for the prosecution of any druggist or manufacturer of alcohol or wine who violates any of the provisions of this act and the liquors seized by virtue thereof are to be used as evidence in such trial which must take place in not more than thirty days and may be continued to not more than fifteen days thereafter.

The act gives jurisdiction to any justice of the peace, police judge, mayor, municipal judge, common pleas judge or probate judge in the county, who tries the case without a jury unless imprisonment be a part of the penalty. It dispenses with information by the prosecuting attorney and indictment by grand jury. It requires leave granted by the reviewing court to file a petition in error; provides the time for filing the petition in error and provides that fines and forfeited bonds collected by the county court shall be paid into the county treasury; if enforced in the municipal court, into treasury of the municipality, or if enforced in the court of a justice of the peace, then into the treasury of the township. It provides that the cost of seizure shall be taxed with the other costs in the case.

The act repeals the license laws and other statutes inconsistent with the act."

I, John G. Price, Attorney-General of the state of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing synopsis is a truthful statement regarding the contents and purpose of said act.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 17, 1919.

HON. L. H. GIBSON, MGR., Ohio Home Rule Association, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me under date of July 9th for my certificate under section 5175-29e a synopsis to be embodied in a referendum petition against an act known as house bill No. 527 (108 O. L. 716), said synopsis being in words and figures as follows:

"The purpose of the act, known as house bill No. 527, passed by the general assembly of Ohio June 17, 1919, approved by the governor June 21, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state June 23, 1919, is to provide for the enforcement of laws and the constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, and to repeal the provisions of an act to provide for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors as found in Vol. 103, Ohio laws, at pages 216-243 being sections 1261-16 to 1261-73, inclusive, of the General Code, and to repeal all other sections of the General Code inconsistent therewith.

It requires the affidavit for such warrant of at least two persons describing the place to be searched, the things to be searched for and alleging substantially the offense in relation thereto.

It provides that the fluids poured out to prevent their seizure when the premises are searched shall be prima facie evidence of an offense, and that the officer making the seizure set forth in his return the place of detention of goods seized.

It provides that upon conviction, the liquors shall be destroyed and upon acquittal they will be returned. Such liquors seized shall not be discharged or returned to a person claiming them by reason of an alleged insufficiency of the description, in the complaint or warrant, of the liquor or place, but such person shall be entitled to a hearing when the case is tried on the affidavit provided in section 6171 or at the hearing provided in section 6178.

It provides that the seizure officer shall post a copy of his warrant upon an uninhabited building or premises wherein liquors are seized; that the magistrate shall fix a time for the hearing which will also be posted on the building or premises and if no claimant appears the liquor shall be destroyed. BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN MAP FILED WITH COUNTY AUDITOR TRANSFER OF TERRITORY IS THEN REQUIRED TO BE MADE FOR TAXING PURPOSES—TIME OF TRANSFER CAN NOT BE POSTPONED.

Under section 4692 G. C., where a county board of education transfers territory from one school district to another, and a map has been properly filed with the auditor of the county, that official is required by law to transfer the territory for taxing purposes at the time of such transfer and regardless of any listing day.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. P. H. WIELAND, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"The county board of education of Morrow county has made several transfers of territory during the months of April and May. These transfers have been from rural school districts to adjoining village school districts. In arranging the tax duplicates the auditor of the county refuses to transfer this territory for taxing purposes this year but holds that it shall stay in the old district until the tax duplicates are made up next year. His theory is that any property transferred after listing day shall not be transferred until the next year."

It is presumed that the transfers of territory in question, which you say took place during the months of April and May, were made under section 4692 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

"The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county in which the transferred territory is situated, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, * * *. The legal title of the property of the board of education shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred. The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

It will be noted that, from the language of the above section, such transfer is not effective until a map is filed with the auditor of the county, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, and in fact such transfer is held up and of no effect until such map is filed.

It is pertinent to here ask as to why the law makes it mandatory that this map should be filed at the particular time of the transfer and that such transfer is held up in its consummation by the proper filing of the map in question, showing boundaries. It seems to be the clear intent of the law that this map must be filed with the auditor at the time of the proposed transfer, in order that such official can at that time transfer the territory for taxing purposes on his duplicate, and not at such later period as he may see fit to do so.

You say the auditor of your county refused to transfer this territory for taxing purposes this year, but holds that it shall stay in the old district until the tax duplicates are made up for next year, his theory being that property transferred after listing day shall not be transferred until the next year. In order to show the fallacy of this proposition, it is only necessary to mention that as soon as the transfer is carried out by the board of education, from that moment the people of the transferred territory begin to receive the service for which they were transferred, and it must follow that if they receive the service in a district to which they were transferred, seemingly then they should pay their share, from and after that date, of the necessary taxes required to maintain such service of which they receive their proportional part.

It is a clear principle of law that the taxes necessary for the maintenance of the schools in a district shall be spread uniformly over the whole of the district, and it has so been held by this department in prior opinions. If the auditor waited until next year to make this transfer upon the tax duplicates of the districts in question, then it would be apparent that the maintenance of the schools in the particular district or districts was not kept up by taxation laid uniformly upon the whole of the district or districts.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the attorney general that under section 4692 G. C., where a county board of education transfers territory from one school district to another, and a map has been properly filed with the auditor of the county, that official is required by law to transfer the territory for taxing purposes at the time of such transfer and regardless of any listing day.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CENTRALIZATION MUST BE SUBMITTED TO WHOLE OF RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—DISTINCTION BETWEEN CENTRALIZATION AND CONSOLIDATION CONSIDERED.

1. The question of centralization of schools must be submitted to the whole of a rural school district and not to a part of such district.

2. Centralization is the bringing together of all the schools of a township or rura district while consolidation is the combining of two or more schools brought about through suspension. Questions of centralization of schools are governed by sections 4726 and 4726-1 G. C.; consolidation of schools is accomplished under section 7730 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. A. V. BAUMANN, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Fremont, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts'

> "The district is divided by the Sandusky river, with considerable territory on each side. On one side of the river they want to build a centralized school building, which will include high school. On the other the consolidation of the schools so that a single building will care for all pupils through the elementary grades is desired.
> Can part of a rural school district be centralized? If so, what is the procedure? What is centralization? Can it be distinguished from consolidation? What is the proper procedure in submitting the above proposition to the voters?"

In reply to your first question asking whether a part of a rural school district can be centralized, it is advised that in order to centralize schools the entire district must vote thereon and no part of a rural school district can centralize its schools without joint action and consent of all the electors in the rural school district.

In reply to your question as to what is centralization, and as to whether it can be distinguished from consolidation, it is advised that centralization is the case where all the schools of a rural school district take action towards centralizing their educational activity, while consolidation is where two or more schools join together in their educational activity and hence a lesser amount of territory is usually involved in consolidation than in centralization.

The section which governs centralization of a rural district is section 4726 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "A rural board of education may submit the question of centralization,and upon the petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of such rural district or upon the order of the county board of education, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such rural district at a general or a special election called for that purpose. If more votes are cast in favor of centralization than against it, at such election, such rural board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the rural district, and, if necessary, purchase a site or sites and erect a suitable building or buildings thereon. If, at such election, more votes are cast against the proposition of centralization than for it, the question shall not again be submitted to the electors of such rural district for a period of two years, except upon the petition of at least forty per cent. of the electors of such district."

Consolidation of schools is usually accomplished under section 7730 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 638, which reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide, and in such rural school district shall provide, for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and all of the pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, transferred to another school or schools when the county board of education so directs the board of education of the village or rural district in which said school is located. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural district by the board of education of such village or rural district within ten days after the county board of education directs the suspension of such schools; provided, however. that any suspended school as herein provided, shall be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age. Any school district that is entitled to state aid for salary of teacher according to provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1 when such schools are not consolidated, or centralized, shall receive the same amount of state aid after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, but to be applied to the cost of transportation of pupils to consolidated school, or schools, or for salary of teachers and the transportation of pupils."

It often occurs that the very thing accomplished by centralization is later accomplished by processes of consolidation under section 7730 G. C. and a board of education, under such section, has clear authority to suspend those schools which are no longer advantageous to operate. It follows, therefore that after a sufficient number of schools have been discontinued and transportation provided to a neighboring district school, in many instances the district will be practically centralized without having taken advantage of section 4726 G. C. Upon this point the Attorney-General said in opinion No. 1377, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913:

"The abolishment of all the schools in all the subdistricts by virtue of section 7730 and 7731 G. C., the establishment of new schools and the conveyance of pupils to these schools, operate as a centraliztion of the schools of the township, provided that no election has been held upon the question of centralization which resulted adversely and provided that no petition may be filed for an election according to law."

Attention is invited to the fact that section 7730 G. C. has been frequently amended, the present law being the amendment adopted in 107 O. L., 638, but the present general assembly, has amended this section twice in separate acts, which are H. B. 348 and H. B. 406, the latter of which is effective August 18th and the former of which is effective September 22nd. So that, whatever may be done by the local board of education concerned under section 7730, the law that is in effect at that particular date should be the one under which the board should operate.

Answering your question as to what is the proper procedure in submitting the question of centralization, attention is invited to section 4726, which provides that the rural board of education may itself submit the question of centralization to the qualified electors of the rural district and this is done in the usual manner by making the proper request of the deputy supervisors of elections for the county that an election be called in such rural district upon the question of centralization of schools and if more votes are cast in favor of centralization than against it, such rural board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the rural district and if necessary purchase a site or sites and erect a suitable building or buildings thereon. This means that it is not entirely necessary that all the pupils of the entire rural school distict be brought to one central building for the whole district, for there can be more than one school building in a centralized school district, as has been previously held in the opinion of the Attorney-General rendered heretofore. Thus it would be entirely possible in Sandusky township, which you say is divided by the Sandusky River, to have the schools of the township centralized and have a school building on each side of the river and still be within the law.

Should the board of education of the township in question care to operate under section 7730, there is ample authority to suspend any or all of the schools in the rural districts by the board and then provide transportation to a public school in the rural district. As to whether the board desires centralization under section 4726 or desires consolidated schools under section 7730, is a question for the board of education to decide.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. The question of centralization of schools must be submitted to the whole of a rural school district and not to a part of such district.
2. Centralization is the bringing together of all the schools of a township or rural district while consolidation is the combining of two or more schools brought about through suspension. Questions of centralization of schools are governed by sections 4726 and 4726-1 G. C.; consolidation of schools is accomplished under section 7730 G. C.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OIL INSPECTION LAW—APPLICABLE TO OILS AND GASOLINE BROUGHT INTO STATE FOR USE WITHIN STATE WITHOUT REGARD TO PLACE OF SALE—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF LAW DISCUSSED.

The oil inspection act (sections 844 to 871 G. C. inclusive) is applicable in its provisions for inspection and fees to oils and gasoline brought into the state for use within the state, without regard to the place of sale of such products.

Said act since its amendment in 1915, whereby the inspection fees were reduced, is not subject to the infirmity of the original act with respect to excessive inspection fees, and it is held that the act in its present operation is constitutional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. CHARLES L. RESCH, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for a written opinion as to liability for inspection fees of owners of oils and gasoline shipped into Ohio from a point without the state.

You submit with your correspondence statement of facts of certain cases where inspections have been made and payment of fees refused, on the ground that the oil or gasoline was sold at a point outside of the state of Ohio and that its shipment into the state does not render the owner amenable to the oil inspection laws of this state.

You also submit a communication from C. D. Chamberlain, general counsel of the National Petroleum Association, in which it is contended that there is no liability for the inspection fees where the oils or gasoline are bought outside of Ohio for use in the state of Ohio, and citing the case of Castle vs. Mason, 91 O. S. 296, in support of his position.

You summarize your statements with the inquiry as follows:

> "In rendering your opinion I wish you would give me the exact status of persons other than the government who receive shipments from without the state."

The oil inspection act as now in force comprises sections 844 to 871 of the General Code, and the sections directly pertinent to your inquiry are perhaps sections 850, 854 and 865 G. C.

Section 850 provides a graduated scale of fees chargeable for oil inspections, the same to be paid into the state treasury.

Section 854 G. C. provides:

> "Before being offered for sale to a consumer for illuminating purposes within this state, all mineral or petroleum oil, and any fluid or substance, the product of petroleum, or into which petroleum or a product of petroleum enters or is a constituent element, whether manufactured within this state or not, shall be inspected as provided in this chapter."

Section 865 G. C. provides in part:

> "Gasoline, petroleum, ether or similar or like substances, under whatever name called, whether manufactured within this state or not, having a lower flash test than provided in this chapter for illuminating oils, shall be inspected by the state inspector of oils. * * *"

Said section further provides that the same inspection fee shall be charged as for inspection of oils and a certificate of inspection attached to the container.

The provisions of the oil inspection law are substantially the same as the provisions of its predecessor in force at the time the case of Castle vs. Mason was presented to the courts, the only material alteration made in the amendment of the law as now in force being a reduction of the fees provided for inspections.

With respect to the scope of operation of the law in its application to oils brought into the state in interstate commerce, the supreme court, in the Castle vs. Mason case, in referring to the contention of the state that the act was applicable only to products sold in this state, said:

> "This is too narrow a construction of the facts pleaded and of the scope of the Ohio act. The act is not in terms made to apply to intrastate products, applies generally to any and all oils, gasoline, etc., 'whether manufactured in this state or not.' The language employed would require inspection of products shipped into the state, and the features of the inspection would necessarily, though indirectly, impose a burden upon interstate commerce."
> Castle vs. Mason, 91 O. S. 296.

This judicial interpretation of the scope of the law may be said to be determinative of that question and therefore I advise that the act in question by its terms is applicable to oils and gasoline brought into the state, for use within the state, without regard to the place of sale.

In fact it was with reference to the operation of the oil inspection law as applied to interstate commerce that the original act was held to be violative of the constitution in the Castle vs. Mason case.

The particular in which the original act was found to be invalid was with respect to the extent of the fees provided for inspections, and since the amendment of the law has reduced the fees to one-half that provided in the original act, the fault in the original act, the fault in the original law no doubt has been removed, which was the legislative purpose and intent in the amendment of the law.

It was pointed out in the Mason case, supra, that Article I, Section 10, Clause 2 of the Federal Constitution provides:

> "No state shall, without the consent of the congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

The court determined from the annual reports of the department of oil inspection covering the years 1907 to 1913 that the fees provided were not only excessive but continued from year to year yielding increasing net revenue, which was said to show the operative effect of the inspection act to be in direct violation of Article I, Section 10 of the U. S. Constitution. In the seven years of operation of the law as considered by the court, it was shown to have produced a net receipt above disbursements in the amount of $395,876.00 and the court said:

> "Under these circumstances the court feels warranted in holding that the resultant operation of the law is in direct and flagrant conflict with the Federal Constitution."

I have examined the annual reports of the department of oil inspection disclosing the resultant operation of the amended act, which reports disclose that in the first year of its operation there resulted a deficit of over $2,000 and that in the years 1916 and 1917 there was a small excess in receipts over disbursements for each of said years, while for the year ending June 30, 1918, there was a substantial increase in the excess of receipts over disbursements, which fact may have been due to abnormal conditions during said year.

The supreme court in the Mason case, supra, pointed out that > "It is not necessary that the legislature determine with exact nicety the amount of the inspection charges required to carry its purpose into execution. This is manifestly impossible owing to the varying fluctuations of trade. Mere excess in net surplus revenues is of itself no warrant in disturbing the law, nor would we feel disposed to hold that a flagrant excess in a single year over the expenses would invalidate it."

The test seemed to be regarded and expressed by the court as follows:

> "It may be subject to judicial attack if the inspection charges are so unreasonable and disproportionate to the service rendered as challenge the good faith of the law."

From the reports of the department of oil inspection covering the operation of the amended act as now in force. I am not able to conclude that there is any such excess in the proceeds of the fees chargeable, over and above expense of administration of the law, as to render the act void within the reasoning of the court in the Mason case, nor the holding by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of D. E. Foote & Co. vs. Stanley, 232 U. S., 494, which was followed by our Supreme Court in the Mason case.

In the case of D. E. Foote & Co. vs. Stanley, the United States Supreme Court said:

"Inspection necessarily involves expense, and the power to fix the fee, to cover that expense, is left primarily to the legislature, which must exercise discretion in determining the amount to be charged, since it is impossible to tell exactly how much will be realized under the future operations of any law. Beside, receipts and disbursements may so vary from time to time that the surplus of one year may be needed to supply the deficiency of another. If, therefore, the fees exceed cost by a sum not unreasonable, no question can arise as to the validity of the tax so far as the amount of the charge is concerned. And even if it appears that the sum collected is beyond what is needed for inspection expenses, the courts do not interfere, immediately on application, because of the presumption that the legislature will reduce the fees to a proper sum."

I therefore advise that the owners of oil shipped into Ohio for use in this state are liable for the inspection fees provided by the oil inspection act as amended and now in force, and that the fees provided are not shown to be so disproportionate to the expense incident to the administration of the law in its operation as to render the act unconstitutional.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSE BILL 162 (108 O. L. 478)—(BUSB-FOUTS ACT)—STATE LEVY GOES INTO IMMEDIATE EFFECT—OTHER LEVIES ARE SUBJECT TO REFERENDUM.

An act which amends several sections of the General Code is subject to the referendum by the General Code sections so amended, rather than by the formal sections of the act itself.

House Bill No. 162 (108 O. L. 478) amending various sections of the highway law is in general subject to the referendum and does not go into effect until ninety days after it was filed in the office of the secretary of state.

The amendment therein of section 1230 G. C. constitutes a law providing for a tax levy and went into immediate effect.

The amendment therein of section 1231-2 G. C. is so intimately related to the amendment of section 1230 that it also went into immediate effect.

The amendment therein of section 1222 G. C. so as to authorize county commissioners to levy a tax at the rate of one and one-half mills instead of one mill, as formerly, for the purpose of paying the county's share of a state road improvement, and taking such one and one-half mill levy in part outside of the limitations of the Smith one per cent law is not a "law providing for tax levies." This question is doubtful and the conclusion is reached on the principle of strict construction of exceptions to the reserved right of the referendum. Accordingly, this section will be held not effective until the expiration of ninety days from and after the date of filing in the office of the secretary of state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Careful consideration has been given to the recent request of the commission for the opinion of this department, which is as follows:

"The commission assumes that under the decision of the supreme court of Ohio, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Roose, 90 O. S. 345, the provisions of sections 1222, 1330 and 1231-2 G. C., as amended by H. B. No. 162 (108 O. L. 478), filed in the office of secretary of state May 28, 1919, relating to the levy of taxes, became effective upon the date of such filing. If this assumption is correct the commission desires to inquire whether, under the second paragraph of section 1222 G. C., the county commissioner may, in the event of less than one and one-half mills being levied, place more than one mill thereof outside of the maximum limitations and whether they can place less than one-half mill thereof inside such limitations."

It is understood that the commission desires the advice of this department as to the correctness of the assumption referred to in the first sentence of the above inquiry So far as section 1230 of the General Code as amended by the act referred to is concerned, the decision cited is directly in point. The former section carrying this number provided for the levy of a tax on the grand duplicate of the state at the rate of three-tenths of one mill. This provision is repealed and a levy of five-tenths of a mill is made by the amended section. The levy is direct and in fact is exactly the same kind of a levy as that involved in the case cited.

For perhaps slightly different reasons, section 1231-2 must be deemed to have gone into immediate effect. The original section bearing this number into immediate effect. The original section bearing this number made the three-tenths mill levy one in addition to all other levies and unlimited by any tax limits. The function of, this section was to make clear what otherwise would have been left to inference, namely the effect of the Smith law limitations upon the subsequently levied state highway tax. While sections of this character are, as will hereinafter be pointed out, not universally within the class of "laws providing for tax levies" mentioned in article II section 1d of the constitution, yet the provision of section 1231-2 is so closely related to that of section 1230 that it is the opinion of this department that both take effect at the same time.

There is another reason which points in the same direction: original section 1231-2, as has been mentioned, took the three-tenths mill levy outside of the limitations of the Smith law. The main legislative motive embodied in this original section was that the state highway levy should be outside of the Smith law limitations rather than that a levy of three-tenths mill, as such, should be outside of such limitations. That is to say, it would have been possible for the legislature to have expressed the idea embodied in that section without using the words "of three-tenths of one mill," which were descriptive merely and were not intended to define in terms of mills the extent to which the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith law was to be exceeded for road purposes; so that the full scope of the legislative intent could have been expressed by the language "the annual levy on all the taxable property within the state provided for in this act shall be in addition, etc." Had that been the form of original section 1231-2 it would not have been necessary to amend it in the act of 1919. That being the case, the amendment is one of form only rather than of substance. So that no substantial right of the people under the initiative and referendum is denied by giving effect to this section at the time when section 1230, to which it relates, goes into effect, which certainly would promote convenience.

The amendment of section 1222 presents an entirely different question. For the purpose of getting in mind exactly what that question is the following quotation from section 1222 as previously in force and the same section as amended will be made.

Section 1222 as amended, 107 Ohio Laws, 132:

"For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding one mill, upon all taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, and subject only to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. * * *"

Section 1222 as amended by House bill No. 162:

"For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding one and one-half mills, upon all the taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, but subject, however, to the extent of one-half mill thereof, to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. The remaining one mill of said levy so authorized shall be in addition to all other levies made for any purpose or purposes, and the same shall not be construed as limited, restricted or decreased in amount or otherwise by any existing law or laws. The proceeds of such levy shall be used solely for the purpose of paying the county's proportion of the cost and expense of constructing, improving, maintaining and repairing inter-county highways and main market roads or parts thereof in co-operation with the state highway department or the federal government or both; and the funds produced by such levy shall not be subject to transfer to any other fund, either by order of court or otherwise.

The county commissioners of any county in which less than one and one-half mills is levied in any year under the provisions of this section shall within the above limitations determine what part of such levy shall be subject to the limitations upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force and what part of such levy shall be outside such limitation and unrestricted by any existing law or laws."

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Both sections contain a paragraph authorizing the making of a township levy which is unchanged.

Two statements may be made of this section:

1. In its original as well as in its amended form it is not self-executing; it does not itself levy a tax; it merely grants authority to the county commissioners to make a levy.

2. The only changes made in the course of amendment relate to the extent of the authority granted; no new tax is authorized; the limitations are merely altered. The former section imposed the following limitations:

(1) Of one million the amount of the specific levy.

(2) Of fifteen mills on the amount of the levy together with all other levies in a given taxing district, exclusive of those exempted from the fifteen mill limitation.

The amended section imposes the following limitations:

(1) Of one and one-half mills on the specific levy.

(2) Of fifteen mills as to one-half mill of the specific levy operative as above described.

(3) Of one mill on the rate of the specific levy in excess of the fifteen mill limitation.

For the purpose of analyzing the effect of these changes with a view to determining whether or not they make the section a "law providing for tax levies," let us at the outset eliminate the first change from consideration. That is, let us suppose that the rate of the levy for the purpose specified (which is the same under both the old and the new law) had remained unchanged in process of amendment, so that the only change had been to provide that in whole or in part the levy should be outside of the fifteen mill limitation.

Such a change would be merely a change in tax limitations—in real effect a change in what is popularly known as the Smith law. As such, it would come squarely within the decision in State ex rel. vs. Milroy, 88 O. S. 301, referred to in a recent opinion to the commission. That case may be taken as authority for the statement that a law altering the limitations of the Smith law is not a law providing for tax levies; rather it is a law providing for limitations on tax levies, which is an entirely different thing.

So far, amended section 1222 has been considered as if it were a "law" within the meaning of the constitution only to the extent that it may have changed the pre-existing law embodied in the same section. This statement is believed to be correct. It is a fundamental principle that where a new law re-enacts a whole section for the purpose of amendment, introducing new matter or striking out old matter, the unchanged portion of the section is taken to have been the law all the time. So that it is only with respect to the changes made that the new law speaks from the date of its effectiveness.

By an analogous course of reasoning it is submitted that it should be held that an act amending a section of the General Code which originally may have provided for a tax levy but also provided for some other subject such as limitations on tax rates and which changes the original section without making any new provision for tax levies but in some other respect is not itself a law providing for tax levies; rather it is a law amending a previous law providing for tax levies in some respect other than making provision for tax levies.

Upon these principles then it is the opinion of this department that the fact that the act of May 28 1919 amends section 1222 so as to repeal the authority of the commissioners to make a levy for a particular purpose which authority previously existed and to change the application of the Smith law to such levy does not make the section if it may be separately considered a "law providing for tax levies."

A more difficult question arises when we take account of the fact heretofore eliminated from consideration that the limitation on the specific levy is raised by the new section from one mill to one and one-half mills. This question may be considered from two angles of view. In the first place the authority to levy being present in the law before its amendment, and the only change being in the limitation on that authority expressed in terms of rate, is the case different from that already supposed, and does not State ex rel. vs. Milroy supra apply as well to this change as to the other? In other words it is still the same levy for the same purpose that the commissioners are authorized to make; the levy itself is not changed, for it need not have amounted to one mill under the old law; it did not levy a tax but merely granted authority to levy subject to the limitation that the levy made by the commissioners should not exceed one mill.

Putting it in another way: Suppose the subject matter of the section were divided into two sections; one granted authority to the commissioners to levy a tax; the other contained a proviso to the effect that the tax levied under the first section should not exceed one mill. Then suppose an amendment to the second section, striking out the phrase "one mill" and inserting "one and one-half mills," would the law making this change be a "law providing for tax levies:" It would seem that the answer to this question should be clearly in the negative.

However it is perhaps reasonable to consider the increase from one mill to one and one-half mills to be in the nature of new authority to levy to the extent of a half mill; so that to this extent the new section may be regarded as a law authorizing the county commissioners to levy for a particular purpose on particular property a tax not greater than half a mill in rate. Such a view would raise squarely a question which is difficult of solution, but which may as well be considered in this connection as in any other in which it is likely to arise. That question may be put as follows:

> Suppose a law grants authority to the proper officers of a local subdivision to levy taxes for a specified purpose on the grand duplicate of the subdivision; is such a law a 'law providing for tax levies' which under article II section 1d of the constitution is to go into immediate effect.

This question has never been determined in this state.

However in State ex rel. vs. Milroy supra we have something very closely approximating a definition of a "law providing for tax levies" in the following quotation:

> "The general assembly did not in this act impose a tax stating distinctly the object of the same nor did it fix the amount or the percentage of value to be levied nor did it designate persons or property against whom a levy was to be made. * * * The act cannot be said to be one 'providing for tax levies' within the meaning of those words as used in section 1d of article II of the constitution."

In section 1222 no tax is directly imposed. The section grants authority to the commissioners to levy a tax but it does not execute that authority in and of itself. Neither does the act fix the amount or the percentage of value to be levied; it leaves that to the local authorities merely prescribing certain limits beyond which they may not go.

An act of the type imagined would have the other essentials mentioned in this definition. It would state distinctly the object of the tax authorized to be levied and designate the persons or property against whom the levy was to be made.

It is true that section 5 of article XII of the constitution, which the supreme court seems to have had in mind in framing the above definition, provides that:

> "No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax, shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied."

The latter part of this section of the constitution is certainly intended to be as broad as the first part of it. That is, the word "imposing" used therein must be understood as meaning "in pursuance of which" a tax "is levied." So that for the purposes of article XII, section 5 of the constitution a law "imposing a tax" is a law in pursuance of which a tax may be levied, whether by local authority or otherwise. Therefore, it may be that within the scope of the court's definition an act of the kind imagined for the purpose of the present discussion would be one which "imposed" a tax. Nevertheless, it would still lack the one essential element of failing to fix the amount or percentage of value to be levied. What it does, as previously stated, is to fix a limitation beyond which the levy shall not go.

At the very least, the question now under discussion as applied to a law of the type imagined would be very doubtful. In view of such doubt what should be the attitude of the administrative officers of the state? It seems to me that that attitude ought to be one of extreme conservation in the interpretation of article II, section 1d of the constitution. We have here an exception to the reserved right of the people to exercise the power of the referendum. Certainly it is subject to a strict construction. Certainly, too, the supreme court of this state when called upon to construe it has given it such a strict construction; for in State ex rel. vs. Milroy, supra, that court held a law but slightly different from the new law introduced by the amendment of section 1222 to be not within the exception, and in State ex rel. vs. Roose, referred to in your inquiry, the court limited what is even the natural import of the words used in article II, section 1d so as to interpret the section as if it read "sections of laws providing for tax levies" instead of "laws providing for tax levies," as it actually does read.

Under all these circumstances, the only safe and proper course for the administrative officers of the state is to construe the phrase "providing for" strictly rather than liberally, and to hold that no law comes within the scope of the exception thus created which is not self-executing as to the levy to which it relates. In other words, without a judicial determination of the question this department feels unable to advise that a law authorizing local authorities, like county commissioners, township trustees and municipal councils, to levy taxes for a particular purpose is a law "providing for tax levies." Accordingly the present advice of this department is that such a law should be regarded as subject to the referendum and not effective until after the expiration of ninety days from and after the time of filing it in the office of the secretary of state.

So far as section 1222 is concerned, of course, there are other considerations previously referred to which make it extremely doubtful that the amendment made by the section could even be considered as if it were a new law authorizing a particular tax levy for some particular purpose. Without repeating what has been previously said along this line, but merely in amplification thereof, it is now pointed out that the new matter in section 1222 as amended in nowise specifies the object of the tax to which the amended section refers nor the property upon which it shall be levied. The only new thing is a change in the limitation on the specific rate; so that it is only by regarding that changes as if it were new authority to levy for the designated purpose to the extent of the increase authorized to be levied that the question last discussed is even raised. For this reason the department advances with even greater confidence than would otherwise be the case the view that the law of 1919, in so far as it amends section 1222 of the General Code is not a "law providing for tax levies."

In the preparation of this opinion one important consideration not previously mentioned has not been overlooked. As suggested in your letter, State ex rel. vs. Roose, cited by you, holds that though a law as a whole may be subject to the referendum, if it contains a section which provides for a tax levy such section may go into immediate effect. As previously stated, this rule constitutes a strict interpretation of section 1d of article II of the constitution. It authorizes us, as it were, to separate a law into sections to determine whether or not any part of it goes into immediate effect. Thus far it has been assumed and held that the General Code sections amended in the act of May 28, 1919, are "sections" within the meaning of this rule. The rule itself is derived from reading section 1d of the article in connection with section 1c thereof, which provides that referendum petitions may be filed as against > "any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly."

The question is as to what is meant by the phrase "section of any law" as used in this context and adapted to section 1d by the supreme court in the case cited. For while sections 1222 and 1230, for example, are sections of the General Code, they are not, strictly speaking, sections of house bill No. 162. That bill, strangely enough contains but three sections, numbered respectively, section 1, section 5 and section 6. Section 1 provides that certain sections of the General Code be amended and certain supplemental sections be added "to read as follows." Then follow numerous

General Code sections quotes in their amended form. Section 5 directs that the "sections of this act and parts thereof" shall be regarded as "independent sections and parts of sections," etc. Section 6 repeals the original sections amended.

The view might be taken that there are only three sections in this law for referendum purposes; so that "section 1" would have to stand or fall as a "law providing for tax levies" as an entirety. From this it might be argued, on the one hand, that because one provision of it, viz.: amended section 1230 G. C. admittedly provided for a tax levy the whole section would go into immediate effect. The converse might also be argued, viz.: that because the provision for a tax levy in section 1 is so small a part of it, so that its paramount characteristics might partake of another nature, none of "section 1" of the act—not even sections 1230 and 1231-2 is to go into immediate effect. Just enough doubt is raised by this suggestion to make even the opinion heretofore given respecting the immediate effectiveness of sections 1230 and 1231-2 one with respect to which some reservation may be made. Indeed it would be well if the whole question could be authoratively settled in the courts. However, it is the opinion of this department that the phrase "section of law" as used in the initiative and referendum provisions of the constitution is to be construed in connection with section 16 of the same article of the constitution, which provides in part that:

> "no law shall be * * * amended unless the new act contains the * * * section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed."

In other words, the word "section" as used in article II, section 1c and as understood according to the judicial interpretation thereof in article II, section 1d should be held to refer to the section or sections amended when the act is an amendatory act. Any other interpretation would, it is believed, defeat the purpose of the referendum on sections of laws, for by far the greater bulk of the laws passes by the general assembly take the form of amendments to existing Code sections. They most frequently have but one or two sections, an amending section and a repealing section—that is, they have but these two sections in the one sense suggested; but in the typical section 1 will be found very frequently several sections of the General Code amended "to read as follows." The framers of the initiative and referendum amendment and the people who voted for it could hardly have intended to limit the right to file a referendum petition against "any section of any law" to those cases in which the law is of the exceptional type which contains numerous consecutively numbered sections. For this reason it is the opinion of this department that where an amendatory law contains two "sections," in one of which there are re-enacted in their amended form numerous sections of the General Code, the right to file a referendum petition exists as to the various Code sections thus amended.

To be sure some technical difficulties exist. For eaxmple, the typical "section 1 of a bill of the type under discussion will set forth the sections amended, and the typical "section 2" will repeal the original sections mentioned in section 1. Suppose a referendum petition is filed against a Code section merely and the section is defeated, what would be the effect of such vote of the electors upon the repeal of the original section? Technically, it might be argued that the result would be that the entire section, both in its original and in its amended form, will be expunged from the statutes. It is believed, however, that the courts would not be so technical in working out the practical operation of the referendum, but would hold that in such case the vote of the people would have the effect of destroying the repeal of the section by the typical "section 2" of the bill, though no referendum had been filed against that section. Indeed, such a holding would be the only way in which it would be possible to give any practical operation in the great majority of cases to the right to file a referendum petition against a "section of a law."

The foregoing conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to answer your inquiry respecting the interpretation of section 1222 as amended at this time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—NON-CHARTER CITY—MAY CHARGE FEES TO RESIDENTS FOR COLLECTION OF GARBAGE.

The officers of a non-charter municipality, acting under a legally enacted ordinance providing therefor, may charge reasonable fees to the residents of the municipality for the collection of garbage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledging the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department, it is noted that, as stated in your letter, the question is "may the officers of a non-charter municipality legally charge fees to the residents of the municipality for the collection of garbage?"

It is also noted that you call attention to section 3649 G. C.

While your question relates to officers charging the fees concerned, it is assumed for the purpose of this opinion that such officers are acting under a regularly enacted ordinance.

Bearing upon the powers of municipal corporations in such matters, sections 3646, 3649 and 3809 G. C. are pertinent.

Section 3646 of the chapter enumerating the general powers of municipal corporations, generally empowers municipal corporations to provide for the public health, to secure the inhabitants of the corporation from the evils of contagious, malignant and infectious diseases.

Section 3649 of the same chapter also empowers such corporations " to provide for the collection and disposition of * * * garbage * * * and to establish maintain and regulate plants for the disposal thereof."

Section 3809, more special in its nature, provides that:

> "The council of a city may authorize * * * a contract with any person * * * for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation."

It will be seen that sections 3646 and 3649 are general grants of power. Section 3616 of the same chapter provides that such corporation shall have the general powers enumerated in that chapter, and "council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them."

Section 3809 directly authorizes the council to make a contract for the collection and disposal of garbage, while the power granted in section 3649 is more general in that the corporation is authorized "to provide for the collection and disposition of * * * garbage."

In Stadler vs. Cleveland, 17 O. D. (N. P.) 340, this power of the corporation is considered.

On page 342 the court says:

> "The city may exercise the powers already referred to as given to it by the legislature of the state, and in exercising these powers it may use every means 'which are plainly adapted to an end'."

That was the language of Marshall, J., in McCullach vs. Maryland, 17 U. S. (4 Wheat.), 316.

In California Reduction Company vs. Sanitary Reduction Works, 199 U. S., 306, the supreme court used this language:

> "Municipal bodies under legislative sanction may exercise the power—to prescribe such regulations as may be reasonable, necessary and appropriate for the protection of the public health * * *. Equally well settled is the principle that if a regulation enacted by competent public authority, avowedly for the protection of the public health, has a real, substantial relation to that object, the courts will not strike it down."

While the precise question presented by you was not raised in the Stadler case, supra, the court's consideration of the powers of the municipality in such matters is pertinent.

The case of Bauer vs. Casey, 6 C. C. (n. s.) 69, does not dissent from the general principles announced in the Stadler case.

Believing that the powers in such matters granted to the municipal corporation are very comprehensive, it is concluded that by ordinance or resolution, duly enacted, the officers of a non-charter municipality may legally charge reasonable fees to the residents of the municipality for the collection of garbage.

This opinion is restricted to the general question stated in your letter, in which it is noted no facts are stated, and the opinion does not pass upon nor consider a case where the ordinance not only fixes a fee to be paid by the resident of the municipality for the collection of garbage, but at the same time requires all of the residents to dispose of their garbage by delivering it to the officers of the municipal corporation.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SUMMER SCHOOLS FOR TEACHERS—INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 7868 G. C.—SUCH SCHOOLS CAN BE LOCATED EITHER IN OR OUTSIDE OF OHIO—WHEN BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY PAY FOR INSTITUTE ATTENDANCE OF TEACHERS.

1. The recognized summer school for the training of teachers, mentioned in section 7868-1 G. C., can be located either in or outside of Ohio, but such summer school for teachers must be one that has been officially recognized as such by the superintendent of public instruction of Ohio.

2. Boards of education may pay for institute attendance that takes place in another county in this state, but such attendance must be certified by a county superintendent in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgement is made of your request for an opinion upon the following questions:

"Referring to section 7868-1 G. C.:

1. Must the 'recognized summer school' have been held in Ohio?
2. How is the fact established and officially made known, that a summer school was recognized"?

Referring to section 7870 G. C.:

3. May a board of education pay for institute attendance that took place in another county in this state?
4. May institute attendance be paid for when it took place in another state?"

Section 7868-1 G. C. reads as follows:

"Each village and rural boards (board) of education in counties in which no county institute has been held in any year, shall pay ten dollars to each teacher employed by such board, who has attended for at least six weeks during such year, a recognized summer school for the training of teachers."

It will be noted that nothing in the above section stipulates that such attendance at a summer school for teachers' training must have taken place within the state of Ohio, but it is necessary that such summer school for teachers must be a "recognized" summer school. It is found that there are a large number of recognized summer schools for teachers' training held in other states and that the superintendent of public instruction has had representatives of his department visit these summer schools outside of Ohio, in order that they may be given a proper rating, and it has been found that their courses of study for the training of teachers is equally as good as recognized summer schools within the state of Ohio, and it is therefore not necessary that the attendance mentioned in section 7868-1 G. C. should have taken place at a recognized summer school for teachers within the state of Ohio.

Answering your second question, as to how the fact is established that a summer school is a "recognized" summer school, it is for the superintendent of public instruction of the state of Ohio to say whether any summer schools for the training of teachers, either within Ohio or outside, come within the class known as recognized summer schools for the training of teachers. An official knowledge as to whether any summer school comes in that class can be secured from that official.

Answering your third question as to whether a board of education may pay teachers for institute attendance that took place in another county in this state, attention is invited to the language of section 7870 G. C. which provides that teachers shall be allowed two dollars a day for actual daily attendance for the week they attend the institute, such attendance to be certified by the county superintendent of schools. After providing that such payment of ten dollars for attendance at the county teachers' institute must be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed, the section further provides as follows:

"* * *. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

The seeming intent of this legislative section is that teachers shall be encouraged to attend a county teachers' institute, for which they shall be allowed ten dollars for that particular week. Such teachers' institute commences in August, when a majority of the teachers are free to take up other employment for the summer vacation, than that of their regular employment as a teacher. They must quit, for one week, whatever other employment they may have taken up, and receive in lieu of any other amount they might have earned, the sum of ten dollars for such attendance, which would be practically the paying of the expense of attendance in many cases, without any allowance for actual time lost.

It must be remembered that under the recently enacted school code of 1914, the schools of the state have become co-ordinated more or less, and there is considerable reciprocity in educational matters between the cities and the counties. Very frequently a teacher will have her home in southern Ohio but may be teaching in a distant county It would hardly seem right, if she has returned to her home, that she should be compelled to return to the county of her employment for the week of the teachers' institute, where a teachers' institute is also held in her own county or near thereto.

It is noted that in order to secure the payment for attendance at a county teacher institute it is necessary to have the certificate of such attendance signed by the county superintendent. Clearly, if the legislature has arranged that the examinations and certificates of one county shall be recognized by the county board of school examiners of another county, it would seem that the certificate of a county superintendent, that a teacher had attended a county institute in his county, would be recognized by the superintendent of another county or a board of education in another county. As an illustration of this, a teacher who is unemployed in August attends the county institute in Marion county. Shortly thereafter the teacher is employed by a board of education in Miami county, and the law contemplates that such situation shall be taken care of by using the language, "Such salary (ten dollars) shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

Coming to your fourth question, however, it may be said that there is no provision in the Ohio law for the payment of institute attendance that took place in another state, in that there are no reciprocal arrangements between the counties of different states, and while the Ohio statutes refer to the certificating that may take place in other states, nowhere in our law is there found any intimation or any official knowledge taken of the fact that county institutes for teachers are held in other states. Hence the contemplation of the law is that in order to avail themselves of the benefits of section 7870 G. C., teachers must attend a teachers' institute that is a part of the Ohio educational system.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. The recognized summer school for the training of teachers, mentioned in section 7868-1 G. C., can be located either in or outside of Ohio, but such summer school for teachers must be one that has been officially recognized as such by the superintendent of public instruction of Ohio.

2. Boards of education may pay for institute attendance that takes place in another county in this state, but such attendance must be certified by a county superintendent in Ohio.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—LEVY UNDER SECTION 1222 G. C. IS OUTSIDE OF TEN MILL LIMITATION OF SECTION 5649-2 G. C. AND SUBJECT ONLY TO FIFTEEN MILL LIMITATION OF SECTION 5649-5b G. C. THOUGH PART OF LEVY ANTICIPATED BY ISSUANCE OF BONDS UNDER SECTION 1223 G. C.—LEVY PROVIDED BY SECTION 1223 G. C. SUBJECT TO TEN MILL AND THREE MILL ALSO FIFTEEN MILL LIMITATION.

The entire levy under section 1222 G. C. (107 Ohio Laws, 132) is outside of the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C. and subject only to the fifteen mill limitation of section 5649-5b G. C., though part of such levy has been anticipated by the issuance of bonds under section 1223 G. C.

The deficiency levy required to be provided for by section 1223 G. C., if made, is subject to the ten mill and three mill limitations, as well as to the fifteen mill limitation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. ISSAC C. BAKER, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:- I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"The board of county commissioners have submitted to me the following statement requesting to me the following statement requesting an opinion from me:

'Section 1222 G. C. permits counties for the improvement of roads with state aid to levy one mill in addition to other taxes but within the fifteen mill limitation.

Section 1223 G. C. authorizes counties for such purpose to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of such levy and the collection of assessments against property benefited.

This county has divided the one mill, levying part for road improvements and part for the payment of bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments the total of the two keeping within the specified amount.

The blank tax budgets furnished by the county auditor place the direct levy in the 15 mill limitation column but levy for bonds in the 10 mill column.

This to us does not appear at all consistent with the intent of the law and we believe that the bond levy should also be within the 15 mill limitation.

Respectfully,

Board of County Commissioners,

By W. W. Crawford, Clerk.'

This matter was likewise submitted to the tax commission of Ohio at Columbus for their opinion and under date of June 3, 1919, the tax commission through its secretary, George L. Gableman, sunmitted the following letter as their opinion relative to the matter:

'The commission is in receipt of the copy of the communication from the county commissioners of Butler county to Hon. Isaac C. Baker, prosecuting attorney, relative to levy under section 1222 G. C. and bonds issued under section 1223 G. C.

In reply will say section 1222 provides for a levy of one mill within the 15 mill limitation upon all taxable property in the county, and a two mill levy by township trustees upon all taxable property in a township. The funds from this levy may be expended annually as provided in the law governing the construction of state aid roads, or it may be expended as provided in section 1223, which permits the county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of taxes from the levies provided for in section 1222, to sell bonds, and the levies under section 1222 shall be for the payment of the bonds and whether the levy of one mill is expended annually or applied to the payment of bonds issued under section 1223, it is within the 15 mill limitation, it being optional with the commissioners as to either expending the amount annually to issue bonds. We beg to differ with your commissioners as to the budget form being in error, that is, if the form is the one prescribed by the commission in 1915.

The budget on line 22 calls for the levy under section 1222, and this applies to all the levy, whether for annual use or for bonds. Section 1223 does not provide for any levy and could not have a place upon the budget, for it does not authorize any levy, and for this very reason could not be included with the levies enumerated within the 10 mill limitation.

The proper course for your commissioners is to place the whole levy under section 1222, and direct the auditor as to the distribution of the levy. From the levy for the county the auditor will apply the amount necessary to pay the bonds, and follow the same procedure with that of the township. The balance should be placed in the proper road fund.

Trusting this will explain the matter, we are

Yours very truly,

The Tax Commission of Ohio,

George L. Gableman, Secretary.'

Now I desire to know whether or not your office is of the same opinion in regard to this matter as the tax commission of Ohio in order that we may know whether or not the levy for the bonds will come within the 15 mill limitation as we think it does."

You have evidently misinterpreted the tax commission's letter. The commission holds that the entire levy under section 1222 of the General Code is outside of the ten mill limitation but subject to the fifteen mill limitation. This is correct and apparently in accord with the contention of your commissioners. So that there is really no dispute between the tax commission and your commissioners. The commission is correct in its ruling that a levy under section 1222 of the General Code is an entirety, regardless of whether the entire amount of such levy is anticipated by the issuance of bonds or not.

Said section 1222 in its present form (it has been amended by the last session of the legislature but your question does not relate to such amendment) provides that:

"* * * the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding one mill, upon all taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, and subject only to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force."

Section 1223 provides in part that:

"The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments or any part thereof, * * * may, * * * sell the bonds of said county * * *."

In other words, the levy may, as in your case, exceed that required to pay the county's proportion of specific improvements for which bonds have been issued and therefore anticipated by the issuance of such bonds. This is immaterial and, as pointed out in the commissioner's letter, the fact that a part of the levy is for the accumulation of a fund and part is appropriated by anticipation in the issuance of bonds makes no difference so far as the application of the second sentence of the first paragraph of section 1222 of the General Code is concerned. The levy is subject to the fifteen mill limitation as an entirety and is outside of the ten mill limitation as an entirety. As previously stated, this seems to be the view both of your county commissioners and of the tax commission and I am at a loss to know why there seems to be any controversy for further settlement.

In strict accuracy it must be said that the tax commission's letter contains at least one misleading statement, namely, that section 1223 of the General Code does not provide for any tax levy. The contrary is the case. That section provides in part that:

> "Prior to the issuance of such bonds the county commissioners shall provide for the levying of a tax upon all the taxable property of the county to cover any deficiency in the payment or collection of any special assessments or township taxes anticipated by such bonds."

This tax levy, if made, would be subject to the ten mill limitation and to the three mill limitation on taxes for county purposes imposed by section 5649-3a of the General Code, as well as to the fifteen mill limitation. In other words, it is not exempt from any of the limitations which would naturally apply to it. This is so for the simple reason that there is no language in the section which makes it so exempt from any such limitation. In other words, no such language as appears in section 1222 is found in section 1223.

Now the levy which must be "provided for" by the resolution of the county commissioners prior to the issuance of the bonds is one which may not actually be made except for the purpose of supplying any deficiency in township levies or special assessments. It is a guaranty levy which stands behind the assessments and township taxes and secures the bonds so as to comply with the requirement of Article XII, Section 11 of the Constitution, which provides that:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Unless the county commissioners were authorized to levy such a tax the statute in question would be unconstitutional. However, the tax need not actually be levied unless a deficiency appears or is threatened. Where all things are done in accordance with law and expectation no such levy will have to be made.

It is suggested that possibly the blank tax budgets furnished by the Tax Commission refer to this hypothetical levy under section 1223 of the General Code in mentioning a levy which is subject to the ten mill limitation. If so, the blanks are correct. Your commissioners have merely been misled into supposing that such blank form amounted to a ruling to the effect that so much of the levy under section 1222 as was anticipated by the issuance of bonds was subject to the ten mill limitation. The levy under section 1222, as stated, is wholly outside of the ten mill limitation and is for the sole purpose of meeting the county's share. The levy under section 1223, if made, is entirely within the ten mill limitation and is for the purpose of guaranteeing or securing the township and property owners' share—not the county's share.

I trust that the foregoing statement will clear up what appears to be a mere misunderstanding between your commissioners and the tax commission.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—BONDS ISSUED UNDER SECTIONS 7630-1 AND 7625 G. C.—NOT SUFFICIENT—MAY ISSUE ADDITIONAL BONDS UNDER SAME SECTIONS.

A board of education which has issued bonds under sections 7630-1 and 7625 of the General Code and finds that the amount of the bond issue will not be sufficient to construct a school house which is necessary for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, may, by complying again with these sections, issue additional bonds in an amount sufficient to produce the required aggregate sum necessary to construct such building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. F. M. CUNNINGHAM, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of recent date you request the opinion of this department on the following question:

> "The board of education of Franklin Village School District has issued bonds in the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of erecting a new school house to take the place of one which has been condemned. Upon advertising for bids for the construction of the building it was discovered that it was impossible to construct the building according to the requirements of the building code and the necessities of the school district for the amount for which bonds were issued, and that at least the same amount in addition, viz: $100,000, would be necessary in order to construct the building in question. The plans and specifications have been approved by the Industrial Commission.
> Has the board of education authority at this time to issue and sell additional bonds in the sum of $100,000 for the purpose referred to?"

You append to your request a financial statement of the school district.

Your question may be answered shortly by the statement that the board of education of its own motion and without securing the approval of the electors does not have the authority in question. The only authority a board of education has to issue bonds for building purposes without a vote of the people is that expressed in section 7629 of the General Code. The limit on the amount of bonds so issued for such purpose is the equivalent of a tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding such issue. The financial statement shows that this limit in dollars and cents figured on the 1919 duplicate would only amount to about $6,700. It would naturally be less for the year 1918, and obviously the authority of the board of education falls very short of issuing $100,000 in bonds without a vote of the people.

Your statement of facts does not show whether or not the $100,000 previously issued was upon a vote of the people, but this is assumed, else the bonds could hardly have been disposed of as you say they were. It is assumed also that section 7630-1 of the General Code was complied with, inasmuch as the facts show a warrant for proceeding under that section. It provides in effect that to replace a building destroyed by fire or condemned by the department of workshops and factories a board of education may, if "without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district," * * * "subject to the provisions of sections seventy six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds." It is then provided that a tax shall be levied for the interest and sinking fund purposes of such bonds.

In the same connection section 5649-4 G. C. provides in effect that such interest and sinking fund levies shall be outside of all limitations of the Smith One Per Cent. Law.

In this connection it would seem that the taxing district in question must be about up to the limit of the Smith Law, inasmuch as the aggregate levies of the district, the township and the corporation, excluding those not subject to the limitation of fifteen mills, apparently amount to about thirteen mills, without any allowance being made for county levies or state levies subject to the limitation. Therefore, it would seem to be "not practicable to secure such funds * * * because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district," within the meaning of section 7630-1 G. C. In other words, the board of education could, assuming the authority to act at all, in the fair exercise of its discretion make the necessary findings required to be made by section 7630-1 G. C. and thus, if the approval of the electors should be obtained, lay the foundation for a levy outside of the Smith Law limits. That being the case, the fact that the Smith Law limits are now practically exhausted would be immaterial.

It still remains to be inquired whether or not the fact that bonds have already been issued for this purpose in an amount which proves to have been insufficient will preclude the district from completing the accumulation of a sufficient fund by further issues of bonds. It will be observed that section 7630-1 authorizes the issuance of bonds when "the district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose * * * to construct a new school house for the proper accomodation of the schools of the district." The facts as stated by you fit this provision; the board has $100,000.00 applicable to the purpose, but that amount is not sufficient to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, to the satisfaction of the state department having authority to approve plans and specifications and in compliance with law. However, section 7630-1 refers us back to section 7625, 7626 and 7627 of the General Code. The last two named sections need not be considered. Section 7625, which must be complied with, authorizes a board of education, whenever it determines > "that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to * * * erect a schoolhouse * * *, to complete a partially built school house, to * * * furnish a schoolhouse, * * * or to do any or all of such things, that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-nine and seventy-six hundred and thirty, are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose and that a bond issue is necessary," to "make an estimate of the probable amount of money required for such purpose or purposes and at a general election or special election called for that purpose, submit to the electors of the district the question of the issuing of bonds for the amount so estimated."

It is clear that the terms of this section are satisfied by the facts as they exist. The board has at its disposal $100.00; it could raise under section 7629 G. C. something like $6,500.00; this aggregate amount would not be sufficient to accomplish the purpose, indeed, this department has held that under such circumstances section 7629 is not available at all, regardless of the amount that could be produced thereunder; a bond issue is necessary.

The only question is as to whether or not the fact that this procedure has once been taken and the estimate made and the people have approved a one hundred thousand dollar building will preclude the construction of a two hundred thousand dollar building.

In the opinion of this office such fact does not have this effect, and upon the approval of the electors as provided in sections 7625 et seq. General Code bonds for the additional amount of $100,000.00 needed for the purpose may be issued.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—ACT OF JUNE 5, 1919—APPLICATION TO UNSETTLED ESTATES.

1. The inheritance tax law effective June 5, 1919, does not apply to any particular successions in favor of collateral relatives of the decedent upon whose successions inheritance taxes had accrued prior to June 5, 1919, under original sections 5331 et seq. G. C., the collateral inheritance tax law. Such taxes accrued under said law at the death of the decedent; so that if a tax would have been collectible under said collateral inheritance tax law, but for the act of 1919, and the decedent died prior to June 5, 1919, the said act does not apply to such successions.

Query as to accrual of tax under original collateral inheritance tax law in case of contingent remainders and executory devises.

2. In all other cases the question as to whether or not the act of 1919 applies, depends upon whether or not the taxable succession thereunder occurred on or after June 5, 1919.

A "succession," for the purpose of the act of 1919, occurs when beneficial interests pass to particular heirs, next of kin, devisees, legatees or donees, though perfect legal title or specific equitable estates and actual possession or enjoyment may be postponed until after such time.

The act of 1919 makes no artificial rule as to when such taxable successions take place, but such rule is furnished by the statutory and common law relative to the kinds of successions taxed.

For the purpose of the question relative to the application of the tax to successions arising out of the estates of persons dying prior to June 5, 1919, the successions taxed by the act of that date, as enumerated in subparagraphs of section 5332 G. C., as therein amended may be divided into the following classes:

(a) The successions referred to in paragraph three (gifts in contemplation of death, etc.), are not taxable under the new law, even though the decedent may die subsequently to June 5, 1919, if the gift itself was effective prior to that date.

(b) The successions mentioned in paragraphs four and seven of section 5332 are not successions in anywise dependent upon the death of the original testator or grantor, but are successions taking place—

(1) By the exercise or failure to exercise of a power of appointment (paragraph four); and

(2) (As regards the increase then accruing) by the happening of a contingency referable to the death of a person other than the original testator. In such cases the date of death of the original testator or donor is immaterial, the date of succession depending upon some other event. Such successions therefore may be taxable under the act of 1919, though the death of the original testator or donor occurred prior to June 5, 1919.

Query again as to application of these paragraphs to collateral successions under wills of testators dying prior to June 5, 1919.

(c) The successions mentioned in paragraph one, two and six of section 5332 are successions by will or intestacy. Said successions may be considered under two headings:

(1) As to real estate, all vested interests therein passing from testators or intestates dying prior to June 5, 1919, are excluded from the operation of the new law.

Query as to operation of new law to interests in real estate of the nature of contingent remainders, executory devises, etc., arising under wills of testators dying prior to June 5, 1919, and not vested prior to that date.

(2) As to personal property, the interest of the legatee or distributee, taxable under the said paragraphs of section 5332 is that which arises immediately on the death of the testator or intestate. It does not depend upon the making of final distribution and the consequent vesting of perfect titles in possession and enjoyment. Therefore all intestate successions to personal property and such legacies as are not analogous to contingent remainders, etc. (as to which latter, query), arising out of the estate of a decedent dying prior to June 5, 1919, are not taxable under the act of that date.

(d) The successions mentioned in paragraph five of section 5332, as amended, take place at the death of a person, though they constitute no part of such person's estate. The test for determining whether or not such successions are taxable under said act is furnished by the date of the death of the joint owner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is informed that at a recent meeting of certain probate judges of the state, called by the tax commission, it was agreed by those present that an administrative ruling as to the application of the inheritance tax law, approved June 5, 1919, and effective from and after its approval, to any successions taking place by virtue of deaths occurring prior to that date, is desirable.

This department is in receipt of a request for opinion on this point from the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county. In view of the conference of probate judges above referred to, the opinion of this department is addressed to the commission.

The act in question contains the following section which constitutes a schedule and the office of which is to provide for the manner in which the act as a whole shall go into effect:

> "Section 4. This act shall not affect pending proceedings for the assessment and collection of collateral inheritance taxes under the original sections hereby amended, nor the duty to pay, nor the right to collect any such tax which has accrued prior to the approval of this act, nor the rights or duties of any officer with respect to the assessment and collection of such inheritance taxes; nor shall this act affect successions taking place prior to its approval, whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to such approval or not, but all successions occurring subsequently to the approval of this act shall be affected by and taxable under it, whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to its approval or not, unless a tax has already accrued thereon under the provisions of the original sections hereby amended."

The first part of the above quoted section, down to the semicolon therein, makes it clear that if a collateral inheritance tax has accrued in the case of any estate, the public rights and private liabilities resulting from such accrual shall be in nowise disturbed by the repeal of the old law and the enactment of the new. The very last clause in the section, beginning with the word "unless," makes it clear that successions to which the new act would otherwise in terms apply are to be withdrawn from its application if a collateral inheritance tax has already accrued in respect of such successions.

These provisions make it possible at once to eliminate from further consideration, in connection with your inquiry, all cases in which the death of the decedent occurred prior to June 5, 1919, and the particular successors are collateral relatives whose privileges were taxed under original sections 5331, et seq. G. C. For the test under both the provisions of section 4 above referred to is the accrual of the collateral inheritance tax. Such collateral inheritance tax accrued under original section 5331 "upon the death of the decedent" (see last sentence of that section).

This statement can not, perhaps, be taken without any reservation. For instance, it was held in Kibler vs. Glynn, 12 N. P. (N. S.) 657, that the legatee of what might be termed a contingent remainder in testator's personal estate, after a life estate in the wife with power to dispose of such part of the personal estate as she might see fit, was not liable to the collateral inheritance tax at all. Such a holding raises the question under the collateral inheritance tax, which afforded no express machinery for the deferred assessment or appraisement of contingent remainders, both true and by analogy, as to whether a tax accrued against such estates at the death of the testator, as a literal application of the last sentence of original section 5331 would require, or not until the estate actually vested in right in the remainderman. Other future interests of the same character would give rise to the same question.

It is the purpose of this opinion to lay down some general principles only, and not to attempt to cover the entire field suggested by the question. Therefore, no holding is made herein as to the application of the new inheritance tax law to estates originally contingent but becoming vested after the approval of the new law, and owing their existence to the provisions of wills and other instruments such as declarations of trust and the like "made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor" (original section 5331) when the death of the testator or grantor occurred prior to June 5, 1919. In other words, this question is saved for future consideration and the holding of the department as to the effect of the two provisions of section four which have thus far been considered is limited to the statement that all estates and interests, legal or equitable, which had vested in right prior to June 5, 1919, by and through the death of a testator or intestate occurring prior to such date, and in favor of collateral relatives and strangers whose privileges were subject to the collateral inheritance tax, including distributees of personal estates and legatees, whether the estates were settled prior to that date or not, are not subject to the inheritance tax law effective thereon.

It will be understood, therefore, that from this time forward we are considering the application of the new law to estates passing to persons whose successions were not subject to the provisions of original sections 5331, et seq. G. C. We know that what may be termed direct relatives, being those specifically mentioned in that section as last in force, come within this class, and we are reserving for further consideration the question as to whether or not persons within the class of collateral relatives so far as their relationship to the decedent is concerned, but whose interests had not vested in right prior to June 5, 1919, are within the same class for the purposes of this question.

In connection with this last question, a case which might be cited against a conclusion that the takers of contingent remainders, etc., not vested until after June 5, 1919, are subject to the new law, is Executors of Eury vs. State, 72 O. S. 448. It is believed that this case is distinguishable from the case imagined, but, as previously stated, the question will not be determined in this opinion.

In this same connection, because it is the first time in the course of this discussion the question arises, mention may be made of a general principle which applies throughout. Inheritance taxes are laid on the equitable estate or interest passing, and not upon the bare legal title; or, putting it in another way, it is the right or privilege of succeeding to beneficial interests, and not the insubstantial and really valueless privilege of succeeding to legal estates, that constitutes the subject of the tax. Therefore the fact that the legal title of an estate created at the death of a testator occurring prior to June 5, 1919, was held on trusts in favor of ascertained beneficiaries who were collateral relatives of the testator, and does not ripen into a legal estate in them until after that date, is immaterial.

With these observations out of the way, we come to the consideration of the remainder of said section 4, the quotation of which is repeated here for convenience, as follows:

> "nor shall this act affect successions taking place prior to its approval whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to such approval or not; but all successions occurring subsequently to the approval of this act shall be affected by and taxable under it, whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to its approval or not, * * *."

Here are two provisions. The effect of the first of them may be disposed of in a few words. It has relation to the successions mentioned in paragraph three of section 5332, as amended by the act. This paragraph imposes a tax upon successions "by deed, grant, sale, assignment or gift" under certain circumstances. Such successions obviously "take place" or "occur" inter vivos. According to the provisions of section 5336, as amended, the tax under the new law does not accrue on such successions until the death of the decedent, who in this case is the grantor or doner. In other words, if in contemplation of death a person has, prior to June 5, 1919, disposed of all his property, reserving a life interest in himself, and then dies subsequently to June 5, 1919, it might be claimed that a tax would accrue under sections 5332 and 5336 at the death of such person, on account of such disposition of his property; but here section four steps in and declares that such tax shall not accrue because the act as a whole is not to apply to or affect successions taking place prior to its approval, whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to such approval or not. This point is mentioned not because it is responsive to the general question under discussion, but merely for the purpose of noting the effect of one of the provisions of the schedule section of the law under examination, it being the object of this opinion to discuss generally, though not in exhaustive detail, all the provisions of that section.

We now come to the last remaining provision of section four which, with the exception previously noted, has the effect of subjecting to the tax imposed by the body of the act "all successions occurring subsequently to the approval of this act * * * whether the death of the decedent occurred prior to its approval or not." We must give some effect to this declaration, and it at least evinces an intent to ignore the mere time of the death of the decedent, as in and of itself a criterion for determining the going into effect of the act. But this does not mean that the time of death is to be ignored altogether. The real purport of the provision is that the date of the succession shall be determinative, whether that date corresponds to the date of death or not. As we shall see the date of death is in many, if not most, cases also the date of the succession.

It thus becomes apparent that a further general answer to your question may be said to depend upon the answer to the still more general question as to what successions, taxable under the act, do take place simultaneously with the death of the decedent, and what do not. In the consideration of this question, however, it must be borne in mind that we are not dealing with successions generally, but with those transfers of interest which are called successions and make taxable as such for the purposes of the act, and that moreover we are not dealing with the term "succession" in any general or undefined sense, if it be ascertained that the act itself furnishes a definition of that term for its own purposes.

We must therefore look to other provisions of the law to see whether they throw any light upon these questions. Suppose we start with the definition of the word "succession," as it appears in subparagraph 2 of section 5331 as amended in the act in question. It is as follows:

> "'Succession' means the passing of property in possession or enjoyment, present or future."

Right at this point a further question might arise, as to whether the word "property" in this definition means specific property, so that its "passing" would be equivalent to a transfer of legal title. Here the first definition of section 5331 comes to our aid, as follows:

> "1. The words 'estate' and 'property' include everything capable of ownership, or any interest therein or income therefrom, whether tangible, or intangible * * * which passes to any one person * * * from any one person, whether by a single succession or not."

Here we see that for the purposes of the act property does not denote specific chattels or land, or even specific choses in action. It also includes all kinds of interests in such things. From these two definitions, therefore, we get the idea that a succession takes place whenever any proprietary interest passes from one person to another. Of course the act is an inheritance tax law and, as we shall see, it does not purport to tax all such "successions" as have been previously described, which would include all kinds of commercial transactions, as well as inheritances.

The section which imposes the taxes is section 5332 as amended. The general clause thereof is of interest here. It provides that:

> Section 5332. A tax is hereby levied upon the succession to any property passing, in trust or otherwise, to or for the use of a person, institution or corporation, in the following cases; * * *."

This provision makes clear what has been previously laid down as a general principle, namely, that the taxes are levied upon the beneficial interest and not upon the naked legal title.

Following this general clause, we find seven specific instances of successions which are taxed. For convenience this opinion will depart from the numerical order in the discussion of these instances. It will be remembered that we are examining the act for the purpose of noting whether or not there are any successions which are taxable under it and which do not take place at the death of the decedent. It is believed that certain of the paragraphs of section 5332 afford instances where this is clearly the case.

The third paragraph of section 5332 has been previously dealt with and need not be again considered.

The fourth and seventh paragraphs of the section are as follows:

> "4. Whenever any person or corporation shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property heretofore or hereafter made, such appointment when made shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter in the same manner as if the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by said donee by will; and whenever any such person or corporation possessing such power of appointment shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a succession taxable under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as if the persons, institutions or corporations thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise the same, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure.

7. When any property shall pass subject to any charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of any person, or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase accruing to any person, institution or corporation, on the extinction and determination of such charge, estate or interest, shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, in the same manner as if the person, institution or corporation beneficially entitled thereto had then acquired such increase from the person from whom the title to their respective estates or interests is derived. Such tax shall be upon the excess of the actual market value of such property over and above the exemptions made and at the rates prescribed in this subdivision of this chapter."

Here are two kinds of taxable successions, i. e., instances in which interests in property pass from one person to another, which clearly do not take place at the time of the death of the decedent. Section four provides that whenever (note the time idea present here) a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property heretofore or hereafter made, shall be exercised or its exercise shall be omitted, "a succession taxable under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to take place" (I have quoted one of the two similar provisions of the section). That is to say, the taxable succession under paragraph four shall take place when the power of appointment is exercised or omitted to be exercised, and not when the disposition of property, by which the power of appointment was created, took place.

Paragraph seven begins likewise with the word "when" (as indeed do all the paragraphs of section 5332) and makes the increase accruing to the ultimate taker of an estate, which passes subject to a charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of a person on the extinction and determination of such charge, estate or interest, and independent succession. That is to say, the entire estate or interest of the ultimate taker is not taxed by this paragraph, but merely the increase accruing to him at the death of the holder of the life estate or other intervening estate determinable by death. In such cases the ultimate taker will undoubtedly have received a vested estate in the first instance, the succession to which has presumably once been taxed. This is not to be taxed again by virtue of paragraph seven, but to the extent that the determination of the intermediate estate or charge enhances or increases his interest, and to that extent only, he is deemed, for the purposes of the act, to receive a new and independent succession which is made taxable because it is to the extent of the increase a proprietary interest devolving upon him by the death of another person, though in this instance not the person whose will created the intervening estate or charge.

Without going more deeply into these two paragraphs of the section, it is sufficient to state that under either of them successions take place subsequently to the death of the original decedent. All such successions to direct relatives of the original decedent and to such collateral relatives of such original decedent, if any, against whose interests a tax did not accrue under the collateral inheritance tax law, are subject to the provisions of the act in question, though the death of the original decedent may have taken place prior to June 5, 1919.

Right here another question is presented, upon which this opinion will not pass definitely, viz., whether or not the "succession" upon which a specific tax is imposed by paragraph seven of section 5332 G. C., as amended, is subject to that tax, even though the original succession by will (which, as has been observed, is an independent succession for the purposes of the new act) became subject to the collateral inheritance tax by the death of the testator prior to June 5, 1919.

We come now to paragraphs one, two and six of section 5332. These impose taxes on ordinary successions by will or intestacy. As to real estate it is clear that such successions take place as of the date of the death of the decedent.

Carr vs. Hull, 65 O. S. 394.
Douglass vs. Massie, 16 Ohio 271.
Faran, Admr. vs. Robinson, et al., 17 O. S. 242.
9 R. C. L. 72.

The succession is in specie. The statutory power of the administrator or executor to sell real estate to satisfy debts of the decedent's estate does not change the nature nor the time of the succession, further than to make the titles thus devolved upon the successors contingently defeasible. See 9 R. C. L. 74.

This is the rule as to all vested estates in real property created by intestacy or by will and arising from the death of the testator or intestate occurring prior to June 5, 1919. As to such vested interests, therefore, whether legal or equitable, the new law does not apply.

Here another question arises which will not be passed upon in this opinion, viz: as to whether or not estates created by the wills of persons dying prior to June 5, 1919, but not vested until after that date because of their contingent character, are subject to the new law. Take the ordinary case of a contingent remainder in real property, when does the "succession" take place? It would seem that the succession to such contingent remainders, executory devises and the like, could not take place until the happening of the contingency and that accordingly the date of the death of the testator is immaterial; so that where the testator died prior to June 5, 1919, having created by his will contingent remainders or other estates that do not vest until after that date, such contingent remainders or other estates would be subject to the new law.

In this connection I may point out that section 5336, as amended by the act, postpones the accrual of the tax in such cases until the time "when the persons or corporations then beneficially entitled thereto shall come into actual possession or enjoyment thereof." This is not of itself determinative, because it relates to the accrual of the tax and does not attempt to accelerate or postpone the time of the succession itself. In fact, the new law attempts to create no artificial rule whatever as regards to date of the succession, leaving that to the operation of the law of property. In this connection, Ex'trs of Eury vs. State, supra, which contains a dictum pointing in the other direction, may be very easily distinguished, as it had to do with the operation of a law under which the tax was to become due and payable "immediately upon the death of the decedent." Moreover, it merely exemplifies the general rule applied in the absence of express schedules like that found in section four of the law, now under examination; and which is to the effect that the inheritance tax laws are to be construed generally as applicable only to "such interests * * * as arise by reason of death subsequent to the act." This general rule is admitted but it does not necessarily apply here because of the presence in the act of an express schedule. As stated, however, final opinion on the question as to the effect of the act upon contingent remainders and executory devises of real estate arising under wills of decedents dying prior to June 5, 1919, and not vesting until after that date, is reserved for further consideration.

We come now to the last and perhaps the most important specific question involved in the general inquiry which has been considered, viz: the application of the new law to successions to personal property, from decedents dying prior to June 5, 1919. For the purpose of this discussion the question will be thus considered, no discrimination being made as between specific legacies on the one hand and residuary legacies and intestate successions on the other hand.

It is established general law that the immediate successor to the personal property of a decedent, whether he be testate or intestate, is his executor or administrator. No specific property right to any particular chattels or choses in action vests in the next of kin or legatee at the time of the death of the decedent. This is abundantly proved by McBride vs. Vance, 73 O. S. 258, wherein the plaintiff, as general legatee of her deceased mother, attempted, unsuccessfully, to bring suit upon a note belonging to her mother's estate, upon which no administration had ever been made. As a matter of fact, the essential right of the next of kin, or even the specific legatee, is rather in the nature of a money demand, than a specific property right. Therefore we may predicate the following statements of the nature of the interest of the next of kin or legatees in the state of their ancestor or testator prior to distribution:

1. They have no specific property right, legal or equitable, in any particular personal property.
2. They do not have legal title to any of such personal property and of course have no possessory right in it nor any right to the immediate enjoyment of it or any part of it.

From these statements it is clear that if the word "succession',' as used in the act (and it appears to have been used in the same sense throughout) means devolution of title or devolution of an equitable right in a particular thing, it would have to be held that the time of such succession, as to personal property, is postponed until distribution.

But as heretofore pointed out, the combined effect of the definitions of the word "succession" and the word "property," as found in section 5331, as amended, do not so limit the import of the first term. A succession may take place as to a mere interest in property, less than a specific title either legal or equitable, in and to particular property. That being the case, it is the opinion of this department that the principles laid down in Conger vs. Barker, 11 O. S. 1, Armstrong vs. Grandin, 39 O S. 368, and Banning vs. Gotschall, 62 O. S. 210, apply. In these cases it was held in the following language quoted from Armstrong vs. Grandin, supra, that:

The question involved in that case was raised by the death of the distributee before distribution and it was held that the rights of the distributee passed to his or her personal representative. A similar holding in the case of a legatee was made in the last of the three cases cited. This is held to be the general rule in those states where the legal title and immediate possessory interests vest in the administrator or executor. See 9 R. C. L. pp. 77-79. Of course in states in which the title to personal property is treated like the title to real estate is treated in general, viz., as vesting specifically in rem at the time of the death of the decedent, the same result would follow for even stronger reasons.

The case of Orlopp vs. Schueller, 72 O. S. 41, was decided upon an interpretation of the statutes relating to attachment and garnishment and is not to be taken as authority for the statement that the distributees or legatees, prior to distribution, have no vested interest whatsoever in the estate of their ancestor or testator. The case of McBride vs. Vance, supra, is one in which the plaintiff's case required the support of a legal title or at least a specific right in the nature of a right in rem in and to the chose in action which was the subject of the suit.

The case of Lewis vs. Eutsler, 4 O. S. 355, is not inconsistent with the general principle laid down. In fact the case is of extreme interest in this connection. One P. died in 1852, intestate, unmarried and without issue. He was an illegitimate child and survived his mother who left other children who were legitimate. The statute in force at the time he died had been previously construed so as to produce an escheat under such circumstances. Prior to the distribution of P's estate, viz., in 1853, an act was passed which if applicable would entitle the surviving children of P's mother to his personal estate. It contained a schedule which was as follows:

> "This act shall not affect any estate, to which any natural person shall have become entitled, by or under any statute of the state heretofore in force; but this section shall not apply to escheats to the state."

Ranney, J., delivering the opinion of the court, at p. 361, says:

> "There is certainly nothing in the act of 1853, that evinced an intention to make it retrospective in its operation; nor was it necessary that there should have been. When P. died, the legal title to all his personal property vested in his personal representative. He alone could sue for and recover it, and convert it into money. It vested in him, it is true, as a mere trust estate, for the benefit of creditors and distributees. The right to distribution was a vested right, and if it had belonged to a private person, could not have been impaired by subsequent legislation. In such case, the distribution must have been made according to the law in force when the right accrued, but it belonged to the state, and she had unlimited control over her own interests."

Some of these cases were considered and the principle that seems applicable here was laid down in In re Bushnell, 2 N. P. (N. S.) 673. The decision itself is possibly not perfectly applicable to the question now under consideration because it is ruled by the general principle above stated, to the effect that inheritance tax laws, in the absence of specific provisions to the contrary, are to be construed as inapplicable to interests arising by the will or intestacy of a person dying prior to the date when such laws take effect. It contains, however, a discussion of the very question now under consideration, in the following language:

> "When is the right of succession complete? * * * While the question of the date of the vesting of the personal property has not been as frequently discussed in the state of Ohio as in some other states, yet we find it touched upon in a number of cases (the court here discusses and quotes from some of the cases above cited and others which have not been mentioned). The interest of a legatee or distributee vests at the time of the death of the testator, so that he has a claim against the executor which does not depend upon any contingency, the only uncertainty being as to the amount. * * *
> I think that there can be no doubt that in the case at bar the interests of the various legatees were vested absolutely upon the death of the testator, and that the duty of the executors was merely to administer the estate in compliance with the will of the testator, and to pay the legacies as provided in the will. The right to succeed to or inherit the property * * * was absolutely and unalterably fixed at the instant of his death, and there was nothing that could then be done to change or alter or delay the vesting of the various interests. The control of the executors was merely fiduciary and their action or lack of action could in no way alter, enlarge or diminish the vested right of those entitled to the property under the will, be the same real or personal. It is true that the right of enjoyment in possession of the personalty was to be postponed until the executors had performed such duties as are imposed upon them by law and the will of the testator."

It is the opinion of this department that these principles are sound and determine the question now immediately under discussion. It is true that succession on the part of the distributees or legatees to all that they ultimately succeed to does not take place immediately at death. They ultimately acquire legal title and full possession and enjoyment of particular property, but the word "succession" in the law does not depend upon or relate to present possession or enjoyment alone, as paragraph two of section 5331 shows. It being the policy of the law to tax beneficial interests and not mere naked legal titles, and the law not being limited to complete property rights, but extending to interests in property as well, it is clear that the distributees and legatees have the only taxable interest under the law prior to distribution, if they have any interest at all, for the legal title and right of possession of the executors or administrators is fiduciary merely. Their right to a reasonable compensation out of the estate is not taxable (paragraph six of section 5332 as amended). It is only gratuitious beneficial interests that are intended to be and are reached by the law.

The cases cited show that distributees and legatees have beneficial interests of this character, contingent as to quantity, to be sure, but vested in right as of the death of the decedent. If they have no such interest, it is clear that no one has any such interest as is taxable under the law during the period of distribution. But as heretofore stated, it is the opinion of this department that the succession as to personal estate of a decedent occurs under the general property law of this state and the statutes of descent and distribution at the death of the decedent, and that the inheritance tax law of 1919 not only does not change this general rule for its purposes, but in imposing the tax which it levies places the burden thereof upon and in respect of rights of the kind and quality which accrue to distributees and legatees at the instant of death and prior to distribution.

It is, therefore, the opinion of this department that, except as to such gifts over upon contingencies as may not have vested under any possible theory of the law at the death of the testator, and may have vested after June 5, 1919 (as to which opinion is reserved) the distributive shares or legacies passing to direct relatives of a testator or intestate who died prior to said date, are not taxable under the act approved on that date, hough distribution may not have occurred prior thereto.

The foregoing opinion is intended to furnish the general principles relative to the going into effect of the act of June 5, 1919, and its application to estates in process of administration on that date. It is not intended as an attempt to cover every possible detail of the questions that may arise. Certain specific questions have been mentioned but not passed upon in the course of the opinion. There are doubtless others of similar character. All of such cases will have to be decided on the specific facts as they are presented.

In closing, I note that the successions referred to in paragraph five of section 5332 have not been mentioned. This paragraph, however, gives rise to no question in this connection, as by its very terms it refers to a species of successions occurring at the death of a person. Like paragraphs four and seven, however, it has nothing whatever to do with any question arising out of the settlement of estates.

SPECIAL ELECTION—ADDITIONAL LEVY OF TWO MILLS FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES AS PROVIDED IN SENATE BILL 187 (108 O. L. 924) HELD AUGUST 12, 1919.

The special election for an additional levy of two mills for school purposes as provided in S. B. 187 (108 O. L. 924) can be held only on August 12, 1919, and in school districts where such election is called it shall be conducted as other special school elections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1919.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter requesting the opinion of this department on the following statement of facts:

> "The two mill school financial measure provides for a vote at the August primary. Primary elections are held only in places of 2,000 or more people. In school districts where no primary election will be held, what are the provisions for a vote?"

In reply to the above question it is assumed that reference is made to senate bill No. 187 (108 O. L. 924), which was passed with an emergency clause and is now the law. Such act reads as follows:

> "Section 1. In lieu of proceeding under an act entitled 'An Act to authorize the taxing authorities of counties, municipal corporations, townships and school districts to fund deficiencies in operating revenues for the year 1919, issue bonds and to levy taxes for such purposes but not otherwise,' the board of education of any school district may levy in the year 1919, not to exceed two mills for any and all purposes for which such boards may levy taxes, upon securing the approval of the electors of such district in the following manner:
> By resolution passed by an affirmative vote of a majority of all its members elected or appointed, such board may order that the question of levying such tax, at a rate to be fixed therein, shall be submitted to the electors of the district at a special election to be held therein on Tuesday the twelfth day of August, 1919. A copy of such resolution shall be certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county or counties in which the district is situated. The deputy state supervisors shall prepare the ballots and make the necessary arrangements for the submission of such question. The result of the election shall be certified and canvassed in like manner as all regular elections for the election of members of boards of education. Notice of such election for not less than ten days shall be given by the deputy state supervisors of elections in one or more newspapers printed in the district, once a week on the same day of the week for two consecutive times prior thereto. If no newspaper is printed therein such notice shall be posted for ten days prior to the election in five conspicuous places in the district, and published as aforesaid in a newspaper of general circulation therein. A notice substantially in the following form shall be sufficient:
> NOTICE OF SPECIAL ELECTION
> Notice is hereby given that a special election will be held in the ..... school district, Ohio, on Tuesday, the twelfth day of August, 1919, to determine whether an additional tax levy of ------ mills, outside of all limitations, for the year 1919, shall be made for school purposes in such district.

The expense of giving such notice shall be certified by the deputy state supervisors to the clerk of the board of education and shall be paid as expenses of notices of school elections are paid.

Section 2. The ballots used at such election shall indicate the name of the school district and, further shall be in form as follows:

'For additional tax levy of------mills for the year 1919, for school purposes, Yes.

'For additional tax levy of------mills for the year 1919, for school purposes, No.

Section 3. If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919, at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes. Such levy shall be certified to the county auditor who shall place it on the tax duplicate; it shall not be subject to any limitation on tax rates now in force, and shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year.

Attention is invited to the fact that nothing is said in the law itself relative to the August primary, but the language is "at a special election to be held therein on Tuesday, the 12th day of August, 1919." This language again occurs in the notice of special election, wherein it is stated that "a special election will be held * * * on Tuesday, the 12th day of August, 1919. * * *" The procedure necessary is for the board of education to adopt a resolution calling such election and stating in exact language the question to be voted upon, with the number of mills, including fractions, but not to exceed two mills as a whole; such resolution to be regularly certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county and a special election conducted in the same manner that all other special school elections are conducted.

Attention is invited to the fact that senate bill 187 takes no official notice that the 12th day of August, 1919, happens to be the day on which the primaries are held in municipalities this year, but refers to the 12th day of August, 1919, as the date on which there shall be a special election held for the purpose of taking care of deficiencies existing in the financial affairs of school districts. In these municipalities over 2,000 in population, primaries will be held for the nomination of municipal officers and electors of all parties of the male sex will be handed the special school levy ballot provided that the board of education of such districts have taken steps to have such special election called on such date and for such purpose. In those communities which are subdivisions with less than 2,000 population and in which on the 12th day of August there will be no primary election for the nomination of any officials, the special election will be conducted on such date in the same manner as in other special school elections, provided the school board of such subdivision has called the election provided for in senate bill 187.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BOND ISSUE AUTHORIZED UNDER SECTION 3939 G. C.—INTERPRETATION AS TO WHAT PURPOSES ARE INCLUDED IN SAID SECTION—FOR FIRE DEPARTMENT BUT NOT FOR AUTOMOBILES FOR POLICE SERVICE, PARK, HEALTH, ETC.

Section 3939 G. C. authorizes the issuance of bonds by a municipal corporation for purchasing apparatus for the fire department, including automobiles and other conveyances necessary for the complete usefulness of the buildings and equipment specially authorized in paragraph 27 of said section.

Section 3939 G. C. does not authorize the purchase of automobiles for the police department, service department, park department, health department, or general miscellaneous purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my written opinion as follows:

> "We are enclosing herewith copy of a communication to state examiner Parmelee, together with copy of an opinion of the city solicitor of Youngstown, Ohio, to the city auditor, as the writer in several instances has held according to his best judgment on the issuance of bonds to cover motor vehicles of various natures, we think it advisable and therefore respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> 1. Can bonds be legally issued to cover general apparatus of a fire department other than those which are specifically listed in paragraph 27 of section 3939 of the General Code.?
> 2. Can bonds be legally issued to cover the cost of motor patrol wagons, police chief's car, two automobiles for general police purposes and motor vehicles for police usage?
> 3. Can bonds be legally issued to purchase motor vehicles for general miscellaneous purposes, such as automobiles for service director, service department, park department, health department, etc.?"

With your communication you also submit a copy of opinion of the city solicitor of Youngstown, in which he considers the legality of a bond issue under the provisions of section 3939 G. C. for the purpose of purchasing for the central police station of Youngstown an auto patrol wagon, a chief's car, two Ford cars, four motorcycles and other equipment.

The determination of your question will depend upon the construction of the provisions of section 3939 G. C., as amended in 106 Ohio Laws, 536, as I do not find any other general or special provision which might be considered in point upon the question involved.

Section 3939 G. C. in its amended form is of the same general purport and substance as the original section 3939, which was enacted as a part of the Longworth act, so-called, which provided a comprehensive authorization for issuance of bonds for specifically enumerated purposes. The section is quite lengthy and provides by an extended enumeration of particular purposes authorization for the issuance of bonds by the council of a municipal corporation upon a two-thirds vote of its members.

I have examined the enumeration of purposes embodied in the section and find that the only ones which might be said to be in point as an authorization for the issuance of bonds for the purposes comprehended by your inquiry are found in subsections 2 and 7. Therefore I quote so much of the section as will illustrate the application of the provisions mentioned.

> "Sec. 3939. When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per anum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:
> * * * * * * * * *
> 2. For extending, enlarging, improving, repairing or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it.
> * * * * * * * * *
> 7. For erecting workhouses, prisons and police stations.

I have examined the copy of opinion of the city solicitor of Youngstown which you have attached to your communication, in which the conclusion is reached that section 3939 authorizes the issuance of bonds for the purpose of purchasing automobiles for the police department, and the conclusion being arrived at by deduction of an analogy to the case of the issuance of bonds for purchasing an automobile hose truck and similar equipment for a fire department. which was determined to be authorized under said section in a previous opinion of this department rendered on December 8, 1914, and appearing in volume II of the Report of the Attorney-General for that year, at page 1512.

I find myself unable to agree with the conclusion of the city solicitor, and likewise unable to agree that the case presented in your inquiry and as considered by the solicitor of Youngstown in the construction of an ordinance of that city, providing for the issuance of bonds for the purchase of motor vehicles for the police department, is analogous to the case of issuance of bonds for purchase of a hose truck as considered in the previous opinion of this department.

The question considered by my predecessor with relation to the authority to issue bonds for purchase of a hose truck involved a consideration of subsection 27 of section 3939 G. C., supra, which sub-section provides:

> "27. For erecting any building necessary for a fire department, purchasing fire engines, fire boats, constructing water towers and fire cisterns, and paying the cost of placing under-ground the wires or other signal apparatus of any fire department."

In the opinion referred to it was pointed out that said sub-section 27 and subsection 2 of the same statute should properly be considered together and by so doing the provision of sub-section 2 amounted to an enlargement of the specific authorization contained in sub-section 27, to the extent that it provides for issuing of bonds for

> "extending, enlarging, improving, repairing or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it."

The case thus considered is distinguishable from the one now under consideration for the reason that sub-section 7, which is the substantive provision to be relied upon in the present case, only pertains to the erection of workhouses, prisons and police stations; while sub-section 27, in addition to the enumeration of buildings for the fire department, also enumerates items of equipment, and by reading sub-section 2 in connection with the latter section the provision for extending, enlarging and securing a more complete enjoyment applies as well to the provision for equipment as to the provision for buildings; while the same result does not follow in the case of reading sub-section 7 and sub-section 2 together, for the reason that, as above pointed out, sub-section 7 does not relate to equipment for the police department but is aptly limited in its language to buildings, thus necessitating the limitation of the effect of sub-section 2 to extending, enlarging and securing the more complete enjoyment, etc., of the buildings.

Thus, while conceding the suggestion of the solicitor of Youngstown that sub-section 2 should be read in connection with sub-section 7, yet I am of the opinion the conclusion does not follow that any authorization is found for issuing bonds to purchase automobiles, as it could not be said they pertain to the enjoyment or enlargement, etc. of the police station.

Sub-section 7 is not as broad in its language in this regard as sub-section 27, and with respect to the matter of supplying general equipment for the respective departments of the city government concerned with the police station under sub-section 7 and the fire department under sub-section 27 there appears to be no analogy.

Therefore, I advise that the provisions of section 3939 G. C. do not authorize the issuance of bonds for the purchase of automobiles for the police department, nor for the service, park or health departments of the city government.

Your first inquiry pertains to apparatus for the fire department, and I am of the opinion that the section does authorize the issuance of bonds for the purchase of apparatus calculated to secure more complete enjoyment or to extend and enlarge the improvements authorized in sub-section 27, being not only the necessary building for the fire department but also fire engines and other enumerated apparatus. In securing the complete usefulness of the fire engine undoubtedly other equipment would be found necessary, and in fact various motor trucks and conveyances might be found appropriate and necessary for conveying the chief and other officers to the scene of a fire for effecting the proper and complete use of the fire engines and other apparatus specifically authorized and would therefore seem to be within the spirit and scope of the section, and I hold that the authorization is sufficient when properly invoked for such purposes.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—ELECTION HELD FOR BOND ISSUE AND APPROVED BY ELECTORS—FIRST INTEREST AND SINKING FUND LEVY SHOULD BE CERTIFIED TO COUNTY AUDITOR ALTHOUGH ELECTION HELD AFTER FIRST MONDAY IN JUNE—SUCH LEVY NOT SUBJECT TO CONTROL OF BUDGET COMMISSION—WHEN SECTION 5660 G. C. MUST BE COMPLIED WITH.

The first interest and sinking fund levy on account of bonds issued under section 7630-1 G. C. should be certified to the county auditor by the board of education, though the election authorizing the issuance of such bonds and the resolution providing therefor are not held and passed, respectively, until shortly after the first Monday in June. Such levy is not subject to the control of the budget commission and need not be included in the annual budget.

The making of such levy is not a proper predicate for the issuance of a clerk's certificate under section 5660 G. C. in connection with the awarding of a contract for the construction of a school building. The bonds must be sold and in process of delivery before such certificate can be issued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1919.

HON. GEORGE S. MAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of the receipt of your letter of June 27th setting forth the following facts upon which the opinion of this department is invited:

> "In May of this year the board of education of Napoleon Village School District, acting under section 7630-1 of the General Code, passed a resolution submitting to the electors of the district at a special election to be held on June 10, 1919, the question of issuing bonds for the construction of a new school house and the repair of the present building in the district; the election was held and duly canvassed; a majority of the electors voted in favor of the issue. Thereupon a resolution was adopted by the board of education providing for the issuance and sale of bonds.
> Query. May the first sinking fund levy on account of such bonds be made on the duplicate to be made up this fall, or does section 5649-3a of the General Code prevent the making of such levy on account of the date for the submission of the annual budget thereunder having gone by?
> You also ask whether contract can be let and the auditor's certificate issued as soon as the levy is made and the bonds are advertised for sale, or whether the issuance of such certificate and the letting of the contract will have to await further action?

In the above statement of the question it has been assumed that the proceedings thus far taken were had under authority of section 7630-1 G. C., which need not be quoted. It is sufficient to observe that this section authorizes the issuance of bonds for the purpose broadly of complying with orders of the department of workshops and factories and that upon favorable vote of the electors thereunder it then becomes the mandatory duty of the board of education to make interest and sinking fund levies for the retirement of such bonds.

Attention is invited in this connection to the provisions of section 5649-4 G. C., which provides, among other things, that for the emergencies mentioned in section 7630-1 of the General Code "the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor, irrespective of any of the limitations of this act."

In other words, the interest and sinking fund levies which now must be made in the school district in question are outside of all the limitations of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, so-called, and made so by one of the provisions of that very law itself.

Such levies being so made it is obvious that they are not subject to the control of the budget commission, and in fact are not to be taken into account by the budget commission in making its apportionment of levies to the school district for other purposes. In other words, the exception made in section 5649-4 G. C. are broad enough, in the opinion of this department, to obviate the necessity in the legal sense of submitting the levies therein provided for in the annual budget for any purpose whatsoever.

From this fact it is concluded that section 5649-3a, which deals with the submission of the annual budget and fixes the first Monday in June as the date on which such submission shall be made, is not controlling as to levies authorized by section 5649-4.

Even if it were controlling it is submitted that it is directory merely. Surely the levy of taxes for all the necessary purposes of a political subdivision is not to be denied on the mere ground that it is not made in time. (See in this connection State ex rel vs. Roose, 90 O. S., 345.)

Of course, in this case the levy in question not only was not included in the annual budget and filed on or before the first Monday in June, but it could not have been so included and filed because it was not authorized until the vote was taken on June 10th. In the opinion of this department, this fact makes no difference in the legal result of the election. The general principle is that statutory provisions as to time are to be regarded as directory merely, especially where there is no express provision as to what shall be done in the event that the stipulation as to time is not complied with. A corrollary of the same principle is that where the controlling purpose of the law is that the thing shall be done at all events this purpose is to prevail over a provision that it shall be done on or before a certain date. Here there can be no question as to the existence of the controlling purpose that the levy shall be made at all events. We find that purpose expressed not only in section 7630-1 of the General Code, which provides, inter alia, that > "For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds * * * and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law.";

but also in Article XII, Section 11 of the Constitution, which contains similar language of general application. In other words, the requirement is that annual levies during the life of the bonds shall be made. It is physically possible to make such a levy at this time, and it is not subject to the control of the budget commission. Therefore, the mandatory requirement of the constitution and of section 7630-1 G. C. is that the levy shall be so made, though it is impossible to make it through the agency of the budget commission, even if section 5649-3a could be held applicable to such a levy.

Thus far sections 7586 and 7594 of the General Code have not been considered. These sections provide as follows:

> "Sec. 7586. Each board of education, annually, at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June, shall fix the rate of taxation necessary to be levied for all school purposes, after the state funds are exhausted."
> "Sec, 7594. The amount of the levy fixed by the boards of education under the next eight preceding sections, shall be certified to the county auditor, in writing, on or before the first Monday in June of each year by the boards of education, and on or before the first Monday in August of each year by the county commissioners when the levy is made by them, who shall assess the entire amount upon all the taxable property of the district, and enter it upon the tax duplicate of the county. The county treasurer shall collect it at the time and in the same manner as state and county taxes are collected, and pay it to the treasurer of the district upon the warrant of the county auditor."

The reference in section 7594 is to the provisions of section 7610 of the General Code, which authorizes the county commissioners to make the levy when the board of education fails to make it. It will be observed that upon a very strict interpretation of these sections no more extreme holding could be made than that the board of education itself is without authority after the first Monday in June to make the levy, but that the county commissioners have authority to do so up to the first Monday in August (See section 7594). However, under the circumstances of this case it seems to me that the principle of directory statutes should be adhered to, at least to the extent of holding that if the board of education is willing after the first Monday in June to make a levy which is not only authorized but which is positively required by law and by the constitution to be made in that year, such levy when made by the board of education after that date is legal and the action of the county commissioners is not necessary.

Your first question is therefore answered by the statement that the board of education is authorized at the present time, and indeed it is its duty to certify a levy to the county auditor for the purpose of paying the interest and accumulating a sinking fund against the retirement of the bonds in question, assuming that they were properly issued under section 7630-1 G. C.

Your second question invokes consideration of section 5660 of the General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund * * *."

The form in which you express your inquiry suggests that you have considered the possibility of regarding the levy when made as money "in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose" than the purpose of the contract. Such an assumption is erroneous, for two reasons:

> (1) The levy does not provide money sufficient to pay the contract price, but only one installment of interest and sinking fund on account of the bonds.
> (2) The proceeds of the levy are appropriated to a purpose other than the discharge of the contract, namely, the payment of the principal and interest on the bonds. It is the proceeds of the bonds which may be used to discharge the contract, and not the proceeds of the levy.

You will observe that the section further provides that > "money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund."

It is, therefore, not necessary to wait until the proceeds of the sale of the bonds actually reach the treasury, but when the bonds have been sold and are in process of delivery the contract may be entered into and a certificate issued.

In the same connection it may be observed that the supreme court of this state has held under the somewhat similar language of sections 3806 et seq. of the General Code, applicable to municipal corporations, that an auditor's certificate is not necessary at all as against the proceeds of bonds.

> See Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., 185;
> Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66.

These cases, however, do not stand upon a very firm foundation (Carthage vs. Diekmeier, 79 O. S., 323), and in the opinion of this department cannot safely be followed, especially by boards of education.

You are advised, therefore, that section 5660 G. C. should be literally followed, and that the letting of the contract should be postponed until the bonds are sold and in process of delivery, but not necessarily until the proceeds of the sale are actually in the treasury of the school district.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX LAW—PARAGRAPH 4 OF SECTION 5332 AS AMENDED CONSTRUED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1919.

HON. HOMER, Z. BOSWICK, Probate Judge, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 18th in which you call my attention to paragraph 4 of section 5332 of the General Code as amended by the act approved June 5, 1919, being an act providing for the levy and collection of a tax on all inheritances etc. This paragraph provides as follows:

> "4. Whenever any person or corporation shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property heretofore or hereafter made, such appointment when made shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter in the same manner as if the property to which such appointment relates belonged absolutely to the donee of such power, and had been bequeathed or devised by said donee by will; and whenever any such person or corporation possessing such power of appointment shall omit or fail to exercise the same within the time provided therefor, in whole or in part, a succession taxable under the provisions of this act shall be deemed to take place to the extent of such omission or failure, in the same manner as if the persons, institutions or corporations thereby becoming entitled to the possession or enjoyment of the property to which such power related had succeeded thereto by a will of the donee of the power failing to exercise the same, taking effect at the time of such omission or failure."

You state that you are unable to comprehend the meaning of this provision, and request the rendition of an opinion "setting forth in simplified language what the legislature meant to say in this paragraph." (You call attention especially to the last three lines of the paragraph).

The paragraph is one which is found in one form or another in the inheritance tax laws of perhaps a dozen different states. (See Gleason & Otis' Inheritance Taxation, pp. 109, 111, 209). It has two purposes which may be summed up as follows:

To make it clear that a tax is imposed by the act upon successions under wills effectual before the passage of the act but not vesting an ultimate estate at such time because of the interposition of a power of appointment to be exercised within limits of time expiring after the act became effective. For example, let us suppose that A. died in 1917 leaving to his executors a sum of money to be distributed by them in 1920 among such of the testator's blood relatives as might seem to be most worthy, in accordance with the discretion of the executors.

Suppose again that the testator dying in 1917 had devised lands to his wife for her life, with power to appoint the remainder by her will.

Now suppose in both of these cases that the power created by the will is so exercised as to make the succession devolve upon direct relatives of the testator, i. e., those whose succession would not have been taxable under the original collateral inheritance tax law. This paragraph declares the intent of the law to be, in the first place, that the exercise of such power of appointment, with the resultant devolution of estates or interests upon the appointees of the donee of the power, shall constitute taxable successions under this act. This is brought about by the use of the word "heretofore" which appears twice in the paragraph. The paragraph is divided into two parts, separated by the semicolon. The first part states what shall happen in the event of the exercise of such power, and the second part states what shall happen in the event of the failure of the donee of the power to exercise it. This part of the paragraph, in so far as it relates to the result upon estates passing from testators dying before the law of 1919 became effective, had been held unconstitutional in New York, but sustained as to its constitutionality in Massachusetts. (See the work above cited). Of course what results is that the property will go as in the case of partial intestacy. But the policy of the law is that though there is an intestacy there shall not be a relation back as to the date of death for the purpose of determining the taxability of the succession, but the result shall be regarded in law (as it is in fact) as brought about through the agency of the donee of the power through his failure to exercise it.

All that has been said relates to the effect of the paragraph as bringing within the purview of the law successions that might be otherwise held to be not subject to it at all. This is only half, however, of the intent embodied in the paragraph; for the paragraph aims to clear up what would otherwise be a doubtful question as to the application of the tax to an estate passing under a power of the kind described or because of failure to exercise it. You will observe that it is not the will of the testator (or grantor—for such powers can be created by deed as well as by will) that has the effect of ultimately vesting the estate in the appointee or appointees, but it is the concurring will of the testator or grantor, as the donor of the power, and the donee of the power that brings about this result. This question becomes particularly difficult of solution when (as is very frequently the case) appointment is made by the will of the donee of the power, as in the second case above supposed. There the property passes from the original donor to the ultimate successor as the cumulative result of two wills—one that of the donor, and the other that of the donee of the power. One possible result of such a situation in the absence of a specific statute governing the case might be the double taxation of the succession—once as a contingent remainder arising under the first will, and again as a fee arising under the second will. To avoid this the paragraph provides that such a transaction shall be deemed a succession taking place at the time of the exercise of the power of appointment. Similarly, as to failure to exercise the power of appointment. The law provides that the resultant devolution of estates shall be regarded as taking place as the result of the conduct—that is to say the will or intent—of the donee of the power rather than as the result of the act or will of the original donor.

Exhaustive notes illustrating the holdings of the courts on such questions, both under statutes of this kind and under the common law, as affecting inheritance taxes are found in

You ask for a paraphrase of the section. I do not know that I can make the language used any simpler than it is, but I can at least put it in another way, as follows:

> "Whenever the owner of property by deed or will grants, bequeaths or devises it to another person for a limited period and empowers such other person to appoint the ultimate successors to it, or whenever the original owner by will leaves property to such person as may be selected by some designated person, the taxable succession for the purposes of the act shall be that which occurs when the selection is made by the person so empowered, rather than that which occurs when the estate passes out of the original owner; and if the person so empowered fails to exercise the power, so that the estates descend or are distributed according to law, yet such descent or distribution shall be regarded as taking place through the agency or will of the person who failed to exercise the power, so that the taxable succession shall be deemed to have taken place at the time such person should have exercised such power; and in order to bring about such a result the succession shall be considered in the same light for the purposes of the tax as if the person who exercised the power or failed to exercise it, as the case may be, had died on the date of such exercise or failure to exercise, leaving a will by which the estates ultimately vesting had been immediately created. This shall be the result whether the instrument of the original donor creating the power was effective for that purpose before or after the taking effect of this act."

I may add that the last three lines will be clearly understood, I think, if the word "failing" therein be read "who has failed," and if it be remembered that the phrase "taking effect at the time of such omission or failure" modifies the word "will."

I trust that this makes the matter clear.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

JANITOR OF OHIO SENATE—WHEN ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION FOR ADDITIONAL SERVICES.

1. The janitor of the Ohio senate, who is regularly employed and receives a stated monthly salary, is not entitled to secure compensation for services in cleaning the senate chamber after a meeting or conference which was incidental to or connected with the senate sessions or meetings or conferences of its committee.

2. Such janitor is entitled to compensation for services rendered in cleaning the senate chamber when he is employed for that purpose by the industrial commission after a meeting of the division of boiler rules and inspection under section 1058 G. C., provided such work does not interfere with the discharge of his duties as janitor of the senate.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "It has come to my official notice that the janitor of the Ohio senate is in the habit of being paid additional sums by state departments for cleaning up the senate chamber after a joint conference or meeting has been held by one of the state departments of government.

The present incumbent, Edward Cain, is janitor of the senate rooms and is on the Ohio senate payroll and receives $75.00 per month. He states that previous to this time janitors have received extra compensation from departments for cleaning up the senate chamber after a conference.

Recently the industrial commission, division of boiler rules and inspection, held a meeting and have tendered a voucher to this department in the sum of $5.00 for additional compensation to the janitor who is on the state payroll.

I wish you would advise me whether or not Mr. Edward Cain can lawfully receive money from other departments for janitorial services in view of the above facts. This department has always discouraged double salaries or compensation where the employe receives a reasonable payment for services of a specific nature."

Your letter of inquiry does not define the duties of the janitor of the senate rooms nor does it indicate the character of the meeting or conference which was held in the senate chamber other than this: that it indicates that it was a meeting held by the division of boiler rules and inspection of the industrial commission.

It is noted that the question upon which you desire the opinion of this department is whether the janitor of the Ohio senate, who is a senate employe receiving a monthly salary, may legally be paid compensation for cleaning the senate chamber after the meeting of such boiler rules and inspection division.

Section 29, article II of the constitution of Ohio, sections 56, 871-6 and 1058-6 General Code are pertinent to this question.

At the outset it may be observed that because of the absence of information, as above indicated, the question of the legality of this payment cannot be answered categorically but the statement of the correct rules of law applicable to the payment of extra compensation to a senate employe and the correct rule as to the payment of a person employed by the industrial commossion may furnish you with an alternative rule which it is hoped may be responsive to your needs.

Section 29, article II, in part provides:

"No extra compensation shall be paid to any officer, public agent, * * * after the service shall have been rendered, * * * nor shall any money be paid, on any claim, the subject matter of which shall not have been provided for by pre-existing law, unless such compensation, or claim, be allowed by two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the General assembly."

In State ex rel. vs. Williams, 34 O. S., 218, it is held that this inhibition applies to any person employed in the public service, whether as an officer, public agent, or employe. This is evidenced by the following language in the opinion, page 219:

"This language is very broad and was intended to embrace all persons who may have rendered services for the public in any capacity whatever, in pursuance of law, and in which the compensation for the services rendered is compensated by law."

If the claim for extra compensation in the question under discussion is considered as extra services rendered by a senate employe the following language of the court in the case above quoted is pertinent:

> "Now, they (senate sergeant-at-arms) were required to take an oath to 'faithfully and diligently discharge the duties required of them in their respective offices.' * * * They were, therefore, bound to perform their duties faithfully and diligently, and, if this was done, the performance in addition thereto of extra services in discharge of their duties would not be possible."

Paraphrasing this quotation in its application to the present case we would find that if the janitor of the senate were obliged to perform all of the work incident to his employment as such janitor for which he was employed and compensated it would follow that, as above quoted,

> "Extra services in discharge of (such) their duties would not be possible."

In Sage, Auditor, vs. Commissioners, 82 O. S., 186, the court, speaking by Judge Shauck, holds it to be a rule long established in this state > "that if a statute imposes a duty upon a public officer it is presumed to be performed by him in consideration of the general emoluments of his office, unless the legislature has clearly indicated that compensation shall be paid for the performance of the duty so imposed."

So, it would be very well said that if the meeting which necessitated the work of the janitor referred to in your letter was incident to or connected with the sessions of the general assembly, in the absence of any expression of the senate indicating a different intention, it would be concluded that that work was incident to the janitor's employment and so contemplated in the fixing of his monthly salary, in which event no extra compensation would be payable to him.

If, however, the meeting referred to was not of the character above referred to and was not incident to or connected with the senate sessions or meetings or conferences of its committees a different result would be reached.

Section 871-6, General Code, authorizes the payment of expenses for providing suitable rooms for the industrial commission and section 1058, General Code, requires the division of boiler rules and inspection to hold "examinations and public hearings * * * in the city of Columbus * * * on the second Wednesday * * * in May * * * of each year and at such other times as it may determine." It may be noted that such a meeting of this division of the industrial commission may or may not be held in the senate chamber and such a meeting could not be said to be a meeting in connection with the sessions of meetings of the senate chamber.

The sections above referred to and others related thereto would authorize the payment for janitor services by the industrial commission and if the meeting referred to in your letter was of such a character you are advised that authority in law exists for the payment of the expenses of such meeting including that of expenses necessarily incurred in cleaning the senate chamber where it met.

This result is reached not on the theory that the janitor is entitled to compensation as extra compensation as a senate employe but as one who has rendered services for the industrial commission.

There is nothing incompatible in the two empoyments and unless the rendition of such services for the industrial commission interfered with his work as janitor of the senate no legal objections can be raised to the payment for such services rendered to the industrial commission.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MOTHER'S PENSION FUND—HOUSE BILL No. 507 (108 O. L. 264), INCREASING RATE OF LEVY FOR SAID PURPOSE EFFECTIVE IN NINETY DAYS AFTER IT IS FILED IN OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

House bill No. 507 (108 O. L. 274), amending section 1683-9 G. C. by increasing the rate of the levy which may be made by county commissioners for mothers' pension fund purposes, is subject to the referendum and does not go into effect until ninety days after it was filed in the office of the secretary of state. This being the case, action under H. B. 507 can not be taken so as to affect the next tax year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1919.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of July 3 you request the opinion of this department on the question as to whether or not house bill 507 (108 O. L. 624), amending section 1683-9 G. C., by authorizing the levy, for the uses and purposes of the juvenile court in the administration of the mothers' pension law, to be made at the rate of one-fifth of a mill, instead of one-tenth of a mill as formerly, went into immediate effect by virtue of the exception in the rc'erendum provision of the constituiton found in section 1d of Art. II of the constitution.

I am enclosing a copy of an opinion addressed to the tax commission of Ohio, dealing with the precisely similar question arising under the act amending the highway laws of the state. Applying the principles of this opinion to your question, the result is that house bill 507 does not go into effect until ninety days after it was filed in the office of the secretary of state, and I so advise.

This conclusion answers your first question and makes unnecessary an answer to your second question.

In answering your third question, as to whether or not, if the act in question is subject to the referendum, its benefits may be made possible for the next tax year I note that the act was filed in the office of the secretary of state on June 6, 1919. This was after the first Monday in June, 1919, when county budgets are required to be made up and filed with the budget commissioner. The ninety day period will expire early in September, 1919. In any possible view of the law relative to the time of making tax levies, this would be too late to make possible the use of H. B. No. 507 for the next tax year.

Section 1683-9 G. C. is of course not self-executing, being a mere grant of authority to the county commissioners. Moreover, it is not mandatory on the commissioners to levy any particular rate, as would be the case if it were an interest and sinking fund levy governed by Art. XII, Sec. II of the constitution, for example. In short, it is a matter of mere discretion and power in the county commissioners. Such power, to be exercised at all, must be exercised at the time provided by law, or at least within a reasonable period thereafter. Moreover, the mothers' pension levy is one of the levies which is subject to the control of the budget commission. The budget commission under existing laws is required to complete its work before the time at which this act will go into effect. See section 5649-3b G. C.

For all these reasons, therefore, your third question is answered in the negative.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—CANNOT CENTRALIZE UNDER SECTION 4726-1 G. C.—CAN COMBINE UNDER SECTION 4735-1 G. C.

1. A village school district cannot participate in an election for the centralization of the schools in a township under the provisions of section 4726-1 G. C.

2. Where a township rural school district and a village school district desire to combine their school activities regard should be had to section 4735-1 G. C., which provides for the dissolution by election of the rural district and its joining to the village school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1919.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "In Jefferson township, Fayette county, Ohio, there are two school districts, to-wit: The Jefferson village school district and the Jefferson township rural school district. Jeffersonville is an incorporated village. The boards of education of each of these districts are of opinion that these two school districts should be consolidated, provided that the schools therein were centralized.
> They are not in favor of the county board of education transferring territory from one to the other and thus effecting consolidation for the reason that centralization might thereafter fail in the consolidated district. These matters are mentioned for the purpose of explaining the importance of the questions hereafter to be discussed.
> Section 4726-1 of the General Code, if applicable to this situation, will accomplish their objects. In the application of this section to the facts, however, several questions are encountered.
> 1st. Does G. C. 4726-1 apply where there is a village school district involved? That section in part reads:
>
> 'In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralization of the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein,' etc.
> Does the language of this section limit its application to the two classes of school districts just mentioned?
> It also appears from this section that in case centralization carries 'the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township. If the consolidated district is thereafter to be a township district (meaning rural) it would seem that there is a conflict with General Code section 4681, which defines a village school district.

2nd. In case this section is applicable, the question next arises: How shall the machinery be set in motion to submit the questions to a vote of the people, and who is entitled to vote at such election?

On this question the law makes no provision for the electors petitioning any board or body for submission of the question; no provision for the joint boards acting in the matter or for the boards acting separately is to be found."

Section 4726-1 G. C., which you cite, reads as follows:

"In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated, five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

You desire to know whether the language of this section limits its application to township districts and to special school districts, the two kinds of districts mentioned in the section, special school districts now being rural school districts under the law, and whether a village school district could come within the language of such a section.

The answer to this question is that nowhere in section 4726-1 G. C. is there any provision for the centralization of a village school district because in practical life the schools of a village school district are in reality very greatly centralized; that is to say, instead of the number of school buildings as would occur in a rural school district, in a village school district this number might be limited to only one or two and there is little occasion for the centralization of the schools of a village school district, because under section 7730 G. C. the board of education of such village school district has ample authority to transport its pupils to the village school without any question of centralization entering therein.

You are therefore advised that the Jeffersonville village school district and the Jeffersonville township rural school district cannot proceed under section 4726-1 G. C. in the matter of centralization for the reason that such section does not provide for the centralization of village school district schools.

It may be further said that section 4726-1, in order to have any effect at all, and the General Assembly intended it should have, must be read in conjunction with section 4726 G. C., which provides the manner and method of calling the election, which very important feature does not appear in the supplemental section 4726-1 G. C.

As regards your particular case, which seems to be the joining of some method by the township rural school district and the village school district, attention is invited to section 4735-1 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "When a petition signed by not less than one-fourth of the electors residing within the territory constituting a rural school district, praying that the rural district be dissolved and joined to a contiguous rural or village district, is presented to the board of education of such district; or when such board, by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, shall decide to submit the question to dissolve and join a contiguous rural or village district, the board shall fix the time of holding such election at a special or general election. The clerk of the board of such district shall notify the deputy state supervisors of elections, of the date of such election and the purposes thereof, and such deputy state supervisors shall provide therefor. The clerk of the board of education shall post notices thereof in five public places within the district. The result shall be determined by a majority vote of such electors."

This section provides that upon the petition of one-fourth of the electors in the Jeffersonville township rural school district, there shall be an election called on the question of the dissolution of such rural school district and joining to the village school district of Jeffersonville; that if a majority of the male electors in the rural school district vote to join the village school district and become a part thereof, then the whole of the territory affected, including the old village school district and the rural school district, becomes an enlarged village school district, in which the Jeffersonville board of education would still be the board of education controlling all the schools in such enlarged village school district. It has been indicated that part of the rural school district population is opposed to this because it would give them no representative on the village board of education at this particular time, but this could be amicably arranged if such action were taken before the election of November, 1919, when several new members of every board of education in the state are elected. Both the voters of Jeffersonville village school district as it exists today and the voters of Jeffersonville township rural school district having been joined to the Jeffersonville school district, would have the privilege of voting for the new members of the board of education in November, 1919, in which election both male and female electors could participate. After the joining of such territory to the village school district, the board of education of the enlarged village school district has ample authority under section 7730 G. C. to suspend any or all schools in such enlarged district and provide for the conveyance of pupils to the village school, with the result that this process of consolidation would bring about the same result as centralization which both of these boards are attempting to seek under section 4726-1.

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide, and in such rural school district shall provide for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and all of the pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, transferred to another school or schools when the county board of education so directs the board of education of the village or rural district in which said school is located. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural district by the board of education of such village or rural districts within ten days after the county board of education directs the suspension of such school; provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided, shall be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age. Any school district that is entitled to state aid for salary of teacher according to provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1 when such schools are not consolidated, or centralized, shall receive the same amount of state aid after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, but to be applied to the cost of transportation of pupils to consolidated school, or schools, or for salary of teachers and the transportation of pupils."

In taking advantage of section 7730 G. C., attention is invited to the fact that such section has been twice amended by the present legislature, first in house bill 406, which is effective August 17, 1919, and again in house bill 348, which is effective September 19, 1919. Copies of the new sections occurring in these bills can be secured by addressing the secretary of state, but should your procedure take place before August 17th, then section 7730 G. C., as herein quoted from 107 O. L., would govern.

It would seem, therefore, that your proper avenue to consummate the desires of both boards of education, as indicated in your letter, would be to take advantage of section 4735-1 G. C., for section 4726-1 G. C. does not cover village school districts in centralization proceedings.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. A village school district cannot participate in an election for the centralization of the schools in a township under the provisions of section 4726-1.

2. Where a township rural school district and a village school district desire to combine their school activities, regard should be had to section 4735-1 G. C., which provides for the dissolution by election of the rural district and its joining to the village school district.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AGRICULTURAL AGENTS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ARE AUTHORIZED TO ENTER INTO ARRANGEMENTS WITH STATE FOR THEIR EMPLOYMENT—COMPENSATION HOW PAID—SEE SECTION 9921-2 G. C.

County commissioners are authorized under the provisions of sections 9921-2 G. C. et seq. to enter into arrangements with the state for employment of county agricultural agents and provide the funds for the compensation of such agent, and this function may be exercised by appropriation from the general county fund or a contingent fund in case no special levy has been made for that purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1919.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication relative to employment of a county agricultural agent, and requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Section 9921-4 of the General Code provides for county authorities making appropriations for the support and expenses of county agricultural agents.
> At the time of making the annual appropriations the commissioners of Miami county did not appropriate any money for the maintenance, support and expenses of a county agricultural agent, but said county has had an agent, who has been paid by the aid of state and national funds, but this fund ceases to be available on July 1, 1919, and unless provision is now made the county would be without an agent from July 1, 1919, to March 1, 1920.
> My first impression was that no appropriation could be made at this time, but on considering section 9921-5 of the General Code I find a provision made for a referendum vote by the electors of the county and the further provision that if a majority vote in favor of such appropriation that the county commissioners "shall proceed at once to make appropriations for the employment of such agent." It appears to me that if the county commissioners during a fiscal year could by a vote of the electors make an appropriation, that the commissioners would likewise have the power to make that appropriation without such vote and that the appropriation could now be made by the commissioners of Miami county, Ohio, of not to exceed one thousand dollars for the period from July 1, 1919, to March 1, 1920.
> The county officers, however, do not wish to take the steps necessary to proceed for the transfer of such money from the county fund to a special fund for this purpose without the sanction of your office.
> Will you kindly inform me if I am correct in my construction of the section indicated?"

The statutes providing for the employment of a county agricultural agent are sections 9921-2 et seq. G. C.

Section 9921-2 provides for the appropriation by the state of a sum not to exceed $3,000.00 in any one year for employment of a county agricultural agent in event that the county shall raise at least $1,000.00 for the support of the agricultural agent for one year and shall give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of Ohio State University that a like sum shall be raised for a second year.

Section 9921-4 provides:

> "Each and every county of the state is authorized and empowered to appropriate annually not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars, for the maintenance, support and expenses of a county agricultural agent, and the county commissioners of said county or counties are authorized to set apart and appropriate said sum of money and transmit the same to the state treasurer who shall place it to the credit of the agricultural extension fund to be paid for the purposes aforesaid, on warrant issued by the auditor of state in favor of the Ohio state university. If for any reason it shall not be used as contemplated in this act (G. C. sections 9916 to 9921-5) before the expiration of two years, it shall revert to the county from which it came."

Section 9921-5 provides that if the county commissioners of any county shall not make provision for an agricultural agent, that they may be directed and required to make such provision by the qualified electors of the county on referendum vote, and if a majority of the electors are in favor of the employment of a county agricultural agent, "then the county commissioners shall proceed at once to make the appropriation for the employment of such agent."

The foregoing resume of the statutes will perhaps be sufficient to show their general purport with respect to the plan for providing county agricultural agents.

You state that your county now has the services of an agricultural agent whose compensation has heretofore been provided by state and national funds, which funds cease to be available on July 1st, and your question as to the authority of the county commissioners to now provide for the continuance of the services of the county agent and compensation therefor, no doubt arises in large measure from the provision of section 5649-3a G. C. which provides in substance that on or before the first Monday in June of each year the county commissioners and taxing officials of other local subdivisions shall submit to the county auditor an annual budget setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, which budget, among other things, shall set forth the amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law, for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year, as well as the provision of section 5 of article XII of the constitution, which provides that and the further provisions of section 5660 G. C. which provide that county commissioners shall enter into no contract or obligation involving the expenditure of money unless the auditor shall first certify that the money required for the payment of such obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, etc.

However, I am of the opinion that the provisions of the statutes above noted providing for county agricultural agents import a policy of the state and a legislative direction to the county commissioners to provide for the county agricultural agent without regard to the matter as to whether a tax has been levied specifically for that purpose in advance of the employment of the agricultural agent.

These statutes are of later enactment than the other statutes to which attention has been directed, and in some of the provisions is clearly indicated a policy in contravention of that policy embodied in the statutes relative to the levy of taxes and requirement for funds to be available before the obligation may be incurred.

Such policy is indicated for example by the provisions of section 9921-5 that in event of an affirmative determination by referendum vote upon the question of employing a county agent, "the county commissioners shall proceed at once to make appropriation for the employment of such agent."

Also the provision of section 9921-2 to the effect that when the initial arrangement is entered into between the county and the state for co-operation in providing the funds for employment of a county agent, that the commissioners shall "give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of Ohio State University that a like sum shall be raised for a second year;" and the further provision of section 9921-5 which appears to contemplate an undertaking on the part of the county commissioners at the time of establishing the county agent's work, to continue to make provision for it for a period of five years.

In making the initial employment, or in your case, in making your initial provisions for funds at this time in the year, which has been made necessary by the federal and state funds having been discontinued, a strict compliance with the provisions of section 5649-3 by way of appropriation only from a fund levied for this specific purpose would perhaps be impossible, inasmuch as you indicate that no levy has been made for that special purpose.

However, this would seem to be a contingent requirement which may properly be met out of your contingent or general fund of the county, without doing violence to the intent of the sections of the law we have considered, nor the spirit and purport of the constitutional provision, supra.

In Porter vs. Hopkins, 91 O. S., 74, the supreme court said:

> "The maintenance of contingent and general funds for general purposes is provided for by statutes which are familiar. The municipal and other subdivisions are fully empowered to raise such funds. It would be wholly impracticable to specifically name in the different budgets the amount to be raised for each specific item. There are many incidental charges which are necessarily taken care of out of the funds of the character referred to as the needs arise. The fact that the amount raised does not meet the exact requirements from time to time and that some inconvenience may arise does not affect the validity of the statutory requirements."

While your letter indicates that you have funds perhaps to the credit of the general county fund or a contingent fund, which may be made available for the employment of the county agent, and therefore the question of employment of said agent without funds available does not seem to be involved, yet I may call attention to an opinion of my predecessor, being opinion No. 1212 found at page 690 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1918, wherein it was held that by reason of certain provisions of the statutes relative to employment of county agricultural agents being found to be inconsistent with the provision regulating the general scheme of tax levy and expenditure of county funds, particularly section 5660 G. C. restraining the commissioners from incurring obligations except in case funds are available for their payment, the provisions of section 5660 were not applicable to the case of incurring obligations for employment of county agricultural agents in pursuance of the statutes.

I quote from the opinion the following:

> "If, therefore, a statute subsequently passed expressly authorized the making of an agreement by the county commissioners which would bind them to make appropriations in a succeeding year, it is manifest that such statute would be wholly inconsistent with section 5660, because at the time of making the agreement so authorized it could not be certified that the money required to perform the agreement on the part of the county is in the treasury and not appropriated for any other purpose. * * *
> The later statute, being inconsistent with the earlier one, must prevail, and to the extent of such inconsistency must be regarded as constituting an exception to the general rule laid down in the earlier law. * * *
> The scope of the exception is such that the county commissioners may, in my opinion, enter into the agreement authorized by section 9921-2 of the General Code, whether they have any money in the treasury which can then be appropriated or not."

While this latter phase of procedure is not directly involved, apparently, in your inquiry, I have called your attention to the above ruling, as it may cover questions that will arise in your mind, and from the conclusions I have reached above, I would also be inclined to concur in the opinion of my predecessor relative to the application of section 5660 G. C.

Therefore, I advise that in my opinion your county commissioners are authorized to make appropriation at this time and provide for the continued service of your county agricultural agent.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BBOARD OF SCHOOL EXAMINERS—GRANTING OF CERTIFICATES TO HOLDERS OF CERTIFICATES GRANTED BY OTHER COUNTY AND CITY BOARDS OF SCHOOL EXAMINERS IN OHIO AND ALSO BY AUTHORITIES OF OTHER STATES—BOARD OF EDUCATION NOT PERMITTED TO PAY TEACHER UNLESS CERTIFICATE HOLDER—VALIDITY OF CERTIFICATES IN CITY OR COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

1. Boards of school examiners at their discretion may issue certificates, without formal examinations, to holders of certificates granted by other county and city boards of school examiners in Ohio.

2. Boards of school examiners at their discretion may issue certificates, without formal examination, to holders of certificates granted by certificating authorities in other states, only upon the approval in each case of the superintendent of public instruction, who also has authority to make regulations for the renewal of such certificates.

3. A board of education is not permitted to pay a teacher, unless such teacher holds a certificate valid in the jurisdiction where such teaching is performed. Certificates issued by a board of city school examiners are valid in that city school district. Certificates issued by county school examiners are valid in the county school district, including the villages of such county school district. Certificates issued by the superintendent of public instruction are valid in all school districts in the state.

4. A county board of school examiners may at its discretion recognize the certificates of a city board of school examiners in Ohio, and similarly a city board of school examiners may recognize the examinations and certificates of a county board of school examiners in Ohio, and such recognition may be as to one or more certain branches.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. May Ohio county and city boards of school examiners respectively issue a certificate upon a certificate issued by a county or a city board of school examiners of another state?
> 2. May an Ohio board of education employ and pay a teacher who holds only a certificate that, although of proper grade, was issued by an out-of-state board of school examiners, or by an Ohio board of school examiners in recognition of an out-of-state board of school examiners?
> 3. If so as to the above, how is an Ohio board of school examiners or of education to determine the fact of 'legal jurisdiction?'
> 4. As to exclusively Ohio boards of school examiners, must a county or a city board limit recognition of other boards only to certificates issued by county and city boards, respectively? Or may a county board recognize a city board even as to certain branches, and may a city board recognize a county board likewise?"

Bearing upon the first question as to whether county and city boards of school examiners may issue certificates upon certificates issued by a county or city board of school examiners of another state, your attention is invited to house bill No. 317, bearing upon the question of certificates for teachers, which will be effective as law during and after September, 1919. Section 7824 of the new law, which will be the guide for future questions of this character, reads as follows:

> "Sec. 7824. Boards of school examiners at their discretion may issue certificates without formal examinations to holders of certificates granted by other county and city boards of school examiners in Ohio, and, with the approval in each case of the superintendent of public instruction, to holders of certificates granted by certificating authorities in other states. Such certificates may be renewed under regulations provided by the superintendent of public instruction."

From the amended section 7824 G. C. it will be noted that all boards of school examiners, including city and county boards, may at their discretion grant certificates effective in their jurisdiction upon certificates issued by some other board of school examiners in Ohio, but if the holder of the certificate has a certificate from a board of examiners in another state, a certificate valid in Ohio can be granted by either a county or city board of examiners, but only upon approval of the state superintendent of public instruction, who also has the power of making regulations for the renewal of such certificates.

Relative to your second question as to whether an Ohio board of education may employ and pay a teacher who holds only a certificate which was issued by an out-of-state board of school examiners, it is advised that no teacher is permitted to teach in the public schools of Ohio unless such teacher has a proper certificate from a board which has jurisdiction over the school in which such teaching is done.

You further ask whether an Ohio board of education may employ and pay a teacher who holds only a certificate that was issued by an Ohio board of school examiners in recognition of an out-of-state board of school examiners, and you are advised that under the provisions of section 7824 G. C., newly amended, such certificate is valid, provided that the approval in each case of the superintendent of public instruction has been given upon the question of granting an Ohio certificate upon the certificate of some authority in some other state.

Answering your third question as to how an Ohio board of school examiners or board of education is to determine the fact of "legal jurisdiction," it may be said that this is determined by geographical lines of which the board of school examiners or board of education must have knowledge; that is to say, a certificate granted by a city board of examiners would be valid in the city school district where it was granted, while a certificate granted by a county board of school examiners would be valid in the county school district in which it was granted, including the exempted villages and rural districts of such county district; but a certificate granted under authority of the state superintendent of public instruction, who is the executive head of the school machinery of the state, would be valid in any and all city and county school districts of the state.

As to your fourth question, as to whether the boards of school examiners, either county or city, must limit recognition of other boards only to certificates issued by boards of their same kind, it is advised that it is the clear contemplation of the law that there shall be reciprocal features connected with the administration of the certification of teachers, and this idea is further advanced by the reading of the sections of H. B. No. 317 which is effective in September, 1919, pertinent paragraphs of which are, including section 7824 G. C., above quoted, as follows:

> "Sec. 7847. All provisions of preceding and following sections pertaining to county school examiners and applicants for county teachers' certificates shall apply also to city examiners and applicants for city teachers' certificates unless there are specific provisions of law applying to the latter.

Sec. 7847-1. City boards of examiners shall provide the questions used in the respective city examinations, but may arrange to use questions prepared for county examinations as provided in section 7819, or questions prepared for city examinations under the directions of the superintendent of public instruction for such dates as may be arranged.

Sec. 7848. City and county boards of examiners at their discretion may substitute for the practical teaching test provided by section 7825 such an investigation of the teaching of the applicant as they deem best, and any member of the board of examiners may examine any school in the district when such examination is deemed necessary to ascertain a teacher's qualifications.

Sec. 7852. City boards of examiners at their discretion may require teachers in elementray schools to be examined in drawing, music or physical training if such subjects are a part of the regular work of such teachers; they may also at their discretion relieve applicants for elementary certificates from examination in agriculture or substitute general science or nature study therefor.

Sec. 7852-1. City and county boards of examiners may upon proper examination issue certificates valid to teach special classes for the deaf, feebleminded, backward, and the like, but such applicants must have all necessary and legal qualifications for elementary teachers and in addition such qualifications in such special studies as may be prescribed by the superintendent of public instruction."

It would seem, therefore, that a county board may recognize a city board of examiners, even as to certain branches, and that a city board of examiners could recognize the examination given by a county board of examiners on certain branches.

It may be said that H. B. No. 317 clears up the questions which you ask, but which, under the sections that are now being repealed, have been the cause of more or less doubt prior to this time.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. Boards of school examiners at their discretion may issue certificates, without formal examinations, to holders of certificates granted by other county and city boards of school examiners in Ohio.

2. Boards of school examiners at their discretion may issue certificates, without formal examination, to holders of certificates granted by certificating authorities in other states, only upon the approval in each case of the superintendent of public instruction, who also has authority to make regulations for the renewal of such certificates.

3. A board of education is not permitted to pay a teacher, unless such teacher holds a certificate valid in the jurisdiction where such teaching is performed. Certificates issued by a board of city school examiners are valid in that city school district. Certificates issued by the county school examiners are valid in the county school district, including the villages of such county school district. Certificates issued by the superintendent of public instruction are valid in all school districts in the state.

4. A county board of school examiners may at its discretion recognize the certificates of a city board of school examiners in Ohio, and similarly a city board of school examiners may recognize the examinations and certificates of a county board of school examiners in Ohio, and such recognition may be as to one or more certain branches.

In a personal conference you advise that this opinion is requested for a future rule in matters of this kind, rather than to make a finding on the law as it may have existed some months prior thereto, and for that reason the law, which will be in effect after September 7, 1919, has been brought to your attention. It may be said that the holding herein is the proper construction of both the old and the new law on all the points in question, except that covered in the second branch of the syllabus, which becomes effective on and after September 7, 1919, prior to which date the statutes did not speak upon any approval of the superintendent of public instruction in the matter of recognizing certificates from other states. The new law provides clearly that no certificates shall be issued except under a strict construction of the law, for section 7831 G. C., newly amended, says:

> "* * * and no such certificate shall be issued by such authority except on the specific conditions provided by the statutes."

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

POLYCLINIC BUILDING — COUNTY COMMISSIONERS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO CONSTRUCT SUCH A BUILDING—SECTION 3127 G. C. (108 O. L. 255) CONSTRUED.

Under sections 3127 et seq. (108 O. L., Page 255, House Bill 305) county commissioners are not authorized to construct polyclinics the main use and purpose of which is not that of a county hospital.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1919.

HON. C. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as to the question of the authority of Summit county, as stated in your request, "to erect and operate a polyclinic building under the provisions of House Bill No. 305 (108 O. L. 255), which amended sections 3128 et seq."

As indicating the charcter of uses and purposes for which a polyclinic would be built, it is noted that you incorporate in your letter an opinion from a medical standpoint, from which the following is quoted:

> "This polyclinic building would be devoted almost entirely to providing clinical facilities and laboratory equipment and only such a limited number of hospital beds would be provided as were found to be necessary for the successful operation of the clinics. It is also desired to provide office rooms and committee rooms for various civic, social, and charitable agencies. It is proposed to incorporate in the construction of this building such memorial features as are outlined in section 3128 of this bill. * * * The limited number of hospital beds maintained in this building would be devoted to emergency uses arising from the work of the clinics, and it is not contemplated to conduct a regular hospital in this building, but to send the patients needing hospital care to existing hospitals. * * * * * *
> "It is further desired, however, to take an advanced step in hospital work by making this memorial hospital the headquarters for all charitable, civic and social agencies dealing with the problems of disease, ignorance, poverty and delinquency and to marshal in this way all the educational and curative agencies in a great movement to remove all conditions which are prejudicial to public health, morals, and civic efficiency."

Without quoting further it is contemplated that a social service department shall function in connection with the hospital, both in and outside of the hospital, carrying with it the idea of extension work in the home, as shown by some of the outlined activities, such as "social history." * * * necessary aftercare for children discharged from hospital, * * * care for neglected children."

Sections 5, Article 10, and 5, Article 12, of the constitution of Ohio, and sections 3127 to 3138-2 of the General Code are pertinent to your inquiry. Section 5, Article 10, provides:

> "No money shall be drawn from the county * * * treasury, except by authority of law."

Section 5, Article 12, provides:

> "No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax, shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied."

It is not deemed necessary to quote at length from all the sections relating to county hospitals, but sections 3127 and 3128, as amended by House Bill 305, April 6, 1919, may be quoted.

Section 3127 is the section wherein authority is given to the county commissioners upon certain conditions to erect county hospitals. That section in part provides:

> "When two hundred or more tax payers of a county petition the county commissioners for the privilege of having submitted to a vote of the electors of such county the issue of county bonds or notes to provide funds for the purchase of a site and erection thereon of county hospital buildings, and the support thereof, such commissioners shall order a special election * * * to determine the question of issuing bonds or notes for the county hospital, to purchase a site therefor, erect the buildings thereon and to maintain them."

Section 3128, either in its original form or as amended, in no way added anything new to the character of the enterprise which section 3127 authorized, as will be shown by further reference to and quotation from amended section 3128.

It is to be noted that the thing authorized in section 3127 is a county hospital, which is to say, a hospital for the use of the people of the county.

A hospital is defined in the second edition of Black's Law Dictionary as follows:

> "Hospital. An institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called 'eleemosynary' or 'charitable.' "

In 21 Cyc. 1105:

> "A hospital is an institution for the reception and care of sick, wounded, infirm or aged persons; generally incorporated, and then of the class of corporations called 'eleemosynary,' and for the perpetual distribution of the free alms of their founders."

As held by my predecessor in 1912 (Vol. 2, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1348):

> "In order to constitute a hospital, the institution must be prepared to receive and take care of the sick, infirm or aged. It must have rooms for receiving the patients and also the means of giving them the proper attention."

From these definitions the term "hospital," as used in section 3127, would seem to have a definite meaning and it may be suggested that nothing else appears in section 3127 and other related sections to indicate that the legislature used or intended the word to be understood in any sense other than its ordinary meaning, and this department is of the opinion that authority to build a county hospital does not carry with it authority to build a polyclinic building, the main purpose of which would be not for the purpose of conducting a hospital, as understood in the ordinary sense of the word, but, as stated in your letter, "would be devoted to emergency uses arising from the work of the clinic," and it is not contemplated to conduct a regular hospital in this building, but to send the patients needing hospital care to existing hospitals.

The other lines of activity whereby it is proposed "to marshal all the educational and curative agencies in a great movement to remove all conditions which are prejudicial to public health, morals and civic efficiency," while commendable, are outside the scope of a county's function as now defined by the laws of Ohio. It might be claimed, however, that the very recent amendment of these sections extends the commissioners' authority in the matter of such hospitals by reason of the fact that section 3128, as amended, provides that such hospital may be "designated as a memorial to commemorate the services of soldiers, sailors, marines and pioneers of the county." But an examination of the act, as amended, shows that if the memorial feature is petitioned for and voted upon in the election for such a county hospital, the only different result which obtains is that "such buildings, tablets, busts, statues and other memorials and equipment as the board of county hospital trustees hereinafter provided for shall deem fit to properly accomplish and reserve the memorial feature in such hospital, shall be incorporated in its construction."

Examination of the amendment will disclose that this is the only change with reference to making the county hospital also a memorial, and section 3137, being the one as before stated which contains the direct grant of authority, is unchanged in any way by the amendment.

It cannot properly be claimed that the legislative desire to thus provide a memorial to its soldiers and pioneers shows any legislative intention to change the character of the enterprise which it had theretofore authorized under the term "county hospital."

In conclusion, this department is of the opinion that neither original section 3127 nor its amendments referred to in your letter, warrant or authorize the county commissioners to erect such a polyclinic building as described in your letter.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISCHARGED SOLDIERS NOT SUBJECT TO MILITARY LAW—PERSONS IN MILITARY SERVICE NOT EXEMPT FROM ARREST AND PROSECUTION BY CIVIL AUTHORITIES FOR VIOLATION OF STATE LAWS.

1. Under article II of the articles of war, discharged soldiers are not subject to martial law.

2. Persons in the military service of the United States are not exempt from arrest and prosecution by civil authorities for offenses under state laws.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1919.

HON. JOHN P. PHILLIPS, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "Camp Sherman, a United States military training camp, located in this city, is traversed by one state highway designated as Columbus avenue and bounded by another state highway known as the Frankfort pike.
> The commanding general thereof has monopolized the business of the transporting of soldiers to and from said camp and has restricted the use by soldiers of any automobiles except those licensed by him.
> It has been the custom of a number of automobile drivers to transport in automobiles over said public highways civilians and discharged soldiers. Military police have been stationed on said highways and within the corporate limits of Chillicothe, Ohio, and outside of the boundaries of Camp Sherman with instructions to stop all automobiles, the owners of which are not so licensed, and compel all persons in military uniform, whether discharged or not, to be removed therefrom. The order further specifies that in case a driver does not stop when ordered, the military policemen are ordered to shoot.
> Considerable friction has naturally resulted and on June 11, 1919, one Steve Genin stopped his automobile on said Frankfort pike, outside of the limit of the said camp. He was ordered to move and upon his failure to obey immediately, was assaulted and beaten and two shots were discharged into his automobile, which were evidently aimed at him.
> Complaints have been filed before a local magistrate against two military officers, charged with assault and battery, and against two other military officers, charged with shooting with intent to kill.
> I have been advised by the judge advocate of Camp Sherman that these defendants will resort to their weapons if any attempt be made to serve the warrants.
> Query:
> 1. To what extent has a military authority jurisdiction over discharged soldiers?
> 2. Are persons in the military service of the United States exempt from arrest by civil authorities under the above circumstances?
> For the reason that violence may result in effecting said arrests, I would appreciate your consideration hereof at your earliest convenience."

It is noted that your first question is, "To what extent has a military authority jurisdiction over discharged soldiers?"

It may be suggested that an answer to your question lies in the consideration of article 2, of the articles of war. That article defines the persons who are subject to the articles of war and it will be quite apparent from reading that article that a discharged soldier is not subject to martial law; and it follows that upon obtaining a final discharge from the military service the discharged soldier is not affected by or subject to the articles of war and the military authorities have no jurisdiction over such discharged soldier.

Your second question is, "Are persons in the military service of the United States exempt from arrest by civil authorities under the above circumstances (as stated in your letter)?" Articles 12, 74, 93 and 117 of the articles of war are pertinent to your inquiry.

Article 12, relating to the jurisdiction of general courts martial, in part provides that they shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles, and any other person who by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals.

Article 93 in part provides:

> "Any person subject to military law who commits manslaughter * * *, assault with intent to commit any felony or assault with intent to do bodily harm, shall be punished as court martial shall direct."

It is to be observed that the courts martial are vested with jurisdiction to try offenses as above referred to.

Article 74 makes it obligatory upon the commanding officer, except in time of war, to assist in the apprehension of a person accused of a crime and to deliver such person over to the civil authorities.

Article 117 provides in part:

> "When any * * * criminal prosecution is commenced in any court of the state against any * * * soldier * * * on account of any act done under color of his office or status, or in respect to which he claims any right * * * under any law of the United States respecting the military forces thereof * * *, such suit or prosecution may * * * be removed for trial into the district court of the United States."

In 6, Opinions of the Attorney-General (U. S.) page 413, in Steiner's Case, the syllabus is:

> "An officer or soldier of the army, who does an act criminal both by the military and the general law, is subject to be tried by the latter in preference to the former under certain conditions and limitations."

In the opinion of the then Attorney-General (1854), it is stated:

> "The military law, as it exists in the United States, and in Great Britain, from which country the substance of our jurisprudence was derived, is an exceptional code, applicable to a class of persons in given relations, but not abrogating or derogating from the general law of the land. By the general doctrine of America as well as of British law, an officer or soldier of the army, who does an act which is criminal both by the military and by the general law, is subject to trial by the latter, in preference to the former, under certain conditions and limitations."

In Coleman vs. Tennessee, 97 U. S., 509, the syllabus reads:

> "By the 30th section of the enrollment act, exclusive jurisdiction is not vested in the military tribunals therein mentioned, over offenses committed by persons in the military service of the United States, when the offense was committed in a loyal state where the civil courts were open."

Section 30 of the act referred to in the syllabus is similar in effect to the provisions of articles 12 and 93, supra.

In the Tennessee case the court concluded that conferring such jurisdiction on the court martial does not disturb or destroy the jurisdiction of the state's courts, as stated in the opinion:

> "But the section does not make the jurisdiction of the military tribunals exclusive of that of the state courts. It does not declare that soldiers committing the offenses named shall not be amenable to punishment by the state courts. It simply declares that the offenses shall be 'punishable,' not that they shall be punished by the military courts; and this is merely saying that they may be thus punished.
> Previous to its enactment, the offenses designated were punishable by the state courts and persons in the military service who committed them were delivered over to those courts for trial; and it contains no words indicating an intention on the part of congress to take from them the jurisdiction in this respect which they had always exercised. With the known hostility of the American people to any interference by the military with the regular administration of justice in the civil courts, no such intention should be ascribed to congress in the absence of clear and direct language to that effect."

In Franklin vs. United States, 216 U. S., 559, the syllabus is:

> "The contention that under U. S. Rev. Stat., section 1342, article 62, U. S. Comp. Stat., 1901, p. 957, a court martial has exclusive jurisdiction over crimes committed by a military officer which are cognizable by courts martial under the provisions of that article, is too clearly unfounded to serve as the basis of a writ of error from the federal supreme court, to review a conviction in a circuit court."

The provisions of Article 62, referred to in the syllabus, are similar to the present articles of war above quoted. The syllabus is supported by the opinion rendered by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, which in part is:

> "It is well settled that the 62d article of war does not vest, nor purport to vest, exclusive jurisdiction in courts-martial, and that civil courts have concurrent jurisdiction over all offenses committed by a military officer which may be punished by a court-martial under the provisions of that article.
> In Grafton vs. United States, 206 U. S. 333, 348, 51 L. ed. 1084, 1089, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 749, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas., 640, it was expressly declared that the jurisdiction of courts-martial is not exclusive. Undoubtedly the general rule that the jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to offenses triable before courts-martial. See opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, 6 Ops. Atty. Gen. 413, 419; United States vs. Clark, 31 Fed. 710."

In Opinions of the Attorney-General (U. S.) Vol. 21, page 88 (1894), the question was raised as to the liability of a soldier for violation of a city ordinance and the opinion of the Attorney-General, as shown at page 89, was:

> "If the first question is answered affirmatively (that such ordinance was part of the law of the land), I see no escape from the conclusion that a soldier may be arrested, tried and punished by the proper civil authority for the violation of a city ordinance."

In view of the conclusions reached by the United States Supreme Court, as indicated above, this department is of the opinion that the jurisdiction conferred upon courts-martial is not exclusive.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—FEES OF PROBATE JUDGES AND SHERIFFS—OTHER COSTS DISCUSSED.

Probate judges are entitled to tax as fees, in proceedings to determine inheritance taxes, such fees as are allowed under sections 2900 and 2901 G. C., which are the same fees allowed to the clerk of courts for similar services.

Sheriffs are entitled to fees for services performed in inheritance tax cases, whether in the service of subpoenas issued by the inheritance tax appraiser, or in the service of process issued by the court.

No appraiser' fees are allowable in inheritance tax cases.

No costs may be taxed for services rendered in connection with the hearing of exceptions in the initial determination of the tax by the probate court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter requesting the opinion of this department as follows:

> "We are enclosing you herewith copy of cost bill prescribed by this bureau for use by probate judges in taxing their fees under the old collateral inheritance tax laws, said bill being prescribed to conform with the opinion of the Attorney-General to be found in Opinions for 1917, Vol. 2, page 1061.
> Question: Can this same cost bill be used by probate judges under the new inheritance tax law, known as Amended Senate Bill 175, by merely eliminating the word 'collateral' in the heading and caption?
> We would ask you to review this bill with the view of approving or disapproving same in whole or in part."

The cost bill, referring to General Code sections 1603, 2900 and 2901, specifies fees for the following services:

PROBATE JUDGE'S FEES.	SHERIFF'S FEES.
1. Filing (____) praecipes, pleadings, subpoenas, cost bill and other necessary documents.	On subpoena.
2. Noting the filing of same, except subpoena and praecipe therefor, on the docket (____).
3. Taking (____) affidavits, including certificates and seal, (includes verifications to pleadings).
4. Taking (____) undertakings or bonds.

5.	Issuing (____) writs, orders or notices, except subpoenas.
6.	Noting the issue of same on docket (____)
7.	Recording return of same on docket (____).
		Total Sheriff's Fees_____
8.	Certificate of deposit on foreign writ.
9.	Certificate of opening deposition.
10.	Issuing subpoenas, (____) names.
11.	Swearing (____) witnesses.
12.	Each entry (____ entries) on journal—per 100 words or fraction thereof.
13.	Indexing same (____).
14.	Posting same on docket (____).
15.	Making (____) copies of pleadings, process, record or files, inc. certf. and seal, (____ words), per 100 words.
16.	Making complete record in cause, (____ words), per 100 words.
17.	Indexing same, each cause.
18.	Making cost bill, taxed but once.	Sheriff_____Co.
19.	Entering on cash book costs received in each cause.	On subpoena.

This cost bill, as you state, was prescribed for the old collateral inheritance tax law. The only mention in that law of fees and costs was in old section 5346 G. C., which provided that:

> "The fees of officers having duties to perform under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be paid by the county from the county expense fund thereof, and shall be the same as allowed by law for similar services * * *."

In the new inheritance tax law the following provisions appear, relating to costs in the probate court:

> "Sec. 5348-10. Such fees as are allowed by law to the probate judge for services performed under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be fixed in each case and certified by him on the order fixing the taxes, together with the fees of the sheriff or other officers and the expenses of the county auditor. The county auditor shall allow such fees and expenses out of said taxes when paid and credit the same to such fee funds, and draw his warrants on the treasurer in favor of the officers personally entitled thereto, payable from such taxes, as the case may require.
> Sec. 5346. * * * No costs shall be allowed by the probate court on such exceptions" (to the initial determination of taxes made by the probate court).

These sections assume that fees are taxable as in other cases, but do not expressly provide that such fees shall be the same as those allowed for similar services in other cases.

As the bureau is advised in another opinion of even date herewith, the proceeding in the probate court for the assessment of the tax is a judicial proceeding.

Section 1603 G. C. provides as follows:

> "For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services."

It will be observed that this section is broad enough to entitle the probate judge to charge for services similar to those rendered by the clerk of the common pleas court, wherever such services are required of him and no compensation is otherwise provided by law, the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the courts for such services.

The inheritance tax law will require of the probate court some services at least for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law. Therefore section 1603 G. C. by its own terms applies to the services rendered under the inheritance tax law and refers us to the schedule of fees payable to the clerk of courts. These are found in section 2900 and 2901, as follows:

"Sec. 2900. For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the clerk shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section and no more:" (Then follow in the two sections detailed fees for various services).

The cost bill submitted is in the opinion of this department correct, in that the services mentioned therein, for which fees may be charged, are all services that may conceivably be rendered by the probate judge acting as the clerk of his own court in an inheritance tax proceeding. This statement applies to the probate judge's fees.

The cost bill also carries a column for sheriff's fees, depositions and appraiser's fee. No appraisers are allowable, as the work of appraisement is done through the county auditor, under the new statute. The sheriff may conceivably render services in the service of subpoenas, and it is possible that depositions may be used before the probate court, although most of the testimony that will be adduced in the ordinary case will be that taken before the county auditor in his capacity of inheritance tax appraiser.

These possibilities raise the further question as to the interpretation of section 5348-10 G. C., quoted supra. When it speaks of the certificate of the probate judge, it includes "the fees of the sheriff or other officers and the expense of the county auditor." This might refer back to the provisions of section 5341, which deals specifically with the fees "of the sheriff or other officer serving such subpoenas" issued by a county auditor in his capacity as inheritance tax appraiser. However, it is the opinion of this department that such is not the case and that the sheriff is entitled to fees for any services which he may render in an inheritance tax proceeding, whether in the service of subpoenas issued by the county auditor as inheritance tax appraiser, or in the service of subpoenas issued by the probate judge in the making of an original order fixing the tax.

Section 5346 G. C. specifically provides that "no costs shall be allowed by the probate court" in connection with exceptions to the original appraisement and determination of taxes. The object of this seems to be to encourage parties to bring out all their evidence before the original order is made and to discourage the possible practice of allowing the original order to be made pro forma and then reopening the matter by the filing of exceptions.

In case any services are rendered by the sheriff or other officer, including the probate court, at the instance of a party who files exceptions, such party must pay the fees without having them taxed as costs. Subject to this statement, however, the cost bill, in so far as it allows fees for the sheriff, is proper.

In passing, it is to be noted that the fees of the sheriff or other officer serving subpoenas issued by the county auditor are to be certified by the county auditor upon his report to the probate judge, and audited and allowed by the probate judge (section 5341 G. C.)

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—CORRECT ERRORS IN LIQUOR TAX ASSESSMENTS SINCE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT EFFECTIVE.

Since the state liquor licensing board has been abolished by force of the prohibition amendment to the constitution, the provision of section 6091 for the consent of the state liquor licensing board in the correction of errors in assessments of the liquor tax is to be disregarded, and the auditor of state is now empowered to correct errors and remit assessments or increased assessments and penalties when found by him to be erroneously or illegally certified.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently requested my written opinion on the question of authority for correcting errors in assessments of liquor tax, your communication being as follows:

> "Section 6091 G. C. provides that the auditor of state, with the consent and approval of the state liquor licensing board, may correct any errors or remit any assessments charged against dealers in intoxicating liquors under the Cain law provisions amendatory to the Dow-Aiken tax law.
> Statements accompanied by affidavits have been submitted to this department from certain dealers charged under the provisions aforesaid which indicate that there was both error and illegality in the charge made upon the certification of the state liquor licensing board. The evidence is so conclusive that this department would not hesitate to act under section 6091 G. C.; but we are in doubt as to our power to act inasmuch as there is no board which can give consent to that action.
> Will you kindly give us an opinion as to whether or not we may act without consent in view of the fact that the board is now non-existent?"

Section 6091 relating to the matter involved in your inquiry, is as follows:

> "The auditor of state, with the consent and approval of the state liquor licensing board, may correct any errors or remit any such assessment or increased assessment, together with the penalty thereon, if it is found to have been erroneously or illegally certified."

Since the prohibition amendment to the constitution has become effective, resulting in the repeal of the statutes creating the state liquor licensing board, as determined by the supreme court in the recent case of State ex rel. vs. Donahey, it follows that the provisions of the statutes providing functions to be performed by that board have likewise been annulled.

The statute in question therefore is to be construed and applied without regard to such of its provisions as relate to the state liquor licensing board, or functions to be performed thereby, and so construed, the statute authorizes the auditor of state to act in the matter of correcting errors and remitting assessments or increased assessments and penalties when found to be erroneously or illegally certified.

I therefore advise that the authority so conferred upon the auditor of state under section 6091 may be exercised in accordance with the statute, eliminating therefrom the provision relating to the state liquor licensing board.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—UNDER PROVISIONS OF 6911 G. C. COUNTY SURVEYOR AND COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST AGREE WHEN ALTERNATE PLANS SUBMITTED.

If, under section 6911 G. C. the county surveyor has prepared alternate plans, etc., the vote of the three county commissioners is without effect to adopt plans, etc., if the surveyor does not agree to such adoption.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In a communication of recent date, you call attention to section 6911 G. C. (107 O. L. 96), reading as follows:

> "When the board of commissioners has determined that any road shall be constructed, reconstructed, improved or repaired, as herein provided for, such board shall determine by resolution by unanimous vote, if acting without a petition, and by a majority vote, if acting upon a petition, the route and termini of such road, the kind and extent of the improvement, and at the same time shall order the county surveyor to make such surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as may be required for such improvement. The county commissioners may order the county surveyor to make alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications, providing therein for different widths of roadway, different materials or other similar variations, and approve all or any number of such alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications. The county surveyor may, without instructions from the county commissioners, prepare alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications, providing therein for different widths of roadway, different materials, or other similar variations. Where alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications are approved by the county commissioners or submitted by the county surveyor on his own motion the county commissioners and county surveyor shall after the opening of the bids agree which of such surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications shall be finally adopted for the construction of the improvement."

And, referring to the agreement mentioned in the last sentence of the section, you make the following inquiry:

> "In such agreement, will the votes of three commissioners be considered a majority or is it necessary that at least two of the commissioners and the surveyor vote together to constitute a majority?"

Your inquiry may be briefly answered by the statement that the county surveyor is an elective officer (section 2782), chosen by the voters independently of any action by the commissioners, and that, among his other duties, he "shall have charge of the construction, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners" (section 7184). Assuredly the very purpose of section 6911 was to give the surveyor a voice in the matter of final adoption of plans, etc., when alternate plans have been prepared—a purpose entirely consistent with the duties devolving upon the surveyor.

It follows, therefore, that the answer to your inquiry is that when alternate plans, etc., have been prepared, the vote of the three commissioners is without effect to adopt plans, etc., if the surveyor does not agree to such adoption.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attornry-General.

SCHOOLS—PRESIDENTS OF RURAL AND VILLAGE BOARDS OF EDUCATION—EXPENSES HOW PAID—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION THROUGH ITS SUPERINTENDENT HAS AUTHORITY TO ARRANGE ANNUAL MEETING OF MEMBERS OF BOARDS OF EDUCATION OF VARIOUS VILLAGE AND RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION DISBURSES ONLY COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION FUND.

1. The actual and necessary expenses of the presidents of the rural and village boards of education of a county, incurred while in attendance at a meeting for the election of a member of a county board of education, as provided for in section 4729 G. C., shall be paid out of the general fund in the county treasury.

2. A county board of education, through its superintendent, has full authority to arrange for the time and place of holding the annual meeting of the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts of the county, including the rental of a proper place for such meeting if necessary.

3. The county board of education has authority under the statutes to disburse but one fund, viz., the county board of education fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

HON. FRANK CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion of the Attorney-General upon the following statement of facts:

> "1. Out of what fund should the actual and necessary expenses of the presidents of the rural and village boards of education of the county, incurred while in attendance at a meeting for the election of a member of the county board of education, as provided for in section 4729 General Code of Ohio, be paid?
> 2. Has the county board of education the right to pay for a hall and other incidental expenses in connection with holding an annual meeting of the members of the various rural and village boards of education of a county school district, as provided for under section 4747-1 General Code of Ohio?
> 3. Has the county board of education the right to act as custodian of moneys paid into the county board of education fund from entertainments given by the county normal school, and teachers' contributions made by registration fees at the annual teachers' institute of the county, and pay the same out for the purposes designated by the county board of education and approved by those who have paid said moneys into said county board of education fund, said expenses including the purchase of supplies for said normal school and the payment of a secretary of said teachers' institute, etc.?"

Bearing upon your first question from what fund the actual and necessary expenses of the presidents of rural and village boards of education should be paid, where such presidents have met for the purpose of electing a member of the county board of education, section 4729 G. C. reads in part:

> "* * * Such expense shall be allowed by the county auditor and paid out of the county treasury upon the order of the chairman and clerk of the meeting."

It will be noted that the statement of the section in question is that such expenses shall be paid out of the county treasury, which means the general fund, and in the absence of any stipulation in the section as to fund such expenses should be paid from, the intent of the law is that the general fund is the one from which this payment for expenses that are actual and necessary should be made.

In reply to your second question, as to whether a county board of education has the right to pay for a hall and other incidental expenses in connection with holding annual meetings of the members of the various rural and village boards of education of the county school district, section 4747-1 G. C., reads as follows:

> "Once each year all the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts within any county school district shall hold a meeting for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the schools of such county school district. The county superintendent shall arrange for the time and place of holding such meeting and shall also act as chairman."

Under the statutes the county superintendent indicated in section 4747-1 G. C. is the executive officer of the county board of education and therefore has full power to act as the agent of the county board of education in the matter of securing a place for the annual meeting of all members of the village and rural school districts of the county, which the law contemplates shall be held once each year for the discussion of matters pertaining to the public schools of the county. It must be remembered that this is not a meeting of merely the presidents of the various village and rural district school boards, as is held for the election of a member of the county board of education, but it is a much larger meeting because all the members of all the boards of education of the village and rural school districts are directed to attend and inasmuch as there are five members on each local school board, it will be seen that the meeting would be one that might require a room of some size for the proper accommodation of these members who are directed by law to attend such meeting once each year, and a room which the county board of education could control might not be located in the county seat where it was desired that such meeting should be held, and the school rooms in such county seat are very frequently under the control of the city board of education and not the county board of education. It is true that a court room in the court house might be used for this meeting, but even in that case the board of county commissioners would have to be consulted. It is the clear intent of the law that a proper place shall be provided for this meeting, and where it is necessary, in order to properly hold the meetings and accommodate the members who are directed by law to attend, the county superintendent, as the agent of the county board of education, has full authority to arrange for a place for holding such meeting, which would include rent for such place for that occasion, if it was necessary that rent should be paid, and this would not necessarily include "other incidental expenses" unless such expenses were absolutely necessary in the proper holding of the meeting and attending to the business for which such meeting was called.

Replying to your third question, as to whether a county board of education has the right to act as custodian of moneys paid into the county board of education fund from entertainments given by the county normal school and teachers' contributions made by registration fees at the annual teachers' institute of the county, and to pay the same out for the purposes designated by the county board of education and approved by those who have paid said moneys into said county board of education fund, said expenses, including the purchase of supplies for said normal school, the payment of said teachers' institute, etc., it is advised that the county board of education is a trustee of public moneys; that in its routine of business it must follow the language of the statutes the same as any other board of education in the paying out of money. It has full power to receive bequests and grants of money and when they are accepted absolute title to the same rests in the board of education. You indicate here that certain expenditures of the county board of education would have to first be approved by those who have paid the moneys in, which is contrary to public policy in that the board of education has full control of its own expenditures and is not presumed to consult a private authority as to how and when it shall vote its funds, provided that it always remains within the authority granted by law.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. The actual and necessary expenses of the presidents of the rural and village boards of education of a county, incurred while in attendance at a meeting for the election of a member of a county board of education, as provided for in section 4729 G. C., shall be paid out of the general fund in the county treasury.
2. A county board of education, through its superintendent, has full authority to arrange for the time and place of holding the annual meeting of the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts of the county, including the rental of a proper place for such meeting if necessary.
3. The county board of education cannot act as custodian of moneys where some private authority must first approve an expenditure by such board of education.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE.
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter of recent date requesting a written opinion as indicated in the following statement and question:

We hereby call your attention to an opinion of Attorney-General Joseph McGhee, construing section 4747-1 G. C., as published in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 254, and would respectfully ask for your written opinion as to whether the enactment of supplementary section 4744-3a, as found in 107 O. L., 622, nullifies the opinion cited above?"

It is found that the opinion to which you refer, appearing at page 254, Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, makes the following holding in its syllabus:

"No expenses, fees or salaries can be paid from the county board of education fund or any other fund, by reason of a meeting held under the provisions of section 4747-1 G. C."

Section 4747-1 G. C. provides:

"Once each year all the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts within any county school district shall hold a meeting for the purpose of discussing the matters relating to the schools of such county school district. The county superintendent shall arrange for the time and place of holding such meeting and shall also act as chairman."

You now ask whether the supplementary section 4744-3a, as found in 107 O. L., 622, nullifies the opinion cited above.

Section 4744-3a, added in 107 O. L., after such opinion was issued, reads as follows:

"The county board of education is authorized to pay for the printing of programs, examinations and other necessary printing supplies for the use of the county superintendent and the superintendents and teachers of the county school unit. The county board of education is authorized to pay the expenses of its educational meetings required by law."

It is therefore necessary to analyze the meaning of the last sentence of such supplementary section 4744-3a, as to what is meant by the words "its educational meetings required by law," as it refers to the county board of education. This section was enacted after the opinion of the Attorney-General was rendered that there could be no expenses paid by the county board for the annual meeting of the school boards of the county district. There is nothing in the section which indicates that the county board of education members are not presumed to be present, for they usually are, having general charge of the village and rural schools of the county. The members of the county board of education are vitally interested in such meeting and it could properly be called an educational meeting of the county school unit mentioned in section 4744-3a and of which unit the county board is the head.

It is not entirely clear what the general assembly may have meant in saying that the county board of education is authorized to pay the expenses of "its educational meetings" required by law, for the reason that while the county board is directed to have a number of business meetings throughout the year, nowhere in the statutes is there found any mandate or authority for an educational meeting or meetings other than the one required in section 4747-1 G. C., and the county teachers' institute, which is under the control of the county board of education and the expenses of which are provided for in section 7860 G. C., which reads in part:

"The expenses of conducting such institute shall be paid out of the county board of education fund upon the order of the presidents of the county board of education."

It has been held in prior opinions of the Attorney-General that there can be in a county but one teachers' institute each year and that is the one that is provided for in sections 7859-7874 G. C. It is noted that section 4744-3a authorizes the payment of the expenses of the educational meetings of the county board of education that must be held as "required by law." It is entirely possible that the members of the county board of education do attend the annual meeting of all the members of the various village and rural school boards, for the law provides that this meeting shall be under the supervision of the county superintendent, who is also the executive officer of the county board.

As the executive officer of the county board has charge of the matter in full, it could logically be considered as being a county educational meeting required by law, and the county board has charge of educational affairs in the county school unit.

Attention is invited to the fact that while supplemental section 4744-3a, enacted in 107 O. L., 622, does nullify the opinion heretofore issued by the Attorney-General on March 13, 1917, for the reason that such section provides for expenses of the educational meetings of the county board of education, such opinion will be further nullified after September, 1919, because there will appear in 108 O. L. 704 the new amended section 4747-1, reading as follows:

> "Once each year all the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts within any county school district, shall hold a meeting for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the schools of such county school district. The county superintendent shall arrange for the time and place of holding such meeting and shall act as chairman thereof. Each member of a rural and village board of education may receive the amount of $2.00 for attending such meeting, upon filing a certificate for attendance thereof with the board of which he is a member, this to be in addition to the allowance made by rural board of education members under authority of section 4715."

The new matter in section 4747-1 is the last sentence, which provides that $2.00 may be paid to the members attending such annual meeting, but it is noted that such $2.00 shall come from the funds of the board of education of which the attending person is a member and not from any county board of education fund. The county superintendent, as agent of the county board of education, shall arrange for the time and place of holding such meeting and shall act as chairman thereof, for a general discussion of school matters in the various boards of the county school unit. Seemingly, therefore, by the amendment added in 108 O. L. 704, section 4747-1, it was the belief of the general assembly that there would be some expense that such meeting could have, and it was necessary, therefore, to provide by supplemental sections 4747-1 and 4747-3a G. C. for such additional expense.

Taking this view of the question, it would seem, therefore, that while the county superintendent shall arrange for the time and place of holding such a meeting, the word "place" must be taken in its literal sense, that is, the building in the county where such annual meeting shall be held and not merely the town or district within the county for which location the meeting has been called, and it might be necessary to rent a suitable hall, under unusual circumstances, but this is not to be encouraged.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that no expenses, fees or salaries can be paid from the county board of education fund or any other fund, for the annual meeting of the members of the various village and rural boards of education in a county school district, except those actual necessary expenses provided for in section 4747-3a G. C., and, after September, 1919, the two dollar fee allowed attending members of rural and village boards, which fee shall be paid by their local board of education.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT CREATED UNDER SECTION 4736 G. C.—ONE FROM VILLAGE AND CONTIGUOUS RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—OTHER FROM TWO CONTIGUOUS VILLAGE DISTRICTS—NEW CREATED DISTRICT IS A VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

1. Where the county board of education, under authority of section 4736 G. C., has created a new school district out of a village school district, containing a tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, and a rural school district contiguous thereto, under the provisions of section 4681 G. C., such newly created district shall be a village school district.

2. Where a county board of education, under authority of section 4736 G. C., has created a new school district from the territory of two contiguous village school districts, each with a tax valuation of $500,000.00 or more, under the provisions of section 4681 G. C., such newly created district is a village school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

HON. MERVIN DAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following two questions:

"1. Where the county board of education, under the authority of section 4736 G. C. has created a new school district out of a village school district containing a tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, and a rural school district contiguous thereto, it being understood that the board of education had previously abolished both districts in order that they might create one new school district, then by what name or designation shall the newly created district be known; shall it be called a village school district or a rural school district, under section 4681 G. C.?

2. Having reference to the same sections, and where there are two contiguous village school districts, each with a tax valuation of $500,000.00 or more, and the board of education abolishes both village districts and creates from their territory one new district, then in that case, what shall the name or designation of the newly created district be, as to whether it shall be called a village district or a rural district?"

Section 4679 G. C. reads as follows:

"The school districts of the state shall be styled respectively, city school districts, village school districts, rural school districts and county school districts.

Section 4681 G. C. provides:

"Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

Section 4736 G. C. provides in part:

"The county board of education shall arrange the school districts according to topography and population in order that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils, and shall file with the board or boards of education in the territory affected, a written notice of such proposed arrangement. * * * The county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof."

From your statement of facts it is assumed that the creation of the new districts mentioned in both of your questions has been made in regular manner, in compliance with law, and the question now arises as to whether, under your question 1, a new school district created out of a village district and a rural district contiguous thereto, and having a tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, is either a village school district or a rural school district.

Your special attention is invited to section 4681, which clearly provides that each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, shall constitute a village school district. From your statement of facts it is noted that such village school district, prior to the creation of the new district, had a tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, and of course with the added territory from the rural school district to the new district, the figures of $500,000.00, as a tax valuation in such new district, would be augmented, and having a tax valuation in the enlarged district in excess of the figures given in section 4681 G. C., which defines a village school district, it must follow that such enlarged new district, with a tax valuation which you indicate, and containing a village school district, could not be a rural school district, but would be a village school district under section 4681 G. C.

Coming to your second question, which indicates that two contiguous village school districts, each with a tax valuation of $500,000.00 or more, have been legally abolished by the county board of education, attention is invited again to section 4681, and the same reasoning would prevail, viz.: that under section 4781 a village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, shall constitute a village school district and cannot be a rural school district.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General:

(1) Where the county board of education, under authority of section 4736 G. C., has created a new school district out of a village school district, containing a tax valuation of not less than $500,000.00, and a rural school district contiguous thereto, under the provisions of section 4681 G. C., such newly created district shall be a village school district.

(2) Where a county board of education, under authority of section 4736 G. C., has created a new school district from the territory of two contiguous village school districts, each with a tax valuation of $500,000.00 or more, under the provisions of section 4681 G. C., such newly created district is a village school district.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOLHOUSES—RENTAL OF TEMPORARY ROOM DOES NOT CONSTITUTE SCHOOL BUILDING—WHEN ORDER OF CHIEF DEPUTY INSPECTOR OF WORKSHOPS AND FACTORIES MUST BE OBEYED—SUCH OFFICER WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO ORDER ERECTION OF NEW BUILDING—WHEN BOARD REQUIRED TO PROVIDE SUITABLE SPACE—HOW BOARD CAN PROVIDE FOR SUCH EMERGENCY.

1. Where a board of education under section 7620 G. C. rents or leases rooms for temporary school purposes, such rooms do not constitute a school building within the meaning of section 7630-1 G. C.

2. An order placed by the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories against a school building as being inadequate in space, air and light, or unsafe for pupils greater than a designated number, and prohibiting the use of such building if overcrowded, must be obeyed.

3. The chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories has full authority to prohibit the use of a public building and order changes, alterations, additions, repairs and installations of appliances on such buildings, but has no authority to order the erection of a new building and thereby deprive an official or board of its right to rent or lease other space.

4. Where the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories issues an order against a public school building, that it is inadequate or unsafe for an overflow of pupils, and such excess number of pupils is thereby without proper school facilities, the board of education must provide suitable space, and an emergency is created.

5. Such board of education can meet such emergency by renting or leasing rooms for school purposes under section 7620 G. C., and if none are available in the district, the board can issue bonds for a new school building, upon vote of the electors, to meet such emergency, without regard to the limitations of the Smith One Per Cent. Law, but such bond issue regularly made as provided in section 7630-1 G. C. can be only on the erecting of a new building and provision for the purpose of a site and the furnishing of the building must be made in accordance with section 7625 G. C., which provides that levy for interest and sinking funds must be within the fifteen mill limitation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

HON. HARRY A. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Caldwell, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter in which you request an opinion on the following statement of facts:

"1. The board of education of Caldwell village school district has two school buildings which are inadequate to accommodate its pupils, necessitating the leasing of additional room for about 75 pupils. These leased rooms comprise the second floor of a private business block in this village and have been used for school purposes for a number of years. If the use of these rooms for school purposes be prohibited by the inspector of workshops and factories, would an emergency be created such as would permit the budget commission of this county to exceed the maximum tax rate in levying taxes to meet the interest and sinking fund on an issue of bonds authorized by a vote of the electors of the district under sections 7630-1 and 5649-4 of our General Code? In other words, would the word 'schoolhouse,' as found in the second clause of section 7630-1 of the General Code, include rooms as above referred to?

2. Could the proceeds of said bond issue be used by said board in purchasing a new site, erecting a school building thereon and equipping and furnishing the same, or would the money for a new site and furnishing and equipping of building have to be raised by a separate bond issue, the levy for interest and sinking fund of which would have to be within the 15 mills."

Attention is first invited to section 7620 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto or purchase or lease real estate to be used as playgrounds for children, or rent suitable school rooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It also shall * * make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts." (102 O. L., 419).

It will be noted from the above section that the powers of the board of education are rather sweeping on the question of providing school facilities, the fundamental idea being that the schools must be kept going, for after enumerating various powers in detail, the section says in two places that "the board * * * shall make all other necessary provisions" for the convenience and prosperity of the schools. It follows, however, that in the making of all other necessary provisions by the board, those statutes which speak in detail on certain matters must be adhered to.

You say that for a number of years the Caldwell village board of education has leased additional rooms on the second floor of a business block, for school purposes, the two regular school buildings being inadequate for present needs. This was entirely regular under section 7620 G. C., above quoted, for boards of education have power to rent or lease buildings for school purposes at any time, and under said section 7620 G. C. it is for the board of education in a district to say whether they will rent or lease suitable school rooms or whether they will erect a new building where buildings or rooms now used are not in compliance with law. The board of education of a district knows the condition of the finances of the district and is responsible for the same in their proper expenditure.

Your statement of facts says the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories, in the discharge of his duties, has prohibited the use after the present term of school ends, of the rooms located on the second floor of the Shafer building in Caldwell, and which rooms have been leased by the board of education for school purposes in the past and used therefor. You further say that these rooms accommodate about seventy-five pupils of the Caldwell village school district placed therein because the two regular school buildings are inadequate for the number of pupils and that such condition has obtained for some time; and desire to know if such temporary leased location is a "school-house," within the meaning of the statutes. It is clear that the word "school-house" as used in the law, contemplates a degree of permanence that does not obtain in the case of rented rooms where the title to the property is always in a private party. Thus the overflow of pupils might be in one rented building one year and in another building the next year. A board of education in its power under section 7620 G. C. could rent temporary rooms for school purposes knowing they would not pass a rigid inspection of the division of workshops and factories; when such inspection is made and an order issued against the further use of such temporary rooms for school purposes, the board could plead an emergency for a bond issue for a new "school house" because such rooms had been condemned; but the board has not been deprived of the use of one of its school houses, but merely forbidden to use such leased rooms for further school purposes and still has the leeway of renting or leasing similar space in another building (if available) that might pass the inspection of the state officials. Beyond the degree of prohibiting the use of present school rooms, if they can not be repaired as he may require, the chief deputy of workshops and factories cannot go. He has full power to direct that suitable accommodations of all necessary kinds be furnished by the board of education and take proper steps to see that they are furnished by prohibiting the use of any school building that is over-crowded or unsafe and cannot be used as intended, without violating the law. But the choice of renting or leasing other rooms that might be satisfactory cannot be taken from the board of education by any official; the board must provide suitable facilities for every pupil in the district in some form or other, but such facilities are not limited to new buildings necessarily. A board might have sufficient funds in its treasury to cover a lease, but would hardly have a fund sufficient to erect a new building, and in the latter event a bond issue would be necessary and the statutes governing school bond issues and school taxation would operate. But such bond issue cannot be predicated upon the fact that temporary school rooms have been condemned by the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories, for the board still has the privilege of leasing or renting other rooms and such privilege cannot be taken from the board by any other authority, but such rooms must conform to the requirements of the division of workshops and factories.

In this particular case the order of the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories reads in full:

> These rooms are without adequate air space or sufficient light. Light being at a ratio of one square foot of glass to about 18 square feet of floor area and more cannot be obtained. Is without proper ventilation, without sufficient heat and without the proper means of ingress and egress, without proper number of water closets for accommodation of school; therefore the use of these rooms for school purposes after the present term of school is forbidden. New and adequate school room must be erected for the accommodation of the school, before the school year of 1919-20.
> Plans and specifications for same must be submitted in duplicate to this department before the work is begun.
> I refer you to sections 4648-4657, 1031-1037, Ohio General Code.
> Awaiting notification immediately upon compliance."

Here the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories orders that a "new and adequate school room must be erected for the accommodation of the school before the school year of 1919-20" and that "plans and specifications for same must be submitted in duplicate to this department before the work is begun," basing such new building order on these temporary school rooms. Such order takes from the board of education its privileges granted in section 7620 G. C., to lease or rent other rooms in the district. The decision as to whether it shall lease or rent, or erect a new building, rests first with the board of education. The chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories can prohibit the use of any school building or other public building where persons assemble, if it has not the "proper fire protection, fire escapes, exits, emergency exits, hallways, air space, light and such other matters which relate to the health and safety of those assembled in such structures." (Section 1031 G. C.) Such official can forbid the use of a school building, theater or other building for the use or occupancy of more than a designated number measured by the law and regulations which govern his activities, and if an inspection of the regular school houses in a district shows that any of them are crowded beyond the regulations set by law, he can forbid their use for any greater than a designated number, where air space, light, seating arrangements and toilet facilities, or any of them, are inadequate or would be inadequate for a greater number.

And if the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories orders that no greater number than he designates shall use a school building and its use by a greater number is prohibited by him, and such order leaves a group of pupils without school facilities as required by law, an emergency is created which the board of education must meet by providing other school space by renting, leasing or erecting a building, but it is for the board to decide which will be done; and if the board decides to erect a building or alter any rooms, then must the plans and specifications be submitted to the inspector of workshops and factories, as required in section 1035 G. C.

Section 1037 G. C. says in part:

> "Whoever, being a * * * member of a board and * * * in control of any building mentioned in section ten hundred and thirty-one of this chapter * * * permits the use of such building in violation of any order prohibiting its use issued as provided by law, or fails to comply with an order so issued relating to the change, improvement or repair of such building shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars, and each day that such use or failure continues shall constitute a separate offense."

So it is mandatory upon a board to furnish space that is satisfactory to the requirements of the law, and if one of their regular school buildings has been pronounced inadequate for the number of pupils entitled to attend such school, an emergency is created, for the whole number of pupils must have equal and sufficient school facilities, and any school district that does not furnish its pupils with ample facilities as to space, seating, air and light, as well as physical safety, is derelict under the law.

That an order against a school building by the chief inspector of workshops and factories creates an emergency, is amply sustained by the preceding attorneys-general as follows:

In opinion found in Vol. I of Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1914, at p. 548, it is held:

> "Where the inspector of workshops and factories prohibits the use of a school house until certain repairs are made, but the board of education decides to erect a new school building instead, and the electors vote for a $25,000 bond issue for the construction thereof, but cannot levy sufficient taxes to pay bonds and maintain school, there would be an emergency within the meaning of section 5649-4 General Code, and the necessary taxes for the retirement of bonds required for the purpose might be levied outside of all limitations of law."

Again, on p. 1715 of Vol. II, Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1913, it was held:

> "Where the industrial commission and its deputy in charge of workshops, factories and public buildings condemn the use of a public school building for school purposes, the order must be complied with and an emergency is created.
> If bonds are issued by the board of education, with the approval of the majority of the electors, at a special election, the tax levies necessary to carry these bonds may be made outside of the limitations of the Smith one per cent law. Such is the effect of the amendment to section 5649-4, General Code."

Bearing directly on the powers granted to boards of education under section 7630-1 G. C., and section 5649-4 G. C., in cases where school buildings have been condemned by state authority, the following excerpts from prior opinions of this department are here given:

"In case of the condemnation of a school building by the state building inspector, levies for the necessary repairs are not entitled to exemption from all limitations under sections 7630-1 and 5649-4, General Code, unless bonds are issued by a vote of the people, in which event the interest and sinking fund levies will be exempt from the limitation. Simple repair levies made under these circumstances are subject to all the limitations of law."

Vol. II, Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1914, p. 1328:

"Under section 7630-1 General Code, a school building condemned by the chief inspector of workshops and factories may be rebuilt or repaired. The money may be borrowed therefor, regardless of the Smith law limitations."

Vol. I, Annual Report Attorney-General for 1913, p. 14.

"Where under authority of section 7603-1 G. C. bonds are issued by a board of education for the purpose of constructing a new school building, in compliance with the order of the state inspector of workshops and factories, and thereafter a sinking fund levy cannot be made for the purpose of paying the interest on said bonds and retiring the same at maturity without exceeding the fifteen mill limitation provided by law, said board of education may make said levy under authority of said section 7630-1 G. C., and section 5649-4 G. C., irrespective of the limits provided by sections 5649-2 to 5649-5b G. C., and referred to in said section 5649-4 G. C."

Vol. II, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, p. 1263.

"A levy for the payment of principal and interest on bonds issued to erect or repair school buildings, rendered necessary as a compliance with the orders of the chief inspector of workshops and factories or by the destruction of school buildings by fire or other casualty, said bonds being issued pursuant to a vote of the people, is not within the five mill limitation or any of the other limitations of the Smith one per cent law.

A board of education not having fully exercised the authority conferred by law to levy taxes for sinking fund and interest on bonds falling due, is not authorized to borrow money or issue bonds for the purpose of extending or refunding said indebtedness under the provisions of section 5656 G. C."

Vol. I, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, p. 523.

"Following the above opinions, then, I advise you that where the chief deputy of the department of inspection, division of workshops, factories and public buildings, prohibits the use of school houses for their intended purpose, and the board of education is without funds to rebuild or repair same, or to build a new school house for the proper accommodation of the school youth, and that the funds for said purpose cannot be raised under the provisions of sections 7625, 7626, 7627, 7628 and 7629 G. C., because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, then if under the provisions of section 7625, 7626 and 7627 G. C. bonds are sold, such an emergency exists as will permit the levy of taxes to pay the bonds, and the interest thereon, outside of any limitations of the Smith one per cent law."

(Vol. III, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, p. 2355, p. 2357.)

Coming to your second query, as to whether the proceeds of such bond issue could be used by the board in purchasing a new site and equipping and furnishing the school building erected thereon, attention is invited to Opinion No. 1110 of the Attorney-General, appearing in Vol. II, Ann. Rep. of Atty. Gen., 1914, p. 1128, wherein he says:

> "It is clear that this section (7630-1) confers authority to issue bonds only for the purpose of rebuilding, repairing and constructing school houses. The authority to issue bonds for the purpose of acquiring a site for a school house is to be found in section 7625, General Code. Interest and sinking fund levies for the retirement of bonds issued for the purpose of securing a site for a school house must be made within the limitations of the Smith law.
> Upon the approval of the electors, as provided in section 7625, then, to the extent that they involve the acquisition of a site, at least, they are subject to the fifteen mill limitation as imposed by section 5649-5b, as amended 103 O. L., 57; and this limitation cannot be exceeded, as you suggest, by a vote of the people taken under authority of sections 5649-5b and 5649-5a, General Code.
> In short, then, I am of the opinion that in no way can bonds be issued for the acquisition of a school house site so as to take out of the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith law the interest and sinking fund levies necessary to retire such bonds, but that under the circumstances mentioned by you a separate issue of bonds for the construction of a new school house on a new site, when the necessity for having a new school house arises from the condemnation of the old one by the state authorities, and the other conditions of section 7631 have been satisfied, the interest and sinking fund levies to retire such bonds are outside of the fifteen mill limitation."

In this latter view the present Attorney-General fully concurs, for section 7625 G. C. clearly provides for the purchasing of a site and the furnishing of the building after it is erected.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General:

(1) Where a board of education under section 7620 G. C. rents or leases rooms for temporary school purposes, such rooms do not constitute a school building within the meaning of section 7630-1 G. C.

(2) An order placed by the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories against a school building as being inadequate in space, air and light, or unsafe for pupils greater than a designated number, and prohibiting the use of such building if overcrowded, must be obeyed.

(3) The chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories has full authority to prohibit the use of a public building and order changes, alterations, additions, repairs and installation of appliances on such building, but has no authority to order the erection of a new building and thereby deprive an official or board of its right to rent or lease other space.

(4) Where the chief deputy inspector of workshops and factories issues an order against a public school building, that it is inadequate or unsafe for an overflow of pupils, and such excess number of pupils is thereby without proper school facilities, the board of education must provide suitable space, and an emergency is created.

(5) Such board of education can meet such emergency by leasing or renting rooms for school purposes under section 7620 G. C., and if none are available in the district, the board can issue bonds for a new school building, upon vote of the electors, to meet such emergency, without regard to the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law, but such bond issue regularly made as provided in section 7630-1 G. C. can be only on the erecting of a new building and provision for the purchase of a site and the furnishing of the building must be made in accordance with section 7625 G. C., which provides that levy for interest and sinking funds must be within the fifteen mill limitation.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

3. Under section 4748 G. C. a board of education cannot fill a vacancy in such boards at the same meeting in which it accepts a resignation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1919.

HON. WALTER S. RUFF, Prosecuting Attorney, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following statement of facts·

> "Mr. Moulton was elected by the presidents of the various village and rural school boards of Stark county in December, 1916. Mr. Moulton was ousted by quo warranto proceedings in the supreme court on the ground that the member of the county board of education should have been elected by the presidents of the various village and rural school districts which met on the third Monday of January, 1917. Mr. Moulton was elected to take the place of A. B. Wingate whose term expired the third Saturday of January, 1917. A. B. Wingate was therefore the legal member of the county board of education until his successor was elected and qualified. However, January 17, 1918, and before Mr. Moulton was ousted by the supreme court of Ohio, A. B. Wingate tendered his resignation to the county board of education. There were, therefore, only four legal members of the county board of education, no person having been elected by the presidents of the various village and rural school boards in January, 1917, as provided by law. However, after Mr. Wingate resigned the presidents of the various village and rural school boards of Stark county requested the county superintendent to call a meeting of said presidents for the purpose of electing a member of the county board of education for five years beginning on the third Saturday of January, 1917, there having been no election. Said county superintendent neglected and refused to issue said call and in January, 1918, several of the presidents of the various village and rural school boards issued a written call according to law to all of the village and rural school board presidents of Stark county to meet in the office of the county board of education for the purpose of electing a county board member for a term of five years commencing on the third Saturday of January, 1917. In pursuance to said call a majority of said board presidents met and elected A. A. Kurtz as a member of the Stark county board of education for a term of five years commencing on the third Saturday of January, 1917. The Stark county board of education claimed there was a vacancy and attempted to fill the vacancy by appointing Amos C. Myers for a term of five years beginning on the third Saturday of January, 1917.

Question: Whether or not Amos C. Myers or A. A. Kurtz is a legal member of the county board of education?

After going into these facts more fully we are of the opinion that there was not a vacancy under section 4748 of the General Code and that Amos C. Myers is therefore not a legal member of the county board of education, but that A. A. Kurtz who was elected by the presidents of the various village and rural school boards is the legal member. We were formerly of the opinion that Mr. Myers was the legal member but after getting more facts in the matter and studying opinion No. 177 issued by the Attorney-General April 8, 1919, we are now of the opinion that there was no vacancy as provided in section 4748, but there was simply a non-election which, of course, should be filled by election of the presidents of the various village and rural school boards."

The facts herein are similar in a degree to those in opinion No. 177 issued by this department April 8, 1919, copy of which you have at hand. In that opinion the matter of filling positions in county boards of education since their creation by the new School Code in 1914 is treated at length, citing court decisions and former opinions of the Attorney-General that were in point. It was held in opinion No. 177 (1919) that a member of the county board of education elected in December, 1916, for the term beginning the third Saturday in January, 1917, had no title to such office because he was chosen by the wrong personnel of presidents of village and rural boards, that is, those in office in 1916 rather than the new personnel of 1917 which had the power to fill the 1917 vacancy; that where the 1917 group of presidents failed to elect, the member whose term was to expire in Janauary, 1917, would hold over until his successor was elected and qualified; that based upon the decision in the case of Scott vs. Ryan, 95 O. S., 405, wherein Scott was elected a member of the county board of education by the presidents of the village and district boards on April 3, 1916 and seated by the court, for the term ending in January, 1921, it was held that the presidents could be called together at a later time to make the election which they had failed to make in January.

Appearing under the head of "County School Districts." section 4728 G. C. reads in part:

"Each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of a county board of education composed of five members who shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district. Each district shall have one vote in the election of members of the county board of education * * *."

The above section is part of the new school code, establishing county boards of education which did not exist in Ohio prior to 1914. The clear intent of the section is that the members of the county board shall get their grant of power from the action of all the districts through the presidents of each, for "each district shall have one vote." The group of presidents is a continuing body that can be called into action on short notice, and the presidents come direct from the districts, that is, the people themselves.

Section 4729 G. C., passed February 17, 1914, reads in part:

> "On the second Saturday in June, 1914, the presidents of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts in each county school district shall meet and elect the five members of the county board of education, one for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years and one for five years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. The terms of office of such members shall begin on the fifteenth of July, 1914, and each year thereafter on the third Saturday of January. Each year thereafter one member of the county board of education shall be elected in the same manner for a term of five years. * * *"

It is noted in the above section that members of county boards of education are to serve until their successors are elected and qualified. It would seem therefore that regardless of any resignation a member would continue as such until his successor was not only elected but had qualified.

In the case before us Mr. Moulton was elected in the place of A. B. Wingate, a member of the Stark county board of education whose term expired the third Saturday in January, 1917, but Moulton was elected in December, 1916, by the wrong personnel of presidents, which changes just prior to the third Saturday in each January. On the point of being elected by the wrong group of presidents and at the wrong time Moulton was ousted by the supreme court of Ohio, and thus Mr. Wingate was the legal member of the county board until his successor was elected and qualified, for Moulton had been disqualified by the court, and Moulton was not a successor of Wingate and one who had qualified as his successor.

It is found that following the election of Moulton in December, 1916, for the term beginning the third Saturday in January, 1917, and which was irregular, the matter was taken to the supreme court in case No. 15888, State of Ohio, ex rel. William E. Moulton vs. Amos C. Myers, in quo warranto. This case was pending in the supreme court practically all through the year 1918, the decision dismissing the contention of the relator Moulton being rendered November 19, 1918. The point decided by the supreme court was that Moulton had no title, being elected by presidents of village and district boards who themselves retired before Moulton's supposed term began, the third Saturday in January, 1918. The decision does not go into the title of Amos C. Myers to the office, but treats of the contention of William E. Moulton. The decision of the court reads in full:

> "The statute which confers upon the presidents of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts of each county authority to elect a member of the county board of education each year, does not authorize the election of a member of such board for a term which does not begin until after the expiration of the term of office of such presidents. The general rule of law, well established, which is recognized and applied in the case of State, ex rel. Morris vs. Sullivan, 81 Ohio St., 79, is applicable, and precludes the election of members of the county board of education, whose terms of office do not begin until the third Saturday of Janauary, by presidents of village and rural school districts of the county, whose own terms and power to appoint expire on the preceding first Monday of Janauary. The election of each of the relators was therefore invalid and they are not entitled to the relief sought."

(Ohio Law Reporter, March 3, 1919, p. 526.)

It is noted that the decision says the right to elect members of the county board of education is conferred upon the presidents of the village and district boards, but they cannot elect for a term which begins after they themselves retire. In the case at hand the presidents of the rural and village districts of Stark county never had the opportunity of exercising the right which the supreme court says was conferred upon them, for the question was in the supreme court until November 19, 1918; it could not be expected that during 1918 and prior to November 19th, the presidents of the rural and district boards would act in a matter which the supreme court was deciding. But when that decision was known, in November, 1918, it was the clear duty of the presidents of the village and rural boards to proceed with an election which had never legally taken place before, for the group of presidents is a continuing body that can be called into session at any time. But section 4730 G. C., after providing for the very first meeting of the presidents in June, 1914, says:

"The call for all future meetings shall be issued by the county superintendent."

You say that after Mr. Wingate (whose term on the county board expired the third Saturday in January, 1917) signified his desire to no longer hold the office, as his term had expired, and he had not served for a year, that is, during 1917, for Mr. Moulton was acting, he submitted a resignation on January 17, 1918, as he had been pronounced the legal member by the Attorney-General by virtue of an opinion on the same kind of a question rendered to Hon. C. M. Caldwell, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio, December 17, 1917, and which opinion, along with the later one of June 16, 1918 (No. 1259), was sustained by the Supreme Court in the decision here, deciding that the presidents of village and rural boards cannot elect in December for an office which begins the third Saturday in January following and after they are out as an electing body.

The Attorney-General has examined the bulky evidence in the Supreme Court in the Stark county school cases of 1918 (decided November 19th), such cases being as follows:

No. 15888—State of Ohio ex rel. Wm. E. Moulton vs. Amos C. Myers.
No. 15889—State of Ohio ex rel. Franklin Schott vs. John W. Myers.
No. 15890—State of Ohio ex rel. Elmer E. Leighley vs. David F. Eikenberry.

The evidence in these cases was taken before Special Master Commissioner Ralph S. Ambler at Canton, he having been named as such by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, and the evidence is all in stenographic form. From this long array of evidence is gleaned certain details not fully covered in your statement of facts. The decision of November 19, 1918, by the Supreme Court covers the first two of the cases, the same point of law being at issue, that the presidents could not elect in December for a term beginning the next January.

The evidence shows that A. B. Wingate was called in suddenly and told that he was a member of the county board of education by a ruling of the Attorney-General, that he had been out for a year while Moulton was acting, that he still felt Moulton was a member; that he had "nothing to resign" in his evidence; that he was told that if he did not care to serve to resign; that he did not approve what the controlling element in the board had been doing, did not care to be a member with them and did submit a paper to the county board purporting to be a resignation brought about in a hurry; that thereupon the controlling element in the board immedictely elected Amos C. Myers to the fifth place in the county board of education. You say that the presidents of the village and rural boards requested the county superintendent to call a meeting to elect in place of A. B. Wingate, whose term expired in January, 1917, upon its being ascertained from the Attorny-General that Wingate was still the member until his successor qualified; that the county superintendent "neglected and refused" to issue said call, whereupon the presidents met pursuant to a call of their own and elected A. A. Kurtz as a member of the county board of education to succeed A. B. Wingate whose term expired in January, 1917, such election being by a majority of such presidents held in regular manner in the office of the county board of education in January, 1918, after the county superintendent had "neglected and refused" to issue the call for a long time before.

It is important to note that while the power to elect the county board members is conferred upon the presidents of the village and rural boards, the errors and litigation occurring in Stark county during 1917 and 1918, prevented such presidents from exercising the right conferred on them to elect in regular manner, the successor of A. B. Wingate whose term as a member of the county board expired in January, 1917. Hence, there never was a regular election of Wingate's successor, or an opportunity for one until the presidents called themselves together after the decision of the Supreme Court. Every opportunity should be given to these district presidents to elect the members of the county board rather than to retard them, for they come direct from the people, far more so than a county board which, coming down from 1914, seeks to create and fill vacancies under guise of section 4748 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term."

It is again necessary to refer to the evidence in the Supreme Court in the Moulton vs. Myers case in order to bring out important details not in your statement of facts. In such evidence is a correct copy of the minutes of the Stark county board of education for the date of January, 17, 1918. These minutes show that the three old members of the county board of education created two vacancies on January 17th and filled the two vacancies on the same day. They sought to throw out Elmer E. Leighley as a member of the county board by a resolution showing said Leighley had been absent ninety days from board meetings from October 8, 1917, to January 7, 1918, and did throw him out and elected David F. Eikenberry as his successor on the same day the resolution ousting Leighley was passed, or a few hours afterward. This went to the Supreme Court and Eikenberry, chosen by the three remaining members of the county board, was ousted. Second, they secured the resignation of A. B. Wingate and in the same session that the resignation was accepted followed with a motion to elect Amos C. Myers vice A. B. Wingate, resigned. The minutes show that the county board met at 9:50 A. M. on January 17, 1918, with all five members present including Moulton and Leighley; the opinion of the Attorney-General reinstating Wingate in place of Moulton was read after Moulton had left the room at 12:03 P. M. The board then directed the clerk to notify A. B. Wingate to appear and Mr. Wingate soon arrived and was entered as present in the minutes by a resolution reinstating him; but he must not have stayed for on the next motion to oust Leighley, the fourth member, because of absence (later not sustained in the Supreme Court) Wingate was not marked as voting at all. From that point we will quote briefly the minutes of the Stark county board of education for January 18, 1917, as follows:

"It was then moved by Mr. Myers and seconded by Dr. Temple that the meeting adjourn at 1:45 P. M.

Motion carried.

The above is a correct record of the proceedings of the Stark county board of education on January 17, 1918.

Special Meeting of the Stark County Board of Education, Canton, Ohio, January 17, 1918.

The Stark county board of education met in special session in their office at 2:00 p. m., January 17, 1918, pursuant to written call of the president delivered personally to each member—W. J. Pontius, R. T. Temple, J. W. Myers and A. B. Wingate.

The roll call showed the following members present: W. J. Pontius, R. T. Temple, J. W. Myers.

Mr. Pontius, the chairman, stated that the purpose of the meeting, as specified in the call, was to fill any vacancies in the county board and to transact any business that might be necessary.

It was then moved by Dr. Temple and seconded by Mr. Myers that D. F. Eikenberry be and he is hereby appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Elmer E. Leighley, as a member of this board.

The roll call on the above motion stood as follows: Pontius, yea; Myers, yea; Temple, yea. All three members voting yea, the president declared the motion carried.

The resignation of A. B. Wingate as a member of this board, was received and presented to the board.

It was moved by Dr. Temple and seconded by Mr. Myers that the resignation of A. B. Wingate, as county board member, be accepted.

Roll call on above motion stood as follows: Pontius, yea; Myers, yea; Temple, yea.

All three members voting yea, the president declared the motion carried.

It was then moved by Mr. Myers and seconded by Dr. Temple that A. C. Myers of Greentown be and he is hereby appointed to fill the unexpired term of A. B. Wingate, resigned.

Roll call on the above motion stood as follows: Pontius, yea; Myers, yea; Temple, yea.

All three members voting yea, the president declared the motion carried.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

On motion of Mr. Myers, seconded by Dr. Temple, the board adjourned at 3:00 p. m.

The above is a correct record of the proceedings of the Stark county board of education on Januray 17, 1918.

Read and approved. W. J. PONTIUS, President.
2-12-18. J. J. ARMSTRONG, Clerk.

It will be noted that at 10 o'clock the board had five members on its roll and at a certain time a few hours later this was reduced to three by action of that particular three; that the county board adjourned at 1:45 p. m. and met fifteen minutes later, at 2:00 p. m. in a so-called special meeting to fill vacancies they had brought about prior to 1:45 p. m., for the minutes show the last business transacted before adjournment at 1:45 p. m. to have been the ousting of Leighley and the first business after 2:00 p. m. was electing a successor to Leighley, which action was afterward nullified in the supreme court in its ouster of Eikenberry; that in the fifteen minutes between the sessions the members were notified of the 2:00 p. m. meeting, as was A. B. Wingate who was a member by the board's action until after 2:00 p. m., January 17, 1918; the clerk and president sign the minutes of both sessions as the "proceedings of the Stark county board of education on January 17, 1918;" the minutes of the first session were not approved at the afternoon session, but were approved along with the second session's minutes on February 12, 1918, as "the proceedings of January 17, 1918," which would go far toward indicating that the 2:00 p. m. meeting was not a special meeting at all but the afternoon session of "the proceedings of January 17, 1918." If it was a special meeting then the board should have obeyed section 4754 G. C., which reads in part:

> "* * * The record of proceedings at each meeting of the board shall be read at its next succeeding meeting, corrected, if necessary, and approved, which approval shall be noted in the proceedings."
> Here none were approved until both were on February 12, 1918.

But aside from this oversight in failing to approve the minutes of the morning session at its afternoon session specially called by the president, would fifteen minutes be a proper notice to Mr. Wingate to attend when an hour or more might be needed to find him? The law will not look with favor on a fifteen minute notice even though there is no stipulated time of notice in section 4751 G. C., which reads:

> "A special meeting of a board of education may be called by the president or clerk thereof or by any two members, by serving a written notice of the time and place of such meeting upon each member of the board either personally or at his residence or usual place of business. Such notice must be signed by the official or members calling the meeting."

This means a reasonable notice of a special meeting, and not one of minutes, for section 4742 G. C. provides ten days' notice for the meeting to elect a district superintendent.

But the election of Amos C. Myers as a member of the county board of education falls completely upon an examination of the minutes above quoted. The county board at its "special" session at 2:00 p. m. on January 17, 1918, with three members present, accepted the resignation of A. B. Wingate and elected A. C. Myers as his successor in a succeeding motion, all within ten minutes by the record, a clear violation of section 4748 G. C., which says in part:

> "Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term."

The word "thereafter" means after one special or regular meeting has passed, and a vacancy, if existing, cannot be filled at the meeting when a resignation was accepted. Hence the election of A. C. Myers was illegal for two reasons, viz.:

> (1) Myers was not elected at a meeting following the creation of a vacancy.
> (2) The county board of education could not call a non-election by the presidents to be a vacancy.

On the second proposition the district presidents were for a long time denied the right to elect in place of Wingate, but by such delay, (which they could not help, not being called together) they were prevented from exercising a power conferred on them by the statute. They then called themselves together, and by a majority vote in the county, village and rural districts, exercised the power conferred, in electing A. A. Kurtz as the successor of A. B. Wingate who must "serve until his successor is legally elected and qualified."

As the right to meet later than January to make an election by the district presidents who had neglected, or were prevented from doing so, see the following:

Opinion No. 177—Attorney General, April 8, 1919;
Opinion No. 877—Opinions of Attorney-General, 1917, Vol. III, page 2399;
Opinion No. 1496—Opinions of Attorney-General, 1916, Vol. I, page 696;
State ex rel. Scott vs. Ryan, 95 O. S., 405.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General based upon the facts submitted and the stenographic evidence, including the minutes of the Stark county board of education for January 17, 1918, at hand, that Amos C. Myers was never legally elected the successor of A. B. Wingate on the county board of education and that A. A. Kurtz who was chosen to be such successor of Wingate by a majority of the district presidents of village and rural boards of education at their first legal opportunity, is the successor of A. B. Wingate as such county board member for the term ending the third Saturday in January, 1922.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

Sections 3931 and 3916 G. C. are not inconsistent. Money may be borrowed under section 3916 to pay accrued legal obligations, floating in character, though such obligations, are properly chargeable to the current expense account of the municipality.

Section 5649-3d, in so far as it applies to municipal corporations, is not inconsistent with either section 3916 or 3931 G. C. That part of said section 5649-3d which by inference prohibits the appropriation of moneys estimated to come into the treasury during the fiscal h .lf year, from various sources of revenue, is not to be regarded as applicable to municipal corporations which are governed by the similar but in this respect different provisions of section 3797 G. C.

In spite of the provisions of sections 5649-3d and 3797 G. C. a "deficiency" in the current revenues of a municipal corporation for which money may be borrowed under section, 3931 G. C. may arise under circumstances of which the following are examples:

(a) The occurrence of a shortage in the col'ection of taxes and other revenues cs compared with the amount of such co!'ections in good foith estimated by the budget commission and appropriated at the beginning of the fisca' period.

(b) The imposition of any paramount fixed charge upon the municipa'ity otherwise than through the agency or under the authority of the 'egis'ative body thereof having the power to appropriate, ind not fu''y provided for in the appropriation for the fiscal period.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of two seperate inquiries from the bureau, both of which involve an interpretation of section 3931 of the General Code. In the one case the question is as to whether that section, the legislative history of which is such as to make it prevail as a later enactment over section 3916 of the General Code to the extent of any irreconcilable inconsistency between the two sections, has the effect of limiting the natural application of the last named section. Specifically, the question is whether or not bonds may be issued under section 3916 to pay accrued obligations of a municipal corporation, such as for salaries fixed by ordinance or on long time contracts for lighting the streets, alleys and public places, to which the provisions of sections 3806 et seq. of the General Code, familiarly known as the Burns law, do not apply.

The second question in turn arises out of another suspected implied repeal, and may be stated as follows:

> Do the provisions of section 5649-3d of the General Code, requiring in substance that no expenditure within a fiscal half-year shall be made except from and within the amounts fixed by the budget commission and appropriated for such purpose, exclusive of receipts and balances, impliedly repeal because of its later enactment the provisions of section 3931 G. C., authorizing the issuance of bonds to supply deficiencies in current revenues?

The statutes necessary to be considered in connection with these two inquiries are as follows, in the order of their respective enactments:

"Section 3916. For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually.

Section 3917. No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. * * *

Section 3931. Council may issue deficiency bonds in such amount and denominations, for such periods of time, not to exceed fifty years and at such rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. as it deems best when in the opinion of council it is necessary to supply a deficiency in the revenues of the corporation. The total amount of deficiency bonds issued by a corporation, outstanding at any time, shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in the corporation as listed and assessed for taxation. The issuance of such bonds shall be approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the electors of the corporation voting upon such question at a regular or special election to be provided for by council.

Section 5649-3d. At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

The line of reasoning necessary to be considered in dealing with the combined effect of these three sections is as follows:

In so far as obligations properly payable out of current revenues, such as the compensation of officers and salaries of employes fixed by ordinance and the payment of sums due on lighting contracts, might be considered, such obligations could not arise and become "indebtedness" of the municipality "which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity" except through the occurrence of a deficiency in current revenues.

Section 3931 provides the conditions under which bonds shall be issued "to supply a deficiency in the revenues of the corporation." It could not have been the intention of the general assembly to permit any deficiencies to be supplied on less stringent conditions than those set forth in that section. Therefore, to the extent that indebtedness might arise which under ordinary circumstances would be payable out of current revenues, the subsequent enactment of section 3931 G. C. must be regarded as having limited the application of section 3916 G. C. But when the revenues of a municipality are deficient, not because of any unexpected failure to collect taxes or other income, but because the program of municipal activities as established by ordinance and long time contracts is such that the revenues which might have been anticipated at the beginning of a fiscal period are insufficient to finance such program, then to borrow money for the purpose of supplying such a deficiency at least and to expend the money so borrowed, in addition to the appropriations and balances and in addition to the amount fixed by the budget commissioners and the revenues from other sources than property taxation, would be to violate section 5649-3d, which is of enactment later than section 3931. Therefore, to this extent section 5649-3d impliedly repeals section 3931.

In other words, what has just been outlined is the argument for implied repeal, first, of section 3916 by section 3931, and second, of section 3931 in turn by section 5649-3d. It will of course be understood that the process thus suggested is not really a repeal but rather an amendment, as it would be impossible upon such reasoning to say that section 3916 was wholly destroyed by the enactment of section 3931 or that the latter section was wholly destroyed by the enactment of section 5649-3d. If in either of these cases the latter section had any effect upon the former, such effect was one of limitation rather than one of destruction. Thus, indebtedness arising in the course of some transaction not properly and naturally comprehended within the current expenditures of a municipal corporation would not amount to a deficiency in the current revenues; so also a deficiency in current revenues might arise not from the enlargement of the expenditures contemplated by the budget and the estimated receipts other than from taxation, but from the failure of revenues, such for example as that occurring in the municipalities of this state during the present year through the adoption of prohibition and the consequent reduction in number or presumed total extinction of places where the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors is carried on. To borrow money to supply such a deficiency would not be violative either of the letter or spirit of section 5649-3d, however construed. Therefore, I repeat that we are rather dealing with implied limitation or amendment than with implied repeal in testing out the correctness of the line of reasoning above outlined.

The principles applicable to the question at hand are, however, the same whether the effect of the two steps in legislation now under discussion be called implied repeal or implied amendment. The fundamental rule to be applied is that a later statute prevails over and pro tanto destroys the effect of an earlier statute to the extent only that such later statute is irreconcilably inconsistent with the former statute. This rule is sometimes put as a statement that implied repeals and amendments are presumed against.

A subordinate principle is also to be taken into consideration, viz.: that where both of the two statutes the combined effect of which is to be considered are affirmative, the presumption against an implied repeal is greatly strengthened; so that unless it is clear that the later statute is intended to cover the entire field of the common application of the two and to operate as a substitute pro tanto for the former, it will be presumed that the two are cumulative.

Authorities need not be cited upon these rather elementary principles. Let them now be applied to the first of the two legislative processes under consideration. We have it then, with a statute providing that > "for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness * * * council * * * may issue bonds of the corporation" in effect, another statute was passed providing that

> "council may issue deficiency bonds * * * when * * * it is necessary to supply a deficiency in the revenues of the corporation. The total amount of deficiency bonds issued by a corporation * * * shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in the corporation. * * *

> The issuance of such bonds shall be approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the electors of the corporation * * *."

If this were the exact situation a difficult question of legislative intent would exist. On the one hand, both sections are affirmative in form and therefore the presumption that the powers granted in each of them were intended o be cumulative arises. On the other hand, it is easy to get a negative inference out of section 3931 to the effect that no bonds to supply deficiencies in current revenues, however arising, shall be issued without the approval of two-thirds of the members of the council and two-thirds of the electors of the corporation; nor shall such bonds be outstanding in an amount to exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in the corporation. This would make a statute negative out of section 3931 and make it clearly more potent to modify by implication the provisions of section 3916, thus far assumed to be an earlier statute. In the same connection one might point, as Messrs. Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, a copy of whose opinion on this question is before me, have pointed to section 3931 of the General Code, which limits loans in anticipation of the general revenue fund to six months in duration. From both these sections (3916 and 3931) one might argue that the legislative policy is very strong against the issuance of deficiency bonds or notes without stringent limitations.

However, it is not strictly true that the relation of section 3931 to section 3916 can be worked out in the theory that they are respectively a later and an earlier statute. It is true that section 3916 was originally section 2701 of the Revised Statutes, and as such antedated in point of enactment the Municipal Code of 1902. It is also true that section 3931 became a law of general operation throughout the state by virtue of being enacted as section 99 of the Municipal Code of 1902 (96 O. L. 53); but the general assembly in enacting the Municipal Code of 1902 was not content merely to leave section 2701 of the Revised Statutes unimpaired and to leave to inference the effect upon it of any of the provisions then inserted in the Municipal Code of 1902, but in section 96 of that act it provided expressly as follows:

> "Sec. 96. Municipal corporations shall have power to issue bonds in the manner and for the purposes authorized by section 2701, Revised Statutes of Ohio, and the form and requisites of all bonds shall be such as are required by sections 2703, 2706, 2707 and 2708 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio."

Here is an expression of intent speaking from the date of the enactment of the Municipal Code of 1902 that the power to issue bonds for the purposes authorized in section 2701 R. S. shall continue to exist. It is the opinion of this department that this provision is just as strong in section 96 as it would be if added as a proviso to section 99. Therefore it cannot be argued that section 99 in any way cut down or limited section 2701 because section 96 expressly declared that the power granted in section 2701 should continue unimpaired.

This bit of legislative history is really enough to dispose of the question of implied repeal arising in connection with the joint operations of sections 3916 and 3931 of the General Code as they now stand. However, it may not be out of place to call attention to a few considerations which at least tend to show that the supposed inconsistency in policy between the two sections does not really exist. Under section 3916 money cannot be brought into the treasury to be expended through the creation of obligations in the future. That is to say, if a municipal treasury is empty, section 3916 of the General Code cannot be so employed as to fill it up. This is exactly what can be done under either section 3916 or section 3931. Section 3916 is available in a municipality only in that very limited class of cases to which the provisions of the Burns Law, so-called, being sections 3806 et seq. of the General Code, do not apply—those cases, in short, in which the municipality is actually bound by an obligation created without reference to the adequacy of the revenues through which it is to be discharged The money borrowed under section 3916 passes through the treasury of the municipality immediately into the hands of the municipality's creditors—the holders of claims of this character. The money derived from the issuance of bonds under section 3931 may remain in the treasury and be used to finance enterprises contemplated but not contracted for at the time of the borrowing. To be sure, the two sections do overlap in the limited sense that under section 3931 floating indebtedness already incurred may undoubtedly be considered as a part of the deficiency for which bonds may be issued; but insofar as they do overlap they must be regarded, in the opinion of this department, as cumulative and not exclusive. The elaborate and stringent safeguards thrown about the issuance of bonds under section 3931 would not be appropriate were the principal office or function of the issuance of such bonds to provide means for paying debts already incurred. It would be very unusual to find a permanent statute preventing the immediate payment of floating obligations already incurred by the issuance of bonds save upon the approval of two-thirds of the electors. These safeguards point to an intent to curb municipal extravagance in the making of additional expenditures rather than toward the hampering of an effort on the part of the municipality to fund a debt which already exists as a floating obligation.

For these reasons it is concluded that there is no inconsistency between section 3931 and section 3916, and that the two sections may therefore stand together; so that bonds may be issued under section 3916 to pay any valid indebtedness of the municipality when the other conditions of that section are satisfied, though such indebtedness may have arisen with respect to matters and things which constitute enterprises which are a charge upon the current revenues of the municipality.

The case as regards the joint operation of section 3916 and 3931 considered together, on the one hand, and section 5649-3d of the General Code, on the other hand, is entirely different from that which has been discussed. Here there is no doubt as to the later enactment of section 5649-3d as compared with the other two sections. Here also the language of the latter section is entirely negative rather than affirmative in any sense, so that from what surface evidence we have it would seem to be arguable that in so far as section 5649-3d might be inconsistent with any and all provisions relating to the securing of money to care for deficiencies in current revenues it would impliedly repeal such provisions. Certainly, too, section 5649-3d is inconsistent in at least one important sense with such other provisions. The very policy of section 5649-3d is that no deficiencies shall occur. This is, of course, inconsistent with the funding of such deficiencies when they do occur.

However, the implied repealing effect of section 5649-3d cannot go beyond its words. The unavoidable repugnance which must be found to exist between two sections in order to justify the application of the principle of implied repeal certainly requires that there be found in the later section, the potency of which to repeal is in question, language clearly inconsistent with anything found in the earlier section. The only language in section 5649-3d which is negative in form and evinces any policy inconsistent with that of sections like the ones under discussion is the following:

> "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriations shall be made * * * for a greater amount * * * than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

This language cannot be taken literally. If it could be the repealing effect of the section would extend not only to sections like sections 3916 and 5656 G. C., but also to sections like section 3939, which authorizes a municipal corporation to issue bonds for numerous distinct specific purposes, some of which, such as the repair, maintenance and extension of existing improvements, are quite properly considered to be matters of current expense. There is no possible middle ground between holding that section 5649-3d makes it impossible to borrow money at all and holding that the section relates only to the making and expenditure of appropriations out of the proceeds of taxes and other current revenues, and does not extend at all to expenditures made from the proceeds of borrowed money. The section governs the making of appropriations, and only by remote inference does it prohibit the incurring of any expense that is not met by appropriation. As pointed out by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, who first considered this question in an opinion to the city solicitor of Middletown under date of February 15, 1912, (Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1912, page 1614), this inference is not reconcilable with the fact that when the Smith Law was passed all the sections relating to both counties and to municipal corporations and authorizing the borrowing of money were left unrepealed; nor is it reconcilable with the fact that section 5649-3d is modeled after and in large measure a paraphrase of section 3797 G. C., previously in effect as a part of the Municipal Code, which section was enacted in 1902 by the same law to which reference has previously been made. In other words, in 1902 the general assembly did not apparently consider it inconsistent to provide in the language of section 3797 that "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof" and at the same time to provide for the issuance of deficiency bonds, and to provide also for the continuing power to borrow money under section 2701 of the Revised Statutes. The scope and application of section 3797 being thus disclosed by the legislative history of that section, and section 5649-3d being closely modeled after section 3797, we must give to said section 5649-3d the meaning thus indicated and hold that it relates only to the expenditure of moneys raised by taxation and other current revenues, and does not prevent the borrowing of money under other sections that remain unimpaired and in terms authorizing such borrowing, nor the expenditure of the proceeds of such loans.

It is possible that the opposite interpretation, if made and adhered to in 1911 when the Smith Law went into effect, would have prevented the accumulation of deficiencies; it is possible also that this very idea may have been in the mind of the legislature when it passed the Smith One Per Cent. Law; but in fact the above interpretation was given to the section by the administrative officers of the state and has been acted upon through the years within which the Smith Law has been in effect. The legislature has met repeatedly during that time and has considered these sections, amending some of them. If it had been the intention to do away with the power of borrowing money to meet current obligations fastened upon a subdivision by law, and not subject to the Burns Law as applied to the subdivision, the legislature in the the face of what was going on in the state could have taken appropriate action by expressly repealing sections like section 5656 and 3916 of the General Code, or at least amending section 5649-3d so as to make it more explicit in that regard.

Thus far, the only substantial difference between section 3797 G. C. and section 5649-3d has not been considered. Section 3797 G. C provides that the appropriation shall be made at the beginning of each semi-annual period "from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other soucces of revenue." Section 5649-3d requires that appropriation be made "from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue." There is also another difference, in that the amount fixed by the budget commissioners is a limitation on the appropriating power under section 5649-3d, which is lacking under section 3797. This latter feature of the section, however, has already, been considered.

From the requirement that appropriations shall be limited to moneys actually in the treasury it may be argued that a deficiency in revenues could never occur. I am very reluctant to express an opinion upon the point thus raised, but necessity requires me to do so. I feel obliged to hold that the feature of section 5649-3d now under consideration should be absolutely ignored so far as municipal corporations are concerned. My information is that it has been so ignored at all times since it was supposed to be in force. The reason for this course of conduct can be appreciated by any one familiar with municipal finance. Prior to the date when the Smith law took effect municipalities had been operating on estimated revenues. That is to say, their budgets of expenditures were made up and their appropriation ordinances were predicated upon the anticipated revenues of the incoming six months. This law became effective on June 2, 1911. Under it the next semi-annual appropriation as to municipal corporations would take place in the month of July (for the Smith law did not change the fiscal year as to municipal corporations, which was fixed by section 3796 of the General Code, still in force). Acting on July 1, 1911, the council of a city, if proceding strictly in accordance with section 5649-3d, would have had no money at all to have appropriated, excepting so much of the proceeds of the February distribution as remained unexpended at that time. A literal application of section 5649-3d at the time the Smith law went into effect would have put a stop to municipal government in every city in this state. Face to face with such an emergency and protected by unrepealed section 3797, the municipalities of the state continued to operate under the latter section. Indeed, without deciding the question on its original merits it may be observed that there is much to be said in favor of reading section 3797 as a particular statute, to be considered as an exception to section 5649-3d even in the face of the later enactment of that section. There is some authority for such a holding. I express no view as to such a question, contenting myself with the statement that the cities have actually continued to operate under section 3797, so far as the anticipation of receipts during the fiscal half year as a basis for the appropriations made at the beginning thereof was concerned. Such long continued action on their part must be regarded as a contemporaneous administrative interpretation of the cumulative effect of the two sections of sufficient weight to be binding at this time. For this reason alone, then, it is stated as the opinion of this department that estimated receipts to accrue during the period for which appropriations are to be made by the council of a municipal corporation may be anticipated in making such appropriations, as well as the amount on hand at the beginning of the fiscal half year for which appropriations are made.

From this it follows that the section is not to be taken literally but, as you put in your letter of inquiry respecting this phase of the question, the thing which cannot be exceeded is the sum of the following items:

(1) Balance on hand.
(2) Budget tax allowance.
(3) Other revenues.

In fact your letter shows that you have been giving the identical practical interpretation to the section which has just been discussed.

But without exceeding this sum there may arise a deficiency in the revenues of a corporation through failure to collect the amount of taxes allowed by the budget commission or through failure of other revenues. That is to say, at the time of making the appropriations the revenues to accrue during the six months' period were estimated at a certain sum; collections failed to produce the amount thus estimated; a "deficiency" thus arises.

But this is not the only way in which a deficiency may arise. While the section under consideration provides that all expenditures shall be made from and within the semi-annual appropriations, there may conceivably be certain expenditures over which council has no immediate control. An example of such a contingency has occurred in the city of Cleveland, where the people by direct initiative have recently adopted the eight-hour day for firemen and policemen, thus increasing largely the fixed charges of the city in the safety department without any action on the part of council. Without holding that the sections under consideration apply to charter cities like Cleveland in their entirety, the possibility of such an occurrence in a non-charter city cannot be overlooked. Such an ordinance so initiated and adopted is valid and imposes on the city the obligation of incurring the additional expense. If it should become effective during a fiscal period it would necessarily result in the creation of charges for which no appropriation had been made. That is to say, there would be a clash between the policy of section 5649-3d and the policy of the initiative and referendum as applied to municipal corporations. Now section 5649-3d applies to the appropriating body; it does not in terms, as heretofore stated, relate to expenditures of the character now under discussion; it does not prohibit the proper expenditure of moneys raised by bond issue. It must therefore follow that under circumstances like those last imagined a deficiency would arise which could be met either by borrowing money under section 3931 or by borrowing under section 3916, when the obligations had actually accrued and were payable.

A variety of cases might be imagined, and I am not so sure that any comprehensive definition of the phrase in section 3931 to which you call attention can be satisfactorily framed. The following is an attempt to construct such a definition:

By "a deficiency in revenues" in section 3931 of the General Code is meant:

(a) Any shortage in the actual collections from taxes and other sources of revenue for a given fund, as compared with the amount of the income of such fund during the fiscal half year reasonably and lawfully estimated at the beginning thereof and appropriated at such time, pertaining to such fund.

(b) The amount of any paramount fixed charges, i. e., charges imposed upon the municipality otherwise than through the agency or under the authority of the council or other legislative body thereof, and not fully covered or provided for in the appropriation for the fiscal period.

At this time I would not care to extend the definition beyond that which has been framed. For example, the necessary work of repairing streets and other contract service of the municipality might because of rise in price of labor and commodities largely exceed in cost the amount anticipated at the beginning of a fiscal period; but this fact would not justify the borrowing of money under section 3931 for the purpose of bringing enough into the treasury to finance the enterprises of this character originally contemplated. As at present advised, I would also hold that council is without authority to borrow money under section 3931 for the purpose of providing funds in excess of appropriations for the fiscal period to meet salary and wage increases provided for by its own action. This would be directly violative of sections 3797 and 5649-3d, and though those sections, as previously stated, do not have the effect of modifying the natural scope and import of section 3931, yet they do reflect upon what that natural scope and import is, to the extent of denying the application of the latter section to such cases.

In short, one may say that a deficiency is always arrived at by comparing one amount with another. It is obvious that one of the amounts in question is the actual income of the municipality during the period for which funds have to be provided and appropriated. The question is as to what the other figure which may be compared with this is. Another way of phrasing the definition which I have attempted would be to say that this other figure consists of the following items:

"(1) The amounts actually appropriated for contract service.

(2) The amounts actually appropriated for fixed charges determined by standing ordinances, such as for salaries, wages, and the like, in effect at the time of making the appropriation.

(3) The amount of any paramount fixed charges fastened upon the municipality by action of any authority other than the appropriating body itself and effective during the fiscal period."

In conclusion it may be said that it would be much more satisfactory from the viewpoint of this department to deal with a question like that submitted in your letter of June 16th in the light of specific facts, rather than as a general proposition. Much difficulty has been encountered in attempting to deal with it in the latter way.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

3. Foreign trust companies not comprehended in paragraph (1) admitted to do business in the state prior to the taking effect of house bill 200, are subject to all the above requirements mentioned in paragraph (2), *excepting the compliance with the general laws relating to the admission of foreign corporations, the obtaining of a certificate to that effect, filing it with the superintendent of banks, the securing of a further certificate of his approval, of its deposit, and the payment of an initial license fee of one hundred dollars. COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 28, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have addressed to me a letter containing the following inquiries:

"1. What is necessary in the case of a foreign trust company desiring to execute a trust in this state created under a foreign will, in which foreign will said trust company is named as trustee, for me to issue a certificate as provided in the new banking act?

2. Do you understand that the new banking act, especially section 710-152, applies to a foreign trust company already doing business in Ohio as trustee under a foreign will?

3. In section 710-151 of the new banking law it is provided that 'every foreign trust company shall, upon being admitted to do business within this state as otherwise provided by law, file a certified copy, etc., etc.

4. What do the words 'otherwise provided by law,' refer to? Do the words 'otherwise provided by law' refer to section 710-150, or to some other section?"

Your questions make necessary a consideration of sections 710-17c, 710-150, 710-151, 710-152, 710-153 and 710-154 G. C., which are a part of H. B. No. 200 (108 O.L. 80), revising and codifying the banking laws of the state. They are as follows.

"Sec. 710-17. * * * (c) Each foreign trust company desiring and intending to do business in this state shall annually pay to the superintendent of banks a fee of one hundred dollars for issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state, and such fees shall be paid before such certificate is issued. * * *."

"Sec. 710-150. No trust company, or corporation, either foreign or domestic, doing a trust business shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred to or committed to it by a person, firm, association, corporation, court or other authority, of property within this state, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, except that the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state or any municipality or county therein, or of any other state or any municipality or county therein, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past has earned at least five per cent. net on its issued and outstanding capital stock, which securities and the sufficiency thereof shall be approved by the superintendent of banks. From time to time said treasurer shall, with the approval of the superintendent of banks, permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, upon deposit with him and approval of the superintendent of banks, of cash or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposits as heretofore provided, and so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited."

"Sec. 710-151. Every foreign trust company shall, upon being admitted to do business within this state as otherwise provided by law, file a certified copy of its certificate of admission with the superintendent of banks, together with a certified copy of the last published statement made by it and filed with the proper department of the state in which it is organized and doing business, and upon approval thereof and of the funds and securities to be deposited as in the preceding section provided, he shall certify that fact to the treasurer of state, and upon deposit of such funds and securities with the treausrer of state the superintendent of banks shall thereupon, and upon the payment of a license fee of one hundred dollars therefor, license said trust company to transact business within this state for the period of one year thereafter."

"Sec. 710-152. Every foreign trust company doing a trust business in this state shall annually within thirty days after complying with all the provisions of law in relation to foreign corporations transacting business within this state, file with the superintendent of banks a certificate of the tax commission of Ohio as to such compliance together with a copy of the last published statement of said corporation, and if such trust company is not in default as to any trust matter or estate within this state, the superintendent of banks shall thereupon, and upon payment of a fee of one hundred dollars therefor, license said corporation to transact business within this state for a further period of one year."

"Sec. 710-153. The superintendent of banks shall have the right to examine, by any deputy, examiner or person especially appointed for that purpose, the books or affairs of any foreign trust company, or any corporation doing a trust business, as to any and all matters relating to any trust, estate or property within this state and concerning which such trust company is acting in a trust or representative capacity, the expense of which shall be charged to and paid by such trust company."

"Sec. 710-154. No such trust company, foreign or domestic, authorized to accept and execute trusts, either directly or indirectly through any officer, agent or employe thereof, shall certify to any bond, note or other obligation to evidence debt, secured by any trust deed or mortgage upon or accept any trust concerning property located wholly or in part in this state, without complying with the provisions of sections 150, 151 and 152 of this act. But nothing herein contained shall prevent a foreign corporation from qualifying as executor or administrator of property in this state, after appointment as executor or administrator by the courts of any other state as provided by law, when the decedent was a resident of such state at the time of his death, or from acquiring, holding or transferring title to lands or other property within this state as trustee to secure any bond, note or other obligation aforesaid, or from certifying thereto, but provided always, that by the laws of such other state a trust company organized and doing business under the laws of this state shall have equal privileges as to any similar estate, deed or trust of property in such other state."

I have given an unusual amount of consideration to the above provisions of law and other statutes which may shed light on their construction, not only because the state is interested in the proper regulation of institutions with which its citizens transact business and in the revenues provided, but for the further reason that a mistaken interpretation of the act might in the future result in controversies between foreign trust companies and their clients, and litigation between others with whom they may have dealt; cloud the title to real estate which they may have administered, and jeopardize the claims of those who may have acquired property through proceedings to which they were parties.

In other words, trust companies, on account of the obligations which they may incur and their responsibility to their clients, and for the sake of the security of titles derived from or through them, are as vitally concerned as the state and its citizens in its proper compliance with the provisions of these laws. For example, if a foreign trust company is subject to the provisions of section 178 G. C. and fails to comply therewith, it can not maintain an action on its contracts in Ohio. What rights those in privity with it or with whom it had dealt would have, is a question prolific of litigation. Illustrations of the types of questions arising from the diverse views of courts are afforded by the following cases copiously annotated:

Tarr vs. Western Loan & Sav. Co., 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707.

Strampe vs. Minn. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999.

Having the consequences of a wrong interpretation of these statutes fully in view, I shall proceed to give you what I consider to be a safe conclusion, so that there will be no risk to the state or its citizens or to the trust companies in following it.

It must be frankly stated that the law upon the question as to how a foreign trust company should qualify to do business in Ohio is now in a state of great uncertainty Prior to the enactment of H. B. No. 200 it had been held, and I think properly, that such trust companies, to be qualified, must have had a paid-in capital of at least one hundred thousand dollars; must have deposited witht the treasurer of state, in cash or designated bonds, not less than fifty thousand nor more than one hundred thousand dollars, and must have paid a fee of fifty dollars to the superintendent of banks for the issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business. The provisions as to the amount of its capital and required deposits were found in sections 9778 and 9779 G. C. These two sections have been repealed by H. B. No. 200.

Section 736, paragraph (c), as amended May 20, 1915, was as follows:

> "Each foreign trust company desiring and intending to do business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of banks a fee of fifty dollars for issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state. Such fee to be paid before such certificate is issued."

This section has also been repealed.

My predecessor, in Opinions of Attorney-General, 1917, Vol. II, p. 1296, held that it was not necessary for a foreign trust company to comply with section 178 or 183 G. C., which are the general statutes appplicable to the admission of foreign corporations to do business in the state. The Attorney-General reached that conclusion because of the special provision of section 736, paragraph (c), above quoted. He suggested the query as to what would constitute doing business by a foreign trust company, but refrained from expressing an opinion on it.

In Vol. II of Ann. Rep. of Atty.-Gen. for 1914, p. 1636, the following syllabus appears:

"Where a foreign trust company has been appointed trustee under a foreign will and under a deed of trust made by a non-resident, and has been appointed by an Ohio court as trustee to fill a vacancy caused by the death of a trustee named in the will, all that is necessary for such a trust company to qualify in Ohio, so that it may pass title to real estate, is to make a deposit in the manner provided under section 9778, General Code, and pay the fees required under section 736, General Code, paragraph c."

In the opinion the Attorney-General refers to section 178 G. C., which reads as follows

"Sec. 178. Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate. This section shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

He states that the facts presented to him did not show the trust company to be "doing business" in the state, and further observes that a foreign trust company is a banking corporation and within the exception in the statute. A similar conclusion might be drawn from a reading of section 710-2, which provides that unless the context otherwise requires, the term "bank" as used in the act, shall include trust companies.

Section 178 G. C., as quoted above, has not been amended. Therefore we must still consider the exception to which attention was called, along with the classification of trust companies with banks.

Section 183 G. C. provides for the filing of a statement by a foreign corporation of:

"1. The number of shares of authorized capital stock of the corporation and the par value of each share.

2. The name and location of the office or officers of the corporation in Ohio and the names and addresses of the officers or agents of the corporation in charge of its business in Ohio.

3. The value of the property owned and used by the corporation in Ohio, where situated, and the value of the property of the corporation owned and used outside of Ohio.

4. The proportion of the capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in Ohio."

Upon this statement and other facts coming to his knowledge, the secretary of state calculates a franchise fee.

By section 188 G. C., a foreign banking company is excepted from the provisions of sections 183 to 187 inclusive.

What we have to consider now is, have those exceptions been modified or repealed in part by H. B. No. 200. so that foreign trust companies must comply with sections 178 and 183 G. C.?

Section 710-17, paragraph (c), is unambiguous and provides that a foreign trust company shall pay to the superintendent of banks one hundred dollars for a certificate authorizing it to transact business in the state.

Section 710-150 G. C. provides that no trust company "doing a trust business shall accept trusts in the state until its paid-up capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars and it has made the required deposit with the treasurer of state. Observe that this provision runs against a trust company "doing business." It does not say doing business within the state. Therefore I conclude that (disregarding for the present an exception hereinafter to be referred to) section 710-150 G. C. must be complied with by a foreign trust company accepting a trust, whether the transaction in which it is engaged amounts to doing business or not.

Section 710-151 provides that every foreign trust company shall, upon being admitted to do business in this state "as otherwise provided by law," file a certified copy of its certificates of admission with the superintendent of banks. The latter must examine its certificate and statement, approve the funds and securities deposited and certify the fact of such approval to the treasurer of state, and, upon the payment to him of a fee of one hundred dollars, license said company to transact business within the state for a period of one year.

What is the force of the language "upon being admitted to do business within this state as otherwise provided by law," as appearing in section 710-151 G. C.? This question must be determined because the right of a trust company to accept and execute trusts or certify to any obligation to evidence debt is made dependent in section 710-154 upon a compliance with the provisions of section 710-151.

As I said above, prior to the enactment of the statutes in question, a foreign trust company received its certificate of admission from the superintendent of banks. Now, however, in presenting itself for a license to that officer, it must submit to him a certified copy of its certificate of admission to do business.

Unless we are to construe the language quoted out of the statute entirely, it must have reference to a certificate obtained from the secretary of state. There could be no other source from which such certificate could be obtained prior to the application to the banking department for a license.

If, then, it is necessary to obtain a certificate of admission from the secretary of state, manifestly there must be compliance with the provisions of sections 178, 179 180 and 183 G. C. To reach this conclusion, the exemptions of sections 178 an 188 G. C., to which reference was made above, of foreign banking corporations, must be disregarded. I am of the opinion that this view must be accepted. To hold otherwise, would be to eliminate from consideration entirely the portion of section 710-151 above quoted. That section seems to provide, then, that a foreign trust company must (1) comply with the general laws relating to the admission of foreign corporations to do business in Ohio and obtain a certificate to that effect from the secretary of state; (2) file this certificate, with a certified copy of its last published statement with the superintendent of banks; and (3) pay the latter a license fee of one hundred dollars when he has approved the securities deposited with the treasurer of state and certify the fact of such approval to that officer.

Section 710-152 G. C. relates to the procedure necessary on the part of a foreign trust company subsequent to its admission to do business in the state. It is required to "annually within thirty days after complying with all the provisions of law in regulation to foreign corporations transacting business within this state, file with the superintendent of banks a certificate of the tax commission of Ohio as to such compliance," etc. If the superintendent finds that there has been no default upon its part as trustee, he is to license it to transact business within the state for a further period of one year, upon payment of a fee of one hundred dollars.

What is meant by complying with "all the provisions of law in relation to foreign corporations transacting business within this state? And what certificate shall the tax commission make as to such compliance? Heretofore the latter has exercised no such function. In my opinion this section brings these foreign trust companies within the provisions of sections 5499, et seq. G. C., which requires each foreign corporation for profit, doing business in the state, to make a report to the tax commission during the month of July, containing the information specified in section 5501 G. C. From this report and other facts coming to its knowledge, the commission must on the first Monday of September determine the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the company represented by its property and business in this state. Using this calculation, the auditor must charge a franchise fee of three-twentieths of one per cent upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation represented by the property owned and used in business transacted in the state. Such fees shall not be less than ten dollars in any case, and shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following December.

If we are not to adopt this view, we must disregard the provision of section 710-152 G. C., which requires compliance with all the provisions of law in relation to foreign corporations transacting business within the state and a certificate of the tax commission as to such compliance. Here we ought to consider for a moment section 5508 G. C., which has not been directly repealed.

> "Section 5508. All foreign corporations, and the officers and agents thereof, doing business in this state, shall be subjected to all the liabilities and restrictions that are, or may be imposed upon corporations of like character, organized under the laws of this state, and shall have no other or greater powers. Every contract made by or on behalf of any such foreign corporation, affecting the liability thereof or relating to its property within this state, before it shall have complied with the provisions of section one hundred and seventy-eight of the General Code, shall be wholly void on its behalf and on behalf of its assigns, but shall be enforceable against it or them. Nothing contained in this section shall be held or construed to apply to insurance corporations, fraternal beneficiary associations, or building and loan associations required by law to report to the superintendent of insurance, nor to repeal, change or modify the provisions of section one hundred and eighty-eight of the General Code."

This section is to be considered in two aspects: (1) It makes the contracts, of a company wrongfully failing to comply with section 178 G. C., wholly void on behalf of itself and its assigns. (2) By reference to section 188 G. C., it would seem to bear the construction that foreign banking companies are not within its provisions As a matter of fact, foreign trust companies have not been filing reports with the tax commission.

The prohibition as to business is found in section 710-154. There it is provided that no trust company, foreign or domestic shall certify to any note, bond or other obligation to evidence debt, or accept any trust concerning property located wholly or partly in the state, without complying with the provisions of sections 150, 151 and 152 of the act. Therefore, we may not disregard the two provisions above considered, however inconsistent they may be with older statutes. If sections 710-151 and 710-152 require a compliance with the general laws relating to foreign corporations, then such compliance must be had before the trust company can certify to any obligation or accept any trust concerning property located wholly or in part in this state.

The arguments against the view that there is such requirement, as I have said, are numerous. There are express exceptions of foreign banking companies in sections 179 and 188 G. C. The course of this department and of the officers of the state has been in effect a holding that compliance with sections 5499 et seq. G. C. was unnecessary. Beside the initial license fee, the initial franchise and the yearly franchise fees, such trust company will be required to pay one hundred dollars for its original certificates from the superintendent of banks and one hundred dollars annually for the renewal of such certificate. The only requirement, prior to the enactment of this law, was a fifty dollar fee annually. True, the initial franchise fee and the annual franchise fee, which the present law seems to exact, would in most cases be nominal because a foreign trust company would transact a very small portion of its business and employ only an inconsiderable amount of its capital in this state.

A trust company organized under the laws of Ohio must not only pay the fee required of domestic corporations upon the filing of its articles with the secretary of state, but an initial fee of seventy-five dollars. Such institution is further subject to the payment of a yearly sum of twenty dollars and in addition thereto one-ninetieth of one per cent of its total aggregate resources in excess of fifty thousand dollars (such total fee not to exceed the sum of two thousand dollars in any one year). It is also required to make a report to the tax commission and to pay annually a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock. So it can not be said that there is any substantial discrimination against foreign trust companies. But be that as it may, foreign corporations can exercise none of their powers or franchises within this state except by comity or under legislative consent which may be granted on such terms and conditions as the state may impose.

Western Union Telegraph Co. vs. Mayer.
Humphreys vs. State, 70 O. S., 67.

It might be urged that sections 710-151 and 710-152 G. C. are not applicable to foreign trust companies unless their activity in the state is such as to constitute doing business. But section 710-154 G. C. contains an absolute provision against trust companies, foreign and domestic, and requires on the part of all compliance with sections 150, 151 and 152 G. C. "No such trust company" I do not believe can be limited to trust companies "doing business" in Ohio, because domestic companies are formed for the transaction of such business. On the other hand I think this phrase refers to any corporation doing a trust business anywhere and attempting to certify to obligations or accept trusts in Ohio.

Section 710-151 is applicable, however, only on the application of a foreign trust company for admission to do business within the state. Certain of such companies have already complied with the provisions of old sections 736c, 9778 and 9779 and have received from the superintendent of banks certificates authorizing them to carry on business in the state for one year. In my judgment such companies need not comply with the provisions of section 710-151 or with 178 and 183, because they have already paid a fee of $50.00, and here complied with the laws in force at the time of their applications for admission and received the certificate authorizing them to transact business in Ohio for a year. They must, however, when their present certificates expire, pay a fee of $100.00 for a renewal. It is true that section 710-154 provides that no trust company shall perform certain functions without complying with section 710-151, but nothing is contemplated under the latter section unless it is necessary for the company to be admitted to do business.

I now direct your attention to the following exception in section 710-154;

> "But nothing herein contained shall prevent a foreign corporation from qualifying as executor or administrator of property in this state, after appointment as executor or administrator by the courts of any other state as provided by law, when the decedent was a resident of such state, at the time of his death, or from acquiring, holding or transferring title to lands or other property within this state as trustee to secure any bond, note or other obligation aforesaid, or from certifying thereto, but provided always, that by the laws of such other state a trust company organized and doing business under the laws of this state shall have equal privileges as to any similar estate, deed or trust of property in such other state."

How broad is this exception? Are such favored trust companies excused from compliance with sections 710-17c, 710-150, 710-151 and 710-152? In my judgment they are. Whatever may be the force of the word "herein," whether it comprehends the entire act or simply section 710-154, it is to be noted that specific reference is made therein to sections 710-150, 710-151 and 710-152. True, section 710-17c does not contain any exception in favor of such trust companies, nor does section 710-150. The latter does contain a prohibition against certain transactions until compliance is made with its provisions. Sections 710-151 and 710-152 contain no words of prohibition. There is therefore room for the argument that the exception in 710-154 goes only to 710-151 and 710-152, but I do not believe such to be the fair interpretation of the language. The reference to section 710-150 in 710-154 is particularly significant.

Summing up my conclusions so as to answer your inquiries, it is my opinion:

(1) That a foreign trust company which has been appointed as executor or administrator by the courts of some other state, as provided by law, when the decedent was a resident of such state at the time of his death, may qualify as executor or administrator of property in this state, acquire, hold or transfer title to lands or other property therein, as trustee, to secure any bond, note or other obligation, or certify thereto without making a deposit with the treasurer of state, paying a fee, complying with the general laws as to admission of foreign corporations to do business, making reports to the tax commission, securing a certificate from the superintendent of banks, provided the laws of such state (where the decedent resided at the time of his death) give equal privileges to trust companies organized and doing business under the laws of this state.

(2) That with the above exceptions, foreign trust companies which have not been admitted to do business in Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of law in force, prior to the taking effect of house bill 200, must comply with the general laws relating to the admission of foreign corporations (sections 178 et seq. and 183 et seq.); must have a paid-in capital of at least $100,000; must deposit with the treasurer of state that sum in cash or in the approved designated securities; must secure from the secretary of state a certificate of admission to do business, and file it, with a certified copy of the last published statement made by it and filed with the proper department of state in which it is organized and doing business, with the superintendent of banks; must secure his approval of such bonds and securities and his certificate of that fact to the treasurer of state; and must pay him a license fee of $100.00 for the privilege of transacting business for a period of one year.

To obtain a renewal of its certificate, it must make the required annual report to the tax commission, provided by section 5499, obtain its certificate that such report has been filed and the franchise tax calculated thereon paid, file this certificate with a copy of its last published statement, with the superintendent of banks, and pay a fee of $100.00.

(3) That foreign trust companies not comprehended in paragraph (1), admitted to do business in the state prior to the taking effect of house bill 200, are subject to all the above requirements mentioned in paragraph (2), excepting the compliance with the general laws relating to the admission of foreign corporations, the obtaining of a certificate to that effect, filing it with the superintendent of banks, the securing of a further certificate of his approval of its deposit, and the payment of an initial license fee of one hundred dollars. At the expiration of the period for which it is now licensed, such fee of $100.00 is payable for the privilege of doing business for another year.

It will be apparent from this discussion, and from the difficulties encountered in trying to reconcile or choose among various statutes, that there is room for much diversity of opinion in their construction. The questions involved are of so much importance and the consequences of a mistaken construction of the law so grave, that these ambiguities should be removed in some authoritative manner, and this is especially so since neither the opinion of the department or the manner of the law's administration by the state's officers will be binding on those who may acquire property interest and rights under and through the proceedings of these foreign trust companies.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

> The county commissioners of Brown county, at the October meeting, 1918, passed a resolution extending the time for the payment of taxes on real and personal property to the 20th day of January and July, and the collections have been made accordingly, without penalty.

Mr. Clarence Rosselot, who was engaged in trafficking in intoxicating liquors, paid the assessments up to the fourth Monday of May, 1919, continued in the business on Monday, the 26th day of May, 1919, under a new license issued for that one day and paid $105.00 therefor. He did not, however, pay the one thousand dollars or any part thereof, and after the 20th day of June and on or about the first of July, the county auditor and treasurer notified him that payments were due, as provided in section 6071 et seq.

In response to this notice he tenders payment of the sum of $200.00 and is willing to pay $500.00 with the understanding that $300.00 thereof be remitted or returned to him.

The auditor and treasurer are in doubt as to their right and duty to impose a penalty and, if penalty should be imposed, on what basis the twenty per cent should be computed; that is to say whether or not they should collect or retain $300.00, computing the penalty on $500.00, or whether they should collect and retain $240.00, computing the penalty on $200.00, the minimum payment, or whether or not they should not collect any penalty, since the commissioners have extended the time for the payment of real and personal taxes to the 20th day of July.

This inquiry is made and you may answer the same on the assumption that all parties, including Mr. Rosselot, acted in absolute good faith. As evidence of the good faith of Rosselot, the treasurer in writing the receipt for the payment made by Rosselot December 19, 1918, of $500.00, stated in the receipt that the same was 'one half payment of the assessment charged on the business of trafficking in spirituous, malt and vinous liquors from the 28th day of December, 1918, to May 28th, 1919.'

The fact that the receipt stated the 28th day of May, 1919, led Mr. Rosselot to believe that he had paid his assessment covering the 26th day of May, 1919."

The matter involved in your inquiry invites attention to the provisions of section 6071 G. C. et seq. Section 6071 provides for a tax of $1,000 upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquors.

Section 6072 provides that the tax shall attach and operate as a lien on the property in which the business is conducted as of the fourth Monday of May of each year and shall be paid at the time provided for the payment of taxes on real or personal property within this state, to-wit, one-half on or before the 20th day of June, and one-half on or before the 20th day of December of each year.

Section 6081 provides that each assessor shall return to the county auditor with his other returns, a statement showing each place where such business is conducted, with the name of the person conducting the business, etc.

Section 6085 provides that the county auditor shall make and preserve duplicates of the assessments; and also upon receiving satisfactory information of such business liable to assessment or increased assessment not returned by the assessor, he shall forthwith enter an assessment upon the duplicate.

Also that not later than the first Monday of June of each year he shall make out and deliver to the county treasurer a copy of such assessment duplicate.

From the provisions of the statutes so far noted, the method of making up the duplicate, charging the assessment and placing the same into the hands of the county treasurer is provided, and also the time for payment of the tax is stipulated.

In section 6082 it is provided:

"If such assessment is not paid when due there shall be added a penalty thereto of twenty per cent which shall be collected therewith."

The provisions of section 6072 G. C. noted above, that the liquor tax shall be paid at the time provided for the payment of taxes on real or personal property, in my opinion amounts to an adoption of the entire statutory provision relative to the time of payment of property tax, which is governed by the provisions of sections 2653 and 2657 G. C. which sections, so far as pertinent here, are as follows:

> "Sec. 2653. Each person charged with taxes on a tax duplicate in the hands of a county treasurer may pay the full amount thereof on or before the twentieth day of December, or one-half thereof before such date, and the remaining half thereof on or before the twentieth day of June next ensuing, but all road taxes so charged shall be paid prior to the twentieth day of December.
> Sec. 2657. The county commissioners of any county by resolution spread upon their journal may extend the time of payment of taxes from June twentieth to July twentieth of the same year and from December twentieth to January twentieth of the following year. * * *"

Thus the time for payment of real and personal property tax, though provided by statute as of December 20, and June 20, is subject to the further provision of section 2657 by which such dates may lawfully be extended for a period of one month respectively.

I am influenced in my conclusion that the provision for extension of time for payment of tax is intended to be applicable to the payment of liquor tax by the consideration that it is reasonably apparent that the purpose and policy in the legislation was to authorize the payment of the entire tax or installment of tax charged on the duplicate against the particular taxpayer at one and the same time, and the two classes of tax have thus been so intimately associated together with respect to the provision for payment thereof that it is calculated to so impress the taxpayer.

In the case you have submitted, it appears not only that the commissioners did extend the time for payment of taxes to the twentieth of July and January respectively but that there is the further extenuating circumstance in this particular case that the treasurer had issued a receipt for the liquor tax for the year 1918 purporting to be for the period from May 28, 1918, to May 28, 1919.

While this circumstance could not influence the proper construction of the law and the receipt was erroneous with respect to the dates involved in the taxing year yet the fact of the extension of time for payment of taxes by the county commissioners in my opinion applied to the liquor tax as well as the general property tax, and I therefore, hold that the payment of the tax in pursuance of the tender made on or about the first of July should be accepted without the imposition of the twenty per cent. penalty.

This leads me then to the question of the amount of refunder to which the taxpayer may be entitled, and the procedure to be pursued in the payment of the tax and securing a refunder.

This question of course only arises upon the application of the taxpayer and his representation that he has discontinued the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors. The statutes relative to refunder upon discontinuance of the business are as follows:

> "Section 6074. When a person, company, corporation or co-partnership, engaged in such business, has been assessed and has paid the full amount of such assessment and afterward discontinues such business, the county auditor, upon being satisfied thereof, shall issue to such person, corporation or co-partnership a refunding order for a proportionate amount of such assessment so paid, but the amount of such assessment so retained shall not be less than two hundred dollars, unless, etc."

It is also provided in section 6072 (104 O. L. 166):

"Any person who traffics in intoxicating liquors as a beverage at retail shall not be entitled to any rebate or refunder under the liquor tax without giving a bond in amount equal to twice the amount of such rebate or refunder, with securities acceptable to the county clerk that he will not traffic in intoxicating liquors without paying the liquor taxes provided by law; * * *."

Pursuant to the provisions of the statutes just noted, I advise that if the party in question pays or has paid the $500.00 in pursuance of his tender as of July 1st, and satisfies the auditor that he has discontinued the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquor, and enters into the proper bond as prescribed by said sections, then upon his application, the auditor would be entitled to make him a refunder of a proportionate amount of the payment corresponding to the remainder of the assessment year, subject to the provision that in no case shall the amount of the assessment retained be less than $200.00; and in the present case upon the auditor being satisfied of the discontinuance of the business on May 26th, the taxpayer would be entitled to a refunder of that portion of the $500.00 installment due and payable above the minimum $200.00 to be retained.

Thus on the payment of the $500.00 installment in full, which is required by the terms of section 6074, and the compliance with the other provisions of the sections quoted, a refunder for $300.00 should be issued and a remittur of the second installment of $500.00 which would be due in December should be entered upon the duplcate.

Respectively,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my written opinion, as follows:

"We are calling your attention to opinion No. 785, page 2097 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, and would ask:

Question: Does the right to issue bonds as set forth by this opinion covering salaries of policemen and firemen authorize the same to be done where the budgetary provisions of section 5649-3d G. C. have been exceeded by including all obligations thus incurred together with other expenses of a particular fund of a municipality?

To give you a concrete illustration, the city in question has quite recently appointed a health officer, whereas the funds of the health department were not in shape to stand such obligation. In other words, the provisions of section 5649-3d G. C. would be exceeded. Can the compensation of this health officer which is now matured for payment be covered by a bond issue as set forth in the opinion referred to?

Question 2: Some two years ago the city of Alliance, Ohio, established a board of hospital commissioners under section 4023 et seq. G. C., to build a hospital. Such board appointed a clerk, (See section 4026 G. C.) but neither the board nor council took any action whatsoever relative to any compensation for such clerk. Now the work is practically completed and the city is desirous of paying this clerk a compensation equal to approximately $20.00 per month for the past two years' work. Can the same be legally done, and if so, how?

Question 3: Where a contract containing a bonus and penalty provision under authority of section 4330 G. C., has been completed and the contract has been delayed beyond the period of completion and a considerable penalty has accrued, is it within the authority of any board or officer of a municipality to then set aside the penalty?"

I may say at the outset that I do not consider that the particular provisions of section 5649-3d G. C. are at all controlling in the case of the issuance of bonds under authority of sections 3916 and 3917 and the disposition of the proceeds of the sale of such bonds.

Section 5649-3d is an essential part of the general scheme of the Smith one per cent law for bringing about a limitation upon the rate of taxation that may be lawfully levied, but in its terms does not purport to govern all cases of provision for and application of funds by the various sub-divisions of government; it is essentially a limitation upon the power of appropriation of moneys derived from taxes and other original sources of revenue and of the expenditure of such revenues. The conclusion expressed in the opinion to which you refer (Opinion No. 785, page 2097 Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917) was arrived at under authority of sections 3916 and 3917, which provide as follows:

"Sec. 3916. For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent per annum, payable annually or semi-annually.

"Sec. 3917. No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the place of payment of principal and interest."

The authorization here to issue bonds does not, strictly speaking, create or provide a source of revenue, nor is it a debt-creating authorization, but on the contrary furnishes a means of temporarily providing for existing obligations which cannot be met by the revenues presently available under the limits of taxation.

The case of providing funds for payment of the salary of a health officer, set forth in your inquiry, may invoke action under the provisions of sections 3916 and 3917 with equal propriety to the case of providing for payment of salaries of policemen and firemen as considered in opinion No. 785 to which you refer.

Section 4408 of the General Code provides for appointment of a health officer by the board of health, as follows:

"The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necesasry."

Section 4411-1 G. C. as enacted in 103 Ohio Laws, 436, provides:

"The board shall determine the duties and fix the salaries of its employes; but no member of the board of health shall be appointed as health officer or ward physician."

When action is taken by the board of health in pursuance of sections 4408 and 4411-1 G. C., supra, a fixed obligation is imposed upon the city, which the city council is obligated to provide for; it is an obligation imposed by paramount authority, and is, within the purview of section 3917, an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation.

Then, when from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay such obligation at maturity, by the authorization of section 3916 G. C. to extend the time of liquidation of the obligation the corporation is empowered to issue bonds, and thereby change the indebtedness so that its ultimate payment may be provided for out of future revenues.

Of course, in so providing for the ultimate payment of such obligation, the revenues must be secured within the tax limitations provided in the Smith one per cent law, so-called, and at the time of authorizing the issuance of bonds a levy for their ultimate retirement and for payment of interest must be provided for by virtue of both constitutional and statutory mandate.

Section 2 of article XII of the constitution provides:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

And section 5649-1 G. C. provides:

"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

In State ex rel. vs. Zangerle, 94 O. S. 447, this constitutional and statutory provision was applied in the holding that the levy for sinking fund and interest purposes must be made in preference to all other levies and without regard to the other needs of the taxing district, the second branch of the syllabus being as follows:

"The provision of section 5649-1, General Code, that the taxing authorities in each taxing district of the state shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes, requires the county budget commissioners to certify to the county auditor a tax sufficient for such purposes, regardless of other needs of the taxing district. (Rabe et al. vs. Board of Education, 88 Ohio St., 403, approved and followed.)"

The observation in the Rabe case, to the effect that in determining upon the creation of bonded indebtedness, not only the limits of taxation must be regarded but also the current needs of the political subdivision must be anticipated, is perhaps to the extent of the latter observation not entirely controlling under the present provisions of the constitution and section 5649-1 G. C. as applied in the case in 94th State, supra; and in any event the issuance of bonds for funding an existing obligation, such as that involved in your inquiry, would not be within the spirit of the observation made in the Rabe case with reference to the incurring of additional indebtedness by the issuance of bonds to an extent that would disable the subdivision to provide for its current expenses, inasmuch as the obligation to be refunded is one which already constitutes a charge upon the current revenues.

The opinion to which you refer announces the conclusion that bonds may be issued under authority of sections 3916 and 3917 for the purpose of funding valid existing indebtedness, and the question which you present relative to issuance of bonds to provide for payment of the salary of a health officer which has accrued as an existing, valid and binding obligation stands upon the same principles as those considered in said opinion, and my conclusion is that such bonds may be issued without regard to the provisions of section 5649-5d, relative to appropriations from collection of taxes and other sources of revenue, for the reason that the moneys realized from the issuance and sale of such bonds are not comprehended by the terms of said section and in the light of the law stand appropriated for the purpose for which the bonds are issued.

Section 5654 G. C. provides:

> "The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. * * *."

It is said in Schieber vs. Village of Edon, 23 C. C., n. s., 378:

> "The debt-creating power which has been conferred upon municipalities is in nowise affected by the tax limitations which have been imposed, and an issue of bonds to meet the cost of street improvements will not be enjoined because not authorized by a vote of the people, where payment thereof can be made without violation of the tax limitation fixed by the Smith one per cent. law."

The specific application of the Smith one per cent law as an entirety to the matter of the issuance of bonds for the payment of accrued salary of policemen, firemen or health officer, under authority of section 3916, has to do only with the matter of tax levy for interest and sinking fund, which must be made within the ten mill limitation.

Your second question relates to the authority for payment of compensation of a clerk appointed by hospital commissioners in pursuance of sections 4023 and 4026 G. C., which sections provide as follows:

> "Section 4023. When the council of a municipality enteres upon and takes possession of grounds purchased, appropriated, or otherwise obtained for hospital purposes, and, by resolution or ordinance, determines to erect thereon or rebuild a hospital, the erection and repair thereof, or any addition thereto, shall be vested in a board of five commissioners, called the 'Board of Hospital Commissioners,' > Section 4026. The board may appoint a clerk, an architect, a superintendent, and other necessary employes, fix their compensation, and adopt a suitable plan for such hospital, and make all contracts for the erection and furnishing thereof. The salary of the appointees, and the plan of the hospital, before any contract for its erection is entered into, shall be submitted to and approved by the council."

While it might appear that the intent of the statute, section 4026 G. C., is that the compensation shall be fixed at the time of the appointment of the clerk, yet the paramount purpose and policy of the statute in that regard is that such compensation shall, at all events, be fixed and its payment provided for in consideration of the services of such clerk, and I see no reason why the board may not now fix the compensation for the clerk appointed by the board, in consideration of the services rendered by such clerk, which compensation so fixed, of course, shall be submitted to and approved by the council, and when so fixed and approved the same becomes a valid and binding obligation of the corporation.

Your third inquiry raises the question of the authority of any board or officer of a municipality to set aside or remit a penalty which has already accrued in pursuance of a contract entered into between the municipal corporation and a contractor.

There is statutory authority for embodying a provision for bonus for completion of the contract prior to a specified date, and a corresponding penalty for delay in such completion beyond a specified date, and where such provision has been made a part of the contract and the penalty has accrued by the occurrence of the delay stipulated against, I am of the opinion that the officials of the municipal corporation are not authorized to remit such penalty.

The provisions of section 4330 G. C. relative to bonus and penalty are as follows:

> "The contract shall be between the corporation and the bidder, and the corporation shall pay the contract price in cash. Where a bonus is offered for completion of contract prior to a specified date, the department may exact a prorated penalty in like sum for every day of delay beyond a specified date."

The penalty provision is not only supported by statutory authority but is one of the elements of consideration in said contract, and after the same has accrued its remittitur would be without consideration, and further, the officials of the municipal corporation are not acting with unlimited discretion as in the case of a private enterprise, but represent the public interests and the scope of their authority is determined and limited by the law.

There being no statutory authority for such remittitur without consideration, therefore, I am of the opinion that such an act would be entirely unauthorized and of no effect.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BUREAU OF FISH AND GAME—WHEN STATE DEPUTY WARDENS MAY BE EMPLOYED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO ASSIST IN ENFORCING FEDERAL MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY ACT.

The state deputy wardens appointed to enforce the Ohio laws relating to the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish and game, may be employed by the Federal government to assist in enforcing the federal migratory bird treaty act, provided the work to be undertaken will not interfere with the faithful discharge of their duties under the state law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 2, 1919.

HON. A. C. BAXTER, Chief Warden, Bureau of Fish and Game, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of July 18, 1919, with which you enclosed a letter received by you from the chief of the United States Bureau of Biological Survey relating to the employment of the state deputy wardens by the federal government to aid in enforcing the provisions of the federal migratory bird treaty act, approved July 3 1918, was duly received.

The purpose and scope of the intended employment and the control to be exercised over the state deputy wardens by the federal authorities are indicated by the letter referred to, which, so far as pertinent, reads as follows:

> "The tentative plans of the bureau for the enforcement of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act and regulations contemplate putting all United States deputy game wardens on the same basis at a nominal salary of $1 per year with additional compensation at the rate of $3.50 per day when actually employed for temporary periods in the enforcement of the law, but not to exceed $300 to any warden in any one fiscal year.
> In addition to the per diem for their services we shall pay their actual traveling and subsistence expenses when actually employed in accordance with the regulations of the department. When employed on active duty by the bureau we would expect that all violations of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act which come to their notice would be prosecuted in the Federal courts, but there would be no objection whatever to the wardens in their capacity of state wardens rendering incidental services in the enforcement of the state laws covering offenses not included in the federal game laws, during the time they are rendering active services for the bureau. We would first obtain your specific consent before placing any deputy warden on active duty, and in no event would any deputy warden be assigned to duty outside of the state.
> We hope to have a large number of these deputy wardens in the United States and with the present small appropriation for the enforcement of the federal game laws it is obvious that we shall be able to place only a few of the deputy wardens on active duty for periods ranging from a few days to two months and in no case for a period entitling a warden to salary exceeding $300 in any one fiscal year.
> We shall be obliged if you will inform the bureau whether you have any objections to placing on this basis such of your deputies as hold the position of United States deputy game warden.
> Your department has been kind enough to extend most cordial support and cooperation in the enforcement of federal laws in the past and we trust that you may have no objection to the proposed new arrangement which we believe will be more satisfactory than that now in force."

As I understand it, you desire my opinion as to whether or not the employment and payment of the state deputy wardens by the federal government would be in conflict with the state law.

The appointment, compensation and duties of the state deputy wardens are governed by sections 1390 et seq., G. C.

Section 1390 provides that the state secretary of agriculture shall have authority and control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of song and insectivorous birds, game birds, game animals and fish within the state, and in and upon the waters thereof, and it is made his duty to enforce by proper legal action or proceeding the laws of this state relative thereto. He is also required to establish fish hatcheries and propagate fish therein, and to adopt and carry into effect, such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties.

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of section 1390, it is provided by section 1391 G. C. that > "there shall be appointed a chief warden and such number of deputy wardens and special wardens as the board of agriculture may prescribe. The chief warden and each deputy state warden shall hold his office for a term of two years unless sooner removed by the secretary of agriculture. Each special warden shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as a deputy state warden."

Before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the chief warden and each deputy state warden and special warden is required by section 1392 to give bond to the state

"conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office."

The duties of the chief warden, deputy state wardens and special wardens are prescribed by sections 1393, 1395 and 1398, as follows:

Section 1393 reads:

"The chief warden, special wardens and deputy state wardens shall enforce the provisions of this act and the laws relating to the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish and game, and shall also enforce the laws against trespassing upon premises, for the purpose of hunting, without the permission of the owner thereof and shall have authority to make arrests upon view and without the issuance of a warrant therefor. Under the direction of the secretary of agriculture, the chief warden shall visit all parts of the state and direct and assist special wardens and deputy state wardens in the discharge of their duties."

By section 1395 authority is conferred upon each warden to serve and execute warrants and other process of law issued in the enforcement of the laws for the protection, preservation or propagation of birds, fish and game in the same manner as a sheriff or constable, and he is authorized to arrest on sight and without warrant any person found violating any such law. He is also authorized to seize without process, birds, fish or game found in the possession of any such person, together with the guns nets, seins, boats, traps or other devises with which they were taken or killed, etc., and forthwith to convey the person so offending before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense.

By section 1398 it is provided that each warden shall seize and safely keep any gun, net, seine, trap or other device used in the unlawful taking, catching or killing of birds, fish or game, and, unless otherwise ordered, shall institute proceedings in the proper court for its forfeiture, etc.

The compensation of the chief warden, deputy state wardens and special wardens are fixed by the state secretary of agriculture, and such appointees are also entitled to receive from the state their actual and necessary expenses incurred while traveling on the business of the department, etc. See sections 1087 and 1394.

It will be observed from an examination of the several statutes hereinbefore referred to that there is no express provision that the state wardens shall give their entire time in enforcing the provisions of the Ohio law, and that there is no express prohibition against such wardens accepting other employment and compensation from the federal government. The only requirement in this regard is that they shall faithfully discharge the duties of their office.

The purpose of the federal act and one of the purposes of the state law is the protection of birds. The federal act deals with migratory birds exclusively, while the Ohio law treats the subject generally, but this appears to be authorized by section 7 of the federal act which provides that the several states may make and enforce laws and regulations not inconsistent witht the provisions of the federal act and the convention between the United States and Great Britain proclaimed December 8, 1916 and also that state laws and regulation for the further protection of migratory birds may be made and enforced.

It has, I understand, been the practice of the state and federal authorities to confer and co-operate in the enforcement of the bird laws, and this is in harmony with both the state and federal laws (see section 1096 G. C., section 9 of the federal act, and letter from the Chief of U. S. Bureau, supra), and I am of the opinion that unless the rendition of the work require by the federal act and regulations will interfere with the duties of the wardens under the state law, there would be no objection to their employment by the federal department which is authorized by section 9 of the federal act to co-operate with local authorities.

The only objection to the proposed arrangement as outlined in the letter from the chief of the federal bureau of biological survey, and above referred to, is that part which seems to indicate or imply that state wardens entering the employ of the federal department shall render only > "incidental services in the enforcement of the state laws covering offenses not included in the federal game laws, during the time they are rendering active services for the bureau."

Such an arrangement would be inconsistent with the obligation of the state wardens to faithfully discharge the duties of their offices in enforcing the provisions of the state law. The first duty and obligation of the state wardens is to the state, and it is only such federal work as will not interfere with their duties under the state law that should be undertaken by them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO UNIVERSITY—APPROPRIATIONS—WHEN ITEMS IN APPROPRIATION BILL CANNOT BE LEGALLY USED TO PAY SALARIES.

Monies appropriated by the legislature to Ohio University by the act known as H. B. No. 536, under the head of "Contract and Open Order, F9 General Plant," cannot legally be used by the university authorities for the purpose of adding to salaries definately fixed by another part of said act, under the head of "Personal Service A1 Salaries."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 2, 1919.

HON. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter of July 22, 1919, reading as follows:

> "H. B. No. 536—state appropriation bill—carries with it appropriations for Ohio University, located at Athens, Ohio. Under the head of 'Personal Service A1 Salaries,' a number of positions are named with definite salaries connected therewith. Under 'Contract and Open Order F9 General Plant' is found the following: 'All endowment monies due Ohio University on account of rents and taxes in Athens and Alexander townships, and $3,700.'
> In addition to the rents and taxes named, the university gets interest on its portion of the irreducible debt of Ohio. From all these sources—rents, taxes, and interest—the university has an annual income of between $7,500 and $8,000.

Now, the question for consideration and answer is: Have the university authorities, as such, any legal right to add to the fixed salaries already referred to by making drafts upon said income from rents, taxes, and interest? I request that you favor me, at your earliest convenience, with an answer to the question."

It appears that Ohio University's portion of the interest on the so-called irreducible debt is also a matter of legislative appropriation, being included in sections 2 and 3 of the same act referred to by you, to wit, H. B. No. 536 (General appropriations).

Section 4 of said act reads in part as follows:

"The sums set forth in the columns designated 'items' in sections 2 and 3 of this act, opposite the several classifications of detailed purposes, shall not be expended for any other purposes except as herein provided."

The exception "herein provided" refers to monies expended upon authority granted by the "controlling board' consisting of the governor (or budget commissioner, if appointed by the governor for such purpose), the chairman of the finance committee of the house of representatives, the chairman of the finance committee of the senate, the attorney-general and the auditor of state, which board

"may authorize the expenditure of monies appropriated in said sections 2 and 3 of this act within the purpose for which the appropriation is made, whethe included in the detailed purposes for which such appropriations are distri buted by 'items' in said section, or not."

Specifically answering your question, I advise you that the university authorities have no legal right to add to the fixed salaries in question, by making drafts upon the income from the rents, taxes and interest referred to in your letter.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—HAVE CONTINUING AUTHORITY AS TO PROPER ALLOWANCES FOR CLERK HIRE IN SEVERAL COUNTY OFFICES.

Under authority of section 2980-1 G. C., as effective July 9, 1919, the county commissioners are empowered to make reasonable and proper allowances for clerk hire in the several county offices, up to the forty, sixty and eighty-five per cent. limitations prescribed in the amended section, from and after the date it became effective, the jurisdiction of the commissioners in this regard being a continuing one, to be exercised as the needs of the offices may require.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 2, 1919.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt of the inquiry submitted to this office, in which you join with Hon. Lehr E. Miller, county treasurer of Allen county, is acknowledged.

Your inquiry relates to the authority of county commissioners to make additional allowances for clerk hire to county officers, after having once acted in that matter. You have stated the facts and your inquiry as follows:

> "In November, 1918, I filed with the county commissioners of Allen county, Ohio, a sworn statement of the sums expended by the treasurer's office for deputy, clerk hire and assistants during the year 1917, together with a statement of the probable amount necessary for such purposes during the year 1919. Section 2980 General Code.
> On the 18th day of December, 1918, the board of county commissioners fixed the sum to be expended for deputies, clerks and assistants for the year 1919 in the treasurer's office in the sum of $3,383.34; the amount so fixed being 30 per cent on the first two thousand dollars and 40 per cent on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof of the fees earned by the treasurer's office for the year Oct. 1, 1917, to Sept. 30, 1918, inclusive. Section 2980-1 Gen. Code.
> On the 29th day of March, 1919, section 2980-1 of the General Code of Ohio was amended by the legislature of Ohio. On the 8th day of April, 1919, the act amending such section was approved by the governor and on April 9, 1919, the act as enacted and approved, was filed in the office of the secretary of state and became and was in full force and effect on the 9th day of July, 1919. Section 2980-1, as amended, is the same in its provisions as the original section 2980-1, except that the aggregate sum that may be fixed by the commissioners for the compensation of deputies, clerks, etc., shall not exceed 40 per cent on the first two thousand dollars and 60 per cent on the next eight thousand or fractional part thereof.
> Quaere: May the commissioners on my application as treasurer make a further allowance for deputy, clerk hire and assistants, for the year 1919, in a sum which shall not exceed the difference between the sum first fixed by the commissioners upon the basis of the original section 2980-1, namely 30 and 40 per cent and the basis fixed by section 2980-1 as amended, namely 40 and 60 per cent computed upon the fees earned by the treasurer's office for the year Oct. 1, 1917, to Sept. 30, 1918, inclusive?"

As set forth in your communication, the amended section 2980-1 G. C., as enacted by the present legislature, increases the percentages which may be allowed by the commissioners from the fee fund for clerk hire, providing forty per cent on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, and sixty per cent on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, in lieu of the original provision for thirty per cent and forty per cent. on said amounts respectively. Said amended section became effective on July 9, 1919. As now in force, it provides:

> "Section 2980-1. The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of the courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing forty per cent on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, sixty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers require additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required, and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

Notice in writing of such application and the time fixed by such judge for the hearing thereof shall be served by the applicant, five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners of such county And said board shall file in said proceeding their approval or disapproval of the allowance asked for and shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard thereon; and evidence may be offered.

When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which such aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same, shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year."

I have considered the question of the continuing authority of the commissioners to provide reasonable and proper allowances for clerk hire, within the limitations of the authorization of the statute, in Opinion No. 323 of this department, recently announced, wherein it was said, concerning the statute prior to the recent amendment:

"The statutes under consideration vest in the county commissioners the exclusive power to make allowances from the fee fund, and, in my opinion, their jurisdiction is not exhausted by a single exercise of such power, but is continuing, and not exhausted until they have exercised to the fullest extent the 30, 40 and 85 per cent computations provided for in section 2980-1 G. C."

In that opinion, the question before me was the validity of the exercise of such authority by the adoption of a resolution by the county commissioners amending their original allowance so as to provide additional funds for clerk hire, within the limitations of the statute however, and it was held:

"That the action of the county commissioners was a proper exercise of their power to fix the allowance of the probate judge for the ensuing year, whether it be called an amendment or by some other name, so long as the aggregate amount did not exceed the amount arrived at under the percentage computations above mentioned.

There is no provision in the statute that the commissioners may not at any time increase an allowance made from the fee fund, either by way of amending their original order or by making a new order, so long as they keep within the percentages specified. As already stated, the power of the commisisoners is continuing until they have reached the aggregate amount authorized in the section."

The provision of the statute relative to the time of taking action by the commissioners was regarded as directory, and it was said:

"It must also not be overlooked that section 2980 G. C. clearly and expressly provides that the aggregate sum to be fixed by the commissioners shall be 'reasonable and proper,' and this, in my opinion, evinces the legislative intent to confer upon the commissioners continuing authority until a reasonable and proper amount has been allowed, subject only to the express limitation imposed by section 2980-1 G. C."

The original allowance by the commissioners is to be made pursuant to the estimate of the several county officers of the probable amount necessary to be expended, and obviously, in exercising the authorization of the statute to provide a "reasonable and proper" allowance, the circumstances and conditions confronting a particular county office at any time within the year will be controlling in the determination of the reasonableness and propriety of the allowances for the assistants in such office, which essentially requires that such conditions be taken into account when they arise, and the duty and authority conferred upon the county commissioners properly exercised in accordance therewith.

The conclusion announced in the previous opinion of this office, above referred to, has the support of the unreported decision of the common pleas court of Noble county, afterwards affirmed by the court of appeals, and a recent decision of the court of common pleas of Franklin county.

Now that the forty and sixty per cent limitations provided in section 2980-1 G. C., as amended, constitute the operative boundaries of the authority of the county commissioners, with reference to allowances for clerk hire in the several county offices, in the exercise of their continuing jurisdiction under the statute as found to be reposed in that board under the ruling above cited, the commissioners may, by proper resolution, increase the amount heretofore provided for clerk hire, when in their judgment such increase is required for the proper performance of the functions of any or all of the several county offices, subject, of course, to the maximum limitation prescribed by the statute in force at the time of taking such action, and the further proviso of the statute that the allowance shall be only such in amount as is reasonable and proper.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—CREATION OF NEW DISTRICT UNDER SECTION 4736 G. C. BY TAKING AN ENTIRE EXISTING DISTRICT AND PART OF ANOTHER—REMONSTRANCE SIGNED BY MAJORITY OF ALL ELECTORS IN NEWLY CREATED DISTRICT.

Where a county board of education creates a new school district under section 4736 G. C. by taking an entire existing district and a part only of another existing district and joining the district and part district together as a new district, the remonstrance against such creation of the new district must be signed by a majority of all the qualified male electors in the newly created district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 2, 1919.

HON. SUMNER E. WALTERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"Calling your attention to section 4736 of the General Code, particularly the following words:

'The county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof.'

Also,

'a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board,'

I desire your answer to the following questions:

May the county board by taking an entire existing district and a part only of another existing district, and by joining the whole district and the part district together, create by virtue of this section a new district; or would that simply be transferring territory from one district to another, as provided in section 4692. If a new district may be thus created who would be the electors qualified to sign a remonstrance, those only of the part district that was added to the whole, or those of both the part district and the whole district joined?"

Section 4736 G. C., which is the law at the present time, covers the creation of new school districts in a county school district, as follows:

"The county board of education shall arrange the school districts according to topography and population in order that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils, and shall file with the board or boards of education in the territory affected, a written notice of such proposed arrangement; which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed unless, within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board, file a written remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed. The county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof. The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created school district and direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district. Members of the boards of education of the newly created district shall thereafter be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the boards of education of the village and rural districts."

Attention is also invited to the new section 4736 G. C., appearing in house bill No. 348, which becomes effective September 22, 1919, and reads as follows:

"The county board of education may create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof, and in so doing shall make an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness between the newly created district and any districts from which any portion of such newly created district is taken. Such action of the county board of education shall not take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory affected by such order shall within thirty days from the time such action is taken file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against it. Members of the board of education of the newly created district shall be appointed by the county board of education and shall hold their office until the first election for members of a board of education held in such district after such appointment, at which said first election two members shall be elected for two years and three members shall be elected for four years, and thereafter their successors shall be elected in the same manner and for the term as is provided by section 4712 of the General Code. The board so appointed by the county board of education shall organize on the second Monday after their appointment."

The new section 4736 G. C. is herewith quoted because your proceedings to create a new school district might run past the date when the new section is effective; and again, it clarifies old section 4736 G. C. as to the true intent of the General Assembly as regards the transfer of territory by a county board of education. It must be remembered that the proceeding for the transfer of territory from one school district to another under section 4692 is an entirely distinct transaction from the proceeding necessary under section 4736 G. C., creating a new school district, hence under the law if some prior transfer of territory, initiated under section 4692 G. C., had failed by remonstrance proceedings, such result would not affect proceedings to be had under section 4736 G. C., in the creation of a new school district. It is true that a proceeding under section 4736 G. C. is a transfer of territory, but the fact remains that no new district can ever be created at all unless the element of transfer of territory enters therein.

You ask if a new district is created under section 4736 G. C. who would be the electors qualified to sign a remonstrance, whether only those in the part of the new district or those who constitute the electors of the whole of a new district; and it may be said that where a new school district is created by taking an entire existing district and a part only of another existing district, and joining the old district and the part district together, thus creating a new district, then it follows that every part of the territory in the new district is affected by the creation of such new district.

As an illustration of this: the old district which was entire before, loses its school board as a whole and it is necessary that the county board of education appoint a new school board of five members for such new district, a number of whom might come under the law from the part of the district which was added to the old district in the creation of a newly formed district. Again, the electors in the old district are affected in their taxation rate one way or another for the reason that the whole district, as newly created, must assume the obligations of all of its component parts, as well as receiving not only the funds of one part of the newly created district, but also the funds of every other part of such district created.

The entire school system, even as to the location of schools that were conducted might be wholly changed in a newly created district composed of an old district and a part of another district, because of advantageous arrangements which might follow such joining of interest. It is clear, therefore, that the qualified electors of the territory affected by an order of the county board creating a new district would be all of the qualified electors in such newly created district and the remonstrance provided under section 4736 provides that in order to prevent such creation of a new district, a majority of the qualified electors in the territory affected, which is all of the new district, must file within thirty days a written remonstrance with the county board of eduaction against the arrangement of school districts so proposed.

You will note that the new section 4736 G. C., effective on September 22d, does not materially change this feature appearing in old section 4736 G. C., but rather clarifies the same by providing for the manner and method of the appointment of the new board of education and saying when their successors shall be elected and when such new board must organize.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a county board of education creates a new school district under section 4736 G. C. by taking an entire existing district and a part only of another existing district and joining the district and part district together as a new district, the remonstrance against such creation of the new district must be signed by a majority of all the qualified male electors in the newly created district.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—RECIPROCITY WITH OTHER STATES IN GRANTING OF EMBALMERS' LICENSES DISCUSSED.

Where a duly licensed embalmer of another state has been examined by a regular board of embalming examiners on substantially the same subjects and requirements demanded by the Ohio state board of embalming examiners, and has obtained in such examination an average grade of at least seventy-five per cent, the Ohio state board of embalming examiners may, in its discretion, recognize such examination as a basis of reciprosity between Ohio and such other state. If it does so recognize it and grants reciprocal licenses to qualified persons residing in a certain geographical part of such foreign state, it can not thereafter refuse to grant reciprocal licenses to other similarly qualified persons in such foreign state, on the mere ground that such other persons reside in a part of the state geographically different from that wherein reside the persons first named.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 4, 1919.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary-Treasurer of the State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date is at hand, reading as follows:

"Section 1343-1 authorizes the issuing of reciprocal licenses by this board under certain conditions.

Inasmuch as a great deal of inconvenience is caused to undertakers and embalmers who are in business along the border towns by reason of not having a license that will give them the authority to cross the border and embalm, the question of granting reciprocal licenses to those who may apply for the same is now being considered by this board.

It is the opinion of the majority of the membership of this board that the requirements of the several bordering states are not the equal of this state and that it would be an injustice to grant embalmers of other states an Ohio license merely by paying the legal fee, thereby placing them in the same position of pre-examination requirements to obtain this license.

And yet those members of our profession who are in business on the border, either on the Ohio or the other side, should receive some consideration as in a great many localities these embalmers are the only ones available for miles around.

Therefore this board respectfully asks for your opinion upon the question as to whether this board has the legal right to grant a reciprocal license to those located on the border and to refuse a similar license to other embalmers who are not so located."

Section 1343-1 G. C., to which you refer, reads as follows:

"The state board of embalming examiners may grant without examination an embalmer's license to a duly licensed embalmer of another state, who shall have been examined by a regular board of embalming examiners on substantially the same subjects and requirements demanded by the board of this state, and shall have obtained an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent in such examination. Such license shall be known as a reciprocal license, applications for which shall be made on a form containing a certified statement from the board which granted the original license in the other state, stating the grade and result of examination. Each applicant for a reciprocal license shall pay a license fee of twenty-five dollars, which shall accompany the application for such license. Such reciprocal license shall be renewed annually upon payment of a renewal fee of one dollar as provided above."

This, it seems, is the only section of the embalming license act which deals with the matter of reciprocity with other states.

Construing this section, the Attorney-General, in opinion No. 381, addressed to you as president of the state board of embalming examiners, on June 16, 1917 (Vol. 2, Atty. Gen. Opin. for 1917, p. 1029), said at p. 1034:

> "This section does not make it the duty of your board to issue licenses without examination to embalmers of other states who are within the provisions of this section. The section is not mandatory; it is directory only. It provides that 'the state board of embalming examiners may grant without examination * * *.' It does not state that the board shall grant a license to such embalmers, but leaves it to the discretion of the board."

The law contemplates that no reciprocal licenses shall be issued by your board under section 1343-1 G. C., unless and until your board shall have satisfied itself that the examination passed in the foreign state by the applicant for such reciprocal license embraced "substantially the same subjects and requirements" demanded by your board as to Ohio applicants; and further that in such examination the applicant for the reciprocal license obtained an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent.

In other words, it is for your board to say, in the exercise of its discretion, whether the requirements of foreign states are substantially the same as those prevailing in Ohio.

But having once determined that the requirements of a foreign state are substantially equivalent to those of Ohio, and having decided to enter into reciprocity with such foreign state, is it proper for your board to limit its reciprocity to the residents of some particular geographical part of such foreign state less than the whole area of such state; or did the legislature intend that reciprocity once entered into with a foreign state should extend to every part thereof?

Upon reflection, it is considered that the view last above stated must be taken as the meaning of section 1343-1 G. C. Whether the legislature has the power to effect reciprocity with a foreign state in the limited and discriminating way just referred to, is a question which it is unnecessary here to consider. What is before us now is rather the question whether section 1343-1 G. C. must be so construed as to ascribe to the legislature an intention so to discriminate.

The idea of reciprocity is contained in other statutes of Ohio, for example, the state dental board law (see section 1324 G. C.), the state board of pharmacy law (see section 1305 G. C.), the state medical board law (section 1282 G. C.), etc. In none of these acts is there any attempt made to make reciprocity dependent upon the matter of the geographical location of the applicant in the foreign state. This being true, it seems to me that if the legislature had intended to give authority to your board to make the discrimination referred to in your inquiry, it would have done so in express and unmistakable language.

Hence, you are advised that where a duly licensed embalmer of another state has been examined by a regular board of embalming examiners on substantially the same subjects and requirements demanded by the board of this state, and has obtained in such examination an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent, your board may in its discretion recognize such examination as a basis of reciprocity.

If it does so recognize it and grants a reciprocal license to qualified persons residing in a certain geographical part of such foreign state, it can not, thereafter, as the law now stands, refuse to grant reciprocal licenses to other similarly qualified persons in such foreign state, on the mere ground that such other persons reside in a part of the state geographically different from that wherein reside the persons first named.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES—WHAT POWERS MAY BE EXERCISED BY EITHER STOCK OR MUTUAL COMPANIES—SECTIONS OF CODE GOVERNING THE INCORPORATION OF BOTH KINDS OF COMPANIES ABOVE NAMED DISCUSSED AND INTERPRETED.

Fire insurance companies, whether stock, or mutual, may have and exercise only such powers as are prescribed by section 9607-2, paragraph 1, G. C.

Sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. are supplanted by the subsequently enacted amendment to section 9607-2. Powers mentioned in the latter section and not mentioned in the former are available to either class of company, but powers mentioned in the former group of sections but not in the latter may not be exercised by either class of company.

The powers formerly enjoyed or capable of being enjoyed under sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. by a fire insurance company but now prohibited to such company are as follows

(1) The making of insurance against theft of automobile accessories.

(2) The making of insurance on goods in the course of transportation other than inland transportation, whether on land or by water.

With these exceptions, the powers enumerated in section 9607-2 are broader than those enumerated in the other sections. A company originally organized under section 9510 et seq. G. C. may appropriate such additional powers by amendment to its articles of incorporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 4, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested the opinion of this department upon the following question:

"The National Fire Insurance Company of Cleveland, Ohio, offers the following amendment to their purpose clause, to-wit:

'Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring houses, buildings and all other kinds of property within and without this state against loss or damage to such property and loss of use and occupancy thereto by fire, lightning, tornado, hail, tempest, flood, earthquake, frost or snow, explosion, fire ensuing and explosion fire not ensuing, except explosion by steam boilers or flywheels; against loss or damage by water caused by the breaking or leakage of sprinklers, pump, tanks, water pipes and fixtures connected therewith, erected for extinguishing fires and against accident or injury to such fixtures and other apparatus, water pipe, plumbing or fixtures to make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of transportation on land, water or on vessel, boat or wherever it may be; to insure against every description of marine risk, which may legally be undertaken, relating to the perils of the sea, fire, war, reprisals, and all other risks of a like nature incidental to the seas, ships, vessels, and water craft of all descriptions, and also the freights, goods, merchandise, cargo, and all property whatsoever in or on board of the same, whether the property of members of the company or not, so far as the same may be effected or made according to law. To insure all other matters and things which lawfully may or can be from time to time insured or be the subject of insurance against perils of the sea; to insure against loss by the theft of automobiles and accessories and against damage thereto from this cause and to write all kinds of insurance upon automobiles whether stationary or operated under their own power, against loss or damage by any of the causes or risks specified above, including also transportation, collision, liability or damage to property resulting from owning, maintaining or using automobiles, but not including loss or damage by risk of bodily injury to the person. To buy, sell, repair, maintain, operate and otherwise acquire manage and dispose of any and all classes of property which are insurable within the meaning of the purpose of this corporation, to invest and reinvest the funds and assets of this company as prescribed by law and in the form and manner provided by law and to buy, sell, or otherwise hold, own and dispose of all real and personal property necessary and convenient to operate and maintain said business and to do all things incident and necessary thereto.'

Kindly give your opinion as to whether or not the said company can assume amendment on the powers given to the company, organized under section 9510 by reason of the subsequent enactment of sections 9556 and 9607-2, paragraph 1.

Would this purpose clause be in conflict with section 9511 of the General Code of Ohio?"

This inquiry invokes consideration of the following provisions of the General Code, all of which are at least nominally in force:

"Sec. 9510. A company may be organized or admitted under this chapter to:

1. Insure houses, buildings and all other kinds of property in and out of the state against loss or damage by fire, lightning, and tornadoes, and make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of transportation, on land, water, or on a vessel, boat or wherever it may be.

2. * * *; make insurance against loss or damage resulting from accident to property, from cause other than fire or lightning; * * * make insurance * * * to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations. * * *."

"Sec. 9511. No company shall be organized to issue policies of insurance for more than one of the above four mentioned purposes, and no company organized for either one of such purposes shall issue policies of insurance of any other. But companies organized under subdivision two of the preceding section, which do the business of guaranteeing the fidelity of persons, holding places of public or private trust, who are required to or in their trust capacity do receive, hold, control, disburse public or private property, and guaranteeing the performance of contracts other than insurance policies, and executing and guaranteeing bonds and undertakings required or permitted in actions, proceedings or by law allowed, may indemnify bank deposits against loss by reason of bank suspension and failure."

"Section 9556. All companies organized or admitted for the purpose of insuring against loss or damage by fire, may insure against loss or damage by water, caused by the breakage or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, tanks, water pipes and fixtures connected therewith, and by lightning, explosions from gas, dynamite, gunpowder, and other like explosions, and tornadoes; and may also insure against loss by the theft of automobiles and accessories, and against damage thereto from this cause."

"Sec. 9607-2. A domestic mutual company may be organized by a number of persons, not less than twenty, to carry on the business of mutual insurance and to reinsure and to accept reinsurance as authorized by law and its article of incorporation. * * * A mutual or a stock insurance company may transact only the first kind of insurance, or may transact such as it may elect of the other kinds of insurance, following:

1. Fire insurance. Against loss or damage to property and loss of use and occupancy by fire, lightning, hail, tempest, flood, earthquake, frost or snow, explosion, fire ensuing, and explosion, no fire ensuing, except explosion by steam boiler or flywheels; against loss of damage by water caused by the breakage or leakage of sprinklers, pumps or other apparatus, water pipes, plumbing, or their fixtures, erected for extinguishing fires, and against accidental injury to such sprinklers, pumps, other apparatus, water pipes, plumbing and fixtures; against the risks of inland transportation and navigation; upon automobiles, whether stationary or operated under their own power, against loss or damage by any of the causes or risks specified in this subsection, including also transportation, collision, liability for damage to property resulting from owning, maintaining or using automobiles and including burglary and theft, but not including loss or damage by risk of bodily injury to the person. * * * * * * *."

In order to present the problems which arise in graphic form let it be observed that the following portions of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of The National Fire Insurance Company, as proposed to be amended, are clearly justified under sections 9510 and 9556 of the General Code, read together:

"Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring houses, buildings and all other kinds of property within and without this state against loss or damage to such property * * * by fire, lightning, tornado, * * explosion, fire ensuing and explosion fire not ensuing, except explosion by steam boilers or flywheels; against loss or damage by water, caused by the breaking or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, tanks, water pipes and fixtures connected therewith, erected for extinguishing fires * * * to make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of transportation on land, water or on vessel, boat or wherever it may be; * * * to insure against loss by theft of automobiles and accessories, and against damage thereto from this cause."

The last sentence of the purpose clause, in so far as it authorizes the company "to buy, sell, repair, maintain, operate and otherwise acquire, manage and dispose of any and all classes of property which are insurable within the meaning of the purpose, etc."

is permissible only if interpreted as an incidental power. If interpreted as an independent and co-ordinate power it would, of course, have to be condemned as authorizing the company to engage in various businesses, such as the mercantile business, the business of marine transportation, etc. It should be introduced by the clause "as incidental thereto;" and if this part of the purpose clause is new in the amendment (which does not appear from your letter), I advise that the amendment be not filed until this change is made.

The recitals omitted from the amended purpose clause as last above quoted are not justified by sections 9510 and 9556 of the General Code, and if these sections stood alone would be forbidden in the clause by the operation of section 9511 of the General Code.

Let us now turn to section 9607-2 G. C. and consider the purpose clause as a compliance with it, regardless of the provisions of sections 9510, 9556 and 9511 of the General Code. The following portions of the purpose clause would be justified under that section:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring houses, buildings and all other kinds of property within and without this state against loss or damage to such property and loss of use and occupancy thereto by fire, lightning, * * * hail, tempest, flood, earthquake, frost or snow, explosion, fire ensuing and explosion, no fire ensuing, except explosion by steam boilers of flywheels; against loss or damage by water, caused by the breakage, or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, tanks, water pipes and fixtures connected therewith, erected for extinguishing fires and against accident * * * to such fixtures and other apparatus, water pipes, plumbing or fixtures; to make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of (inland) transportation on land, water or on vessel, boat or wherever it may be; to insure against every description of marine risk, which may be legally undertaken, relating to the perils of the sea, fire, war, reprisals, and all other risks of a like nature incidental to the * * * (inland navigation), ships, vessels, and water craft of all descriptions, and also the freights, goods, merchandise, cargo, and all property whatsoever in or on board of the same, whether the property of members of the company or not, so far as the same may be effected or made according to law. To insure all other matters and things which lawfully may or can be from time to time insured or be the subject of insurance against perils of the sea; to insure against loss by the theft of automobiles * * * and against damage thereto from this cause and to write all kinds of insurance upon automobiles, whether stationary or operated under their own power, against loss or damage by any of the cause or risks specified above, including also transportation, collision, liability for damage to property resulting from owning, maintaining or using automobiles, but not including loss or damages by risk of bodily injury to the person."

It will be observed that I have made very few omissions for the purpose of fitting the purpose clause of the amended articles to section 9607-2 of the General Code. The first ot them is the omission of the word "tornado." This word is found in section 9556 of the General Code, but not in paragraph 1 of section 9607-2. In all likelihood the word "tempest" in the latter is broad enough to include the species of storm technically known as a "tornado." Assuming this to be so, there is no objection to the inclusion of the word "tornado" in the amended articles.

The next is the omission of the words "or injury" after the word "accident" in connection with the insurance of certain sprinklers, etc. The language of the section 9607-2 in this particular is "accidental injury;" that is, the thing insured must not only be an injury but an accidental injury. This is evidently a typographical error in the amendment, and while it is very slight, if the amendment is to be conformed to section 9607-2 and that section governs, I would advise the use of the words of the statute.

The third omission is that of the words "and accessories" after the word "automobiles." Section 9556 allows insurance against loss by the theft of "automobiles and accessories." Section 9607-2 allows insurance "upon automobiles * * * including burglary and theft." It does not allow insurance against theft of other property than automobiles. For these reasons, if section 9607-2 governs, the words "and accessories" must be stricken out of the articles as amended.

Still looking to the propriety of the amended articles under section 9607-2, I have given some consideration to the clause in the amended articles relating to marine insurance. Though this clause is very much expanded as compared with the language of section 9607-2, already set out, it seems to be justified by the very broad provision of that section, to the effect that a so-called "fire insurance" company may insure "against the risks of inland transportation and navigation." Every known kind of marine insurance would be comprehended within the clause "against the risks of * * * navigation." It will be observed that this part of the section does not deal (as does the remainder of the section) with the kind of property to be insured but with the peril to be insured against. Therefore, anything may be insure "against the risks of * * * navigation." Therefore, the conclusion has been reached that all that is recited in the amended articles respecting marine insurance, including "fire, war, reprisals, and all other risks of a like nature incidental to the seas" as descriptive of some of the specific risks of navigation, and "ships, vessels, and water craft of all descriptions, and also the freights, goods, merchandise, cargo, and all property whatsoever in or on board of the same," as descriptive of the thing to be insured, is proper under section 9607-2 G. C.

It will be noted, however, that I have inserted the word "inland" in parenthesis before the word "transportation" in this clause and, striking out the word "seas," have inserted in lieu thereof in parenthesis the words "inland navigation." I have done this because I am satisfied that section 9607-2, paragraph 1, limits the right to write marine insurance to that pertaining to inland navigation. The question is as to the modifying effect of the word "inland" in the phrase "inland navigation and transportation." Much doubt is encountered here. It is possible to read this phrase in two ways, viz.: "inland transportation and all navigation" and "inland transportation and inland navigation." The most natural interpretation to give to the phrase is, however, that last suggested. An adjective preceding two substantives or nouns, connected by the word "and" and not separated by any punctuation naturally modifies both the substantives. There is nothing unnatural about giving to the word "inland" a modifying effect as regards the noun "navigation" because there is such a thing as "inland navigation." (See Standard Dictionary under the word "navigation"). Therefore so far as section 9607-2 is concerned it does not authorize any kind of marine insurance, whether on cargoes or on bottoms, pertaining to the navigation of the ocean, or at least to foreign commerce. It is not necessary to decide in this connection just what is meant by the word "inland," i. e., whether it is to be given the significance of "domestic," as when used in the law of negotiable instruments, or the meaning of "continental" as distinguished from that which would pertain to the ocean. I say it is not necessary to decide this question because if the word "inland" is used as in the statutes the articles of incorporation will be within the law and the question will be common to the statute and to the articles, so that it need not now be decided.

But these conclusions are only preliminary to the statement of the real question involved, which is as to whether or not a corporation may be organized under the laws of Ohio for the purpose of doing the things mentioned in paragraph 1 of section 9607-2 in the teeth of unrepealed sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C.

Attention is called to the fact that section 9510 in terms deals with the organization or admission of corporations. The same is true of the other sections in par- materia with it, aside from section 9607-2. That section begins by dealing with the organization of domestic mutual companies other than life. It then provides in effect that "only the first kind of insurance" mentioned thereafter in the section may be transacted by "a mutual or stock insurance company." It would seem that while the section is undoubtedly potent to authorize the organization of a domestic mutual company to transact the first kind of insurance mentioned therein, it could hardly be looked to as authority for the organization of a stock insurance company to carry on all these kinds of business. By its terms it merely states that a stock insurance company may transact only the first kind of insurance or may transact such as it may elect of the other kinds of insurance; but as this is the only mention in section 9607-2 or elsewhere in the act in which that section was amended, or in the act found in 104 Ohio laws, 202, to which it was amendatory, of a "stock insurance company," it is arguable that section 9607-2 cannot be looked to as a grant of power to stock insurance companies; that to do so would make the section virtually wipe out section 9510 G. C. and the other sections referred to, which would be violative of the principle of implied repeal, which is that such repeals are presumed against and that inconsistencies between earlier and later statutes will be reconciled if possible rather than that the result described as "implied repeal" shall be arrived at.

To be sure, section 9607-2 has some effect upon section 9510 even as to stock insurance companies. It prohibits such companies, other than fire companies, from doing what is specified in paragraph 2 of section 9510, viz:

> "guarantee the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trust, * * *; guarantee the performance of contracts * * * and execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings required or permitted in all actions or proceedings, or by law allowed;"

unless these be held to come within paragraph 7 of section 9607-2, which is as follows:

> "7. Miscellaneous insurance. Against loss or damage by any hazard upon any risk not provided for in this section, which is not prohibited by statute or at common law from being the subject of insurance, excepting life insurance."

No opinion is expressed upon this point, but the question is at least raised by the peculiar language of section 9607-2

I refer also to paragraph 4 of section 9510, which authorizes companies to > "receive on deposit and insure the safekeeping of books, papers, moneys, stocks, bonds and all kinds of personal property."

The effect of section 9607-2 upon the conduct of such business by either a mutual or a stock insurance company will afford an interesting study.

You do not inform this department whether the National Fire Insurance Company is a mutual company as further defined by the related provisions of the act found in 104 Ohio Laws, 202, and designated sections 9607-1 to 9607-29 of the General Code, with its amendments, or not. I may say that the distinguishing characteristic of a mutual company seems to be that mentioned in section 9607-6 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided by law every policy holder of a domestic mutual company shall be a member while his policy is in force, and entitled to one vote and no more."

In the view which will be taken of the general operation of section 9607-2, however, this question is immaterial.

While, as before stated, section 9607-2 and the related supplemental sections bearing the same general number do not elsewhere deal with "stock insurance companies" at all, and while the first part of the section deals with the organization of "a domestic mutual company," yet this department is unable to reach the conclusion that the effect of section 9607-2 upon section 9510 and the other sections under consideration is different with respect to mutual companies than it is with respect to stock companies. The two are grouped together in the same sentence in section 9607-2 and that sentence has the same meaning with respect to the one as it has with respect to the other.

It has been heretofore intimated that section 9607-2 in and of itself does not purport to authorize the organization of a company empowered to carry on any one or more of the various kinds of business mentioned therein; whereas section 9510 does purport to deal with the charter powers of such companies. The rule against implied repeal would result in a holding to the effect that both sections might be regarded as limitations upon the charter powers of insurance companies other than life, whether mutual or stock; that is to say, that a company might have no larger powers than are comprehended in section 9510 and also in section 9607-2. So that if a given kind of business mentioned in the one were not also mentioned in the other, a corporation could not be organized under section 9510 nor transact business under section 9607-2. This, however, would reduce to absurdity many of the provisions of section 9607-2. In order to give such provisions any meaning at all, therefore, the conclusion that section 9607-2 does enlarge the possible charter powers of insurance companies other than life, where it has that effect at all, must be reached. So also, because it is later in point of enactment than section 9510, it would follow that if it should appear that in any particular the business which may be transacted under section 9607-2 is less comprehensive than that authorized by section 9510, said section 9607-2 would govern and pro tanto nullify section 9510.

This conclusion is supported by the legislative history of section 9607-2 G. C., and indeed by the policy of the state with respect to the relation between mutual insurance companies other than life and stock insurance companies other than life. The group of statutes introduced by section 9510 G. C. formerly dealt with all insurance companies other than life, whether stock or mutual, except such mutual companies as are technically known as mutual protective associations. This is made very clear by even the most cursory examination of some of the sections in the chapter in which section 9510 appears, as they formerly existed. Thus, section 9515, dealing with the organization of such companies, provided how the elections of "a mutual company" should be conducted. Sections 9525 to 9528, inclusive, regulated mutual companies. Section 9529 drew the distinction previously mentioned between a mutual company as such and a mutual protective association existing under sections 9593 et seq. Section 9538 dealt with the rights of members of mutual companies. Sections 9550 to 9553, inclusive, and sections 9557 and 9558 also dealt with mutual companies.

In this same connection the distinction between a mutual protective association and a mutual insurance company was and is drawn by section 9604 G. C., providing how a mutual protective association might reorganize into a mutual fire insurance company.

At all times prior to the enactment of section 9607-2 in its present form the possible charter powers of a mutual company and a stock company were exactly the same. In other words, sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. applied alike to mutual companies and stock companies. So that it was the settled policy of the state at that time to afford no favors to either class of companies at the expense of the other in the matter of charter powers pertaining to the kind of risks that might be insured.

In 1914 the general assembly passed an act which repealed a number of the sections previously mentioned and enacted in lieu thereof what might be termed a new code relating to the organization of mutual insurance companies other than life. The section numbers of this act in the original were consecutive beginning with "1" (See 104 Ohio Laws, 202). The Attorney-General gave to the act the supplemental code numbers 9607-1 to 9607-29, inclusive. Originally this act dealt only with the manner of organization and the special regulations pertaining to mutual companies, including the reorganization of a mutual protective association into a mutual company, specifically preserving the distinction between a mutual protective association and a mutual company. (See section 9607-27 G. C.).

The passage of this act of 1914 did not in anywise disturb the settled policy of the state which has just been described, for the second section of that act, designated as section 9607-2, originally provided that:

> "A domestic mutual company may be organized with such powers to transact the business of insurance as are, or may be, granted by law to stock fire insurance companies organized under the laws of this state."

In other words, after the passage of the law which took the section numbers 9607-1 et seq. in the year 1914, we still went to sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 and like sections to find possible charter powers of a mutual company.

Now in 1917 section 9607-2 was amended so as to take on its present form. It is to be admitted that the draftsman of this amendment did an inappropriate thing: instead of amending the section which dealt with possible charter powers he amended the section which had formerly declared the policy of the state that there should be no distinction between the possible powers of a stock company and those of a mutual company. It may be argued that in so doing he manifested an intention, which must have been shared by the members who voted for the measure, to overturn the policy of the state and to deal separately with the charter powers of mutual companies. If this was the original intention it was certainly changed in the processes of legislation by the sentence already considered, which in effect provides, as formerly, that the charter powers of a mutual company shall be the same as those of a stock company.

In other words, this legislative history discloses the following situation: Formerly we had a section that prescribed the charter powers of insurance companies and primarily applied to stock insurance companies; we also had another section stating that the powers of stock and mutual companies should be the same; then there was enacted a section prescribing primarily (no doubt) the powers of mutual companies, but also providing, as had been the previous rule, that the powers of stock companies should be the same. In other words, broadly though somewhat inaccurately speaking, we have it that formerly the possible charter powers of mutual companies were to be ascertained by reference to what the powers of stock companies were; while by virtue of the most recent amendment the powers of stock companies are to be ascertained by reference to what the powers of mutual companies are. The process is reversed but the result is the same—the powers of the two companies are the same.

Now as a matter of proper and orderly legislation the purpose of the act of 1917 would have been better subserved by amending sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. than by amending section 9607-2. Technically, sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. remain in force; they have not been repealed. But the subsequent amendment of section 9607-2 covers a great part of, if not the entire subject matter of these sections and so long as it remains in force must be given controlling effect to the extent that it does overlap the other sections. It is impossible to regard the new section as a cumulative measure for this is clearly inconsistent with the use of the word "only" therein. This word clearly implies a negative to the effect that things not included within the enumeration which it makes shall not be done. Therefore, if there is anything which a stock or a mutual insurance company could be authorized to do under sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C., but which is not authorized under section 9607-2 G. C., it is not now permissible because the latter section specifically provides that only the "first kind of insurance" therein mentioned may be transacted by a company engaged in that kind of business generally.

In the same connection another consideration presents itself. Section 9607-2 either does or does not apply to existing stock companies to the extent that they may avail themselves of it by amendment to their articles of incorporation. If it does not apply, then existing stock companies, and for that matter new stock companies, are limited to the powers mentioned in sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. if they engage in the first kind of insurance mentioned in section 9510. But if the effect of section 9607-2 is to enlarge in any respect the powers of such companies, either existing or new, then it must also be given such restricted effect as it has. It would not be open to companies of that class to accept its benefits without also being subject to its burdens. The section operates as a whole and not in parts.

It has been suggested to me that the phrase "the first kind of insurance" as used in section 9607-2 denotes the kind of insurance mentioned in section 9593 G. C., dealing with mutual protective associations, that being the first section in the chapter in which section 9607-2 is found. This is a very forced interpretation of the section which is scarcely permissible in view of the use of the word "following" in the same context. But if it were permissible at all it would be entirely negatived by the above outlined history of the section under consideration, and particularly that part of it which shows how the section happened to get into the chapter in which it is found, and further that part of it which shows how carefully the distinction between a mutual protective association and a mutual insurance company has always been preserved.

It is not meant in this opinion to hold that sections 9510, 9511 and 9556 G. C. are repealed by implication in their entirety. That question is left undetermined. For example, it is not at all clear that section 9607-2 deals with anything else than the organization of domestic companies. This appears to be its intended effect because section 9607-19, as amended by the same act, deals with the admission of one kind of foreign companies, viz.: "a foreign mutual company." Therefore it would seem that foreign stock companies are still governed by section 9510 G. C. However, as stated, no opinion is expressed on this point nor on the point as to whether the state of the law thus resulting would be violative of any federal or state constitutional limitation.

For the foregoing reasons it is the opinion of this department that, except in the particulars previously noted, in which respect the amended articles of incorporation should be corrected, the said amended articles of The National Fire Insurance Company, which is assumed to be a domestic company, may be received and filed by the secretary of state, the charter powers assumed therein being authorized by section 9607-2 of the General Code, which with respect to the business of fire insurance as defined in paragraph 1 thereof has the effect of enlarging in some respects such charter powers as compared with those formerly authorized for the transaction of this class of insurance business by section 9510 G. C.

It is only necessary to add that in the opinion of this department the amendment by implication resulting from the amendment of section 9607-2 and its effect upon the pre-existing law, as laid down in the other sections under consideration may be appropriated to the use of a corporation originally organized under section 9510 G. C. In other words, section 9607-2 is not limited in its application to companies organized after its enactment.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS AND INSPECTORS OF ELECTIONS—ALPHABETICAL SETS OF REGISTRATION BOOKS LOST—NEW LIST CAN BE MADE FROM ORIGINAL REGISTRATION—WHEN BOTH ALPHABETICAL LISTS AND ORIGINAL REGISTRATION BOOKS ARE LOST—HOW NEW ALPHABETICAL LISTS CAN BE PREPARED.

1. When the alphabetical sets of registration books are lost or destroyed, and not in the possession of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, and the original registration book is in the possession of the board, new alphabetical lists can be made up from the original registration book for the use of the registrars, clerks, and judges of election.

2. When the alphabetical lists and original registration books are lost or destroyed, new alphabetical lists can be prepared from the bound volumes of registered voters required to be made under the provisions of section 4917 G. C. and from such other papers or information as are in the possession of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 4, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts submitted to you by the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections for Franklin county:

> "In a recent election contest case, held in this county, the entire set of registration books in precinct 'E' of the 14th ward and both alphabetical sets of registration books of precinct 'C' of the 12th ward for the year 1918 were used in evidence before the Hon. E. B. Kinkead, judge of the court of common pleas of Franklin county, Ohio. The court and officials are unable to locate the above registration books
> At a meeting of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections for Franklin county, Ohio, held on Saturday, July 19, 1919, all members concurring, we were authorized to request you to furnish this board with an official opinion as to what course this board is to pursue at our special registration on August 9 and the August 12, 1919, primary election in the above precincts."

From the above statement of facts it is apparent that in precinct "E" of the 14th ward of the city of Columbus, the entire set of registration books will be lacking for use in the primary on Tuesday, August 12, 1919, and that the same condition will obtain in precinct "C" of the 12th ward of the same city, as far as the alphabetical lists prepared for such precincts are concerned. The question at issue involves only the primary election of August 12th, because new registration lists must be prepared in the city of Columbus in the month of October prior to the November election of 1919, because such city is an annual registration city as described by the statutes.

Section 4975 of the General Code bears upon the registration of electors prior to any primary election and reads as follows:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors in municipalities where registration of electors is required by law, shall, prior to any primary election, make such provision as shall be necessary and reasonable for the transfer upon the registration books and the registration of all persons, not previously registered, who may qualify themselves to vote at the ensuing November election. No person shall be admitted to vote at any primary election, in such municipalites, unless he shall have caused himself to be registered as an elector therein, in the manner provided by law for the registration of electors.'

It is noted from the above section that no person shall be permitted to vote in the primary election of August 12th unless such person shall be properly registered as an elector in the precinct where he resides and in the manner provided by law for the registration of electors, that is, the names to appear in the various books and forms as provided in the statutes describing the forms for registration of electors.

It might be said that the electors in the precinct or precincts in question had registered, and were registered, in the manner provided by law, at some previous date and that the fact that such records are lost, as indicated in your statement of facts, is no fault of the electors residing in such precincts This is true in the fullest degree that it is no fault of the electors that the registration books, which are the evidence of proper registration under the law, are missing and the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections is, therefore, confronted with the question of providing on August 12, 1919, a proper registration list in the precinct where such lists are missing, in order that every elector in such precincts may be registered and have an opportunity to vote, for the law plainly provides that no person shall vote at any primary election in a municipality unless he shall be properly registered as an elector therin; and the statutes mean that upon the date of the primary election there should be in each precinct the registration books provided for by the statutes.

Under section 4975 G. C., supra, the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, in municipalities where registration of electors is required by law, has broad powers, for it may make such provisions as shall be necessary and reasonable for the registration of all persons not previously registered.

In addition to such section 4975, attention is invited to the following quotation from the election laws of Ohio:

"Sec. 4887. While exercising office under this or any other law regulating elections, all registrars of electors * * * at all hazards * * * shall preserve and secure the registers, poll books, * * * at every election from violence, fraud, or tampering

Sec. 4874. The board of deputy state supervisors * * * shall provide for the * * * preservation * * * of books, blanks and forms necessary for the registrations and elections herein designated. * * *"

Sec. 4918. After making and returning such lists to the board of deputy state supervisors, the registrars shall make in books, to be prepared and furnished them by the board, duplicate lists of all registered electors in their precinct, arranged alphabetically in the order of their surnames, followed by their full Christian names, ages and residences, as registered, and the registry number of each prefixed. * * * These lists shall be carefully compared by the registrars of each precinct with the registers thereof and with each other, and then certified by them in the form prescribed for the lists returned to the board of deputy state supervisors, and at the openings of the polls at the next succeeding election shall be there produced by them for the use of the judges, as herein provided.

Sec. 4891. * * * in annual general registration cities, on or before the first day of September of each year, the board shall procure and have at its office duplicate books for each election precinct in such city for the registration of electors therein, which shall be styled and known as 'registers of electors'.

Section 4893. On Wednesday in the fifth week before the November election, each year, the registrars of each precinct in such city shall apply for such lists and such registers and the map of their precinct and such printed instructions for the discharge of their duties as the board of deputy state supervisors may lawfully prescribe."

Section 4893 G. C., last quoted, provides that the registration lists covering the old registration shall be called for in the fifth week before the November election in order that such registration lists can be used for comparison purposes on the days of the new registration, which takes place each year in every annual registration city in the month of October, as provided by section 4894 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

"Section 4894. The days for the general registration of electors in cities wherein annual general registration is required * * * shall be Thursday in the fifth week and Friday and Saturday in the third week next before the day of the general election in November in each year.

Section 4901. Within a sufficient time previous to such state or other public election, the registrars of each precinct in such city shall obtain the preceding register made by them from the board of deputy state supervisors * * *. Such registrars shall take all such preceding registers of their respective precincts, so required to be furnished them, as hereinbefore provided * * * and make a report of their proceedings carefully noting any and all changes found, together with such additional names of the electors registered by them to the board of deputy state supervisors.

Section 4911. * * * No person shall be entitled to vote at any election in such city unless he shall establish his residence by causing himself to be registered in the precinct where he shall claim to reside, in the manner and at the time required herein, nor shall a ballot be received by the judges at any election under any pretense whatever, unless the name of the person offering it shall have been entered on both of the registers of the precinct in which he claims to vote, as herein provided. It shall be the duty of each elector resident in any such city to see that his name has been so registered."

Appearing under the chapter headed primary elections, attention is invited to the following language of section 4967 G. C.:

"The county boards of deputy state supervisors of elections shall have all the powers granted and perform all the duties imposed by the laws governing general elections. * * * All statutory provisions relating to general elections * * * shall, as far as applicable, apply to and govern primary elections."

Section 4980 provides:

"At such election only legally qualified electors, or such as will be legally qualified electors at the next ensuing general election, may vote, and all such electors may vote only in the election precinct where they reside * * *. Affiliation shall be determined by the vote of the elector making application to vote, at the last general election held in even numbered years."

From all of the above quoted sections of the statutes, it would seem that no person can vote in any precinct on August 12th, such being the primary election, unless there is present in such election booth the evidence that such person is properly registered in that precinct, and it is therefore necessary that the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in Franklin county shall take steps under section 4975 G. C. to see that such registration lists for such precincts shall be present and in possesison of the judges of election in such precincts on the day of the primary, August 12, 1919.

It is presumed that the election board in question has carried out the clear mandate of the law provided for in section 4917 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "* * * A copy of the complete registration prior to a November election from each precinct shall be retained by the board of deputy state supervisors, and each year, after the close of the annual registration, bound together in a volume and preserved in its office. They shall cause at least fifty additional copies of such list respectively to be printed in pamphlet form for immediate distribution."

It would seem, therefore, that even if the original registration books and alphabetical lists were taken into court and from some cause or other were lost, the bound volume provided for in section 4917, to be preserved in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, would be available. In precinct "E" of the 14th ward the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of election have the original registration list, which contains a correct list of all the voters of that precinct. Only the alphabetical set required to be made by the registrars is lost. Therefore, since the original list is in their possession, it will only be necessary for them to make the new alphabetical list from this record as is required in the first instance. However, in precinct "C" of the 12th ward a more serious question arises because both the original registration books and the alphabetical lists are missing. I am informed, however, that the bound copy required by the above mentioned section is in the office of the board.

Section 4917 does not say that the election board may make this copy, but says that they shall do it, and the seeming intent of the law in question is to take care of just such a situation as is now confronting us; that if the original copy is lost the other official copy could be available and from these official copies the form books could be made up in an official manner. This bound copy contains the exact list of voters in the various precincts on the last registration day. I am informed, however, after communicating with the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of election of Franklin county, that this list does not show who was transferred from this precinct on the evening prior to the last general election as provided by law, nor does it show the names of those who were transferred into this precinct at said time. They have, however, the transfer slips, so that they can make a correct list of all the voters eligible to vote at the last general election, with the exception of those who were transferred to another precinct. The only objection to this list, then, would be that it might show that there were persons eligible to vote in this precinct who had been transferred prior to the last general election, but I do not think that this would be a serious discrepancy, and if a voter would attempt to vote in any precinct except the one in which he was entitled to cast his ballot he would be subject to prosecution.

I am also informed that this list was not verified and there was a possibility that this printed list did not contain the names of all of the voters who had registered at the time the list was printed. However, this is a record which is required by law to be made by the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections and therefore it must be presumed to be correct; but if said board is satisfied that there are any mistakes or errors in this bound volume, they have the authority to correct this record and supply any omissions therein.

> "A recording officer while in office may amend his record by correcting mistakes or supplying omissions so as to make it conform to the facts."
> 34 Cyc., p. 591.

It is the clear duty of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections to have registration books, in proper form, in every precinct in the city on the day of the primary election, Tuesday, August 12th, for if there are no such books in the precinct on that day it must follow that the persons who attempt to vote at such primary could not do so because there would be no evidence at hand that they lived in the precinct and were qualified to vote therein.

Clearly, every citizen who is qualified by residence and age, who resides in the precinct in question, is entitled to vote at the primary election on Tuesday, August 12th, if he cares to do so, and he should not be prohibited from doing so because the registration books have disappeared. Since the voters have registered as required by law, it is incumbent upon the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of election to exhaust all means within their power to see that such registration books are on hand so that no citizen will be deprived of his ballot.

Inasmuch as your inquiry refers to the specific date of August 12, 1919, it is important to notice that such date is also the time mentioned in senate bill 187 for the calling of a special school election for the purpose of voting on increased levies for school purposes. It is entirely possible that such election will be held in the Coulmbus city school district, which includes the precincts in question. I am also informed that special elections on other questions will also be held in this precinct on that day. This makes it doubly important that there should be in each and every precinct in the city in question a valid and complete registration list on the morning of Tuesday, August 12, 1919.

Bearing on the question of special elections and the registration therefor, section 4941 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The provisions of the preceding sections of this chapter shall extend to any special election authorized by law to be held in a registration city * * *;
> 1. * * * on Friday and Saturday in the second week before any such special election, the registrars of each precinct shall obtain the last registers made by them from the board of deputy state supervisors, and attend at the place in such precinct appointed for the registration of electors * * * and receive application for registration by such qualified electors residing therein as are not already registered. * * *
> 9. If the board of deputy state supervisors is of the opinion that it is unnecessary to require the registrars of each precinct to attend in each precinct for the registration of voters for a special election, such board may make such other reasonable provisions for transfers and the registration of voters at such election as it deems proper.
> 10. When a new ward has been created, or the boundaries of any ward or the precincts thereof have been changed after the general registration and before any such special election following, the board of deputy state supervisors shall appoint election officers, rearrange the voting precincts, provide for registration of electors not already registered, make new registers, certify the registration of registered electors whose voting precinct has been changed, and make all necessary arrangements and regulations for holding elections in such new or altered wards and precincts. The right of any registered elector to vote shall not be prejudiced by any error in making out the certified list of registered voters."

The fact that the legislature made specific provision that electors should not be prejudiced in the case of rearranging the boundary lines, in my opinion, only emphasizes the fact that if they are registered they should not be prejudiced by any error, and the fact that such a provision is not made in any other case would not change the electors' rights in any manner. I believe the same principle would apply in all cases and that any error made by the board of deputy state supervisors would not bar the elector's right to vote if he could establish the fact that he had properly registered as required bylaw.

I am therefore of the opinion that in precinct "E" of the 14th ward a new alphabetical list can be prepared from the bound copy of the list of voters in said precinct, together with the certificates of transfers into this precinct which the board has in its possession. If any elector contends that he has registered and his name is not found on this list or transfer certificate, and can satisfy the board that this is correct, the board has authority to correct the list so as to conform to the facts.

It is my opinion therefore that

(1) When the alphabetical sets of registration books are lost or destroyed, and the original registration book is in the possession of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, new alphabetical lists can be made up from the original registration book for the use of the registrars, clarks and judges of election.

(2) When the alphabetical lists and original registration books are lost or destroyed, new alphabetical lists can be prepared from the bound volumes of registered voters required to be made under the provisions of section 4917 G. C. and from such other papers or information as are in the possession of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of election.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—WHERE NO LEGAL ADMINISTRATION IS BEING HAD FOR SETTLEMENT OF ESTATES WHICH MAY OR MAY NOT BE LIABLE FOR PAYMENT OF TAX.

There is no necessity to consider whether or not the tax commission of Ohio can apply for the appointment of an administrator in the case of an estate in which it appears probable that some inheritance tax is due, and the other parties in interest refuse or neglect to ask for administration.

An application for determination as to the inheritance taxes due on account of the estate of a deceased person may be made to the probate court which would have jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary or of administration on such estate, by the heirs or next of kind of the decedent or by the tax commission, though no administration is being had.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date requesting the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "In connection with the administration of the inheritance tax law this commission is encountering many cases in which no legal administration is being had for the settlement of estates which may or may not be liable for the payment of the tax. The commission is uncertain as to the proper procedure to adopt under such circumstances and desire to have your advice.
> We ask therefore:
> 1. In cases where it appears probable that some tax is due and the heirs refuse or neglect to ask for administration, ought the commission to do so?

2. Can an application be made by the heirs of a decedent in the probate court of the proper county solely for a determination as to inheritance tax without having full administration?

3. If such an application can be made, can the tax commission on its part similarly invoke the jurisdiction of the probate court in connection with estates where no administration is being had, for the sole purpose of determining if any inheritance tax is due and the amount, if any?"

The first question which you ask will not be considered as a question of law in view of the answer to be given to the other two questions which you submit. That is to say, it will not be necessary in the view taken of the general purport of the inheritance tax law to consider the question as to whether or not the tax commission of Ohio, sustaining such relation as it does to the new inheritance tax, can qualify as a "creditor" under the general administration sections of our statutes; though it is intimated that if it were necessary to express an opinion upon this point the ruling would be in the negative.

The following provisions of the new inheritance tax law may be quoted in connection with the remaining questions in your letter:.

"Section 5340. The probate court of any county of the state having jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary or of administration upon the estate of a decedent, on the succession to whose property a tax is levied by this subdivision of this chapter, or to appoint a trustee of such estate, or any part thereof, or to give ancillary letters thereon, shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the questions arising under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, and to do any act in relation thereto authorized by law to be done by a probate court in other mettars or proceedings coming within its jurisdiction; and if two or more probate courts shall be entitled to exercise such jurisdiction, the court first acquiring jurisdiction, hereunder, shall retain the same to the exclusion of every other probate court .Such jurisdiction shall exist not only with respect to successions in which the jurisdiction of such court would otherwise be invoked, but shall extend to all cases covered by this act, to the end that succession inter vivos, taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, may be reached thereby.

Section 5341. The county auditor shall be the inheritance tax appraiser for his county. The probate court, upon its own motion may, or upon the application of any interested person, including the tax commission of Ohio, shall by order direct the county auditor to fix the actual market value of any property the succession to which is subject to the tax levied by this subdivision of this chapter. Such auditor shall forthwith give notice by mail to all persons known to him to have a claim or interest in the property to be appraised, including the tax commission of Ohio, and to such persons as the probate court may by order direct, of the time and place when he will appraise such property. * * *"

Section 5345. From the report of appraisal and other evidence relating to any such estate before the probate court, such court shall forthwith upon the filing of such report, by order entered upon the journal thereof, find and determine, as of course, the actual market value of all estates, the amount of taxes to which the succession or successions thereto are liable, the successors and legal representatives liable therefor; and the townships or municipal corporations in which the same originated. Provided, however, that in case no application for appraisement is made the probate court may make and enter such findings and determinations without such appraisement. * * *"

By the first of the above quoted provisions jurisdiction is conferred upon the probate court in inheritance tax cases. Though this jurisdiction depends upon the jurisdiction to grant letters testamentary or of administration, it is not conditioned upon the actual granting of such letters testamentary or of administration.

The second of the sections from which quotation has been made provides for the initiation of the proceeding to determine the tax. This proceeding is not conditioned in any way upon the granting of letters testamentary or of administration. The proceeding may be initiated by the tax commission of Ohio.

These considerations lead me to return to your second and third questions unequivocal answers in the affirmative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for the opinion of this department upon the following questions:

> "Is there any statutory limitation to the powers of the presidents of the boards of education of the districts constituting a supervision district which contains one or more weak districts receiving state aid under the provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1 of the General Code of Ohio as to the maximum amount of salary that may be paid a district superintendent?

For what length of time may a district superintendent be employed the first time after a supervision district has been formed? For what length of time may he be employed thereafter? "

Section 4739 G. C. provides that each supervision district shall be under the direction of a district superintendent, who shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district, unless where such supervision district contains three or less rural or village school districts such district superintendent shall then be chosen by the members of the boards of education of such school districts in joint session. District superintendents shall be employed upon the nomination of the county superintendent, but the board may elect a district superintendent who has not been nominated by the county superintendent, by a majority vote of the rural and village presidents composing such district. The section means that the district superintendent, being an administrative officer, can suggest a name to the board, but the authority goes no further, as far as the law is concerned, in recommending either the salary or the time of the contract, the latter two matters being entirely within the purview and jurisdiction of the electing body.

Section 4743 of the General Code reads as follows:

"The compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made and by the same authority, which appoints him; such compensation shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. The salary of any district superintendent shall in no case be less than one thousand dollars per annum, half of which salary not to exceed seven hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by the state and half by the supervision district, except where the number of teachers in any supervision district is less than forty in which case the amounts paid by the state shall be such proportion of half the salary as the ratio of the number of teachers employed is to forty. The half paid by the supervision district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in such district in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

The above section provides that the district superintendent shall have his compensation fixed at the same time that he is appointed and by the same authority which appoints him, that is, the electing body. Growing out of said section, your question now arises as to whether the figures mentioned in section 4743 place a mandatory limit upon the amount of salary that may be paid a district superintendent by the various boards of education composing a supervision district, such salary being paid out of the county board of education fund upon the order of the presidents of the county board, but a portion of which is afterwards prorated among the village and rural school districts in such district in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district.

Attention is invited to the fact that section 4744-1 G. C., which provides for the salary of the county superintendent and the portions that shall be paid by the state and by the school districts composing the county districts, reads practically the same as section 4743 G. C., which latter section treats of the salary of the district superintendent. While section 4743 G. C. has never been construed on the particular point in question, yet the same principle has been covered in an opinion of the Attorney-General, rendered upon section 4744-1, bearing upon the salary of the county superintendent, which section also carries the language that "half of such salary shall be paid by the state * * * and in no case may the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars." The opinion referred to, bearing upon the question as to whether a county board of education could pay more than $2,000.00 salary to a county superintendent, inasmuch as the state, under the law at that time, was permitted to furnish but one thousand dollars of the whole, was rendered on September 21, 1914, to the prosecuting attorney of Cuyahoga county, and appears at page 1265, Vol. 2, 1914 Annual Report of the Attorney-General. The syllabus of such opinion reads:

> "There is nothing in section 4744-1 G. C. which prohibits a county board of education from fixing the salary of the county superintendent at any amount in excess of twelve hundred dollars per year as it may deem proper.
> When the board of education fixes the salary of the county superintendent in an amount greater than two thousand dollars, the county district is to pay the balance remaining after deducting the one thousand dollars to be paid by the state and such balance is to be apportioned and certified as provided by sections 4744-1, 4744-2 and 4744-3 G. C."

In a very exhaustive opinion upon this section, which is largely analogous to section 4743, which governs the pay of district superintendents, the Attorney General said:

> "If it were the intent of the legislature that the salary should in no event exceed two thousand dollars, why was this not said? A minimum is provided definitely, 'the salary shall be fixed * * * to be not less than $1,200.00 per year.' No maximum is named. It is provided that half the salary is to be paid by the state, the balance by the county school district. It is then provided that the amount to be paid by the state in no case shall be more than $1,000.00 This is in a separate sentence. * * * If the maximum salary is to be $2,000.00, then, as the legislature has not so said, after limiting the amount to be paid by the state to $1,000.00 it should also limit, in the same way, the amount to be paid by the county school district. This is not done. Can it be inferred that because the provision is for the state to pay one-half of such salary, and in no case to pay more than $1,000.00, the salary is limited by law to $2,000.00. I do not think so; for the following reasons:
> First. A definite minimum of $1,200.00 is provided.
> Second. No maximum is provided.
> Third. Limitation s expressly placed on the amount the state may pay.
> Fourth. No limitation is placed on the amount to be paid by the county school district."

After discussing the matter further very exhaustively, the Attorney-General concludes with this statement:

> "In any event I cannot see that this alters the main question; that is, that the salary is not limited by the act, to $2,000.00. Even if it were true that not to exceed half of the salary is to be paid by the county district, the fact still remains that nowhere in this statute does it say that the half to be paid by the county school district is not to exceed $1,000.00.
> * * * upon first reading it, one at once gains the impression that a limitation of $2,000.00 is placed upon the salary, but upon carefully considering it, from every angle, it is perfectly plain that this is not the case, and whether it be by design or not, the statute carefully refrains not only from placing any maximum limit upon the amount of the salary of the county superintendent, but also from placing any maximum limit upon the portion of the salary which the county district is to pay."

The above opinion is quoted for the reason that the same language which gives the salary of the county superintendent also appears to be the governing language in section 4743, supra, which governs the compensation of the district superintendent, and it seems to have been the policy throughout the state to have accepted such opinion of the Attorney-General as bearing upon both the maximum salary of the county superintendent and the maximum salary of the district superintendent.

An examination of the files in the office of the superintendent of public instruction shows that while section 4743 G. C. might indicate that the salary of any district superintendent could not be more than $1,500.00, for the reason that the portion paid by the state is $750.00 as the state's maximum, the majority of district superintendents in Ohio, from the records in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, have been receiving more than $1,500.00, the state paying $750.00, the maximum of the state's portion under section 4743 G. C., and the remainder being paid by the village and rural school district in such district in proportion to the number of teachers employed in such district. However, where the number of teachers is less than forty in such supervision district, the portion paid by the state is that fractional amount of $750.00 which the number of teachers bears to forty teachers; that is, a supervision district with thirty-four teachers would receive 34–40 of the $750.00 allowed by the state and the remainder of such salary would be made up by the districts themselves, who are the employing body.

It is entirely clear that the construction put upon section 4744-1 G. C., by the former Attorney-General, in 1914, would apply with equal force in construing section 4743 G. C., that is, that there is nothing in the law which prevents a supervision district from paying more than the $1,000.00 minimum mentioned in such section, or the $1,500.00 that might be in force from such section on the basis that the state was to always pay one-half of the total salary.

You indicate that such supervision district might contain one or more weak school districts receiving state aid under section 7595 and 7595-1 of the General Code, and desire to know if the fact that there is one or more weak schools in such supervision district would obviate against the general provisions which apply in other supervision districts regarding the district superintendent's salary.

It is clear there is no connection between the two for the reason that the aid which is given by the state to all supervision districts, in order to enable them to more easily comply with the requirements of the law that they have a superintendent, applies uniformly over the entire state and has nothing to do with the "state aid to weak school districts," and such aid granted under section 4743 G. C., and also under section 4740 G. C., is allowed whether such districts are weak or not. The Attorney-General has previously ruled upon this point and attention is invited to opinion 1179, Vol. 2, 1916, Opinions of the Attorney-General.

In answer to your question as to what length of time the district superintendent may be employed for the first time if a supervision district has been formed, attention is invited to section 4741 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "The first election of any district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year, thereafter he may be re-elected in the same district for a period not to exceed three years.'

Bearing upon the above section it may be said that the electing body which has the sole power to fix the compensation, as well as the term, has no authority to elect for a longer period than one year where such election is the first election of any district superintendent in a certain district. However, after such first employment has taken place for the one year term, and has been satisfactory, the law contemplates under section 4741 G. C. that the school system should be disturbed as little as possible by making new contracts for short periods, and where a district superintendent has been satisfactory, the policy of employment for more than one year should be encouraged for the reason that such employes would seemingly be able to give better service in that district by knowing that his tenure extended beyond the present school term. Not only is the teacher entitled to this consideration—and the law had it in mind when they set the maximum at three years—but the people of the district are also entitled to know whether continuous changes are liable to occur in the superintendency of the schools in which they are interested. If the law did not contemplate that elections of district superintendents, after the first election, should be for a longer period than one year, but not exceeding three years, then there would not have occurred in the law the maximum limitation of three years.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. There is nothing in section 4743 G. C. which prohibits the fixing of the salary of a district superintendent by the electing body at any amount in excess of $1,000.00 per year which it may deem proper.

2. When the salary of the district superintendent is fixed in an amount greater than $1,500.00, the supervision district is to pay the balance remaining after deducting the portion paid by the state and such balance is to be apportioned and certified as provided in sections 4744-1, 4744-2 and 4744-3 of the General Code.

3. The financial assistance rendered by the state in the payment of salaries of district superintendents, under section 4743 G. C. is of uniform operation in all supervision districts of the state and has no connection with state aid that may be given to weak school districts under section 7595 G. C.

4 District superintendents can be nominated by the county superintendent, but the electing body in such supervision district shall fix the compensation of the district superintendent as well as his term, which may be for a period not to exceed three years following his first contract for one year.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COPY OF ORDINANCE SHALL BE FILED WITH CITY AUDITOR OR VILLAGE CLERK BEFORE CIRCULATING REFERENDUM PETITION—SAID PROVISION OF SECTION 4227-6 G. C. IS MANDATORY.

The provision of section 4227-6 G. C. that a duly verified copy of an ordinance shall be filed with the city auditor or village clerk before circulating a referendum petition, is mandatory and jurisdictional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

HON. WILLIAM T. DIXON, Prosecuting Attorney, St. Clairsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date requesting my opinion relative to section 4227-6 G. C. was duly received, and reads as follows:

"Under date of May 6, 1919, the city council of the city of Bellaire, Ohio, passed an ordinance relative to permits to use public streets for public meetings, etc. This ordinance was approved by the mayor and is now law.

A referendum petition has been filed, with the required number of names, as provided by law.

No attempt was made to comply with section 4227-6 of the General Code. See volume 104 at the top of page 240, and no copy of the ordinance was filed with the city auditor.

Will the omission to comply with this section of the General Code invalidate the referendum?"

The statute referred to in your letter provides as follows:

"Whoever seeks to propose an ordinance or measure in a municipality by initiative petition or file a referendum petition against any ordinance or measure shall before circulating such petition file a duly certified copy of the proposed ordinance or measure with the city auditor, if it be a city, or with the village clerk, if it be a village."

It is my opinion that the filing of a duly verified copy of the proposed ordinance with the city auditor or village clerk, as the case may be, before circulating a referendum petition against it, as provided in that section, is mandatory and jurisdictional, and that failure so to do invalidates the referendum. This conclusion is justified under the doctrine of Wright vs. City of McMinnville, 59 Ore., 397; and State vs. Fulton, decided by the supreme court of Ohio on Janauary 28, 1919.

In Wright vs. City of McMinnville, supra, an initiative petition for an amendment to the city charter was filed with the proper officer, but the provision of the law requiring that notice of the election be posted in three public places in the city was not complied with. Notices of the election were issued, but only one copy posted, and in lieu of the other two postings the notice was printed in two consecutive issues of newspapers printed in the city, and also printed in a pamphlet and mailed to each voter, etc. The failure to post the notices as required by law was held fatal.

In the opinion of the court, speaking with respect to the particular statute involved, said:

"The command in this respect was imperative, and necessitated the posting of notices in three public places in the city, in the failing to comply with which the election was void."

In State vs. Fulton, supra, it was held that the provisions of the state constitution for the filing of petitions of proposed amendments to the constitutions, and for copies, arguments and explanations thereof, etc., are mandatory and jurisdictional.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

1. A county or city board of school examiners may not legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the sections of law respectively relating to such boards.

2. A county or city board of school examiners may not legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the law but which is considered by the examining and issuing board to logically be an extension of or logically related to, a branch or branches of study already enumerated in the law.

3. A board of education cannot legally pay a teacher for instructing in a branch of study not enumerated in the law.

4. A person who holds no certificate cannot be legally paid by a board of education for teaching in schools of the district over which the board has jurisdiction.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following questions:

> "1. May a county or city board of school examiners legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the sections of law respectively relating to such boards?
> 2. May a county or city board of school examiners legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the law, yet which is considered by the examining and issuing board to logically be an extension of, or logically be related to, a branch or branches of study already enumerated in the law?
> 3. If such boards may legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the law is the inclusion of that branch, in a certificate, to be made only upon the initiative of the examining and issuing board, or primarily and necessarily upon the suggestion or the desire of a board of education?
> 4. May a board of education legally pay a legally certificated teacher for instructing in a branch of study not enumerated in the law? May such board pay such teacher for instructing in a branch of study that is considered by that board to logically be an extension of, or logically be related to, a branch or branches of study already enumerated in the law and specifically covered by the certificate held?
> 5. May a person who holds no certificate whatever, unless it be for a non-enumerated branch, be legally paid by a board of education for instructing throughout the school year in a branch of study that is a part of the curriculum, yet is not enumerated in the law? May such board legally pay such person for instructing throughout the school year in a branch of study that is in both the curriculum and the law?"

Careful examination has been made of the enclosures and exhibits from the city of Cleveland, where this question arose, including the correspondence in 1917 between the state superintendent of instruction and the Cleveland school officials. It would seem that the condition has been corrected in that city, from the following statement by the secretary to the superintendent of schools of Cleveland, but for your future guidance an opinion is herein given.

In reply to the request of this department for further information that would be more recent than the file submitted, the secretary to the superintendent of schools of Cleveland says:

> "In 1917, the mayor's advisory war board established classes for the instruction of aliens who had applied for their second papers. These classes were established under an arrangement which provided that the board of education should appoint the teachers and supervise their work. The teachers were appointed and duly certificated. The payrolls covering their services were made up in the division of educational extension and sent to the mayor's board, out of whose funds they were paid.

During this school year these classes have been conducted on another plan. The teachers have been selected by the mayor's board and paid out of the board's funds. They have not been appointed by the board of education nor have they been certificated, except in cases where regular teachers holding certificates to teach in the public schools have been selected by the mayor's board for citizenship class work."

In order to determine what certificates may be issued by a board of examiners and to whom the same may be issued, it is first necessary to determine the exact powers of the various boards of school examiners mentioned in your inquiry, and to aid in such determination it will be necessary to note the several sections of the General Code which make reference thereto and the classes of certificates which each board is authorized to issue.

Section 7811 G. C. provides that there shall be a county board of school examiners for each county which shall consist of the county superintendent, one district superintendent and one other competent teacher, and section 7816 provides:

"The board shall make all needful rules and regulations for the proper discharge of its duties, and the conduct of its work, subject to statutory provisions and the approval of the superintendent of public instruction."

Section 7821 provides that county boards of school examiners may grant teachers' certificates for one year and three years which shall be valid in all villages and rural school districts of the county wherein they are issued. Section 7821-1 provides that all five year and eight year certificates now granted (that is, which were granted prior to the enactment of said section) shall continue in force until the end of their terms and shall be renewed by the superintendent of public instruction upon proof that the holders thereof have taught successfully until the time of each renewal.

Section 7821-2 G C. provides:

"All two-year and three-year primary, elementary and h gh school certificates now granted shall continue in force until the end of their terms and may be renewed by the county boards of examiners on proof of five years' successful teaching experience.'

Special certificates are provided for in section 7852 G. C., which reads as follows:

"No person shall be employed and enter upon the performance of his duties as a special teacher of music, drawing, painting, penmanship, gymnastics, German, French, Spanish, the commercial and industrial branches, or any one of them, in any elementary or high school supported wholly or in part by the state in any city, village, or rural school district, who has not obtained from a board of examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate of good moral character that he or she is qualified to teach the special branch or branches of study, and, in addition thereto, possesses an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching."

Emergency certificates are provided for by section 7832-1 G. C. as follows:

"A 'teacher's emergency certificate' which shall be valid for one year in any village or rural school district in the county may be granted by the county board of school examiners with the approval of the superintendent of public instruction to applicants who have had one year's experience teaching in the public schools whenever for any reason there is a shortage of teachers in such district."

The various certificates, whether issued for one or three years, or renewedfor two, three, five or eight years, are divided into three classes or kinds by the provisions of section 7829 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Three kinds of teachers' certificates only shall be issued by county boards of school examiners, which shall be styled respectively 'teacher's elementary school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in schools below high school rank, 'teacher's high school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in recognized high schools and for superintendents and 'teacher's special certificate,' valid in schools of all grades, but only for the branch or branches of study named therein."

An elementary school is defined as:

"Section 7648. An elementary school is one in which instruction and training are given in spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, English language, English grammar, composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil goverment, physiology and hygiene. Nothing herein shall abridge the power of boards of education to cause instruction and training to be given in vocal music, drawing, elementary, algebra, the elements of agriculture and other branches which they deem advisable for the best interests of the schools under their charge."

A high school is defined as:

"Section 7649. A high school is one of higher grade than an elementary school, in which instruction and training are given in approved courses in the history of the United States and other countries; composition, rhetoric, English and American literature; algebra and geometry; natural science, political or mental science, ancient or modern foreign languages, or both, commercial and industrial branches, or such of the branches named as the length of its curriculum makes possible. Also such other branches of higher grade than those to be taught in the elementary schools, with such advanced studies and advanced reviews of the common branches as the board of education directs."

It is most worthy of being noted here that while an elementary certificate is valid for all branches of study in schools below high school rank and the high school certificate is valid for all branches of study in recognized high schools and for superintendents, yet that teachers' special certificates are valid in schools of all grades but only for the branch or branches of studies mentioned therein. This is an indication of legislative intent which must not be overlooked.

Section 7830 G. C. provides:

"No person shall be employed or enter upon the performance of his duties as a teacher in any elementary school supported wholly or in part by the state in any village, or rural board district who has not obtained from a board of school examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate of good moral character; that he or she is qualified to teach orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, physiology, including narcotics, literature and elementary agriculture, and that he or she possess an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching."

Section 7831 G. C. provides:

"No person shall be employed or enter upon the performance of his duties as a teacher in any recognized high school supported wholly, or in part, by the state in any village, or rural school district, or act as a superintendent of schools in such district, who has not obtained from a board of examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate of good moral character; that he or she is qualified to teach six branches or more selected from the following course of study (three of which branches shall be algebra, rhetoric and physics); literature, general history, algebra, physics, physiology, including narcotics, Latin, German, rhetoric, civil government, geometry, physical geography, botany and chemistry, and high school agriculture; and that he or she possesses an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching."

So that, as noted by the above quoted sections, before a teacher can teach the elementary branches he must secure an elementary certificate and before he can teach the high school branches he must secure a high school certificate, and before he can teach the special branches he must secure a special certificate.

To recapitulate, then, with reference to county certificates, the board is permitted to grant the three classes, elementary, high and special, and outside of the emergency certificate which is granted by the board, with the approval of the superintendent of public instruction, no other kinds or class of county school certificates are provided for by our laws.

Coming now to the certificates which may be issued by the city board of school examiners, section 7838 G. C. provides that there shall be a city board of school examiners for each city school district. Such board shall consist of the city superintendent of schools and two other competent teachers serving full time in the dayschools of such city, and section 7841 G. C. provides that to secure a thorough examination of applicants in difficult branches, or special studies, the board may secure the temporary assistance of persons of sufficient knowledge in such branches or studies, who must promise on oath or affirmation to perform the duties of examiner faithfully and impartially.

Section 7844 G. C. provides for the issuing of one year and three year certificates; section 7845 G. C. provides for the renewal of all five and eight year certificates; Section 7846 G. C. provides for renewal of all two and three year certificates and section 7852 G. C. provides:

"The provisions of this chapter relating to the kinds of certificates authorized to be issued by the county boards of school examiners for teachers in elementary schools, high schools and for superintendents shall apply to city boards of school examiners; except that city boards, in their discretion, may require teachers in elementary schools to be examined in drawing, music, or German, if such subjects are a part of the regular work of such teachers."

That is, the provisions of section 7829, supra, which provides that there shall be three classes of certificates, viz., elementary, high and special, are made by the provisions of section 7852 G. C. to apply to city boards of school examiners and therefore if it was the intention of the legislature, as I think it was, that no one but the possessor of an elementary or a high school certificate, or one who would be permitted to teach in all grades, could secure a special certificate, then the city board of school examiners would have no right to issue special certificates to any person outside of those who are entitled to elementary or high school certificates.

Teachers are not permitted to teach in Ohio without a certificate. In School District No. 2, etc., vs. Dillman, 22 O. S., 194, it was held:

> "The law forbids the employment of a teacher who has not secured a certificate. * * * The mischief intended to be guarded against was the teaching of a school by an incompetent person * * *."

Section 7786 G. C., which is general in its nature, that is, applies to all boards of education, provides that:

> "No clerk of a board shall draw an order on the treasurer for the payment of a teacher for services until the teacher files with him such reports as are required by the superintendent of public instruction and the board of education, a legal certificate of qualification, or a true copy therof, covering the entire time of the service, and a statement of the branches taught. But orders may be drawn for the payment of special teachers of drawing, painting, penmanship, music, gymnastics, or a foreign language, on presentation of a certificate to the clerk, signed by a majority of the examiners, and the filing with him of a true copy thereof, covering the time for which the special teacher has been employed, and the specialty taught."

This opinion is based on existing law in force at this time and there should be read in conjunction herewith the provisions of new legislation on certificates which, however, is not effective until in September, 1919. After that time the provisions of senate bill 44, senate bill 134 and house bill 317, all bearing on certificates, will apply. These new laws in nowise militate against the holding herein, but rather strengthen it, for section 7831 G. C. has been amended to read:

> "* * * and no such certificate shall be issued by such authority except on the specific conditions provided by the statute."

These new laws, effective in September, 1919, provide for the certification of teachers to teach vocational subjects under the supervision of the state board of education; elimination of German from teachers' examinations with an oath of allegiance by teachers; the issuing of elementary and high school life certificates, including kindergarten, primary certificates by the superintendent of public instruction; in fact the legislature has seemed to make more clear the provisions that certificates cannot be granted except upon subjects specifically provided by law.

A further discussion of the payment of instructors in branches not provided by existing law, is found in opinion No. 396, under date of June, 1919, to the superintendent of public instruction. holding that a board of education could not say that military training was an extension of "physical training" and that it could not be placed in the curriculum under section 7721 G. C., which provides for physical training.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

> "1. A county or city board of school examiners may not legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the sections of law respectively relating to such boards.
> 2. A county or city board of school examiners may not legally issue certificates for a particular branch of study not enumerated in the law, but which is considered by the examining and issuing board to logically be an extension of or logically related to, a branch or branches of study already enumerated in the law.

3. The answers to your first and second questions answer your third.

4. A board of education cannot legally pay a teacher for instructing in a branch of study not enumerated in the law.

5. A person who holds no certificate cannot be legally paid by a board of education for teaching in schools of the district over which the board has jurisdiction.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—CENTRALIZATION AND BOND ISSUE FOR SAID CENTRALIZATION CANNOT BE SUBMITTED TO ELECTORS AT SAME TIME—SEE SECTION 4726-1 G. C.—CENTRALIZATION UNDER SECTION 4726-1 G. C. CAN BE SUBMITTED AT EITHER A GENERAL OR SPECIAL ELECTION.

1. The question of centralization of schools and the issuance of bonds necessary to the furtherance of the scheme of centralization, can not be submitted at the same time to the qualified electors of the school district under section 4726-1 G. C.

2. Where the qualified electors in the township proceed to the centralization of schools under section 4726-1, such question can be submitted at either a general election or special election called for that purpose by the respective boards of education concerned, or upon the order of the county board of education, or upon petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified male electors in such township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio:

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following two questions:

"1. Can the question of centralization and issuing of bonds be submitted at the same time to the qualified electors of school districts under section 4726-1 of the General Code to be voted upon at the same time, or will it be necessary for them to be voted upon at separate elections?

2. Can centralization be voted upon at a special election in accordance with the provisions of section 4726-1 of the General Code?"

In reply to your first question your attention is invited to opinion No. 41, dated January 30, 1915, and appearing at page 67, Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, wherein the syllabus reads:

"A proposition for the centralization of schools under the provisions of section 4726, General Code, and a proposition to issue bonds authorized by section 7625 G. C. may both be submitted to the electors of the rural school district at one election."

In arriving at such conclusion the Attorney-General said:

"I assume that the bonds referred to are deemed necessary to the furtherance of the scheme of centralization, and I shall confine my answer to such state of facts.

I am of the opinion that the question of centralization of schools as provided in section 4726 G. C., as amended in 104 O. L. 139, and the question of the issuance of bonds as authorized by section 7625 G. C., may both be submitted to the electors of a rural school district at one election. It might be suggested, however, that before the issue of such bonds would thereby be authorized, there must be a concurrence of a majority of the votes cast at such election in favor of both centralization and the issuing of bonds, and the answer implies that the election shall be in all further respects in compliance with the statutes relative thereto."

It is noted that the above opinion is upon section 4726 G. C., while you make your inquiry relative to the same question as regards section 4726-1 G. C., which latter section takes care of the question of centralization in a township in which there is more than one rural or special district.

It may be said in a general way that unless section 4726-1 G. C. be read in conjunction with section 4726 G. C., the supplemental section would not be put into force for the reason, among others, that section 4726-1, taken alone, does not provide for the manner of calling an election for the centralization of the districts in question in the township and therefore it is necessary that this special section, speaking of centralization, must be read in the light of section 4726 G. C., which section, preceding the supplemental section, provides for the calling of elections on school centralization.

But while a school district operating under section 4726 G. C., in order to bring about centralization can hold the election on centralization and vote on the question of a bond issue on one and the same day, a close analysis of section 4726-1 G. C. (which governs where more than one district is concerned) shows that under such section the questions must be submitted separately and at different times.

Section 4726-1 G. C. reads as follows:

"In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated, five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

Section 7625 G. C. reads as follows:

"When the board of education of any school district determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to purchase a site or sites to erect a schoolhouse or houses, to complete a partially built schoolhouse, to enlarge, repair or furnish a schoolhouse, or to purchase real estate for playground for children, or to do any or all of such things, that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-nine and seventy-six hundred and thirty, are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose and that a bond issue is necessary, the board shall make an estimate of the probable amount of money required for such purpose or purposes and at a general election or special election called for that purpose, submit to the electors of the district the question of the issuing of bonds for the amount so estimated. Notices of the election required herein shall be given in the manner provided by law for school elections."

It will be noted that to call an election to issue bonds for a new school building the election must be called by "the board of education" of any school district. In the case at hand, under section 4726-1 G. C., there is more than one board of education prior to centralization being passed, and until centralization is passed by a majority vote, "then the districts shall proceed as though no election were held" (section 4726-1 G. C.). The section on bonds (section 7625 G. C.) further provides that "the board shall make an estimate" and the question shall be submitted to "the electors of the district." Here "the district" in question is not created until after centralization carries by a majority of all votes cast, and there follows a new school board appointed by the probate judge of the county, and it is for this new board of education to call the election on the bond issue in the new centralized district. The old boards involved pass out with centralization, while this is not true under section 4726 G. C., under which one district centralizes and no new board is created. Where centralization is had in one district under section 4726 G. C., the same board would make the estimate and call the election, and there is no objection to such board submitting both the centralization and bond issue questions on the same day, but this condition does not obtain where two or more districts operate under section 4726-1 G. C., for the reason that "the district" to vote on the bonds under section 7625 G. C. secures a new school boacd which is to "make the estimate" and call the bond election. Taxes to take care of the bond issue must be laid uniformly over the whcle of the new district and the bonds to be issued must be the bonds of the new district and retiring boards of education would have no legal authority to call a bond election in a newly created district that was to have a new board of education appointed by the probate judge.

Section 7626 G. C. reads in part:

"If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition to issue bonds, vote in favor thereof, the board thereby shall be authorized to issue bonds for the amount indicated by the vote. The issue and sale thereof shall be provided for by a resolution * * *."

Bonds issued for centralization purposes must come under the provisions of sections 7625 and 7626 G. C. and such sections contemplate that but one board of education shall issue such bonds, and in the case indicated by you it would be the new board created by the probate judge in the new district, and it would follow that a second election is necessary for the bond issue, as the first election was upon centralization only, for under section 7625 G. C. more than one district can not vote upon the same bond issue, the section saying that the question shall be submitted to "the electors of the district" and not more than one district.

Referring to your second question, as to whether centralization can be voted upon at a special election in accordance with the provisions of section 4726-1 G. C., it is advised that such supplemental section must be read in connection with section 4726 which it supplements, on the subject of centralization of schools, for, as pointed out before, section 4726-1 G. C., taken alone, does not provide clearly as to the manner of calling an election for centralization of two or more districts in a township, and it is necessary to refer to the language of section 4726 G. C., which says that the question of centralization can be submitted "to the vote of the qualified electors * * * at a general election or a special election called for that purpose." It must have been the clear intent of the general assembly that section 4726-1 should be an effective law and not a nullity and it is therefore necessary that the main section, which section 4726-1 G. C. supplements, must be read in conjunction with the latter section.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. The question of centralization of schools and the issuance of bonds necessary to the furtherance of the scheme of centralization, can not be submitted at the same time to the qualified electors of the school districts, under section 4726-1 G. C.

2. Where the qualified electors in the township proceed to the centralization of schools under section 4726-1, such question can be submitted at either a general election or special election called for that purpose by the respective boards of aducation concerned, or upon the order of the county board of education, or upon petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified male electors in such township.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—ASSISTANTS TO COUNTY SURVEYOR—PAID FROM ALLOWANCE MADE UNDER SECTIONS 2787 AND 2788 G. C—NOT FROM SPECIFIC ROAD IMPROVEMENT ALLOWANCE.

The services of assistants to the county surveyor rendered in connection with the construction of roads under the county road improvement statutes as amended 107 Ohio Laws, are to be paid from the allowance made in accordance with sections 2787 and 2788, General Code, and are not to be charged to a specific road improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have recently submitted for opinion the following:

> "We desire to call your attention to an opinion of the Attorney-General to be found in the Opinions for 1917, Volume 1, page 721, and would ask for your opinion as to whether assistants of the county surveyor while performing services on roads built under section 6919 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 98, are to be paid from the appropriation set aside by the county commissioners under the provisions of sections 2787 and 2788 G. C., or whether the cost of their services becomes a part of the cost of the improvement which would permit such assistants to be paid from other funds than that provided in sections 2787 and 2788 G. C."

Said sections 2787 and 2788, G. C., as amended 107 Ohio Laws, p. 70, read as follows:

"Sec. 2787. On or before the first Monday of June of each year, the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. The county commissioners shall examine such statement and, after making alterations therein, as are just and reasonable, fix an aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year. Provided, however, that if at any time any county surveyor requires an additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, such county surveyor may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such county surveyor was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salaries of such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or other employes as may be required. Notice in writing of such application and the time fixed by such judge for the hearing thereof shall be served by the county surveyor five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners of such county; and said board shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard upon said application and evidence may be offered both by the county surveyor and the county commissioners.

Sec. 2788. The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners or allowed by a judge of the court of common pleas of the county. After being so fixed such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor. The county surveyor may require such of his assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems proper to give bond to the state in an amount to be fixed by the county surveyor with sureties approved by him, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties. Such bond with the approval of the county surveyor, indorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the county treasurer and kept in his office."

The headnote accompanying the opinion of this department to which you refer (Opinions 1917, volume 1, p. 721) reads as follows:

"The report made by the county surveyor to the county commissioners, under the provisions of section 2787 G. C. should not include those deputies and assistants who do not receive their pay from the general county fund. Neither should the total compensation reported to the county commissioners include compensation not drawn from the general county fund.'

An examination of the opinion shows that the reason underlying it was, to quote the words of the officer who submitted the question:

"* * * but that the above salary estimate is not to include the compensation of employes when engaged on either state aid road work or on ditch work; because the engineering expense on these two kinds of work becomes a part of the cost of the work, to be paid from special funds created for these purposes and not out of the general county fund."

While the opinion in question does not designate the statute which was assumed to provide that the engineering expense on state aid improvements should be treated as part of the cost of the work, doubtless section 1219 as it appeared in the Cass act (106 Ohio Laws, 639) was the statute had in mind. That statute was amended 107 Ohio Laws, 131; and its effect as amended and when taken in connection with other pertinent statutes was passed upon by this department in an opinion of date April 20, 1918, appearing in Opinions of the Attorney-General 1918, Volume I, p. 584. The first three paragraphs of the headnote accompanying that opinion are as follows:

> "1. The cost and expense of engineering work done preliminary to the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways by the state highway commissioner are paid half by the county or township making application for state aid and half by the state. If the improvement is made under the preliminary plans, the expenses of the same may be added to the total cost and expense of the improvement.
> 2. The cost and expense of supervision and inspection done during the progress of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of said highways, form a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement and are to be apportioned and paid as are other costs incident to the improvement.
> 3. The work performed by the county surveyor in the matter of preparing preliminary plans is covered by his regular salary under the provision of section 7181 G. C. If any engineering work is required during the course of the improvement, the county surveyor would perform the same under section 7192 G. C. However, the state highway commissioner employs all superintendents and inspectors for the improvement and they are paid as set out in syllabus No. 2."

In contrast to these express provisions of section 1219 to the effect that certain engineering, supervision and inspection expenses may be treated as a part of the cost of a state aid road improvement, we find no similar provision as to expenses of this character in the series of statutes relating to road improvements made under the supervision of county commissioners, section 6919, to which you refer, being a part of said series. This contrast becomes the more marked when we note that there are in the county road improvement statutes provisions that certain items shall be treated as part of the cost of the improvement, as, for instance, "extra work," as defined in section 6948, General Code, the cost of which, according to said section, "shall be paid by the county commissioners * * * and the amount shall be charged to the construction of said improvement and apportioned as the original contract price for said improvement," and likewise approaches to abutting lands, the cost of which under certain conditions as stated in section 7212, General Code, "may be assessed against the lands along which they are constructed."

In considering the question whether in view of the omission from the county road improvement statutes of special provisions on the subject, there is yet room to conclude from the statutes that the engineering expense is to be treated as part of the cost of a given improvement or that such expense may through affirmative action of the commissioners be so treated, our principal inquiry is, naturally, into the duties imposed upon the county surveyor. Those duties are provided for by sections 2792 and 7184, General Code (the latter as amended 107 Ohio laws, 111), which read respectively as follows:

> "Section 2792. The county surveyor shall perform all duties for the county now or hereafter authorized or declared by law to be done by a civil engineer or surveyor. He shall prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads, drains, ditches and other public improvements, except buildings, constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county. When required by the county commissioners, he shall inspect all bridges and culverts, and on or before the first day of June of each year report their condition to the commissioners. Such report shall be made oftener if the commissioners so require.

Section 7184. The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners. The county surveyor shall also have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of roads by township trustees under the provisions of sections 3298-1 to 3298-15n, inclusive, of the General Code. The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction; reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of the roads of a road district under the provisions of sections 3298-25 to 3298-53, inclusive, of the General Code. The county surveyor shall not be authorized, however, to perform any duties in connection with the repair, maintenance or dragging of roads by township trustees, except that upon the request of any board of township trustees he shall be required to inspect any road or roads designated by them and advise them as to the best methods of repairing, maintaining or dragging the same."

Thus it is seen that very broad powers and duties are cast upon the county surveyor as to county highway improvements; and as has already been noted from a reading of above quoted sections 2787 and 2788, ample provision is made for the procuring of such assistants, etc., as may be required by the surveyor in the performance of those duties. It is to be noted also that there is a mandatory provision in section 2788 that the compensation of assistants, etc., shall be paid from the county fund. Furthermore, section 7181 provides that the surveyor shall receive an annual salary, computed on a certain basis, and that "such salary shall be paid monthly out of the general county fund."

These specific provisions to the effect that the surveyor shall prepare all plans, details, forms of contract, etc. for the construction or repair of roads constructed under authority of any board within and for the county, and shall have general charge of the construction of highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, and that his services and those of his assistants shall be paid for out of a certain designated county fund, would seem of themselves to negative any theory that the expense of such services might ultimately be charged to a specific road improvement. It is true that section 6919 provides that "the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement shall be apportioned and paid" according to certain percentages; but while these terms are quite broad in describing the total cost of the work, the same expression and its equivalent so far as our present discussion is concerned, "cost and expense thereof," are used repeatedly in statutes relating to state aid improvements, notwithstanding which the legislature found it proper to make special provision in the latter series of statutes that certain engineering expense should be counted in calculating the cost of the improvement. But an additional and very strong reason for concluding that the words "compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement," as used in section 6919 and elsewhere in the county road improvement statutes are not to be taken of themselves as authority or as giving the county commissioners authority for including in the cost of an improvement the engineering expense thereof, is found in section 6919 itself. Said section provides four methods of apportioning the "compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement;" and no matter which of the four methods is chosen, a part of the total cost must be assessed against abutting or adjoining lands. Since the legislature has itself made the general rule that salaries and compensation for engineering services shall be paid from the general county fund, we are not at liberty to assume in the absence of an express legislative enactment making an exception to that rule that the legislature may have intended an exception or may have lodged authority in another body to make an exception; for as stated in Cincinnati vs. Connor, 55 O. S. 82, at page 91 of the opinion:

> "The rule generally prevails that, independent of any legislative requirement on the subject, statutes imposing taxes and public burdens of that nature are to be strictly construed; and where there is ambiguity which raises a doubt as to the legislative intent, that doubt must be resolved in favor of the subject or citizen on whom the burden is sought to be imposed."

In the chapter of the Municipal Code providing for improvements on the assessment plan, it will be seen that the legislature in section 3896, General Code, has made special provision that "the expense of the preliminary and other surveys," shall be included as part of the cost of any improvement contemplated in that chapter; and has further made provision in section 3911 that the improvement proceedings "shall be strictly construed in favor of the owner of the property assessed or injured, as to the limitations on assessment of private property," and these enactments, to some extent at least, indicate the legislative view that engineering expense, when provided to be paid out of the general funds, is not to be taken as an item of cost chargeable to a specific improvement.

Consistent with the foregoing views will be found the opinion of our courts, and previous opinions of this department.

The answer to your question is, therefore, that the services of assistants to the county surveyor rendered in connection with the construction of roads under the county road improvement statutes as amended 107 Ohio Laws, are to be paid from the allowance made in accordance with sections 2787 and 2788, General Code, and are not to be charged to a specific road improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"It is proposed by the township rural school districts of one of the townships in our county, to call an election for the purpose of voting on the question of centralizing the schools of the township. In this township there are three special school districts. In one of these special districts there are not sufficient petitioners (25 per cent) to compel the board of education to call an election. The county board of education has not asked nor ordered the board of education in the special district to hold an election and the board of education in said special district has failed to call an election on the question of centralization.

Should the said township rural school district proceed with the election and centralization should carry, and the special district in question should take no part in said election and none of the residents vote on the question of centralization at such election, what effect, if any, would that have on the special school districts stated? In other words, will the special school district in any way be bound by the vote of the balance of the township on the question of centralization, and will they be compelled to come into the centralized district? "

Section 4726-1 G. C. provides:

"In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated, five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections therafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

Attention is invited to opinion No. 1102, issued by the Attorney-General March 25, 1918, found on page 476 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, bearing upon section 4726-1 G. C., wherein the syllabus reads:

"1. In a township in which there are seven rural school districts the qualified electors of all of such districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of such township district.

2. It is not permissible under the provisions of section 4726-1 G. C. for a part of the school districts of a township to vote on the centralizing of the schools of such districts and prevent the electors of other districts, located in whole or in part within the township, from participating in said election.

3. A part of the districts of a township may be united as one district and then provide for centralization under the provisions of section 4726 G. C.

4. The fact that certain territory is located in another civil township, but is attached to the territory of a township where all the districts desire to vote on the question of centralizing the schools of such township, will not prevent the electors residing therein from participating in the election upon the question of centralizing the schools of such township under section 4726-1 G. C."

The question which was answered in this opinion was in the case of where, in a certain township, there were seven special school districts, only four of which were wholly within the township, the rest having adjacent attached territory beyond the township lines, and it was desired to know whether the four districts could centralize their schools without action on the part of the other three special districts or any part of them. Commenting upon such section, in answering the question, which in a very large degree is similar to the one which you have submitted, the Attorney-General said:

"The section is not clear when considered with a view to answering your several questions but I am convinced from a careful consideration of same that all the school districts of a township must participate, where action is desired, under the terms of said section. While it was formerly the policy of the school law of Ohio, and provision was made therefor, that each civil township in itself should consist of a township school district, that provision of law no longer exists and the policy seems now to be that township lines shall not be seriously considered in forming or arranging school districts. In fact, when the new school code was enacted in 1914, section 4736 thereof provided that:

'In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines, and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation.'

This provision no longer remains in said section but the policy thereof seems to be constantly followed in practice. Said section 4726-1 says, 'in townships in which there are one or more school districts.' It does not say where there are one or more entire school districts, but simply that there is more than one school district; that then the qualified electors of such school districts, meaning of course all the school districts of the township, may vote on the question of the centralizing of the schools of said township districts. If the language would say 'may vote upon the question of the centralizing of the school districts lying only within the township lines of the civil township,' or would specifically provide that all territory outside of such township lines should be excluded and residents thereof not permitted to participate in such election, a different conclusion might be reached, but, as noted above, considering the language in its present form, I can come to but one conclusion and that is that all school districts with territory within the township must unite when the provisions of section 4726-1 are followed. You will understand, however, that each school district may centralize its schools separately, as is provided by section 4726 G. C., and in case such proceeding is impracticable, districts may be combined into one district and then centralize their schools."

In the case which you submit you indicate that practically the entire township rural population is favorable to the proposition of holding an election for the purpose of voting on the question of centralizing the schools of the township and that in such township there are three special school districts, in one of which there is not sufficient petitioners to call an election in that particular district, under the provisions of section 4726-1, and it is entirely possible that in such special district the question of centralization may not be voted upon.

Attention is invited to the fact that under the existing Ohio law and since the adoption of the new school code in 1914, there are no longer any special districts, but such former special districts are now rural school districts and the tendency has been toward centralization of the schools of a township and the elimination of many of these small former special districts, in order that the township, as a whole, by uniting its efforts along educational lines, may be in a position to bring to all its pupils the best possible educational advantages which grow out of unity of purpose and a common endeavor. It would hardly seem reasonable or good school administration, that a small rural school district, formerly a special school district, could hold out and nullify the desires of the other district or districts, in the township and thus prevent a majority of the electors of such township from securing the centralization of schools which a majority of such township might desire.

A careful analysis of the language of section 4726-1 G. C. shows the intent of the legislature to be that centralization of schools should take place in a township for the reason that the section speaks of "such election in any township," the "schools in said township," and that after an election in such township there shall be created "the board of education for said township" by the probate judge in his selection from the several boards of education thus consolidated five suitable persons; further, this section speaks of the "electors of the township," in that they shall elect in the following years the members of the board of education. The section further says:

"If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization * * * then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

Nowhere in the above section is there any provision that any lesser section of territory than a township shall vote upon the question of centralization of schools, and it is section 4726-1 which provides for the centralization of schools in townships in which there are one or more school districts.

But section 4726-1 G. C., taken alone is not effective, for the reason that it does not provide for calling an election, but merely says,

> "the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or special districts therein."

Supplemental section 4726-1 G. C. must be read in the light of, and in connection with, section 4726 G. C., which it supplements in order to care for a township in which there is more than one district. Section 4726 G. C. reads in part:

> "* * * upon the order of the county board of education, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors * * * at a general or special election * * *."

It would follow that if a county board has authority to order an election in a township to centralize its schools, where such township is one district, then an election could also be ordered by that authority in a township which happened to have more than one district, for in centralization proceedings the township is the unit, and the purpose in both section 4726 G. C. and supplemental section 4726-1 G. C. is to get the view of a majority of the electors in a township.

So unless section 4726-1 G. C. is read with main section 4726 G. C. there is no provision for calling an election unless every one of the school boards in the township join in the action and call the election under section 4839 G. C., which reads:

> "The clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all school elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district or post written or printed notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election. Such notices shall specify the time and place of the election, the number of members of the board of education to be elected, and the term for which they are to be elected, or the nature of the question to be voted upon.."

The county board of education has full authority to arrange districts as it sees fit; it can combine two or more districts into a new district, in which an election on centralization could be had under section 4726 G. C. if such territory was a township; or it can combine any districts into a lesser number of districts, but regard must always be had to the remonstrance provided for in section 4736 G. C. and in section 4692 G. C. where transfers of territory only are made and no new district is created. If the county board creates a new district or districts, it must also appoint a new board of education for such new district or districts, and such new district could be composed of one or more existing school districts or parts thereof under section 4736 G. C. and a remonstrance against such new district to nullify the action of the county board must be signed by a majority of the male electors in the whole of such new district, that is the territory affected, and such remonstrance must be filed within thirty days after the filing of the notice of change of territory sent by the county board to each local board affected by such new district. If, after a county board of education has created new districts in a township, there still remains more than one school district in such township, then section 4726-1 G. C. applies for centralization purposes, but it must be read with the main section 4726 G. C. in order to be effectively administered in the matter of bringing the issue to a vote in the township concerned and where several districts in the township are involved. But if one of the "special districts" you indicate, had later become a village district and not a rural district, such village district cannot be concerned in a centralization election under either section 4726 G. C. or 4726-1 G. C., for the sections cover rural districts only.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

(1) Under section 4726-1 G. C. all rural boards of education in a township must each call an election in their respective districts for centralization of the schools of such township, in order that such question may be legally voted on in the manner provided in section 4839 G. C.

(2) Section 4726-1 G. C. must be read in conjunction with section 4726 G. C. and a county board of education has authority to order an election on centralization of schools in a township which has one or more rural school districts as its school territory.

(3) Centralization of schools must be voted upon by the electors of a township and not a part of it, village and city school districts being excluded.

(4) County boards of education have full authority to create a new school district from one or more districts or parts thereof.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

HON. CHARLES M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of July 21, 1919, requesting the advice of the Attorney-General concerning the disposition, care and treatment of William Wright, an indigent person, resident of Seal township in your county, who is in an advanced stage of tuberculosis, was duly received.

In your letter you suggest for consideration the applicability of section 2544 G. C., and inquire whether the superintendent of the county infirmary can receive the person referred to and provide for his care and treatment outside of the infirmary at the expense of the county, and, if not, whether there is any other place or institution where he can be received and cared for at public expense.

In your subsequent letter of July 24th you advise that Pike county has joined in the establishment of a district tuberculosis hospital under authority of section 3148 et seq. G. C. You further state that when this case was brought to your attention you advised the township trustees to make application for Mr. Wright's admission to the district hospital, and was subsequently informed by the township trustees and superintendent of your county infirmary that admission to the district hospital had been refused on account of the advanced stage of the disease.

(1) District hospitals for tuberculosis are established and maintained under favor and authority of section 3148 et seq. G. C. for the express purpose of caring for and treating persons afflicted with and suffering from tuberculosis, who are in need of proper care and treatment (see sections 3146 and 3148 G. C.). "This law," to use the language of Judge Johnson in Brissel vs. State, 87 O. S., 154, 162, "was passed in response to an intelligent public sentiment which was formed in the light of the gratifying advances in medical science, in recent years. * * * It was an effort on the part of the legislature, to provide a plan for arresting the advance, and if possible, for the extermination of a dreadful disease." And it may also be pertinent to state in this connection that the constitutionality of this law was sustained by the supreme court because it was enacted by the legislature in the exercise of the police power, and in the performance of its duty to provide for the health, safety and best interest of the people. (Brissel vs. State, supra.) Such being the origin and purpose of the law, those who are charged with its administration should at all times earnestly and diligently seek to bring about the beneficent and humane results intended to be accomplished by its enactment.

Persons who are suffering with tuberculosis and in need of proper care and treatment are entitled to admission to such hospital, and cannot be excluded therefrom on the ground that they are in an advanced stage of tuberculosis. No such policy of exclusion is hinted at in the law, but on the contrary the policy of the statutes governing these hospitals is clearly that of admission. Had the legislature intended to limit admission to persons in an early stage of tuberculosis, it would have used apt words to that effect, as was done in sections 2054 et seq. G. C. relative to the Ohio state sanatorium. To refuse admission to the district hospitals on the ground that the applicant is in an advanced stage of the disease, would place it within the power of the medical superintendent and trustees to thwart the very purpose of the law. Statutes such as sections 3145, 3147 and 3153 G. C., requiring the medical superintendent to investigate applicants for admission, and empowering the state board and trustees to prescribe and enforce rules and regulations for the government of district hospitals, etc., have not been overlooked in the consideration of this case, but such statutes, in my opinion, were never intended to authorize the exclusion of a person from the hospital on the ground referred to. On the contrary, the exercise of the authority to investigate and to prescribe and enforce rules and regulations for the government of these hospitals, must be consistent and in harmony with the beneficent intent and purpose of the law to arrest, as Judge Johnson has well said, the advance, and if possible, exterminate the disease. The authority cannot be exercised in such manner as will arrest or exterminate the law.

However, if the medical superintendent or trustees of a district hospital should refuse to admit a resident of the district suffering from tuberculosis and in need of proper care and treatment, the case can be called to the attention of the state board of health, which board, under section 3147 G. C., has general supervision of the hospital. Such board is also clothed by section 3144 G. C. with the authority upon a proper presentation of facts, to order removed to the district hospital any person suffering from tuberculosis, when in its opinion such person is a menace to the public and cannot receive suitable care and attention at home, and surely an indigent person in an advanced stage of tuberculosis comes within that description.

With regard to the expense of caring for and treating indigent persons admitted to the district hospital who are unable to pay therefor as provided in section 3145 G. C., such expense should be charged against the county of the patient's residence and raised by taxation and paid over to the hospital trustees as authorized and provided in sections 3152 and 3152-1 G. C., and the obligation imposed upon county officers by these two later statutes cannot, under the doctrine of Brissel vs. State, supra, be disregarded.

(2) With regard to the care and treatment of Mr. Wright, other than at the district hospital, I beg to advise as follows:

By section 3476 G. C. it is provided that the township trustees shall afford at the expense of the township public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it. The support and relief referred to by that section is of a general character, the subject of medical services and attention being specifically provided for and authorized by section 3480 G. C.

The latter statute clearly authorizes the township trustees on their own initiative to furnish medical services to any persons in the township who are in a position requiring public relief, and such trustees are not required to stand back and wait until a formal complaint has been made or given by some person having knowledge of the situation. This has been the uncontradicted and settled law in this state for years. See Trustees vs. Way, I. C. C. 249, wherein the court had occasion to construe the poor relief laws of this state. In that case the court, speaking with particular reference to sections 3476 and 3480 G. C. (then known and designated as sections 1491 and 1494 R. S.) said:

> "The general liability of the township is fixed, not by section 1494 (now 3480) but by section 1491 (now 3476) * * *. The provision of section 1494 is not exclusive. The trustees in a proper case, under section 1491 may furnish the relief, and if the trustees take the initiative and solicit a person to furnish the relief in a proper case, the township becomes liable for its reasonable value. The township is liable generally for relief under the first section."

The primary duty or responsibility of affording public support or relief, including medical services to the indigent poor of a township, is imposed upon the township trustees. See 1918 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 54, holding that:

> "Primarily the duty to provide for the indigent poor rests with the trustees of each township * * * and this condition continues until the indigent poor becomes a county charge under the provisions of section 2544 G. C."

In an opinion by a former attorney general (1918 Opinions, Vol. 1, p. 649), it was also said:

> "As a fundamental principle it can be stated that the furnishing of support or relief to the needy poor rests upon the townships and municipal corporations of which the needy poor are residents. Section 3476 makes such provision * * *.
> When we note section 3480 G. C. we find that this principle applies not only to the needy poor in general, but to those who are in need of the services of a physician or a surgeon."

In other words, until such time as Mr. Wright can be admitted to the district hospital, it is the duty of the trustees of Seal township to provide for his support, including necessary medical services, until he becomes a county charge as hereinafter referred to.

(3) In the event the township trustees are of the opinion that Mr. Wright should become a county charge and the township relieved of his care, they should bring the matter to the attention of the superintendent of the county infirmary as provided in section 2544 G. C., and if the superintendent, after receiving a statement of the facts transmitted to him by the trustees under that statute, is satisfied that he should become a county charge, provision should be made for his support and care outside of the infirmary. Mr. Wright could not be kept at the infirmary, because of section 3139 G. C. which provides that persons suffering from tuberculosis shall not be kept there.

While as pointed out in division 2 of this opinion, the duty of furnishing support and relief to the needy poor of a township rests primarily upon the township, yet, as was said in 1918 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 650-651,

> "It is to be further noted that the township * * * may be relieved of the duty of furnishing relief to the needy poor, under section 2544 G. C., when something more than temporary relief is required.'

The present law of the state on this subject was considered in 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 358, and with reference to section 2544 G. C. it was said:

> "From the provisions of this section it is manifestly the policy of the law that in case of all those persons who are entitled to admission to the county infirmary, and whose circumstances and conditions are such as to reasonably indicate the necessity of public relief for an indefinite or any considerable period of time, the matter of providing relief should in as expeditious a manner as is practicable and in conformity to law, be turned over to the superintendent of the infirmary and that in those cases the trustees should provide only such relief as is necessary for such person during the time required to transmit it to the superintendent of the infirmary the statement of facts prescribed and for such person in due course of business to be received by the superintendent. * * *
> From an examination of the statutes above referred to, it will seem clear that there is no authority for trustees providing other than temporary relief in counties having infirmaries except in those cases, if such there be, where persons who for any reason are not entitled to be admitted to any infirmary require public relief. * * *

Attention is called to section 2544, wherein, after it is determined that a person should become a county charge by the superintendent of the infirmary, it is made the duty of the superintendent to 'forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution or otherwise.' Again in section 2545 G. C., the superintendent is required to report the names of all persons to whom relief has been given outside of the infirmary. From this it will hardly be doubted that it was the legislative purpose to vest in the superintendent authority to provide relief for persons other than those actually confined in the infirmary under certain contingencies. * * *

Cases suggest themselves which by reason of their peculiar circumstances render it impracticable that the necessary relief of proper county charges be afforded at the infirmary. A county charge may be in such physical condition as to render his removal extremely hazardous or be affected with a contagious or infectious disease of such character as to render it dangerous to the safety and health of other inmates that he be admitted to the infirmary or by reason of epidemic or other such exigency it may become temporarily impracticable to furnish proper accommodations for all those persons who are properly subject of county charge in the infirmary, hence the necessity for some provision and authority for relief outside of the infirmary. It is my opinion, however, that outside relief by the superintendent should be carefully restricted to cases of a character similar to those above indicated," etc.

While, as was held in 1918 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 54, the duty of determining whether a person is qualified to become a county charge rests with the superintendent of the county infirmary under the provisions of section 2544, and that the course pointed out in that section is the only one by virtue of which a person may be found qualified to become a county charge, it cannot be too strongly stated that the authority vested in the superintendent must not be exercised arbitrarily. If the facts transmitted to him by the trustees disclose that Mr. Wright is in a condition requiring public support and relief, and the truth of these facts cannot be successfully disproved, it becomes the imperative duty of the superintendent to provide for his relief outside of the infirmary at county expense. It is not absolutely necessary, as was said in the opinion last referred to, that a person must be admitted to the infirmary to become a county charge, but as was also said in 1915 Opinions of the Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 358, in cases where the applicant is suffering from a disease of such character as to endanger the inmates of the infirmary, etc., relief outside of the infirmary at county expense is justified.

It may be suggested or contended that section 2544 G. C. cannot be applied to persons having tuberculosis, on the theory that such outside relief is only authorized to be given to persons "entitled to admission" to the infirmary, and that since under section 3139 G. C. a person suffering from tuberculosis cannot be kept at the infirmary, it must follow that the superintendent cannot provide for his support and relief outside. Such contention, in my opinion, is unsound. On the contrary, as has already been stated above, it has been held that section 2544 G. C. authorizes outside relief for persons who on account of the peculiar conditions or circumstances of their cases should not be received into the infirmary, and it is my opinion that the purpose of 3139 G. C. is to specifically point out one of the cases that should not be taken into the hospital, but on the contrary, should be provided for outside of the infirmary. Such construction is in harmony with the previous ruling of this department above referred to, and when it is kept in mind that the poor laws of the state should be liberally construed so as to accomplish the object and purpose of their enactment, and should not, excepting only when clearly and imperatively so required by their own language, be so construed as to exclude from their protection an indigent poor person who is in condition requiring public support and relief, the reasonableness and fairness of my conclusion becomes apparent. To hold in the present case that Mr. Wright is not entitled to relief outside the infirmary at county expense, after facts have been presented by the township trustees to the superintendent of the infirmary clearly showing that he is in a condition requiring permanent public support and relief, would violate both the letter and spirit of the law.

Based upon the information furnished in your letter, and the present law of this state, it is my duty to advise you:

(1) That Mr. Wright is eligible to admission to your district tuberculosis hospital, and that he cannot be excluded therefrom on the sole ground that he has passed the incipient or early stage of tuberculosis, and that the expense of his care and treatment at such hospital is provided for in sections 3152 and 3152-1 G. C.

(2) That it is the duty of the trustees of Seal township to provide for his support and relief, including medical services, until he becomes a county charge as provided for by section 2544 G. C.

(3) That after the township trustees have brought the case to the attention of the superintendent of the county infirmary in the manner pointed out by section 2544 G. C., it is the duty of the superintendent to provide for him at county expense outside of the infirmary until he is admitted to the district tuberculosis hospital.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY OFFICERS—COMPENSATION OF DEPUTIES, CLERKS AND OTHER EMPLOYES OF SAID OFFICERS HOW FIXED—COMPENSATION FOR EXTRA HOURS UNAUTHORIZED—SEE SECTION 2981 G. C.—FINDINGS LEFT TO DISCRETION OF BUREAU PURSUANT TO SECTION 286 G. C. ET SEQ.

The compensation of deputies, clerks and other employes of the several county officers is to be fixed by the said officers respectively and a certificate thereof filed with the county auditor as provided in section 2981 G. C., and allowances to such employes in excess of the amount so fixed and certified, purporting to be made in consideration of extra work or for extra hours are unauthorized.

The matter of return of findings as involved in the inquiry is one addressed to the discretion of the bureau in pursuance of sections 286 G. C. et seq.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. May a person who has been appointed as a deputy or clerk in any county office, whose certificate of appointment fixes a monthly salary legally receive from the county additional compensation for working overtime or for extra hours?

2. May a deputy, inspector, clerk or laborer appointed by the surveyor whose compensation is fixed at a certain rate per day legally draw compensation for a number of days in any one month in excess of the actual number of days contained in that particular month by reason of the fact that he worked extra hours each day during the month?

3. If these questions be answered in the negative should a finding for recovery be made for the excess compensation drawn?"

The section of the statute providing for the employment of deputies, clerks, assistants, etc., in the various county offices is as follows:

"Section 2981. Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Both your first and second questions require consideration of the practice of allowing compensation to deputies, assistants and employes of the several county offices in addition to their regular compensation as fixed and made a matter of record in pursuance of the provisions of section 2981 supra, the same purporting to be in consideration of the performance of extra services or for extra hours of service.

The statutes nowhere have assumed to prescribe the hours of service for such deputies and employes of the various county offices, but the employment itself presumably contemplates such reasonable hours of service as the necessities of the offices may require, and conversely, consistency suggests that the service rendered by such employes is referable to their employment and compensated by the emolument attached thereto.

Thus, the scope and extent of service contemplated by the regular employment is such, when fully executed, as to suggest a probable disqualification for engaging in so-called extra services.

While instances may readily be conceived wherein it would appear to the public advantage to avail of the services of regular employes in a public office for the discharge of a temporary accumulation of work of the office or other exigency, by the devotion of additional time outside of the usual hours of the office, yet in its operation such a practice would be fraught with much of opportunity and tendency to open the way for abuse and fraud against the public treasury, which, in practice, would be found difficult of ascertainment and restraint.

Public policy usually has been held to demand the rejection of practices which, though free from objection in particular cases, yet in their general adoption and operation tend to facilitate the accomplishment of fraud and circumvention. The suggested practice of payment of extra compensation to regular employes is not a faithful compliance with the letter and the spirit of the statute above noted, providing the conditions of creation of valid obligations against the public treasury on account of services required in the various offices of the county.

The statute contemplates a definite action on the part of the several county officers by way of employment and fixing of compensation of necessary deputies, assistants, etc., and the filing by such officers respectively with the county auditor of certificates of such action. While the county officers are invested, no doubt, with a continuing discretion in the matter of fixing the amount of compensation of the several deputies and employes of their respective offices, within the aggregate allowance for the purpose subject to their disposal, yet the action so taken in pursuance of the statute and appearing as a matter of record must determine the extent and manner of exercising the authority for charging the public funds on account of deputy and clerk hire.

I do not find that the exact question under consideration has been before the courts of the state in any reported decision, nor considered in previous opinions of this department, although some questions bearing analogy to that under consideration have been the subject of previous ruling by this office.

In opinion No. 199 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, page 511, the question of authority of the senate to allow additional compensation to its employes, in excess of that previously fixed, was considered and the following is quoted from the opinion:

> "In my opinion the senate is without power to allow pay for extra services to its officers and employes. The compensation fixed by statute or by the initial resolution is deemed to be in full of all services which the senate may exact of them within the scope of their respective employments. * * *
> My opinion is, therefore, that senate resolution No. 56 is a nullity."

Again in opinion No. 2064, found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1916, page 1841, the syllabus is as follows:

> "A state officer or an employe of a state department or institution who is receiving the full regular salary out of the state treasury, as fixed by the appropriation of the legislature, is not entitled to receive additional compensation for overtime or night work."

In the opinion it is said:

> "The legislature in fixing the annual salary undoubtedly contemplated that each officer or employe should put in so much time daily as the necessities of the office should require."

While the questions involved in the opinions cited might have been determined entirely or in large measure by considerations not affecting the general question you submit, yet the principles of public policy which are here recognized were manifestly given recognition in connection with other considerations in the opinions referred to.

Thus, from the considerations that have been pointed out I hold that the manifest purpose and policy of the statute governing the employment of deputies, clerks, assistants, etc., in the various county offices, would be circumvented and the way opened for the practice of fraud and imposition by the recognition of a liability against the public treasury on account of services of the character under consideration incurred otherwise than in faithful compliance with the provisions of the statute.

It therefore follows that payments made to such employes in excess of that stipulated in the certificate of employment were without authority of law.

The conclusions which have been reached in reference to your first and second inquiries will be found sufficient as a guide in determining your course with relation to findings, in connection with the provisions of section 286 G. C. et seq.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN CORONERS AND ACTING CORONERS ARE AUTHORIZED TO HOLD INQUESTS—WITNESS FEES HOW DETERMINED AS TO LIABILITY FOR UNAUTHORIZED INQUESTS.

Coroners and acting coroners are only authorized to hold inquests in case of a dead body found within the county, and where there is reason to suspect the death caused by unlawful agency

However, when witnesses have been subpoenaed and have attended in case of an unauthorized inquest, such as a mere accidental death, free from all suspicion of violence, the liability for fees of such witnesses should be determined from the fact of their attendance in obedience to lawful authority, rather than by consideration of the abuse of process by the coroner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1919.

HON. CHESTER A. MECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent communication requesting my opinion as follows:

> "I have been having a great deal of annoyance in regard to acting coroners' bills. These have been coming through my office for O. K. before going to the commissioners for payment, and it has seemed that these acting coroners were holding inquests without the knowledge of the coroner, in cases where no inquest should be held, and I have been rejecting them.
> I have cited section 2856 of the General Code to these acting coroners on this proposition, that an inquest should only be held over a body of a person, 'whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence,' and not over persons killed in shops and on the railroad, where no suspicious circumstances existed.
> I would like to know from you whether I am right or wrong in this contention, and if I am right as to the rejection of the claim of the acting coroner, whether I should allow the fees to witnesses called at such inquests."

The section of the statute relating to the general duties of coroners is section 2856 G. C. and reads as follows:

> "When informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, the coroner shall appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, administer to them the usual oath, and proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, whether by violence from any other person or persons, by whom, whether as principals or accessories before or after the fact, and all circumstances relating thereto. The testimony of such witnesses shall be reduced to writing, by them respectively subscribed, except when stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, and, with the finding and recognizances hereinafter mentioned, if any, returned by the coroner to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county. If it deems it necessary, he shall cause such witnesses to enter into recognizance, in such sum as may be proper, for their appearance at the succeeding term of the court of common pleas of the county to give testimony concerning the matter. The coroner may require any and all such witnesses to give security for their attendance, and if they or any of them neglect to comply with his requirements, he shall commit such person to the prison of the county, until discharged by due course of law.'

Section 1745 provides for justices of the peace acting as coroner in case of vacancy in that office, and is as follows:

"When the office of coroner becomes vacant by death, resignation expiration of the term of office, or otherwise, or when the coroner is absent from the county, or unable from sickness or other cause to discharge the duties of his office, a justice of the peace of the county shall have the powers and duties of the coroner to hold inquests. When acting in the capacity of coroner, a justice may receive the fees allowed by law to coroners in such cases."

It is to be noted that the acting coroner has the same powers and duties as the coroner in relation to holding inquests, and shall be allowed the same fees.

Section 2856 G. C. which was formerly section 1221 of the revised statutes has been construed by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Bellows, 62 O.S. 307. The question before the court involved a determination of the scope of the statute. It is pointed out, after consideration of the provisions of the section that "it is thus indicated that the inquest is intended to aid in the detection of crimes and in the punishment of those perpetrating them."

A death "caused by violence" is held to be "a death caused by unlawful means such as usually calls for the punishment of those who employ them," and it is said in the syllabus:

"Death is supposed to have been caused by violence whenever the coroner from observation or information has substantial reason for believing or surmising that death was caused by unlawful means."

The supreme court approved the opinion of Shearer, C. J.,disposing of the same case in the circuit court, and reported in 15 C. C. 504, and there the question is dealt with somewhat more specifically; this opinion may be invoked as an authoritative pronouncement of a proper construction of the statute on the following propositions:

" 'Violence' means the unlawful use of physical force or other agency to cause death. It does not include mere accident or casualty. * * *

The coronial office is of ancient origin, and its duties, while they have undergone some changes, are substantially the same as they were under the English common law. These duties are in many respects judicial, and their exercise, except in case of gross abuse, should not be interfered with. * * *

Violence, in the sense used in the statute, means force unlawfully exercised, as distinguished from mere accident or casualty. See Anderson's Law Dic. 1091. Also Lancaster Co. vs. Holyoke, 21 L. R. A., 394 and notes.

If there be reasonable ground to suspect that the death was a natural one, it is a perversion of the whole spirit of the law to compel the county to pay him for such services (inquest).

The coroner must act in good faith—not capriciously or arbitrarily. He may not act where there is no ground to suspect violence was the cause of the death."

The determination by the courts, as above quoted, is authoritative, and you are therefore advised that the law does not contemplate the holding of inquests in cases of natural or mere accidental death but only where there is reason to suspect an unlawful agency where the inquest may serve as an aid in the detection of crime and the ascertainment of those perpetrating it, which, in the last analysis, is the purpose and intent of the law.

Similar holdings have been made by this department in the following opinions:

Opinion No. 1291, A. G. R. 1914, p. 1529;
Opinion No. 189, A. G. R. 1913, p. 1196;
Opinion No. 336, A. G. R. 1913, p. 1281;
Opinion A. G. R. for 1909-10, p. 493.

Of course, the rule announced would apply equally to a justice of the peace acting as coroner in case of the absence of the coroner from the county or his inability from sickness or other causes to discharge his duties.

This will furnish the rule governing your first inquiry, and your second inquiry relates to the allowance of witness fees to witnesses called at inquests of the character referred to in your inquiry, to-wit: cases of "mere accidental death at shops or on the railroad where no suspicious circumstances existed."

The provisions governing the payment of witness fees in case of coroner's inquest, are as follows:

"Section 3012. Each witness in civil causes shall receive the following fees: * * * for attending a coroner's inquest, one dollar for each day and the same mileage allowed a witness in the taking of depositions, to be paid from the county treasury.

Section 2460. No claims against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount due is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal allowing the claim."

Substantially the same provision is made for fees of constable or other persons serving process at the direction of the coroner as governs the matter of witness fees to persons subpoenaed before the coroner.

In State ex rel. vs. Hagerty, 11 O. C. C. 226, the court in considering whether constable fees must be allowed by the commissioners, said:

"It is entirely clear, we think, that the amount due the relator is not 'fixed by law.' "

The court points out that while it is true that the statute attaches certain fees to the performance of certain duties, yet the amount allowable ultimately depends upon the fact of the service being rendered, which latter fact, of course, is not fixed by law, and it is said:

"Unless a bill of this kind is allowed by some other officer or tribunal authorized by law to allow the same, it is eminently proper that before the issue of the warrant by the auditor, for its payment, it should, as is expressly required by the statute, be scrutinized, and if correct be allowed by the county commissioners upon whom the law imposes the duty in cases of this kind, of guarding and protecting the interests of the county. * * *

There is no claim that any statute authorizes the coroner to make such a certificate to the auditor and that on receipt of the same he is to issue his warrant."

The court's conclusion is:

"All such and like bills must be presented to the county commissioners for examination and allowance, and if not allowed by them, or by some other tribunal on appeal from such decision, can not be paid by the auditor."

While the bill for witness fees is not a charge fixed by law within the meaning of the statute, nor the coroner an officer or tribunal authorized to fix the fees, yet inasmuch as the coroner has legal authority to subpoena witnesses and compel their attendance, where witnesses have attended in pursuance of such process, I am of the opinion that such witnesses should be paid from the county treasury their legal fees and mileage, and while the same must be allowed by the county commissioners, and as pointed out in your letter, are submitted to the prosecuting attorney for his approval before allowance, I am of the opinion that the exercise of the authority to subpoena by the acting coroner and the obedience of the witnesses thereto, in pursuance of the statute, should entitle the witnesses to their compensation.

Other adequate means will be found to protect the public treasury against abuses in this regard, and it will rarely be found necessary to make that an element of determination of the allowance of witness fees, which rather should rest on the fact of attendance in pursuance of lawful subpoena.

It will be observed in your statement that "acting coroners are holding inquests without the knowledge of the coroner," and it is considered probable that in addition to the questions which have been considered above, you desire the further consideration of this department with reference to the authority of justices of the peace to exercise the functions of the coroner, and I may say without entering broadly upon a discussion of this phase of your inquiry, that the authority of justices of the peace in this regard must be found in the provisions of section 1745 G. C., and is not broader than the express provisions of the section. Thus, justices of the peace may only assume to act as coroner:

(1) When that office becomes vacant by death, resignation, expiration of the term of office or otherwise; or (2) when the coroner is absent from the county; or (3) when the coroner is unable from sickness or other cause to discharge the duties of his office.

In event of an inquest assumed to be held by a justice of the peace when the coroner is within the county and able to perform the duties of his office, you are advised that a justice of the peace so assuming to act is an intruder, and should be dealt with as such.

However, my conclusion as above expressed relative to witness fees will not be modified even in relation to such an unauthorized proceeding as last considered, for the reason that even in that case the justice of the peace may be regarded as acting under apparent color of office, and it is not considered that the burden of ascertaining the jurisdictional facts in every case of acting coroner's subpoenas be imposed upon the citizens at large who may be recipient of the process of such officer.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—FISCAL YEAR FOR TOWNSHIP—CALENDAR YEAR.

The fiscal year for townships is not prescribed by specific statutory provision, and ever since the enactment of the Smith law its ascertainment has been treated as addressed to the administrative department of government, and under provisions of the law authorizing the tax commission to prescribe uniform rules and methods to be followed in procedure relating to taxation, the fiscal year has been determined to be the calendar year. This determination having been generally adopted in practice, it is held to be the fiscal year for the purpose of house bill No. 567 relating to taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus. Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication of July 17, 1919, requesting my written opinion as to "what is the fiscal year of a township," and in which you say that your question arises in connection with the provisions of house bill No. 567, enacted by the present legislature.

The act to which you refer is entitled "An act to authorize taxing authorities of counties, municipal corporations, townships and school districts to fund deficiencies in operating revenues of the year 1919, issue bonds and to levy taxes for such purposes," and is popularly known as the relief measure.

Without undertaking any extended review of the provisions of the act, it is sufficient here to say in a general way that it provides for the ascertainment of deficiencies in revenues of counties, townships, municipalities and school districts appearing during the fiscal year, 1919, and authorizes the issuance of bonds for the funding of such deficiencies, and provides a levy for the interest on said bonds and their retirement.

The references in said act to the fiscal year have occasioned your inquiry as to "what is the fiscal year" and likewise certain provisions of the so-called Smith one per cent law have given rise to the necessity for consideration of the same question heretofore.

While specific provision is made in the law for the fiscal year of the state, municipalities, and in reference to certain offices in various sub-divisions, yet difficulty has arisen in reference to certain other taxing sub-divisions, for which specific provision in this regard has not been made in the law, which fact has required the supplying of the ommission in legislation by necessary implication.

For example, the Smith law which deals, broadly speaking, with the production of public revenue by taxation and the expenditure thereof, provides in section 5649-3a for the submission of an annual budget by each of the taxing sub-divisions, which shall set forth in itemized form an estimate of the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year: while section 5629-3d provides in substance that at the beginning of each fiscal half year the proper authorities of the various taxing subdivisions of the state shall make appropriation for each of the several objects for which moneys have been provided, etc., and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from such appropriations, etc.

Thus, while there is found no express statutory provision fixing the fiscal year of some of the taxing subdivisions, neither in the Smith law, nor in other statutes previously enacted, yet it is manifestly the intent and policy of the Smith law that the authorities of the several taxing subdivisions in preparing the budget shall have in mind the financial needs of the subdivision for a definite year, that is designated as the "incoming year," which obviously refers to the same period of time as that denoted in section 5644-3d as the "fiscal year."

In the main, therefore, it may be said that the occasion for considering the question of the "fiscal year" for a particular subdivision of the government, arises largely, if not entirely, in connection with the subjects of taxation and the appropriation of revenues derived from taxation, and the question as it arises in your present inquiry under the legislative relief measure, supra, involves the same consideration as has arisen relative to the fiscal year under the provisions of the Smith law as noted.

There having been no specific provision fixing the fiscal year with reference to townships, and the provisions of certain sections of the Smith law (5649-3a and 5649-3d) having required the ascertainment of a fiscal year with reference to the levy of taxes and appropriations thereof, the determination of such "fiscal year" became an administrative function.

Provision has been made for uniformity of administration of the taxing machinery, as found in section 5624 et seq. G. C.

Section 5624 provides that the tax commission of Ohio shall from time to time prescribe general and uniform rules and regulations and issue orders and instructions respecting the manner of the exercise of powers and duties of any and all officers relating to the assessment of property and the levy and collection of taxes. It shall cause the rules and regulations prescribed by it to be observed, the orders and instructions issued by it to be obeyed and the forms prescribed by it to be observed and used.

Section 5624-1 provides that the tax commission of Ohio shall prescribe and furnish to all county boards of revision, county auditors and county treasurers blank forms for all statements, returns, reports, tax lists and duplicates and all other documents, files and records authorized or required by any provision of law relating to the assessment, levy or collection of taxes; and the county auditors and county treasurers and all other officers having functions in regard to listing property shall use true copies of such blank form.

Acting in pursuance of this statute and previous statutes of similar import, the tax commission of Ohio has prescribed uniform methods to be pursued in the making up of the tax duplicates and forms for budgets and for all of the various activities involved in the levy and collection of taxes, and in so doing, as I am advised at the office of the tax commission, and from their records, have determined and prescribed the fiscal year for townships as the calendar year, to-wit, January 1 to January 1.

There appears no reason from an examination of the statutes for any alteration of date determined by the tax commission, and you are advised that in pursuance of such determination, and the established practice in that regard, the fiscal year for townships is the calendar year.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—WHERE PART OF TERRITORY OF CIVIL TOWNSHIP ANNEXED TO MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—RIGHT OF SAID JUSTICE FOR RE-ELECTION AND RIGHT OF RESIDENTS TO VOTE AT TOWNSHIP ELECTIONS.

Where a part of the territory of a civil township is annexed to a municipal corporation the status of a justice of the peace in the annexed territory is not altered by reason of the annexation; and the right of the incumbent to be a candidate for re-election as well as the right of the residents of the annexed territory to vote at township elections is likewise unaffected, in the absence of specific statutory provisions to that effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1919.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent communication requesting an opinion from this department. Your statement of facts involved in the inquiry being somewhat lengthy, may be summarized as follows:

> During the fall of 1917 the city of Youngstown, with the concurrence of the county commissioners, annexed a portion of Boardman township known as Pleasant Grove. In this annexed portion there resided and still resides a justice of the peace for Boardman township and whose term of office expires this year. From the time of such annexation this justice of the peace has continued to exercise his office while a resident of the city of Youngstown, having become such by living in the annexed portion of the township. This justice of the peace now desires to be a candidate for re-election while still residing in Pleasant Grove in the city of Youngstown, and as stated above, this is the annexed portion taken from Boardman township.
> The question now is, can he be a candidate, and if elected, hold his commission while a resident of said annexed portion, and can the voters of such annexed portion vote for township officers while residents of the city of Youngstown.

You further add that the township still exists as before annexing a part of it by the city.

You express it as your opinion that the justice of the peace in question may be a candidate for re-election in the township and is qualified to hold the office if successful at the polls, and also that the residents of the annexed portion of Boardman township are entitled to vote at the township election.

I concur in the views you have thus expressed, and call attention to considerations which lead me to that conclusion.

The matter of annexation of territory to municipal corporations is covered by sections 3547 G. C. et seq. which sections are presumed to have been complied with in annexation of territory to the city of Youngstown in the instance in question.

Section 3512 G. C. provides:

> "When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, except that justices of the peace and constables shall continue the exercise of their functions under municipal ordinances providing offices, regulating the disposition of their fees, their compensation, clerks and other officers and employes. Such justices and constables shall be elected at municipal elections. All property, moneys, credits, books, records and documents of such township shall be delivered to the council of such city or village. All rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation."

While specific provision has thus been made relative to the merger of the civil township into the municipal corporate entity in case the boundaries of the township and the municipal corporation become identical, yet no provision is found affecting the continued existence of the township entity or its boundaries in any other case of annexation of territory to a municipal corporation than that above provided.

The civil township having been established by previous action and authority of law, obviously will remain in existence and intact until specific action to the contrary has been taken in pursuance of legislative authority, which is not affected by the mere annexation of a portion of its territory to the municipal corporation, and it therefore follows that the township entity remains intact and the political status of its residents in relation to township matters unaffected by the annexation in question, unless the status be found to have been changed by the provisions of the municipal court law of Youngstown, which must be consulted in connection with ascertaining the law affecting the general powers and jurisdiction of courts in that territory.

On examination, however, I find that no provision of the act would affect the question before us.

Section 51 of the act (1579-177 G. C.) provides, as far as pertinent:

> "The said municipal court shall supersede all the powers, duties and rights, as, now, or may hereafter be, provided by law as successors of the criminal or police court in and for the city of Youngstown and of justices of the peace in and for Youngstown township."

While the form of expression employed in the statute might have been improved upon, its effect and intent obviously does not extend beyond the implication that the municipal court should take the place of the criminal and police court of the city of Youngstown and of justices of the peace of Youngstown township theretofore existing, and does not purport to extend to justices of the peace of Boardman township, nor is there anything in the language that requires the conclusion that no justice of the peace may reside or exercise jurisdiction within the limits of the city of Youngstown, if the same be authorized by other provisions of the law as seems manifestly to result from the annexation of a part of Boardman township to the city of Youngstown.

Section 56 of the act (1579-182), so far as pertinent, provides:

> "The office of justice and justices of the peace in and for Youngstown township, Mahoning county, Ohio, and of clerk and clerks and of constable and constables thereof; and the criminal court and police court and mayor's court and of clerk and clerks thereof of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, are hereby abolished."

Here again it is apparent that the force of the statute to abolish the office of justice of the peace is confined to the office in Youngstown township, and does not purport to extend to the office as existing in Boardman township, and cannot be so extended by implication.

Likewise the provisions of the repealing clause at the end of the section in reference to justices of the peace are confined to matters relating to Youngstown township.

It is concluded, therefore, that the municipal court act for the city of Youngstown and Youngstown township does not have the effect of curtailing the general provisions under authority of which the office of justice of the peace in Boardman township exists.

The case of State ex rel. vs. Truman Ward, 17 O. S., 544, to which you call attention, is in point, and pertinent observations thereof are as follows:

> "On the organization of a city of the second class divided into wards, the boundaries of which city are not coterminous with those of any township, the territory within such city does not cease to be a part of the township or townships within the limits of which it is situate.

* * * * * * * * *

In the offices of township trustees, clerk, treasurer, justices of the peace and constables, electors and tax payers of the city have in some or in all respects a like interest with electors of the townships outside the city limits, and are entitled to a vote in the choice of them."

In the course of the opinion the court said:

"Neither as a matter of theory or practice, is there any necessary difficulty in the existence and harmonious working of a civil township organization and at the same time of a city organization within the limits of such township, or within the limits of more than one township; and the statutes nowhere provide, either expressly or by just implication, that, on the organization of a city within the limits of a township or townships, the territory within the city limits shall cease to be a part of the township or townships from which the same was taken. But there are clear indications of a contrary legislative intent."

I have examined the case of State ex rel.vs. Morse, 94 O. S., 435, to which you also call attention, but am of the opinion that the conclusion there reached as well as the reasoning of the court are not applicable to the case in question, for the reason that the annexation of territory there involved was an annexation "to the city of Toledo and Port Lawrence township," and the conclusion of the court that the justice of the peace residing in the territory annexed was authorized to continue in the exercise of his office, was based upon the provisions of section 1716 G. C. which provides:

"If a part of a township is attached to another township, justices of the peace residing within the limits of that part so attached shall execute the duties of their office in the township to which such part is attached," etc.

Thus the question there treated as an annexation of a portion of a township to another township, while in the case under consideration, as specifically stated, Boardman township still exists as before the annexation of a part of its territory to the city.

My conclusion is that the status of the office of justice of the peace in question and the right of the present incumbent to become a candidate for re-election to such office has not been affected by the annexation of part of the territory of the township to the city of Youngstown, and further that the right of the residents within the boundaries of the township to vote at township elections has not been affected by the annexation in question.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAX COMMISSION—CONSTRUCTION OF AMENDED SENATE BILL No. 72 (108 O. L. 138) REQUIRING SAID COMMISSION TO FIX COMPENSATION TO CLERKS IN COUNTY AUDITOR'S OFFICE—NOT APPLICABLE TO REGULAR EMPLOYES—WHEN APPROVAL OF TAX COMMISSION IS NECESSARY DISCUSSED AND SECTIONS OF SENATE BILL No. 72 INTERPRETED.

1. Amended senate bill No. 72 requires the tax commission to fix the number and approve the compensation of such clerks only as may be required from time to time in addition to the regular employes of the county auditor's office; it does not require the commission to fix the number and approve the compensation of all clerks in the auditor's office performing services required by sections 2583, 5366 *and 5612 G. 2. The commission is not required to fix the number and approve the compensation of the clerks performing duties under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C. for the last half of July and the remainder of the calendar year 1919, and in the absence of any action under section 5366 by the tax commission clerks employed under section 2981 G. C., and actually performing such services, will continue to receive their compensation out of the allowance fixed by the county commissioners or the common pleas court under the provisions of sections 2980 and 2980-1 *G. 3. It will be necessary for a county auditor to secure the approval of the tax commission under senate bill No. 72 before issuing a warrant on the county fund for the remainder of the month of July in compensating any deputy or clerk performing services under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C., but it will not be necessary to secure such approval as a condition of retaining regular deputies and employes in service in the performance of such work, the compensation to be payable out of the fee fund, as formerly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of your letter requesting an opinion upon the following questions involving the construction of amended senate bill No. 72 (108 O. L. 138) which became effective July 16, 1919:

> "1. Does this act require the commission to fix the number and approve the compensation of all clerks in the county auditor's office performing the services required by sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code or only such clerks as may be required from time to time in addition to the regular employes of the office?
> 2. Will the tax commission be required to fix the number and approve the compensation of the clerks performing duties under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C. for the last half of July and the remainder of the calendar year 1919 or will such clerks continue to receive their compensation out of the allowance fixed by the county commissioners and the common pleas court under the provisions of sections 2980 and 2980-1 G. C.?

3. If it is held that the commission is to fix the number and approve the compensation of such clerks for the balance of the calendar year and authorizes their payment out of the general county fund, would the county auditor be permitted to use the surplus thus created in the allowance made under sections 2980 and 2980-1 to increase the salaries of his other clerks or to employ additional clerks for work other than that required by sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code?"

About the same time Hon. Thomas F. Hudson, prosecuting attorney of Clark county, requested the opinion of this department upon similar questions relative to the same measure. His questions were submitted to him by Hon. R. W. McKinney, auditor of Clark county, in the following form:

"In accordance with sections 2980 and 2980-1 of the General Code, the county auditors of Ohio secured their clerk hire allowance for the calendar year 1919 some time previous to January 1, 1919. Amended senate bill No. 72, passed by the present legislature becomes operative on July 16, 1919. In the second paragraph on page 2 of this bill, provision is made whereby the number of employes of the county auditor doing work under the provisions of sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code (in other words, the employes of the county auditor having to do with duplicate or tax matters) are to be prescribed by the tax commission of Ohio, their time of employment to be determined by that commission and their compensation to be fixed by the county auditor, subject to the approval of the tax commission, said compensation to be paid out of the general county fund.

1. Under the provisions of amended senate bill No. 72, will it not be necessary for the auditors of Ohio to secure the approval of the tax commission and carry out the provisions of this law before issuing warrants on the county fund for the remainder of the month of July, viz: the 16th to the 31st inclusive, in compensating their deputies and clerks who come under the provisions of said act?

2. Will not these said deputies and clerks be paid from the county auditor's fee fund for the first fifteen days of July and from the county fund for the last sixteen days of that month?

3. Will it be lawful to pay the deputies coming under the provisions of amended senate bill No. 72 for the last 16 days of July and the months of August, September, October, November and December from the county auditor's fee fund, provision having been made under sections 2980 and 2980-1, when amended senate bill No. 72 becomes effective on the 16th of July?

4. Inasmuch as provision for the auditor's clerk hire has been made for the current year under sections 2980 and 2980-1, is it true that amended senate bill No. 72, in practice, would not become operative until January 1, 1920?"

So much of amended senate bill No. 72 as gives rise to the questions thus submitted, embraced within section 5366 of the General Code as therein amended, is as follows:

"For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and the provisions of sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code, each county auditor shall appoint such number of experts, deputies, clerks and employes as may from time to time be prescribed for him by the tax commission of Ohio. Such experts, deputies, clerks and employes shall hold their employment for such time as may be prescribed by the tax commission of Ohio. The compensation of such experts, deputies, clerks and employes shall be fixed by the county auditor subject to the approval of the tax commission of Ohio, and shall be paid monthly out of the general county fund upon warrant of the county auditor. Such compensation shall constitute a charge against the county, regardless of the amount of money in the county treasury appropriated for such purposes and notwithstanding any failure of the county commissioners to levy or appropriate funds therefor. On the first day of January, annually, any amount in the fee fund of the county auditor in excess of that necessary to pay the one-sixth of the aggregate compensation of the deputies, assistants, clerks and other employes of such auditor as fixed under section 2980-1 of the General Code, but not in excess of the amount paid out of the general county fund under the provisions of this section, shall be transferred to the general county fund without action by the county."

This section refers to duties performed under certain sections of the General Code including the section itself. Said section 5366, in addition to containing the provision quoted, relates to the duties of the county auditor in procuring the voluntary listing of personal property, moneys, credits, investments, etc. He is to "have supplied at his office for the use of persons required to list such property of any character" the necessary blanks, and he is "to mail or distribute such blanks * * * to the persons required to list such property, or he may place listing blanks at convenient places in each taxing subdivision, and give notice thereof in (a) newspaper * * *."

By himself or by his deputy he may administer oaths to persons required to list such property.

After the lists are made up and filed it is the duty of the county auditor to "make corrections thereof," and he has the power to "go over the same together with the assessor of the same taxing subdivision, and if they believe any property is omitted from any returns, or that the value is incorrect, the assessor shall call upon the person listing such property and upon actual view list and assess such property at its true value in money."

The county auditor is also required to "deliver to the assessors of the respective subdivisions at the time of their meeting for instructions, a list of all persons and property so returned for taxation, and may deliver the original returns to such assessor for his use"; whereupon it becomes the duty of the assessor to inspect the returns and list all property not at that time listed and returned.

Without considering these provisions in detail, it is sufficient to observe of them that they relate to the securing of returns of personal property, the correction thereof, and the listing of omitted property, which latter is to be done by the assessor under the direction of the auditor. Considerable clerical work is involved in this process, as well as some work of an expert character.

Section 2583, referred to in that portion of section 5366 which gives rise to the inquiry, relates to making up the tax list and duplicate of real and personal property and its correction in accordance with the additions and deductions ordered by the tax commission of Ohio and the county board of revision. This work is entirely clerical.

Section 5612 requires the county auditor to make out and transmit to the tax commission of Ohio an abstract of the real and personal property of each taxing district in his county. This work is entirely clerical.

The work to be done under section 5366 of the General Code would in the ordinary course of events be largely, if not entirely, completed by the middle of July of a given year. The work to be done under the other two sections the provisions of which have been abstracted above would, however, fall within the latter part of the year and would be completed about the first of October, in the ordinary course of events.

It is therefore apparent that a part at least of the duties devolving upon a county auditor, for the purpose of aiding in the performance of which the above quoted paragraph of section 5366 was enacted, are as yet unperformed for the year 1919.

In the letter of the commission and that of Mr. McKinney two extreme views of the operation of section 5366 in this particular are, among others, suggested. These may be described as follows:

> (1) That the paragraph does not go into practical effect at all until January 1, 1920, when, so to speak, the effect of the prior action of the county commissioners in making an allowance for deputy hire for the calendar year 1919 under section 2980-1 of the General Code will have expended its force.
> (2) That the section not only goes into immediate effect, but also operates so as to require the tax commission immediately to prescribe the number, tenure of employment and compensation of such members of the office force of each county auditor as may be engaged in the performance of services of the character above referred to. That is to say, in this view of the section, it would require all deputies, assistants, etc. of the county auditor engaged on the date when the law went into effect in the performance of such services to be transferred, so to speak, from the regular corps of assistants, etc., for which allowance had been made by the county commissioners, and placed in a special class with compensation payable from the general county fund instead of from the auditor's fee fund, as formerly, subject, however, to the action of the tax commission, which would be required in each case.

Before leaving this last alternative, it may be pointed out that it follows as a necessary corollary of such a view of the section that until the tax commission had acted in a given county by prescribing the number of such clerks, etc., their tenure of employment and their compensation, it would not be lawful to employ or pay any person whatsoever in such capacity; for such persons could not be employed and paid out of the auditor's fee fund, the effect of the act having been to re-classify the positions formerly occupied by them and to take them out of the class of deputies, assistants, etc., employed by virtue of the allowance of the county commissioners; nor could they be paid out of the general county fund, for only such compensation as has been allowed by the tax commission can be paid out of that fund.

Returning to the first of tht two alternatives which have been thus far suggested, it is apparent that such a view of the practical going into effect of the above quoted paragraph of section 5366 as amended would be predicated upon the supposition that the action of the tax commission thereunder could only be taken at the time when the allowance for general clerk hire of the county auditor was made. Such a supposition, however, finds no warrant in the language used in the section. In fact, the commission's action is not in the nature of an allowance for clerk hire at all; the commission is to prescribe the number of experts, deputies, clerks and employes to be appointed by the county auditor for the purpose specified, the time they shall serve and is to approve their compensation as fixed by the county auditor. In other words, the action of the commission is more closely analogous to the action of the county auditor himself under the county auditors' salary law. The function of the commissioners under that law would be to fix an aggregate allowance. It is for the auditor to determine the number of persons whom he will employ within the limits of such allowance, and the compensation of each of them, as well as the period of their employment.

Without discussing this question further it is believed that the first of the two views above suggested must be rejected, and that it cannot be said that the tax commission has no authority or duty to act under section 5366 as amended until the expiration of the present calendar year; but that on the contrary whatever may be the authority or duty of the tax commission, such authority or duty existed on and after the date when section 5366 as amended went into effect as a law.

But does it follow that on the date when section 5366 as amended went into effect it immediately produced the result described in the second alternative above suggested? The answer to this question depends upon the interpretation of the first sentence of the paragraph which is under consideration. The language of that sentence may be repeated here for convenience as follows:

> "For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, etc. * * * each county auditor shall appoint such number of experts, deputies, clerks and employes as may from time to t me be prescribed for him by the tax commission of Ohio."

This sentence prescribes a duty on the part of the county auditor arising when action on the part of the tax commission is taken. It is not an appropriate expression to designate mere power or authority; it enacts that the auditor shall appoint such number of experts, etc., as may from time to time be prescribed for him by the tax commission. Such an expression does not necessarily negative any power which he may have from any other source to appoint deputies, experts, etc., for the purpose designated in the section.

Section 2980 of the General Code provides, in effect, that the county auditor, among other officers of the county, must on the twentieth of each November file with the county commissioners "a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, * * * for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter." It is then made the duty of the county commissioners within a short time after the filing of such statement to "fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, etc."

Section 2980-1 places limitations on the amount of the allowance and affords relief against the operation of such limitations by application to the common pleas court.

Then follows section 2981 of the General Code, which provides that—

> "Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation * * * shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 2987 may be mentioned in this connection. It provides in effect that the compensation of deputies, etc., shall be paid from the fee fund.

A comparison is suggested between section 5366, previously considered, and section 2981, which relates to the appointment and employment of persons in the office of the county auditor, among other county officers. As previously observed, the former makes it the mandatory duty of the auditor to appoint the prescribed number of deputies, etc.; section 2981, however, confers a power rather than imposes a duty.

This comparison is made for the purpose of determining whether or not section 5366 has the effect previously imputed to it, namely, of withdrawing clerks, etc. who are performing the services designated therein from the class of employes and appointees employed and compensated under section 2981 of the General Code. In order to arrive at this result it is necessary to regard section 5366 as having the effect of making it illegal for a county auditor to employ what might be termed personal tax deputies and clerks under section 2981, regardless of the action of the tax commission. That is to say, whether the tax commission prescribes any employes for him or not under section 5366, the auditor is wholly without authority to employ persons for the performance of the services referred to in that section in the exercise of such authority as he may have under section 2981.

Further illustrating the necessary implications of such a construction, let it be observed that it will require us to paraphrase section 5366 substantially as follows:

> The necessary experts, deputies, clerks and employes for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, etc., shall be appointed by the county auditor in such number as the tax commission may prescribe, for such time as that commission may prescribe, and at such compensation as shall be fixed by the auditor, subject to the approval of the tax commission, and shall be paid out of the general county fund; and such deputies, etc., shall not be employed or paid in any other manner.

It is true that a negative implication may often be drawn from an affirmative statute where it is clearly the intention of the legislature that the affirmative statute is to govern the subject matter exclusively. The maxim which is applied in such a case is that expressed by the Latin phrase: Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. It has apt and almost necessary application to every grant of power; it does not, however, have such clear application to the imposition of a duty; that is to say, it is perfectly conceivable that the legislature may empower a public officer to act in a given manner but make it his duty to act in a different manner when certain conditions exist.

It is thus seen that the maxim under discussion does not have perfect application to section 5366 unless that section be regarded as a grant of power, which, to be sure, it is in the sense that every positive duty of a public officer also embraces the power to discharge that duty.

Unless we can interpret section 5366 as providing the exclusive method for the employment of the clerks, etc., who are to do the work referred to therein, we cannot say that the subsequent adoption of that section had the effect upon section 2981 which is described as implied amendment, at least to the extent of holding that the subsequent section, 5366, of ts own force and without any action thereunder by the tax commission has this effect.

But it is believed that the question as to whether or not the two sections may stand side by side under any circumstances is perhaps best tested by consideration of whether or not it is the duty of the tax commission to take any action under section 5366—in other words, whether or not mandamus will lie to compel the tax commission to prescribe any clerks. experts, etc., for a county auditor thereunder.

There is no mandatory language in the section in so far as it refers to the tax commission. The phraseology is "as may from time to time be prescribed for him by the tax commission of Ohio." The tax commission may prescribe; it may do this "from time to time." It is very difficult at least to get out of this language any inference that action under it by the tax commission is mandatory.

If we say that the section is directory and reposes discretion in the tax commission whethe to act or not in a given case, then we face the question as to whether we will impute to the legislature the intention of denying to a county auditor the right to employ anybody to do the work provided for in sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code, unless the tax commission happens to so "prescribe."

It is believed that this was not the intention of the legislature. Conceivably there must be many of the smaller counties in the state in which what has come to be known in the larger counties as a "taxing department" in the auditor's office, in the sense of a corps or body of clerks distinct from the others who are employed in that office, is not required. That is to say, while the work has to be done, it may very well be done by persons who not only need not devote their entire time during the whole year to the performance of such services, but whose entire time even at the periods of stress is hardly consumed by the necessities of the taxation work. Section 5366 seems to take account of this in providing that the tax commission may prescribe the number, and do it from time to time.

It is true that the word "additional" is not in the first sentence of that paragraph of section 5366 which is under consideration. That is to say, it is not therein provided that the county auditor shall appoint "such additional number of experts, etc., as may be prescribed." Nevertheless, the failure of the section to provide that the commission shall prescribe the number at all, as hereinbefore pointed out, makes it clear that unless the commission has acted the employment of deputies, etc., on such work as is indicated in the section but made under section 2981 G. C. is authorized and lawful. Inasmuch, therefore, as the section under consideration imposes a duty on the auditor without expressly limiting his powers under other sections, and further, because the tax commission would, in the nature of things, act in the light of circumstances as they exist, it must follow that though the word "additional" is not used in the first sentence of the paragraph, that sentence is to be interpreted as if the word were actually there. Putting it in another way: the auditor may under section 2981 lawfully appoint deputies for this service; he must under section 5366 appoint such number as the tax commission prescribed; those whom he must appoint would necessarily be in addition to those whom he is authorized to appoint, if he has exercised the authority.

It follows from this that the paragraph of section 5366 as amended now under consideration expends its force with respect to providing for the payment of deputies, assistants, etc., engaged in the work therein mentioned and their employment upon the appointment of such number of deputies, assistants, etc.,as the commission has prescribed; so that if the commission should prescribe, for example, that one expert should be employed by a given county auditor to perform designated service of this character, his compensation would have to be fixed subject to the approval of the commission and paid out of the general county fund; but this would not preclude the auditor from retaining in his employment what might be termed a "regular" deputy or clerk employed by him under section 2981 G. C. To reach any other conclusion would necessitate such an interpretation of section 5366 as to make it, either in the first instance or when action thereunder is taken by the tax commission, a limitation upon section 2981. Both sections are affirmative in form and presumably are intended to be cumulative. Therefore, the suggested interpretation would be false. Moreover, section 5366 recognizes the necessary relation of the clerks, experts and other employes prescribed by the tax commission to the total number employed by the auditor by the provision therein made for a reimbursement of the general county fund out of the surplus, if any, remaining at a given time in the fee fund of the auditor.

From the reasons thus far adduced, it is the opinion of this department that section 5366 in and of itself does not so operate, so to speak, as to discharge the employes already at work by virtue of appointment or employment under section 2981 G. C. and engaged in assisting the auditor in the performance of his duties under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 of the General Code; that that result is not reached under section 5366 even when the tax commission of Ohio takes action thereunder; and that the tax commission of Ohio is not required to take such action if in its judgment the number of deputies, etc., now at work in a given county is sufficient.

It is further the opinion of this department that the tax commission's action under section 5366 is to be predicated upon conditions as it finds them in the office of a given county auditor; so that if the auditor's force is sufficient in number and quality of personnel to perform the services referred to in the section the commission need not act at all; but if at the present time or at any time hereafter, by reason of the expansion of other work in the auditor's office and the consequent inability of the auditor to procure a sufficient number of employes of the kind desired for the performance of the work mentioned in section 5366, within the limits of his allowance as fixed by the county commissioners for any year, the commission is of the opinion that action under section 5366 should be taken, it may and should prescribe for such county auditor such number and character of employes, in addition to those capable of performing this work and otherwise provided for, if any, as it may see fit to prescribe without in anywise necessarily affecting thereby the status of persons employed under section 2981 G. C.

These considerations lead to the following answers to the specific questions submitted to this department:

(1) Amended senate bill No. 72 requires the tax commission to fix the number and approve the compensation of such clerks only as may be required from time to time in addition to the regular employes of the office; it does not require the commission to fix the number and approve the compensation of all clerks in the county auditor's office performing service required by sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C., unless the allowance made to the auditor under section 2980-1 G. C. by the county commissioners is insufficient, having regard to the extent of other work in the auditor's office, to enable him to employ any clerks and other assistants for such service within the limits of such allowance and at the same time adequately to man his department for the performance of other services.

(2) The commission is not required to fix the number and approve the compensation of the clerks performing duties under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C. for the last half of July and the remainder of the calendar year 1919; and in the absence of any action under section 5366 by the tax commission clerks employed under section 2981 G. C., and actually performing such services, will continue to receive their compensation out of the allowance fixed by the county commissioners or the common pleas court under the provisions of sections 2980 and 2980-1 G. C.

(3) The answers given to the first two questions submitted by the tax commission make unnecessary an answer to the third question submitted by the commission.

(4) It will be necessary for a county auditor to secure the approval of the tax commission under senate bill No. 72 before issuing a warrant on the county fund for the remainder of the month of July in compensating any deputy or clerk performing services under sections 2583, 5366 and 5612 G. C., but it will not be necessary to secure such approval as a condition of retaining regular deputies and employes in service in the performance of such work, the compensation to be payable out of the fee fund, as formerly.

(5) It follows that without action by the tax commission the deputies and clerks of the county auditor, whether performing the service indicated or not, will continue to be paid from the county auditor's fee fund.

This statement answers the second and third questions submitted by the prosecuting attorney of Clark county.

(6) Amended senate bill No. 72 in practice may become operative at any time, the commission being authorized to act in the premises whenever it sees fit. It is therefore not true that the act itself will not in practice become operative until January 1, 1920. It is probably true that after new allowances are made in the fall of the year 1919, operative on and after January 1, 1920, from which regular employes of the county auditor are to be employed, new conditions may arise which will probably require further action on the part of the tax commission. The jurisdiction of the commission under section 5366 is continuing and may be exercised at any time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

2. The duty of stamping the date on food deposited in and removed from cold storage warehouses, is imposed upon both the owner of the food and the licensed warehouseman by section 11 of said act.

3. Knowledge on the part of the owner of food or of the licensed operator of a cold storage warehouse, that such food is unwholesome, is not necessary to constitute a violation of said law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6, 1919.

HON. THOMAS C. GAULT, Chief of Bureau of Dairy and Foods, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date relative to the interpretation of certain sections of the act providing for the inspection of cold storage goods, and the regulation and supervision of cold storage warehouses (107 O. L. 594), was duly received, and reads as follows:

> "Please advise who shall be held responsible for a violation of section 13 of the cold storage act where an individual rents storage from a licensed cold storage operator.
> Also violation of sections 10 and 11, regarding the keeping in storage of unwholesome food and the marking of the same. Shall the responsibility for such violation be charged wholly against the licensee or against the owner of such food commodities, should he be other than the licensed operator of cold storage plant?"

In the consideration of your questions, the provisions of section 12380 G. C., commonly referred to as the aider and abettor statute, are also applicable.

(1) Section 10 of the act, now designated as section 1155-10 G. C., provides:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to place in any cold storage warehouse, to keep therein, or to sell, offer or expose for sale, any diseased, tainted, or otherwise unwholesome food, or to place in cold storage any slaughtered animals or parts thereof unless the entrails and other offensive parts have first been properly removed."

It will be observed that the foregoing section is directed at the following acts:

(a) To place in any cold storage warehouse:

(b) To keep in any cold storage warehouse; or

(c) To sell, offer or expose for sale any diseased, tainted, or otherwise unwholesome food; and

(d) To place in cold storage any slaughtered animals or parts thereof unless the entrails and other offensive parts have first been properly removed.

It is made unlawful by the section referred to for any person, firm or corporation to do any of the forbidden acts above enumerated, and both the owner of the food, or slaughtered animals, as the case may be, and the licensed operator of the warehouse, may be guilty of doing any of the enumerated unlawful acts. For example:

The owner of unwholesome food, or of prohibited slaughtered animals, would violate the section as principal by placing the same in the warehouse; and if the licensee should allow the owner to place such food and animals therein, he would be liable as an aider.

A licensed operator of a warehouse who keeps therein unwholesome food or prohibited slaughtered animals would violate the section as principal; and the owner who placed such food in the warehouse would be liable.

The owner of unwholesome food who sells, offers or exposes for sale such food would be liable as principal; and any person, including the licensed operator of the warehouse, acting for the owner in selling, offering or exposing for sale such food or animals, would also be an offender; and

The owner of prohibited slaughtered animals who places such products in cold storage would violate the section, and a licensee who permits him to do so would also be liable.

(2) Section 2 of the act provides:

"All food shall at the time it is deposited in any cold storage warehouse bear the date of such deposit plainly stamped thereon. Such food shall also bear a stamp indicating the date of removal. The marking of food as provided in this section shall be under such further regulations as may be prescribed by the secretary of agriculture."

This section is directed against the deposit and removal of food unless the date of deposit and removal is stamped thereon as therein provided, and it is my opinion that the section imposes the duty of stamping upon both the owner of the goods and the licensed operator of the warehouse.

(3) Section 13 of the act provides:

"No person, firm or corporation shall sell, or offer, or expose for sale, any of the following foods which have been held for a longer period of time than herein specified in a cold storage warehouse: Whole carcasses of beef, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of pork, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of sheep, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of lamb, or any parts thereof, six months; whole carcasses of veal, or any parts thereof, four months; dressed fowl, ten months; butter, nine months, and fresh fish, nine months."

The prohibition in the foregoing section is against the sale, offering for sale or exposing for sale, the foods therein mentioned, which have been in storage beyond a certain specified time. The statute is broad enough to include not only the owner of the food who sells, offers for sale or exposes for sale the foods mentioned, but also the licensee in event he undertakes to act for the owner in selling, offering for sale, or exposing for sale such foods.

In conclusion I desire to call attention to the fact that while the act in question does not, in express terms, require that the owner of the food or the licensed operator of the warehouse shall have knowledge that the food placed or kept in cold storage warehouses, or sold, offered or exposed for sale, is unwholesome, it is my opinion however, that knowledge is not an essential element of any such offense under the act, and that both the owner of the food and the licensed operator of the warehouse act at their peril in committing or permitting any of the prohibited acts, or in omitting to discharge any duty imposed upon them by the act.

The evident purpose of the act was to protect the public against the harmful consequences of unwholesome food, and to prevent the hoarding of food supplies, and if the burden of proving knowledge on the part of the owner or licensed operator is placed upon the state, the very purpose of the act might, in may cases, be defeated. The act, in my opinion, falls clearly within the doctrine of State vs. Kelly, 54. O. S., 166, and kindred cases, holding that in prosecutions under food acts, ignorance of adulteration or condition is no defense. The law in question being enacted, as already stated, in the interests of and to protect the public against the harmful consequences of unwholesome food, and also to prevent the hoarding of food supplies, the licensed operator of the warehouse cannot sit supinely by and close his eyes to what use is being made of his warehouse, but is required by the provisions of this act to be on guard at all times and to be diligent, to the end that the acts prohibited by the act shall not under any circumstances be committed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—PARTY AFFILIATION FOR VOTING PARTY TICKET AT PRIMARY—HOW DETERMINED.

Party affiliation as a requisite qualification for voting a party ticket at a primary is to be determined upon challenge, by requiring the affidavit of the proposed voter upon facts touching his qualification, and by his examination under oath, and any further investigation which may be determined upon by the judges or either of them, and the judges of the party to which the person asking the ticket claims affiliation, are the final arbiters of his qualification.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1919.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently requested my opinion on the following question:

> "At the coming primary election in this city, our board of election and precinct boards will be faced frequently with this question:
> What qualifications are requisite to entitle one to vote a party ticket at a city primary election?"

With your communication you furnish additional information to the effect that your question relates primarily to the matter of determination of party affiliation as a qualification for voting the party ticket at the primary election.

From among the sections relating to primary elections, I quote provisions reflecting upon your question as follows:

Section 4976 provides in part:

> "Separate tickets shall be provided for each political party entitled to participate in such primary. Such tickets shall contain the names of all persons whose names have been duly presented and not withdrawn."

Section 4980 provides:

> "At such election only legally qualified electors or such as will be legally qualified electors at the next ensuing general election may vote and all such electors may vote only in the election precinct where they reside, and it shall be the duty of the challengers and of the judges, and the right of any elector, whenever there is reason to doubt the legality of any vote that may be offered to interpose a challenge. The cause of a challenge shall be: That the person challenged has received or been promised some valuable reward or consideration for his vote; that he has not previously affiliated with the party whose ticket he now desires to vote. Affiliation shall be determined by the vote of the elector making application to vote, at the last general election held in even numbered years."

Section 4981 provides:

> "Before any challenged person shall be allowed to vote, he shall make and subscribe an affidavit duly sworn to, before one of the judges, who are hereby authorized and empowered to administer such oaths, blanks for which shall be furnished by the board of deputy state supervisors, giving age, residence, nationality, citizenship, party allegiance, length of residence in the voting precinct, county and state, and all other facts necessary to disclose whether he is a legal voter at such election, which affidavit shall be returned to the office of the board with the poll books and tally sheets."

Section 4982 provides:

> "If a person challenged refuses to be sworn, or being sworn, refuses to answer any questions, or if his answers show that he lacks any of the qualifications herein required to make him a legal voter at such primary election, his vote shall be rejected. The judges, or either of them, shall have the power to make further investigation, and he or they may call and examine witnesses as to the qualifications of the person challenged, and, if the judges of the party to which the person asking the ticket claims affiliation are not satisfied that he is a legal voter under this chapter, they shall reject his vote."

It is found from an examination of the statutes that provision is not made for determination of the party affiliation qualifying a person to vote a party ticket at the primaries, strictly as a matter of record, but on the contrary, it is made the duty of challengers and of the judges, and the right of any elector, to interpose a challenge whenever there is reason to doubt the legality of any vote that may be offered. Among the causes for challenge is that the voter has not previously affiliated with the party whose ticket he now desires to vote.

It is further provided that before any challenged person shall be allowed to vote he shall make and subscribe an affidavit before one of the judges in which he shall state, among other things, his "party allegiance," and "all other facts necessary to disclose whether he is a legal voter at such election." Party affiliation shall be determined "by the vote of the elector making application to vote, at the last general election held in even numbered years."

The making of the affidavit is not conclusive of the applicant's right to vote the particular party ticket, but by the provisions of section 4982 it is provided that the judges or either of them shall have the power to make further investigation, and may call and examine witnesses as to the qualifications of the person challenged; and, finally, if the person challenged refuses to be sworn, or refuses to answer any questions, or his answers show that he lacks any of the qualifications for voting the ticket which he seeks to vote, his vote shall be rejected; and further, if from the entire information at hand, acquired both from the sworn statement of the voter and his answers to questions propounded, and any further investigation which may be made by way of examination of witnesses, or otherwise, if the judges of the party to which the person asking for the ticket claims affiliation, are not satisfied that he is a legal voter, they shall reject his vote.

It seems that the provisions for ascertainment of the qualifications of a voter with respect to his party affiliations and otherwise, authorizes a searching inquiry in case of fraud or attempted abuse in voting, and these provisions will generally be found adequate to afford proper restriction against voting contrary to the spirit and intent of the primary law.

In the case of State ex rel. Murphy vs. Graves, 91 O. S., 36, it was said:

> "Under existing law the primary is necessarily a party primary. Wisely or unwisely, there is no provision made for the independent voter. The members of a party are presumed to act as the members of a lodge, or the members of a church, or of any other voluntary organization, to select representatives of their lodge, church or such association, to fill certain offices and discharge certain trusts. * * *
> Sections 4981 and 4982 provide as to how the challenge shall be tried, and that the judges of the party with whom the voter claims affiliation are the judges to finally determine his qualifications as a legal voter."

Here the court was considering the party status of the relator, who had previously been affiliated with another party than that with which he claimed affiliation for the purposes involved in the case before the court, and it was said:

> "Under the statutes he would not be a qualified voter at such Progressive party primary."

You are therefore advised in conformity with the observations of the supreme court in the foregoing case that sections 4981 and 4982 govern the determination of a challenge and the judges of the party with which the voter claims affiliation, are the judges who finally determine his qualification as a legal voter.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

DEPUTY SHERIFFS—MAY PERFORM DUTIES UNDER DOG REGISTRATION LAW AND ALSO ACT AS REGULAR DEPUTIES.

Deputy sheriffs whose employment is referable to the increase of duties of the sheriff's office by reason of the provisions of the dog registration law, are not special deputies in the sense of their authority being limited to the performance of functions under said act, but are authorized to act in the full capacity of regular deputies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1919.

HON. GEO. W. SHEPPARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently requested my opinion, as follows:

> "According to a recent ruling of your department the sheriff is to appoint deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provision of the act relating to the catching and impounding of dogs and the commissioners are to make the necessary appropriation to pay for said deputy or deputies. Are the duties of such deputies when so appointed restricted to catching and impounding dogs or will such deputies be subject to any duties the sheriff may require of them?"

The ruling to which you refer is no doubt opinion No. 229, addressed to Hon. H. W. Kuntz, prosecuting attorney, Zanesville, Ohio, under date of April 24, 1919. In that opinion I held that the provisions of section 5652-8 G. C. (107 O. L. 535) invested the county commissioners with the authority and the duty to provide sufficient funds for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of the act which is one relating primarily to the registration and licensing of dogs.

It was pointed out that "section 5652-7 readily discloses that the executive functions under the law are vested in the sheriff, which as readily suggests the probability of the requirement of additional assistants or deputies over that which would be found necessary for the regular duties of the office."

The language "the commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act" was construed as a cumulative authorization, supplementing the provisions of section 2980 G. C. et seq. for compensation of deputy sheriffs to the extent that the employment was made necessary by additional duties imposed upon the sheriff's office by the legislation in question. This section was held to authorize proper provision for so much of the work of the sheriff's office as related to the enforcement of the dog registration law, their duty to provide compensation for the deputies so engaged being measured only by the necessity for such service as imposed by this law, rather than that the same should depend upon the condition of the sheriff's fee fund, as in the case of the employment of regular deputies. The section which is involved in your inquiry is section 5652-8, and your question arises out of the provision which was under consideration in the former opinion.

Only the pertinent part of the section will be quoted:

> "Sec. 5662-8. County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act."

From the language of the statute, and the analysis made in the opinion to which you refer, it is apparent that the duties involved in the provision for compensation are duties cast upon the sheriff, while the provision for appropriation of funds is to provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of the act.

It is thus obvious that it was intended that the sheriff in the discharge of the additional duties imposed upon that office should not be disabled by inability to maintain the proper staff of assistants on account of lack of funds, and therefore the matter of providing the necessary funds for carrying out the purposes of the law was not made to depend upon the general provision for employment of deputies out of percentages of the fee fund, but a special provision was made for the necessary funds, but only such as the additional duties created by the act should require.

It follows then that in practice the sheriff being charged with the administration of the dog registration law, must provide himself not only with such deputies as are required in the administration of the other functions of his office, but also such additional deputy or deputies as may be required in the discharge of the new duties imposed by the dog registration law; and likewise it is made the duty of the county commissioners to co-operate in the matter to the extent of providing the funds for the employment of such additional deputies. Neither the duty nor the authority of the county commissioners in relation to providing this additional fund extends beyond a provision sufficient for the enforcement of the act in question, and likewise the extent of the authority of the sheriff for providing deputies to be compensated under this cumulative provision is measured by the necessities arising under the law.

Therefore, while I think that such deputies as may be appointed by the sheriff are qualified to act for and on behalf of that officer to the full extent of the general authority of deputies, yet presumably there will be no more money provided under the special provision in section 5652-8 than is to be applied to compensation of deputies engaged in the special services marked out in that act, which in fact is the limit of authority in that regard.

The operation of the law I think becomes clear when it is considered that its paramount purpose as involved in your question relates only to providing the sheriff with additional funds for deputy hire to the extent of the additional duties imposed upon his office. It is not apparent from the law that any new department is intended to be created, nor in fact that any special classification of deputies is contemplated, but rather that the regular deputy force of the sheriff's office may be increased commensurate with the additional duties imposed.

The county commissioners are to make the appropriation necessary to provide such additional deputies, and if it be found that the duties would in some instances only require part time of the deputy it is to be presumed that the appropriation will be limited accordingly.

There being a stated volume of this special work to be done, and a corresponding provision for deputy hire to be made, it is not important whether there be a special assignment of deputies for exclusive service in the administration of the dog registration law or not so long as the purpose and spirit of the law is observed to the end that there shall be a due administration of its provisions on the part of the sheriff's office, and the essential appropriation for deputy hire on the part of the county commissioners.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, I advise that deputies in the sheriff's office whose employment is referable to the necessity for additional assistants in the performance of the duties arising under the dog registration law, and whose compensation is provided in pursuance of the law, are not essentially special deputies with restricted authority, but are in fact deputies of the sheriff in the same general sense as what may be termed regular deputies employed in pursuance of other provisions of the law; and while the law only authorizes provision for funds sufficient for compensation of deputies made necessary in the performance of the additional duties stipulated in the dog registration law, and presumably only such amount will be provided, yet there is no legal disqualification against the deputy so employed performing other service in the sheriff's office, if the matter of his compensation therefor is arranged.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—DEPOSITORY HAS DEPOSITED WITH BOARD BONDS AS SECURITY FOR SUCH DEPOSIT—BOARD PLACED BONDS IN SAFE DEPOSIT BOX WHICH WAS BURGLARIZED—LIABILITY OF BOARD.

Where a board of education has received bonds from a bank, which has been made the depository for such board of education, as security for such deposit, and such board has exercised reasonable care in the preservation of such bonds, by placing the same in a safe deposit box of the bank in question, the board of education is not responsible for the loss of such bonds where the bank in question was burglarized and the safe deposit box, bonds and all papers therein, were taken.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1919.

HON. J. H. FULTZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "The Pleasantville village board of education in Fairfield county had $4,225.42 deposited with the Pleasantville Bank, the legal depository, the law having been complied with in every particular. The bank had deposited with the board of education $5,500.00 of city of Cleveland, Ohio, bonds to secure the deposits. Said bonds were placed in a safety deposit box in the vaults of the bank, the safety deposit box having been rented by the board for the purpose of depositing the valuable papers and securities of the board, and kept in the bank with its consent. The clerk of the board of education could not get the box without the help of the bank clerk, nor could the bank get the securities without the clerk of the board of education. The bank was burglarized February 10, 1919, the box, bonds and all papers were taken.
> Is the board of education responsible for the loss of the bonds under the statement of facts?"

Following such request this department asked for further information, viz., a copy of the contract under which such bank became a legal depository of the Pleasantville village board of education and whether there was any stipulation in such agreement as to title in any collateral that may have been given as security in the event of certain contingencies; and an exact copy of the contract rules under which such safe deposit box was rented by the village board of education from the Pleasantville Bank and rules of such bank attendant thereto.

In reply to such request for information as indicated, you made the following statement under date of July 21, 1919.

> "The contract for the deposit of the funds was not in writing, this bank being the only one in the district, and the contract for the safety deposit box in which the bonds were kept was a verbal contract, in which the board paid $1.25 per year for the purpose of filing valuable papers.
> The enclosed contract is the entire written evidence, all other arrangements were verbal, just passive acts by both the bank and board."

The copy of the instrument given by the officials of the Pleasantville bank reads as follows:

> "To whom it may concern:
> We, the officials of the Pleasantvill e Bank, hereby agree that the bonds described as follows: being City of Cleveland, Ohio, bonds, numbered 44151, 44152, 44153, 44154 and 44155, each for the sum of one thousand dollars, and all maturing July 1st, 1936, school district of Cincinnati, Ohio, numbered 121 for the sum of five hundred dollars, placed with the board of education of Pleasantville village school district, Fairfield county, Ohio, as collateral security on the part of this bank as depository of said school district, will become at once the property of said board of education, to an amount equal to the sum of such deposit and accrued interest, upon the suspension or default of this bank.

February 1st, 1918.

A. V. Lerch, Vice President.
E. C. Sawyer, Cashier."

An analysis of the above statement of facts shows that the Pleasantville bank became the depository of the village school district of Pleasantville, Ohio, and that on February 10, 1919, the board of education of such village had on deposit in such bank the sum of $4,225.42; that at the time when such bank became the depository of the village board of education the bank offered as collateral security to such board of education the five bonds of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, numbered as indicated in the instrument heretofore quoted; that the board of education, through its clerk, took the collateral security in question and placed it in a safe deposit box in the Pleasantville bank, such bank being the only institution of its kind located in the village school district. On February 10, 1919, the safe deposit box, bonds and all papers were taken by burglars and you now ask the question as to whether the board of education is responsible for the loss of the bonds, under the statement of facts given.

When the board of education of the Pleasantville school district accepted the bonds of the city of Cleveland, offered by the Pleasantville bank as collateral security, required under the statutes where a bank becomes the depository for a school district, it became a bailee in the transaction and was charged with exercising all reasonable care in preserving the bonds in question. The clerk of the board of education thereupon deposited the bonds in a safe deposit box in the bank which was the depository and there can be no question but what this was exercising reasonable care in the preservation of such bonds for the reason that such safe deposit box is presumed to have been the safest and strongest place in the village district for the preservation of papers and valuables.

The law of placement is that where the bailor has deposited with the bailee valuables of any kind and the bailee has exercised all reasonable care as custodian of such bailment, the bailee cannot be charged with the responsibility for a loss of the bailment through an accident or a matter over which the bailee had no control. It is presumed that the board of education, or the Pleasantville bank, has communicated with the authorities of the city of Cleveland, advising that such bonds as numbered above were stolen, hence in the end the loss of the bonds themselves might not be a financial loss, for the reason that when presented for payment or cancellation, the person who had stolen them could not prove ownership to them and would have no title. The title to the bonds would still rest in the bank which had deposited them with the board of education under the instrument above quoted, until there had been a default on the part of the bank in the payment of the deposit in money, made by the board of education in such bank, which default does not appear in your statement of facts and would not be a default until an open demand had been made.

Answering your question specifically, then, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a board of education has received bonds from a bank which has been made the depository for such board of education, as security for such deposit, and such board has exercised reasonable care in the preservation of such bonds, by placing the same in a safe deposit box of the bank in question, the board of education is not responsible for the loss of such bonds where the bank in question was burglarized and the safe deposit box, bonds and all papers therein were taken.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CASHIER IN AUTOMOBILE DEPARTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE'S OFFICE NOT IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The position of cashier in the automobile department of the office of secretary of state is not one for which the merit and fitness of applicants is practicable of determination by competitive examination, and said position is therefore outside of the classified service of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication requesting my opinion as follows:

> "I would like an opinion from you relative to my power to appoint a person of my own selection as cashier in the automobile department.
> The civil service commission insists that I am compelled to appoint from a certified list which they furnished me. Am I bound to appoint from this list or can I ignore it?
> This position is of extreme importance to me as this cashier will handle nearly three millions of dollars within the next twelve months, for all of which I am responsible. I desire to keep in this place a man whom I know to possess the highest standard of qualifications, honesty and integrity, all of which I know from my own personal contact with the man."

The civil service legislation of the state of Ohio consists of a constitutional provision and a legislative measure enacted in pursuance thereof. The constitutional provision is as follows:

> "Section 10, Art. XV. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."

The legislation passed in pursuance of the constitutional provision and now in force is comprised within the act found at page 400 of 105-6 Ohio laws, being sections 486 to 486-31, inclusive, pertinent provisions of which are those relating to the definition of the classified and unclassified civil service of the state, being part of section 486-8, as follows:

> "The civil service of the state of Ohio and the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof shall be divided into the unclassified service and the classified service."

There follows then in subdivision (a) an enumeration of positions comprising the unclassified service; while it is provided in subdivision (b) that classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class and the unskilled labor class.

> "1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. * * *
> 2. The unskilled labor class shall include ordinary unskilled laborers. * * * "

Other provisions of the act govern appointments, promotions, etc., in the classified service. It is to be noted that there is a recognition both in the provisions of the constitution and the legislative act of the impracticability of ascertaining the merit and fitness of appointees for certain positions by competitive examination, which positions, by the subdivision of the classified service above noted, are expressly excluded from either division thereof, and it follows as a necessary conclusion that in addition to the enumeration of specific positions comprised within the unclassified service, there is the further group of positions the "merit and fitness of which is not practicable of ascertainment, by competitive examination."

While certain of the language of the act is somewhat inaccurate and contradictory, yet the view I have expressed has been universally adopted, and in fact, to hold otherwise would be to construe the law as exceeding the constitutional bounds.

The exact question which you have presented was considered by my predecessor in an opinion addressed to Hon. W. D. Fulton, secretary of state, and reported at page 19 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917.

In considering the question it was said:

> "This functionary though not called a deputy substantially is one in a particular department of the office of the secretary of state. There is no doubt as to his holding a fiduciary relation, superlatively so, almost exclusively so. There is no doubt of his being authorized to act in the place of his principal."

Among the positions placed in the unclassified service, subsection 9 enumerates the following:

> "The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act for and in the place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

After noting the character of duties of the cashier in the automobile department of the office of secretary of state, as above quoted, it was further set out in the opinion that while there might arise some doubt as to the cashier being "authorized by law" to act for his principal, within the letter of the provision of section 9 designating positions in the unclassified service, yet it was held this question should be resolved in the affirmative, and it was further observed that in any event,

> "He does, however, come within that designation by the necessary test of the law by its constitutional foundation."

In speaking of the slight discrepancy in the language of the two provisions of the civil service law purporting to be definitive of the classified service, my predecessor observed:

> "Under subdivisions (a) of this section, in subsections numbered from 1 to 12, is what purports to be a complete schedule of all positions in the unclassified service, but which, as shall presently be submitted, has one important limitation—the constitutional one. * * *
> The addition to the unclassified service alluded to above consists of all those officials whose merit and fitness it is not practicable to ascertain by competitive examination. This class of officials is recognized in the act itself expressly. * * *
>
> '(1) The competitive class shall include all positions and employments * * * for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations.'
> This is the exact language of the constitutional qualification, except that in one case we have 'for which', and in the other 'as far as', a mere verbal difference. The conclusion is irresistible that this language was employed to effectuate this constitutional qualification. It can do so in no other way than by including as unclassified all those positions for which it is impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. To so hold is to hold the statute in accordance with the constitution, a construction which is always adopted where possible, even though it be a forced one."

After pointing out that in cases of any doubt as to the application of the law to a particular position, it has always been the disposition of this department to leave it for determination by the civil service commission, it is said:

> "There are, however, some positions that in the common knowledge of everyone are not practically subject to the test of such examinations, in which case, if there can be no doubt what the commission would find, or what the courts would determine upon the subject, such conclusion may be acted upon as a matter of law, in the first instance, by the appointing authority or its advisers without the unnecessary circumlocution and circumvention of going through the proceedings and records of the commission. This office is such position, and it may safely be said, as a matter of law, that the fitness and merit of a cashier cannot be determined by an examination for the obvious reason that more than ninety-nine per cent of such fitness is a question of integrity, which is inscrutable, past finding out, by any such test, and which no man can determine except as a result of intimate acquaintance or careful observation thereof on his part, or of someone in whom he confides. What would be said of a board of bank directors who would select a cashier for the bank by a competitive examination? Yet the nature of that duty would render it much more appropriate than this cashier, for that cashier has other very prominent duties and requirements aside from the handling of money.

Suppose a warden of the penitentiary wanted a cashier. He would not have to go outside his own walls to find a goodly number from which to make a selection, most of whom could stand the test of a very severe examination, and yet their very reason for being his involuntary guests is that they are unfit to be cashiers. * * *

It is correct to state, as a matter of law, that it is not practicable to ascertain his merit or fitness by an examination whereby his intellectual acumen or scientific or literary attainments may be compared with those of other persons seeking the same position. He is once for all in the unclassified service. * * * This action is taken with reference to this case alone, because, as shown above, it is so peculiarly and exclusively an unfit case for the test of an examination, that there could be no doubt but what the commission would so hold or that the courts would so hold in the event of its reaching them."

The conclusion thus reached by my predecessor in reference to the same position concerning which you now inquire is so obvious that it is not deemed necessary to engage in an extended discussion of the question.

It is so evidently contemplated by the law that there are positions for which a competitive examination is not practicable that it only remains to ascertain the nature and character of the duties of a given position in the determination of the application of the civil service law thereto. Having ascertained the facts the question of exemption then doubtless becomes one of law, as has been frequently held by the courts

In the case of Chittenden vs. Worster, 152 N. Y., 345, which is in point, the court said:

"We have carefully read the evidence in this case, and not a word have we found tending to show that a competitive examination is practicable for a position where the appointee is to receive, open, read and answer the letters of his chief, where he is to counsel and advise him with reference to the conduct and management of his office, sign his name to checks or warrants, collect and pay out his money, have the combination of his safe and the custody and control of its contents. A candidate may be ever so competent and still lack many of the necessary elements of a trustworthy officer; he may be ever so learned and still lacking in judgment and discretion; he may be discreet and still without character; he may be honest and yet meddlesome and a person in whom you could not confide. To our minds the framers of the constitution or of the statutes never contemplated or intended that a competitive examination was practicable for such a position."

It is sufficient to say that I adhere to the ruling previously announced by this department, as above set out at some length, and therefore advise you that under your statement as to the duties pertinent to the position of cashier in the automobile department of your office, such position is in the unclassified service, appointments to which are not required to be made from a list derived by competitive examination.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—DISAPPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENTS IN ROSS AND SUMMIT COUNTIES —COMPLIANCE WITH SECTION 5660 G. C. NECESSARY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1919.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of August 8, 1919, enclosing for my approval, among others, final resolutions on the following improvements:

Dayton-Chillicothe road, I. C. H. No. 29, section A-1, Ross county (township trustees), type A.

Dayton-Chillicothe road, I. C. H. No. 29, section A-1, Ross county, type B (township trustees).

Dayton-Chillicothe road, I. C. H. No. 29, section B-1, Ross county, type A and B (township trustees).

Cleveland-Massillon road, I. C. H. No. 17, section N-1, Summit county.

I note as to the four resolutions mentioned in the first three paragraphs above that the township clerk has stricken from the printed form of certificate of funds on hand the following clause:

"is in the township road fund to the credit of;"

and has also stricken from said printed form the following words:

"and in process of collection."

The certificate in question must be filed in compliance with section 5660 G. C.; and the wording in the printed form,

"is in the township road fund to the credit of, or has been levied, placed on duplicate and in process of collection for the state and township road improvement fund," is almost a literal quotation from said section 5660. The printed form of certificate is so drawn as to cover either condition, which would constitute a compliance with section 5660; that is to say, on the one hand, that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn; or on the other hand, has been levied and placed on the duplicate and in process of collection.

Therefore, unless the improvement proceedings have reached the point where the clerk can make the certificate in the form in which it is printed on the back of the final resolution, and until he does make the certificate in such form, I cannot approve said final resolutions.

The final resolution as to Cleveland-Massillon road, I. C. H. No. 17, section N-1, Summit county, is objectionable in this: That the certificate of the county auditor as to funds on hand is dated July 14, 1919; whereas the action of the county commissioners appears to have been taken on June 28, 1919.

In accordance with the opinion of this department heretofore expressed, the certificate of the county auditor must be made at or before the time at which the commissioners passed their resolution.

I am therefore withholding my approval of said last named resolution.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 3 OF SENATE BILL No. 187, (108 O. L. 924)—SPECIAL TAX FOR SCHOOLS IN YEAR 1919—BUDGET COMMISSION'S AUTHORITY NOT APPLICABLE WHEN LEVY OF SPECIAL TAX APPROVED BY ELECTORS.

Section 3 of senate bill 187 limiting the power of the budget commission with respect to the reduction of school district levies does not apply unless proceedings have been taken under the first and second sections of the act, and the levy of the special tax is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon at the special election held on August 12, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1919.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request the opinion of this department on the interpretation of section 3 of senate bill 187, (108 O. L. 924), which provides for the levy of a special tax not to exceed a two mill rate by the board of education in the year 1919. The particular question concerning which you desire to be advised is as to whether or not the prohibition in section 3, in the following words,

> "nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year," applies to all budget commissions in the adjustment of all school district levies, or rather applies only in the event that action is taken under the bill.

You submit other questions, but the answer to the one stated will suffice for the purposes of your case.

It is the opinion of this department that the provision in question applies only in the event of a favorable vote of the electors upon the submission of the question as provided in the earlier sections of the act. Section 3 in full is as follows:

> "If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes. Such levy shall be certified to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate; it shall not be subject to any limitation on tax rates now in force, and shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission, nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year."

It will be observed that the whole section is introduced by a condition, namely, the favorable vote of a majority of the electors upon the proposition submitted. All that follows in the section is governed by this condition.

It is therefore apparent that the action of the budget commission with respect to school levies generally is not affected by senate bill 187, but the prohibition contained in section 3 thereof applies only in the event that a majority of the electors voting on the proposition of making a special levy vote in favor thereof.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—TEACHER WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICT—SCHOOL LIBRARIAN.

A teacher employed at the maximum rate of pay in a weak school district, which receives state aid for teachers, is not prevented from being employed as a school librarian, but such duties must be performed before and after each day's recognized teaching periods and the payment of such librarian by the board of education from its contingent fund will not operate against such district receiving state aid for teachers to which it may be entitled.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. JOHN E. BLAKE, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "The board of education of the Zaleski village schools employed G. S. to teach in their high school at eighty dollars per month for the school term beginning September 1, 1918, this being done in the regular manner according to the school laws of this state. They also employed her as librarian at the same meeting at ten dollars per month. The duties were performed before and after each day's teaching periods. For this extra work she was paid by the board of education out of the contingent funds.
> Question: Did the payment of the ten dollars per month to G. S. for this extra labor disqualify the Zaleski village schools from receiving state aid?"

The sections bearing upon state aid for weak school districts are as follows (as amended in 107 O. L., p. 623), the same being in effect during the school term beginning September 1, 1918, the period covered by your question:

> "Sec. 7595. No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than fifty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 of the General Code, for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficit.
> Sec. 7595-1. Only such school districts which pay salaries as follows shall be eligible to receive state aid: Elementary teachers, without previous teaching experience in the state, fifty dollars a month; elementary teachers having at least one year's professional training, fifty-five dollars a month; elementary teachers who have completed the full two years' course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, sixty dollars per month; high school teachers not to exceed an average of eighty dollars per month in each high school."

Section 7596 G. C. was not amended in 107 O. L., but appears as originally passed in 103 O. L., 267. Section 7596 reads as follows:

> "Section 7596: Whenever any board of education finds that it will have such a deficit for the current school year, such board shall on the first day of October, or any time prior to the first day of January of said year, make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of such deficit in the tuition fund."

However, in 107 O. L., p. 621, the above section 7596 G. C., was supplemented by the following section:

"Section 7596-1: Whenever a school district receives state aid, as is provided for in section 7595-1 of the General Code, the board of education of such school district may refund any tuition indebtedness by issuing bonds, as is provided by section 5656 of the General Code. When such bonds are due, the amount and interest of the bonds shall be a part of the deficit for the current year, and shall be paid as state aid by the auditor of state as is provided by section 7596 of the General Code."

Your attention is invited to the fact that section 7595 G. C. says that no person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio and does not refer to any other service that may have been performed by a teacher, as a librarian, or otherwise. As an illustration, a weak school district under the schedule given in section 7595-1 G. C. might be paying an elementary teacher the minimum salary of $50.00 per month for teaching, and such person might be performing services as school janitor in addition, for possibly an additional $4.00 per month, or whatever figures the board of education and the teacher may have agreed upon. The performance by a teacher of duties outside of teaching for a board of education is not an unusual occurrence; in fact, questions of a teacher performing the duties of teaching and also of a janitor have even been carried into the courts, which have decided that a teacher cannot be compelled to perform janitor services under a contract as a teacher, but there is no objection to such teacher performing such extra service by voluntary arrangement. Such being the case, it would follow that where a teacher had performed duties outside of the teaching for the board of education, such as school librarian, as you indicate, it is eminently proper that such teacher should be paid for such additional service, for it must be performed by some person, and since it is not teaching, as indicated under section 7595 and section 7595-1 G. C., such sections upon state aid to weak school dis tricts would not prevent such employe from performing such extra service outside of school hours and being compensated therefor.

Attention is invited to the new enactment upon state aid for weak school districts, wherein certain of the above sections have been again amended in house bill 406, but such law is not effective until August 18, 1919. You further indicate that the person in question, while paid $80.00 per month, the maximum mentioned in section 7595-1 G. C. for high school teachers, which $80.00 per month was paid out of the tuition fund, was also paid $10.00 per month for performing the duties of librarian, before and after each day's teaching, out of the contingent fund, and hence should not enter into any computation as regards the distribution of state aid. If it is the view of the board of education that the school in question should have a librarian, such board has ample authority to hire such employe, and the mere fact that a teacher is receiving the maximum pay under the statute for teaching, ought not to prevent the board of education from employing such person for other minor work that was not teaching, provided such duties were performed outside of the school periods that are the recognized hours of duty of a teacher.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that a teacher employed at the maximum rate of pay in a weak school district, which receives state aid for teachers, is not prevented from being employed as a school librarian, but such duties must be performed before and after each day's recognized teaching periods, and the payment of such librarian by the board of education from its contingent fund will not operate against such district receiving state aid for teachers to which it may be entitled.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—TUITION FROM OUTSIDE DISTRICTS PLACED IN CONTINGENT FUND—EXCEPTION IN CASE OF JOINT HIGH SCHOOL—WHEN CONTINGENT FUND MAY BE USED TO PAY SUPERINTENDENT—WHERE BOARD OF EDUCATION PAYS ITS TEACHERS MORE THAN SALARIES PROVIDED IN SECTION 7595-1 G. C., DISTRICTS NOT ELIGIBLE TO STATE AID.

1. The amount of tuition received by a school district from outside districts shall be placed in the contingent fund of the district receiving such payments, except where two or more school districts have joined to establish a joint high school, in which latter event the provisions of section 7595-4 G. C. would apply on and after August 18, 1919.

2. Under section 7690 G. C. a board of education may use its contingent fund in the payment of a superintendent, after the tuition fund has proved inadequate.

3. Where a board of education pays its teachers more than the salaries provided in section 7595-1 G. C. for teaching, such district is not eligible to state aid for weak school districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. W. R. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Two school districts having joined for high school purposes and both districts contributing to the cost of operation of the school—using money for that purpose from the contingent and tuition funds of the respective districts—have received tuition fees from outside school districts under section 7747 of the General Code and placed it in the contingent fund of said high school under authority of section 7603 G. C. The state auditor in the calculation of state aid claims this outside tuition fund should be placed in the tuition fund and not in the contingent fund. The question, therefore, is, should the outside tuition fund or fees be placed in the tuition fund or in the contingent fund?
> The second question we desire to know is, 'in calculating state aid, shall we include in the calculation a sum paid a superintendent hired under section 7690 and paid under authority of section 7603 of the General Code from the tuition fund or shall a board pay a superintendent from the contingent fund and if so under what section of the law may it do so?'
> "The third question is, 'during the emergency caused by the war, many of the state aid schools were unable to employ teachers for the sums enumerated under section 7695-1 and in order to continue the schools they paid some of the teachers a greater sum than enumerated in the above mentioned section by paying excess salaries from the contingent funds of their respective districts. Would this bar a school district from receiving state aid if it was otherwise entitled to same?"

In your first question you indicate that the state auditor, in his calculation of state aid, claims that the tuition received from outside districts, who send pupils to the high school in question, should be placed in the tuition fund and not in the contingent fund. Under existing law there is no provision in the statutes that this tuition received from foreign pupils shall be placed in any other fund than the contingent fund, for section 7603 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "* * * Moneys coming from sources not enumerated herein shall be placed in the contingent fund."

In a personal conference with the auditor's department, the Attorney-General is advised that the state auditor does not in his computations add this outside tuition fund to the tuition fund of the district, but has always placed it in the contingent fund, and the answer to your first question is, that under existing law, the tuition received from outside school districts should be placed in the contingent fund.

Bearing upon your second question, section 7690, as amended in 107 O. L., 47, reads in part as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. * * *"

It is the intent of the law that the salaries of superintendents be paid from the tuition fund, if possible, but where the tuition fund is not adequate in a district to make such payment, the board has authority to use any portion of its contingent fund to make up such salary, such authority appearing in section 7690 G. C., previously quoted.

Attention is invited to the fact that house bill 406, which was filed in the office of the secretary of state May 19, 1919, and is therefore effective on August 18, 1919. clears up a number of these situations and provides in section 7595-1, as newly amended in paragraph (e) of such section, clear authority for the payment of superintendents salaries from the tuition fund.

Bearing upon the question of where two or more school districts have joined to establish a joint high school, the question of state aid for one or more of such districts is covered as follows in section 7595-4:

> "Whenever two or more school districts have joined pursuant to section 7669 to establish a joint high school, and one or more of such school districts makes application for such state aid to cover a probable deficiency in the tuition fund, then a condition precedent to the determination and rendering of such state aid the high school committee shall place in the tuition fund that part of tuition received from other districts which represents the expense for salaries of teachers as computed pursuant to section 7736. And the school district applying for such aid shall, in placing in a separate fund its contribution to the high school committee pursuant to section 7671, pay out of its tuition fund only that part of the total contribution which represents the needs of the high school committee for salaries of the high school teachers. And such high school committee in its disbursements of moneys from the tuition fund shall be governed by the limitations of section 7595-1 of the General Code."

It may be said that until house bill 406 takes effect on August 18, 1919, the matter of payment of a superintendent is nowhere directly touched upon in the statutes as to what fund he should be paid, except in section 7603 G. C., which you cite and which reads as follows:

> "The certificate of apportionment furnished by the county auditor to the treasurer and clerk of each school district must exhibit the amount of money received by each district from the state, the amount received from any special tax levy made for a particular purpose, and the amount received from local taxation of a general nature. The amount received from the state common school fund and the common school fund shall be designated the 'tuition fund,' and be appropriated only for the payment of superintendents and teachers. Funds received from special levies must be designated in accordance with the purpose for which the special levy was made and be paid out only for such purpose, except that, when a balance remains in such fund after all expenses incident to the purpose for which it was raised have been paid, such balance will become a part of the contingent fund and the board of education shall make such transfer by resolution. Funds received from the local levy for general purposes must be designated so as to correspond to the particular purpose for which the levy was made. Moneys coming from sources not enumerated herein shall be placed in the contingent fund."

In many instances it was felt that after the tuition had been collected from the outside districts and resulted in a largely centralized school, that sooner or later had a superintendent, such tuition payments from foreign pupils placed in the contingent fund under section 7603, should be used in meeting the expenses incurred by having such superintendent. Under existing law, and in the absence of a specific rule, it would seem that the superintendent should be paid from the tuition fund, if such fund will permit it, but there is nothing in the law which prevents the board of education from paying part of a superintendent's salary, if necessary, from the contingent fund, and such authority may be said to exist under section 7690, above quoted.

Coming to your third question, you say that during the emergency caused by the war, many of the state aid schools were unable to employ teachers for the scale mentioned in section 7595-1, and that in order to continue the schools they paid some of the teachers a greater sum than the amounts mentioned in section 7595-1, but such existing salaries were paid from the contingent fund of their respective districts. You now desire to know whether this emergency action taken during the war would prevent such districts from receiving state aid, if they were otherwise entitled to same.

The state aid statute is mandatory as to the salaries to be paid trachers for teaching and in order for a school district to be eligible for state aid, it must comply strictly with the provisions of section 7595-1 G. C., and if a district paid more than the salaries named therein, it could not make a proper certification to the state auditor as required in the application for state aid, and would not be eligible for such aid.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. The amount of tuition received by a school district from outside districts shall be placed in the contingent fund of the district receiving such payments, except where two or more school districts have joined to establish a joint high school, in which latter event the provisions of section 7595-4 G. C. would apply on and after August 18, 1919.

2. Under section 7690 G. C. a board of education may use its contingent fund in the payment of a superintendent, after the tuition fund has proved inadequate.

3. Where a board of education pays its teachers more than the salaries provided in section 7595-1 G. C., for teaching, such district is not eligible to state aid for weak school districts.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—FUNDS RAISED UNDER SENATE BILL NO. 187, (108 O. L. 924) HOW DISTRIBUTED—TWO-THIRDS FOR TUITION PURPOSES NEED NOT BE OBSERVED.

Funds raised under the provisions of senate bill 187 need not be divided so that two-thirds of the proceeds of such levy shall be for tuition purposes; the aggregate of such levy can be for any or all school purposes and it is for the board of education to say.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following question:

> "If a school district desires to come within the class of weak school districts to which aid is rendered pursuant to H. B. No. 406, which goes into effect this month, and such district avails itself of the provisions of senate bill No. 187 (108 O. L. 924) and in doing so raises money by levying for current expense, must two-thirds of the money so raised be placed to the credit of the tuition fund pursuant to the provisions of sections 7594-1 and 7595-1 G. C.?"

Your attention is called to the fact that house bill No. 406 bearing upon state aid to weak school districts goes into effect on August 18, 1919, and not during July, 1919, as you indicate. On the other hand, senate bill No. 187, which permits boards of education to call a special election for August 12, 1919, for the purpose of authorizing the board by vote of the people to levy taxes outside of all limitations for the purpose of meeting deficiencies in current revenues, became effective when filed in the office of the secretary of state on July 7, 1919, as section 4 of said senate bill No. 187 is an emergency clause. From this it will be noted that house bill No. 406 is not effective until after such election of August 12th, as provided in Senate bill No. 187, has been held.

Senate bill No. 187 reads as follows:

"AN ACT

To authorize boards of education to levy taxes outside of all limitations for the purpose of meeting deficiencies in current revenues.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Section 1. In lieu of proceeding under an act entitled 'An act to authorize the taxing authorities of counties, municipal corporations, townships and school districts to fund deficiencies in operating revenues for the year 1919, issue bonds and to levy taxes for such purposes but not otherwise,' the board of education of any school district may levy in the year 1919 not to exceed two mills for any and all purposes for which such boards may levy taxes, upon securing the approval of the electors of such district in the following manner:

By resolution passed by an affirmative vote of a majority of all its members elected or appointed, such board may order that the question of levying such tax, at a rate to be fixed therein, shall be submitted to the electors of the district at a special election to be held therein on Tuesday the twelfth day of August, 1919. A copy of such resolution shall be certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county or counties in which the district is situated. The deputy state supervisors shall prepare the ballots and make the necessary arrangements for the submission of such question.

The result of the election shall be certified and canvassed in like manner as all regular elections for the election of members of boards of education. Notice of such election for not less than ten days shall be given by the deputy state supervisors of elections in one or more newspapers printed in the district, once a week on the same day of the week for two consecutive times prior thereto. If no newspaper is printed therein such notice shall be posted for ten days prior to the election in five conspicuous places in the district, and published as aforesaid in a newspaper of general circulation therein. A notice substantially in the following form shall be sufficient:

NOTICE OF SPECIAL ELECTION.

Notice is hereby given that a special election will be held in the * * * school district, Ohio, on Tuesday the twelfth day of August, 1919, to determine whether an additional tax levy of ____ mills, outside of all limitations, for the year 1919, shall be made for school purposes in such district.

The expense of giving such notice shall be certified by the deputy state supervisors to the clerk of the board of education and shall be paid as expenses of notices of school elections are paid.

Section 2. The ballots used at such election shall indicate the name of the school district and further shall be in form as follows:

'For additional tax levy of * * * mills for the year 1919, for school purposes. Yes.'

'For additional tax levy of * * * mills for the year 1919, for school purposes. No.'

Section 3. If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes. Such levy shall be certified to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate; it shall not be subject to any limitation on tax rates now in force, and shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission, nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year.

Section 4. This act is hereby declared to be an emergency law necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace and safety. The necessity therefor lies in the fact that in many school districts of the state, under the limitations on tax levies provided by law, deficiencies exist in operating revenues, arising from the abnormal increase of operating expenses and the desirability of increasing the compensation of school teachers; so that unless afforded extraordinary means of raising revenues the boards of education of such district will be unable to carry on the function of public education until permanent revenues can be provided. Therefore this act shall go into immediate effect."

It will be noted that section 1 of senate bill No. 187 provides that such levy not to exceed two mills can be made for "any and all purposes," which means that the board of education could levy the entire two mills (or any portion of such two mills) for tuition purposes or any deficiencies existing in current revenues, for the law says that such levy can be made for any purpose for which a board may levy taxes. The law does not specify what the levy shall be for specifically, but says "school purposes," which covers the entire list of school activities by any board and the expense attendant.

thereto. Even the ballot form which shall be used says "school purposes" and that will be the subject the electors will pass upon. The intent of the act seems to have been to provide boards of education with temporary revenues for "operating expenses" and "increasing the compensation of school teachers" (section 4) until permanent revenues can be provided, and from such language it is apparent that the general assembly left to each individual board of education the question of how they should spend the amount arising from the levy that might be voted by the electors on August 12th, for each board in preparing its resolution would set its levy figures (two mills or less) after considering (1) what deficiencies were to be met and (2) the amount that the levy would bring in based on the tax duplicate in that district. No two districts would likely have the same deficiency figures for the same pu poses or the same tax duplicate total to be levied upon.

Section 3 of senate bill No. 187 provides that the levy at the aggregate rate authorized on August 12th "shall be in addition to all other taxes for like purposes," and further that "such levy * * * shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission," which commission is the subject matter of new section 7594-1 G. C., cited by you in house bill No. 406, which is effective on August 18, 1919, and reads as follows:

> "Whenever the board of education of a school district attaches to its budget a certification that it intends to make application for state aid pursuant to sections 7595-1 and 7595-2 of the General Code, and that it is entitled thereto, the budget commission shall proceed to make adjustments in accordance with the provisions of section 5649-3c, but shall lay such adjustment aside and thereupon proceed to make an adjustment which shall allow to such school district a levy of not less than four mills exclusive of the levy necessary to provide for indebtedness incurred prior to 1911 or incurred by a vote of the people. This last adjustment shall be certified by the budget commission pursuant to section 5649-3c. If it should thereafter appear that such school district did not so apply for such state aid or was not entitled thereto, then the adjustment first made and laid aside as above provided shall be deemed to be the final adjustment and the county auditor shall distribute, or redistribute the proceeds of tax collections in accordance with such first adjustment, or if such school district has received its distribution of the tax collections, the county auditor shall deduct from the sum due the school district on the distribution of the tax collections next following, the sum necessary to make such redistribution of tax collections."

Section 7595-1 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "A school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund by filing with the auditor of state an application therefor in such form as the auditor of state shall prescribe, and by first complying and showing compliance with the following conditions:
> 1. It shall place in the tuition fund at least two-thirds of the proceeds of the levy as adjusted by the budget commission pursuant to section 7594-1."

Answering your question direct then, it is noted that state aid is governed by the adjustment made by the budget commission as indicated in house bill 406, while senate bill 187 clearly provides that the funds arising from a levy voted under that act are not subject to any control of the budget commission. Hence the budget commisson cannot consider the amounts arising from proceedings under senate bill 187 in making their adjustment of two-thirds of the school levy for the tuition fund, which certification to the state auditor is necessary in order to secure state aid.

Senate bill 187, which is an emergency enactment, provides that:

1. The board of education may levy the tax not to exceed two mills for any purpose, that is to say the whole levy could be for one purpose, which might or might not be for tuition.

2. The rate so authorized is a levy in addition to the existing levy for the same purpose, and which has been passed upon by the county budget commission.

3. The levy authorized by senate bill 187 is beyond the control of the budget commission, and such commission cannot take cognizance of any proceedings under senate bill 187, for the purpose of reducing the amount of other levies below that allowed for the preceding year.

4. The emergency act (senate bill 187) is for providing additional revenues to care for deficiencies, increased operating expenses and increased compensation for teachers, and it is for each board of education to say what the increased levy shall be for, and it may be for one purpose, two purposes or all purposes.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that funds raised under the provisions of senate bill 187 need not be divided so that two-thirds of the proceeds of such levy shall be for tuition purposes; the aggregate of such levy can be for any or all school purposes and it is for the board of education to say.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SHOOTING ON SUNDAY—SECTION 13048 G. C. PROHIBITS—APPLICABLE TO CIVILIAN RIFLE CLUBS.

There are no exceptions to section 13048 G. C., prohibiting any person over fourteen years of age from engaging in shooting on Sunday and members of civilian rifle clubs may not legally engage in shooting on that day of the week.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. ROY E. LAYTON, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "There are now between fifty and sixty civilian rifle clubs in the state of Ohio, organized under the rules of and recognized by the National Rifle Association, which in turn is recognized and supported by the war department. Guns and ammunition are furnished by the federal government through these clubs. None of these clubs can be maintained or organized without the approval of the adjutant general of the state. I mention these facts in order to show their official standing.
> Most of these clubs have rifle ranges in the country. Is it legal for the members of these clubs to shoot on Sunday? That is, do you know of any reason why the members of these clubs cannot go to these ranges and shoot and practise on Sunday, in the daytime of course, shooting officially under rules and regulations of the club? If no Sunday laws are violated the only other objection that might be made by farmers within the vicinity, so far as I can see, would be to the noise. Of course all proper precautions are taken at these ranges to protect life and property."

Section 13048 G. C. of chapter 13, entitled "Sabbath Desecration," is pertinent to your inquiry. This section in part provides:

> "Whoever, being over fourteen years of age, engages in * * * shooting on Sunday, on complaint made within ten days therafter, shall be fined not more than twenty dollars or imprisoned not more than twenty days, or both."

This is a general law having uniform operation, and in the absence of special exceptions therein, in favor of the clubs or associations referred to in your letter, or in other sections of the law, would apply to and prohibit the members of such clubs from shooting on Sunday.

This department is aware of no such exceptions and this results in a negative answer to your inquiry.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—LEVIES—SECTION 3 OF SENATE BILL No. 187 (108 O. L. 924) PROHIBITS THE BUDGET COMMISSION FROM REDUCING THE AMOUNT OF OTHER LEVIES MADE BY BOARD OF EDUCATION BELOW AMOUNT FIXED BY BUDGET COMMISSION FOR PRECEDING YEAR.

By virtue of section 3 of senate bill No 187, "to authorize boards of education to levy taxes outside of all limitations," etc., the budget commission, in the event of a favorable vote of the electors on the question of making a special tax levy therein provided for, is prohibited from reducing the amount of other levies made by the board of education below the amount fixed by the budget commission for the preceding year. The rate of the levy for the preceding year is not to be taken into consideration.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have been asked by the city attorney of Columbus to interpret section 3 of senate bill No. 187, (108 O. L. 924) "to authorize boards of education to levy taxes out side of all limitations," etc., with respect to the provisions thereof limiting the power of the budget commission, in the event of a favorable vote of the electors on the proposition to levy additional taxes, with respect to the adjustment of other levies made by the board.

The language in question is as follows:

> "* * * nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year.'

The question submitted is as to whether the budget commission is prohibited by this provision from reducing the amount of money produced by other levies made by the board of education for the year 1919, or whether the budget commission is prohibited from reducing the rate of the levies made for the preceding year, regardless of the fact that a much larger duplicate would produce a much larger tax revenue if the rate of the board of education levies were to remain the same.

This question is of such general interest that I venture to address an opinion to the tax commission in answer to it.

It is the opinion of this department that neither of the two meanings above suggested is to be given to the language in question. The clause requires in practice a comparison of two things. (1) The amount of the other levies made by the board for the year 1920, and (2) the amount allowed such board for the year 1919. This comparison is to be made by the budget commission and its action is to be guided thereby, to the end that the result shall be (3) a certain thing with respect to the official action of the budget commission.

Suppose we begin by ascertaining what the official action of the commission under the Smith one per cent law, so called, is. It is clear that under section 5649-3c G. C. this action is expressed in terms of amounts and not of rates. The following quotation from that section shows this:

> "If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount * * * the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all of the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each * * * taxing district within the limits provided by law.
> When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property * * * of such * * * taxing district * * * and place it on the tax list of the county."

The budget commission deals with amounts, though it is true that in so doing it is enforcing limitations which according to the Smith law in its present form are expressed in terms of rates only. Having fixed amounts, its action is certified to the county auditor who determines rates. Therefore it is clear that what the budget commission is required to do under the Smith law and conversely what it is prohibited from doing under Sec. 3 of senate bill No. 187, both relate ultimately to the amount of taxes to be levied and must be expressed in terms of amount. We may therefore say that the language in question means that the budget commission shall not reduce the amount of money to be raised by levies on the grand duplicate of taxable property below a certain figure.

Obviously, if two things are to be compared, they must be capable of comparison. Therefore the thing with which the amount to be raised by property taxation, otherwise than under favor of S. B. No. 187 is to be determined, according to the provisions of Sec. 3 thereof, must, as the section itself has it, be an "amount." Here the ultimate question is encountered. The phrase is "the amount allowed by such board for the preceding year." Does this mean the amount that would be produced on the current duplicate by the rate computed by the county auditor upon the allowance for the preceding year; or does it mean the amount actually allowed for the preceding year in dollars and cents? This is the question presented.

There is another possibility suggested by the letter of the city attorney, viz., that the clause may mean the amount actually produced by the levy for the preceding year. Occasionally there is a variation between the amount fixed by the budget commissioners and translated into terms of rates on the basis of an estimated duplicate and the amount actually yielded by the extension of the rate on the duplicate as ultimately fixed, which may be either greater or less than the amount fixed by the budget commission.

The opinion of this department is that the amount actually allowed by the budget commission for the preceding year is the test. Referring again to section 5649-3c G. C., it is observed that the only thing in the nature of an allowance which is provided for therein, pertains to an amount. The rate is fixed by mere calculation on the basis of the estimated duplicate and the amount so fixed. This calculation is a ministerial act to be performed by the county auditor. It is both theoretically and practically inexact to say that the budget commission or anybody else "allows" the rate. It is theoretically inexact because of the express language of section 5649-3c G. C. It is practically inexact because of the limitation expressed in section 5649-3d G. C., which prohibits the making of appropriations "for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances." That is to say, even though it should happen by reason of an unexpected increase in the duplicate on the basis of which by estimation the rates were computed, an amount of revenue from taxation should be produced in excess of that fixed by the budget commission in terms of dollars and cents, such amount is not available for appropriation and expenditure.

Sec. 3 of S. B. No. 187 does not say in terms that the criterion shall be "the amount allowed by the budget commission;" but inasmuch as the budget commission is the only tribunal which has any authority to allow anything, it is clear that the omitted words are inferentially in the statute.

To read into the statute the opposite meaning suggested by the inquiry of the city attorney would be to do extreme violence to its terms; whereas, to construe it as has been intimated, would give it literal effect.

It is therefore the opinion of this department, as previously stated, that the budget commission's authority to act under section 5649-3c G. C. is, in the event of a favorable vote of the electors upon the question of levying extra taxes for school purposes as authorized by S. B. No. 187, limited by section 3 of said act only to the extent that the other levies made by such board and subject to adjustment in the year 1919 shall not be reduced in amount below the amount fixed by the budget commission as the aggregate of such levies for the preceding year; and that in applying this limitation the matter of rates is to be entirely ignored.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ABANDONED ROAD IMPROVEMENT PRIOR TO LETTING OF CONTRACT—ASSESSMENTS MADE INTO COUNTY TREASURY BY VIRTUE OF SECTIONS 6922 AND 6923 G. C.—HOW COUNTY SHOULD REPAY INSTALLMENTS OF SUCH ASSESSMENTS.

Where road improvement proceedings, undertaken by county commissioners, are abandoned prior to the letting of a contract but subsequent to the coming into the county treasury of accruals from an assessment made by virtue of sections 6922 and 6923 G. C. the proceeds of a sale of bonds in said proceedings having been placed in the sinking fund for the redemption of such bonds,—HELD,

That the county should repay to the persons who originally paid them to the county the installments of such assessment, without reference to whether there has been a sale of the affected tract subsequent to the attaching of the lien of the assessment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. LEWIS STOUT, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication submitting for an opinion the following:

> "Bonds were issued and sold for the construction of the Wapakoneta-Roundhead road in this county. Thereafter assessments were levied and three payments have been made on the assessments. No work was done on this improvement, and by resolution of the commissioners the improvement was abandoned, and this improvement was incorporated in a state road improvement. The county commissioners have ordered that the assessments be refunded.
> Who constitute the legal claimants for refunders on tracts of land which have been disposed of, sold or conveyed during the period covered by the payments on this improvement?"

In addition to the foregoing, it has been ascertained upon correspondence and in a personal interview with you that the proceeds arising from the sale of the bonds in question have been put into the sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds; and that the original improvement proceedings had their inception subsequent to the date on which the so-called White-Mulcahy act (107 O. L. 69) became effective.

Coming to your question: Assessments under the White-Mulcahy act are, as to improvements undertaken by the county commissioners, provided for by sections 6922 and 6923. Said section 6922, after setting forth the method of arriving at the amount of the assessment as to each tract of land concerned and the confirmation of the assessments by the county commissioners, concludes with this sentence:

> "Such assessments, when so approved and confirmed, shall be a lien on the land chargeable therewith."

Section 6923 provides for a special assessment duplicate and the payment of the assessment in twenty semi-annual installments.

Now that your county commissioners have ordered that these assessments be refunded, because of the abandonment of the original proceedings, it is quite clear that so far as the county is concerned refunder should be made to those persons who paid the assessment to the county, and this is true without regard to the present ownership of the tract of land as to which the assessment was paid. Quite clearly, any arrangements made between grantor and grantee in the case of the sale of a tract of land subsequent to the attaching of the lien of the assessment are private contractual matters with which the county has nothing to do.

As a matter of correct procedure it is suggested that claims for refunder on account of the payment of the assessment installments in question be paid only upon presentation and allowance as provided in sections 2460 and 2572 G. C.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—"FULL TIME" TEACHER AND PART TIME TEACHER DISTINGUISHED—UNDER HOUSE BILL No. 406, (108 O. L. 431), TEACHERS CAN BE COMPENSATED FOR PERFORMANCE OF DUTIES AS PRINCIPALS OR SUPERINTENDENTS—SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION SHALL CERTIFY TO SAME—WHEN TUITION FUND IS AVAILABLE FOR PAYMENT OF TEACHERS, PRINCIPALS OR SUPERINTENDENTS OR ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION PAID TEACHERS WHO PERFORM EXTRA DUTIES—SCALE OF SALARIES IN SECTION 7595-1 G. C. IS FOR TEACHING DONE BY TEACHERS AND NOT FOR DUTIES OR SUPERINTENDENT OR PRINCIPALS.

1. A "full time" teacher is one who performs the duties of teaching during the whole of the regularly prescribed school hours in a district, and a part time teacher is one who performs hours of teaching service which are a fractional part of the whole of the regularly prescribed school hours in a school district.

2. Under house bill 406, effective August 18, 1919, additional salaries can be paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents, but if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed.

3. The tuition fund in a school district can be used for the payment of teachers, principals or superintendents and also additional compensation paid teachers who perform extra duties as principals or superintendents, and a district whose tuition fund is not sufficient to meet the obligations provided for in paragraph 5, section 7595-1, is entitled to state aid.

4. The scale of salaries provided for in paragraph 3 of section 7595-1 is a scale of salaries for the teaching done by teachers and not for performing the duties of superintendent or principal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Under the recently enacted Freeman law, being H. B. 406, (108 O. L. 431), and which soon goes into effect, a school district applying for state aid is required as to high schools to pay an average salary of $90.00 per month. The act also provides that the salary of principals and superintendents and part time principals and superintendents shall, under certain conditions, be paid out of the tuition fund and therefore become factors in determining the sum of state aid.
> We are being advised by many county boards and also boards of education that contracts have or are being entered into under which high school teachers are employed to teach full time at a salary of $90.00 per month, and are also being engaged to have general charge of the discipline of the schools, to look after playgrounds during intermissions, to prepare courses of study and hold weekly conferences with the other teachers, and also to attend meetings of the board of education.
> It is apparent to us that some of these duties requiring the employe to devote some time in addition to the regular time prescribed for teaching. The doubt in our mind is this:
> Whether or not a teacher employed for full time is employed for each school day as an entirety, or for such time as the regularly prescribed school hours call for, and consequently whether or not he can—having been em- school day as an entirety, or for such time as the regularly prescribed school ployed as a teacher for full time—be additionally compensated for duties to be performed each school day in addition to his work as teacher. If so, can the district receive state aid for all or any part of such salary."

Bearing upon the above question, your attention is first invited to the fact that house bill No. 406, covering the issuance of state aid for weak school districts, is not effective as law until August 18, 1919.

You now ask whether a teacher employed for full time, as indicated in said house bill 406, is employed for each school day as an entirety or for such time as the regularly prescribed school hours call for, and whether following such employment for full time as a teacher such employe can be additionally compensated for duties to be performed each school day, in addition to his work as teacher, and if so, can the district in question receive state aid for all or any part of such salary.

Pertinent parts of such new law read as follows:

"Section 7595-1. A school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund by filing with the auditor of state an application therefor in such form as the auditor of state shall prescribe, and by first complying and showing compliance with the following conditions:

1. It shall place in the tuition fund at least two-thirds of the proceeds of the levy as adjusted by the budget commission pursuant to section 7594-1.

2. It shall place in the tuition fund the whole sum of the state common school fund and interest on the common school fund received by the district.

3. It shall pay its teachers neither more or less than the following salaries: In elementary schools, teachers without having less than one year's professional training or less than three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty dollars per month; teachers having at least one year professional training or three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty-five dollars a month; teachers having completed the full two years course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, or who have had five years' teaching experience in the state, seventy-five dollars a month. In high schools inclusive of joint high school districts, an average of ninety dollars a month in each high school. Such salaries shall be for full time and in high schools if any teacher be not employed full time, then, in computing the average, the salary for each hour of service paid such part time teacher shall, for the purposes of the calculation, be multiplied by the number of full time hours in each month, and the sum so ascertained shall be assumed to be the salary paid such part time teacher. In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time, or at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time.

4. It shall maintain its schools for eight months in each year.

5. It shall not transfer or cause to be transferred to any other fund any moneys that may be in the tuition fund. Nor shall it expend any moneys that may be in the tuiton fund except for the following purposes:

(a) Payment of salaries of teachers.

(b) Payment of expenses for attending institute.

(c) Payment of temporary loans incurred to meet current expenses in anticipation of revenue which would accrue to the tuition fund.

(d) That part of tuition payable to other school districts which represent the expense of teachers' salaries as computed pursuant to section 7736.

(e) Salaries of principals or superintendents, or additional salaries paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents. Provided, however, that, if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed.

6. The county auditor in making his deductions pursuant to section 4744-3 of the General Code shall deduct two-thirds of the total sum from the two-thirds yield of the tax levy which is distributable to the tuition fund pursuant to this section, and the remaining one-third from the remaining part of the yield of such tax levy.

Sec. 7595-2. The application to the state auditor for state aid shall be filed between the first day of September and the first day of October for the then current school year, and upon demand of the state auditor the books or any records of the school district shall be transmitted to the auditor of state. The application shall be accompanied by the copy of the distribution of the county auditor made on the preceding August settlement, and an estimate of the county auditor showing the probable yield and distribution of the taxes, state common school fund and interest on the common school fund to be distributed to such district on the February settlement next following, together with a copy of his balance sheet as the same appears on his school fund distribution record for the school year for which such application is made.

Sec. 7595-3. Upon receipt by the auditor of state of such application, and satisfying himself in all things essential to his proper determination of the right of such district to have aid from the state, he shall determine the probable deficiency that will exist in the tuition fund of such school district. Should there be ascertained to be a probable deficiency therein the state auditor shall issue his voucher for the issuance of a warrant on the treasurer of state in favor of such school district for the sum of such probable deficiency, against any funds appropriated for such purposes then being in the state treasury. Should the fund available for the payment of such state aid be insufficient to pay the total sums so found due the several districts making application for and entitled to such aid, the auditor of state shall apportion the whole available fund among the districts entitled to such aid.

Sec. 7595-4. Whenever two or more school districts have joined pursuant to section 7669 to establish a joint high school, and one or more of such school districts makes application for such state aid to cover a probable deficiency in the tuition fund, then a condition precedent to the determination and rendering of such state aid the high school committee shall place in the tuition fund that part of tuition received from other districts which represents the expense for salaries of teachers as computed pursuant to section 7736. And the school district applying for such aid shall, in placing in a separate fund its contribution to the high school committee pursuant to section 7671, pay out of its tuition fund only that part of the total contribution which represents the needs of the high school committee for salaries of the high school teachers. And such high school committee in its disbursements of moneys from the tuition fund shall be governed by the limitations of section 7595-1 of the General Code."

It will be noted that under section 7595-1 a school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund and the law does not treat upon any deficiencies that may exist in any other fund, the view being to keep the tuition fund as strong as possible in any district by rendering state aid where the school district in question is not able to pay the salaries indicated in the scale mentioned in paragraph 3 of such section. Bearing upon your direct question, paragraph 3 says:

"It shall pay its teachers neither more nor less than the following salaries: * * * Such salaries shall be for the full time and in high schools if any teacher be not employed full time, then in computing the average, the salary for each hour of service paid such part time teacher shall, for the purposes of the calculation, be multiplied by the number of full time hours in each month, and the sum so ascertained shall be assumed to be the salary paid such part time teacher * * *."

Paragraph 5 says in part:

"* * * Nor shall it expend any moneys that may be in the tuition fund except for the following purposes:

(a) Payment of salaries of teachers.

(e) Salaries of principals or superintendents, or additional salaries paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents. Provided, however, that, if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed."

Bearing upon your question as to what is meant by the words that such salaries shall be for full time, it is noted that in the same paragraph 3, wherein such language occurs, the law speaks of a part time teacher whose salary shall be paid on the basis indicated therein by computing one hour of service. It is clear that the "full time" indicated in such paragraph does not mean each school day as an entirety, or twenty-four hours, but does mean the recognized and prescribed school hours in each school day. Thus if in a high school a teacher becomes a part time teacher under paragraph 3, and teaches for instance three hours in each school day, and is allowed half time, or approximately so, for teaching, it must follow that if three hours is half time or a part time that may be called three-sixths, then six hours of teaching would be full time, that is to say, if the section speaks of hours of service, it necessarily means the prescribed school hours in any certain district, and if part time is a fractional part, as indicated above, of full time, and computed by hours of service, then full time must necessarily be the whole fraction or the unit which is divided into hours, to establish what is part time; and from this it can be seen that the law does not contemplate the school day as an entirety, which might be twenty-four hours, or possibly twelve daylight hours, as one might care to calculate. You further desire to know whether the teacher employed for full time, that is, the prescribed school hours in a district, can be additionally compensated for duties to be performed each school day, in addition to his work as teacher, and paragraph (e) of section 7595-1, as above quoted, provides that additional salaries may be paid teachers for duties performed as principals or superintendents, but that if additional salaries are paid to such teachers, it must be only for services that can come under the head of principals or superintendents, and the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are both required in such district and performed by the teacher.

The state aid law for weak school districts is purely a measure to strengthen the tuition fund, as before indicated, and paragraph 5 of section 7595-1 provides just how the tuition fund may be spent and for no other purposes; it mentions first in paragraph (a), payment of salaries of teachers, and then in (e) additional salaries paid teachers for duties performed as principals or superintendents.

As the tuition fund is available and intended for the five things mentioned in paragraph 5 of the section under discussion, the same being marked (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), it must follow from a readir g of paragraph (e) that duties performed as principals or superintendents by a person who is also a teacher, can be paid for from the tuition fund, and compensation paid to persons for the duties mentioned in paragraph (e) is a legitimate claim upon the tuition fund, part of which in weak school districts comes from the auditor of state as state aid for weak school districts.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

(1) A "full time" teacher is one who performs the duties of teaching during the whole of the regularly prescribed school hours in a district, and a part time teacher is one who performs hours of teaching service which are a fractional part of the whole of the regularly prescribed school hours in a school district.

(2) Under house bill 406, effective August 18, 1919, additional salaries can be paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents but if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers, as principals or superintendents the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed.

(3) The tuition fund in a school district can be used for the payment of teachers principals or superintendents and also additional compensation paid teachers who perform extra duties as principals or superintendents and a district whose tuition fund is not sufficient to meet the obligations provided for in paragraph 5 section 7595-1. is entitled to state aid.

(4) The scale of salaries provided for in paragraph 3 of section 7595-1 is a scale of salaries for the teaching done by teachers and not for performing the duties of superintendent or principal.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION—WHEN SUCH AN ASSOCIATION CANNOT TRANSACT BUSINESS IN THIS STATE—AFTER THE MANNER OF A CORPORATION—SEE SUPPLEMENTAL OPINION No. 597, AUGUST 30, 1919.

An unincorporated association of persons organized to carry on business in such manner as is calculated to impress the general public with the belief that it is a corporation, and whose intended acts are such as appertain to or are to be done after the manner of corporations, cannot transact business in this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1919.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date with which you enclosed a copy of the trust agreement under which the Investors Research Syndicate has been organized and proposes to operate, and requesting an opinion as to whether or not individuals can organize in such manner and conduct business in this state, was duly received.

The syndicate mentioned is a voluntary unincorporated association of individuals formed for the purpose of acquiring property to be held by a trustee, who, pursuant to the terms and in the manner authorized by the trust agreement, is to engage the property and its income and proceeds in conducting a multitudinous and almost unlimited line of business. The purpose clause of the trust agreement reads as follows:

> "The trustees hereby declare that they will hold such property to be transferred to them, as well as other property which they may acquire as trustees, together with the proceeds thereof, in trust, to engage such property and funds to do a commercial engineering and mercantile business; to manufacture, prepare for market, transport, import, export, purchase and otherwise acquire and own, sell or trade in and with goods and merchandise of every nature and description to acquire, hold, own, improve, sell or otherwise deal in rights, privileges, franchises, real estate or personal property, devices and methods suitable or convenient for the purposes mentioned; to purchase, construct, or improve mills, factories, store houses, offices, buildings, roads, including railroads and tramways, boats, docks, or any means or methods for transportation on land, on water or in the air; to engage, appoint or discharge agents; to acquire, own, handle or control letters patent and inventions; and in general to do and perform such acts and things and transact such business not inconsistent with law, as they may deem to advantage of their trust."

The trust agreement is somewhat lengthy and for that reason will not be incorporated into this opinion. It has been carefully examined and analyzed and the controlling features, so far as necessary to a proper determination of your inquiry, are hereinafter referred to and succinctly stated. Suffice it to say that from practically every paragraph and sentence it clearly appears that the acts in which the association or syndicate intends to engage, are such as appertain to corporations or are to be done after the manner of corporations.

It should be borne in mind at the outset that Ohio determines its own public policy and has ample power to control the activities of its own citizens and those of other states coming within its borders, subject only to constitutional limitations. A claim from either group of citizens that they can without restraint or limitation, engage in acts such as appertain to corporations, or conduct their affairs after the manner of corporations, finds nc support in the law of this state, no matter what name may be assumed or how ingenious the plan under which they claim or propose to act. Persons who assume such authority and act in such a manner without being legally incorporated, bring themselves within the terms of section 12303 G. C., which provides that a proceeding in quo warranto may be brought against any association of persons who act as a corporation within this state without being legally incorporated, and subject themselves to a judgment of ouster. This was declared to be the law of Ohio a quarter of a century ago in State vs. Ackerman, 51 O. S., 163. In that case the court held:

> "To come within the purview of that provision of section 6760, of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes an action in quo warranto to be brought 'against an association of persons who act as a corporation within this state without being legally incorporated,' it is not necessary that the association, or persons composing it, avow a purpose to act as a corporation, or assume to do so; it is sufficient if the acts are such as appertain to corporations, or are done after the manner of corporations."

The claim was made in that case, as it has been in this, that the association was not exercising a franchise or acting as a corporation, or even assuming or avowing to do so, but that its members were pursuing as individuals a business or occupation, in which any person may of natural and common right engage, without abridgement or interference from any source; hence the conclusion that such an association or its members are not subject to the conditions and regulations imposed by laws applicable to corporations. But such contention and conclusions were denied, the court, holding as above indicated, that an association of persons need not avow a purpose to act as a corporation, or even assume to do so, but that it is sufficient to warrant a judgment of ouster if the acts complained of are such as appertain to corporations or are done after the manner of corporations.

No useful purpose will be served by enumerating in this opinion the numerous acts committed or performed by the association involved in the case of State vs. Ackerman, supra, but suffice it to say that some of the acts and transactions complained of, and which supported the judgment of ouster in that case, were practically the same in effect if not in form as those contemplated and provided for in the trust agreement now under investigation, and it is my opinion that the doctrine of that case applies with equal force to the Investors Research Syndicate.

That the association now under investigation intends, and is authorized by the agreement, to conduct its business after the manner of corporations, etc., and that its characteristics and mode of conducting its business are calculated to impress one who does not make a critical examination with the belief that it is a corporation, is clearly shown by the express terms of the trust agreement itself and particularly in the following respects:

> "In addition to the adoption and use of a fictitious name, the syndicate is to have a capital stock divided into common and preferred shares, to be represented by negotiable certificates which will express the respective proportionate interest of the holders. Lost or destroyed certificates are to be replaced by the issue of new ones.
> Provision is made for increasing the capital stock by the issue and disposal of non-voting redeemable preferred shares of the par value of $100 each, the proceeds of such issue to be used to provide funds to accomplish the purposes of the syndicate. The holders of the preferred shares are to have such preference over the common shares as may be expressed in the certificates, etc.

The voting power of the common shares is also provided for, the stipulation being that each shareholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share held, that each shareholder may vote by proxy, etc.

Annual meetings of the shareholders for the election of a board of trustees, and the transaction of other business, and also for the calling and holding of special meetings at any time, are also provided for.

The election of a board of trustees by the shareholders, clothed with power and authority to manage and control the syndicate's property and business for the benefit of the shareholders, their tenure of office, etc., are also provided for; and in addition to the general grant of authority, it is specifically provided that the trustees may adopt and use a common seal, employ counsel, borrow money under certain restrictions, and make, amend and repeal by-laws. The filling of vacancies on the board of trustees is also cared for.

The board of trustees is also required to hold at least stated monthly meetings, and provision is also made for the holding of special meetings.

Officers are to be elected by the trustees who shall have the authority and duties 'usually incident to like officers in corporations,' etc.

The shareholders do not have title to the syndicate property or the right to call for a division of assets among themselves.

The shareholders are not to be personally liable for the syndicate's debts, and the same immunity is also granted the trustees, and it is expressly provided that the trustees have no power to bind the shareholders personally, and that creditors must look only to the syndicate property.

The death of a shareholder does not dissolve the syndicate, nor entitle his personal representative to an accounting, but such representative or his assigns succeeds to the right of the decedent.

Provision is also made for the declaration and payment of dividends out of net earnings.

After the manner of some statutes, such as those governing real estate companies, the life of the syndicate is limited to twenty years, but with the provision, however, that its existence may be prolonged by the vote of two-thirds of its shares.

Upon the termination of the syndicate's existence the last board of trustees is to continue in control and authority of the property and business for the purpose of winding up its affairs."

Based upon the so-called trust agreement itself, the conclusion cannot be escaped that the Investors Research Syndicate has the appearance of a corporation, that the mode of conducting its business and affairs is such as is calculated to impress the general public with the belief that it is a corporation, and that its acts and mode of organization and control are such as appertain to corporations, or are done after the manner of corporations. Such being the case, the syndicate comes squarely within the doctrine of State vs. Ackerman, supra, and, therefore, cannot transact business under the agreement in this state.

Persons interested in the Investors Research Syndicate specially rely upon the case of Eliot vs. Freeman, 220 U. S. 178, as authorizing its organization and manner of operation, but that case when properly considered does not support their contention.

The pertinent question in that case was whether certain real estate and department store trusts created and operating under trust agreements, and possessing some of the characteristics of the Investors Research Syndicate, were corporations or joint stock associations organized under the laws of Massachusetts, within the meaning of the Federal corporation tax act, which applies only to corporations and joint stock associations "organized under the laws of the United States, or of any state or territory of the United States," etc. In the opinion, at page 186, the court said:

> "The description of the corporation or joint stock association as one organized under the laws of a state at once suggests that they are such as are the creation of statutory law, from which they derive their powers and are qualified to carry on their operations. A trust of the character of those here involved can hardly be said to be organized within the ordinary meaning of the term; it certainly is not organized under statutory laws as corporations are."

The Federal supreme court therefore answered the question in the negative, and held that the trusts involved were not creatures of statutory law, and hence could not be corporations or joint stock associations organized under and deriving their powers from such laws. That is one of the principal shortcomings of the Investors Research Syndicate. Not being a creature of statutory law, but owing its origin and existence entirely to contract, its members nevertheless are engaged in and carrying out acts such as appertain to corporations, or such as are done after the manner of corporations.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TOLEDO MUNICIPAL COURT—COSTS AND FINES IN STATE CASES COLLECTED UNDER SECTION 4599 G. C. PAYABLE INTO COUNTY TREASURY—SAME RULE APPLICABLE IN POLICE COURTS OR MUNICIPAL COURTS SUCCEEDING SUCH POLICE COURTS IN ABSENCE OF SPECIFIC PROVISIONS.

1. Under section 4599 G. C., in state cases the costs and fines collected are properly payable to the county treasurer by the clerk of the municipal court of Toledo.

2. In police courts, or municipal courts succeeding such police courts, in the absence of specific provision to the contrary, under section 4599 G. C. the fees and costs imposed and collected by the court in state cases go into the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1919.

The Bureau of Supervision and Inspection of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "1. Under section 39 of the Toledo municipal court law (107 O. L., 716), do the costs and fees collected in state cases go to the county treasury?
> 2. In police courts, where the laws make no specific provision to the contrary, under section 4599 G. C. do the fees and costs imposed and collected by the courts in state cases go into the county treasury?"

Your first question involves a consideration of the Toledo municipal court act, passed March 21, 1917, and found in 107 O. L., p. 704, being section 1579-276 G. C.

et seq. Pertinent parts of section 39, page 716, supra, relating to the clerk of the municipal court, are:

> "He shall receive and collect all costs, fees, fines and penalties and shall pay the same monthly into the treasury of the city of Toledo and take a receipt therefor, except as otherwise provided by law, * * * He shall succeed to and have all the powers and perform all the duties of police clerks."

Section 53 (p. 720 supra) in part provides:

> "The municipal court shall be the successor of the police court of the city of Toledo."

Section 4599 of chapter 3, relating to clerks of police courts, provides that

> "On the first Monday of each month, he (clerk of the police court) shall make * * * to the city auditor, a report of all fines, penalties, fees and costs imposed by the court in city cases * * *. He shall make a like report to the county auditor as to state cases. He shall immediately pay into the city and county treasuries, respectively, the amount then collected, or which may have come into his hands, from all sources, during the preceding month."

It will be observed that the municipal court succeeds the police court of the city of Toledo, and that the clerk of the municipal court received all the powers and is obliged to perform all the duties of police clerks (among which are those above indicated in section 4599), and that section 39, partially quoted above, after specifically providing for the accounting on the part of the clerk to the city for moneys collected in city cases, contemplates other provisions of the law relating to payment of monies collected. This is evidenced by the provision in that section that he shall pay over "all moneys received by him as clerk * * *, except as otherwise provided by law."

Section 4599, requiring that such moneys collected in state cases should be paid to the county treasurer, is the exception referred to in section 39, "as otherwise provided by law."

From these considerations it is concluded that in the creation of the Toledo municipal court, there is no evidence of a legislative intention to thereby change the well recognized and long established legislative policy of requiring such moneys collected in state cases to be paid into the county treasury. Examination has been made of a number of other municipal court acts and similar provisions are found in each of them, clearly recognizing that the provision for the accounting for and payment of moneys collected in state cases is made in section 4599. It is to be noted also that by the terms of section 38, the county pays a part of the salary of the clerk of the municipal court in consideration of the services rendered in state cases.

It is, therefore, the opinion of this department that costs and fees collected in state cases in the municipal court of Toledo, Ohio, are properly payable to the county treasury.

Your second question is:

> "In police courts, where the laws make no specific provision to the contrary, under section 4599 G. C. do the fees and costs imposed and collected by the court in state cases go into the county treasury?"

It is to be observed that this is a general statute applicable to all clerks of police courts in the state and there is no apparent reason for concluding that in the absence of specific provision in special acts creating municipal courts which succeed such police courts and cast the same duties upon the clerks thereof, that section 4599 does not govern the distribution of the fines, penalties, fees and costs imposed and collected in such courts, and answering your question specifically, the fees and costs imposed and collected by the court in state cases go into the county treasury. In police courts, however, section 3056 must not be overlooked with reference to the disposition of fines and penalties collected in state cases. This section provides in such courts for a part of such fines and penalties being paid to law library associations.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TUITION FROM FOREIGN PUPILS—SCHOOL MONTH FOR SUCH PURPOSE—WHERE SCHOOL TERM ENDS IN FRACTIONAL PART OF MONTH—HOW TUITION DETERMINED.

1. A board of education is entitled to tuition from foreign pupils for each and every school month in which there was any attendance, and it is for such board of education to say when its school months begin, counting four school weeks as a school month, starting with the opening date of the school term in September.

2. Where a school term ends in a fractional part of a month and no service is offered for the remainder of such school month, the charge for tuition should be for the fractional part of the school month during which service was actually available, but where a school is in operation for the whole of a school month, then an attendance for any part of such school month will create a liability for the whole of such school month.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1919.

HON. ROBERT B. MCMULLEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "I would like to have your opinion on certain questions relating to the payment of tuition for non-resident pupils, which questions have arisen as a result of the epidemic of influenza
> In order that you may fully understand the situation, I submit the following facts:
>
> The H schools opened on Monday, September 9th, 1918, and were in session until October 4th The schools were then closed on account of the influenza until November 18th On November 18th they reconvened and were in session until November 22d, when they were again closed on account of influenza. They were not again opened until Janauary 6, 1919, and from that date continued in session until June 13th The last two weeks taught were to make up a part of the lost time.
> On December 23d the board of education declared a two weeks vacation, beginning December 23d. The schools were in actual session only 139 days but the pupils were given credit in their work for a full term of nine months The board of education for the H schools claimed tuition should be paid for the full nine months
> You will observe that if the schools had not been interrupted by the epidemic they would have closed on May 16th, if there had been no vacation, or on May 30th, allowing for the two weeks vacation

You will also observe that if there had been no epidemic or vacation, December 27th would have been the end of a school month The time taught from June 2d to June 13th was by agreement of the teachers for the purpose of making up a part of the lost time You will note the extra time taught was not a full month and school was not closed on June 13th, on account of an epidemic

Now the question on which I would like to have your opinion is, to how many months tuition is the H. board of education entitled for the attendance of non-resident pupils?

I may say that the things that puzzle me are, first, to determine just what effect the vacation period would have on computing the school months, and, second, whether or not the extra two weeks taught should be regarded as a full school month for the purpose of determining the amount of tuition due."

Attention is invited to opinion No. 66, rendered by the Attorney-General February 24, 1919, in which the holding was as follows:

"Liability for tuition rests upon attendance in the light of sections 7736 and 7747 G. C., and if there was no school during a particular school month, there could be no attendance, but if there was school during part of a particular school month, and there was attendance during any part of such month, on the part of a foreign pupil, even for a day, there becomes due the tuition of that pupil for that entire school month and such tuition actually due under sections 7736 and 7747 can be collected."

The statutes provide that the school month shall consist of four school weeks and a school week is composed of five school days. You say that H. school opened on Monday, September 9th, and such day would be the beginning of the first school month which would end with the 4th week thereafter or on October 7, 1918; the second school month would then run until November 4, 1918, because each succeeding period of four school weeks is considered a school month and the days would not be uniform in all districts because of the day of beginning the school term. You state that the school in the district in question, which furnished tuition to foreign pupils, maintained a term of nine months of school, that is, thirty-six weeks, as the period intended in normal years, but this year there was an extra two weeks, or a total session covering a period of thirty-eight weeks. In practice teachers are usually paid at the end of each school month and pupils receive their report cards prepared by the teachers for each school month, thereby establishing in each school district the school month as regards the beginning and closing day of such month in that particular district, and from such record of school months, starting with September 9, 1918, it could be ascertained in just what school months school was held.

Going into your particular case by an analysis of the dates given, it is found that your first school month closed four weeks after September 9th and schools were not closed during that month and thereafter tuition would accrue from foreign pupils. The next school month began on October 7th and ended four weeks thereafter, or on November 1st; in this particular school month your statement shows that the H. schools were not in session, for they reconvened on November 18th in the third school month, but were in session only until November 22d, which, however, would constitute attendance for that particular school month. It is found that the third school month, from the date of the beginning of the H school term, would be on December 2, 1918, and would have ended on December 27, 1918, and it is noted that during that particular school month there was no school at all in the district in question, hence there could be no attendance on the part of foreign pupils. It is for the board of education maintaining the schools in question to say when its school months in that particular district begin and end; if teachers were paid for the two weeks beginning December 23d, and which two weeks the board of education declared to be at holiday vacation, then such vacation period would seemingly be considered a part of a school month and should so be used in computations; but the system in the local board of education might omit such two weeks as being a part of a school month, in which event the fourth school month would end on January 13th.

Section 7747 G C. in part says

> "An attendance any part of the month will create a liability for the whole month."

This necessarily means a school month in that particular district, which includes the four weeks following the opening day of school and the same computation should be carried throughout the remainder of the term. The school records should show whether school was not held in any one particular school month and if no school was held in that particular school month no tuition liability would accrue, for there could be no attendance. But under the section quoted if there had been school even for a day in that particular school month, then liability for tuition would accrue on the part of those who had been in attendance during such school month even once. It, is not believed that where a district has a two weeks' holiday vacation in December that the board of education maintaining a school, at which foreign pupils attend should charge tuition for the two weeks' holiday vacation when during such two weeks they rendered no service to their own pupils. In your case you indicate that there was an extra two weeks taught by the teachers at the end of the term, and this might offset a two weeks missed during the holiday vacation, but in your particular district there was no school at all during the month of December, so there could be no liability for any time during such month. It would seem, therefore, that your rule should be, in computing this tuition, to first establish what are the recognized school months in the H. school district and then establish in which of those school months there was no school, and hence could be no attendance, and for any school month in which there was no school at all, the board of education of the H. school district would have no claim for foreign tuition. Seemingly you have had school running over a period of thirty-eight weeks, and there would therefore be due the tuition for nine and one-half school months, provided that school was held in each and every one of such months, which in your case was not true, because there was no school during the October school month or during the December school month. Hence, from such figures, for nine and one-half school months, at the tuition rate agreed upon, there should be deducted the school months in which there was no school, and it must be remembered also that, from a strict legal standpoint, if the tuition is based upon so much per pupil, the amount for various pupils might not be the same. For instance, there was school from November 18th to November 22d, a period of four days, and if any foreign pupil attended on any one of these days, there would be due from the board of education of the district in which such pupil resided tuition for the whole of that school month; but some other pupil might not have attended either of these four days, in which event the sending district could not be charged with the month's tuition for that pupil, because there had been no attendance.

There is herewith enclosed, for your proper perusal, copies of opinion No. 66, rendered by this department February 24, 1919, and opinion 32, rendered February 7, 1919, the latter treating upon the holiday vacation. It would seem that the records of attendance, which are kept by the superintendent of schools of the H. school district, would establish the school months in which school was held; the pupils who attended any part of that particular school month thereby causing liability for tuition for those pupils to accrue, and from this basis of calculation the number of months' tuition to which the H. board of education would be entitled for the attendance of non-resident pupils could be properly computed. In considering the extra two weeks taught, it would hardly be proper to consider such two weeks as a full school month, because the teachers taught for half of a school month, and had they been paid would have been paid for but one-half of a school month.

The case presented by you is rather unusual in that the teachers voluntarily taught two weeks beyond the stipulated school term, that is, one-half month for which they were not paid, hence the board of education of the H. district had no expense in the matter of payment of teachers for this two weeks, but at the same time the H. board of education operated the school and the teachers in question were the employes of said board of education and were rendering this two weeks service as a gift to the H. board of education because they had in previous weeks been paid a considerable amount of salary for school weeks in which the schools were not in operation. It this two weeks extra teaching is to take the place of some particular two weeks in some past school month to fill in a certain two weeks in which there was no school in that month, then no tuition would be due for this extra two weeks, which changes the school term from 36 weeks to 38 weeks of operation. It would seem that the matter of these extra two weeks present an unusual angle in the payment of tuition and could be amicably adjusted by the two boards, all things considered. The point might be raised as to whether there could be a half month tuition charge, in view of the following language in section 7747 G. C., which says in part:

> "An attendance any part of the month will create a liability for the whole month."

On the face of such language above quoted, it appears that there could not be such a thing as a half month tuition. But let us take for instance a school that is in operation for eight and a half month, or one for nine and a half month, which has frequently been the case in Ohio in past years. It is the principle of law that in every contract there must be a consideration, and it would hardly seem equitable that a school operating for nine and a half months could charge tuition for foreign pupils for ten full months, that is, charge for forty weeks of service when but thirty-eight weeks of service were rendered, and there was no intent to render any more than thirty-eight weeks. It would seem, therefore, that the language in section 7748 G. C., in equity to all concerned, would mean that while an attendance any part of the month will create a liability for the whole month, in fact intends that an attendance any part of the month will create a liability for the whole of the school service that is offered in that particular school month, that is to say, if at the end of a term of school there was a half month left over beyond the full unit of tuition months, and there was no intent to have school the other half of the school month, clearly the liability would be for the whole of the school service rendered in that school month, which if a complete school month would naturally be four school weeks. Any other construction put upon the language of section 7747 would mean that the schools, in order to render the exact amount of service that is paid for, would have to have either thirty-two weeks, thirty-six weeks or forty weeks, and the board of education would thus have taken from it its privilege of having any odd number of weeks appearing between thirty-two weeks and forty weeks.

It has been previously held by this department that an attendance any part of the month would create a liability for the whole month, but what was in contemplation was that the school which was collecting the tuition should always be in the position of furnishing four full school weeks of service for four full school weeks tuition paid. At the H. school the board operated the schools for forty weeks instead of thirty-eight weeks, and there would be ten school months tuition due less the time lost, but between the thirty-eighth week and the fortieth week there was no intent to render any service and hence for services not even offered a charge could not be made.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. A board of education is entitled to tuition from foreign pupils for each and every school month in which there was any attendance, and it is for such board of education to say when a school month began, counting four school weeks as a school month, starting with the opening day of the school term in September.

2. Where a school term ends in a fractional part of a school month and no service is offered for the remainder of such school month, the charge for tuition should be for the fractional part of the school month during which service was actually available, but where a school is in operation for the whole of a school month, then an attendance for any part of such school month will create a liability for the whole of such school month.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—AN UNSATISFIED JUDGMENT AGAINST CITY IS AN INDEBTEDNESS FOR WHICH BONDS MAY BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 3916 G. C.

An unsatisfied judgment against a city is an indebtedness for which bonds of the city may be issued under section 3916 so as to change but not increase the indebtedness.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department as follows

> "Under the provisions of section 4517 G. C., final judgments against a corporation, except in condemnation cases, are payable by the sinking fund trustees. When through negligence and improper levies the funds of the sinking fund are depleted and the amounts of money which should be on hand are not on hand purely through disregard of the provisions of article XII, section 11, of the constitution of Ohio, together with section 5649-1 of the General Code and suit is brought against the city and the city confesses judgment,
> Can funding bonds legally be issued by the municipality to meet the amount of such judgment?"

It is noted that the reasons be given in your letter for the depletion of the sinking funds are stated to be in reply through disregard of the provisions of article XII, section 11, of the constitution of Ohio, together with section 5649-1 of the General Code." It is suggested, however, that the solution of your question lies in determining whether the judgment is an indebtedness within the meaning of section 3916, under which the issuance of funding bonds by municipalities are authorized. It is suggested, also, that the claim against the city having been reduced to a judgment which remains unmodified and unsatisfied, the question of its validity cannot collaterally be inquired into. Such an inquiry would seem unnecessary in any event, as your statement shows that the city confessed judgment.

Sections 3916, 3917, 4506 and 4517 G. C. are pertinent. In part section 3916 is:

"For the purpose of extending the time of payment of an indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation * * * so as to change but not increase the indebtedness."

Section 3917 G. C., as a conditionprecedent to such refunding or extending, require the determination by a formal resolution of the council that the debt to be funded or extended is an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation. The effect of reducing a claim to judgment, as determining its character as an indebtedness under section 3916, was considered in an opinion rendered by the Attorney-General April 11, 1913, to Hon. Marshall G. Fenton, city solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio, and found in Vol. 2 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1913, page 1485, in which it is indicated that the reduction of the claims to judgment makes it such an indebtedness. Section 4507 gives the municipality power to levy taxes to pay a final judgment against a city, except in condemnation cases.

Section 4517 makes it the duty of the trustees of the sinking fund to "provide for the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases." From your letter it may be fairly inferred that the judgment was not confessed in a condemnation of property cases.

Is such a judgment an indebtedness for which such bonds may be issued?

While not rendered on the precise question involved herein, Opinion No. 518 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General, rendered under date of July 24, 1919, and directed to your bureau, defines generally the debts which may be the basis of a bond issue under section 3916.

Such debts are defined on page 9 of that opinion to be:

"Section 3916 is available in a municipality only in that very limited class of cases * * * those cases, in short, in which the municipality is actually bound by an obligation created without reference to the adequacy of the revenues through which it is to be discharged."

In Newton vs. Toledo, 18 O. C. C., 756, affirmed by the supreme court without report in 52 O. S., 649, the then circuit court, after quoting section 2701 R. S. (practically the same as present section 3916 G. C.), states one of the points in that case as follows:

"It is argued by counsel for the plaintiffs that the mere existence of claims against the city for which in some manner it may be made or is liable, is not sufficient basis for the lawful issue of bonds under this section, but that the indebtedness must be such as the city has power to levy a tax to pay, and must be already evidenced by bonds of the corporation, or must be such that, on account of it, the city had power to issue its bonds when the debts were contracted", and the court then proceeds to inquire into and determine the validity of the alleged indebtedness against the city, and on page 769, finding the alleged indebtedness to be invalid and not binding on the city, granted the relief prayed for by the plaintiff and enjoined the issuance of the refunding bonds of the city of Toledo.

Consideration of the duty imposed upon the sinking fund trustees by section 4517 and measured by the above quoted definitions it can hardly be claimed that a final judgment rendered against the city is not an indebtedness and the opinion of this department is, therefore, that funding bonds legally may be issued by a municipality for the purpose of paying a final judgment rendered against the municipality under section 3916 G C.

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO LET CONTRACTS FOR FURNISHING LABOR ON SCHOOL BUILDING AT TEN PER CENT OF COST OF MATERIAL—COMPETITIVE BIDDING AS REQUIRED BY SECTION 7623 G. C., NECESSARY.

Boards of education are without authority to let contracts for the furnishing of labor on a school building at ten per cent of the cost of material, and all contracts exceeding fifteen hundred dollars in city districts and five hundred dollars in other districts, let by boards of education for such labor, must be by competitive bidding and in compliance with section 7623 G C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1919.

HON. G. F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"Monroe township, in this county, has taken a vote which resulted in favor of issuing bonds and constructing a centralized school. The board advertised for bids, which were rejected, for sufficient reasons, principally because they were much higher than the estimate of the architect.

The board can procure a contractor who will furnish the labor on the building at 10 per cent of the cost on material, the board to buy the material, which is considered by them to be very much cheaper than the bids they are able to procure

They have asked my advice as to whether or not they have power to contract in this way. I have advised them that they have not for the reason that every purchase they make must be made in strict accordance with the statute (7623 G. C.), and when any purchase exceeds $500.00 they will have to advertise for competitive bids and proceed strictly according to the statute.

The board does not seem to be satisfied with this advice and have asked me to procure an opinion from your office."

Section 7623 of the General Code reads as follows:

"When a board of education determines to build, repair, enlarge or furnish a schoolhouse or schoolhouses, or make any improvement or repair provided for in this chapter, the cost of which will exceed in city districts, fifteen hundred dollars, and in other districts, five hundred dollars, except in cases of urgent necessity, or for the security and protection of school property, it must proceed as follows:

1. For the period of four weeks, the board shall advertise for bids in some newspaper of general circulation in the district, and two such papers, if there are so many. If no newspaper has a general circulation therein, then by posting such advertisement in three public places therein. Such advertisement shall be entered in full by the clerk, on the record of the proceedings of the board.

2. The bids, duly sealed up, must be filed with the clerk by twelve o'clock, noon, of the last day stated in the advertisement.

3. The bids shall be opened at the next meeting of the board, be publicly read by the clerk, and entered in full on the records of the board.

4. Each bid must contain the name of every person interested therein, and shall be accompanied by a sufficient guarantee of some disinterested person, that if the bid be accepted, a contract will be entered into, and the performance of it properly secured.

5. When both labor and materials are embraced in the work bid for, each must be separately stated in the bid, with the price thereof.

6. None but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted. The board in its discretion may reject all the bids, or accept any bid for both labor and material for such improvement or repair, which is the lowest in the aggregate.

7. Any part of a bid which is lower than the same part of any other bid, shall be accepted, whether the residue of the bid is higher or not; and if it is higher, such residue must be rejected.

8. The contract must be between the board of education and the bidders. The board shall pay the contract price for the work, when it is completed, in cash, and may pay monthly estimates as the work progresses.

9. When two or more bids are equal, in the whole, or in any part thereof, and are lower than any others, either may be accepted, but in no case shall the work be divided between such bidders.

10. When there is reason to believe that there is collusion or combination among the bidders, or any number of them, the bids of those concerned therein shall be rejected."

Section 2362 G. C. reads as follows:

"An officer, board or other authority of the state, a county, township, city, village, school or road district or of any public institution belonging thereto, authorized to contract for the erection, repair, alteration or rebuilding of a public building, institution, bridge, culvert or improvement and required by law to advertise and receive proposals for furnishing of materials and doing the work necessary for the erection thereof, shall require separate and distinct proposals to be made for furnishing such materials or doing such work or both in their discretion, for each separate and distinct trade or kind of mechanical labor, employment or business entering into the improvement."

Section 2363 G. C. reads as follows:

"When more than one trade or kind of mechanical labor, employment or business is required no contract for the entire job, or for a greater portion thereof than is embraced in one such trade or kind of mechanical labor shall be awarded, unless the separate bids do not cover all the work and materials required or the bids for the whole or for two or more kinds of work or materials are lower than the separate bids therefor, in the aggregate."

A reading of the above sections indicates clearly that there must be a bidding where a school board is proposing to construct a school building and the law goes very carefully into the matter of just how that bidding shall be conducted and stipulates clearly that such bidding on the building, as a whole, or on materials and labor taken separately, or parts of such labor or parts of such material, shall be competitive.

You say that the board has indicated its desire to buy the material which it has full authority to do, but such purchase of material must be made through competitive bidding and the law provides that "none but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted."

You further say that the board, after it buys the material, presumably at the lowest bid, can then procure a contractor who will furnish the labor on the building at ten per cent. of the cost of material. It is apparent at once that if the board is dealing with one contractor who has made such an offer, then there is no competition as between bidders and again, if such bid is ten per cent of the cost of material, there would be no advantage in having such bid "duly sealed up," for the reason that the board, or any one else who might care to make the computation, would know the figures contained in the bid, whether sealed or not, for it would be ten per cent. of the amount paid for materials, of which the board must have knowledge as regards its total.

The contemplation of the law is that all public improvements of this nature must be thrown open to bids that are actually competitive and the mere fact that the board has in mind a contractor who will furnish the labor on the building at ten per cent of the cost of the material, does not indicate that some other person might not contract to furnish such labor at eight or nine per cent. of the cost on material, and even if this system were established and bids were made on the basis of percentages, then if the cost of the material was known, every contractor would know by computation the amount in money of the bid of his competitors and the element of competition, in the true sense, would be removed. The contemplation of the law is that where bids are required to be made, such bids must be made in exact figures in money and they must be sealed and filed and opened up at a specified time, all of which would be unnecessary if the board were permitted to give the contract to a contractor who would furnish the labor on the building at ten per cent of the cost of material. The provisions of section 7623 G. C., in its ten specific paragraphs, must be carried out absolutely, and there should be no deviation therefrom. There is no provision in such statute for a board of education to let a contract for the furnishing of labor on a school building at ten per cent. of the cost of material, and all contracts let by boards of education must be in compliance with such section.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

GOVERNOR—PARDONING POWER—EXTENDS TO ALL CRIMES AND OFFENSES—TREASON AND CASES OF IMPEACHMENT EXCEPTED

The pardoning power is vested solely and exclusively in the Governor by section 11 of article III of the state constitution, and extends to all crimes and offenses except treason and cases of impeachment. Such power cannot be conferred upon or exercised by any other authority.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 20, 1919.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—The pardoning power is vested solely and exclusively in the governor and extends to all crimes and offenses except treason and cases of impeachment. The governor may grant pardons on such conditions as he may think proper, subject only to such regulations as to the manner of applying for pardons as may be prescribed by law.

The pardoning power is conferred upon the governor by section 11 of article III of the state constitution, and, as above stated, such power can not be lodged with or exercised by any other authority.

The constitutional provision above referred to, so far as pertinent, reads as follows:

> "He shall have power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, for all crimes and offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper; subject, however, to such regulations as to the manner of applying for pardons, as may be prescribed by law."

In Jiha vs. Berry, 16 Ohio Dec. 33, the Cuyahoga county common pleas court decided that by reason of the foregoing constitutional provision—

> "the whole pardoning power, except as to treason and cases of impeachment, is vested in the governor exclusively, and can not be exercised directly or indirectly by any other authority."

The foregoing case was affirmed by the circuit court and Judge Caldwell, in announcing the affirmance, said:

> "We have carefully examined the opinion in this case in the court of common pleas and we come to the same conclusion that Judge Dissette came to in that case, and we think we can not give any better reasons than were given in that opinion."

The power to parole should not be confused with the power to pardon, for there is a vital distinction between the two powers, and it was by reason thereof that the constitutionality of the act of May 4, 1885, which authorized the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary to allow prisoners to go upon parole, was sustained, the court holding that the act was not in conflict with the constitutional provision above quoted, vesting the pardoning power exclusively in the governor. See State vs. Peters, 43 O. S. 629.

Confining this opinion strictly to the subject of the pardoning power, it is my opinion that such power is lodged exclusively with the governor, and that any statute undertaking to confer such power upon any other officer or board will be unconstitutional.

It may not be improper for me to add that it is for the governor alone to finally determine in what cases he will or will not exercise the pardoning power.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

FALSE OR SHORT MEASURE IN SALE OF OIL DELIVERED FROM ONE COUNTY TO ANOTHER UNDER CERTAIN AGREEMENT FOR SALE OF PROPERTY—WHERE PROSECUTION IS TO BE HAD.

1. Where an agreement for the sale of property is made in "P" county, Ohio, one of the terms of which is that the purchaser shall pay for it f. o. b. cars in "C" county, Ohio, and such property is not shipped c. o. d., and in "C" county, Ohio, the seller makes or gives a short measure thereof, and there delivers it on board cars as agreed upon, one of the offenses defined in section 13106 G. C. is consummated in the latter county and that county is the proper venue for the prosecution of such offense.

2 The seller in such case being a corporation, its mananger, as well as its employes, who knowingly make or give such false measure, in the usual course of their employment, may be prosecuted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "The B. Oil Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, sold to J. W. W., of Circleville, Ohio, through their agent, two drums of oil which were found by our inspector to contain less than the amount which was sold to and paid for by J. W. W. Freight on said oil was paid by Mr. J. W. W. in Circleville.
> "We desire to file prosecution against the B. Oil Company. Please advise against whom the affidavit should be drawn and where the same should be filed."

By personal conference it is learned that your department contemplates a criminal presecution under section 13106 G. C., as amended in 103 O. L., 499, charging the giving of a false or short measure in the sale of oil. That section is as follows:

> "Whoever, in buying or selling any property, or directing or permitting an employe so to do, makes or gives a false or short weight or measure; or whoever has charge of scales or steelyards fixed for the purpose of misweighing an article bought or sold, or, having scales or steelyards for the purpose of weighing property, reports a false or untrue weight; or whoever uses in the sale of a commodity a computing scale or device indicating the weight and price of such commodity upon which scale or device the graduations or indications are false, or inaccurately placed, either as to weight or price, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars."

It is to be noted that among the things which this statute makes punishable is the making or giving a false or short weight or measure, as therein provided, in "buying or selling any property or directing or permitting an employe so to do." The offense may be committed in purchasing as well as selling and by short weighing or measuring, but in your question relating to short measuring the statute will be further quoted and considered only as affecting such measuring and selling.

To properly distinguish this statute from other statutes construed by the courts of this state, it is proper to note that offering for sale or having short measured property in possession is not an offense, but under this section the offense is committed in "buying * * * any property."

In establishing the venue in a prosecution under this section on the facts as stated in your letter, it becomes necessary to determine whether a sale was made and where the false measuring was done, for this is the gist of the offense.

It must be borne in mind that the evil thing prohibited is false measuring in the sale of property; the acts constituting the sale of property are the surrounding circumstances of the offense, furnishing, it might be stated, the opportunity for such false measuring. True, unlawful acts culminate in a sale on the part of the offender and the offense is not consummated unless a sale occurs. But it cannot be said that the offense is committed where the agreement of sale occurs, as the object of this law is not to discourage or prevent sales of property, but to prohibit and make unlawful the giving of a false measure in such sales.

The case of State vs. Bissman, 54 O. S., 243, to which you direct attention in personal conference, has been considered. The sections under which the prosecution in that case was made differ materially from the section involved in this case. The Bissman case was a prosecution under the adulteration of food statutes and, unlike section 13106, makes it an offense to offer the prohibited article for sale as well as the actual selling, and because of this and other differences in the terms defining the offenses, that case cannot be safely relied upon as furnishing a precedent in the present question. To constitute an offense under section 13106, the facts must establish two main elements: (a) the giving of a short measure, and (b) in the sale of property. Consideration of the terms and purpose of this section convinces this department that such false measuring being done in "C" county, the affidavit, charging the seller with an offense under that section, should be filed in that county.

Your second question may be stated to be:

> "Against whom should the prosecution be brought?"

it being observed that the sale was made by an agent in behalf of a corporation. In the Bissman case, supra, the second syllabus is:

> "The manager of a mercantile corporation is subject to a fine under the provisions of the 'act to provide against the adulteration of food and drugs,' when the adulterated article is sold or offered for sale by an agent of such corporation acting within the scope of his authority, and the offense is triable in the county in which such article is sold or offered for sale by such agent."

This was a prosecution for the sale of adulterated ketchup and it was based on a statute in some respects dissimilar to section 13106, the same general principle as to the liability of the principal for the agent's acts is applicable and the facts as stated at page 243 of the report of that case, are very similar to the facts under consideration:

> "The jury were instructed that of the accused, as manager of the corporation, sent an agent from Richland county to Hardin to sell the article of food in question, and it was so sold, the defendant was liable as though he had been personally present making the sale, and was triable in Hardin county. The accused excepted to the charge. After the verdict of guilty a fine of $100 was imposed."

In sustaining the judgment of the trial court, on page 244 the supreme court says:

"The statutory provisions governing these cases do not exempt any one who sells or offers to sell the articles prohibited, because of his relation to the transaction whether it is that of agent or principal."

In this connection it should be remembered that bearing on the principal's liability, section 13106 makes it an offense to direct or permit an employe to give a false measure in the sale of property. What the court held as to those sections relating to the liability of the principal, is equally true of section 13106, viz.,

"The agent is within the terms of the statute because he personally participated in its violation; and the principal is responsible for what he does by another. Any other construction of the statute would afford an easy method for defeating its purpose;"

Section 12350 G. C. provides:

"Whoever aids, abets or procures another to commit an offense, may be prosecuted and punished as if he were the principal offender."

So it may be concluded that the manager of the corporation may be prosecuted for the giving of short measure in such a sale by his employe, in the usual course of his employment, and that the employe, who knowingly gives such false measure, may also be prosecuted.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

RELIGIOUS GERMAN CATECHISM SCHOOLS—NOT VIOLATION OF AMENDED SENATE BILL No. 137.

Citizens can conduct strictly religious German catechism schools for the study of the Bible and church history and such instruction is not a violation of amended senate bill No. 137.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1919.

HON. GEORGE S. MAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following question:

> "I would like to inquire whether the Ake bill renders it unlawful to conduct strictly religious German catechism schools during the summer months, at which schools all the instruction that is given is Bible and church history instruction, together with such instruction in the reading of German as would tend to make the religious instruction more intelligible."

The Ake bill, to which you refer, is amended senate bill 137 and is effective on and with September 5, 1919. Such new law upon the teaching of the German language in the public, private and parochial schools of the state, reads as follows:

> "An act to supplement section 7762 of the General Code, by the addition of supplemental sections to be known as sections 7762-1, 7762-2, 7762-3 and 7762-4, and to repeal section 7729, concerning elementary, private and parochial schools and providing that instruction shall be in the English language.
> BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO:
> Section 1. That section 7762 be supplemented by sections 7762-1, 7762-2, 7762-3 and 7762-4 to read as follows:
> Sec. 7762-1. That all subjects and branches taught in the elementary schools of the state of Ohio below the eighth grade shall be taught in the English language only. The board of education, trustees, directors and such other officers as may be in control, shall cause to be taught in the elementary schools all the branches named in section 7648 of the General Code. Provided, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools of this state.
> Sec. 7762-2. All private and parochial schools and all schools maintained in connection with benevolent and correctional institutions within this state which instruct pupils who have not completed a course of study equivalent to that prescribed for the first seven grades of the elementary schools of this state, shall be taught in the English language only, and the person or persons, trustees or officers in control shall cause to be taught in them such branches of learning as prescribed in section 7648 of the General Code or such as the advancement of pupils may require, and the person or officers in control direct; provided, that the German language shall not be taught below the eighth grade in any such schools within this state.
> Sec. 7762-3. Any person or persons violating the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined in any sum not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, and each separate day in which such act shall be violated shall constitute a separate offense.

Sec. 7762-4. In case any section or sections of this act shall be held to be unconstitutional by the supreme court of Ohio, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining sections.

Section 2. That section 7729 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repealed."

Article I, section 1 of the constitution of the state of Ohio reads as follows:

"All men are, by nature, free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and seeking and obtaining happiness and safety."

Article I, section 3, of the constitution of Ohio, reads:

"The people have the right to assemble together, in a peaceable manner, to consult for the common good; * * *"

Article I, section 7, of the constitution of Ohio reads as follows:

"All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience. No person shall be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or maintain any form of worship, against his consent; and no preference shall be given, by law, to any religious society; nor shall any interference with the rights of conscience be permitted. * * * Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to pass suitable laws to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship * * *."

It must be presumed that the general assembly had full knowledge of the above quoted provisions appearing in the constitution of the state of Ohio, when it enacted senate bill 137, with a view of eliminating the teaching of the German language below the eighth grade in the elementary, private and parochial schools within this state.

Sections 7762-1 and 7762-2, appearing in amended senate bill 137, both refer to the branches named in section 7648 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

"An elementary school is one in which instruction and training are given in spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, English language, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil government, physiology, and hygiene. Nothing herein shall abridge the power of boards of education to cause instruction and training to be given in vocal music, drawing, elementary algebra, the elements of agriculture and other branches which they deem advisable for the best interests of the schools under their charge."

This section, while not amended directly by the general assembly, has been amended indirectly by the following new language appearing in amended section 7645 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Boards of education are required to prescribe a graded course of study for all schools under their control in the branches named in section seventy-six hundred and forty-eight, subject to the approval of the superintendent of public instruction. The course of study mentioned in this section shall include American government and citizenship in the seventh and eighth grades."

The above section was amended in amended senate bill 140, effective September 5, 1919, and the following amended section, 7762 G. C., appearing in such senate bill 140, is also pertinent at this time and reads as follows:

"Section 7762. All parents, guardians and other persons who have care of children, shall instruct them or cause them to be instructed in reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, geography, arithmetic, United States history, American government and citizenship."

A careful analysis of the several amendments to the General Code bearing upon the elimination of the Germar language in public, private and parochial schools of the state indicates that it was the intent of the legislature that the German language should be prohibited in the teaching of the subjects mentioned in section 7648 of the General Code and had no reference to any religious instruction that might be given by any religious denomination in the carrying out of their own mode of worship which is protected by the state constitution. The bill in question provides that in the elementary schools of the state, that is. the public school system, all instruction below the eighth grade shall be given in the English language only, but under the provisions of this new act as appearing in section 7762-1, the German language can be taught in the eighth grade in any of the elementary schools of the state and also in all grades of the public high schools. As regards private and parochial schools, and those schools maintained in connection with state benevolent or correctional institutions, unless a pupil in such schools shall have completed a course of study equivalent to that prescribed for the first seven grades of the elementary schools of the state, he shall be taught in the English language only, but if such pupil attending either of these kinds of schools has completed the first seven grades, then there is nothing in the new law which prevents his instruction in the German language or any other language, the main prohibition of both sections being that the German language should not be taught to pupils below the eighth grade, or its equivalent

You indicate in your question that the schools you have in mind are strictly religious schools held during the summer months and that all the instruction that is given is religious in its nature, being upon the Bible and church history. The constitution provides that every religious denomination shall be free to exercise the peaceable enjoyment of its own mode of public worship and that the General Assembly shall pass suitable laws to protect each and every denomination in its mode of worship. These modes of worship might vary considerably and do vary. The religious instruction in one instance might be read in Hebrew, in another instance in Latin and in another instance in German. Such mode of worship might be the only one that the parents of the children would know. If the children are prevented from enjoying the same mode of worship as the parents. then it might be said that such child is being compelled to maintain a form of worship against his consent, which is prohibited in section 7 of article I of the constitution of Ohio, as well as being an interference with the rights of conscience, which are protected in the same section.

Any other construction put upon amended senate bill 137 might give rise to the question of its constitutionality, in view of the quotations from the constitution above given.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that citizens can conduct strictly religious German catechism schools for the study of the Bible and church history and such instruction is not a violation of amended senate bill No. 137.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER ELECT DIES BEFORE BEGINNING OF TERM—NO VACANCY—PRESENT INCUMBENT CONTINUES IN OFFICE.

1. The death of the treasurer-elect before the beginning of the term for which he was elected, does not create a vacancy in the office for the ensuing term, when the present incumbent is not disqualified under the constitution from continuing in office.
2. The present incumbent of the office of county treasurer of Delaware county is entitled to continue in office until the first Monday in September, 1921.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1919.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Assistant Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter requesting my opinion as to whether or not the death of the treasurer-elect of Delaware county after the last November election, has created a vacancy in the office, etc., was duly received, and reads as follows:

> "At the November election, 1916, A. E. Baldwin was elected county treasurer of Delaware county, qualified and is now serving on his first term as such treasurer. At the November election in 1918, F. D. White was elected to succeed him. On December 19, 1918, said F. D. White died. The question has arisen whether the death of said White will have created a vacancy in said office of county treasurer, at the expiration of Mr. Baldwin's term, such as would require an appointment by the county commissioners of Delaware county, or whether no vacancy will exist, and Mr. Baldwin continue to hold such office as county treasurer for the term beginning the first Monday in September, 1919, and ending the first Monday in September, 1921.

No commission was ever issued to said F. D. White, and he had not qualified as such treasurer by taking the oath of office or filing a bond."

The term of office of the county treasurer is fixed by section 2632 G. C. at

"two years from the first Monday of September next after his election," and by section 8 G. C., which provides that a person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein

"until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws"

See State vs. Speidel, 62 O. S., 156, 160, holding that section 8 G. C. must be read into the officer's commission.

It will thus be seen that "unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws" the term of office of county treasurer is for two years from the first Monday of September next after his election, and until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified.

In State vs. Metcalfe, 80 O. S. 244, the court held, and the cases therein cited sustain the proposition, that under the present law of the state, an office cannot be regarded as vacant while filled by one lawfully entitled to hold it, and that the death of a person elected to an office before he qualifies does not create a vacancy where the law provides that the incumbent shall hold over until the election and qualification of his successor.

While the court in that case was construing constitutional provisions, nevertheless the doctrine of the case is equally applicable in the construction of statutory provisions. That this is true is evidenced by the fact that the court refers to and quotes from several cases involving statutory terms of office in support of the point actually decided. See State vs. Speidel, supra, which holds that:

"When one who is holding the office of sheriff, and is a candidate for election to succeed himself, dies before entering upon the new term, a vacancy is thereby created in the term in which he was serving, but not in the term for which he was a candidate and upon which he had not entered."

Referring again to section 8 G. C., the question arises as to whether or not there is any constitutional provision or law prescribing a different rule with respect to the county treasurer, because, in the absence of a constitutional provision or law to the contrary, that section cannot be disregarded, but must be applied.

There are two constitutional provisions pertinent to the present inquiry which are in direct conflict with respect to the maximum term of office of county officers, viz., section 2 of article X (adopted October 13, 1885), which provides that county officers shall be elected for terms,

"not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law," and section 2 of article XVII (adopted November 7, 1905), which, among other things, provides that such officers shall be elected for terms,

"not exceeding four years, as may be so prescribed." (That is, prescribed by the general assembly.)

Under the first constitutional provision the term cannot exceed three years, while under the latter provision the term cannot extend beyond four years, for, as held in State vs. Brewster, 44 O. S. 589,

> "Where the term of office is fixed and limited by the constitution, there is no power in the general assembly to extend the term or tenure of such office beyond the time so limited."

There being a conflict between these two constitutional provisions with respect to the term of office of county officers, section 2 of article XVII, being the latest expression of the people on the subject, must govern. Such also was the opinion of the former Attorney-General (1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 2, p 1476). See also State vs. Creamer 83 O. S. 412, in which the court held:

> "The doctrine relating to repeals and amendments by implication applies alike to constitutions and statutes, and it requires that earlier expressions yield when it is necessary to give effect to the latest expression of the intention of those whose intention is entitled to control."

Under article XVII the general assembly is clothed with exclusive power to fix the term of office of county officers, subject to the limitation that the term shall not exceed four years. In the exercise of constitutional power the general assembly has provided that the term of the county treasurer shall be two years from the first Monday of September next after his election (section 2632 G. C.), and until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified "unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws" (section 8 G. C.) and the only limitation on this term is the constitutional provision that it shall not exceed four years.

It is contended that section 8 G. C. has no application to the present situation because it is "otherwise provided" with respect to the county treasurer by sections 2634 and 2636 G. C. The statute first mentioned (2634) provides that if a person elected to the office fails to give bond on or before the date of the commencement of his official term the office shall become vacant; and the latter statute (2636) provides that when the office becomes vacant by death, removal, resignation, neglect to give bond or other cause the commissioners shall forthwith appoint a suitable person to fill such vacancy. But these statutes in my opinion must be read and construed in connection with section 8 G. C. and the decision of the supreme court defining vacancy or prescribing rules for determining when a vacancy exists. When so considered the conclusion must be that section 2634 G. C. has reference to cases such as Kelly vs. State 25 O. S. 577, hereinafter referred to or where the incumbent has held the office for the full constitutional period and that the death of a treasurer-elect before the beginning of the term for which he was elected does not create a vacancy in the office when the present incumbent is not disqualified by the constitutional limitations (section 3 of article X and section 2 of article XVII) from holding over.

Cases such as Adams vs. Hopkins, 10 O. S., 509; Kelly vs. State, 25 O. S., 577, and State vs. Brewster, 44 O. S., 589, which are cited in support of the contention that section 8 G. C., has no application to the office of county treasurer, when properly considered, are not opposed to the conclusion at which I have arrived.

In Adams vs. Hopkins, supra, the incumbent had served two full terms of two years each, and was therefore disqualified by the four year limitation prescribed by section 3 of article X of the constitution from continuing longer in office. And, also, there was no statute in existence at the time authorizing or permitting an incumbent to hold over after his term—section 8 G. C. not having come into our statute law until 1880. Hence the statement in the opinion that there was no person entitled to take and hold the office during the ensuing term, while true and controlling in 1860 when the opinion was written, has no application under the present state of our statutory law. The case was also distinguished in State vs. Metcalfe, supra.

In Kelly vs. State, supra, the question now under consideration was not involved, and the case is therefore not an authority either for or against my conclusion. In that case the treasurer, who had entered upon and was serving his second term, had failed to give bond or take the oath of office on or before the beginning of such term. That case, like Adams vs. Hopkins, supra, was also decided prior to 1880.

State vs. Brewster, supra, decides that when an officer has served the full time allowed by the constitution, he cannot continue in office until a successor is elected and qualified. In such a case section 8 G. C., by reason of the express constitutional limitation, necessarily becomes inoperative, and it was so held in that case. No such situation is presented here, for the present incumbent is now serving his first term.

Since there will be no vacancy in the office of county treasurer of Delaware county on the first Monday of September, 1919, to be filled under section 2636 G. C. (assuming that the present incumbent will be alive and in office on that day), and in view of the fact that there is no provision for the election of a successor until the general election in November, 1920, and then only for the term beginning on the first Monday in September, 1921 (section 10 G. C. not being applicable to the present situation), it is my opinion that the present incumbent, who is serving his first term, and therefore not disqualified under section 3 of article X and section 2 of article XVII of the state constitution from continuing in office, is entitled to hold over until the first Monday in September, 1921. See 1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 2, p. 1476.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date reads as follows:

> "In view of opinions of Attorney-General to be found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1916, volume I, page 908, and 1917, volume I, page 1067, and the provisions of section 1692 G. C. as amended, 103 O. L. 417, and section 1693 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L. 689, and as again amended in 1919, in house bill 515, we would ask your opinion as to what the maximum amount is that can be allowed a court constable in the courts of insolvency (Cuyahoga and Hamilton counties) and in probate courts in counties having a population of 70,000 or more? Can constables in the insolvency courts and in the probate courts in counties having a population of 70,000 or more be placed by the court in charge of the assignment of cases with additional compensation therefor? "

It is considered that both of your questions relate to one and the same thing and come to this: Have judges of the insolvency courts, and of probate courts in counties having more than 70,000 inhabitants. the right to appoint one or more constables to attend and assume charge of the assignment of cases in their respective courts, and to allow such constables additional compensation therefor?

Section 1692 G. C. (103 O. L. 417) says:

"When, in the opinion of the court the business thereof so requires, each court of common pleas, court of appeals, superior court, insolvency court, in each county of the state, and, in counties having at the last or any future federal census more than seventy thousand inhabitants, the probate court may appoint one or more constables to preserve order, attend the assignment of cases in counties where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time and discharge such other duties as the court requires. When so directed by the court, each constable shall have the same powers as sheriffs to call and impanel jurors, except in capital cases."

Section 1693 G. C. (amended in 108 O. L. 162, being H. B. No. 515) says:

"Each constable shall receive the compensation fixed by the judge or judges of the court making the appointment. In counties where four or more judges regularly hold court, said compensation shall not exceed eighteen hundred and twenty dollars each year, in counties where two judges and not more than three judges hold court at the same time, not to exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars each year, and in counties where only one judge holds court, such amount, not to exceed one thousand dollars each year, as may be fixed by the court, and shall be paid monthly from the county treasury on the order of the court. Such court constable or constables when placed by the court in charge of the assignment of cases, may be allowed further compensation not to exceed one thousand five hundred dollars per year, as the court by its order entered on the journal determines. In counties where only one judge holds court the constable provided for herein, when not attending the common pleas court, shall upon the order of the judge of such common pleas court, and without additional compensation, attend the probate court and the court of appeals of said county."

It has been heretofore held by this department that the first of the above quoted sections is the enabling statute in respect of the appointment of court constables to attend the assignment of cases; that section 1693 G. C. does not confer authority upon the court to impose the duty of assigning cases upon court constables, but only authorizes an extra allowance to court constables when the latter have been given that duty by virtue of an order made by the court under favor of section 1692 G. C. See 1916 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 908; also 1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1067.

By reason of section 1692 G. C., the judge of an insolvency court may appoint one or more constables to attend the assignment of cases, provided only that the county wherein such court is held is one "where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time." This same proviso and one other as well attaches to the right of a probate judge to appoint one or more constables to attend the assignment of cases; that is to say, the county in which such probate judge holds court must be one "where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time," and such county must, at the last or any future federal census, have had or have more than seventy thousand inhabitants.

It is apparent from the sections under consideration that the legislature has made the appointment of "assignment constables," and the compensation of constables, generally, dependent upon the state or condition of business in the county, as disclosed by the fact of the number of common pleas judges regularly holding court in that county.

By section 1692 G. C. the legislature has made, as an arbitrary measure or gauge of the necessity for the appointment of one or more constables to attend the assignment of cases in the courts therein specified, the fact that there are more than two common pleas judges in a county regularly holding court at the same time.

You will notice that that part of section 1693 G. C. which fixes the compensation of constables, to-wit, the part reading:

> "In counties where four or more judges regularly hold court, said compensation shall not exceed eighteen hundred and twenty dollars each year, in counties where two judges and not more than three judges hold court at the same time, not to exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars each year, and in counties where only one judge holds court, such amount, not to exceed one thousand dollars each year, as may be fixed by the court, and shall be paid monthly from the county treasury on the order of the court," does not expressly speak of common pleas judges. That is, it does not say "In counties where four or more common pleas judges regularly hold court," etc. Yet it is evident that "judges" in this connection means common pleas judges; othewise the word is meaningless, for we have no counties in Ohio where four or more court of appeals judges regularly hold court, nor any wherein four or more superior court or insolvency court or probate court judges regularly hold court. In only one county of the state (Hamilton county) is there a court known as the "superior court;" and but two counties have an "insolvency court," to-wit, Hamilton and Cuyahoga counties. In both Hamilton and Cuyahoga, the number of common pleas judges is in excess of four.

You are therefore advised:

(1) That the court of insolvency in Hamilton and in Cuyahoga counties may in its discretion appoint one or more constables to preserve order, attend the assignment of cases and discharge such other duties as the court requires; that the compensation of such constable or constables in said court of insolvency shall be that fixed by the judge making the appointment, such compensation not to exceed eighteen hundred and twenty dollars each year, together with such additional compensation, for the work of attending the assignment of cases, not to exceed one thousand, five hundred dollars per year, as the judge determines.

(2) That in all counties having at the last or any future federal census more than seventy thousand inhabitants, the probate court may, if the county is one wherein more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time, appoint one or more constables to preserve order, attend and take charge of the assignment of cases in such court and discharge such other duties as the court requires. The compensation of such constable or constables shall be that fixed by the probate court, on the following basis: If the county wherein such probate court is held is one wherein four or more common pleas judges regularly hold court, said compensation shall not exceed eighteen hundred and twenty dollars each year, together with whatever further compensation (not to exceed one thousand, five hundred dollars per year), the court may allow for the work of such constable or constables in connection with the assignment of cases; if the county wherein such probate court is held is one wherein three, that is to say, more than two and not more than three common pleas judges hold court at the same time, said compensation shall not exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars each year, together with whatever further compensation (not to exceed one thousand, five hundred dollars per year), the court may allow for the work of such constable or constables in connection with the assignment of cases.

The phrase "more than two and not more than three common pleas judges" is used in the paragraph immediately preceding, out of regard for certain provisions found in section 1692 and 1693 G. C. According to section 1692 G. C., the duty of attending the assignment of cases can not be legally imposed upon a court constable unless said court is held in a county wherein more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court; and according to section 1693 G. C., which fixes the compensation of court constables, such compensation shall not exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars "in counties where two judges and not more than three judges hold court at the same time," with additional compensation incident to the assignment of cases. In other words, both of the provisions just quoted must be borne in mind in fixing the salary of a constable in a "three-judge" county.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—UNDER PROVISIONS OF SECTIONS 2787 AND 2788 G. C. NUMBER OF ASSISTANTS DETERMINED BY SAID OFFICER.

Under the provisions of section 2787 and 2788 G. C. it is the duty of the county surveyor and not of the county commissioners to determine the number of assistants to be employed by the surveyor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1919.

HON. HOMER HARPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of recent date submitting for opinion the following:

> "On the first Monday of June, 1918, the county surveyor of Lake county filed with the county commissioners a statement of necessary deputies, draftsmen, inspectors and employes in his office, eight (8) in number, for the year beginning September 1, 1918. The county commissioners fixed the aggregate compensation to be expended for such year at $9,650.00, for said eight persons. This is under the General Code, section 2787.
> The county surveyor has expended but about half that sum. He now presents a bill for eighteen employes and claims that inasmuch as their pay does not exceed the aggregate amount fixed by the county commissioners, that the auditor should draw his warrant under the provision of section 2788 for the eighteen.
> The auditor refused to draw his warrant under 2788, because the number of employes exceeds the number filed with the commissioners under 2787, although the aggregate amount fixed by the county commissioners is not exceeded.
> Will you please advise me whether on this statement of fact the auditor should draw his warrant for the eighteen employes?"

Your inquiry has reference to sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. which read respectively as follows:

> "Section 2787. On or before the first Monday of June of each year, the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. The county commissioners shall examine such statement and, after making such alterations therein as are just and reasonable, fix an aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year. Provided, however, that if at any time any county surveyor requires an additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, such county surveyor may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such county surveyor was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salaries of such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or other employes as may be required. Notice in writing of such application and the time fixed by such judge for the hearing thereof shall be served by the county surveyor five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners of such county; and said board shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard upon said application and evidence may be offered both by the county surveyor and the county commissioners."

"Section 2788. The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation; but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners or allowed by a judge of the court of common pleas of the county. After being so fixed such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor. The county surveyor may require such of his assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems proper to give bond to the state in an amount to be fixed by the county surveyor with sureties approved by him, conditioned for the faithful performance of their official duties. Such bond with the approval of the county surveyor, indorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the county treasurer and kept in his office."

These statutes nowhere state that the commissioners are to determine the number of employes or to fix the compensation of an individual employe. On the other hand, section 2788 plainly provides that the county surveyor shall appoint "such assistants * * * as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office and fix their compensation."

When we construe the two statutes together, as they must be construed, the result is that provision in the first sentence of section 2787 to the effect that the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners a statement of all necessary assistants, deputies, etc., must be taken merely as requiring that certain data be furnished to the commissioners as a basis for action on their part in determining the total amount which may be expended by the surveyor for the year, subject, of course, to the right of the surveyor to make application to a judge of the common pleas court for additional allowance if the aggregate amount allowed by the commissioners proves in practice to be insufficient. In other words, the purpose of the two sections is to fix an aggregate amount that may be expended by the surveyor in a given year rather than to permit the commissioners to say what number of persons shall be employed by the surveyor and what compensation shall be paid to them.

The two sections in question follow the general plan of sections 2980, 2980-1 and 2981 of the General Code. These several sections were passed upon by the common pleas court of Henry county in the case of County Commissioners vs. Rafferty, et al., 19 O. N. P. (n. s.) 97. In that case the court held, as shown by the syllabus:

"County commissioners are without power to fix the compensation of deputies and assistant clerks of county auditor, treasurer, probate judge and recorder. The authority to fix such compensation is vested in these several officers, with the limitation that the aggregate compensation to be paid in each office shall not exceed the amount allowed by the county commissioners for such offices."

The court in the course of the opinion at page 102 refers to the case of Theobald vs. State of Ohio, ex rel. 10 O. C. C. (n. s.) 175 in which case the constitutionality of the so-called county salary law was considered and quotes the following language from the opinion of Judge Smith in said case:

> "It must not be overlooked that the officer fixes the compensation of each particular employe as well as the number of employes. With that the board has nothing to do save that it may limit the aggregate that may be thus expended."

You are therefore advised that under the statement of facts submitted by you the auditor should draw his warrant in payment of the compensation of the eighteen employes.

Respectfully
JOHN G. PRICE
Attorney-General.

COMMISSIONER OF DEEDS IN ANOTHER STATE—WOMEN ELIGIBLE

The acknowledgment of an instrument for the conveyance or incumbrance of lands, tenements or hereditaments situate within this state may lawfully be made without this state before a woman resident of another state appointed as commissioner by the governor of Ohio under the provisions of section 132 G. C

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1919.

HON. JAMES M. COX Governor of Ohio, Columbus Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—Some question has arisen as to the validity of deeds acknowledged before women residents of other states and appointed by yourself and your predecessors to act as commissioners of deeds in these states.

The appointments were made under sections 132 and 8515 G C which are as follows:

> "Section 132. The governor is authorized to appoint as commissioners of the state of Ohio persons residing in any other state or in any territory of the United States or in any foreign state on such evidence of qualification as he may require. Such commissioner shall continue in office for a term of three years and have authority to take affidavits and depositions to be used in any of the courts of this state and to take acknowledgment and proof of the execution of any deed or other conveyance, lease, contract, letter of attorney or other written instrument to be recorded or used in this state."
> "Section 8515. The acknowledgment of an instrument for the conveyance or incumbrance of lands, tenements or hereditaments situate within this state may be made without this state before a commissioner appointed by the governor of this state for that purpose or a consul-general, vice consul-general, deputy consul-general, consul, vice consul, deputy consul, commercial agent and consular agent of the United States resident in any foreign country."

These sections independent of any other provisions constitutional or statutory bear the manifest construction that the governor has authority to select a woman as such commissioner. The only requirement recited is that the appointee must present evidence of qualification satisfactory to the governor.

The doubt as to the validity of the acts of such commissioners has undoubtedly arisen because the supreme court of Ohio has decided that a woman is not eligible to the office of notary public. In State ex rel The Attorney-General vs. Adams 58 O. S. 612 the court in so holding said that a notary public is an officer and that under the provisions of section 4 of article XV of the constitution no person may be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector. So it has been suggested that such a commissioner is an officer and must possess such qualifications. With this view I do not agree. The pertinent language of section 4 of article XV of the constitution is as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; * * *."

And section 1 of article V states the qualifications of an elector thus:

> "Every white male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector, and be entitled to vote at all elections."

If the qualifications recited in this section must be possessed by a commissioner of deeds appointed for a foreign state, it would follow that such person so acting must not only be a white male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, but must also have been a resident of the state of Ohio for one year and of the county, township or ward therein for such time next preceding an election as may be provided by law. No resident of a foreign state could possibly be eligible to such position. However, these qualifications are prescribed only for those who are to be elected or appointed "to any office in this state."

We need not determine whether or not such commissioner is an "officer" because if he is his duties are to be performed without the state. There is no "office in this state." If the commissioner is to possess all the qualifications of an elector it must be so because the nature of his duties makes him an officer. But under section 8515 G. C. United States consuls "resident in any foreign country" may take acknowledgments. These officials of course do not possess the qualifications of electors in Ohio but their authority, though frequently exercised, has never been challenged in the courts of this state.

The general view taken by recording officers and acquiesced in by the bar for more than a hundred years carries great weight; nor should a construction be adopted which would overturn what has come to be a rule of property and render questionable scores of titles.

It is proper here to call attention to section 8516 G. C. the language of which is:

> "All deeds, mortgages, powers of attorney and other instruments of writing for the conveyance or incumbrance of lands tenements or hereditaments situate within this, state executed and acknowledged or proved in any other state, territory or country in conformity with the laws of such state, territory or country or in conformity with the laws of this state shall be as valid as if executed within this state in conformity with the foregoing provisions of this chapter."

The existence of this section, however, is not decisive of the point which we are considering because it would not be safe to assume that the laws of other states provide for the execution of deeds therein by commissioners appointed by the governor of Ohio. The section does however evidence in a general way the policy of the legislature and has been before the supreme court for consideration in a number of cases. If the reasoning in this opinion is unsound and my conclusion incorrect then the constitutionality of section 8516 G. C. is doubtful. That it has been considered by the supreme court many times without any suggestion as to its unconstitutionality is of course an argument for the view which I have taken on the question considered here.

It is my opinion therefore that the acknowledgment of an instrument for the conveyance or incumbrance of lands, tenements or hereditaments situate within this state may lawfully be made without this state before a woman resident of another state appointed as commissioner by the governor of Ohio under the provisions of section 132 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—ASSISTANTS IN CONNECTION WITH CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES UNDER SECTION 3298-1 ET SEQ. G. C.—HOW PAID—SECTIONS 2787 AND 2788 G. C. GOVERN

The services of assistants to the county surveyor rendered in connection with the construction of roads by township trustees under favor of section 3298-1 et seq. G. C. are to be paid by the county from the allowance made in accordance with sections 2787 and 2788 G. C.; and this principle applies even though the county surveyor in making his estimate of the cost of the improvement, included therein the expenses of such engineering services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1919.

HON. WATSON H. GREGG, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of recent date submitting for opinion the following:

> "Where the trustees of a township are constructing a road, the question has arisen who shall pay the expenses such as board and engineering expenses during construction, including the help for the county engineer. That is, who shall pay it, the county or the trustees? It seems clear and satisfactory that the county pay the preliminary work such as surveying and making plans but there seems to be a difference of opinion as to who pays the other items enumerated above.
> Will be glad to have your opinion about this matter."

In response to a request for additional information, you have advised in your letter of August 22nd that the road work in question is being done by certain township trustees under the provisions of section 3298-1 et seq. And you also advise that by "board" you mean meals for the assistant engineer and chairman.

You will find that your inquiry has been substantially answered in two opinions of this department the first being No. 378 of date June 9, 1919, directed to Hon. Harry

S. Core, prosecuting attorney, Ottawa, Ohio, and the second being No. 546 of date August 5, 1919, directed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, copies of which opinions are enclosed for your information.

In the first of these opinions the conclusion reached was:

> "The method of providing compensation for assistants and employes in the office of the county surveyor is governed by sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. which sections direct that the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate compensation to be expended for such purpose during the year and further that if an additional allowance is found to be necessary the same may be granted by the court of common pleas upon proper application drawn from the general fund of the county.
> The services rendered by assistants or employes of the county surveyor in township road improvements at the direction of the township trustees constitute part of the official duties of the surveyor and compensation for such service is governed by the aforesaid statutes subject to the exception provided in section 3298-15k G. C. which authorizes payment of compensation of an inspector on a township road to be paid out of funds available for the construction of the improvement"

In the second opinion mentioned the following conclusion was arrived at:

> "The services of assistants to the county surveyor rendered in connection with the construction of roads under the county road improvement statutes as amended 107 Ohio laws are to be paid from the allowance made in accordance with sections 2787 and 2788 G C., and are not to be charged to a specific road improvement."

In view of the various statutes enumerated in the first of these opinions, it becomes plain that the principles discussed in the second opinion are applicable to improvements conducted by township trustees under favor of section 3298-1 et seq. with the special statutory exception provided by section 3298-15k, as noted in the first opinion above cited.

Therefore, you are advised that engineering expenses of the character indicated by you incurred in the construction of improvements by township trustees under the provisions of section 3298-1 et seq. are to be paid by the county from the allowance made in accordance with sections 2787 and 2788 G. C.

In a verbal statement to this department you have indicated that the engineer in making his estimate for the improvement in question included in the estimated cost of such improvement the engineering expenses named by you. That fact, however, is not in point, because, as has already been pointed out, such items may not properly be charged to a specific improvement, and the action of the engineer in that respect is without legal effect.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLD STORAGE ACT—DUTY OF THOSE OPERATING SUCH WAREHOUSES WHERE FOOD HAS PREVIOUSLY BEEN IN COLD STORAGE—HOW TIME CALCULATED UNDER STATUTES WHERE FOOD STORED IN DIFFERENT WAREHOUSES—LIABILITY OF LICENSED OPERATOR OR MANAGER OF COLD STORAGE PLANT FOR ABOVE VIOLATION OF LAW—SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE HAS AUTHORITY TO SECURE COLD STORAGE HISTORY OF FOOD.

1. Persons, firms or corporations operating cold storage warehouses in this state are charged with the duty of not permitting food to be deposited therein for the purpose of sale if it has previously been in cold storage either within or without the state, or both, beyond the time specified in section 1155-13 G. C.; or, if such time has not elapsed at the time of deposit, of not permitting food to remain in cold storage for such purpose beyond the time specified. And in making up the maximum period of time prescribed and allowed by statute, the several periods of time the food has been stored in all the warehouses must be counted.

2. The licensed operator or manager of a cold storage warehouse acts at his peril in receiving into the warehouse food which has been in cold storage for the purpose of sale beyond the time specified in section 1155-13 G. C., or by keeping it in cold storage for such purpose after the expiration of the specified time.

3. The secretary of agriculture has authority under sections 1155-9 and 1155-17 G. C. to require the licensed operator of a cold storage warehouse to secure the cold storage history of food deposited in his warehouse and embody the same in reports to be made under the former section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1919.

HON. THOMAS C. GAULT, Chief of Bureau of Dairy and Foods, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 18, 1919, relative to the duties imposed upon cold storage warehousemen in this state, was duly received, and reads as follows:

> "Please advise me if a manager for a cold storage warehouse in this state shall be required to ascertain at time of deposit in such warehouse if goods so deposited may have been in cold storage prior to the time that it was presented to his warehouse for deposit.
> If he is required to obtain this information, shall such information be required to be a part of the record?"

(1) It is provided in section 14 of the act governing the inspection of cold storage goods and the regulation and supervision of cold storage warehouses (section 1151-1 et seq. G. C.; 107 O. L. 594) that:

> "Food may be transferred from one cold storage warehouse to another, provided, that the total length of time such food shall remain in cold storage, for the purpose of sale, shall not exceed the time specified in section thirteen of this act."

The effect of section 14 is to prohibit the storing of food in cold storage warehouses in this state for the purpose of sale, beyond the period of time specified in section 13 of the act, and, in computing the statutory period, the time such food has been in cold storage in other warehouses must be counted.

By section 15 of the act it is provided with respect to food which shall have been placed or stored in any cold storage warehouse outside of Ohio, that:

"No such food shall be sold, or offered or exposed for sale, in this state, if the total length of time that such food has remained in cold storage shall exceed the time specified in section thirteen of this act."

The effect of section 15 is to prohibit the sale, or the offering or exposing for sale, in this state, of food, if the total length of time it has remained in cold storage, either within or without the state, or both, has exceeded the time specified in section 13.

Persons, firms or corporations operating storage warehouses in this state are charged with the duty, under the act referred to, of not permitting food to be deposited therein for the purpose of sale if it has previously been in cold storage either within or without the state, or both, beyond the time specified in section 13; or, if such time has not elapsed at the time of deposit, of not permitting food to remain in storage for such purpose beyond the specified time, to be computed by adding together the respective periods of time it has been stored in the several warehouses. In other words, such persons, firms or corporations act at their peril in receiving or keeping food in cold storage for the prohibited purpose after the time specified in section 13 has expired, no matter in how many warehouses it may have been stored, or where such warehouses may be located.

It is easily within the power of the licensed operator or manager of a warehouse to secure this information from those desiring to place or store food in his warehouse, and his ignorance or want of knowledge of the cold storage history of such food would be the result of his own negligence or indifference. No hardship is imposed upon the operator or manager in this respect, because the source of such knowledge would in all cases be close at hand, and the means of reaching it peculiarly within his power. Refusal on the part of the owner of food to furnish such information could be met by the operator or manager's refusal to accept the food for storage.

(2) Persons, firms or corporations operating a cold storage warehouse are charged by section 9 of the act with the duty of keeping certain records, as follows:

"It shall be the duty of every person, firm, or corporation that shall be licensed to operate a cold storage warehouse to keep an accurate record of the receipts and withdrawals of food therefrom. The agents of the secretary of agriculture shall have free access to such records at all times. It shall be the duty of each person, firm, or corporation licensed to operate a cold storage warehouse to file in the office of the secretary of agriculture on or before the sixth day of January, April, July and October, of each year, a report setting forth in itemized form the kind and quantities of food products held in cold storage in such warehouse. The report shall be made on printed forms prepared and supplied by the secretary of agriculture. The secretary of agriculture may cause such other reports to be filed and at such times as it may deem advisable."

The foregoing section, so far as records are concerned, requires that the licensed operator of a cold storage warehouse "shall keep an accurate record of receipts and withdrawals of food therefrom." It will be observed from this section that the duty imposed upon the operator is not to keep a record of the warehouse history of food prior to its deposit in his warehouse, but to keep a record of receipts and withdrawals therefrom. But, as stated in paragraph 1 of this opinion, the operator or manager of a warehouse acts at his peril in receiving into his warehouse food which has been in cold storage for the purpose of sale beyond the time specified in section 13, or by allowing it to remain in his warehouse for such purpose after the expiration of the time specified.

(3) It will also be observed that the secretary of agriculture has authority under section 9 quoted above to require, in addition to the quarterly reports setting forth the kind and quantity of food products held in cold storage, that the licensed operator of a cold storage warehouse shall file "such other reports * * * at such times" as he may deem advisable.

It is my opinion that the secretary of agriculture has authority under this section, and section 17 imposing upon him the duty of making rules and regulations for the enforcement of the act, to require the licensed operator to secure the cold storage history of food deposited in his warehouse from those making the deposit, and to require that such history be embodied in reports to be made to him under section 9.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

JOHN G. PRICE
Attorney-General.

HUGHES HEALTH BILL—HOUSE BILL No. 211—DOES NOT REPEAL BY IMPLICATION SECTIONS 7692 AND 7692-1 G. C. WHICH EMPOWER BOARDS OF EDUCATION TO PROVIDE FOR MEDICAL INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS—DISTRICT BOARDS OF HEALTH ALSO HAVE CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

1. House bill No. 211, known as Hughes health bill, effective August 10, 1919, did not repeal by implication sections 7692 and 7692-1 G. C., which empower boards of education to provide for medical inspection of schools.

2. Under section 11 of the Hughes bill, district boards of health are required to provide for the medical inspection of schools, but such inspection is not exclusive, boards of education also having the right to make inspection to the extent provided in sections 7692 and 7692-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date reads as follows:

"We are respectfully requesting the following information relative to house bill No. 211, known as the Hughes health bill, passed by the last general assembly:

1. Does such act remove from school authorities the right to provide for medical inspection of schools?

2. Will such inspection be conducted by the municipal health boards and district health boards?"

The authority of boards of education to provide for medical inspection of schools is contained in the following sections of the General Code:

Sec. 7692 (103 O. L. 897):

"Each and every board of education in this state may appoint at least one school physician; provided two or more school districts may unite and employ one such physician whose duties shall be such as are prescribed in this act. Said school physician shall hold a license to practice medicine in Ohio. School physicians may be discharged at any time by the appointing power whether the same be a board of education or of health or health officer, as herein provided. School physicians shall serve one year and until their successors are appointed and shall receive such compensation as the appointing board may determine. Such boards may also employ trained nurses to aid in such inspection in such ways as may be prescribed by the board. Such board may delegate the duties and powers herein provided for to the board of health or officer performing the functions of a board of health within the school district if such board or officer is willing to assume the same. Boards of education shall co-operate with boards of health in the preventing of epidemics."

Sec. 7692-1 (103 O. L. 897):

"School physicians may make examinations and diagnosis of all children referred to them at the beginning of every school year and at other times if deemed desirable. They may make such further examination of teachers, janitors and school buildings as in their opinion the protection of health of the pupils and teachers may require. Whenever a school child, teacher or janitor is found to be ill or suffering from positive open pulmonary tuberculosis or other contagious disease the school physician shall promptly send such child, teacher, or janitor home with a note, in the case of the child, to its parents or guardian briefly setting forth the discovered facts and advising that the family physician be consulted. School physicians shall keep accurate card index records of all examinations and said records that they may be uniform throughout the state shall be according to the form prescribed by the state school commissioner, and the reports shall be made according to the method of said form; provided however that if the parent or guardian of any school child or any teacher or janitor after notice from the board of education shall within two weeks thereafter furnish the written certificate of any reputable physician that the child or teacher or janitor has been examined in such cases the services of the medical inspector herein provided for shall be dispensed with and such certificate shall be furnished by such parent or guardian from time to time as required by the board of education. Such individual records shall not be open to the public and shall be solely for the use of the boards of education and health or other health officer. If any teacher or janitor is found to have positive open pulmonary tuberculosis or other communicable disease, his or her employment shall be discontinued upon expiration of the contract therefor, or, at the option of the board, suspended upon such terms as to salary as the board may deem just until the school physician shall have certified to a recovery from such disease."

Although H. B. No. 211, known as the Hughes bill (effective August 10, 1919), specifically repealed some eighteen sections of the General Code, sections 7692 and 7692-1 G. C. were not specifically repealed by it. Said sections are therefore unaffected by the act in question, unless they must be taken to have been repealed by implication. It is to a consideration of this question that we now proceed.

Repeals by implication are of course not favored. "A statute," says Black on interpretation of laws, at p. 112, "will not be construed as repealing prior acts on the same subject (in the absence of express words to that effect), unless there is an irreconcilable repugnancy between them, or unless the new law is evidently intended to supersede all prior acts on the matter in hand and to comprise in itself the sole and complete system of legislation on that subject."

On the question of irreconcilable repugnancy, it is important to consider section 11 of the Hughes bill, reading thus:

"Section 11. In addition to the duties now required of boards of health it shall be the duty of each district board of health to study and record the prevalence of disease within its district; to provide for the prompt diagnosis and control of communicable diseases; to provide for the medical and dental supervision of school children; to provide for the free treatment of cases of venereal diseases; to provide for the inspection of schools, public institutions, jails, workhouses, children's homes, infirmaries and other charitable, benevolent, correctional and penal institutions; to provide for the inspection of dairies, stores, restaurants, hotels and other places where food is manufactured, handled, stored, sold or offered for sale, and for the medical inspection of persons employed therein; to provide for the inspection and abatement of nuisances dangerous to public health or comfort; and to take all steps necessary to protect the public health and to prevent disease.

Provided that in the medical supervision of school children as herein provided, no medical or surgical treatment shall be administered to any minor school child except upon the written request of the parent or guardian of such child; and provided further, that any information regarding any diseased condition or defect found as a result of any medical school examination shall be communicated only to the parent or guardian of such child and if in writing shall be in a sealed envelope addressed to such parent or guardian."

It is apparent from this section that full authority is given to each district board of health to provide for inspection of schools and for the medical and dental supervision of school children. Yet there is nothing to show that the exercise of such powers would either necessarily or probably conflict with the action taken by the board of education under sections 7692 and 7692-1 G. C. Furthermore, the last named sections, it will be noticed, provide only for examination and diagnosis of school children, while under section 11 of the Hughes bill medical and surgical treatment of a minor school child may be afforded at the request of a parent or guardian.

If it should seem odd that the legislature should provide for medical inspection of schools by two different, uncoordinated agencies, it should be remembered that under the terms of section 7692 G. C. the appointment by a board of education of a school physician or trained nurse is not compulsory, merely optional; that under provisions of the next to last sentence of that section, "such board may delegate the duties and powers herein provided for to the board of health or officer performing the functions of a board of health within the school district if such board or officer is willing to assume the same." It is entirely possible that some district boards of health may not be able to give to the work of medical inspection in the schools the degree of attention that the boards of education desire, in which event the authority contained in sections 7692, et seq. G. C. could be exercised to good advantage.

It is also noteworthy that while the Hughes bill specifically provides (see section 15) for the exercise by the district board of health of all the powers and duties now conferred and imposed by law upon the board of health of a municipality, it is not specifically provided that "health" powers of boards of education should be transferred to district boards of health.

I am therefore of the opinion that the Hughes bill did not, when it became effective, repeal by implication the sections of the General Code first hereinabove cited, and that it did not remove from boards of education the right to provide for medical inspection of schools.

Your second question is: "Will such inspection be conducted by the municipal health boards and district health boards?" This question is to be answered in the affirmative, for the reason that under section 11 of the Hughes bill it is the duty of each district board of health "to provide for the medical and dental supervision of school children" and also "to provide for the inspection of schools." The term "district board of health" in this section refers to all the administrative districts created or recognized by the act, to-wit, municipal health districts, separate municipal health districts and general health districts. But, for reasons above stated, the inspection of schools made by the district health districts will not be exclusive, the boards of education also having the right to make inspection to the extent provided in sections 7692 and 7692-1 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SECURITIES—UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATION—NO OFFICER OR AGENT SHOULD BE LICENSED TO DEAL IN SUCH SECURITIES WHERE SUCH ORGANIZATION IS CALCULATED TO IMPRESS PUBLIC WITH BELIEF IT IS A CORPORATION—SUPPLEMENT TO OPINION No. 575, DATED AUGUST 19, 1919.

No officer or agent of an unincorporated association of persons organized in this or any other state to carry on business in such manner as is calculated to impress the general public with the belief that it is a corporation, and whose acts are such as appertain to or are to be done after the manner of corporations, nor any other person acting for it or in its behalf, should be licensed to deal in its securities in this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Supplementing my former opinion No. 575, in which the conclusion was reached that an unincorporated association of persons organized to carry on business in such manner as is calculated to impress the general public with the belief that it is a corporation, and whose acts are such as appertain to or are to be done after the manner of corporations, cannot transact business in this state, and in response to your verbal inquiry, I beg to advise you that that opinion applies to all such associations whether organized in this or other states, and that one of the effects of the opinion is to deny the right of the officers and agents of such associations, and others acting in their behalf, to be licensed as dealers in their securities in this state. In other words, no officer or agent of such an association, nor any other person acting for or in its behalf, should be licensed by your department to deal in its securities in this state.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—DEPUTY COUNTY SURVEYOR INELIGIBLE TO BID ON ROAD IMPROVEMENT TO BE DONE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF COUNTY IN WHICH DEPUTY EMPLOYED.

A deputy county surveyor is ineligible as a bidder on road improvement work to be done under the supervision of the commissioners of the county in which the deputy is employed as such.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

HON. CARROLL A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date is received, reading as follows:

> "The Mercer county commissioners at a road sale yesterday received a bid from one of the deputy county surveyors on one of the roads. This bid was $4,000.00 cheaper or less than any other bids received on this road. The deputy in question has expressed his intention to resign from his office should he be awarded this contract.
> I have examined the statutes and opinions of the attorney-general but have been unable to find anything covering this particular case and am therefore making the following inquiries:
> 1. If the contract should be awarded this deputy and he resign upon being awarded the same, would such award be illegal?
> 2. If the contract should be awarded this deputy and he not resign upon being awarded the same, would such award be illegal?"

Your inquiry involves a reference to the statutes providing for the method of selection and for the duties to be performed by deputy county surveyors.

Section 2788 G. C. provides, among other things, that the county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office. As no statute has been found directing or commanding the county surveyor to assign his assistants or deputies to particular classes of work—such, for instance, as assigning one to bridge construction, another to ditch work, and so on—it follows that the county surveyor may in his discretion call upon his assistants and deputies to take charge of, or assist in, any of the various classes of engineering duties which it may fall to his office to perform. And what are those duties? By the terms of section 2792 G. C.

> "The county surveyor shall perform all duties for the county now or hereafter authorized or declared by law to be done by a civil engineer or surveyor. He shall prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads, drains, ditches and other public improvements, except buildings, constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county. When required by the county commissioners, he shall inspect all bridges and culverts, and on or before the first day of June of each year report their condition to the commissioners. Such report shall be made oftener if the commissioners so require."

By the terms of section 2793,

> "The county surveyor shall be responsible for the inspection of all public improvements made under authority of the board of county commissioners. He shall keep in suitable books a complete record of all estimates and summaries of bids received and contracts for the various improvements, together with the record of all estimates made for payments on the work. He shall make all surveys required by law to be made and perform all necessary services to be performed by a surveyor or civil engineer in connection with the construction, repair or opening of all county roads, turn pikes, or ditches constructed under the authority of the board of county commissioners and shall perform such other duties as such board from time to time requires."

In addition, the county surveyor by the provisions of section 7184 is given general charge of the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.

When we turn to the statutes providing for road construction by county commissioners (section 6906 et seq.), we find that the county surveyor plays an important part. It is his duty to make surveys, plans, profiles. cross-sections, estimates and specifications, and on his own motion may submit such surveys, etc., in alternate form (sections 6911 and 6912); and it is his duty to make assessments, subject to review by the county commissioners (Sec. 6922).

The foregoing references, without others which might be made, are sufficient to show the broad scope of the powers and duties of the county surveyor; and as before pointed out, the surveyor is at liberty to assign any of his deputies to take part in the performance of any such engineering duties. In this connection it may be stated as a matter of common knowledge, that the work of the county surveyor involves a large amount of detail; so that in great measure, in order to properly perform the duties of his office, he must depend on the disinterested service of his assistants and the constant exercise of skill and good judgment on their part.

Under these conditions, what would be the practical effect upon the public interest, of permitting a deputy or assistant to become a bidder for public work to be done according to plans and specifications for which his principal is responsible?

In the first place, the door would be opened to the deputy to influence the preparation of plans and specifications in such manner as to give himself an advantage over other bidders. Again, items in the surveys and cross-sections might be improperly dealt with, and other details, the correctness of which prospective bidders are accustomed to depend upon in making their calculations, might be suppressed, so as to mislead bidders other than the deputy. Estimates of cost, which are an important factor in the letting of county road work,—inasmuch as assessments are based on them (section 6922) and the work may not be awarded at a price in excess of the estimate (section 6946)—might be made in such way as to discourage competition or to give bidders a wrong impression. Instances need not be multiplied to illustrate the almost self-evident proposition that a contractor bidding on plans of his own making, has an advantage over others. Furthermore, it should not be overlooked that the mere fact, made known to a prospective bidder, that an assistant or employe in the office of the county surveyor intended to bid on certain work and might be awarded it, would tend to discourage such prospective bidder from entering into competition. And finally, it should be kept in mind that the commissioners, if they so request, are entitled to the views of the county surveyor as to what is the lowest and best bid; and assuredly it is not in the public interest that a situation be allowed to arise wherein the surveyor is put in the attitude of comparing the bid of one of his deputies with the bids of other persons.

The foregoing observations are not to be taken as implying want of good faith on the part of the deputy in the particular instance stated by you. But good faith in a given instance is no answer where a matter of general public policy is concerned. No doubt in many instances, and perhaps in the very instance which you state, there might be direct financial gain to the public by awarding the work to the deputy surveyor; but as for outweighing any such consideration, we have the other consideration that an employe of the public must not be permitted to put himself in a position where his private financial interest may influence his duty to the public, or the exercise of his judgment in performing that duty.

You are therefore advised that under the facts stated by you, the deputy surveyor is, upon grounds of public policy, disqualified as a bidder.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE UNDER FLOOD EMERGENCY ACT OF 1913—UNEXPENDED BALANCE MAY NOT BE USED IN PAYMENT OF REPAIRS AND RECONSTRUCTION BY FLOODS RECENTLY OCCURRING.

Unexpended balances in funds arising from the issue of bonds under the flood emergency act of 1913 (103 O. L. 141), may not be used in payment of repairs and reconstruction made necessary by floods recently occurring.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

HON. CHARLES C. CHAPMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of recent date reading as follows:

> "Our county commissioners, shortly after the flood of 1913 in our county passed a resolution under the emergency act for the issuance of bonds for the building and repairing of certain specified county bridges. There still remains in this emergency fund something like $35,000. Our county commissioners desire to apply this money to the emergency fund of 1919.

Our view of this is that it is governed by section 5654 G. C., which says in substance:

'Where any surplus remains that has been raised by special tax, that it must be returned to the county sinking fund.'

We are requested to ask your opinion in regard to this special fund, whether or not there would be some way by which this could be used to repair and build county bridges and roads which were washed away by the recent flood."

In addition to what is stated in your letter information has come to this department to the effect that the use proposed to be made of the moneys in question is for the repair of bridges injured by floods resulting from a recent heavy rainstorm.

The flood emergency act of 1913 is found in 103 O. L. 141; and as indicated by its title as well as by its colloquial name, it is an emergency act pure and simple. It has relation to public property and public ways destroyed or injured by the floods of 1913; and as to the repair and reconstruction made necessary by such floods authorizes the raising of funds and levying of taxes without the observance of certain statutory formalities which would otherwise be applicable. It is unnecessary to discuss the act in detail; but your attention is called to these provisions of section 6 of the act:

"In no case shall funds produced by the levy authorized and required to be made by this section be used otherwise than for the purposes specified herein. In case money levied or borrowed under any of the provisions of this act is more than sufficient for the purposes for which it is levied or borrowed, the unexpended balance thereof shall be credited to the sinking fund provided for herein, and shall in no case be subject to transfer to any other fund; and when in such case, the final redemption of such bonds is provided for, the levy shall thereupon terminate."

Quite plainly a violation of these provisions would take place if the unexpended balances of bond issues made under the provisions of said emergency act were used for the purpose indicated in your letter.

As a matter of information, your attention is called to sections 5638 to 5644 G. C., especially to sections 5643 and 5644, and to opinions of this department rendered in connection with said sections during the years 1914 to 1917 and reported in Opinions of Attorney-General for the several years indicated.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General

BONDS MAY NOT BE ISSUED BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES FOR PURCHASE OF ROAD MACHINERY

Bonds may not be issued by township trustees for the purpose of purchasing road machinery.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919

HON. JOHN E. BLAKE, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date is received, reading as follows:

> "Will you kindly give me an opinion on the following state of facts:
> The township trustees contract for a road machine to do certain grading on the public roads when there are no funds in the township treasury or to its credit to pay for the same. Can the township trustees issue the bonds of the township to obtain money to pay for such machine?"

No doubt the statute under which the township trustees have assumed, or are assuming, to act is section 3373 G. C., which provides among other things:

> "* * * Township trustees are hereby authorized to purchase or lease such machinery as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining or repairing roads and culverts within the township. * * * All payments on account of machinery, tools, material, labor and team shall be made from the township road fund as provided by law. All purchases of materials, machinery and tools, shall, where the amount exceeds one hundred dollars, be made from the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement in the manner hereinbefore provided. * * *"

In order to make their purchase as provided by law, the trustees must give heed to the provisions of section 5660, to the effect that

> "* * * the trustees of a township * * * shall not enter into any contract agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose."

According to your letter, the mandate of this section has not been fulfilled; and inasmuch as by the provisions of the next following section (5661, G. C.), contracts (with certain enumerated exceptions) are void if entered into contrary to the provisions of said section 5660, it is quite plain that no basis is furnished for a bond issue for the payment of the alleged obligation which you describe. It may be added that no provision of statute has been found authorizing the issue of bonds by a township for the purpose of purchasing road machinery.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—SUSPENSION OF SCHOOL BY COUNTY OR LOCAL BOARD—WHEN RE-ESTABLISHED—AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE GOVERNS.

1. Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten, the county board of education shall direct the suspension of such school and the board of education of the village or rural school affected shall suspend such school; but wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, after such daily attendance shall be established as being ten or more, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established.

2. Where a public school has been closed because the average daily attendance for the preceding year has been below ten, and it later appears upon investigation that such school if re-established would have an average daily attendance of ten or more and it is the finding of the board of education that such school ought to be re-established, then such school shall be re-established.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

HON. J. C. OGLEVEE, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is herewith made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "I have been asked by the county board of education of this county to submit to you three or four questions in regard to the new school law with reference to closing schools. It is known as House bill No. 348, amending General Code sections 4688 et seq.
> 1. By section 13 of this act the county board is required to close all schools whenever the average daily attendance for the preceding year falls below ten. The act is effective September 21, 1919. Are they required to close a school that had an average attendance below ten last year, or does it not rather contemplate that the average daily attendance shall be taken this year, and that no school shall be closed unless the daily attendance this year falls below ten?
> 2. If a school last year had a daily attendance of less than ten, and after school opens this year it should appear that more than twelve pupils are attending other schools from the district that had less than ten last year, and has consequently been closed, has the county board authority to re-open the former school, or must the school remain closed throughout the year?
> 3. There is one district in this county where the average daily attendance was below ten last year because the teacher was not satisfactory, and parents refused to send their children; but the enumeration this year shows 24 persons of school age, and the daily attendance will exceed twelve. Shall the board close this school, or allow it to continue?"

You refer to House bill No. 348, which becomes law on and with September 22, 1919, and it is presumed that the "Section 13" referred to by you in your letter is section 7730 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause. Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten the county board of education shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school. Whenever any school is suspended the board of education of the district shall provide for the transfer of the pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school to other schools. Upon such suspension the board of education of such village or rural district shall provide for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age who reside in the territory of the suspended district and who live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned, to a public school in the rural or village district or to a public school in another district. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district by the board of education within ten days after the resolution providing for such suspension is adopted. Wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more then, upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school."

In your first question you ask whether the county board is required to close all schools whenever the average daily attendance for the preceding year falls below ten, or whether it does not contemplate that the average daily attendance shall be taken this year and that no school shall be closed unless the daily attendance this year falls below ten. Your attention is invited to the language in the second sentence of section 7730, which says:

"Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten the county board of education shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school."

From this language it is noted that the county board of education does not suspend the school, but shall direct the local board of education in control of such school to do the suspending, and that such act of suspension shall be based upon the fact that the average daily attendance for the preceding year has been below ten, the language of the statute.

The seeming purpose of the opening language of section 7730 is that no school shall be permitted to operate where the attendance is less than ten during the preceding year, and thus if a school following the close of the term would have had an average daily attendance for that term of less than ten it would be the clear duty of the county board of education to direct the suspension of such school upon such facts being brought to their official attention. Such act on the part of the county board of education should take place in sufficient time prior to the opening of the next school term—that is, the school year beginning on September 1 of each calendar year—to give the local board of education an opportunity to employ its teachers. But attention is invited to the language which follows in the section which gives not only the county board of education, but the local board of education as well, full authority to re-establish such school upon ascertaining that such school ought to be re-established, for the section says:

> "Wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established."

There might be frequent cases in which a school would show for a certain term an attendance of less than ten, and immediately prior to September 1, or after the enumeration was taken for the new school year, a sufficient number of children would become of school age in such district or a family or families might move in with children of school age in sufficient number that the number less than ten as shown by the figures of the prior school term might be increased to twelve or fifteen or a greater number, and thus it would be a clear injustice to all concerned to govern the school activities of a certain district for the current year by what may have been the history of the preceding year. This seemingly is what the new law has in mind when it says that if the county board of education or the local board of education ordering the suspension finds that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. This is followed further by the language that in the event that the respective boards of education fail to re-establish the school, provision is made for a petition signed by a majority of the voters of the territory in question showing that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory is twelve or more; but even in that event this is merely bringing it to the attention of the board of education, for the closing sentence of the section says that the board of education may re-establish such school. (But see Myers vs. Board of Ed., 95 O. S. 367).

It would seem, therefore, that it is the duty of the boards of education concerned in the suspension of the school in question to ascertain the true facts as to what the attendance may be for the coming term and shall make a finding, and the law says that if such finding is that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established.

Attention is invited to the fact that section 7730 was amended in 107 Ohio laws, that is, the last legislature prior to the existing one, and was twice amended by the present General Assembly; first, by the enactment of House bill No. 406 which was effective on and with August 18, 1919; but section 7730 as appearing in House bill No. 406 is repealed by House bill No. 348, which becomes law on and after September 22, 1919. However, an examination of the three sections shows that there is very little difference in the language as regards the suspension of schools and their later re-establishment, if the conditions warrant. Since House bill No. 348 was the last enactment by the legislature upon the subject in question and is effective practically throughout the entire school year from September 22 on, boards of education should have in mind the provisions of House bill No. 348, which will be the governing statute after September 22.

In construing section 7730 G. C. it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that

(1) Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten, the county board of education shall direct the suspension of such school and the board of education of the village or rural school affected shall suspend such school; but wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, after such daily attendance shall be established as being ten or more, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established.

(2) Where a public school has been closed because the average daily attendance for the preceding year has been below ten, and it later appears upon investigation that such school if re-established would have an average daily attendance of ten or more and it is the finding of the board of education that such school ought to be re-established, then such school shall be re-established.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TURTLE OR MOURNING DOVES—UNLAWFUL TO SHOOT OR KILL SAME UNDER STATUTES OF OHIO EFFECTIVE SEPTEMBER 5, 1919—FEDERAL TREATY BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES DISCUSSED.

1. Under both the present game law of Ohio and under the new game law which becomes effective September 5, 1919, the shooting or killing of turtle or mourning doves in this state is unlawful.

2. Said Ohio laws are fully consistent with the "Migratory Bird Treaty" concluded between the United States and Great Britain, and also with the laws of the Congress and proclamations made thereunder.

3. The act of Congress of July 3, 1918, expressly authorizes the Ohio law, and the proclamations of the United States secretary of agriculture are made subject to the power of state legislatures to pass laws extending further protection to migratory birds, but not lesser protection than that secured by the federal department of agriculture.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1919.

HON. HAVETH E. MAU, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the letter of William K. Marshall, assistant prosecuting attorney of Montgomery county, dated August 28.

The question upon which my opinion is desired may be stated thus:

> "Is it lawful to shoot or kill doves within the state of Ohio, and if so, during what period?"

By "doves" is meant what are commonly called turtle or mourning doves. It is assumed herein that such birds are migratory; that is, not remaining permanently the entire year within the borders of this state.

The answer to your question involves the consideration of both state and federal laws. Let us first consider the state law.

(1) Section 1409 of the General Code of Ohio reads, in part:

> "No person shall catch, kill, injure, pursue or have in his possession either dead or alive, or purchase, expose for sale, transport or ship to a point within or without the state a turtle or mourning dove * * *, or any wild bird other than a game bird. No part of the plumage, skin or body of such bird shall be sold or had in possession."

The section just quoted is repealed by Senate bill 45, passed by the present legislature, which said bill was signed by the governor, and on the 6th day of June, 1919, was filed in the office of the secretary of state. It becomes effective ninety days after the date last mentioned, to-wit, on the 5th day of September, 1919.

Upon said law becoming effective, section 1390 G .C. will read, in part, as follows:

> "Definitions * * * non-game birds; * * * turtle or mourning dove * * *."

Upon said law becoming effective, section 1408, G. C. will read as follows:

> "Sec. 1408.—Non-game birds. No person shall catch, kill, injure, pursue * * * any wild bird other than a game bird * * *."

From the foregoing it is apparent that under both the present and the new game laws of Ohio, the shooting or killing of doves is prohibited.

(2) It remains now to consider whether such shooting or killing is lawful under the federal law and regulations proclaimed thereunder, and if so, also to consider what the status of the Ohio law is in the light of that circumstance.

On December 8, 1916, the president of the United States proclaimed a treaty which was made between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds in the United States and Canada. Article I of said treaty says:

> "The high contracting powers declare that the migratory birds included in the terms of this convention shall be as follows:
> 1. Migratory game birds: * * * (Here follows an enumeration of birds) (e) Columbidae or pigeon, including doves and wild pigeons."

Article II of the treaty says, in part:

> "The high contracting powers agree that, as an effective means of preserving migratory birds, there shall be established the following close seasons during which no hunting shall be done, except for scientific or propagation purposes under permits issued by proper authorities.
> 1. The close season on migratory game birds shall be between March 10 and September 1, * * *. The season for hunting shall be further restricted to such period not exceeding three and one-half months as the high contracting powers may severally deem appropriate and define by law or regulation."

On July 3, 1918, Congress enacted what is known as the "Migratory Bird Treaty Act" (July 3, 1918, c. 128, section 1, 40 Stat.; Comp. St., section 8837a). This law, as its title indicates, was designed to "give effect to the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds, concluded at Washington August sixteenth, nineteen hundred and sixteen, and for other purposes."

Section 2 of said bird treaty act (Comp. Stat., section 8837b) provides:

> "Unless and except as permitted by regulations made as hereinafter provided, it shall be unlawful to hunt, take, capture, kill * * * any migratory bird included in the terms of the convention between the United States and Great Britain for the protection of migratory birds concluded August sixteenth, nineteen hundred and sixteen, * * *."

Section 3 of the act (Comp. Stat., section 8837c) says:

> "Subject to the provisions and in order to carry out the purposes of the convention, the secretary of agriculture is authorized and directed, from time to time, having due regard to the zones of temperature and to the distribution, abundance, economic value, breeding habits, and times and lines of migratory flight of such birds, to determine when, to what extent, if at all, and by what means, it is compatible with the terms of the convention to allow hunting, taking, capture, killing, possession, sale, purchase, shipment, transportation, carriage, or export of any such bird, or any part, nest, or egg thereof, and to adopt such suitable regulations permitting and governing the same, in accordance with such determinations, which regulations shall become effective when approved by the president."

I am informed that the secretary of agriculture of the United States, in pursuance of the authority conferred by the section last above cited, and out of a desire to take advantage of that part of the treaty before mentioned, which reads:

> "The season for hunting shall be further restricted to such period not exceeding three and one-half months as the high contracting powers may severally deem appropriate and define by law or regulation," has submitted to the president of the United States for approval, an amendatory regulation which prescribes the open season for hunting mourning and turtle doves in Ohio to be from September 1 to December 15 inclusive.

Attention is also called to section 7 of the act in question (Comp. Stat., section 8837g):

> "Nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the several states and territories from making or enforcing laws or regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of said convention or of this act, or from making or enforcing laws or regulations which shall give further protection to migratory birds, their nests, and eggs, if such laws or regulations do not extend the open seasons for such birds beyond the dates approved by the president in accordance with section three of this act."

Having in mind the purpose of the treaty for the protection of the migratory birds comprehended by its terms, it is the view of this department that it is to be construed as providing first that there shall be a restriction against the hunting of such birds during the period between March 10 and September 1 of each year, and further that the season for hunting shall be restricted to such period not exceeding three and one-half months as the high contracting powers may severally determine by law.

The legislation enacted by Congress under the provisions of the treaty has authorized the establishment of restrictions limiting the hunting season to the period between September 1 and December 15. By the express provision of the act of Congress found in section 7 thereof, it is further provided that the authority of the states and territories to make and enforce further regulations shall not be held to be denied by the federal legislation, provided that such regulations of the state and territories shall not be in conflict with the provisions of the treaty and the federal legislation, and shall not extend the open season for such birds beyond the dates approved by the president.

In this provision we have what may be said to be a construction that the effect of further protection by state regulations shall not be considered as inconsistent with the protection accorded under the federal act, subject to the proviso that such state regulations shall not extend the open season beyond the dates approved by the president.

In other words, it is considered that the language of the federal act itself recognizes and preserves the right of the states to enact and enforce further regulatory measures for the protection of the birds in question. From which it follows that the provisions of the Ohio law extending further protection by means of the absolute prohibition against the hunting of such birds, are in accord with the general purport and spirit of the federal act and not void for inconsistency therewith.

You are therefore advised that the above mentioned Ohio statute, both in its present form and in its amended form when in effect, is valid and operative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—WHERE RE-ELECTED, THEN DIES BEFORE COMMENCEMENT OF SECOND TERM—VACANCY—HOW FILLED—TENURE OF OFFICE OF SUCH APPOINTEE.

When a county auditor who has been re-elected to succeed himself, dies before the commencement of his second term, the person appointed to fill the unexpired term is entitled, by virtue of section 10 G. C., to hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified, which election must be had at the first general election for county officers that is held more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy. The tenure of office of such appointee is not limited to the unexpired portion of the decedent's first term.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 2, 1919.

HON CHARLES R. SARGENT, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 11, 1919, relating to the situation which has arisen in your county by reason of the death of the county auditor, was duly received.

The facts as I understand them are as follows:

Mr. William S. Howland died on April 5, 1919, while serving his first term as county auditor. He had been re-elected to the office at the general election for county officers held on November 5, 1918, for the term commencing on the third Monday in October, 1919. A vacancy having occurred in the office by reason of Mr. Howland's death, the county commissioners, acting under authority of section 2562 G. C., appointed Mr. W. H. Cook to fill the vacancy.

The questions for decision are as follows:

(1) Does Mr. Cook's right and authority to hold the office expire on October 19, 1919 (the end of Mr. Howland's first term), thereby enabling the county commissioners to make another appointment to the office?

(2) When must the successor in office be elected?

Section 2558 G. C. provides that a county auditor shall be chosen biennially in each county, who shall hold his office for two years, commencing on the third Monday in October next after his election. The time for holding elections for county officers is prescribed by section 1, article XVII of the state constitution which provides that such election shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the even numbered years, and it is also provided in section 2 of the same article that vacancies in all elective offices other than that of a member of the General Assembly shall be filled for the unexpired term in such manner as may be prescribed by law.

The manner of filling vacancies in the office of county auditor, as contemplated by the constitutional provision just referred to, is provided for by sections 10 and 2562 G. C. Section 2562 authorizes the county commissioners to fill any vacancy in the office of county auditor by the appointment of a suitable person, resident of the county, and section 10 G. C., which in my opinion is the controlling statute in the present case, provides that:

"When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred.

> This section shall not be construed to postpone the time for such election beyond that at which it would have been held had no vacancy occurred, nor to affect the official term, or the time for the commencement thereof, of any person elected to such office before the occurrence of such vacancy."

It will be observed that, by virtue of the foregoing statute, the appointee is to hold the office "until his successor is elected and qualified," and that unless otherwise provided by law (and it is not otherwise provided by law so far as the present inquiry is concerned) the successor in office to such appointee must not only be elected, but can only be elected at the first general election for the office that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred, which in the present case will be in November, 1920—there being no law under which a special election for the office can be held before that time. In other words, section 10 G. C. fixes the tenure of office of the appointee by expressly providing that he shall hold office "until his successor is elected and qualified," and there is no provision either in that section or any other section governing county auditors warranting the county commissioners in shortening the tenure, or declaring the office vacant. See State vs. Metcalfe, 80 O. S., 244, holding that an office cannot be regarded as vacant while filled by one lawfully entitled to hold it.

It is my opinion, as already stated, that the principal governing statute in this case at this time is section 10 G. C.; that under its clear and express terms the tenure of the present appointee, Mr. W. H. Cook, is not limited to the unexpired portion of the term in which Mr. Howland's death occurred, but that he is entitled to hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified; and that his successor can only be elected at the first general election for the office that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy occurred, which in this case will be the general election in November, 1920.

The foregoing conclusion is supported by State vs. Speidel, 62 O. S. 156, which holds that the death of an officer during his first term does not create a vacancy in, but instead disposes of, the new or second term for which he has been re-elected; that the vacancy is created in the first term, and that a person duly appointed to fill the vacancy will hold the office not only during the unexpired portion of the first term, but also until his successor is elected and qualified, which election it was also held must be had at the first proper election for the office that is held more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy. That case is directly in point, and cannot be distinguished from the present situation so far as any facts of legal significance are concerned.

A conclusion contrary to the one at which I have arrived would not only be in conflict with section 10 G. C. and State vs. Speidel, supra, but also out of harmony with the declared policy of our law on the subject of vacancies in public offices, as expressed in the decision just referred to, viz.:

> "The policy has been to secure continuity of service and avoid unnecessary vacancies. It has never been the policy of the state to create vacancies in office for the mere purpose of giving somebody an opportunity to fill them. Piling vacancy upon vacancy is an anomaly. * * * The policy to discourage the needless creation of vacancies is recognized in a number of decisions of this court."

Adams vs. Hopkins, 10 O. S. 509, has been cited as applicable to the present inquiry, but the situation in that case was materially different from the situation in the case now under consideration, and involved the application of different statutes. The incumbent in that case was not an appointee to fill a vacancy, but had been elected to the office of county treasurer and had served two full terms of two years each, and was therefore disqualified by the four year limitation prescribed by section 3 of article X of the state constitution from continuing in office. His successor had been duly elected, but died before the commencment of his term of office. Hence, the office not being in the possession of a person entitled to hold it because of the constitutional disqualification imposed upon the incumbent, it was held, and properly so, that the office had become vacant by death, so as to authorize the commissioners to make an appointment to fill the vacancy. No such situation is presented here, because Mr. Cook, the appointee, is not disqualified by any statute or constitutional provision from continuing in the office, but on the contrary, he is especially authorized by section 10 G. C. to hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified, and not only that, but the time of the election of his successor is specifically provided for in that section.

Bearing on the questions as to when such elected successor will take office, and the length of his term, see State vs. Hadley, 59 O. S. 167.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "In Re: Hughes Health Bill—House Bill 211 (108 O. L. 236).
> Please advise when the above health bill goes into effect, also how money shall be obtained for the year beginning January 1, 1920, to pay the expenses of the General Health District."

Your inquiry relates to House Bill No. 211, known as the Hughes Health Law, passed during the present session of the General Assembly April 17, 1919, and approved May 9, 1919, and was filed in the office of the Secretary of State May 12, 1919. Your first question may be stated to be:

> "When does this act go into effect?"

Section 29 of House Bill No. 211 provides:

> "That said original sections 1245, 1246, 3391, 3392, 3393, 3394, 4404, 4405, 4408, 4409, 4410, 4413, 4429, 4430, 4436, 4437, 4476 and 12785 of the General Code be and the same are hereby repealed, but this section shall not go into effect until January 1, 1920."

It should be noted that there is no provision in the act fixing a time at which any other section of the act shall go into effect and that section 29 relates only to "this section."

Section 12 of article II, Constitution of Ohio, provides in part:

> "Every bill passed by the General Assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state."

This section also fixes the time within which an act becomes a law if passed over the veto of the governor, but that part of the section is not material to the question in this case as the act was approved by the Governor May 9, 1919.

However, by the amendment known as the initiative and referendum, adopted in 1912, being sections 1 et seq. article II of the Constitution, the operation of laws passed by the General Assembly is postponed as provided in section 1c, which in part is:

> "No law passed by the General Assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided."

The exceptions therein provided may be found in section 1d providing that laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for current expenses of state government and state institutions and emergency laws "shall go into immediate effect."

The effect of these exceptions is not material in the present inquiry as more than ninety days have elapsed since the filing of the law in the office of the Secretary of State.

From this it would appear that the legislature in section 29 of the act has fixed the time when the repealing section goes into effect, leaving the rest of the law to go into effect as otherwise provided by law.

As to the time when section 29 becomes effective little doubt exists.

As held in State vs. Roney, 82 O. S. 376, in the first and third syllabi:

"1. The presumption is that the legislature intends a statute to take effect at the time it declares the statute shall be in effect, and a court may not by construction substitute a different time merely to correct defective legislation. The province of construction is to ascertain and give effect to the intention of the legislature, but its intention must be derived from the legislation and may not be invented by the court. To supply the intention and then give the statute effect according to such intention would not be construction but legislation.

3. A statute, declared to take effect from and after a date named, takes effect on the day after the day of the date named."

In Gas & Fuel Co. vs. Chillicothe, 65 O. S. 186, in the opinion (page 208) it is held:

"There is no legal objection to different provisions of the same statute taking effect at different times at the will of the legislature."

In view of the explicit expression of the legislative intention that section 29 should go into effect January 1, 1920, and the constitutional provisions above cited, taken in connection with the decisions of the Supreme Court above quoted, it is clear that section 29 will become effective January 1, 1920, and that the other sections of the act become effective ninety days after May 12, 1919.

Your second question is:

How shall the money be obtained for the year beginning January 1, 1920, to pay the expenses of the general health district?

This is an interesting question and of prime importance in the administration of the health laws as amended. Apparent difficulties may be eliminated by an analysis of the financial sections of the act in determining the preliminary question of whether or not any change as to the method of obtaining the money for the expenses of the health district is effected by the new law.

Section 25 of that law provides:

"The board of health of a general health district shall annually, on or before August first, estimate in itemized form the amounts needed for the current expenses of such district for the fiscal year beginning on the first day of January next ensuing. Such estimate shall be certified to the county auditor and by him submitted to the district advisory council at a meeting held at his office on the second Monday of September. The district advisory council may reduce any item or items in such estimate but may not increase any item or the aggregate of all items. The aggregate amount as fixed by the district advisory council shall be apportioned by the county auditor among the townships and municipalities composing the health district on the basis of population as shown by the last federal census. * * The county auditor, when making his semi-annual apportionments of funds, shall retain at each such semi-annual apportionment, one-half of the money so apportioned to each township and municipality. Such moneys shall be placed in a separate fund, to be known as the 'district health fund.'"

Section 26 relates only to raising money in cases of "epidemic or threatened epidemic or the unusual prevalence of dangerous communicable diseases."

It may be observed that there is no direct authority to levy contained in section 25 or 26, or in any other section of the act. Nor is there, except as hereinafter indicated, any change in the method of making a levy.

Section 25 evidently presupposes the making of such levies under existing laws. After receiving the itemized statement of the amounts needed for the current expenses of the health district as finally approved by the district advisory council, the auditor is not authorized to levy such an amount but his duties from that point are rather those of apportioning to and collecting from each tax subdivision a share of the total estimate on the basis of population, resulting in an appropriation and segregation of the subdivision's share.

The latter part of section 25 provides that after having so apportioned such estimate the county auditor, when making his semi-annual settlements with the townships and municipalities, "shall retain * * one-half of the money so apportioned to each township and municipality. Such money shall be placed in a separate fund, to be known as the 'district health fund.'"

It might be claimed that this power amounts to authority to make, and does in fact constitute, a levy. The essential elements of a valid levy and a restriction on the application of money collected thereunder are found in section 5 of article XII of the Constitution of Ohio, which provides:

"No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax, shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied."

Sections 3646, 3647 and 3784 G. C., which authorize levies by municipalities for health purposes, are left intact and unaffected by this act. Likewise no attempt was made to amend or repeal sections 5646 to 5649 inc. G. C., relating to levies for township purposes, which include health purposes.

So it may be said that none of the legal machinery theretofore provided for making such levies or determining the amount thereof is amended or repealed by this act, unless that part of section 25, above quoted, has such effect by the necessary implication that giving the county auditor the arbitrary power to withhold the apportioned amount from each tax subdivision at the semi-annual settlements amounts to and has the effect of indirectly authorizing the levy of a tax by the county auditor, in direct conflict with former statutes as to such levies. Such implied repeal may also occur if the new act revises the whole matter involved, and is evidently intended as a substitute for the former laws. This is the rule announced in Goff vs. Gates, 87 O. S. 142, the first branch of the syllabus of which is:

"An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject-matter must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the later act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject-matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it."

Therefore to reach a conclusion that section 25 impliedly repeals such former laws, we must find that it is irreconcilably repugnant to them, or, revising the whole subject, was evidently intended as a substitute for them.

In support of the idea that such repugnancy exists, it might be claimed that this power of apportionment and retention of the amount charged against each subdivision gives the auditor the power to withhold such amounts, regardless of the amount levied and collected for such purpose. If this were correct, it would be in direct conflict with such laws which place the discretion as to the amount and the method of making such levies in other officials. But is this the proper interpretation of section 25? It must be borne in mind that unless this section contains direct authority to levy, and unless the auditor's action thereunder constitutes a valid levy of the amount apportioned, such a power to apportion and withhold money for health purposes from the tax subdivision's funds, regardless of the purpose of the levy under which such funds were collected, would be in violation of Sec. 5 of Art. XII, supra, in this, that taxes would be thus applied to objects other than those for which they were levied.

The proper construction to be placed upon section 25 in this regard, and it may be suggested the only construction which will maintain its constitutionality and carry out the legislative intention, is that after the township and municipal officers have made the levies from which such health expenses are payable, the auditor is authorized to retain half of the apportionment against each township or municipality from the funds payable to such township or municipality up to but not to exceed the total amounts in the funds from which such expenses are payable, such as general or contingent funds.

Precedent for such procedure is found in section 1465-66 et seq. G. C., enacted in 103 O. L. 72. These sections were construed in Porter, et al. vs. Hopkins, et al., 91 O. S. 74. This was an action to contest the constitutionality of the workmen's compensation act. Section 1466 gave the power to the auditor to pay and charge to each taxing subdivision its proportionate part of the county's contribution to the workmen's compensation fund.

It was claimed that in such payment by the county auditor the public funds were diverted from the purpose for which they were levied, in violation of Sec. 5 of Art. XII of the Constitution. The auditor proposed to pay such contribution from general and contingent funds and charge the same to the taxing subdivision.

The court held on page 84:

> "The maintenance of contingent and general funds for general purposes is provided for by statutes which are familiar. The municipal and other subdivisions are fully empowered to raise such funds. It would be wholly impracticable to specifically name in the different budgets the amount to be raised for each specific item. There are many incidental charges which are necessarily taken care of out of the funds of the character referred to as the needs arise. The fact that the amount raised does not meet the exact requirements from time to time and that some inconvenience may arise does not affect the validity of the statutory requirements. * * * It was the duty of the taxing officers of the different subdivisions to provide for such general and contingent funds in accordance with the provisions of the law."

The court, in holding that such contribution may be paid from contingent and general funds without violating the constitution in the respect above indicated, did not mean to hold that taxes could be applied to purposes other than those for which they were levied, but that the use of taxes for contributions for workmen's compensation was within the purposes for which general and contingent fund levies were made.

Consistently with the holding of the court in the workmen's compensation case, the county auditor may and is by this statute legally empowered to withhold from the various townships and municipalities their portion of the expenses for the health district by taking the same from their contingent and general funds where sufficient levies are not made in special health funds.

Of course it should be noted that taxes raised by levies for special purposes, as for example township road or cemetery purposes, could not be diverted to other uses.

It is the opinion of this department that there is no irreconcilable conflict between the sections above considered; that section 25 is not intended as a revision of the whole subject of levies for health purposes and was not intended as a substitute for the former laws above mentioned, and that the money for the expenses of the general health district for the year beginning January 1, 1920, will be raised in the following manner:

(1) By levies made by proper township and municipal officers as provided in sections 5646 to 5649 inc. and 3646, 3647 and 3784 respectively.

(2) In his semi-annual settlements with such townships and municipalities the county auditor shall retain one-half of the amount apportioned by him against each township or municipality. The funds retained shall be taken from township or municipal funds, from which expenses for health purposes are properly payable, excluding, of course, funds raised by special levies as above indicated.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date requesting an opinion on seventeen questions arising under the new non-par value stock law (Amended Senate Bill No. 47) was duly received. Pursuant to your verbal request, immediate attention has been given to the four following questions, and the others have been taken under advisement:

(1) Must a corporation that desires to issue common stock without par value issue preferred stock also?

A corporation incorporated or reorganized under the recent non-par value stock law is not required to, but it may if it so desires, provide for the creation and issue of preferred stock. The act in this respect is not mandatory, but permissive only.

See section 1 of the act prescribing the contents of articles of incorporation, particularly paragraph (a), which provides that the number of shares to be issued must be set out, "and if any of such shares be preferred stock," the terms and provisions thereof; and paragraph (b), which provides that the amount of capital stock with which the company will carry on business must not be less than the amount of the "preferred capital, if any."

See also section 4 of the act, which provides that the capital stock may be increased by preferred stock "if none theretofore was authorized," in the manner and in accordance with the provisions relating to the amendment of articles of incorporation under the general law. The general law (sections 8698 and 8719 G. C.), it will be remembered, provides for the creation and issue of preferred stock after the incorporation of the company.

See also the provisions of section 5 relating to the classification, if any, of the company's capital stock, and if classified, the terms and provisions of the preferred stock, etc.

(2) When a reorganized corporation files its certificate with the Secretary of State, should it not be allowed a credit for incorporation fee previously paid upon its authorized capital stock?

This question must be answered in the negative. The act clearly and specifically provides what fee shall be paid upon reorganization, and nowhere is there any provision authorizing a credit on account of fees previously paid to the Secretary of State. The requirement of the act (section 10) is that every reorganized company "shall pay to the Secretary of State the same fees provided in section 1 of this act as therein computed," and the only exception to the rule is expressed in the section itself, viz., that the fee shall not be less than $25.00. It follows, therefore, that every corporation reorganized pursuant to the act, is required to pay to the Secretary of State "a fee of ten cents on each share of common stock authorized in the articles to be issued without any nominal or par value, and in addition thereto a fee of one-tenth of one per cent of the par value of preferred stock authorized in the articles," as provided in section 1 of the act. In other words, a reorganized company is treated exactly as if it was a new incorporation, so far as the fees of the Secretary of State are concerned excepting only as to the minimum fee.

It has been suggested that section 10 only applies when the certificate of reorganization shows that a company has been reorganized with an increased authorized capital stock, but this contention cannot be adopted because that section, and also section 1 in terms clearly provide for two separate and distinct fees, viz., (a) a reorganization fee to be paid when the certificate of reorganization is filed, and (b) an increased capital stock fee to be paid in event the reorganized company increases its authorized capital stock. See also the proviso in section 10 fixing a minimum fee to be paid upon the filing of the certificate of reorganization.

Section 9, referred to in your letter, does not affect the question of fees to be paid to the Secretary of State by corporations taking advantage of the statutory authority to reorganize; its only effect is to declare that reorganization shall not work a dissolution or in any way affect the corporate existence of the company, etc.

> (3) Kindly state whether or not a corporation which reorganizes under the above act is obliged to pay a fee of ten cents per share for changing a share of par stock to a share of non-par stock.

The fees to be paid to the secretary of state upon reorganization are those fixed by section 1 of the act. Section 10 expressly so provides. The secretary of state must be governed by the certificate of reorganization in computing the fees to be charged and collected, and the fact that par value shares have been changed or transformed under authority of the act to non-par value shares does not exempt such shares from the computation. The mandate of the statute is that ten cents must be charged and collected on each share to be issued without par value. In other words, there is no distinction between a so-called "transformed" share and a newly created or additional share, so far as the fee is concerned.

> (4) When the amount of capital with which a foreign corporation having non-par value shares will carry on business is not stated in its articles of incorporation, or otherwise fixed, so as to bring the company within section 11 of the Ohio non-par value stock act, what rule should be adopted in determining the fee to be paid to the secretary of state under section 178 et seq. G. C. governing the admission of foreign corporations to do business in this state, and the amount of the annual franchise tax under section 5501 et seq. G. C.?

Section 11 of the act prescribes the rule to be followed with respect to such foreign corporations, and such only, as state in their articles or otherwise fix the amount of capital with which they will carry on business, as follows:

> "The amount of capital with which a foreign corporation having shares of capital stock without par value will carry on business, as stated in its articles of incorporation, or otherwise fixed or as thereafter lawfully changed, shall be deemed to be the authorized capital stock of such foreign corporation for the purposes of sections 180, 183, 184, 185, 5501, 5502 and 5503 of the General Code."

In other words, the secretary of state and the tax commission cannot adopt the foregoing rule, unless the amount of capital with which the company will carry on business is stated in its articles of incorporation or is otherwise fixed.

(a) It will be observed that the foregoing section 11 does not provide that there shall be a foreign statute requiring the amount of capital with which the company will carry on business to be stated in the articles, or providing how the amount shall be otherwise fixed.

In my opinion when the amount is not stated in the articles of incorporation, it is permissible for the board of directors of the foreign corporation to fix the amount, and thereby bring the company within section 11 of the act, which amount, if so fixed, should be certified to the secretary of state at the time the company makes application for admission to do business in this state, and to the tax commission when the company files its annual reports with the commission.

(b) In the event, however, that the amount is not stated in the articles, or otherwise fixed as provided in paragraph (a) supra, then recourse must be had to section 178 et seq. G. C. as to the fee to be paid by a foreign company seeking admission to do business in this state, and to section 5501 et seq. G. C. with respect to the annual franchise tax—those being the governing statutes.

Examination of section 178 et seq. G. C. will disclose that the amount of the company's "authorized capital stock" is an indispensable factor in determining the amount of the fee, because under one section (180 G. C.) the fee is an arbitrary one based solely on the authorized capital stock, and under the other sections of the group (184 and 185 G. C.) the fee is based upon the proportion of the company's authorized capital stock represented by property and business in Ohio.

The company's authorized capital stock is also an indispensable factor in determining the amount of the annual franchise tax, as will appear from the provisions of section 5501 G. C. which provides that the tax commission shall determine and certify to the state auditor the proportion of the company's authorized capital stock represented by its property and business in this state, and from section 5503 G. C. which provides that the state auditor shall charge, and that the company shall pay to the state treasurer a certain fee upon the proportion of the company's authorized capital stock represented by property and business in this state.

In determining the amount of the authorized non-par value capital stock of a foreign corporation which does not come within section 11 of the act and paragraph (a) of this opinion, I suggest that the following rules be adopted:

"In case of issued and outstanding non-par value shares, adopt the real consideration for which such shares were issued from time to time.

With respect to unissued non-par value shares, adopt the real consideration for which such shares are being offered by the company; but in the event unissued shares are not being offered by the company, then adopt the real consideration for which the last issued non-par value shares were issued by the company."

This information should be certified to the secretary of state at the time the company makes application to do business in this state, and to the tax commission at the time it files its annual franchise tax reports.

The rules just mentioned should be applied to Delaware corporations, and also to other foreign corporations organized under the laws of other states, which do not come or bring themselves within section 11 of the act and paragraph (a) of this opinion.

The Delaware law has specifically placed a valuation of $100 per share on non-par value shares as far as Delaware fees only are concerned, but of course that provision has no application to fees and taxes to be paid under the Ohio law.

The case of North American Petroleum Company vs. Hopkins, 181 Bac. 625, has been cited for consideration in this connection, but that case involved the method for determining the value of the "lawfully issued capital" of the company, and also its "capital stock," as those terms are used in the Kansas law, and not the amount of the company's "authorized" capital stock, which is the term used in the Ohio law.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SENATE BILL NO. 187 (108 O. L. 924)—IN EVENT TWO MILL ADDITIONAL LEVY IS AUTHORIZED BY ELECTORS UNDER SAID STATUTE—BUDGET COMMISSION REQUIRED TO ALLOW SCHOOL DISTRICT AN AMOUNT NOT LESS THAN ALLOWED FOR YEAR 1918—SEE ALSO OPINIONS NOS. 565 AND 570, 1919.

In event of favorable vote by the electorate upon the proposition to levy the additional two mills authorized under Senate Bill No. 187 for school purposes, the budget commission is required to allow to the school district, upon its budget submitted to the commission, an amount not less than that allowed the school district for all purposes, by the budget commission, for the year 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1919.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 26, you submitted to me a request for a construction of the provision of Senate bill No. 187 (108 O. L. 924), authorizing the levy of an additional two mills of tax by boards of education, in event of favorable vote thereon by the electorate at a special election, and particularly the provision that budget commissions shall not reduce the amount of all other levies made by boards of education below the amount allowed for the preceding year.

This request for construction of said provision of the law was joined in by Hon. R. W. McKinney, auditor of your county, and a similar inquiry from the city attorney of Columbus was at the time under consideration at this office and a ruling announced in Opinion No. 570, directed to the tax commission of Ohio on August 16, 1919, of which you have received a copy.

Mr. McKinney has further advised me, under date of August 25, that some uncertainty prevails in the minds of your budget commissioners as to the application of the law as construed in my former ruling, to the specific facts before your budget commission, relative to the levy for school purposes and accordingly has submitted the following data covering allowances made by the budget commission to the city of Springfield school board for the year 1918 and also the amounts requested in the budget of the school board for the year 1919, and requests an application of the law to the concrete case stated:

"The budget commission allowed said school board in 1918 the following amounts:

Tuition fund	$159,434 37
Contingent fund	87,000 55	Rate 3.30
Sinking fund within the 10 mill limitation	12,000 00	Rate .16
Sinking fund outside the 10 mill limitation	40,000 00	Rate .54
Total	$298,434 92	Rate 4.00

This year, 1919, the board hands to the budget commission the following request:

Tuition fund	$445,000 00
Contingent fund	195,000 00
Interest and sinking fund within the 10 mill limitation	9,000 00
Interest and sinking fund outside the 10 mill limitation	12,941 00
Total	$661,941 86

The rate required to grant the $9,000.00 for the sinking fund within the 10 mill limitation would be .12 of a mill, and without the 10 mill limitation to grant the $12,941.86, the rate required would be .17 of a mill.

If the Attorney-General's Opinion No. 570 means that the budget commission must grant amounts aggregating the total amount allowed last year, and inasmuch as the sinking fund requests this year are so much less than the grants for that purpose last year, it would mean, in order to grant the aggregate of last year, that considerably more money would have to be allowed for current expense, viz.: Tuition and contingent funds, than was allowed last year, which will very greatly cut into the revenues of both city and county.

Trusting that I may have an early interpretation of our situation in the light of Opinion No. 570, I remain," etc.

The provision of S. B. No. 187 which gives rise to your inquiry is contained in section 3, which is as follows:

"Sec. 3.—If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes. Such levy shall be certified to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate; it shall not be subject to any limitation on tax rates now in force, and shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission, nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year."

Other pertinent provisions of other statutes are found in the so-called Smith 1 per cent law and are as follows:

"Sec. 5649-1.—In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

Section 5649-3c G. C. governs the action of the budget commission and directs that the commission shall examine the budgets submitted by the various taxing subdivisions and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each district; and further:

> "* * * If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law. * * *."

The provision of section 5649-1 G. C. and that of S. B. No. 187, to the effect that the budget commission shall not reduce the amount of all levies authorized under the Smith law, for the school district, below the amount allowed for the preceding year, are mandatory, and, to the extent that they conflict with the general language of section 5649-3c G. C., they are a limitation upon the powers of the budget commission conferred by that section.

The purpose of the enactment of S. B. No. 187 obviously was to authorize a two mill levy for school purposes, in addition to that authorized within the then existing limitations, and the provision against reduction of the other levies as contained in section 3, is clearly employed to insure the benefit of the additional rate allowed by the stipulation that the power of the budget commission to reduce levies under section 5649-3c G. C. should not be employed in the direction of curtailing the levies of the school board which were authorized under the Smith law, and the legislature has chosen to adopt the allowance granted to the school district for 1918 as the standard or basis for allowance of what may be termed the regular levy for 1919.

It was pointed out in Opinion No. 570:

> "The budget commission deals with amounts, though it is true that in so doing it is enforcing limitations which according to the Smith law in its present form are expressed in terms of rates only. Having fixed amounts, its action is certified to the county auditor who determines rates. Therefore it is clear that what the budget commission is required to do under the Smith law and conversely what it is prohibited from doing under section 3 of Senate bill No. 187, both relate ultimately to the amount of taxes to be levied and must be expressed in terms of amount. We may therefore say that the language in question means that the budget commission shall not reduce the amount of money to be raised by levies on the grand duplicate of taxable property below a certain figure."

Here the provision of S. B. No. 187 supplies the language which must furnish the answer to your inquiry, to wit, the amount allowed such board for the preceding year.

Applying this specifically to the data submitted in your last communication, it follows that the amount requested by the school board in its budget is subject to reduction by the budget commission, either in toto, or in one or more of the items thereof, under authority of section 5649-3c G. C., provided that the total amount to be allowed shall not be less than that allowed for the preceding year, which is stated in your letter as $298,434.92.

While it is true, as you point out, that a substantially less sum is required for interest and sinking fund purposes, yet the practical effect of this is to make available for tuition and contingent fund purposes a larger amount to that extent, and this is beyond the control of the budget commission.

It is no doubt true that if the amount requested by the school board in its budget, either in the aggregate or in any of its items, is less than that allowed for the year 1918, the budget commission would not be authorized to increase the allowance over the amount requested, but such a contention is not being made by any one, as I understand, and therefore need not be considered.

Therefore you are advised that the budget commission is not authorized to reduce the amount of the budget for the school district, in the aggregate, below the amount allowed for all purposes in the year 1918, to wit, $298,434.92.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—INSTRUCTION OF BLIND—HISTORY OF NEW METHOD FOR INSTRUCTING PARTIALLY BLIND—AUTHORITY OF SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION TO PRESCRIBE STANDARD REQUIREMENTS FOR SCHOOLS RECEIVING STATE AID.

1. Under section 7761 G. C. the state superintendent of public instruction has full authority to prescribe standard requirements as to the methods of instruction in those schools which receive state aid for the instruction of the blind, and can direct that boards of education maintaining such schools for persons of defective vision shall provide such equipment as is necessary, including text books printed in large type for the use of pupils who are partially blind.

2. Boards of education maintaining classes for the blind, in order to receive the state aid mentioned in section 7757 G. C., must comply with the requirements promulgated by the superintendent of public instruction made under authority of section 7761 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Section 7761 gives the superintendent of public instruction authority to prescribe 'certain standard requirements concerning the conditions under which * * * schools for the blind * * * are conducted,' etc. I desire to issue a statement to the effect that as the success of the method of instructing partially blind children in so-called 'Conservation of Vision' or 'Sight-Saving Classes' is dependent for its ultimate success upon an adequate supply of text books and supplementary reading material in a large clear type, and as such an adequate supply of books is not at present available, and as the printing of such a supply in any one year would entail too great an expenditure to be considered in the present state of school finances, I shall hereafter require that the cities conducting such classes shall expend each year for such books not less than 15 per cent of the amount received from the state for the instruction of such pupils during the preceding school year until such time as these classes are satisfactorily equipped in this respect.

I beg leave to have your official opinion as to whether such a requirement is within my authority to prescribe in accordance with the provisions of section 7761 and other sections which may bear upon the control and support of these schools."

Section 7761 G. C., as amended in 107 Ohio Laws, 154, reads in part as follows:

"The state superintendent of public instruction shall select some competent person or persons to inspect all such schools for * * * blind * * * established by virtue of this act, and cause inspection to be made at least twice a year or as often as the state superintendent of public instruction may deem necessary concerning the method of instruction * *, the condition under which such schools are maintained * * * and such other matters as may be of interest in the education of such children in such schools; * * *. The state superintendent of public instruction shall prescribe certain standard requirements concerning the conditions under which such school or schools for the blind * * * are conducted, the methods of instruction and supervision * * *. When upon inspection it has been found that the standard requirements theretofore prescribed for the instruction * * * of blind persons have not been complied with by a board of education, the state superintendent of public instruction shall recommend to the auditor of state that the payment to such board of education provided for in section 7757 be withheld, and thereupon the auditor of state shall refuse to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of state for the amount to which such board of education of a school district maintaining a school for the blind would otherwise be entitled."

Section 7755 G. C., as amended in 107 Ohio Laws, p. 153, provides for the application by the board of education to the state superintendent of public instruction on the question of establishing a school for the education of the blind, and before such school can be established by the board of education the state superintendent of public instruction shall grant permission to do so.

Section 7756 G. C. provides that each and every one of such blind schools established in the public schools shall report annually to the state superintendent of public instruction and must furnish any additional facts oftener than annually if the state superintendent of public instruction makes a request for such facts.

Section 7757 provides that at the close of each school year the board of education which has conducted the school for the blind shall certify to the auditor of state the number of persons given instruction and thereupon the auditor of state shall draw his warrant upon the treasurer of state in favor of such board of education, payable out of the general state fund in an amount equal to two hundred and fifty dollars for each pupil.

Section 7758 provides that the state superintendent of public instruction shall certify that the inspection provided for in section 7761 "had shown these schools to be operating under satisfactory conditions," and taken in conjunction with section 7761 G. C., supra, it is clear that the state superintendent of public instruction has the authority to say whether a school for the blind is entitled to such two hundred and fifty dollars from the state for each pupil, following the inspection which his department must make as provided by the statute.

The clear intent of the act of March 19, 1917, in which the above amended sections appear, was that the payment to be made by the state auditor must first have the approval of the superintendent of public instruction, and unless such latter official recommended the payment, the same could not be made as indicated in section 7761. The latter section places the methods of instruction, the methods of supervision, the conditions under which such schools are maintained, and "such other matters as may be of interest in the education of such children," in the hands of the superintendent of public instruction, and it is for that official to say whether the funds received from the state are being wisely expended, because he must certify that they are or are not, whether the methods of instruction are up-to-date and the best that can be secured, and if it is his view, after a careful inspection, that an adequate supply of proper equipment for latest methods of instruction, including text books and supplementary reading material, in large clear type for the sight-saving classes, is necessary and that the best interests of the state will be served by having a supply secured at one time for all such schools in order to save expense, he has authority to do so. An expenditure of fifteen per cent of the amount received from the state for proper text books selected by the state superintendent of public instruction is not unreasonable, and such official has authority, under section 7761 G. C., to direct boards of education maintaining schools for the blind, to purchase such equipment as he indicates as being necessary in "proper methods of instruction" for the blind, or the near blind.

Section 7760 G .C. (107 Ohio Laws, 154) provides that for the purposes of the act relative to the education of the blind, persons of defective vision shall come within the scope of such law. Your question seemingly is upon the proper methods of instruction of those of defective vision, but who are not totally blind; that is, who may be called semi-sighted, and for the proper education of whom arrangements have been made by the establishment of what is known as "Sight-saving Classes." It is found that sight-saving classes are now maintained by the school authorities of progressive cities for the special training of those whose sight is radically imperfect, but who are not blind. It has been found that standard methods of class room study in the public schools are unsuited to the child with very defective sight. He cannot be taught with his clear-visioned companions, and the methods used with the blind will not do for him; he needs to be trained by special methods in a class by himself. The semi-sighted child is necessarily always behind his fellow students, when these have good eyes; he becomes discouraged and often careless and shiftless, an attitude that handicaps his whole industrial life. In order that such children may be properly educated and their sight conserved as much as possible, it has been found that they should have at their disposal and for their use a special equipment; that is, books printed in large type but possibly containing the same matter that their other pupils use, printed in the ordinary standard book print type. Seemingly, no effort should be lost to place at the hands of these future citizens, handicapped as they are by defective vision, every possible chance for learning as much as possible while in school and encourage them to stay in school as long as possible before abandoning their education. So whatever may be established as the latest and best method of instruction for these pupils, who are not blind and thus have no occasion for using what is known as the raised print that is read by the sense of touch, should certainly be adopted and encouraged in schools of this kind.

No hard and fast line can be drawn between the sighted and semi-sighted on the one hand and the semi-sighted and the blind on the other. For purposes of classification, defective sight has been defined as "vision not more than one-third nor less than one-tenth with the best glasses obtainable."

Children suffering from ocular defects of this sort have, of course, always been enrolled in every large school system. Prior to the period of medical inspection, the reason for the backwardness of any given child did not always appear. All that the teacher and parent knew was that the youngster did not get along well. Even if the defect were discovered, the teacher and parent were helpless. The former had no right to exclude such a child from classes, and often tried hard to fit the child into the usual educational groove—a process which was no more successful than the attempt to fit a square block into a round hole. At the end of the term the discouraged teacher had no recourse but to demote the discouraged pupil. The following year the same weary and futile process was repeated. Of course, this sort of thing could not keep up indefinitely and the problem solved itself (if solution it can be called) by the child leaving the school long before completion of the grammar-school grades.

When systematic medical inspection began to be the rule in schools in the larger cities, more and more of these cases came to light and the problem began to assume definite shape in the minds of educators. It having been determined that these children could not be educated in the ordinary schools, it was thought that provision might be made for them in schools for the blind. It was assumed (erroneously, as experience proved), that the partial-sighted child was to all intents and purposes a blind child, and that the educational methods appropriate for the latter would prove equally effective for the former. The child's vision may be seriously defective, and yet he sees after a fashion. He is bound to rebel at any effort to fit him into any educational system designed for the sightless. It has been found impracticable to teach the raised types of the blind to partial-sighted children; the laborious process of determining the individual letter by the sense of touch is soon abandoned, and these children are found straining their eyes in an effort to see the arrangement of the raised dots. Thus is promoted the very thing which should be avoided, namely, overstrains of the eyes.

The semi-sighted child is discouraged with always being behind his fellow students and develops a consequent carelessness, shiftlessness, and lack of confidence. Later his lack of the fundamentals of education must inevitably handicap his industrial life. Almost always there is the same tale—early abandonment of school because the work could not be done.

The cost of special education varies with location, equipment, etc. It is the highest of any special educational work done in the public schools, but considerably less than the cost of education in institutions for the blind. This cost can be further reduced by placing such children as far as possible in classes with seeing children, which has the additional advantage of accustoming them to a normal school environment in competition with those with whom they will be thrown in later life. The whole aims to minimize eye-strain during school life, to train the semi-sighted child to conserve his own vision, and to give such vocational training as will enable him to become self-supporting.

Your question is whether the superintendent of public instruction can require boards of education to make use of part of their subsidy from the state, which they receive upon the approval of the state superintendent of public instruction, to pay for the installation of certain equipment which in his opinion is necessary as one of the proper methods of teaching provided for under his supervision by section 7761 G. C.

Section 7761 G. C. clearly provides that the superintendent of public instruction shall prescribe certain standard requirements concerning the methods of instruc- tion in schools for the blind and those of defective vision, and he has as much authority to require that printed books with large type for the use of those of semi-vision be placed in the schools as proper equipment as he has to require that books with raised print for the use of the fingers shall be placed therein. From the argument heretofore given it would seem that the child with partial vision should not be compelled to use the standard text books used by other pupils whose vision is clear; again, he should not be required to use the touch system on raised print when he is not totally blind. Recent investigation has established that these children will be better served from an educational standpoint in every way if boards of education will place at their disposal and for their use the books of instruction printed in a size of type which the child with limited vision can see, and would not have to further strain their eyes in attempting to read standard book print in text books, or, on the other hand, be forced to use the touch system, against which they might rebel because they did not care to be called totally blind.

Investigation shows that the state of Ohio leads in the maintenance of these sight-saving classes for children of limited vision, and that the great states of Massachusetts and New York are following the lead of this state, which has been the pioneer in having this special equipment of books of large type printing for the use of those of semi-vision, whose sight it is desired to conserve. No stone should be left unturned to give to those who have partial sight and those who are deaf and those who are crippled the best possible education in order that they may become independent in after life, and not wards of the state.

The very purpose of the sections heretofore quoted seems to be that the superintendent of public instruction should have charge of the methods of instruction in all schools for the blind which receive the state subsidy of two hundred and fifty dollars for each pupil, heretofore mentioned. It would seem that no one could question the value of the equipment of books of large print being installed in schools for the blind, and section 7761 G. C. clearly provides that the superintendent of public instruction shall prescribe the requirements necessary in these schools in order to receive the state aid, and that he shall inspect them through proper channels as to whether proper methods of instruction are being used.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that

(1) Under section 7761 G. C. the state superintendent of public instruction has full authority to prescribe standard requirements as to the methods of instruction in those schools which receive state aid for the instruction of the blind, and can direct that boards of education maintaining such schools for persons of defective vision shall provide such equipment as is necessary, including text books printed in large type for the use of pupils who are partially blind.

(2) Boards of education maintaining classes for the blind, in order to receive the state aid mentioned in section 7757 G. C., must comply with the requirements promulgated by the superintendent of public instruction made under authority of section 7761 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAXES—NO STATUTORY AUTHORITY FOR REFUNDER OF EXCESSIVE PAYMENTS.

There is no statutory authority for the refunder of excessive payments of collateral inheritance taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1919.

HON. WALTER W. BECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 26th you submit an inquiry addressed to you by the auditor of Columbiana county, in which he states that the administrator of a certain estate paid collateral inheritance taxes in the year 1918 on account of certain successions to the estate of which he was administrator; that these payments are now alleged to have been erroneous and excessive in amount because of the failure of the administrator and the collecting authorities to deduct the five hundred dollar exemption provided by the former collateral inheritance tax law from the share of each successor. The administrator now asks a refunder of the amount so excessively paid, and you request the opinion of this department as to whether or not such a refunder can be made.

The contention that the payment was excessive is, on the facts stated, correct as each succession was entitled to a separate exemption. It does not, however, follow that the administrator has an immediate and available right to secure a refunder. Waiving the question of voluntary payment induced by the negligence of the administrator himself or his mistake of law, as the case may be (or the payment may have been in truth involuntary, as no facts are shown on this point), it is nevertheless true that the collateral inheritance tax law provided no machinery for refunding excessive payments from the public treasury. Quotation of the collateral inheritance tax law will be unnecessary to show this fact. Not only is there no provision for such a refunder, but if there were such a provision it would have to go to the extent of distributing the refunder as between the state and the local subdivision entitled to share in the proceeds of the payment.

Other tax laws do provide for refunders. For example, property taxes erroneously collected may, under proper circumstances, be refunded by order of the county commissioners (sections 2589 and 2590 of the General Code). It is true that these sections standing by themselves might possibly be interpreted broadly enough to authorize the refunder which is now claimed, in that inheritance taxes were in theory collected on duplicates (See section 2641 of the General Code). The inheritance tax duplicate was, however, a special duplicate as distinguished from the tax list and duplicate of taxable property which was frequently designated as the "general duplicate." It is clear that sections 2589 and 2590 referred only to the general duplicate; for they were originally a part of section 1038 of the Revised Statutes, which also provided what is now found in section 2588 of the General Code. The first sentence of that section is as follows:

> "From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment."

Section 2589 then begins as follows:

> "After having delivered the duplicate to the county treasurer for collection, if the auditor is satisfied that any tax or assessment thereon * * has been erroneously charged, he may give the person so charged a certificate. * * *"

It goes on to provide that:

"If at any time the auditor discovers that erroneous taxes or assessments have been charged and collected in previous years, he shall call the attention of the county commissioners thereto," etc.

The sentence last quoted must be, I think, interpreted in connection with what precedes. The phrase "erroneous taxes or assessments" therein must refer to taxes and assessments of the kind dealt with previously in the related provisions.

It follows, therefore, that section 2588 et seq. of the General Code are not available in the present instance. As previously stated, other statutory provisions have been made for refunders, as in the case of liquor assessments, for example. These facts are mentioned to bring out the point that there is no single statute of universal application authorizing the refunder of erroneously paid taxes, and that the policy of our legislation has been to make special provision in the case of each tax or kind of tax for such refunder. Section 20-1 of the General Code comes closest to being a law of such universal application. Without quoting that section, however, it may be said that it is limited to taxes paid directly into the state treasury and therefore can have no application to taxes paid to county treasurers.

It follows that whatever may be the merit of the administrator's claim as tested by the character of the payment made by him, there is no administrative machinery which will afford him any relief at the present time. It will be necessary for the administrator to secure relief, if at all, by act of the legislature.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR CLASSIFICATION OF PROPERTY FOR PURPOSE OF TAXATION—QUERY AS TO WHETHER JOURNALS OF BOTH BRANCHES OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OR ENROLLED AND AUTHENTICATED COPY OF JOINT RESOLUTION IS BEST EVIDENCE OF A PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION OF STATE.

1. The amendment to section 2 of Article XII of the state constitution providing for the classification of property for the purposes of taxation, which was proposed by the senate during the present session of the general assembly under authority of section 1 of Article XVI, must be submitted to the electors for their approval or rejection as it appears of record on the legislative journals.

2. The reconvening of the general assembly to take further action with respect to the submission of such proposed amendment to the electors, is unnecessary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 9, 1919.

HON. CLARENCE J. BROWN, Lieutenant Governor and President of the Senate;
HON. CARL R. KIMBALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of a recent communication propounding certain questions relating to a proposed amendment to section 2 of Article XII of the state constitution, reading and signed as follows:

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

General Assembly of Ohio

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 5, 1919.

HON. JOHN G. PRICE, Attorney-General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The undersigned members and officers of the General Assembly constituting a committee authorized by Joint Resolution of the General Assembly to convene the General Assembly during the present recess when occasion may require, respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

Senate Joint Resolution No. 31 entitled 'A Joint Resolution proposing to amend Article 12, Sec. 2 of the Constitution of the State of Ohio, etc.,' was introduced in the Senate and passed by that body; it was amended and passed in the House of Representatives and was then referred to a joint committee of conference. On Friday, April 11, 1919, the joint committee of conference reported back the resolution 'In the form as passed by the Senate' with certain amendments. This report was agreed to by the constitutional majority in both houses on that day.

On the journals of the respective houses in connection with the record of the yeas and nays appear entries of amended Senate Joint Resolution No. 31 in full. These entries agree with each other so far as the phraseology of the proposed amended Sec. 2 of Article 12 of the Constitution is concerned; and both of them are in accord with the resolution as passed by the Senate with the amendments recommended by the committee of conference.

Pursuant to the custom of the houses amended Senate Joint Resolution No. 31 was enrolled after its passage and signed by the presiding officers of the respective houses in the presence thereof while such houses were in session and capable of transacting business. In the enrolled copy, which is on file in the office of the Secretary of State, there is an omission of the words 'public worship, institutions used exclusively for;' found in line 14 of the original resolution and occurring in the repeated portion of Article 12, Section 2 of the Constitution.

Does this omission in the enrolled copy of the Joint Resolution invalidate the proceedings of the General Assembly? Which text, as between that of the enrolled resolution and that of the journals of the House and Senate is to be employed by the Secretary of State in making the publication referred to in Article 16, Sec. 1 of the Constitution and in formulating the ballots for the submission of the proposed amendment to the electors?

In order to procure the proper submission of the proposed amendment in the form in which it actually passed the two houses, will it be necessary to reconvene the General Assembly at this time?

Your early attention to these questions is urgently requested and will be greatly appreciated.

Very respectfully,
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
CARL R. KIMBALL,
RUPERT BENHAM,
F. E. WHITTEMORE,
E. J. HOPPLE."

It appears from the statement of facts contained in the above letter that the joint resolution therein referred to was initiated or proposed by the Senate, and after being duly agreed to was entered on the journals of both branches of the General Assembly; that both journals are in accord as to the terms or contents of the proposed amendment; and that what purports to be, but is not, a true and correct copy of the proposed amendment, was prepared and authenticated by the presiding officers of both houses and filed with the Secretary of State.

The enrolled and authenticated copy, as just indicated, is not identical in contents with, but in one respect is materially different from, the resolution as it was correctly entered and now appears of record on the journals of the two houses, in that the words "public worship, institutions used exclusively for" which appear on the journals, are omitted from the enrolled copy.

Many interesting questions have been, and others might be raised upon the statement of facts referred to, but the facts, when reduced to their last analysis, present but a single controlling question, viz., What is the best evidence of the proposed amendment, the journals, or the enrolled and authenticated copy of the joint resolution?

If the statement of facts involved the contents of a bill, or of a joint resolution other than one whereby the Senate or House had proposed an amendment to the Constitution under Section 1 of Article XVI of the Constitution, the question would be foreclosed by Ritzman vs. Campbell, 93 O. S., 246, which holds that a duly enrolled and authenticated bill, and not the journals, is conclusive upon the courts as to its contents. The expressed underlying reason of the decision on that point was, that the attestation of the presiding officers of the General Assembly is a solemn declaration of a co-ordinate branch of the state government that the bill as enrolled was duly enacted by the legislature.

When there is no positive constitutional or statutory requirement that bills and joint resolutions shall be entered upon the journals no difficulty is encountered in reaching the conclusion arrived at in Ritzman vs. Campbell, supra, that a bill or resolution duly enrolled and authenticated by the presiding officers of both houses, as required by section 17 of Article II, is the exclusive evidence of its contents. See section 69 G. C. showing the legislative policy to be not to allow bills or resolutions, but only amendments thereto, to be entered on the journals.

But that is not the situation we are now considering, for with respect to cases such as the one presented in the statement of facts, there is a constitutional requirement, mandatory in form and effect, that a proposed amendment to the Constitution, when agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to both houses, "shall be entered on the journals." And assuming, but not deciding, that section 17 of Article II applies to such proposal when made in the form of a joint resolution, it by no means follows that an enrolled and authenticated copy thereof is the best or exclusive evidence, or conclusive upon the courts, as to what the proposed amendment really was or is. On the contrary, the only possible effect of an enrollment would be to provide secondary evidence of the contents of the proposed amendment, for use in the event the journals should be lost or destroyed. In such cases the enrolled and authenticated copy might through necessity be looked to and, although secondary in character, be considered prima facie evidence of its contents.

It is my opinion that the doctrine of Ritzman vs. Campbell, supra, can only be applied to the contents of bills and joint resolutions which are not required by the Constitution to be entered on the journals, and not to resolutions which the Constitution expressly and mandatorily requires shall be entered thereon.

Section 9 of Article II of the Constitution which requires that "on the passage of every bill, in either house, the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered upon the journals," was referred to in Ritzman vs. Campbell, supra, and has not been overlooked. With respect to the yeas and nays, it was held that "the legislative journals must provide the appropriate as well as the conclusive evidence" as to the number of votes cast for and against a particular bill. Was it so decided because the Constitution required such entries to be made upon the journal? If so, why not apply the same doctrine to other entries which the Constitution requires shall be made upon the journals?

Coming now to a special consideration of Section 1 of Article XVI, that section, in my opinion, is the sole and exclusive governing provision of the Constitution so far as the question now under consideration is concerned. It should be remembered that the State Constitution was established by the people. It is so declared in the instrument itself.

To secure the blessing of freedom and to promote their common welfare, which were the declared purposes for establishing the Constitution, the people, among other things, provided certain methods for amending the Constitution as occasions might arise, each of which is distinct from and of equal dignity with the others, viz.,

(a) The people may propose amendments to the General Assembly. "The people reserve to themselves the power to propose to the General Assembly * * * amendments to the Constitution, and to adopt or reject the same," etc. (See Article II);

(b) The people may propose amendments independent of the General Assembly. "They also reserve the power * * * independent of the General Assembly to propose amendments to the Constitution and to adopt or reject the same," etc. (See Article II);

(c) Either branch of the General Assembly may propose amendments. This was the method adopted in the present case. See section 1, Article XVI, hereinafter quoted; and

(d) A constitutional convention may be called. See sections 2 and 3, Article XVI.

As just indicated, the proposed amendment now under investigation was initiated or proposed by the Senate under and by virtue of the authority vested in it by the people under section 1, Article XVI of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "Either branch of the General Assembly may propose amendments to this Constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the General Assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the Constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately."

It will be observed that after an amendment has been proposed under the foregoing section by either branch of the General Assembly, and agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house,

> "such proposed amendment shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection," at either a special or general election as the General Assembly may prescribe. In other words, the proposed amendment, and the only one, that must or can be submitted to the electors is the one entered on the journals, and not as it may appear in an enrolled copy of a joint resolution which purports to, but does not, correctly set forth its contents.

The clear, special, mandatory requirement of section 1 of Article XVI should not and cannot be explained away, nor disregarded by invoking rules, whether constitutional or otherwise, which are intended only as general rules to be applied in cases where the Constitution has not prescribed a special rule on the subject. As before stated, and which cannot be too often repeated, section 1, Article XVI has prescribed a special mandatory rule with respect to constitutional amendments proposed by either branch of the General Assembly, by requiring that the proposed amendment shall be entered on the journals of both houses, and has thereby provided the primary and best evidence of its contents. Is not such record a solemn declaration that the proposed amendment as so recorded is the one that was agreed to by the members elected to both houses, and the one that must be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection?

It may be suggested or contended that there is no provision for giving notice to the Secretary of State as to the contents of the proposed amendment as entered upon the journals, unless it be through an enrolled copy of the joint resolution, but that fact, even if true, cannot be allowed to render ineffective or inoperative the requirement of Article XVI that the proposed amendment as entered upon the journals shall be submitted to the electors. But since under section 9 of Article II and section 68 G. C. each house is required to keep a journal of its proceedings, and under section 1 of Article XVI the proposed amendment must be entered on the journals, and these recorded journals are required by section 68 G. C. to be deposited with the Secretary of State, and further by reason of the presumption that public officers will properly discharge the duties of their respective offices, it is not apprehended that the Secretary of State, with the means of knowledge so peculiarly within his power, will find it difficult to submit the proposed amendment in the form in which it appears on the journals. When it is considered, and it is a matter of common knowledge, that the officers of the General Assembly and the executive officers of the state, including the Secretary of State, and also many other interested persons, have ascertained and publicly announced through the press and otherwise that a material discrepancy exists between the journals on the one hand and the enrolled copy on the other, all apprehension as to the ability of the Secretary of State to submit the real proposed amendment disappears.

It may be pertinently said that the Constitution does not require that either the Senate or the House, when proposing an amendment to the Constitution under section 1 of Article XVI, shall make the proposal in any particular form. The form would appear to be immaterial. The important facts to be ascertained are whether either branch of the General Assembly has proposed an amendment to the Constitution which has been agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, and if so, what the proposed amendment really is. And, as before stated, the journals are the best evidence of their existence.

The existence of the foregoing facts being found on the journals, the question arises as to the form in which the proposed amendment should be submitted to the electors—whether as it appears on the journals, or as set out in an enrolled copy of the joint resolution by which the proposal was made? Surely the answer must be, in the form "entered on the journals," and not as it appears in an enrolled copy of the joint resolution which, perchance, as was true in this case, might not be the amendment that was actually proposed and agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to both houses. This must be true, because there would be no authority to submit to the electors an amendment which had not been proposed and agreed to, and entered on the journals, as required by section 1, of Article XVI, excepting only amendments proposed under Article II or by a constitutional convention.

While it must be conceded, as held in Ritzman vs. Campbell, supra, that a duly enrolled and authenticated copy of a bill, or of a joint resolution, which is not required by law to be entered at length upon the journals of both houses, is conclusive upon the courts as to its contents, yet, with respect to a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution under section 1, Article XVI, which, to use the exact words of the Constitution, "shall be entered on the journals, * * and shall be submitted to the electors," the conclusion cannot be escaped that the journals, except when lost or destroyed, are the best and exclusive evidence of the proposed amendment and conclusive as to its contents.

In the foregoing opinion effect has been given, within their respective legitimate spheres, to the several constitutional provisions relating to the journals and the authentication of joint resolutions, and to the decision in Ritzman vs. Campbell, supra, as well as to the intention of the people as solemnly expressed in section 1 of Article XVI.

In reaching the foregoing conclusion, it was not found necessary to specially emphasize the settled rule of statutory and constitutional construction, that where general provisions are found in one part of a statute or constitution which are inconsistent with specific and particular provisions in another part, the latter will govern as being the clearer and more definite expressions of the will of the people, nor the rules that the last expression in point of time is the law, and that where two or more provisions are adopted at the same time the last in order of arrangement should prevail. See, generally, 8 Cyc., 720; 36 Cyc., 1130; Gas Co. vs. Tiffin, 59 O. S. 420, 441; Doll vs. Barr, 58 O. S. 113, 120.

You are therefore advised that the proposed amendment as entered on the journals of both houses is the one that must be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection, and that it will not be necessary to reconvene the General Assembly to take any further action with respect to such submission.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—PROCEEDINGS FOR VACATION OF STREET IN AN UNINCORPORATED VILLAGE—SECTION 6860 G. C. ET SEQ. APPLICABLE—EXCEPTION INTERCOUNTY OR MAIN MARKET ROAD.

Proceedings for the vacation of a street, road or highway in an unincorporated village may be had in accordance with sections 6860 G. C. et seq., unless such street, road or highway be part of an intercounty or main market road.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1919.

HON. HAVETH E. MAU, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of letter from your office signed by Mr. William K. Marshall, assistant prosecuting attorney, reading as follows:

> "The following is a copy of a letter which I have received from the commissioners of this county:
> 'August 14, 1919.
> MR. WM. K. MARSHALL, Assistant Prosecuting Atty., Montgomery County, Ohio.
> DEAR SIR:—We have a petition filed with this board for the vacation of Constance Ave. in Carrmonte, which, is a street on the plat and not a located township or county road.
>
> Have the Board of County Commissioners authority to vacate a street that is not dedicated to the public?
> The board does not infer from the law that they have the authority to vacate such street under present laws.

We would suggest that you present the question to the Attorney-General for an opinion.

Very truly yours,
MONTGOMERY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.'

This matter is pending before the Commissioners on an application to vacate the street in question, and the view has been had and an advertisement made. The present County Commissioners retire from office next month, and if this matter is not decided by that time, it will necessitate another view and advertisement. I would therefore appreciate it if you could give this matter prompt attention.

I might state for your information, that I understand, that this plat was placed of record before the law required plats to be approved by the County Commissioners; that the land is within three miles of the corporate limits of the city of Dayton, and that the plat was submitted to the plat commission of that city and approved by it."

In response to requests for additional information, the following data has been furnished in subsequent correspondence and in a personal interview with Mr. Marshall:

"The plat of which this street is a part is dated April 28, 1903, is properly witnessed and acknowledged, and the plat was recorded on May 4, 1903. In the acknowledgment the owner 'dedicates to public use forever the streets and alleys as laid out and designated therein.'

The plat of record bears the certification of the surveyor who made it, and indicates a placing of corner stones. It also shows markings of distances, width of streets, size of lots, etc.

My information is that the portion of this street sought to be vacated has never been made or used by the public as a street. The plat is not within the limits of a municipal corporation but is within three miles of the corporate limits of the city of Dayton, and it would come under section 4346 which was passed, however, subsequent to the recording of this plat.

The petition to vacate the portion of this street was filed under sections 6860 and 6862; the latter of which was amended in 107 Ohio Laws, page 71. Those who are opposed to the vacation insist that the county commissioners have no authority to vacate the portion of this street, but that the same must be done either under section 3600 or 3595."

The pertinent statutes in force at the time of the making and recording of the plat in question, in April and May of 1903, were section 2597 et seq., designated in Bates' Fourth Edition as sections 1536-62 et seq., part of which series is here quoted:

"Sec. 1536-62. When any person wishes to lay out a hamlet or village, or subdivision or addition to any municipal corporation, he shall cause it to be surveyed, and a plat or map of it made by a competent surveyor; in which plat or map shall be particularly described and set forth the streets, alleys, commons, or public grounds, and all in-lots and out-lots and fractional lots within or adjacent to such hamlet or village, the description to include the courses, boundaries and extent."

"Sec. 1536-63. All the in-lots intended for sale shall be numbered in progressive numbers, or by the squares in which they are situated, and their precise length and width shall be stated on such plat or map; and all out-lots which do not exceed ten acres in size, shall in like manner be surveyed and numbered, and their precise length and width stated on the plat or map, together with any streets, alleys, or roads which divide or border on the same."

"Sec. 1536-64. The proprietor of the hamlet or village, at the time of surveying and laying it out, shall plant and fix, at the corner of the public ground, or a public lot, if any there be, and if there be none, then at the corner of one of the in-lots, and at the corner of each out-lot, a good and sufficient stone, of such size and dimensions, and in such manner, as the surveyor shall direct, for a corner from which to make future surveys; and the point or points where the same may be found shall be designated on the plat or map."

"Sec. 1536-65. After the plat or map is completed, it shall be certified by the surveyor, and acknowledged by the owner or owners before some officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, who shall certify his official act on the plat or map; and if any owner is a nonresident of the state, his agent, authorized by writing, may make such acknowledgment; and such plat or map, and if the execution is by agent, his written authority, shall thereupon be recorded in the office of the county recorder."

"Sec. 1536-69. The plats or maps, other than those mentioned in section two thousand six hundred and one, shall be deemed in law a sufficient conveyance to vest the fee simple of all such parcels of land as are therein expressed, named, or intended for public use, in the county in which the hamlet or village is situated, for the uses and purposes therein named, expressed or intended, and for no other use or purpose whatever."

The expression in the last quoted section "other than those mentioned in section 2601" has reference to section 1536-66 as the statute numbering was given in Bates' Fourth Edition; and said section 1536-66 related solely to plats of lands within municipal corporations and provided, among other things, that the recording of a plat should have the effect of vesting in the municipal corporation title in trust to the streets, alleys, etc., for the uses and purposes set forth on the plat.

A mere reading of section 1536-62 indicates plainly that the words "hamlet or village" as used in said section, refer to subdivisions of lands outside of municipal corporations; for in contrast to the words "hamlet or village" the section itself contains the words "subdivision or addition to any municipal corporation." This meaning becomes even clearer when sections 1536-66 and 1536-69 are taken into consideration; for as above stated, section 1536-66 provided for the vesting of title to streets, alleys, etc., in the municipal corporation wherein was situated the land shown on the plat, leaving the meaning above stated as the only one which may be given the words "hamlet or village" as used in section 1536-62, when said section is read with section 1536-69, providing for the vesting in the county in which the hamlet or village is situated, of title in trust to all parcels of land shown on the plat as being intended for public use.

The earlier form of the sections above mentioned is found in Swan & Critchfield's Statutes (1860), Vol. 2, p. 1482, in a chapter entitled "Town Plats," and in that form the word "town" was used where the words "hamlet or village" later appeared, while the words "city or town corporate" were employed in lieu of the words "municipal corporation" as later adopted. The word "town" as used in the earlier form was construed in Walworth vs. Village of Collinwood, 8 O. C. C. 477; 4 O. C. D. 503, to refer to a subdivision outside of a municipal corporation.

The sections above referred to are still in force, with minor changes, and are now known as sections 3580 et seq. G. C., and while both in 1903 and at the present time they appeared as part of the municipal code, it is evident from the above observations that they make provision for the platting of lands without, as well as for those within, municipal corporations.

The data submitted in connection with your inquiry indicates that the statutory provisions applicable at the time, were fully complied with in the matter of the execution and recording of the plat now in question. Under such circumstances, the further fact that the street sought to be vacated may never have been used as such since its dedication in 1903, becomes immaterial to the consideration of your inquiry. In Village of Fulton vs. Mehrenfeld, 8 O. S. 440, the court say at page 446:

> "The importance of the distinction between dedications under the statute and at common law is obvious. Under the law then in force, upon the acknowledgment and record of the plat, the fee of the streets and public grounds therein specified, eo instanti, became and was vested in the public for the uses declared, without any act indicating an acceptance on the part of the public; while a dedication at common law only becomes operative upon its acceptance by the public."

In the case of Walworth vs. Collinwood, supra, the facts as stated by the court were:

> "In this case a plat was made by Coe, Gilbert & Shipherd, of certain lands divided into forty or fifty lots in the township of East Cleveland, now within the limits of the village of Collinwood. It was recorded on the 26th of February, 1872. It contained certain streets, and among them Beech street, running to Lake Erie. Beech street was unimproved, and for a short time inclosed, until a little short of twenty-one years. The incorporation of the village of Collinwood took place in 1883. In 1892 the village undertook, in pursuance of an ordinance, to improve the street. On the 13th day of September, 1892, John Walworth, the owner of a lot that adjoined that street, brought a suit for an injunction. He had become the owner of the lot by a title which in its terms conveyed the lot by number, bounding it by the middle of the street, and naming Beech street as a street."

In the course of its opinion, refusing the injunction asked for, the court say at page 479:

> "The act of 1853, sec. 29 (2 S. & C., p. 1296), now section 4668, provides that unless a county road shall be improved within seven years, it shall revert. Although the fee of this land vested in the county, it was not such a county road as is provided for in section 29, made such by virtue of proper proceedings under the act of which that was a part (2 S. & C. p. 1289), so that neither of these provisions apply to this case. There may be a fair ground for legislative distinction in this, that both the state and county roads were established in invitum by judicial proceedings, while in such a case as this the owner expressly, himself, and of his own free will, grants the land in fee to the county for the purposes named.
> Now, what is the statute of limitations? We know of no other limitation than that provided in the general statute of twenty-one years, and that statute of limitations does not apply. The twenty-one years had not run. * * *"

It is to be noted that the provisions of said former section 4668 R. S., as to vacation of a county road, are still in force (see last sentence of section 6869 G. C.); but such provisions are inapplicable in the present instance, not only for the reasons given by the court in the case just cited, but also for the further reason that by subsequent legislative enactment, as will hereinafter appear, the street now in question is to be classified as a township road.

In the recent case of Beard vs. Beatty, 21 O. C. C. (n. s.) 522; 3 Ohio App. 354, the Court of Appeals of Butler county held in effect that not even the twenty-one year statute would operate to bar the rights of the public in a regularly dedicated street outside of a municipality. The following paragraphs are quoted from the opinion in that case:

> "This is an action brought by plaintiffs as trustees of Lemon township, Butler county, Ohio, alleging that as such trustees they have charge of all public highways within their township that are not county roads; and that as such all highways in unincorporated villages and hamlets are public highways under their control. They seek to enjoin the defendant from obstructing an alley adjoining her premises on the south and west, claiming that she has maintained an obstruction thereon in the way of a stable, barn and other buildings.
> The evidence shows, without question, that this alley was regularly dedicated and became a public alley and the title thereto was vested in fee in the county under the terms of section 8 of the act of March 3, 1831 (29 O. L., 350); afterward found in section 2604, Revised Statutes, and 1536-69 Bates' Revised Statutes; and now in section 3589, General Code.
> Defendant, however, claims to have acquired title by prescription, by virtue of the terms of section 11220, General Code, and has submitted evidence tending to show that this alley was enclosed along with the lots in such a manner as to exclude the public for more than twenty-one years, and to come directly within the terms of the statute above mentioned.* *
> In our opinion, the evidence does not bring the claim of the defendant within the terms of section 11220, G. C., but this section, however, applies only to streets or alleys within a municipality. We know of no case in Ohio where the statute of limitations has been enforced against the state or any of its subdivisions other than a municipality."

These authorities, together with the fact that at the time of the making and recording of the plat in question, there was not in effect any statute requiring an acceptance by any public authority of plats of lands outside of municipalities, seem clearly to warrant the conclusion that the right of the public to the use of the street now under discussion is at this time wholly unimpaired.

We are thus brought directly to your inquiry. Section 6860 provides:

> "The county commissioners shall have power to locate, establish, alter, widen, straighten, vacate or change the direction of roads as hereinafter provided. This power extends to all roads within the county, except the intercounty and main market roads."

Related sections 6861 to 6869 provide for filing of application to vacate; fixing by the county commissioners of a time for view and hearing; notice of hearing; order of vacation, etc.

Section 7464, relating to classification of the public highways of the state, after reciting in substance that state roads include those constructed or taken over by the state, and that county roads include those improved by the county and not taken over by the state, as well as those improved by township trustees up to a given standard, contains this provision:

> "Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined.* * * *"

It thus appears that the street now in question is to be considered a township road. From this it follows that the provisions of sections 6860 et seq. as to vacation are applicable. Said section 6860 was enacted as a part of the so-called Cass Highway act, and by the terms of the same act the provisions of section 6972 for vacation of roads by township trustees were repealed. Such repeal gives added force to the words of section 6860 "this power extends to all roads within the county, except the intercounty and main market roads." Of course, it might be urged that the word "road" as ordinarily used in our Ohio statutes, relates to public ways in rural sections, while the word street is used with reference to public ways in municipal corporations and in unincorporated villages or towns. However, no hard and fast rule obtains in Ohio in this connection; and the context must be considered in arriving at the meaning of either word when used in the statutes. It will be noted that section 7464 in defining township roads, makes use of the words "all public highways;" and of course this latter expression is broad enough to include both street and road as those terms are ordinarily understood.

The data submitted indicates that it is being claimed that the proceeding for vacation should be had under the provisions of section 3600 or 3595. However, an examination of those sections shows that section 3600 relates to a change in plats of lands outside of municipal corporations, and not to the vacation of a street; while section 3595 is part of a series making provision for the altering or vacating of a plat upon application to the common pleas court. For these reasons it is not perceived how either of the two sections is in point in the present instance.

You are therefore advised that proceedings for the vacation of the street in question may be had in accordance with sections 6860 et seq. G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR INCREASE OF SALARIES IN WATERWORKS DEPARTMENT OF CITY—WHEN SUCH ORDINANCE IS LEGALLY AN EMERGENCY MEASURE—EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY.

An ordinance providing for increase of salaries in the waterworks department may be legally enacted as an emergency measure to go into immediate effect, when an emergency demanding such action is found to exist.

Such an emergency ordinance goes into immediate effect, and is not postponed pending the lapse of ten days from its first publication.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication requesting my opinion as follows:

"We are today in receipt of the following communication from the city auditor of Lima, Ohio:

'Lima, Ohio, August 6, 1919.
File Waterworks Salaries.

Mr. Moses Blau, Municipal Supervisor, Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

Dear Sir:—

RE: Salary ordinance containing emergency clause.

Kindly note attached copy of ordinance No. 744, covering increases of from twenty to forty per cent passed August 4, 1919, containing emergency clause, making same effective immediately upon its approval by the mayor.

Kindly advise in this respect.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) David L. Rupert,
City Auditor.'

and we are enclosing you copy of ordinance No. 744.

We are fully conversant with the Opinions of the Attorney-General which may be found on pages 1557 and 1629 of the Annual Reports for 1912, but since the date of these opinions, section 4227-2 has been modified. We, therefore, respectfully request your written opinion on the following matter:

Question: May ordinances increasing salaries and compensation legally be declared emergency ordinances by council to go into immediate effect?"

With your communication you also furnish a copy of ordinance No. 744 referred to in the letter of the city auditor of Lima, which purports to amend certain sections of the ordinances of said city relating to salaries, and which amendment I am advised provides for increases in salaries in the waterworks department. Said amendment having been passed August 4, 1919, as an emergency measure, the last section thereof declaring the emergency to consist in the necessity for the ordinance to become effective at once

"in order to enable the waterworks department to provide employes to conduct and operate the waterworks system and thereby preserve the health and safety of said city and its inhabitants."

Proceeding then to a consideration of the specific question, i. e.,

"May ordinances increasing salaries and compensation legally be declared emergency ordinances by council to go into immediate effect?"

I advise that the provisions of section 4227-3, in my opinion, determine the question in the affirmative.

While it is provided in section 4227-2 that,

"Any ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of such municipal corporation, except as hereinafter provided," yet it is expressly provided in section 4227-3 that certain ordinances shall go into immediate effect, as follows:

> "Ordinances or other measures providing for appropriations for the current expenses of any municipal corporation, or for street improvements petitioned for by the owners of a majority of the feet front of the property benefited and to be especially assessed for the cost thereof as provided by statute, and emergency ordinances or measures necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety in such municipal corporation, shall go into immediate effect."

It is then further provided that such emergency ordinances must receive a two-thirds vote of all members of council, and the reasons for the necessity that the ordinance go into immediate effect shall be set forth in one section thereof.

These provisions are found in the sections of the law which provide for the application of what is known as the initiative and referendum to the legislative acts of the municipal corporation, and while, subject to the exceptions provided in the act all ordinances are subject to the referendum, yet by the specific enumeration contained in section 4227-3, the conclusion must follow that the classes of ordinances there enumerated are withdrawn and excepted entirely from the referendum, and as stated, shall go into "immediate effect."

While you do not especially inquire as to the effect upon emergency ordinances of the provision of section 4227 that "no ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice," yet, in a communication addressed to me by the city auditor, I observe that a question is in fact made as to the specific time when the emergency ordinance becomes effective, and I am therefore considering that question, which in fact may properly be regarded as involved in your question as to such ordinance going into "immediate effect."

The provision of section 4227 provides for the authentication and publication of ordinances, and then provides for deferring the effectiveness of the ordinance until ten days after the first publication thereof.

I am of the opinion that this latter provision for deferring the effectiveness of the ordinance until the expiration of ten days from the first publication is in conflict with the provisions of section 4227-3 supra, to the effect that the ordinances there enumerated "shall go into immediate effect," and the latter provision being subsequently enacted, and being of special application to enumerated ordinances, I hold that it supersedes the ten day provision of section 4227.

It might be noted that it is provided in section 4227-2 as follows:

> "Nothing in this act shall prevent a municipality after the passage of any ordinance or resolution from proceeding at once, to give any notice, or make any publication, required by such ordinance or resolution," which provision no doubt is primarily applicable to ordinances subject to referendum, but may be regarded as evidencing the legislative policy to separate in their application the provisions relative to publication, etc., from the provisions dealing especially with the application of the referendum.

The holdings of my predecessor to which you refer, are in no sense applicable to the present state of the law, inasmuch as the amendment of the sections in question has so changed their provisions that those which were determinative in the conclusions reached by my predecessor are now supplanted by provisions of entirely different purport.

Under the original provisions of the enactment ordinances involving expenditures of money were excluded entirely from the application of the provision for the passage of emergency measures, so that this fact alone was decisive, while in its present form the statute authorizes any measure necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety to be enacted as an emergency measure.

In answer to the question,

"Do ordinances involving emergency measures require publication?"

my predecessor in Opinion No. 38, found at page 1557 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for the year 1912, said:

> "I am inclined to the opinion that such word 'immediately' is used in contradistinction to the provision that ordinances shall remain inoperative for sixty days after passage, and that, therefore, they should be published in the same manner as has been done prior to the passage of the initiative and referendum act. * * * The object of publication is to advise the electors of the municipality of ordinances and resolutions passed by council, and should an emergency ordinance of a general nature or providing for improvement, wherever it is of that nature, be passed, the publication thereof would, in many instances, be the only knowledge that the electors could have that such ordinance had been passed.
> Therefore, I am of the opinion that any ordinance of a general nature or providing for improvement, passed as an emergency ordinance, would require publication."

While I do not interpret the observations of my predecessor as referring primarily to the time when emergency ordinances shall go into effect, but more particularly determining that they shall be published in accordance with the general provision, it is my opinion that the exigencies involved in an emergency are such as to indicate the legislative purpose in the provision for emergency legislation, and having employed the express stipulation that emergency measures shall go into immediate effect, the enactment must be construed with a view to effectuating its evident purpose, and to give the provision for publication before the act becomes effective application to emergency measures, would be in contravention of the very spirit and purpose of the latter provision.

The basic policy involved in the provision for ten day publication before an ordinance becomes effective is repugnant to that involved in the provision for legislation becoming effective immediately to meet an emergency. It is to be presumed that the provision for emergency legislation will only be employed where the basic facts sustain and demand its application, and in that event the fact of the existence of an emergency calling for immediate remedy at once suggests repugnancy to the policy of postponement of its effectiveness pending publication, and therefore the policy to appropriately provide for such an emergency has been aptly expressed in the language that the same shall go into "immediate effect," and therefore I hold that such legislation is not held in abeyance pending the lapse of ten days from the first publication thereof, but becomes effective immediately upon its passage.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have requested my opinion as to the proper construction of section 3001 as amended by Senate Bill No. 100 (108 O. L. 926), passed June 19, 1919, and fixing the compensation of county commissioners. Its language is:

> "Sec. 3001. The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:
> In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1909, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be seven hundred and fifty dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent.

of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911.

Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 3001 had theretofore provided in part:

"Sec. 3001. The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:

In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1911, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be nine hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911. * * * Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner and shall not in any case exceed four thousand dollars per annum. Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Prior to the enactment of the section in that form in June, 1911, a statute passed in 1904 (97 O. L. 254) had been in force. It read:

"Sec. 897. The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:

In each county, in which on the twentieth day of December of the preceding year the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, the compensation shall be seven hundred and fifty dollars ($750.00), and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than $5,000,000.00, three dollars on each full $100,000.00 of the amount of such duplicate in excess of said sum of $5,000,000.00. But in counties where ditch work is carried on by the commissioners, in addition to the salary hereinbefore provided, each county commissioner shall receive three dollars per day for the time they are actually employed in ditch work, the total amount so received for such ditch work not to exceed the sum of three hundred dollars in any one year.

The compensation herein provided shall be paid in equal monthly installments out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor.

Section 2. The compensation provided in the preceding section shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner. But such total compensation shall not exceed the sum of $3,500.00 per annum."

The enactment of the Smith law resulted in a large increase in the duplicates in the various counties in December, 1911, which the legislature anticipated in June of that year when it passed amended section 3001. The latter made December 20, 1911, the date to be taken for the computation on the duplicate; increased the compensation in counties having a duplicate of five million dollars or less from $750 to $900; added the provision that the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912 and each year thereafter should not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid for the year 1911; and raised the maximum provided from $3,500 to $4,000 per year.

Senate Bill No. 100 now makes the duplicate for December, 1909, instead of for December, 1911, the basis of calculation, repeals the limitation of $4,000 and declares that the official year ending on the third Monday in September, 1911, shall be the basis of calculation.

With this preliminary statement of the history of the legislation in question, I shall give you my conclusions as to the meaning of section 3001 as it now stands.

Those to whom its provisions are applicable may be divided into three classes, the first of which includes commissioners in counties where the tax duplicate for 1909 did not exceed $5,000,000. As to these, the law is clear. Their compensation is fixed at $750.

In the second class are commissioners of counties whose tax duplicates exceeded $5,000,000 in 1909, but in which the maximum allowance of $3,500 or $4,000 had not been reached. Their compensation is to be determined in the following manner: To $750 add $3 for each full $100,000 that the amount of the duplicate in the county in question in December, 1909, exceeds $5,000,000; then take the amount paid to the commissioners of such county for the official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911, multiply it by 1.15 and compare the results obtained by the two calculations. The lesser sum is the amount of the officers' compensation.

While as I have stated, the law was amended in June, 1911, the new provisions could not affect the salaries of commissioners then in office, but as to them remained in abeyance until the beginning of the next term, in September, 1912. Ohio Constitution, Art. II, Sec. 20; State ex rel. vs. Raine, Auditor, 49 O. S. 580; State ex rel. vs. Lewis, 15 N. P. (n. s.) 582.

The serious question arises in the interpretation of the expression "the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911." Does it mean the salary of the officer prior to the act of June, 1911, the amount provided by that act, or an amount obtained by taking one rate of compensation up to June, 1911, and the other from June to September?

The same query is met in the application of the new act to the compensation of commissioners in counties where the maximum of $3,500 was drawn in 1911. As I have already stated, the maximum for the year ending September, 1911, was increased in June of that year from $3,500 to $4,000. We are to take the 115 per cent. of the "compensation paid for this official year." Shall we use $3,500 or $4,000, or make our computation on the former sum from September to June, and on the larger from June to September? The language of section 3001 is not susceptible of a strictly literal construction. The provision that each commissioner shall not receive in a later year more than 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each commissioner for the official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911, does not, in my judgment, require the ascertainment of the exact amount in dollars and cents drawn by each commissioner in 1911. For instance, by reason of death or resignation, one such officer may have drawn less than his colleagues. On the other hand, while the change in the maximum salary provided in June, 1911, could not be effective as to those in office at that time, one subsequently appointed to fill a vacancy could draw the increased compensation. State ex rel. vs. Tanner, 27 O. C. A. 385.

Since practically all the commissioners who were in office in 1911 are now retired, and new boards have been elected, it could not in many cases be determined which particular member of a board would be the successor to the officer whose compensation in 1911 had been less than that of his colleagues. Therefore, we must, in my judgment, look further for the meaning of the phrase "compensation paid to each county commissioner."

We have a case [State ex rel. vs. Lewis, 15 N. P. (n. s.) 582] in which the question here was necessarily passed upon, although apparently not discussed by the court. There it appeared that the commissioners of Adams county had been paid $750 for the year 1911 but in 1912 drew $1,131, claiming to be entitled to that amount on a duplicate of $12,700,000 in December, 1911. The court held however, that they should have been paid but 115 per cent. of $750, their salary drawn in 1911. The question as to the effect of the change in the compensation by the legislature in June, 1911, was in that case as it is here. The court could have taken one of three amounts for his multiplier of 1.15 as we must do here. He found the proper sum to be that which a commissioner in office at the time of the amendment referred to, could legally draw. If we are to follow the reasoning of this case we must hold that the officers in counties where the maximum has been reached are to receive 115 per cent. of $3,500 or $4,025; in the counties where it has not, but whose duplicates in December, 1909, exceed $5,000,000, they are to have 115 per cent. of what was drawn in 1911 by a commissioner serving a full term. While the instant question was not discussed in that case, I think it fair to assume that it must have been considered, and should regard that decision as authoritative here and follow it. The case was affirmed by the Court of Appeals of Adams county, and my predecessor gave it his approval in Opinions of Attorney General for 1918. Vol. I, p. 198.

It has been ably urged that $4,000 instead of $3,500 should be used in determining the salaries of commissioners in those counties where the maximum had been reached. The argument is that the compensation stood at $4,000 when the official year closed in September, 1911. But the language is "paid to each county commissioner." The most that any such officer could have received for that year was $3,500.

Ohio Constitution, Art. II, Sec. 20.

True, the aggregate salaries of a commissioner who deceased after June, 1911, and of the appointee to fill the vacancy might exceed $3,500. But the payment to neither could equal that sum. Therefore, the maximum paid to any commissioner for the year 1911 would be $3,500. Again, it is well settled that laws providing for the compensation of public officers must be strictly construed and only such compensation allowed as is clearly expressed.

Debold vs. Trustees, 7 O. S. 237;
Richardson vs. State, 66 O. S. 108;
Thornley vs. State, 81 O. S. 108;
State ex rel. vs. Stone, 92 O. S. 63;
State ex rel. vs. Kleimhoffer, 92 O. S. 163; 29 Cyc. 1226.

Attention is called to section 57 of Senate Bill No. 100 which allows additional compensation for time given to improvements. Its provisions are:

> "In addition to the regular salary provided by law for the county commissioners, each county commissioner shall receive five dollars per day for each day he is actually engaged on improvements under this act, but in no case shall any commissioner receive an aggregate of more than twenty-five dollars for services on one improvement, nor shall they receive pay for two separate improvements on the same day. Such amounts shall be paid by warrants issued by the county auditor upon the county treasurer, upon the filing in his office of an itemized statement by the commissioner of such service; provided, however, that the aggregate compensation paid a county commissioner under this section for said service shall not exceed in one year five hundred dollars."

I am aware that views different from those expressed above have been entertained by attorneys for whose ability and judgment I have the greatest respect. The questions raised are not free from difficulty. But it is my duty as I comprehend it, to determine what the law is from decisions as well as statutes, and to recognize the authority of a decision unless clearly contrary to reason or other authority.

My conclusions therefore are that:

(1) Under the provisions of Senate Bill No. 100 passed June 19, 1919, commissioners in counties having an aggregate tax duplicate of $5,000,000 or less are entitled to an annual compensation of $750; those in counties where the maximum of $3,500 could be drawn by officers serving for the full official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911, to an annual compensation of $4,025; and those in other counties to an annual compensation of $452, plus $3 for every full one hundred thousand dollars of the excess of the aggregate tax duplicate in December, 1909, in such respective counties over $5,000,000; but not to exceed 115 per cent. of the amount which could be drawn annually in such respective counties by county commissioners serving for the full official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911.

(2) In addition to the above compensation, each county commissioner is entitled to $5 per day for each day he is actually engaged on improvements under said act, but not more than $25 for services on one improvement, nor for services on two separate improvements on the same day; but the aggregate of such compensation for time during which he is engaged in improvements shall not exceed $500 in any one year.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

NON-PAR STOCK ACT—WHEN AMOUNT OF CAPITAL WITH WHICH SUCH FOREIGN CORPORATION WILL CARRY ON BUSINESS IS NOT STATED IN ITS ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION, OR OTHERWISE FIXED—HOW VALUE IS PLACED UPON AUTHORIZED NON-PAR VALUE SHARES AND ALSO HOW ANNUAL FRANCHISE TAX COMPUTED—REAL CONSIDERATION FOR WHICH SHARES ISSUED—VALUE OF UNISSUED SHARES.

When the amount of capital with which a foreign corporation having non-par value shares will carry on business is not stated in its articles of incorporation, or otherwise fixed and certified to the Secretary of State and Tax Commission, so as to bring the company within section 11 of the non-par value stock act, proper rules to be followed in placing a value upon the authorized non-par value shares of the corporation when seeking admission to do business in this state under section 178 et seq. G. C., and also in computing the amount of the annual franchise tax under section 5501 et seq., G. C., would be to adopt the real consideration for which such shares have been issued by the company from time to time, in the case of issued shares, and the real consideration for which such shares are being offered by the company, with respect to the unissued shares. But in the event unissued shares are not being offered at the time of the application, or at the time of filing the annual report, then the value to be placed upon the unissued shares should be the real consideration for which the last non-par value shares were issued. Such information should be certified to the Secretary of State and to the Tax Commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date inquiring as to what rule should be adopted in determining the amount of the annual franchise tax of a foreign corporation having non-par value shares of capital stock, was duly received.

The exact question was submitted to this department by the Secretary of State prior to the receipt of your inquiry, and an opinion (No. 611) rendered, copy of which is enclosed herewith.

In that opinion it was held that section 11 of the act prescribes the rule to be followed with respect to foreign corporations, and such only, as state in their articles, or otherwise fix, the amount of capital with which the company will carry on business; and also, that when the amount of such capital is not stated in the articles, it is permissible for the board of directors to fix the amount and thereby bring the company within section 11 of the recent non-par value stock act, which amount, if so fixed, should be certified to the Secretary of State at the time the company makes application for admission to do business in this state, and to the Tax Commission when the company files its annual reports with the Tax Commission.

It was also held in that opinion that in the event the amount of such capital was not stated in the articles, or otherwise fixed by the board of directors and certified to the Secretary of State and Tax Commission of Ohio, then recourse must be had to section 178 et seq., G. C. as to the fee to be paid by a foreign corporation seeking admission to do business in this state, and to section 5501 et seq. G. C. with respect to the annual franchise tax—those being the governing statutes.

After pointing out that the company's authorized capital stock is an indispensable factor in determining the amount of the fees to be paid to the Secretary of State under section 178 et seq. and the amount of the annual franchise tax under section 5501 et seq. G. C., it was advised that the following rules be adopted with respect to those companies which have not stated in their articles, or otherwise fixed by their board of directors, the amount of capital with which they will carry on business, viz.:

> "In case of issued and outstanding non-par value shares, adopt the real consideration for which such shares were issued from time to time.
> With respect to unissued non-par value shares, adopt the real consideration for which such shares are being offered by the company; but in the event unissued shares are not being offered by the company, then adopt the real consideration for which the last issued non-par value shares were issued by the company."

The information necessary to apply the foregoing rules should be certified to the Secretary of State at the time the company makes application to do business in this state, and to the Tax Commission of Ohio at the time it files its annual franchise tax reports with that commission.

The foregoing rules should be applied to all foreign corporations which do not come or bring themselves within section 11 of the non-par value act, as above construed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

HON. PHIL H. WIELAND, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following statement of facts:

"On March 22, 1919, the county board of education of Morrow county, in accordance with section 4692 G. C., transferred in one transfer to the Edison village school district a strip of territory from Gilead township school district, a strip of territory from the Canaan township school district and the whole of Denmark rural school district. Denmark school district previous to the enactment of the present school code was a special district; it has a tax duplicate of approximately $200,000.

"A remonstrance containing more than fifty one per cent. of the qualified electors in the territory proposed to be transferred was filed with the county board of education three days after the expiration of the thirty days, consequently the board declared the transfer effective. Subsequent to the filing of the remonstrance the majority of the qualified electors of said territory have filed a petition with the county board of education requesting that said territory be detached from the Edison village school district and restored to the same status as it was previous to the action of the county board on March 22, 1919.

"Did the county board of education have legal right to attach the Denmark rural school district to the Edison village school district under the provisions of section 4692 G. C.?

"Does the county board of education have the legal right to restore the Denmark rural school district under the provisions of section 4692 G. C.?

"Does the county board of education have the legal right to restore the Denmark rural school district under the provisions of section 4736 G. C.?

"If said territory be detached from the Edison village school district, will it carry with it its proportion of the bonded or borrowed indebtedness of the Edison village school district?"

It is understood that this transfer of territory was made under section 4692 G. C., which is as follows:

> "The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county in which the transferred territory is situated, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, and a notice of such proposed transfer has been posted in three conspicuous places in the district or districts proposed to be transferred, or printed in a paper of general circulation in said county, for ten days; nor shall such transfer take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred, shall, within thirty days after the filing of such map, file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer. If an entire district be transferred the board of education of such district is thereby abolished or if a member of the board of education lives in a part of a school district transferred the member becomes a nonresident of the school district from which he was transferred and ceases to be a member of such board of education. The legal title of the property of the board of education shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred. The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

There is no question but what the county board of education had a legal right to attach the Denmark rural school district to a village school district under the above section, for it provides that the county board of education may transfer "all of a school district of a county, school district to an adjoining district," but, "such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county, "and even not then after such filing should a majority of the qualified electors, residing in the territory to be transferred, file within thirty days after the filing of such map a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer, such remonstrance to be filed with the county board of education. It clearly provides also that if an entire district be transferred (which was the case in transferring the Denmark rural school district, which was formerly a special district), the board of education of such district is abolished and the legal title of the property of the Denmark board of education would become vested in the Edison village school district to which transfer had been made, upon the filing of the map mentioned in the section. To have prevented the consummation of such transfer, it would have been necessary to have filed a remonstrance with the county board within thirty days after the filing of the map with the county auditor.

You indicate that such a remonstrance, filed by more than fifty-one per cent. of the qualified electors in the territory to be transferred was filed with the county board of education but after the expiration of the thirty days, in which event the transfer would be effective. You further say that following the filing of the remonstrance, a majority of the qualified electors then filed a petition with the county board of education, requesting that said territory be detached from the Edison village school district and restored to its former status prior to the action of the county board on March 22, 1919.

It is advised that section 4692 provides for the remonstrance, but makes no provision for a petition by the electors. Hence the county board of education is not required to act upon such petition from the fact that it has been filed by the electors, but there is nothing to prevent any board from being guided in their decisions by any petition that comes out in time from the electors, who are directly concerned in the matter at issue.

So, answering your first question, it is advised that the county board of education has a legal right, under section 4692 G. C., to transfer all of a rural school district to an adjoining district, but the provisions of said section 4692 must be clearly and fully carried out, as provided therein, that the rights of all concerned may be fully protected.

Your second query is, whether the county board of education has the legal right to restore the Denmark rural school district, under the provisions of section 4692 G. C., to its former status as a rural school district, with a school board of its own, having previously been a special district prior to the enactment of the present school code.

In answer to this query it is advised that there is nothing in section 4692 which provides for the creation of a new district as the matter of the creation of a school district by the county board of education is fully covered in section 4736 G. C.

Coming to your third question as to whether the county board of education has the legal right to restore the Denmark rural school district under the provisions of section 4736, attention is invited to the language of such section which reads in part as follows:

> "The county board of education shall arrange the school district according to topography and population in order that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils * * *; which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed, unless within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education (in the territory to be affected), a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board, file a written remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed. The county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof. The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created school district and direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district. Members of the boards of education of the newly created district shall thereafter be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the boards of education of the village and rural districts."

It will be thus seen that under sections 4692 and 4736 G. C. that a county board of education can make transfers of territory, the same to be effective at any time, provided that such transfers of territory do not constitute a redistricting of the county, in which event such redistricting would take effect only as of the date of September 1st following. That is to say, a county board of education which had transferred a rural district to a village district, or an adjoining rural district, could at such later time as it sees fit, make a subsequent transfer affecting the same territory. In the case of the Denmark rural school district, it is noted that since the whole district was transferred to resume a status that would be similar to the one that had been lost, there is no district to which Denmark could be transferred, as provided in section 4692, because the whole of the Denmark rural district was taken at the time of the transfer of March 22, 1919, and the district abolished if such transfer was made under section 4692 G. C. Therefore the provisions of section 4736 G. C. would have to apply, wherein a county board of education is authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or boards thereof and at any time that it may see fit, following which it is necessary to appoint a new board of education for the newly created district and make an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district.

Coming to your fourth question, as to whether the said territory, if detached from the Edison village school district, to which it was transferred on March 22, 1919, would carry with it its proportion of the bonded or borrowed indebtedness of the Edison village school district, it is advised that when territory is attached to a school district, it thereby becomes an integral part of such district and under the rule of law the tax for the support of the school district as enlarged, must be spread uniformly over all the territory in such enlarged district. And so, as soon as the newly attached territory becomes a part of the new district, then as an integral part of such enlarged district it must begin to assume its proportion of the indebtedness of the district to which it is attached, because such district has itself assumed the indebtedness of the territory which was transferred, and it is entirely proper that the rule should work both ways. Should the territory in question, that is the Denmark rural school district, be detached from the Edison village school district, under section 4736, that is, by creating a new district, we come again to the language of section 4736, which says that "the county board of education is authorized to * * * direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district," which means that the newly created district must take its portion of the indebtedness of the district from which it is detached, as well as its proper portion of the funds of such district.

Bearing upon this particular question, attention is invited to Opinion 146, dated March 27, 1917, and addressed to the Superintendent of Public Instruction of this state, such opinion appearing at page 359, Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "Where a county board of education, acting under the provisions of section 4692 G. C., abolishes a village school district by transferring the same to another village school district bonded or other indebtedness of such abolished school district become a charge on the school district to which it is transferred and may be paid by a levy of taxes on all the taxable property of the latter district as enlarged by the transfer.
> "The equitable division of the school funds and of the indebtedness which the county board of education under section 4692 G. C. is authorized to make on the transfer of the territory from one school district to another is not a matter jurisdictional to the power of the county board of education to make such transfer of territory; and such equitable division of the fund and the indebtedness may be made at a meeting later than the one at which the transfer of the territory is made.
> "There is no right of appeal from an order of the county board of education making such division of school funds and of the indebtedness, but such order may be reviewed by original action in the court of common pleas on the petition of the board of education of either school district affected by such order if the county board of education has been guilty of fraud or gross and intentional abuse of discretion in making such order."

Attention is also invited to Opinion 323, issued by the Attorney-General, May 31, 1917, appearing at page 859, Vol. 1, of Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, wherein it was held:

> "When an entire school district is transferred to an adjoining school district, the bonded indebtedness of the district transferred becomes the debt of the whole district as it exists after the transfer is made.

The board of education of the district as it exists after the transfer is made must provide for all indebtedness by making the levy upon all the property in the district as it exists after the transfer is made.

Should the district transferred by the owner and holder of any property at the time the transfer is made, the property so held shall pass to the district as it exists after the transfer is made."

It would seem, then, that if the county board of education desired to take notice of the petition which has been filed with it, by the electors in the district transferred on March 22, 1919, it can operate under section 4736 by creating a new district from the territory which formerly constituted he Denmark special district. Under the statement of facts submitted, the transfer made on March 22, 1919, was a legal transfer properly made, because a remonstrance was not filed within thirty days required by law.

The county board of education has full authority to make such transfers as it sees fit of school territory at any time, provided it stays within the language of the statutes and always gives to the elector the right of petition and remonstrance provided for in the statutes. The county board is not required to take official notice of petitions for transfer of territory under section 4692 G. C., but it must heed a remonstrance, but such remonstrance must be filed within the stipulated time.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. That a county board of education has a legal right under section 4692 G. C. to transfer all of a school district, or a part of it, to an adjoining village or rural school district, and a remonstrance filed later than thirty days after the filing of the map with the county auditor, fails.

2. Under section 4692 G. C. the county board of education, in its discretion, can make transfers of territory from one school district to another at any time it decides it is necessary, but new districts are created under section 4736 G. C.

3. Under section 4736 G. C. the county board of education can create a new school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof.

4. Where a new school district is created by the county board of education, such county board shall direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—WHETHER OR NOT CORPORATION HAS INCREASED THE PROPORTION OF ITS CAPITAL STOCK REPRESENTED BY PROPERTY USED AND BUSINESS DONE IN THIS STATE IS A QUESTION OF FACT.

1. Whether or not a foreign corporation has increased the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in this state, so as to put section 185 into operation with respect to such company, is a question of fact to be determined by mathematical calculation in each case.

2. To effect an increase in such proportion it is not indispensable that the company shall have also increased the amount of its authorized capital stock; nor, on the other hand, will an increase in the amount of the company's capital stock necessarily result in all cases in an increase in such proportion. The statutory test in all cases is, has the company increased the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date inquiring as to the proper interpretation to be given to section 185 G. C., which relates to the filing of additional statements by foreign corporations with the secretary of state, was duly received, and in reply thereto I beg to advise you as follows:

Section 185 G. C. first came into the statute law of this state on May 16, 1894 (91 O. L. 272), as part of original supplementary section 148c R. S. Section 148c R. S. as originally enacted, was a somewhat lengthy section, but upon the enactment of the General Code its contents were divided and distributed by the General Assembly into several sections, so that now its parts are to be found in sections 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191 and 192 G. C.

As origially passed and in force until the enactment of the General Code, it was, among other things, provided that foreign corporations should file with the secretary of state a statement setting forth the amount of the company's authorized capital stock and the par value of each share, the value of property owned and used in and outside of Ohio, and the proportion of the company's capital stock represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in this state. It was then provided that:

> "From the facts thus reported, and any other facts coming to his knowledge bearing upon the question, the secretary of state shall determine the proportion of the capital stock of the company represented by its property and business in Ohio, and shall charge and collect from the company, for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, one-tenth of one per cent upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the corporation, represented by property owned and used and business transacted in Ohio." * * *

It doubtless occurred to the legislature, as was said by a former attorney-general, that in the natural course of events the foreign corporation might increase and grow, and it was therefore provided in section 185 G. C. that when the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in this state was increased, an additional statement thereof should be made to the secretary of state, as follows:

> "Every corporation which has filed its statement and paid the privilege tax under this section, and which thereafter shall increase the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in Ohio, shall within thirty days after such increase, file an additional statement with the secretary of state, and pay a fee of one-tenth of one per cent upon the amount of increase of its capital stock represented by property owned or business done in Ohio."

Neither the Attorney-General nor the courts have anything to do with the wisdom of requiring these additional statements. The subject is one of legislative policy. See Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. II, p. 1454; also Western Union Telegraph Co., vs. Mayer 28 O. S. 521; Toledo Computing Scale Co., vs. Manufacturing Co., 55 O .S. 217; Gum Co. vs. Laylin, 66 O. S. 595; Humphrey vs. State, 70 O. S. 67, and State vs. Fulton, 98 O. S. 350, which support the proposition that foreign corporations can exercise none of their franchises or powers within this state except by comity and legislative consent, and that their admission to the state may be made subject to such reasonable terms and conditions as the General Assembly may see fit to impose.

The provisions of original supplementary section 148c R. S. set forth in the last paragraph of the foregoing quotation were, after the dismemberment of the section by the codifying commission and General Assembly, placed in what is now known as section 185 G. C. The phraseology was slightly changed, but not in such manner as to change its meaning. In its present form the statute reads as follows:

> "A corporation which has filed its statement and paid the fee prescribed by the preceding two sections and which thereafter shall increase the proportion of its capital stock, represented by property used and business done in this state, shall file within thirty days after such increase an additional statement with the secretary of state, and pay a fee of one-tenth of one per cent upon the increase of its authorized capital stock represented by property owned and business transacted in this state."

That statute means that whenever the proportion of the capital stock of a foreign corporation represented by property used and business done in this state becomes larger than it has been, an additional statement shall be filed and a fee shall be paid, based not upon the new proportion, but upon the difference in amount between such new proportion and the proportion upon which the initial compliance fee, or the last supplementary compliance fee, may have been based. See 1915 Opinions of the Attorney-General, Vol. II, pages 1454, 1456, 1768.

Whether or not a foreign corporation has increased the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in this state, so as to put section 185 G .C. into operation with respect to such company, is a question of fact to be determined by mathematical calculation in each case. To effect an increase in such proportion it is not indispensable that the company also shall have increased the amount of its authorized capital stock; nor, on the other hand, will an increase in the amount of the company's authorized capital stock necessarily result in all cases in an increase in such proportion. The statutory test in all cases is, has the company increased the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in Ohio. See examples or illustrations in Opinions of the Attorney-General, supra.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROPRIATION BILL—H. B. NO. 536, 108 O. L. 733—UNEXPENDED BALANCES OF ALL APPROPRIATIONS MADE BY 82nd GENERAL ASSEMBLY AGAINST WHICH CONTINGENT LIABILITIES HAVE BEEN LAWFULLY INCURRED ARE TO EXTENT OF SUCH LIABILITIES ONLY HEREBY APPROPRIATED FOR PURPOSE OF DISCHARGING SUCH CONTINGENT LIABILITIES—PREVIOUS APPROPRIATIONS FOR TEACHERS TRAINING SCHOOL BUILDING OF BOWLING GREEN NORMAL COLLEGE NOT AVAILABLE FOR ABOVE REASON.

*By reason of the provision of section 10 of H. B. No. 536, 108 O. L., 733, to the effect that "unexpended balances of all appropriations made by the eighty-second General Assembly, against which contingent liabilities have been lawfully incurred, are to the extent of such liabilities only * * * hereby appropriated and made available for the purpose of discharging such contingent liabilties and for no other purpose," the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made for the teachers' training school building of the Bowling Green State Normal College, is not available for a contemplated new contract for the completion of such buildings.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

HON. F. E. REYNOLDS, Secretary Board of Trustees, Bowling Green State Normal College, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of recent date you say:

> "At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Bowling Green State Normal College held August 8, 1919, the secretary of the board was instructed to ascertain from your department whether or not the unexpended balance in the appropriation for the training school building at the college is available for the completion of said building, or such a part of it as may be completed with the money yet unexpended, under a new contract now in contemplation by the board. The original contractor, The Steinle Construction Company, upon the certificate of the architect, has been dismissed and the board is taking steps to let a new contract. Our question is, is this balance available for the new contract?
> I am also enclosing a copy of a resolution passed by the board of trustees at this same meeting."

It appears that the 81st General Assembly appropriated the sum of $100,000.00 for the erection and completion of a teachers' training school building at the Bowling Green State Normal College, said appropriation being found in 106 O. L., page 739 and page 814.

On the 21st of July, 1916, the board of trustees of the Bowling Green State Normal College entered into a written contract with The Steinle Construction Company for the construction and completion of such building, said contract calling for the payment to the contractor of the sum of $94,545.45.

Said contract contained a provision requiring the contractor to complete the work by July 1, 1917, but on or about the 14th day of December, 1918, said board of trustees extended the time of such completion to September 1, 1919.

In July, 1919, the board of trustees, being in receipt of a certificate from the architect in charge of said building improvement, to the effect that the refusal, neglect and failure of the contractor to supply sufficient workmen and materials was such as to justify the board in so doing, terminated, under authority of Article V of the contract, the employment of said contractor for the work.

It is understood that the board of trustees now desires to enter into a new contract with some other person or persons in order to complete the building or such part of it as may be completed with available funds. Before doing so, the board wishes to make sure that the unexpended balance of moneys in said appropriation is available to pay the contractor under the new contract.

Re-appropriations of unexpended balances were made by the eighty-second General Assembly, section 9 of H. B. No. 584 (107 O. L., 355), reading thus:

> "Unexpended balances of all appropriations, made by the eighty-first General Assembly, against which contingent liabilities have been lawfully incurred, are to the extent of such liabilities only hereby reappropriated and made available for the purpose of discharging such contingent liabilities and for no other purpose. Any balance remaining in the item
> F 9. General plant, installing indexes, $5,000
> made to secretary of state in House bill No. 196 approved March 2, 1917, is hereby re-appropriated."

Re-appropriation of unexpended balances were also made by the eighty-third General Assembly, section 10 of H. B. No. 536 (108 O. L., 733) reading as follows:

> "Unexpended balances of all appropriations, made by the eighty-second General Assembly, against which contingent liabilities have been lawfully incurred, are to the extent of such liabilities only, and whether the same have been lapsed prior to the taking effect of this act with respect thereto or not, hereby appropriated and made available for the purpose of discharging such contingent liabilities and for no other purpose * * *."

By reason of the provisions just cited, it appears that the legislative appropriation which you have in mind is available for a limited purpose only, to wit: For the purpose of discharging contingent liabilities which had already been lawfully incurred at the time the re-appropriation took effect. At that time, of course, the new contract was not in existence and there were no contingent liabilities thereunder which the re-appropriation of unexpended balances could possibly relate to.

The conclusion is, therefore, reached that the unexpended balance in the appropriation for the building in question is not available to discharge liabilities arising under the proposed new contract of which your letter speaks.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

WHERE COUNTY COMMISSIONER ELECT DIES BEFORE COMMENCEMENT OF TERM OF OFFICE—HOW VACANCY FILLED.

When a new county commissioner elect dies before the commencement of his term of office, the probate judge, auditor and recorder, or a majority of them, are authorized under section 2397 G. C. to fill the vacancy if the interest of the county so requires.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date, inquiring whether there will be a vacancy on the board of county commissioners of your county on September 15, 1919, was duly received.

The facts as I understand them are as follows:

> The board of commissioners as now constituted is composed of Messrs. Barnes, Williams and Wright. At the last general election Messrs. Van-Curren, Smith and Engle were elected for the term beginning on the third Monday of September, 1919. Mr. Engle, one of the commissioners elect, recently died.

By the statutory law of this state it is provided that the board of county commissioners shall consist of three persons, who shall be elected bi-ennially. Pursuant to constitutional authority, the time of the election is fixed as the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the even numbered years, and the term of office at two years commencing on the third Monday of September next after the election. See section 2395 G. C., sections 1 and 2, Article XVII, Ohio Constitution.

The filling of a vacancy which occurs in the office of commissioner, and the election of a successor, are provided for by section 2397 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "If a vacancy in the office of commissioner occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state and county officers, a successor shall be elected thereat. If a vacancy occurs more than thirty days before such election, or within that time, and the interest of the county requires that the vacancy be filled before the election, the probate judge, auditor, and recorder of the county, or a majority of them, shall appoint a commissioner, who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified."

Your board of commissioners as now constituted is composed of persons other than those elected to the office at the last general election, and the death of one of the commissioners elect does not have the effect of creating a vacancy in the office at this time, because under the well settled law of this state there can be no vacancy in an office so long as there is a person in possession legally entitled to hold it and qualified to perform its duties (see State vs. Bryson, 44 O. S. 457; State vs. McCracken, 51 O. S. 123; State vs. Metcalfe, 80 O. S. 244, 263; State vs. Thompson, 9 C. C. 161, 167); but there will, however, be a vacancy on September 15, 1919, which the probate judge, auditor, and recorder, or a majority of them, are authorized to fill if the interest of the county so requires.

If there was but a single county commissioner, instead of a board composed of three members, there would be no vacancy in the office on September 15, 1919, by reason of the death of the commissioner-elect because the person now in office would, by virtue of section 8 G. C., continue therein until his successor is elected and qualified. But such is not the case now under consideration for we are dealing with a board composed of three members who are elected at the same time and for the same term, and not with an office filled by a single officer, nor with a board whose members are elected at different times and for different terms, etc.; hence, section 8 G. C. cannot be applied. To hold that section 8 G. C. applies to the present situation would require that all three of the present commissioners continue in office and the result on and after September 15 would be a board composed of five, instead of three members as prescribed by section 2395.

So far as I have been able to ascertain from the official reports, the exact question has never been decided by the courts or the Attorney-General. The nearest approach seems to have been in 1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 462, holding that when a county commissioner elected to succeed himself dies after election and before commencing the term for which he was elected, a vacancy is thereby created in the term during which the death occurred, which should be filled, and that the appointee to fill such vacancy would, by virtue of section 10 G. C., hold the office not only for the remainder of the term during which the death occurred, but also thereafter until the appointee's successor is elected and qualified.

You are therefore advised that a vacancy will exist in the office of county commissioner of your county on September 15, 1919, by reason of the death of Mr. Engle, which the probate judge, auditor and recorder are authorized to fill if the interest of the county so requires.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS—MUTUAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION—AMENDMENT TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—HOW ADOPTED—COMPANY CANNOT CLASSIFY RISKS.

1. An amendment to the articles of incorporation of a mutual protective association must be made by its members and not by its incorporators, and the amendment, when properly adopted, must be certified to the secretary of state by the president and secretary of the association.

2. A mutual protective association is without authority to classify its risks and members so as to provide that a loss caused by fire, lightning or explosions from gas, shall only be assessed against members holding policies covering such risks, thereby exempting from the assessment members carrying insurance against loss from cyclones, tornadoes, windstorms and hailstorms, and vice versa.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 13, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of August 19, 1919, with which you transmitted a copy of an amendment to the articles of incorporation of the Hobart Insurance Association, with a certificate thereto attached, and requesting my approval of these papers both as to form and substance, was duly received.

These papers, together with the record in your office, disclose that the Hobart Insurance Association is a mutual protective association incorporated without capital stock under authority of sections 9593 et seq. G. C.

There being no special provision governing amendments to the articles of incorporation of such associations, the proposed amendment and certificate must be tested under the general corporation statutes, viz., sections 8719-8723 G. C. See also section 8737 G. C.

Section 8719 G. C., so far as pertinent to the present inquiry, provides that a domestic corporation may amend its articles of incorporation:

> "3. So as to modify, enlarge or diminish the objects or purposes for which it was formed; but not substantially to change the purpose of its original organization.
> 4. So as to * * * add to the articles anything omitted from, or which lawfully might have been provided for originally, or to take out of the articles any unnecessary provisions or provisions which might lawfully have been omitted from them originally."

The procedure to be followed in perfecting the amendment is specifically set forth in sections 8720 et seq. G. C.

Section 8720 G. C. provides:

> "Amendments to articles of incorporation may be made at any meeting of the members or stockholders thereof, of which, and of the business to come before it, thirty days' notice has been given by a majority of the directors or trustees, in a newspaper published and of general circulation in the county where the company's principal place of business is located, and by a vote of the owners of at least three-fifths of its capital stock then subscribed, if it has a capital stock, or if not, by a vote of at least three-fifths of its members."

When the amendment has been adopted in the manner above provided a certified copy thereof, signed "by the president and secretary of the corporation," must be recorded in the office of the secretary of state. See section 8721 G. C.

The certificate of amendment proposed to be filed by the Hobart Insurance Association discloses on its face that the articles of incorporation have not been amended in the manner prescribed by section 8720 G. C., in that the alleged amendment was adopted by the votes of the incorporators, instead of by the votes of at least three-fifths of the company's members, as the statute requires. There is no provision in our laws whereby incorporators are authorized to amend articles of incorporation, either before or after organization.

It is also proposed that the certificate of amendment shall be signed by each incorporator, instead of by the president and secretary of the company, as the law requires. See section 8721 G. C.

Another question arises which goes to the merits of the proposed amendment, viz.: Whether a mutual protective association can classify its risks and members so as to assess the amount of a loss arising from one class of risks upon those members only holding policies covering the particular risks involved, thus exempting from assessment the other members whose policies cover other classes of risks. In other words, and for example, under the provisions of the proposed amendment, whenever a loss is caused by fire, lightning or explosion from gas, an assessment to cover the loss can only be made upon the members carrying insurance covering the risks specified, and not upon those members who carry insurance against loss by cyclones, tornadoes, wind storms and hail storms. Such classification, in my opinion, is out of harmony with the statutes under which the company is incorporated, and is unauthorized.

Section 9593 G. C. clearly provides that persons possessing certain qualifications may associate themselves together as a mutual protective association for the purpose of insuring "each other" against loss by fire, etc., and assess upon and collect from "each other" such sums of money as may be necessary to pay losses to "any member." It is also provided that:

> "The assessment and collection of such sums of money shall be regulated by the constitution and by-laws of the association, which shall require such assessments to be made directly and specifically upon the members and to be paid directly and specifically by them and not out of any fund deposited with the association or other trustee in anticipation of assessments or in any other manner except that any such association may borrow money for the payment of losses and expenses, such loans not to be made for a longer period than the collection of their next assessment; and such association may also accumulate a surplus from its assessments not exceeding two dollars on each one thousand dollars of insurance in force, such surplus to be used in paying losses and expenses that may occur," etc.

The foregoing statutes, in my opinion, require that the amount of each loss, no matter from what cause, shall be directly and specifically assessed upon and paid by all the members, "and not * * * in any other manner," except as therein otherwise expressly authorized, viz., with borrowed money, or from the association's accumulated surplus. See also section 9594 G. C.

Under the laws of some states mutual companies appear to be empowered to divide their risks into classes, and in case of a loss, to assess only those members within the particular class to which the loss belongs, etc., subject, however, to the limitation that if the necessity arises, all the members shall be subject to assessment. Such division or classification, to be sustained, must not in any case be opposed to the policy and provisions of the statute under which the association is incorporated. The decisions on the subject are referred to in 3 Joyce, Insurance, section 1298, and summed up as follows:

> "The conclusion from these decisions is, that the company's right to divide its risks into classes and to base its assessments upon such division must be governed by the law under and by virtue of which it is created and exists, and that it may be empowered to regulate these matters by its charter and by-laws not inconsistent with express statutory provisions, mandatory or prohibitory in their nature, etc."

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—TOWNSHIP BOARD OF EDUCATION—NO AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE TRANSPORTATION FOR ELIGIBLE HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS—BOARD MUST PAY TUITION OF ELIGIBLE HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS RESIDING IN DISTRICT WHICH HAS NO HIGH SCHOOL.

1. Nowhere in the present law is there found authority or provision for a board of education of a township school district, which does not provide a high school, to provide transportation for eligible high school pupils.

2. The tuition of eligible high school pupils residing in a district which has no high school, must be paid by the board of education of the district in which said high school pupil resides.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

HON. V. W. FILIATRAULT, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter of recent date requesting an opinion on the following statement of facts:

"Would the board of education of a township school district which does not provide a high school be allowed to provide transportation as well as pay tuition for eligible pupils to another high school?

Sections 7748 and 7749 of the General Code provide for the paying of tuition to outside high schools and for transportation of pupils to high schools maintained by the supplying board. However, I am unable to determine whether or not the transportation could be furnished to outside high schools and consequently have submitted the above question for your ruling."

Sections 7748 and 7749 G. C., cited by you, read as follows:

"Sec. 7748.—A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year.

Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

"Sec. 7749.—When the elementary schools of any rural school district in which a high school is maintained, are centralized and transportation of pupils is provided, all pupils resident of the rural school district who have completed the elementary school work shall be entitled to transportation to the high school of such rural district, and the board of education thereof shall be exempt from the payment of the tuition of such pupils in any other high school for such a portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education includes."

Bearing upon the question submitted by you, attention is invited to Opinion No. 824, issued by the Attorney-General in 1914 and appearing at page 362 of the Annual Reports for that year, on a question very similar to the one herein, and covered by the following syllabus:

"When a pupil resides five miles from any high school and has a high school in its district not closer than five miles, and no high school in any district nearer than five miles, free transportation to such high school may be furnished by the board of education when the nearest high school is its own high school. The board of education cannot under any circumstances furnish transportation to such pupil to any high school except its own."

Speaking further in such opinion, the Attorney-General said:

"* * * It seems to be the legislative intent that the provision for furnishing transportation shall be limited to furnishing transportation to the said high school maintained by the said board of education in its own district, and said provision is not so broad that such board is required to furnish transportation to such pupils or to entitle such pupil to transportation to a high school other than its own high school. As before stated, such board of education is limited to furnishing transportation to such pupils to its own high school in lieu of paying the tuition of such pupils to a nearer high school than the one provided by such board.

* * * * I am of the opinion that such pupil is not entitled to transportation to the nearest high school, under favor of said section, (7748) unless in line with the foregoing, such nearest high school happens to be its own high school, for the reason that such board cannot, under any circumstances, furnish transportation for said pupils to any high school except its own."

It is advised that section 7748 G. C. has not been changed by the legislature upon the point in question since the promulgation of the above opinion, and nowhere in the present law is there found authority or provision for a board of education of a township school district, which does not provide a high school, to provide transportation for eligible high school pupils. The tuition of such pupils must, however, be paid by the board of education of the district in which such pupils reside.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TEACHER EMPLOYED FOR FIXED TERM AT DEFINITE SALARY—TIME LOST ON ACCOUNT OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASE—ENTITLED TO SALARY—UNDER SECTION 7690 G. C. BOARD CAN GRANT REASONABLE LEAVES OF ABSENCE TO TEACHERS WHO ARE ILL WITH DISEASE NOT CONTAGIOUS.

1. Where a board of education employes a teacher for a fixed term at a definite salary, and such teacher is compelled to be out of school with a contagious disease, and subsequently resumes teaching work for the board, the teacher is entitled to be paid for the time necessarily lost on account of such sickness.

2. Under section 7690 G. C. the board of education has full control of the management of the schools of the district and can grant reasonable leaves of ab- sence to teachers who are ill with a disease that is not contagious, if it sees fit to do so, but such leaves of absence must be reasonable in length of time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

HON. HAVETH E. MAU, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request of recent date, signed by Wm. K. Marshall, assistant prosecuting attorney, for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "In the department reports for 1918, Volume, I, Opinion No. 6, page 216, issue of May 23, I found an opinion given by your predecessor holding that 'where a teacher is out of school temporarily by reason of contagious disease, such teacher should receive pay for the time so absented.'
> While the caption would indicate that this opinion was confined to cases of teachers who were absent because of illness from contagious disease, a reading of the opinion and the reasoning therein contained would lead one to infer that a teacher who had a contract with a board of education for a definite period at a definite salary was entitled to compensation for time lost on account of any temporary illlness. And this construction has been placed upon it by the department of public instruction of this state, which has been advising, as I understand, that teachers who are absent temporarily on account of any illness are entitled to recover compensation for the time lost.
> In view of the latter part of section 7690, it would be my idea that this opinion should be strictly confined to cases where teachers are absent because of illness from contagious disease, and I know this opinion has been heretofore given by one of your predecessors. In any event, there should be no question as to the scope of the opinion first referred to, and I ask that you let me know whether your department would hold a teacher who was temporarily absent on account of illness, caused by any other than a contagious disease, would be entitled to compensation for the time lost; if not, the matter should be brought to the attention of the department of public instruction."

In the above communication you cite an opinion of the preceding Attorney-General, holding that where a teacher is out of school temporarily, by reason of contagious disease, such teacher should receive pay for such time absent. Such opinion appears at page 659-669, Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1918. The opinion in question is a very exhaustive one of ten pages, on the question as to whether teachers should be paid when absent from their duties on account of illness, and your statement that the reason therein contained would lead one to infer that a teacher who had a contract with a board of education for a definite period at a definite salary, was entitled to compensation for the time lost on account of any temporary illness, is largely true, but attention is invited to the opinion of the Attorney-General in the closing paragraphs, which read as follows:

> "Coming then to a specific answer to the question, and confining my opinion to this case or cases closely allied, it is my view that this entire contract should receive a liberal construction and that this teacher, who was out of school temporarily, by reason of contagious disease, should receive pay for the time so absent.
> Inasmuch as it is my opinion that the teacher is entitled to pay for the time lost by reason of sickness, there is no necessity of my answering your second question as to whether or not the substitute teacher is entitled to receive the pay which would have gone to the regular teacher. Assuming that the board has a contingent fund out of which to provide for emergencies, the compensation for such emergency employe should be taken from that fund, in case there is not sufficient money in the tuition fund to pay same."

The syllabus of the opinion which you cite, and which was rendered on May 8, 1918, reads as follows:

"Where a board of education employs a teacher for a fixed term at a definite salary and there is nothing in the contract or in the rules of the board on the question of absence on account of sickness, and such teacher is compelled to be out of school with a contagious disease, and subsequently resumes teaching work for the board, the teacher is entitled to be paid for the time so necessarily lost on account of such sickness."

A careful examination of the conclusions of the Attorney-General in the opinion just cited, shows that the illness of the teacher, in order to entitle that person to pay, must have been an illness that was contagious and that the teacher must subsequently resume teaching work for the board.

Your attention is invited to Opinion No. 338, dated May 24, 1919, wherein the following language on the part of this department occurs:

"Prior opinions of this department have held that the contagion known as influenza was an epidemic and that teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed on account of the influenza epidemic.

It has been held further by this department that where a teacher was absent from duty because of being ill with a contagious disease, such teacher is entitled to pay even though the schools were in session. So teachers who are deprived from teaching because schools are closed on account of epidemic and those who are ill with contagious disease, when schools are in session, must be given full pay, and it is for the board to provide substitutes in the latter case, as it deems fit.

Under section 7690 G. C., the board has full control of the management of the schools and * * * it can grant reasonable leaves of absence to teachers who are ill with a disease that is not contagious, if it sees fit to do so, but the schools must be kept going, if possible, by other teachers acting in place of those who are ill. * * * Boards of education should be as reasonable in dealing with their employes who are ill for short periods as other public officials and private employers are with salaried help. * * *

* * * If the teachers who were ill had a contagious disease, they must be paid. If such illness was not contagious, the board can grant such leave as it sees fit, at full pay, such grant being reasonable in time.

* * * The opinion of the Attorney-General is, therefore, that * * * salaries of teachers ill with contagious disease can not be withheld by a board of education and the board must provide substitutes."

The above opinion, No. 338, issued by the present Attorney-General, is the latest construction upon the question at issue and clearly provides that teachers when ill with a contagious disease, must be paid by their board of education for the time lost from their duties, and further, that the board of education, under the general powers given it under section 7690 G. C., can grant such leaves of absence as it sees fit, at full pay, such grant being reasonable in time. The latter view is based upon prior opinions of this department, holding that boards of education have authority to grant reasonable leaves of absence for short periods, when in their judgment it should be done, among which prior opinions is one issued on April 12, 1912, and found in Vol. I, page 226, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, part of the syllabus of which reads:

> "The action of the board in allowing said regular teacher full pay during said absence is in effect an increase in pay and not illegal. Such action, however, should be scrutinized.
> The payment by the absent teacher, of compensation to the aforesaid substitute, is a private arrangement not objectionable."

Practical experience shows that there are a number of contagious diseases which appear in the school room, where the person afflicted does not know for some days as to whether such illness is contagious. Among these diseases might be mentioned scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles and whooping cough, all of which are held to be contagious by medical authorities and all of which are said to be more contagious in the early stages than at a later date. A teacher might feel ill at the beginning of a certain school week on Monday, but rather than stop teaching and have her pay deducted, she will appear for duty on Tuesday or Wednesday, and a medical examination on Thursday or Friday might show that she had any one of the above mentioned diseases, with the result that during such malignant period the pupils had been exposed to the contagious disease and at the end of the week not only the teacher but a number of pupils would be afflicted with the same contagion. On this reasoning it would seem that it is better for a teacher, who may be contracting a contagious disease, to consult a physician at once and be taken from the school room and its activities, rather than to have her continue teaching with the resultant contagion to others, because of a hard and fast rule of the employing board of education that absence for a single day would result in a deduction of pay. Hence boards of education should take these things into consideration, and as they are guardians, in a sense, of the pupils under their control, they have ample authority to grant reasonable leaves of absence to teachers who are ill, if in their judgment it should be done, for a slight illness may later be diagnosed as a contagious one, which would cause an epidemic affecting the whole school population.

Boards of education in each locality are in the best position to judge as to the merits of temporary leaves of absence and they have full authority to do so under the general powers of section 7690 G. C.

Reaffirming the view indicated in Opinion No. 338, it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. Where a board of education employs a teacher for a fixed term at a definite salary, and such teacher is compelled to be out of school with a contagious disease, and subsequently resumes teaching work for the board, the teacher is entitled to be paid for the time necessarily lost on account of such sickness.

2. Under section 7690 G. C., the board of education has full control of the management of the schools of the district and can grant reasonable leaves of absence to teachers who are ill with a disease that is not contagious, if it sees fit to do so, but such leaves of absence must be reasonable in length of time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—COUNTY AGRICULTURAL AGENT—SALARY—VOLUNTARY CO-OPERATION OF COUNTY WITH STATE—ALSO WHERE COUNTY CO-OPERATES WHEN DIRECTED BY VOTE OF ELECTORS—MINIMUM SALARY OF AGENT IN EACH CASE.

In case of voluntary action by the county commissioners in co-operation with the state in employment of a county agricultural agent under the provisions of section 9921-2 G. C. the minimum undertaking authorized by the statutes on the part of the county commissioners is the appropriation of not less than one thousand dollars annually for a period of not less than two years.

In case the county commissioners are directed and required to co-operate with the state in the employment of the county agent by a referendum vote of the electors of the county, the minimum obligation contemplated by the statute is an appropriation by the commissioners of such an amount annually as shall be directed by the trustees of the Ohio State University, not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars, which shall continue for a period of five years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

HON. ROBERT B. MCMULLEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication requesting my construction of certain provisions of the statutes authorizing employment of a county agricultural agent, as follows:

> "In 1918 the board of county commissioners made an appropriation in the sum of $1,500 for a county agent under section 9921-1 et seq. General Code.
> This year (1919) the board of county commissioners have made an appropriation of only $1,000 for the county agent.
> 1. Is the board of commissioners compelled to make the 1919 appropriation in the same sum ($1,500) as the 1918 appropriation?
> 2. If so, is the board of commissioners or their successors in office required to make an appropriation in a like sum ($1,500) for a period longer than two years?
> I may say here that I have advised the board that the 1918 appropriation is binding on them for at least two years and possibly five, but they have asked me to get an opinion from you."

Section 9921-2 G. C. governs in the matter involved in your inquiry, and provides:

> "From moneys appropriated by the state for the employment of agricultural agents, not to exceed three thousand dollars in any one year shall be expended for any county that shall raise at least one thousand dollars for the support of an agricultural agent for one year, and shall give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of the Ohio State University that a like sum shall be raised for a second year, or shall establish and maintain a county experiment farm as provided in the statutes. To secure this aid from the state, the board of county commissioners of any county shall agree to the employment of an agricultural agent approved by the dean of the college of agriculture of the Ohio State University."

In a previous opinion directed to Hon. R. A. Kerr, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio, dated June 21, 1919, and being Opinion No. 502 of this department, it was observed that the provisions of the statutes governing the employment of county agricultural agents were in some respects inconsistent with other sections of the statutes governing appropriation and expenditure of money by the county commissioners, and these statutes being special in their application and of later enactment, to the extent of the inconsistency, supersede the more general provisions of other statutes.

The very obvious import of the provisions of section 9921-2, supra, is that the co-operative action of the county and state in the matter of employment of the county agent shall not be inaugurated or undertaken for a shorter period than at least two years, and in my opinion it is the clear intent of the statute that the commissioners by entering into the arrangement with the state for contribution to the fund for the agricultural work specified, obligate themselves to provide at least $1,000 annually for a period of at least two years, which after the affirmative action of the commissioners becomes an obligation imposed by the law and may not be disregarded.

You inquire as to the obligation to appropriate the same amount in the year 1919 as was appropriated in the year 1918, to-wit $1,500. It is noted that the statute provides that the county must raise at least $1,000 for one year "and shall give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of the Ohio State University that a like sum shall be raised for a second year," etc.

I am of the opinion that the term "like sum" which fixes the extent of performance to which the commissioners become obligated, has reference to the preceding expression "at least $1,000," and that an appropriation of $1,000 is a compliance with the purport and mandate of the statute.

You also make a query as to the five year term of co-operation in the employment of the county agent in reference to the case presented. This provision is found in section 9921-5 which authorizes a referendum by the electors of the county for the purpose of directing and requiring the commissioners to co-operate with the state in the employment of the county agent, in case the commissioners fail to act voluntarily in the matter, and in this connection it is provided:

"After having established this county agent work in any county, the county commissioners of such county shall continue to make such annual appropriations for said work as the trustees of the Ohio State University may direct, not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars annually, for a period of five years."

This provision is so obviously more drastic and so essentially different from that provided in the statute above considered in connection with the voluntary action of the commissioners that I have no trouble in reaching the conclusion that it relates only to cases where the agricultural extension work has been inaugurated in pursuance of a referendum vote, in which case the provision for a five year period as well as the provision delegating to the trustees of Ohio State University the authority to determine the amount "not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars annually" which shall be appropriated by the county commissioners are a substitute for the provisions of section 9921-2 G. C. which govern in case of voluntary action by the commissioners.

You are therefore advised that in the case of a voluntary action on the part of the county commissioners, the statute contemplates an obligation to appropriate not less than $1,000 annually for a term of not less than two years.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN CORPORATION—PROPORTION OF AUTHORIZED CAPITAL STOCK REPRESENTED BY PROPERTY USED AND BUSINESS DONE IN THIS STATE BECOMES LARGER IN AMOUNT WHEN COMPARED WITH PROPORTION STATED IN LAST STATEMENT FILED —HOW FEE DETERMINED.

Whenever the proportion of the authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation represented by property used and business done in this state becomes larger in amount than it has been, when compared with the proportion stated in the last statement filed with the Secretary of State, the company must file an additional statement and pay a fee upon the amount of the increase in proportion, as required by section 185 G. C.; and in determining whether the proportion has been increased, the only statements to be considered are the last one filed with the Secretary of State and the new one which it is proposed to file.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date with respect to the rule to be followed by your office in computing the fee to be paid by a foreign corporation under section 185 G. C., was duly received, and reads as follows:

> "Kindly give me the rule that should be followed by this office in computing the fee for a foreign corporation under section 185 of the General Code of Ohio.
> For example: If an organization has filed several applications for increase under the above section what proportion should be used for giving said company credit for fee heretofore paid? Should the original proportion be used or should the proportion of the last increase filed be used, or should the sum of the original proportion, together with all proportions of increases filed be used in giving said organization credit for the fee heretofore paid?"

Section 185 G. C., referred to in your letter provides that:

> "A corporation which has filed its statement and paid the fee prescribed by the preceding two sections and which thereafter shall increase the proportion of its capital stock, represented by property used and business done in this state, shall file within thirty days after such increase an additional statement with the Secretary of State, and pay a fee of one-tenth of one per cent upon the increase of its authorized capital stock represented by property owned and business transacted in this state."

The statement referred to in the first clause of the statute is the initial statement required by section 183 G. C., to be filed with the Secretary of State by foreign corporations before doing business in this state, setting forth, among other things, the proportion of the capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in Ohio; and the fee referred to is the fee of one-tenth of one per cent upon the proportion of the company's authorized capital stock represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in this state, to be not less than $10 in any case.

In 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, page 1768, it was correctly said with reference to the foregoing section, that:

> "As the section explicitly provides, the fee is to be computed not upon the amount of the authorized capital stock, represented by property owned and business transacted in this state as increased, but upon the increase itself. This means that whenever the 'proportion' of the authorized capital stock of a company represented by its property and business in this state * * * becomes larger than it has been, an additional statement shall be filed and a fee shall be paid, based not upon the new 'proportion,' but upon the difference in amount between such new 'proportion' and the 'proportion' upon which the initial compliance fee, or the last supplementary compliance fee may have been based."

The first proportion, and therefore the starting point in determining whether or not there has been an increase in the proportion of the company's capital stock represented by property used and business done in this state within the meaning of section 185 G. C., is the proportion contained in the statement filed by the company with the Secretary of State under section 183 G. C. at the time it seeks admission to do business in this state. Thereafter, and as often as the company shall have increased the proportion of its capital stock represented by property used and business done in this state, just so often must an additional statement be filed and a fee paid on the amount of the increase.

In determining whether or not an additional statement is required to be filed and a fee paid under section 185 G. C. the following rule should be adopted:

Determine the present proportion of the company's capital stock represented by property used and business done in Ohio from the additional statement which the company is proposing to file, and if the proportion therein stated is greater in amount than the proportion stated in the last statement filed with the Secretary of State (whether such last statement be the initial or an additional statement), then the new additional statement should be filed and a fee paid upon the increase in such proportion. If there has been no increase over the amount of the last proportion, then the filing of an additional statement is not required.

In other words, the only statements that need be considered by you in computing the fees to be paid under section 185 G. C. is the last statement which was filed in your office by the foreign corporation, and the new statement which the company is proposing to file.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX LAW—LIFE INSURANCE POLICY—BENEFICIARY'S INTEREST NOT TAXABLE SUCCESSION—INSURANCE POLICY PAYABLE TO ESTATE OF INSURED TAXABLE—WHEN PROCEEDS OF POLICY PAYABLE TO ONE BENEFICIARY DURING HIS LIFE AND THEREAFTER TO ANOTHER, DEATH OF FIRST BENEFICIARY DOES NOT GIVE RISE TO TAXABLE SUCCESSION AS AGAINST SECOND BENEFICIARY—WHEN SAME IS TAXABLE SUCCESSION.

1. The beneficiary's interest in a life insurance policy payable to such beneficiary is not a taxable succession under the inheritance tax law.

2. If an insurance policy is payable to the estate of the insured the successions thereto are taxable under the inheritance tax law; but the insurance company may pay the proceeds of the policy to the executor or administrator without notifying the Tax Commission and retaining a sufficient amount thereof to pay the inheritance tax.

3. When the proceeds of the policy are according to its terms payable to one beneficiary during his life and thereafter to another, the death of the first beneficiary does not give rise to a taxable succession as against the second beneficiary.

If, however, the proceeds of the policy are according to its terms payable to the estate of the insured or to the estate of the beneficiary after the death of the latter, then the successions occurring through the estate of such second decedent constitute "property within this state" which is taxable under the inheritance tax law, if such second decedent was a resident of this state, or if it is necessary for the personal representatives entitled to enforce the claim to resort to the courts of this state for the purpose of enforcing it. Such necessity would seem to arise only in the event that the insurance company was organized under the laws of Ohio and did business in no other state. No other fact, such as the residence of the successor, would be sufficient to subject the succession to taxation under the laws of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have requested the opinion of this department upon the following questions relative to the interpretation of the inheritance tax law:

"1. Life insurance policies are frequently written 'payable on receipt of due proof at the death of the insured to Mary Doe if living at the death of the insured, otherwise to the executors, administrators or assigns of the insured.' The law levies a tax on succession by deed, grant sale, assignment or gift (See Sec. 5332-3). In your opinion does the succession to a beneficiary under a policy of life insurance fall within the terms of this section? If so, in connection with insurance payable to a beneficiary or to the estate of the insured under a policy containing the above quoted beneficiary provision, is the company required to retain the tax, or to notify the tax commission or the county auditor of the payment?

2. Under the provisions of the policy contracts, sums payable at the death of the policy holder are frequently left with the company to be paid in installments to the beneficiary. In the event of the death of the beneficiary any balance of such sums remaining unpaid may be payable, under the terms of the contract, either to the estate of the insured, or to the estate of the beneficiary, or to a third person. Will you please advise us whether, in your opinion, such sums passing on the death of the beneficiary are under the provisions of sections 5331 and 5332 to be deemed 'intangible property'; and if so, are they to be deemed 'property within this state?'

First—If passing on the death of a non-resident of Ohio to a non-resident of Ohio.

Second—If passing on the death of a non-resident of Ohio to a resident of Ohio.

Third—If passing on the death of a resident of Ohio to a non-resident of Ohio."

In the opinion of this department the accrual of a right of action in behalf of the beneficiary of a life insurance policy against the company on account of the death of the assured, is not a taxable succession under the inheritance tax law. Section 5332 G. C. as amended in that act, mentions the successions taxable thereunder. Summarizing its provisions it appears that the following are the taxable successions:

(1) By will or intestacy.

(2) By gift in contemplation of death or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at death.

(3) By the exercise of a power of appointment or failure to exercise it.

(4) By the accrual of the right of survivorship in case of jointly held property.

(5) By the extinction of a prior interest or charge determinable by death or at a period ascertainable by reference to death.

Obviously life insurance does not come under any of these headings unless it be that of gift, etc. The following is a full quotation of this part of section 5332 G. C.:

"3. When the succession is to property from a resident or to property within this state from a non-resident by deed, grant, sale, assignment or gift, made without a valuable consideration substantially equivalent in money or money's worth to the full value of such property:

(a) In contemplation of the death of the grantor, vendor, assignor, or donor, or

(b) Intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after such death."

The succession must take place as to property which passes from a person to the successor by a stipulated mode. This is not the case with a life insurance policy payable to a beneficiary. The assured does not give, grant, assign or sell any part of his property to the beneficiary. He makes a contract with the insurance company whereby in the event of his death, the insurance company agrees to pay to the beneficiary. The assured never had the right of action which the beneficiary has upon the happening of his death, and therefore that right of action does not pass from the decedent to the beneficiary, either at death or at any other time. In fact, the only thing which passes to the beneficiary is a thing which has no existence until the death occurs.

It is true that the beneficiary may have a vested interest in the policy to the extent that in the absence of any clause in the policy reserving the right so to do, the assured may not change the beneficiary without the consent of the latter when there is an insurable interest on the part of the beneficiary in the life of the insured. So also in such case the beneficiary has the right to keep up the premiums on the policy, though the assured has defaulted but this is because of the insurable interest on the part of the beneficiary in the life of the assured.

Tyler v. Treasurer L. R. A. 1917D, 633, and Note.
Matter of Parsons, 117 App. Div. (N. Y.) 321.
Matter of Elting 140 N. Y. S. 238.

It is otherwise if the policy is payable to the estate at the time of the death. Then it becomes a part of the estate and is something which the testator disposes of or in case of intestacy something which passes by the intestate laws of the state.

It follows that the policy quoted in your first question would afford ground for the imposition of the inheritance tax only in the event that its proceeds should become a part of the estate of the assured. In that event you further inquire whether it would be the duty of the insurance company to retain the tax or to notify the tax commission or the county auditor of the payment. In the opinion of this department it would not be the duty of the insurance company to do so if the company is subject to the laws of Ohio.

Section 5348-2 of the new inheritance tax law provides:

> "No * * corporation * * or other institution * * having in possession or in control or custody * * assets or property belonging to or standing in the joint names of a decedent * * shall deliver or transfer the same to any person whatsoever whether in a representative capacity or not, * * without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any taxes * *, and unless notice * * be served upon the tax commission * *."

As previously pointed out, the insurance company has no assets or property belonging to the decedent. It merely owes a debt to the decedent's estate. This section is not broad enough in my opinion to apply to all debtors of the decedent's estate and to prevent them from paying to the administrator amounts due from them to the estate. In other words the phrase "assets or property" does not in the opinion of this department include debts. At the instant of death the right of action on the policy in favor of the estate is an asset of the estate—not of the insurance company; as to the latter it is a liability. The payment of a chose in action by the debtor is not the transfer of assets belonging to the creditor. For this reason the last part of your first question is answered in the negative.

Coming now to your second question it is to be observed that what has been said in answer to your first question makes it clear that the payment of the installments to the beneficiary by the company does not constitute a succession to property taxable under the act, as far as the relation between the beneficiary and the deceased assured is concerned.

However, a new question arises, namely, as to whether the payment over after the death of the first beneficiary to the estate of the decedent, or to a third person constitutes a taxable succession. It can come under none of the headings of section 5332 G. C. unless it be the last heading thereof, viz.:

> "When any property shall pass subject to any charge, estate or interest determinable by the death of any person or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase accruing to any person, institution or corporation, on the extinction and determination of such charge estate or interest shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, in the same manner as if the person, institution or corporation beneficiary entitled thereto had then acquired such increase from the person from whom the title to their respective estates or interests is derived."

In the opinion of this department this part of the statute does not apply. It will be observed that in order for it to have application property must pass subject to a charge or estate. In the case of an insurance contract of the kind described in your second question there are merely successive beneficiaries, the rights of each one of whom are fixed by the same instrument, viz.: the original policy or some election referable thereto. The death of one such successive beneficiary does not cause any property to pass to the next in succession. True, by that event the rights of the deceased beneficiary terminate and new rights arise in his successor as beneficiary. But by this process no rights which formerly devolved upon the first of them devolve upon the second. The situation is rather that separate and distinct rights arise than that a single right devolves by succession upon a new person. Thus, if at the time of the death of the first beneficiary a payment then due had not been made the personal representatives or legatees of the first beneficiary would be entitled to that payment, and not the second beneficiary.

For these reasons, then it is the opinion of this department, as heretofore stated, that no tax is imposed by the new inheritance tax law upon the accrual of rights in secondary beneficiaries under policy contracts like those referred to in your second question.

Of course if the policy contract is such that the estate of the insured or the estate of the beneficiary becomes entitled to the remaining installments or payments the law would apply and such rights of action would constitute property of the estate of the insured or that of the original beneficiary, as the case might be. In such event, the remaining points suggested in your second question would arise. Clearly, if the person whose estate is entitled to the remaining payments, be that person the insured or the original beneficiary, was a resident of Ohio as described in the third case put by you, the right of action would be "property within this state" because its succession would be directly subject to and governed by the law of this state with respect to the administration of the estates of deceased persons. This would be true whether the ultimate successor to the property through the estate in question were a resident of this state or not. In short, the situation would be the same as in the case of any other chose in action belonging to the estate in question.

The other two cases stated in your second question are those wherein the person whose estate receives the benefit of the deferred payments is a non-resident of Ohio. The first of them supposes also that the ultimate successor is a non-resident of this state. Under these circumstances, the only ground for holding that the claim constitutes "property within this state" would be that the contract was either made in this state or was with a company organized under the laws of this state. It is true that paragraph 3 of section 5331 uses very broad language, as follows:

> " 'Within this state', * * * when predicated of intangible property, (means) that the succession thereto is, for any purpose, subject to, or governed by the law of this state."

Such a theory would not be without the support of judicial authority. Thus, it has been held that ordinary debts due from residents to non-resident decedents are "property within the state" for purposes of inheritance taxation.

> People ex rel. Graff vs. Probate Court, 128 Minn. 371;
> Blackstone vs. Miller, 188 U. S. 189;
> Matter of Daly, 100 App. Div., 373;
> Affirmed 182 N. Y. 524.

However, in the face of these authorities the Court of Appeals of New York has held that the mere fact that the insurance company is a New York corporation is not sufficient to subject the matured claim under the insurance policy issued by it to the inheritance tax law of New York when the decedent was a non-resident of that state.

> Matter of Gordon 186 N. Y. 471;
> Matter of Rhoades 190 N. Y. 525.

Without quoting from the Gordon case it is sufficient to observe that the other cases mentioned were distinguished upon the ground that in all of them the creditor was under the actual necessity of coming to the taxing state for the purpose of enforcing his claim; whereas in the case of the insurance company then before the court the personal representatives of the policy holder could obtain judgment against it in the foreign state and there get satisfaction, inasmuch as the company had both subjected itself to the laws of that state for jurisdictional purposes and placed on deposit there sufficient assets to guarantee the payment of all claims against it due to citizens of that state.

It is the opinion of this department that the answer to the question now under discussion depends upon whether or not the company issuing the policy is doing business elsewhere than in Ohio, and particularly in the state where the personal representatives of the decedent reside. If so, the claim is not "property within this state" on the principle laid down in the case last cited; if not, the claim is "property within this state" for the purpose of the inheritance tax law upon the principles of the other decisions cited; that is to say, the succession to that property is subject to the law of this state for the purpose of enforcement of the claim, and this is sufficient to bring it within the scope of the inheritance tax law.

If the company is not an Ohio company and the decedent was not a resident of Ohio, it is the opinion of this department that no other fact could constitute a policy contract in the hands of the personal representatives of a decedent "property within the state." The contract might have been originally entered into in this state or otherwise referable to the laws of this state for its construction, but that would not give the courts of this state jurisdiction over its enforcement for any purpose nor jurisdiction over the administration of the estate. Nor would the fact that the ultimate successor might reside in this state be significant. In the first place, the claim itself in the single instance in which a tax could apply at all (viz.: where the proceeds of the policy become payable to the estate) would vest for remedial purposes in the executors or administrators of the decedent. In other words, the next of kin or residuary legatee could not directly enforce the claim. Therefore, the fact that he might reside in Ohio would of itself confer no jurisdiction upon the Ohio courts, much less necessitate recourse to those courts for the enforcement of the claim in his behalf. In the second place, it is true almost as a universal rule that the residence of the successor is an immaterial fact for the purposes of the inheritance tax law. It is the residence of the decedent which is in all cases material for that purpose, and not that of the successor.

For these reasons then, save in the hypothetical case stated, an insurance policy passing on the death of a non-resident of Ohio through his estate to a non-resident of Ohio or to a resident of Ohio would not be "property within this state."

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

Section 4210 in part provides that the members of the council

"shall elect * * * a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties * * * and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve two years."

Section 4213 prohibits the increasing or diminishing of the salary of a clerk or employe of the city council during the term for which he is elected or appointed. It may be observed that it is the salary of such clerk which may not be increased or diminished. The term "salary," as used in this connection, has been construed as meaning a certain definite fixed amount and not to include fees for services, the extent and time of perfomance of which are uncertain. The term "compensation" which may include a salary, is thus construed to be a broader term than salary. It must also be noted that for this inhibition to apply to a clerk, he must have a term or definite period of employment.

So far as the inhibitions of section 4213 may apply to the facts stated in your inquiry, without specific facts being stated, it may be said that if in the resolution electing the assistant clerk of council a salary for such assistants was fixed and his duties were also fixed in that resolution, so as to include those services performed under section 3818 G. C., then such assistant clerk's salary could not be increased or diminished during his term and if such facts exist, the answer to your first question must be in the negative.

On the other hand, if the council, acting under section 4210, which authorizes the election of an assistant clerk and the fixing of his duties and compensation, fixed a salary, but did not fix the duties of the assistant clerk under section 3818, a different conclusion will result.

Section 3818 in part provides:

"A notice of the passage of such resolution (improvement resolution) shall be served by the clerk of council or an assistant upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions."

From other facts stated in your letter, it is inferred that your questions relate to non-charter cities, to which this opinion is accordingly confined.

Under the terms of the section last quoted, the service of such notice is made the duty of the clerk or his assistant and council is powerless to charge any other office or employe with this duty. It may, however, appoint or designate a certain clerk or assistant clerk, as the person to serve them.

Section 4210 empowers council to fix the duties of the clerk and assistant clerk, but this section, construed with other sections imposing certain statutory duties upon the clerk, must be understood as if it read that "the members of council shall fix their duties in addition to those duties imposed by law."

In any event, whether the service be considered as a duty imposed by statute or by council under this section, it must be remembered that council alone has full authority to fix the compensation for the performance of both kinds of duties.

In the absence of further facts as to the contents of the resolution of the city council, fixing the duties and compensation of the assistant clerk, it is impossible to answer your question categorically. But in addition to the conditional answer above given, it may be added that if at the time council fixed the duties and compensation of the assistant clerk, it fixed a general salary and at the same time included in the duties of the assistant clerk the duty of serving the notices referred to in your question, then it would follow that the salary of the assistant clerk could not be increased or diminished during his term. This also is on the assumption that as to the form and manner of the resolution council proceeded according to law. The form of your question indicates that your bureau desires information also as to the amount which would be payable to the assistant under the resolution, if it is held to be a valid exercise of the municipal power. The resolution provides for the payment of the sum of 25c for each notice "written and served," and you inquire if the clerk may draw fees for writing the notice and an additional fee for serving the same.

This question must be answered by consideration of the terms of the resolution. The resolution provides not 25c for writing a notice and 25c for serving the same. This is not ambiguous and before the amount mentioned is payable, the notice must be written and served. To hold that the assistant clerk is entitled to a fee of 25c for writing and an additional fee of the same amount for serving the notice would be to construe the ordinance to read that he shall be entitled to 50c for each notice written and served. This construction would do violence to plainly expressed meaning of the resolution and cannot be adopted.

Therefore, this department is of the opinion that the assistant clerk is not entitled to additional fees for serving notices.

Your second inquiry questions the power of the city council to fix a per diem compensation for the clerk or his assistant under section 4210 G. C., supra. This section does not restrict the council in fixing such compensation to fixing it in any particular manner; in the exercise of its discretion it could fix a regular salary or a schedule of fees on what might be termed a "piece-work plan." The term compensation, as construed by the courts, includes the idea of a definite salary as well as fees for particular services. In view of the discretion vested in the council in this matter, no reason is apparent why it could not legally make a per diem compensation.

Your third question involves the legality of that part of the resolution of the council which sought to allow the assistant clerk his automobile expenses in serving such notices outside of the city of Marion.

It is the settled policy of this state, evidenced by numerous decisions of the supreme court, that compensation for public service can only be paid pursuant to laws authorizing such payment. (See opinion No. 85, dated March 1, 1919, directed to your bureau.) See also State vs. Maharry, 97 O. S., 272, where, after holding public money to be a public trust fund, the supreme court held:

> "Said trust fund can be disbursed only by clear authority of law."

The proper rule of construction, where the authority to expend public funds is in doubt, is plainly stated in the third syllabus of the case of State vs. Pierce, 96 O. S., 45, as follows:

> "3. In case of doubt as to the right of any administrative board to expend public monies under a legislative grant, such doubt must be resolved in favor of the public and against the grant of power."

True, the city council is not an administrative board, but in the matter involved in this opinion is exercising a delegated power, and it is suggested would be held to the same rule.

The allowance and payment of expenses to public employes stand on no different footing. In Richardson vs. State, 66 O. S., 111, the court say:

> "To make such expenses an additional burden on the public funds would require a plain and unequivocal provision of the statute. An intention to do so will not be inferred."

Again on page 113, speaking of the personal expenses of a county commissioner, it was observed:

> "It is a fair inference that if it had been intended to reimburse the commissioner for expenditures of his character, the legislature would have expressed that intention in plain terms. It is well settled that the compensation of public officers cannot be enlarged, by implication, beyond the terms of the statute."

Section 4210 authorizes the council to fix compensation for the clerk and assistant clerk of council. The word "compensation" is understood to mean that which the state pays the employe in consideration of a given service and does not ordinarily include expenses. The courts of this state have repeatedly held that clear authority must exist before officials' expenses may be paid by the state. It follows that the council is without authority to allow or fix, as a charge upon the public funds, anything in addition to that authorized by law, and that payment to the assistant clerk of his automobile expenses, in serving such notices, is illegal.

INHERITANCE TAX—PROBATE COURT WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO COMPEL RECORDATION OF CERTIFIED COPIES OF FOREIGN WILLS AND OF APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTORS OR ADMINISTRATORS AS A CONDITION PRECEDENT TO EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION OF NON-RESIDENTS UNDER SAID LAW.

Probate courts are without authority to compel the recordation in their offices of certified copies of foreign wills and of the appointment of executors or administrators, as a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction to determine the inheritance tax, in case of the estates of non-resident decedents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 4th enclosing a copy of your Form No. 1 which has been prescribed by the Commission for use solely in connecion with the determination as to the liability to inheritance tax of the succession to stock in Ohio corporations or other Ohio property where the same is part of the estate of a non-resident decedent.

You state that your practice is to have such petition prepared by the legal representatives (executor or administrator) of the estate and forwarded to the Commission, by whom the same is filed in the probate court of the county in which the corporation is located or in which the property may lie.

In this connection you make the following inquiry:

> "In the case of a decedent who died testate, must a certified copy of the will and of the appointment of the executor be filed and recorded in the court whose jurisdiction is invoked at the time of or prior to the exercise of such jurisdiction?

In the case of a decedent who died intestate, must a certified copy of the appointment of the administrator similarly be filed and recorded?"

There is nothing in the inheritance tax law requiring a foreign administrator or executor, as a condition of applying to the probate court of the proper county for the determination of the tax, to have a copy of the evidence of his official authority, including in the case of an executor a certified copy of the will, filed and recorded in such court. A certified copy of the will is, of course, necessary in case of testate successions, and such copy is provided for in the Commission's blank form as evidence to accompany the petition.

Foreign executors and administrators are entitled to "commence and prosecute an action or proceeding in any court in this state" in their capacity as such, "in like manner and under like restrictions, as a non-resident is permitted to sue." (Section 10769 G. C.)

It is true that a foreign will when offered for probate must be recorded; but I am aware of no authority in the probate court to compel a foreign executor to offer a will for probate as a condition of assessing the tax.

It is the opinion of this department that probate courts are without authority to compel the recordation in their offices of certified copies of foreign wills and of the appointment of executors or administrators, as a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction to determine the tax, in the case of the estates of non-resident decedents.

COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—WOMAN MAY BE LEGALLY APPOINTED TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

1. A county children's home established under sections 3077 G. C., et seq., is an institution established by a political subdivision of the state, involving the interests or care of children, within the meaning of Sec. 4 of Art. XV of the Constitution of Ohio.

2. By reason of said constitutional provision, a woman or women may be legally appointed to a board of trustees of a county children's home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

HON. WATSON H. GREGG, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of September 8 is at hand, reading thus:

"May a woman or women be legally appointed to a board of trustees of a children's home in Ohio? Please let me have your opinion on this matter right away. See section 3081, pertaining to the appointment of trustees."

It is assumed that your query relates to the board of trustees of a county children's home, established under authority of section 3077, et seq., G. C.

Section 3081 G. C., to which you refer, reads as follows:

"When the necessary site and buildings are provided by the county, the commissioners shall appoint a board of four trustees, as follows: One for one year, one for two years, one for three years, and one for four years, from the first Monday of March thereafter. Not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party. Annually thereafter on the first Monday of March, the county commissioners shall appoint one such trustee, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified."

While you do not expressly so state, it is probable that your query is occasioned by the provision in said section that:

"Not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party."

It is unnecessary, however, to give further consideraion to said language, in view of the provisions of Sec. 4 of Art. XV of the Constitution of Ohio, reading thus:

"No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivision thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both."

Relative to the question of who are "citizens," attention is called to Sec. 1 of Art. XIV of the Constitution of the United States, which says in part:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside."

That a county children's home is an institution esablished by a political subdivision of the state, and involves the interests or care of children, clearly appears from a reading of sections 3077 et seq. G. C. A detailed discussion of these sections is deemed unnecessary. Attention is called particularly to section 3089 G. C., which says:

"The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of eighteen years, of sound mind and not morally vicious and free from infectious or contagious diseases, who have resided in the county not less than one year, and for such other children under such age from other counties in the state where there is no home, as the trustees of such home and the persons or authority having the custody and control of such children, by contract agree upon, who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them. In no event shall a delinquent or incorrigible child, be committed to or be accepted by such home. If an inmate of such home is found to be incorrigible, he or she shall be brought before the juvenile court for further disposition. Parents or guardians of such children shall in all cases where able to do so, pay reasonable board for their children received in such children's home."

That the Supreme Court of Ohio regards the constitutional provision above quoted (Sec. 4, Art. XV, Ohio Constitution) self-executing, appears from the case of State ex rel. McNamara vs. Campbell, 94 O. S. 403 and also from the case of State ex rel. Taylor vs. French, 96 O. S. 172. In the last mentioned case the court at p. 180 says:

> "* * the amendment adds a proviso 'that women who are citizens may be appointed as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivision thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.' The proviso expressly concerns the appointment of women to the places named, and authorizes the appointment of women who are not electors."

You are therefore advised that a woman or women may be legally appointed to a board of trustees of a county children's home.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—WHERE CORPORATION TAKES SUBSCRIPTION TO ITS STOCK ON BLANK FORM TO WHICH IS ATTACHED NEGOTIABLE PROMISSORY NOTE—WHETHER OR NOT SUCH LEGAL CLAIMS SHOULD BE LISTED AS CREDITS TO BE TAXED—ALSO WHETHER STOCK SUBSCRIPTION IF NOT ACCOMPANIED BY PROMISSORY NOTE, IS TAXABLE CREDIT AGAINST COMPANY.

Where a corporation takes subscriptions to its stock on a blank form to which is attached a negotiable promissory note which the subscriber is also required to sign, and it is apparent from the provisions of both the note and the subscription that the former is not accepted in payment of the latter, the claim for the unpaid subscription constitutes the only taxable asset of the corporation and constitutes "personal property" from which its debts may not be deducted.

If the note should be detached and negotiated, the only effect of such transaction for taxation purposes would be to diminish or wipe out the taxable asset by crediting on the subscription contract the amount received by the corporation through the negotiation of the note.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of two letters from the Commission, one under date of August 16th enclosing copy of a stock subscription blank and copy of a promissory note used by a certain corporation in taking subscriptions to its capital stock, and requesting the advice of this department as to whether the promissory notes taken in this way are "legal claims and demands which should be listed by the company in determining the amount of its credits to be taxed;" and also "whether the stock subscription itself, if not accompanied by the promissory note, should be taxed as a credit against the company;" the other letter of date August 20th calls attention to the opinion of my predecessor found at page 714 of the Opinions of Attorney General for the year 1918, which the Commission states was overlooked when the opinion was requested. In connection with this information the Commission requests the advice of this department as to whether or not the previous opinion is agreed to.

The previous opinion thus mentioned held in effect that unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a private corporation and sums due under executory contracts for the purchase of such stock made with the corporation do not consitute "credits" of the corporation from which its debts may be deducted, but constitute "personal property" of the corporation from which its debts may not be deducted. This opinion was based upon the definitions of the term "personal property" found in section 5325 of the General Code and the term "credits" found in section 5327 thereof. The one definition constitutes "the capital stock" of a corporation "personal property;" the other excludes from the debts which may be deducted by an individual taxpayer in making up his taxable "credits" "an unpaid subscription to the capital stock of a joint stock company." It was concluded that though such unpaid subscriptions are naturally debts of the subscriber and credits of the corporations, they have been otherwise classified for property taxation purposes, just as money secured by mortgage on real estate, bonds and money on deposit subject to payment on demand, all of which broadly considered are "credits," have been otherwise classified for such purposes.

With this conclusion and the reasoning in support of it I agree. The previous opinion, however, does not afford a complete answer to the question now submitted. In this case the corporation has not been content with the legal claim or chose in action arising on the making of an ordinary contract of subscription to its capital stock, but has in addition taken a promissory note of similar tenor, thus adding to the primary claim the element of negotiability.

The following is a quotation of the essential parts of the instruments thus employed:

"STOCK SUBSCRIPTION

"I hereby subscribe for and agree to take.....shares of the capital stock of.....company and agree to pay therefor.....per share, payable as follows: Twenty-five per cent. (25%) with this subscription and twenty-five per cent. (25%) quarterly until paid in full.

The certificate for the above stock shall be issued by * * when payment in full of this subscription is made.

No agreements or stipulations other than those printed hereon shall be binding upon the company. * * * The damages accruing upon a breach of this contract by the subscriber being difficult of ascertainment, it is agreed that twenty per cent. (20%) of his subscription shall, upon default by the subscriber, be retained by the company as liquidated damages, and that the stock covered by the said subscription may be issued and sold at public or private sale and the proceeds applied to the payment of any balance due upon said subscription or said note; any overplus after defraying all expenses of said sale to be returned to the subscriber. * *"

NOTE

For value received, I hereby promise to pay to The.....

company, or order, the following sums of money at the times herein specified, to wit:

$..... .....19....
$..... .....19....
$..... .....19....
$..... .....19....

with interest after maturity at 6% per annum, payable semi-annually.

Payable at the office of The.....company.

In case of failure to pay any installment of this note when due, this entire note shall become immediately due and payable without further action or demand on the part of the holder of the same, and I hereby make, constitute and appoint the president of The..... company, my true and lawful agent and attorney, hereby giving and granting to said agent full power and authority to issue and endorse said stock certificate in my name, for the purpose of effecting said sale, assignment and transfer.

It further appears that when executed the stock subscription and the note are on a single sheet of paper, but separated from each other by perforations so that the note can be detached from the stock subscription.

The first question which arises is as to whether or not at the time of the execution of these instruments the note constitutes payment of the stock subscription. The general rule of law relative to payment which obtains in Ohio and most of the states is to the effect that the giving of a negotiable note is not regarded as payment either of a pre-existing debt or of one contemporaneously created, unless the intention to treat it as a payment affirmatively appears. Here there is nothing to overthrow this presumption; but on the contrary it is very clear from the recitals of both instruments that the subscription contract is to remain undischarged, notwithstanding the giving of the note. It is therefore unnecessary to investigate the question as to whether or not an Ohio corporation may lawfully receive payment in satisfaction of subscriptions to its capital stock by taking promissory notes.

It is clear therefore that in the inception of such a transaction the corporation possesses what might appear to be two distinct claims—one on the subscription contract and the other on the note. Yet there is but one debt or primary obligation subsisting between the parties, namely, that arising by virtue of the subscription. At the outset at least the note is a collateral undertaking apparently intended to secure the performance of the principal obligation.

Now it is believed to be clear that for taxation purposes the corporation would not be required to list the value of the subscription contract as personal property and also to list the value of the note considered as an independent chose in action among its taxable credits; for between the parties the note is not an independent chose in action; it is merely a negotiable promise to pay the original subscription and any defense available to the subscriber on the subscription contract would also be available to him on the note, as between the parties.

It follows from this that when the corporation has both the note and the subscription contract in the case of a given subscription the note is to be ignored for taxation purposes and the asset possessed by the corporation treated as personal property on the principles laid down in the former opinion.

The commission also inquires, however, regarding the course to be pursued when the corporation retains the subscription contract but has parted with the note. The same answer is to be given to this question, qualified, however, by the statement that if the note has been negotiated by the corporation for a valuable consideration the proceeds of such negotiation should be credited on the subscription contract. This would be the right of the subscriber and it would follow that pro tanto his subscription contract would be discharged and his liability on such contract limited to the difference, if any, between the amount received by the company through the negotiation of the note plus his other payments and the total amount of the subscription. This, difference, to the extent the claim might be collectible, would, as assets of the company, constitute a part of its personal property for the purpose of taxation.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—AMENDMENT OF SECTIOIN 1465-79 G. C. INCREASING MAXIMUM WEEKLY PAYMENTS IN CASE OF TEMPORARY TOTAL DISABILITY—NOT APPLICABLE TO INJURIES RECEIVED PREVIOUS TO DATE SAID AMENDMENT BECAME EFFECTIVE —LIMITATION IN SECTION 1465-72a G. C. NOT APPLICABLE UNTIL LAW BECAME EFFECTIVE.

1. The amendment of section 1465-79 G. C. which raises the maximum weekly payments in case of temporary total disability from $12.00 to $15.00 does not apply to injuries received previous to the date that said amendment became effective.

2. The limitation found in section 1465-72a G. C. does not apply to injuries received previous to the date that said section became effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First, the amendment to section 1465-79 raises the maximum weekly rate of compensation from $12.00 to $15.00, but does not specifically state whether it will apply only to injuries actually received on and after August 14, 1919, or whether it will relate and apply to injuries sustained prior to the above mentioned date where disability continued beyond said date. We should also like to have your opinion as to whether such amendment will apply to cases of injury sustained prior to August 14, 1919, which may be re-opened after that date for the allowance of further compensation.
> We should also like to have your opinion on section 1465-72a, which contains no provision as to whether it will cover cases of injury sustained more than two years prior to August 14, 1919, or whether it will only apply to cases of injury which arise on and after August 14, 1919, and in which no report is made until more than two years after that date."

Your first inquiry relates to the amendment of section 1465-79 G. C. (108 O. L., 313), which is as follows:

> "In case of temporary disability, the employe shall receive sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of his average weekly wages so long as such disability is total, not to exceed a maximum of fifteen dollars per week, and not less than a minimum of five dollars per week, unless the employe's wages shall be less than five dollars per week, in which event he shall receive compensation equal to his full wages; but in no case to continue for more than six years from the date of the injury, nor to exceed three thousand, seven hundred and fifty dollars."

Section 26 G. C. is pertinent to this question, and reads as follows:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

In considering your first question in connection with this section, injuries received previous to the date the amendment of section 1465-79 became effective would be divided into two classes, to-wit:

> (1) Those injuries which were received prior to the date that said amendment went into effect and for which application for compensation had been made prior thereto.
> (2) Those injuries which were received prior to said date but for which no application had been made to you for compensation until after the date that said amendment became effective.

Section 26 G. C. just quoted, however, clearly provides that in either case this amendment shall in no manner affect the rights of the parties unless so specifically expressed by the legislature at the time the amendment was passed.

An examination of the act fails to disclose any such provisions and, therefore, in all cases of injury previous to the date that the amendment became effective compensation must be based entirely upon the law in effect on the date of injury, and the amendment will in nowise affect the amount of compensation due them. This is also true regardless of the time that their claim is considered by you, and it is true even though some of the disability is suffered after the said amendment became effective. This is because their rights are based upon the law in force at the time of the injury, which is the time when their right of action or to receive compensation accrues.

Relative to your second inquiry, as to the effect of supplementing section 1465-72 G. C. by adding section 1465-72a, I find that this supplemental section is as follows:

> "In all cases of injury or death, claims for compensation shall be forever barred, unless, within two years after the injury or death, application shall have been made to the Industrial Commission of Ohio or to the employer in the event such employer has elected to pay compensation direct."

We must again consider section 26 G. C. as quoted above in connection with this inquiry, and in addition thereto I find that the courts have passed upon the question of limitations of action. Previous to the time at which this amendment became effective there was no limitation at all placed by statute upon the time when an injured party might make application for disabilities sustained on account of an injury received in the course of and arising out of his employment. This amendment requires the application to be made to you, or to the employer in case the employer is carrying his own risk, within two years after the injury or death. I find that the authorities are unanimous in holding that a limitation is not placed upon an accrued right of a party by limiting the time in which such an action may be commenced.

> "Where defendant in an action to enforce stockholder's statutory liability died, pending suit, in October, 1895, and, without revivor in the name of the executor of deceased, appointed in October, 1895, a judgment was taken against deceased defendant May 20, 1899, an action by a receiver appointed to collect the judgments rendered in such stockholder's action, was filed May 16, 1900, against the heirs of such deceased judgment debtor, is within Sec. 6113, Rev. Stat., as it existed October, 1895, providing a four-year limitation within which suits might be brought against an executor, and not within the amended statute of April 8, 1898, reducing the limitation to two years."
> 1st Syllabus—Bevitt, Receiver vs. Diehl, 12 Ohio Dec., 383.

The right of an employe to file a claim was not limited to any period of time previous to the amendment. The new act places a limitation thereon. If this could be made to apply to injuries sustained previous to the date this amendment became effective, it might entirely deprive him of any right for the reason that he may have been injured more than two years previous to the date that the amendment became effective and all rights thus destroyed. The courts have held, however, that an amendment did not limit this existing right if the legislature did not attempt to do so at the time of enacting the legislation, which they did not do in this act.

I also find:

> "The right to bring and maintain such action (to recover for an injury) 'within four years,' having accrued before that date, under existing law, became a vested right, and is not curtailed, abridged, or in any way affected by subsequent legislation, unless it is remedial, and not then unless express provision therefor is contained in the amending act."
> 2d Syllabus—Shuman vs. Drayton, 14 O. C. C., 328.

And also.

> "Where rights have fully vested under a section these rights are not affected by a repeal of the section."
> State ex rel. vs. Purcell, 31 O. S., 352, at p. 358.

I also note that your letter refers to "August 14th" as the date upon which these amendments and supplements became effective. I find that these were a part of House Bill No. 424, which was filed in the office of the Secretary of State on May 16, 1919.

Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution provides:

"No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided."

The term "except as herein provided" refers to emergency laws passed by the legislature. House Bill No. 424 was not an emergency act. In computing the time you cannot include the day it was filed with the secretary of state, and it must remain there ninety days before it becomes effective. Therefore, this act did not become a law until August 15, 1919.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CLERK OF COUNCIL—SALARY MAY NOT BE INCREASED OR DIMINISHED DURING TERM OF EMPLOYMENT.

The salary of the clerk of the city council may not be increased or diminished during the term of his employment, as such clerk, by reason of the amendment to section 486-8 (106 O. L., 404) is placed in the unclassified service and the inhibitions of section 4213 G. C. still apply to such clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "May the general salary of the clerk of council be increased or diminished during his term?"

Your inquiry not indicating that your question arises in a charter city, it is inferred, and this opinion is based on that inference, that your question relates to increasing or diminishing the general salary of the clerk of council in a non-charter municipality. Sections 4210, 4213 and 486-8 et seq. G. C., (106 O. L., 404) are pertinent.

Section 4210 G. C. provides that within a certain time the members of council shall elect

> "a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve two years."

At this point it may be observed that the members of the council are here authorized to fix the duties and compensation of the clerk, and that his term is definitely fixed for two years. Section 4213 contains, among other things, this inhibition:

> "The salary of any * * * clerk or employe * * * shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed."

The application of this statute may be said to rest upon three conditions, viz.: 1. Is the person a clerk or employe? 2. Does he or she have a salary? 3. Is he or she elected or appointed for a definite term?

The clerk of the council is an employe and is specifically named as a clerk. Under section 4210, supra, council is authorized not only to fix a salary for the clerk, but is authorized to fix the compensation, which is a broader term than salary. See Gobrecht vs. Cincinnati, 41 O. S., 72, where it is held:

> "Salary is compensation, but, under the section quoted (section 20, article II of the Constitution) compensation is not, in every instance, salary."

In numerous Ohio cases it has been held that where the salary fixing body has in fact fixed no salary for an officer, the same may be fixed during his term of office, but that is not involved in your question, as the change of a salary presupposes the existence of a salary which can be changed, and in the case under discussion it is assumed that council has fixed a general salary for the clerk of council. So that we see the first two conditions above stated are established and if these two sections were the only law on this subject, no difficulty would be encountered in concluding that under section 4210 a definite term of two years is fixed by the statute itself and it would follow that the salary of the clerk could not be changed during the term for which he was appointed or elected.

However, after the enactment of these sections, section 10 of article 15 of the Constitution of Ohio was adopted. This is known as the civil service amendment and provides:

> "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable, by competitive examination. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."

This amendment is not self-executing and in 1913 (103 O. L., 698) the legislature, pursuant to its mandate, passed sections 486-1 et seq., providing for the civil service required by the amendment.

These sections continued in force until 1915, when they were amended in 106 O. L., 400. Section 486-1 in part now provides:

> "The term 'civil service' includes all positions of trust or employment in the service of the state and the * * * cities thereof. The term 'classified service' signifies the competitive classified civil service of the * * * cities * * *."

Section 486-8 in part provides.

> "The civil service of * * * the several * * * cities * * * shall be divided into the unclassified service and the classified service.
>
> "(a) The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions, which shall not be included in the classified service, and shall be exempt from all examinations required in this act. * * *
>
> "5. All officers and employes elected or appointed by either or both branches of the general assembly, and such employes of the city council as are engaged in legislative duties." * * * * * * *
> "(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the * * * cities * * * not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class and the unskilled labor class."

It may be noted that appointments to and employment in the classified service shall, as provided in section 486-2, "be made only according to merit and fitness to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examination." So that employment in the unclassified service may be said not to be affected by the civil service act.

It is also to be noted that the repealing section of the amendment, like the original act, contains this provision:

> "All other acts or parts of acts, inconsistent with this act, be and the same are hereby repealed."

What effect has sections 486-1 et seq. upon sections 4210 and 4213 with reference to the term of the city clerk? The answer to this question determines the power of the council to increase or diminish the salary of the clerk of council, because if the last named sections remain unaffected by the civil service law, the clerk still has a term during which his general salary cannot be changed and, on the other hand, if the effect of the civil service law is to impliedly amend section 4210, in this that the clerk holds his office or employment during good behavior under the civil service, he has no definite or fixed term and it would follow that his salary may be increased or diminished without violating section 4213.

In an opinion found in Vol. 1, Attorney-General's Opinions for 1913, page 722, the attorney-general pointed out:

> "The general rule is that a later general law does not repeal an earlier special or local law. But there are many exceptions to the general rule."

On the same page it was pointed out that there were many exceptions to this general rule in this language:

> "In discussing this rule it is stated at page 1087 of volume 36 of Cyc.:
> "'* * * Where the clear general intent of the legislature is to establish a uniform system throughout the state, the presumption must be that local acts are intended to be repealed. So also where an act is passed to carry into effect a general amendatory provision of the constitution, all acts inconsistent therewith, although local, are repealed.'"

Before a later law may be said to impliedly repeal or amend an earlier law, there must be an irreconcilable repugnancy or such a revision of the whole subject matter of the former law as to clearly indicate the legislative intention to supersede the former law by the enactment of the latter.

After considering the effect of the adoption of section 10, article 15 (supra.), and the scope of the civil service legislation, no difficulty is encountered in concluding that the enactment of the civil service laws was intended to carry into effect the constitutional mandate as a substitute for former general laws in the matter of employment in the public service.

Section 4210 is therefore impliedly amended unless the civil service act specifically includes the clerk of city council in the unclassified service.

This narrows our inquiry down to the determination of the status of the clerk of city council in the civil service law.

Under the law prior to its amendment in 1915, the attorney-general, in the opinion above quoted, held that the clerk of city council was in the classified service, holding that under the law as it then existed, the clerk was not specifically included in the unclassified service under paragraph 7 of section 486-8. However, after the rendition of that opinion this section was amended to include in the unclassified service "such employes of the city council as are engaged in legislative duties."

The clerk is an employe of the council, but are his duties such as may be held to be legislative duties? The answer to this question is made more difficult by the fact that the clerk has what may be called two kinds of duties, viz., (1) those duties imposed by statute; for example, 3818 G. C., and may be termed statutory duties, and (2) those duties with which the clerk is charged by action of council under section 4210, which authorizes council to select clerks and other employes of council and "fix their duties, * * * and compensation," which may be termed additional duties.

With regard to the latter kind of duties, no definite opinion could be given as to their "legislative" quality without knowing exactly what duties the council had fixed in this regard. As to the former, however, numerous statutes impose certain definite duties upon the clerk, an instance of which may be cited in section 3818, which requires the clerk to serve copies of resolutions for improvements upon land owners, to show that the clerk of the city council is charged with certain duties incident to the exercise of council's legislative function.

The general assembly is conclusively presumed to have known that the city council is the municipal law-making body and, as such, could not delegate its law-making power to its clerk, and the use of the term "legislative duties" must be construed as to mean clerical duties pertaining to and in connection with the legislative function of council. It is also not without significance that this provision in section 486-8, as amended, immediately follows the inclusion and designation of employes of the general assembly in the unclassified service, and considering the effect of these existing statutes imposing statutory duties upon the clerk of the city council, in connection with the enactment of municipal legislation, the general assembly used the term "legislative duties," meaning to include the clerk of the city council in the unclassified service.

It follows from this conclusion that section 4210 is not impliedly amended or repealed by sections 486-1 et seq. and that the clerk of the city council has a definite term. The third condition for the application of section 4213, as above stated—a definite term—is therefore fulfilled and the inhibition of this section applies.

You are therefore advised that the general salary of a clerk of the city council may not be increased or diminished during his employment.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS--FORFEITURE OF CONTRACTS—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED BY STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT—SECTION 1209 G. C. DISCUSSED.

1. The form of section 1209 G. C. that was in effect at the date of the State Highway Commissioner's granting state aid and ordering the making of plans for an improvement under sections 1193 to 1223 G. C., governs in the matter of removing a contractor from, and completing the work under, a contract for such an improvement.

2. The form of section 1209 G. C. that was in effect at the date of the State Highway Commissioner's entering into a contract for maintenance or repair by virtue of section 1224 G. C., governs in the matter of removing a contractor from, and completing the work under, a contract for such maintenance and repair.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

HON. A. R. TAYLOR, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A recent communication, signed by your predecessor, Hon. Clinton Cowen, reads as follows:

"We have a number of contracts which were let between the dates of June 28, 1917, and August 26, 1919, on which we anticipate that it will be necessary for us to take over the work under section 1209 of the General Code of Ohio.

"I respectfully ask for your opinion as to whether the procedure to be followed in completing this work after forfeiture of contract will be in accordance with the provisions of section 1209 in force between the above mentioned dates, or whether the procedure must be in accordance with section 1209 as amended in House Bill No. 162 passed by the legislature on May 9, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 28, 1919."

Said section 1209 as in force from June 28, 1917, to and including August 26, 1919, read as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the State Highway Commissioner, the contractor has not commenced his work within a reasonable time, or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned, or fails or refuses to complete a contract entered into under the provisions of this chapter, the State Highway Commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and complete said improvement either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public, paying the full costs and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor, and in case there is not sufficient balance to pay for said work, the State Highway Commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work. It shall be the duty of the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the county in which said improvement or some part thereof is situated, upon request of the State Highway Commissioner, to collect the same from the contractor, and the surety on his bond. When the State Highway Commissioner elects to complete said improvement by contract, such contract may be let either with or without competitive bidding, as the State Highway Commissioner may deem for the best interest of the public. When the State Highway Commissioner elects to invite competitive bids, he shall proceed in the manner provided by section 1206 of the General Code. Contracts for the completion of improvements may be let either for a lump sum or on a unit price basis. Before entering into a contract for the completion of an improvement, the commissioner shall require a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned as provided in section 1208 of the General Code. When the contract is for a lump sum, the bond shall be in an amount equal to the contract price, and when the contract is let on a unit price basis the State Highway Commissioner shall fix the amount of the bond. When the State Highway Commissioner elects to complete an improvement by force account, and in so completing said improvement enters into an agreement with an individual, firm or corporation, to furnish material or machinery, employ labor or purchase material on behalf of the state, or supervise the work of construction, or do any or all of said things, the State Highway Commissioner may, if he deems it necessary, require said individual, firm or corporation to enter into bond with sufficient sureties in an amount fixed by the State Highway Commissioner, conditioned for the faithful performance of said agreement."

By provisions of House Bill No. 162, in effect as of August 27, 1919, said section in the form quoted was repealed, and in its stead there became effective a new section bearing the same number and providing in substance that in case of removal of a contractor from his work by the State Highway Commissioner, such commissioner shall first offer to the contractor's surety the option of completing the work, and thereupon, if the surety does not avail himself of such option, shall advertise the uncompleted work for letting upon competitive bids at an estimate not to exceed the balance remaining from the original contract price after deducting the amount paid the original contractor. If no bid is received at or under such estimate, the commissioner is to re-estimate and re-advertise the uncompleted work upon competitive bids, and award the work for not more than such re-estimate, to the lowest and best bidder, who must give bond. If the estimated cost of completing a defaulted contract does not exceed five thousand dollars, the commissioner may complete the same by force account, or by a contract let without advertisement.

At the outset, it may be observed that the activities of the State Highway Department fall into three general classes:

(1) Improvements growing out of the granting of state aid on the application of county commissioners or township trustees, the procedure for which improvements is specified in great part by sections 1193 to 1223 G. C.

(2) Maintenance and repair by State Highway Commissioner as specified particularly in section 1224 G. C.

(3) Improvement by State Highway Commissioner as mentioned in section 1191 G. C. where both county commissioners and township trustees fail within the statutory period to avail themselves of their privilege of applying for state aid.

Proceeding to answer your inquiry so far as it bears upon contracts for improvements of the class first noted:

The series of sections 1193 to 1223 provides for the filing of an application for state aid by county commissioners or township trustees; action on such application by State Highway Commissioner; preparation of plans, etc., by State Highway Commissioner in case he grants the application; approval of such plans by county commissioners or township trustees; determination on the part of the commissioners or trustees to make the improvement (section 1200); advertisement by State Highway Commissioner for bids for the doing of the work; award of contract and taking of bond; removal of contractor as provided in section 1209 in case he fails to make proper progress; apportionment of cost to state, county, township and property owners; assessment against abutting or adjoining lands; and levying of tax and sale of bonds to provide funds for the work.

This brief outline is sufficient to show that the series of statutes named prescribes a definite and connected line of procedure from the beginning to the end of the improvement undertaking; and that the action provided for by section 1209 is a link in the chain of procedure. Hence, if the State Highway Commissioner finds that a contractor is not proceeding properly, such commissioner is at liberty to take such action only as is provided by the statute in force when the improvement proceeding became a pending proceeding; for it is provided by section 26 of the General Code as follows:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

In the case of State ex rel. Scobie vs. Cass, 13 O. C. C. (N. S.) 449; 22 O. C. D. 208 (affirmed without report 84 O. S. 443), the Circuit Court of Cuyahoga county held:

"The addition, when it was incorporated into the General Code, of the words 'and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings in the county' to the act of March 8, 1906, providing for the appointment of a commission for the building of court houses, is not effectual to limit or restrict the powers of the commission as granted by the original act, where the work of such a commission in building a court house had been carried almost to completion before these words were incorporated into the original act; but in such a case the work should be completed under the provisions of the act as it originally stood."

The court say in the course of the opinion at page 456:

"If this conclusion must necessarily follow from the addition of the words to the statute above referred to, and now appearing in section 2338 for the first time, then, of course, there is nothing for this court to do but to allow the prayer of the petition. We, however, do not think the conclusion contended for by the plaintiff, from the change in the statute, necessarily follows. The commission came into existence for the purpose of building the court house. Preliminary to the appointment of four members of the commission by the court of common pleas the commissioners of the county had, under the act, determined to build a court house; had submitted to the electors of the county the question of issuing bonds for that purpose, which had been determined affirmatively by them, and then it was that the building commission was organized, pursuant to the terms of the statute, and the members appointed thereto by the court were to serve until the court house, as contemplated in the act, was completed. The commission thus created, had but one thing to do, to-wit, to build and complete the court house. The money was provided by the issuing of bonds for that purpose. The members of the commission appointed by the court took an oath and gave bond for the faithful and honest discharge of their duty. In case one of them died before the court house was completed, the judge appointed his successor, and the commission was authorized to employ architects, superintendents and employes, and to adopt plans and specifications and estimates, and invite bids and award contracts for the court house, and for furnishing heat, light and ventilating the same, and for sewerage thereof, and were given authority to determine all questions connected with that work until the court house shall have been completed and accepted by the building commission.

"Thus the statute had one purpose—one object. The commission's service was continuous, beginning with its appointment and ending when the court house was completed. It seems clear, thus viewed, that the work of the commission in carrying out the objects and purposes for which it was appointed, and the building of the court house down to its completion constituted within the meaning of section 26 of the General Code 'a proceeding' and that any amendment of the statute made after that proceeding was instituted and carried forward almost to completion, can in no manner affect the powers given that commission in the original act. Suppose, indeed, that the codifying act by some error had repealed the entire act creating the commission and authorizing the erection of the court house, can it be said that if that had been done the commission would have been absolutely without power or authority to proceed at all with the completion of the building, and that it must remain in its unfinished and unusable state? It would seem as though the very purpose and object of section 26 was to provide against just exactly such contingency, such repeals, and to permit the authority originally granted to be exercised down to the completion of the work which this statute itself originally authorized, and which was begun and largely completed before this amendment was made."

Attention is also called to an opinion of this department relating to a previous amendment of said section 1209 (Opinions of Attorney General for 1917, Vol II, p. 1231), wherein it was held:

"The provisions of section 1209 G. C., in reference to completing contracts under force account, do not apply to those contracts entered into prior to June 28, 1917, in so far as the new matter therein set out is concerned."

At p. 1234 of the opinion it was said, after quoting the then new form of section 1209:

"The provisions above quoted vary materially from the provisions of the old law. However, it is readily seen that none of these provisions have anything to do with the contract as it was originally entered into, but they have to do with matters which arise after the entering into of the contract, and at first thought it might seem that these provisions might be made applicable to a contract entered into prior to June 28, 1917, as well as those entered into after said date. It must be remembered that the sureties of the contractor also have the right to rely upon the provisions of the law as they were at the time the contract of suretyship was entered into. The matter above quoted has to do very materially with the rights of the surety under his contract, for the reason that he is compelled to pay the difference between the original contract price and the price at which the State Highway Commissioner is enabled to complete the work under force account.

Hence, it is my opinion that these provisions should not be followed in the matter of completing contracts under force account, in reference to those contracts which were entered into prior to June 28, 1917."

The foregoing observations give rise to the question: When does the improvement proceeding become a pending proceeding? Answer to that question may be found in the opinion of this department last above referred to, the fourth syllabus of which reads.

"The different steps connected with an improvement of a highway constitute a proceeding and under section 26 G. C. the provisions of the law as it existed prior to June 28, 1917, must be followed when the first step in reference to a particular road improvement, was taken prior to said date. The first step in the matter of a road improvement is the approval by the State Highway Commissioner of the application of the county commissioners, or the approval of any part of the highways for which application is made, and his ordering the county surveyor to make plans, etc., of the part of the highway so approved."

In the course of said opinion the following language is used at p. 1236:

"Hence, if this approval of the State Highway Commissioner was made and his ordering the county surveyor to make plans, specifications, etc., for an improvement occurred before June 28, 1917, then your department would proceed under the provisions of the old law. But if these steps have been taken since the 28th day of June, 1917, the provisions of the new law would control in the matter of your further proceedings."

Therefore, as to contracts of the first class above mentioned, namely, those growing out of the granting of state aid as specified in sections 1193 to 1223 G. C., the following rule may be laid down in answer to your inquiry:

If the action of the State Highway Commissioner in granting the application of the county commissioners or township trustees for state aid and ordering the making of plans, etc., was taken at any time on and after June 28, 1917, up to and including August 26, 1919, then section 1209, as in effect between those dates, is the governing authority in the matter of removing a contractor and completing his work; while if such action of the commissioner were taken before June 28, 1917, then section 1209, as in force prior to that date, is the governing authority, even though the contract itself may have been entered into subsequent to June 28, 1917.

Referring next to contracts for maintenance and repair as specified in section 1224: This last named section contains the following provision (107 O. L. 133):

"* * The State Highway Commissioner may enter into a contract with any individual, firm or corporation which gives sufficient bond for the faithful performance of said contract, or with the county commissioners of any county or township trustees of any township in which such highway is situated for the repair and maintenance of such highway, or any part thereof, according to the plans and specifications provided by the State Highway Commissioner, or for the furnishing of the material or labor for such repair and maintenance, or the State Highway Commissioner may furnish the material or labor or both, and supervise the repair and maintenance. * * *."

Said section 1224 appears in the same chapter of the General Code as does section 1209; hence, we are brought back to the opening lines of said section 1209:

"If in the opinion of the State Highway Commissioner the contractor has not commenced his work within a reasonable time, or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned, or fails or refuses to complete a contract entered into under the provisions of this chapter, the State Highway Commissioner shall have full power and authority, etc."

This would indicate that section 1209 is applicable to contracts entered into under favor of section 1224.

However, it is doubtful whether a contract entered into by virtue of the last named section is a proceeding, or part of a proceeding, as contemplated by section 26 G. C. It is true that if in maintenance work there is used a material different from that originally employed, an assessment against adjoining lands must be made, but that provision is merely incidental to the evident purpose of the section, namely, to cast upon the State Highway Commissioner the positive duty of maintaining certain roads by such means and using such material as he may think proper, rather than to lay down a course of procedure to be resorted to for the purpose of bringing about the work of maintenance and repair.

At all events, whether section 26 is applicable or not, the first step prescribed by section 1224, when maintenance work is let out by contract, is the making of the contract; and bearing that fact in mind our inquiry is whether such a contract, if entered into between June 28, 1917, and August 26, 1919, is governed, in the matter of removal of contractor and completion of his work, by the form of section 1209 as it existed between those dates, or by its later form in effect August 27, 1919.

Section 28 of article II of the Ohio Constitution reads in part:

> "The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts."

In addition, it is well settled in Ohio that a valid statute is as much a part of a contract as if the statute were set out therein in full.

> Robbins vs. Hennessey, 86 O. S. 181;
> Compton vs. Railway, 45 O. S. 592;
> Weil vs. State, 46 O. S. 450.

In this last named case, the supreme court quotes with approval the following from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations:

> "Contracts must be expounded according to the law in force at the time they were made; and the parties are as much bound by a provision contained in the law as if that provision had been inserted in and formed part of the contract."

It certainly may not be said as a matter of law that the repeal of former section 1209 and the substitution of its later form as of August 27, 1919, would not invade the rights of the contractor and his surety, if the later form were to be held applicable. In other words, the contractor and his surety might well say that they entered into the contract upon the basis that in case of failure of the contractor to complete it, the State Highway Commissioner should have the full liberty given him in section 1209 before its recent amendment of completing the contract in such manner as he might deem for the best interest of the public. As was said by Davis, J., in discussing the matter of competitive bids in the course of the opinion in Mackenzie vs. State, 76 O. S. 369, at page 374:

> "Every man has realized in his own experience that the lowest price does not always secure satisfactory results, and that some things which are most desired are not open to competition."

Therefore, the contractor and his surety have the right to insist on the terms of the contract as entered into, including the provisions of section 1209 as it existed when the contract was entered into; and they are not to be bound by new stipulations put into said section subsequent to the entering into of said contract, even though such stipulations may relate only to procedure on the part of the State Highway Commissioner, and even though there might be some ground for the claim that such new stipulations were favorable rather than otherwise, to the contractor and his surety.

You are therefore advised as to contracts entered into in accordance with section 1224 G. C. at any time on and after June 28, 1917, up to and including August 26, 1919, that section 1209 as in effect between those dates is the governing authority in the matter of removing the contractor and completing his work.

As to contracts of the third class above mentioned—improvement by State Highway Commissioner where local authorities do not avail themselves of their right to apply for state aid. It has been learned, upon conference at your department, that contracts of this character are infrequent and that it is not likely that you will be called upon to take action toward removing contractors therefrom; for which reason no opinion is herein expressed as to the construction of section 1209 in connection with such contracts. It is suggested that should occasion arise, you submit the facts for opinion.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—SECTION 6927 G. C. NOT APPLICABLE TO IMPROVEMENTS UNDERTAKEN UNDER PROVISIONS OF FORMER SECTIONS 6956-1 TO 6956-16 G. C. REPEALED BY CASS ACT—BONDS ISSUED AND CONTRACT LET PRIOR TO PASSAGE OF CASS ACT—COMMISSIONERS MAY LEVY A TAX UNDER FORMER SECTION 6956-14 G. C.

1. Section 6927 G. C., as it appeared in the Cass act (106 O. L. 574) and as it was amended in the White-Mulcahy act (107 O. L. 69), is not applicable to improvements undertaken under the provisions of former sections 6956-1 to 6956-16 G. C. repealed by the Cass act.

2. Where, under said former sections 6956-1 to 6956-16 G. C. upon the taxable property of the township for its share of the bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

HON. MERVIN DAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of recent date reading as follows:

> "In several townships of Paulding county there have been constructed certain pike road improvements under favor of section 6956-1 to 16. The petitions therefor were allowed and the proceedings begun before said laws were repealed. The work was done and assessments were made after this law was repealed.

A large part of the pike work done in this county in the last few years has been done in these several townships under the expectation that the county commissioners were authorized to levy upon all the taxable property of the township or townships affected, a tax levy not to exceed ten mills (see Sec. 6956-14) for the purpose of paying the township's share for the improvement. This year it will require a tax levy in these townships for said pike purposes, in an amount in excess of three mills.

1. Does the limitation of three mills mentioned in section 6927 G. C., enacted 106 v. 603 and re-enacted in 107 v. 101 apply in this situation to prevent the county commissioners this year from levying a sufficient tax to pay the township's portion thereof in these various townships?

The obligation already exists upon the county officials to levy a tax sufficient to pay for these pikes, of course with the understanding that they must keep within the general tax limitations provided by law.

A sufficient fund can be raised for this purpose if the three mill limitation is exceeded, and the levy can still be kept within the general tax limitations."

In response to a request for additional information you have stated in subsequent letters that funds for the improvements in question were provided by fourteen separate bond issues under section 6956-15, the dates of which several issues range from March 9, 1915, to May 1, 1917. The auditor's certificate mentioned in section 5660 was made and filed, and the contract for each particular improvement was let shortly after the date of the bonds issued for such improvement. In their several resolutions providing for the sale of bonds, the commissioners included provision for a levy for the township's share. The improvement work was let to be done on contract; but some of the work has not yet been done.

Sections 6956-1 to 6956-15 were enacted in 1910 as found in 101 O. L. 247, and the general purpose of the sections is indicated by the title of the act enacting them, namely, "To provide for the laying out, construction, repair or improvement of any public road or any part thereof, and for the straightening, widening, or altering, and draining of the same by the county commissioners." The entire series of sections was specifically repealed by the so-called Cass act (106 O. L. 574), effective as of the first Monday in September, 1915. Section 6956-10 as it appeared in said series provided that the cost of an improvement should be paid in certain proportions by the county, township, and owners of lands adjoining the improvement; while section 6956-14 as it appeared in said series read as follows:

"The said proportion of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by the county shall be paid out of the state and county road improvement fund or out of any road, road improvement or road repair fund of the county available therefor. If there are not sufficient funds available therefor, then for the purpose of providing by taxation funds for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of all the improvements made under the provisions of this act, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy upon all the taxable property of the county a tax or taxes not exceeding in the aggregate in any one year the sum of one mill upon each dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, notwithstanding any limitation upon the aggregate amount of such levies now in force. For the purpose of providing by taxation funds for the payment of said proportion of the cost and expense of all improvements made under the provisions of this act to be paid by the township or townships in which such road improvement may be situated in whole or in part, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy upon all the taxable property of any township or townships in which such road improvement is situated, in whole or in part, a tax not exceeding ten mills in any one year upon each dollar of the valuation of the taxable property in such township or townships. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, notwithstanding any limitation upon the aggregate amount of such levies now in force."

Section 6956-15 as it appeared in said series and as it was amended in 103 O. L. 574, provided that the county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of the taxes mentioned in section 6956-14, as well as in anticipation of the collection of assessments, might issue bonds of the county in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township and land owners.

The broad authority granted the county commissioners in said section 6956-14 to levy up to ten mills in any one year on the taxable property of the township has been held in former opinions of this department to be subject to certain general tax limitations; but in view of the statement in your communication that a levy sufficient for the purposes in hand may be made within general limitations, there need be no discussion here as to such limitations. However, you are concerned with the effect of section 6927, as it appeared in the Cass act and as it was subsequently amended in 107 O. L. 101. The amendment is not material to a consideration of your inquiry, so that the section is quoted in its form as appearing in 107 O. L.:

"For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the township or townships interested, in which such road may be in whole or part situated, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding three mills in any one year upon all the taxable property of such township or townships. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes, and subject only to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force."

This section, it may be noted in passing, is in form a statute making a grant of authority rather than imposing a limitation. Hence, the real purport of your question is whether, on the one hand, said section as between itself and said repealed section 6956-14 must be looked to as the source of authority in the commissioners for the making of a levy as to the improvements in question, or whether, on the other hand, there is any "reserve authority" in the commissioners to make a levy at this time by virtue of said repealed section—the fact to be borne in mind being that, according to your statement, the improvement proceedings were begun and the petitions allowed before the repeal of section 6956-14, but the actual physical improvement work being done after such repeal, and paid for out of the proceeds of bonds issued in some instances before and in others after the repeal.

In view of the holding of the Circuit Court of Cuyahoga County in the case of Alexander vs. Spencer, 13 C. C. (n. s.) 475; 22 C. D. 306 (affirmed without report 83 O. S. 492) that a tax levy as distinguished from an assessment is not such a part of an improvement proceeding as to come within the scope of an enactment saving "pending proceedings" from the effect of a repeal, it would seem that if there is any "reserve authority" in the commissioners as above stated, the same must be found, if at all, in an express "saving provision."

It is evident that as a premise for holding that there is such reserve authority, there must be found in the commissioners authority to proceed with the actual physical improvement after the repeal. That they did have such authority was the view of this department as set forth in an opinion dated November 29, 1915, found in Opinions of Attorney-General for that year, Vol. III, p. 2266. Accompanying that opinion is the following syllabus:

> "Where road petitions were filed under section 6956-1 G. C., and the county commissioners under section 6956-2 G. C. acted favorably thereon prior to September 6, 1915, the roads covered by such petitions should be improved under the law in force at the time such petitions were filed and acted upon."

The concluding sentence of the opinion reads:

> "In other words, the commissioners, having made a favorable finding upon the petitions presented to them, a right now exists in the petitioners to have the improvements completed, and it is therefore my opinion, in answer to your specific question, that under the saving provision of section 303 of the Cass highway law, quoted above, it is the duty of the county commissioners to proceed with the construction of the improvements in question and to prosecute the work to completion under the law in force at the time the petitions were filed, and the resolutions making a favorable finding thereon adopted by the board of county commissioners."

Said opinion was referred to with approval in a further opinion of this department of date January 25, 1916, appearing in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. I, p. 129.

We are thus brought to a consideration of the saving provisions of the Cass act. These provisions read in part (106 O. L. 662):

> "Sec. 300. All proceedings for the construction, improvement or repair of stone, gravel or other roads in this state under the provisions of sections 6956-1 to 6956-16 inclusive, of the General Code, had since May 10, 1910, and all petitions granted, bonds issued, taxes and assessments levied or to be levied on account of such roads, and all contracts made or entered into, under the provisions of said sections, and any and all steps taken thereunder, are hereby declared and held to be valid, and boards of county commissioners or other officials shall have full power and authority to complete all roads in process of construction under said sections, and shall have full power and authority to levy taxes and assessments for such roads, and to sell bonds, to pay for the construction and improvement of all such roads, and to do any and all things contemplated by the provisions of said sections."
> "Sec. 303. This act shall not affect or impair any contract or any act done, or right acquired of, any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred prior to the time when this act or any section thereof takes effect, under or by virtue of any law so repealed, but the same may be asserted, completed, enforced, prosecuted or inflicted as fully and to the same extent as if such laws had not been repealed. The provisions of this act shall not affect or impair any act done or right acquired under or in pursuance of any resolution adopted by the board of commissioners of any county, the trustees of any township, or the commissioners of any road district prior to the time of the taking effect of this act." * * *

It may be doubted whether these provisions of section 303 when taken alone, and considered in the light of the rule stated in Alexander vs. Spencer, supra, authorize the continuance of tax levies under the repealed sections; and on the other hand, it is true that the provisions of said section 300 are, generally speaking, curative provisions rather than saving provisions. However, the following clause appearing in said section 300 is plainly a saving clause:

"* * * and boards of county commissioners or other officials shall have full power and authority to complete all roads in process of construction under said sections, and shall have full power and authority to levy taxes and assessments for such roads, and to sell bonds, to pay for the construction and improvement of all such roads, and to do any and all things contemplated by the provisions of said sections."

What is the meaning of the words "all roads in process of construction," as here used? Do they refer only to the actual work of road building, or, do they also embrace roads, petitions for the improvement of which have been granted but on which actual building work has not yet been started? The following considerations, it is submitted, point clearly to the conclusion that an affirmative answer to the latter question, rather than to the former, is in accord with the legislative intent:

(a) The clause above quoted from section 300 contains the expression "shall have full power and authority to levy taxes and assessments for such roads, and to sell bonds, to pay for the construction and improvement of all such roads," which expression immediately follows and relates to the reservation of power in the commissioners and other officials to complete all roads in process of construction under said sections (that is, sections 6956-1 to 6956-16, referred to in your inquiry). At the time said section 300 was enacted, the so-called Burns law, embodied, as applicable to counties and townships, in section 5660 G. C., was in full force and effect, providing, among other things, that no obligation should be incurred unless the funds to pay the same were either in the treasury, or were levied and in process of collection. Hence, as to all roads to be constructed directly from tax income on which actual building had been begun when section 300 was enacted, the necessary funds, in legal contemplation, were either in the treasury, or a levy to produce such funds had been made, thus making unnecessary any saving clause as to such improvements; in which situation the conclusion follows that the legislature in making use of the expression last above quoted, must have intended to reserve to the commissioners authority to raise tax funds for improvements on which the building had not yet begun. This view is fortified by recurring to the latter part of the expression "and to sell bonds, to pay for the construction and improvement of all such roads;" for whatever may be the meaning of section 5660 as to whether or not bond issue funds should be in the treasury before the incurring of an obligation to be paid from such funds, the fact remains that the practice is to award an improvement contract only after bonds have been sold—a practice so rarely departed from as to warrant the conclusion that the legislature was fully cognizant of it when using the language noted. It is also worthy of note that in the curative provisions of said section 300 the words "taxes and assessments levied or to be levied" are twice used.

(b) As has already been pointed out, the saving provisions of section 303 above quoted have been construed by this department, and have been accepted in practice, as meaning that road improvement proceedings begun before the repeal should be carried to fruition in the manner pointed out by the repealed section, even though actual building had not been begun at the time of the repeal; and if the provisions of section 300 be read with those of section 303, as thus understood, the conclusion is clear that the provisions first named are intended to keep in force the tax-levying power necessary to carry out the improvements.

(c) In an opinion of this department rendered to the Tax Commission of Ohio, of date September 11, 1916, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. II, p. 1532, it was held that neither the three mill limitation of section 6927 (which was enacted as section 106 of the Cass act and which is the section forming the basis of your inquiry), nor any other limitation of the Cass act, had any application to tax levies made under authority of former section 6945 G. C., repealed by said Cass act. An examination of said former section 6945 shows that it was very similar to section 6956-14 in authorizing a levy by county commissioners upon township property for certain road purposes. The opinion therefore would seem particularly in point here. It is true that all of the bonds mentioned in said opinion seem to have been issued prior to the passage of the Cass act; but inasmuch as it is entirely clear that by the saving clauses of the Cass act, county commissioners were vested with authority to issue bonds under section 6956-15 subsequent to the passage of the Cass act as to improvements in process of construction at the time of the passage of that act, there would seem to be no difference in principle, so far as concerns supposed Cass act limitations on tax levies, whether the bonds which such levies are to pay were issued before or after the passage of the Cass act.

The views thus expressed lead to the conclusion that section 6927 does not apply in the situation stated by you. However, in a letter of date subsequent to that in which your inquiry was submitted, you express some apprehension as to the validity of the proposed levies because of the fact that some of the contracts were not let until after the passage of the so-called White-Mulcahy act; and you call attention to the saving clause passed as part of that act and found in 107 O. L. 141—which clause reads in part:

> "This act shall not affect or impair * * * any obligation incurred prior to the time when this act takes effect, under or by virtue of any statute hereby amended or repealed * * * but the same may be completed * * * as fully * * * as if such statute had not been amended or repealed."

Inasmuch as this is a saving clause, it is not to be taken as providing by inference or implication that obligations may be incurred after the passage of the act of which it is a part, in no other way than in accordance with the terms of said act. In other words, the White-Mulcahy act did not expressly repeal the saving clause of the Cass act; and the saving clause of the former act may not be construed as in any way repealing or affecting the saving clause of the latter act.

You are therefore advised that under the facts as stated by you, section 6927 as it appeared in the Cass act and as it was amended in the White-Mulcahy act, is not applicable; and that your county commisisoners may, within general limitations, proceed to levy in accordance with former section 6956-14 upon the property of an interested township for the payment of that township's share of bonds issued under former section 6956-15.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE—PROCEDURE—WHEN SECTION 10-1 G. C. APPLICABLE—BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES EXERCISES NO OFFICIAL FUNCTION IN MATTER OF REMOVALS FROM OFFICE.

1. The laws relating to removal from office prior to the enactment and exclusive of section 10-1 et seq. G. C., do not define causes or fix the procedure for removal from office which applies uniformly to all officers. Such causes for and procedure of removal are found in the various acts creating and defining the duties of such office..

2. By the enactment of section 10-1 et seq. G. C., in addition to the causes and procedure fixed and provided by earlier statutes, causes for the removal from office generally are fixed and procedure therefor is provided. The power of removal of state officers is vested in the governor of the state and in the court of appeals of the district where the state officer resides. The power of removal of the officers other than state officers, excepting upon complaint against a judge of the common pleas court, is vested in the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the officer against whom the complaint is filed resides. The power of removal of a common pleas judge from office is vested in the court of appeals of the district in which such judge resides.

3. The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices has no official power or function, as such, to exercise in the matter of removals from office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "We are respectfully calling your attention to section 283 of the General Code, together with section 286 G. C., in part as follows:
>
> 'Sec. 286. * * * If a report sets forth any malfeasance, misfeasance or gross neglect of duty on the part of any officer or employe for which a criminal penalty is provided by law, a certified copy thereof shall be filed with the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed, and such prosecuting attorney shall, within ninety days after receipt thereof, institute criminal proceedings against such officer or employe. * * *"
> Statement of Facts. Much trouble is occasioned this department, owing to the fact that quite occasionally records necessary are not kept in any shape or form and in many cases where the conduct of the office from the standpoint of properly accounting for collections is most questionable, it is impossible to make a consistent audit as there is no foundation, the records not being there.

Question 1. In view of the provisions to which we have called your attention, as well as the constitution and general laws of the state, in whom may the power of removal from office be vested?

Question 2. Has this department any power other than report in the matter?

We are respectfully requesting your written opinion in answer to the above."

It is noted that your inquiries do not relate to removals from any specific offices, but rather to the removal from office generally.

Section 38, Article 2 (1912) of the constitution of Ohio, and sections 10-1 et seq. and 283 G. C., are of general application.

Section 38 in part is as follows:

> "Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, * * * for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution."

Section 283 G. C. provides that all public officers or employes who neglect to keep the accounts of his office in the form prescribed by the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, or to make the reports required by such bureau, "shall be removed from office on hearing before the proper authority."

Until the enactment of sections 10-1 et seq. (infra) in 1913 (103 O. L., 851), there was no statute which defined the causes or fixed the procedure for removal from office which applied uniformly to all offices. Specific causes, however, and methods of removal from office, are found in the various earlier acts creating and defining the duties of each office and therefore no general rule is established by them.

For example, sections 2913, 3036, 3049, 2579, 2790 and 2713 G. C. relate to the removal of certain county officers.

In section 2913 G. C. the power of removal of the prosecuting attorney is lodged with the common pleas court on complaint of a tax payer.

In section 3036 G. C. provision is made for the removal of the clerk, sheriff or prosecuting attorney who neglects to comply with the four preceding sections "at the discretion of the court," meaning the common pleas court. In this section no procedure is outlined.

In section 3049 G. C. provision is made that certain county officers failing to make certain reports upon conviction, shall be "adjudged" guilty of misconduct in office, and be "immediately removed therefrom."

Without providing the procedure for such removal, nor specifically designating who shall exercise the power of removal, section 2790 provides:

> "Any person may bring civil action in the common pleas court for removal of the surveyor."

Section 2713 G. C. empowers the county commissioners to remove the county treasurer for embezzlement "upon examination of the county treasury."

In reference to municipal officers, there are likewise special provisions for the removal of specific officers. Under section 4268 G. C. the mayor may be removed by the governor on complaint "on file in his office." Who may make the complaint is not specified in this section. Department heads may be removed under section 4265 by council on complaint of the mayor.

A more general provision as to municipal officers is found in section 4670 G. C., which places the power or removal for certain causes in the probate judge. The complaint under this section must be filed and sworn to by the electors of the municipal corporation.

However, by the adoption of section 38 (supra) in 1912, and the enactment of sections 10-1 et seq., a general rule for the removal of public officers was provided.

Section 10-1 defines misconduct in office and provides for the removal therefrom of "any person holding an office in this state, or in any municipality, county or any subdivision thereof."

Section 10-2 relates to the procedure for removal and requires that when the complaint is against an officer other than a state officer, the complaint shall "be signed in their own hand writing by at least twenty per cent of the qualified electors within the designated limits for which said officer was elected", and when the complaint is against a state officer, "it shall be signed in their own hand writing by at least six per cent of the qualified electors of the state."

Under this section complaints against state officers shall be filed with the governor or court of appeals of the district where the state officer resides, which officials have the power of removal. Complaints against officers other than state officers may be filed with the judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein the officer against whom the complaint is filed resides, except that a complaint against a common pleas judge may be filed in the court of appeals of his district.

For the purpose of this opinion, it is not necessary to cite or quote further provisions of these sections, but it is sufficient to state that the power of removal is vested in the governor and courts, as above indicated, and that the procedure for hearing of the complaints is provided in this act, being section 10-1 to section 10-4, inclusive.

It is to be noted, however, that this act is cumulative to "other methods of removal now authorized by law," as provided in section 10-1.

Consideration of these various sections result in this answer to your first question:

1. The laws relating to removal from office prior to the enactment of and exclusive of section 10-1 et seq. G. C., do not define causes or fix the procedure for removal from office which applies uniformly to all offices. Such causes for and procedure of removal are found in the various acts creating and defining the duties of each office.

2. By the enactment of section 10-1 et seq. G. C., in addition to the causes and procedure fixed and provided by earlier statutes, causes for the removal from office generally are fixed and procedure therefor is provided.

The power of removal of state officers is vested in the governor of the state and in the court of appeals of the district where the state officer resides. The power of removal of the officers other than state officers, excepting upon complaint against a judge of the common pleas court, is vested in the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the officer against whom the complaint is filed resides. The power of removal of a common pleas judge from office is vested in the court of appeals of the district in which such judge resides.

Your second question is, has your department "any power other than report in the matter?"

In addition to those sections quoted in the discussion of your first question, sections 283 and 286 G. C. are pertinent. Section 286, construed in connection with other sections of the act creating the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, clearly shows its auditing and supervising function. After the creation and organization of the department, provision is made for inspection and supervision, the making of findings and the filing and effect of such reported findings. Authority is given by this section to the law officers of the various subdivisions to enforce the findings of the bureau.

Section 286 G. C. in part provides:

> "If a report sets forth any * * * misfeasance or gross neglect of duty * * * for which a criminal penalty is provided by law," a copy thereof shall be filed with the prosecuting attorney, who is charged with the duty of instituting criminal proceedings.

Consideration of the purpose of the act creating the bureau and defining its powers and duties, together with the further fact that no authority is given to it, as such, to prefer or prosecute any charges for official misconduct, results in this department's conclusion that the bureau has no official power or functions, as such, to exercise in the matter of removal from office. It may be added, however, that with reference to initiating charges of misconduct, where the statute as to any given office does not require that the complainant possess residential, tax-paying or other special qualifications, the head of your bureau or any member thereof could initiate and prosecute a complaint for official misconduct in the manner provided in the statutes relating to each particular office.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—STATE AID—BOARD MUST BE DILIGENT IN SEEING LEVIES MADE IN PROPER PROPORTION AND THAT THE ACTION OF BUDGET COMMISSION PRESERVES PROPER PROPORTIONS TO RECEIVE STATE AID—COUNTY AUDITOR HAS NO AUTHORITY TO APPORTION TAX EXCEPT AS DETERMINED BY ACT OF BUDGET COMMISSION—WHERE BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS PLACED IN ITS TAX LEVY FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES, A PROPORTION OF TWO-THIRDS OF TOTAL AMOUNT TO TUITION FUND, IT IS DUTY OF BUDGET COMMISSION TO MAINTAIN SAME WHERE STATE AID DESIRED FOR WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICT—WHEN SCHOOL DISTRICT DISQUALIFIED.

1. A board of education which desires to apply for state aid must be diligent in seeing that its levies are made in the proper proportions, inasmuch as the action of the county budget commission is involved and it is incumbent upon the board of education to present the facts to that tribunal and see to it that the rights of the board are preserved; and neither the board of education of a weak school district nor the county auditor has authority to distribute or apportion the tax yield among the funds of the district in any other proportion than that determined by the act of the budget commission.

2. Where a board of education has placed in its tax levy for school pur- poses, a proportion of two-thirds of the total amount to the tuition fund, it is the duty of the budget commission to maintain the same proportion in those cases where the board of education desires state aid for a weak school district; but where the budget commission has failed, in the adjustment of the levies, to observe the proper proportion as between the levy for tuition fund and the remainder of the levies, such school district is thereby disqualified to receive state aid as provided for in section 7595-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgement is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "A very unfortunate situation is developing in many of the weak school districts in the state of Ohio, and we are presenting the facts to you for opinion as to the law.
> A board of education made out its annual budget calling for a levy for its several purposes of tuition, contingent, building and sinking funds. In making its adjustments the budget commission found that it was not possible to allow the school district the total levy for which it asked. The budget commission in making its adjustments thoughtlessly, or perhaps not being conversant with the provisions of the law governing state aid to weak school districts, allowed to such district a levy for tuition purposes which was less than two-thirds of the total and for other purposes levies which aggregated more than one-third of the total. When the county received the yield of this levy, the county auditor, in making his distribution of the tax yield on the school distribution ledger, followed the adjustments made by the budget commission, and the clerk of the board of education carried that apportionment upon the school cash book, so that the school district carried upon its books less than two-thirds of the total yield required by the state aid law to be placed in the tuition fund.
> This condition which is developing in more school districts as each day goes by is deplorable, because under the state aid statute such districts are barred from receiving any state aid, and in some instances nearly one-half of the tuition fund will have to come in the way of state aid if the schools of the district are to be maintained.
> While we have been inclined to believe that the special provisions of the state aid to weak school districts' law controlled the more general provisions of the other statutes governing distribution of funds, and that it is within the power of the board of education and its duty to make a distribution of its funds in such cases in accordance with the state aid statute, ignoring the action of the budget commission in that regard, we do not care to trust to our own judgment in this matter and desire that you shall advise us whether or not it is within the power of boards of education in weak school districts, which qualify under the state aid law, to readjust the apportionment of the tax yield upon the books of the school board so that two-thirds of the yield shall be placed in the tuition fund.
> Also, we would be pleased if you would advise us—in the event you find it is the duty of the board of education to make this readjustment—whether or not the county auditor can be directed to make the apportionment of the funds on his school distribution ledger correspond to the reapportionment made by the board of education."

This statement of facts raises three questions of law, which should be separately considered as follows:

1. May the board of education of a weak school district, or a county auditor, or either of them, distribute or apportion the tax yield among the funds of the district in any other proportion than that determined by the act of the budget commission, assuming the action of the budget commission to be valid?

2. In case at the time levies are made and the budget commission was engaged in the adjustment of them, it is anticipated that an application for state aid will be made by a school district, covering either or both of the years for part of which the levy is made, has the budget commission any duty to perform in adjusting the amounts to be raised by taxation for the several purposes allowed by law growing out of such anticipated fact?

3. Assuming a negative answer to both of the preceding questions, does the budget commission's failure, in the adjustment of the levies, to observe the proper proportion as between the levy for tuition fund and the remainder of the levies, disqualify the district to receive state aid?

It will be noted that the first question involves an assumption with respect to the answer to the second question. It has been found most convenient to conduct the discussion in this form.

We are assuming, therefore, in considering the first question, that under existing laws (other than the Freeman law passed by the last session of the general assembly, which it is presumed is not involved in your inquiry) the budget commission has no duty to perform in adjusting the levies in a school district growing out of the fact that the school district is or expected to be "weak"; so that the budget commission is absolutely untrammeled in the exercise of its discretion and may adjust the levies, so far as necessary, to enforce the limitations of the Smith one per cent law, so called, as it deems best.

The question now is as to whether or not, after such adjustment has been made, the county auditor must be guided in his computation of rates for the several purposes, by the action of the budget commission, and in its distribution of taxes to the various funds of the school district by the yield of the rates so computed; and whether or not the board of education of the district, after receiving the distribution resulting from such levies can, because of the necessity for state aid, redistribute the funds by transfer or otherwise on any other bases than that so determined, and so affect retroactively the "levies" which have been made.

The question thus phrased involves an interpretation of the following sections of the General Code:

"Sec. 7595. No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than fifty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 of the General Code, for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficit."

Sections 7586 and 7587 are as follows:

"Sec. 7586. Each board of education, annually, at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June, shall fix the rate of taxation necessary to be levied for all school purposes, after the state funds are exhausted."

"Sec. 7587. Such levy shall be divided by the board of education into four funds: First, tuition fund; second, building fund; third, contingent fund; fourth, bonds, interest and sinking fund. A separate levy must be made for each fund."

Sections 7586 and 7587, however, are not in force at present, having been supplanted by the Smith one per cent law, which is an act of more recent enactment. Without quoting the provisions of this act in detail, it is sufficient to state that the original levying authorities, such as boards of education, city councils, county commissioners, etc., no longer have the power to fix rates of taxation. Instead they are required by section 5649-3a to submit annual budgets to the county auditor, setting forth their needs for each purpose for which taxes may be levied for the incoming year. These budgets are then to be paid before the budget commission (section 5649-3a) and that commission is to examine all the budgets calling for the levy of taxes within the limits of any taxing district, for the purpose of seeing whether or not they call, in the aggregate, for the levy of taxes at rates in excess of those allowed by law. If it appears that such is the case, it is the duty of the budget commission to reduce the items in such budget. The statute provides:

"In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein."

The same section goes on to provide:

"When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property therein of such * * * taxing district."

In other words, the budget commission fixes the amounts and certifies its action to the county auditor, who computes the rates according to the estimated duplicate. The duplicate is then made up and the taxes are collected. Then it becomes the duty of the county auditor, under section 7603 G. C., to distribute the proceeds of the levies as therein provided. The section is as follows:

"The certificate of apportionment furnished by the county auditor to the treasurer and clerk of each school district must exhibit the amount of money received by each district from the state, the amount received from any special tax levy made for a particular purpose, and the amount received from local taxation of a general nature. The amount received from the state common school fund and the common school fund shall be designated the 'tuition fund' and be appropriated only for the payment of superintendents and teachers. Funds received from special levies must be designated in accordance with the purpose for which the special levy was made and be paid out only for such purpose, except that, when a balance remains in such fund after all expenses incident to the purpose for which it was raised have been paid, such balance will become a part of the contingent fund and the board of education shall make such transfer by resolution. Funds received from the local levy for general purposes must be designated so as to correspond to the particular purpose for which the levy was made. Moneys coming from sources not enumerated herein shall be placed in the contingent fund."

In performing his duties under this section, as well as those under section 5649-3c, the county auditor acts purely in an administrative capacity. He must compute such rates under the latter section as correspond to the amounts fixed by the budget commission for the several items in the budget; he must make his apportionment in accordance with the yield of the several rates which he has so computed. Assuming the action of the budget commission to have been correct in a given instance, therefore, it is clear that the county auditor has committed no error when he does these things.

Your letter suggests the possibility of holding that the state aid law (prior to its amendment by the Freeman act) constitutes an exception to the general rule thus laid down. No warrant of law is found for such a statement. It is true that section 7595, above quoted, provides that "at least two-thirds" of the maximum legal school levy "shall be for the tuition fund." This phrase, however, is found in a clause which deals with the action of the board of education. It is not equivalent to a command that the county auditor shall always apportion at least two-thirds of a weak school district tax yield to the tuition fund. Whether or not it is binding upon the budget commission is a question which will be hereinafter considered. It is not, however, binding upon the county auditor. That much is clear.

Postponing, therefore, some of the discussion which might appropriately come under this heading, to a consideration of the second question, it is concluded, as the opinion of this department, on the first part of the first question, as above stated, that the county auditor, in his ministerial capacity, has no duty to perform with respect to the distribution of the levies of a weak school district other than what he would have to perform with respect to the levies of any other school district. Whether or not the district is qualified or disqualified for state aid is a question which does not affect his duty.

The latter part of the first question, as stated, pertaining to the action which may be taken by the board of education, bears close relation to the third question, as above framed. At the present time, however, the following statement will suffice as an answer to it; whatever may be the power of the board of education to transfer from the contingent or other fund to the tuition fund, so as to produce an ultimate distribution of funds which will leave at least two-thirds of the total yield from general taxes to the credit of the tuition fund, such action can in no wise affect what has preceded for the purposes of section 7595 G. C. That section does not say that in order to qualify for state aid a school district must merely exhibit a statement of accounts showing that two-thirds of the money in its treasury and arising from local taxation is in the tuition fund; the qualifying action under section 7595 G. C. pertains to the original levy. It is the weakness of the whole scheme of state aid that nothing is provided therein as to the handling of the funds after they are once in the treasury of the school district. The sole question under the section is as to the proportions in which the levies were made. It is clear that a transfer of funds, after distribution, cannot have the legal effect of changing the levies that were actually made.

For all the foregoing reasons, it is the opinion of this department that the fact that a school district is weak or intends to apply for state aid is one which has no influence upon the action of the county auditor in computing tax rates, nor upon his action in distributing the proceeds of such rates to the school district; and that any action which a board of education might take after distribution by way of transfer, or otherwise, to bring into the tuition fund a proportion of the entire yield from the general property taxes, equal to at least two-thirds of the whole, cannot have any retrospective effect as to the levies themselves and the proportions in which they were made for the purposes of section 7595 G. C. All this is upon the assumption previously stated, that the budget commission has it within its power to ignore the fact that a school district is weak or intends to apply for state aid when it is making its adjustment under section 5649 G. C. This question will be next considered.

The fundamental and outstanding characteristic of section 7595 G. C. is that it describes a condition upon which a school district may obtain state aid. It has, therefore, not the force and effect of a binding law as to any one. Suppose the budget commission were not in existence at all and the machinery of levying taxes was the same as it was before the Smith law was enacted, and when the state aid law was passed it was not obligatory upon a board of education to ask for state aid at that time and in that state of the law. It might disqualify the district for state aid by failing to make levies in the proper proportions which originally were three-fourths for tuition fund purposes and one-fourth for other purposes. That such action would have the effect of disqualifying the district for state aid would not affect the validity of the levies made nor the power of the county auditor to ignore such levies and either actually make the levies on the qualifying basis or distribute them on such basis under section 7603 G. C. The auditor would be a ministerial officer and would be obliged to follow the action of the board of education. In other words, section 7595 does not now and never did provide that any particular board of education should make its general levies in any particular proportion. Read in connection with the remainder of the state aid law it simply had the effect of providing that if the board of education of a school district should intend or desire to apply for state aid, it must lay the foundation for a successful application by doing certain things, one of which was the making of its levies in the prescribed proportion. This relation of section 7595 G. C. to the powers and duties of the board of education is at least clear. However, in the cases described by you the boards of education have taken the initial step by making their estimates of needs for budgetary purposes in the proper proportions indicated by section 7595. The question now arises as to whether or not the board having done so, the budget commission, in scaling down the levies, must observe these proportions. It will be borne in mind, in this connection, that the law does not recognize any such thing as a school district with a permanent "weak" status. In point of fact there doubtless are many districts in the state which are perennially in this condition. But the condition of any such permanent class is not taken cognizance of by the law. The question of the necessity for state aid is one which comes up de novo each year for each district. It cannot be assumed as a matter of law that any district in any year is necessarily going to be obliged to ask for state aid. In fact it cannot be assumed as a matter of law that when a school district makes its levies in the first instance, by submitting its annual budget, such budget is necessarily going to be reduced by the budget commission; that would depend upon the needs of the other taxing districts levying over the same territory as well as the amount of the duplicate.

Now a school district makes its levies by the submission of the budgetary estimates by the board of education in the month of June. These estimates relate to the last half of the school year commencing the following March and the first half of the succeeding school year commencing in the following September. When an application for state aid is made in the month of October, or between that month and December of any year, as the law now provides, the estimated deficiency of the district is based upon the actual yield of the last half of the tax levied a year and four months previous and the yield of the first half of the tax levied about four months previous to the making of the application. In other words, it would seem that two annual levies would have to be taken into consideration in determining the qualification of the district for state aid. This is a fact apparently not taken into account by the framers of the state aid law, which seems to assume that the year from which levies are made is the same from which state aid is rendered. This, however, is not the case and never was.

Without going further into detail, it is sufficient to observe that the power of the budget commission under section 5649-3c is discretionary. That section is of later enactment than the original state aid law, though the latter has since been amended in other particulars.

As stated by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, who has considered this question in an opinion found in the annual report of the Attorney General for the year 1912, Vol. 1, page 89, the act of levying on the part of a board of education is not complete until the budget commission has acted. That opinion held that there were two steps as to which the (then) three-fourths test of section 7595 would have to be applied: (1) the action of the board of education itself, and (2) the action of the budget commission. Failure of either of these bodies to observe the proper proportion would disqualify the district for state aid. The disposition should be to give a liberal interpretation to the state aid law in order to effect the largest measure of relief. In view, however, of the amendment of the state aid law by the Freeman act, which is designed to provide for all matters concerning which you inquire, it is felt there is no longer any necessity for stretching the law, if such a course of conduct was ever justifiable.

What, then, was the duty of the budget commission? It had discretionary power; its action was a part of the machinery for levying taxes; section 7595 G. C. applies to it just the same as it applied to the board of education—viz., by its provision to the effect that if certain proportions were not observed, the district would be disqualified to receive state aid. An intention on the part of the board of education to apply for state aid, and its own action in observing proportions marked out in section 7595, would undoubtedly give to the school district represented by the board a right to have such intention and such fact considered by the budget commission. An inadvertent oversight on the part of the commission in this matter would be a mistake which the commission, were it in session, would have a right to correct. A deliberate ignoring of such a condition would be, in the opinion of this department, an abuse of discretion of a sufficiently arbitrary nature to entitle the board of education to an appropriate remedy. But when the budget commission has completed its work and the auditor has computed his rates, and the taxes have been collected and the apportionment to the school district made, it is in the opinion of this department too late to correct such matters. In other words, the action of the board of education, in attempting to qualify itself for state aid by submitting a proper annual budget, as measured by the requirements of section 7595, does impose a duty upon the budget commission to observe these proportions in making its adjustments. But this is a duty which must be discharged by the budget commission. Should the budget commission fail to discharge that duty, no one else can be substituted for it and no other official action can have the efficacy that the commission's action would have. The only remedy must be worked out through the action of the commission.

This conclusion is irresistible because if the allowance for the tuition fund is to be increased, that of some other fund or funds must be correspondingly reduced in order to get the total within the limitation of the law. Such a reduction might be made in the contingent fund or in the building fund, or in some levy made by some other district, such as a municipal corporation levying within the same territory. No officer or tribunal, other than the budget commission, is empowered to select the levy or levies which must be reduced in order to increase the tuition fund levy of the school district. The county auditor cannot take such action, a court could not do it, the board of education itself is without power to do it. There is therefore no escape from the conclusion that whatever action is taken to remedy an inadvertent, mistaken or erroneous determination of the budget commission of the kind under consideration, must be taken by that body itself.

The answer to your second question is, therefore, that while the budget commission does have a duty to perform, under circumstances like those detailed by you, if that commission should not discharge its duty, its failure to do so does not amount to an error of such a ministerial character as can be corrected by the purely ministerial action of the county auditor, or by any one else.

This conclusion introduces the last question, which is as to whether or not the circumstances stated in your letter disqualifies the board of education from receiving state aid. It was the conclusion of Mr. Hogan, in the opinion cited, that such would be the case. For the reasons supporting that conclusion, I am referring you generally to that opinion.

In the opinion of this department a board of education, which desires to qualify its district for state aid has a continuing duty to perform. In the first instance it must make its budget estimates in the proper proportions. In the second instance it must advise the budget commission of its purpose in doing so. The budget commission's action is taken after public hearing and investigation. If the board of education allows the matter to go by default without advising the budget commission of its intention or need; or if having presented its needs to the budget commission it allows the budget commission to make such a distribution of the levies as will disqualify it for state aid without availing itself of such remedies, before the budget commission or in the courts, as it may have, it may fairly be said that it is the action of the board of education, as much as the action of the budget commission, that has had the effect of disqualifying the district. In other words, while the board of education has not direct or immediate control over its levies, it is a party in interest before the budget commission; it has its day in court, so to speak; and if it permits the budget commission to complete its work and to become functus officio without objection to a result of disqualifying a district to receive state aid, such a result is, in a measure at least, its own fault.

A board of education which desires to apply for state aid and intends to do so, must be diligent in seeing that its levies are made in the proper proportions. Inasmuch as the action of another tribunal is involved, it is incumbent upon the board of education to present the facts to that tribunal and to see to it that its rights are preserved.

This is, of course, precisely the policy that is embodied in the Freeman act, to which reference has been made. Without quoting that measure it is sufficient to observe that the board of education must, under its provisions, notify the budget commission that it intends to apply for state aid, as the very first step in its qualification to receive such aid. Thereupon the budget commission becomes subject to certain duties that, as has been held in this opinion, the commission is not subject to under pre-existing laws; but such duties are after all different only in kind from the duty which the budget commission has previously rested under in the same behalf. It still remains incumbent upon the board of education to see to it that the budget commission's work is properly done.

In this same connection attention is called to the fact that the tax commission has always exercised, without question, the power to reconvene the budget commission when its work was not properly done.

In a personal conference with the auditor's department it was indicated that the number of schools in the state that would be affected on account of failure to secure state aid through a strict construction of the law would be limited to two or three schools and that possibly none of this limited number would suspend operations because of other financial arrangements made following the "two mill levy" permitted under Senate Bill 187.

Every school district that is legally entitled to state aid should receive it and no schools should be closed during a term where it is at all legally possible to keep them going, and the state aid law should be construed as liberally as possible, that the intent of the legislature in assisting weak school districts to maintain their schools be carried out. But the local board of education desiring to be considered for state aid for its district should see that the proportion of two-thirds for tuition, which they originally set aside in their action on the total tax levy for school purposes, is later maintained by the county budget commission.

It is the opinion of the Attorney-General, therefore, that under the facts stated by you no relief is open under the state aid law to the districts which find themselves in the plight referred to therein.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN STEAM BOILER OR ENGINE OF MORE THAN THIRTY HORSEPOWER IS BEING "OPERATED"—QUESTION OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING—SECTION 1047 G. C. CONSIDERED.

1. The question arising under section 1047 G. C. as to when and under what circumstances a steam boiler or engine of more than thirty horsepower is being "operated", is a question of mechanical engineering, rather than of law.

2. It appearing that the practical construction given to the word "operated" by the Industrial Commission, Division of Steam Engines, is in accord with the opinions of experts in mechanical engineering, it is suggested that such construction be adhered to until the same is proved invalid by court decision to the contrary.

3. Whether such a boiler or engine is being operated "directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer", as required by said section 1047 G. C., depends upon the question whether such engineer is in such a relation to the boiler or engine that he can give it the care and attention necessary to its operation with entire safety to life and property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date reads as follows:

> "Enclosed find copy of letter from Malcolm Jennings, secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, with reference to section 1047 of the General Code.
> Will you please let us have your construction of this statute, and oblige?"

The letter from the executive secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, to which your letter refers, reads in part as follows:

> "Some differences have arisen between the officers of the Bureau of Examination of Stationary Engineers and citizens of Ohio with relation to the construction of the above statute and the differences hinge upon the words 'operate', and also upon the words 'unless it is directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer'. The Bureau, which is a subordinate branch of your department, through its officers, has been holding that 'operation' with respect to a steam boiler applies whenever there is a fire in such boiler without reference to the pressure carried or with reference to the fact that the plant is not in operation.
> To be more specific, the Bureau has held that a licensed engineer or boiler operator must be in charge immediately of any boiler under which there is a fire. In many plants it is the practice during the night when the plant is not in operation to maintain a small fire under the boilers for the purpose of preventing freezing and to keep the water warm in order that steam may be gotten up quickly when the plant goes into operation. Our people have held on the contrary that this does not constitute the operation of a boiler within the meaning of the law."

Section 1047 G. C. reads as follows:

> "No person shall operate a stationary steam boiler or engine of more than thirty horsepower without obtaining a license to do so as provided in this chapter. A horsepower as used in this section shall mean twelve square feet of boiler heating surface. No owner or user or agent of an owner or user of any such steam boiler or engine shall permit it to be operated unless it is directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer."

The question now before us is as to the meaning of the word "operate," as used in the section just quoted. In other words, it is this: When and under what circumstances is a stationary steam boiler or engine in operation?

It is apparent from mere statement that the question is a matter of mechanical engineering, rather than of law. Accordingly, an effort has been made to ascertain from persons familiar with boiler operation just what the word "operate" is understood to mean in this regard, from an engineering standpoint. While I am entirely willing to assume any responsibility which is properly mine with regard to the conclusions of this opinion, I feel that it is not inappropriate to point out that the same is based on premises which are really non-legal in character.

Pertinent to our inquiry is a written statement recently made by William T. Magruder, Professor of Mechanical Engineering at Ohio State University. Mr. Magruder says, in part:

> "When the generation of steam is no longer needed, as at the end of the working period of the day and for several hours, it is customary and accepted practice to clean the fire of ashes and clinkers, collect the live coals in a heap, or bank, on the grate, cover them with fresh and fine coal so as to greatly retard combustion and yet maintain it without extinguishing the fire, to close the air inlets to the furnace, and partly to close the gas outlet from the furnace to the chimney, thereby preventing the usual amount of cold, fresh air from entering the furnace to lower its temperature while the boiler is not in the operation of generating steam. This process is commonly known as 'banking the fire', and is the usual and accepted practice when steam is not needed for several hours. Its object is to retain the heat in the boiler and its furnace between the periods of operation, or working periods, and so as to maintain the boiler as nearly as possible at a uniform temperature in the interest of economy and safety. When a boiler is not to be used to generate steam for several days or weeks, its fire is either allowed to die out or is removed, or 'drawn', and the boiler is allowed to cool down, and it is then said to be 'out of commission', or 'laid up'."

After making further observations not necessary to be quoted here, Professor Magruder concludes:

> "For these reasons I am of the opinion that a steam boiler is being 'operated' in the usual and accepted sense of the word, when it is generating steam from the water and by the heat which are being supplied to it; and that if the fire is properly banked and if no person is at the boiler to supply fuel and water in proper ways so as to generate steam, then the boiler is not being operated."

That a boiler with a "banked fire is a boiler not in operation", is also the opinion of Mr. J. C. Callery, a mechanical engineer of Columbus, Ohio, as evidenced by his letter of August 9, 1919, addressed to this department.

In reply to my request for information as to the construction which had been given to section 1047 G. C. by your bureau in practice, you forwarded a copy of a letter sent you by your Mr. Joseph McCue, Chief Deputy, Division of Steam Engineers. This letter, touching the matter in question, says:

> "Generally speaking, it has always been the attitude of this department to consider a steam boiler to be 'in operation' at all times that an active fire was being maintained under it, and when a steam pressure was available for any purpose, either power or heat. There is a condition, known as 'banked fires', during which there is usually no steam being taken from the boiler, and no firing is done, and we do not require the attendance of a licensed man at such times. When, however, the banked fires are raked over the grates and fresh coal added, we consider the boiler is being put into operation, and only a licensed man should perform such work, should the boiler be over 30 h. p."

It thus appears that the interpretation given by your department, as evidenced by the statement of Mr. McCue just quoted, is consistent with the above quoted views of Professor Magruder and Mr. Callery, relative to the condition known as a "banked fire", and that your department does not now take the view ascribed to it by that part of the letter from the executive secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, which says:

> "* * * the Bureau has held that a licensed engineer or boiler operator must be in charge immediately of any boiler under which there is a fire."

In another part of the letter of said secretary of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, there is a statement which seemingly indicates that the writer is of the opinion that a stationary steam boiler or engine of more than thirty horsepower is not in operation if the fact be that "the plant is not in operation." By "plant" is meant, we presume, the machinery, tools, etc., necessary to carrying on the work in any given establishment. Such a view, we think, is not tenable. In the first place, and as a matter of mechanics, we take it to be true that a steam boiler or engine can "operate"; that is, can function, regardless of the use made of the power or energy thereby created. Secondly, such a view is opposed to consideration of public safety. That is to say, the danger consequent upon careless and incompetent operation of a steam boiler might be quite as great when the plant is not in operation, as when it is.

I therefore suggest that your bureau continue to give the word "operate" the same practical construction referred to by Mr. McCue in his letter to you, until such time as a court of competent jurisdiction otherwise decides. As above noted, under this view a steam boiler is not regarded as being in operation when an inactive or "banked" fire is maintained thereunder.

The second question for our consideration is raised by that part of the letter above referred to which says:

> "In a number of our plants batteries of boilers or steam engines are installed sometimes in separate buildings and all are directly in charge of a highly competent and licensed engineer when the plants are in operation. The Bureau has held that each of these engines and each of these boilers must have a licensed engineer or boiler operator in charge immediately and continuously at all times when there is a fire under the boiler or steam in the pipes."

The last sentence of section 1047 G. C. says:

> "No owner or user or agent of an owner or user of any such steam boiler or engine shall permit it to be operated unless it is directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer."

The word "directly", according to the Century dictionary, means: "Without the intervention of any medium; "immediately". The question whether a steam boiler or engine is directly, that is to say, immediately, in charge of a licensed engineer, is really a question of fact, and no categorical answer, available for any and all circumstances, can be given. The law does not expressly require that such an engineer be in the same room or building where the boiler is located; nor does it expressly require that each separate boiler be in charge of a different licensed engineer.

The test to determine whether or not a steam boiler or engine is directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer is, it seems to me, to be found in considerations of safety to life and property. That is to say, if a duly licensed engineer is in such a relation to a steam boiler or engine as that he can give it the care and attention necessary to its operation with entire safety to life and property, such boiler or engine can properly be said to be "directly in charge of a duly licensed engineer", as provided by section 1047 G. C. In other words, the phrase "directly in charge" is not a rigid legal formula, but a phrase whose meaning is to be sought in the peculiar circumstances of each individual case. If a duly licensed engineer were but twenty feet away from a steam boiler or engine, all would probably agree that the same was directly in his charge; and if he were a mile away from the boiler or engine, all would probably agree that the same was not directly in his charge. But where the line is to be drawn between the extremes mentioned, it is not possible to say as a matter of law. The same reasoning applies to the question as to whether the law requires a licensed engineer for each separate engine or boiler.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CAN AVAIL ITSELF OF EITHER SENATE BILL NO. 187 (108 O. L. 924), OR HOUSE BILL NO. 567 (108 O. L. 709), BUT NOT BOTH—IF ELECTORS VOTE AGAINST LEVY UNDER SENATE BILL NO. 187 BOARD MAY AVAIL ITSELF OF PROVISIONS OF HOUSE BILL NO. 567.

Where an election was held in a school district under and by virtue of Senate Bill 187 on August 12, 1919, and a vote of the majority of the electors of said district was against any levy under Senate Bill 187, the board of education is not precluded thereby from taking advantage of the provisions of House Bill 567, since both laws are extraordinary measures for the raising of revenue, and a board of education can avail itself of either Senate Bill 187 or House Bill 567, but not both, in order to carry on the function of public education until permanent revenues can be provided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1919.

HON. HAVETH E. MAU, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the request of William K. Marshall, assistant prosecuting attorney of Montgomery county, for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Where an election was held in a school district under and by virtue of Senate Bill No. 187 (108 O. L. 924), and the vote of the majority of electors in said district was against any levy under said bill, is such board of education thereby precluded from issuing bonds under House Bill No. 567 (108 O. L. 709)?
> In view of the fact that both of these acts were passed for the purpose of furnishing relief to school districts, it seems to me that a board of education would be entitled to issue bonds under House Bill No. 567, although electors of the district refused to authorize by vote a levy under Senate Bill No. 187.
> In case bonds were issued under House Bill No. 567 under such circumstances, and were offered to the Industrial Commission and accepted, the proceedings under which they were issued would be undoubtedly submitted to your office for approval, and you would then have the matter to pass upon, so I deemed it wise to have your opinion before advising the issuing of bonds."

Senate Bill 187 reads in part as follows:

"Section 1. In lieu of proceeding under an act entitled 'An act to authorize the taxing authorities of counties, municipal corporations, townships and school districts to fund deficiencies in operating revenues for the year 1919, issue bonds and to levy taxes for such purpose' but not otherwise, the board of education of any school district may levy in the year 1919 not to exceed two mills for any and all purposes for which such boards may levy taxes, upon securing the approval of the electors of such district * * *."

Then follows the manner and method by which the special school election may be held on the twelfth day of August, 1919, and the respective duties devolving upon the board of education and the deputy state supervisors of elections in the proper submission of the question of levying an additional tax not to exceed two mills for any and all purposes for which such boards may levy taxes.

Section 3 provides:

"If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes * * *."

You indicate in your statement of facts that an election was held in a school district under and by virtue of Senate Bill 187 and the vote of the majority of the electors voting in such district was against the levy asked for by the board of education. In a personal interview you indicate that this was an entire township district situated in Montgomery county, in which the vote was approximately 40 votes against the levy and 24 votes in favor of the same, a total vote of possibly 64, or less than one-fourth of the electors of such township. You now inquire if after such levy was defeated on August 12th, under Senate Bill 187, such action on the part of the electors who went to the polls would prevent the board of education from issuing bonds and taking care of the proper school expenses in the second tax measure known as House Bill 567.

It is important to notice the opening section of Senate Bill 187, quoted above, but which if transposed will read as follows:

"* * * Upon securing the approval of the electors * * * the board of education of any school district may levy in the year 1919 not to exceed two mills for any and all purposes for which such boards may levy taxes in lieu of proceedings under an act entitled 'an act to authorize the taxing authority of counties, municipal corporations, townships and school districts to fund deficiencies in operating revenues for the year 1919, issue bonds, and to levy taxes for such purposes, but not otherwise' * * *."

It would seem from an analysis of the language used in section 1 that the prime factor necessary is "upon securing the approval of the electors", then the provisions mentioned in Senate Bill 187 can be used. In other words, if no approval of the electors has been received, it would seemingly follow that the electors have not taken advantage of Senate Bill 187, which is a law that may be used by the board of education in lieu of proceedings under House Bill 567. Here an attempt was made to provide the necessary funds for the school board when operating under Senate Bill 187. The approval of a majority of the electors was not secured.

The intention of Senate Bill 187, as well as House Bill 567, was to provide immediate revenues for urgent needs in the operation of the schools until permanent revenues can be provided. Clearly a board of education cannot use both House Bill 567 and Senate Bill 187, for the latter says that in lieu of proceedings under House Bill 567, and upon securing the approval of the electors, Senate Bill 187 may provide the necessary revenue.

Prior opinions of the Attorney-General hold that the mere fact that the electors in a school district have, by a majority vote, failed to authorize bond issues or taxes under certain sections, does not cut off the school board from recourse to other sections, and bearing upon this point attention is invited to the following excerpt from an opinion of the Attorney-General, found in Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912, page 1384:

> "When it becomes necessary for a board of education to improve school buildings by reason of an order from the inspector of workshops and factories, and such improvements cannot be made within the ordinary limitations of the Smith tax law, and when, furthermore, the electors have repeatedly refused to authorize bond issues, under sections 7625 and 7628, General Code, the board of education may have recourse to sections 7629 and 7630, General Code.
> By these sections, they may issue bonds for this purpose in a sum not to exceed the amount of a tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding the issue, and may extend the payment of such bonds over a period of forty years."

It will be noted that the above opinion speaks of an emergency that exists where the inspector of workshops and factories has condemned a school building and that the improvements necessary cannot be made within the ordinary limitations of the Smith tax law. The case is parallel to the one at hand in a sense, because section 4 of Senate Bill 187 provides as follows:

> "This act is hereby declared to be an emergency law necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace and safety. The necessity therefore lies in the fact that in many school districts of the state, under the limitations on tax levies provided by law, deficiencies exist in operating revenues, arising from the abnormal increase of operating expenses and the desirability of increasing the compensation of school teachers; so that unless afforded extraordinary means of raising revenues the boards of education of such district will be unable to carry on the function of public education until permanent revenues can be provided. Therefore this act shall go into immediate effect."

House Bill 567 is also an emergency act and its emergency clause is section 14, which reads as follows:

> "This act is hereby declared to be an emergency law necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety. Such necessity arises from the fact that under existing limitations on tax levies deficiencies exist in many of the subdivisions of the state, arising largely from the recent abnormal increase of operating expenses, and the anticipated loss of revenue from the liquor tax; and by reason thereof such subdivisions, unless immediately afforded extraordinary means of extinguishing such deficiencies and meeting fixed charges and current expenses will be unable to carry on the ordinary operations of government until permanent revenues can be provided and made available. Therefore, this act shall take effect immediately."

A comparison of the two emergency sections appearing in the two laws, Senate Bill 187 and House Bill 567, indicates that the necessity in each case was the same, the exception being that Senate Bill 187 was a measure which school boards alone could use and House Bill 567 is a law which all taxing subdivisions, including counties, municipal corporations, townships or school districts, may take advantage of.

The intention of the general assembly seems to have been primarily to give temporary financial relief to school districts and boards of education were given two avenues which they might use, selecting either bill as their avenue. Senate Bill 187 provides that in lieu of using House Bill 567, the board of education can use Senate Bill 187, but provides clearly that the approval of the electors in the district is necessary. It would seem, therefore, that where a school board had attempted to use the provisions of Senate Bill 187 and had failed, none of their rights of operation under House Bill 567 would be lost; it cannot be denied that their debts would be just the same as they were before, their obligations unchanged, and the need of relief would still exist. Had they availed themselves of Senate Bill 187, clearly they could not use House Bill 567, because the former says in its opening sentence, "in lieu of", but if they accomplish nothing in their attempt under Senate Bill 187, the question is, was any burden put upon the tax payers by that board of education through Senate Bill 187? Clearly not.

It would therefore follow, and the opinion of the Attorney-General is, that where an election was held in a school district, under and by virtue of Senate Bill 187 on August 12, 1919, and a vote of the majority of the electors of said district was against any levy under Senate Bill 187, such board of education is not precluded thereby from taking advantage of the provisions of House Bill 567, since both are extraordinary measures for the raising of revenue and boards of education can avail themselves of either Senate Bill 187 or House Bill 567, but not both, in order to carry on the function of public education until permanent revenues can be provided.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY TRANSFER TERRITORY TO OR FROM CENTRALIZED SCHOOL DISTRICT UPON PETITION—NOT MANDATORY—SECTION 4727 G. C. CONSTRUED AS AMENDED BY HOUSE BILL 163 (108 O. L. 235)—IN TRANSFER OF TERRITORY UNDER SECTION 4692 G. C. NO PROVISION FOR PETITION OF ELECTORS.

1. Under section 4727 G. C., as amended by House Bill 163, the county board of education may transfer territory to or from a centralized school district upon the petition of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the territory petitioning for transfer. But there is nothing mandatory in such section that the county board of education shall make such transfer.

2. In transfers of school territory under section 4692 G. C., there is no provision for any petition on the part of the electors, the only provision in such section being that a remonstrance and not a petition can be filed with the county board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1919.

HON. LEWIS F. HALE, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion from this department on the following statement of facts:

> "The Monroe township rural school district, Logan county, Ohio, is a centralized school district with a bonded indebtedness. More than two-thirds of the electors of a certain part of this district adjacent to the West Liberty village school district have petitioned the county board of education, acting under the authority of section 4692 and section 4727 as recently amended by H. B. 163 (108 O. L. 235), to transfer that part of the said West Liberty district. Counsel for the Monroe township board of education has advised the county board that they are without authority to make such transfer, I have advised them that they have full authority under section 4727 as recently amended. Kindly give the county board of education your decision on the following question:
> "Has the Logan county board of education authority under section 4692 4727, as amended to transfer territory from the Monroe township rural centralized school district to the West Liberty village district?
> "It is my opinion that the authority granted the county board by the above mentioned law is clear and needs no interpretation, but our county board wishes your opinion before they take action."

Section 4727, prior to the recent amendment by the present General Assembly, read as follows:

"When the schools of a rural school district have been centralized, such centralization shall not be discontinued within three years and then only by petition and election, as provided in section 4726. If at a special election more votes are cast against centralization than for it, the division into subdistricts as they existed prior to centralization shall thereby be re-established."—(104 O. L., 133).

Under House Bill 163, which was passed by the present general assembly and became law on and with August 11, 1919, section 4727 was amended by adding the following language to original section 4727 G. C., above quoted:

"Nothing in this or the foregoing sections, viz., sections 4726 and 4726-1, shall prevent a county board of education upon the petition of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the territory petitioning for transfer from transferring territory to or from a centralized school district, the same as to or from a district not centralized."

In reply to your question as to whether the Logan county board of education has authority under sections 4692 and 4727, as amended, to transfer territory from a rural centralized school district to a village school district, it is advised that the language of section 4727, as amended, is very clear that a county board of education, upon the petition of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the territory petitioning for transfer, may make such transfer if in its judgment it should be done. There is nothing mandatory in the amended section that compels a county board of education to comply with the petition, even if presented by two-thirds of the qualified electors of the territory petitioning for transfer, for the language of the section says that "nothing * * * shall prevent," and does not say that such transfer shall be made. It is eminently proper that this authority should rest with the county school board, that is, that they should have some discretion in the matter of transfer, for the reason that a centralized district, by vote of the electors in the district, might issue bonds for say $100,000 for the erection of a large centralized school building; such election may have been carried in the affirmative by a comparatively close vote. Soon thereafter the very electors who created a majority in the affirmative and caused the bond issue to be made, seek to be transferred to another district for any reason, one of which might be that the tax rate in the district which was centralized was too high. It is important to note that the party who purchases the bonds usually makes a thorough investigation and possibly pays a premium on the bond issue, because such issue is based upon a large tax duplicate as the district originally existed. It would seem that until all bonds or indebtedness of the district were properly taken care of, unusual care should be had in the transfer of school territory, for several transfers following in succession from a school district, which had bonded itself for a large amount, might sooner or later show that the tax duplicate was but three-fifths of what it was when the bond purchaser purchased the bonds.

It can be seen that the rights of the purchaser of the bonds might be infringed upon by transfers of school territory until the district issuing the bonds had but a fraction of its former duplicate. This is presumed to be one of the important things that a county board of education should take into consideration in making transfers, for the courts have held that where school territory has been transferred to a new district, it must at once become a part of such new district and begin to assume the taxes and indebtedness of such new district. Possibly the latest decision upon this point is that in the case of Ewing vs. Schopf, auditor, decided in the court of appeals for Wayne county February 5, 1919, and reported in the Ohio Law Reporter of July 21, 1919. In this opinion the court said:

"We think the rule in Ohio is well fixed that when territory for school purposes is transferred, pursuant to statutory authority, as is clearly attempted in the petition now before us, that those residing in such annexed territory may be taxed to pay pre-existing indebtedness embraced in the new territorial district."

Section 4692 provides as follows:

"The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory, either in the treasury or in the course of collection, and also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

It is very important that great care should be taken in carrying out the last sentence of the above quotation, that is, that an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory should be made, for by following this out it can be seen that a resident in the territory which had been transferred one or more times might really be subject to double taxation, that is, a portion upon the bond issue which he helped to make in the old district and the pre-existing indebtedness of the new district to which he had been transferred.

You say that more than two-thirds of the electors of a certain territory have "petitioned the county board of education, under authority of 4692, to transfer that part of their school district to the West Liberty school district." Attention is invited to the fact that there is no provision for a petition on the part of the electors in the matter of a transfer of school territory under section 4692 G. C. The only provision in such section is for a protest or remonstrance, as indicated in the following language from section 4692:

"Nor shall such transfer take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred, shall, within thirty days after the filing of such map, file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer."

There is no particular objection to the presentation of a petition to a county school board, where a transfer of territory is desired under section 4692 G. C., in order to show the sentiment of the territory, but such county board of education is without authority to officially act upon such petition, but must act upon any remonstrance. The only condition under which the county board of education is compelled to make the transfer of school territory upon petition of the electors of the territory affected is where such transfer is to be made under the provisions of section 4696 G. C., that is, transferring to an adjoining exempted village or city school district, or another county school district, which in this case would not apply unless the West Liberty school district was a properly exempted village school district, as provided in section 4688 G. C.

Coming then to the conclusions upon the statement of facts given by you, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. Under section 4727 G. C., as amended by House Bill 163, the county board of education may transfer territory to or from a centralized school district upon the petition of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the territory petitioning for transfer. But there is nothing mandatory in such section that the county board of education shall make such transfer.

2. In transfers of school territory under section 4692 G. C., there is no provision for any petition on the part of the electors, the only provision in such section being that a remonstrance and not a petition can be filed with the county board of education.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

EMERGENCY BOARD—EXPENSES OF STATE OFFICERS ATTENDING CONVENTIONS OUTSIDE OF STATE—SECTION 2313-3 G. C. GOVERNS—APPROPRIATION TO BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES FOR TRAVELING EXPENSES CAN ONLY BE USED TO PAY SUCH EXPENSES WITHIN STATE.

1. Section 2313-3 G. C., which provides that no state officer or employe shall attend at state expense any conference or convention outside the state unless authorized by the Emergency Board, applies to the members and executive force of the Board of State Charities.

2. The general appropriation made to the Board of State Charities for traveling expense can only be used to pay such expenses within the state. The expense of attending conferences and conventions outside the state are payable from the emergency fund referred to in section 2313-3 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1919.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of September 15, 1919, inquiring whether or not the provisions of section 1352 G. C. relating to the authority of the members and executive force of your board to attend national conferences, take precedence over section 2313-3 G. C., was duly received.

The provisions of Section 1352 G. C., referred to in your letter, read as follows:

> "The members of the board and such of its executive force as it shall designate may attend state and national conferences for the discussion of questions pertinent to their duties. The actual traveling expense so incurred by the members and such of its executive force as it shall designate shall be paid as provided by section 1351 of the General Code."

The provisions just quoted were not contained in original section 1352 G. C., but first came into the section upon its amendment in 1913 (103 O. L. 865).

About two years after that amendment, the General Assembly enacted original supplementary section 2313-3 G. C. (106 O. L. 183), as follows:

> "No executive, legislative, or judicial officer, board, commission or employe of the state shall attend at state expense any association, conference or convention outside the state unless authorized by the emergency board. Before such allowance may be made, the head of the department shall make application in writing to the emergency board showing necessity for such attendance and the probable cost to the state. If a majority of the members of the emergency board approve the application, such expense shall be paid from the emergency fund."

Whether or not, prior to the enactment of section 2313-3 G. C., members of the Board of State Charities and such of its executive force as it might designate, were authorized to attend conferences outside the state at state expense, is not involved in the present inquiry, and no opinion is expressed on the question. But since its enactment, however, the question is free from doubt, for the General Assembly has thereby expressly and clearly established and declared the general policy of the state to be that no state officer, board, commission or employe shall attend at state expense any conferences or conventions outside the state "unless authorized by the emergency board," and, when such attendance has been authorized, that the expense must be paid from the emergency fund.

It is a well settled rule of statutory construction, which is applicable to the statutes now under consideration, that the provisions of a statute must be construed in connection with all laws in pari materia, so that all provisions may, if possible, have operation according to their plain import; for it is to be presumed that statutes relating to one subject are governed by the same spirit and policy, and intended to be consistent and harmonious. So that when a general policy is plainly disclosed special provisions should, when possible, be given a construction which will bring them in harmony with that policy. See Cincinnati vs. Comer, 55 O. S., 82-89.

Reading sections 1352 and 2313-3 G. C. together, no difficulty is encountered in giving full force and effect to both. The clear legislative intent is, in my opinion, that the members of the Board of State Charities and such of its executive force as it may designate, are authorized to attend certain conferences outside the state at state expense, provided such attendance has been authorized by the State Emergency Board under section 2313-3 G. C.

It is true that the General Assembly has made a general appropriation to the Board of State Charities for "traveling expense," but the same is equally true of other state officers and boards. Such appropriations, however, in the absence of a clear legislative intent to the contrary, must, in view of the general policy expressly declared in section 2313-3 G. C., be held to be made for the purpose only of paying traveling expenses within the state. When the expense is incurred in attending conferences and conventions outside the state, section 2313-3 G. C. requires that it be paid from the emergency fund, and not from the funds referred to in section 1351 G. C.

Section 1352 G. C. was amended at the present session of the General Assembly, but not with respect to the provisions or subject now under consideration. Those provisions have remained the same since their original enactment in 1913, and the recent amendment cannot have the effect of exempting the board and its executive force from the requirements of section 2313-3 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LEVIES ON GENERAL DUPLICATE—MADE BY LOCAL LEVYING AUTHORITIES AND BUDGET COMMISSION FOR EACH PURPOSE AND FUND SEPARATELY—COUNTY AUDITOR, MUST DISTRIBUTE TAXES TO SCHOOL DISTRICTS IN PROPORTION TO LEVIES ON DUPLICATE—NO MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, BOARD OR OFFICER AND NO BOARD OR OFFICER OF SCHOOL DISTRICT OR TOWNSHIP HAS AUTHORITY TO VARY PROPORTIONS—NO METHOD IS PROVIDED BY LAW FOR CERTIFYING ACTION OF BUDGET COMMISSION OR COUNTY AUDITOR IN ALLOWING AND COMPUTING TAX LEVIES TO MUNICIPAL AND TOWNSHIP OFFICERS.

1. Taxes must be levied on the general duplicate through the agency of the local levying authorities and the budget commission for each purpose or fund separately.

2. The county auditor must distribute the proceeds of general property taxes to school districts in proportion to the levies as made on the duplicate.

3. No municipal council, board or officer, and no board or officer of a school district or township has authority to vary the proportions in which the proceeds of tax levies accrue to their respective treasuries, except by way of transfer of funds and subject to the laws governing such transfers.

4. No method is provided by law for certifying the action of the budget commission or the county auditor in allowing and computing tax levies to municipal and township officers. Such officers must, however, take notice of such official action and govern themselves accordingly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your request of recent date for the opinion of this office, as follows:

"STATEMENT OF FACTS.

Both municipal and school and township examiners of this bureau have reported to this office that the budgetary levy in a certain county of the state is made in a lump sum and that the distribution of taxes is made in keeping therewith in lump sum, allowing municipalities, school boards and townships in such county the apportionment of the tax settlements to suit their own tastes. We have had several discussions upon this matter and it is the opinion of the writer that the provisions of the Smith 1 per cent. tax law (See sections 5649-3a and 5649-3d G. C.), plainly show that the levies in all taxing districts must be made for each particular fund and particular purpose. Section 5649-1 G. C., plainly shows that the sinking fund levies must come first and in preference to all others, and we also are of the further opinion that sections 7587 and 7603 G. C., plainly call for distribution by the county auditor in pro rata to the budgetary levies. We are also calling your attention to an opinion of the Attorney-General under date of September 24, 1914, Annual Reports for 1914, Volume 2, page 1290, and since we have been asked to show the law making it mandatory for the county auditor to make distribution of the tax yield to the various purposes and funds, we are asking as follows:

Question 1. Must not the levy allowed by the budget commission be made to cover each purpose or fund?

Question 2. Must not the county auditor make such tax distribution pro rata in keeping with such budgetary levy?

Question 3. Must not such distribution as made by the county auditor be honored by the officers of each municipality, school board and township in their local distribution?

Question 4. If it be not the county auditor's duty to make such distribution, whose duty may it be?

P. S. While we have cited section 7587 and section 7603 of the school laws we want this opinion to cover municipalities and townships as well."

So far as your questions relate to the making and distribution of school levies they are covered substantially in full by an opinion addressed to the Auditor of State, under date of September 24, 1919, copy of which is enclosed herewith. In that opinion affirmative answers are returned to your questions Nos. 2 and 3, thus making unnecessary an answer to your question No. 4. In other words, it is held therein that it is the duty of the county auditor, under the provisions of the laws regulating the levy and distribution of taxes and particularly the Smith one per cent. law, so-called (sections 5649-1 to 5649-5b, inclusive, of the General Code), to take the amounts fixed by the budget commission for the various items in each annual budget submitted to it by a board of education and, on the basis of the estimated duplicate of taxable property in the school district, compute a rate of taxation which will produce such amount; that upon settlement with the county treasurer it is further the duty of the county auditor to apportion to the several school funds pro rata shares of the collections accruing to such school district on the basis of the rates so determined; and that it is not within the power of the county auditor or any other board or officer to alter or vary this distribution. The sections of the General Code upon which this opinion is based are cited in the opinion and, generally speaking, are those referred to by you.

Your first question, in so far as it relates to school districts, will be considered as a general question in connection with the other general questions as relating to municipal corporations and townships, for the question is common to all taxing districts.

It is indeed the duty of the budget commission, as you suggest, to require the submission to it of itemized budgets and to act upon the budgets so submitted to it by items. This is sufficiently apparent from the provisions of section 5649-3c, quoted in the other opinion, and particularly the following provisions thereof:

> "If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district * * *, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein."

Indeed, the duty to segregate the several levies begins with the levying authorities themselves, that is to say, the council or other legislative body of the municipal corporation, the trustees of the township or the board of education of the school district. This results from various provisions of the statutes. In the first place, such sections as section 3794 G. C., as to municipal corporations, sections 3282, 3282-1 and 5646 G. C., as to townships, and sections 7586 and 7587 G. C., as to boards of education, which are modified but not expressly repealed by the Smith one per cent. law, require the levies to be segregated according to "funds" or "purposes," which are substantially the same thing. The sections which have been referred to are typical merely of many which exist, and the following quotations from some of them will illustrate their purport and policy:

Section 3794:

> "* * * The ordinance prescribing the (municipal) levy shall specify distinctly each and every purpose for which the levy is made and the per cent. thereof."
>
> (The modification of this section effected by the Smith law, as will hereinafter become apparent, is that instead of a rate being fixed for "each and every purpose" an amount is fixed by the council; and the ordinance, instead of becoming directly of its own force a levying ordinance, takes on the character of a budget).

Section 5646:

> "The trustees of each township, * * * shall determine the amount of taxes necessary for all township purposes. * * * The county auditor shall levy, annually, for township purposes, including the relief of the poor * * * such rates of taxes as the trustees of the respective townships certify to him to be necessary. * * *"

(The modifying effect of the Smith law here is similar to that which it has exerted upon section 3794;; but it is apparent that the levy for township purposes is to be segregated according to the various rates or purposes).

Section 7586:

"Each board of education, * * * shall fix the rate of taxation necessary to be levied for all school purposes. * * *"

Section 7587:

Such levy shall be divided by the board of education into four funds: * * *. A separate levy must be made for each fund."

Before the Smith law went into effect, then, it was the policy of the state to specify the various legal purposes for which taxes might be levied by municipal corporations, townships and school districts, and to require separate levies for each purpose. The proceeds of such a levy, of course, constituted a "fund"—or rather (for other revenues might accrue to the several funds from sources other than property taxation), the proceeds of each levy constituted a trust fund for the purposes for which they were made and could be credited to such funds only as might be appropriated and expended for such purposes. An attempted levy by a municipal corporation, township trustees or a board of education which did not comply with this requirement was certainly not a valid levy under laws existing prior to the enactment of the Smith law.

Upon this system, the Smith law was superimposed, with its scheme of the submission of budgets and the exercise of the revisory jurisdiction or power of the budget commission for the purpose of enforcing certain all-inclusive limitations. Section 5649-3a is the section which took the place of sections, examples of which have been quoted. Probably it is a complete substitute for those sections, and therefore what has been intimated respecting the continuing force and effect of such other sections may be, strictly speaking, erroneous. However, it is believed that section 5649-3a was enacted in the light of these sections, and no purpose being discernable in it to do away with that policy which has been discerned in these sections, it should be interpreted consistently with that policy. The following provisions of that section are in point:

"On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education and all other boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes, within the county, except taxes for state purposes, shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth:

(1) The amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year.

(2) The balance standing to the credit or debit of the several funds at the end of the last fiscal year.

(3) The monthly expenditures from each fund in the twelve months and the monthly expenditures from all funds in the twelve months of the last fiscal year.

(4) The annual expenditures from each fund for each year of the last five fiscal years.

(5) The monthly average of such expenditures from each of the several funds for the last fiscal year, and also the total monthly average of all of them for the last five fiscal years.

(6) The amount of money received from any other source and available for any purpose in each of the last five fiscal years, together with an estimate of the probable amount that may be received during the incoming year, from such source or sources.

(7) The amount of the bonded indebtedness setting out each issue and the purpose for which issued, the date of issue and the date of maturity, the original amount issued and the amount outstanding, the rate of interest, the sum necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes, and the amount required for all interest and sinking fund purposes for the incoming year.

(8) The amount of all indebtedness incurred under authority of section 5649-4 and the amount of such additional taxes as may have been authorized as provided in section 5649-5 of the General Code, setting out each issue in detail as provided in the next preceding paragraph.

(9) Such other facts and information as the tax commission of Ohio or the budget commissioners may require.

* * * * * *

Such budget shall be made up annually at the time or times now fixed by law when such boards of officers are required to determine the amount in money to be raised or the rate of taxes to be levied in their respective taxing districts. * * *"

Attention is called to the following features of this provision:

(1) The budget is to be "in itemized form."

(2) It is to be made up by the levying authorities at the time they are required to make their levies under existing statutes, and apparently as a substitute for their action in making direct levies.

(3) The very first specification required of such budgets is that they shall set forth "the amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money."

The word "purpose" in this connection must, I think, be given the same meaning that it had possessed in the previously existing statutes, namely, a purpose in the legal sense, as the general object or public need for which the levying authorities are empowered to make a distinct levy. It is the meaning found in Article XII, section 5 of the Constitution, which provides that—

"Every law imposing a tax, shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied."

In other words, "purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money" and "object of the tax" mean substantially the same thing.

(4) Attention is called also to the fact that "the several funds" as they existed prior even to the enactment of the Smith law are mentioned and their condition is required to be reported by section 5649-3a.

If section 5649-3a could be said to have any effect upon the policy of our law, dictated as it is to a considerable extent at least by Article XII, section 5 of the Constitution, with respect to the separation of the legal purposes for which taxes may be levied, such effect could only be, in the light of what has been pointed out, by way of emphasizing that policy.

Coming now to section 5649-3a, which deals with the powers and duties of the budget commission, and recurring to those sentences which have been previously quoted therefrom, we find first therein the use of the phrase "amounts to be raised." A verbal identity exists between this phrase as found in section 5649-3c and the phrase found in subparagraph 1 of section 5649-3a. They are evidently intended to mean the same thing. In other words, the budget is to set forth the amount to be raised for each and every purpose, i. e., object, for which taxes may be levied, or, putting it in another way, each fund. The budget commissioners are to adjust the "various amounts to be raised;" that is, the various amounts which are intended to be turned into levies. They may go further and act upon items, which might constitute subdivisions of a levy or "amount to be raised," in making their reductions, but they must at least take action with respect to each "amount to be raised" or fund.

From what has been said it follows that the answer to your first question must be in the affirmative, not only as to school districts but also as to the levies of municipal corporations and townships.

In the other opinion it is pointed out that section 7603 G. C. in and of itself contains a rather clear answer to your questions Nos. 2 and 3 so far as school districts are concerned. No statute quite so explicit as this section exists with respect to the apportionment of the proceeds of taxation due to municipal corporations and townships, respectively. However, it must be apparent at the very outset that the same rule must apply to townships and school districts even in the absence of any such express statutory provision. In the first place, it is a general principal that the proceeds of a tax levy for a particular purpose constitute a trust fund for that purpose. The purpose of a tax is inherent in the very idea of a tax. It is impossible to think of a tax as not being levied for some purpose. Its legality is tested by the purpose for which it is levied.

> Loan Assn. vs. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655;
> Hubbard vs. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S. 436.

But in this state we have this fundamental principle of taxation in the form of a constitutional limitation expressed in Article XII, section 5, supra. Every tax must be levied for some distinctly stated purpose and its proceeds must be applied to that purpose only. In the face of these constitutional and other fundamental principles, it would be impossible to arrive at the conclusion that any ministerial officer, such as a county auditor with respect to his action in distributing proceeds of tax levies, could lawfully ignore the rates for each purpose and make distribution on some other basis. Indeed, the statute authorizing him to do this would, if it went to the extreme suggested, be unconstitutional, though certain diversions of general revenues to particular lawful public purposes have been sanctioned by the courts.

> See Porter vs. Hopkins, 91 O. S. 74.

It would follow from these general observations that at least in the absence of express statutory authority neither the county auditor nor any other board or officer would be empowered to apportion the proceeds of taxes otherwise than in proportion to the rates for the various purposes for which they were levied.

No such statutes exist. Yet the statutes are not perfectly silent as reflecting upon the questions now under consideration. The following are worthy of notice in this connection:

> "Section 2598. In making the settlement required by the preceding two sections, the auditor shall carefully examine the tax duplicate and ascertain, from the entries of taxes and penalty paid, in whole or in part, and from such other source of information as are within his reach, the true amount collected by the treasurer on account of each of the several taxes charged on such duplicate, the amount remaining in the hands of the treasurer belonging to each fund, and shall give to the treasurer separate certificates in duplicate of the separate sums found to have been collected by him."

> "Section 2599. The county auditor shall also make and deliver to the treasurer a certificate specifying the amount charged on the tax duplicate of the county for each of the several purposes for which taxes have been levied, and also certificate or an abstract of the taxes which have become due and payable and which remain unpaid. Provided that in making the settlement in February of each year, the auditor may ascertain the amount of taxes collected from the statements required by law to be made to him by the treasurer."

> "Section 2602. The auditor shall open an account with each township, city, village, and special school district in the county, in which, immediately after his semi-annual settlement with the treasurer in February and August of each year, he shall credit each with the net amount so collected for its use.

> "On application of the township, city, village or school treasurer the auditor shall give him a warrant on the county treasurer, for the amount then due to such treasurer, and charge him with the amount of the warrant but the person so applying for such warrant shall deposit with the auditor a certificate from the clerk of the township, city, village, or district, stating that he is treasurer thereof, was duly elected or appointed, and that he has given bond according to law."

These sections show that a separate account is required to be kept by the county auditor with each "purpose for which taxes have been levied." It is true that in making his payments to the various taxing districts (other than school districts, as to which section 7603 G. C. applies), he need draw but a single warrant covering the "net amount collected for its use." Here the statute does not seem expressly to require the separation of funds for the purpose of making payment.

> "Section 3795. The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. * * *"

This section, applying to municipal corporations, is explicit. It requires an account to be kept with "each fund for which taxes are assessed." It requires all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation to be deposited "in the appropriate fund." No authority is given to the city auditor or treasurer or the council of the municipal corporation, or any other body, to dispense with this requirement.

The township statutes appear on cursory examination of them to be silent as to the specific duties of the treasurer or clerk in setting up accounts with funds. In view of this silence the general policy of the constitution and laws and the general principles of taxation previously referred to would, of course, apply. Both the treasurer and clerk are required to keep books, and the result would be that these books would have to show correctly the amounts in the various township funds as produced by tax levies and other sources of revenue.

But there is one significant and conclusive feature of our statutes which has not yet been mentioned. I refer to statutory provisions which will not be quoted or specifically cited, dealing with the transfer of funds in various treasuries. These transfers are to be made in certain ways and subject to certain conditions, which are very carefully safeguarded. If it were true that the council of a municipal corporation or the trustees of a township had power to control the disposition of funds accruing to their respective treasuries as the proceeds of tax levies, the provisions for transfers would not only be unnecessary but their restrictions could be effectually avoided.

From all these considerations it follows that tax levies must be made for specific purposes, and when made for such purposes and extended as rates on the grand duplicate, the proceeds of these rates are automatically appropriated to various funds corresponding with the purposes for which they were levied, and, except in strict pursuance of statutes providing for transfers and the segregation of revenues for particular purposes and the like, cannot be diverted from those funds by any officer or board.

What has been said, of course, relates only to the levy of taxes on the general property duplicate. Miscellaneous revenues accruing to a municipal corporation, for example, may properly be subject to the control and disposition of council as to the funds to which they shall be credited. Council has control over the finances of the corporation subject to the provisions of law, and this control is broad enough, in the absence of statutes to the contrary, to permit undesignated revenues to be controlled by ordinance. This was the holding of my predecessor in an opinion found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1918, page 1484, and relating to the disposition of the municipality's share of the collateral inheritance tax. I mention that opinion only to distinguish it from the questions which have been discussed in this opinion.

Your second and fourth questions, though answered as to school districts by the reasoning of the enclosed opinion to the Auditor of State on the basis of section 7603 G. C., cannot be answered in the same way as to municipal corporations and school districts. That is to say, while it is the duty of the county auditor to segregate funds and issue a certificate of apportionment in the case of school levies, he has no similar duty to perform in the case of municipal and township levies. The duty to make the apportionment in accordance with the rates of levy is imposed upon the auditor and treasurer of the municipality and the clerk and treasurer of a township by the sections which have been cited. The statutes contain no machinery for officially notifying such officers of the rates computed by the auditor on the basis of the budget allowances. The work of the budget commission is, under section 5649-3c, to be certified to the county auditor, but he is not required to certify his action in computing the rates to anybody. Nevertheless, both in the respects under consideration in this opinion and in other respects, such as the making of appropriations (section 5649-3d), such action is binding on the local authorities. A hiatus in the statutory machinery exists here, though no real difficulty exists because the tax rates are a matter of public concern, spread upon a public record, and all public officers and citizens must take notice of them. Possibly the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices has specified, or may specify, some appropriate method of accounting to supply the purely formal omission in the statute.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION—ANSWERS TO A NUMBER OF QUESTIONS RELATIVE TO SAID STATION.

1. The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station may, at the expense of the state, furnish the county experiment farms with labor, live stock, machinery, seeds, feed and other kinds of equipment or supplies whenever the same are reasonably necessary for the carrying on of bona fide experimental work of said station.

2. The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station may not legally apply the proceeds of the sale of agricultural products from the station farms to the purchase of supplies for the use of such station. Such proceeds should be paid into the state treasury as provided by section 24 G. C., and said purchases should be paid for out of the regular appropriations made for the station.

3. It is not illegal to pay the salary or wages of the operator of a ditching machine belonging to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station out of funds in the state treasury which have been appropriated to said station, when such salary or wages relate to a period of time during which said machine is used by such operator on county experiment farms in furtherance of bona fide drainage experiments conducted thereon by the officials of the Ohio Agricultural Station.

4. The publication known as the Ohio Station News is a "bulletin" of the experiments and work of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, within the meaning of section 1173 (106 O. L., 123).

5. Rights of the state under certain lease and option discussed.

6. When the owner of a farm leases the same to the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, and there are situate on said farm at the time of lease certain buildings which are annexed to and form a part of the land demised, neither the director nor the burser of said station has any legal authority to grant permission to the lessor to remove from said land any of said buildings. Nor would this conclusion be in anywise affected by the added fact that such lease contained a clause giving the lessee an option to purchase said premises at any time prior to the expiration of such lease.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have recently propounded to me a number of questions relating to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, located at Wooster, Ohio. Your first question reads thus:

"1. May the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, at the expense of the state, furnish the county experiment farms with labor, live stock, machinery, seeds and feed, or any other kind of equipment or supplies?"

The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station has no authority to furnish county experiment farms, at the expense of the state, with any of the things stated in your question, unless it can be said that such authority is given, either expressly or by necessary implication, by some statute. It is essential, therefore, at this point to consider the statutes affecting the functions of such station.

The original act for the establishment of an agricultural experiment station was passed April 17, 1882, and is found in 79 Ohio Laws, page 113. Section 1 of that act was as follows:

> "Section 1.—Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, that for the benefit of the interests of practical and scientific agriculture, and for the development of the vast agricultural resources of the state, an Ohio agricultural experiment station is established as hereinafter provided."

Section 1170 G. C. (106 O. L., 122) describes the experiment station in practically the same language, said section reading thus:

> "There shall be a state agricultural experiment station for the benefit of practical and scientific agriculture and the development of the agricultural resources of the state. It shall be known as the 'Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.'"

Other sections relating to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station are as follows:

> Section 1171.—"The state agricultural experiment station shall be under the supervision and direction of a board of control which shall consist of five members, who shall be practical farmers and who shall be appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, one member to serve for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years and one for five years. Thereafter one member shall be appointed each year who shall hold his office for a term of five years. Not more than three members shall belong to the same political party."
> Section 1171-1.—"Members of the board of control shall receive no compensation for their services, but their necessary expenses while in the discharge of their official duties shall be paid by the state."
> Section 1171-2.—"The board of control shall organize by the election of a president, a secretary and treasurer; the president shall be a member of the board. Three members of the board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. It shall hold a meeting in Columbus on the first Wednesday after the second Monday of January of each year and special meetings at other times and places upon the call of the president or upon the written request of two members. The board shall adopt by-laws, rules and regulations for the government of the station."
> Section 1171-3.—"The board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station shall be a body corporate, with power to sue and be sued, to contract and be contracted with, to make and use a seal and to alter it at its pleasure. It may receive and hold in trust for the use and benefit of the station a grant, or devise of land, or a donation or bequest of money or other personal property to be applied to the general or special use of the station as directed by the donor."

Section 1171-4.—"The board of control shall appoint a director, who shall be a person of acknowledged ability and training in the principles and practice of scientific agriculture. It shall fix the terms of office and salaries of all officers and employes of the station and upon written charge for good and sufficient cause may remove them. The directors shall have control of the affairs of the station, and be responsible to the board of control for the management of all of its departments. With the approval of the board of control he shall appoint chiefs of departments, assistants and other employes necessary for the proper management of the station and shall assign them to their respective duties. He may suspend an officer or employe of the station for cause, which suspension with the reasons therefor he shall immediately report to the board of control for its final action."

Section 1172.—"The title of all lands for the use of experiment station shall be conveyed in fee simple to the state, but no title shall be conveyed for such purposes unless the Attorney-General is satisfied that it is free from defects and incumbrances."

Section 1173.—"From time to time the board of control shall issue bulletins of its experiments and work. It shall make an annual report to the governor which shall be published in pamphlet form for free distribution."

Except as hereinafter noted, the above are all the statutes which describe the powers and activities of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. It will be noticed that such statutes confer upon the station no express authority to furnish county experiment farms with anything.

In fact, resort to the doctrine of implication is necessary to give the station authority for almost any of the important undertakings in which it is now engaged.

Speaking of this doctrine, Mr. Black, in his work on "Interpretation of Laws," page 62, says:

> "Every statute is understood to contain, by implication, if not by its express terms, all such provisions as may be necessary to effectuate its object and purpose, or to make effective the rights, powers, privileges, or jurisdiction which it grants, and also all such collateral and subsidiary consequences as may be fairly and logically inferred from its terms."

I am informed that upon the establishment of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, and frequently thereafter, the officials in charge of said station carried on large numbers of experiments on lands in various parts of the state, which were not owned by the state and which constituted no part of the lands of the experiment station. This work was and still is carried on as "field experiment work" and is considered important in ascertaining the adaptability of soils to different crops. In carrying on such work said officials evidently construed the statutes affecting the station to mean that the conduct of agricultural experiments was not restricted to the station itself or to any particular geographical area, but that the boundaries of the state itself were the only limits upon that kind of undertaking.

That this construction—a contemporaneous and practical construction given the statutes in question—was acquiesced in by the legislature, seems evident from the fact that many legislative appropriations were made from time to time for work of this character. For instance, in 1891 (88 O. L., 534), the General Assembly appropriated $1,000.00 to the station for "sub-station for field experiments with fertilizers," which moneys, according to a letter received by this department from Hon. Charles E. Thorne, present director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, were used for experiments conducted on unproductive soils in northern Ohio.

In other appropriation bills, covering a considerable period of years, provision was made by the legislature for what were styled "co-operative experiments." See 98 O. L., pp. 102, 370,; 99 O. L., pp. 40, 547; 100 O. L., p. 31; 101 O. L., pp. 19, 178; 102 O. L., pp. 23, 381, 407; 103 O. L., 54, 640.

Speaking of these "co-operative experiments," Mr. Thorne, in the letter above referred to, says:

> "In much of this work seeds, plants, spray materials and fertilizers were furnished to the co-operator as a partial offset to the time, labor and rental value of the land employed in the experiment, the object of the work being, not merely so much to help the individual farmer in solving his particular problems as to obtain information concerning the character and best method of treatment of the diverse soil formations of the state, or further knowledge respecting the behavior of varieties of plants under different climatic conditions, or concerning the remedies for plant disease and insect pests. The outcome of this work has been, however, that very few farmers have been willing to continue experiments for a sufficient length of time to secure reliable results, and in 1911, on the initiative of a member of the General Assembly, the county experiment farm law was passed."

It may be argued, however, that even if the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station may, at the expense of the state, legally furnish labor, live stock, machinery, seeds, feed and other materials to individuals co-operating with the station officials in carrying on experiment work on privately owned lands, there is no authority for the furnishing of such things, at the expense of the state, to county experiment farms—this for the reason that the statutes governing county experiment farms contain provisions negativing any such claim of authority. It is necessary, then, at this point to consider the county experiment farm statutes.

Authority for the establishment of such farms was first given by the legislature by the act of April 13, 1910 (101 O. L., 124).

The provisions of this act, generally speaking, are found in section 1165-1 G. C. et seq. (106 O. L. 122).

Section 1174 G. C. says:

> "In order to demonstrate the practical application under local conditions of the results of the investigations of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, and for the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of the agriculture of the various counties of the state, the commissioners of any county in the state are hereby authorized and empowered to establish an experiment farm within such county as hereinafter provided for."

Section 1175 G. C. says:

> "The county experiment farms established under this act shall be used for the comparison of varieties and methods of culture of field crops, fruits and garden vegetables; for the exemplification of methods for controlling insect pests, weeds and plant diseases; for experiments in the feeding of domestic animals and in the control of animal disease; for illustrations of the culture of forest trees and the management of farm woodlots; and for the demonstration of the effects of drainage, crop, rotation, manures and fertilizers, or for such part of the above lines of work as it may be practicable to carry on."

Sections 1176, 1177, 1177-1 and 1177-2 G. C. relate to the submission of the question of the establishment of such a farm to the electors of the county, and are not pertinent to the present inquiry.

The close relationship between the county experiment farm and the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station appears from sections 1177-3, 1177-5, 1177-6 and 1177-7 G. C., which sections are as follows:

Section 1177-3.—"When the funds provided for in this act are deposited in the county treasury, the county commissioners shall notify the board of control of their action, on receipt of which notice it shall be the duty of the board of control to visit the county and assist in the selection of a farm to be used for the purpose specified in this act, provided that no farm shall be purchased except with the approval of the majority of the board of control and also of a majority of the board of county commissioners of the county."

Section 1177-5.—"The management of all county experiment farms established under authority of this act shall be vested in the director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, who shall appoint all employes and plan and execute the work to be carried on, in such manner as in his judgment will most effectively serve the agricultural interests of the county in which such farm may be located, the director and all employes being governed by the general rules and regulations of the board of control."

Section 1177-6.—"Before entering upon any line of investigation or demonstration upon any of the county experiment farms established under this act, the director of the experiment station shall submit a written plan of such contemplated work to an advisory board, consisting of the county agricultural society of the county in which such experiment farm may be located, or if there be no county agricultural society, then the board of county commissioners of such county, and if such plan is not approved by such advisory board, then the work shall not be undertaken."

Section 1177-7.—"The county commissioners of any county may equip and assign to the board of control such portion of any farm now owned by the county as may be mutually agreed upon between the county commissioners and the board of control, the land thus assigned to be occupied and used by the experiment station for the purpose specified in the act and under the management of the director of the station."

Sections 1177-4 and 1177-8 G. C. relate to the equipment and maintenance of the county experiment farm and are important to our question. They read:

Section 1177-4—"The equipment of an experiment farm shall consist of such buildings, drains, fences, implements, live stock, stock feed and teams as shall be deemed necessary by the board of control for the successful work of such farm, and the initial equipment shall be provided by the county in which the farm is established, together with a sufficient fund to pay the wages of the laborers required to conduct the work of such farm during the first season. The county commissioners shall appropriate for the payment of the wages of laborers employed in the management of such farms as may be established under this act, and for the purpose of supplies and materials necessary to the proper conduct of such farms such sums not exceeding two thousand dollars annually for any farm, as may be agreed upon between such county commissioners and the board of control."

Section 1177-8.—"The produce of each county experiment farm as may be established under this act, over and above that required for the support of the teams and live stock kept on the farm, shall be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the labor and to the purchase of the supplies and materials required for the proper management of the farm as contemplated by this act, and for the maintenance of its equipment. Any surplus beyond these requirements shall be covered into the county treasury and placed to the credit of the general fund of the county, except in the case of the use of farms already belonging to the county, in which case the proceeds shall be placed to the credit of such fund as the county commissioners may designate."

By virtue of the sections last quoted, it is the duty of the county commissioners, in counties where experiment farms are established, to provide not only the initial equipment and to pay the wages of laborers required to conduct the work during the first season, but also to make annual appropriations thereafter for the payment of the wages of laborers and for the purchase of supplies and materials needed for the conduct of the farm, the sum of such appropriation not to exceed $2,000.00 per annum. Provision is also made for the sale of the produce of such farm and for the application of the proceeds of such sale to the purchase of supplies and materials for farm use.

In view of the seemingly adequate provision which the legislature has made for the operation and maintenance of county experiment farms, does it necessarily follow that the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station is without authority to furnish such farms, at the expense of the state, with the things mentioned in your letter? I think not.

The gratuitous furnishing by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station of labor, live stock, machinery, seeds, feed, etc., to the county experiment farms is, of course, a great benefit to such farms and thus to the counties maintaining them. Yet the theory upon which these things are furnished is not necessarily one of generosity by the state. On the contrary, these things are furnished, presumably, because the officials in charge of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station are in good faith satisfied that such action is necessary to carry on in a proper manner the experimentation which the station is bound to conduct "for the benefit of practical and scientific agriculture and the development of the agricultural resources of the state." In other words, the furnishing of these things inures to the benefit of the state as well as to the county.

Thus far we have assumed that the provision made by sections 1177-4 and 1177-8 G. C., for the operation and maintenance of the county experiment farm, is in all cases adequate. We now make the point that such assumption is unwarranted. That is, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the revenues derivable from those sections are always adequate. For example, there is a possibility that the annual appropriation made under section 1177-4 G. C. may not be $2,000.00, for the provision of that section is:

"* * * such sums not exceeding two thousand dollars annually for any farm, as may be agreed upon between such county commissioners and the board of control."

It is, of course, conceivable that the county commissioners may not agree to the payment of $2,000.00 per annum, either because they are not personally favorable to the appropriation of such sum, or because the finances of the county are in such a condition as to make such appropriation, under the circumstances undesirable. Again, the circumstances of seasonable conditions, etc., surrounding the operation of the farm, may, in a given year, be such as that there would be no surplus available for sale, as contemplated by section 1177-8 G .C., heretofore quoted.

In other words, to hold that an arrangement of barter and sale must precede the legal furnishing by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station to county experiment farms, of labor, machinery, seeds, fertilizer and other things which are factors in bona fide experimental work, might prove a great embarrassment to the successful carrying on of such work, and militate against the success of the very thing the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station was established to secure.

Answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station may, at the expense of the state, furnish the county experiment farms with labor, live stock, machinery, seeds, feed, and other kinds of equipment or supplies, whenever the same are reasonably necessary for the carrying on of bona fide experimental work of said station.

(2) Your second question reads:

> "If we find that any or all of these things have been done, and it is held to be unauthorized, whom shall we hold responsible?"

The nature of my answer to your first question makes it unnecessary to consider further your second question.

(3) Your third question reads:

> "May the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station legally apply the proceeds of the sale of agricultural products from the station farm to the purchase of supplies for the use of such station, or should such proceeds be paid into the state treasury and the said purchases paid for out of the regular appropriations made for the station?"

As hereinbefore mentioned, the produce of county experiment farms may, by reason of section 1177-8 G. C., legally be sold and the proceeds applied to the purchase of supplies for the use of such farm. I am unable to find any such statute with reference to the sale of agricultural products from the farms of the Ohio Agricultural Station, and am therefore of the opinion that disposition of the proceeds of the sale of such products therefrom should be made as provided by section 24 G. C. (104 O. L., 178), which says:

> "On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, or for the use of any such state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid, during the preceding week, from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed, verified statement of such receipts. Where tuitions and fees are paid to the officer or officers of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid, said officer or officers shall retain a sufficient amount of such tuition fund and fees to enable said officer or officers to make refunds of tuition and fees incident to conducting of said tuition fund and fees. At the end of each term of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid the officer or officers having in charge said tuition fund and fees shall make and file with the auditor of state an itemized statement of all tuitions and fees received and disposition of the same."

Answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station may not legally apply the proceeds of the sale of agricultural products from the station farms to the purchase of supplies for the use of such station; that such proceeds should be paid into the state treasury as provided by section 24 G. C., and that said purchases should be paid for out of the regular appropriations made for the station.

(4) Your fourth question is:

"If we find that such proceeds have been applied as above stated, and such action is held to be unauthorized, whom shall we hold responsible?"

It is understood that no findings for recovery are contemplated by you in this conection, and that you are asking whom to hold "responsible" for the purpose of definitely pointing out in your report the person or persons whose duty it will be to prevent subsequent misapplications of a similar nature.

The management and control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station is, to some extent, divided between a board of five members, known as the "board of control," and the executive officer of the station, known as the director. Section 1171 G. C. says in part:

"The state agricultural experiment station shall be under the supervision and direction of a board of control * * *."

In section 1171-2 it is said that:

"The board of control shall adopt by-laws, rules and regulations for the government of the station."

Section 1171-4 G. C. is here again cited:

"The board of control shall appoint a director, who shall be a person of acknowledged ability and training in the principles and practice of scientific agriculture. It shall fix the terms of office and salaries of all officers and employes of the station and upon written charge for good and sufficient cause may remove them. The director shall have control of the affairs of the station, and be responsible to the board of control for the management of all of its departments. With the approval of the board of control he shall appoint chiefs of departments, assistants, and other employes necessary for the proper management of the station and shall assign them to their respective duties. He may suspend an officer or employe of the station for cause, which suspension with the reasons therefor he shall immediately report to the board of control for its final action."

In view of the provision just quoted, it is considered that the director is chargeable with the duty of seeing to it that proper application of the proceeds of the sales in question is had and that he is responsible for any error in this regard. If it should appear that such erroneous application was in pursuance of some by-law, rule or regulation of the board of control, then the members of such board who voted for the adoption of such by-law, rule or regulation are also responsible.

(5) Your fifth question is:

> "May the salary or wages of any of the employes at the county experiment farms other than that of the person assigned to have general supervision over the work at such farms be legally paid out of the state treasury?"

From personal conference with Mr. Bliss, it is learned that the situation giving rise to the question is as follows: The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station owns a certain machine used for digging ditches or trenches. This machine is sent to various county experiment farms and used there in drainage work, being operated by a person employed for that purpose by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. The salary or wages of said operator is paid out of the state treasury from funds appropriated by the legislature to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.

The operator of said machine is thus an employe at the county experiment farms, but not an employe of such farms.

Speaking of the use of such machine, Mr. Thorne, in the letter above mentioned, says:

> "In making these drains the cutting of the trenches, which probably averages about one-third the total expense, has been done chiefly by a machine owned and operated by the experiment station, but these experiments in drainage are fundamentally necessary to the improvement of Ohio's agriculture."

It thus appears that the machine is used in connection with experiments carried on by the station, and this question is really answerable by what has been said in response to your first question.

Answering your question directly, I will say that assuming your question relates to facts as above stated, I am of the opinion that it is not illegal to pay the salary or wages of the operator of said ditching machine out of funds in the state treasury which have been appropriated to the station, when such salary or wages relate to a period of time during which said machine is used by such operator on county experiment farms, in furtherance of bona fide drainage experiments conducted by the officials of the Ohio Agricultural Station.

(6) Your sixth question is:

> "If we find such salaries or wages to have been thus paid, and it is held to be unauthorized, whom shall we hold responsible?"

In view of my answer to your fifth question, it is unnecessary to consider further your sixth question.

(7) Your seventh question is:

> "May the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station legally publish at the expense of the state a newspaper such as the accompanying copy. See section 1173, 106 O. L., page 123."

The publication to which you refer is a small pamphlet known as the "Ohio Experiment Station News," and you attach to your letter, in explanation of your question, a copy of the edition dated February 17, 1919.

You also call attention to section 1173 G. C. (106 O. L., 123), which says:

> "From time to time the board of control shall issue bulletins of its experiments and work. It shall make an annual report to the governor which shall be published in pamphlet form for free distribution."

With the assumption that the number dated February 17, 1919, is typical of the publication in general, the question for determination is whether this publication is a "bulletin of the experiments and work" of the station.

The word "bulletin," according to the Century Dictionary, has three meanings, which are as follows:

> "1. An authenticated official report concerning some public event, such as military operations, the health of a sovereign or other distinguished personage, etc., issued for the information of the public.
> 2. Any notice or public announcement, especially of news recently received.
> 3. A name given to various periodical publications recording the proceedings of learned societies."

After carefully perusing the copy of the Station News above referred to, I am of the opinion that the same may properly be regarded as a bulletin, that is to say, a "notice or public announcement" of the experiments and work of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. It is true that the publication contains some items of information that do not concern the "experiments and work" of the station. For instance, the item that

> "Prof. and Mrs. A. D. S.——— are enjoying the delightful oceanic climate on the Isle of Pines."

Yet that item is only one of 44 items contained in the entire issue, and it is only fair to say that most of the items do relate to the experiments and work of the station, particularly the activities of various members of the station personnel, while in the course of their various duties. While there might be an honest difference of opinion as to the utility of such a publication, it cannot, I think, be said as a matter of law that its issuance is illegal.

(8) Your eighth question is:

> "If the last preceding question should be answered in the negative, whom shall we hold responsible?"

In view of my answer to question seven, it is unnecessary to answer further your eighth question.

(9) What may be called your ninth question reads:

> "I am enclosing a copy of the lease and option taken by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station on the Fry farm and desire you to inform me just what the rights of the state are under the terms of the lease and option and what they will be when the premises have been purchased, and the following facts which do not appear in the copy of the lease herewith submitted."

The copy of the lease in question which accompanies your letter shows a lease, in ordinary form, between one C. F., and E. F., his wife, party of the first part, and the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, party of the second part. The lease states that "the first party does hereby lease to the State of Ohio, for the use of said Agricultural Experiment Station, the following described real estate, to-wit: Then under a subhead called "a," follows a detailed description of a tract of land consisting of 200 acres of land. Also follows, under a subhead called "b," a tract of land containing 12.95 acres of land more or less. Three tracts of land, consisting of 5 acres, 26.38 acres, and 5 acres respectively, are specifically excepted from the premises leased. No mention is made in the lease of any oil or other lease then existing between the lessor and any third party. On the contrary, the lessor's promise is "to defend the second party in the enjoyment and peaceable possession of the above described premises during the term aforesaid."

Special attention is called to the next to the last paragraph of the lease, reading as follows:

> "And the said First Party, for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, further covenants and agrees to and with the said Second Party that all rents being paid, and all their covenants in this lease being performed by said Second Party, they will at any time previous to the expiration of this lease, convey the said premises to the State of Ohio, by a good and sufficient deed of general warranty, with release of dower, and free from all encumbrances of every description, upon the payment to them by the said Second Party of One Hundred Twenty-Five Dollars per acre."

The particular question asked by you, with reference to this lease, is:

> "Under the terms of the option will the state have the right to purchase the whole premises described in the descriptions indicated as "A" and "B," or will it have the right to purchase only the amount of land covered by the lease?"

It is noted that the total acreage of the premises described in the lease under subheads "a" and "b" is 212.95 acres of land, more or less, and that the amount of land covered by the specific exceptions made in such lease is 36.38 acres, more or less. In other words, the amount of land actually leased by the party of the first part to the party of the second part is 176.57 acres, more or less. Your question is whether the optionee has the right, in the event of the exercise of the above quoted option, to compel the optionor to convey 212.95 acres, or only 176.57 acres.

The answer to this question depends upon the meaning to be given the words "said premises," found in that part of the option which reads:

> "* * * will * * * convey the said premises to the State of Ohio * * *."

The words in question being ambiguous, it is necessary to resort to other parts of the instrument in order to ascertain, if possible, what the parties to such instrument had in mind when they employed such words.

As said before, the description contained in subheads "a" and "b," is immediately followed by the description of three tracts of 5, 26.38 and 5 acres, respectively, all of which are excepted from the premises leased. The habendum clause next follows and reads:

"To have and to hold the same for the term of ten years * * *."

The covenant as to proper use of the premises says:

"And it is mutually covenanted and agreed, by and between the parties hereto, that the aforesaid premises shall be occupied in a careful and proper manner by the second party."

The agreement not to sublet or assign says:

"That said premises, or any part thereof shall not be sublet, nor shall this lease be assigned * * *."

The lease also contains an agreement by the second party to surrender, at the end of the term, "possession of the premises hereby leased."

The insurance clause extends to the buildings "of these premises," and the clause relating to the removal of buildings erected by the lessee speaks of buildings which may be erected on "these premises."

Then follows the option clause hereinabove set forth, which obligates the optionor to convey "the said premises."

Looking at the lease as a whole, I have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the words "the said premises," as used in the option clause, refer only to the amount of land covered by the lease, which amount is the land described in subheads "a" and "b" as cut down and limited by the specific exceptions made in the lease.

Another question upon which you request my opinion is as to the effect of the oil lease mentioned in your letter upon (a) the rights of the lessee under the lease proper, and (b) the rights of the lessee under the option of purchase given by the lease.

The last paragraph of the lease reads as follows:

"The First Party will, and his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns shall defend the Second Party in the enjoyment and peaceable possession of the above described premises during the term of aforesaid, if the Second Party shall perform all and singular the covenants herein agreed to be performed on the part of the Second Party."

By virtue of this provision the lessor has undertaken to secure to the lessee the enjoyment and peaceable possession of the whole of the premises leased. There being no mention made in the lease of the prior oil lease, the lessee is entitled to hold the lessor responsible for damages (if any) flowing from the partial eviction consequent upon the action of the lessee of the oil lease in exercising the privileges given by such oil lease.

Coming now to consider the option clause of the lease, we observe that in it the lessor undertakes, in case the option is exercised, to convey the premises by a good and sufficient deed of general warranty with release of dower, and free from all encumbrances of every description.

If the lessee exercises the option, and a deed of the character mentioned is executed by the lessor, and the fact should be that at the time of the execution of such deed there should be an outstanding oil lease, duly filed for record as provided by section 8519 G. C., then clearly there would be an "encumbrance" against said premises, within the meaning of the covenant against encumbrances. For the breach of such a covenant, an action in damages would lie.

(10) What may be called your tenth question reads as follows:

"When the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station takes an option on a farm with the intention of subsequently buying same, has the board of control or the director of the station any right to permit the owner of said farm to remove a building therefrom between the time of taking such option and the final purchase of the premises without making a suitable deduction from the option price?"

It is assumed, of course, that the building removed was affixed to, and constituted a part of, the premises leased. If it was not so affixed, this fact would change the conclusions herein expressed.

We understand, from personal conference with Mr. Bliss, your supervising examiner, that the option to which the above question refers is the option (as yet unexercised) contained in the lease whose provisions have just been construed in answering your ninth question. We also understand that investigation made subsequent to the time when your question was written shows that the permission accorded to the owner of the farm to remove the building was given, not by the board of control, but by an official of the station known as the bursar. The bursar is, by reason of section 1171-4 G. C., an appointee of the director of the station, he being a person whose services are considered "necessary for the proper management of the station."

It appears that the records of the board of control are entirely silent upon the matter of the removal of such building, and that your best information is that said board at no time took any action relative to granting such permission. It is suggested, however, that the director of the station may possibly have known of, and consented to, such removal.

Under the statement of facts just set forth, it becomes unnecessary to consider what, if any, right the board of control has, under the law, to permit the removal of a building under circumstances like those stated in your letter. If the fact is that the board of control took no action whatever in the matter, there is no justification for any inference of knowledge or permission on their part, and the question becomes, as to such board, purely hypothetical.

I so far as your question affects the director and bursar of the station, it is observed that neither one has any authority to enter into a land lease or land option on behalf of the station, nor any authority to consent to a modification or waiver of any of the terms of such a lease or option after the same have been once consummated by the proper parties. By reason of section 1171-4 G. C., the relation of the director (and that of his appointees, including the bursar) to the station is a managerial one. He is an executive, having "control of the affairs of the station" and "responsible to the board of control for the management of all its departments." The matter of making contracts for the purchase, sale or lease of lands is, we think, the sole concern of the board of control, by reason of section 1171-3 G. C., which expressly makes such board a body corporate, with power to contract and be contracted with, and also to receive and hold, in trust for the use and benefit of the station, a grant or devise of land.

You are therefore advised that when the owner of a farm leases the same to the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, and there are situate on said farm at the time of lease certain buildings which are annexed to and form a part of the land demised, neither the director nor the bursar of said station has any legal authority to grant permission to the lessor of said farm to remove from said land any of said buildings. Nor would this conclusion be in anywise affected by the added fact that such lease contained a clause giving the lessee an option to purchase said premises at any time prior to the expiration of such lease.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—ELECTOR NOMINATED IN PRIMARY OR BY PETITION FOR PUBLIC OFFICE—WITHDRAWAL OF CANDIDACY—HOW MADE—VACANCY HOW FILLED.

1. An elector nominated in a primary or by petition for public office, can withdraw his candidacy and decline such nomination and resign from such ticket, but such resignation should be addressed to the deputy state supervisors of elections if the original nomination papers are filed in a county.

2. Where a primary election is held under the provisions of section 4963 *G. COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 27, 1919.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter of September 24, 1919, in which you request the opinion of this department upon the following statement of facts:

Accompanying such letter were three exhibits, the same being copies of the original papers filed with the deputy state supervisors of elections of Mahoning county, Ohio. Exhibit No. 1 is a copy of the resignation of M. D., as the Democratic candidate for mayor of Youngstown, Ohio, following his nomination at the primaries held in that city on August 12, 1919. Such letter of resignation on the part of Mr. D. reads as follows:

"Youngstown, Ohio, September 15, 1919.

Board of Deputy State Supervisors of Elections, for Mahoning County, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—You are hereby notified that I do hereby resign and withdraw as candidate for the office of mayor of the city of Youngstown, for which office I was nominated by the Democratic electors of the city of Youngstown at the primaries held in this city on August 12, 1919.

I have also notified the Democratic city and central committees to like effect, and request that they duly fill the vacancy occasioned by my withdrawal.

Respectfully yours,

M. D."

Exhibit No. 2 is a letter to the deputy state supervisors of elections of Mahoning county, Ohio, from the Mahoning County Democratic central committee and duly signed by its chairman and secretary. It is not clear as to just why this letter from the Mahoning County Democratic central committee was sent to the deputy state supervisors of elections of that county, inasmuch as the nomination in question is a municipal nomination in a registration city in that county and a matter with which the Democratic county central committee would have nothing to do, inasmuch as such latter committee is composed in part of members elected from the townships outside of the city of Youngstown. This communication reads in full as follows:

"THE MAHONING COUNTY
DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Chairman, W. L. S.
Secretary, J. V. S.

Youngstown, Ohio, September 23, 1919.

Deputy State Supervisors of Elections, Mahoning County, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—You are hereby notified that a meeting of the Mahoning County Democratic central committee was held at the Ohio Hotel on Saturday, September 20, 1919, at 2:30 p. m., which was regularly and duly called, and at which meeting was a quorum of the said committee, there being present fourteen of the twenty-three members of the committee.

Immediately after the meeting was called to order, the withdrawal and declination of M. D., the Democratic candidate who was nominated for mayor of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, at the primaries held in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, on the 12th day of August, 1919, was duly read and accepted by the unanimous vote of said committee.

The committee thereupon set about to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. D.'s withdrawal and declination, and duly nominated and selected A. W. C. of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, as the Democratic candidate for mayor of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to be voted upon at the coming election to be held in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, on the 4th day of November, 1919.

The ballot was taken and A. W. C. received the unanimous vote of the said committee and therefore A. W. C. is hereby certified as the Democratic candidate for the office of mayor of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the withdrawal and declination of M. D., to be voted upon at the next regular election to be held in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, on the 4th day of November, 1919.

Very truly yours,
W. L. S., Chairman.
J. V. S., Secretary."

"State of Ohio, Mahoning County, ss:

S., who, after being first duly sworn according to law, say they have been duly selected as chairman and secretary respectively, of the Mahoning County Democratic central committee; that they were present at a meeting of the above committee held at the Ohio Hotel on Saturday, September 20, at 2:30 p. m.; that the contents of the foregoing statement are true.

(Signed) W. L. S.
J. V. S.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 23d day of September, A. D., 1919.

Exhibit No. 3 is a copy of the letter to the deputy state supervisors of elections of Mahoning county, Ohio, from the Democratic city committee, composed of central committeemen elected from the various wards of the city of Youngstown, though it is noted that the letter head used carries the title of Mahoning County Democratic central committee and not the Youngstown Democratic city central committee. This letter, signed by the chairman and secretary of the Democratic city committee, reads in full as follows:

"THE MAHONING COUNTY
DEMOCRATIC CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Chairman, W. L. S.
Secretary, J. V. S.

Youngstown, Ohio, September 23, 1919.

The Deputy State Supervisors of Elections, Mahoning County, Ohio.

Gentlemen:—You are hereby notified that a committee of the Democratic city committee composed of central committeemen elected from the various wards in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, was held at the Ohio Hotel in this city on Saturday, September 20, 1919, at 2:30 p. m., duly and regularly called, and at which meeting all members of the above committee were present.

Immediately after the meeting was called to order, the withdrawal and declination of M. D., the Democratic candidate who was nominated for mayor of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, at the primaries held in said city on August 12, 1919, was duly read and accepted by unanimous vote of said committee.

The said committee thereupon set about to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Dunn's withdrawal, and declination, and duly nominated and selected A. W. C. of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, as the Democratic candidate for mayor of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to be voted upon at the coming election to be held in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, on November 4, 1919. The ballot was taken and A. W. C. received the unanimous vote of said committee and therefore A. W. C. is hereby certified as the Democratic candidate for the office of mayor of the city of Youngstown Ohio, to fill the vacancy caused by the withdrawal and declination of M. D., to be voted upon at the next regular election to be held in the city of Youngstown, Ohio, on November 4, 1919.

Very truly yours,
W. L. S., Chairman.
J. V. S., Secretary."

AFFIDAVIT

"State of Ohio, Mahoning County, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a notary public within and for the county of Mahoning, State of Ohio, W. L. S. and J. V. S., who, after being first duly sworn according to law, say that they have been duly selected as chairman and secretary respectively, of the Democratic city committee; that they were present at a meeting of the above committee held in the Ohio Hotel on Saturday, September 20, at 2:30 p. m.; that the contents of the foregoing statement are true. W. L. S.
J. V. S.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 23d day of September, A. D., 1919.
(Seal) W. H. M., Notary Public."

A comparison of the two letters above given shows that both the Mahoning County Democratic central committee and the Democratic city central committee both met on the same hour and minute, that is, 2:30 p. m., and that the chairman, according to the letters given, presided over both committees at one and the same time. The letter of the Mahoning County Democratic central committee shows that it set about to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. D.'s withdrawal and nominated and selected A. W. C., of the city of Youngstown, as the Democratic candidate for mayor of Youngstown, one of the municipalities in the county in which the Mahoning County Democratic central committee is the controlling committee in the Democratic party. It would seem that this communication is irregular in that a county committee has no authority to fill a vacancy upon a party ticket in a city which has wards and which has a city central committee, as provided by law.

Your query is as to the right of the election board to accept this withdrawal of Mr. D. and whether they should certify the name of A. W. C. as the Democratic nominee.

Such query really consists of two questions: 1. Has the election board the right to accept the withdrawal of Mr. D. as Democratic candidate for mayor of the city of Youngstown; and, 2. Should the election board certify, that is, place upon the ballot, the name of A. W. C. as the Democratic nominee in the place of Mr. D., under the circumstances stated.

On the first question there can be little doubt as to the right of the election board to accept the withdrawal of Mr. D. as a nominee for mayor and it is their duty to do so upon the receipt of a proper resignation, as given above under date of September 15, 1919, and signed by M. D. The right of an elector to withdraw or resign from a ticket cannot be questioned, and after such withdrawal has been received by the board of elections, the name of the person withdrawing should not appear upon the ballot unless the circumstances were that such withdrawal had been received after provision had been made for the printing of the ballots to be used in the election to follow later.

Bearing upon this question, attention is invited to an opinion of the Attorney-General issued on May 6, 1910, the following language occurring therein:

"An elector who has filed nomination papers may withdraw his name as a candidate. After a candidate has withdrawn his name and his withdrawal has been accepted by the board, the board is without authority to reconsider its acceptance and such elector may thereafter have his name placed upon the official ballot only on nomination papers as provided in the first instance."

Various sections of the statutes speak of withdrawals and declinations and it must be presumed that the law takes full recognition that such withdrawals or declinations can be properly made before the time of election and nowhere is there found any authority in law that compels an elector to remain upon a ticket even though he has been properly nominated in a primary for a place upon such ticket.

The city of Youngstown, it is understood, is not a charter city and therefore holds its primary elections under chapter 6 of the General Code, beginning with section 4948 and running to section 4991-1 G. C. Pertinent parts of such chapter upon primary elections are as follows:

"Section 4949.—Candidates for * * * municipal offices * * * shall be nominated or selected in such * * * municipality, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, and persons not so nominated shall not be considered candidates and their names shall not be printed on the official ballots, nor shall delegates or alternates to such convention, or party controlling committees whose members have not been so selected, be recognized by any board or officer." (104 V., 9).

"Section 4960.—The controlling committees of each voluntary political party or organization shall be * * * a county central committee, consisting of one member from each precinct in the county, or one member from each ward and township in the county as the outgoing committee may determine, and the members of the central committee chosen from a city shall constitute a city committee. * * *" (106 V., 544).

'Section 4961.—Within fifteen days after their selection all such state and county central committees shall meet and organize by the election of a chairman and secretary, and shall elect an executive committee." (103 V., 480).

It will be noted in section 4961 G. C. that the county central committee shall select an executive committee, but such section has no provision that the members of the central committee chosen from a city and constituting a city committee, shall elect an executive committee for that city. Hence the controlling committee of a political party in a city would be the city committee composed of the members of the central committee chosen from such city by direct vote at the primary held in the even numbered years.

"Section 4963.—* * * and primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for township and municipal offices * * * shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the odd numbered years." (107 O. L., 400).

"Section 4969.—* * * Such declarations of candidacy * * * shall be accompanied by the certificate of five electors of the * * * municipality * * * for which such nomination is to be made, and shall be in the form hereinafter provided * * *." (106 O. L., 545).

Section 4969, supra, provides that a certificate of five electors of a municipality should simply certify that the candidate for whom they sign is a member of their political party and is well qualified to perform the duties of the office for which he is a candidate, and in elections held under the party primary system, such list of five electors does not constitute a committee to fill vacancies, such duty, if a vacancy occurs, devolving upon the controlling party committee in the municipality.

> "Section 4989.—In case of a vacancy or vacancies in the list of nominations, occurring by death or otherwise, after the result has been declared, such vacancy or vacancies shall be filled by the proper controlling committee of the party in which such vacancy or vacancies occur, and the names of the candidates, delegates or committeemen, as the case may be, selected by such committee, shall, in the case of offices, the nomination papers for which have to be filed with the state supervisor of elections, be reported to such state supervisor and, in case of other offices, shall be reported to the proper board or boards of deputy state supervisors, and such state supervisor or board, or boards, shall cause such name or names to be placed on the official ballots, lists or rolls." (103 O. L., 486).

Following chapter 6 of the Ohio election laws, which treats upon primary elections, we come to chapter 7, which treats of the nomination of candidates and which starts off with section 4992 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Except as provided by the preceding chapter of this title, nominations of candidates for public office may be made as herein prescribed." (103 O. L., 843).

Section 4992, as quoted, is the first section of an act relating to "nomination by petition" and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 13, 1913. It is important to note that in such act relating to nomination by petition, the closing section of the act was as follows:

> "The power to fill vacancies on a party ticket shall be vested in the central committee of such party or in the case of a vacancy occurring in a list of candidates nominated by petition in the committee named in such petition."

Coming to your second question, you ask whether the election board should certify the name of A. W. C. as the Democratic nominee for mayor of the city of Youngstown, vice M. D., whose resignation as such Democratic nominee for mayor of such city bears the date of September 15 and addressed to the deputy state supervisors of elections of Mahoning county.

You call attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of Ohio in the case of State ex rel. Jones vs. O'Dwyer et al., 97 O. S., p. 22, and say that you do not just understand the meaning of this part of the court's decision:

> "The statute formerly relating to vacancies in municipal elections has been repealed and the amended statute relating to municipal elections has omitted all reference to municipal candidates."

The opinion of the Supreme Court in the above case being very short, the Attorney-General has made a thorough examination of the various papers filed in this case, being No. 15778, and decided October 23, 1917, on file in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court, with a view of ascertaining just what was meant by the court in the sentence above quoted, which carries no reference to any particular statute, and we are unable to advise what specific statute bearing upon vacancies in municipal elections that the Supreme Court had in mind when the above sentence was used. It may be said, however, that the case under consideration by the Supreme Court in the above decision was one in which the nominations were made in a charter city, that is, the city of Toledo, Ohio, and not in a city where party nominations obtained. The primary in question was held on the 11th of September, 1917, under the charter of the city of Toledo and hence was not a primary held under the Ohio primary laws above given. Under these circumstances, there being no political parties appearing upon the primary ballots used in the Toledo primary under the charter, different conditions were present than those appearing in the primary held in Youngstown on August 12, 1919, when party primaries were held for the nomination of Democratic and Republican candidates for mayor. Under these circumstances the case cited by you is not in point on the question of nominations made in the primary election which was held under the Ohio primary law, and in which there was present the element of political parties and candidates running as partisan candidates with a party committee empowered to fill vacancies as might occur, as indicated in the statutes heretofore quoted. Whatever may have been the particular statutes that the Supreme Court had in mind in using the above language, the sections heretofore quoted are still the law of Ohio and seem to cover the case at hand.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. An elector nominated in a primary or by petition for public office, can withdraw his candidacy and decline such nomination and resign from such ticket, but such resignation should be addressed to the deputy state supervisors of elections if the original nomination papers are filed in a county.

2. Where a primary election is held under the provisions of section 4963 G. C., in a municipality other than a charter city, and candidates run in such primary as the candidates of political parties, and a candidate so nominated in such primary as the candidate of a political party later submits his resignation of such nomination to both the board of deputy state supervisors and the controlling party committee of his party in such municipality, there is thereby created a vacancy for that particular nomination and the power to fill vacancies on a party ticket is vested in the city central committee of such political party, but such vacancy must be filled in proper manner by the proper committee before provision is made for the printing of the ballots.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY—CONTROL OF NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT VESTED IN BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

Exclusive authority, direction and control over the operation and conduct of the normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University is vested in the board of trustees of such department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1919.

HON. THOMAS M. NORRIS, Member of Ohio Senate, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

"The committee appointed under the above resolution to investigate and report on the combined and industrial department at Wilberforce, had its first meeting at the institution the 18th, 19th and 20th of August. Practically all of the University trustees, as well as the trustees of the combined normal and industrial department were given hearings, and these hearings show that the cause of dispute between these two institutions results through there being two institutions there apparently instead of one. Bishop Jones states that there was a compact whereby this department was given as an aid to the University, and that the president of the University is really president also of the normal school. Our students are enrolled through the University, in fact the students outside of the state attending the state school in most cases pay their tuition fees direct to the University, only part of same coming to the state funds. Bishop Jones has said that the agreement with regard to giving them the normal school was through Messrs. Nash, McKinley, Foraker, and others. He was unable, however, to give any documentary support to this, and I am going to ask you to inform the committee as to the status of the C. N. & I. department of Wilberforce University. Mr. Sheets, when he was Attorney-General, rendered an opinion that it was separate and distinct from the University, under date of November 30, 1903, and we would value it, and in fact will need, before we can arrive at our report under the resolution above referred to, your opinion as to this. Our next meeting will be September 30 and October 1, and if you could send me an opinion to take to that meeting, it will be keenly appreciated.

The first building that the state erected, O'Neill Hall is situated on land owned by the University. This is the only building that is so situated. There may have been some agreement at that time. It would seem to the committee that there must have been some agreement whereby this land was used which would have provided for our continuous use of it, but I am firmly of the opinion that the aid to the University intended by this department of normal and industrial work was simply the building up for the colored people a great institution at the one point, Wilberforce, and could not have implied what the A. M. E. church officials insist is their understanding that the state institution was never to have a separate head, or to parallel any of the instruction taught in the University."

It is noted that your inquiry may be stated generally to be as to the status of the combined normal and industrial department at Wilberforce University. You also state that the dispute between the department and the university "results through there being two institutions there apparently instead of one," and that it is claimed that there was "a compact whereby this department was given as an aid to the University and that the president of the University is really president also of the normal school." It is further noted that the source of this claim is stated to be: "Bishop Jones has said that the agreement with regard to giving them the normal school was through Messrs. Nash, McKinley, Foraker and others," and you ask this department "to inform the committee as to the status of the C. N. & I. department of Wilberforce University." Your opinion is also noted "that the aid to the University intended by this department * * * was simply the building up for the colored people a great institution at the one point, Wilberforce, and could not have implied what the * * *church officials insist is their understanding that the state institution was never to have a separate head, or to parallel any of the instruction taught in the University."

Sections 7975 to 7986 G. C., both inclusive, under the subtitle of "Wilberforce University," in the chapter of title 5 relating to colleges and universities, are pertinent to your inquiry. Section 7975 provides:

> "A combined normal and industrial department shall be established and maintained at Wilberforce University in Greene county, Ohio."

Section 7976 provides for the creation of a board of trustees, five members of which shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent of the senate, and three members to be chosen by the trustees of the University. It also provides that the president of the University "shall be ex-officio a member of the board." To this board this section plainly commits the government of the department in this language:

> "The government of such department shall be vested in a board of nine trustees to be known as 'the board of trustees of the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University.'"

The powers and duties of the board of trustees are clearly stated in section 7981, which in part is:

> "The board of trustees shall take, keep and maintain exclusive authority * * * and control over the operations and conduct of such normal and industrial department * * *. The board shall determine the branches of industry to be pursued, purchase through a suitable and disinterested agent, the necessary means and appliances, select a superintendent for the industrial branch of the department, fix his salary and prescribe his duties and authority. The expenditures of all moneys * * * shall be made only under such regulations and for such specific purposes * * * as the board of trustees of such department establish. No money appropriated by the state shall be used for any purpose not in direct furtherance and promotion of the objects of the department."

Section 7982 in part provides:

> "No sectarian influence, direction or interference in the management or conduct of the affairs or education of such department shall be permitted by its board."

Section 7986 provides in part:

> "All revenue arising from tuition * * * or otherwise, under the aforesaid department, shall be applied by its board of trustees to defray its expenses, or to increase its efficiency, a strict account of which shall be kept by the department board, and accompany the report to the governor."

With reference to any informal understanding or agreement entered into, as stated to your committee, but concerning which you say no "documentary support" was given, you are advised that the law relating to such department is the sole source of the power and authority of the trustees of the board and of the University in this matter.

The statutes relating to the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University very clearly and definitely place its government and control in the board of trustees, as provided in sections 7976 and 7981 G. C. (supra). As to the application of and accounting for revenue arising from tuition, section 7986 needs no explanation and no further comment is, therefore, made on this feature of your inquiry.

You are therefore advised that exclusive authority, direction and control over the operation and conduct of the normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University is vested in the board of trustees of such department selected under section 7976. The opinion of the former Attorney-General, to which you refer (Annual Reports Attorney-General 1904-1905, p. 227), is not in conflict with the conclusion here reached and a copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—WHERE RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT PARTICIPATES IN SCHOOL ELECTION ON QUESTION OF CENTRALIZATION OF SCHOOLS IN TOWNSHIP BOUND BY VOTE—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS AUTHORITY TO ORDER ELECTION ON CENTRALIZATION OF SCHOOLS IN A TOWNSHIP—SECTION 4726 G. C. MUST BE READ IN CONJUNCTION WITH SECTION 4726-1 G .C.

1. Where a rural school district, formerly created as a special school district, participates in a school election on the question of centralization of schools in a township, such special district is bound by the result of the majority vote in the whole of such township, even though the majority of the votes cast in the special district in question would be against centralization.

2. A county board of education has authority to order an election on centralization of schools in a township which has one or more rural school districts, under section 4726 G. C., which must be read in conjunction with section 4726-1 G. C. in order to make the latter section effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1919.

HON. ROBERT E. MARSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department on the following statement of facts:

> "In a township in which there are several special school districts, and some rural school districts, they propose to hold an election to submit the question of centralization under section 4726-1 of the General Code.
> If a majority of the votes cast would be in favor of centralization, although in one of the special districts the majority of the votes cast would be against centralization, what would be the result to the district voting against it under section 4726-1?"

Section 4726-1 G. C. reads:

> "In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township district, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated, five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

Your question is very largely covered in Opinion No. 547, issued by the Attorney-General to Hon. George F. Crawford, prosecuting attorney of Darke county, Ohio, on August 5, 1919, copy of which is herewith enclosed.

Attention is invited to Opinion No. 1102, issued by the Attorney-General on March 25, 1918, found on page 476 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, bearing upon section 4726-1 G. C., in which the second branch of the syllabus reads:

"It is not permissible under the provisions of section 4726-1 G. C. for a part of the school districts of a township to vote on the centralizing of the schools of such districts and prevent the electors of other districts, located in whole or in part within the township, from participating in said election."

The syllabus of Opinion No. 547, issued by the Attorney-General on August 5, 1919, and bearing upon a case largely similar to the one which you present, reads as follows:

"1. Under section 4726-1 G. C. all rural boards of education in a township must each call an election in their respective districts for centralization of the schools of such township, in order that such question may be legally voted on in the manner provided in section 4839 G. C.

2. Section 4726-1 G .C. must be read in conjunction with section 4726 G. C., and a county board of education has authority to order an election on centralization of schools in a township which has one or more rural school districts as its school territory.

3. Centralization of schools must be voted upon by the electors of a township and not a part of it, village and city school districts being excluded.

4. County boards of education have full authority to create a new school district from one or more districts or parts thereof."

You say that in a certain township there are several special districts and some rural school districts and that they propose to hold an election to submit the question of centralization under section 4726-1 G. C. Attention is invited to the fact that there are no longer any special school districts under the Ohio law and all of the districts in this township must, therefore, be rural school districts unless any of the former special school districts can be called village school districts. You further ask, if a majority of the votes cast would be in favor of centralization, although in one of the special districts the majority of the votes cast would be against centralization, what would be the result to the special district voting against centralization? From your statement of facts it is assumed that all these rural school districts in the township joined in the call for the election in their respective districts and, if such is the case, they become parties in every sense to the transaction, or full participants in the election along with the other districts, and must be bound by the ultimate desult of the election which they called in their districts jointly, along with the election on centralization in the other rural school districts. The question of school centralization must be submitted in the township in question, treating the township as a unit, and if a majority of the votes cast in such election in the whole of said township is in favor of centralization, then the schools of the township should become centralized as a whole and not a part of them.

While your letter indicates that all these districts jointly propose to call the election, in which event every district participating would be bound by the result one way or the other, it is possible that some certain district might not join in this call, in which event the county board of education has authority to order an election in such township on the question of centralization, under section 4726 G. C., which must be read along with section 4726-1 G. C., in order to make the latter section operative; for it will be noted that section 4726-1, taken alone, makes no provision for the calling of the election.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. Where a rural school district, formerly created as a special school district, participates in a school election on the question of centralization of schools in a township, such special district is bound by the result of the majority vote in the whole of such township, even though the majority of the votes cast in the special district in question would be against centralization.

2. A county board of education has authority to order an election on centralization of schools in a township which has one or more rural school districts, under section 4726 G. C., which must be read in conjunction with section 4726-1 G. C. in order to make the latter section effective.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—STATE AID TO WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICT—INTERPRETATION OF HOUSE BILL NO .406 (108 O. L. 431)—APPLICABLE TO STATE AID FOR YEAR 1919-1920.

House Bill No. 406, 108 O. L. 431, relating to state aid to weak school districts, was intended to apply to applications for state aid for the year 1919-20 and must be given that effect, if possible. Though it became a law during the sessions of the budget commissions, its provisions relating to the duties of the budget commission may be given effect by taking the steps referred to in the law after the date of its effectiveness. If a board of education, acting under said act after said date, files with the budget commision a certificate of its "weak condition" it is the mandatory duty of the budget commission to consider such certificate and act in accordance with the section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I note your request for immediate opinion upon the questions submitted in your letter of September 20, as follows:

> "In making out its budget for the ensuing year the county superintendent of Brown county reports that one of the school districts certified pursuant to the provisions of the Freeman law (H .B. No. 406) that it was a weak school district and would make application for state aid under that law. Thereafter the budget commission made its adjustments for that district and finally passed upon it after the Freeman law went into operation, and submitted its action to the state commission, which passed upon it favorably.
> The budget commission ignored the provisions of the Freeman law in making its apportionment of the levy, giving to the tuition fund of the school district less than the required two-thirds. This disqualifies the district from state aid. The district is in urgent need of this aid.
>
> Will you kindly advise us immediately whether it is within the power of the budget commission of Brown county to recall its action and observe the provisions of the law in making its adjustments, and if so how will the commission proceed to do this?
> If the commission refuses to act in the matter, what remedy has the school district? i. e., will an action in mandamus lie to compel it to act in pursuance to law?"

It is assumed from this statement that the budget commission has certified its action to the county auditor under section 5649-3c of the General Code and has finally adjourned. Possibly all this was done before August 18, 1919, when House bill No. 406 became effective as a law; for the budget commissioners are to meet on the first Monday in August and must complete their work "on or before the third Monday in that month, unless for good cause the tax commission of Ohio shall extend the time for completing the work." (Sec. 5649-3b). That is to say, it is possible for a budget commission, acting within the law, to have completed its work and certified its levies before H. B. No. 406 (108 O. L. 431) became a law.

Moreover, at the time when the board of education is required by section 5649-3a G. C. to submit its budget (the first Monday in June) H. B. No. 406 was far short of being an effective law; so that the conclusion is irresistible that at the time stated in your letter, viz.: "In making out its budget for the ensuing year," the school district was not entitled by existing law to the privilege of attaching thereto "a certification that it intends to make application for state aid pursuant to sections 7595-1 and 7595-2 of the General Code, and that it is entitled thereto," as authorized by section 7594-1 as enacted in H. B. No. 406. When the budget commission began its consideration of the budget requests there was no law to permit it to attach any significance to such a certification. It was then governed in making its adjustments only by the provisions of section 5649-3c G. C., which not only created no preference in favor of any kind of taxing district but, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in State ex rel, vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S. 504, Rabe vs. Board of Education, 88 O. S. 403, and State ex rel. vs. Patterson, 93 O. S. 25, really prohibited it from doing so save in the exercise of sound discretion. After they may have completed their work, and at least some time after they were required to commence it, a law became effective not only authorizing the budget commissioners to proceed otherwise than in accordance with section 5649-3c, but expressly requiring such action on their part. This law (H. B. No. 406) provides, in section 7594-1 as therein enacted as follows:

> "Section 7594-1.—Whenever the board of education of a school district attaches to its budget a certification that it intends to make application for state aid pursuant to sections 7595-1 and 7595-2 of the General Code, and that it is entitled thereto, the budget commission shall proceed to make adjustments in accordance with the provisions of section 5649-3c, but shall lay such adjustment aside and thereupon proceed to make an adjustment which shall allow to such school district a levy of not less than four mills exclusive of the levy necessary to provide for indebtedness incurred prior to 1911 or incurred by a vote of the people. This last adjustment shall be certified by the budget commission pursuant to section 5649-3c. If it should thereafter appear that such school district did not so apply for such state aid or was not entitled thereto, then the adjustment first made and laid aside as above provided shall be deemed to be the final adjustment and the county auditor shall distribute, or redistribute the proceeds of tax collections in accordance with such first adjustment, or if such school district has received its distribution of the tax collections, the county auditor shall deduct from the sum due such school district on the distribution of the tax collections next following, the sum necessary to make such redistribution of tax collections."

As stated, this law was not in effect when the budget was filed and when the jurisdiction of the budget commission attached. If we were to apply to the proceedings of the budget commission the principles of section 26 G. C., which is the general saving clause as to "pending proceedings," there could be no escape from the conclusion that H. B. No. 406 could have no application to the work of the budget commission for the year 1919 in any respect, as not only had the time passed for the initiation of procedings before the budget commission, but the official processes of the budget commission were actually operating when H. B. No. 406 became effective.

But the question cannot be resolved upon any such ground for several reasons, which will be stated and discussed:

In the first place, if the enactment of section 7594-1 constituted an "amendment" or "repeal" within the meaning of section 26 G. C., yet the machinery for the levying of taxes has been held not to be a "proceeding" within the meaning of that section.

Alexander vs. Spencer, 13 C. C. N. S. 475.

In the second place, section 26 G. C. applies only "whenever a statute is repealed or amended." In this case no statute has been repealed or amended, unless we say that section 5649-3c has been amended by implication. The legislation embodied in H. B. No. 406 takes the form, not of an express amendment of section 5649-3c which its subject-matter affects, but of the enactment of an entirely new section which happens to modify the effect of the section referred to. Such modifying effect, known as "implied repeal" or "implied amendment," is not within the terms nor within the effect of section 26 G. C.

Railroad vs. Railroad, 72 O. S. 368.

Therefore, section 26 G. C. cannot by its own terms apply to the situation, and when H. B. No. 406 became a law by the expiration of the referendum period nothing was saved from its operation; so that you are correct in your statement that unless some way can be found to comply with section 7594-1 as above quoted, the district (and perhaps all weak school districts in the state) will be disqualified to receive state aid this year. This follows because section 7595-1 as amended in said act sets up a condition which must be complied with by any weak school district in order to entitle it to receive state aid, in the following terms:

> "It shall place in the tuition fund at least two-thirds of the proceeds of the levy as adjusted by the budget commission pursuant to section 7594-1."

In this connection it will not do to say that this express amendment of section 7595-1 does not apply to applications for state aid to be made for the year 1919-20, because of the operation of section 26 G. C.; for while it is true that the reasons above given for the non-application of section 26 G. C. to newly enacted section 7594-1 do not apply to the express amendment of section 7595-1, it is nevertheless true that under section 7596 G. C., as it existed prior to the going into effect of H. B. No. 406, the determination as to the probable existence of a deficit must be made by a school district between October 1 and January 1 of any year; and under section 7595-2 as enacted by H. B. No. 406 the application is to be filed for the then current year between the first day of September and the first day of October, and is to be based on the preceding August settlement and the probable yield and distribution at the succeeding February settlement. It is thus apparent that in the middle of August of a year no proceeding is pending and no cause of proceeding exists with respect to applications for state aid to be made later in that year, even if by liberal construction the right of a district to have state aid could be called a "cause of proceeding" within the terms of section 26 G. C.

So the conclusion is irresistible that from all that thus far appears it will be simply impossible for the district of which you speak, and perhaps most of the weak school districts in the state, to receive state aid this year.

This could not have been the intention of the legislature; nor could the General Assembly have intended that the ability of a school district to avail itself of the benefits of H. B. No. 406, or to receive state aid at all, should depend upon the accident of the completion of the work of the budget commission in a given county before H. B. No. 406 should become effective. To impute either of these intentions to the legislature would be to reach a most improbable result. Some means must be found to avoid such a result.

It occurs to me that the General Assembly intended H. B. No. 406 to operate this year, and could have intended nothing else. Its intention must be given effect if possible (though, of course, it is conceivable that a law clearly intended to be effective at a given time must fail because of failure on the part of the legislature to take into consideration the referendum period.)

To give H. B. No. 406 effect this year it will be necessary to consider it as a command emanating from the General Assembly to the budget commissions of the state at a time when they might lawfully be in session, and in probably the greater number of instances were in session. Though such mandate might require such budget commissions to undertake work additional to that contemplated when their sessions commenced, this would not be a vital point. It will be observed that under section 7594-1 the first thing to be done is to make adjustments under section 5649-3c. The mandate of the section is that in the event its other provisions are complied with by the board of education the adjustments so made as to such school districts shall be laid aside and alternative adjustments made and certified to the county auditor in the first instance. It is to be observed also that section 7594-1 requires the budget commission to lay aside this second alternative adjustment in the event that it "should thereafter appear that such school district did not so apply for such state aid or was not entitled thereto." Such facts could not be made to appear in any event before the first of September. The result is that under section 7594-1, a budget commission cannot complete its work prior to September 1 if it has a proper certification of a weak school district before it. Here is another modifying effect of section 7594-1 upon the existing law—this time upon section 5649-3b G. C., which prescribes the time when budget commissions shall complete their work.

However, another difficulty remains to be disposed of, for it has been hereinbefore stated that the certification made by the board of education under consideration was not entitled to any official cognizance on the part of the budget commission because it was filed at a time when there was no law authorizing it to be filed.

At this point it seems to me that the liberal construction required in order to effectuate the intention of the legislature should be indulged. While section 7594-1 requires the board of education to "attach" the certification in question "to its budget," there is nothing requiring such attachment to be made at any particular time, save by inference. It seems to me it would be perfectly lawful for a board of education at any time after filing its budget, and during the session of the commission, to perform this act of attaching the certification referred to in section 7594-1. These considerations lead me to express the conclusion that the proper thing to do would have been for the board of education in question, and others in a similar situation, to have waited until August 18, 1919, and then have offered to the budget commission of their respective counties for attachment to their respective annual budgets the certifications of which section 7594-1, which would then have been in effect, speaks. Probably this was not done anywhere. The initial operation of H. B. No. 406, as has been demonstrated, is surrounded by very complicated legal questions. The fact that that which ought to have been done was not done in any county should not prejudice the rights of any school district if it is possible to avoid that result.

In view of all these circumstances, I venture to suggest that the tax commission, which has from time to time, without question and under color of statutes, exercised the power of reconvening budget commissions to correct their work, should at the request of any board of education which through failure to understand the intricacies of the law in this respect failed to take the necessary steps to secure state aid, call the appropriate budget commission into session for the purpose of making the alternative adjustment referred to in section 7594-1, if it appears that the district has applied or will apply for state aid and is entitled thereto. The proper procedure would be for the board of education to send directly to the tax commission the certificate in question together with any statements of fact or affidavits showing the facts respecting its application for state aid. The tax commission, were it minded so to do, could then reconvene the budget commission as above suggested.

No course other than this will, in the opinion of this department, secure the desired result, unless it should happen that the budget commission in question was still in session, which as stated is a matter left to inference by the facts stated in your letter. If that were the case, then the immediate re-filing of the certificate in question with the budget commission would enable the commission to act in the premises, and if the commission should refuse to act mandamus would lie, if the above conclusions are correct, to compel action on such certificate. Without the filing of a new certificate, however, even though the budget commission happened to be in session at the present time, it would seem to me that such budget commission could not only be compelled to act as provided in section 7594-1 but that it would not even have lawful authority to act, and this for the reason that the certificate filed prematurely by the board would be technically of no force and effect.

It is true that there is a dictum in State ex rel. vs. Roose, 90 O. S., 345, 349, which might justify the conclusion that in the case submitted by you the budget commission, if reconvened, could act immediately upon the certification already in its possession, though prematurely filed. The following is the language referred to:

> "It follows that such sections of a law as are not subject to the referendum will go into immediate effect notwithstanding other sections or other items may be subject to the delay incident to a referendum or the right to petition therefor. However that may be, the question is no longer of any importance in this case, for no referendum was in fact had upon any section of the law. The law in its entirety was in full force and effect before the auditor had placed the tax levy for state or local purposes upon the tax lists of the county. It is, therefore, of no importance whether or not the certificate of this tax was prematurely issued by the auditor of state to the various county auditors."

However his may be, the course which has been suggested is at least the safer one to follow.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TEMPORARY OR OTHER RELIEF FOR THE POOR—HOUSE BILL NO. 150, 108 O. L., 266, CONSTRUED.

By the provisions of House Bill No. 150, 108 O. L., 266, the obligation to provide temporary or "outdoor" relief for the poor rests upon the township or municipality in cases of such poor persons as have legal settlement therein; while in case of such persons requiring more than temporary relief, it is provided that upon proper ascertainment of that fact the county shall assume the obligation providing permanent relief, which shall only be provided however at the county home, except in case of persons whose peculiar conditions require that they be cared for under county control, and yet, on account of their physical condition or otherwise, may not be proper subjects for admission into the home, and persons whose physical condition will not permit their removal to the county home, in which cases the county shall provide necessary relief outside of the county home.

In addition to the obligation to provide permanent relief, the county is to provide temporary or outside relief for those persons who have not the residential qualifications for township or municipal relief and whose condition requires less than the permanent relief to be provided only at the county home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEECH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication of September 9, 1919, relative to the provision of House Bill No. 150, 108 O. L. 266, in its application to the administration of poor relief by the county and township respectively.

I advise that it appears to be the intendment of that act that townships and cities shall provide what is generally termed as "outside relief" to all persons within the township having the residential qualifications for township relief, and that with respect to such persons the county shall not be liable to afford relief except upon the conditions set forth in section 2544, which contemplates cases requiring more than temporary relief.

While the law prior to the recent amendment was construed as placing the primary responsibility of affording relief to indigent poor upon the townships and municipal corporations, subject to the county's obligation in case a more permanent provision was required, yet that view was by no means capable of general or universal application, inasmuch as it was provided, for example, in section 2544 that the county should provide for indigent persons in the county institution "or otherwise," and in section 2546 that the county commissioners should contract with physicians to furnish relief for persons of their respective townships under the charge of the county.

The intent to eliminate this apparent concurrence of jurisdiction of the county and the township in the matter of affording outside aid is very apparent in the new law in that the words "or otherwise" have been dropped from section 2544 and the provision of section 2546 for providing medical relief by the county is limited to inmates of the county home, and the policy of the law is further clarified in the provisions of section 3476 which states with particularity the intent of the act with respect to temporary relief of residents of the township or city.

What has been said relates to temporary or outside relief for those having residential qualifications for township aid, and of course there remain the class of indigent poor who by reason of lack of residential qualifications do not become a township charge; and for this class it is the apparent intent of the law that the county shall make the necessary provision, even by way of temporary outside relief where that course is proper.

This policy is evidenced not only by the latter provision of section 3476 to the effect that relief to be granted by the county shall extend to those persons not having the necessary residential qualifications for township or municipal relief, those requiring permanent relief and such other persons whose peculiar conditions require that they be cared for under county control, as well as the latter provision of section 2546 to the effect that no medical relief shall be furnished by the county for persons in their homes except those who have not acquired the residential qualifications to give them a legal settlement, and except under the provisions of sections 2544 which relate to a case where a person has been determined a county charge, but whose physical condition will not permit his removal to the county home.

Other language of the act indicates the same general policy, and you are therefore advised that under its provisions it is made the duty of the township or municipality to provide all temporary relief for indigent poor having a legal settlement therein, and that the county's obligation includes the provision of relief for those having legal settlement in the township or municipality, but whose condition requires more than temporary relief, as well as all those not having the residential qualifications, but whose condition requires permanent relief, all of which are to be provided for at the county institutions for the poor, except as to persons whose peculiar conditions require that they be cared for under county control, but may be such as to disqualify them from admission to the county home, and also those whose physical condition will not permit their removal to the county home; while cases requiring temporary relief only and not having the residential qualifications for relief from the township or municipality, are to be provided for by the county, and such provision may be made outside of the county institutions.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT COUNSEL BY SUCH OFFICER—STATUTES GOVERNING SUCH APPOINTMENT —CONSTRUCTION OF SECTIONS 2912, 3004 AND 13562 G. C.

1. The prosecuting attorney may, subject to the restrictions contained in section 3004 G. C. employ an attorney to procure necessary evidence to be used in the prosecution of a criminal offender, and pay him for such services out of the fund referred to in that section.

2. When the prosecuting attorney is disabled from conducting a criminal prosecution, or requires the assistance of additional counsel, appointment and payment of an assistant is governed by section 2912 and 13562 G. C., and not by section 3004 G. C.

3. The expense of a private individual in attending a conference called by the Attorney-General on a matter involving the county treasurer, and whose selection for that purpose was made by the prosecuting attorney at the suggestion of the Attorney-General who stated that the conference was urgent, and which conference the prosecuting attorney was unable to attend because he was then engaged in the trial of a case, may be paid from the fund allowed to prosecuting attorneys under section 3004 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 30, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of recent date relating to certain expenditures made by a prosecuting attorney from the fund allowed these officers under section 3004 G. C. and inquiring as to his authority to disburse the money for the purposes men- in your letter, was duly received.

The statute referred to provides for the creation of a fund to be used by the prosecuting attorney in paying expenses incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, which are not otherwise provided for, and, so far as pertinent to the present inquiry, reads as follows:

> "There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county."

Inasmuch as the section 3004 G. C. fund can be used to pay expenses incurred only in the performance of official duties, and then only when their payment is not otherwise provided for in other statutes, it becomes necessary, in order to properly apply the statute to any given state of facts, to ascertain whether any duty has been imposed upon the prosecuting attorney with respect thereto, and if so, what provision, if any, has been made for the employment or appointment and payment of assistants to assist him in the discharge of the particular duty.

Section 2916 G. C. requires that the prosecuting attorney, except when otherwise provided by law, shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he is directed by law to prosecute within or without the county, in the probate court, common pleas court and court of appeals.

In case of sickness or other disability of the prosecuting attorney, preventing him from discharging his duties, the common pleas court is empowered by section 2912 G. C. to appoint an assistant to perform the duties of the office "until the disability is removed," who shall receive such compensation as "the court fixes and the county commissioners allow."

Section 2914 G. C. may also be noticed in this connection. That section provides that the judge or judges of the common pleas court may fix the compensation of assistants to the prosecuting attorney, but that statute is probably confined in its operation to the general assistants. At least that was the view taken in State vs. Commissioners 8 C. C. (N. S.) 281, 287, affirmed 12 C. C. (N. S.) 202 and 81 O. S. 562, without report. See, however, as probably contra, 1914 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1150; 1916 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 118, and 1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 478.

Another section, 2917 G. C., which may also be referred to, provides that "no officer," and this includes a prosecuting attorney, "may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section 2912 G. C."

Provision has also been made by section 13562 G. C. whereby the common pleas court and the court of appeals are authorized to appoint an attorney to assist the prosecuting attorney in the trial of a pending case, wherever the public interest so requires, and for the payment of such compensation for such services as the court and county commissioners approve.

Having briefly referred to the statutes imposing duties upon the prosecuting attorney in both civil and criminal matters, and those governing the employment and payment of assistants, as well as section 3004 G. C., we will now consider the items of expenditure involved in the order in which they are stated in your letter.

(1) The $5.00 item.

One Brown had been indicted for perjury on account of false statements made in obtaining a marriage license. In order to properly prepare the case for trial it was necessary to secure documentary evidence from Kentucky, and also to interview and arrange for the presence of witnesses from that state. The county being without a secret service officer, a member of the local bar was employed by the prosecuting attorney to secure the documents and witnesses referred to, and for his services in the matter was paid $5.00 from the section 3004 fund.

In my opinion this expenditure comes within the doctrine of 1916 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1453, that the section 3004 fund may be used in the employment of persons to procure evidence to be used in the prosecution of offenders when the county is without a secret service officer.

(2) The $50.00 and $25.00 items.

One Kirk had been arrested for contributing to the delinquency of a minor child. The prosecuting attorney was the brother-in-law of the defendant's father, and, considering himself disqualified from prosecuting the defendant, the matter was called to the attention of the common pleas judge who appointed a special prosecutor to prosecute the case under authority of section 13562 G. C. In the county involved, the probate and common pleas courts were combined, and are known as the court of common pleas, under authority of section 7 of article IV of the State Constitution.

The special prosecutor conducted the first trial of the case, and was allowed a fee for his services which the county commissioners, however, refused to approve. He thereupon announced to the court and prosecuting attorney his retirement from the case.

Thereafter, a new trial having been granted, the prosecuting attorney, without requesting and securing, as in the former instance, the appointment by the court of a special prosecutor under section 13562 G. C. and without invoking the provisions of section 2912 G. C., employed the former special prosecutor to conduct the further prosecution of the case, which he proceeded to do until the final termination in the court of appeals, and for his services was paid the aggregate sum of $75.00.

From the foregoing statement it is evident that, at the beginning of the case, every one connected with the prosecution, namely, the judge, prosecuting attorney, and the former special prosecutor, considered that the employment and payment of a special prosecutor in such a case was specially provided for by section 13562 G. C., for it was under that section that the former appointment was made, and I am also of the same opinion.

The duty of prosecuting this case was imposed upon the prosecuting attorney by section 2916 G. C., and assuming, but not deciding, that he was disabled from discharging the duty imposed upon him by reason of his relationship to the defendant, he should have either invoked the provisions of section 2912 G. C. whereby the common pleas court is empowered to appoint a temporary assistant, and had his compensation allowed and paid as therein provided, or the provisions of section 13562 G. C., as in the former instance.

It is contended, however, that the prosecuting attorney was justified in employing and paying the special prosecutor under section 3004 G. C., because of the previous attitude and action of the commissioners in refusing to approve the compensation fixed by the court for services rendered under the previous appointment by the court. A complete answer to this contention is that none of the statutes referred to make any provision for such situation, and the failure or refusal of the commissioners from any cause, whether arbitrary or not, to approve or allow the compensation fixed by the court, does not, in my opinion, justify the prosecuting attorney in assuming an authority in the matter which has not been conferred upon him, and a fortiori when it has been denied to him in cases specially provided for, as in section 3004 G. C.

Whether or not the county commissioners acted arbitrarily in refusing to approve and allow the compensation of the special prosecutor appointed by the court at the beginning of the case, is a matter with which this department is not now concerned. The question for decision goes to the authority of the prosecuting attorney to employ a special or temporary assistant and pay him for his services from the fund allowed to prosecuting attorneys under section 3004 G. C. It is clear that he had no such authority, for the reason that such authority has by statute been expressly lodged elsewhere, and another fund provided out of which compensation for the services rendered is to be paid. See, also, 1917 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. III, p. 2005, involving the employment by the prosecuting attorney of an attorney to assist in the trial of a civil action.

(3) The $10.00 item.

A former attorney-general had requested the prosecuting attorney to come to Columbus and attend a conference relative to a matter involving the county treasurer. It was impossible for the prosecuting attorney to comply with the request because he was then engaged in the trial of a case which would require several days to complete. The matter being urgent, the former attorney general requested that the prosecuting attorney send some one in his place who in turn could report to him the result of the conference. The $10.00 expenditure was made to reimburse the prosecuting attorney's representative on account of expenses incurred by him in making the trip. It being admitted that the trip was made in the furtherance of justice, I am of the opinion that the expenditure was justified.

In concluding, it may not be improper to call attention to State vs. Maharry, 97 O. S., 272, as supporting the doctrine that when public funds have been unlawfully paid out, findings may be made and suits instituted against private persons who received and are withholding the same, as well as against the public officers who made the disbursement.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE WAGONS FOR CONVEYANCE OF CHILDREN.

Under existing law county boards of education are without authority to purchase wagons for the conveyance of school children, such conveyances to remain the property of the county board and to be assigned by the county board to various school districts within the county district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1919.

HON. W. B. BARTELS, Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter of recent date in which you request the opinion of this department upon the following question:

> "Would it be possible for a county board of education to make use of funds raised under sections 5653, 7820 and 7873, of Ohio General Code, to purchase wagons for the conveyance of school children? The said wagons would remain the property of the county board of education but said board would assign them for use to the various school districts whenever and wherever needed."

Section 5653, which you cite, reads as follows:

> "After paying all horse, sheep, cattle, swine, mule and goat claims at the December session of the county commissioners, if there remain more than one thousand dollars of the dog and kennel fund arising from the registration of dogs and dog kennels for such year the excess at such December session shall be transferred and disposed of as follows: In a county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, which has one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, all such excess as the county commissioners deem necessary for the uses and purposes of such society by order of the commissioners and upon the warrant of the county auditor shall be paid to the treasurer of such society, and any surplus not so transferred shall be transferred to the county board of education fund at the direction of the county commissioners."

Section 7820 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The clerk of the board of county school examiners shall promptly collect all fees from applicants at each examination and pay them into the county treasury monthly. He shall file with the county auditor a written statement of the amount and the number of applicants male and female, examined during the month. All money thus received, shall be set apart by the auditor to the credit of the county board of education fund."

Section 7873 G. C. reads as follows:

> "If the board of a district does not provide for such institute in any year, it shall cause the institute fund in the hands of the district treasurer for the year to be paid to the treasurer of the county wherein the district is situated, who shall place it to the credit of the county board of education fund. The teachers of the schools of such district in such case, shall be entitled to the advantages of the county institute, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-eight hundred and sixty-nine, and seventy-eight hundred and seventy. The clerk of the board shall make the report of the institute required by section 7874."

It will be noted from the above sections that the funds which you indicate are those arising from the dog tax fund, a part of which is turned over to the county board of education fund, the fees from the teachers' examinations and the moneys that should be paid into the county board of education fund by the district treasurer of a school district, where such district does not provide for a teachers' institute in any year, but this latter provision would hardly apply in your case unless a city in your county school district makes such payments into the county board of education fund. Nowhere in these sections, under which provisions the county board of education fund is created, does there occur any authority for a county board of education to purchase wagons for the conveyance of school children. Attention, therefore, must be directed to sections of the statute which might give the county board of education authority to spend this fund or a portion of it. This fund can be spent only as indicated in the statutes and for the purposes which the statutes mention, and nowhere in the statutes is there any provision made for the county board of education to purchase vehicles to be loaned to local boards of education.

The county board of education is directed by the statute to provide transportation in a given case (section 7731), but such case is that a local board of education must have neglected or refused to provide transportation for its pupils.

Your question is whether the county board of education having a surplus of funds at its disposal, could purchase wagons for the conveyance of school children at any time, the said wagons to remain the property of the county board of education and to be assigned by such county board to the various school districts whenever and wherever needed. The law contemplates that transportation of pupils, when furnished, must be furnished by local boards of education and the only occasion that could arise wherein the county board of education could legally be interested in the transportation of pupils would be in cases like that covered by section 7731 G. C., supra, that is, where the district had failed through neglect or refusal to furnish transportation to the school children within their district, and upon this section of the statutes attention is invited to Opinion No. 909, appearing at page 12, Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1918, wherein the following language occurs:

"The above section of the General Code places the duty of providing transportation, that is, of providing the means of transportation, in the rural and village boards of education. It is the duty, therefore, that the boards in the first instance have a right to exercise and cannot be interfered with unless in the exercise of such right or duty the board grossly abuses the discretion placed in it or acts in a fraudulent manner."

Until such a contingency existed the county board of education, under existing law, would be without authority to make an expenditure for transportation of school children, because boards of education can do only those things which are authorized by statute, either direct or by implied authority.

A search of the statutes shows that the county board of education fund can be drawn upon for the following purposes, as indicated in the sections herewith given:

Section 4734 G. C., as amended in 108 O. L., provides for the payment of the members of the county board of education at $3.00 per day of attendance and an allowance of ten cents a mile one way.

Section 4737 G. C. provides for the publication by the county board of education of courses of study.

Section 4743 G. C. provides for the payment of the compensation of the district superintendents by the county board of education.

Section 4744-1 G. C., as amended in 108 O. L., provides for the payment of the county superintendent's salary and certain of his expenses, including an allowance for a stenographer and clerk, by the county board of education.

Section 4744-3 G. C. provides for the contingent expenses of a county board of education.

Section 4744-3a permits the payment of the cost of printing supplies needed by the board of education of the county and the cost of its educational meetings.

Section 4729 G. C. provides for the payment of the expenses of the district presidents at their annual meeting in choosing a member of the county board, the same being three dollars per day for attendance, with ten cents mileage one way. (108 O. L.)

Section 7642 G. C. provides for the purchase of books for a public library by any board of education under certain circumstances.

Section 7654-1 provides for the establishment of county normal schools and joint county normal schools and the payment of certain expenses in the maintenance of the same, from the county board of education fund.

Section 7654-3 provides for the employment of a director of county normal schools that may be established.

Section 7654-5 G. C. provides for the salary of the director so chosen and also for the payment of assistant instructors from the contingent fund of the county board of education.

Section 7731 G. C. provides for the transportation of pupils in a district where the local board of education has neglected or refused to do so.

Section 7860 G. C. makes provision for the cost of the county teachers' institute, held annually, the same to be paid from the county board of education fund.

Section 7870 G. C. permits of the payment to superintendents for attendance at county teachers' institutes under certain circumstances.

It will be seen that nowhere in any of the above sections, providing for the expenditure of the county board of education fund, is there any provision that a county board of education may use its funds for the purchase of vehicles, and it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that under existing law county boards of education are without authority to purchase wagons for the conveyance of school children, such conveyances to remain the property of the county board and to be assigned by the county board to the various school districts within the county school district.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—SALARIES PAID TO TEACHERS OTHER THAN SALARIES MENTIONED IN SCHEDULE, SECTION 7595-1 G. C.—SUCH SCHOOL DISTRICT NOT ENTITLED TO STATE AID.

Where a school district pays salaries to teachers other than the salaries mentioned in the schedule appearing in section 7595-1 G. C., such school is not entitled to state aid to weak school districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1919.

HON. JOHN E. BLAKE, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your letter of recent date in which you request the opinion of this department on the following statement of facts:

> "A board of education levies and collects the maximum legal levy of five mills and places two-thirds of the same in the tuition fund, which is used exclusively for tuition fund purposes. Under these conditions does the following state of facts bar these districts from state aid? One or perhaps more of the teachers are paid a sum in advance of $80.00 per month, but such additional sum is paid solely from the contingent fund of the district in which such teacher is teaching and said tuition fund is not drawn upon in any manner for such advance."

Section 7595 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 623, reads as follows:

> "No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than fifty dollars a month. When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 of the General Code, for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficit."

Section 7595-1 G. C. was also amended in 107 O. L., 623, and reads as follows:

> "Only such school districts which pay salaries as follows shall be eligible to receive state aid: Elementary teachers without previous teaching experience in the state, fifty dollars a month; elementary teachers having at least one year's professional training, fifty-five dollars a month; elementary teachers who have completed the full two years' course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, sixty dollars per month; high school teachers not to exceed an average of eighty dollars per month in each high school."

Attention is invited to the language of the first sentence of section 7595-1 G. C., which says:

> "Only such school districts which pay salaries as follows shall be eligible to receive state aid: * * * high school teachers not to exceed an average of eighty dollars per month in each high school."

It will thus be seen that the figures mentioned in section 7595-1 G. C. are fifty dollars per month, fifty-five dollars per month and sixty dollars per month in the elementary schools, depending upon the experience and training of the teacher. Section 7595-1 G. C. must be read in conjunction with section 7595 G. C. and the sole matter under discussion in both sections is the subject of teaching and not upon any other employment. It is presumed, therefore, that the salaries indicated therein for teachers is for teaching, and your statement of facts indicates that the salary paid the teacher in question was also for teaching, but that it was in excess of eighty dollars per month. It will thus be seen that an examination of the two sections in question indicates that in order to receive state aid a school district must pay the scale of wages mentioned in section 7595-1 G. C. for teaching and only such school districts which do pay the scale indicated shall be eligible to receive state aid. The maximum indicated in such section which was the law until the Freeman act went into effect on August 18, 1919, was fifty dollars per month for elementary teachers and a maximum of eighty dollars per month for high school teachers, construed in the case of the latter as being an average of eighty dollars per month for all teachers in any high school. Your statement of facts indicates that the teacher in question was paid more than the schedule of salaries carried in section 7595-1 G. C., and therefore the district in question which did not comply with the schedule required for state aid is not entitled to receive such state aid.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a school district pays salaries to teachers other than the salaries mentioned in the schedule appearing in section 7595-1, such school is not entitled to state aid to weak school districts.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

2. Is such publication subject to the statutory provisions of section 6251 of the General Code?"

Sections 486-1 et seq., 4228, 4229 and 6251 are pertinent to your inquiry.

Section 486-1, as amended in 106 O. L., 406, relating to definitions under the civil service act, provides in part:

"7. The term 'commission' shall signify either the state civil service commission of Ohio or the civil service commission of any municipality."

As to the powers and duties of the commission, section 486-7 in part provides that it shall,

"First: Prescribe, amend and enforce administrative rules for the purpose of carrying out and making effectual the provisions of this act."

Section 486-9 in part provides:

"As soon as practicable after the taking effect of this act, the commission shall put into effect rules for * * * examinations."

Under the head of "examinations" section 486-10 in part is:

"The state commission shall have control of all examinations, except as otherwise provided in this act. * * * Reasonable notice * * * of every competitive examination * * * shall be given by the commission. Written or printed notices of every examination for the state classified service shall be sent by the commission * * * to the city clerk of each municipality * * * and such notices, promptly upon receipt by them, shall be posted in conspicuous public places * * * in the city hall of the municipality, * * *. Such notices shall be posted in a conspicuous place in the office of the commission for at least two weeks before any examination."

But for the definition heretofore quoted, and but for section 486-19, this section would appear to apply to and affect only examinations held by the state commission, but section 486-19 gives the municipal commission power to prescribe, amend and enforce rules not inconsistent with the provision of this act, and further provides:

"Said municipal commission shall have and exercise all other powers and perform all other duties with respect to the civil service of such city and city school district, as herein prescribed, and confered upon the state civil service commission with respect to the civil service of the state; and all authority granted to the state commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction shall, except as otherwise provided, in this act, be held to grant the same authority to the municipal commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction."

It is to be noted that the municipal commission is charged with the same duties and entrusted with the same powers with respect to the municipal service as are charged and granted to the state commission with respect to the state service.

Consideration of section 486-10, in connection with the other statutes cited, establishes these three propositions:

1. Notice of the examination is "required by law."

2. The method and duration of the publication of such notice is not "specifically directed by statute."

3. The notice is a "municipal notice."

The quotations contained in the statement of these three propositions are made as quotations with reference to the provisions of sections 4228, 4229 and 6251, which may be introduced at this time.

Section 4229, as amended in 106 O. L., 493, in part provides:

> "Unless otherwise specifically directed by statute, all municipal * * notices * * * required by law * * * to be published shall be published as follows:"

Then follows the requirement that the notices shall be published in certain newspapers and other requirements which are not material to the question under discussion.

Section 4229, referring to the notices in section 4228, provides that such notices shall be published for a period "not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks;"

Section 6251, relating rather to the rates for legal advertising, in part provides that newspapers may charge

> "for the publication of * * * notices * * * required to be published by a public officer of the * * * city, except where the rate is otherwise fixed by law, to wit:" (Then follows the rate for each square or fraction of square, with additional charge for tabular or rule work.)

As pointed out before, the notice of examination is required by law, the method and duration of its publication is not specifically directed by statute, and the notice is a municipal notice, bringing it clearly within the provisions of sections 4228 and 4229 and sections 6251, unless because of the indefinite provision in section 486-10, requiring only "reasonable notice," the method and duration of publication could be said to be exclusively entrusted to the discretion of the commission. This part of section 486-10, however, is reconcilable with the other sections by construing it to mean that the discretion of the commission should be exercised in determining for what period the publication shall run between the minimum and maximum time required by law. Certainly, however, it can be said that it is not "specifically directed" by section 486-10 and this would make 4228 applicable.

Consistent with these conclusions, your questions are specifically answered as follows:

1. Publication of the notice of municipal civil service commission examinations under sections 486-10 and 486-19 are subject to the statutory provisions of section 4228 and 4229 of the General Code.

2. Publication of the notice of municipal civil service commission examinations under sections 486-10 and 486-19 are subject to the statutory provisions of section 6251 of the General Code.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DITCHES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS CONTROL CLEANING, REPAIR AND REPLACEMENT OF COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP DITCHES—SEE AMENDED SENATE BILL NO. 100, 108 O. L., 926.

Under amended Senate Bill No. 100, in effect October 10, 1919, county commissioners are given control of the matter of cleaning, repair and replacement of ditches, without regard to whether the ditch was constructed originally by the county or township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

HON. CARROLL A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter is received submitting for opinion in connection with amended Senate bill No. 100, in effect October 10, 1919, two questions as follows:

> "1. May ditches originally constructed by township trustees be repaired by the county commissioners under sections 64-67 inclusive?
> 2. May ditches originally constructed by township trustees be repaired by township trustees under sections 64-67 inclusive?"

The purpose of said bill and its comprehensive character are indicated by its title:

> "An Act to codify, consolidate, and clarify the ditch laws of the state according to the report of the commission appointed therefor, under an act passed March 21, 1917 (O. L. 107 V. 611), to amend sections 3001, 6564, 6565 of the General Code and to repeal all sections of the General Code superseded by, or in conflict with such reported codified consolidation."

It is unnecessary for present purposes to go into detail as to the provisions of this act. Such provisions, in great part, are devoted to proceedings for original construction of ditches under the direction of the board of county commissioners or if that board is a petitioner, then under the direction of the common pleas court, upon application filed with the county auditor. Nowhere in the act do we find that the township trustees have any jurisdiction in ditch proceedings, although such trustees, in common with private individuals and others, may petition for the improvement (Sec. 2), and where a part of the cost of the improvement is apportioned to the township by the board of commissioners or common pleas court, the trustees are to make a levy on the grand duplicate of the township of a tax sufficient to pay such apportionment (Sec. 52). In the matter of what may be termed private ditches, the trustees are given certain minor duties (Sec. 68). On the other hand, we find that the act repeals the entire series of sections relating to township ditches (Secs. 6603 et seq.), which heretofore have been constructed under the direction of the township trustees.

The foregoing brief references serve to make plain the policy of sections 64 to 67, inclusive, relating to cleaning, repair and replacement of ditches.

Section 64 reads:

> "In all cases, except as herein provided, when cleaning, repair, or replacement is found by the county commissioners to be necessary upon any improvement, before the same shall be done, the county engineer, upon the order of the county commissioners, shall make an estimate of the probable cost and expense of material and labor therefor, and report the same to the county commissioners in writing. When such report shows the probable cost to be less than three hundred dollars in the aggregate, the same at the discretion of the county commissioners, may be let by contract made by the engineer with the approval of the county commissioners without public bidding and without petition or other proceedings. But if the estimate of said cost and expense in its entirety exceeds the sum of three hundred dollars except in case of an emergency, the same shall be done by public letting of contract as provided for the original construction of improvements under this chapter."

Section 65 relates to emergency repairs, and section 66 relates to repairs whereof the cost does not exceed twenty-five dollars. Section 67 reads:

"The actual cost of the cleaning, repair, or replacement of any improvement constructed after the passage of this act shall be distributed and charged to the lands, including township and county, originally assessed for the construction of the same, in the ratio of such assessment, and the auditor shall add such amount to the taxes otherwise levied on such lands and certify the same to the county treasurer to be collected as are other taxes with the next semi-annual installment. When such taxes are paid they shall be credited to the general ditch improvement fund in this act provided.

The actual cost of the cleaning, repair, or replacement of any drainage improvement constructed prior to the passage of this act, of which there is a record of the assessment of the original cost according to benefits and the lands on which it was assessed, shall be distributed and charged to such lands in the manner provided herein for the cost of cleaning, repair and replacement of improvements constructed since the passage hereof. But if no such record has been preserved, or such a record as will accurately disclose such facts, then such cost shall be assessed according to benefits as on the construction of an original improvement, and by like proceedings, and after notice, placed by the auditor on the tax duplicate; but in all cases there shall be a right of appeal by any interested party as is provided from assessment on an original improvement."

The expression "except as herein provided' appearing in section 64, evidently refers to the cases covered by sections 65 and 66. Hence, by the express terms of sections 64 and 67, the county commissioners are vested with control in the matter of repairs to ditches, without regard to whether the same were constructed originally by the county or by the township, a policy in line with the general tenor of the act. Repairs affecting lands in more than one county are similarly left to the commissioners of the interested counties (Sec. 89).

Your first question is therefore answered in the affirmative and your second in the negative.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX LAW—PARAGRAPH 7 OF SECTION 5332 G. C. NOT APPLICABLE TO REMAINDERS VESTING PRIOR TO JUNE 5, 1919—SEE ALSO OPINION NO. 493, DATED JULY 18, 1919.

Supplementary to Opinion No. 493, paragraph 7 of section 5332 of the inheritance tax law of 1919 has no application to remainders vesting prior to June 5, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Certain paragraphs of the opinion of July 18, 1919 (No. 493), addressed to the Commission relative to the application of the inheritance tax act of June 5, 1919, to unsettled estates seem to require qualification, or at least amplification. In dealing in that opinion with the general effect of the law passing comment was made respecting the effect of paragraph 7 of section 5332, by which a tax is levied upon successions.

> "7. When any property shall pass subject to any charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of any person, or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase accruing to any person, institution or corporation, on the extinction and determination of such charge, estate or interest, shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, in the same manner as if the person, institution or corporation beneficially entitled thereto had then acquired such increase from the person from whom the title to their respective estates or interests is derived. Such tax shall be upon the excess of the actual market value of such property over and above the exemptions made and at the rates prescribed in this subdivision of this chapter."

The following is quoted from that opinion:

"Paragraph seven begins likewise with the word 'when' (as indeed do all the paragraphs of section 5332) and makes the increase accruing to the ultimate taker of an estate, which passes subject to a charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of a person on the extinction and determination of such charge, estate or interest, an independent succession. That is to say, the entire estate or interest of the ultimate taker is not taxed by this paragraph, but merely the increase accruing to him at the death of the holder of the life estate or other intervening estate determinable by death In such cases the ultimate taker will undoubtedly have received a vested estate in the first instance, the succession to which has presumably once been taxed. This is not to be taxed again by virtue of paragraph seven, but to the extent that the determination of the intermediate estate or charge enhances or increases his interest, and to that extent only, he is deemed, for the purposes of the act, to receive a new and independent succession which is made taxable because it is to the extent of the increase a proprietary interest devolving upon him by the death of another person, though in this instance not the person whose will created the intervening estate or charge.

Without going more deeply into these two paragraphs of the section, it is sufficient to state that under either of them successions take place subsequently to the death of the original decedent. All such successions to direct relatives of the original decedent and to such collateral relatives of such original decedent, if any, against whose interests a tax did not accrue under the collateral inheritance tax law, are subject to the provisions of the act in question, though the death of the original decedent may have taken place prior to June 5, 1919.

Right here another question is presented, upon which this opinion will not pass definitely, viz., whether or not the 'succession' upon which a specific tax is imposed by paragraph seven of section 5332 G. C., as amended, is subject to that tax, even though the original succession by will (which, as has been observed, is an independent succession for the purposes of the new act) became subject to the collateral inheritance tax by the death of the testator prior to June 5, 1919."

It occurs to me that in order that this opinion may not be misunderstood or misapplied it will be necessary to "go more deeply into" paragraph 7 and its comparison with paragraph 4 which was considered together with it. The Commission will observe that no distinction is drawn in the former opinion as between the application of paragraph 7 to estates in remainder which had vested in right prior to June 5, 1919, and those arising by virtue of a death occurring prior to that date but contingent in character. This distinction should be drawn.

In the first place, paragraphs 4 and 7, as the opinion quoted points out, deal with similar subject-matters, namely, successions taking place subsequently to the death of the original decedent. They are the only paragraphs of the section which do deal with such subject-matters. Being thus so closely in pari materia, any differences which may exist between them are significant and should be given full weight. The following difference between the two paragraphs should therefore be pointed out:

Paragraph 4 describes the taxable succession as occurring "whenever any person or corporation shall exercise a power of appointment derived from any disposition of property heretofore or hereafter made," etc.

It is thus clear, not only that the taxable succession occurs when the power of appointment is exercised without reference to the date of the death of the donor of the power, but also that the paragraph is to apply whether that death occurred "heretofore or hereafter." Paragraph 7 on the other hand, not only omits the significant words "heretofore or hereafter" found in paragraph 4, but further conditions the taxable succession to which it relates as follows:

"When any property shall pass subject to any charge, estate or interest," etc.

That is to say, this paragraph does not merely say that all increases accruing to any person, institution or corporation on the extinction of prior estates, charges or interests shall be deemed taxable successions; but, on the other hand, it distinctly says that the accrual of such an increase shall be deemed a taxable succession under certain circumstances only, namely, "when any property shall pass subject to any charge, estate or interest."

In other words, this paragraph is expressly prospective in its scope, while in a sense at least paragraph 4 is fully as expressly retrospective (though not necessarily in any invidious constitutional sense). Under the one paragraph the mere exercise of any power of appointment is enough to form the predicate of the accrual of the tax; under the other the accrual of an increase is not of itself enough for such purpose, for there must be in the first instance the passing of property, which must take place after the act becomes effective.

But in addition to these significant differences between paragraphs 4 and 7, what might be termed the history of said paragraph 7 is entitled to some weight. The inheritance tax act of 1919 is closely modeled after the New York law on the subject of inheritance taxation. Provisions corresponding to paragraph 7 of section 5332 of our law and appearing in the legislation of New York may be cited as follows:

N. Y. St. 1899, Chap. 76, amending N. Y. St 1896, Chap. 908, Sec. 230;

"* * * When property is transferred subject to any charge, determinable by the death of any person, the increase of benefit accruing on the determination of such charge is a transfer of property taxable under the statute, as though the person beneficially entitled thereto had then acquired such interest or increase of benefit. * * *

All estates upon remainder or reversion, which vested prior to June 30, 1885, but which will not come into actual possession or enjoyment until after the passage of this act shall be appraised and taxed as soon as the person or corporation beneficially interested therein shall be entitled to the actual possession or enjoyment thereof."

The last sentence in the above quotation was evidently aimed at making the first sentence thereof, and perhaps other provisions of the law, applicable to vested remainders after life estates which had not yet terminated. This provision was held unconstitutional.

In re: Pell, 171 N. Y. 48; 57 L. R. A. 540.

In the act of 1909 (Article 10 of the Tax Law, Chap. 62, Par. 230, as amended N. Y. St. 1911, Chap. 800, Id. 1916, Chap. 550) occurs the following paragraph:

"Where any property shall, after the passage of this chapter, be transferred subject to any charge, estate or interest, determinable by the death of any person, or at any period ascertainable only by reference to death, the increase accruing to any person or corporation upon the extinction or determination of such charge, estate or interest, shall be deemed a transfer of property taxable under the provisions of this article in the same manner as though the person or corporation beneficially entitled thereto had then acquired such increase from the person from whom the title to their respective estates or interests is derived."

In this provision is seen a careful effort to avoid the consequence pointed out in the decision last cited.

The Ohio statute omits the phrase "after the passage of this chapter," but in view of the framework of the whole section as previously discussed, this omission is not material, and in view of the otherwise close similarity between the two provisions they should receive, on familiar principles, the same construction.

Again, there is a third reason for the result which must be reached on the question under consideration. In the former opinion referred to brief reference was made to the general rule as to the interpretation of inheritance tax laws, to the effect that they are interpreted as wholly prospective unless the contrary intention clearly appears. In the paragraph under consideration the language is prospective. The inferences to be drawn from other related provisions favor a wholly prospective interpretation and therefore there is nothing to oppose the operation of the general rule referred to.

For the foregoing reasons, then, and by way of supplement to the opinion previously given and herein referred to, the commission is advised that in the opinion of this department paragraph 7 of section 5332 of the inheritance tax law of 1919 has no application to remainders vesting prior to June 5, 1919.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AGRICULTURAL AGENT—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE BONDS TO PROVIDE SALARY FOR SUCH AGENT.

County commissioners are not authorized to issue bonds to provide for salary of the county agricultural agents for a fiscal year in which no levy has been made for such purpose and no account thereof taken in the budget, for the reason that inability to meet such obligation, under the circumstances, should not properly be said to arise from the limits of taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

HON. H. W. KUNTZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently requested my consideration of the state of facts submitted as follows:

"Some time during the month of March last, the county commissioners agreed to pay fifteen hundred dollars of the salary of the farm agent in Muskingum county, who is employed by the Ohio State University for the year commencing July 1, 1919, and ending July 1, 1920. The commisioners did this without counseling me, and there are no funds available to pay the county's share, to-wit, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars.

The budget commission has made a levy of twenty-three hundred dollars for the salary of a farm agent, but the same will not be available until March, 1920. There is no way to meet the demand of the Ohio State University for seven hundred and fifty dollars for the remainder of this year, unless the commissioners borrow this amount in anticipation of the collection of taxes as provided for in the budget.

I am willing that the commissioners borrow this amount of money if the same is approved by the Attorney-General. Please let me hear from you."

The statutes governing in the matter of employment of agricultural agents are sections 9921-2 et seq. G. C., and the authority of the county commissioners to act under these statutes, in a case where no provision has been made for payment of the county agent's salary by special levy and appropriation therefor, was considered in a recent opinion rendered to Hon. R. A. Kerr, prosecuting attorney, Troy, Ohio, under date of July 21, 1919, and being Opinion No. 502. In this opinion it was determined that certain of the provisions of the statutes providing for the employment of agricultural agents were obviously inconsistent with certain of the more general provisions of the statutes governing the incurring of obligations and making of appropriations by the county commissioners, and to that extent were held to supersede the more general provisions of other statutes.

It is observed from your communication that during the month of March last, the county commissioners undertook to co-operate with the state in the employment of a farm agent for Muskingum county, but that there are no funds available to meet the county's share of the salary of such agent, and your question is whether the commissioners are authorized to issue bonds to provide funds therefor.

It was held in the previous opinion referred to that the commissioners might make appropriation from available funds in the general fund or contingent fund of the county, for meeting the expense incident to the farm agent work, notwithstanding no special levy had been made therefor.

It is not stated definitely in your communication whether the matter could be taken care of in your county under the rule thus announced in the previous opinion, it only being made to appear that the movement to provide for the farm agent work in your county was instituted last March by the action of the county commissioners, while the actual employment of the agent was to date from July 1; so that it is apparent that funds could not be provided by special levy in the interim, or in fact, as pointed out in your letter, prior to March of 1920.

However, in the event other funds may be drawn upon, as above suggested, the matter may be arranged accordingly; otherwise I am of the opinion there are no means provided for presently meeting the obligation arising by way of current salary of the agent.

While the provisions of section 5660 G. C., requiring the auditor's certificate of available funds, before the incurring of any obligation, may be dispensed with for the reasons pointed out in the previous opinion, a copy of which I am enclosing for your information as to the questions therein discussed, yet the provisions of section 5656 G. C., which must be looked to for authority to issue bonds, in my opinion can not be met in the instant case. That section provides:

"Section 5656.—The trustees of a township, the board of education of a school district and the commissioners of a county, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation such township, district or county is unable to pay at maturity, may borrow money or issue the bonds thereof, so as to change, but not increase the indebtedness in the amounts, for the length of time and at the rate of interest that said trustees, board or commissioners deem proper, not to exceed the rate of six per cent per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

It is noted that the authority for issuing bonds is here limited to necessities arising from an inability to meet obligations on account of the limits of taxation, and it is considered that unless the needs for the salary of the farm agent were taken into consideration in the budget, upon which levies were made for the current year, then it could not be said that the lack of the required funds is in fact due to the limits of taxation, but on the contrary, to the entirely independent fact that no account was taken of the matter which now gives rise to the necessity for funds.

In this respect the provision of section 5656 G. C. is narrower than the provision of section 3916 G. C., relating to the issuance of bonds by municipalities, in that authority is there provided for issuance of bonds "when it appears to the council for the best interests of the corporation," in addition to the case provided in section 5656 G. C.

Having arrived at the conclusion that the salary of the farm agent may be provided for out of funds in the general county fund, or the contingent fund, if such funds are at hand, and unappropriated, but that the issuance of bonds to meet such salary is not authorized where the necessities to be provided for were not taken into consideration at all in the levy for the year in which the expenditure is sought to be made, for the reason that on such state of facts it would not appear that the limits of the particular fund now sought to be made available, it might not be inappropriate to call attention to the discussion of the question as found in an opinion of my predecessor reported at page 1112 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, wherein the conditions entering into a determination of existence of available funds was considered. Without here reciting at length the trend of discussion in said opinion, it may be said that funds which can be applied for the purposes herein questioned, when no special levy and appropriation has been provided for the purpose, must be the proceeds of levies or unexpended balances not already specifically applied to other purposes by the terms of the budget and the previous appropriations.

It is also to be noted that in the opinion referred to, my predecessor took the position that a consideration of the provisions of section 9921-2 G. C., as well as section 5660 requires the conclusion that funds must be found available in the treasury for the purpose before the obligation to co-operate with the state in the employment of a farm agent may be undertaken. This conclusion is rested primarily upon the construction of provisions of said sections as constituting a condition upon which the arrangement with the trustees of the Ohio State University shall be inaugurated, and it is said:

"From the provisions of this section it seems that the raising of not less than $1,000.00 and the assurance that a like amount will be raised for the second year must take place before the project is entered upon."

And in the same connection, the provisions of section 5660 are cited as requiring the certificate of the auditor that the money required for the payment of the obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, before the obligation may be undertaken.

It is, however, found that in a later opinion of my predecessor reported at page 690 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1918 a very similar question was considered, and here it was pointed out that:

> "It is apparent from a consideration of these provisions that the act of the county commissioners which binds the county to co-operate with the Ohio State University in its extension service is that described in section 9921-2, as follows:
> 'To secure this aid from the state, the board of county commissioners of any county shall agree to the employment of an agricultural agent approved by the dean of the college of agriculture of the Ohio State University.'"

And then referring to the requirement of the same section that the county commissioners

> "raise at least one thousand dollars for the support of an agricultural agent for one year, and * * * give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of the Ohio State University that a like sum shall be raised for a second year," * * * the writer of the opinion says that the last provision quoted seems to give to this initial action the effect of binding the county commissioners to make annual appropriations, and is a case of an agreement expressly authorized by statute and involving the expenditure of moneys in a future year or years.

Referring to section 5660 it is said:

> "This being the case, it is difficult to see how section 5660 of the General Code can apply. * * * The latter statute, being inconsistent with the earlier one, must prevail, and to the extent of such inconsistency must be regarded as constituting an exception to the general rule laid down in the earlier law.
> The scope of the exception is such that the county commissioners may, in my opinion, enter into the agreement authorized by section 9921-2 of the General Code, whether they have any money in the treasury which can then be appropriated or not.

So that it is to be noted that the observations of the two opinions referred to are not in all respects entirely in accord, and as said in previous considerations of the question, I am inclined to agree with the observations of the latter opinion of my predecessor, and regard the general purport and policy of the act providing for the employment of farm agents to authorize a more summary procedure than would be proper under the provisions of earlier sections of the statutes relating to appropriations and the incurring of obligations by county commissioners, and in such respect to supersede said earlier statutes.

I am not certain that the provisions for co-operation by the state with a county that shall raise at least a thousand dollars and give assurance that a like sum shall be raised for a second year is to be construed as the essence of the condition for inauguration of the co-operation in the sense that a technical application of the provision for "raising" the first thousand dollars shall be observed.

Since the undertaking of the county to raise the like sum for a second year is accepted under the statute, I am of the opinion that controlling force is not to be given to the technical significance of the phrase "raise at least one thousand dollars for one year."

But where the commissioners enter into the arrangement with the trustees of the college of agriculture, agreeing to the employment of an agent approved by the dean of said college, and satisfying the trustees of their making proper and adequate provision for meeting their share of the salary of the agent, the spirit of the statute is complied with, and the obligation may be made to accrue at a time when the commissioners can provide for meeting same, where such arrangement is adopted by all parties thereto.

I have departed somewhat from the specific question relative to issuance of bonds, which has been answered above, but the further discussion perhaps will clarify to some extent the practical working out of steps which enter into the procedure which may have to be considered in your case.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—DISTRICT DESIRING STATE AID NOT PERMITTED TO USE PART OF TUITION FUND FOR PAYMENT OF TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS.

A school district desiring to be considered for state aid under the provisions of section 7595-1 G. C., is not permitted to use any part of the tuition fund of such district for the payment of transportation of pupils to and from school.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Is it possible for a board of education in which the schools are centralized to pay the persons hauling school children to and from school out of the tuition fund and still receive state aid? If the board only proportions one third of the taxes received to the contingent fund they do not have sufficient to pay the drivers, and as the new law only allows those receiving state aid to give one third to this fund, this board is in a bad way unless they can be allowed to pay the drivers out of the tuition fund and at the same time it is almost impossible for them to carry on their schools without state aid.
> The first resolution centralizing the schools was adopted by the county board on March 15, 1915, but did not take effect for thirty days thereafter.
> My own opinion was that the new law lately passed by our legislature fixes absolutely the only sources for which the tuition fund can be used, and this not coming under the same, this school cannot receive state aid."

Your last paragraph indicates that the question at hand comes under the new law covering the matter of state aid to weak school districts, that act being House bill 406 and commonly called the Freeman act. This act became law on August 18, 1919, and amends sections 7594-1 G. C., 7595-1, 7595-2, 7595-3, 7595-4, 7595-5 and 7730 G. C. You ask if it is possible for a board of education in which the schools are centralized to pay the person hauling school children to and from school out of the tuition fund and still receive state aid.

Section 7595-1 G. C. provides the requirement necessary for a school district to make application for state aid, among which requirements are that it shall place two-thirds of its tax levy in the tuition fund, that it shall pay its teachers the scale of salaries indicated, shall maintain its schools for eight months in each year and then follows sub paragraph 5 of the section, which reads as follows:

> "5. It shall not transfer or cause to be transferred to any other fund, any moneys that may be in the tuition fund, nor shall it expend any moneys that may be in the tuition fund except for the following purposes:
> (a) Payment of salaries of teachers.
> (b) Payment of expenses for attending institute.
> (c) Payment of temporary loans incurred to meet current expenses in anticipation of revenue which would accrue to the tuition fund.
> (d) That part of tuition payable to other school districts which represent the expense of teachers' salaries as computed pursuant to section 7736.
> (e) Salaries of principals or superintendents, or additional salaries paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents. Provided, however, that if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed."

The above items constitute the only purposes for which the tuition fund may be used and there can be no transfers of money from the tuition fund to any other fund if the district desires to come within the class that is entitled to state aid to weak school districts. The matter of transportation of school pupils is not mentioned in the above list and hence the tuition fund could not be used for that purpose in a district which desired to receive state aid under the provisions of section 7595-1, G. C.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that a school district desiring to be considered for state aid under the provisions of section 7595-1 G. C., is not permitted to use any part of the tuition fund of such district for the payment of transportation of pupils to and from school.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

POOR RELIEF—HOW TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY OBTAIN REIMBURSEMENT FOR EXPENSE OF SUCH RELIEF WHERE PERSON TO WHOM RELIEF IS GIVEN HAS LEGAL SETTLEMENT IN ADJOINING COUNTY.

1. Sections 3482 and 3483 G. C. provide the method whereby township trustees giving public relief to a person having a legal settlement in an adjoining county may obtain reimbursement for the expense of such relief.

2. Unless the provisions of said sections, including the provisions as to notice, are strictly complied with, no recovery can be had.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication asking for my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"The township trustees of Wayne township, Fayette county, Ohio, were recently called upon to give assistance to the head of a family, living in their township, suffering with typhoid fever. He and his family had not gained a residence in Fayette, having recently moved to this county from X township in an adjoining county, in which township they had gained a residence before removing to Fayette county. Immediately after it was ascertained that the family was in need, the clerk of Wayne township, under the direction of the trustees, notified the trustees of X township of the facts, with the information that he was not in condition to be moved to the county of his residence, and that they intended to look to them for all charges and expenses incurred. This party was treated by a physician and considerable expense was incurred. The trustees of X township refuse to pay these expenses. Can payment be enforced against the township or county of the residence of this man, and if so how?"

Various sections of the General Code, relating to the subject of poor relief, have recently been amended (H. B. 150, effective August 14, 1919), but it appearing that your query relates to some date prior to June 26, 1919, the law in effect at that time will be taken as the basis of this opinion.

Section 3481 G. C., prior to its recent amendment, read in part as follows:

"When complaint is made to the township trustees * * * that a person therein requires public relief or support, one or more of such officers * * * shall visit the person needing relief, forthwith, to ascertain * * in what township and county in this state he is legally settled."

Section 3482 G. C., prior to amendment, read:

"When it has been so ascertained that a person requiring relief has a legal settlement in some other county of the state, such trustees or officers shall immediately notify the infirmary directors of the county in which the person is found, who, if his health permits, shall immediately remove the person to the infirmary of the county of his legal settlement. If such person refuses to be removed, on the complaint being made by one of the infirmary directors, the probate judge of the county in which the person is found shall issue a warrant for such removal, and the county wherein the legal settlement of the person is, shall pay all expenses of such removal and the necessary charges for relief and in case of death the expense of burial if a written notice is given the infirmary directors thereof within twenty days after such legal settlement has been ascertained."

Section 3483 G. C., prior to amendment, read:

"Upon refusal or failure to pay such expenses, such infirmary directors may be compelled so to do by a civil action against them by the board of infirmary directors of the county from which such person is removed, in the court of common pleas of the county to which such removal is made. If such notice is not given within twenty days after such directors ascertain such person's residence, and within ninety days after such relief has been afforded, the directors of the infirmary where such person belongs shall not be liable for charges or expenditures accruing prior to such notice."

It will be noticed that the sections just quoted speak of "infirmary directors," the legislature having omitted to make said sections conform to the change wrought on January 1, 1913, when all boards of infirmary directors were abolished and their powers were transferred to county commissioners. 102 O. L. 433.

Speaking of such change, the Attorney-General in 1913 observed (1913 Atty. Gen. Annual Report, Vol. II, p. 1078):

> "These statutes present the difficulty of not having been conformed to the law abolishing infirmary directors. There should be no difficulty, however, in reading the words 'county commissioners' where words 'infirmary directors' now stand."

Section 3484 G. C. also sets forth the steps to be taken for the removal of indigent persons to their own counties. This section, however, applies only to the trustees of a township in a county in the state in which there is no county infirmary." According to my information, Fayette county has a county infirmary.

Your statement of facts says that the person receiving the relief had, at the time the same was furnished, no legal settlement in Fayette county, but did have at such time a legal settlement in X township, in an adjoining county. This being true, it would follow, by virtue of the provisions of section 3479 G. C., that such person had also, at the time he received the relief, a legal settlement in said adjoining county.

It thus appears that sections 3482 and 3483 G. C. hereinabove quoted, were the sections available to the trustees furnishing the relief mentioned in your letter, in case they intended to secure reimbursement for the expense of such relief. It would seem from your statement of facts, however, that the provisions of said sections were not complied with in this, that the county commissioners of Fayette county (being the legal successors of the "infirmary directors," mentioned in sections 3482 and 3483 G. C.) were not notified of the necessitous condition of the person in question. On the contrary, your statement shows that the only notice given was a notice to the trustees of X township in the adjoining county. Such a notice was not provided for by any statute and could not, in my judgment, be regarded as a legal substitute for the notice required to be given the county commissioners, as successors of the infirmary directors.

Under former statutes, now repealed, an action might be maintained by one township against another for expenses incurred in furnishing relief to a pauper having a legal settlement in the latter township. Construing such a statute, our Supreme Court, in the case of Trustees of Millcreek vs. Trustees of Miami, 10 Ohio Rep. 375-376, said:

> "* * * before one township can recover of another for expenses incurred in support of one of its paupers, the township seeking to recover must have strictly complied with the requisitions of the law."

Referring to your letter, I advise you that under the principle just stated the trustees of Wayne township, Fayette county, have no power to enforce payment of the bill in question, as against either the township trustees of X township, or the county commissioners of the adjoining county, the fact being, as I understand your letter, that the county commissioners of said adjoining county were not given written notice of the expense within twenty days after the legal settlement of the person in question was ascertained, as required by section 3482 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—COUNTY TREASURER—COUNTY AUDITOR—INTEREST AND PENALTY CHARGES FOR TAXES COLLECTED—NO AUTHORITY TO REMIT—LIABILITY—INTEREST AND PENALTY ON TAXES ERRONEOUSLY MADE—HOW CORRECTED.

Under original section 5743 General Code prior to its repeal, 107 O. L. 740, it was the duty of the county auditor, on the presentation of a receipt for taxes actually collected but not credited on the duplicate, to proceed to collect from the treasurer who gave the receipt the penalty and interest as well as the simple taxes for which the receipt was given. The receipt itself operated as a discharge of the taxpayer and of the collecting treasurer, and the liability was imposed by law upon the treasurer who gave the receipt. The auditor has no authority to remit the interest and penalty and his action in attempting to do so is of no legal effect. The auditor would be liable as for neglect of duty in failing to enforce such penal provision, but upon no other theory.

Under the corresponding section of the act referred to, therein numbered 5726, a corresponding liability still rests upon the treasurer who made the collection, but it is limited to his common law liability for the taxes actually received by him and not accounted for. There is therefore no charge for interest and penalty, so that the question of the auditor's right to "remit" such interest and penalty does not arise.

In case a collecting treasurer fails to credit a payment of the first half of the taxes on real estate actually made, whereby a penalty is entered on the duplicate as for non-payment of such tax, there is no statutory method of relieving the taxpayer from such charge. The charge itself, however, is a cloud on the title to real estate erroneously and unlawfully created and capable of being relieved against in a court of equity. Under these circumstances, the statutes authorizing corrections of the tax duplicate should be liberally construed to permit the correction of the duplicate so as to make it conform to the facts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date requesting the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "We would like your legal construction of section 5743, General Code, as it stood prior to its repeal, (107 O. L. 740), and its practical re-enactment as section 5726, (107 O. L. 740), as to the interest and penalty chargeable to the treasurer who failed to mark taxes "Paid," that were paid.
> Question 1. Was the auditor under the old law, or the auditor under said section as it was re-enacted, legally permitted to remit the interest and penalty thereon, and what is the auditor's responsibility if he does remit same?
> Question 2. In an instance where a person paid the tax and the treasurer failed to mark same paid at the December collection and the auditor assessed a penalty against said apparent delinquency because of the treasurer's failure to credit the payment and the taxpayer presents his receipts, showing that said taxes had been paid and the treasurer refuses to accept same, how is the taxpayer to be relieved of said charge of interest and penalty so erroneously made against him?"

Section 5743 G. C. prior to its repeal provided as follows:
