> "When any tract of land or town lot is returned delinquent for the non-payment of taxes and placed on the duplicate of the succeeding year, and the owner or person, liable to pay taxes therefor, produces the receipt of the treasurer for such taxes of the preceding year, the county auditor or treasurer shall not make a deduction from the duplicate of such tax, interest, or penalty, but it shall be chargeable to the treasurer, as if such receipt had not been produced. The treasurer shall receive such receipt in discharge of the tax for the year that is returned delinquent, with the interest and penalty; and the auditor of the county shall credit such treasurer with the amount, and shall forthwith collect such tax, interest, or penalty from the treasurer who gave such receipt. The prosecuting attorney shall attend to any such suit so commenced by the auditor."

Under this section the answer to your first question is clear. The auditor was without authority to remit the interest and penalty, and it was his mandatory duty to collect the interest and penalty as well as the tax from the treasurer who gave the erroneous receipt. His attempted remission would be a mere nullity. The auditor would lay himself open to no direct pecuniary responsibility for attempting to make such a remission, as his act would not be binding upon himself nor upon his successor in office. Should any auditor neglect to perform his duty in this respect he would be guilty of non-feasance only and subject to such penalties as might be visited upon him for such non-feasance. Possibly limitations would run against the action of which the old section speaks. This question is not free from doubt, as the amount when collected is apportionable to the state and other treasuries in the same manner as the original tax itself. Only in the event that it should be held that the running of limitations against the cause of action possessed by the auditor under this section would make it impossible for the treasurer's liability to be enforced, would any question arise as to the pecuniary liability of the auditor. If liable at all he would be liable on the theory of neglect of duty; that is, he would be accountable as a trustee for the public, who by his neglect has caused the public to suffer a loss.

The corresponding section of the act found in 107 Ohio Laws, 740, and therein numbered section 5726, is as follows:

> "When any tract of land, city or town lot is returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes or assessments, and placed on the duplicate of the succeeding year, the owner or person liable to pay taxes therefor produces the receipt of the treasurer for such taxes and assessments of the preceding year, the county auditor or treasurer shall not make the deduction from the duplicate, of such taxes, assessments, penalty and interest but it shall be chargeable to the treasurer as if such receipt had not been produced. The treasurer shall receive such receipt in discharge of the tax or assessment for the year it is returned delinquent, with the penalty and interest and the auditor of the county shall credit such treasurer with the amount and shall forthwith collect such taxes."

Striking changes are made in this section as compared with the old section. The latter provided that the auditor should "forthwith collect such tax, interest or penalty from the treasurer who gave such receipt;" the new section merely says that the auditor "shall forthwith collect such taxes." Two changes are made:

> (1) It is no longer expressly required that the collection shall be made from the treasurer;

(2) It is no longer expressly required that the collection that is made shall include the interest and penalty.

The significance of these changes will be dealt with in their order.

In the first place, both section 5743 and section 5726 provide that the taxes, penalty and interest "shall be chargeable to the treasurer as if such receipt had not been produced." That is to say, the delinquent land tax is charged on the duplicate as a charge against the treasurer for which he must settle with the auditor. Inasmuch as it is further provided in both the sections that the treasurer shall receive the receipt in discharge of the tax or assessment with the penalty and interest, it is clear that the treasurer is without authority to collect the tax from anybody. This last provision makes it clear also that the auditor cannot collect the tax from the taxpayer, as his liability for the tax, penalty and interest is discharged by the production of the receipt. Without the last provision of each of the sections, therefore, it would follow that the treasurer charged with the collection of the delinquent tax by the duplicate in his office would be liable for the taxes, assessments, penalty and interest erroneously returned delinquent and charged for collection. The old section, however, went on to provide that the auditor should collect the taxes, interest and penalty, not necessarily from the treasurer whose duty it would be to settle on the duplicate on which the mistake occurred, but from the treasurer who gave the receipt. There might have been a change in the treasurer's office between the giving of the receipt and the return of the tract as delinquent and the placing of it on the duplicate for the succeeding year. The real offender would, of course, be the treasurer who gave the receipt without giving proper credit on the tax list. Such treasurer would be the one to be pursued by the auditor under the original section.

As the section stands after its amendment, however, it provides that the taxes, assessments, penalty and interest shall be chargeable to the treasurer as if the receipt had not been produced; that is to say, the treasurer having the duplicate in his possession as a basis of a semi-annual settlement with the auditor is charged with the items appearing on the duplicate and must settle for them. The new section then goes on to provide that the auditor shall collect the tax. In the absence of the provision found in the former section making it the duty of the auditor to collect the tax from the treasurer who gave the receipt, it might be argued that the collection is to be made from the treasurer charged with the collection of the taxes erroneously carried on the duplicate. This conclusion, however, cannot be reached because the new section, as well as the old, specifically provides that "the auditor of the county shall credit such treasurer (i. e., the treasurer whose duty it is to receive the receipt in discharge of the taxes, penalty, etc.) with the amount." This discharges the collecting treasurer.

We have it, then, that either the new section, in so far as it provides that the auditor shall proceed to collect the tax, is entirely meaningless because of its omission to provide that such collection shall be made from the treasurer who gave the receipt, or that, despite the textual amendment which has been made, the section still means substantially what it formerly meant in this respect.

In choosing between these conclusions we must deal with certain presumptions that the law affords in aid of the interpretation of statutes. One of them is that the legislature is not presumed to have done a vain thing, and the other is that a change in language is supposed to be actuated by an intent to change the substance of the meaning of the amended law.

Of these two presumptions the former would seem to be the stronger one, and if there were no other point to be considered, this fact alone should dictate, it would seem, the choice between the two possible constructions.

However, there is another point which must be considered here, lying in the fact that the new section authorizes the collection of "such taxes" only, instead of "the tax, interest or penalty" as was authorized by the former section. There can be no doubt whatever that the legislature did intend to change the law on the subject of what should be collected. This is clear because the formula "taxes, assessments, interest and penalty" is used repeatedly in the amended section in the earlier parts thereof, so that when the form of expression is changed to "taxes" only it is impossible to escape the conclusion that the legislature did not intend that term to include the other things that had previously been mentioned.

It is therefore the opinion of this department that the only thing which can be "collected" from anybody by the auditor is the simple taxes. The policy of the section, it may be observed here by way of parenthetical remark, would dictate also the recovery of the assessments, and this may possibly be its meaning in spite of the point last alluded to; but at any rate no warrant is found in the section as it at present exists for the recovery of any penalty or interest from anybody by proceedings initiated by the county auditor.

The point just settled establishes the fact that a real change in the meaning of the last clause of the section has been made. Inasmuch as this fact appears, the intent to make such change may be assigned as the reason for the amendment of the text, so that it would not be a violent thing to hold that collection should still be made from the person from whom it was required to be made by the former section.

From another point of view it is manifest that the imposition of the duty to collect upon the auditor, without designation of the person from whom collection should be made, would, without more, point out the treasurer who gave the receipt as the person from whom the collection should be made. A statutory direction to an officer to collect something can mean nothing except that the collection shall be made from such person as would according to the principles of the common law be liable therefor. What then has happened in the transaction with which the section deals?

One treasurer charged with the collection of a certain sum of money as simple taxes (and assessments), but charged with no penalty or interest, has actually collected such taxes without marking them "paid" on the duplicate, whereby penalties are added, etc. As a necessary consequence of such an omission of duty on his part the treasurer is not required to settle with the county auditor or his successor for this tax which is actually collected but which is shown by the record not to have been collected. Therefore, the money which was actually collected but not accounted for remains in his pocket. Upon the plainest principles of law such collecting treasurer is therefore liable to the public as for money had and received for the use of the public.

Now by reason of the formal charges on the duplicate the treasurer who receives the delinquent duplicate stands charged, in the first instance, with the collection of the tax which has actually been collected, and the taxpayer who has actually paid it stands charged with its payment. But the section provides a method whereby what might be termed the record charges against these two persons may be expunged. Such extinction of the record charge leaves only the common law liability in existence.

But when any person is liable to the public for money had and received legislation is required in order to point out the particular agent or officer of the public who shall enforce such liability. I need do no more than call to the attention of the bureau the statutes authorizing the law officers of a county or municipality to sue and collect moneys due the public, and to the act under which the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices itself operates, as evidence of the necessity of such legislation. This necessity is supplied in the present case by the provision that the auditor shall make the collection.

Still another observation may not be out of place here. The liability imposed by the former statute was not that for money had and received; it was rather in the nature of a penalty, in that the county treasurer who made the collection was to account for and pay over not only what he actually received but also a penalty thereon, which represented a sum of money which he did not receive. As previously stated, this feature of the former law is done away with and the liability of the collecting treasurer is now limited to accounting for what he actually received. It would seem that interest at the legal rate should be collected, but as no opinion is invited on this point none is expressed.

Coming now to your specific question, it is answered by the statement that the county auditor is not authorized to "remit" the interest and penalty as a duplicate charge against the treasurer who gave the receipt. At the same time he is not authorized to collect any interest and penalty from such treasurer. In point of fact, no interest and penalty is due; it is charged off the books under the express authority of the statute as a liability of the collecting treasurer. Therefore, the question which you submit does not even arise, and when the collecting treasurer has been properly credited with the amount of the taxes, interest and penalty charged on his duplicate in accordance with the presentation of the receipt for the payment of the tax, no charge for interest and penalty exists and there is nothing to remit.

Your second question is not covered by the sections in question, nor by any other express provision of law. You ask how the taxpayer is to be relieved of the charge of interest and penalty erroneously made against him in the case concerning which you inquire. Such charge constitutes an apparent cloud upon his title. Undoubtedly a court of equity would, under the circumstances, entertain jurisdiction of a case to enjoin any proceedings to collect the tax, interest and penalty when the taxes had been paid, and to remove the cloud from the title. The cloud could only be removed from the title in theory by expunging the record; that is to say, under the old chancery practice the decree of the court would have been that the county auditor should correct the tax list and duplicate by striking out the erroneous charge. What these county officers could be compelled to do by process of court, it would seem that they may lawfully do though no statute directly authorizes it. Section 2588 et seq. G. C. authorizes the correction of clerical errors on the tax list and duplicate. These sections, which will not be quoted, may not be quite broad enough to include the correction of an error of this sort. But upon the general principles which have just been mentioned it is believed that the taxpayer may be relieved of the cloud upon the title to his land without the sanction of any express statute and in accordance with the almost certain result of any steps that he might take to protect his interest.

In this connection it may be observed that the rule just stated would be the rule to be applied in the cases covered by what is now section 5726 G. C. if that section had not been enacted. The purpose of the section was, as previously pointed out, to penalize the treasurer for the mistake by charging him with the interest and penalty, and to relieve the taxpayer directly by making his receipt operate as a discharge of the record charge against his property.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT OF HARRY C. HOLBROOK, ARCHITECT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS ON STATE GAME PROPAGATION FARM NEAR WELLINGTON, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent communication transmitting, for the approval of this department, employment contract (in triplicate) between your department and Mr. Harry C. Holbrook. It is noted that this agreement provides for the employment of Mr. Holbrook as architect in the construction of suitable buildings on the state game propagation farm near Wellington, Ohio.

Sections 1433 and 1438 G. C. clothe the secretary of agriculture with authority to provide for game propagation. The latter section, relating to the authority of such secretary, in part provides:

> "and, so far as funds are provided therefor, shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties."

Section 1433 G. C., relating to the use and disposition of hunters' license fees, provides that:

> "At least fifty per cent of the money arising from all such licenses shall be expended by the secretary for the purchase and propagation of game birds and game animals to be used in re-stocking sections where a scarcity of such birds and game animals exist, for establishing and purchasing and otherwise acquiring title to land for game preserves, * * *."

These sections, in connection with others of the fish and game laws, contain ample authority for the establishment of game propagation farms "so far as funds are provided therefor," as provided in section 1438 (supra). That such funds are provided for this purpose is evidenced by the certificate of the auditor of state, herewith transmitted.

Consideration of the form and matter of the agreement and the laws pertinent thereto convince this department that the agreement is in conformity to law and the same is therefore hereby approved.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

HUGHES HEALTH ACT—HOUSE BILL NO. 211, 108 O. L., 236—SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 610, DATED SEPTEMBER 9, 1919—COUNTY BUDGET COMMISSION CANNOT FIX AMOUNT TO BE SEGREGATED FROM GENERAL REVENUES FOR DISTRICT HEALTH PURPOSES—AMOUNT TO BE RETAINED FROM LOCAL DISTRIBUTION—LOCAL LEVIES FOR GENERAL HEALTH PURPOSES WITHIN TEN MILL LIMITATION OF SMITH ONE PER CENT LAW.

Supplementary to Opinion No. 610, the budget commission of a county has nothing whatever to do with the fixing of the amount to be segregated from general revenues for district health purposes. Such amount is to be retained from local distribution produced by levies made through the agency of the budget commission, but is itself not the subject of direct levy of taxes.

Except as provided in section 5649-4 G. C., all local levies for general health purposes are within the ten mill limitation of the Smith one per cent law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging the receipt of your letter of October 1, beg to enclose herewith a copy of the opinion of this department addressed to Hon. John L. Cable, prosecuting attorney, Lima, Ohio, under date of September 9, 1919, which contains a direct answer to your third question and furnishes a principle by which all your other questions may be answered.

As you state them, these questions which relate to the interpretation of House bill No. 211 are as follows:

(1) Can a levy be made at this time for the purposes of said health board?

(2) Has the budget commission any control over the amount to be levied?

(3) Would the county auditor be justified in retaining at each semi-annual distribution from the funds of each political subdivision a sufficient amount to pay its proportionment even though no specific levy had been made for same in that subdivision?

(4) Is there any provision of law that would place a levy for the general health purposes outside of the ten mill limitation?"

The questions themselves are based on the fact that the request of the county health board was not filed with the budget commission until after it had completed its work in the adjustment of tax rates.

In the enclosed opinion this department held, as stated, that it is the duty of the county auditor to retain at each semi-annual distribution from the funds of each political subdivision in a county health district a sufficient amount to pay its apportionment, even though no specific levy has been made to meet such apportionment in that subdivision, provided that a distribution is to be made to the subdivision of moneys for general revenue purposes. This answers your third question. The whole opinion was based upon the premise, also stated therein, that the health bill does not in anywise disturb the machinery for levying taxes by local subdivisions, and it was pointed out that the county health board, as such, is not a levying body. These points dispose in part of your other questions. Thus, they answer fully your fourth question by leading to the result that the levies for general health purposes (as distinguished from the emergency health levies specifically exempted by section 5649-4 of the General Code from the limitations with which that act deals) are subject to all the limitations of the Smith one per cent law.

It also answers in a way your first and second questions by the statement that the action of the district health board is not intended to ripen into a technical tax levy at all.

In fact, the budget commission has nothing whatever to do with the raising of money for the purposes of a general health district, as such, except with respect to its control over the levies for health and general revenue purposes by the constituent townships and municipalities of the district. The revision of the budget of the district health board under section 25 of the bill is to be made by the district advisory council. This consists of the chairman of the trustees of each township and the mayor of each municipality in the district (see section 3). A budget that is approved by the district advisory council is certified directly to the county auditor, without any action whatsoever on the part of the budget commission. The budget filed with the county auditor after the budget commission had completed its work, as stated by you, therefore is properly filed, and it is not of any significance that the budget commission has so completed its work.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—VALIDITY OF PAYMENTS MADE BY BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS TO SURVIVORS ON JOINT DEPOSITS OR JOINT STOCK DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS—LIABILITY FOR SAID TAX.

Section 5348-2 of the new inheritance tax law does not affect the validity of payments made by building and loan associations to survivors on joint deposits or joint stock deposit accounts; but if the tax commission's consent to the payment is not obtained and a sufficient amount is not retained to pay the inheritance tax, the building and loan association is liable for the tax that should have been so retained.

What, if any, defenses are available to building and loan associations as against an action to enforce such liability, not decided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. FRANK F. MCGUIRE, Inspector, Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date requesting the opinion of this department "as to the status of stockholders in building and loan associations on joint and survivorship accounts" and also as to the duties and liabilities of building and loan associations in so far as they may be affected by the inheritance tax law which became effective June 5, 1919.

In this connection you refer to "the provisions of the building and loan laws relating to joint accounts, i. e., G. C. 9648," and you ask "to what extent the powers therein granted are restricted by the new law."

Section 9648 G. C. provides in part that:

> "When such deposits or stock deposits are made to the joint account of two or more persons, whether adults or minors, with a joint order to the corporation that such deposits or any part thereof are to be payable on the order of any one or more of such joint depositors, and to continue to be so payable notwithstanding the death or incapacity of one or more of the persons making them, such account shall be payable to any one or more of such survivors or survivor or order notwithstanding such death or incapacity. No recovery shall be had against such corporation for amounts so paid and charged to such account."

The inheritance tax law contains the following provision:

> "Section 5348-2.—No corporation organized or existing under the laws of this state, shall transfer on its books or issue a new certificate for any share or shares of its capital stock belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent or in trust for a decedent, or belonging to or standing in the joint names of a decedent and one or more persons, without the written consent of the tax commission of Ohio. No safe deposit company, trust company, corporation, bank or other institution, person or persons, having in possession or in control or custody, in whole or in part, securities, deposits, assets or property belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent, or belonging to or standing in the joint names of a decedent and one or more persons, including the shares of the capital stock of, or other interest in, such safe deposit company, trust company, corporation, bank or other institution, shall deliver or transfer the same to any person whatsoever whether in a representative capacity or not, or to the survivor or survivors when held in the joint names of a decedent and one or more persons, without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any taxes or interest which would thereafter be assessed thereon under this subdivision of this chapter, and unless notice of the time and place of such delivery or transfer be served upon the tax commission of Ohio and the county auditor at least ten days prior to such delivery or transfer; but the tax commission of Ohio may consent in writing to such delivery or transfer, and such consent shall relieve said safe deposit company, trust company, corporation, bank or other institution, person or persons, from the obligation to give such notice or to retain such portion. The tax commission or the county auditor, personally or by representatives, may examine such securities, deposits or other assets at the time of such delivery or otherwise. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall render such safe deposit company, trust company, corporation, bank or other institution, person or persons, liable for the amount of the taxes and interest due under this subdivision of this chapter on the succession to such securities, deposits, assets or property. Such liability may be enforced by action brought by the county treasurer in the name of the state in any court of competent jurisdiction."

The first sentence of section 5348-2 G. C. has no application to the question submitted by you, because it relates to transfer of shares of stock or the issuance of new shares.

Section 9648 G. C. relates to the payment of deposits or stock deposits. Its provision is that joint account deposits or stock deposits shall "continue to be so payable (on the order of any one or more of such joint depositors) notwithstanding the death or incapacity of one or more of the persons making them;" and it is further provided that "such account shall be payable to any one or more of such survivors or survivor or order notwithstanding such death or incapacity." It is further provided that: "No recovery shall be had against such corporation for amounts so paid and charged to such account."

So far from repealing or limiting the general effect of these provisions, section 5348-2 G. C. assumes that joint accounts payable to the survivor or his order are legal. In fact section 5348-2 must be read in connection with paragraph 5 of section 5332. This is the section which imposes the inheritance tax upon various forms of what are called "successions" and it is as follows:

"Section 5332.—* * *

5. Whenever property is held by two or more persons jointly, so that upon the death of one of them the survivor or survivors have a right to to the immediate ownership or possession and enjoyment of the whole property, the accrual of such right by the death of one of them shall be deemed a succession taxable under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter in the same manner as if the enhanced value of the whole property belonged absolutely to the deceased person, and had been by him bequeathed to the survivor or survivors by will. * * *."

Under section 9648 G. C., upon the death of one of the joint depositors "the survivor or survivors" would "have a right to the immediate ownership or possession and enjoyment of the whole property" (deposit). In other words, section 9648 G. C. expressly authorizes joint deposits payable to the survivor, and prevents the ownership of an undivided half interest in the fund from vesting in the personal representatives of the decedent. That is to say, the section establishes a true joint ownership with the incident or survicorship in the whole. And the enhancement of value thus accruing to the survivor or survivors is taxed as a "succession" by the inheritance tax law, not on the theory that it is illegal or to be penalized—because the inheritance tax law is not enacted on that theory at all—but merely as an excise tax upon the enjoyment of a privilege which is conceded to be lawful and consistent with public policy.

There is, therefore, nothing fundamentally inconsistent between the law allowing joint accounts and the law taxing the accrual of additional rights of survivors by the death of one of the joint depositors. The one makes such accrual lawful; the other taxes it.

Section 5348-2 G. C. is merely a means of collecting the tax in such cases. It imposes no absolute limitation on the right of the building and loan association to act under section 9648 G. C. It merely provides that if the institution permits the survivor to draw out the joint account without retaining a sufficient sum to pay the tax payable on account of such joint account, (not the whole tax on the general estate of the decedent) the institution shall lay itself liable to a penalty recoverable in a civil action brought by the county treasurer, the penalty being the amount of the taxes due on account of the "succession" arising by virtue of the accrual of such right of survivorship.

Possibly, in an action to recover such amount, good faith and want of knowledge of the fact of death would be matters of defense. No opinion is expressed on this point.

It is at least clear that if a building and loan association has notice of the death of one of two or more joint depositors, however informally such notice may have been acquired, and with such notice pays out the entire deposit to the survivor or survivors, without the consent of the tax commission and without retaining a sufficient sum to pay the taxes, it would thereby render itself liable for such taxes as might be due, considering the amount of the deposit and its enhancement in value to the survivor and the relationship of the survivor to the decedent, and in an action to recover such taxes it would be without any defense as against the suit of the county treasurer.

This liability does not in anywise impair the validity of the payment made by the building and loan association. Section 5348-2 G. C. contains a prohibition, to be sure, but it also stipulates exactly what shall be the consequences of violation of this prohibition. Therefore, the second sentence of the section is not to be taken as an implied amendment of section 9648 G. C., making invalid, as between the parties, what may have been done under the latter section when one of the joint depositors has died, but merely as a regulation, designed as it is to insure the collection of the public revenues.

In conclusion then, it is the opinion of this department that a payment made to a survivor of two or more joint depositors by a building and loan association is perfectly valid as between the association, the payee and the personal representatives of the survivor—indeed, as among all private parties concerned, by virtue of section 9648 G. C.; and that if the entire amount of the deposit is paid out on the order of the survivor or survivors, without the consent of the tax commission and without the retention of a sufficient amount to pay the taxes due on account of the succession, the only result will be to render the building and loan association liable for the amount of taxes that should have been paid on that behalf, which liability can be enforced only in an action brought by the county treasurer in the name of the state. Whether in such an action good faith and want of knowledge of the death of the decedent would be a defense to the building and loan association is a question which is suggested but not decided at this time. It follows that what you describe as "the status of stockholders in building and loan associations on joint and survivorship accounts" is not affected at all by the inheritance tax law; that the powers granted in section 9648 G. C. are not in anywise restricted as powers by that law; but that building and loan associations have certain duties to perform in connection with the inheritance tax law, failure to discharge which will subject them to liabilities thereunder.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COUNCIL MAY PROVIDE FUNDS TO PERSONS FURNISHING EVIDENCE OF LOCAL OPTION VIOLATIONS FROM FINES AND FORFEITED RECOGNIZANCES IN SUCH CASES—MARSHAL OF VILLAGE NOT ENTITLED TO RECEIVE EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SUCH SERVICES.

1. It is competent for the council of a municipal corporation to provide for the payment of a stipulated portion of funds arising from fines and forfeited recognizances in prosecutions under the local option laws to persons furnishing evidence of the violation of such laws in pursuance of section 13247.

2. The marshal of such village, however, being charged by law with the enforcement of the penal statutes of the state within his jurisdiction and the apprehension and bringing to justice of violators thereof, is not entitled to receive rewards or compensation for services incident to his office on the ground of public policy, and is disqualified from receiving compensation from such fines and forfeitures for furnishing evidence of such violations of the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my opinion as follows:

"We are calling your attention to section 13247 of the General Code and to court decision in the case of Powell vs. Ashville, 11 O. N. P. (n. s.) 369.

Statement of Facts

The council of a village passes an ordinance setting aside forty per cent of fines and forfeitures from collections for violation of local option laws to pay persons furnishing evidence resulting in conviction for violation of local option laws. Such moneys are paid out to persons merely for furnishing evidence, among others the marshal of the village.

1. Is there any authority of law for council to provide a certain portion of such fines and forfeitures to be paid persons promiscuously for furnishing evidence?

2. If such be legal could the village marshal legally be paid portion of such money in addition to his compensation for furnishing evidence?"

Section 13247, to which you refer, is as follows:

"Fines and forfeited bonds collected under this subdivision of this chapter, except as provided in section thirteen thousand two hundred and thirty-one, if enforced in the county court, shall be paid into the county treasury, and if enforced in municipal courts, shall be paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation in which the cause was tried. Such funds paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation shall be applied as the council thereof may direct."

The case of Powell vs. Ashville, 11 O. N. P. (n. s.) 369, to which you refer, involved an attack on an ordinance of the village of Ashville, which provided for payments of a percentage of fines and forfeited bonds coming into the treasury in pursuance of local option statutes, for the services of detectives, secret service officers and attorneys in securing evidence and making prosecutions for the violation of the local option laws. The attack upon the ordinance was not sustained by the court, and it was held that it is within the discretion of council of the village to provide that a percentage of all fines and forfeited bonds which may be paid into the village treasury by violators of the local option statutes shall be applied for the purposes above indicated. It was contended that the ordinance in question was illegal and void and in contravention of the just public policy of the state of Ohio, but the court said:

"Under section 13247 of the General Code said council is authorized, if it so desired, to expend the whole of the fines collected by said village under said prosecutions, for services of detectives and attorneys, and the plaintiff as a taxpayer could not complain."

It was further said:

"It is presumed that the legislature of this state declares the policy of the state through its enactments."

It has further been said in Gilmore vs. Lewis, 12 Ohio, 281, that promises of reward should be regarded with a favorable eye, so long as the administration of criminal justice is necessary to secure the peace and safety of society and are frequently the only hope of remuneration for a meritorious service rendered to the commonwealth.

It was the obvious policy of the statute to place it within the power of the council of municipal corporations to apply the funds, or such part thereof as they may determine, arising from fines and forfeited bonds under the local option laws, to such purposes as that body shall determine, and it cannot be said that its application in the direction of securing a more vigilant enforcement of the law, is a misapplication of such funds, and your first question is, therefore, answered in the affirmative.

Your second question, however, involves an entirely different consideration.

It is the duty of the village marshal, as of other police officers generally, to enforce the penal laws, and public policy forbids that such officer shall be permitted to demand or receive for the performance of his purely legal duty any fee or reward other than that established or allowed by law as compensation for his official action, otherwise the tendency would be to foster delinquency in the performance of the duty, with the hope of a reward or compensation being offered. By statute the marshal is made the conservator of the peace and required to arrest all disorderly persons in the corporations and pursue and arrest persons fleeing from justice into any part of the state, etc.

Section 4386 is as follows:

"He shall suppress all riots, disturbances and breaches of the peace and to that end may call upon the citizens to aid him. He shall arrest all disorderly persons in the corporation and pursue and arrest any person fleeing from justice in any part of the state. He shall arrest any person in the act of committing any offense against the laws of the state or the ordinances of the corporation, and forthwith bring such person before the mayor or other competent authority for examination or trial and he shall receive and execute any proper authority for the arrest and detention of criminals fleeing or escaping from other places or states."

In this respect the village marshal is a police officer with similar functions and duties to those of sheriffs and constables.

In Somerset Bank vs. Edmund, 76 O. S., 396, it was said:

"1. Public policy and sound morals alike forbid that a public officer should demand or receive for services performed by him in the discharge of official duty, any other or further remuneration or reward than that prescribed and allowed by law.

2. The office of constable is not an office created for the private emolument of the holder. Every constable is a conservator of the peace, and it is his duty, within his jurisdiction, 'to apprehend and bring to justice all felons and disturbers and violators of the criminal laws of the state,' without other reward or compensation therefor than such as is fixed and allowed by law.

3. A constable who, within his jurisdiction, arrests a person who has committed a felony, will, in making the arrest, be presumed and held to act in his official capacity, whether such arrest be made by him under, or without a warrant. And the law will not permit him to claim that an arrest made pursuant to official duty, was made by him in his individual capacity as a private citizen."

Such has been the holding since the early case of Gilmore vs. Lewis, 12 Ohio 281, where it is said, after approving the practice of rewarding the vigilance of private citizens in the ferreting out of crime and bringing the offenders to public justice:

"But public officers, on whom is cast this duty, from whom it requires exertion, and to whom it affords adequate compensation, occupy different ground. * * * A promise to pay them extra compensation is absolutely void, under the statutes of Ohio. Such promise could not be enforced at common law, being against sound policy, and, quasi, extortion. English judges have declared that such claims by them are novel in courts of justice, and that actions founded on such promises are scandalous and shameful."

In Brown vs. Commissioners, 2 O. C. C., 381, it was said:

"It is contrary to public policy and the law of this state, and generally of other states, that an officer be paid a reward for the performance of an act which his duty as such officer requires him to perform."

While the cases reviewed in the main involve the payment of rewards to officers for making arrests, and your inquiry in the main relates to the furnishing of evidence, yet I am inclined to think, it being the duty of the officer as a conservator of the peace to ferret out and apprehend persons guilty of violations of penal laws, that the furnishing of such evidence as he may acquire in connection therewith is but incident to his official duty and in line with what was said by the court in the case of Somerset Bank vs. Edmund, supra, where the fact that the arrest was made without warrant and in the alleged private capacity of the constable was disposed of by the observation that his general authority as a peace officer was the only authority required to justify the arrests made.

Your second question is, therefore, answered in the negative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

STATE INSPECTOR OF PLUMBING—PREMIUM ON SURETY BOND FOR SAID OFFICIAL INDIVIDUAL OBLIGATION.

There being no general or special statutory provision which may be invoked as authority for payment out of public funds, of premiums on a surety bond given by the state inspector of plumbing, it follows that such premiums as are incurred in the giving of the statutory bond are the individual obligation of the official giving the bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. ALLEN W. FREEMAN, Commissioner, State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent communication relative to the requirement for an official bond given by the state inspector of plumbing, and inquiring whether the premium for a surety bond should be paid out of public funds appropriated to the state department of health.

It is noted that the statute requiring such bond is as follows:

> "Section 1261-7.—Within ten days after his appointment the said inspector shall give a bond payable to the state of Ohio, for the faithful performance of his duties, in the sum of five thousand dollars. Said bond when approved by the Attorney-General shall be deposited with the secretary of state and kept in his office."

While this and numerous similar statutes impose requirements for official bonds to be given by incumbents of state offices and positions, it is noteworthy that there is no provision, either general or special, which might be invoked as authority for payment out of the public funds, of premiums on the surety bond of the state inspector of plumbing; and in accordance with the general practice, where surety bonds are provided by officials the premium charges incurred are to be treated as the individual obligation of the official required to provide the bond.

The section above quoted provides that "said inspector shall give a bond," and you are advised that if in the "giving" of such bond to meet the approval provided for in the statute, expense by way of premiums is entailed, the same must be regarded as the obligation of the official incurring same in the absence of authorization for charging it against the public funds.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—ACCRUED PRIOR TO JUNE 5, 1919—PROCEEDINGS FOR COLLECTION COMMENCED AFTER SAID DATE—WHAT STATUTES GOVERN.

Where a collateral inheritance tax accrued prior to June 5, 1919, proceedings for its assessment and collection, though not commenced until after that date, are governed by the statutes as they were in force before that date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. W. J. BISSMAN, Probate Judge, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Replying to your letter of September 22, in which you state that a decedent died December 16, 1905, giving to his wife a life interest in all his property and after her death the property to be divided into three parts and distributed equally between a church, a Sunday school and a distant relative; and in which you further state that the wife died in May, 1919, and that the property has been sold and is now ready for distribution, beg to advise that all proceedings for the settlement of the inheritance taxes, if any, on account of this estate should be had under the old law.

I call your attention to the schedule section of the new law, therein numbered section 4, which provides in part that:

> "This act shall not affect * * * the right to collect any such tax" (collateral inheritance taxes under the original sections hereby amended) "which has accrued prior to the approval of this act, nor the rights or duties of any officer with respect to the assessment and collection of such collateral inheritance taxes; * * *."

This provision of itself answers your question, and shows that not only are the taxes to be imposed according to the rates, etc., fixed by the old law, but that the machinery of collecting the tax is to be that provided by the repealed sections.

You also inquire from what date the tax, if any, should be figured and what discount should be allowed. I find it impossible to answer these questions without more definite information as to the provisions of the will, as the answers thereto depend upon whether the taxable interests were vested as of the death of the testator, or as of some other date.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—SECURITIES CANNOT BE REMOVED FROM SAFE DEPOSIT BOX BY PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES OF DECEASED RENTER OF BOX—LIABILITY FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 5348-2 G. C.

Under section 5348-2 G. C. a safe deposit company or bank renting a safe deposit box cannot allow the personal representatives of a deceased renter of the box to take securities like coupon bonds from the box without incurring the liability mentioned in section 5348-2, unless the further provisions of that section are complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. J. ARTER WEAVER, Probate Judge, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 3 requesting the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "I ask your opinion as to what interpretation can be given the words 'Assets or property belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent,' which words are found in paragraph two of section 5348-2 of the inheritance tax law.
> The reason for asking this, is that I can see where the decedent might leave no estate except coupon Liberty Bonds, etc., which would be transferred by simple delivery, and said securities would be in a safety deposit box in a bank or safe deposit company, which bank or safe deposit company did not have any jurisdiction over, except the safe keeping of same."

You evidently have in mind a specific question arising under the section named, and this opinion will be limited to answering that specific question, as it would hardly be within the bounds of propriety for this department to undertake a comprehensive "interpretation" of the phrase mentioned.

The specific question which you have in mind may be put as follows:

> What is the duty of a bank or safe deposit company with respect to coupon bonds and other similar securities which may be in a safe deposit box rented by such bank or company to a decedent?

Section 5348-2 provides, in part, as follows:

> "No safe deposit company, trust company, * * * bank or other institution, person or persons, having in possession or in control or custody, in whole or in part, securities, deposits, assets or property belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent * * * shall deliver or transfer the same to any person whatsoever whether in a representative capacity or not, * * * without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any taxes or interest which would thereafter be assessed thereon under this subdivision of this chapter, and unless notice of the time and place of such delivery or transfer be served upon the tax commission of Ohio and the county auditor at least ten days prior to such delivery or transfer; but the tax commission of Ohio may consent in writing to such delivery or transfer, and such consent shall relieve such safe deposit company, trust company * * *, bank or other institution, person or persons, from the obligation to give such notice or to retain such portion. The tax commission or the county auditor, personally or by representatives, may examine such securities, deposits or other assets at the time of such delivery or otherwise. Failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall render such safe deposit company, trust company, * * * bank or other institution, person or persons, liable for the amount of the taxes and interest due under this subdivision of this chapter on the succession to such securities, deposits, assets or property. Such liability may be enforced by action brought by the county treasurer in the name of the state in any court of competent jurisdiction."

Coupon bonds certainly come within the scope of the clause "securities, deposits, assets or property." The relation of the safe deposit company or bank renting a safe deposit box to the contents of that box certainly amounts to partial custody, if not more. The contention that the relation of such companies to their customers is that of landlord and tenant, having no custody or control of the contents of such a box, was successfully made in People vs. Mercantile Safe Deposit Co., 143 N. Y. Supp. 849; but this contention was overruled in National Safe Deposit Co. vs. Stead, 250 Ill. 584; which was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in 232 U. S. 58. These cases all arose under statutes practically identical with section 5348-2 of the General Code of Ohio.

Since the decision of the Supreme Court it is stated by Messrs. Gleason and Otis in their work on Inheritance Taxation, p. 253, that:

> "Safe deposit companies throughout the Union have acquiesced with the demands of the state for a right to inspect the contents of safe deposit boxes of decedents."

In other words, it would seem, at least under the ordinary arrangement existing between a safe deposit company or bank and the renters of its safe deposit boxes, that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is final and conclusive. This decision followed the New York decision to the contrary, and the statement from the text of Messrs. Gleason and Otis is some evidence of the manner in which the Supreme Court decision was regarded as determining the law of New York.

Aside from these considerations it is very clear that the statute at least attempts to reach transactions of this sort. Nothing could be clearer than this when regard is had to the language above quoted. For example, it is provided that:

> "No safe deposit company * * * having in * * * custody * * * in part securities * * * belonging to * * * a decedent * * * shall deliver * * * the same to any person whatsoever."

The General Assembly could have been thinking of nothing except safe deposit boxes and bonds and other like securities when it employed this language.

It is therefore the opinion of this department that under section 5348-2 G. C. a safe deposit company or bank renting a safe deposit box cannot allow the personal representatives of a deceased renter of the box to take securities like coupon bonds from the box without incurring the liability mentioned in section 5348-2, unless the further provisions of that section are complied with.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—"MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR" BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AS PROVIDED IN SECTION 3373 G. C. DOES NOT INCLUDE "IMPROVING" OR "RESURFACING" AS THOSE TERMS ARE USED IN SECTION 3298-5 G. C.—WHEN SECTION 3298-15f G. C. GOVERNS IN LETTING OF CONTRACT BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES.

1. "Maintenance and repair" by township trustees as mentioned in section 3373 G. C. does not include "improving" or "resurfacing" as those terms are used in section 3298-5 G. C.

2. Section 3298-15f G. C. to the exclusion of section 3373 governs in the matter of letting a contract growing out of a resolution passed by township trustees in accordance with section 3298-5 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. CHESTER A. MECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your letter reading as follows:

> "I would like your opinion in regard to the following matter:
> Section 3298-5 of the General Code provides as follows:
> 'The township trustees may without the presentation of a petition, take the necessary steps to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve a public road or part thereof * * *.'
> Section 3373 of the General Code provides:
> 'In the maintenance and repair of roads the township trustees may proceed either by contract or force account.'
> It is now a question with me as to what is included under the terms, 'Maintenance and repair.' Does that include the improving of public roads or the resurfacing of a public road as provided in section 3298-5? In other words, suppose a resolution was passed unanimously under section 3298-5 G. C. and the different steps were taken to 'resurface and improve' a public road and assessments were made against the real estate abutting upon said improvement and money was borrowed on a bond issue, could this money simply be put in the road funds of the township and used by the township trustees without letting the contract by competitive bidding, for the reason that it was for the 'maintenance and repair' of roads and that section 3373 gives them the right to let it without competitive bidding?"

Said section 3298-5 reads:

> "The township trustees may, without the presentation of a petition, take the necessary steps to construct, reconstruct, resurface, or improve a public road, or part thereof, as hereinbefore provided, upon the passage of a resolution by unanimous vote declaring the necessity therefor. The cost and expenses thereof may be paid in any one of the methods provided in section 3298-13 of the General Code, as may be determined by the township trustees in said resolution."

Said section 3373 opens with the provision quoted by you, "in the maintenance and repair of roads, the township trustees may proceed either by contract or force account," and then goes on to make provision for letting of contract if the trustees decide to proceed upon contract, and also to make provision as to the manner of force account work if the trustees elect to pursue the force account method.

The answer to your question is found in a consideration of the context of said two sections. The first of them, section 3298-5, is a part of a series (3298-1 to 3298-15n) authorizing township trustees "to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any public road * * * under their jurisdiction," and providing a complete proceeding in conformity with which the authority so granted may be exercised. Included in such proceedings are the matters of petition, making of plans, hearing of claims for damages, apportionment of cost as between township and landowners, assessment of property, levying of tax for township's share, issuing of bonds in anticipation of collection of such tax, and letting of contract on competitive bids after insertion of notice in newspapers. The words, "without the presentation of a petition" as used in section 3298-5, do not have reference to a proceeding separate from that which has just been described; they are intended to confer on the trustees, in the absence of a petition, authority to undertake the proceeding described. That such is the intent of the statute plainly appears from its use of the words "as hereinbefore provided," which can only refer to the several sections immediately preceding section 3298-5—said several sections having reference to general power in the trustees to proceed with the improvement and to the first step to be taken when a petition is filed; and further, plainly appears by reference to the next following section, which recites that the trustees "shall determine by resolution by unanimous vote, if acting without petition, and by a majority vote if acting on a petition, the route and termini of such road, the kind and extent of the improvement," etc.

Section 3373 is part of an entirely different series of statutes, namely, sections 3370 to 3376, providing for the maintenance, repair and dragging of roads in their township by township trustees. For that purpose, provisions quite extensive in character are made, including the provision above quoted giving the option to the trustees of proceeding by contract or force account. We find in the above mentioned series of statutes (3298-1 to 3298-15n) of which section 3298-5 is a part, a distinction between improvement work that is done under authority of that series of sections, and improvement work that is done under sections 3370 to 3376; for in section 3298-15d the following language appears:

> "* * * For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving roads under the provisions of section 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive of the General Code and for the purpose of maintaining, repairing or dragging any public road, or roads, or part thereof, under their jurisdiction in the manner provided in sections 3370 to 3376 inclusive of the General Code, the board of trustees of any township is hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding three mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township."

An evident reference to the work contemplated by sections 3370 to 3376, as distinguished from sections 3298-1 to 3298-15n, may also be found in section 3298-18, which reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 3298-18. After the annual estimate for each township has been filed with the trustees of the township by the county surveyor they may increase or reduce the amount of any of the items contained in said estimate and at their first meeting after said estimate is filed they shall make their levies for the purpose set forth in the estimate and for the purpose of creating a fund for dragging, maintenance and repair of roads, upon all the taxable property of the township outside of any incorporated village or city, or part thereof therein situated, not exceeding in the aggregate two mills in any one year upon each dollar of the valuation of such taxable property. * * *"

Clearly, then, in this situation, the two sections you have in mind are not to be taken as in pari materia, but are to be read, section 3298-5 as relating to construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement in the sense of a fully planned and definite construction having permanency as its object, and section 3373 as relating to maintenance and repair in the sense of keeping a highway in condition for travel. Instances may arise, of course, wherein adequate maintenance and repair involve in some degree both reconstruction and resurfacing; hence, the views herein expressed will not be understood as implying that section 3373 and its accompanying sections are to be construed as excluding reconstruction and resurfacing to the extent necessary in the proper maintenance or repair of a highway as directed in said last named sections.

Your inquiry is therefore answered by the statement that "maintenance and repair" as mentioned in section 3373 G. C., does not include "improving" or "resurfacing" in the sense in which those words are used in section 3298-5 G. C., and that if a resolution is adopted under said section 3298-5 for improvement or resurfacing, the work must be done upon contract as provided in section 3298-15f G. C. and not under the optional plan mentioned in section 3373 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—EXPENSES—AMENDMENT OF SECTION 7181 G. C. DOES NOT REPEAL BY IMPLICATION PROVISIONS OF SECTION 2786 G. C.—EXPENSES OF TAX MAP ASSISTANTS—"REASONABLE AND NECESSARY EXPENSES" USED IN SECTION 2786 G. C. PERMITS ALLOWANCE FOR BOARD, LODGING AND AUTOMOBILE HIRE.

3. The expression "reasonable and necessary expenses" used in section 2786 G. C. permits of the allowance of board, lodging and automobile hire. Attention called to section 7200 G. C., 107 O. L., 115.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. CHARLES L. FLORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter is received, submitting for opinion three questions, of which the first is as follows:

> "1. Is the county surveyor entitled to the expenses provided for by section 2786, General Code, in view of the last amendment of section 7181, General Code, found in volume 107, page 110, Ohio laws?'

Section 2786 G. C. reads:

> "The county surveyor shall keep his office at the county seat in such room or rooms as are provided by the county commissioners, which shall be furnished, with all necessary cases and other suitable articles, at the expense of the county. Such office shall also be furnished with all tools, instruments, books, blanks and stationery necessary for the proper discharge of the official duties of the county surveyor. The cost and expense of such equipment shall be allowed and paid from the general fund of the county upon the approval of the county commissioners. The county surveyor and each assistant and deputy shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties."

Section 7181 G. C. (as amended, 107 O. L. 110), reads in part:

"The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office and shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: * * * Such salary shall be paid monthly out of the general county fund upon the warrant of the county auditor and shall be instead of all fees, costs, per diem or other allowances, and all other perquisites of whatever kind or description which any county surveyor may collect or receive. The county surveyor shall be the county tax map draftsman, but shall receive no additional compensation for performing the duties of such position. When the county surveyor performs service in connection with ditches or drainage works under the provisions of sections 6442 to 6822, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio, he shall charge and collect the per diem allowances or other fees therein provided for, and shall pay all such allowances and fees monthly into the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund The county surveyor shall do likewise when he performs services under the provisions of sections 2807 to 2814, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio."

Before its amendment, the pertinent language of section 7181, which at that time designated the county surveyor as county highway superintendent, was as follows (106 O. L. 612):

"The salary above provided for shall cover all services rendered by the county highway superintendent to the state, county and townships."

With reference to the statute in its form as last quoted, it was held by this department, among other things, in an opinion of September 20, 1915 (Opin. of Atty. Gen. for 1915, Vol II, p 1785), as follows: (Syll.)

"Annual salary provided by section 138 of the Cass highway bill, G. C., 7181, does not cover services rendered by county surveyor in making tax maps under provisions of sections 5551 and 5552, G. C.

* * * * * * * *

Salary provided for in section 138 of the Cass highway bill, G. C., 7181, does not cover services to private individuals under sections 2807 to 2814, G. C., nor does said salary cover the services of county surveyor in the location and construction of ditches where the cost of such ditches, including the engineering expense thereon, is assessed against and paid by the owners of land specially benefited.

* * * * * * * * *"

Plainly, then, the purpose of the legislature in amending said section was to provide, in as positive terms as might aptly be employed, that the various fees which the county surveyor might receive, in addition to the salary provided by said section, should no longer be retained by him, but should be paid into the county treasury; and in order that no room should remain for doubt as to that purpose, the legislature at the same time enacted the following (107 O. L. 142):

> "Section 6956-4. The words 'county highway superintendent' found in any section of the General Code of Ohio not herein amended or repealed shall after the taking effect of this act be read 'county surveyor.' "

Since the legislature did not, when amending section 7181, expressly amend or repeal section 2786, and has not since expressly changed the latter section in any way, we are left to a consideration of the question whether said amendment of section 7181 has the effect of an implied amendment or repeal of section 2786, in so far as this last named section relates to expenses of the county surveyor.

The Ohio rule as to repeals by implication is thus stated by the supreme court in Railway Co. vs. Pace, 68 O. S. 200, at p. 205 of the opinion:

> "But repeals by implication are not favored, and this court has said in the case of Dodge vs. Gridley, 10 Ohio 178: 'Where two affirmative statutes exist, one is not to be construed to repeal the other by implication, unless they can be reconciled by no mode of interpretation.' "

It is felt that as to the two statutes now under discussion there is no such inconsistency in their terms as within the rule just stated indicates an intention to repeal section 2786 in so far as relating to expenses of the surveyor. However, that point need not be discussed in detail, because we have a much broader basis of interpretation on which the statutes are readily reconciled. It will be noted that the amendment of section 7181 was enacted as part of the so-called White-Mulcahy highway act. In that same act there were important amendments to the two sections immediately following section 2786, which said two sections relate respectively to the fixing of an annual allowance for the conduct of the surveyor's office, and to the appointment, compensation, etc., of deputy surveyors. There was also an amendment in the same act to section 2784 in the matter of surveyor's bond, as well as amendments to certain related sections immediately following section 7181.

In view of the fact that these substantial changes were being made as to the duties and powers of the surveyor, and that the legislature was dealing in a comprehensive way with the office of county surveyor, it is certainly to be presumed that had the legislature intended any change in related section 2786, it would have so indicated by express action. In other words, the fact that the legislature, when dealing with the subject, amended statutes closely related to section 2786, and did not amend that section, furnishes ample circumstantial evidence of an affirmative intent to allow said section to stand in full force and effect.

Your second question is:

> "2. Is the tax map assistant to the county surveyor appointed under section 5552, General Code, an 'assistant' or 'deputy' within the meaning of that portion of section 2786, General Code, which entitles an assistant or deputy to expenses incurred in the performance of his duties?"

This question of course proceeds upon the assumption that said section 2786 has not been repealed by implication in so far as it relates to the expenses of assistants and deputies to the county surveyor. That such assumption is correct, is clearly shown by the fact that in amending section 7181, as noted in the discussion of your first inquiry, the legislature made no mention of assistants and deputies, so that upon no basis could it be claimed that there is an implied repeal of section 2786 in the matter of expenses of deputies and assistants.

Section 5551 G. C. authorizes the county commissioners to appoint the county surveyor as tax map draughtsman, and then goes on to enumerate the duties of the surveyor in that connection, the surveyor being empowered to employ necessary assistants, not exceeding four. Then follows the section referred to by you, reading as follows:

> "Section 5552. The board of county commissioners shall fix the salary of the draughtsman at not to exceed two thousand dollars per year. They shall likewise fix the number of assistants not to exceed four, and fix the salary of such assistants at not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars per year. The salaries of the draughtsman and assistants shall be paid out of the county treasury in the manner as the salary of other county officers are paid."

Of course this section must be read in conjunction with above quoted section 7181, and as so read the two sections were the subject of an opinion of this department of date June 7, 1917 (Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 949, 1917), wherein it was held:

> "Under the new highway act, which becomes effective on June 25, 1917, the assistants to the county surveyor as tax map draftsmen must be furnished and paid under the provisions of sections 5551 and 5552 G. C., the provisions of the new act having no effect upon this matter."

Supplementary to this last mentioned opinion, there appears an opinion of this department dated July 24, 1917 (Opinion of Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. II, p. 1264), wherein it was held, among other things:

> "When the county surveyor acts as tax map draftsman, his deputies are provided and paid under the provisions of sections 5551 and 5552 G. C."

In a memorandum accompanying your inquiries, you indicate a belief that the views of this department, as expressed in said two opinions, lead to the conclusion that the assistants employed in accordance with sections 5551 and 5552 are assistants within the meaning of section 2786 G. C., allowing payment of the expenses of assistants to the county surveyor. However, it is believed that your impression is erroneous. It has already been seen that in the opinion of July 24, 1917, it was held that deputies were paid in accordance with the provisions of sections 5551 and 5552 G. C. It was also said in the course of the same opinion: (p. 1265)

> "The duties he performs as tax map draftsman are not performed as county surveyor, but as county tax map draftsman; that is, virtually, two positions are held by the same person, namely, county surveyor and county tax map draftsman.
> In so far as his deputies are concerned for this position, the provisions of sections 5551 and 5552 G. C. will control. If he needs a deputy in the performance of these duties, the county commissioners may fix the number and pay of the same, which is paid out of the county treasury, as other county officers are paid."

While the distinction thus made as between the duties of the county surveyor and the tax map draughtsman seems somewhat artificial, in view of the mandate of section 7181, that the "county surveyor shall be the county tax map draughtsman," yet it must be borne in mind that the legislature, when so amending section 7181 G. C., saw fit to leave untouched sections 5551 and 5552, although, as has been above noted, the legislature in connection with said amendment expressly abolished the distinction between "county surveyor" and "county highway superintendent;" and it must also be borne in mind that in the earlier forms of sections 5551 and 5552 no reference was made to the county surveyor, but to the employment of "an expert draughtsman" (See 89 O. L. 220; 94 O. L. 558). Hence, there is ample reason for the distinction in question, if resort thereto be necessary in order to give effect to the several sections involved; for it is well to keep in mind the principle above referred to, that repeals by implication are not favored and are not accomplished, if the statutes can be fairly reconciled.

It follows from the above that inasmuch as the assistants provided for by sections 5551 and 5552 are assistants to the county surveyor in his capacity as tax map draughtsman, such assistants do not come within the terms of the last sentence of section 2786, reading:

> "The county surveyor and each assistant and deputy shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties."

Your third question is:

> "Is an assistant or deputy entitled to board, lodging and automobile hire as a part of the expenses provided for by section 2786, General Code?"

This question was substantially answered as to board and lodging, in an opinion of this department of date January 16, 1912 (Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. I, p. 145). The statutory language construed in that opinion was "necessary actual expenses," and the conclusion reached with respect to such language was that it permitted the inclusion of such items as meals and lodging. It is believed that the same conclusion applies to the words "reasonable and necessary expenses," now appearing in section 2786.

The matter of hiring an automobile by the county surveyor was passed upon in an opinion of this department of date August 24, 1915 (Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. II, p. 1592), wherein it was held that by virtue of section 2786 the surveyor might hire an automobile when necessary in the discharge of his official duties. Of course the same is true of deputies and assistants, since section 2786 makes no distinction between them and the surveyor in the matter of expenses.

Your attention is called to section 7200 G. C. (107 O. L. 115), which provides in part:

> "The county commissioners may also at their discretion purchase, hire or lease automobiles, motorcycles or other conveyances and maintain the same for the use of the county surveyor and his assistants when on official business."

This language of course does not have a direct bearing on your inquiry, because it relates to a rather comprehensive plan for an established "transportation system" to be provided on the initiative and within the discretion of the commissioners. However, it is thought proper to make mention of the section as a matter of information in connection with your third inquiry.

In conformity with the foregoing, your first and third questions are answered in the affirmative and your second question in the negative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—SALE OF COMMODITIES "BY THE BASKET" NOT PROHIBITED BY SECTION 13128 G. C., 108 O. L., 556.

The sale of commodities "by the basket" is not prohibited by section 13128 G. C., 108 O. L., 556.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. G. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date inquiring whether section 13128 G. C. (108 O. L., 556), prohibits the selling of commodities "by the basket" without having the net weight stamped on the basket, was duly received.

The section as amended reads as follows:

> "Whoever puts up or packs goods or articles sold by weight or count into a sack, bag, barrel, case or package, or whoever puts up or fills a bottle, barrel, keg, drum, can or other container with any commodity sold or offered for sale by liquid measure, shall mark thereon in plain figures and letters the exact quantity of the contents thereof in terms of weight, measure or numerical count; provided, however, that reasonable tolerances and variations and also exemptions as to small packages shall be established by rules made by the secretary of agriculture and shall conform to those of the federal law, and provided, further, that this act shall not apply to such packages, or containers, weighed, put up, packed or filled in the presence of the customer.
> Whoever, with intent to defraud, transfers a brand, mark or stamp placed upon a case or package by a manufacturer to another case or package, or with like intent, repacks a case or package so marked, branded or stamped, with goods or articles of quality inferior to those of such manufacturer shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this section.
> Any article or commodity packed or sold by weight shall be sold by net weight only, and no wood, paper, burlap, cord, paraffin or other substance used for wrapping or packing, shall be included as a part of the weight of such commodity sold.
> Provided, however, that nothing in this section shall prohibit making a reasonable separate charge for any wrapper or container used in packing or preparing such article or commodity for sale, if such be agreed to by the purchasers of said article or commodity at time of sale. Any person, firm, company, corporation or agent, who fails to comply with any provision of this act, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars ($25.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00)."

The foregoing section, it will be observed, applies only to goods or articles sold by "weight" or "count," and not to goods sold by the "basket." There is no statute fixing, either expressly or by implication, the size of baskets as such, or prescribing the number of pounds that must be packed in a basket, such as section 6415 G. C.

which fixes the interior dimensions and capacities of the peck, half-peck, quarter-peck, quart and pint measures, and section 6418 G. C. which prescribes the number of pounds of several different commodities that must be contained in a bushel.

Section 6418-1 G. C. (enacted originally in 102 O. L., 42), and as amended in 103 O. L., 136, and providing that certain articles therein mentioned shall be sold by avoirdupois weight or numerical count, unless otherwise agreed in writing, may also be referred to. The amendatory section was held unconstitutional in re Steube, 91 O. S., 135, and while no mention was made of the original enactment, nevertheless the decision is equally applicable thereto, because the objectionable provision of the amendatory section, namely, the one requiring an agreement in writing before a sale other than by weight or count can be made, also appears in the original section.

You are therefore advised that it is not unlawful under section 13128 G. C. to sell commodities "by the basket" without having the net weight of the commodity stamped thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE TO S. L. WILGUS FOR CONSTRUCTING DOCK LANDING AT INDIAN LAKE, OHIO, VALUATION BEING $500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of this date transmitting for my approval lease in triplicate form to S. L. Wilgus of Russels Point, Ohio, covering permission to construct and maintain a board walk and dock landing along the water front of Indian Lake, valuation fixed being $500.00.

I see no objection to the execution of the lease recited in your letter, and I am therefore returning the triplicate copies with my approval.

However, I think it would be well for you to write to Mr. Wilgus when forwarding the lease that the state assumes no responsibility whatever in the matter of litigation now pending between Mr. Wilgus and Mr. Tarr.

Respectfully,

DISAPPROVAL BOND ISSUE, ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MERCER COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $39,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE—Bonds of Mercer county, for the improvement of Wooster road, in the amount of $39,000.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to publish, for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement, the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held June 14, 1919; the notice was published in the "Mercer County Standard" on June 6th and June 13th of the same year. Two full weeks, or fourteen days, should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

"Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same Report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of July 28, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on the 18th and 25th days of July in the "Mercer County Standard." Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published "once each week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922 G. C.

(3) The resolution of February 3, 1919, fails to determine the kind of the improvement, and this omission is not cured by any subsequent resolution of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above, I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Mercer county, and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL BOND ISSUE, ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MERCER COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $19,300.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE—Bonds of Mercer county, for the improvement of Watkins road, in the amount of $19,300.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to publish, for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement, the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held June 28, 1919; the notice was published in the "Mercer County Standard" on June 20th and June 27th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'after advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks, or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (See same Report, p 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of July 17, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on the 4th and 11th days of July in the "Celina Democrat." Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published "once each week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922 G. C.

(3) The resolution of April 11, 1919, fails to determine the kind of the improvement, and this omission is not cured by any subsequent resolution of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above, I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Mercer county, and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL BOND ISSUE, ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MERCER COUNTY OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $6,600.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE—Bonds of Mercer county, for the improvement of Homan road, in the amount of $6,600.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to publish, for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement, the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held June 28, 1919; the notice was published in the "Mercer County Standard" on June 20th and June 27th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnai, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22nd and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same Report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of July 17, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on the 4th and 11th days of July in the "Celina Democrat." Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published "once each week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922 G. C.

(3) The resolution of June 13, 1919, fails to determine the kind of the improvement, and this omission is not cured by any subsequent resolution of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above, I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Mercer County, and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL BOND ISSUE, ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MERCER COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $2,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

RE—Bonds of Mercer county, for the improvement of Jones road, in the amount of $2,000.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to publish, for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement, the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held July 11, 1919; the notice was published in the "Celina Democrat" on July 4th and July 11th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (See same Report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of July 31st, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on the 18th and 25th days of July in the "Mercer County Standard." Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published "once each week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922 G. C.

(3) The resolution of April 25, 1919, fails to determine the kind of the improvement, and this omission is not cured by any subsequent resolution of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above, I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Mercer county, and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PRIMARIES—NOMINATIONS OF CANDIDATES FOR MEMBERS OF BOARD OF EDUCATION SHALL BE HELD IN EACH COUNTY ON SECOND TUESDAY IN AUGUST OF ODD NUMBERED YEARS—APPLICABLE TO CHARTER CITIES—HOW NOMINATIONS ARE MADE WHERE NO NOMINATING PETITION OR DECLARATION OF CANDIDACY HAS BEEN FILED.

1. Primaries to nominate candidates for a member of a board of education shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the odd numbered years under the provisions of sections 4963 and 4969-1 G. C., and the provisions of such sections apply in a charter city for the nomination of members of boards of education.

2. Where nominations are sought to be made at any primary election, and for which no nominating petition or declaration of candidacy has been filed within the time prescribed, if a person's name appears on at least eight per cent of all the ballots voted at such primary election, then such person shall be considered as being duly nominated and his name should be placed upon the ballot for the following November election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1919.

HON. LOUIS H. CAPELLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of a letter from your office signed by Mr. Charles W. Baker, assistant prosecuting attorney, which reads as follows:

"I am enclosing to you copies of two letters received from the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, together with a request for an opinion from our office. I enclose also copy of ballot used at the primary. This ballot was of the type furnished by the secretary of state for use in the election. In view of the fact that the board of elections has acted upon an opinion of Mr. Hildebrant, secretary of state in 1915, we feel that it is a matter that the Attorney-General of Ohio should pass upon.

While the statement of facts appears very fully in Mr. H.'s letter, nevertheless we wish to say that the primary ballots contain no names. The other candidates, aside from Mr. F. were nominated by petition. Mr. F.'s name was written in at the time of the primary without any nomination petitions being filed and without any party designation. The numbers of the statutes of the General Code appear very fully in Mr. H.'s letter."

Due to the importance of the question submitted, and in order to take notice of all the facts bearing upon the case, the letters of the clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of Hamilton county to the prosecuting attorney of that county, and the protest against the candidacy of Mr. F., as made by Mr. S. H. under date of October 1st to the board of elections of Hamilton county, are herewith given in full:

"October 2, 1919.

Hon. Louis H. Capelle, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

My dear Sir:—.

I am directed by the board of deputy state supervisors to transmit to you herewith a copy of letter received from S. H. and to request an opinion from you on the same.

I might add for your information that in 1915, Charles Q. Hildebrant, secretary of state, rendered a verbal opinion to the board at that time directing them to print a blank ballot for members of board of education for the Cincinnati school district when no petitions had been filed for these offices. We have followed that opinion since and in the recent primary election, held August 12, 1919, J. G. F.'s name was written on the blank ballot in excess of the 8 per cent required by section 4984-1. We therefore concluded that he was nominated and have ordered the printer to print his name on the ballot for the coming November election.

I may also add that the specifications under which these ballots are being printed, call for them to be delivered at the office of this board by the third day of October. This is done in order to meet the requirements of the absent voter's law which make it necessary to have the ballots on hand at least thirty days before the election.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) S. A. B.....
Clerk."

"Cincinnati, Ohio, October 1, 1919.

The Board of Elections, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

Addressing myself to you purely in my private capacity as an elector and taxpayer will say that I understand that you are contemplating placing Mr. F.'s name on the non-partisan ballot for members of the school board or board of education for the Cincinnati school district. As an elector and taxpayer I wish to protest against such action on your part and to request that this course be not followed without first securing the opinion of the prosecuting attorney as to the legality of such action.

This protest is based upon the view which I entertain to the effect that Mr. F. has not been properly nominated for such office. I am advised that Mr. F. has filed no nominating petitions. Nor was he a party candidate nominated at either the republican or democratic primaries. Those who are supporting his candidacy claim his nomination by reason of the votes he received, from all voting at the primaries, upon a ballot which did not purport to be either a republican primary ballot or that of any other party, and which was used indiscriminately by republicans, democrats, and all others voting at the election. In this respect his case differs very materially from that of Dr. C., several years ago, as Dr. C. was nominated by writing in his name upon the republican primary ballot, and he, therefore, became the republican candidate, nominated at a republican primary.

I do not believe that I need call your attention to the fact that the primary election is designed for the nomination of 'party candidates' (G. C. 4949) and that the candidates so nominated thereby become the candidates of 'the party nominating them' (C. G. 4985). Further, only such 'parties' may hold primaries as shall have cast the required percentage of votes at the preceding general election (G. C. 4949). There would seem to be no such thing as a non-partisan primary. This alone would seem to be sufficient to exclude Mr. F. but there is another and even stronger reason for not printing his name on the ballot.

When the laws regulating the size and election of the members of boards of education in city districts were amended in 1914, see 104 Ohio Laws, the legislature amended section 4997 of the General Code to read that all nominations 'shall be by petition' instead of reading that such nominations 'may be by petition.' This change of the word 'may' to 'shall' leaves no room for doubt as to the legislative intent, but if there were room for such doubt it would be removed by the provisions of section 4999 to the effect that nominations for 'all other offices' might be by petition. In other words, members of the boards of education shall be nominated by petition while the nominations of all other offices may be by petition or by primary.

As I have already said, I suggest that you obtain an opinion upon this matter before the final ballots are prepared since such action would undoubtedly avoid injunction proceedings and the delay incident thereto.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) S. H."

The board of education of the city school district of Cincinnati is elected under the provisions of section 4698 to section 4997, as provided in senate bill 95, as passed by the general assembly of Ohio on April 28, 1913, and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 2, 1913, and effective as a law ninety days after the latter date (103 O. L., 279). In this act section 4997 G. C. reads as follows:

"Nominations of candidates for the office of member of the board of education shall be made by nominating papers signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of the school district, of either sex, in village districts and in city school districts by not less than two per cent. of the electors voting at the next preceding general school election in such city school districts."

In the General Code the above numbered section is followed by section 4998, which reads as follows:

"When nominations of candidates for member of the board of education have been made by nomination papers filed with the board of deputy state supervisors, as herein provided, such board of deputy state supervisors shall publish on two different days prior to the election a list of the names of such candidates in two newspapers of opposite politics in the school district, if there is such printed and published therein. If no newspaper is printed in such school district, the board shall post such list in at least five public places therein. (R. S. section 3897a.)"

By the same general assembly which enacted section 4997 G. C., as given above, there was enacted section 4999 G. C., but in another bill which appears in 103 O. L., p. 844, said section reading as follows:

"Nominations of candidates for other offices, may be made by petition, signed for each candidate by qualified electors of the state or the district, or county, for which such candidates are nominated, not less in number than one for each one hundred persons who voted at the next preceding general election in the state, district or county."

In order to show that sections 4997 and 4999 G. C. do not entirely dovetail into each other, attention is invited to the fact that in section 4997 G. C. relative to the nominations for the office of member of the board of education in city districts, the requirement is "not less than two per cent of the electors voting," and based upon the next preceding general school election, that is, the election held in the year in which school board members were last elected and two per cent to be upon the basis of those who voted for school officers, it is noted that section 4999, providing for nominations by petition for other offices, says that such nominations may be made by petition, while section 4997 G. C. uses the word "shall" instead of "may" in the matter of nominating candidates for board of education.

Section 4999 G. C. says the number signing the petitions for other offices shall not be less in number than one for each one hundred persons, that is, one per cent, and that this shall be based upon the next preceding general election in the state, thus showing there is a wide divergence in both the language and the results of the two sections enumerated.

Commenting upon this section, the Attorney-General, in Opinion 596, rendered September 6, 1917, appearing at page 1676 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, Vol. 2, says:

"Candidates for members of boards of education shall be nominated as provided by section 4997 G. C., in which section it is provided that nominations of candidates for office of members of boards of education shall be made by nominating papers signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of the school district, of either sex.

Such nomination papers shall be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections as provided by section 5004 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

'Certificates of nomination and nomination papers of candidates shall be filed as follows: * * * For * * * members of the board of education, with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county, not less than sixty days previous to the date of election; * * *.'

Section 5032 G. C. provides that the names of candidates for members of the board of education of a school district, however nominated, shall be placed on one independent and separate ballot without any designation whatever except for member of board of education and the number of members to be elected.

Section 5018-1 G. C. provides that where the names of several persons are grouped together upon the ballots as candidates for the same office, the ballot shall contain, immediately above the names of such candidates, the words 'Vote for not more than ———.' The blank space shall be filled with the number representing the persons who may lawfully be elected to such office.

In your case the word 'three' will be written in the blank space.

Section 4998 G. C. provides that when nominations of candidates for members of the board of education have been made by nomination papers filed with the board of deputy state supervisors, then the board of deputy state supervisors shall publish, on two different days prior to the election, a list of the names of such candidates in two newspapers of opposite politics in the school district, if there be such printed and published therein, and if no newspaper is printed in such district, the board shall post such list in at least five public places therein.

Section 4839 G. C. provides that all elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of odd numbered years; and section 4839 G. C. provides that the clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all such elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district, or post written notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election, and that such notices shall specify the time and place of election and the number of members of the board of education to be elected and the term for which they are elected."

It would seem, therefore, that in view of prior holdings of this department, and it must be admitted that the language of section 4997 G. C. is plain as to the manner and method of nominating candidates for member of the board of education, this is the only method by which members of the board of education can be nominated and placed upon the ballot, and yet we have the following language in section 4963 G. C., occurring in the chapter under the title of Primary Elections:

"Primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for members of the house of representatives in the congress of the United States * * * shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the even numbered years; and primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for township and municipal officers, justices of the peace and members of boards of education shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the odd numbered years; provided, however, that in a municipality organized under any of the provisions of sections 3515-1 to 3515-71, both inclusive of the General Code, primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for all offices not provided for in the plan of government under which such municipality is organized shall be held in such municipality at the usual polling places on the same day on which primary elections are held to nominate the officers of such municipality provided for in its plan of government. * * *." (107 O. L., p. 400).

It will be noted that the above section, which appears as a section under the chapter on primary elections in the General Code, provides for the nomination of members of boards of education in each county at the usual polling places in the odd numbered years and that the same shall also be true in charter cities, of which Cincinnati is one, unless such charter provides that members of the board of education shall be nominated and elected at some other time, which cannot be true because the matter of school elections comes entirely within the statutes of the state and is not an office "provided for in the plan of government" in charter cities.

An examination of section 4963, as amended in 107 O. L., 400, shows that this same language relative to primaries for member of the board of education occurs in section 4963 prior to March 31, 1917, when Senate Bill 218 was filed in the office of the secretary of state, thus being an enactment by the legislature just preceding the present general assembly. Senate Bill 218, passed by the general assembly March 21, 1917, contained but one single section, which was upon the subject of primaries, and is section 4963 G. C., supra, as it now reads.

We thus have the language of section 4997, passed in 103 O. L., 279, and the language here given relative to primaries occurring in section 4963 G. C., as passed in 107 O. L., 400. Thus four years after the small school board law was passed by the legislature of 1913, we have the enactment of the legislature of 1917, providing for the primaries for the nomination of members of the board of education in the uneven years.

Section 4997 G. C. occurs in the General Code under the chapter called Nomination of Candidates (Chapter 7), the first section of which reads as follows:

> "Section 4992: Except as provided by the preceding chapter of this title, nominations of candidates for public office may be made as herein provided." (103 O. L., 343).

The preceding chapter referred to is chapter 6, bearing the title of Primary Elections and in such chapter occurs section 4963 G. C., supra, providing for the holding of primaries for members of boards of education in each county in the odd numbered years. Attention is also invited to the following language in the same chapter on primary elections:

> "Section 4969-1: In case of declarations of candidacy for candidates for public office in a * * * school district situated in more than one county, such declarations shall be filed as above limited with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county containing the majority population of such * * * school district, which board shall certify the same forthwith to the board or boards of the county or counties containing the other parts of such * * * school district. * * * When such board or boards of the county or counties containing the other part or parts of such * * * * district shall have canvassed the returns of the primary in such * * * district received by them they shall certify the result to the board of the county containing such majority population which board shall ascertain and declare the result of the primary and shall forthwith certify the name or names of the successful candidate or candidates to the boards of such other counties to be placed on the official ballot at the election." (106 O. L., 545).

It will be noted that section 4969-1 was enacted in 106 O. L., and is thus a later statement by the legislature than is section 4997, appearing in 103 O. L., 279.

In addition to the language of sections 4963 and 4969-1 G. C., as here quoted, appearing in chapter 6 under the title of Primary Elections, there appears the following section in such chapter:

> "Sec. 4984-1. That in the event of any office for which nominations are sought to be made at any primary election, and for which no nominating petitions or declarations of candidacy have been filed within the time prescribed by law by or in behalf of any candidate of a political party, so that > in so far as such office is concerned, there is a vacancy on the primary ballot to be nominated, no valid nomination shall be made for such office unless the name of the person attempted to be nominated and receiving the highest number of votes for said office, shall have been written on at least eight per cent of all the ballots containing such vacancy, which have been voted at such primary election." (106 O. L., 207.)

You indicate in your statement of facts that Mr. J. F.'s name was written on the blank ballot in excess of the 8 per cent required by section 4984-1, and that no petition had been filed for member of the school board prior to such primary, though section 4963 G. C. provides for the holding of primaries in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the odd numbered years for the purpose of nominating members of boards of education. The rule of law is that where two sections are in conflict, the one later enacted by the legislature must necessarily be presumed to be the last known intent of the general assembly as to what the law should be. In the case at hand we have the provisions of section 4963 enacted in 104 O. L., and again in 107 O. D., as well as section 4969-1 G. C., enacted in 106 O. L., both of which sections are of very recent enactment, and the former was reenacted several times since 1913, providing for the holding of primaries for the nomination of candidates for members of boards of education in the odd numbered years in each municipality and each county of the state.

Under these circumstances it cannot be said, therefore, that section 4997, passed in 103 O. L., and appearing in the chapter providing for a nomination of candidates by other methods than the primary, is the only method by which candidates for board of education can be nominated. There is a seeming conflict between section 4997 G. C., passed in 103 O. L., and sections 4963 and 4969-1, enacted by later legislation, and both providing for primaries for nominations for candidates for boards of education in the odd numbered years. This is followed by section 4984-1, a very late law passed in 106 O. L., 207, providing that if no nominating petitions have been filed, the people can write in at the primary the name or names of certain persons, and if such persons receive eight per cent of all the ballots voted at such primary, they shall be considered duly nominated and placed upon the ballot for the following election.

Attention is also invited to opinion No. 908, appearing at page 10, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1918, wherein it is held in the syllabus that:

> "Where * * * the deputy state supervisors of elections * * * placed the name on the ballot (for member of board of education), and at the election the person received the highest number of votes, he was duly elected as a member of said board of education, and irregularities in the making of the nomination would not affect the validity of his election."

The Attorney-General is advised by the office of the secretary of state that for a number of years the secretary of state, being the head of the election machinery in Ohio, has advised the various county boards of elections throughout the state that ballots must be prepared and furnished to the electors in primaries held on the second Tuesday in August in the odd years, for members of boards of education. These instructions from the then secretary of state are based upon section 4963 G. C., which specifically mentions boards of education as being nominated in the primary held in the odd years. Acting upon theses instructions, the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections of Hamilton county prepared these blank forms of ballots and on the day of the primary, that is August 12, 1919, such ballots were handed to the electors to use along with any other ballots received by them from the election officers on duty in the several precincts of the Cincinnati school district on that day. With your communication and request for an opinion you have submitted one of these ballots and it has as its heading these words: "Form of Board of Education Primary Ballot." Then follows the number, name of voter, residence and registered number of voter, below which entries appear the words "Republican Board of Education Ticket," with places below for the electors to write in the names of persons if they so desire. Following this, and below the ballot, there are three short paragraphs with instructions, the first of which reads:

> "The above form of ballot is to be used where primaries are held."

On the back of these ballots, copy of which has been furnished this office, appear these words:

> "Official Republican Board of Education Ballot. Primary Election August 12, 1919. (Here print the facsimile signatures of the officers causing the ballots to be printed.)"

In the case at hand it seems that electors in the Cincinnati city school district were handed at the place of election on primary day, by the election officials, forms of ballots similar to the one herein described and bearing the names of recognized political parties. On such ballot there were blamk spaces and no names as regards the city school district of Cincinnati, which carried with it a clear invitation to the electors to write a name or names therein, and in the case at hand that seems to have been just exactly what was done and the name of Mr. J. F. appeared on more than eight per cent of the ballots cast for board of education in such city school district. It seems, however, that there is no question raised but what J. F. did receive eight per cent of the ballots cast by proper computation and that question is not here involved or attacked.

Following this primary and the publication of the returns of such primary, it is entirely possible that the friends of J. F. felt they had nominated him in proper manner because they had cast more than eight per cent of the ballots in the primary of August 12th, and had cast such votes on ballots furnished by the board of elections, with the clear invitation that such ballots were to be used in this manner, and that under these circumstances it would not be necessary to file the petition mentioned in section 4997 G. C., which petition by another statute must be filed at least sixty days before the November election.

It may be said that section 4997 G. C. is a statute speaking specifically as to how the members of boards of education shall be nominated and that section 4963 G. C. speaks but generally about boards of education, and in that event where two statutes were in conflict, the one carrying the specific language would govern. This might be true if the contrast was between but two laws passed on two specific occasions but here we have section 4997 G. C., passed as a part and the closing paragraph of senate bill 95, creating small boards of education in city school districts, filed in the office of the secretary of state May 2, 1913; and by the same general assembly, and six days after May 2, on May 8, 1913, there was filed in the office of the secretary of state house bill 669, an act relating to primary elections, and this act contained section 4963, containing these words:

> "* * * and primaries under this chapter to nominate candidates for township and municipal offices, justices of the peace and members of boards of education, shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday of August of the odd numbered years."

Thus the same legislature (103 O. L.) passed both of these sections and section 4963 G. C. became law after section 4997 G. C. It is important to note, however, that, following the above action, in passing both of these two sections, section 4997, as first passed in 103 O. L., 279, has not since been amended or changed, but on the other hand, in the following legislature in 104 O. L., page 9, in house bill No. 3, section 4963 was again passed by that legislature February 16, 1914, and contained the words:

> "That members of boards of education shall be nominated in primaries in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday of August of the odd numbered years."

In the following legislature, that is the 81st General Assembly, there was enacted section 4969-1, heretofore referred to, which takes care of primaries in municipalities and school districts which lie in more than one county, and this section, bearing upon the holding of primaries in school districts, was filed in the office of the secretary of state June 5, 1915. In the next legislature, that is the 82nd General Assembly, section 4963 was again enacted in senate bill 218 and again carried the words that primaries to nominate candidates for members of boards of education should be held in each county in the odd numbered years. Thus we have the language of section 4997 enacted once in 103 O. L., and not changed since, while on the other hand section 4963 G. C., providing for primaries for members of boards of education in the odd numbered years, has been re-enacted by necessary amendments made to the section for other offices by the general assemblies which have followed since 1913, as shown in the above history of the legislation. The question therefore arises if it was the clear intent of the general assembly that members of boards of education should not be nominated in primaries, but only by the method provided in section 4997, why did the general assembly carry the words "members of boards of education" in section 4963 G. C., first in 1913, following the enactment of section 4997 G. C., and again in 1914 (104 O. L.), and again in 1917 (107 O. L.)? These successive enactments on the part of each succeeding general assembly, and carrying in each instance provision for the nomination of members of boards of education in primaries in the odd numbered years, and not omitting such words in any of the several re-enactments, would indicate that the legislature did not intend that section 4997 G. C., the petition method of nominating members of boards of education, should be the only method that could be used. Thus these successive re-enactments, carrying the same language in a general statute, would seemingly cause the principle of law, holding that where two statutes are in conflict the one mentioning a specific thing, as against the provisions of a section speaking of the same in a general way, to fail, because the general act in question here has been so many times kept in its original form, providing for the nomination of boards of education in primaries held in the uneven years.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the judicial ballot in Ohio is practically the same as the ballot for members of boards of education, that is, in November when it is used in the election it has a non-partisan character, and neither of the ballots, either judicial or that for a member of a board of education, contains any party designations, and yet candidates for judicial positions enter the primary on the second Tuesday in August and compete with possibly others for their party's endorsement, and they thus become a candidate of that party, at least as far as endorsement is concerned, for that particular judgeship, though on election day in November the ballot on which their names appear for judicial positions has the same non-partisan character in appearance as the ballot for members of boards of education.

There is a seeming conflict between section 4997 G. C., providing the petition plan of nominating candidates for the board of education, such petitions to be filed sixty days before the November election, and section 4963 G. C., which specifically says that primaries shall be held in the odd years for nominating members of boards of education. Yet this seeming conflict existed in 103 Ohio Laws, when both sections were enacted the same month by the general assembly; it was still in existence in 104 Ohio Laws, when the general assembly enacted section 4991-1, relative to primaries where the school district lies in more than one county; the next legislature (106 O. L.) did not correct section 4963 G. C. to conform to section 4997 G. C., but re-enacted it with members of boards of education specifically mentioned again; the next general assembly (107 O. L.) amended section 4963 G. C., but kept members of boards of education within the primary law by specific mention; the present general assembly (108 O. L.) has not seen fit to change 4963 G. C. Seemingly the successive legislatures since 1913 do not think that the two sections do conflict, that either method of nomination can be used for the board of education. Cities in Ohio are nominating candidates for board of education in the August primary in odd years and to construe that section 4963 G. C., so often re-enacted by late legislatures, is to go out of the law, would create chaotic conditions in those cities. If section 4963 G. C. conflicts with section 4997 the remedy for correcting and getting the legislative intent is in the general assembly.

Based upon the statutes here cited, it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. Primaries to nominate candidates for a member of a board of education shall be held in each county at the usual polling places on the second Tuesday in August of the odd numbered years, under the provisions of sections 4963 and 4969-1 G. C., and the provisions of such sections apply in a charter city for the nomination of members of boards of education.

2. Where nominations are sought to be made at any primary election, and for which no nominating petition or declaration of candidacy has been filed within the time prescribed, if a person's name appears on at least eight per cent of all the ballots voted at such primary election, then such person shall be considered as being duly nominated and his name should be placed upon the ballot for the following November election.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

POSTAGE—COUNTY OFFICES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AUTHORIZED TO PROVIDE NECESSARY AMOUNT—SEE SECTION 2419 G. C., 108 O. L., 387—SAID SECTION NOT APPLICABLE TO PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILE.

1. Under the provisions of section 2419 G. C. as amended in 108 O. L., 387, H. B. No. 524, county commissioners are authorized to provide such postage as they may deem necessary for the proper and convenient conduct of any of the county offices, and the provisions of this section constitute a substantive authorization for such purchase, and other or independent requirement of the law for the mailing of such documents is not necessary.

2. The provision of said section authorizing the commissioners to provide equipment and facilities for use in the administration of the several county offices is held not applicable to the purchase of automobiles, for the reason that special provision is made therefor elsewhere in the statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your inquiry relative to the application of the provisions of section 2419 G. C. as recently amended, your inquiry being as follows:

> "We desire to call your attention to the amendment of section 2419 in house bill 524, passed by the legislature April 17, 1919; approved by the governor May 15, 1919; and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 17, 1919, and would ask your written opinion as to whether the postage that this section permits the county commissioners to purchase for the use of county officers must be limited to the mailing of such documents as the law requires to be mailed?
> And further, if under the provision for 'equipment,' as used in said section, the county commissioners may purchase an automobile for any of the county officers?"

Section 2419 G. C., to which you call attention, as amended in H. B. 524 (108 O. L.) at the current session of the general assembly, is as follows:

> "Section 2419. A court house, jail, public comfort station, offices for county officers and an infirmary shall be provided by the commissioners when in their judgment they or any of them are needed. Such buildings and offices shall be of such style, dimensions and expenses as the commissioners determine. They shall also provide all the equipment, stationery and postage, as the county commissioners may deem necessary for the proper and convenient conduct of such offices, and such facilities as will result in expeditious and economical administration of the said county offices. They shall provide all rooms, fire and burglar-proof vaults and safes and other means of security in the office of the county treasurer, necessary for the protection of public moneys and property therein."

In considering your question relative to the extent of the authorization to provide postage, I am constrained to observe that the authorization by the terms of the enactment is not limited to postage for mailing of documents elsewhere in the law specifically "required" to be mailed; but on the contrary, this provisions in the amendment of section 2419 G. C. must be regarded as a substantive authorization in itself, obviously intended to vest a discretion in the county commissioners.

True, the statute may not be invoked as authority for incurring expense for postage otherwise than in connection with the official business of the several county offices, but as to matters incident to the administration of the official business of the office, the authority to determine the necessity and propriety of incurring expense by way of postage to be provided for out of public funds is vested in the county commissioners; in other words, the statute authorizes the charge for postage when in a reasonable exercise of judgment and discretion the county commissioners determine same to be necessary "for the proper and convenient conduct of such offices."

You are therefore advised that there is a very wide discretion vested in the county commissioners in the determination of necessity and propriety for incurring expense by way of postage in the administration of the several county offices, and that affirmative exercise of such discretion under and in accord with the provisions of this section of the statute suffices as an authorization for incurring the charge for postage.

Your further inquiry as to the effect and application of the provision of said section relative to "equipment" in relation to the purchase of automobiles for the use of county officers raises a question which challenges a most careful consideration.

In addition to the provision that the county commissioners shall "provide all the equipment * * * as the county commissioners may deem necessary for the proper and convenient conduct of such offices," the scope of the grant is still further augmented and enlarged by the ensuing language, "and such facilities as will result in expeditious and economical administration of the said county offices." The term "equipment" is one of broad significance and is defined by the new Standard Dictionary as:

> "Whatever constitutes an outfit or preparation for some special purpose."

Webster's Dictionary defines the term "equipment" as:

> "Furniture, habiliments, apparatus."

By the language of the section of the Code under consideration, the commissioners are authorized to provide the equipment they shall deem necessary for the proper and convenient conduct of the county offices, which primarily would appertain to the necessary furnishings, fixtures and provisions in and about the respective offices as would be requisite in the proper conduct of the business to be administered therein, but to the extent that the conduct of such offices may involve activities outside of the walls or location constituting the official place of business, the scope of the authorization to provide equipment would not seem to be exhausted in providing things of the character above noted.

But in addition the purpose and intention to extend the grant of power beyond the mere provision for furnishings and office fixtures, etc., is evidenced by the further authorization to provide "such facilities as will result in expeditious and economical administration of said county offices." This language is broad enough to extend to the entire activities incident to the administration of the several offices, and here again a wide discretion is vested in the county commissioners in the determination of the propriety or necessity of adoption of particular facilities for the expeditious and economical administration of the offices.

The term "facility" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as:

> "Something by which anything is made easier or less difficult; an aid; advantage or convenience."

The term is defined by Webster as:

> "That which promotes the ease of any action or course of conduct; advatage; valuable aid; assistance."

From a consideration alone of the broad language of the statute, it might well be argued that the authorization to the commissioners to "provide all the equipment, * * * (they) may deem necessary for the proper and convenient conduct of such offices, and such facilities as will result in expeditious and economical administration of the said county offices" would empower the commissioners to purchase automobiles when in their judgment the circumstances and conditions warrant.

However, it must be noted that special provision has been made in relation to the subject of purchasing automobiles for the use of county officers, and this fact being considered, it is then to be determined what influence such special provision should have in the construction of the provisions of section 2419, supra.

Section 2412-1 G. C., enacted in 1917, provides for the purchase of automobiles for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff, in order to facilitate the transaction of the county business, while by section 7200 G. C., also enacted in 1917, the county commissioners are authorized to purchase, hire or lease automobiles, motorcycles or other conveyances for the use of the county surveyor and his assistants when on official business.

In both of said sections last cited certain regulatory provisions are embodied, constituting to some extent a restriction upon the exercise of the power.

For example, under section 2412-1 G. C., the purchase of machines can only be made with the approval of the common pleas court, and both the number of such machines and the amount to be expended therefor are subject to the approval of the court, and certain provisions are made, in this and the second section above mentioned, relative to the lettering of the machines and the use to which they may be devoted. So that such legislation is in the nature of a special or specific provision for the procuring and the use of automobiles by county officers, while the application of section 2419 G. C., under consideration, to the matter of the purchase of automobiles, would be referable to its broad and general terms.

In Columbus vs. Kauffman, 8 O. N. P. 231, it was said:

> "General statutes are read as silently excluding from their operation the cases which have been provided for by special laws."

In Railway vs. Elyria, 14 O. C. C. (N. S.) 364, the court, in considering the question of authority of the village to enter into certain contracts by virtue of a provision of the general statutes, said:

> "Such contracts are authorized under certain circumstances by the other sections referred to. Having legislated particularly upon the subject, the general power granted by the legislature should not be amplified by judicial interpretation, 'expressio unius est exclusio alterius'."

In City of Cincinnati vs. Connor, 55 O. S. 82, the court said:

> "It is an equally well established rule, that the provisions of a statute are to be construed in connection with all laws in pari materia, and especially with reference to the system of legislation of which they form a part, and so that all the provisions may, if possible, have operation according to their plain import."

In consideration of the rule announced by the decisions cited, and in view of the special legislation empowering county commissioners to purchase automobiles only for particular county officers and under stated conditions and regulations, it is held that the general provisions of section 2419 G. C. must be construed with due reference to the special provisions and therefore must be held not to include the subject of automobiles as an object of the legislation

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SENATE BILL NO. 187—WHERE ELECTORS VOTED AN ADDITIONAL LEVY FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES UNDER PROVISIONS OF SAID ACT ON AUGUST 12, 1919—ON TAX DUPLICATE FOR YEAR 1919—ATTACH TO TERRITORY TRANSFERRED PRIOR TO AUGUST 12th.

Where a levy of an additional tax for school purposes was voted by the people of a school district on August 12, 1919, under the provisions of Senate Bill No. 187 such levy will attach on the tax duplicate for the year 1919, and such levy will attach to territory transferred prior to August 12 to a school district in which such special school election was held.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1919.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Territory is transferred from one school district to another between April 13, 1919, and August 12, 1919. Since this transfer from one tax unit to another was made subsequent to April 13, the time at which the tax rate was fixed, will a two-mill levy by vote of the people on August 12, 1919, attach for the present year to the territory transferred?"

In your query you refer to the two mill levy by vote of the people on August 12, 1919, provision for which vote is found in Senate Bill No. 187, passed by the general assembly as an emergency act and filed in the office of the secretary of state on July 7, 1919. You inquire as to whether the two mill levy voted by the people on August 12 will attach for the present year to the territory transferred, and indicate that such transfer was made between April 13, 1919, and August 12, 1919, the latter date being the date of the election.

Attention is invited to section 3 of Senate Bill No. 187, providing for the two mill levy for school purposes, such section reading as follows:

> "If a majority of the electors voting on the proposition so submitted vote in favor thereof, upon the certification and canvass of such result it shall be lawful for such board of education to levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 at the aggregate rate so authorized for such purposes in addition to all other taxes for like purposes. Such levy shall be certified to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate; it shall not be subject to any limitation on tax rates now in force, and shall not be subject to the control of the budget commission, nor shall such budget commission reduce the amount of all other levies made by any board below the amount allowed such board for the preceding year."

It is noted in the above section that the board of education shall levy taxes on the duplicate made up in the year 1919 and that such levy shall be certified to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate; that is, the tax duplicate of 1919.

Attention is also invited to the notice of special election which is carried in Senate Bill No. 187, such notice saying that the election is to determine whether an additional tax levy shall be made for the year 1919, and this is followed in section 2, showing the form of the ballot that the people shall vote directly on the question of an additional levy for the year 1919 for school purposes.

It is understood from personal conferences that your question refers to a case where the territory transferred between April 13 and August 12, 1919, was territory legally transferred to a school district in which a special election for taxation purposes was held on August 12, under Senate Bill No. 187.

Answering your question, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General that where a levy of an additional tax for school purposes was voted by the people of a school district on August 12, 1919, under the provisions of Senate Bill No. 187 such levy will attach on the tax duplicate for the year 1919, and such levy will attach to territory transfererd prior to August 12 to a school district in which such special school election was helld.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MOTOR VEHICLES—FORFEITURE OF DEPOSIT FOR VIOLATION OF TRAFFIC STATUTES—FEES OF MAGISTRATE OR ARRESTING OFFICER, HOW PAID—FORFEITURE PAYABLE INTO COUNTY TREASURY—SHERIFF OR CONSTABLE'S FEES WHEN ACCUSED CONVEYED BEFORE MAYOR'S COURT—WHAT FEES ALLOWABLE —CHARGE OF $1.00 FOR USE OF MOTOR CYCLE IN SERVICE OF WARRANT FOR ARREST NOT ALLOWABLE—FEE OF 75c. FOR BRINGING ACCUSED INTO COURT IN EXECUTING MANDATE OF WARRANT NOT ALLOWABLE—OFFICER ENTITLED TO FEE OF 75c. PER DAY FOR ATTENDANCE UPON SESSIONS OF EXAMINING COURT.

In case of forfeiture of the deposit made either with the magistrate or arresting officer by a person charged with violation of the traffic statutes in the chapter relating to motor vehicles, the fees taxable to the officers are not legally payable from the forfeiture, but the amount of the forfeiture, or in case of recovery on recognizance, the amount so recovered must be paid into the county treasury; the legal fees of such officers, however, in such case are payable from the county treasury as provided in section 3016 G. C.

Where a sheriff, deputy sheriff or constable makes the arrest of a violator of the traffic regulations aforesaid, and conveys the accused before the mayor's court, such fees as are provided by law for the services rendered by such officers are taxable and payable to them in the mayor's court. Of course, the fees thus accruing to the sheriff and his deputy constitute emoluments of the sheriff's office which must be paid into the county treasury, under the provisions of section 2977.

Only such fees as are specifically provided by law are allowable, and a charge of $1.00 for the use of a motor cycle in the service of a warrant for arrest may not be allowed as costs.

Nor may a fee of 75c. be allowed for bringing the accused into court in executing the mandate of the warrant.

Under section 3010 G. C., where the officer is required to be in attendance upon the session of the examining court, in charge of the prisoner, a fee of 75c. a day is chargeable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently requested my opinion as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:

Whereas sections 12626 and 12627 G. C. allow officer making arrest in motor vehicle speed violations to take the person arrested to an accessible judicial officer, in consideration of section 13500 G. C. together with Opinion of the Attorney-General, page 202, Annual Reports for 1909-1910, holding that when bail is forfeited no fees may be paid from such forfeitures, we respectfully request:

1. In case of forfeiture can any fees be legally paid anyone under section 12626 or 12627 or other motor vehicle speed laws of such chapter?

2. In case of conviction can fees be paid from the mayor's court to sheriff, deputy sheriff or constable?

3. In case such fees may be allowed can fees other than fees provided by law be taxed; for illustration, a fee of one dollar for use of motor cycle?

4. Under such sections is a fee of 75c. legally taxable and payable for the officer arresting and bringing the person arrested and bringing the person arrested to such magistrate's court?

We are asking these questions in view of a special examination called for by the Toledo Automobile Club of the mayor's court of Maumee, Ohio, and neighboring justices of the peace."

Sections 12626 and 12627 to which you refer, are as follows:

"Sec. 12626. A person taken into custody, because of the violation of any provision of this subdivision of this chapter, shall forthwith be taken before a magistrate or justice of the peace in a city, village or county, and be entitled to an immediate hearing. If such hearing cannot be had, he shall be released from custody on giving his personal undertaking to appear in answer for such violation at such time or place as shall then be indicated, secured by a deposit of a sum equal to the maximum fine for the offense with which he is charged; or, in lieu thereof, if he be the owner, by leaving the motor vehicle. If the person so taken is not the owner, he can leave the motor vehicle with a written consent given at the time by the owner, who must be present, with such judicial officer.

Sec. 12627. If a judicial officer is not accessible, the accused under the next preceding section shall forthwith be released from custody by giving his name and address to the officer making the arrest and depositing with such officer a sum equal to the maximum fine for the offense for which such arrest is made or instead, if he is the owner, by leaving the motor vehicle. If the accused is not the owner, he can leave the motor vehicle with a written consent given at the time by the owner who must be present."

Your first question relates to the authority for payment of fees to the court and the officer for services rendered, in case of forfeiture of the deposit provided for in the two sections quoted.

In case of violation of the traffic regulations embodied in the chapter, of which said sections are a part, in the due course of procedure a charge would be filed before the court or magistrate and a warrant issued or undertaking provided for, and perhaps other steps of the proceeding for which elsewhere fees are provided; and thereafter the proceeding is interrupted by the forfeiture of the deposit by non-appearance of the accused, and upon this state of facts the question is, whether the fees which have accrued are payable.

The inquiry seems to be answered by the provisions of section 3016, which provides:

"In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgment of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

It is understood that the provisions of section 12626 and 12627 authorizing a deposit equal to the maximum fine provided for the offense constitute simply an expeditious means of realizing upon the undertaking; and in fact the deposit is to be regarded as governed by the provisions of law relative to disposition of forfeited undertakings. The statutes provide for payment into the county treasury of all moneys coming into the hands of magistrates in pursuance of proceedings under the criminal statutes of the state.

You are therefore advised that the fees which lawfully accrue on account of proceedings instituted for violation of the chapter regulating traffic upon the highways are payable out of the county treasury in pursuance of section 3016 G. C.

The opinion of the Attorney-General at page 202 of the reports for 1909-1910, to which you call attention, holds:

> "When bail is forfeited on account of the non-appearance of the defendant in a state case, the entire sum recovered thereby must be paid into the county treasury, and the fees of the mayor and chief of police may not be paid out of such sum so forfeited."

I agree with this holding, in that moneys so coming into the hands of the court shall be paid into the treasury and may not be applied directly to the payment of fees, which must be recovered from the county treasury in pursuance of section 3016, supra.

Section 4599 provides with reference to police courts that the clerk "shall immediately pay into the city and county treasury respectively, the amount then collected, or which may have come into his hands from all sources during the preceding month."

Section 4271 G. C. provides with reference to the mayor of a municipality as follows:

> "All fines, penalties and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasury monthly."

Similar provision is made with reference to justices of the peace and other similar officers.

Your second question relates to payment of fees to sheriffs, deputy sheriffs and constables in cases pending before mayor's courts. Section 13500 to which you call attention, provides:

> "The warrant shall be directed to the sheriff or to any constable of the county, or, when it is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, to the marshal or other police officer thereof and, by a copy of the affidavit inserted therein or annexed and referred to, shall show or recite the substance of the accusation and command such officer forthwith to take the accused and bring him before the magistrate or court issuing such warrant, or other magistrate of the county having cognizance of the case, to be dealt with according to law."

However, the provisions of sections 12626 and 12627 taken in connection with other provisions of the statutes relative to the duties of sheriffs and constables seem to authorize a different view in relation to procedure under the traffic provisions of the chapter relating to motor vehicles.

By other provisions of the law, which need not be here set forth at length, sheriffs and constables are made conservators of the peace and authorized to arrest persons found violating the penal statutes of the state or committing breaches of the peace, and in pursuance of such general power, would be fully warranted in taking into custody persons found violating the provisions of the chapter relating to motor vehicles, and in pursuance of the provisions of said sections, would be authorized to convey such persons before an accessible magistrate or justice of the peace in a city, village or county, and having done so, I am of the opinion there is ample authority for the taxing in their favor of such fees as accrue for the services they render in such proceeding.

In other words, while under section 13500 in the initial issuance of the warrant, the same is to be directed to a police officer of the municipal corporation, yet under the provisions of the chapter relating to motor vehicles, any police officer, including sheriffs and constables, is authorized generally to take his prisoner before a court either within or without a municipality, so that there would be no reason here to suppose that the statutory fees that may accrue shall not be payable to such officer as may have performed the service.

You are therefore advised that where services are rendered by a sheriff or constable in a prosecution before a mayor's court for violation of the traffic regulations of the chapter relating to motor vehicles, such statutory fees as accrue for services rendered by him may lawfully be paid. Of course, the fees so accruing to the sheriff or his deputy constitute emoluments of the sheriff's office, which are received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county and must be accounted for and paid over to the treasury as provided by section 2977 G. C. et seq.

In answer to your third question, you are advised that no fees or costs are allowable unless specifically authorized by statute, and I know of no provision of law allowing fees such as that mentioned in your inquiry "a fee of $1.00 for use of motorcycle."

Of course, there is provision for allowing to constables, for example, the necessary expense incurred "in transporting and sustaining prisoners, the same to be allowed by the magistrate and paid on his certificate", section 3347. But the fee so provided is not applicable to the service of executing a warrant or even the making of an arrest without warrant, and the mere bringing of the prisoner before the court where no special expense is incurred by way of transporting the prisoner, but only such as is incident to the execution of the warrant.

Your fourth question relates to the authority for payment of a fee of 75 cents to the officer arresting and bringing the person arrested to the magistrate's court, and you ask whether said payment is legal.

You are advised that the fees provided for the service of a warrant are all that may be taxed for the mere arrest and bringing of the accused before the court; the bringing of the accused into court under such circumstances being merely a part or incident of the execution of the warrant.

The question no doubt arises from a consideration of section 3010 G. C., which provides:

> "When required by an examining court to take charge of the defendant or defendants, during the examination of such defendant or defendants upon any charge for the commission of a crime or offense against the laws of the state, sheriffs, marshals and their deputies, constables, and watchman shall be allowed seventy-five cents for rendering such service, to be taxed and paid as other fees of such officers in like cases. When acting as the officer of such examining courts, such officer shall not receive fees for testifying upon such examination."

The fee here provided is for service in attendance upon the examining court when in session for conducting the hearing in the cause, and is not applicable to the mere bringing of the prisoner into court in pursuance of the warrant for his arrest.

And from the purport of the facts which are stated as involved in your inquiry, and the sections cited relating to the traffic regulations, you are advised that the charge of 75 cents may not legally be allowed to the officer either arresting and bringing the violator of the traffic statutes before the court or taking a deposit from such violator and returning same to the court.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—SERVICE OF WRITS BY MAIL—NOT AUTHORIZED TO TAX MILEAGE FEES AS COSTS IN SUCH CASE—WHEN SERVICE IS MADE BY TELEPHONE, MILEAGE FEES NOT COLLECTIBLE.

1. In service of writs by mail, as provided in section 11297-1 G. C. (107 O. L., 653) the sheriff is not authorized to tax and collect mileage fees as costs in the case.

2. Where a sheriff instead of making a personal service at the residence of the person named in the writ, or by making a residence service by leaving a copy of such writ at the residence of the person named therein, calls such person to his office by telephone and there serves such writ by handing a copy thereof to such person, such sheriff may not legally tax and collect mileage fees from such office to the residence of the person thus served.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department on the questions therein stated.

By personal conference it is learned that the principal questions upon which you desire the opinion of this department relate to the legality of the taxation and collection of mileage fees in cases of service of writs by mail and where the service is actually made in the office of the sheriff, and the other questions stated in your letter are reserved for future consideration at such time as actual cases may arise requiring their consideration and solution.

Your first question may be stated to be where writs are served by mail, as provided in section 11297-1 G. C. by the sheriff mentioned therein, may such sheriff tax and collect mileage fees for serving such writs, and your second question may be stated to be where a sheriff does not make a personal or residence service at the residence of the person named in the writ, but instead telephones to such person to come to his office and there serves such writ upon such person by handing him a copy thereof, may such sheriff legally charge and collect mileage for such service.

Section 11297-1 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 653, provides an additional method of service and return of writs where the judges of the courts of common pleas and probate and municipal courts by rule "provide for the service of writs or process by mail, registered or otherwise, and for the service of persons summoned for jury duty by mail registered or otherwise."

This section also provides that when such service by mail is made, the return of the sheriff on such service, properly evidencing the deposit of the writ in the mail, "shall be proof of residence service at the address on the envelope containing such writ or process," subject to the correctness of the address and that such envelope be not returned by the postal authorities undelivered.

This section is silent as to any change in the compensation for service of writs.

Section 2845 G. C. is the general sheriff fee section and in part provides:

"For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect the following fees and no more; * * * Summoning each juror, other than on venire, ten cents; * * * all summons, writs, orders or notices, for the first name, seventy-five cents; * * * in addition for the fee for service and return the sheriff shall be authorized to charge on each summons, writ, * * * a fee of eight cents per mile going and returning, provided, that where more than one person is named in such writ, mileage shall be charged for the shortest distance necessary to be traveled."

A fair construction of section 2845 G. C. leads to the conclusion that this section means that the sheriff is "authorized to charge" mileage at the rate of eight cents per mile for the "distance necessary to be traveled."

It is to be noted that in fixing the rate of compensation for the services therein specified, section 2845 G. C. in the first line provides that "* * * when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect" the fees therein fixed. In view of the plain terms of this section and keeping in mind the constitutional prohibition against drawing money from the county treasury without authority of law, this department is of the opinion that under sections 2845 and 11297-1 G. C. the sheriff is not legally entitled to charge and collect mileage for a service made by mail under the latter section, and the answer to your first question is in the negative.

The same principle applies to your second question, section 2845 G. C. being applicable to and decisive of this question.

As pointed out in the discussion of your first question, this section contemplates the actual performance of the services therein referred to before the sheriff is authorized to charge and collect mileage fees therein provided for, and no traveling to and from the place of residence of the person named in the writ having been done by the sheriff in such a case, it cannot consistently be claimed that the service in this respect has been "rendered" as required by section 2845.

It therefore follows that your second question is also answered in the negative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PUBLIC AND SECTARIAN HOSPITAL DISTINGUISHED UNDER PROVISIONS OF SECTION 3138-1 G. C., 108 O. L., 62.

Under the provisions of section 3138-1 G. C. as amended in 1919, house bill No. 65, providing for contribution by county commissioners toward the maintenance of hospitals and the providing of care for the indigent sick and disabled to corporations or associations maintaining such hospitals, provided that no payment of public funds shall be made to sectarian institutions, the test of a public as distinguished from a sectarian use or character of a hospital is a common or equal right, free from discrimination or unreasonable restriction.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1919.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication requesting a construction of the provisions of house bill No. 65, in relation to providing public funds by county commissioners for the purpose of aiding in the maintenance of hospital facilities and providing care and treatment for the indigent sick and disabled under agreement with corporations or associations organized for charitable purposes or for the purpose of maintaining and operating hospitals.

With your communication you enclose a letter received from your board of county commissioners requesting advice in the matter, and setting forth an enumeration of hospitals located in Cuyahoga county, which, it is indicated, are to be considered in connection with the administration of the provisions of said act.

It is also stated, both in your communication, and in the enumeration of hospitals by the commissioners that each and all of said hospitals, in accordance with their charters and by-laws "provide for the relief of the sick of all denominations and sects" without regard to religion, race or sect.

House Bill No. 65 is as follows:

"Section 1. That section 3138-1 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

Sec. 3138-1. That the board of county commissioners of any county may enter an agreement with one or more corporations or associations, organized for charitable purposes, or with one or more corporations or associations organized for the purpose of maintaining and operating a hospital in any county where such hospital has been established, for the care of the indigent sick and disabled, excepting persons afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between said commissioners and such corporations or associations, and said commissioners shall provide for the payment of the amount agreed upon, either in one payment, or installments, or so much from year to year as the parties stipulate. Nothing herein shall authorize the payment of public funds to a sectarian institution.

Section 2. That said original section 3138-1 and section 2502 of the General Code be, and the same are hereby repealed."

Section 3138 G. C. as enacted in House Bill No. 65 embodies practically all of the operative provisions of original section 3138-1 G. C. and 2502 G. C. which sections were repealed by the act.

The provision "nothing herein shall authorize the payment of public funds to a sectarian institution" appeared in identically the same language in section 2502 G. C., but I do not find that this provision of the statute has been the subject of judicial construction.

The granting or enabling provisions of the section in its amended form are very broad and purport to authorize the county commissioners to enter into an agreement for making contribution of funds for the care of the indigent sick and disabled, with corporations or associations organized for charitable purposes, or such as maintain or operate hospitals within the county, and in view of the large number, and in fact, the probable preponderance of hospitals conducted under the auspices of various religious and charitable institutions, it is hardly to be assumed in the first instance that all such were intended to be excluded from the application of the provisions of the statute in question, without regard to the actual terms and conditions of their admission and treatment of patients.

While in its broader signification, the term "sectarian" or "sectarianism" imports any partisanship or school of thought, whether political, philosophical, religious or otherwise, and in this broad application would comprehend adherence to a separate religious denomination, yet such terms are also defined in Webster's dictionary, Standard dictionary and March's Thesaurus in a more limited and special signification, importing a person or institution "that inculcates the particular tenets of a sect; devotion to the interests of a sect or party; undue denominationalism; excessive devotion to the advancement of a particular sect."

Having in mind the apparent intent of and purpose to be accomplished by the law, I am of the opinion that the restraint against payment of public funds to sectarian institutions as embodied in the last provision of the section is to be regarded as applicable to such institutions as are devoted to the teaching, advancement or inculcation of the principles or tenets of a sect; and that such hospitals as admit and treat all patients without regard to sect or religion, and do not engage in the teaching or promulgation of the tenets of any sect or religion or other denomination, are not within the spirit and purpose of the restraint against the contribution of public moneys as provided in the act.

In other words, the test of a public use as distinguished from a sectarian use, is a common or equal right free from discrimination or unreasonable restriction, and when the hospital is maintained and devoted to such public use, so that charity patients are admitted on equal terms without regard to religion or sect, and does not embody in its administration the teaching or inculcation of sectarian principles or doctrine, it is not considered to be disqualified under the provisions of the act to enter into the agreement with the county commissioners for receiving public funds in the operation of its hospital and the treatment of the indigent sick and disabled.

It is believed that this general outline of the construction and application of the provision of the section to which your inquiry is directed will be found sufficient in determining the qualification of such hospitals as may enter into the consideration of the commissioners in accordance with the surrounding facts and character of each particular hospital.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—EXPENSE OF AUTOMOBILE IN PERFORMANCE OF OFFICIAL DUTIES—HOW PAYABLE.

Where a prosecuting attorney in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice incurs expenses in connection with the hire of an automobile or in the purchase of gasoline and oil for his own automobile, such expenses are payable out of the fund provided by section 3004 G. C., and not otherwise.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1919.

HON. ALLEN J. SENEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date reading in part as follows:

> "Is there any way in which you could figure out that the prosecuting attorney can have the use of an automobile that the county could pay for same without this expense coming from the prosecutor's special fund?
> I believe that you have already ruled that when the prosecutor owns a machine, it is perfectly right and proper for him, while on business for the county, to charge the actual expense and upkeep of the machine while so engaged, to the county, but is this paid out of the prosecutor's special fund or does the county pay for it?"

What you speak of as the prosecutor's special fund is that provided for by section 3004 G. C., which in part reads as follows:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expense which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. * * *."

Former opinions of the Attorney-General, on the subject of the payment of expenses incurred by a prosecuting attorney in the use of an automobile, hold:

(1) That a prosecuting attorney may hire an automobile when necessary in the discharge of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, and may pay the expense of such hire out of the fund provided by section 3004 G. C. (Opin. of Atty. Gen. for 1917, Vol. I, p. 478).

(2) That a prosecuting attorney may be reimbursed for expenditures for gasoline and oil made by him in connection with the operation of his own automobile upon official business, such reimbursement to be made out of the fund provided by section 3004 G. C. (Opin. of Atty.-Gen. for 1918, Vol. I, p. 998).

Each of said opinions goes upon the theory that the expenses in question are properly payable under section 3004 G. C., because they are "not otherwise provided for" by statute. Your question—whether such expenses can be paid by the county from some county fund, rather than out of the section 3004 fund—would, if answered in the affirmative, require a finding that such expenses are otherwise provided for.

After careful search, I fail to find any statute which will permit the expense of an automobile hired or used by a prosecuting attorney in the course of his official duties, save and except section 3004 G. C.

In 1917 the legislature enacted a measure (now known as sections 2412-1 and 2412-2 G. C.) entitled:

"An act authorizing county commissioners to purchase automobiles or other venicles for the use of county officials in the transaction of public business."

That the real scope of the act is less than that indicated by the title, is apparent from the fact that the purchase is limited, in the body of the act, to automobiles or other vehicles "for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff."

Replying directly to your question, I advise you that where a prosecuting attorney, in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, incurs expenses in connection with the hire of an automobile or in the purchase of gasoline and oil for his own automobile, such expenses are payable out of the fund provided by section 3004 G. C., and not otherwise.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SECURITIES—BLUE SKY LAW—THE WESTERN OIL & SHALE LAND VALIDATING COMPANY OF KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI, AMENABLE TO SAID LAW IN MAKING CONTRACTS WITH PERSONS TO VALIDATE FOR THEM TITLE TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT LANDS LOCATED OUTSIDE OF OHIO FOR A CONSIDERATION.

The Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company of Kansas City, Missouri, proposing to engage in Ohio in the business of making contracts with persons to procure and validate for them title to United States Government lands located outside of Ohio for a consideration, is amenable to the provisions of the Ohio Blue Sky Law, and required to secure a license as such dealer and procure the issuance of the certificate of the commissioner of securities authorizing the consummation of the proposed transactions prior to its engaging therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1919.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for my opinion upon the application of the "Ohio Blue Sky Law" to certain transactions proposed to be conducted in this state by the Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company of Kansas City, Missouri, and the Oil Development Corporation of Denver, Colorado.

Your inquiry is stated as follows:

> "We are enclosing you a letter submitted to this department by George E. Seney, attorney-at-law, Toledo, Ohio, with attached exhibits, requesting a ruling of this department whether or not said contracts are a security within the meaning of the Ohio Blue Sky Law.
> This is entirely a new proposition and we are desirous of having an opinion from your department before passing on same."

With your communication you submit communications from the representative of the companies, and also copies of the proposed contracts sought to be made by the companies in connection with their transactions which are the subject of the inquiry.

Without setting forth in detail the provisions of such contracts, which are lengthy, I find that in substance they import an obligation on the part of the Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company to secure for the persons with whom they deal, designated in the form of contract as the "subscriber" an oil and shale claim of twenty acres of United States government land, it not being stated in the contract form where such land is located, the Land Validating Company further agrees to pay filing fees, cost of locating, staking, platting, posting notices, filing proof of labor, proof of discovery of oil and all legal expenses, fees and charges in connection with locating the claim, and to make application for a patent for such land and bear the expense incident thereto.

In consideration of the undertakings of the Land Validating Company the subscriber is to pay to said company the sum of $100 upon the execution of the contract, and further agrees to pay the sum of $13.33 annually for four years, which is said to cover assessments and expenses required by the government.

It is noted that a further provision in the contract is to the effect that upon the payment of the $100 the company agrees to execute and deliver a quit-claim deed for all right, title and interest in said twenty acre claim, while in all other provisions of the contract it is apparent that the title to the land which is the subject of the negotiations to be conducted by the Land Validating Company is in the United States government, and it is expressly stated by the attorney for the company, whose communication to your department is among the papers submitted to me, that "the land in question belongs to the United States government."

It is therefore assumed that the latter is the fact, and that the undertaking by the Land Validating Company to execute and deliver the deeds does not correctly disclose the fact as to title to the property, if such statement is intended to import title in the Land Validating Company.

An examination of the agreement to which the Oil Development Corporation proposes to be a party, as evidenced by the documents presented, discloses that such agreement purports to be merely a lease by the subscribers who acquire the government lands to the Oil Development Corporation of their tract of the land for the development and extraction of the oil resources and by-products therefrom.

It appears that this lease is also to be procured by the Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company as the representative of the Oil Development Corporation in connection with its operations along the lines above set forth by way of procuring subscribers for the land claims and the validation thereof. This abstract of the data furnished me will serve to indicate the character of the activities of the Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company, which is the subject of consideration in connection with the provisions of the so-called Blue Sky Law.

It might be said at this point that the activities of the Oil Development Corporation as understood from the data at hand, do not constitute an activity regulated by the provisions of the Blue Sky Law, the same merely purporting to consist in the procuring of leases from persons who become owners of tracts of the government land.

Directing attention then to the question of application of the Blue Sky Law to the activities of the Land Validating Company, it is noted that you inquire specifically as to whether the contracts proposed to be entered into by either company is a "security" within the meaning of the Blue Sky Law.

Subject to certain exceptions enumerated in the law, securities are defined as follows:

> "Section 6373-1. Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall, within this state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stock, stock certificates, bonds, debentures, collateral trust certificates or other similar instruments (all hereinafter termed 'securities') evidencing title to or interest in property, issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership or association (except corporations not for profit,) or by any taxing subdivision of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so to do as hereinafter provided."

From a consideration of this and other related provisions of the statute, I reach the conclusion that the contracts in question do not constitute "securities" as comprehended within the meaning of the term of the Blue Sky Law.

However, it is provided in section 6373-15 of said act as follows:

> "No person or company, unless licensed in the manner and under the conditions applicable thereto hereinbefore provided for dealers, shall, within this state deal in real estate not located in Ohio of which he is not the actual and bona fide owner and unless the 'commissioner' shall issue his certificate as provided in the following section," * * *.

This provision of the law is held to be applicable to the activities of the Western Oil & Shale Land Validating Company if the real estate involved in their proposed activities is located outside of Ohio, and to require that before conducting their proposed activities they shall procure a license in the manner and under the conditions applicable to dealers as provided in said act, and further, that prior to their engaging in such dealings, the commissioner of securities shall have issued his certificate authorizing same as provided in section 6373-16.

Section 6373-16 provides:

> "Said commissioner shall have power to make such examination of the issuer of the securities, or of the property named in the two next preceding sections, at any time, both before and after the issuance of the certificate hereinafter provided for, as he may deem advisable. * * * And if it shall appear that the law has been complied with and that the business of the applicant is not fraudulently conducted, and that the proposed disposal of such securities or other property is not upon grossly unfair terms, and that the issuer or vendor is solvent, upon the payment of a fee of ten dollars, the commissioner shall issue his certificate to that effect, authorizing such disposal. * * *."

The requirement for license is the same as that applicable to a dealer in securities, and is covered by the provisions of section 6373-1 above quoted, and the following provisions regulating the issuance of such licenses.

The conclusion that the Land Validating Company is amenable to the provisions of the Blue Sky Law is rested upon the provision that no person or company, unless licensed, shall within this state deal in real estate not located in Ohio, of which he is not the owner, as found in section 6373-15 supra.

It is noted that counsel for the company suggest that the law would not be applicable, for the reason that the company would not be "selling land" as the land in question belongs to the United States Government, but it is to be noted that the law in fact is only intended to apply to the activities of others than the actual and bona fide owners, and the inquiry is resolved to a determination of whether the proposed activities of the company constitute "dealing in real estate."

"Deal" is defined by Webster's Dictionary as follows:

"To act, as between man and man; to have transactions of any kind with; to manage; to intervene or mediate."

The Century Dictionary defines "deal" as follows:

"Specifically—2. To negotiate or make bargains; traffic or trade; with a person, in articles; as, he deals in pig-iron.

To engage in mutual intercourse or transactions of any kind; have to do with a person or thing, or be concerned in a matter; absolutely or with with or in.

To intervene as a mediator or middleman.

To distribute to."

The proposed activities of the Land Validating Company clearly come within the recognized significance of the term "deal" as used in the law in relation to real estate, and is clearly within the principle and purpose of the law.

You are therefore advised that said company is amenable to the provisions of the Blue Sky Law before conducting the proposed dealings with reference to the "validation" of land claims, as disclosed by the form of its proposed contracts and the information submitted therewith.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO USE SCHOOL FUNDS TO ERECT OR REMODEL A BUILDING FOR USE OF SUPERINTENDENT AND TEACHERS AS RESIDENCE.

A board of education has no authority to use school funds to erect a residence for superintendent and teachers, nor has the board of education a right to remodel one of its old buildings into a residence for superintendent and teachers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 20, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following two questions:

> "Has a board of education the right to use school funds to erect a residence for superintendent and teachers?
> Has a board of education the right to remodel one of its old buildings into a residence for superintendent and teachers?"

In answering either or both of the two questions given, it is necessary to refer to the general powers of the board of education. Pertinent parts of the statutes relative thereto are as follows:

> "Section 4749. The board of education of each school district, organized under the provisions of this title. shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property, and taking and holding in trust for the use and benefit of such district any grant or devise of land and any donation or bequest of money or other personal property and of exercising such other powers and privileges as are conferred by this title and the laws relating to the public schools of this state."

Section 7620 reads as follows:

> "The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as playgrounds for children or rent suitable schoolrooms, either within or without the district, and provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It also shall provide fuel for schools, build and keep in good repair fences enclosing such school houses, when deemed desirable plant shade and ornamental trees on the school grounds, and make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

Section 7590 provides in part:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district * * *."

Bearing upon the question of the levying of a tax or the expenditure of money for a purpose other than one strictly connected with the schools themselves, section 7622-7 G. C. provides:

"The board of education of any school district or a municipality may levy annually upon the taxable property of such school district or municipality within the limitations of section 5649-2 of the General Code, not to exceed two-tenths of a mill for a social center fund to be used for social and recreational purposes. (106 O. L., 552.)"

Section 7625 reads in part as follows :—

"When the board of education of any school district determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to purchase a site or sites to erect a schoolhouse or houses, to complete a partially built school house, to enlarge, repair or furnish a schoolhouse, or to purchase real estate for playground for children, or to do any or all of such things, * * *, the board * * * shall submit to the electors of the district the question of the issuing of bonds for the amount so estimated. * * *"

Boards of education can do only those things for which there is either direct or implied authority in the statutes, and nowhere in such statutes in this state under existing law is there any provision for a board of education to use school funds to erect a residence for the superintendent and teachers, nor is any provision found for a board of education to remodel one of its old buildings into a residence for superintendent and teachers, unless one can read into the provisions heretofore quoted that such was the intent of the general assembly when these sections, giving general powers to boards of education, were enacted. It will be noted that in all of these sections the prime idea is that the expenditures authorized shall be for school purposes and in the matter of school buildings, that is, buildings which are used by the pupils as public houses, and a residence for superintendent and teachers does not come within such language.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that a board of education has no authority to use school funds to erect a residence for superintendent and teachers, nor has a board of education a right to remodel one of its old buildings into a residence for superintendent and teachers.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—BONDS AND NOTES BELONGING TO STATE OF NON-RESIDENT DECEDENT BUT KEPT IN OHIO, TAXABLE UNDER SAID LAW—WHEN CERTIFICATES OF STOCK IN FOREIGN CORPORATIONS ARE TAXABLE UNDER SAID LAW.

Bonds and notes belonging to the estate of a non-resident decedent, but kept in Ohio for safekeeping or otherwise, are with respect to the succession thereto subject to inheritance tax in Ohio.

The question as to whether or not certificates of stock in foreign corporations so owned and kept are in this respect subject to Ohio taxation is more doubtful, but the taxing officials should hold them taxable until otherwise ruled by the courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 20, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of September 29th you submit certain inquiries as corollary to those submitted in your previous letter of September 15th answered by opinion of even date herewith. The following points are raised by the commission:

> "1. Are bonds of a municipality situated outside of Ohio subject to inheritance tax in this state when found in a safety deposit box in Ohio where they constitute part of the estate of a decedent who was a resident of a state other than Ohio and other than that in which the municipality issuing the same is situated?
> 2. Are promissory notes given by individuals who are non-residents of this state subject to the same tax as above when found in this state and when they constitute part of the estate of a non-resident decedent?
> 3. Are certificates of stock issued by a foreign corporation subject to similar tax when found in this state and when they constitute part of the estate of a non-resident decedent? "

In the other opinion referred to the authorities from other states relative to your first question are set forth. In addition to these there is the express holding of Ferris, J., in Matter of Speers, 4 N. P., 238. This case arose under the collateral inheritance tax law, which, without attempting a definition of the term, imposed a tax upon "all property within the jurisdiction of this state" in respect of its succession. The facts as stated by the judge were as follows:

> "It is represented that one Elizabeth Speers died testate, a resident of Kentucky, devising by her will her entire estate to various persons in several amounts; that about ninety thousand dollars worth of real estate belonging to said decedent, was located in this county, and that a personal estate of about eighty thousand dollars, represented by bonds, notes, mortgages and money on deposit in banks of the city of Cincinnati, was, by the will, directed to be paid to persons who could not have received the same except for the terms of the will."

Further, in the course of the opinion the judge discloses the information "that the bonds, stocks, notes and evidences of debt (were) in the private box of Mrs. Speers, in the vault of the safe deposit company, in Cincinnati, for safe keeping;" and the contention was made by her executors that that fact "did not give any of these values a situs for taxation other than that of the owner, and that the credit in bank was of such a character as to be incapable of a legal situs, apart from the person of the owner." Relying upon the decision in State vs. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, and distinguishing Orcutt's Appeal, 97 Pa. St., 179, Judge Ferris came to the following conclusion:

> "The application asking for a direction to the executors to return this property for taxation should be granted and such proceedings will be had in accordance therewith."

This case affords the only available precedent in this state and should be the basis of such administrative rulings as are necessary to raise the questions mentioned by you and bring them before the courts properly for decisions. It is clearly a precedent under the present tax for the reason that the present law is certainly not narrower in its definition of what constitutes "property within this state" than the old law was.

In principle this decision answers your first and second questions in the affirmative.

However, there is one general qualification which must be made; the mere finding of the evidences of intangible property in this state affords no more than a presumption that the state has the right to impose the tax under the decisions cited. Such presumption is probably rebuttable by showing that the presence of the paper evidence in the state is merely temporary, transitory or accidental.

See—In re Romaine, 127 N. Y. 80;
In re Enston, 113 N. Y. 174.
See also—Buck vs. Beach, 206 U. S. 392.

Your third question seems not to have been involved in Re Speers, supra. It is rendered more doubtful by the fact that the courts of New York, which in decisions cited had sustained the taxation of bonds and other evidences of debt kept in the state, have not applied this rule to non-resident stock in a foreign corporation, though found within the state.

Matter of Whiting, 150 N. Y. 27.

In the other opinion attention has been called to the interesting manner in which the judges of the court of appeals of New York divided on the series of cases reported in 150 New York. Vann, J., announcing the opinion of the court in the Whiting case, supra, (though personally dissenting from a part of it) employed the following language:

> "Augustus Whiting, a resident of Newport, Rhode Island, * * * at the time of his death * * had money on deposit in a bank in this state, and owned certain bonds and certificates of stock that were found in a box rented by him in a safe deposit vault in this state. The stocks and bonds were issued partly by domestic and partly by foreign corporations * * *. All except the stock of foreign corporations were included in the appraisement, which was sustained by the surrogate and by the appellate division. The theory upon which the supreme court, by a divided vote, proceeded to judgment, was that the written instruments were physically within the state, and constituted property here subject to taxation. They were regarded as tangible, and apparently as in the nature of chattels. I think this is a sound conclusion, warranted by the Romaine Case * * * I think, moreover, that the written instruments issued by domestic corporations, including their bonds and the interests represented by them, are subject to a succession tax, independent of the fact of their physical presence in this state * * *. The main use of certificates is for convenience of transfer, and they are treated by business men as property for all practical purposes. They are sold in the market, transferred as collateral security to loans, and are used in various ways as property. * * * They are the only evidence of transfer required by the corporations issuing them in order to make the actual transfer on the books. There is obvious propriety in subjecting the instrument of transfer to a transfer tax when it is left in this state for safekeeping. It is subject to the jurisdiction of our laws, and hence is within the intent of the transfer tax act. * * *
> A majority of my associates, however, are of the opinion that the United States bonds, although physically present in this state, are not subject to a transfer tax. By their direction I announce, * * * that the certificates of stock in question as well as all of the bonds, except those issued by the United States, were properly held by the courts below subject to taxation under the transfer tax act on account of their physical presence in this state."

The head-note of the case, however, expressly excepts the certificates of stock of foreign corporations, and it is apparent that inasmuch as the lower courts had held those exempt and the executors and trustees had appealed, no question was before the court respecting the stock of foreign corporations. The question therefore is left in doubt by this decision.

As remarked by Messrs. Gleason and Otis, in their work on inheritance taxation, (p. 250):

> "The reasoning of modern authorities would support such a tax when the certificate is within the jurisdiction of the taxing power."

The authors cite People ex rel. vs. Reardon, 185 N. Y., 531, where quotation is made from the very language of Judge Vann above quoted. The earlier New York case of Matter of James, 144 N. Y. 6, may be distinguished on the ground that the statute was at that time of narrower interpretation.

People vs. Griffith, 245 Ill. 532, interpreting a statute based on the earlier New York statute, and following In re James, held that neither stocks nor bonds of foreign corporations found in safety deposit boxes in Illinois were subject to the Illinois law. This decision, however, was expressly based by the court on the doctrine of adoption by reference, it appearing that the Illinois law was like the New York law was at the time it was interpreted in the James and Romaine cases, and that the change in the New York law and the consequent change in judicial interpretation thereof worked by the decisions found in 150 New York took place after the Illinois legislature had acted. This principle would not hold here. If anything, the reasoning of the cases found in 150 New York would apply to the Ohio statute.

For the purpose of administration it is the advice of this department that if stocks of corporations are permanently kept in this state they are, on that account alone, in respect of their succession taxable in this state. As stated, this question must be regarded as doubtful, but it would seem to be proper to raise it for judicial determination in this way.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

LOCAL OPTION STATUTES—FINES AND FORFEITURES COLLECTED UNDER PROVISIONS OF ABOVE STATUTES ARE PAYABLE INTO TREASURY OF COUNTY OR MUNICIPALITY—COUNCIL BY ORDINANCE MAY PROVIDE FOR PAYMENTS TO PERSONS SECURING EVIDENCE OF VIOLATIONS OF SAID STATUTES.

Fines and forfeitures collected in cases of violation of the local option statutes are payable by the court in which the collection is made, into the treasury of the county or municipality.

When the fine is enforced in a court of a municipality, the money so paid into the treasury is subject to application by the council and it is competent for the council to provide by ordinance for the appropriation of a portion thereof for payment to persons securing evidence of violations of the local option statutes, but such provision of council must be sufficiently complete to amount to a specific authorization for the withdrawal of the money from the treasury in order to be operative.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 20, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 13th referring to opinion

No. 685 recently rendered to your department with reference to which you say that the answer to the first question therein considered is not entirely understood and in fact it is not thought to have been directly answered.

In the inquiry which was the subject of the opinion referred to it was pointed out that:

> "The council of a village passes an ordinance setting aside forty per cent of fines and forfeitures from collections for violation of local option laws to pay persons furnishing evidence resulting in conviction for violation of local option laws. Such moneys are paid out to persons merely for furnishing evidence, among others the marshal of the village."

Your first question was stated thus:

> "Is there any authority of law for council to provide a certain portion of such fines and forfeitures to be paid persons promiscuously for furnishing evidence?"

Your question was considered as relating to the authority for dispensing the fund, or a portion thereof, derived from fines and forfeitures under the local option statutes for the purposes named in your inquiry, rather than as questioning the procedure to be observed in that regard, and accordingly the answer given, after pointing out that the application of such funds toward the securing of evidence of law violations tends to bring about the enforcement of the law, and is not contrary to principles of public policy, was

> "It cannot be said that its application in the direction of securing a more vigilant enforcement of the law, is a misapplication of such funds, and your first question is therefore answered in the affirmative."

It is now perceived, however, that the further query in your mind relates to the method by which such fund so arising from the fines and forfeitures may be dispensed for the purposes named.

It is first to be noted that the provision of section 13247, which was quoted in full in the previous opinion, is > "Such funds paid into the treasury of the municipal corporation shall be applied as the council thereof may direct."

Provision is made by other sections of the law for the payment into the municipal and county treasury, respectively, by mayors and police courts of all fines, penalties and forfeitures coming into their hands. See sections 4599 and 4271 G. C. Similar provision is made with reference to justices of the peace and other lower courts, and these general provisions would control entirely the disposition of the funds arising from fines and forfeitures except for the special provision here made. Here it is not only especially provided that the proceeds of fines and forfeitures shall be paid into the county treasury when enforced in a county court and into the municipal treasury when enforced in municipal courts, but further the ultimate application of the funds paid into the municipal treasury is taken out of the operation of general provisions and is here governed by the special authorization of council to determine and direct its application.

At the outset therefore it may be stated that fines and forfeitures under the local option statutes must be paid into the treasury of the municipality when enforced in the courts thereof and may not be paid directly by the court to persons furnishing evidence.

When the money has been so paid into the treasury in compliance with the express provision of the statute, the council is then authorized to make disposition thereof, which may be done in my opinion by the enactment of a general ordinance. That is to say, council may provide by the ordinance that a stated per cent or portion of the fines and penalties shall be set aside and appropriated for the particular purpose which they determine and the ordinance may further stipulate what amount shall b payable for a given service and under what circumstances; or it might authorize the mayor or solicitor to procure the service of persons in ferreting out evidence of violations authorizing the use of a stated portion of the accumulated or contingent fund. No doubt council might provide simply that a given per cent of fines and forfeitures coming into the treasury in any case shall be payable to the person or persons furnishing the evidence leading to the conviction of the violator or the prosecution resulting in the forfeiture of recognizance, and it is believed that such provisions as above outlined will be operative, while on the other hand a mere provision by council that a certain portion of the funds should be appropriated for the purpose of securing evidence of violation of the local option laws would not be sufficiently complete to authorize the drawing of the money from the treasury as council has neither determined the specific application of the fund nor vested the administration thereof in any other officer or department.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—COUPON BONDS ISSUED BY MUNICIPAL AND PRIVATE CORPORATIONS OF STATE OF OHIO AND BELONGING TO ESTATES OF NON-RESIDENT DECEDENTS AND HELD OUTSIDE STATE NOT TAXABLE—REGISTERED BONDS TAXABLE—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS NOT WITHIN SCOPE OF SECTION 5348-2 G. C. RELATING TO TRANSFERS OF ASSETS, ETC.—PRIVATE CORPORATIONS WITHIN SCOPE OF SECTION 5348-2 G. C.—SAID SECTION APPLICABLE TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS REGISTERED TO DO BUSINESS IN OHIO AND ACTUALLY KEEPING STOCK BOOKS IN OHIO—NOT APPLICABLE TO SUCH CORPORATIONS WHOSE STOCK BOOKS, ETC., ARE KEPT OUTSIDE OF THIS STATE

Coupon bonds issued by municipal and private corporations of the state of Ohio and belonging to the estates of non-resident decedents, and held outside the state, are not subject to the Ohio inheritance tax with respect to the succsssion thereto.

On principle and in the absence of authority, the opposite rule should prevail as to registered bonds of such corporations.

Municipal corporations are not within the scope of section 5348-2 G. C., relating to transfers of assets, securities, etc. Private corporations are, and the statute is broad enough to apply to the transfer of registered bonds on the books of the company.

Section 5348-2 G. C. applies to foreign corporations registered to do business in Ohio and actually keeping stock books, etc., in Ohio. It does not apply to such corporations whose stock books, etc., are kept outside of this state. Whether it applies to foreign corporations, if any, not registered to do business in Ohio, but keeping stock books in this state, Query.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of September 15th requesting the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "In connection with the administration of the inheritance tax act, will you be good enough to advise us on the following matters:
> 1. To what extent is the registration and transfer of registered bonds (both as issued by subdivisions of the state and by private corporations) controlled or regulated by the provisions of the law mentioned? Similarly as to bonds which have not been registered?
> 2. Where such bonds have been issued and are held outside the limits of the state by a non-resident, are they subject to inheritance tax in Ohio? Or is the actual location of the bonds immaterial?
> 3. Where the estate of an Ohio decedent possesses shares of stock in a foreign corporation, is the transfer of such stock on the books of the company subject in any way to the provisions of the second and subsequent sentences of section 5348-2 when such corporation has been admitted to do business in this state? Similarly when the corporation has not been admitted to do business in this state?"

Your first two question may be considered together as a negative answer to the second question as applied to either class of bonds mentioned would make unnecessary any answer to your first question.

Accordingly, the first question to be considered is as to whether bonds which have not been registered and are held outside the limits of the state by a non-resident are, in case of the death of such resident and in respect to the succession thereto, subject to taxation in Ohio because the issuer of the bonds is an Ohio municipality or other subdivision or private corporation organized under the laws of this state.

This question must be answered, in the light of the authorities, in the negative. The inheritance tax law of Ohio is not broader in its reach than those of many other states in which this question has arisen, notably New York, and the holdings in such other states are uniform on the point that ordinary coupon bonds issued by a corporation within the taxing state are not "within the state" for the purpose of the incidence of the inheritance tax in case of their transfer by death of a non-resident.

Re Fearing, 200 N. Y., 344;
Ramble vs. Dawson, 67 Wash., 81;
Re Fearing, 123 N. Y. Supp. 396;
Re Preston, 78 N. Y. Supp. 91;
Eidman vs. Martinez, 184 U. S. 587.

If there is a distinction in principle between the rule announced by these decisions and the rule referred to in the recent opinion of this department on the question as to the situs for inheritance tax purposes of an insurance policy payable to the estate of a non-resident decedent and issued by a corporation organized under the laws of the taxing state, it lies in the fact that coupon bonds are negotiable instruments designed to pass more or less current and therefore taking their situs for all purposes, including succession, at the place where they are owned or even where they are held and kept.

See— In re Whiting, 150 N. Y., 27;
In re Morgan, 150 N. Y., 36;
Western Insurance Co. vs. Holliday, 126 Fed. 259;
People vs. Griffith, 245 Ill. 541.
See also—Tafel vs. Lewis, 75 O. S. 182.
But see—Eidman vs. Martinez, supra.

In other words, the general current of authority is to the effect that succession to bonds is taxable by a state, either when the bonds themselves are kept within the state or when the decedent was a resident of the state, but not merely on account of the fact that the issuing corporation is domiciled within the state.

So far as ordinary coupon bonds are concerned, therefore, your second question is answered by the foregoing, and an answer to your first question with respect thereto is unnecessary.

The case would seem to be different as regards registered bonds. The legal effect of the registration of a bond is to destroy its negotiability, in that the obligor is not liable to any holder of the instrument in due course, but may discharge its obligation by paying it to the registered owner. Such bonds are, moreover, usually secured by some sort of a mortgage or other collateral security. In the case of private corporations, such collateral security usually consists of a trust deed or other instrument having the effect of a mortgage of property; in the case of municipal corporations and subdivisions of the state, the collateral security consists of tax levies which the subdivision is compellable to make for the purpose of raising a fund to meet the principal and interest of the bonds. It is obvious, as stated by Vann, J., in his dissenting opinion in Re Bronson, supra, (p. 25): that

> "Where the bonds are registered, * * * the transfer can only be effected at an office designated by the corporation. * * * It would be necessary, upon this assumption, for the person entitled to succession to these bonds to come into the state of New York, directly or indirectly, to complete his title. The transaction, by virtue of the contract itself, would become localized, for the transfer would require a corporate act in this state done under the sanction of our laws, and possibly by virtue of an appeal to our courts."

This dictum of Vann, J., (for the bonds in the case were actually coupon bonds and not registered bonds) is the only expression of opinion which has been found suggesting a distinction between registered and coupon bonds. Its effect is weakened by the fact that Vann, J., also argued for the subjection to tax of the succession to coupon bonds of New York corporations held by non-resident decedents outside of the state, in which respect his position was not accepted by a majority of the court of which he was a member. It is true that the case of Callahan vs. Woodbridge, 171 Mass., 595, goes to the extent of holding that any bonds belonging to the estate of a non-resident, whether issued by Massachusetts corporations or not, and whether actually held in Massachusetts or not, were subject to the Massachusetts inheritance tax when the will was probated in Massachusetts. This department has, however, been hitherto unable to follow this decision, and it is clearly out of line with the current of authorities.

It is strange that no case is to be found dealing with registered bonds. In view of the character of such obligations, however, and the necessity of resorting to the courts of the taxing state for the purpose of perfecting the succession, which does not exist in the case of negotiable bonds, it would seem that upon the principles laid down in the former opinion of this department with respect to insurance policies, heretofore referred to, successions to such bonds should be regarded as taxable when the same are issued by Ohio private or municipal corporations or subdivisions, regardless of the place at which the securities are kept (which in this case would seem to be immaterial, though the decisions above cited would tend in the other direction). At least it is the advice of this department that the administrative rulings should be that the tax is collectible under such circumstances, so that a judicial ruling on the point may be properly secured.

This conclusion as to your second question, in so far as it relates to registered bonds, makes necessary further consideration of your first question as relating to such bonds, and particularly to the provisions of section 5348-2 of the General Code with respect thereto. This section has been quoted in other opinions of the department and its quotation will not now be repeated. Suffice it to say that the language therein employed as descriptive of the institutions which are prohibited from making transfers except with the consent of the commission and upon the retention of a sufficient amount to pay the tax is not broad enough to include public corporations or quasi public corporations. As a matter of the interpretation of the statute, therefore, it is concluded that a municipal corporation or a school district, township or county in this state, or any officer thereof, would not be liable for the penalty provided by that section in the event of failure to withhold the tax, etc., in the case of registered bonds.

It is just as clear that the section does apply to transactions of this sort on the part of private corporations. The statute provides that—

> "No safety deposit company, * * * corporation, etc., * * * having in possession or in control or custody in whole or in part securities * * * belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent * * *, including the shares of capital stock of, or other interest in, such safety deposit company, * * * corporation or other institution, shall * * * transfer the same to any person whatsoever * * * without retaining a sufficient portion or amount thereof to pay any taxes or interest which would thereafter be assessed thereon under this subdivision of this chapter, and unless notice of the time and place of such delivery or transfer be served upon the tax commission of Ohio and the county auditor at least ten days prior to such delivery and transfer."

The retention of which the section speaks could be made of accrued interest, or in case the bonds were due, of a part of the principal thereof, so that the section has possible application, though nothing is to be done excepting to make a transfer on the books.

It is the opinion of this department that section 5348-2 applies to the transfer of registered bonds and their registration in the name of the transferee in case of the accrual of the inheritance tax on account thereof, and that such inheritance tax accrues in all cases in which a private corporation issuing the registered bonds is organized under the laws of this state or has its principal place of business, where its corporate concerns are managed and its books for the registration and transfer of bonds are kept, in this state. This opinion is given with some qualification, as heretofore stated, because of the lack of authority on this point.

Coming to your third question, it will be at once seen that it involves primarily a consideration of the section last above referred to and of that part of it which has been quoted. The first sentence of the section which has been omitted speaks of "corporations organized or existing under the laws of this state" and would not apply to foreign corporations, inasmuch as the phrase "existing under" is probably intended to apply to corporations created by special act prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1851. The second sentence is not so qualified, and so far as the force of its own terms is concerned, would apply at least to all corporations to which any laws of this state might apply, which would include foreign corporations admitted to this state for the purpose of doing business. Foreign corporations not so admitted could scarcely be subject to the laws of this state. But this question will be further considered herein. Before considering it the pursuit of another line of thought seems appropriate. The sentence under consideration prohibits certain acts, and the last sentence of the section imposes a liability which is in the nature of a penalty, in that it is consequent upon failure to comply with the statute. The question now arises as to whether the act commanded by the statute is one that could take place outside the territorial jurisdiction of the state. The section purports to regulate the institutions referred to in respect of certain acts, namely, the delivery or transfer of certain kinds of securities or assets to persons. Aside from the question as to what sort of a construction this statute should receive, it seems obvious that, however phrased, it could not apply to acts committed outside the state of Ohio. No authority has been found on this point, though the section is of a type which is frequently employed in inheritance tax laws. The general principle is that the penal or regulatory laws of a state, including those regulations which have to do with the collection of revenue, have application only within its boundaries so far as non-residents of the state are concerned, though it is possible for the state to prohibit acts of its citizens or residents or creatures, whether committed within or without the state. This is the general principle in conflict of laws, and has application here.

At the most, then, the section regulates transfers taking place in this state and involving action in this state on the part of the institution referred to therein. Therefore a foreign corporation admitted to do business in this state, transferring stock on its books kept in another state from the name of a decedent to that of his executor, administrator or other successor, would not come within the operation of this statute even though the decedent was domiciled in this state, whether the corporation had complied with the laws of this state or not.

On the contrary, a foreign corporation actually keeping its stock books in this state and making transfer here, would at least, if registered as a foreign corporation under the laws of this state, be within the terms of the statute, and it is the opinion of this department that under such circumstances the statute would apply.

These conclusions leave open but one question, namely, as to whether a foreign corporation not registered to do business in this state, but keeping its stock books here and making the transfer here, would be subject to the statute in case of the transfer of stock belonging to a resident decedent. This question is very doubtful, and it would seem hardly possible that it could ever arise in practice.

One thing is certain: unless the corporation is authorized to transact business in this state, or unless it has property in this state subject to attachment, the courts of this state could not acquire jurisdiction over it for the purpose of enforcing the collection of the tax or penalty from the corporation. Inasmuch as the primary liability is not cast upon the corporation for the tax, but, as previously intimated, the liability of the corporation is created by a statute which is penal in its nature, it is very much to be doubted that the courts of any other state would enforce collection of the amount. So that in the case last imagined the only possibility of even raising the question suggested would exist if the corporation should have property subject to attachment in this state.

Unless the commission particularly desires advice on this question, it will be held in abeyance.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BANKS AND BANKING—NOT UNLAWFUL FOR BANK EXISTING UNDER LAWS OF OHIO TO APPOINT AGENTS TO TRANSACT FOREIGN EXCHANGE BUSINESS IN PLACES OTHER THAN REGULAR PLACE OF BUSINESS.

It is not unlawful for a bank existing under the laws of Ohio to appoint agents to transact a foreign exchange business at places other than its regular place of business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1919.

HON. PHILIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have addressed to me this inquiry:

> "May banks appoint agents to transact a foreign exchange business and no other function of banking, at places other than the regular place of business of such banks?"

The importance of arriving at a correct disposition of this question can hardly be overstated. An erroneous conclusion followed by your department may result in consequences disastrous to the banks and their customers. If we answer this inquiry in the affirmative and that conclusion be incorrect, we permit these institutions and those with whom they deal to assume and acquire obligations, the validity of which would be subject to the most serious doubt.

Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, 13 Peters 519.

The number and the importance of the commercial transactions in which banks will participate if advised that they may exercise this function have led me, therefore, to give it most serious consideration. The authorities in point are few and in some conflict, so that we must analyze them carefully to ascertain the true principle.

You correctly characterize the dealing in foreign exchange as a banking function.

"Buying and selling exchange is an exercise of a banking franchise."

Michie on Banks and Banking, p. 1611.

"A bank may buy and sell exchange."

Morse on Banks and Banking, 5th Ed., p. 125.

Section 710-47 G. C., effective in Ohio on July 11, 1919, and relating to the corporate powers of banks, authorizes each "to do all needful acts, to carry into effect the object for which it was created."

Section 710-181 G. C. is in part as follows:

> "No person, firm or corporation, except banks and duly incorporated and qualified railroad, steamship and express companies, shall engage in this state in the business of receiving money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries."

The right of a bank to deal in foreign exchange being well settled by judicial authority and clearly recognized by the legislature, may it exercise this function through agents located at places other than that in which it carries on its general business?

It is said in Michie on Banks and Banking, p. 1611:

> "When a bank is authorized to do banking business in a certain county, the buying and selling exchange through an agency in another county is illegal, as buying and selling exchange is, in effect, discounting paper, and an exercise of a banking franchise."

The author cites in support of this text only the case of People vs. Oakland County Bank (Mich.), 1 Doug. 282. There the supreme court of Michigan held that a bank whose charter required that it should be located in the county of Oakland had violated the law by the establishment of an agency in the county of Wayne, where it received and kept deposits, redeemed its bills, and as incident to such redemption bought and sold exchange. It said at p. 289:

> "It is unnecessary to push our inquiries any further upon this point, as we are all clearly of opinion that, in this respect, there was the assumption of an authority not warranted by law. With regard to the purchase and sale of bills of exchange, in the manner and for the purpose stated in the case made, we are equally clear."

The decision was put upon the ground that the bank was limited in the exercise of its functions to the county at which it was to have its place of business. Nor was there any distinction made between the accepting of deposits and the buying and selling of exchange.

This case was referred to in the dissenting opinion in Thompson vs. Waters, 26 Mich. 214, as settling the law of Michigan that a corporation whose existence is fixed by its charter in a city or town, can not exercise its powers elsewhere. But the majority in deciding Thompson vs. Waters did not apply this doctrine, but held that a railroad company organized under the laws of Indiana could take title to land in Michigan, and in so concluding said:

> "The mere right of a corporation to purchase and sell property, not being in its nature strictly a franchise, but a right existing equally in individuals without special grant, is very generally recognized in states other than those of its creation."

Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, 13 Pet. 589, to which I shall call attention, was cited with approval. In my opinion, therefore, the authority of People vs. Oakland County Bank was very much weakened by the later holding of the same court in Thompson vs. Waters, though not expressly disapproved.

On the other hand, in Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, supra, the supreme court of the United States, speaking through Chief Justice Taney, held that recovery could be had upon a bill of exchange made for discount by the Mobile, Alabama, agent of the Bank of Augusta in Georgia. The circuit court of the United States had held the contract void and the bill unenforceable, upon the ground that a bank incorporated under the laws of Georgia, with the power among other things to purchase bills of exchange, could not lawfully exercise that function in the state of Alabama. While the supreme court discussed the doctrine of comity between states, rather than the concrete question of the right of a bank to deal in exchange away from its place of business, it could not have reached the conclusion it did without assuming the existence of such power.

City Bank of Columbus vs. Beach, Fed. Cas. No. 2736; 1 Blatch. 425, was heard in the circuit court of the northern district of New York, Mr. Justice Nelson and Judge Conkling sitting. The action was against the acceptors on two bills of exchange drawn by H at Cleveland, Ohio, on the defendant B at Auburn, New York, accepted payable in New York to the order of H and indorsed by him. H, plaintiff's agent in Cleveland, had discounted the bills as such and for its benefit. In deciding in plaintiff's favor, Justice Nelson said: (p. 741, Vol. 5, Fed. Cas.)

> "The acts under which the bank became a corporation, conferred upon it the power to deal in exchange, without restriction, and hence the purchase of bills at the city of Cleveland, for the purpose of remitting the proceeds of paper belonging to the bank collected at that place, or even the dealing generally in exchange at that place by an agent, with the funds thus collected and remitted, was not in contravention of the charter of the bank, or of any law of the state of Ohio. I think this case falls within the principle of the cases of Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 519, and of Tombigbee R. Co. vs. Kneeland, 4 How. (45 U. S.) 16, and that a new trial ought not to be granted."

Conkling, J., concurred in the judgment in a somewhat lengthy opinion, in which he showed that Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, supra, was in point, and said:

> "The case decides, therefore, that if the City Bank of Columbus had employed its agent and purchased these bills at Mobile, instead of Cleveland, its title would have been indisputable. Is its title then to be held invalid, because the purchases were made within the limits of the state of Ohio?"

The syllabus, which fairly states the law, is as follows (p. 739):

> "1. Where a banking corporation, whose location and place of business was at Columbus, Ohio, had power by its charter to deal in bills of exchange, without restriction as to place: Held, that it could purchase such bills at Cleveland, Ohio, for the purpose of remitting to New York the proceeds of paper belonging to the bank, collected at Cleveland.
> 2. And it could even deal generally in exchange at Cleveland, through an agent there, with the funds thus collected and remitted.
> 3. The cases of Bank of Augusta vs. Earle, 13 Pet. (38 U. S.) 519, and of Tombigbee R. Co. vs. Kneeland, 4 How. (45 U. S.) 16, quoted and approved.
> 4. The City Bank of Columbus, under the acts of Ohio incorporating it, passed March 17, 1838, and March 6, 1845, and under the general banking law of Ohio, passed February 24, 1845, is restricted to Columbus as its location and place of business. (Per Conkling, J.)"

Section 710-181 G. C., to which reference has been made, contemplates that railroad, steamship and express companies will transact their foreign exchange business through agents at various locations. It requires such compamies to file yearly with the superintendent of banks a certificate each place in this state where it maintains an office where money is to be received for such purpose and the person or persons there in authority to receive this money.

We are to keep in mind also the provision of section 710-47 G. C., to the effect that the bank may do all needful acts to carry into effect the objects for which it was created, one of which unquestionably was the purchase and sale of foreign exchange. This function is quite different from that of receiving deposits or loaning money. This the legislature recognized by permitting other corporations to deal in foreign exchange. Nor does it appear why they should be permitted to carry on this business wherever they might establish agencies, and a similar privilege be denied to banks existing under our own laws and amenable to all the supervision and regulation provided in our banking laws.

I therefore advise you that it is not unlawful for a bank existing under the laws of Ohio to appoint agents to transact a foreign exchange business at places other than its regular place of business; but I am not here considering any other question than might arise or be suggested by the provisions of section 710-181 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, DEFICIENCY BONDS OF FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICT, $8,000.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

RE—Deficiency bonds of Fairfield township school district, in the amount of $8,000.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Fairfield township school district, relative to the above bond issue, and am unable to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

1. These bonds are issued under authority of sections 5656 and 5658 G. C. Section 5658 G. C. provides as follows:

> "No indebtedness of a township, school district or county shall be funded, refunded or extended unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of such township, school district or county by a formal resolution of the trustees, board of education or commissioners thereof, respectively. Such resolution shall state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of their maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear and the place of payment of principal and interest."

The resolution authorizing the issuance of the bonds does not contain a finding or determination that the indebtedness to be refunded is an existing, valid and binding obligation of such school district, as required by the provisions of the section just quoted.

2. Art. XII, Sec. 11 of the Ohio constitution provides:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtednss is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The language of section 5 of the resolution, authorizing the issuance of these bonds, is not sufficient to meet the requirements of this constitutional provision. The board of education which is the tax levying authority of the district, should, in its resolution authorizing the issuance of the bonds, in direct language, provide for a levy of taxes sufficient to pay the interest and the principal of said bonds as they fall due. Merely directing the clerk to certify to the county auditor in the annual budget a tax to be levied upon all the taxable property of said district, real and personal, is not sufficient without further language providing for the tax levy.

For the reasons just stated, I advise that you decline to accept the above bonds.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATION OFFICER—MAY NOT RESIGN HIS POSITION AND BE IMMEDIATELY REAPPOINTED TO FILL HIS OWN VACANCY AT AN INCREASED SALARY.

A duly appointed probation officer may not resign his position and be immediately reappointed to fill his own vacancy at an increased salary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In a recent letter to this department you say:

"We desire to call your attention to opinion of the Attorney-General to be found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Volume 3, page 2100, and would ask as to whether a duly appointed probation officer may resign his position and be reappointed to fill his own vacancy at an increased salary."

One of the holdings of the opinion to which you refer was that after the judge exercising the juvenile jurisdiction had appointed a probation officer and designated his compensation, such compensation could not be increased or diminished. Whether such probation officer might resign and be immediately reappointed to fill his own vacancy at an increased salary—your present question—was not considered in said opinion.

The appointment and compensation of probation officers in juvenile court are provided for in section 1662 G. C. This section has been recently amended, and, so far as pertinent, reads:

"Sec. 1662. The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be a woman, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be one or more assistants. Such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed three thousand dollars per annum and that of the assistants shall not exceed eighteen hundred dollars per annum."

Speaking of the provision—

"Such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of appointment," which provision was not changed by the recent amendment of the section, the Attorney-General, in the opinion above referred to, said:

"It will be noted that this section does not merely provide that the salary of the probation officers shall be fixed at the time of their appointment, but provides that the compensation which they shall receive shall be 'as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment.' The words 'as the judge may designate at the time of the appointment' is descriptive of the salary which the probation officers are to receive, and to my mind makes it impossible for the court to alter the compensation of the probation officer or officers after it has once been fixed at the time of the appointment."

The statutory language just quoted is clear and unambiguous. It clearly evinces an intent on the part of the legislature that the compensation of a probation officer shall be unchanged during the period of his appointment. Such intent would, in my judgment, be defeated were the view adopted that the increased compensation could be paid by the simple process of resignation followed by an immediate reappointment.

Speaking of constitutional and statutory provisions prohibiting increase or decrease of compensation of an officer during his term, Mr. Mechem in his work on Public Offices and Officers says, citing State vs. Hudson Co., 44 N. J. L. 388, that:

"He (the officer) will not be permitted to evade the provisions by resigning his office and being at once reappointed."

It may be contended that such decisions are without point in the present case, for the reason that a probation officer is not, in many essential respects, an "officer," nor is his tenure in the nature of a "term." It seems to me, however, that such decisions are noteworthy as showing how quick courts have been to frustrate attempts to evade statutes providing limitations upon compensation of public officials, and to prevent from being done indirectly what the law making body has clearly said shall not be done directly.

You are therefore advised that a duly appointed probation officer may not resign his position and be immediately reappointed to fill his own vacancy at an increased salary.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE—NOT AUTHORIZED TO DEPOSIT ANY STATE FUNDS PROPER UNDER AN AWARD FOR DEPOSIT OF STATE INSURANCE FUNDS.

The treasurer of state is not authorized to deposit any state funds proper under an award for the deposit of state insurance funds; and it is immaterial that the successful bidder for state insurance funds may also have bid for state funds, but was prevented from receiving an award thereof because of the acceptance of its bid for insurance funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

HON. R. W. ARCHER, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Some time ago a letter was received from your department submitting a question as to the operation of the depository law in its application to deposits of state insurance funds. The letter was inadvertently mislaid and some delay has taken place in answering it, for which an apology is tendered.

In that letter it is stated that banks to which state insurance funds have been awarded, subject of course to the limitation on the total amount of state funds which may be deposited in any one bank, have asserted the claim that in the event of the depletion of their deposits by the withdrawal of the insurance funds for investment by the industrial commission in bonds, they are entitled to have the amount awarded to them made up out of state funds deposited in other banks at a lower rate of interest than that offered by them on insurance funds. This contention is supported by the persuasive reasoning that banks in this position were prevented from receiving state funds (though they may have bid high for such funds) because their allotments of insurance funds exhausted their capacity to receive moneys of the state on deposit, under the previous rulings of this department interpreting the statute relating to the deposit of insurance moneys.

As you point out, the result of the acceptance of the view contended for would be that the treasurer of state would, in some instances, have to withdraw moneys from inactive banks in which state funds, as such, were on deposit in order to supply the requirements of the insurance fund depositories, which would lead to great confusion and inconvenience. Of course, this would not necessarily have to be done in all instances as the state treasurer might have state funds for initial deposit. However it is a point which is entitled to some weight.

Ultimately, however, the question which you submit is answered by a few very simple considerations. In the first place, there is no authority whatsoever to withdraw any moneys on deposit save "for the purpose of paying the appropriations and the obligations of the state" (Section 330-2 G. C.). In making the initial awards it is true that the money awarded is to go first to the banks offering to pay the highest rate of interest (Section 330 G. C.); and in withdrawing funds from inactive depositories it is provided that withdrawals shall first be made "from the banks and trust companies paying the lowest rates of interest and in proportional amounts as near as practicable" (Section 330-2). Further than this no bank, whether bidding for state funds or for state insurance funds, acquires any right to have its deposit maintained by withdrawals from other banks.

This of itself answers the specific question which you submit, but I deem it proper to go further and say that deposits of the state insurance fund are separate and distinct from deposits of state funds generally. Section 1465-57 G. C. provides that:

> "The treasurer of state is hereby authorized to deposit any portion of the state insurance fund not needed for immediate use, in the same manner and subject to all the provisions of the law with respect to the deposit of state funds by such treasurer; and all interest earned by such portion of the state insurance fund as may be deposited by the state treasurer in pursuance of authority herein given, shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of such fund."

It further appears that the state insurance fund is not a fund in the state treasury, but that the relation of the treasurer of state to that fund is that of custodian merely (Section 1465-56 G. C.); so that he is authorized by the section last cited to make distribution therefrom on vouchers issued by the industrial commission, without the necessity of appropriations by the general assembly. All the implications of these sections are against the commingling of state insurance funds with state funds proper. Separate bids and separate awards of deposit are to be received and made respectively for these two kinds of moneys. A bank which has bid for and been awarded insurance money has no right to receive under its contract any state funds, and the treasurer of state is not authorized, without separate qualification by such bank, to place any state funds therein. In short, when a deposit of state insurance funds is depleted it would not be lawful for the treasurer of state to make further deposits up to the authorized and contracted amount by using state funds proper for this purpose, even though he might have such funds available without the necessity of making withdrawals from other banks, and although by so doing he might be able to earn for the state moneys a higher rate of interest than he could earn by depositing them in depository banks that had qualified to receive state funds proper but at a lower rate of interest than the rate offered by the depository of the state insurance fund.

The more comprehensive answer to your question is therefore that the treasurer of state is not authorized to deposit any state funds proper under an award for the deposit of state insurance funds; and it is immaterial that the successful bidder for state insurance funds may also have bid for state funds, but was prevented from receiving an award thereof because of the acceptance of its bid for insurance funds.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—AUTOMOBILE BELONGING TO SAID OFFICER'S WIFE USED IN PERFORMANCE OF HIS OFFICIAL DUTIES—WHAT EXPENSES ARE ALLOWABLE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Where the sheriff makes use of an automobile belonging to his wife who is matron of the county jail, the county commissioners are authorized under the provisions of section 2997 G. C. to make an allowance to the sheriff for expenses incurred in the operation of such automobile in connection with his official duties, but such allowance may not include any item of compensation for the use of such machine.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

HON. GEO. WAITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Urbana, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently requested my opinion as follows:

"Is it possible for the sheriff of a county to use his wife's automobile while transacting business connected with his office, (she being matron of the jail) and charge for trips taken, providing the charge is just and reasonable, and satisfactory to the county commissioners?"

Section 2997 G. C. provides:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary exenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

Provision is also made in section 2412-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 585) for the purchase of automobiles or other vehicles by the county commissioners for their use and the use of the sheriff, but your question does not relate to the matter of purchase of an automobile in pursuance of the provisions of this statute, so it will not be further considered.

Considering then your question in connection with the provisions of section 2997 it may be stated that the statute clearly authorizes the allowance to the sheriff of his necessary livery hire incurred in the proper administration of the duties of his office, and it has been held in State ex rel. Sartain vs. Sayre, 12 O. N. P. (n. s.) 61, that automobile hire constitutes "livery hire" within the purview of the statute. The syllabus is as follows:

> "It is within the discretion of county commissioners to make an allowance to the sheriff for automobile hire, incurred in and necessary to a proper administration of the duties of his office in the service of writs and processes or in pursuing or transporting persons who are wards of the state or are charged with crime."

This decision has been generally followed as authority for the proposition that proper expenses incurred by the sheriff by way of automobile hire in the discharge of the duties of his office may be allowed him by the county commissioners.

But in your question a further consideration is involved, in that it is stated that the automobile in question is owned by the sheriff's wife, who is also the matron of the jail, and the matter of the sheriff' authority to contract with his wife under the circumstances for the employment of her automobile in the administration of his office is to be considered.

In an opinion of this department appearing at page 2397 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. III, the question of the authority of the county commissioners to hire the sheriff's machine for his use in the performance of his official duties was considered, and it was held that section 2997 did not give the county commissioners the authority to hire or provide the means of conveyance for the sheriff; but on the contrary that such provision is to be made by that officer himself. The opinion, however, held that the commissioners under authority of section 2997 may make allowance to the sheriff to reimburse him for his expense incurred in using his own machine for official business. The opinion cites an earlier opinion of this department appearing at page 1276 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. II, in which the same question was considered, and the following conclusion reached:

> "While section 2997 contains the word 'maintaining' and does not contain the word 'operating,' it would undoubtedly follow that said section authorizes the allowance of all expenses incident to the use of the automobile in public business and would include oil and gasoline, as well as necessary repairs to tires and parts.
> The county commissioners may, therefore, make an allowance to the sheriff for the expenses of maintaining and operating his automobile when used in the proper administration of the duties of his office. * * * Just what proportion of the expenses may be charged against public funds will depend upon the facts in each particular case and is more a matter of policy than of law."

It was further said by my predecessor in the opinion first above cited:

> "In no case can such arrangement include any item of compensation for the use of said machine," and in support of this proposition cited Opinion No. 631, appearing at page 1746 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1917, Vol. II, wherein principles of public policy were said to forbid that a public officer, charged with the duty of making an expenditure on behalf of the public, should in that capacity deal with himself. This principle has been laid down in a still earlier opinion, being No. 1161 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, page 11, Vol. I, where the following observation was made:

> "* * * While the highway superintendent, being charged with the duty of providing himself with transportation when engaged on official business, may not deal with himself and include in his expense accounts compensation for the use of his own automobile, yet if the county highway superintendent is the owner of an automobile and uses the same in traveling about the county on official business, he may include in his expense accounts and the county commissioners may allow to him the actual and necessary expenses incident to the maintenance and operation of the automobile during the time the same is used in the public business of the county."

The principle of public policy announced in the several opinions referred to has been adhered to repeatedly in the rulings of this office, and in fact is believed to be one of general recognition.

It is believed that while it is true that for the purposes of general law a husband and wife are perfectly competent to contract with each other, a different principle should be applied to official dealings. The policy of the law prohibits public officers from having any interest in contracts with the public, especially where they are authorized to make the contracts. Here, in the theory that automobile hire is incurred as an expense by the sheriff and reimbursed by the allowance of the county commissioners, the sheriff is the officer who makes the contract for the public. The contract, if contemplating compensation for the use of the machine, would then be between the sheriff and his wife. Though probably not covered by any criminal statute, such a contract is clearly against public policy because of the family relationship involved.

The fact that the sheriff's wife is matron of the jail furnishes an additional reason for the same conclusion, in that it introduces another relationship which accentuates the same public policy.

It is therefore the opinion of this department that it would not be lawful for the sheriff to be reimbursed for automobile hire where the automobile hired belongs to his wife. It would be perfectly lawful for him, however, to use his wife's automobile in his official business as his own and receive from the county an allowance for the maintenance thereof.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CONTRACT WITH PERSON TO TEACH—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO PAY SUCH PERSON FOR ANY TIME NOT COVERED BY PROPER CERTIFICATE.

A board of education having made a contract with a person to teach a school in its district, is without authority to pay such person for any time not covered by a proper certificate issued under the requirements demanded in the statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

HON. LEWIS STOUT, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"The school board of Noble township were unable to find a teacher for a certain school in their district, and finally they hired one J. N., an ex-school teacher, as a last resort. N. did not at the time of his hiring have a certificate but it was presumed that he would be granted an emergency certificate.

"The parents of the children attending this school seemed to have great objection to N.'s teaching and have refused to allow their children to attend the school. N. went to the school house on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, but no pupils appeared. The parents of the children state they will not send their children to school so long as N. is the teacher.

"The board of education held a meeting and succeeded in finding another teacher for this school who is satisfactory to the parents of the pupils, and this last teacher is in possession of a certificate. N. offered to release his contract for $100.00. Is the board of education authorized to make this compromise? It must be understood that N. has been acting in good faith all the way through and was willing to help the board out."

The question which enters here and upon which the rights of Mr. N. rests in this matter is whether he was qualified in a legal sense of the word to make the contract of teaching with the board of education of Noble township, that is, whether he was certificated properly by the board of county school examiners and if so for what length of time.

It is clear from a legal standpoint that even though the contract was regularly made in the method provided in the statutes by the board of education, it could not run if the said N. was without the certificate which is required under section 7830 G. C., which reads as follows:

"No person shall be employed or enter upon the performance of his duties as a teacher in any elementary school supported wholly or in part by the state in any village or rural school district who has not obtained from a board of school examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate of good moral character; that he or she is qualified to teach orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, physiology, including narcotics, literature and elementary agriculture, and that he or she possess an adequate knowledge of the theory and practice of teaching."

It would seem that under this section, in order to have the full qualifications of entering upon a contract to teach in any elementary public school, the teacher should have at the time of contracting a certificate for the entire time of the contract. You say that "N. did not at the time of his hiring have a certificate, but it was presumed that he would be granted an emergency certificate."

The courts, however, have passed upon this section, as indicated by the following language:

"Under this section a contract for the employment of a person as teacher, who has not obtained a teacher's certificate, is not invalid if such certificate is obtained before such person enters upon the performance of the duties of his employment." (School District vs. Dillman, 22 O. S., 124.)

See also Youmans vs. Board of Education, 13 O. C. C., 207.

Section 7690 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"Each board of education shall have the management and control of all the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. * * *

Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made."

You indicate that Mr. N. did not at the time of his hiring have a certificate, but that he would likely be granted an emergency certificate, that is, a certificate that is granted in compliance with section 7832-1 G. C., which reads as follows:

"A 'teacher's emergency certificate' which shall be valid for one year in any village or rural school district in the county may be granted by the county board of school examiners with the approval of the superintendent of public instruction to applicants who have had one year's experience teaching in the public schools whenever for any reason there is a shortage of teachers in such district."

The records of the department of public instruction show that permission was granted to the county board of school examiners of Auglaize county by the state superintendent of public instruction to issue an emergency certificate to Mr. J. N., this permission from the state superintendent of public instruction being dated September 9, 1919. In ascertaining as to whether the county board of school examiners of Auglaize county granted a certificate of any kind to Mr. J. N. following this permission from the superintendent of public instruction dated September 9, the Attorney-General is in receipt of the following statement of facts from the county superintendent of schools of Auglaize county, who under the law is also a member of the county board of school examiners of such county:

"Mr. J. N. made application for a certificate on September 6th. The board of examiners thereupon made application to the state department for an emergency certificate.

Mr. N.'s school opened on September 8th. We did not receive an answer from the state department until September 10th, and no emergencies were granted in this county before that date. Before the examiners met for granting these certificates we received word from the president of the board of education that Mr. N. had resigned and that they had engaged another teacher, who held a three-year certificate and measured up to the requirements of the law in every particular. By this action the examiners felt that no emergency existed and therefore did not grant the certificate. In justice to Mr. N. we must state that we are informed that Mr. N. resigned with the understanding that he was to receive $100.00 providing the board could legally pay him. The board of education had requested his resignation because of the sentiment of the people in the district against Mr. N., which was to such a degree that not a pupil came to the school during the two or three days he was in the school room."

From the above letter it is noted that the school in question in Noble township opened on September 8th, and from your statement of facts Mr. N. appeared at such school on the 8th, 9th and 10th days of September; on September 10th the county board of school examiners received permission from the state superintendent of public instruction to grant an emergency certificate to Mr. N., as no emergency certificate had been granted to him prior to that date. It seems that on or about the 10th of September, or at least before the board of examiners met for the purpose of granting certificates, word was received from the president of the board of education of Noble township that another teacher had been engaged who had a three-year certificate and that Mr. N. was no longer the teacher in the school in question in Noble township. Under these circumstances the county board of examiners did not grant a certificate to Mr. N. and therefore he did not have a certificate on September 8th, when he entered the school room as a teacher, or on any of the days following. It is necessary that a teacher have a certificate of some kind covering every day on which teaching is done, in order to cover payments for services from the employing board of education. The right of Mr. N. to recover from the board of education rests in a very large measure upon his having a certificate, as required by the statutes, covering all the days for which he demands pay, and if he could not show his certificate starting with the day on which he entered upon his duties, then under the decisions of the courts, heretofore quoted, he would not be fully qualified in a legal sense as a teacher and therefore would be without power to contract in such capacity. It must follow, therefore, that as Mr. J. N. did not have a complete status as a teacher in being certificated at the proper time, and thus qualified under the statutes as a teacher, he has no valid claim against the board of education of Noble township.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that a board of education having made a contract with a person to teach a school in its district, is without authority to pay such person for any time not covered by a proper certificate issued under the requirements demanded in the statutes.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, OIL AND GAS LEASE TO MIAMI CONSERVANCY DISTRICT, CERTAIN LANDS IN GREENE COUNTY, OHIO—CANCELLATION OF FORMER LEASE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent letter transmitting for approval the oil and gas lease of the state to the Miami Conservancy District for certain lands in Greene county, dated October 7, 1919. Acknowledgment is also made of the receipt of the enclosed cancellation of former lease on the same premises of the same date.

Consideration of the matter and form of the lease and cancellation of the former lease, the facts stated in your letter and the laws of Ohio applicable thereto, has been given by this department.

Section 3209, as supplemented by 3209-1, 105 O. L., page 6, gives authority to the auditor of state to lease > "for oil, gas, coal, or other minerals, any unsold portions of section sixteen and section twenty-nine, or other lands granted in lieu thereof, * * * upon such terms and for such time as will be for the best interest of the beneficiaries thereof."

The lands are described in the lease as being part of section 16. Section 4 of that act (see also 106 O. L., 245, section 23-1 G. C.) provides that in case of sale of public state land, the state "shall expressly reserve to the state all gas, oil, coal and other minerals in and under such lands."

The object of the proposed new lease and cancellation of the old lease being, as stated in your letter, to secure a practical compliance with the laws relating to the public lands and the leasing of section 16 being by section 3209, supra, vested in the auditor of state, and the lease being of proper form, said cancellation and new lease are approved as being executed in conformity to the sections above quoted.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED BY GOVERNOR IN SUSPENDING OR REMOVING MAYOR OF A NON-CHARTER CITY FROM OFFICE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 27, 1919.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—Referring to the question submitted by you relative to the procedure to be followed in case of the filing in your office of charges which may involve the suspension or removal of the mayor of a non-charter municipality, I beg to submit the following:

Under the statutes which govern (Secs. 4268 and 4269 G. C.), the first step to be taken consists of the filing in the office of the Governor of a written statement of the alleged causes for the mayor's removal. A form of this statement is hereto appended.

The second step consists of causing a copy of the statment to be served upon the mayor not less than ten days before the hearing of the matter. This copy should be certified by the Governor to be a true copy of the original statement on file in his office. The date of hearing should be set so as to allow an opportunity to complete service on the mayor at a date at least ten days before the date set. The statute does not mention the manner of service, and therefore to avoid all question, such service should be made personally.

Pending the investigation, the Governor may suspend the mayor for a period of thirty days. If this is to be done, the order of suspension may either be separately made or incorporated in the statement so that service of a copy of the latter will inform the mayor of the action of the Governor. The latter would seem to be the better procedure, but in any event, a record of the order of suspension should be entered upon the journal record kept in the office of the Governor on the date on which it is made. (See Sec. 144 G. C.)

The next step consists of the hearing itself. There is no provision for the filing of any formal answer by the mayor. If any is tendered it should probably be accepted. There is no requirement that the Governor shall hear in support of the alleged causes for removal, any evidence other than that which he may already have in his possession. However, it is suggested that "a full and fair opportunity to be heard in his defense" which the statute does expressly guarantee to the mayor, would seem to suggest at least a disclosure to the mayor and to the public of the substance of all the information coming to the knowledge of the Governor respecting the alleged causes for removal.

The hearing must be public. In case the Governor decides not to remove the mayor, the minute of his decision should be entered upon his own records. If the decision is that the mayor be removed, such an entry on the record of the Governor should be made, and in addition thereto, a statement thereof, together with a "full detailed statement of the reasons of such removal" must be filed by the Governor in the office of the secretary of state.

In this connection, you are advised that at the time and place appointed for hearing, the statement of alleged causes should be read publicly and supplemented so far as may be necessary in fairness to the mayor, by a disclosure of the nature of the information supporting the allegations, as above suggested. Thereupon the mayor should be called upon to offer his defense, which he may do in person or by counsel. The Governor must hear the witnesses offered by the mayor as to matters tending to disprove the alleged causes for removal. The Governor would have reasonable discretion in the matter of limiting the number of witnesses on any given point offered by the mayor.

It must be understood that the Governor has no right to compel witnesses to be sworn. However, if the Governor desires to have witnesses giving evidence in support of the charges, sworn, and they are willing to be sworn, he may do so; and in that event, should permit witnesses giving evidence on the part of the mayor likewise to be sworn if so desired by the mayor. In any event, any sworn evidence which is offered should be received by the Governor, subject to his right to limit the number of witnesses above referred to.

The Governor is to conduct the hearing in accordance with his own sense of justice and fair play; he is not bound by technical rules of evidence, though he may well hear counsel for the mayor upon any point respecting the relevancy of any evidence that is offered.

I take it that you understand that there is no power on the part of the Governor nor the mayor to compel the attendance of witnesses.

Any documentary evidence or signed writings considered by the Governor in connection with the alleged cause of removal should be exhibited to the mayor upon the hearing.

The following is a suggested blank form of statement:

State of Ohio,
Office of the Governor,

—In the Matter of the Removal of — ----------, Mayor of the
— --------of----------.

Statement of Cause.

I, James M. Cox, Governor of the State of Ohio, by virtue of the authority in me vested by section four thousand two hundred sixty-eight of the General Code, do hereby declare that it is alleged that the mayor of the ----------of----------, Ohio, ought to be removed from office for the following cause, to-wit: (e. g.) Gross neglect of duty in the following alleged particulars, to-wit:

(1) He, the said----------(here give a brief statement of facts constituting one or more like instances of alleged neglect, specifying dates and places).

(2) He, the said----------(in case there are two or more different kinds or qualities of alleged neglects, it will be competent and appropriate separately to designate them in this manner).

If the said----------desire to be heard in his defense, he may appear at the office of the Governor on the----day of----------, 19----, at the hour of----------M, and he will be then and there publicly heard.

And the said----------if hereby suspended from the office of mayor of the said----------of----------, Ohio, for the period of thirty days from this date, unless sooner removed or reinstated. (The above clause as stated is to be inserted only in the event the Governor decides to suspend the mayor).

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this_____day of _____, 19____.

Governor of Ohio.

It is to be understood that the particulars under the statutory cause for removal must be such as in law to constitute the particular statutory charge. In the absence of any statement of facts, however, I cannot, in this opinion, deal with the subject of the sufficiency of any given specification or bill of particulars, further than to say, in the language that has received the approval of one supreme court of this state that "the cause must be one which touches the qualifications of the officer for the office, and shows that he is not a fit or proper person to perform the duties."

APPROVAL, FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENTS IN LUCAS COUNTY, OHIO.

HON. A. R. TAYLOR, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 27, 1919.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—COMMON PLEAS JUDGE—OFFICES IN OHIO NATIONAL GUARD.

The acceptance by a common pleas judge in Ohio of a commission as officer in the National Guard results in the vacation of his judicial office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1919.

HON. ROY H. WILLIAMS, Judge, Common Pleas Court, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your recent favor you make this inquiry:

"Does a common pleas judge vacate his office by accepting a commission as officer in the National Guard of Ohio?"

The existing provisions for the organization and maintenance of the National Guard are found in the act of congress approved June 3, 1916, section 73 of which is entitled: "Federal Oath for National Guard Officers." By this oath obedience is pledged to the orders of the President of the United States and to the Governor of the particular state. The act of course makes provision for the compensations of the officers and prescribes their general duties.

Art. IV, Sec. XIV of the Ohio constitution is in part as follows:

"The judges of the supreme court, and of the court of common pleas * * * shall receive no fees or perquisites, nor hold any other office of profit or trust, under the authority of this state, or of the United States. * * *."

Is an office in the National Guard comprehended within this language? The authorities seem to warrant a clear, affirmative answer. Such officer receives compensation, exercises an authority conferred upon him by virtue of the acts of congress under its power to raise and maintain an army, and assist in the performance of a sovereign function of government.

In State vs. Mayor of Jersey City, 42 Atl. 782, the supreme court of New Jersey held that the position of colonel in the Fourth Regiment of New Jersey Volunteers of the United States army was an office.

In Kerr vs. Jones, 19 Ind. 351, it was ruled that the office of colonel of volunteers in the military service of the United States was a lucrative office and that its acceptance would vacate the office of reporter of decisions of the supreme court of the state.

In State vs. De Gress, 53 Tex. 387, the court said:

"By express enactment, officers of the army on the retired list constitute a part of the army of the United States, retain the actual rank held by them at the date of retirement, receive seventy-five per centum of the pay of that rank, are subject to trial by courts-martial for any breach of the rules and articles of war, and may be assigned to duty at the soldiers' home. * * *

That such an officer holds a lucrative office under the authority of the United States, or, in the language of our state constitution, 'an office of profit or trust under the United States,' is too plain to admit of being made more so."

"An office to which salary, compensation or fees are attached is a lucrative office, or, as it is frequently called, an office of profit. The amount of the salary or compensation attached is not material."

Mechem's Public Offices and Officers, Sec. 13.

"An office whose duties and functions require the exercise of discretion, judgment, experience and skill is an office of trust, and it is not necessary that the officer should have the handling of public money or property, or the care and oversight of some pecuniary interest of the government."

Id., Sec. 16.

"Military officers are those who have command in the army."

Id., Sec. 22.

It seems clear that an individual can not serve as common pleas judge and at the same time hold a commission in the National Guard.

The next question is, what is the effect of such judge's accepting such commission? The American rule is well stated in Throop's Public Officers, at Sec. 31:

"In many of the states of the Union, it is expressly forbidden by the constitution or by statute, that one person should hold two public offices under the state government, and that an officer under the state government should hold office under the United States government. * * * It is, however, the acceptance of, not the election or appointment to, an incompatible office, which vacates the first office; and that result follows from such acceptance, without any legal proceedings to oust the party from his first office."

Authorities sustaining this view are collected in the foot note to Attorney-General vs. Marston (N. H.), 13 L. R. A. 670. See also Howard vs. Harrington, 114 Me 443; L. R. A. 1917a, p. 211, 225 (annotation).

A similar conclusion was reached in State ex rel. vs. Mason, 61 O. S. 513. A different constitutional provision was there considered but the holding was that the acceptance of a federal judgeship by a state representative prevented his receiving further compensation as such.

You are therefore advised that the acceptance by a common pleas judge in Ohio of a commission as officer in the National Guard results in the vacation of his judicial office.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION—SPECIAL MEETINGS HOW CALLED AND WHAT MINUTES SHOULD SHOW—MEETING AT CEDAR POINT IRREGULAR.

1. The meeting of the state board of education at Cedar Point on June 24th was not a special meeting properly called under the law. A special meeting of the state board of education may be held at any place within the state, but to make such meeting legal the president of the state board of education shall make the call, or it can be made by a majority of the board, said call to be sent to all members of the board.

2. The minutes of the state board of education, in covering a special meeting of such board, should show by whom such special meeting was called, and the reasons therefor; and all minutes of the board should be signed by the president and secretary in the permanent record.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1919.

HON. ALFRED VIVIAN, President State Board of Education, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion on the following statement of facts:

"The act providing for the organization of a board of education to take charge of the vocational work under the terms of the federal vocational act commonly known as the Smith-Hughes bill, provides that the state board shall hold regular meetings in the office of the superintendent of public instruction and special meetings at any other place in the state upon the call of the president or of the majority of the board.

"At the regular June meeting of the board it was voted to hold the next meeting at Cedar Point at the time of the meeting of the State Teachers Association. Four members of the board of education as well as the supervisors of agricultural and home economics education attended that meeting. The auditor of state has refused the payment of their expense accounts on the ground that such a meeting was not within the intent of the law.

"May I have a ruling as to whether this meeting was or was not within the intent of the law by which the state board of education was created?"

In arriving at an answer to the above question, it is necessary to quote the statutes establishing the state board of education of Ohio and the requirements relative to the meetings whether regular or special, of such board.

Following an act of congress, entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for co-operation with the states in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for co-operation with the states in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure," there was created in Ohio the state board of education as the agency with which the Federal government would have to deal in the matter of joint work pertaining to vocational education in agriculture the trades and industries. In creating such board, section 367-3 G. C. provides:

"In order to carry out the provisions of this act, there is hereby created the state board of education, which shall consist of the superintendent of public instruction, and six appointive members, who shall be persons of recognized standing and ability in business, the professions, industry or the trades, to be appointed by the governor. Not more than three of the appointive members shall be members of the same political party. Two of the six appointive members shall be appointed for a period of two years, two for a period of four years, and two for a period of six years, and at the expiration of their terms their successors shall be appointed for terms of six years each. The board shall elect one of its appointive members to serve as president."

The matter of meetings of the board is covered in section 367-4 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The superintendent of public instruction shall serve as secretary of the board and shall designate some employe of the department of public instruction to act as clerk, who shall take charge of all papers and perform all clerical work in conection with the meetings of the board. Regular meetings of the board shall be held at the office of the superintendent of public instruction and special meetings may be held at any place within the state, upon the call of the president or of a majority of the board. No compensation shall be paid to any member of the board, but each shall receive his necessary and actual expenses incurred in attending meetings and while engaged in performing the duties imposed by this act. All such expenses and any other expenses incurred by the board in the official conduct of its business as authorized in this act shall be paid upon receipt of itemized bills authorized by the board and approved by the president. Vouchers for said bills shall be drawn by the auditor of state, payable from appropriations made by the general assembly."

The pertinent part of such section bearing upon the question at hand, is this sentence:

"Regular meetings of the board shall be held at the office of the superintendent of public instruction and special meetings may be held at any place within the state upon the call of the president or of a majority of the board."

This sentence means that there is an absolute distinction between a special meeting and a regular meeting; that the regular meetings of the board must be held in the office of the superintendent of public instruction at Columbus, but special meetings can be held at other points in the state, but there must be a call either upon the part of the president or of a majority of the board. You say at the regular June meeting of the board it was voted to hold the next meeting at Cedar Point at the time of the meeting of the state teachers association. Following such vote at the June meeting of the state board of education four of the six members, as well as the supervisor of agriculture and home economics education, went to Cedar Point at the time of the state teachers association convention at that place, but now the auditor of state has refused the payment of their expense accounts on the ground that such a meeting was not within the intent of the law. It is therefore necessary to examine the minutes of the Ohio state board of education, in order to find out just how this meeting came to be held at Cedar Point on the day in question.

It is found that during the current year the state board of education, by their minutes, met in Columbus in the office of the superintendent of public instruction on the following days: January 21, 1919, March 18, 1919, April 10, 1919, May 12, 1919, and June 2, 1919, which seems to carry with it that the state board of education holds monthly meetings, although no minutes appear for the month of February, 1919.

The following entries relative to adjournment appear from the records:

On January 21, 1919, the last entry is:

"On motion the meeting adjourned."

On March 18, 1919, the entry is:

"On motion the meeting adjourned."

On April 10, 1919, the last entry is:

"On motion the board adjourned."

On May 12, 1919, the last entry is:

"On motion the board adjourned to meet again on June 2d. Carried."

On June 2, 1919, the last entry is:

"Moved and seconded that the board adjourn to meet again at Cedar Point on Tuesday morning, June 24th, at 9:00 o'clock. Carried."

Following this the next entry bears upon the meeting at Cedar Point and the first paragraph of the minutes of the Cedar Point meeting reads as follows:

"COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1919.

A special meeting of the Ohio State Board of Education was held at Cedar Point, Hotel Breakers, on Tuesday afternoon, June 24th, at 4 o'clock, with president Vivian, secretary Pearson, members Edmund, Condon, Mrs. Hughes, Eldridge, supervisors Heusch, Stewart, Mrs. Adams and Miss Kaufman, present. McCune absent.

Upon suggestion of Dr. Condon the reading of the minutes of previous meeting was dispensed with."

The minutes show that at this Cedar Point meeting there was one motion made and carried, that being that the Federal board be requested to rule on the matter of securing funds for the transportation of teachers visiting home project work. The last entry of the minutes of the Cedar Point meeting reads as follows:

> "On motion of Mr. Edmund, seconded by Mrs. Hughes, the board adjourned to meet Tuesday, July 8th, at 9 a. m., at the office of the superintendent of public instruction, in Columbus."

It frequently has been held by the courts that a board of education, and in fact any body having similar functions to perform, speaks only from its records, and, as given above, the minutes of the June 2d meeting, at Columbus, shows that it was moved and seconded, though nothing is shown by whom such motions were made, that the board adjourn to meet again at Cedar Point on Tuesday, June 24, at 9:00 o'clock.

The minutes of the next meeting, it will be noted, were dated Columbus, as of June 26th, that is, two days after the time of the meeting at Cedar Point. It seems also that the meeting was called for 9:00 o'clock, June 24th, and the description shows in the minutes of June 26th that the board met on Tuesday, afternoon, June 24th, at 4:00 o'clock. These minutes of June 26th start out by saying "a special meeting of the Ohio state board of education was held at Cedar Point, Hotel Breakers, on Tuesday afternoon, June 24th, at 4:00 o'clock," with various members and board employes present, without showing by whom the special meeting was called or for what purpose.

> "A board of education can speak only through its records, and these must accordingly be complete, showing just what the board did and no more * * * The records of a special meeting should state by whom the meeting was called, as the legality of the proceedings depends upon the legality of the call." 11 Mass., 477; 17 Me., 444.

The question before us is whether the meeting of the Ohio state board of education and its employes at Cedar Point was a special meeting which may be held at any place within the state, but must be upon the call of the president or the call of a majority of the board (section 367-4 G. C.), or whether, referring to the minutes of June 2, 1919, it was an adjourned session of the June meeting, since it was provided for by motion regularly made and recorded in the minutes of the meeting of June 2d. The minutes say in the closing paragraphs of June 2d, that the board adjourned to meet again during June, that is on June 24th, at 9:00 o'clock a. m., but actually met at 4:00 o'clock p. m. on that day, and the minutes were written at Columbus under date of June 26th. Here the board acted three weeks ahead in setting its meeting at Cedar Point on June 24th, and as far as can be ascertained, there was no call for the meeting issued to the members of the board by the president of the board or a call issued by four members of the board, that is, a majority of the six composing the board. The minutes of the board show that the board met in June and then by motion, spread upon its minutes, agreed to meet again three weeks later. The contemplation of the law is that a special meeting is one for which there is a special reason in its being called, and this reason must be stated in the call of the president or a majority of the board, and there is nothing in a study of the minutes to indicate that there was a special reason for the meeting of the board at that time or a special reason why it should be held at some specified place other than Columbus, and it would seem, therefore, that as far as the statutes are concerned, the meeting held at Cedar Point by the members and employes of the state board of education was not a special meeting, in compliance with the statute, because the minutes do not show that it was called by the president or by a majority of the board, but was a meeting held following a motion which said that the board was to meet again at Cedar Point on Tuesday morning, June 24th, this being the same language in calling the June 24th meeting that was used to call the June 2d meeting, because the minutes of May 12, 1919, close as follows:

"On motion the board adjourned to meet again on June 2d."

It may be said that the point at issue could be very easily cleared up if the minutes of this board made it clear that the meeting was a special meeting and called in the proper way, with the reasons given in the minutes as to why it was called; but an examination of the minutes of this board does not show that the board met "upon the call of the president or of a majority of the board" (the language of the statute), but upon their own motion on June 2, 1919, that they would meet again on June 24th at Cedar Point, and nothing indicates that this was a "special" meeting in the language of such minutes of June 2, and regular meetings must be held in Columbus.

On the question submitted, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. The meeting of the state board of education at Cedar Point on June 24th was not a special meeting properly called under the law. A special meeting of the state board of education may be held at any place within the state, but to make such meeting legal the president of the state board of education shall make the call, or it can be made by a majority of the board, said call to be sent to all members of the board

2. The minutes of the state board of education in covering a special meeting of such board, should show by whom such special meeting was called. and the reason therefor; and all minutes of the board shall be signed by the president and secretary in the permanent record.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COMMISSIONER OF SECURITIES — AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE CERTIFICATE PERMITTING DISPOSAL OF "INTERIM CERTIFICATES" OF THE NATIONAL HARDWARE STORES, INC.

The commissioner of securities is authorized to issue his certificate permitting disposal in Ohio of "interim certificates" of the National Hardware Stores, Inc., a corporation of New York, which "interim certificates" simply constitute an evidence of subscription to the capital stock of said corporation, bearing 7 per cent interest and redeemable in the preferred stock of said corporation when the same may be issued in compliance with the laws of New York, the object of the issuance of such interim certificates being to make available to the corporation at the time of making application for authorization to increase its capitalization an amount of assets equal to the amount of the proposed increase, and the undertaking of the corporation being to redeem such certificates in shares of its duly authorized preferred capital stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO. October 28, 1919.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

I have your recent communication submitting for the opinion of this department thereon the following statement of facts and inquiry:

"Will you kindly render to this department an opinion on the following question:

The National Hardware Stores, Inc., is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York which is proposed to increase its capitalization. The laws of the state of New York provide that before an increase may be authorized the amount of such increase must be subscribed and paid for in advance. Said company is making application to this department for permission to enter this state to dispose of shares representing said proposed increase in its capitalization and to issue interim certificates conditioned upon a sufficient amount of subscriptions or shares being sold to authorize the state of New York to issue a certificate of increase. Has this department authority to issue a certificate of corporate compliance to a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York with a present capitalization issued and fully paid for, permitting it to enter the state of Ohio to solicit and sell interim certificates for the purpose of increasing its capitalization, the actual certificates to be issued when the increased capitalization has been authorized by the state of New York?".

With your communication you also submit considerable data in the way of reports required under the law to be submitted in connection with the application for certification of the securities proposed to be placed upon the market in this state and from a consideration of which it appears that the National Hardware Stores, Inc., is now proposing to increase its capital stock to $1,000,000 preferred, 7 per cent participating cumulative stock, and 7 per cent non-participating cumulative stock of the par value of $100 per share, and also to increase its no par value stock to 60,000 shares, it being stated that the present capitalization of the company consists of 10 shares of preferred stock of the par value of $100 and 2,000 shares of common stock of no par value, all of which has been issued and the preferred stock paid for at par, while the common stock was paid for at $5.00 per share, thus making a total cash capitalization of $11,000 paid in.

It is stated that the corporation is in process of enlarging and extending the scope of its business, necessitating increased capitalization, and that the plan to issue interim certificates has been adopted out of a consideration of certain requirements of the New York law where the company is located, that the authorization to increase its capital stock may not be effected until the amount of the increase has been received in money or property by the corporation.

The provision of the law said to be applicable is section 20 of the stock corporation law of New York, which is as follows:

"No corporation formed pursuant to section 19 hereto, shall begin to carry on business or shall incur any debts until the amount of capital stated in its certificate of incorporation shall have been fully paid in money or in property taken at its actual value.

In case the amount of the capital stated in its certificate of incorporation shall be increased as herein provided, such corporation shall not increase the amount of its indebtedness then existing until it shall have received in money or property the amount of such increase of its stated capital.

The directors of the corporation assenting to the creation of any debt in violation of this section, shall be liable jointly and severally for such debt."

It is further stated that the "interim certificates" proposed to be issued constitute in fact simply an evidence of subscription to the preferred capital stock of the company, which certificates are interest bearing at the rate of 7 per cent from the date of their issuance and are exchangeable for participating preferred stock of the company when its issuance is authorized; and further, that upon the procurement of the subscriptions for the entire amount of such preferred stock and the receipt of payment therefor at par, or from time to time as such subscriptions are taken and paid for, the corporation will make application for authorization to issue such stock.

While I have not been furnished with a draft of the proposed "interim certificates," I am informed by the president of the corporation and by its counsel, that the certificates will embody the corporation's specific undertaking to deliver the preferred capital stock of the corporation as described in its financial circular of January 1, 1919, a copy of which is furnished me, and discloses the character and attributes of the stock to be as outlined above.

These certificates thus evidence simply the obligation arising upon a subscription for specific capital stock of the corporation and payment therefor, and are employed, as stated by the corporation's counsel, by reason of an administrative construction of the New York corporation law requiring that a proposed increase in the capitalization of a corporation amenable to such law must be fully subscribed and paid in before the authorization for such increase may be procured.

Upon this state of facts it is to be determined whether the commissioner of securities is authorized to act as provided in the so-called Blue Sky Law in the matter of issuing a certificate as a prerequisite to the disposal of securities.

Pertinent sections of the law will be noted. The term "securities" as comprehended by the law in question is substantially defined in the first section thereof as follows:

> "Section 6373-1. Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall, within this state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stock, stock certificates, bonds, debentures, collateral trust certificates or other similar instruments (all hereinafter termed 'securities') evidencing title to or interest in property, issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, copartnership or association (except corporations not for profit,) or by any taxing subdivision of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so to do as hereinafter provided."

It is provided in section 6373-2, subdivision f:

> "As used in this act, the term * * * 'dispose of' shall be construed to mean 'sell, barter, pledge or assign for a valuable consideration or obtain subscriptions for.'"

Thus it is at once apparent that the obtaining of subscriptions of the capital stock of the corporation which it is proposed to issue upon qualifying under the provisions of the New York law constitutes an activity comprehended by the terms of the Ohio law, and renders the corporation engaging in the procuring of such subscriptions amenable to the requirements of the law.

Section 6373-14 provides:

> "For the purpose of organizing or promoting any company, or assisting in the flotation of the securities of any company after organization, no issuer or underwriter of such securities and no person or company for or on behalf of such issuer or underwriter shall, within this state, dispose or attempt to dispose of any such security until such commissioner shall issue his certificate as provided in section 6373-16 of the General Code * * *."

From the provisions of the law which have already been noted, it is determined that the taking of subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation in question or the disposing of its "interim certificates," however the transaction be viewed, constitutes a disposing of securities, which requires compliance with provisions of the law which direct that the corporation shall file with the commissioner of securities an application for the certificate provided in section 6373-16 G. C. and certain information relative to its organization and the proposed disposal of its securities.

Section 6373-16 provides that the commissioner shall have power to make such examination of the issuer of the securities as he may deem advisable, and that after completion of his investigation,

> "if it shall appear that the law has been complied with and that the business of the applicant is not fraudulently conducted, and that the proposed disposal of such securities or other property is not upon grossly unfair terms, and that the issuer or vendor is solvent, upon the payment of a fee of ten dollars, the commissioner shall issue his certificate to that effect, authorizing such disposal."

It is apparent that under the provisions of the sections which have been considered above, certain of the conditions which must be found by the commissioner preliminary to his issuance of certificate for disposal of the securities relate to questions of fact relative to the solvency of the issuer and the fairness of the proposed terms for disposal of the securities and the absence of fraud in the conduct of the applicant's business.

These questions of fact are to be determined by the commissioner from his investigation and from the information which he is authorized to require from the applicant.

The sole question to be now determined is one of law and really arises from the language of the section last quoted prescribing as a condition to the issuance of the certificate by the commissioner that "it shall appear that the law has been complied with."

Considering this question specifically, I am of the opinion that the method adopted by the corporation for effecting the increase of its authorized capitalization is not inconsistent with the letter and apparent spirit and purpose of the section of the New York law requiring that in case of increase of capitalization "such corporation shall not increase the amount of its indebtedness then existing until it shall have received in money or property the amount of such increase of its stated capital."

By the plan to take subscriptions and issue "interim certificates" evidencing the same, the corporation proposes to procure the equivalent of the proposed new issue of stock in money or property before the issuance of such stock, and when from an examination of the terms of the proposed "interim certificate" you find its provisions and undertaking to be in accord with the plan outlined in the communication at hand, and that the rights and interests of the subscribers are fairly set forth and safeguarded therein, and have further found the other conditions of fact enumerated in the statute favorable to the applicant, you are advised that the conditions of the Blue Sky Law have been met and the issuance of your certificate is authorized.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ARE WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO EMPLOY FIELD WORKER TO PLACE DEPENDENT CHILDREN IN PRIVATE FAMILIES—SEE SECTION 3092 G. C., 108 O. L., 51.

Under section 3092 G. C., as amended in house bill 246, 108 O. L., 51, the county commissioners are without authority to employ a field worker who will place its dependent children in private families and exercise supervision over them after placement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1919.

The Board of State Charities, H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "A private child caring organization proposes to contract with the county commissioners in one of the counties of Ohio for the care of its dependent children pursuant to the provisions of the amended section of 3092 of the General Code as found in H. B. 246.
> In such case, have the county commissioners authority to enter into contract with this institution not merely for the care of its wards on a per capita basis, but may they in addition to this employ a field worker who will place children in family homes and exercise supervision over them after placement?"

Article X, section 5, of the constitution of Ohio, and section 3092 G. C., as amened in house bill 246 (108 O. L., 51), are pertinent to your inquiry.

The constitutional section above referred to prohibits payment of money from the county treasury unless authorized by law. Section 3092 is as follows:

> "In any county where such home has not already been provided the board of county commissioners may enter into a contract for the care of its neglected or dependent children with a county children's home, or with any institution or association in the state which has for one of its objects the care of dependent or neglected children, provided such institution or association has been duly certified by the board of state charities; or the board of county commissioners may pay reasonable board and provide suitable clothing and personal necessities as well as medical, dental and optical examination and treatment of dependent or neglected children who may be placed in the care of private families within the county. Provided that in any such case such dependent or neglected children shall be duly committed to the aforesaid institution or association-or placed in the care of a private family by the juvenile court as provided by law.''

The word "home" as used in the first line of this section refers to a county children's home by reference to the preceding sections and it is to be noted that this section only applies where a county children's home has not been provided. Under it the county commissioners are authorized to enter into a contract "for the care of its neglected or dependent children" with a county children's home or such institution having for one of its objects the care of such children as has been duly certified by the board of state charities. This is the provision of the first part of the section down to the first semi-colon and is complete in itself. Then follows provision for an alternative in this that the section provides that such commissioners may pay reasonable board and provide clothing and other necessities, as well as medical, dental and optical treatment for such children in "the care of private families within the county."

The provisions relating to placing such children in a county children's home, or in the institution above referred to, is "for the care" of such children, while in the latter part of the section the different things which the commissioners are authorized to contract and pay for are specifically mentioned.

The proposition involved in your inquiry, as stated in your letter, is something "in addition" to the care of such children, and questions the authority of the commissioners to "employ a field worker who will place children in family homes and exercise supervision over them after placement," as stated in your letter. The duties of such employe towards such children cared for outside of a county children's home would be similar to those of a superintendent of a county children's home, and would not be without similarity to those duties of a juvenile probation officer.

The question here is one which goes to the power and authority of the county commissioners, as said in the case of Jones, Auditor, vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., page 189:

> "The board of county commissioners represents the county, in respect to its financial affairs, only so far as authority is given to it by statute."

Bearing in mind the firmly established rule in this state that public funds can only be paid out by authority of law, if the employment and services of the field worker are, as stated in your letter "in addition" to the care of such children, then it would follow that such employment is not authorized by section 3092, under which the commissioners may contract "for the care" of such children. In view of the fact that under the first part of this section it is contemplated that such children will be placed either in a county children's home or an institution which has for one of its objects the care of such children, it would seem that such supervision would be furnished by the institution or home in which such child was placed and would be included in the care furnished by such home or institution and for which the commissioners would pay.

As already pointed out, the latter part of the section referred to relates exclusively to the care of such children in private families. This part of the section makes no provision for the employment of such a field worker. Can it be said that this section furnishes clear warrant for such expenditure of public funds?

We may turn to section 3092 (103 O. L., 891) before its amendment by house bill 246. At that time this section in part provided for transferring such children to the nearest children's home, or the commissioners could lease suitable premises for that purpose,

> "Which shall be furnished, provided and managed in all respects as provided by law for the support and management of children's homes * * *. But the commissioners may provide for the care and support of such children within their respective counties, in the manner deemed best for the interest of such children, which may include the payment of board for such children in a private home."

Here was ample authority and wide discretion vested in the county commissioners in this, that they had authority to provide for the care and support of such children "in the manner deemed best for the interest of such children."

The omission of this grant of discretion and authority from the new act, considered with its present lack of express or implied authority to employ a field worker, leads this department to the conclusion that the county commissioners are not authorized to enter into the contract stated in your letter.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF TOLEDO—FORFEITURE OF BAIL—MAY AT SAME TERM VACATE FORFEITURE—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE IS AUTHORIZED TO INVEST SURPLUS FUNDS ARISING FROM CEMETERY CHARGES—SUCH BONDS IN CUSTODY OF CITY TREASURER.

1. Where the municipal court of Toledo has declared the forfeiture of bail, it may at the same term vacate and set aside such record of forfeiture.

2. Under section 4167, the director of public service is authorized to invest surplus funds in his hands arising from regular collections from the cemetery charges, and the bonds or other form of investment purchased by such funds shall be held in the custody of the city treasurer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "Following the interview of this morning between your Mr. Martin and State Examiner John E. Diemer of this bureau, we are respectfully requesting written opinion upon the following matters:
> Under house bill 79, passed by the recent general assembly, money in lieu of bail is authorized in such court by section 1579-311, pages 8 and 9.
> Question 1. After such cash bail has been received and the defendant fails to appear and the court orders the bail forfeited, may such court later revoke or set aside the forfeiture of such cash bail?
> We are calling your attention to opinion of the Attorney-General of May 27, 1912, page 1747 of the Annual Reports for 1912, and in case of any surplus accrued from the regular collections of cemetery charges by the director of public service accumulating to an extent to justify investment:
> Question 2. Are such investments to be made by the director of public service and are such investments to be held in the custody of the director of public service, or should such investment be made by council and be held in the custody of clerk of council?"

Sections 1579-276 et seq. (107 O. L., 704) creating the Toledo municipal court, sections 1579-296, 1579-287, 1579-311 and sections 13550 et seq. are pertinent to your first question:

Section 1579-276, after establishing such municipal court, fixes the terms thereof as follows:

> "Sec. 2. The calendar of the municipal court shall be divided into four terms of three months each, beginning respectively on the first day of January, April, July and October of each year."

In passing it is here noted that this court is a court having regular and stated terms.

Section 1579-287, as amended in H. B. 79, as to such court's jurisdiction, provides:

> "In all civil actions and proceedings of law for the recovery of money or personal property of which the court of common pleas have or may be given jurisdiction when the amount claimed by any party * * * does not exceed seven hundred and fifty dollars."

Section 1579-296 provides that the laws relating to practice and procedure in actions in the court of common pleas, justices of the peace and police courts, are applicable to like proceedings in the municipal court so far as consistent with the municipal court act.

Section 1579-311 was amended to provide for the admission of a person accused of a misdemeanor to bail by a cash deposit in lieu of a bond and provides "the bail so given or the money so deposited shall continue until the case is finally disposed of."

It is to be noted that the Toledo municipal court act contains no provision as to the forfeit of such cash recognizance.

Section 13550 provides in part:

> "The court, in which the action for the penalty of a forfeited recognizance is brought, may remit or reduce part or the whole of such penalty and render judgment thereof according to the circumstances of the case and the situation of the party, and upon such terms and conditions as seem just and reasonable."

Section 13551 provides for the further right to review the judgment on such forfeited recognizance "when after such rendition, the accused has been arrested and surrendered to the proper court, to be tried on such charge."

Whether or not the Toledo municipal court would have jurisdiction of an action on a forfeited recognizance, the penalty for which is not over $750.00, is not here passed upon, as your question may be answered by consideration of the control which the Toledo municipal court has over its own records.

Similar questions were considered in opinion 251, dated May 2, 1919, directed to Hon. Charles R. Sargent, prosecuting attorney, Jefferson, Ohio, and opinion No. 446, dated June 30, 1919, and directed to your department. The latter opinion cites and quotes from the case of Antonio vs. Milliken, 29 O. C. A., 305, wherein the power of the municipal court of Youngstown to suspend sentence was under consideration. In this case, as in the former opinion of this department, it is pointed out that the power to modify judgments during the term in which they are rendered, is an attribute of courts of general jurisdiction which have terms.

Pointing out that the Youngstown municipal court act provided for the terms of that court, the court held that it had power to suspend the execution of its sentence "during the term at which sentence was passed, even though the defendant had entered upon the imprisonment ordered by the sentence." The reasoning of the court was that the court had such power "upon the theory that a court has control over its judgments and orders during the term at which they are made," and concluded:

> "The judge of the municipal court had a right in the case at bar to direct the release of the prisoner."

Consistent with the foregoing opinions, and the holding established in this and other cases in this state, it is concluded that during the term at which the bond is forfeited, the court may later revoke or set aside such forfeiture.

Your second question is as follows:

> "Are such investments to be made by the director of public service and are such investments to be held in the custody of the director of public service, or should such investment be made by council and be held in the custody of clerk of council? "

Sections 4167, 4168, 4169, 4170 and 4300 G. C. are pertinent. Section 4167 relating to the duty and power of the director of public service, in connection with cemeteries, provides in part: that such director

"shall have entire charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots, and of the laying off and embellishing the grounds. He may receive donations by bequest, devise, or deed of gift, or otherwise, or money, or other property, the principal or interest of which is to be used for the enlargement, improvement, embellishment or care of the cemetery grounds generally, or for any particular part * * * as the donor directs * * *. He shall sell lots, receive payment therefor * * * and invest, manage and control property received by donations and surplus funds in his hands from any source whatever."

Section 4168 provides that the city may accept and maintain permanent funds for the care of lots in such cemeteries. When such a permanent fund is received, the director is authorized to enter full details of such endowment and the expenditure thereof in his books. keeping each case separately.

By the terms of section 4169, the director is ordered to turn "over to the council property on hand or held by him as a permanent fund, for purposes under his control * * *. The council shall acknowledge receipt thereof in writing to the director signed by its clerk. By resolution duly passed and entered on the minutes of its proceedings, the council shall pledge the faith and credit of the corporation to forever hold such money as a permanent fund, and pay in semi-annual payments, to the director as interest on the funds, sufficient to provide perpetual care of the lot and lots as agreed by the director. The council and its successors shall invest and keep invested such funds in interest bearing debts of the city, if any, and if no such debts are owing by the city, in safe interest bearing bonds, or stocks for the benefit of such cemetery funds, that will bear as great an income as possible, and all such money and the income thereof shall be exempt from taxation, the same as other cemetery property."

Section 4300 provides that:

"The treaurer shall receive and disburse all funds of the corporation including the school funds, and such other funds as arise in or belong to any department or part of the corporation government."

It is to be noted that under sections 4167 and 4168, at least three classes of receipts may be received by the director, as follows: (1) receipts from the sale of lots or other cemetery charges; (2) donation funds to be used and expended immediately; and (3) permanent endowment funds for the perpetual care of such cemetery or certain lots therein. It is noted that your question relates only to "regular collections of cemetery charges" and eliminates what has been above termed classes 2 and 3.

It is to be noted that in section 4167, the director is given charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots. In this section he is also authorized to receive bequests for the use of the cemetery, or a part thereof as the donor may direct. As to these classes of receipts, the last part of the section directs that the director shall "invest, manage and control them."

As to permanent endowments, however, a different course is prescribed. Upon receipt of these the director issues a written receipt and acknowledgment, pledging the faith and credit of the city to the proper use of such funds. A particular record is made on the director's minutes, exhibiting full details of the transaction.

Under section 4169 such fund is turned over to the city council, which issues a receipt to the director. Again the credit of the city is pledged on the council's minutes. In this section as to the permanent endowment funds, council "and its successors shall invest and keep invested such funds."

Consideration has been given the opinion of the former Attorney-General, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. 2, page 1747, and the conclusion therein reached, so far as applicable to the question raised in this inquiry, is approved. It is to be noted, however, that in that opinion only permanent endowment funds were under consideration.

Consideration of these sections leads to the conclusion that the investment of regular collections of cemetery charges is to be made by the director of public service under section 4165. A proper record of such investment should be made by the cemetery secretary and the investment held in the custody of the city treasurer.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

AGRICULTURE SEED LICENSE—AN INCORPORATED COMPANY HAVING PAID LICENSE FEE TO SELL AGRICULTURAL SEED IS NOT REQUIRED TO PAY SAME FOR BRANCH HOUSES UNDER SAME NAME IN OHIO.

An incorporated company having paid the license fee required by section 5805-13 (section 13, amended senate bill No. 11, 108, O. L., 52), and having received from the secretary of agriculture a certificate to sell agricultural seed, is not required to pay a separate license fee for its branch houses operated under the same name within the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1919.

The Department of Agriculture, Division of Feeds and Fertilizers, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgemnt is made of the receipt of your letter requesting the opinion of this department as follows:

> "The B. Milling Co. writes us that they are an incorporated company, having four houses, 'branches,' all operating under same name, and requesting to be advised whether one agricultural seed license will cover all places, or if a separate license is required for each separate branch.
> We desire to know whether or not one license will cover all branch houses, whether located in the same town or in different towns in different sections of the state."

Section 5805-13 (section 13 of amended senate bill 11) is pertinent. This is the license fee section of the new agricultural seed act and in part provides:

> "For the purpose of defraying the cost of inspection and analyses of agricultural seeds * * * before any person, firm, company or corporation shall sell, offer for sale, or expose for sale in this state any of the agricultural seeds * * * he or they shall pay each year a license fee * * * and shall receive from said secretary of agriculture a certificate to sell agricultural seeds until the first day of January next following."

For the purpose stated in this section, this license fee is imposed on the business of selling or exposing "for sale in this state any of the agricultural seeds." It is to be noted that the selling or exposing for sale does not relate to such sale or exposure for sale in any particular part of the state, but merely "in this state." It is also noted that but one license fee is required and but one certificate is issued, the act requiring the payment of a "license fee" and the issuance of "a certificate."

The opinion of this department is that separate licenses are not required for branch houses of a company which has complied with this section by the payment of the license fee required and to which has been issued by the secretary of agriculture "a certificate to sell agricultural seeds."

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE JUDGE—FEMALE PERSON APPOINTED TO ACCOMPANY SHERIFF TO INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE-MINDED WITH A PATIENT—EXPENSES AND FEES ALLOWABLE—EXPENSES ALLOWABLE TO PERSON APPOINTED BY PROBATE JUDGE TO CONVEY PATIENT TO OHIO HOSPITAL FOR EPILEPTICS.

1. A female person appointed by the probate judge to accompany the sheriff and a feeble-minded person to the institution for the feeble-minded is entitled to receive only such fees and allowances for expenses as are provided by section 1981 G. C., as amended by H. B. No. 108 O. L. 262, to wit, a fee of two dollars, and mileage at the legal rate of railroad transportation for the distance actually and necessarily traveled. Expenses for meals can not be allowed such assistant.

2. A person appointed by the probate judge to convey a patient to the Ohio hospital for epileptics at Gallipolis is entitled to receive a fee of two dollars for such service and likewise traveling and "incidental expenses." "Incidental expenses" include reasonable expenses for the meals of such person.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently wrote this office to the following effect:

> "My attention has been called by the sheriff to a bill, the following of which is a true copy, for the transporting of a female patient to the Feeble-Minded Hospital at Columbus, Ohio, on Friday, August 29, under section 1981 limiting the allowance to $2.00 and 2 cents per mile, and under section 1959 requiring the appointment of a suitable female assistant to accompany the sheriff and such insane person to said hospital:
> 'Assistant's expenses:
> Railway fare round trip $7 40
> Two meals on trip 1 00
> Total $8 40
> Assistant's fees:
> Mileage 240 miles at 2 cents per mile $4 80
> For making trip 2 00
> Total ..... $6 80'

Your attention is called to the fact that the railroad fare for the round trip was $4.80; that the compensation to such female for services was $2.00, making a total of $6.80. That the actual railroad fare was $7.40, and the actual expenses of the trip being two meals $1.00, making total of $8.40. That for the reason of the expense being greater than the amount of money received, the sheriff will be unable to procure a female attendant to transport such persons to Columbus, and that the institution at Gallipolis being much farther and more expensive to access, he is inquiring what can be done to carry out his duties in this matter."

Section 1893 G. C., as amended in S. B. No. 153, 108 O. L. 552, says in part:

"Feeble-minded persons * * * shall be admitted to the institutions for the feeble-minded * * *. Such persons shall be * * * admitted to the institutions for the feeble-minded in the same manner and by like proceedings as are provided for the commitment and admission of insane persons to the state hospitals for the insane * * * and the same fees, costs and expenses that are allowed and paid in lunacy cases shall be allowed, taxed and paid for similar services in all proceedings related to feeble-minded persons * * *."

Section 1959 G. C., to which you refer, is a part of chapter 7 of title V of the General Code, entitled "Hospitals for the Insane," and reads thus:

"When advised that the patient will be received, the probate judge shall forthwith issue his warrant to the sheriff, commanding him forthwith to take charge of and convey such insane person to the hospital. If the probate judge is satisfied, from proof, that an assistant is necessary, he may appoint one person as such. If the insane person is a female, he shall appoint a suitable female assistant to accompany the sheriff and such insane person to the hospital."

Section 1981 G. C., to which you also refer, is likewise a part of the same chapter of the General Code. This section was recently amended by H. B. 143, 108 O. L. 262, 263, effective August 11, 1919, and now reads, in part, as follows:

"* * *. The costs and expenses, other than the fees of the probate judge and sheriff, to be paid under the provisions of this chapter, shall be as follows: * * * to one assistant to convey to the hospital, when authorized by the probate judge, two dollars and mileage at the legal rate of railroad transportation; all mileage herein shall be for the distance actually and necessarily traveled."

The underscored words in the above quoted section are new matter. They take the place of the following language found in said section, prior to its recent amendment:

"* * * two dollars and two cents per mile each way."

It thus appears that the legislature has remedied the difficulty spoken of in your letter. In fact, the amendment to section 1981 G. C. was in effect on August 29, 1919, when you say the services were rendered by the female assistant mentioned in your letter. Such assistant is therefore entitled to receive "mileage at the legal rate of railroad transportation," which, under present conditions, will, of course, be more than two cents per mile.

Your statement is also noted that said assistant, in performing the services noted incurred the expense of two meals, costing one dollar. Your attention is called to the fact that there is no statutory authority for the payment of the "expenses" of the assistant, other than the expense of railroad transportation.

In the case of Ward vs. Russell, 57 O. S. 144, 145, it is said:

> "The right of a sheriff to mileage for transporting an insane person to one of the state hospitals for the insane, is purely statutory; he is entitled to receive for such service whatever the statute allows, and nothing more."

The same considerations apply to the payment of fees and expenses to the sheriff's assistant.

Your letter also refers to the fees and expenses payable to a person appointed by the probate judge to accompany an epileptic person committed to the Ohio hospital for epileptics at Gallipolis.

Authority for the appointment of such a person is given by section 2048 G. C which in part says:

> "If the judge deems it proper to intrust the conveyance of the patient to his parent, guardian, representative or friend, he may issue the warrant to such parent, guardian, representative or friend, instead of the sheriff."

The concluding words of the above section indicate that the person accompanying the patient to the hospital for epileptics goes in the place of, and not with, the sheriff. However, section 2044 G. C. provides that in the commitment and conveyance to the hospital of insane or dangerous epileptics, like proceedings shall be had as are provided by law for the commitment and care of the insane. Said section would doubtless authorize the appointment of an assistant to the sheriff in respect of an insane or dangerous epileptic, just as section 1959 G. C. does with respect to insane persons committed to state hospitals for the insane.

Authority for the payment of a fee of two dollars to such person appointed to accompany an epileptic who has been committed to the state hospital for epileptics is contained in section 2050 G. C., by virtue of the reference therein made to the statute giving "similar fees in the commitment of an insane person to a state hospital." Section 2050 G. C. reads in part:

> "The fees of the probate judge, physician and other officers, witnesses and persons, growing out of the admission of a patient to the hospital, shall be paid to the amount, and in the manner as similar fees in the commitment of an insane person to a state hospital. * * *."

Authority for the payment of expenses is given by section 2049 G. C., which says in part:

> "* * * The traveling and incidental expenses of the patient and of the officer or other person or persons in charge of the patient, to and from the institution shall be paid by the counties, or as provided by general provisions relating to benevolent institutions."

The words "or as provided by general provisions relating to benevolent institutions" have reference to the expenses of the patient, rather than the expenses of the person in charge of the patient. (See H. B. 723, 94 O. L. 182, and R. S., Sec. 631, now known as Sec. 1815 G. C.)

It will be noticed that section 2044 G. C. provides not only for the payment of traveling expenses of the person in charge of the patient, but for "incidental" expenses as well. Without attempting to decide what all is included in the term "incidental," I am of the opinion that it does include reasonable expenses for meals.

It thus appears that the legislature has made a more liberal provision for the expenses of a person accompanying an epileptic to a state hospital for epileptics, than for the expenses of a person accompanying an insane person to a state hospital for the insane, or a feeble-minded person to the institution for the feeble-minded, in this, that the former is entitled to a fee of two dollars and to traveling expenses (including meals), whereas the latter is entitled to a fee of two dollars and mileage at the legal rate of railroad transportation, but is not allowed the expense of meals en route.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BONDS OF MERCER COUNTY, IMPROVEMENT CHATTANOOGA ROAD IN THE SUM OF $35,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Bonds of Mercer county in the amount of $35,000 for the improvement of Chattanooga road.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to cause the notice required by section 6912 G. C. to be published for the length of time provided in said section. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing upon the question of allowing the improvement was held July 28, 1919. The notice of such hearing was published July 18th and 25th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of September 6, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published August 29th and September 5th of the same year. Section 6922 requires that such notice be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the published notice meets the requirements of section 6922 and as a result that the county commissioners were without authority to proceed to levy the assessments or to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of the same.

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Mercer county and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BONDS OF MERCER COUNTY FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN THE SUM OF $4,300.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Bonds of Mercer county in the amount of $4,300.00 for the improvement of Bruns road.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript discloses that the county commissioners failed to publish for the required length of time before the date set for hearing objections to said improvement the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held August 21, 1919, and notice was published August 8th and 15th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, is special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that notice of the hearing of September 8, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on August 29th and September 5th of the same year. Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922.

(3) The resolution of January 13, 1919 fails to determine the kind of the improvement, and this omission is not cured by any subsequent legislation of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above I am of the opinion that said bonds are not valid obligations of Mercer county and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BOND ISSUE MERCER COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN THE SUM OF $5,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Bonds of Mercer county in the amount of $5,000 for the improvement of Fullenkamp road.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to publish for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing was held August 21, 1919. The notice was published on August 8th and 15th of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I beleive that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript shows that the notice of the hearing of September 8th on the schedule of estimated assessments was published on August 29th and September 5th of the same year. Section 6922 G. C. requires this notice to be published once each week for two consecutive weeks." For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph, I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of section 6922 G. C.

(3) The resolution of July 9, 1919, fails to determine the kind of the improvement and this omission is not cured by any subsequent legislation of the county commissioners.

For the several reasons set forth above I am of the opinion that the bonds under consideration are not valid obligations of Mercer county and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BOND ISSUE MERCER COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN THE SUM OF $14,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Butler township, Mercer county, in the amount of $14,000 for the improvement of Gerdes road in said township.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the trustees and other officers of Butler township relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve of the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript discloses that the township trustees failed to publish for the required length of time prior to the hearing of objections to said improvement the notice required by section 3298-7 G. C. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." This hearing was held August 4, 1919. The publisher's affidavit shows that notice was published July 25th and August 1st of the same year. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

"Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report, p. 342). The supereme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment ot Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable in the interpretation of the language used in section 3298-7 and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript also shows that the notice of the hearing of September 6, 1919, upon the schedule of estimated assessments was published on August 29th and September 5, 1919. Section 3298-15a requires this notice to be published once a week for two consecutive weeks. For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice given meets the requirements of said section 3298-15a.

The transcript is deficient in other respects, probably through omission of matters of record which can be corrected. It is unnecessary, however, to call attention to them specifically as I am of the opinion that the defects mentioned in paragraphs (1) and (2) are fatal. I therefore advise that you decline to accept the above bonds.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MAUSOLEUM—CONTRACT BETWEEN CITY OF ZANESVILLE AND MARIETTA AMERICAN MAUSOLEUM COMPANY FOR ERECTION, CONTROL, REGULATION AND MANAGEMENT OF SUCH BUILDING VALID—SAID MAUSOLEUM EXEMPT FROM TAXATION—DISCUSSION—AND EXCEPTION.

The license granted by the city of Zanesville to the Marietta American Mausolcum Company for the erection of a community mausoleum in the municipal cemetery of Zanesville, and the contract entered into between said city and mausoleum company providing for the exclusive control, regulation and management of said mausoleum by the city, are held to be legal and valid.

The mausoleum, together with the portion of the cemetery grounds which it occupies, devoted to the purpose of entombment of the dead, are exempt from taxation; except to the extent of the property rights reserved to the mausoleum company and held with a view to profit from the sale of crypts in said mausoleum.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for my opinion as follows:

"We are enclosing you herewith copy of circular No. 419, which was sent to every municipality in the state of Ohio, under date of May 27, 1919, and are referring you to opinion of Attorney-General covering mausoleums, which you will find on page 16. We are also enclosing you copy of contract entered into by the city of Zanesville with a mausoleum company on October 1, 1918, together with bond covering same, entered into June 21, 1919. Also a statement showing Chas. R. Raynor as proprietor of the Marietta American Mausoleum Company and also of the Muskingum county Mausoleum Company, together with motion of council, the only act of authority attempted in the matter, and would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:

Question 1. Is such a structure after erection or completion, not being in itself municipal property, exempt from taxation?

Question 2. What recommendation can this department make the officers of Zanesville relative to the completion of this structure, now nearing about half completion?

Question 3. What recommendation can you make this department relative to stoping this illegal practice?"

With your letter you enclose a copy of the contract entered into between the Marietta American Mausoleum Company and the director of public service of the city of Zanesville, which discloses an agreement between said parties substantially as follows:

By item 1, the mausoleum company is granted the right and privilege to erect a community mausoleum within the Greenwood Cemetery, which is a cemetery located within the city of Zanesville and under its control.

By item 2, the city undertakes to furnish the mausoleum company sufficient ground within said cemetery upon which to construct said mausoleum, the site to be determined by the director of public service and approved by the mausoleum company. Items 3 and 4 provide for compensation to the city for the ground so to be occupied by the mausoleum, said compensation being fixed at thirty cents per square foot, which I am advised is the usual price received for conveyances of burial lots under the rules governing the cemetery.

By item 5, it is provided that the mausoleum company shall pay to the city the sum of $10.00 for each and every crypt constructed within said mausoleum, and the funds so paid to be held as an endowment fund, the same to be perpetually held by the city for the benefit of persons having crypts in said mausoleum building and to be used exclusively for the maintenance, care and preservation of said mausoleum and grounds upon which it is located, in such manner as may be directed by the proper authorities of said city.

Items 7, 8, 9 and 10 of the contract relate to the specifications for construction of the mausoleum and the time allotted for the completion thereof.

Items 11, 12 and 13 provide as follows:

"ELEVENTH. It is mutually understood and agreed between both parties hereto that after said mausoleum shall have been completed, the building together with the land upon which it is located, shall be under exclusive control and direction of the said party of the second part hereto, its successors or assigns, subject to the rules as adopted, or which may hereafter be adopted for the government and control of said cemetery and mausoleum, and in conformity of the laws of the state, county, city and township in which said mausoleum building is located.

TWELFTH. It being further understood and agreed, however, that the said party of the first part and the purchasers of crypts in said mausoleum shall be fully protected in their perpetual lease-hold rights in said crypts.

THIRTEENTH. It is understood and agreed that the use of the chapel in said mausoleum shall be entirely free to the owners of crypts and that there shall be no charge whatsoever by the cemetery to owners of crypts except for the opening and closing of said crypts at a price not to exceed five ($5.00) dollars per crypt."

Item 15 of the contract provides for the execution of a bond by the mausoleum company for the faithful performance of its obligations before entering upon the construction of the building or receiving subscriptions for crypts therein.

Thus in logical sequence your questions numbers 2 and 3 should first be given consideration, as they are interpreted as raising the question of the legality of the arrangement embodied in the contract.

It is noted that the erection of the mausoleum is practically one-half completed, and your third question as well as the reference to a previous opinion of this department indicate that the legality of the transaction is challenged.

The opinion of my predecessor to which you refer is that of October 10, 1913, and appearing at page 1575 of the annual reports of the Attorney-General for said year, and it is there held that:

"A city has no authority at the present time to enter into a contract with the mausoleum company for the erection of a mausoleum in a cemetery for the purpose of selling crypts therein."

My predecessor also announced substantially the same conclusion in an opinion dated January 25, 1912, appearing in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for said year at page 342, in which it was said:

"Cemetery trustees or boards, either municipal or township, are not authorized to lease or deed lots to a mausoleum company."

And in an opinion of the same year, appearing at page 1810 of the annual reports it was said:

"The only power given by the statutes to trustees or boards controlling public cemeteries, either municipal or township, is to vest the title to lots directly to individuals who purchase the same.

They have no power, therefore, to lease or deed cemetery lots, either permanently or temporarily to a mausoleum company under any agreement whatever."

From a consideration of the contract entered into by the director of public service of the city of Zanesville, it does not appear that the transaction involved is a sale of lots or grounds in the cemetery to the mausoleum company to be evidenced by a deed of conveyance; but on the contrary, the provisions of the contract indicate a license to the mausoleum company to enter upon identified grounds of the cemetery and construct a mausoleum upon terms and conditions imposed and provided by the contract.

An examination of the opinion of my predecessor discloses that the writer proceeded upon the theory that there is entire lack of authority to enter into any arrangement for the use or conveyance of cemetery grounds, except to purchase for individual burial purposes, and remarked that the statutory authority in this regard indicated such a transaction as would be consummated by a deed of conveyance.

However, I am of the opinion that the rule thus announced must now be abandoned in view of decisions of courts upon the question.

The opinion of October 10, 1913, above referred to, was directed to Hon. S. C.

Karns, city solicitor of Cambridge, Ohio, and I am advised related to the same question which afterwards was before the common pleas court of Guernsey county involved in the case of city of Cambridge vs. John H. Morgan, director of public service. The action was determined in July, 1918, and was a proceeding for injunction against said director of public service seeking to restrain him from granting a license to the Builders of Mausoleums Company for the construction of a mausoleum in the cemetery of the city of Cambridge, and from executing a contract with said mausoleum company which in all substantial respects was the same as that involved in your inquiry relating to the city of Zanesville. The proposed contract provided for the erection of a mausoleum upon ground in the cemetery to be designated by the director of public service, and in other respects was substantially the same in its terms as the contract entered into by the city of Zanesville. The journal entry embodying the final determination of the question by the court recites that:

> "The court further considering the rights of the director of public service to grant the license and execute the contract as set forth and attached to the amended and supplemental answer and marked exhibit "A," finds that there is no legal objection to the signing of such contract or the granting of such license, and that the same is not a violation of law.
> It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that the motion for an injunction to restrain the director of public service from granting the license and signing the agreement set forth and attached to the amended answer should be, and is hereby overruled."

It does not appear that the case was reviewed in the higher courts, but a case arising at the city of Dover, Ohio, involving the questions presented here, sustained the authority of the director of public service to enter into a contract authorizing the erection of a mausoleum in the municipal cemetery of Dover, the holding being sanctioned by both the common pleas court and court of appeals, and an application for review of the judgment was denied in the supreme court. The case referred to is styled The City of Dover vs. The Tuscarawas Mausoleum Company, et al., and in my opinion went far beyond the scope of the question which is now before me, in sustaining the action of the municipal authorities involved in that case. The facts of the case included a conveyance of a plot of ground to the mausoleum company by the city authorities for the purpose of the erection thereon of a community mausoleum; and after the erection of the mausoleum, a contract of purchase of the mausoleum and grounds which it occupied, by the city, at a price of $10,000.00, the same to be provided by a tax levy and bond issue.

The validity of the entire procedure was attacked in an action for an injunction and to set aside the original deed of conveyance of the grounds for the purpose of the erection of a mausoleum in the cemetery.

From an examination of the briefs it appears that the case turned largely upon the fundamental question of the authority of the city to grant any rights in cemetery property looking to the establishment of a community mausoleum thereon. The opinions of my predecessor were urged upon the consideration of the court, and the authority for any grant of cemetery property for the purposes involved was clearly along the principal issues presented. True, the case involved the power of the cemetery trustees of a union cemetery maintained jointly by the city of Dover and Dover township, but it was pointed out that by the provisions of section 4193-1 G. C. the powers of such board of trustees of a union cemetery are the same as those exercised and performed by directors of public service of a municipality, so that the ultimate question was identical with the one now before me in this respect. Only a very brief opinion was rendered by the court of appeals, and only such excerpts therefrom as will be necessary to disclose the question determined will be quoted. The opinion was rendered June 28, 1919, and I think is not reported. Houck, J., speaking for the court, said:

> "The relief sought by the plaintiff is to set aside a deed and for injunction.
> The question now before the court and for its determination is—was the purchase, under the evidence and law, legal and must it be enforced or set aside?
> Under the facts, law and statutory enactments governing union cemeteries, we find that all things done, in the premises, were regular and according to law, and in the absence of any evidence of fraud must stand.
> The petition is dismissed and the injunction is dissolved."

From consideration of the holdings which have just been reviewed, I am constrained to advise that the arrangement contemplated by the contract entered into by the city of Zanesville and the mausoleum company is not illegal, but is one whose legality has been fully recognized and approved by the courts of the state to such an extent that the conclusions there announced may well be relied upon as decisive of the legality of the license granted and contract entered into on the part of the city officers of Zanesville.

Having thus concluded that the project for construction of a mausoleum in the municipal cemetery may lawfully proceed to consummation, we may then consider the question of the liability for taxation as embodied in your first interrogatory.

Section 2 of article XII of the constitution provides in part:

> "Burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars to each individual, may by general laws be exempted from taxation."

Legislation for the exemption of cemeteries has been enacted and section 5350 G. C. is pertinent. Section 5350 provides as follows:

> "Lands used exclusively as graveyards, or grounds for burying the dead, except such as are held by a person, company or corporation with a view to profit, or for the purpose of speculating in the sale thereof, shall be exempt from taxation."

The terms "cemetery," "graveyard" and "burying grounds" as commonly used are practically synonymous and import a place for the entombment of the dead, not necessarily under ground.

"Burying grounds" is defined by the Standard Dictionary as > "A plot of ground set apart for burial of the dead; cemetery; graveyard."

"Cemetery" is defined as > "A place for the burial of the dead; formerly a church yard or catacomb; now usually a large park like enclosure regularly laid out and kept for purposes of interment."

In Cemetery vs. Brooks, 8 C. C. 439, the court, speaking of the provisions of the statute now embodied in section 5350, said:

"While this is so, we suppose that it should have reasonable construction in other respects—for instance, that if a cemetery association has land prepared for and set apart for the burial of the dead, that it is not essential to make it exempt from taxation under our law, that the whole of it be used in this way. It would seem that there might be necessary and proper buildings thereon as chapels, offices, etc., and it may be even a place of residence for those in charge, and that the fact that a very considerable part of the ground was not used for the mere purpose of burial but was used for avenues or plots, useful or ornamental, if not used for profit, would not render the whole or any part of the land liable to taxation."

My predecessor in an opinion found at page 1435 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1914, held:

"A building for the residence of the cemetery superintendent constructed by the association upon the lands set apart and actually used for burial purposes, and otherwise conceded to be exempt, is itself exempt from taxation."

In my opinion these rulings just cited extend the rule farther than the facts I am considering require. From what has been said above, I reach the conclusion that the mausoleum and the specific ground upon which it is located are plainly within the ordinary significance of the term "burying grounds" or "grounds for burying the dead" as used in the constitution and statute, and are therefore within the purview of the exemption from taxation in so far as its purpose and character is determinative.

However, it is to be noted that the exemption provided in section 5350 G. C. supra, does not extend to burying grounds held by persons, companies or corporations with a view to profit, or for the purpose of speculating in the sale thereof, and I am of the opinion that to the extent of interests in the mausoleum held with a view to profit, or for the purpose of speculating in the sale of crypts, it is subject to taxation.

In Cleveland Library Association vs. Pelton, Treas., 36 O. S. 253, it was held that where such an association owned a lot of ground with a block of buildings constructed as an entirety, and a part of the rooms of the building were used by it for its purposes, while some were rented out, such parts of the building as were rented or otherwise used with a view to profit, were not exempt from taxation; and the fact that the buildings were so constructed that the parts leased or otherwise used with a view to profit could not be separated from the residue by definite lines was no obstacle to a valuation of such part for the purposes of taxation, having due reference to the taxable value of the entire property.

It appears that the mausoleum company is to be protected in certain interests in the building designated as its "perpetual lease-hold rights" which, it is understood, relate to its interest in the proceeds of sale of crypts therein, and whether or not such interests or rights amount to a legal title in the real estate, in my opinion, is unimportant the fact being that a part of the mausoleum is held with a view to profit and is, therefore, not within the terms of the statutory exemption from taxation.

You are, therefore, advised that the mausoleum together with the ground devoted to its maintenance is within the statutory exemption from taxation, except to the extent of the value of portions thereof held with a view to profit as above noted.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, BOND ISSUE MEDINA COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN THE SUM OF $22,888.45.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1919.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER—WHEN ELECTED TO SECOND TERM AND FAILS TO QUALIFY—VACANCY HOW FILLED—ADJUDICATION OF OFFICER TO BE INSANE DISQUALIFIES HIM FROM HOLDING OFFICE.

Where one elected to a second term as county commissioner fails to qualify in pursuance of such election, a vacancy occurs which is to be filled as provided by law. The provision of section 8 G. C. for holding over is not applicable to such case.

The adjudication of an officer to be insane disqualifies him from holding office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEECH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted a statement of facts relative to the office of county commissioner in your county, and requesting my opinion thereon as to the legal status of said office. Your statement of facts and inquiry is as follows:

"In the year 1916, Daniel T. Sommers was elected as a member of the board of commissioners of Coshocton county, Ohio, and began his term of office on the third Monday of September, 1917, giving a surety bond furnished by the Southern Surety Company, a copy of said bond enclosed herewith together with oath and approval.

In 1918 Mr. Sommers was again a candidate for county commissioner and re-elected. On the third Monday of September, 1919, when his new term of office was to begin he did not file a new bond, but there was attached to the old bond a certificate from the agent of the Southern Surety Company setting forth that the company had renewed his bond. A copy of said renewal certificate is furnished you with the copy of the bond.

You will notice from the old bond that it was approved in 1917 by Don C. Porter as prosecuting attorney, Milo C. Ely as probate judge and sworn to before Chas. B. Wilhelm, clerk of court, and filed with the treasurer August 15, 1917. When his second term of office began nothing was done toward giving a bond except the attachment of the renewal certificate; no oath was taken, and the bond was not reapproved by the probate judge or myself as prosecuting attorney.

On Tuesday, September 16, 1919, that being the second day after his term of office was to begin, a lunacy affidavit against the said Daniel T. Sommers was filed in the probate court. On the 17th he was given a hearing and an examination made as provided by law, and he was duly adjudged insane and committed to the institution for the insane at Massillon, Ohio, and since said date has been an inmate thereof.

We desire to know whether or not the bond herein set forth could be construed to be a sufficient bond, whether or not Mr. Sommers duly qualified as such county commissioner and whether or not the fact that he has been adjudged insane will create a vacancy in the board of commissioners.

We are very desirous of having an early report on the above matter, as payment of the salary of the said Sommers as commissioner has been held up by the county auditor and treasurer."

With your communication you submitted a copy of the official bond of the officer in question which was executed in 1917 before entering upon his first term, and which is referred to in your letter as having had attached thereto a certificate purporting to be a renewal of the bond by the Southern Surety Company.

Without setting forth the bond in full, it is sufficient for the purposes of this opinion to say that it evidences the undertaking of the officer and the surety company to the state of Ohio in the penal sum of $5,000.00 conditioned as follows:

"The condition of this obligation is such, that whereas the said Daniel T. Sommers was, on the seventh day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen (1916) duly elected to the office of county commissioner of Coshocton county, Ohio, to hold his office for two (2) years, to begin on the third Monday in September next after his said election, and until his successor is chosen and qualified.

Now, if the said Daniel T. Sommers shall faithfully discharge his official duties as such officer, and pay any loss or damage that the county may sustain by reason of his failure therein, during the term for which he has been elected as aforesaid, then this obligation shall be void, otherwise the same shall be and remain in full force and virtue."

This bond bears the signature of Daniel T. Sommers and the Southern Surety Company by R. H. Clark, attorney in fact; also a certificate of sufficiency by the prosecuting attorney and an approval of the bond as to amount and sureties by the probate judge. To the bond is attached an oath of office duly signed by the officer with the certificate of the clerk of court that the oath was taken before him on the 5th day of August, 1917.

The renewal certificate referred to is in the following language:

"RENEWAL CERTIFICATE.

The Southern Surety Company hereby renews the bond of Daniel T. Sommers as a member of the board of county commissioners of Coshocton county for a term of two years from the third Monday in September, 1919."

Upon this state of facts it is to be determined whether the office of county commissioner is vacant or is lawfully held and occupied by Daniel T. Sommers. The questions entering into such determination are, has Daniel T. Sommers duly qualified for the office of commissioner in pursuance of his election for a second term in 1918? If not, is he the lawful incumbent of the office by reason of his election in 1916, and qualification for the office pursuant thereto? What is the legal effect of the adjudication of insanity against Daniel T. Sommers?

In considering the questions in the order enumerated, it is appropriate to note certain provisions of the constitution and statutes relative to the qualification of an officer-elect entitling him to the status of legal incumbent of the office.

Section 7 of article XV of the constitution of Ohio provides:

"Every person chosen or appointed to any office under this state, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, shall take an oath or affirmation, to support the constitution of the United States, and of this state, and also an oath of office."

Section 2399 G. C. provides:

"Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, each commissioner shall give a bond to the state in a sum not less than five thousand dollars, with two or more sureties, approved by the probate judge of the county, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his official duties, and for the payment of any loss or damage thst the county may sustain therein. Such bond, with the oath of office and the approval of the probate judge endorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the treasurer of the county and kept in his office. Such surety may be discharged in the manner provided by law for the release of sureties of guardians."

Section 2 G. C. is also a general provision that may be noted in this connection:

"Each person chosen or appointed to an office under the constitution or laws of the state, and each deputy or clerk of such officer, shall take an oath of office before entering upon the discharge of his duties."

Section 3 provides the form of the oath which is applicable to the office of county commissioner.

Section 6 G. C. provides a form of bond which shall be sufficient, and directs that among other things, the election and appointment of the person to an office or public trust shall be recited therein, and the bond shall be conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of such office or trust.

Section 7 provides:

"A person elected or appointed to an office who is required by law to give a bond or security previous to the performance of the duties imposed on him by his office, who refuses or neglects to give such bond or furnish such security, within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and in all respects to quality himself for the performance of such duties, shall be deemed to have refused to accept the office to which he was elected or appointed, and such office shall be considered vacant and be filled as provided by law."

Returning now to the statement of facts submitted, it is noted that no bond was executed and filed for approval by Daniel T. Sommers in pursuance of his election for a second term as county commissioner, nor was any oath of office taken. It is stated that nothing was done toward giving a bond except the attachment of a renewal certificate by the surety company to the old bond of the officer in question, which was, executed as a qualification for entering upon his first term, and that said renewal certificate was not approved by the probate judge or prosecuting attorney as an official bond of the officer.

From these facts it is readily seen that there was a complete failure on the part of Daniel T. Sommers to qualify in pursuance of law for the office to which he was elected for a second term. He took no oath of office, he signed no bond, and he failed to furnish the securities prescribed by the statute for the official bond.

Section 5 G. C. relating to official bonds speaks of the signing thereof both by principals and sureties. Other sections provide for the approval by the prosecuting attorney and the probate judge, none of which requirements were observed in the case under consideration, and you are advised that the provisions of section 7 G. C. are determinative of the status resulting from the failure to give bond, in that the officer-elect shall be deemed to have refused to accept the office, and therefore forfeited his rights under such election.

The section further provides that "such office shall be considered vacant and filled as provided by law." But the succeeding section must be noted in this connection, making the following provision:

> "Section 8. A person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws."

This leads us to a consideration of the second inquiry above enumerated, which requires a determination of the status of Daniel T. Sommers as the incumbent of the office of county commissioner under his prior election and qualification for such office, since under his election for a second term he has failed to qualify.

It has been held in State ex rel. vs. McCracken, 51 O. S. 123, that there is no vacancy so long as there is an incumbent that can lawfully hold over until a successor is elected and qualified.

Section 8 G. C. would obviously authorize the incumbent of the office to hold over in event of failure of his successor to qualify "unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws."

It is thus pertinent to note any provisions of the constitution and statutes that might have a bearing upon the conclusion to be reached with reference to the existence of a vacancy or the contrary.

Two sections of the constitution relate to the terms of county officers, and are in direct conflict in their provisions. Section 2 of article X provides:

> "County officers shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of each county in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law."

Section 2 of article XVII provides:

> "The term of office of all elective county, township, municipal and school officers shall be such even number of years not exceeding four (4) years as may be so prescribed."

The first provision quoted providing the three year limitation was adopted in 1885, while the latter section was adopted in 1905, and in view of the irreconcilable conflict in their provisions, familiar rules of construction would determine that the latter provision shall supersede the former.

The pertinency of this constitutional provision lies in its limitation upon the length of term of the county office, and a question arises as to whether the provision of section 8 G. C. to the effect that an incumbent of an office shall hold over until his successor is elected or appointed, is in conflict with the constitutional limitation of the term of county officers, or perhaps to be more specific, where the express provision of section 8, limiting its application to cases where it is not "otherwise provided in the constitution or laws," renders it inapplicable to a county office in view of the limitation provided in the constitution.

And, of course, in the same connection it is necessary to give due consideration to the provision of section 7 G. C. above set out, particularly the provision that the officer failing to qualify shall be deemed to have refused to accept the office "and such office shall be considered vacant and be filled as provided by law." The special provision for filling vacancies in the office of the county commissioner is found in section 2397, which is as follows:

> "If a vacancy in the office of commissioner occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state and county officers, a successor shall be elected thereat. If a vacancy occurs more than thirty days before such election, or within that time, and the interest of the county requires that the vacancy be filled before the election, the probate judge, auditor, and recorder of the county, or a majority of them, shall appoint a commissioner, who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified."

It is the doctrine of many cases, and notably State vs. Metcalfe 80 O. S. 224, that an office is not to be considered vacant while filled by one lawfully entitled to hold it, but the cases in which that doctrine has been generally declared related in the main to instances where the officer-elect died before the time of taking his office, and the conclusion was rested upon the provisions of section 8 G. C. supra, which, of course, would be authority for the incumbent continuing in office until his successor is qualified, in the absence of a contrary provision either by the constitution or other statutes. But the section itself provides the exception to the rule announced in the cases referred to, and in the case of State ex rel. vs. Brewster, 44 O. S. 589, while recognizing that the state of the law relating to the filling of vacancies in office did not regard an office as vacant when an incumbent might lawfully hold over, the court called special attention to the proviso in section 8, and said with reference to the office of county auditor.

> "We find it 'otherwise provided' in the constitutional limitation of the term of this office to three years; and 'otherwise provided' by the law, which authorizes the county commissioners to fill the vacancy in the auditor's office by appointment."

The statutory provision relative to vacancies in the office of county auditor was the same as now provided in sections 2561 and 2562, as follows:

> "Sec. 2561. If a county auditor elect fails to give bond and take the oath of office as required by law on or before the day on which he is so required to take possession of his office, it shall become vacant.
> "Sec. 2562. If a vacancy occurs in the office of county auditor, from any cause, the commissioners of the county shall appoint a suitable person, resident of the county, to fill the vacancy."

The court in the Brewster case further said:

> "We can not, without violence to its language, hold this latter provision to have been repealed by any rational implication from section 8, and the legislative intention that the former section (1017) should point out the mode of filling such vacancy as existed in the present case seems too clear for serious controversy."

In State ex rel. vs. Howe, 25 O. S. 588, the court said:

> "After a careful examination of the question, in the light of both principle and authority, we are led to the conclusion that the general assembly may provide against the occurrence of vacancies by authorizng incumbents to hold over their terms in cases where the duration of their tenures is not fixed and limited by the constitution.

Further, the court said:

> "The evils contemplated as likely to result from vacancies in office are guarded against by confining the exercise of the power to fill vacancies in office to those cases where no one is authorized by law to discharge the public duties; which, we think, is the constitutional scope of that power."

While the observations of the court in the cases just cited raise considerable question as to the application of section 8 where a limitation on the term of office is prescribed by the constitution, yet, in view of the provision for electing county officers each two years it is arguable that a holding over under section 8 until the next general election for county offices would not contravene the constitutional limitation of the term of county offices to four years, and that at least until the constitutional period has elapsed, in case of a holding over, the constitution is not violated.

This view was adopted in previous opinions of this department involving a different state of facts from that now before me. See opinion No. 587, dated August 25, 1919, directed to Hon. D. M. Cupp, prosecuting attorney, Delaware, Ohio, and opinion No. 605, dated September 2, 1919, directed to Hon. Charles R. Sargent, prosecuting attorney, Jefferson, Ohio, but upon the facts of the case now before me, while not holding that the constitutional provision for four year limitation upon county offices constitutes a provision excluding the application of section 8, yet I am of the opinion that the provision of section 7 G. C. expressly providing that in event of failure of an officer to qualify, his office becomes vacant, renders inapplicable the provision of section 8 G. C. for holding over, it being "otherwise provided" by law that the office shall be considered vacant and shall be filled as provided by law.

This conclusion seems to be directly in line with the decision of Anderson vs. Brewster, 44 O. S. 576, hereinbefore discussed, and you are therefore advised that section 8 G. C. may not be construed as continuing Mr. Sommers in office in pursuance of his election and qualification for his first term as county commissioner; but on the contrary, his office must be considered to have been vacated by reason of his failure to qualify in pursuance of his second election, authorizing the filling of the vacancy in pursuance of the provision of section 2397 supra.

The determination of the existence of a vacancy need not rest entirely upon the ground so far pointed out, but the facts involved in the third inquiry above enumerated also would require the same conclusion.

It is stated in your communication that on September 16, 1919, that being the second day of his term of office, a lunacy affidavit was filed against Daniel T. Sommers in the probate court, and on the 17th day of September he was duly adjudged insane and committed to Massillon Hospital, and has since been an inmate thereof.

Section 4 of article XV of the constitution provides:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

Section 6 of article V of the constitution provides:

> "No idiot or insane person shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector."

In State ex rel. vs. Collister, 6 O. C. C. (N. S.) 33, the court had before it the right of an alien who had been elected to the office of councilman to hold the office The defendant had not been naturalized, and the court held:

"Where such an one has been elected to the office of councilman and has taken his seat, a judgment of ouster will be entered against him."

The question of his qualification arose under section 1 of article X of the constitution, which provided citizenship as one of the qualifications of an elector. In discussing the case the court said that the defendant did not have "the qualifications required by law for such officer."

That case is entirely analogous to the situation here presented, in that an insane person is not entitled to the privileges of an elector.

Under section 4 of article XV one of the qualifications for office holding is that the person must be an elector.

In the case of In Re South Charleston Election Contest, 3 O. N. P. (N. S.) 373, the court said:

"One whose mental condition is such that a court would experience no hesitancy in committing him to an insane asylum or in appointing a guardian for him, where proper application made, comes well within the class of persons who under the term 'idiot' or 'insane,' are prohibited from voting by the constitution."

This case is authority for the conclusion that the adjudication of the officer in question to be insane by the probate court, sufficiently fixes his legal status to terminate his qualification in contemplation of law as an office holder.

An additional consideration which should be noted in this connection is that the provision of section 8 for "holding over" could hardly be made applicable to the case of the failure of a county commissioner to qualify where there is more than one outgoing incumbent of the office, assuming the application of section 8 on other considerations. That is to say, it could hardly be determined that Daniel T. Sommers was elected as his own successor, and therefore identified as the one of the commissioners to hold over in event one or both of the other incumbents would occupy the same status.

If other members of the board of commissioners are retiring from the office, the question of ascertainment of the particular incumbent to hold over would at once arise, and its solution is not found in the provisions of section 8 G. C., so that the conclusion would again follow that section 8 could not be regarded as operative in such case.

You are therefore advised that for the reasons pointed out, the office of county commissioner as involved in your inquiry became vacant, not only by reason of the failure of the commissioner-elect to qualify, but also by reason of the adjudication that he was insane at the beginning of his term of office.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BOND ISSUE MERCER COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN THE SUM OF $5,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

IN RE: Bonds of Gibson township, Mercer county, in the amount of $5,500.00, for the improvement of Denney road in said township.

GENTLEMEN:

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the township trustees and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) The transcript discloses that the township trustees failed to publish the notice required by section 3298-7 of the General Code for the required length of time before the date set for hearing objections to said improvement. The hearing was held August 11, 1919. The notice of such hearing was published August 1st and August 8th of the same year. Section 3298-7 G. C. provides that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of the hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held (quoting from the syllabus):

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same Report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation of similar language laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 3298-7 and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

(2) The transcript also shows that the hearing on the schedule of estimated assessments was held August 25th and that notice thereof was published August 15th and 22nd of the same year. Section 3298-15a requires such notice to be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks," For the reasons stated in the preceding paragraph I do not believe the notice published meets the requirements of section 3298-15a.

For the reasons set forth above I am of the opinion that the bonds under consideration are not valid obligations of Gibson township and advise you to decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOWLING GREEN STATE NORMAL COLLEGE—APPROVAL, CONTRACT OF LOUIS BRANDT, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1919.

The Board of Trustees of the Bowling Green State Normal College, Bowling Green, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—There has this day been submitted to me for my approval, as per section 2314 G. C., a contract between your board and Mr. Louis Brandt, landscape architect, relative to certain contemplated improvements at your institution.

I have approved said contract and am this day filing same, with my said approval indorsed thereon, with the auditor of state.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN JEFFERSON COUNTY, OHIO.

HON. A. R. TAYLOR, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1919.

APPROVAL, BOND OF CHARLES ASH AS DEPUTY HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER IN THE SUM OF $5,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Attached I am transmitting bond in the sum of $5,000.00 given by Charles Ash with the Aetna Casualty & Surety Company as surety, covering Mr. Ash's appointment as deputy highway commissioner, for the term beginning October 22nd.

You will note that this bond has received the approval of the state highway commissioner as to surety and of myself as to form.

Section 1181 G. C. in conformity with which the bond is given, does not specify with whom it shall be filed. However, as the official bond of the state highway commissioner as well as the bonds of certain employes of the highway department are directed by law to be filed in your office, I believe that the same course should be followed as to the bond attached, and for that reason I am transmitting it to you for filing.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—PROPOSED TAX CLASSIFICATION AMENDMENT TO OHIO CONSTITUTION—CORPORATIONS PROHIBITED FROM MAKING CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES—SEE SECTIONS 13320 AND 13321 G. C.—WHO ARE REQUIRED TO MAKE REPORT OF RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES AT ELECTIONS UNDER SECTION 5175-1 G. C.

Sections 13320 and 13321 G. C. are held applicable to contributions by corporations in business in this state for the purpose of promoting or defeating at the polls the proposed tax classification amendment to the state constitution. In the absence of judicial decision or other decisive considerations to the contrary, the previous ruling of this department is approved and followed.

A committee or combination of two or more persons co-operating to aid in or promote the success or defeat of any proposition submitted to a vote at any election required under the law to make report of receipts and expenditures unless clearly shown to be within exempted class in section 5175-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 1, 1919.

HON. HUGO N. SCHLESINGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date submitting for my consideration the matter of contributions by corporations engaged in business in this state for the purpose of promoting or defeating at the polls the proposed tax classification amendment to the state constitution, has been duly received.

The public policy of this state on the subject of contributions by corporations for political purposes is disclosed by sections 5522, 8729, 8730, 13320 and 13321 G. C., the latter two of which sections are penal in character.

Section 13320 provides:

> "Whoever, being a corporation in business in this state, directly or indirectly, pays, uses, offers, or consents or agrees to pay or use money or property for, or in aid of a political party, committee or organization, or for or in aid of a candidate for political office, or for a nomination thereto, or uses money or property for any political purpose whatever, or for the reimbursement or indemnification of any person or persons for money or property so used, shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars."

Section 13321 provides a penalty applicable to an officer, stockholder, attorney or agent of a corporation participating in, aiding or advising the violation of the preceding section.

On June 17, 1917, my predecessor ruled that the making of contributions by a corporation for the purpose of affecting the result of what are commonly referred to as "Wet" and "Dry" elections is prohibited by the statutes under consideration. This ruling was directed to Hon. C. Ellis Moore, prosecuting attorney, Cambridge, Ohio, and is herewith set forth in full, as follows:

> "Sometime ago you inquired of this office whether or not a corporation as such could make a contribution to the organization known as the Ohio Dry Federation which is organized for the purpose of promoting the cause of statewide prohibition in Ohio. Answering your inquiry it is my opinion under the provisions of section 13320 of the General Code, a corporation doing business in Ohio can not legally contribute money of the corporation, either directly or indirectly to affect the result of what are known as wet and dry elections. As one authority supporting the proposition, I cite the case of People vs. Gainsley, 158 Northwestern Report, 195. I also call your attention to the title of the act, of which section 13320 General Code is a part. You will note from this title that there are two different provisions, one to prevent the corruption of elections; and the other to prevent the corruption of political parties."

The question is not free from doubt and has been the subject of much controversy subsequent to the ruling of the Attorney-General to which reference is made. The conclusion there reached has not been disapproved by any court and in view of the manifest purpose of the law I see no sufficient reason suggesting a departure from the former ruling until there be a judicial determination to the contrary.

Your second question is as follows:

"Must a report on the receipts and expenditures of all money used by any committee or organization for the purpose of defeating or supporting said amendment be filed with the secretary of state under the provisions of the corrupt practice law of Ohio?"

A reading of the provisions of sections G. C. 5175-1 to 5175-6 inclusive at once leads to this conclusion: that a committee or combination of two or more persons, which is co-operating to aid in or promote the success or defeat of any proposition submitted to a vote at any election and is soliciting money or has solicited and received money to be used in its activities in connection with the election at which the proposition is submitted, is required to file a statement of its receipts and expenditures with the secretary of stste within ten days following the election. The requirement would not be applicable to a "committee or organization for the discussion or advancement of political or economic questions" as is apparent from the exception in section 5175-1. There is nothing before this office which tends to show that the committee or organization to which you have referred is within the exempted class. That point is one to be determined from various tests and amounts to a question of fact to be passed upon by the court in case complaint is made that the provisions of the corrupt practices act have been violated. The mode of procedure of course is provided in sections 5175-14 et seq.

It is my opinion that a report of the receipts and expenditures of any such committee or organization referred to above should be made as provided by law, unless it is made clearly to appear that it comes within the exempted class referred to in section 5175-1 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, SALE OF STATE CANAL LANDS IN AKRON, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 1, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 22, 1919, transmitting duplicate memoranda of three sales of state canal lands at public sale at the door of the court house in Akron, Ohio, as follows:

4875 sq. ft., more or less, Ohio canal land in city of Akron, appraised at $1,625.00, bid in by the People's Savings & Trust Company for the sum of $1,219.00 cash.

2500 sq. ft., more or less, Ohio canal land in city of Akron, appraised at $4,166.66, bid in by the Williams Foundry & Machine Company for $3,125.00 cash.

3581 sq. ft. Ohio canal land, city of Akron, appraised at $8,410.00, bid in by Latham H. Conger for $6,308.00 cash."

I have carefully examined the memoranda submitted and find that the same shows that the proceedings have been in conformity with law.

I am therefore returning the memoranda in question with an endorsement of my approval of the sales.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—NO CANDIDATE, AS SUCH, HAS RIGHT TO DESIGNATE CHALLENGERS OR WITNESSES AT VOTING PLACES—STATUTES PROVIDE THREE METHODS FOR APPOINTMENT OF CHALLENGERS AND WITNESSES—HOW MADE.

No candidate, as such, whether partisan or otherwise, has the right to designate representatives of himself as challengers or witnesses at the various voting places.

Under existing laws such challengers and witnesses can be appointed in three ways only:

(1) By political parties acting through committees.

(2) In special elections where no candidates are to be voted for, by the judges and clerks of election in each precinct (sections 5058 and 5080-G. C.)

(This provision may apply only in non-registration cities, but no opinion is expressed on this point.)

(3) At any election committees in good faith advocating or opposing any measure to be voted upon have the right in question (section 5058-1 G. C.)

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 4, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested the opinion of this department upon the fo lowing question:

"Mr. Zimpfer, one of the candidates for mayor of the city of Columbus, has been refused by the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections of Franklin county, Ohio, witnesses to the count in the various polling places in said city during the canvassing and counting of the vote in the various precincts of the city in the said mayoralty contest November 4, 1919.

Has Mr. Zimpfer, under the provisions of the city charter, or the General Code, governing elections the legal right to have qualified representatives as witnesses in the various voting places of the city at the counting and canvassing of the votes in said contest?"

The charter of the city of Columbus has been examined. The provisions thereof need not be quoted in full. It is sufficient to state that candidates for mayor are to be nominated by petition without the agency of any political party. The sections which govern the matter of nominations by petition do not attempt to confer any right upon such nominees, or any one acting in their behalf, to appoint or otherwise designate witnesses and challengers.

It is expressly provided in section 200 of the charter that:

"Except as otherwise provided in this charter, all elections shall be held and conducted and the results thereof ascertained and certified as provided by the general laws of the state and by the election authorities therein provided for."

This being the condition of the charter of the city of Columbus, it is obvious that the question which you submit must be answered by reference to the general laws of the state.

The city of Columbus is a registration city. Accordingly, section 4922 of the General Code applies to elections held therein. It provides as follows:

"At each election, the executive or principal committee of each political party presenting one or more candidates for suffrage may, by writing, certified by its chairman and secretary, and presented to the judges of election at or before this meeting, designate not more than one elector of such city as witness and one other elector as challenger, to attend at such election in behalf of such party. The judges of election in each ward or election precinct shall admit such witnesses and challengers so accredited into the polling room with themselves and the clerks at the ensuing election and place them so near to themselves and the clerks that they can fully and conveniently watch every proceeding of the judges and clerks from the time of opening to closing of the polls. No other person, except the witnesses and the judges and clerks of the election shall be admitted to the polling place after the closing of the polls until the counting, certifying and signing of the final returns of such election have been completed."

Provisions for the appointment of challengers in other than registration cities, is found in section 5058 G. C., which need not be quoted. This section does, however provide for the appointment of challengers "in special elections when no candidates are to be elected." This provision obviously does not apply to the instant case because candidates are to be elected at the pending election.

Section 5080 G. C. performs a similar office with respect to the designation of inspectors and witnesses in election districts other than registration cities. This section is inapplicable as a whole for the reason just pointed out in discussing section 5058. It also provides for the appointment of inspectors and witnesses "in special elections when there are no candidates to be elected," and for reasons stated this part of the section can have no application.

A supplement to section 5080 (104 O. L. 124), commented upon in a recent opinion addressed to you, provides for the selection of witnesses and challengers by committees acting for or in opposition to propositions to be voted on by the electors. This section obviously can have no application to the appointment of witnesses and challengers to act in behalf of a candidate.

The only other provisions which are found in the statutes respecting witnesses and inspectors deal with the rights and duties of such witnesses and inspectors. Those which have been quoted are the only ones which upon search have been found dealing with the designation of such witnesses and inspectors.

The question under consideration does not depend for its solution even upon the principle that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others, because section 4922, which governs, expressly provides that "no other person except the witnesses and the judges and clerks of the election shall be admitted to the polling place after the closing of the polls until the counting, certifying and signing of the final returns of such election have been completed." This is a direct prohibition, unambiguous in purport, and operates expressly to forbid the admission of any witnesses into the polling places during the counting excepting those of whom it and related sections speak.

It may not be out of place to remark that none of the candidates for mayor at the pending election in the city of Columbus are entitled to be represented by witnesses and challengers in their several capacities as such candidates. It happens, however, that said election is an election at which political parties are "presenting one or more candidates for suffrage" in the persons of the candidates for assessors and those for boards of education, as pointed out in the recent opinion addressed to you. That being the case, party challengers and witnesses are permissible at this election, and must be admitted to the polling places if designated in the proper manner. Being so admitted, the statutes give them authority to watch every proceeding and exercise their rights as they see fit (See section 4922 above quoted, and sections 5083 et seq. G. C., dealing with the functions of witnesses and inspectors).

In short, the general assembly has never deemed it expedient to allow candidates nominated by petition, as such, or any committee or organization acting in behalf of a non-partisan candidate to designate witnesses and challengers who shall have the right to be admitted to the polling places in such capacities. Undoubtedly the reason for this omission on the part of the legislature lies in the fact that it would be utterly impracticable to afford each candidate so nominated the right to exercise such a privilege; and the legislature has not chosen to discriminate in this particular in favor of candidates for the "head of the ticket."

For all theses reasons, the answer to your question is that the candidate in question has not the right to designate representatives of himself as challengers or witnesses at the various voting places in the city during the casting or the counting and canvassing of the votes at the pending election.

This conclusion, of course, applies to all candidates as such, whether partisan or otherwise.

Under existing laws such challengers and witnesses can be appointed in three ways only:

"(1) By political parties acting through committees;

(2) In special elections where no candidates are to be voted for, by the judges and clerks of election in each precinct. (Sections 5058 and 5080.)

(This provision may apply only in non-registration cities, but no opinion is expressed on this point.)

(3) At any election committees in good faith advocating or opposing any measure to be voted upon have the right in question." (Section 5058-1.)

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—HOUSE BILL No. 162, 108 O. L. 478, CONSTRUED—ROAD LEVIES MAY BE MADE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ON TAX DUPLICATE FOR YEAR 1919 WHEN FAVORABLE VOTE HAD BY ELECTORS—LEVY MAY BE MADE THEREAFTER—SECTIONS 6926 AND 6926-1 G. C. CONSTRUED.

Elections may be held in counties under section 6926-1 G. C. as enacted by house bill No. 162 at the regular time for holding elections in 1919.

The favorable vote of the electors on the question submitted under said section will authorize road levies to be made by county commissioners on the duplicate made up in the year 1919, exempt from all limitations of law on tax levies.

In the event no levy has been made under section 6926 for the year 1919, the favorable vote of the electors at such election will authorize such levy to be made thereafter by the county commissioners.

In the event that a levy has been made under section 6926 G. C., the favorable vote of the electors at such election will authorize a levy at the rate approved by the electors to be made after the election by the county commissioners, in lieu of such levy theretofore made under section 6926 G. C., but not in addition thereto.

In the event the authority thus conferred is exercised by the county commissioners, and the result of the elimination of the levy theretofore made under section 6926 G. C. is to release levying power which would have been possessed by any taxing district in the county had such levy not been made in the first instance, the budget commission should be reconvened for the purpose of readjusting the levies in the taxing districts so affected so as to permit the exercise of such released levying power. Such reconvening of the budget commission and action on its part will be unnecessary unless the elimination of a levy under section 6926 actually has such effect in some taxing district in the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date requesting the opinion of this department on the following questions:

> "The commission is advised that in a large number of the counties of the state the county commissioners have taken the necessary action under section 6926-1, as enacted by H. B. No. 162 passed May 27, 1919, to submit to the electors of the county at the election to be held November 4, 1919, the question of exempting from all tax limitations all or part of the two mill levy provided for by section 6926 G. C. Your opinion is respectfully requested upon the following questions in connection therewith:

If the proposition is carried in any county—

1. Will the exemption be effective for the year 1919?

2. In the event that no levy has been made under section 6926 for the year 1919 may one be made? If so, by what board or authority?

3. If a levy has been made under section 6926 for the year 1919 may it be increased to the amount stated in the resolution and the other levies in any taxing district in the county be adjusted to conform to the exemption of this levy from all limitations? If so, by what board or authority?"

The following sections of the General Code, now in force, require quotation in this connection:

"Section 6926. * * * For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, improving, maintaining, and repairing roads under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding two mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, and subject only to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force."

Section 6926-1. The county commissioners of any county may, and upon the petition of qualified electors of the county in a number equal to at least five per cent. of the number of votes cast therein at the last preceding general election of state and county officers, shall by resolution submit to the electors of such county at the first ensuing November election that occurs more than forty days after the adoption of such resolution, the question of exempting from all tax limitations the levy of two mills provided by section 6926 of the General Code * * * or the question of so exempting a part of such levy, such exemption to continue for a definite term of years not exceeding ten. When such question is submitted upon the petition of electors, such petition shall state the portion of the levy to be so exempted and the number of years during which such exemption shall continue, and these matters set forth in the petition shall also be set forth in like manner in the resolution adopted by the county commissioners pursuant thereto. * * * The board of county commissioners, upon the adoption of such resolution by a majority vote of all the members elected or appointed thereto, shall cause a copy of such resolution to be certified to the deputy state supervisors and inspectors or the deputy state supervisors of elections of the proper county.

Section 6926-2. Such proposition shall be submitted to the electors of such county at the first ensuing November election that occurs more than forty days after the adoption of such resolution. * * *

The form of the ballots cast at such election shall be:

'For an additional levy of taxes for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, maintaining and repairing county roads not exceeding _____ mills, for not to exceed _____ years. Yes.'

'For an additional levy of taxes for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, maintaining and repairing county roads not exceeding _____ mills, for not to exceed _____ years. No.'

Section 6926-3. The ballots shall be marked as is provided by law with reference to other ballots and the result of such election shall be certified by the deputy state supervisors and inspectors or the deputy state supervisors of elections to the county commissioners of such county. If a majority of the electors voting thereon at such election vote in favor of such levy or levies, it shall be lawful to levy taxes within such county at a rate not to exceed such increased rate for and during the period provided for in such resolution, such taxes to be in addition to such other taxes for the same purposes as may be levied subject to any limitation prescribed by law upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes, and the taxes so levied pursuant to such vote of the electors shall be in addition to all other levies made for any purpose or purposes and the same shall not be construed as limited, restricted or decreased in amount or otherwise by and existing law or laws."

The sections have not been quoted in full, but it may be said of the last three of them that they bear a striking resemblance in language and practical effect to sections 5649-5, 5649-5a and 5649-5b G. C., part of the Smith one per cent law, so-called. Both sets of statutes provide for the submission of a proposition affecting tax rates and limitations at the November election. It is reasonable to suppose therefore that the general assembly when it enacted sections 6926-1 et seq. G. C., intended that the same effect should be given to such new legislation as had been practically given to the similar provisions of the Smith one per cent law.

The questions submitted might be easily answered by saying that no action could in practice be taken at a November election to affect tax rates for the ensuing year, inasmuch as at that time the budget commissions have completed their work and the rates of other subdivisions levying within the districts affected by the vote have been adjusted by the commission to the levies of such district, on the theory that they were subject to one or more of the limitations of the Smith law; also because in November the duplicate is supposed to be in the possession of the county treasurer for the collection of taxes thereon.

These considerations are, however, in a measure at least practical rather than strictly legal. The same objections might be raised against giving effect to a vote under section 5649-5 G. C. in the year in which the vote is taken. It is believed, however, that the practical interpretation which has been given to the Smith law is contrary to the view suggested by the above objections. In other words, in numerous instance additional levies have been voted under sections 5649-5 et seq. G. C., and placed on the duplicate after election and before the time for the collection of taxes, although, as will be hereinafter pointed out, such action has, in certain instances, required the reconvening of the budget commission.

This department is not in possession of the exact facts with respect to the statement just made. The commission, it is believed, is aware of the situation. However, a general impression to that effect obtains, and it is believed that we must take it that the general assembly shared that impression and intended in so closely following section 5649-5b to make a law which would have the same practical effect so far as that feature of the question is concerned.

For this reason, then, it is the opinion of this department that a favorable vote of the electors under sections 6926-1 et seq. G. C. will be effective with respect to the duplicate upon which collections are to be made in December, 1919, and June, 1920. This statement is a categorical answer to your first question, though perhaps not a complete one.

In answer to your second question it may be said to be the opinion of this department that the fact that no levy has been made under section 6926 for the year 1919 does not prevent action under authority of a vote of the people by virtue of sections 6926-1 et seq. This answer is dictated by the principle just laid down.

Similarly, your third question must be partially answered by the statement that action previously taken under section 6926 may be rescinded under authority of a vote of the people effective in the year 1919 and taken under sections 6926-1 et seq., so that the rate levied subject to the limitations of the former section may be expunged and a new rate, levied outside of the limitations of that section, substituted therefor.

Coming now to some of the important collateral questions suggested by your inquiries in general, and indeed submitted in your third question, the following observations should be made:

In the first place, the essence of the vote is after all, as stated in section 6926-1, to exempt a levy for a purpose authorized by section 6926 G. C. from the limitations of the Smith law. Although section 6926-3 speaks of authority to levy the tax springing from a favorable vote of the electors, such tax is not in addition to other taxes that may be levied under section 6926 but must take the place of and be a substitute for levies under section 6926. Putting it in another way: when the people have authorized by their vote a levy under section 6926-3, the making of any levy referable to that authority destroys any authority to levy under section 6926 itself. This last way of putting the case is not strictly accurate but is intended to convey a clear impression of the practical result of the operation of the statute.

In the second place, the conclusion that the favorable vote of the electors may be acted upon so as to affect the current duplicate makes it necessary to hold that the budget commission must reconvene and make a new adjustment of levies throughout the county, in each instance in which a levy has already been made under section 6926 and allowed by the budget commission. For it having also been held that the effect of the exemption vote being to substitute the exempted levy for the one made subject to the limitations, or to take that levy out of the operation of the limitations, it is clear that the result must be that levying power equivalent to the amount of the levy under section 6926 as fixed by the budget commission may and most probably will be released by such exemption. It is true that this will not necessarily be the case in every instance. For example, no levy may have been made under section 6926 as suggested in your second question. In this event no action by the budget commission will be necessary. The county commissioners can make the levy at the rate authorized by the vote and certify their action to the county auditor, who will merely place the levy on the duplicate, without more.

Again, it is a fact not to be overlooked that the levy under section 6926 is subject only to the fifteen mill limit. It is logically possible, though not very probable, that there may be no taxing district in the county in which the release of levying power subject only to the fifteen mill limit will in anywise affect the adjustments made, the levies reduced having been those subject to the ten mill limit. Here is another case in which it is at least theoretically possible that no adjustment of levies will be required.

In the great majority of instances, however, it is supposed that the release of levying power will be such as to leave one or more taxing districts in the county with smaller tax levies than they are strictly entitled to with the road levy exempted. If these districts should insist upon it, it would certainly be the duty of the budget commission, if reconvened, to make a readjustment in such manner as to afford to them the full revenues to which they are entitled after the exemption of the county road levy.

In some instances it might be that the effect of the release of the levying power would be negligible and there would be no demand for such a readjustment. Wherever there is one, however, it should be met.

Opposed to the conclusions of this opinion is the provision of section 5637 G. C., to the general effect that the county commissioners shall levy taxes at their June session. If this provision and the provisions of section 5649-3a G. C. be given full effect. the June session of the county commissioners is the only time at which the act of levying taxes may be done. The practical interpretation of sections 5649-5 et seq., however, is to the contrary, and it is upon that practical interpretation, together with the similarity which exists between those sections and the ones immediately under consideration in this opinion, that the conclusions of this opinion are based.

Respectfully,

CHIEF INSPECTOR OF WORKSHOPS, FACTORIES AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO ISSUE ORDER TO BOARD OF EDUCATION TO DISCONTINUE PRACTICE OF CHARGING ADMISSION TO MOTION PICTURE ENTERTAINMENTS.

The chief inspector of workshops, factories and public buildings is without authority to issue an order to a board of education to discontinue the practice of charging admission to motion picture entertainments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the question as to whether the chief inspector or workshops, factories and public buildings has authority to issue an order to a board of education to discontinue the practice of charging admission to motion picture entertainments.

In the statement of facts submitted by you, it is noted that there is nothing irregular in the board of education holding such entertainments as you have in mind, the same being provided for under sections 7622, 7622-1, 7622-2, 7622-3, 7622-4, 7622-5 and 7622-6 of the General Code.

The question before us is whether the official named by you has authority to issue an order on any matter which does not come within the scope of his duties, as provided by the statute.

An examination of the statutes bearing upon all of the duties and powers of the chief deputy of the division of workshops, factories and public buildings, in the industrial commission fails to show any authority for the official in question to issue an order to the board of education to discontinue charging admission to motion picture entertainments. A brief analysis of the powers of the above official as regards boards of education shows that he has authority to prohibit the use of school buildings for school purposes under certain conditions; he can issue repair orders on such school buildings, which must be complied with by the board of education; he can limit the number of pupils in any one room or building and prohibit the use of such room or building if a greater number are forced to use such room or building for public school purposes; he has authority to direct the correction of any dangerous condition existing about such school building, including the proper installation of any moving picture machine, and the proper kind of booth in which such machine is installed. Under the compulsory education laws, which, however, do not apply in this case at hand, he can forbid the employment of children of school age who should be in school, as provided by the statutes, but no where is any authority found for the chief inspector of the division of workshops, factories and public buildings to issue an order prohibiting a board of education or any other organization from charging admission to motion picture entertainments.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—WHERE NON-DEPOSITORY BANK RECEIVES COUNTY FUNDS FOR PERIODS OF FROM SIXTY TO ONE HUNDRED DAYS WITHOUT BANK PAYING ANY INTEREST—LIABILITY OF BANK AND COUNTY TREASURER.

Where a non-depository bank receives county funds, having actual or imputed knowledge of their public character. Such funds are not deposited for transportation purposes under sections 2748 G. C. et seq. and such bank commingles and uses such funds with its general deposits, deriving a profit therefrom. HELD:

1. Such bank may be required to account to the county for the use of such funds. The questions of the measure of liability as to rate and time in computing interest reserved for further specific facts.

2. Such a deposit by a county treasurer constitutes a violation of sections 2715 et seq. (county depository laws) and if all of the facts in connection therewith show beyond a reasonable doubt that such violation was wilful, he is amenable to prosecution under section 2743 G. C. He is also liable in a civil action to account for any public money thus unaccounted for, wrongfully converted or misappropriated under section 286 G. C., as construed in State ex rel. vs. Maharry, 97 O. S., 272.

3. Where such deposit is made in a regularly designated county depository with such actual or imputed knowledge, not for transportation under sections 2748 et seq., G. C., and such funds are not credited to or deposited in such depositary account but are credited to such county in a non-interest bearing account, and by such bank commingled and used with its general deposit, such bank is liable for the use of such money. The same questions as to rate and period of interest on accounting that are stated in paragraph 1 hereof are likewise reserved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "Examiners of this department have discovered in certain counties, that where the treasurer received taxes under the provisions of sections 2746 to 2749, General Code, inclusive, that it has been the practice to permit the collections made at these places to be deposited with banks of deposit located at the place where collections were made and to permit the funds so collected to remain in said banks for periods of from 60 to 100 days without the bank paying any interest for the use of said funds and without the treasurer having reported same as tax collections in his daily statements to the auditor under section 2642 G. C.
> Question 1. What is the responsibility of the bank as to paying interest for the use of these funds?
> 2. What is the responsibility of the treasurer who permits these funds to remain in said bank as to the question of interest thereon?
> 3. Where a bank under the circumstances mentioned above is the regularly designated depository of county funds and the funds so left with this bank from such collections are not credited to the depository account, what is the responsibility of the bank as to interest on such funds?"

Sections 2715 and 2745 G. C., relating to county depositories, and sections 2746 and 2749, relating to tax receiving offices, are pertinent to your inquiry. Without quoting all of these depository statutes, it is deemed sufficient to set forth such parts thereof as may show the general intent of the legislature with reference to the safe-keeping of the county's funds.

Section 2715 in part provides:

> "The commissioners in each county shall designate in the manner hereinafter provided a bank or banks * * * as inactive depositories, and one or more of such banks * * * as active depositories of the money of the county."

Section 2715-1 in part provides that the deposits in active depositories "shall at all times be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county," and that deposits in inactive depositories shall remain "until such time as the county treasurer is obliged to withdraw a portion or all of the same and place it in the active depository * * * for current use." In passing it may be noted that funds which are not needed for current expenses are those required to be deposited in a different kind of a depository than those funds which are needed for current expenses.

Section 2722 provides that no award on proposals for depositing public money shall be made until the statutory security is given under this section and sections 2723 and 2724.

Section 2729 fixes the time or final condition, viz., the acceptance of the depository undertaking and hypothecation of bonds upon which such bank or banks become depositories.

Section 2736, as amended in 103 O. L., 562, provides that after the treasurer is notified by the commissioners of the selection of a depository,

> "such treasurer shall deposit in such bank or banks * * * as directed by the commissioners and designated as inactive depositaries to the credit of the county all money in his possession, except such amount as is necessary to meet current demands, which shall be deposited by such treasurer in the active depositary or depositaries. Thereafter, before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein the balance, if any, remaining in his hands after having paid out of the receipts of the preceding business day, in cash, warrants presented to him for payment during such day, except as hereinbefore provided."

Section 2737 in part provides:

> "All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month * * * such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, and the depositary shall notify the auditor and treasurer, each separately, in writing of the amount thereof before noon of the next business day. All such interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided tax funds shall be apportioned by the county auditor to the state, * * * or assessing districts in the proportion that the amounts collected for the respective political divisions * * * bear to the entire amount collected by the county treasurer for such undivided tax funds and deposited as herein provided."

Section 2743 provides that:

> "An officer of a county having a county deposit who wilfully violates any provision of this chapter relating to county depositaries, or wilfully neglects or refuses to perform any duties thereby imposed upon him, shall be fined not more than ten thousand dollars * * * or be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years, or both."

Section 2746 authorizes the county treasurer to open a tax receiving office, in each township whenever in his opinion it is necessary and, as to such office, provides:

"Such office shall be in a city or village in which is located a bank of deposit."

Section 2748 provides that

"For the purpose of transportation, the county treasurer may deposit temporarily in any bank of deposit located at such place of collection any money received in the payment of taxes."

This section also requires that such bank receiving temporary deposits for the purpose of transportation, must give security, subject to the approval of the county commissioners.

From the facts stated in your letter, supplemented by personal conference, it is learned that your question relates largely to a practice in connection with the deposit of money received in payment of taxes and which belongs, until settlement and distribution, to the undivided general tax fund. Questions 1 and 2 are understood to relate to such deposits being made in non-depositary banks.

These questions require that sections 2746 to 2749, inclusive, be construed with the county depositary sections, above quoted or referred to.

The first part of section 2715 is free from doubt and under it the county commissioners are given no discretion as to selecting and maintaining a county depositary, the statute reading that they "shall designate in the manner hereinafter provided a bank or banks" as depositaries for the money of the county.

Section 2736 leaves no doubt about the imperative duty of the treasurer, after making the deposits which should go into the inactive depositary, depositing all the rest of the money in his possession "before noon of each business day."

Section 2737 is free from ambiguity, providing that "all money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest."

Section 2748, it must be remembered, permits the deposit only of money collected at such place of collection (where the bank is located) temporarily and only "for the purpose of transportation." The enactment of these statutes followed the decisions in the cases of Eshelby vs. Board of Education, 66 O. S., 71; Glenville vs. Englehart, 19 O. C. C., 285, and others which arose upon the acts of treasurers depositing and loaning public money to banks and claiming to own the income or interest thereof. Their purpose is to safeguard and insure the proper custody of public money, but they go further than that and require that such part of the increment of the public funds, as is agreed upon, shall inure to the benefit of the public.

Assuming the deposits made by the treasurer in such banks, located at the place where branch tax collection offices are opened, are not legally designated depositaries of public funds, as required by section 2715 et seq. G. C., your first question is, "what is the responsibility of the bank as to paying interest for the use of these funds."

The case of Eshelby vs. Board of Education, (supra), while a case on different issues than here involved, throws some light on this question. In that case funds were deposited in a bank which was not a depositary of the school district funds and interest accrued on the deposit which the treasurer claimed as his property. The case was presented to the court on the question of whether the interest accruing upon such public funds belonged to the school district or to the treasurer and was disposed of on this reasoning:

"Since the funds belong to the school district, the ultimate question in the case is answered in favor of the defendant in error (board of education) by the elementary proposition, that in the absence of a statute or stipulation to the contrary, the increment follows the principal."

As reflecting upon the treasurer's duties, a further quotation from this opinion may be made as follows:

"The safety of public funds has been the chief object of care. For their security the law employs the character and ability of the treasurer, and the security which is afforded by his official bond."

In a suit against the bondsmen of the state treasurer, the same result was reached in the case of State vs. McKinnon, et al., 15 O. C. C. (n. s.) 1. This case was affirmed by the supreme court.

Other cases awarding a recovery against the treasurer or his bondsmen for interest collected on funds illegally deposited, are found in State vs. Bank, 19 O. D., p. 82, State vs. Schott, et al., 9 N. P. (n. s.) 522.

The result of these holdings leaves no doubt as to the rights of the county and the duty and liability of the treasurer, where the money so illegally deposited has drawn interest, and there is no doubt in such cases that the bank could be required to pay such interest to the county, or, if same has been paid to the treasurer, he and his bondsmen are liable to an accounting for such interest. This, however, presents a different case from the one under discussion, for it is assumed that the funds in this case have been deposited without any understanding or agreement as to interest being paid either to the treasurer or to the county.

The case of Franklin Bank vs. Newark, 96 O. S., 453, is the nearest in point of any available decision. In that case the city treasurer deposited in the Franklin Bank a certain sum of money in violation of section 4294 G. C., which then provided that "Upon giving bond, as required by council, the treasurer may, by and with the consent of his bondsmen, deposit all funds and public monies of which he has charge, in such bank or banks * * * which may seem best for the protection of such funds * * *. All profits arising from such deposit * * * shall inure to the benefit of the fund."

The plaintiff in that case had not provided a depositary for the city funds and the defendant bank claimed that the deposit was made with the knowledge and consent of the city council and the bondsmen of the city treasurer, and was received by the bank under an agreement with the treasurer that no interest was to be paid on said funds or compensation charged for their safe keeping.

The city claimed that the bank had full knowledge that such funds were the public funds of the city of Newark and that the bank derived profits in loaning the same in its banking business, and plaintiff sought an accounting of the profits.

The banks in the case under consideration are not legal depositaries and, except for temporary deposits for the purpose of transportation, a deposit of county funds in such banks, without any agreement as to interest, is an illegal deposit resembling the facts in the Newark case. On page 456, after stating the issues in the Newark case, the supreme court stated the material facts to be:

"The issues of fact which may be regarded as material in this case were whether such funds were received upon the condition that no compensation should be paid therefor either as interest or otherwise, and whether such funds were in fact received and at all times held by the bank as a special deposit and no profit realized by the bank from the possession and use thereof."

The trial court had found in fact that such deposit was not a special deposit and that the bank did derive a profit from the possession and use thereof, and, after quoting section 4294 (supra), the court laid down this general rule:

> "We think it clear from the provisions of this and cognate sections of the General Code that any bank receiving funds of a municipality under the circumstances disclosed by this record, knowing the same to be the funds of the municipality, becomes a trustee and must account to the municipality for the fund so deposited and all profits arising from such deposit."

The special facts as to the deposits made in your question are not given, but in consideration of the statutes and cases above cited, a general rule may be announced that in case of such illegal deposits, if the bank knows, or by the exercise of ordinary prudence should know, that the funds deposited belong to the county, and receive the same not as a special deposit, but commingle and use the same with the other general deposits of the bank, and derive a profit from the possession and use thereof, such bank must account for the profits arising from such deposit.

This results in an answer to your first question that the responsibility of the bank, where the facts are as above stated, is that it may be held to an accounting to the county and be required to pay to the county the amount which such accounting would show to be due the county for the use and possession of its funds.

Your second question is,

His responsibility criminally would be determined by applying the provisions of section 2743 (supra), to the facts in each case, on the wilfullness of his neglect or refusal to perform any of the duties imposed upon him by the depositary statutes, and if the facts show beyond a reasonable doubt that the county treasurer wilfully violated any provision of those laws, or wilfully neglected or refused to perform his duties thereunder, he is subject upon conviction to the fines or imprisonment, or both, as provided in section 2743.

Section 286 G. C., as amended in 103 O. L., 508, in part provides that if an examiner's report sets forth any misfeasance or gross neglect of duty on the part of an officer, for which a criminal penalty is provided by law, the prosecuting attorney is obliged, upon the receipt of certified copy of the report, to institute criminal proceedings against such offender.

The same section provides that:

> "If the report sets forth that any public money * * * has not been accounted for, or that any public money has been converted or misappropriated," the prosecuting attorney, upon receipt of such report, is authorized and required to bring a civil action for the recovery of such public money. Public money is defined in the same section to be "all money received or collected under color of office, whether in accordance with or under authority of any law * * * or otherwise, and all public officials * * * shall be liable therefor."

If the county treasurer wilfully violates any provision of the depositary laws and wilfully neglects or refuses to perform the duties imposed upon him of depositing the public money in the designated depositary, and for unlawful purposes deposits said money in an unauthorized bank, where such public money draws interest, he has in law converted such money to his own use and he and his bondsmen are liable to the county for the amount of the increment to the public funds. See State vs. McKinnon and other cases cited in answer to your first question.

Your third question relates to such temporary depositing of county money by the treasurer in a bank which is the regularly designated depositary of the county and where such deposit in the depositary is not credited to the regular depositary account, and your inquiry is "what is the responsibility of the bank as to interest on such funds."

Enough of the depositary sections have been quoted to show that upon the acceptance of the depositary proposal, the giving and acceptance of its bonds and notice from the county commissioners to the county treasurer, it is made the unmistakable duty of the treasurer to deposit the active funds of the county in such depositary before noon of each business day. The depositary is charged with knowledge of this law, which is read into and is a part of its depositary contract.

Excepting such moneys which the county will not need for the payment of its current expenses and which must be deposited in the inactive depositary, there is no provision in law whereby a lawfully designated depositary of county funds may receive any of the public money of the county and place it in a separate non-interest bearing account, except as herein pointed out.

It is a known fact that during the tax paying period, and up to the time of the semi-annual settlement of the county treasurer, large sums of money are paid into the undivided general tax funds. The law provides for the computation of the interest on the county funds in an active depositary on a daily cash balance basis. With the great amount of money thus paid in during the tax-paying period, the legislature realized the importance of having such undivided tax funds bearing interest on the daily balance basis, and the action of the county treasurer and county depositary, in depositing such money in a separate and irregular non-interest bearing account is to defeat the manifest purpose of this act, and is nothing more or less than a plain evasion of the law.

Here the bank is the legal depositary and, as your letter is understood, it has also qualified as what may be here termed "temporary depositary for transportation only." It must be remembered that such bank may receive deposits in either of these capacities. If duly received in the capacity first referred to, the liability and rate are fixed by statute and the depositary contract thereunder, and this phase may be eliminated from further discussion.

But in the latter situation there is no such contractual rate and the money is and can be received only as a special deposit; this is so from the very nature of the transaction and its legal effect under the statutes permitting such deposits. The bank in this instance receives the county's monies and holds them temporarily for transportation. In theory it must hold and transport the particular monies it receives. Under no circumstances can it legally treat them as a general deposit and use and commingle them with its general deposits.

The length of time allowed for transportation is not fixed by statute but may be determined by established banking custom, subject to special facts in particular cases, and no hard and fast rule is here made.

It may be suggested that the necessity and justification for such temporary deposit in a designated depositary would not ordinarily exist. One exception, however, may be pointed out; where such bank has already received as a regular depositary the maximum amount it could receive under its agreement upon qualifying under sections 2748 et seq. it could receive such temporary deposits.

Where, however, by agreement with the treasurer, such bank receives such money with actual or imputed knowledge of their public character, not for the purpose of transportation but with the agreement and intention to hold such money for a period of time clearly beyond the time necessary for transportation, and such funds are not placed or credited in the regular depositary account, but are placed in a non-interest bearing account, and used and commingled with the bank's general deposits, its liability is certain.

In such a case, entertaining no doubt as to the bank's liability, these questions remain as to the measure of the bank's liability: (a) what rate of interest is recoverable, and (b) from what time shall such rate be charged.

Specific facts as to the particular deposits not being given in your letter, and it being understood that your questions are asked with a view of ascertaining and announcing a general rule in such matters toward the end that certain practices in this matter may be stopped, rather than at present making this opinion the legal basis for a particular finding or suit for recovery, these general questions will be noted and tentatively considered, but not finally decided until presentation of actual facts in specific cases.

(a) As to the rate of interest, the rate finally recoverable in the Newark case, it is suggested, may not be adopted for all cases. In that case the trial court found against the bank (page 455) on accounting on the basis of "the rate of net profit realized by the bank upon its entire assets during the period said fund was on deposit." The supreme court held, however, that the facts constituted the bank a trustee, from which upon established principles of equity, other facts being equal, it may be claimed the trustees have wrongfully converted the money to its own use and used and commingled the funds of its cestui que trust with its own funds or with other funds controlled by it in such a way as to make it impossible to ascertain the increment thereto, that the trustee would be liable for the legal rate of interest where no rate is agreed upon, viz., 6 per cent. This claim does not appear to have been made in the pleadings in the Newark case and was not considered in the supreme court, so that the measure of liability fixed in that case may not be held as a precedent for all cases. Again, a trustee bank in such a case may have used and commingled such money in such a negligent and imprudent manner as to have made little or no profit thereon; in such case it would seem unsafe to hold that the cestui que trust would be bound by such negligence and imprudence and entitled only to such profits as resulted therefrom.

(b) In the consideration of the question as to the time from which such rate shall be charged, it must be noted that, (1) sections 2748 et seq. do not fix a time limit for transporting such monies. It may be observed, however, that in the ordinary course of banking in ordinary cases, this would require but a short time; (2) such money is subject to the control of the treasurer and not the bank.

The liability of the bank may depend in some (if not all) cases upon its treating such funds as a general deposit.

In a given case, where such funds are received and held by the bank as a special deposit, but not transported because of the negligence of the treasurer, no reason for the bank's liability is apparent. But if such bank receives such funds, according to law, and their transportation is delayed by reason of the neglect of the treasurer or the bank, and such funds are used and commingled as before stated, the time of such use and commingling would be the beginning of the interest bearing time.

In another case in which may be supposed, the transportation is unreasonably delayed by the bank, the interest would then be charged from the beginning of such delay. But where it is the understanding between the treasurer and the bank that such funds are not intended as such temporary deposit and it was the understanding and the intention that they were to be used by the bank as a general deposit, the interest begins from the time of the deposit.

These questions are noted (but not decided) for practical purposes in guiding your examiners in procuring pertinent facts in the process of their examinations and are reserved for final consideration as actual cases may arise and be submitted.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—COUNTY AND DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS NOT ENTITLED TO PAY FOR ATTENDING COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

County and district superintendents are not entitled to pay for attending the county teachers' institutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department upon the following question:

> "Are county and district superintendents entitled to pay for attending a county teachers' institute?"

Section 7870 G. C., reads as follows:

> "When a teachers' institute has been authorized by the county board of education the boards of education of all school districts shall pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendents presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the county superintendent. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance as certified by the county superintendent, for not more than five days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

Relative to the question of a district superintendent being entitled to the additional compensation of $2.00 per day mentioned in section 7870 G. C., the attorney general in 1915 passed upon this question in opinion 749, appearing at page 1531, Vol. 2, 1915, the syllabus of which reads:

> "A district superintendent is not entitled to pay for attending a teachers institute under authority of section 7870 G. C., as amended in 104 O. L., 107."

It is advised that section 7870 G. C. has not been amended since 1915 by any subsequent legislation upon this particular subject and the law at present reads the same as it did at the time it was construed by the attorney-general in 1915. The attorney-general arrived at his conclusion in such opinion upon the ground that,

> "While the provisions of said statute are general in that they apply to a teacher or superintendent employed by the board of education of any school district in the county, it will be observed that such teacher or superintendent must be employed by such board of education within the meaning of said provisions of such statute in order to be entitled to pay for attending said institute."

It seems, therefore, that it was not the intention of the legislature, in amending said section (7870) to extend the meaning of said provision so as to include district superintendents. The present attorney-general concurs in the opinion above given and for the reasons appearing therein.

Coming to the question as to whether the county superintendent is entitled to pay for attending the county teachers' institute, attention is invited to the fact that he is employed by the year starting on August 1st and running for a period of twelve months thereafter. In Opinion No. 104, issued by the Attorney-General on March 8, 1919, such annual salary as appearing in the contract of the county superintendent should be paid in twelve equal installments and therefore the county superintendent would be drawing his regular salary for attendance at the county teachers' institute, no matter what part or time of the year such institute might be held. Again, the question arises as to whether the management of a county teachers' institute, the expenses of which are paid by the county board of education, is not one of the duties of the county superintendent in the capacity for which he was employed. It will be noted that section 7870, supra, says that the daily attendance of the teachers and superintendents at the county teachers' institute "shall be paid * * * as certified by the county superintendent * * *," which would indicate that before such county superintendent could certify any teacher or superintendent as being present at such institute, he would be there personally himself in order to certify the daily attendance of others. The section in question seems to contemplate the payment of $10.00 as maintenance for teachers and superintendents who might not be on the salary roll at a time when the teachers' institute is held, in which event, if they desire to attend such institute, they would be compelled to pay from their own funds maintenance in attending a county teachers' institute at a time when they themselves were not on the pay roll, for in the majority of cases the teachers are paid for their work at the end of each school month, beginning with the school month of September, and when the school term has ended with its last month, they have under contract with the board of education received their last month's salary, in which event, during the months prior to September, that is to say, the summer months in which the institute might be held, they are not on the pay roll of any board of education at that particular time.

The intention of the law seems to be to encourage attendance at the teachers' institutes and it has thus provided that those persons who are not being paid during the summer months shall receive this additional compensation of $10.00, that is, five days attendance at $2.00 per day, from the next employing board of education, to be paid as an addition to the first months salary by the employing board. This condition does not seem to apply in the case of a county superintendent of schools who receives his annual salary in twelve equal installments, to be paid throughout all of the months of the calendar year, nor does it apply, it may be said, in the case of a district superintendent who should be paid in the same manner, these two employes being paid as indicated above for their time throughout the entire calendar year of twelve months.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the attorney-general that county and district superintendents are not entitled to pay for attending the county teachers' institutes.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—REDRAFT OF AGREEMENT WITH THE MASSILLON ELECTRIC AND GAS COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1919.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of recent date, enclosing duplicate copies of a certain proposed memorandum of agreement between your board and the Massillon Electric & Gas Company, relative to the erection by the latter of an electric transmission line across state land.

I have taken the liberty of redrafting the agreement, with the view of accomplishing the following things:

"(1) Incorporating within the agreement itself a copy of the law authorizing the same to be made.

(2) Making the blue print, by definite reference, a part of the agreement.

(3) Limiting, as does the act, the use of the line to transmission use only.

(4) Following the words of the act with reference to the non-liability of the state for injuries occasioned by the erection or use of the line.

(5) Giving the state the right to revoke, upon failure of the company to observe any of the terms and conditions of the agreement, including the payment of rent.

(6) Limiting the duration of the agreement to a period of ten years certain."

Inasmuch as the act is silent as to the duration of the right authorized to be granted, it is thought that nothing is gained by the reference that "this agreement * * * shall continue thereafter from year to year in accordance with House Bill No. 323," etc. At the end of ten years the agreement may, of course, be renewed.

As redrafted, said agreement is hereby approved as to form.

Very respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—WHERE TESTATOR DEVISED ALL HIS PROPERTY TO A AND B, HUSBAND AND WIFE, AND COLLATERAL RELATIVES FOR LIFE, SURVIVOR TO SUCCEED TO WHOLE FOR LIFE AND REMAINDER OVER TO OTHER COLLATERAL RELATIVES IN FEE—TAX HOW DETERMINED.

Where a testator devised all his property to A and B, husband and wife, and collateral relatives, for life, the survivor to succeed to the whole for life and remainder over to other collateral relatives in fee, the right to succeed to the whole estate for life in the survivor is a contingent interest passing by the will in addition to the half interest for life passing to each of the life tenants as a vested interest. The vesting of such contingent interest constitutes a new inheritance taxable under the collateral inheritance tax law in addition to the original life estate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1919.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date requesting opinion of this department as follows:

> "One M. E. B., of Clermont county, died in October, 1918, her will was duly probated on October 21, 1918. Under the provisions of her will she left all her money to J. J. U. and M. J. U. for life, with the further provision that should one of them die the survivor should hold the entire estate for life. Upon the death of both of these parties the estate was to go to eight nieces and nephews in fee. J. J. U., one of the holders of the life estate died several months ago, and after the will was probated, therefore, of course, enjoying for at least a few months the life estate of half of this property.
> The question now comes up as to the payment of the inheritance tax. The appraisement of the estate was $6150.00. The bona fide debts of the estate amount to $1195.82. There was no personal property and the executrix, who happens to be one of the life tenants, M. J. U., paid all the debts out of her own personal funds. It is admitted, of course, that she could have sold the real estate to pay these debts, but she did not elect to do so.
> After the payment of the debts there was left in the estate $4954.18. The life interest of M. J. U., she being 64 years of age, was $1114.69, and after deducting the $500.00 exemption, left an amount on which she was to pay an inheritance tax of $614.69.
> The life estate of J. J. U, he being 67 years old, amounted to $1016.65. Taking the $500.00 exemption from this, left $516.65, on which he was to pay inheritance tax.
> The probate judge seems to think that, in addition to the payment of this tax, M. J. U., on account of the death of J. J. U., when she inherited a life estate in all the property, should pay an additional tax on that part which she inherited by reason of the death of J. J. U.
> In other words, the court claims that Mrs. U. should pay an inheritance tax on her life estate in one-half of the property, and Mr. U. should pay an inheritance tax on his half of the property, and in addition Mrs. U. should pay inheritance tax on the half which she is now entitled to on account of the death of Mr. U.
> The attorney for the executrix claims that the last named item of tax should not be paid, claiming that the tax having been paid on the whole estate, to-wit, the two halves, it will make a double taxation to charge for three parts.
> Will you kindly advise me whether this estate should pay on the half inherited by Mrs. U., the half inherited by Mr. U., and also if Mrs. U. will have to again pay an inheritance tax on the half she gets by reason of the death of Mr. U.?"

It appears from your statement of facts that all the events mentioned occurred before the present inheritance tax law went into effect on June 5, 1919. These questions are therefore all to be solved by the application of the former collateral inheritance tax law.

I may say at the outset that the old collateral inheritance tax law contains no specific provision to govern such a case, except the one providing generally how the value of life estates shall be computed.

In the case under consideration it would appear that the life estates created by the will might be described as life tenancy in common or joint tenancy (the distinction between the two being immaterial for present purposes) for the joint lives of the husband and wife, with a contingent survivorship by way of remainder for life. In other words, each of the takers had a life interest which was vested as of the death of the testator, and the survivor was to have a life interest contingent upon the fact of survivorship.

Under the old law contingent estates, especially those which were wholly contingent, could not be appraised and taxed until the contingency happened. It appears in this instance, however, the contingency has happened before the necessity for determining the tax has arisen, in that the husband has died. The wife therefore appears as the survivor who acquires a life estate in the whole and therefore an enhancement in value of the life estate which she theretofore had, which was a half interest only, by reason of the death of her husband. This is a new succession upon which it is proper, as the probate judge has ruled, to collect an additional tax.

I have not made computations to verify the correctness of the probate judge's assessment of the initial life estates. Assuming, however, that such initial assessments were upon the theory that the husband had a life estate in a half interest, joint or in common, and the wife also a life estate in a half interest, both of which were vested as of the death of the testator, the assessment of such life interests and the payment of taxes thereon would leave unassessed and untaxed the new interest which the wife acquired by the death of her husband. It would not be double taxation either in law or in fact to tax the wife for this newly acquired interest.

You are advised, therefore, that in principle the probate judge's view of the case is correct, though no opinion is expressed as to the correctness of the valuations.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—WHERE THE GOODYEAR TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY OF AKRON DECIDES TO REDEEM AN ISSUE OF ITS PREFERRED STOCK AT FIXED PRICE—SUCH TRANSACTION NOT WITHIN PURVIEW OF SECTION 5348-2 G. C. OF INHERITANCE TAX LAW.

Where a corporation decides to redeem an issue of its preferred stock at a fixed price, and gives notice thereof and makes arrangements with a financial institution to pay out money necessary to redeem the issue if the shares are preferred, the act of such trust company in paying out cash for the shares of redeemed stock is not a transaction within the purview of section 5348-2 G. C., a part of the inheritance tax law, requiring notice to be given to the tax commission of Ohio and consent on the part of that commission to such transaction, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date quoting the following communication to the commission on the part of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company:

> "The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of this city is redeeming an issue of preferred stock, the redemption to be made on November 1st of this year.

The Ohio Savings & Trust Company, also of this city (Akron) is acting for the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company in the redemption of this preferred stock. The certificates of stock will be, when presented to the Ohio Savings & Trust Company, redeemed by the payment of money therefor. Some of the certificates of preferred stock will be in the hands of the representatives of deceased persons, and inquiry is therefore made as to whether the Ohio Savings & Trust Company may safely pay to the representatives of the deceased, the money represented by the stock certificate.

The inquiry, of course, arises out of section No. 5348-2, General Code, being a part of the new inheritance tax law.

The Trust Company is of the opinion that this transaction does not constitute a delivery of assets or property belonging to the decedent, but that it is a conversion by the representatives of the deceased of an asset of the deceased into another form. We request, therefore, that you inform us at your very earliest convenience as to whether or not the Trust Company may accept the certificates of stock presented by representatives of deceased persons, and pay them the redemption price therefor, or whether the Trust Company must retain from the redemption price, a sufficient amount to pay the inheritance tax.

It is further requested that if it be the holding of your commission that such tax must be retained under the law, you give to the Ohio Savings & Trust Company consent to pay to the representatives of deceased persons, the redemption price for the preferred stock to be redeemed by the Trust Company, the consent of your department being authorized by the provision of section No. 5348-2."

You request the advice of this department as to the proper procedure and as to the duties imposed on the Ohio Savings & Trust Company by the section of the inheritance tax law to which reference is made.

The letter quoted above is susceptible to two interpretations with respect to the nature of the arrangement between the trust company and the corporation. Under one of such possible interpretations the trust company would have a general deposit of the corporation commingled with its other assets, and would have agreed merely as agent of the corporation to redeem the stock in question and charge the account of the corporation with the payments thus made. Under the other interpretation the trust company would be the depositary of a special fund, set apart by the corporation out of its assets for the specific purpose of retiring this stock.

In the one case the relation between the trust company and the corporation would be purely that of debtor and creditor as to the moneys on deposit, and of agent and principal as to the duty to retire the stock. There would be no trust in the technical sense of the word, either for the corporation or for the stockholders. The assets subject to be paid over to the stockholders would be in the legal sense assets of the trust company itself. Even in the strict equitable sense they would be its assets. But if in such view they might be regarded as the assets of any one other than the trust company, they would have to be regarded as those of the corporation. It would be impossible in any view to regard the moneys as assets of the stockholders. Hence, the statute would not apply.

In the other possible view of the case the special deposit above described would constitute a trust, but a trust primarily for the benefit of the corporation. The assets in the possession of the trust company would then be, in the equitable sense at least, assets of the corporation devoted by it to the particular purpose of redeeming the stock.

The question would then arise as to whether or not such an arrangement would constitute a trust for the benefit of the stockholders in such a sense as that the assets in the possession of the trust company could be regarded as assets belonging to the stockholders, and the redemption of the stock as a transfer of such assets to the stockholders.

In connection with this question it must be remembered that a resolution to retire stock has the effect of terminating many of the incidents at least of the relation of stockholder and corporation. The right to dividends ceases, as does the right, if any, to participate in the internal management of the corporation. The situation becomes analogous to that arising between a vendor and a vendee under a contract of sale and purchase subject to conditions which have occurred. It is assumed, of course, in the discussion of this question that the stock has been issued under statutory provisions similar to those obtaining in Ohio, so that a subscription for or purchase of a share of stock gives rise not only to the relation of stockholder and corporation until the redemption takes place, but also to an executory contract between the corporation and the holder of the stock looking to the purchase of the share on or after a day certain, at the election of the corporation and at a fixed price. This option being exercised by the corporation, the stockholder ceases to be such in the full sense of the word and becomes merely a person having a right to offer the certificate to the corporation for purchase by it; and the corporation becomes bound by its own action to purchase the stock when offered at a particular price.

In this view of the case the trust, if any, can be regarded as nothing more than a trust for the discharge of an executory contract of purchase. The fund to be used for this purpose cannot be regarded as belonging beneficially to the holders of the retired stock in proportion to their several interests therein, because in order to avail themselves of whatever right they may have to participate in that fund the holders of the retired stock will be obliged to part with their certificates, which now constitute choses in action in the sense that they evidence a claim to a matured contract of purchase.

Previous opinions of this department have laid down the principle that payment by a debtor to the estate of a deceased creditor of a claim due that estate cannot be regarded as a delivery or transfer of assets within the meaning of section 5348-2 G. C., for the reason that the asset of the estate consists of the duty to pay, which is known as a "credit" in the hands of the estate. The specific money which may be in the possession of the debtor and by him intended to meet the claim when presented belongs to him and is to be used by him in discharging the debt; it does not belong to the creditor. This principle applies a fortiori to the present case where the "asset belonging to the decedent" is evidenced in the tangible form of a certificate of stock which has been called in. What actually takes place is that this asset is liquidated; and its liquidation does not constitute a transfer of assets on the part of the corporation nor any agent or trustee of it.

For all these reasons it is concluded that on neither possible interpretation of the letter which is quoted in the commission's request for opinion would the retirement of the stock in question through the agency of the trust company be a transaction which would require the giving of notice to the tax commission and its consent in writing thereto, in order to avoid the liability of the trust company for inheritance taxes.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DITCHES—WHEN PROCEEDING FOR CLEANING DITCH BEGUN UNDER FORMER SECTION 6691 ET SEQ. G. C. REPEALED, 108 O. L. 926—TO BE COMPLETED ACCORDING TO REPEALED SECTIONS.

By virtue of section 26 G. C.; a proceeding for cleaning a ditch begun under former sections 6691, et seq., G. C., repealed as of October 10, 1919, 108 O. L. 926, is to be completed in the manner pointed out in said repealed sections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1919.

HON. EDWARD GAUDERN, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR—Your letter of recent date is received, reading as follows:

> "A ditch in Jefferson township, this county, established heretofore, was apportioned by the township ditch supervisor for a 'clean out' more than one year ago. Practically all of the work was done promptly, but two different sections were left uncompleted at the time the new ditch law went into effect.
> Will you kindly advise whether the old trustees or ditch supervisor have any present authority to carry out their original orders?"

The matter of the appointment and duties of township ditch supervisor was provided for by former sections 3366 to 3390 G. C. Among these sections was section 3389, reading as follows:

> "The township ditch supervisor shall have the supervision of all township and county ditches in his township. He shall clean them out and keep them in repair as provided by law and shall perform such other duties as are imposed upon him by law."

The matter of cleaning and keeping in repair of township ditches was provided for by former sections 6691 to 6726 G. C. These sections, in brief, provide that the township ditch supervisor of the township through which a ditch runs, shall divide it into working sections and apportion the sections to landowners, corporate roads, railroads, township and county according to the benefit received, whereupon such landowners and others interested are charged with cleaning out their respective "working sections." The right is given a landowner dissatisfied with his apportionment, to file a protest with the township trustees, and the right is also given of an appeal to the probate court from the proceedings of the trustees.

By sections 6705, 6706 and 6707 it is provided in substance that if the persons to whom "working sections" are apportioned, refuse to clean or keep them in repair, the ditch supervisor may let to the lowest responsible bidder the work of cleaning them, and certify the cost of said work to the county auditor, whereupon the amount assessed attaches as a lien upon the affected land. All costs certified to the county auditor are to be collected by the county treasurer and paid over to the treasurer of the township for use as township ditch funds.

In an opinion of this department (No. 447) dated June 30, 1919, directed to Hon. Haveth E. Mau, prosecuting attorney, Dayton, Ohio, the two series of sections above referred to were considered and their history reviewed. The conclusion reached was that the two series were to be construed together.

All of said sections were expressly repealed by the new ditch law, known as amended senate bill No. 100 (108 O. L., 926) effective October 10, 1919. In the new law provision is made by sections 64 to 67 for the cleaning of ditches under the supervision of the county commissioners, and for an assessment of the cost against lands originally assessed for the construction of the ditch, except that in the case where no record of the original assessment has been preserved, then the assessment is to be made according to benefits, etc.

The answer to your question turns on the fact whether the steps directed to be taken by said repealed sections constitute a proceeding within the meaning of section 26 G. C. That section reads:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

While it was at one time a matter of doubt whether said section had application to proceedings other than judicial proceedings, that doubt was disposed of by the supreme court in the case of Cincinnati vs. Davis, 58 O. S. 225—a case involving the validity of an assessment for the improvement of an alley. The principal objection to the assessment was that the ordinance for the improvement was not adopted by the proper municipal body in that it was adopted by the board of legislation, when as claimed, it should have been adopted by the board of administration in accordance with an act of the legislature giving jurisdiction to the latter board as to improvements of the character there involved, which act of the legislature was passed subsequently to the beginning of the improvement proceedings by the passage of resolution of necessity by the board of legislation. The court in the course of its opinion holds said section 26 (then known as section 79 R. S.) to be applicable, and disapproves the case of Commissioners vs. Green, 40 O. S., 316, in so far as the latter case held said section applicable only to judicial proceedings. The syllabus in the Cincinnati case reads as follows:

> "Where a resolution, declaring the necessity of the improvement of an alley, is made by the proper board of a city, at the time the resolution is adopted, the subsequent amendment of the law, whereby the making of such improvements as to alleys of a certain width, is conferred on another board, does not work a discontinuance of the pending proceeding, though it be of such an alley; and the improvement should be prosecuted to completion by the board that adopted the resolution, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amendment."

The various steps provided under the repealed statutes for the cleaning of a given ditch are so related as to give them the character of a "proceeding." It is well to bear in mind also that the matter of assessment lien is involved and that speaking generally, the steps pointed out by the applicable statutes must be strictly followed in order to give validity to such assessment. For these reasons the case of Cincinnati vs. Davis is in point, and in answer to your inquiry, leads to the conclusion that the repealed statutes are applicable to your situation and that the township trustees and ditch supervisor retain their authority to the extent that the proceeding for cleaning out the ditch in question should be completed under their supervision, in the manner pointed out in the repealed statutes.

It is true that in the Cincinnati case the amendment there in question, so far as is shown in the report of the case, did not operate to discontinue the existence of the board of legislation; whereas, by the terms of the new ditch law all statutes relating to the office of ditch supervisor, and conferring power on the township trustees in the matter of cleaning ditches, are expressly repealed. However, such distinction cannot be accepted as ground for holding section 26 inapplicable in the present instance, because that section in terms states that a "repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending * * * proceedings;" thus making plain that all official authority necessarily involved in the pending proceeding is continued in force for the purpose of completing the proceeding.

You are therefore advised in answer to your inquiry that the township trustees and ditch supervisor have authority to carry out their original orders, provided that such orders were, when made, in accordance with the steps pointed out by the statutes then in force.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BOND ISSUE IN CLARK COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $11,000.00—PURCHASE LAND AND CONSTRUCT SCHOOL BUILDING.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 11, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

Re Bonds of Springfield township rural school district of Clark county, Ohio, in the amount of $11,000.00, to purchase land and construct a school building, being 22 bonds of $500.00 each.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Springfield township rural school district relative to the above bond issue and herewith decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reason:

Section 7629 G. C., under authority of which these bonds are issued, is as follows:

> "The board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied, from time to time, as occasion requires, may issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven. The board shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but provide that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year next preceding such issue. The order to issue bonds shall be made only at a regular meeting of the board and by a vote of two-thirds of its full membership, taken by yeas and nays and entered upon its journal."

It will be noted that the last paragraph of this section provides that the order to issue such bonds can only be made by a vote of two-thirds of the full membership of the board of education. The transcript reveals that the board of education of Springfield township rural school district is composed of five members. The clerk of the board recites in his certificate attached to the transcript that four of these members were present at the opening of the board meeting at which the bond resolution was adopted, but that one of the four members present, Mr. Driscoll, was called away from the meeting before the vote was taken, leaving only three members to vote for the adoption of the resolution.

The provisions of section 7629, above referred to, are mandatory and the board of education is without authority to issue bonds under said section except by a vote of not less than four of its members at a regular meeting.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said bonds do not constitute valid and binding obligations of the school district and advise you not to accept the same.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

GENTLEMEN:—There was recently submitted to this department an abstract of title covering the following described premises, accompanied with request that the same be examined with reference to the state of said title:

Situate in the county of Perry, in the state of Ohio, and in township of Jackson and bounded and described as follows:

Being part of the northwest quarter of section five (5), township fifteen (15), range sixteen (16): Commencing at a point where the county road intersects the B. & O. railroad; thence east nineteen (19) rods and fourteen (14) feet to a stone in the half-section line; thence north thirty (30) rods and thirteen (13) feet to a point; thence west twenty-seven (27) rods to the B. & O. railroad; thence south along said railroad thirty (30) rods and thirteen (13) feet to the place of beginning, containing five (5) acres, more or less, excepting therefrom the following described parcel, to-wit:

Commencing at a stone in the quarter section line 327½ feet east of the B. & O. railroad; thence north thirty (30) rods and thirteen (13) feet to a point; thence west 298½ feet; thence south thirty (30) rods and thirteen (13) feet; thence east 249½ feet to the place of beginning, containing three (3) acres, more or less.

There was also submitted with said abstract a proposed deed from Charles S. Bruney and wife to the state of Ohio for my approval.

Upon examination of the abstract, which is dated October 27, 1919, together with the subsequent deeds attached evidencing the continuation of chain of title, I find it discloses title to the premises above described in said Charles S. Bruney. The abstract is not entirely satisfactory from the standpoint of description of the premises in that there are occasional discrepancies in the courses and distances marking the boundaries, particularly in the sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of the proceeding for partition of the estate of Enos Goble, deceased, and in the record of said proceeding, as appears at sections 17 to 27 of the abstract.

However, these discrepancies are not considered to be probably indicative of a defective title, inasmuch as the several descriptions are sufficiently in accord to identify the property and the discrepancies are obviously merely typographical.

As before indicated, the description embodied in the record of said partition proceeding and the sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of the judgment in said cause evidences the most marked departure from the original description of the premises as shown in the preceding chain of title, but this infirmity is materially lessened by supplementing the description by courses and distances with certain location of the property by metes and bounds, which is consistent with the location shown in the earlier chain of the title.

Further, the inaccuracies of the description are shown to have been later remedied by the embodiment of practically the same identification of boundaries as embraced in the earlier deeds, so that I am not inclined to reject the evidence of title as defective in this respect.

Some other irregularities are noted in the abstract of the title in that the executions of certain of the conveyances were informal and that grants of rights of way for railroad purposes are not specific in point of location, but the lapse of time has cured the most, if not all, of the irregularities which are observed.

It is reported that there are no liens against the premises except a mortgage for $1,900, executed by the present holder of the legal title, Charles S. Bruney, to his predecessor in title, which mortgage, however, I am informed, is to be assumed by the state, as a credit against the purchase price.

The taxes for the year 1919 are not shown to have been paid and are therefore a lien against said premises.

The deed for conveyance of said premises to the state of Ohio by said Charles S. Bruney and wife is found to be in proper form and substance for vesting the title of the grantors in the state, subject to taxes for the year 1919 and the mortgage lien of $1,900 above mentioned, which conveyance is made with the reservation of right to obtain water from said premises granted to Jefferson Middaugh, his heirs and assigns, by condition of a prior deed in the chain of title.

You are therefore advised that subject to the mortgage lien and lien for taxes and water rights above enumerated, the abstract discloses legal title to the premises involved in Charles S. Bruney upon the date of its examination and that the deed submitted with said abstract and executed by said Charles S. Bruney and Isabelle A. Bruney, his wife, is approved as a conveyance of said premises to the state of Ohio.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COMMOM PLEAS JUDGE—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ARE WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE PERMANENT OFFICE FOR JUDGE OUTSIDE OF COURT HOUSE.

The commissioners of Hocking county are without authority to provide a permanent office for the judge of the common pleas court outside of the court house. Sections 2418 and 2419 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date in which you state that there is not sufficient office room in the county court house to supply an office for the common pleas judge, and inquiring whether or not the county commissioners have authority to rent an office outside of the court house for such purpose, was duly received.

I note your statement that you are inclined to the opinion that the common pleas judge is a county officer, and that therefore the county commissioners are warranted by section 2419 G. C. in providing him an office outside the court house.

Section 2419 G. C., as recently amended, provides, among other things, that > "A court house, jail, public comfort station, offices for county officers and an infirmary shall be provided by the commissioners when in their judgment they or any of them are needed."

Whether or not a judge of the court of common pleas is a state or county officer has been the subject of considerable discussion in this state. In 1906 Annual Report of the Attorney-General, page 293, he was held to be a state officer; in 1918 Opinions of the Attorney-General, Vol. I, page 756, the opinion was that he is a state officer "for most purposes," but a county officer for the purposes of the primary election laws. In State vs. Rafferty, 26 Ohio Dec., 371, the common pleas court of Henry county reached the conclusion that he is not a state officer, but an officer who acts in a dual capacity, partly for the state and partly for the county in which he is elected; but when the case reached the court of appeals (27 Ohio Cir. 569), that court considered, and also decided it on the theory, that the judge was a state officer, upon whom certain non-judicial duties local in nature and effect had been imposed, and I am of the same opinion. The question in the case, as stated by the court, was whether the legislature may impose upon purely state officers duties which in their nature and effect are local to counties, and require the counties to contribute to the expense thereof from funds raised by taxation wholly within such counties. The question was answered in the affirmative. A list of the non-judicial duties imposed upon judges of the common pleas court is set out in the opinion.

Under the law of this state (sections 2418 and 2419 G. C.), the proper building in which to hold court and discharge judicial functions is the court house, which the commissioners are expressly authorized to provide at the permanent seat of justice in the county. A court house has been provided for Hocking county and is now fit for occupancy. That being the case there is no authority vested in the commissioners to expend public funds in providing and maintaining a place for judicial purposes elsewhere, whether it be denominated a court room, judge's chambers, or judge's office. This conclusion is also justified by section 2418 G. C., which confers authority upon the commissioners to provide temporary quarters for the court, viz.: "Until proper buildings are erected for the permanent seat of justice in a county, the commissioners shall provide a suitable place for holding the courts thereof."

It is not intended to hold, either expressly or by implication, that the commissioners are without authority to provide temporary quarters at the permanent seat of justice, when the county is without a court house, or where the court house that has been provided is unfit for occupancy or is undergoing repairs. No such situation exists in Hocking county. The present condition arises solely by reason of the fact that the county officers have been given precedence over the court in the matter of providing offices in the court house, whereas the preference should have been in favor of the court, and outside offices, if necessary, provided for such of the other officers as may not be required to have offices in the court house.

Since the question under consideration involves the authority of the commissioners to expend public funds in providing a permanent office for the judge outside of the court house, and their right to do so is based solely upon the ground that there is not sufficient room in the court house for the purpose by reason of the fact that the available office space has been assigned to the county officers, the line of cases referred to in 15 Corpus Juris, p. 898, and in 11 Cyc., p. 738, to the effect that it is not essential in all cases to the validity of court proceedings that court be held in the court house, are not in point.

It may be contended that the judge when discharging some of the non-judicial duties imposed upon him by law may be acting as a county and not as a state officer, and that the commissioners would be warranted in providing him an office to be used for such purposes outside the court house. The contention is plausible, but not sound. The law, as already pointed out, has made provision for a court house which, when erected, is the proper building in which to hold court and discharge judicial duties, and where court should be held and judicial duties discharged, excepting only when the building has become unfit for occupancy or is undergoing repairs, in which latter event temporary quarters may be provided elsewhere. The court house having been provided, it must be held that the legislature did not contemplate or intend that a separate office or room be provided away from the court house for the use of the judge in discharging his non-judicial duties, but rather that he use the judicial office for such purposes whenever necessary.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

OLEOMARGARINE CONTAINING COLORING MATTER—MANUFACTURE OF SAME IN OHIO FOR SALE IN OTHER STATES, UNLAWFUL—SEE SECTION 12733 G. C.

The manufacture in Ohio of oleomargarine containing coloring matter, although manufactured exclusively for sale in other states, is made unlawful by section 12733 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. THOMAS C. GAULT, Chief, Bureau of Dairy and Foods, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date inquiring whether or not section 12733 G. C. prohibits the manufacture of colored oleomargarine in this state exclusively for sale outside the state, was duly received.

The section reads as follows:

> "Section 12733. Whoever manufactures oleomargarine which contains methyl orange, butter-yellow, annatto, aniline dyes or other coloring matter, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, and, for each subsequent offense, in addition to the above fine, may be imprisoned not more than ninety days."

Section 12733 G. C. was originally a part of an act passed May 6, 1894 (91 O. L. 274), to prevent fraud and deception in the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. The constitutionality of the act was sustained in State vs. Capital City Dairy Co., 62 O. S. 315, as a valid exercise of the police power of the state, and the judgment of the state court was affirmed by the supreme court of the United States in Capital City Dairy Co. vs. State, 183 U. S. 238.

It has been suggested that if the statute prohibits the manufacture in this state of colored oleomargarine exclusively for sale outside of Ohio, it imposes a direct and unwarranted burden upon interstate commerce, and is therefore unconstitutional.

That the power granted to congress by the federal constitution "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes" (Art. 1, Sec. 8, Ch. 3) confers no authority upon congress to control the states in the exercise of their police power over local trade and manufacturing, has been sustained by the federal supreme court in a long line of cases. One of the latest decisions is that of Hammer vs. Dagenhart, 247 U. S. 251, commonly referred to as the child labor act case, in which the court at pp. 273 and 274 said:

> "The grant of power to congress over the subject of interstate commerce was to enable it to regulate such commerce, and not to give it authority to control the states in their exercise of the police power over local trade and manufacture. The grant of authority over a purely federal matter was not intended to destroy the local power always existing and carefully reserved to the states in the tenth amendment to the constitution."

The point for decision, however, does not, in my opinion, involve either interstate or intrastate commerce, nor the power of congress under the commerce clause of the federal constitution, for the reason that the question for determination is not the abstract right to transport colored oleomargarine from Ohio to other states, or the right to sell it within the latter states, but the right to manufacture it in this state for such purposes.

The fact that it is intended, after an article has been manufactured in this state, to transport it to other states for sale, or that it is manufactured for the exclusive purpose of being transported to and sold in other states, presents no question calling for the application of the commerce clause of the federal constitution, because manufacture is not commerce, and neither the intention of the manufacturer nor the purpose for which he manufactures an article can make it such. Manufacture and commerce are distinct and independent things. As was tersely said in United States vs. Knight Co., 156 U. S. 1, "Commerce succeeds to manufacture and is not a part of it." The distinction, or independent character of each, was also emphasized by the same court in Capital City Dairy Co. vs. State, supra, as follows:

> "All the acts of the corporation which were comblained of related to oleomargarine manufactured by it in the state of Ohio, in violation of the laws of that state, and therefore operated on the corporation within the state, and affected the product manufactured by it before it had become a subject of interstate commerce."

In Hammer vs. Dagenhart, supra, the court at page 272 used the following language:

> "The making of goods and the mining of coal are not commerce, nor does the fact that these things are to be afterwards shipped or used in interstate commerce, make their production a part thereof. Railroad Co. vs. Yurkonis, 238 U. S., 439. Over interstate transportation, or its incidents, the regulatory power of commerce is ample, but the production of articles, intended for interstate commerce, is a matter of local regulation."

"If it were otherwise," said Mr. Justice Day in Hammer vs. Dagenhart, supra, pp. 272, 273, "all manufacture intended for interstate shipments would be brought under federal control to the practical exclusion of the authority of the states, a result certainly not contemplated by the framers of the constitution when they voted in congress the authority to regulate commerce among the states."

The language of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in U. S. vs. Knight Co., supra, covers not only the case of a manufacturer who intends to ship and sell his product outside the state, but also where the product is manufactured exclusively for that purpose and is particularly pertinent, viz.:

> "The fact that an article is manufactured for export to another state, does not of itself make it an article of interstate commerce, and the intent of the manufacturer does not determine the time when an article or product passes from the control of the state and belongs to congress."

And in the earlier case of Kidd vs. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, it was held that the Iowa statute prohibiting the manufacture within the state of intoxicating liquors except for certain specified purposes, but for no other—not even for the purpose of transportation beyond the limits of the state—was within the police power of the state, and that one who manufactured liquors exclusively for transportation and sale outside the state was within the prohibition of the statute. The court distinctly recognized and applied the rule that the fact that an article is manufactured for export to another state does not make it an article of interstate commerce.

See. also, Diamond Glue Co. vs. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, to the effect that the fact that a portion of a contract involves interstate commerce, does not bring the part relating to the manufacture of the particular article involved within the commerce clause of the federal constitution.

Commerce does not begin, according to the decision in the celebrated case of Coe vs. Errol, 116 U. S. 517, until goods are committed to the common carrier for transportation out of the state to the state of their destination, or until they have started on their ultimate passage to that state. "The carrying of them in carts or other vehicles or even floating them to the depot where the journey is to commence," said Mr. Justice Bradley, "is not part of that journey. That is all preliminary work, performed for the purpose of putting the property in a state of preparation and readiness for transportation. Until actually launched on its way to another state, or committed to a common carrier for transportation to such state, its destination is not fixed and certain. It may be sold or otherwise disposed of within the state, and never put in course of transportation out of the state. * * * Until shipped or started on its final journey out of the state its exportation is a matter entirely in fieri, and not at all a fixed and certain thing."

The object and purpose of section 12733 G. C. are not to exert the jurisdiction of the state over persons or property or transactions within the limits of other states, or to act upon colored oleomargarine as an export or while it is in process of exportation. Its purpose is to prevent, not the transportation of colored oleomargarine out of the state, nor its sale in other states, but to prevent its manufatcure within the state of Ohio. It is true that, notwithstanding its purposes and ends are restricted to the jurisdictional limits of Ohio, and apply to transactions wholly internal and between its own citizens, its effects may reach beyond the state by lessening the amount of colored oleomargarine exported.

> "But it does not follow," said Mr. Justice Lamar in Kidd vs. Pearson, supra, "that because the products of a domestic manufacture may ultimately become the subjects of interstate commerce, at the pleasure of the manufacturer, the legislation of the states respecting such manufacture is an attempted exercise of the power to regulate commerce exclusively conferred upon Congress. Can it be said that a refusal of a state to allow articles to be manufactured within her borders (for export) any more directly or materially affects her external commerce than does her action in forbidding the retail within her borders of the same articles after they have left the hands of the importers? That the latter could be done was decided years ago; and we think there is no practical difference in principle between the two cases."

But it is contended that the legislature of Ohio only had in mind the protection of the people of this state when it enacted section 12733 G. C., that the manufacture of colored oleomargarine exclusively for sale in other states can in no way endanger or affect the people of this state, and that there is no necessity for prohibiting its manufacture for that purpose.

The statute, however, admits of no such interpretation, and so far as the necessity for such legislation is concerned, the general assembly alone is the judge, and its decision, unless violative of some constitutional provision, must be respected and obeyed.

> "Whether the manufacture of oleomargarine, or imitation butter, of the kind described in the statute * * * involves such danger to the public health as to require, for the protection of the people the entire suppression of the business, rather than its regulation in such manner as to permit the manufacture and sale of articles of that class that do not contain noxious ingredients," said Mr. Justice Harlan in Powell vs. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, "are questions of fact and of public policy which belong to the legislative department to determine."

The manufacture of colored oleomargarine in this state is made unlawful by section 12733 G. C. The statute provides for and makes no exception in favor of a manufacturer who intends to sell his product outside the state, or who manufactures it exclusively for sale in other states, and the officers whose duty it is to enforce the law are without authority to read any such exception into the statute.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, BOND ISSUE FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT, FRANKLIN COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $16,600.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—APPROVAL OF FORMS OF RESOLUTIONS FOR USE BY BOARDS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENTS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. A. R. TAYLOR, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR—

In the matter of approval of forms of resolution by boards of county commissioners as to highway improvements, a part of the cost of which is to be contributed by the state.

There has been in use for sometime by county commissioners in connection with state highway improvement work a form known as "Final Resolution." This form covers not only the final resolution proper, that is to say, the resolution appropriating money for the share of cost other than that borne by the state, and assuming such share in the first instance, but also a resolution approving plans and determining that the work be done under the series of statutes relating to state highway work.

As your department has found in practice that the form now in use is somewhat confusing to the county officials, I have revised such present form, and have provided for two forms of resolution, the first to be designated "Resolution Approving Plans and Determining to Proceed" which form has particular reference to sections 1199 and 1200 G. C. and the second to be designated "Final Resolution," which has particular reference to sections 1218 and 5660 G. C.

The two forms as revised, which I now approve, are respectively as follows:

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO APPROPRIATE REAL ESTATE FOR USE IN UNLOADING ROAD MATERIAL DELIVERED BY RAILROAD.

County commissioners are without authority to appropriate real estate for the purpose of establishing a point for the unloading of road material delivered by railroad.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. EDWARD GAUDERN, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR·—Your letter of recent date is received reading as follows:

"One of our improved roads crosses a railroad by an overhead crossing. The railroad at the point being in a cut of several feet in depth, it is impossible to unload stone onto wagons, at this crossing and get out onto the highway.

At the time the highways were improved the contractors leased a strip of land from the adjoining proprietor parallel to the right of way of the railroad and unloaded stone at this point. Unloading at this point has become quite important as another improved highway intersects at a point about a half mile distant, so that this strip has become necessary as a place of unloading road material.

The commissioners desire to continue the use of this strip for unloading material for the maintenance of these two roads. * * * The strip is about twenty rods long and perhaps four rods wide. * * *

Do the commissioners have authority to appropriate this land by proceedings under 7214, 7471, 1195 G. C. or any other provisions for the appropriation of property for road purposes? The commissioners desire to acquire title to this strip of land and make a permanent place for unloading road material. It is located very near the center of the county and is several miles from any existing railroad siding and makes an ideal point for distribution."

It is, of course, a rule of long standing in Ohio that statutes granting the right of eminent domain are to be strictly construed; and this rule has been applied not only as to private corporations but also as to political subdivisions of the state. See Cemetery Association vs. Traction Co., 93 O. S. 161, and cases there cited; Grant vs The Village of Hyde Park, 67 O. S. 166, and cases cited. In the light of this rule, let us consider the three statutes mentioned in your communication.

Section 7214 (106 O. L. 645) reads as follows:

"The county commissioners or township trustees may contract for and purchase such material as is necessary for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing any highways, bridges or culverts within the county, and also appropriate additional land necessary for cuts and fills together with a right of way to or from the same for the removal of material. If the county commissioners or township trustees, and the owner of such material or land, cannot agree on the price therefor, the county commissioners or township trustees may apply to the probate court or common pleas court of the county in which the same is located, and on receipt of such application, the court shall proceed to assess the value of the material or right to be appropriated in the manner hereinafter provided."

While the mode of expression used in this statute is not all that might be desired, yet clearly its main purpose is to provide for the appropriation of road materials—a purpose which the legislature itself has recognized, in that section 7470 (106 O. L. 650), adopted as part of the same act as section 7214, contains the expression in specifying the procedure for certain rights of appropriation "the same may be done in the manner hereinbefore specified for the condemnation of road materials." Hence, the language appearing in section 7214 "and also appropriate additional land necessary for cuts and fills together with a right of way to and from the same for the removal of material" has reference to such incidental or additional land as may be necessary to permit access to the land containing the material appropriated, and is not intended as a general grant of power to appropriate a right of way for the purposes of transporting road material.

Section 7471 reads in part (106 O. L. 650):

"If the state highway commissioner or county commissioners deem it necessary at or near railroad crossings to remove buildings, or other obstructions near such railroad crossing, they shall pass a resolution declaring it necessary to appropriate such buildings or other obstructions and the ground upon which they are located if they deem it advisable."

(Here follow provisions as to proceedings.)

The obvious purpose of this section is to provide a means of securing a safe railroad crossing, since the language is "to remove buildings or other obstructions near such railroad crossing." Hence, there is not to be found in the statute any intent to appropriate a right of way for use as such.

Section 1195 as mentioned in your letter is the former statute numbering of what is now section 1201. The latter section (108 O. L. 485) reads in part:

"If the line of the proposed improvement deviates from the existing highway, or if it is proposed to change the channel of any stream in the vicinity of such improvement, the county commissioners or township trustees making application for such improvement must provide the requisite right of way. If the board of county commissioners or township trustees are unable to agree with the owner or owners of such land or property as may be necessary for such change or alteration, or if additional right of way is required for the same, and the county commissioners or township trustees are unable to agree with the owner or owners of the land or property in question." (Here follow provisions as to the steps to be taken for appropriation.)

The word "improvement" as used in the quotation just made refers to a road improvement to which the state is to contribute a part of the cost. Hence, it is quite plain the right of appropriation granted has reference to additional lands which may be necessary to the road improvement proper and has no bearing upon the matter of road materials.

Two statutes in addition to those named in your letter remain to be considered, —sections 7470 and 2446.

Section 7470 reads (106 O. L. 650):

"The state highway commissioner, county commissioners or township trustees, may, in connection with any improvement, appropriate any drainage rights outside of the line of said highway or any easement, right or interest whatever in any property desired for any proposed improvement, and in case such official or either of them desire to appropriate such drainage right, easements, right or interest in any property in connection with any existing highway, the same may be done in the manner hereinbefore specified for the condemnation of road materials. Any land or property rights required for the construction of a new bridge or for any additions to, or repairs to any existing bridge, may be acquired in like manner."

This section, which appears as part of the so-called Cass highway act, is quite broad in its provision giving the right of eminent domain as to "any property desired for any proposed improvement." However, when we keep in mind that provision has elsewhere been made for appropriation of road materials, the intent of section 7470 when read as a whole is evidently to authorize the taking of such property as is necessary to be made a permanent part of the improvement in order to bring about proper construction, rather than to permit its taking for purposes incidental to actual construction work.

Section 2446 as recently amended (108 O. L. 628) reads:

"When in the opinion of the commissioners it is necessary to procure real estate, or the right of way, or easement for a court house, jail, or public offices, or for a bridge and the approaches thereto, or other lawful structure, or public market place or market house, and they and the owner or owners thereof are unable to agree upon its purchase and sale, or the amount of damages to be awarded therefor, the commissioners may appropriate such real estate, right of way or easement, and for this purpose they shall cause an accurate survey and description to be made of the parcel of land needed for such purpose, or in case of a bridge, or the right of way and easement required and shall file it with the probate judge. Thereupon the same proceedings shall be had, as are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."

Clearly, there is nothing in this section which authorizes appropriation for what may be called an "unloading yard." However, your letter states that "the commissioners desire to acquire title to this strip of land and make a permanent place for unloading road material;" and there is thus involved in your inquiry the proposition whether the commissioners might acquire the land for the purpose of building thereon an unloading platform or shed. Is this authorized by the words "or other lawful structure" as used in the statute?

No citation of authority is needed on the point that county commissioners have only such powers as are given them by statute. Therefore, in considering the purport of the words "lawful structures" we must look to their context for their meaning. It is not to be supposed that the legislature intended to leave to the discretion of the commissioners the matter of determining what is a lawful structure; for in that case the commissioners would have authority to condemn land for the placing thereon of a building of almost any character which appealed to their fancy as being for the public interest. We are thus left to the alternative of concluding that the words in question have reference to such structures as the commissioners are directly authorized by statute to erect,—such, for instance, as a court house, jail, public offices, or bridge, which are specifically named in section 2446, and authority to construct which is expressly given by statute elsewhere than in section 2446. Applying this rule to the situtation stated by you, section 2446 is not to be taken as giving authority to appropriate, since no statute is found which authorizes the county commissioners to erect an unloading platform or shed.

Specific answer to your inquiry is therefore that no authority is vested in the county commissioners to appropriate land for the purposes named in your letter.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

PROBATION OFFICER OF JUVENILE COURT—NO AUTHORITY FOR PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILE FOR USE BY SAID OFFICER—WHEN PROBATION OFFICER MAY USE HIS OWN AUTOMOBILE AND FOR WHAT EXPENSES HE CAN BE REIMBURSED.

1. There is no statutory authority for the purchase, with county funds, of an automobile for the use of a probation officer of the juvenile court.

2. A probation officer may use his own automobile in the course of the performance of his official duties and be reimbursed, in the manner provided by section 1682 G. C., for the expense of gasoline and oil paid for by him in connection with such use of said automobile.

COLUMBUS ,OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have written this department as follows:

"The chief probation officer in our juvenile court conducts the detention home, and in addition thereto, makes investigations under claims for mothers' pensions.

In this work he has a great deal of use for an automobile. Up to date he has been using his own, without any compensation therefor. He desires to have one purchased by the county commissioners for this work. However, I am at a loss to find any authority under our code for the purchase, unless same can be secured under favor of section 2412-1.

Please advise if in your opinion there is any authority for purchasing an automobile for use by the chief probation officer."

Section 2412-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 585), to which you refer, reads thus:

"That, whenever the county commissioners are of the opinion that it is expedient to purchase one or more automobiles or other vehicles for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff in order to facilitate the transaction of public county business, they shall adopt a resolution to that effect, and shall file an application in the court of common pleas, setting forth the necessity for such purchase, together with a statement of the kind and number of vehicles required and the estimated cost of each such vehicle. Ten days notice of the time of hearing such application shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county. If upon such hearing of said application the court shall find that it is necessary and expedient to purchase one or more of such vehicles, it shall so order, and shall fix the number and kind of such vehicles, and the amount to be expended for each."

Section 2412-2 G. C. (107 O. L. 586), says:

"When purchased, such vehicles shall be for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff, such use to be subject to regulation of the county commissioners, and such vehicles shall be used by each of such officials in lieu of hiring vehicles in the manner otherwise provided by law, unless the county vehicles are not available for such use, when vehicles are so purchased by the county commissioners, they may purchase such supplies as may be necessary. Any vehicles heretofore acquired and now owned by the county shall be used as herein provided. All such automobiles or other vehicles shall be plainly and conspicuously lettered as the property of the county. No official or employe shall use or permit the use of any such automobiles or other vehicles or any supplies therefor, except in the transaction of public business of such county."

It is evident that said sections give no authority for the purchase of automobiles or other vehicles for the use of any but the county officials therein named, to-wit: the county commissioners and the county sheriff.

After diligent search I have been unable to find any statute which would authorize the purchase of an automobile with county funds for the use of the chief probation officer or other probation officer of the juvenile court. In the absence of any such statute, the conclusion is of course unescapable that your question must be answered in the negative.

The foregoing is probably sufficient to answer the precise question stated in your letter of inquiry. Inasmuch, however, as your letter emphasizes the fact that the chief probation officer whom you have in mind has been using his own automobile in the performance of his official duties, and without any compensation therefor, it is presumed that you are also desirous of having my views upon this further question. Whether a probation officer using his own automobile in the course of the performance of his official duties may be reimbursed from the county treasury for the expense of such use, and if so, to what extent he may be so reimbursed.

Attention is first called to the fact that ample provision seems to have been made for the payment of the "incidental expenses" of the juvenile court and its officers.

Section 1660 G. C. provides that the summons, warrants and other writs of the juvenile court may issue to a probation officer of such court.

Section 1661 G. C. says:

> "When a summons or warrant is issued to any such officer, the expense in pursuing and bringing the person named therein, before such judge, shall be paid by the county in the manner prescribed by law for the payment of deputies, assistants and other employes of county officers."

Section 1682 G. C. says:

> "Fees and costs in all such cases with such sums as are necessary for the incidental expenses of the court and its officers, and the costs of transportation of children to places to which they have been committed, shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers, certified to by the judge of the court."

Construing the last cited section, the Attorney-General in a former opinion (1917 Atty. Gen. Opin., Vol. II, p. 1362), says:

> "Section 1682 of the General Code makes provision for the expenses of the probation officer, he being considered an officer of the juvenile court."

In an opinion to Hon. F. J. Bishop, prosecuting attorney, Jefferson county, Ohio, the Attorney-General on July 19, 1918 (1918 Atty. Gen. Opin., Vol. I, p. 998), held that the prosecuting attorney may be reimbursed, out of the fund provided by section 3004, G. C., for gasoline and oil paid for by him in connection with the operation of his own automobile upon official business. "As to wear and tear," said the opinion, "I see no way in which a proper estimate of the county's liability could be determined, and for that reason am not convinced that any allowance could be made to you for such purpose from this fund."

No reason is seen why a probation officer may not likewise use his own automobile in the course of the performance of his official duties and be reimbursed, in the manner provided by section 1682 G. C., for the expense of gasoline and oil paid for by him in connection with such use. In many cases such a practice is to be commended as it results in a saving of considerable money to the county, although considerations of economy can not, of course, be taken as a substitute in any way for statutory authority.

Section 1682 G. C. authorizes, as hereinbefore pointed out, the "incidental expenses of the court and its officers." That is, the expenses incident to the performance of some official duty enjoined by statute upon the court or upon some officer of the court. Thus far in our discussion no attention has been paid to the question whether the official duties of the probation officer include the two kinds of work in the performance of which you say your probation officer uses his own automobile, viz., his work of investigating claims for mothers' pensions and his work as a person appointed to conduct the detention home. We have simply assumed that these things were so included.

That said assumption was proper, appears from the following sections of the General Code:

Section 1683-3 G. C. makes it the special duty of the probation officer, where directed by the juvenile court, to investigate mothers' pension claims, said section reading in part thus:

> "* * *; sixth, a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made under the direction of the court by the probation officer, the agent of an associated charities organization or humane society, or in the absence of such probation officer, society or organization in any county, the sheriff of such county shall make such investigation as the court may direct, and a written report of the result of such examination or investigation shall be filed with the juvenile court, for the guidance of the court in making or withholding such allowance."

That the duty of conducting the detention home may be also placed upon the probation officer by the juvenile court, in its discretion, also seems evident.

Section 1663 G. C., defining the duties and powers of probation officers, says in part:

> "He shall * * * take charge of any child before and after the trial as the judge may direct."

Section 1670 G. C. authorizes the establishment of a detention home where delinquent, dependent or neglected minors under the age of eighteen years may be detained until final disposition:

> "In counties having a population in excess of forty thousand," says said section, "the judge may appoint a superintendent and matron who shall have charge of said home, and of the delinquent dependent and neglected minors detained therein."

This language is permissive, merely, and it would seem that even in counties of more than forty thousand the probation officer as an officer of the juvenile court, might properly be placed in charge of said home.

It may be contended, however, that section 1682 G. C. is not applicable to the payment of expenses incurred by the probation officer in discharging his duties under the above quoted provisions of section 1683-3 G. C., for the reason that the last cited section (first enacted in 103 O. L. 878 and reenacted with slight changes in 106 O. L. 436) was not a part of our law at the time section 1682 G. C. (99 O. L. 202, Sec. 40) was enacted, and, therefore, that the phrase "in all such cases," found in section 1682 G. C., could not be taken to include the activities of the probation officer under section 1683-3 G. C.

Upon reflection it is concluded that the contention just stated is not sound. It seems evident that section 1682 G. C. was intended to be a sort of "catch-all" section, giving broad authority for the payment of all fees and costs occasioned by, and the incidental expenses of the juvenile court and its officers incurred in the carrying out of the provisions of the juvenile act.

What is now section 1682 G. C. was section 40 of the original juvenile act, found in 99 O. L. 202. The language of that section, so far as material to our inquiry, was this:

> "And all fees and costs in all cases coming within the provisions of this act, together with such sums as shall be necessary for the incidental expenses of such court and its officers * * * shall be paid," etc.

The codifying commission, it appears, merely condensed the language just quoted, and the words "in all such cases," now found in section 1682 G. C., are made to carry the idea conveyed by the words "in all cases coming within the provisions of this act."

It is also to be borne in mind that the legislature has clearly bespoken for the juvenile act a liberal construction. See section 1683 G. C.

The conclusion is therefore reached that both of the matters mentioned in your letter come within the category of the official duties of the probation officer, and that when the probation officer uses his own automobile in connection with such matters, the expense of gasoline and oil necessary to the operation of such automobile so used is an "incidental expense" within the meaning of section 1682 G. C., for which such probation officer may be reimbursed out of the county treasury in the manner provided by that section.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

HUGHES HEALTH BILL—IN CITIES HAVING POPULATION LESS THAN 25,000 GENERAL DISTRICT HEALTH BOARD HAS POWER TO APPOINT LOCAL REGISTRAR OF VITAL STATISTICS.

In cities having a population of less than 25,000, the genera district health board has power to appoint the local registrar, as provided in section 15 of House Bill 211, and section 201 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

Department of State Bureau of Vital Statistics, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "Section 201 G. C. provides for the appointment of local registrars in townships, villages and cities, and inasmuch as the Hughes health bill provides for the abolishment of the present health organization in cities under 25,000, I would like to have you clear up the legal points involved.
> Section 15 of the Hughes health bill seems to me to confer the power now given these municipal boards of health to the district boards of health. This matter affects registration in a great many cities in the state and I herewith request your office to give an opinion confiding what course of action, if any, should be taken by this bureau."

By personal conference it is learned that your question relates to the power of appointment of local registrars of vital statistics in cities under twenty-five thousand inhabitants not included in municipal health districts, as section 201 G. C., infra, provides that in villages and townships the clerks are ex officio local registrars. Section 197 and 201 G. C. and section 15 of House Bill 211 (Hughes health act), are pertinent to your inquiry.

The purpose of sections 197 et seq. G. C. is to establish "a state system of registration of births and deaths," as stated in section 197 G. C.

Section 201 in part provides·

"In villages the village clerk, and in townships the township clerk, shall be the local registrar, and in cities the city board of health shall appoint a local registrar of vital statitics, and each shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the state registrar, the provisions of this chapter and to the penalties provided by law."

Section 15 of house bill 211 in part provides:

"The district board of health hereby created shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties now conferred and imposed by law upon the board of health of a municipality, and all such powers, duties, procedure and penalties * * * shall be constiued to have been transferred to the district board of health by this act."

It should be noted that neither in this section nor in any other section of house bill 211 is there any specific reference to or change in the method of appointing local registrars, as provided in section 201.

Section 15, by its clear and comprehensive grant and transfer to the district board of health of "all the powers and * * * duties now conferred and imposed by law upon the board of health of a municipality," furnishes a complete answer to your inquiry, and as one of the powers and duties then conferred and imposed upon a board of health of a city was to appoint the local registrar, it logically follows that the exercise of this power and performance of this duty must "be construed to have been transferred to the district board of health," as provided by this sction.

Therefore you are advised that in cities having a population of less than 25,000 the general district health board has power to appoint the local registrar, as provided in section 15 of house bill 211, and section 201 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY RECORDER—FEE FOR CERTIFYING COPY OF SOLDIER'S DISCHARGE—SECTION 2778 G. C. GOVERNS.

Section 2778 G. C. fixes the recorder's fee for certifying copy of a soldier's discharge at twelve cents for each one hundred words.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. ROBERT E. MARSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department as follows:

"Should the county recorder charge a soldier for a certified copy of his discharge, and if so, what should the charge or fee be?"

Sections 2770, 2779, 2772 and 2778 are pertinent.

Under sections 2770 and 2779 the recorded discharge of a soldier becomes a record in the recorder's office.

Section 2772 requires the recorder on demand and tender of the "fee therefor" to furnish a certified copy "of any record in his office."

Section 2778, in part, is:

> "For the services hereinafter specified, the recorder shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section * * * for certifying copy from the record, twelve cents for each hundred words."

It is thus clear that the answer to your question is found in section 2778, which fixes the fee as above quoted.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—DISTANCE FROM RESIDENCE OF PUPILS TO SCHOOL HOUSE—HOW MEASURED—OVER NEAREST TRAVELED PUBLIC HIGHWAY.

Distance from the residence of pupils to the school house to which they are assigned must be measured over the nearest traveled public highway, that is, the highway that is at all times practicable, convenient and accessible to such pupils, and one that can be used by vehicles of travel.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Where pupils live nearer than two miles to a school to which they have been assigned by measuring along an old established highway which has become impassable for automobiles or vehicles of any sort by reason of gullies and washouts and a part of which is over-grown with grass and weeds, but can be traveled on foot or on horseback, and more than two miles from such school by measuring along a public highway which can be traveled by all sorts of vehicles, will the board of education be relieved from transporting such pupils?
> In other words, does the 'nearest traveled highway' in your opinion mean a highway that is actually traveled by the public by modern methods or a highway that may be traveled only on foot or on horseback in its present condition."

Section 7731 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., page 625, in part reads as follows:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school the transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the residence of such pupils or the private entrance thereto. * * *"

The above section means that where it is established that a pupil lives less than two miles from the school house, the board of education of the district shall have the option of providing transportation, whereas if the distance is more than two miles, the board of education must provide transportation. The question before us is as to how this two miles distance from the school house to the residence of the pupil is to be ascertained, because there might be a number of cases in which the residence of the pupil would be less than two miles from the school house if measured in one manner and more than two miles if measured in another manner.

Upon the question as to the proper method to be used in computing such distance from the residence of the pupil to the school house, the courts have spoken in several cases, as indicated herein.

In the case of the Board of Education vs. Board of Education, 23 O. D., 698, Judge Woodmansee said, on page 699:

> "It would not be proper to measure the distance on a straight line 'as the crow flies' across the fields, as the children, without the consent of the owners of the fields, would thereby become trespassers. Besides, under the provisions of the statutes of Ohio the children who reside in school districts in the country, living more than one-half mile (now two miles), from the school, and residing at not a greater distance than one-half mile from a public highway, are entitled to be carried to school in a public conveyance, at the expense of the school fund in the district. Necessarily they would be carried thus along the highway. And, whether the children go by public or private conveyance, or whether they walk to and from school, they are expected to go by the most direct and convenient highway, and the length of that course determines the distance from home to school."

Possibly the latest decision upon this question regarding the route of travel to be used in computing distance from the home to the school, is the case of Dover Township Board of Education vs. State ex rel. Frederick E. Hershey, et al., decided in the court on June 11, 1919, and reported in the Ohio Law Bulletin for October 20, 1919, at page 562. The second branch of the syllabus in such decision reads as follows:

> "Provision must be made for the transportation of all pupils of legal school age who reside in the territory of a suspended school and live more than two miles by the nearest traveled highway from the nearest school or the school to which they have been assigned."

In arriving at this conclusion the court said:

> "We hold that all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended school, and who live more than two miles from the nearest school must and shall be transported to such nearest school or the school to which they have been assigned, if the same be more than two miles from where such pupil or pupils live in said rural school district, the said distance to be measured from the school house to where such pupils live over the nearest traveled public highway."

In your inquiry you desire to know as to whether "the nearest traveled public highway" is one that is actually traveled by the public by modern methods or a highway that was established once upon a time but at present can be traveled only on foot or on horse back due to the reason that there are many gullies and washouts in such highway and a part of it is overgrown with grass and weeds.

Speaking of the transportation of pupils living less than two miles from the school house, the language of the statute (section 7731), is that if such transportation is furnished, it shall be by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupil. In Judge Woodmansee's decision, supra, the court says that children are expected to go by the most direct and convenient highway and further indicates that the legislature had in mind the use of a public conveyance, to be furnished at the expense of the school fund in the district, and that the children would be carried thus along the highway. The decision of the Tuscarawas court of appeals, however, goes a step farther and says that the distance shall be measured by the nearest traveled public highway; these words analyzed mean, first, that the highway shall be a public highway, which is true in your case even though the same is in an impassable condition from years of neglect. But the decision further says that such public highway must be one that is "traveled," and the court, passing upon this question, as late as the summer of 1919, must certainly have had in mind modern methods of travel, which includes the use of automobiles and other vehicles and could not be restricted to mean a public highway that was not used by the public because of impassable conditions, unless the pupils saw fit to walk on such highway or ride horseback thereon.

Under the provisions of state law, children are transported in various school districts in either school vans or automobile trucks, there usually being a route arranged by the district board of education, which takes in a number of children, thus obviating the use of more than one vehicle, though in isolated instances many boards of education, complying with the law, are compelled to transport to school one, two, three or more pupils who are so situated geographically that their school transportation is compulsory and yet there is no necessity for an established school transportation route in the sense of having to use a truck or van. In providing for school transportation, the general assembly certainly meant that a practical view of the matter should be taken, and that aside from furnishing the vehicle, there was contemplated that such vehicle should travel over roads that are used and are safe for the transportation of children.

You indicate that the road in question could not be used by passenger automobiles or small vehicles carrying persons in a limited number, because of washouts and gullies. How then could any one presume that such a road would be considered a "traveled public highway" whereon it is necessary to use a truck or school van? Can it be said that this highway, as described by you, is either practical or convenient? Clearly the road in question does not come within the limits of either of these descriptions, the same being words used in the law by the courts in passing upon this question.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that distance from the residence of pupils to the school house to which they are assigned must be measured over the nearest traveled public highway, that is, the highway that is at all times practical, convenient and accessible to such pupils, and one that can be used by vehicles of travel.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SWEET CIDER AND GRAPE JUICE—MANUFACTURE AND SALE UNDER OHIO STATUTE NOT ILLEGAL—VINEGAR—SALE OF SAME NOT PROHIBITED—QUANTITY OF CIDER OR WINE PERSON MAY KEEP IN PRIVATE DWELLING FOR OWN USE NOT SUBJECT OF REGULATION UNDER STATE LAW.

The manufacture of sweet cider and grape juice is not subject to a penalty in the present state of the Ohio law, nor in the sale thereof before it ferments made the subject of penalty.

The sale of vinegar, not for beverage purposes, while regulated with reference to branding and adulteration is not prohibited. The quantity of cider or wine which a person may keep in his bona fide private dwelling for his own use, and not for sale as a beverage, is not the subject of regulation under the present state of the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. HOMER HARPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your recent communication asking for my opinion as to the state of the law relative to the manufacture of cider and grape juice has been duly received and is as follows:

> "Will you kindly give me your opinion on the following questions:
> (1) Whether a person may for compensation make cider and wine for persons who bring their apples and grapes to his mill, the cider and juice of the grapes being removed by the owner within a short time after it is made?
> (2) Whether a person may buy apples or grapes and grind or press the same and sell the sweet juice before it ferments?
> (3) How much cider or wine may a person make or have and keep for his own use in his dwelling?
> (4) Whether a person may make cider or grape juice and keep it until it becomes vinegar and then sell it?"

It is supposed that information as to possible change in the state of the law in pursuance of the abrogation of the previous license policy of the state by the adoption of constitutional prohibition, is the real purpose of your inquiry. You are advised, however, that no change in the law applicable to the manufacture of sweet cider and sweet wine or the sale thereof before it ferments, nor the keeping of the same in one's private dwelling for his own use, nor the sale of vinegar has been recently made to my knowledge.

While it was provided in the recent prohibition amendment to the constitution that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage is prohibited, yet no penalty or administrative measures were incorporated in the amendment, it being provided that the legislature shall enact legislation for carrying it into effect, so that in this respect the amendment is not fully self-executing, and no penalty is afforded for enforcing its provisions except to the extent found in the pre-existing statutes of the state.

With reference to the manufacture of cider, grape juice, and even intoxicating liquors generally, there is no general provision of the statutes purporting to penalize or prohibit such manufacture, save certain special provisions in the local option laws which would not be applicable to the manufacture of sweet cider and grape juice, as outlined in your question.

Likewise, the sale of sweet cider and unfermented grape juice is not subject to penalty under any statute in force, to my knowledge; nor am I aware of any statute regulating the quantity of cider or wine which a person may make and keep for his own use in his private dwelling.

While the sale of vinegar is the subject of regulation in reference to branding and adulteration thereof, as provided in sections 5786 G. C. et seq., yet the sale of vinegar is not prohibited, and when such sale is made in compliance with the regulatory provisions of the statute, your fourth question is answered in the affirmative.

Thus the law on the subject remains the same as prior to the adoption of constitutional prohibition, and you are advised that the statutes so in force do not prohibit the making of sweet cider and unfermented grape juice, nor the purchase and sale thereof; nor is the amount of cider and wine which a person may make or have and keep for his own use in his private dwelling regulated. The sale of vinegar is not prohibited, but is regulated with reference to branding and adulteration, as provided in section 5786 G. C. et seq.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—TEXT BOOKS—WHAT PRICE PUBLISHERS MAY CHARGE FOR BOOKS REGULARLY ADOPTED—SECTION 4752 G. C. GOVERNS —STATUTE DOES NOT RECOGNIZE ADOPTION OF SCHOOL BOOK FOR SUPPLEMENTARY OR REFERENCE PURPOSE.

1. Publishers of text books cannot charge more than the Ohio contract price on file with the state school book commission for books regularly adopted.

2. When books for use in public schools are regularly adopted by a board of education such adoption is for a period of five years, and the board of education is entitled during such period to the benefit of the price of such text book, as filed by the publisher with the school book commission.

3. There is but one method for the legal adoption of books for use in the public schools and that is the method provided in section 4752 G. C. The statutes do not recognize an adoption of a school book for supplementary or reference purposes as against an adoption for school use.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion of the attorney-general upon the three following questions:

> "(1) Have publishers the right to charge more than the Ohio contract price for books regularly adopted, but used for supplementary and reference purposes for a period of five years?
> (2) Have publishers the right to charge more than the Ohio contract price for books regularly adopted, but used for supplementary and reference purposes, when no time period of adoption is specified, but the matter is left open?
> (3) What constitutes a legal adoption of books for supplementary and reference purposes so that publishers may be required to furnish such books at the Ohio contract price?"

The statutes covering the establishment of the state school book commission and fixing the manner and method of filing text books by publishers, for the purpose of adoption later by school boards throughout the state, are sections 7709-7715, inc., G. C.

Your first question is whether publishers of text books have the right to charge more than the Ohio contract price for books regularly adopted but used for supplementary and reference purposes for a period of five years. The answer to this question is in the negative, for if a publisher had agreed in writing to furnish books that were adopted by a school board and did not do so, such publisher would be violating the provisions of section 7712 G. C., which provides that under circumstamces where a publisher fails or refuses to furnish books that have been adopted, the board of education which has been refused must at once notify the state school book commission of such failure or refusal and if it is found that there has been a failure or refusal, the state school book commission shall at once notify such publisher and each board of education in the state that such book shall not thereafter be adopted and purchased by boards of education in this state. In addition, the section provides that the publisher shall forfeit and pay to the state five hundred dollars for each failure to furnish books that have been adopted by a board of education at the prices agreed upon at the time of contract, such prices being not in excess of those filed with the state school book commission in the office of the superintendent of public instruction at Columbus.

It is therefore apparent that publishers have no right to charge more than the price listed with the state school book commission to any board of education which adopts such text book or text books. The law does not recognize any distinction as to what constitutes supplementary and reference purposes in the use of a text book. The only reference in the law is to text books and Webster defines a text book as:

> "A volume, as of some classical author, on which a teacher lectures or comments; hence any manual of instruction; an educational treatise; a school book."

The Century Dictionary defines a text book as:

> "A book used by students as a standard work for a particular branch of study."

It would seem, therefore, that if the books have been regularly adopted in the manner provided in section 4752 G. C., the question as to the way in which they were to be used in class work, whether with each recitation or intermittently, does not enter. Where a publisher has listed a book with the state school book commission and such book has been later adopted by a board of education, the publisher must furnish such book at a price not exceeding the maximum price filed with the text book commission at the time of purchase.

Coming to your second question, you ask whether publishers have the right to charge more than the Ohio contract price for books regularly adopted but used for supplementary and reference purposes, when no time period of adoption is specified but the matter is left open. You indicate in this question that the books you have in mind have been regularly adopted by a board of education, but that no time period of adoption is specified and the matter is left open.

There is but one method of legal adoption of books in Ohio, which is that provided for in section 4752 G. C., which reads:

> "* * * Upon a motion to adopt a resolution * * * to adopt any text book, the clerk of the board shall publicly call the roll of the members composing the board and enter on the records the names of those voting

'aye' and the names of those voting 'no.' If a majority of all of the board vote aye, the president shall declare the motion carried. * * *"

Section 7713 G. C. reads:

"At a regular meeting, held between the first Monday in February and the first Monday in August, each board of education shall determine by a majority vote of all members elected the studies to be pursued and which of such text-books so filed shall be used in the schools under its control. But no text-books now in use or hereafter adopted shall be changed, nor any part thereof altered or revised, nor any other text-book be substituted therefor for five years after the date of the selection and adoption thereof, as shown by the official records of such boards, except by the consent at a regular meeting, of five-sixths of all members elected thereto. Books so substituted shall be adopted for the full term of five years."

From a reading of the above section, it is noted that a regular adoption operates for the full term of five years and there can not be, under the provisions of section 7713 G. C., a regular adoption in which the time period could be stated as less.

Coming to your third question, you desire to know what constitutes a legal adoption for supplementary and reference purposes, so that publishers may be required to furnish such books at the Ohio contract price.

The statutes creating the state school book commission of Ohio, consisting of the governor, the secretary of state and the superintendent of public instruction, do not recognize a distinction between books used strictly as text books and those which you indicate may be books for supplementary and reference purposes. Throughout the sections the word "text-book" occurs, but in more frequent instances it is simply the word "books." It is important to notice that there is a distinction between the work conferred on the state school book commission, as regards this act, and the duty that is later conferred on boards of education under such act. The state school book commission created in section 7710 G. C. does not adopt anything. Its power is limited by the language of the statute in these words:

"* * * shall fix the maximum price at which such books may be sold to or purchased by boards of education, as hereinafter provided. * * *"

Following the fixing of such maximum price, the publisher "notifies the superintendent in writing that he accepts the price fixed, and agrees in writing to furnish such book during a period of five years at that price, such written acceptance and agreement shall entitle the publisher to offer the book so filed for sale to such boards of education."

A reading of the statutes in question indicates that before any board of education can legally demand that books be furnished to such board, at the price filed with with the state school book commission, the board itself has a duty to perform—that is, adopting such book for use in its district. Thus we have the following excerpts from the statutes, indicating that an adoption is contemplated in order to have the benefits of the law:

"Sec. 7709. * * * before such books may be lawfully adopted and purchased by any school board, * * *."

Sec. 7711. * * * A board of education shall not adopt or cause to be used * * *.

Sec. 7712. If a publisher * * * fails or refuses to furnish such books adopted as herein provided to any board of education * * * such books shall not thereafter be adopted and purchased by boards of education. * * *.

Sec. 7713. * * * which of such text-books so filed shall be used * * *. * * * no text-books now in use or hereafter adopted * * * (and again) for five years after the date of the selection and adoption thereof, as shown by the official records of such boards, * * *.

Sec. 7716. When pupils remove from any district, and have text-books of the kind adopted in such district and not the kind adopted in the district to which they remove, * * *."

It will thus be seen that there is contemplated by the law an adoption prior to the purchase, and that such adoption shall be had by the board of education which desires to avail itself of the price fixed by the state school book commission. As indicated heretofore, there is but one section of the statutes which bears upon the manner of adopting a text book, that appearing in section 4752 G. C., supra.

By section 7710 G. C., the state commission fixes the maximum price at which such books may be sold to or purchased by boards of education "as hereinafter provided," and the maximum price thus fixed for purchases by the board of education is only for purchases "as hereinafter provided." The method "hereinafter provided" occurs in section 7713 G. C., supra, and these two sections jointly provide for obtaining the contract price on the basis of the publisher agreeing to furnish (section 7710) "during a period of five years at that price" and (section 7713) for the reciprocal consideration of the board of education adopting a book for five years, with the possible exception of substitution at a regular meeting by five-sixths of all the members elected to the board, and as to this exception it may be mentioned that practically all the school boards of Ohio are now what are known as small school boards, so that five-sixths of any board is substantially requirement for a unanimous vote to change the books in question and the corresponding security, in practice, to the publisher of a full five-year contract. It will be noted that while the publisher is bound under the section heretofore quoted to furnish the books for a period of five years at the price contracted for which may not exceed the maximum price fixed by the state commission, at the same time the board of education can abrogate the contract any time during the five years by a five-sixths vote of its members. It thus will be seen that this statute is in the interest of the public, but a one-sided or unfair interpretation can not be given to it.

There is a distinction between the adoption of a text book as contemplated in the statutes and the approval of such book for use in public schools. A book might be approved for use upon the recommendation of the superintendent or on the report of a committee of the board of education, but this would not be an adoption in the sense that is mentioned in section 4752, supra, because the board of education could approve the use of such book and not be bound for any specific time, while if the same was adopted, under the language of the statutes such adoption would hold for five years, unless during such five years the book in question was supplanted by another book upon a five-sixths vote of the board of education, counting all its members.

It would seem, therfore, that a board of education which had adopted a text book that was listed with the state school book commission in the manner provided by the text book law would be entitled to the benefits of the prices filed with such commission, such prices being filed by the publishers as being effective to such boards of education as adopt the text book or text books in the manner provided by law.

On the other hand, a board of education which had merely approved the use of a certain book could hardly demand the full rights of a board of education that had adopted the book for a period of five years, for the former board of education would be presenting little consideration to the publisher, in return for the price quoted and filed with the state school book commission.

The law contemplates that the board shall do certain things for the publisher in order that he may know what supplies to purchase, that the books may not be required to be furnished at a loss to the publisher.

The requirements of section 4752 G. C., as to the manner of adopting a text book are mandatory and should be strictly followed. Bearing upon the language of this section, which language formerly occurred in section 3982 R. S., the supreme court of Ohio spoke as follows:

> "The authority of boards of education like that of municipal councils, is strictly limited. They both have only such power as is expressly granted or clearly implied, and doubtful claims as to the mode of exercising the power vested in them are resolved against them."
> Board of Education vs. Best, 52 O. S., 152.

As far as can be ascertained, the courts of this state have never had any occasion to pass upon the direct question as to what was a text book for "supplementary use," but in the state of Michigan, where school books are required to be listed in practically the same manner as in Ohio, the following language is pertinent as bearing upon the question at hand:

> "A resolution of a board of education to purchase certain text books for 'supplementary use' in the schools shows that there is no intention of adopting the books within the sense of the statute and the purchase is illegal and void. * * * The language of the statute is 'adopt.' Books are adopted when such action as the statute provides is taken * * * the sole authority for purchases for supplementary use is in this statute relative to adoption."
> Attorney-General ex rel. Marr vs. Board of Education of Detroit, 133 Mich. 681.

It would seem that the publisher would be glad to furnish books at the regular Ohio contract price, provided he has a regular adoption of his book in the manner prescribed by the Ohio statutes, for the consideration moving to him for having submitted the reduced price to the state school book commission is the practical certainty of a five-year contract which enables him to purchase supplies and gauge his requirements with some degree of accuracy.

Even though a book is adopted by a board of education, such adoption does not carry with it a purchase, for the purchase must follow adoption to secure the price filed with the school book commission. The publisher runs the risk of selling many or few of the text books in question in a particular district, even after adoption, though in a general sense adoption usually means that there will be purchases to follow.

If a board of education, by merely approving a book or by acquescence permitting it to be used in the schools of the district, demanded as its right the price filed by the publisher with the school book commission, it would be demanding something for which it had not given, in the eyes of the statute, anything in return, or at least that which is contemplated—that is, the adoption, in legal manner, of the book in question.

Where a board of education complies with the statute in adopting a book,it is clearly entitled to the benefits of the text book law, but another board of education which declines to adopt, but yet merely desires to use intermittently, would hardly be in a position to demand the same consideration as the board of education which had complied with the statute in carrying out its part of the statute in adopting in the manner provided by law.

The statutes providing for the filing by the publisher, with the state school book commission, of his maximum price also obligate the publisher to sell at the lowest price for five years, notwithstanding changes in conditions and greatly increased costs due to abnormal conditions, not anticipated at the time such price was filed, and such statutes obligate the board of education to make such sales possible at the lowest price by practical assurance to the publisher that a book regularly adopted will be used for five years and that the publisher will not be cut off short of that period. Yet this latter can occur by a five-sixths vote of the board of education.

The protection to the publisher contemplated in this act is that part of the statute which provides for an adoption in a legal way of the book which he has submitted to the school book commission for use within the state. A mere occassional purchase of a book from the publisher by a board of education, which may not result in any further purchase at all, is not the protection to the publisher which the statutes contemplate. If a board of education chooses to depart from the statutory method of purchasing books prescribed by the legislature for its use—that is, by adoption (section 4752 G. C.) and purchase—then they have little right to expect the benefits of the contract price obtainable through compliance with the statute.

In answer to your questions, therefore, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. Publishers of text books can not charge more than the Ohio contract price on file with the state school book commission for books regularly adopted.

2. When books for use in public schools are regularly adopted by a board of education, such adoption is for a period of five years, and the board of education is entitled, during such period, to the benefit of the price of such text book as filed by the publisher with the school book commission.

3. There is but one method for the legal adoption of books for use in the public schools and that is the method provided in section 4752 G. C. The statutes do not recognize an adoption of a school book for supplementary or reference purposes as against an adoption for school use.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DOG REGISTRATION LAW—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS REQUIRED TO PROVIDE FOR EXPENSES INCIDENT TO ADMINISTRATION OF SAID LAW—LIMITATION ON APPROPRIATIONS—HOW MADE.

County commissioners acting under the provisions of the dog registration law, sections 5652 G. C. et seq. as amended and supplemented in 108 Ohio Laws, are obligated to provide by appropriation from the dog and kennel fund for the several elements of expense incident to the administration of said law, such appropriations in the aggregate, however, to be limited to 35 per cent. of the proceeds of the dog and kennel fund for the calendar year for which the appropriations are made.

The appropriations for the several objects involved in the administration of the law should be made separately and the amount thereof determined only by the necessities for proper administration of the law, subject, of course, in the aggregate to the 35 per cent. maximum limitation, and such appropriations being applicable to the specific purposes under the law, should be kept separate and distinct from the general "deputy and clerk hire funds" of the auditor's and sheriff's offices.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—You recently requested my opinion upon the matters set forth in your communication as follows:

"This bureau has made a ruling from the accounting sandpoint that where the commissioners make a special allowance to the sheriff out of the county fund for the purpose of catching dogs in conformity to opinion Nos. 229 and 556, that the auditor and county treasurer open separate accounts on their ledgers of this appropriation, to be designated as the "sheriff's dog catcher fund," in order that check can be made of its expenditure to see that it was used for the purpose for which it was set aside and that it be not merged with the sheriff's fee or clerk hire funds as provided under section 2980-1 G. C. Are we correct in so doing?

We desire to call your attention to the proviso portion of section 5652-13 G. C., as amended in house bill No. 493, passed by the legislature May 9, 1919; approved by the governor June 5, 1919; and filed in the office of the secretary of state June 6, 1919. Hence, effective September 5, 1919. We would ask if said section 5652-13 as amended must be read with section 5652-8 G. C., also amended in the same bill? We desire your written opinion as to how the commissioners should apportion amount not to exceed 35 per cent. of the gross receipts of said dog and kennel fund in any calendar year. The dog law assumes that dogs should be registered before the first of January for the following year although the law provides continuous registration throughout the year or as soon as a dog becomes over three months of age. Under the 35 per cent. provision can this amount be based upon the collections of the preceding year or must this be estimated upon the possible collections of the current year? In other words, when shall this amount be set aside? And shall separate ledger acccounts be kept of each of these divisions?

The first part of section 5652-13 G. C. provides that the defraying of the cost of furnishing of blanks, records, tags, nets and other equipment necessary to carry out the enforcement of the provisions of the laws relative to the registration of dogs shall be paid from the collections of the dog taxes. Is this apart from the 35 per cent. mentioned in the proviso portion of this section or is it to be included within that percentage and must this all be provided for before any sheep claims or other payments are to be made from the funds?

We take it that this appropriation shall be used for four purposes as clearly expressed; for registration, which would affect the county auditor's office; possible providing extra clerk hire outside of the provisions of section 2980-1; for seizing, which would apply to the sheriff; for impounding and destroying dogs, which would apply to the pound keeper or humane society, if such arrangement was made with such society. What we desire your opinion on is whether the amount thus set aside must be specifically and separately appropriated for the various purposes for the use of the various officers mentioned entirely outside of the provisions of section 2980-1 G. C."

The previous opinions Nos. 229 and 556, to which you refer, considered certain provisions of the statutes relative to the registration of dogs, and your first inquiry now submitted related to the administration application of the principles announced in said opinions.

In opinion No. 229, which was directed to Hon. H. W. Kuntz, prosecuting attorney, Zanesville, Ohio, under date of April 23, 1919, it was held that the provision embodied in section 5652-8 G. C. that "county commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act" was not to be construed as a mere adoption by reference of the provisions of section 2980 and 2980-1 G. C. governing the appropriation of deputy and clerk hire from the several county officers fee funds, but on the contrary, was in itself a substantive authorization to the board of county commissioners to appropriate funds necessary for carrying out the provisions of the dog registration law in which that section is found.

In opinion No. 556 the question was whether deputy sheriffs employed for the performance of the duties cast upon the sheriff's office in connection with dog registration were to be regarded as in the nature of special deputies of limited authority. That opinion which was directed to Hon. George W. Sheppard, prosecuting attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio, under date of August 7, 1919, pointed out that under the dog registration act certain duties are conferred upon the sheriff's office in addition to those existing by virtue of previous laws, and that to the extent necessary for the discharge of such duties, the sheriff is authorized to employ an additional deputy or deputies. It was further said:

> "And likewise it is made the duty of the county commissioners to cooperate in the matter to the extent of providing the funds for the employment of such additional deputies. Neither the duty nor the authority of the county commissioners in relation to providing this additional fund extends beyond a provision sufficient for the enforcement of the act in question, and likewise the extent of the authority of the sheriff for providing deputies to be compensated under this cumulative provision is measured by the necessities arising under the law."

It was thus pointed out that while the deputies so employed were not classified by any apparent policy of the law as special deputies of limited authority, but possessed the same general attributes of the regular deputies of the sheriff's office, yet the authority for both the appointment and the compensation is referable solely to the special duties in connection with administration of the dog registration law, and is commensurate therewith.

Coming now to a consideration of your first inquiry, it is noted that you regard the promulgation of a ruling of your department, for purposes of accounting that the auditor and county treasurer open separate accounts on their ledgers of the appropriation made in pursuance of the statutes as considered in the former opinions, said accounts to be designated as the "sheriff's dog catcher fund," and that such fund be maintained separate and distinct from the sheriff's fee fund or clerk hire fund as provided in section 2980-1 G. C.

The conclusions announced in the previous opinions clearly indicated that the appropriation authorized under the dog registration law was in no sense to be regarded as an augmentation of the so-called "deputy and clerk hire fund" governed by section 2980-1, but on the contrary, was one for the special purpose and application outlined in said opinions as abstracted above.

Therefore, in the proper administration of the fund so appropriated under the registration law, it would seem to be highly desirable, if not imperative, that the fund be not merged with other funds administered in compliance with distinct and independent provisions of the law.

In view of this fact and of the broad authority vested in the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices by the provisions of section 274 G. C. et seq. it is not perceived that the ruling is an improper one.

Section 279 provides:

"A separate account shall be kept for each appropriation made or fund created by each taxing body, or legislative body, showing date and manner of payment therefrom, name of person or organization paid, and for what purpose paid * * *"

You are therefore advised that the ruling referred to is considered in accord with the spirit and policy of the law.

Your reference to certain amendments of the so-called dog registration law as enacted at the recent session of the general assembly, and the questions based thereon require a somewhat comprehensive discussion of the provisions of law in force.

The amendments referred to are certain sections of house bill No. 493, and particularly the provisions of sections 5652-8 and 5652-13, and your question involves an interpretation of the clause providing for a limitation of appropriation from the dog and kennel fund to 35% thereof.

Section 5652-8 provides:

"County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act, shall provide nets and other suitable devices for taking dogs in a humane manner, and, except as hereinafter provided, shall also provide a suitable place for impounding dogs, and make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same, and shall also provide humane devices and methods for destroying dogs. Provided, however, that in any county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, and having one or more agents appointed in pursuance to law, and maintaining an animal shelter suitable for a dog pound and devices for humanely destroying dogs, county commissioners shall not be required to furnish a dog pound, but the sheriff shall deliver all dogs seized by him to such society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and children at its animal shelter, there to be dealt with in accordance with law, and the county commissioners shall provide for the payment of reasonable compensation to such society for its services so performed out of the dog and kennel fund. Provided further, that the county commissioners may with the approval of the sheriff, designate and appoint any officer regularly employed by any society organized as provided by sections 10062 to 10067, inclusive, of the General Code, to act as deputy sheriff for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, if such society whose agent is so employed, owns or controls a suitable place for keeping and destroying dogs."

Section 5652-13 provides:

"The registration fees provided for in this act shall constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund which shall be deposited by the county auditor in the county treasury daily as collected and be used for the purpose of defraying the cost of furnishing all blanks, records, tags, nets and other equipment necessary to carry out and enforce the provisions of the laws relating to the registration of dogs, and for the payment of animal claims as provided in sections 5840 to 5849, both inclusive, of the General Code, and in accordance with the provisions of section 5633 of the General Code. Provided, however, that the county commissioners by resolution shall appropriate sufficient funds out of the dog and kennel fund said funds so appropriated not to exceed 35% of the gross receipts of said dog and kennel fund in any calendar year, for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses of registering, seizing, impounding and destroying dogs in accordance with the provision of section 5652 and supplemental sections of the General Code."

A broad general survey of the provisions for application of the dog and kennel fund as provided in the original act and the amendments thereto as embodied in the sections noted, discloses that it is to be appropriated to the payment of the expenses incident to the administration of the dog registration law; the payment of claims for injuries or loss occassioned to animals by dogs; the support of humane societies and to the uses of the county board of education.

The question you raise relates to the appropriations from said fund for the various expenses incident to the administration of the dog registration law itself, and it is to be determined whether the appropriations for such purpose are limited in the aggregate to 35% of the fund; how such 35% is to be ascertained and the appropriation made for a given year, and details incident thereto.

It is noted that section 5652-8 as amended, is substantially in the same form as the original section considered in previous opinions referred to, with reference to casting the duty upon the county commissioners to provide the funds for employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of the act, and further, it is provided that the commissioners shall provide nets and other suitable devices for taking dogs, and shall provide a suitable place for impounding dogs and make proper provisions for feeding and caring for same and for their destruction in accordance with the provisions of the act. The provision for impounding, caring for and destroying of the dogs may be made with a humane society in counties where such society exists, and in that event, the commissioners shall provide for payment of reasonable compensation to such society for its services, payable out of the dog and kennel fund.

Section 5652-13 further authorizes the payment from the dog and kennel fund of the cost of furnishing blanks, records, tags, nets and other equipment necessary to carry out and enforce the provisions of the act. These provisions are followed by the clause "provided, however, that the county commissioners by resolution shall appropriate sufficient funds out of the dog and kennel fund, said funds so appropriated not to exceed 35% of the gross receipts of said dog and kennel fund in any calendar year, for the purpose of defraying the necessary expenses of registering, seizing, impounding and destroying dogs in accordance with the provisions of section 5652 and supplemental sections of the General Code." From consideration of this latter clause it is readily apparent that the preceding language relative to the purposes to which the fund is applicable is not to be considered as the complete and unrestricted appropriation of such funds, but is to be read in connection with the clause last quoted, and such several provisions construed consistently.

It is noted the appropriation to be made by the commissioners as set forth in the last clause of section 5652-13 embraces under general terms all of the purposes more specifically enumerated in the preceding provisions for charging the dog and kennel fund with the expense of its administration, so that all such provisions are to be read as subject to the maximum limitation of 35% of the fund, and you are advised that the appropriations for the various items of expense incident to the administration of the dog registration law are limited in the aggregate to 35% of the gross receipts of the dog and kennel fund.

The dog and kennel fund is a special fund to be accumulated from the registration fees, fines, costs, etc., accruing under the provisions of the dog registration act, and clearly is to be maintained as a separate and independent fund.

With reference to the order of its distribution, it clearly appears that the application of the fund for the expense incident to the administration of the law is to have priority over its application to live stock claims, and a final distribution to the humane society and the county school board fund. This is disclosed particularly by the provisions of section 5652-13 of the act, which after setting forth that the fund shall be used for defraying costs and expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of the act, and for payment of animal claims, continues with the proviso that the county commissioners shall appropriate not to exceed 35 per cent. of such fund in any calendar year for the purpose of defraying the expense of the various matters involved in the administration of the act elsewhere enumerated, so that it is determined that the commissioners are charged with the appropriation of a sufficient amount for the purposes of administration of the act, not to exceed, however, 35 per cent. of the gross receipts of the funds in any calendar year, from which it follows that it is only the balance remaining after such appropriation that is charged with the payment of animal claims, and the distribution to the humane society and county school board fund.

With reference to the calculation of the 35 per cent. of the fund in a given year, it must be said that a somewhat difficult problem is confronted. From a careful analysis of the pertinent provisions of the act I am of the opinion that the 35 per cent. which may be appropriated for a given year is not to be based upon the proceeds of the previous year, but rather the proceeds of the year for which the appropriation is made.

In practical operation, no doubt, the bulk of the proceeds of registration fees, which is the principal source of the fund, would come into the treasury on or before the first of January, it being provided in section 5652 of the act that the registration shall be made annually before the first day of January for the following year, and thus a substantial part of the fund will be available for appropriation for the expenses to be incurred during the calendar year.

Of course, the dog and kennel fund in practice will be further augmented at intervals during the entire year by the accumulation of fines and penalties under the act, and also by additional registrations of dogs, it being provided by section 5652-2 that at any time a dog shall become subject to registration the owner shall make application for such registration accompanied by the fees therefor.

The only practicable way of administering this provision, in my opinion, is to so order the appropriations from the funds for administrative expense that in the aggregate they shall not exceed 35 per cent. of the final proceeds for the calendar year, which for practical purposes no doubt may be accomplished by anticipating the accumulations into the fund in incurring administrative charges against it and making successive appropriations as the funds shall be accumulated.

What has been said in the previous opinions of this department referred to and abstracted above, relative to the duties of the county commissioners in providing funds for employment of deputy sheriffs and the method of administering that function is likewise applicable to the appropriations to be made for the other items of expense chargeable to the fund.

It is contemplated that there shall be an appropriation or appropriations by the county commissioners from this special dog and kennel fund for the several administrative charges provided in carrying the law into effect, and while such appropriation in the aggregate are limited to 35 per cent. of the gross receipts of the fund, yet it is made the duty of the county commissioners to provide appropriations for the various measures authorized in the administration of the law, and the duty of appropriation, as said in connection with the question considered in the previous opinions, is measured by the needs for properly carrying out the purpose of the law, subject of course to the maximum limitation of 35 per cent. So that as a practical matter, in a full observance of the various provisions of the law it will be incumbent on the board of commissioners to make separate appropriations for the several items of expense to be incurred in the administration of the dog registration law, and in accord with what has been previously said with reference to the appropriations for deputy sheriffs, the several appropriations so made have no connection whatever with the general fee fund or deputy and clerk hire fund maintained under favor of sections 2980 and 2980-1 G. C.

It is believed that this outline is in accord with the spirit and policy of the act, and will determine the various inquiries involved in your communication.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

AGRICULTURE—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ARE AUTHORIZED TO MAKE APPROPRIATIONS FOR "DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND COUNTRY LIFE"—HOW QUALIFIED—DISBURSEMENTS HOW MADE.

Under section 9921-6 G. C. the commissioners of a county are authorized to make a general appropriation for "the development of agriculture and country life," the application of which is addressed to the discretion of the trustees of the Ohio State University, and their disbursement of the funds so appropriated for the employment of "assistant county agents," "home demonstration agents" or "leaders of boys' and girls' agricultural clubs" would not constitute a violation of the authority conferred under the provisions of section 9921-1 et seq., G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. ALFRED VIVIAN, Dean, College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your recent communication requesting my opinion as follows:

"I respectfully request from you an opinion on the following matter relative to section 9921-6 of the General Code, namely:

Is there anything in said section to prevent the county commissioners from appropriating money to be used in the employment of assistant county agents, home demonstration agents, or leaders of boys' and girls' agricultural clubs?

Explanation—Section 9921-4 provides that the county commissioners may appropriate $1,500 a year toward the employment of a county agent. The work of the county agents has grown so rapidly that there are now several counties that feel that this work should be increased in scope. Since the law was passed permitting the use of money for county agents, the work for the women, under what is known as a home demonstration agent, has been introduced, and there has also been a great demand for the work among boys and girls in the agricultural clubs.

Those who wrote section 9921-6 intended to give the county commissioners authority to appropriate additional money either for boys' and girls' club leaders, home demonstration agents or assistant county agents. This section was adopted by the present legislature and under it three counties have already appropriated money for the salary of a leader of boys' and girls' clubs only to be notified by their county attorneys that money appropriated under said section could be used for a home demonstration agent and for no other purpose.

There are at least three other counties sufficiently interested in this work with boys and girls that are now ready to make the appropriations but after the experience of the three counties mentioned above they feel that it is desirable to have an opinion from you before proceeding with the appropriation.

Since the money has already been appropriated in three counties and these counties are anxious to get the work started as soon as possible, I respectfully petition an opinion from you at the earliest possible date."

The question which you thus present requires a construction of certain provisions of section 9921-6 as enacted by the recent session of the general assembly known as House Bill No. 257. That section provides:

"The county commissioners of each and every county of the state in addition to the powers conferred in section 9921-4 of the General Code are hereby authorized and empowered to make additional appropriations annually to further the development of agriculture and country life in the county including the employment of a home demonstration agent and the county commissioners of said county or counties are authorized to set apart and appropriate said sum of money and transmit the same to the state treasurer who shall place it to the credit of the agricultural extension fund to be paid for the purpose aforesaid by warrant issued by the auditor of state on voucher approved by the Ohio State University. If for any reason it shall not be used as contemplated in this act, it shall revert to the county from which it came. The home demonstration agent shall acquaint herself with conditions in the county to which she is assigned, and as far as practicable, respond to invitations to visit homes and gardens, give practical and useful information with reference to the selection and preparation of foods for persons both in health and sickness, the feeding of infants, the preservation and storage of foods, the choice of fabrics and making of garments, the arrangement and installation of household mechanical devices, and the choice and repair of household furnishings and decorations. She shall co-operate with the United States department of agriculture, the Ohio agricultural experiment station, and other public agencies to the end that the women of the county may have at hand the services of these agencies. She shall have an office in which bulletins and other printed matter and records of value to housewives may be consulted and through which the agent may at all times be reached as she travels from home to home in the discharge of her duties. After having appropriated under this section and a home demonstration agent having been employed for the county, the county commissioners shall appropriate under this section in each succeeding year for five years not less than one thousand dollars."

This section is supplemental to sections 9921-1 to 9921-5 G. C. inclusive, and in arriving at the proper determination of the question you present, it is necessary to consider the entire provisions of the law governing the county agricultural extension work together.

The question now presented for determination no doubt arises out of the language of the supplemental section providing the purpose for which additional appropriations may be made, in the following language:

"To further the development of agriculture and country life in the county, including the employment of a home demonstration agent."

The original sections as enacted in the 105-106 session laws of the general assembly may be classed broadly as having for their purpose the development of agriculture and country life. It is true that the activity so inaugurated was to be conducted so far as said original sections provided, through the medium of the county agricultural agent, and that authority to appropriate money on the part of the county commissioners was limited to appropriations "for the maintenance, support and expense of a county agricultural agent." The duties of the agent were outlined in such a way as to characterize the activity as one for the development of agriculture and country life.

By the supplemental section (9921-6), it is now provided that in addition to the powers conferred by the previous enactment on county commissioners, they shall be empowered to make additional appropriations annually "to further the development of agriculture and country life in the county," and by the language of the supplemental section, the employment of a home demonstration agent is included in the project so authorized.

Without the reference to the employment of the home demonstration agent it would hardly be contendable that the application of the additional funds whose appropriation is authorized is ascertained or limited in detail, but is rather general, and no doubt addressed to the discretion of the disbursing authority in considerable measure.

Considered in this light, about the only other sourse of limitation upon the application of such additional appropriations would have to be found in the limitation of the original section to the application of the appropriation for employment of county agricultural agents.

However, the natural import of the language of the supplemental section does not at all lead to the conclusion that the additional appropriations here authorized are to be regarded as simply authorizing an increased fund for salary and expenses of county agricultural agent, but on the contrary, purport to provide funds for the further development of agriculture and country life without stipulating or limiting in detai the method by which such development is to be brought about, and consequently such funds expended.

The fact that this phrase is followed by the language "including the employment of a home demonstration agent" does not import, in my judgment, a limitation or restriction of the more general language which has gone before, but rather indicates that the particularization with reference to the home demonstration agent does not exhaust the full purpose for which the appropriation may be made. If the general authority provided includes the authority to employ a home demonstration agent, the natural conclusion would be that it must be a larger authority, and not being otherwise particularized, I reach the conclusion that there is a somewhat general authority granted in the section, the administration of which is reposed in the disbursing authority.

The appropriations authorized by the supplemental section are to further the development of agriculture and country life in the county, including the employment of a home demonstration agent, and such appropriations are to be transmitted to the state treasurer who shall place it to the credit of the agricultural extension fund to be paid for the purpose aforesaid. Section 9921-1, which is a part of the original act relating to the subject of county extension work, provides that "the trustees of the Ohio State University shall expend, in accordance with law, all moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the agricultural extension fund."

From the provisions that have been considered, you are advised that the application of funds appropriated generally for "furthering the development of agriculture and country life" by the commissioners of any county and transmitted to the state treasurer, is a matter addressed in the first instance to the discretion of the trustees of the Ohio State University, and it is not now apparent that their determination to apply such funds in the employment of assistant county agents, home demonstration agents or leaders of boys' and girls' agricultural clubs, would be an abuse of discretion as a matter of law.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—REQUIREMENTS OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS TO OBTAIN STATE AID—ENUMERATION AND NOT DAILY ATTENDANCE GOVERNS —FAILURE TO DISCONTINUE SCHOOL WHOSE AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE IS LESS THAN TEN DOES NOT PREVENT DISTRICT FROM RECEIVING STATE AID—STATE AID GRANTED TO SCHOOL DISTRICTS AS A WHOLE—SECTION 7730 G. C., HOUSE BILL No. 348 (108 O. L. 704) MAKES NO PROVISION FOR WEAK SCHOOL DISTRICTS TO BE APPLIED TO TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS OF SCHOOLS THAT HAVE BEEN SUSPENDED.

1. School districts entitled to state aid must have a number of persons of school age equal to at least twenty times the number of teachers employed therein; under section 7597 G. C. the school enumeration in the whole district is the factor and not the daily attendance in any particular school.

2. Where either the county board of education or the local district board of education has failed to discontinue a school whose average daily attendance was less than ten for the preceding year, as provided in section 7730 G. C., such failure does not prevent the district from receiving state aid for other schools therein, since state aid is granted to school districts as a whole, which comply with the state aid law, and not to certain schools in such district.

3. Section 7730, as amended by the act effective September 22, 1919, house bill 348, makes no provision for state aid to weak school districts to be applied to the transportation of pupils of schools that have been suspended.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for the opinion of this department upon the following statement of facts:

> "Section 7730 of the Wenner bill, H. B. 348 (108 O. L. 704) enacted by the eighty-third general assembly in 1919, provides:
> 'Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten, the county board of education shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural district shall suspend such school.' If a school, the average daily attendance of which was below ten, the preceding year, is not suspended in accordance with the provisions of this section, is the district in which the same is located entitled to state aid for teachers of such a school?
> If the school is suspended, may the board of education receive state aid for the transportation of the pupils of such school who live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned."

Section 7730 G. C., as last amended by the present general assembly, and effective September 22, 1919, reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause. Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten the county board of education shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school. Whenever any school is suspended the board of education of the district shall provide for the transfer of the pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school to other schools. Upon such suspension the board of education of such village or rural district shall provide for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age who reside in the territory of the suspended district and who live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned, to a public school in the rural or village district or to a public school in another district. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district by the board of education within ten days after the resolution providing for such suspension is adopted. Wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more, then, upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school."

The intent of the above section is that following the end of a term of school in a district and before arrangements are made for the continuation of such school, the county board of education shall direct the suspension of the schools if the average daily attendance for the preceding school year was below ten. Your question is understood to be relative to a school in which the attendance was below ten for the preceding school year, but such school was not suspended in accordance with the provisions of section 7730, above quoted. It must be remembered that section 7730, supra, appearing in house bill 348, the Wenner school law, was effective on September 22d, or practically after all district schools for the year 1919-1920 had begun.

The law which would have been in force during the summer of 1919, that is to say, the period after the school term ended in a school district, and before the beginning of the new school year in September, 1919, would be section 7730, as it appears in 107 O. L., page 638. The language of the law on this subject, as it existed prior to September 22d, when the Wenner school law went into effect, read as follows:

"Section 7730. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year had been below ten, such school shall be suspended and all of the pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, transferred to another school or schools when the county board of education so directs the board of education of the village or rural district in which said school is located * * *."

It will be noted that this language in the old law is not radically different from that appearing in section 7730, as amended in the Wenner school law, effective September 22, 1919. It is, therefore, apparent that this language was really carried into the Wenner school law, which you quote, and that the same practical requirements mentioned in section 7730 of the Wenner school law, house bill 348, were in vogue during the entire year of 1919. You indicate that the preceding year showed such school to have an attendance below ten in number and desire to know whether, if it is not suspended in accordance with the provisions of law, the district in which the same is located is entitled to state aid for teachers in such district.

Your attention is invited to section 7597 G. C., which reads as follows:

"No district shall be entitled to state aid, as provided in sections 7595, 7595-1 and 7596, unless the number of persons of school age in such district is at least twenty times the number of teachers employed therein, and the schools in such district are maintained at least eight months of the year. (104 v., 165.)"

From the above section it is noted that a district, in order to receive state aid must have at least twenty pupils to each teacher and the contemplation is that the district asking for state aid maintain the schools in the district at least eight months of the year. The school you have in mind had an attendance of less than ten the preceding year and is one of the schools located in such district which makes request for state aid.

Applications for state aid for weak school districts are made by the district board of education and the district is the unit to be considered by the state auditor in approving such application and making his allotment of state aid. If the district making the application shows that it has a school enumeration, that is, persons of school age which equal or exceed a number twenty times the number of teachers employed, such district is entitled to state aid if it has complied with the provisions of the state aid law mentioned in sections 7594-1, 7595, 7595-1, 7595-2, 7595-3, 7595-4, 7595-5, 7596, 7596-1 and 7597 G. C. No consideration can be given to the question of daily attendance in the schools of such district, the requirement being that the district must show that in the whole district there is a school enumeration that is equal in number to twenty times the number of teachers, and the fact that in one particular school there was less than such required number, ought not to militate against the other schools in such district receiving state aid. Under the provisions of section 7730 G. C., it is mandatory upon the county board of education to direct the discontinuance of a school within the county, if such school, during the preceding year, showed a daily attendance of less than ten, such order of discontinuance to be carried out by the district board of education; but if neither of these boards have carried out the provisions of section 7730, as regards the particular school in question, the other schools within the district should not be made to suffer on account of such dereliction in their consideration for state aid under another section of the statutes, the idea of the law being that the district is the unit which makes the application for state aid and must show the requirements regarding school population as a district, following which state aid is rendered to the district for its board of education to disburse to the several schools in its discretion, under the law, rather than granting state aid to any particular school in such district. In the question at hand the provisions of section 7597 G. C. apply, in that the district, if it can show persons of school age in the proper number rather than daily attendance, should receive state aid if other provisions of the law under the sections heretofore cited, are complied with.

Coming to your second question, you inquire if the school is suspended, may the board of education receive state aid for the transportation of pupils of such school who live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned. Bearing upon this point, attention is invited to the fact that section 7730, which appears in house bill 406, Freeman law, effective August 18, 1919, was repealed by new section 7730 G. C., which appears in house bill 348 (Wenner school law), effective September 22, 1919, and section 7730, as it now reads and as amended above, contains no provision for state aid in the transportation of pupils of suspended schools. Under these circumstances, while the legislature made such provision in the first section 7730 that was enacted, the same provision was omitted in the later enacted section 7730, and which must be considered as the final expression of the general assembly upon the matter, and until further legislation is had upon the subject the state auditor cannot allow any state aid for transportation of pupils in suspended schools to be paid from the state funds.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. School districts entitled to state aid must have a number of persons of school age equal to at least twenty times the number of teachers employed therein; under section 7597 G. C. the school enumeration in the whole district is the factor and not the daily attendance in any particular school.

2. Where either the county board of education or the local district board of education has failed to discontinue a school whose average daily attendance was less than ten for the preceding year, as provided in section 7730 G. C., such failure does not prevent the district from receiving state aid for other schools therein, since state aid is granted to school districts as a whole, which comply with the state aid law, and not to certain schools in such district.

3. Section 7730, as amended by the act effective September 22, 1919, house bill 348, makes no provision for state aid to weak school districts to be applied to the transportation of pupils of schools that have been suspended.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, PROPOSED AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION AND THE CLEVELAND, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SIDE TRACKS ON PRISON FARM NEAR LONDON, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1919.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent letter transmitting proposed agreement between your board and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Company, for the construction of side tracks on the prison farm near London, Ohio, for the approval of this department.

By personal conference it is learned that the primary purpose of this agreement is to facilitate the economic purchase and delivery of material for the building of the new penitentiary, agreeably to the provisions of the new prison act, enacted in 103 O. L., 249. Consideration of these facts leads this department to the conclusion that the subject matter of this contract is incidental to and necessary for carrying out the power expressly granted in that act. Consideration of this act, together with sections 1832, 1835, 1838, 1862 and 1865, sections 2314 to 2332, inclusive, and sections 14 and 15 of the appropriationg act in 107 O. L., 346, and also the appropriating acts in the same volume, pages 234 and 309, lead to the further conclusion that such a contract is within the power of the board of administration in the construction of the new penitentiary. That such funds are in the treasury available for the discharge of the proposed agreement and not otherwise appropriated is evidenced by the certificate of the state auditor hereto attached. In this connection, however, the provisions of section 22 of article 2 may properly be referred to. This section in part provides that:

"No appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

If this appropriation certificate is not effective to embrace the entire consideration involved in the agreements in the contract, then by reference, this section being read into the proposed agreement, results in its being so construed as making the agreement as to maintenance beyond the two-year period subject to appropriations being made by the general assembly. However, I am informed that this does not present any practical difficulty and in view of this fact, the proposed agreement, as thus construed, is hereby approved as to form.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—SALARY—HOW COMPUTED FOR COMMISSIONERS IN COUNTIES WHERE TAX DUPLICATE IS LESS THAN FIVE MILLION DOLLARS—SEE SECTION 3001 G. C. AS AMENDED, 108 O. L. 926—SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION No. 623, SEPTEMBER 12, 1919.

Section 3001 G. C., as now amended, fixes the yearly compensation of commissioners of counties whose tax duplicates in December, 1909, were five million dollars, or less, at seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Such section, as amended, became effective October 10, 1919, and it is not applicable to officers whose terms began prior to that date.

In a county whose tax duplicate for December, 1909, and for December, 1910, was less than five million dollars (questions arising from vacancies not considered), each commissioner was entitled to receive, from 1912 to 1919, both inclusive, a compensation of eight hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty cents; and those serving terms beginning prior to October 10, 1919, may continue to draw that sum until the end of such terms.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You advise that in a certain county in Ohio the tax duplicate in December, 1909, and in 1910, was less than five million dollars, and that for subsequent years it has been in excess of that amount. You inquire to what compensation its commissioners were entitled prior to the enactment of amended section 3001 G. C. in June, 1919, what they are to receive under the amended section, and when the latter became effective.

My opinion No. 623, rendered to you on September 12, 1919, sets out the statutes applicable since 1904 and I shall not quote them here. As I then advised you, the commissioners of a county whose tax duplicate did not exceed five million dollars in December, 1909, are entitled, under the present provisions of section 3001 G. C., to an annual compensation of seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Senate bill No. 100, containing this amended section, having been neither approved nor vetoed by the governor, was filed in the office of the secretary of state on July 11, 1919 and became effective on October 10, 1919. Consequently it is not applicable in its present form to commissioners who took their office prior to that date.

Ohio Const., Art. II, Sec. 20.
State ex rel. vs. Raine, Auditor, 49 O. S. 580.
State ex rel. vs. Lewis, 15 N. P. (N. S.) 582.

But it would govern the compensation of one chosen to fill a vacancy occurring after that date.

State ex rel. vs. Tanner, 27 O. C. A. 385.

Prior to June, 1911, the compensation of a commissioner of a county in which, on the 20th of December of the preceding year, the aggregate of the tax duplicate was five million dollars or less, was seven hundred and fifty dollars.

In June, 1911, the statute was amended so as to provide:

> "Sec. 3001. The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:
> In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1911, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be nine hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911. * * * Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner and shall not in any case exceed four thousand dollars per annum. Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

In State ex rel. vs. Lewis, 15 N. P. (N. S.) 582, the court, construing this statute, held that the compensation of a commissioner for the year ending September, 1912, in a county in which for the year 1911 it was seven hundred and fifty dollars, was eight hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty cents, or one hundred and fifteen per cent. of seven hundred and fifty dollars. And the compensation being limited to one hundred and fifteen per cent. of the amount drawn in the official year ending in September, 1911, remained unchanged until affected by the last amendment.

State ex rel. vs. Lewis, supra, is exactly in point here, and, having been, as I understand, affirmed by the court of appeals, and having been referred to with approval by my predecessor in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1918, Vol. I, p. 199, as well as in my own opinion No. 623, I think it is controlling. True, the construction adopted practically reads out of the statute the minimum of nine hundred dollars, but that point was presented to the court and considered by it. The opposite conclusion would have nullified the limitation which was a later provision in the statute.

It is also well settled that laws providing for the compensation of public officers must be strictly construed and only such compensation allowed as is clearly expressed.

> Debold vs. Trustees, 7 O. S. 237.
> Richardson vs. State, 66 O. S. 108.
> Thornley vs. State, 81 O. S. 108.
> State ex rel. vs. Stone, 92 O. S. 63.
> State ex rel. vs. Kleinhoffer, 92 O. S. 163.
> 29 Cyc. 1226.

It is therefore my conclusion that:

(a) Section 3001 G. C., as now amended, fixes the yearly compensation of commissioners of counties whose tax duplicates in December, 1909, were five million dollars, or less, at seven hundred and fifty dollars.

(b) Such section, as amended, became effective October 10, 1919, and it is not applicable to officers whose terms began prior to that date.

(c) In a county whose tax duplicate for December, 1909, and for December, 1910, was less than five million dollars (questions arising from vacancies not considered), each commissioner was entitled to receive, from 1912 to 1919, both inclusive, a compensation of eight hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty cents; and those serving terms beginning prior to October 10, 1919, may continue to draw that sum until the end of such terms.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO LEVY AGAINST CONTIGUOUS LANDS ALL OR ANY PART OF COST OF REAL ESTATE PURCHASED FOR PURPOSE OF EXTENDING A STREET.

Municipalities are without authority to levy against contigous lands all or any part of the cost of real estate purchased for the purpose of extending a street.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of recent date is received reading as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:

Statement of Facts.

The city of X, Ohio, has a number of so-called 'dead-end streets' which the city council proposes to abolish by purchasing property for street purposes and connecting these dead ends with other streets. It is thought that this action would be a great benefit to the property located in the vicinity of these dead ends.

Question 1. Can the cost of the property and expense of improvement be legally assessed against the property, abutting or not, considered benefited by the improvement?

Question 2. Can any portion of the cost of improvement be so assessed, and if so, what portion of the expense?"

The general statute authorizing improvements by a municipality for which an assessment against contiguous lands may be made, is section 3812, which so far as bearing upon street improvements, reads as follows:

"Section 3812 (107 O. L. 629). Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost and expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, * * * public road, or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, water courses, water mains or laying of water pipe * * *."

Plainly, there is no provision in the foregoing which permits of an assessment for extending a street through the medium of purchasing lands; nor has any such authority been found elsewhere in the General Code.

Passing reference may be made to section 3896 which reads as follows:

"The cost of any improvement contemplated in this chapter shall include the purchase money of real estate, or any interest therein, when acquired by purchase, or the value thereof as found by the jury, when appropriated, the costs and expenses of the proceeding, the damages assessed in favor of any owner of adjoining lands and interest thereon, the costs and expenses of the assessment, the expense of the preliminary and other surveys, and of printing, publishing the notices and ordinances required, including notice of assessment, and serving notices on property owners, the cost of construction, interest on bonds, where bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments, and any other necessary expenditure."

Clearly, this statute is not a grant of power, but merely a definition of items which may be included in the cost of an improvement for which an assessment is elsewhere authorized. It should be added that the scope of said section 3896 has in effect been limited in certain respects upon principles announced by the supreme court in the case of City of Dayton vs. Bauman, 66 O. S. 379.

Hence, the answer to both your questions is in the negative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, CERTAIN LEASES, LAND AT LOGAN, BUCKEYE LAKE AND NEW COMERSTOWN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 18, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of November 6, 1919, transmitting leases, in triplicate, for my approval, as follows:

	Valuation.
"To John Springer of Logan, Ohio, canal property in the city of Logan, Ohio, for warehouse purposes	$ 300 00
To Robert F. Wolfe, Columbus, Ohio, lease for use as park and pasturage on the water front of Buckeye Lake, at Buckeye Lake	1,000 00
To Dent L. Lydick, New Comerstown, Ohio, canal property in New Comerstown, Ohio, for store and warehouse purposes	800 00
To W. M. Brode of New Comerstown, Ohio, canal property in New Comerstown, Ohio, for store and warehouse purposes	1,000 00
To John Graham, Logan, Ohio, a portion of the abandoned Hocking Canal, near Falls Mills in Mills township, Hocking county, for agricultural purposes	200 00

I have carefully examined said leases, find them correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISTRICT TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO BORROW MONEY TO CONTRIBUTE TO CURRENT EXPENSES OF SUCH A HOSPITAL WHERE TAX LEVIES INSUFFICIENT.

The county commissioners of a county which is a member of a tuberculosis hospital district have no authority to borrow money to contribute to the current expenses of the hospital in case the tax levies for the year prove insufficient.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting the opinion of this department upon the following question:

> "The district tuberculosis hospital for the counties of Clark, Madison, Greene and Champaign is located near Springfield, Ohio.
> The boards of commissioners of said counties have made annual assessments of taxes to defray the expense of maintenance of said hospital, but the number of patients have more than doubled within the last year, thereby compelling the trustees to purchase additional equipment, bedding, supplies, etc., in order that the patients therein might have proper care and attention.
> At a meeting of the board of trustees of said hospital in Springfield yesterday, it developed that there was not sufficient funds to meet the monthly pay-roll.
> The board of trustees requested me to ask your opinion as to the authority of the board of commissioners of the several counties to borrow money or issue bonds to defray the necessary expenses of maintenance of this hospital until the time for the next annual assessment of taxes for such purpose."

No authority such as is inquired about in your letter has been found. Power is vested in the commissioners by section 3152 G. C. to borrow money for the purpose of payment of the county's apportionment of the first cost of a district tuberculosis hospital and the cost of any betterments or additions thereto. No other similar power is expressly given to the commissioners of a member county in the district tuberculosis hospital act. The latter part of the section just mentioned contains the following provision:

> "A statement shall be prepared quarterly (evidently by the board of trustees of the district hospital, who through the superintendent are to have 'entire charge and control of the hospital,' Sec. 3151) showing the per capita daily cost for the current expenses of maintaining such hospital, * * * and each county in the district shall pay its share of such cost as determined by the number of days the total number of patients from such county have spent in the hospital during the quarter, but the sum paid by patients from such county for their treatment therein shall be deducted from this amount. The boards of commissioners of counties jointly maintaining a district hospital for tuberculosis shall make annual assessments of taxes sufficient to support and defray the necessary expense of maintenance of such hospital."

These provisions are capable of two constructions: First, that each county is to pay its share at all events out of whatever funds it may have on hand; and, second, that each county is to pay its proportionate share in the manner pointed out in the section by making a levy sufficient to provide for the same.

As reflecting upon the true interpretation of section 3152, if not modifying that section itself, sections 3152-1 and 3153 must be taken into account. The first of these sections provides in part:

> "All taxes levied by the county commissioners of any county under the provisions of section thirty-one hundred and fifty-two shall, when collected, be paid over to the trustees of the district tuberculosis hospital upon the warrant of the county auditor, at the same time that school and township moneys are paid to the respective treasurers, (i. e., after each semi-annual settlement of taxes); and the board of trustees shall receipt therefor and deposit said funds to its credit in the bank * * * to be designated by it * * *; and thereupon said funds may be disbursed by said board of trustees for the uses and purposes of said district tuberculosis hospital, and accounted for as provided in the foregoing sections."

Section 3153, referred to, provides in part that: the trustees shall in April

> "file with the joint board of county commissioners a report of their proceedings with reference to such district hospital, and a statement of all receipts and expenditures during the year, and at such time shall certify the amount necessary to maintain and improve the hospital for the ensuing year."

From these sections it is clear that the word "pay" as used in section 3152 does not import general liability on the part of the county but is merely used to designate a basis of apportionment of a fund to be raised in the manner stated in the same and succeeding sections. In other words, the intent of the first sentence which has been quoted is to provide the basis on which the contributing counties shall make their respective contributions. Then the sections go on to create machinery to raise the necessary funds. That machinery contemplates an annual estimate based, doubtless, upon the experience of the past as disclosed by the quarterly statement, and leading to an annual levy of taxes by the several boards of county commissioners for the purpose of raising the necessary funds.

This conclusion being reached, it is clear that the legal result of a need for funds on the part of the board of trustees of the hospital is through proper machinery to give rise to a duty on the part of the commissioners of each county to make a tax levy; that result is not the incurring of general liability by the county as such. In other words, the county does not owe a debt in the nature of an obligation enforcible against it in any way, nor can the commissioners be compelled by mandamus to do anything other than levy a tax.

These remarks have been indulged for the purpose of disposing of the question as to whether or not the commissioners could take the action suggested in your letter under favor of section 5656 G. C. which authorizes the commissioners to borrow money or issue bonds for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any obligation which the county from its limits of taxation is unable to pay at maturity. The conclusion arrived at leads to a negative answer to this question.

The only other general section under which county commissioners may borrow money is section 2434 G. C. which will not be quoted. It is sufficient to observe that it does not give authority to borrow money for any such purpose as that referred to in your letter.

For all these reasons the answer to the question which you submit is in the negative.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER—NOTICE OF TAX RATES REQUIRED BY SECTION 2648 G. C. TO BE PUBLISHED—WHEN SAME SHOULD BE RE-PUBLISHED WHEN RATES RE-ADJUSTED.

It is lawful (though perhaps not indispensable) that the notice of tax rates required by section 2648 G. C. to be published should be re-published where the rates are re-adjusted after the notice has been once given.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I hasten to answer your letter of November 11th in which you submit certain questions respecting the effect of a favorable vote of the electors on the submission of the question authorized to be submitted by sections 6926-1 et seq. of the General Code, as recently enacted. One of your questions is, it is believed, fully covered by an opinion addressed to the tax commission of Ohio, a copy of which you have. The remaining question may be stated as follows:

> Where the county road levy has been exempted from the fifteen mill limitation in accordance with the approval of the electors and, as held in the opinion referred to, the tax rates for the ensuing year are revised accordingly, but it happened that the county treasurer has given notice as required by law of the rates levied for the various purposes, should not such notice be given again?

The section requiring the giving of notice of the tax rates is as follows:

Section 2648 G. C.:

> "Upon receiving from the county auditor a duplicate of taxes assessed upon the property of the county, the county treasurer shall immediately cause notice thereof to be posted in three places in each township of the county, one of which shall be at the place of holding elections in such township, and also be inserted for six successive weeks in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county. Such notice shall specify particularly the amount of taxes levied on the duplicate for the support of the state government, the payment of interest and principal of the public debt, the support of state common schools, defraying county expenses, repairing of roads, keeping the poor, building of bridges, township expenses and for each other object for which taxes may be levied on each dollar valuation."

It is the opinion of this department that compliance with this section would require the repetition of the notice. In effect, the revision of the rates even after the duplicate is in the hands of the treasurer for collection would constitute a new delivery of the "duplicate of taxes assessed."

Whether or not the section is merely directory, so that failure to comply with it would not invalidate the tax levies, need not be considered. Even a directory statute should be complied with, and the expenditure of funds for legal advertising, etc., involved in such a compliance would be perfectly legal. For example, failure to publish a proclamation of election would not invalidate the result of the election if it were duly held, and no one were actually prejudiced by such failure. But the mere fact that a notice intended for the benefit of the public may not be so vital as that its omission will invalidate a proceeding, does not militate against the view that it is the duty of the public officers to give the notice.

Though inclining to the view therefore that the omission of the notice specified in section 2648 G. C. may not be vital, you are advised that it is the duty of the treasurer to give such notice as required in that section and in section 6252 G. C. (see State vs. Commissioners, 7 N. P., 239), in the event that the tax rates are revised after the first notice has been given, and that this being the case the treasurer is authorized to incur the expense involved in giving such notice.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—PRIOR TO ENACTMENT OF HOUSE BILL No. 348, 108 O. L 704, NO AUTHORITY FOR TRANSFER OF TERRITORY FROM EXEMPTED VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT OR CITY SCHOOL DI TRICT TO SCHOOL DISTRICT OF A COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

Prior to the enactment of house bill No. 348, amending section 4696 G. C., there was no provision under the laws of the state for the transfer of territory from an exempted village school district or a city school district to a school district of the county school district, and attempted transfers of school territory from an exempted village school district or a city school district to a school district of the county school district prior to September 22, 1919, were without authority of law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

HON. F. M. CUNNINGHAM, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for the opinion of this department on the following statement of facts:

> "The Lebanon village school district comprises the village of Lebanon and the larger part of Turtlecreek township, in which Lebanon is located; said district is independent of the control or supervision of the county superintendent or county board of education.
> Last July certain territory within said district owned by the U. B. people, and known as Otterbein Home property was detached from the Lebanon village school district, upon application by said home, and with the consent of the Lebanon village school district, and formed into a rural district.
> At the time said territory was transferred, the board of education, Lebanon village school district, and the Otterbein Home adjusted the question of indebtedness upon said district, and the same was approved by resolution of the board.
> At the August settlement of the auditor of the county the funds raised by taxation for the Lebanon village school district was placed to the credit of said district, no division or proportionment of the funds being made between the district and the detached territory.

There does not seem to be any statutory provision specifically covering the question as to whether there shall be a division of the funds upon territory being detached from a village district, which is not under the control of the county board.

Please let me have your opinion as to whether a proportionate division of the funds received at the August settlement can be legally made, and if so under what provision of the Code."

From an analysis of the above statement of facts, it seems that the Lebanon village school district, to which is attached the larger part of Turtlecreek township, is an exempted village school district and one that is independent of the control and supervision of the county superintendent or county board of education. You further indicate that during last July, 1919, certain territory within the exempted Lebanon village school district was detached and transferred by the board of education of Lebanon village school district to the Otterbein Home rural school district under the jurisdiction of the county board of education.

Section 4696 as in effect July, 1919, read as follows:

"A county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district, provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred, petition for such transfer. Provided, however, that if at least seventy-five per cent. of the electors of the territory petition for such transfer, the county board of education shall make such transfer. No such transfer shall be in effect until the county board of education and the board of education to which the territory is to be transferred each pass resolutions by a majority vote of the full membership of each board and until an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness be decided upon by the boards of education acting in the transfer; also a map shall be filed with the auditor or auditors of the county or counties affected by such transfer."

The above section is the only statute speaking of the transfer of school territory wherein is mentioned an "exempted village school district" or "city school district," and while such statute provided that a part or all of the school district of the county school district could be transferred by the county board of education to an exempted village school district or city school district, no provision appears therein for any transfer of school territory from an exempted village school district or a city school district back to a contiguous rural school district in the county after such school territory had been once attached to an exempted village school district or city school district for school purposes.

The above condition obtained during all the period prior to the amendment of section 4696 G. C. at the present session of the legislature, and under the provisions of house bill 348, section 4696 G. C., as newly amended, reads as follows:

"A county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district or to another county school district upon the petition of a majority of the freeholders residing in the territory to be transferred and make an equitable division of the funds and indebtedness between said districts; and a county board of education may accept a transfer of territory from an adjoining exempted village school district, city school district or another county school district and annex same to a school district of the county school district. When territory is to be transferred from an exempted village school district, city school district or another county school district, the board of education of the district from which such territory is to be transferred shall pass a resolution by a majority vote of the full membership of such board asking for such transfer, and file the same with the county board of education of the county school district to which such territory is to be transferred. Such transfer shall not be complete until the county board of education of the county in which such transfer is to be made shall pass a resolution by a majority vote of the full membership of such board, accepting such transferred territory and such county board shall make an equitable distribution of the funds and the indebtedness between the district from which and to which such territory is transferred; nor shall any transfer mentioned in this section be complete until a map shall be filed with the county auditor of the county or auditors of the counties affected by such transfer. When territory is so transferred the legal title of the school property, both real and personal, shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred."

But this section was not effective until on and after September 22, 1919, and a transfer or an attempted transfer made prior to September 22, 1919, could not be covered by the language of the amendment. It seems that the very fact that old section 4696 made no provision for the transferring of territory from a city school district or an exempted village school district back to the adjoining rural district, was the very reason that the section in question was amended to take care of such situations which arise, as in the case at hand. Thus under the provisions of section 4696 G. C., as newly amended, the provisions are very plain for the making of a transfer of this kind, while before such amendment was in effect on September 22, 1919, there was no provision under the statutes whereby territory within the bounds of a city school district or an exempted village school district could be detached to an adjoining rural school district.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that prior to the enactment of house bill 348, amending section 4696 G. C., there was no provision under the laws of the state for the transfer of territory from an exempted village school district or a city school district to a school district of the county school district, and attempted transfers of school territory from an exempted village school district or a city school district to a school district of the county school district prior to September 22, 1919 were without authority of law.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT—NO AUTHORITY TO INCREASE COMPENSATION DURING TERM OF SERVICE FOR WHICH ELECTED—COMPENSATION FIXED AT TIME OF HIS ELECTION.

The appointing authority provided in section 4739 G. C., whose duty it is to elect the district superintendent of schools, has no power to increase the compensation of such district superintendent during the term of service for which he was elected. Under the provisions of section 4743 G. C., the compensation of such district superintendent shall be fixed at the time of his election and such compensation cannot be changed after the appointment has been accepted by the person so elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for an opionion upon the following statement of facts:

> "In May, 1918, the presidents of the boards of education of Pleasant, Oak Run, Range and Paint townships, Madison county, Ohio, said townships formerly supervisory district No. 2, met in accordance with the law and elected C. S. Dennis, of Mt. Sterling, Ohio, as district superintendent of the above district for a term of two years at a salary of $1,800 per year. On August 23, 1919, the presidents of these same boards of education met and by unanimous vote increased the salary of said superintendent four hundred and fifty dollars.
> "Shall the county auditor of Madison county upon an order issued by the county superintendent and signed by the president of the county board of education for the increased monthly salary issue a warrant upon the county treasury to be paid from funds in the hands of the county board of education, the said increase in salary to be taken care of next year by increased taxation on the townships composing said district and said money returned to the county board of education fund, or shall it be paid causing a deficit in the townships composing said district? There is money sufficient in the county board of education fund to take care of it this year."

Your question is whether the county auditor shall pay from the funds in the hands of the county board of education an increase in salary of a district superintendent, such increase having been made during the term for which such district superintendent was elected, and further as to how this increase in salary shall be taken care of by the townships composing the supervision district of said superintendent.

Before considering the matter as to how the townships should take care of the increase in salary made to a district superintendent during the term for which he was elected, it is well in the first instance to consider the question as to whether such district superintendent can be increased in salary during his term.

Section 4743 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made and by the same authority which appoints him; such compensation shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. The salary of any district superintendent shall in no case be less than one thousand dollars per annum, half of which salary not to exceed seven hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by the state and half by the supervision district, except where the number of teachers in any supervision district is less than forty in which case the amounts paid by the state shall be such proportion of half the salary as the ratio of the number of teachers employed is to forty. The half paid by the supervision district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in such district in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

It will be noted by the provisions of the above section that the compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made and by the same authority which appoints him, which means that when a district superintendent is elected in a supervision district by the joint votes of the presidents of the several school districts in such supervision district, he shall be elected for a definite time, which may be one, two or three years, provided the first election of such superintendent in that particular district had been for a term of one year, and his compensation shall be fixed by the presidents who perform the duty of electing him, and such compensation shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made.

Section 4744-2 reads as follows:

> "The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendent and for contingent expenses, as may be certified by the county board. Such moneys shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund.' The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the county snd district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount; which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

The above section provides that the county auditor shall have received prior to the first day of August of each year the certificate from the county board of education as to the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation, along with the certification as to the compensation of the county superintendent. This certification is made to the auditor in order that the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salary of a district superintendent may be properly entered on the records and provided for in the allotment of school funds. It would thus be seen that promiscous increases of salary for district superintendents made at any time during the calendar year would have a tendency to disturb the original certificate made by the county board of education to the county auditor prior to the first day of August in each year.

Attention is invited to opinion 2069, appearing at page 1855, Vol. 2, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, wherein it was held:

> "There is no power in the appointing authority provided by section 4739 G. C., 104 O. L., 140, to increase the compensation of a district superintendent during the term of service for which he was elected, and his compensation fixed pursuant to the provisions of section 4743 G. C., 104 O. L., 142, after the appointment has been accepted by the person so elected."

After holding that district superintendents are not officers and are, therefore, not subject to the provisions of section 20, article 2 of the constitution, the Attorney-General further said:

> "The presidents of the village and rural boards of education and the members of such boards, when in joint session, are, however, in the employment of the district superintendents, subject to the familiar rule that public officers, in the discharge of their official duties, have only such powers as are expressly conferred by law or are necessary to the proper performance of duties imposed or the exercise of powers conferred by express provision of law.

"The particular officers referred to, in the employment of district superintendents, and the fixing of their compensation, pursuant to sections 4739 and 4743 G. C., supra, have not conferred upon them the general power to contract and be contracted with, as in the case of boards of education, under the provision of section 4749 G. C.

There is found no express statutory provision authorizing the presidents of the board of education of rural and village districts, or the members of such boards in joint session, authorized by section 4739 G. C., supra, to increase or decrease the compensation of a district superintendent, after the same has once been determined, pursuant to the provisions of section 4743 G. C., supra, and the same accepted by the person so elected, and it is not believed that the exercise of such power is in the way necessary to a proper performance of the duties imposed by law upon such officers in respect to the election of and determining the compensation of district superintendents."

Speaking of the certification to be made by the county board of education to the county auditor prior to August 1st, in each year, as provided under section 4744-2 G. C., the then Attorney-General further said:

"I am aware of no authority to make a second certification under this section and am of the opinion that when a certification has once been made to the county auditor, according to the provisions of section 4744-2 G. C., supra, no subsequent certification may be made for that year."

In opinion No. 334, addressed to Hon. Donald F. Melhorn, prosecuting attorney, Kenton, Ohio, under date of June 2, 1917, a later Attorney-General, upholding the view taken by his predecessor, further said:

"Following the reasoning of said opinion (2069), the term, then, of the district superintendents who were elected in 1914 would extend, as above noted, to August 31, 1915. How, then, could any district superintendents receive another or a different salary covering the said period. If the same district superintendents were re-elected, they had already been paid for said time, or at least their contract covered said period. * * * The various presidents or members of the boards of education who made up the supervision district were without authority to enter into contracts covering a period which was included in the contracts previously entered into. * * * The officers who employed such district superintendents could exercise only such powers as are conferred upon them by law. They had no authority to make a contract overlapping any other contract. The money having been paid thereon, recovery of the same back can be had."

Section 4743 G. C., supra, has not been amended in any wise since it was enacted in 104 O. L., page 133, and containing the language in the text upon which the two opinions by former Attorneys-General were based.

Section 4744-2, providing for the certification by the county board of education to the county auditor of the number of district superintendents and the compensation of the county superintendent prior to the first day of August of each year, was amended in 108 O. L., 233, but such amendment was that the local expense of the normal school in the county should be also certified by the county board of education at the time of the regular August certification.

There has been no change in the law that the salary of the district superintendent shall be fixed by the appointing authority at the same time that the appointment is made, and it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that the appointing authority provided in section 4739 G. C., whose duty it is to elect the district superintendent of schools, has no power to increase the compensation of such district superintendent during the term of service for which he was elected. Under the provisions of section 4743 G. C., the compensation of such district superintendent shall be fixed at the time of his election and such compensation cannot be changed after the appointment has been accepted by the person so elected.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP CLERK—SECTIONS 12910 AND 12912 G. C. DO NOT PROHIBIT HIS EMPLOYMENT BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES ON TOWNSHIP ROAD WORK, ETC.—LIMITATION OF SECTION 3308 G. C. 4. The maximum annual compensation to a township clerk permitted by section 3308 G. C. may be allowed by the township trustees at the end of the year if in the exercise of a sound discretion the trustees find that such maximum represents reasonable compensation for services rendered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication reading as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:

We are respectfully referring you to section 3308 of the General Code, as well as section 3298-12 G. C., and would say that under date of July 11, 1916, the Attorney-General held that the compensation under section 3298-12 G. C., was subject to the limitation fixed by section 3308 G. C.

1. May the township clerk legally be employed by the township trustees to do road work, ditch work or miscellaneous work?

2. If so, is not the amount that he may draw from the township treasury for all and any kind of work subject to the limitation of section 3308 G. C.?

3. Are not the township trustees obligated to fix by resolution what his general compensation shall be per annum subject to the limitation of section 3308 of the General Code? Or may they without any resolution at the close of the year allow the maximum?

4. Should not a detailed account be rendered of miscellaneous services and work if legal, allowing consistent verification by the State department?"

On personal conference with your bureau, it has been ascertained that the purport of your first inquiry is whether the provisions of sections 12910 and 12912 G. C. prohibit the employment of the township clerk by the trustees of his township for the rendition of personal services in the construction, maintenance and repair of roads ditches, and the doing of other general township work along those lines.

Said two sections read as follows:

"Sec. 12910. Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

"Sec. 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustees of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

Very plainly, the mere furnishing of personal services is not such an activity as would come within the prohibition of being "interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance," set out in section 12910. Even if that proposition were the subject of doubt, the doubt is removed by reference to the terms of section 12912, which specifically cover the case of being interested in the profits of services for the township. Inasmuch as section 12912, so far as it relates to townships, refers only to the township trustees, and does not include the clerk, the conclusion follows that the two sections in question do not prohibit the employment of a township clerk by the trustees of his township for the rendition of personal services on work of the character indicated in your letter. Hence the answer to your first question is in the affirmative.

It should be understood that the conclusion just stated relates only to the rendition of personal services, and does not pass upon the question whether the township clerk is prohibited by section 12910 from an employment by the township trustees involving the furnishing by the clerk of material, such as gravel or stone, in connection with personal services.

Your second question has reference to section 3308 G. C. which in its form as amended in 107 O. L., 651, reads as follows:

"The clerk shall be entitled to the following fees, to be paid by the parties requiring the service: twenty-five cents for recording each mark or brand; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and repaired by the parties; ten cents for each hundred words of records or copies in matters relating to partition fences, but not less than twenty-five cents for any one copy, to be paid from the township treasury; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and kept in repair by the superintendent; for keeping the record of the proceedings of the trustees, stating and making copies of accounts and settlements, attending suits for and against the township, and for any other township business the trustees require him to perform, such reasonable compensation as they allow. In no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than two hundred and fifty dollars."

You refer in connection with this section to an opinion of this department of date of July 11, 1916. Said opinion is found in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. II, p. 1184. The conclusion reached in that opinion was that the compensation provided for in section 3298-12 G. C. as it appeared in 106 O. L., 592, was subject to the limitation of $150 for any one year, as provided in said section 3308 before its amendment in 107 O. L. Said section 3298-12 related to the keeping by the township clerk of a record of township road proceedings.

The effect of your second question is to inquire whether the principles underlying said opinion are such as to lead to the conclusion that the limitation of $250 in section 3308 is applicable to services rendered by the township clerk of the character mentioned in your first question.

Of course, taken alone, the last sentence of section 3308 "in no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than $250," would prohibit the township clerk from drawing more than that amount in any one year from the township treasury under any conditions whatsoever. However, it is a familiar rule of construction that a statute should be read as a whole, and that the terms of a statute are to be considered in the light of their context and subject matter rather than literally. Keeping this rule in mind, the conclusion plainly follows from a reading of the section that the limitation of $250 is applicable to the township clerk only as to services rendered in his capacity as clerk. Such services as the clerk might legally render outside of the scope of his official duties are subject to payment in the same way as would be the services of any other employe of the township.

Hence the answer to your second question is in the negative.

Your fourth question will next be taken up because of its relation to services of the character referred to in questions 1 and 2.

No statute has been found which defines with any degree of certainty the procedure to be followed by the township authorities in their allowance and payment of accounts. However, sections 3304 and 3316 are here quoted respectively as follows:

"Section 3304. Immediately after the township officers have made their annual settlement of accounts, the clerk shall make and enter in the record of the proceedings of the trustees, a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the township for the preceding year, if any, the amount of money received and expended for such purposes in each such district in the township, and the receipts and expenditures of the township board of education. He shall state from what source the moneys were received, to whom paid, for what expended, and in detail all liabilities, if any. On the morning of the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, each year, the clerk shall post a copy of such statement at each place of holding township elections in the township. A township clerk refusing or neglecting to make, enter and publish such detailed statement, shall be liable to a fine of not less than twenty-five nor more than thirty dollars, to be recovered before any justice of the peace of the township, and paid into the school fund of the township.

Section 3316. No money belonging to the township shall be paid out by the treasurer, except upon an order signed personally by at least two of the township trustees and countersigned personally by the township clerk."

It goes without saying that the township clerk cannot make up a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures for the preceding year unless the accounts which make up those expenditures are rendered in such detail as to show exactly what the expenditure is for. An account merely for "miscellaneous services" explains nothing so far as proper entries on the township books are concerned, and might include activities reaching into every public function which the township is authorized to perform, at the same time failing to indicate the particular fund out of which the charge is properly payable. The plain intent of section 3304 will not be subserved unless all accounts rendered to the township trustees show the precise nature of the services rendered or work done, and the purposes to which such services or work were put.

It will be noted that by the terms of section 3316 the township clerk must personally countersign all orders on the treasurer before that officer is authorized to pay them; hence the clerk should not only be advised of the details making up the account which is to be paid through the medium of the order, but also is provided with a means of requiring that accounts be rendered in detailed form.

For these reasons the answer to your fourth question is given in the affirmative.

Your third question relates only to such services as are performed by the clerk in the course of his official capacity and does not include those services embraced within the intent of your remaining questions.

The first part of section 3308 relates to fees to be paid to the clerk by parties requiring the service. The latter part of said section relates to compensation to the clerk for services rendered the township in his official capacity and reads as follows:

> "For keeping the record of the proceedings of the trustees, stating and making copies of accounts and settlements, attending suits for and against the township, and for any other township business the trustees require him to perform, such reasonable compensation as they allow."

The phraseology just quoted imports the idea of an allowance for services after they are rendered rather than before. The township trustees may not be in position to know in advance what services will be required in a given year; and the services of the clerk may differ materially in volume in one year as compared with another. Hence, the only construction which we may give the statute is that the allowances for services were intended by the legislature to be left to the sound discretion of the township trustees, subject to the limitation of $250.00. Plainly, the township clerk is not placed on a salary basis, and to hold that the township trustees must by resolution fix the general compensation for the year would be almost tantamount to holding that the township clerk is to be on a salary basis. Besides the question would remain, what services would "general compensation" include?

It is also to be noted that the expression appears "for any other township business the trustees require him to perform," thus indicating a certain discretion in the township trustees in the matter of calling on the clerk for particular services which the trustees may find in the interest of the township.

Upon the whole, therefore, there is nothing in section 3308 to warrant the conclusion that there is a duty on the part of the township trustees to fix in advance the general compensation of the clerk. Neither is there anything in the statute which forbids the trustees at the close of the year from allowing the maximum. It is presumed, of course, that the trustees will not act arbitrarily, but that in whatever allowance they make they will exercise a sound discretion looking on the one hand to the public interest, and on the other to the value and nature of the services rendered by the clerk.

Your third question is, therefore, answered by the statement that the township trustees are not obligated to fix by resolution the general annual compensation of the clerk, and that such township trustees may, at the close of the year, allow the maximum sum named in section 3308, provided that such trustees in the exercise of a sound discretion find that such maximum represents reasonable compensation for services rendered.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LEGAL HOLDER OF PAST DUE MUNICIPAL BONDS AND COUPONS FOR PAST DUE INTEREST UPON MUNICIPAL BONDS IS ENTITLED TO COLLECT INTEREST THEREON FROM TIME THEY ARE PROPERLY PRESENTED FOR PAYMENT UNTIL ACTUAL PAYMENT IS RECEIVED.

The legal holder of past due municipal bonds and coupons for past due interest upon municipal bonds is entitled to collect interest thereon from the time they are properly presented for payment until actual payment is received.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—We have your letter of October 29, 1919, requesting opinion as follows:

"Statement of Facts.

The cashier of the Union Deposit Bank of Maumee, Ohio, was also treasurer of the village of Maumee. Bonds and coupons were presented for payment. The village had no funds on deposit by the sinking fund to cover the same. The bank paid out the money to redeem the bonds and coupons presented at maturity without municipal funds to cover, charging the payment to the account of the bank. Later when the municipality had procured funds to cover the bank charged the municipality interest as follows:

Question: Can the bank legally charge the village interest on moneys paid under the conditions set forth herein?"

The recital in your letter that the Union Deposit Bank of Maumee, Ohio, upon presentation of these bonds and interest coupons paid for them and charged the payment so paid to the account of the bank, indicates that the transaction was considered by the bank and carried on its books as a purchase of such securities from the legal holders thereof, and in answering your question, I am considering the bank as a purchaser for value of overdue bonds and interest coupons.

As further authority for this assumption, I have a letter from Mr. A. F. Mitchell, president of the Union Deposit Bank of Maumee, Ohio, in which he makes the direct statement that these bonds and interest coupons were purchased by the bank and carried as bank property until their subsequent redemption by the village of Maumee.

Your inquiry does not particularly describe the bonds and interest coupons in question and I take it that they were valid obligations of the village of Maumee, containing the recitals usually found in such instruments.

Such being the case, the legal holder thereof was entitled to receive payment upon proper presentation when due and in default of such payment by the village to collect interest upon the amount due until payment was received.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Union Deposit Bank of Maumee, being the legal holder of the bonds and interest coupons referred to in your letter, was entitled to collect interest on the same from the time they were properly presented for payment when due until they were paid.

As to the rate of interest which the bank was entitled to charge, I call your attention to sections 8303, 8304 and 8305 of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Section 8303. The parties to a bond, bill, promissory note, or other instrument of writing for the forbearance or payment of money at any future time, may stipulate therein for the payment of interest upon the amount thereof at any rate not exceeding eight per cent per annum, payable annually.
> Section 8304. Upon all judgments, decrees, or orders, rendered on any bond, bill, note, or other instrument of writing containing stipulations for the payment of interest in accordance with the provisions of the next preceding section, interest shall be computed till payment at the rate specified in such instrument.'
> Section 8305. In cases other than those provided for in the next two preceding sections, when money becomes due and payable upon any bond, bill, note, or other instrument of writing, upon any book account, or settlement between parties, upon all verbal contracts entered into, and upon all judgments, decrees, and orders of any judicial tribunal for the payment of money arising out of a contract, or other transaction, the creditor shall be entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, and no more."

Under sections 8303 and 8304 G. C., above quoted, the bank was only entitled to interest upon the unpaid bonds at the rates respectively stipulated in the several bonds.

Upon the unpaid interest coupons, assuming that they were of the usual form and provided for the unconditional payment of a sum stated at a date certain, interest was properly computed and collected, under said section 8305 G. C., at the rate of six per cent. per annum.

As it appears from your letter that these interest payments were for interest accruing prior to October 5, 1918, the question of whether the Union Deposit Bank of Maumee was authorized to purchase the overdue securities mentioned in view of the provisions of the new banking act, house bill No. 200, filed in the office of the secretary of state, April 12, 1919, is not material as such banking act did not become effective until July 12, 1919.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—NON-CHARTER CITY MAY BUY WATER WORKS FROM PRIVATE COMPANY BY ISSUING BONDS FOR FIRST PAYMENT UNDER SECTION 3939 G. C., AND CONTRACTING TO PAY REST OF PURCHASE PRICE FROM EARNINGS OF WATER WORKS—MAY LEGALLY ISSUE MORTGAGE BONDS SECURED ONLY UPON UTILITY AND ITS REVENUES.

1. A non-charter governed municipality may buy a water works from a private company by authorizing and issuing bonds for the first payment under section 3939 G. C., and contracting to pay the rest of the purchase price from the earnings of the water works.

2. Such a municipality may legally issue bonds under section 3939 G. C. to make the initial payment and issue mortgage bonds secured only upon the utility and its revenue under article 18, section 12, of the constitution for the payment of the rest of the purchase price of such water works.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "We are enclosing copy of communication to Mr. B. F. Robinson, president of council, Bucyrus, Ohio, and respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> 1. In a non-charter governed city, may a municipality buy a water works from a private company by authorizing and issuing bonds for the first payment and contracting to pay the balance at fixed intervals from the earnings of the water works?
> 2. May a municipality legally issue bonds to make the first or initial payment and issue mortgage bonds secured only upon the utility and its revenues to cover the balance?
> 3. Is there any legal way to purchase such water works, making only a partial payment?"

Acknowledgment is also made of the receipt of a copy of the communication from your bureau to the president of the city council of Bucyrus, Ohio. It is suggested that while your questions are separately stated and numbered, they are all intimately affected by the consideration of and answer to question No. 1.

Sections 4, 5 and 12 of article 18, section 11 of article 12, sections 3939, 3940, 3806 and 3809 are pertinent.

Section 4, article 18, in part provides:

> "Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate * * * any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants."

Section 5 provides that any municipality exercising the powers granted in section 4, "shall act by ordinance, and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage." Then follows provision for a referendum on such ordinance.

Section 12 of article 18 is as follows:

> "Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure."

Section 11 of article 12, adopted at the same time as the above quoted sections (1912), provides that no bonded indebtedness of a political subdivision of the state shall be incurred unless

"in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Section 3939 (106 O. L., 536) authorizes the city council, in the manner therein stated, to issue and sell bonds

"in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent per annum, as said council may determine, and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes; * * *

(11) For erecting or purchasing water works for supplying water to the corportion and the inhabitants thereof."

Section 3940 limits the amount of such bond issue to "one per cent of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation." At this point it may be observed that prior to the adoption of section 12, article 18, municipal corporations, by delegated power from the general assembly, in sections 3939 and others, already had the authority to acquire and operate water works and to issue bonds in payment thereof. The amendment, however, does not enlarge the power but rather places it beyond the control of the general assembly and is a direct grant of power not from the general assembly, which theretofore was necessary (see Board of Health vs. Greenville, 86 O. S., 24) ,but is a direct grant from the people in "a new distribution of governmental power, * * * made by the people," as held in Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, 88 O. S., 360.

This direct grant, then, from the people of Ohio, contains express authority to acquire a water plant. Authority to issue bonds for the entire cost price of construction or purchase was also granted by sections 3939 and 3940 up to one per cent of the taxable property. By the terms of section 3949 this limitation may be exceeded where the net income of the plant is sufficient to meet the sinking fund requirements.

The question of the validity of this section, because of its apparent conflict with section 11, article 12, may be noted (but not decided) in this, that said section 11 prohibits the incurrence or renewal of any bonded indebtedness, unless in the legislation authorizing it "provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay interest and redeem the bonds at maturity." It is to be noted that the constitutional requirement is that this sinking fund shall be levied and collected "annually by taxation." Section 3949 contemplates the creation and maintenance of such sinking fund from the revenues of the water plant. However, section 12, article 18, adopted by the people at the same time section 11 was adopted authorizes the issuance of the bonds beyond the one per cent limitation, where the payment of such bonds is secured only by the utility and its income. The same apparent conflict exists between sections 11 and 12, unless the latter, being more special in its nature, is to be regarded as an exception to the former. Such a conflict is avoidable also by construing the special or limited indebtedness of the municipality on the mortgage bonds issued under section 12 and section 3949 G. C. as not being a "bonded indebtedness" in the sense in which that term is used in section 11. This latter construction is adopted by this department. This does not affect or impair the application of section 11 to bonded indebtedness, and gives meaning to section 12. In view of the authority contained in the last section, so far as the present question is concerned, it is unnecessary to further discuss or determine the implied repeal of section 3949 by the adoption of section 11, article 12. To keep in mind the effect of the adoption of these constitutional amendments, it must be remembered that they are self-executing and apply to "any municipality," whether charter or non-charter.

Section 3806 (Burns law) in part provides:

> "No contract * * * involving the expenditure of money, shall be entered into * * * unless the auditor * * * first certifies to council * * * that the money required for such contract * * * is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose."

With this preliminary survey of the law applicable to your inquiries, they may now be considered separately.

In question 1 you inquire:

> "In a non-charter governed city, may a municipality buy a water works from a private company by authorizing and issuing bonds for the first payment and contracting to pay the balance at fixed intervals from the earnings of the water works?"

This project may be said to involve two principal acts:

(1) The issuance of bonds for the initial payment under section 3939, and (2) a contract for deferred payments out of the net income.

The authority to issue bonds for water works (see further discussion in answer to your second question) clearly exists and, subject to the limitations of section 3940, the requirements of the constitution as to the sinking fund and general laws as to the tax rate limitations, authority to contract for the purchase is equally clear, but it may be said that this authority is subject to the impediments of section 3806 (supra).

In the scheme contemplated, the deferred payments are not to be made from funds raised by taxation, but are to come from the net income of the utility. It is at once obvious that the auditor cannot certify that such money is in the treasury or in process of collection. But is such certificate necessary?

In Kerr vs. Bellefontaine, et al., 59 O. S., 464, the court held that that part of the statute which limits its application to contracts, ordinances or orders, for or involving "the expenditure of money," applies only to money raised by taxation. Holding that the statute did not apply in that case, the court held:

> "The fund from which the plaintiff is entitled to satisfaction of his demand, is not raised by taxation. It is derived from the operation of the gas works and made subject to the order of the board, whose authority is so limited that they can make valid contracts only for appliances and supplies for the gas works to which the fund is devoted."

In Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S., 288, the rule is more clearly and definitely stated. As appears on page 294 of the opinion:

"The section is general in its terms, but the object of the general assembly evidently was to compel municipalities to have the money in the treasury before appropriating or spending it. This can only apply to money raised, or to be raised by a levy on the general tax list of the municipality." and again on page 296 it is said that this section (then 2702) did not apply,

"for the further reason that by necessary implication said section has reference to money of the municipality, that is, money raised, or ultimately to be raised, by a levy on the general tax list, and does not cover or refer to moneys of individuals, that is, money to be raised by an assessment on the property along the improvement."

On page 297 this holding is characterized as protecting

"the treasury and the general tax payer and at the same time enables needed local improvements to be made without detriment to the municipality and is in accordance with the intention of the general assembly in passing the Burns law."

In the contemplated scheme to carry out the second part of the project, no money raised by levy on the taxable property of the municipality is used for the deferred payments, and in view of these and other decisions, construing the Burns law in this regard, this department is of the opinion that on the facts as contemplated in your inquiry, the Burns law is inapplicable.

It is therefore concluded that in the manner pointed out, and subject to the limitations indicated, the proper answer to your first question is an affirmative one.

Your second question is:

Consideration of the purpose of the sections and constitutional provisions above quoted and considered, suggests no reason why the municipality may not utilize either of these methods in acquiring a water plant. This seems free from doubt. But the question as presented here is whether the authority and power of both of these separate provisions may be utilized in part and conjunctively. On one side it may be claimed that the power to issue bonds under sections 3939 et seq. and section 12, article 18 of the constitution, carries with it authority to issue bonds to provide part payment for a water works plant. This on the theory that the lesser power is included in the greater power. On the other side of this question it may be claimed that to legally exercise the authority contained in section 3939, viz., to issue bonds for the purpose of "erecting or purchasing water works," the bond must be for the entire cost of such water works, and that this section contemplates that the issuance of such bonds, of itself, will result in the acquisition of such utility and that a complete and exclusive means of such acquisition is here provided. This section, however, relates to the grant of powers to municipalities; in it the legislature was concerned with the purposes or objects for which power to issue bonds was there granted. It may be plausibly argued that the later adoption of section 12, article 18, supra, was not without significance in this connection. This section, adopted at the same time as sections 4 and 5 of article 18, rather indicates that bonds up to the bond limitation may be issued under section 3939, and if this does not raise sufficient money, the rest of the money necessary may be raised by issuance of mortgage bonds secured only by the property and its revenues. This section reads:

"Provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality."

Would this not seem to indicate that with authority to acquire water works clearly granted, without restriction (except as to the extent of bond issues) in previously enacted sections, it was thus intended to provide for the acquisition of such water works in cases where the bonds issuable under section 3939, et seq., were insufficient, by providing the balance of the funds requisite to such acquisition could be raised by mortgage bonds secured only on the property and its income, as above pointed out? No decision on this precise question has been found, but the case of Platt vs. Toledo, 21 O. C. D., 305 (12 O. C. C. (n. s.) 279) is similar in principle. In that case it was claimed, as stated in page 306:

"It is said that there are two substantial reasons why this issue should be enjoined; first * * * and also that there is no authority given by law for the issuance of bonds to construct anything but a completed bridge."

The court held on page 307:

"We are disposed * * * to hold that the council * * * may authorize contracts to be entered into and provide the means for their fulfillment, for the completion of parts of such structures as the statute says they may provide means to pay for, by the issue of bonds or otherwise. We think that this contention that the council was powerless to issue bonds for the construction of a bridge without making provision for the construction of a draw or other method of completely spanning the stream, should not be sustained, and we adhere to the decision made in this respect upon the other trial between the same parties."

The Ohio circuit court reports do not disclose the reporting of the other trial between the same parties. In this case it was claimed that the amount of the bond issue (up to the bond limit) was so manifestly insufficient to complete the bridge that it fairly raised the question of the power of council to issue bonds for an incompleted part of a specifically authorized improvement, viz., the construction of a bridge. The foot note, page 305, indicates that a petition in error was dismissed by the supreme court in Platt vs. Toledo, 54 Bull., 106. In this case (page 306), referring to the former circuit court's holding on this branch of the plaintiff's case, the court say:

"In that case, the opinion in which was announced by Judge Kinkade, it was said, in substance, that the court saw no reason to hold that the contention of the plaintiff in that regard was correct."

With clear authority granted to acquire and issue bonds for a water works, no reason is apparent to this department at this time why the power to acquire and issue bonds for the whole consideration for such water works does not include and carry with it the power to issue bonds for such part thereof as council deems necessary for the attainment of such purpose, and consistent with this conclusion, supported by the Toledo case, this department is of the opinion, in the absence of judicial decision to the contrary, that the answer to your second query should be in the affirmative.

Because of the intimate relation of your third question to question one, it is considered that the discussion and conclusion reached in the latter question settles the third question and necessarily results in an affirmative answer thereto.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BANKS AND BANKING—WHO HAS AUTHORITY TO DETERMINE CORPORATE NAMES OF BANKING INSTITUTIONS WHERE THERE IS SIMILARITY OF SAME—SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS MAY NOT REVOKE HIS CERTIFICATE OF APPROVAL OF NAME AFTER ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION HAVE BEEN RECORDED BY SECRETARY OF STATE.

1. By virtue of the provisions of section 710-44 G. C., 108 O. L. 91, the duty of determining whether or not an objectionable name has been selected by an institution desiring to be incorporated to do a banking business, devolves solely upon the superintendent of banks (subject to the right of appeal to a board composed of the governor, the superintendent of banks and the attorney-general), although the secretary of state may with entire propriety call the superintendent's attention to what his records disclose as to the appropriation of such name or similar names by other institutions.

2. The superintendent of banks, having certified his approval of a name selected by such institution, may not revoke his certificate after its articles of incorporation have been recorded by the secretary of state, upon the ground that he has subsequently reached a different conclusion as to the propriety of such use of the name adopted (cases in which such certificate was obtained by fraud, misrepresentation or deception or was issued under a mistake of fact not considered).

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

HON. PHILIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have addressed to me for consideration the following communication:

> "Will you advise this department whether the statutory discretionary authority as to the similarity of the corporate names of banking corporations and banking institutions seeking to be incorporated is lodged—(first) in the superintendent of banks exclusively, by virtue of section 710-44, General Code; (second) jointly in the superintendent of banks and the secretary of state of Ohio, by virtue of sections 710-44 and 8628, General Code, of Ohio; (third) if lodged in the superintendent of banks exclusively, at what stage in the proceedings for the incorporation of a bank, etc., under section 710, General Code, does the right to exercise such discretion cease to exist?"

Section 710-41 G. C., a part of the Graham banking act, effective July 11, 1919, sets forth general provisions relating to the organization of banking corporations. They need not be quoted here.

Section 710-42 G. C. contains this language:

> "* * * The secretary of state shall forthwith transmit to the superintendent of banks a copy of such articles of incorporation and shall not record the same until duly authorized so to do by the superintendent of banks as hereinafter provided."

Section 710-44 G. C. is as follows:

> "Upon receipt of a copy of the articles of incorporation of such proposed bank, the superintendent of banks shall at once examine into all the facts connected with the formation of such proposed corporation including its location and proposed stockholders and if it appears that such corporation, if formed, will be lawfully entitled to commence the business of banking, the superintendent of banks shall so certify to the secretary of state, who shall thereupon record such articles of incorporation. But the superintendent of banks may refuse to so certify to the secretary of state, if upon such examination and investigation he has reason to believe that the proposed corporation is to be formed for any other than legitimate banking business, or that the character and general fitness of the persons proposed as stockholders in such corporation, are not such as to command the confidence of the community in which such bank is proposed to be located or that the public convenience and advantage will not be promoted by its establishment, or that the name of the proposed corporation is likely to mislead the public as to its character or purpose; or if the proposed name is the same as one already adopted, or appropriated by an existing bank in this state, or so similar thereto as to be likely to mislead the public, unless the place of business of such proposed corporation is to be located in a county other than the one in which the corporation bearing such similar name is then doing business and the corporation so adopting such name adds thereto the words 'of .....' (Indicating thereby the name of the city, village or township in which its place of business is situated.)"

Section 710-45 G. C. provides that if the superintendent of banks withholds such certificate, an appeal may be taken to a board composed of the governor, the superintendent of banks and the Attorney-General, whose decision in the matter shall be final.

The language of section 710-46 G. C. is:

"Upon receipt of such certificate from the superintendent of banks the secretary of state shall record said articles of incorporation; one copy thereof, duly certified by the secretary of state shall thereupon be furnished to the incorporators of such corporation, and one copy to the superintendent of banks, to be by him filed in his office. All certificates thereafter filed in the office of the secretary of state relating to such corporation shall be recorded, and a certified copy thereof forthwith furnished to the superintendent of banks and filed in his office."

Section 710-52 G. C. provides that banking corporations shall be created, organized, governed and conducted and their directors chosen in all respects in the same manner as provided by law for corporations organized under the general corporation laws of this state, in so far as the same shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of the banking act.

After the articles of incorporation of the proposed banking corporation have been subscribed and acknowledged, they are to be filed in the office of the secretary of state and a copy thereof transmitted forthwith to the superintendent of banks. Section 710-42 G. C.

The superintendent of banks is to determine whether or not the proposed corporation "is lawfully entitled to commence the business of banking" and if it appears to him that it is, he must so certify to the secretary of state. He may refuse to make such certificate if the name of the proposed corporation is likely to mislead the public as to its character or purpose, or so simulates one already adopted by another bank as to be deceptive. If he does certify that the institution may commence business, "the secretary of state shall record said articles of incorporation." Section 710-46 G. C.

Under the provisions of section 8628 G. C., relating to the organization and powers of corporations generally, it is provided that:

"Section 8628. The secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes, nor if such name is that of an existing corporation, or so similar thereto as to be likely to mislead the public, unless the written consent of the existing corporation, signed by its president and secretary, be filed with such articles."

I am of the opinion that the duty of determining whether or not an objectionable name has been selected by a banking corporation devolves upon the superintendent of banks alone. Section 8628 is, as I have said, a general section, while those quoted from the banking act relate to a particular class of corporations and are in that sense special in their nature. Then they are of more recent enactment and as to the organization of banks supersede section 8628, if not consistent with it.

Section 710-44 G. C. expressly makes it the duty of the superintendent to refuse to certify if the name selected is likely to mislead the public or is unduly similar to that adopted or appropriated by an existing bank. Clearly he must decide whether or not such objections exist and it would seem therefore that the secretary of state could not also determine such controversies because there might be a disagreement between the two officers. Then the duty of the secretary of state to record the articles, when approved by the superintendent of banks, seems to be mandatory under section 710-46 G. C. He is not given discretion to refuse because he may disagree with the superintendent of banks. But it would be entirely proper for the secretary of state, when transmitting the articles of incorporation to the superintendent of banks, to call attention to the use or appropriation of similar names by other corporations, and for the superintendent of banks to have the records of the secretary of state examined before issuing his certificate.

I therefore conclude that the duty of determining whether or not there is an objectionable similarity between a name proposed and one already adopted or appropriated by another institution devolves solely upon the superintendent of banks (subject to the right of appeal), though the secretary of state may with entire propriety call attention to what his records disclose as to such names.

If the superintendent finds that the name proposed is improper, when should he signify his disapproval of it? As noted above, if he is satisfied that the institution should be permitted to begin business, he shall so certify to the secretary of state and the articles of incorporation are thereupon to be recorded. Clearly the law contemplates that the superintendent of banks should reach his conclusion before the articles of incorporation become a part of the public records.

I am not prepared to say that if fraud or deception were practiced upon the superintendent in securing his certificate or some excusable mistake had been made, the certificate and the recording of the articles could not be questioned. But it is my view that under ordinary circumstances the superintendent of banks would not have the right to revoke or recall a certificate after the articles had been recorded. The certificate of the superintendent of banks, approving the name selected, would not prevent another institution, whose name had been unfairly and improperly appropriated, from preventing the use of it by injunction or from resorting to remedies generally available in unfair trade or competition cases. The following expression of the court in Shoe Co. vs. Shoe Co., 9 O. D. (N. P.) 579 and 582, considering section 8628 G. C., is pertinent:

"But the Ohio statute gives the secretary of state no power to hear testimony or summon witnesses and makes no provision for notice to parties interested or the public generally that the secretary of state has under consideration the question of identity or similarity of certain corporate names. Under such circumstances it is not to be seriously considered that it was the intention of the legislature to make the finding of the secretary of state so conclusive that the courts cannot review it when a case is properly presented which requires such a review."

I am therefore of the opinion that the superintendent of banks, having certified his approval of a name selected by such institution, may not revoke his certificate after its articles of incorporation have been recorded by the secretary of state, merely because he afterward reaches a different conclusion as to the legality of the use of such name by the institution.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, ABSTRACT OF TITLE OF PREMISES LOCATED IN MADISON COUNTY NOW STANDING IN THE NAME OF IVA F. DALBEY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1919.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent communication submitting for my examination an abstract of title of premises located in Madison county, the purchase of which is under contemplation by the state, the title now standing in the name of Iva F. Dalbey.

The premises in question are described as follows:

"Beginning at a stone northeast corner of William Cryder's land, formerly Warner land; thence with the line of said land S. 3° 45″ W. 15.55 chains (Chain four poles) to a stone southeast corner of said Cryder in the center of the London and South Charleston pike; thence with the center of said pike N. 68° 30″ E. 3.25 chains to an iron rod corner of the Knowles land (formerly Gray land); thence with three consecutive lines of said land N. 3° 45″ E. 31.80 chains to a stone; thence N. 86° 15″ W. 3.07 chains to a wild cherry tree; thence N. 2° E. (original call north) 26.28 chains to a stone corner of said Knowles in the line of John Thompson and in the original line of Peter Helphenstein's Survey Number 4513; thence with said line and line of Thompson S. 83° W. 22.40 chains to a stone in said line and corner of said Thompson; thence with two lines of said Thompson S. 2° 15″ W. 9.50 chains to a stone; thence S. 83° W. 5.20 chains to a stone northeast corner of Harry Armstrong in the line of aforesaid Thompson; thence with the east line of said Armstrong S. 1° 40″ W. 31.06 chains to a stone corner of said Armstrong; thence with the lines of said Armstrong, Kirkwood Cemetery lands and William Cryder aforesaid, passing a stone corner of Armstrong and the northwest corner of said cemetery at 5.15 chains east 27.13 chains to the place of beginning and containing one hundred and twenty acres, being part of Peter Helphensteine's Survey Number 4513, being the same premises conveyed by Harry H. Armstrong and wife to Iva Armstrong, September 24, 1898."

Upon examination of the abstract submitted, which bears date of November 1, 1919, I find that it evidences legal title to the above described premises at the date of said abstract in Iva F. Armstrong, who is shown by affidavit embodied in the abstract to be the same person as Iva F. Dalbey (by marriage with W. J. Dalbey).

The abstract is exceptionally complete and I do not find from my examination thereof evidence of defect or infirmity of title worthy of note, nor are liens or clouds against the title disclosed in the abstract.

It is shown that there are no unsatisfied mortgages or assessment liens appearing upon the records of the county against the premises and that all taxes due have been paid, including the June installment for the present year. Of course, the taxes for the year 1919, although assessed in the name of the present owner, have become a lien upon the premises and therefore should be adjusted as against the purchase price.

Accordingly, you are advised that the title as disclosed by the abstract is approved.

Very respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, LEASE, MIAMI AND ERIE CANAL AT CARTHAGE, HAMILTON COUNTY, OHIO, TO THE CHATFIELD MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of lease in triplicate form covering use of water from the Miami & Erie Canal, at Carthage, Hamilton county, Ohio, by the Chatfield Manufacturing Company.

I note that the rent stipulated is $864.00 per year.

I have examined the lease in question, find it correct in form and legal, and I am therefore returning it with my approval endorsed thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF RESOLUTIONS FOR SALE TO UNITED STATES OF AMERICA OF CERTAIN ABANDONED CANAL LANDS AT CAMP SHERMAN, CHILLICOTHE, OHIO, APPRAISED AT $500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of November 24th, transmitting in duplicate, copies of resolution providing for the sale to the United States of America of certain abandoned canal lands now occupied by the government as a military camp known as Camp Sherman in the suburbs of Chillicothe, Ohio.

I note that you have found that the land covered by the resolution is not required for the use, maintenance or operation of any of the canals of the state, and that you have appraised the same at $500.00.

I have examined the resolution and found it correct in form and legal, and I am therefore returning same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

INHERITANCE TAX—CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 5348-2 G. C.—PROHIBITION AGAINST TRANSFER ON BOOKS OF COMPANY OR ISSUANCE OF NEW CERTIFICATE FOR SHARES OF STOCK PASSING FROM A DECEDENT WITHOUT CONSENT OF TAX COMMISSION—EXCEPTION OF CORPORATION—WHEN TRANSFER ENDORSED IN BLANK—PRESENTED AFTER DEATH OF SUCH OWNER.

Subject to the qualification that the corporation in question must have exercised due care so that if there were anything about the circumstances of the case to put it on its inquiry in relation to the transfer, it would be at fault did it not make such inquiry, a corporation transferring on its books, and without knowledge of the facts, a share of stock the certificate for which, indorsed in blank by the owner of record, is presented to it for transfer after the dea h of such owner of record, is not liable for any inheritance tax which might become due in respect of such share, if it should subsequently develop that the share was transferred without consideration, in contemplation of the death of the donor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

HON. ROBERT E. MARSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date requesting opinion of this office upon the following question:

> "Where an Ohio corporation receives for transfer a certificate of stock from A, a resident of another county in Ohio, which certificate stands on its books in the name of B, also a resident of another county, and is endorsed in blank by B, and the corporation has no knowledge of any facts or circumstances other than the above; if it should subsequently appear that the transfer from B to A was made without consideration and in contemplation of the former's death, which actually occurred before the presentation of the certificate for transfer, would the corporation be liable for the taxes, under section 5348-2 G. C., because it, in ignorance of any of these facts, and acting in good faith, transferred the stock without notifying the tax commission of Ohio or the county auditor?"

I enclose herewith copy of opinion (No. 684) addressed to Hon. Frank F. McGuire, inspector of building and loan associations, relative to the interpretation of section 5348-2 G. C. In this opinion the question suggested by you is raised but not decided. The ground work of the discussion necessary to answer the question which you submit is, however, found in that opinion, if it be established that the first sentence of the section is to be interpreted like the second sentence thereof is interpreted in the opinion to Mr. McGuire. That is to say, the first sentence of section 5348-2 G. C. is in terms a prohibition against the transfer on the books of the company or the issuance of new certificates for shares of stock passing from a decedent, without the consent of the tax commission.

The second sentence is in terms a like prohibition against the transfer of assets other than the stock of the company making the transfer. It is held in the opinion referred to that the prohibition in the latter case has not the effect of making such transfer absolutely illegal, but that the sanction for the enforcement of the prohibition is found in the sentence which provides that:

> "Failure to comply with the provisions of this section shall render such safe deposit company, trust company, corporation, bank or other institution, person or persons, liable for the amount of the taxes and interest due under this subdivision of this chapter on the succession to such securities, deposits, assets or property. Such liability may be enforced by action brought by the county treasurer in the name of the state in any court of competent jurisdiction."

On the question thus arising, it is the opinion of this department that the provision last quoted is to be read in connection with the first sentence of this section as well as in connection with the second sentence thereof; so that the only consequence of a violation of the first sentence is liability for the taxes to be recovered in a separate action, the validity of the transfer itself being unimpeached thereby.

This question is not entirely free from doubt. Because of the failure of the two sentences last above quoted to mention "shares of stock" by name, an argument might be built up to the effect that these provisions relate only to the enforcement of the prohibition contained in the second sentence. However, according to the terms of the uniform stock transfer law found in our General Code, sections 8673-1 to 8673-22, inc., the transfer described in sections 5348-2 G. C. would be perfectly legal.

It is well established law that statutes in pari materia, whatever their order of enactment, will be construed together and full effect given to each, rather than that one of them will be interpreted as a limitation upon or derogation of the other.

Having regard to the manifest purpose of section 5348-2 G. C., as more fully discussed in the other opinion referred to, a copy of which is herewith enclosed, it is most reasonable to interpret that section not as in derogation of the substantive rights of the immediate parties to the transfer of stock, and therefore pro tanto amendatory of the stock transfer act, but merely as a means of securing payment of the inheritance tax. This result can be perfectly achieved by giving to the sentences which have been quoted from section 5348-2 G. C. the interpretation to which they are easily susceptible (inasmuch as they refer to "this section" as an entirety), and holding, as has been previously held in this opinion, that the only effect of making a transfer of shares or issuing a new certificate, in violation of the first sentence of the section, is to render the offending corporation liable for the taxes due on account of the succession to the shares (not, as pointed out in the other opinion, the entire taxes due on account of the successions arising out of the estate of the decedent, nor even the entire tax on account of such successions to the particular successor).

Your letter seems to assume the correctness of all that has been heretofore set forth and it has been included in this opinion merely to complete the discussion of all questions which are even incidentally involved. That is to say, you assume that the only effect of non-compliance with section 5348-2 G. C., on the part of a corporation whose stock has been transferred in apparent violation thereof, would be to subject the corporation to liability for the taxes.

You then inquire whether such liability exists under circumstances like those stated by you, which clearly show good faith and want of knowledge of the facts, which give rise to original liability for the tax, on the part of the transferring corporation. This was the question suggested but not decided in the other opinion. Coming now to the decision of that question, it is the opinion of this department that in such case liability would not exist; or, to put it perhaps more technically, a suit to enforce the payment of the tax against the corporation could be successfully defended by showing the facts upon which good faith and want of knowledge could be predicated.

Although the statutes of many states contain provisions essentially similar to those of section 5348-2 G. C., no decision interpreting such provisions has been found. The constitutionality of such statutes is sustained in National Safe Deposit Co. vs. Stead, 232 U. S. 58.

It would seem that if in practice any harsh or arbitrary construction had been put upon provisions like these, some question would ere now have arisen, and authority would be available. I take it, therefore, that either there has been small necessity for resort to the secondary liability of the transferring corporation or the safe deposit company, as the case may be, or else that such liability has been enforced only in case of flagrant violation of the law.

Dealing, therefore, with a case of first impression, this opinion will be limited to the precise facts stated by you. It is clear that in the case you put, the actual transfer of the stock certificate, entitling the transferee to have the shares transferred on the books of the company or to have new certificates issued to him therefor, took place inter vivos. The case is not one where the corporation is asked to transfer on its books or issue a new certificate of stock for shares belonging to the estate of a deceased person and devolving upon some one else only by virtue of death. In such a case at common law and under the stock transfer act as well, the corporation would be liable to the estate of the decedent if it should transfer the shares or issue new certificates for them, without administration. That being the case, it could hardly be contended that any hardship is involved in imposing upon the corporation the duty to see to it that due administration is had before transferring the shares on its books, and then not transferring to the administrator without the consent of the tax commission; for the duty imposed by section 5348 G. C. is but a slight enlargement of the duty imposed by the general law.

However, in the case you submit the transfer is one that does not involve the necessity for administration, because, as previously stated. it actually took place inter vivos and becomes taxable only if and because made in contemplation of death. Whether or not a succession occurs through a transfer in contemplation of death and therefore becomes taxable under paragraph 3 of section 5332 G. C., is always a question of fact. Probably the burden is on the state or its representative to show the facts which subject the succession to taxation. It is conceivable that the corporation mignt be a party to the transaction and thus have full knowledge of the facts, in which event a question would arise as to whether it would make itself liable by transferring the shares or issuing new shares without the consent of the tax commission. But that is not the case which you state.

Where the corporation is in ignorance of the facts, as it may well be, and the shares presented to it for transfer bear the indorsement of the donor, showing conclusively that the transfer took place inter vivos, it is the opinion of this department that suit to enforce the liability provided for in section 5348-2 G. C., on the theory that the corporation had violated the first sentence thereof, could be successfully defended against. The principle which is believed to be applicable to this case is that suggested in the other opinion, to which reference has been made. The contingent liability of the corporation for the tax is not original. Personal liability is imposed by section 5336 G. C. upon the executors or trustees and upon the successors. Even here there is an original and a secondary liability, the successors being primarily or ultimately liable, and the executor or personal representative being secondarily liable.

The liability of the corporation then is, as suggested in the other opinion, in the nature of a penalty for its failure to comply with the law. It is to be enforced, therefore, subject to principles which apply to the enforcement of other penalties; and the statute providing for it is to be interpreted like other statutes of a similar nature are interpreted.

It is, of course, familiar law that penal statutes are to be strictly construed. This rule is subject to two qualifications: First, that the manifest object of the statute is not to be defeated by strict construction; and second, that there must be some doubt as to the meaning of the statute before there is anything whatever to construe (Slingluff vs. Weaver, 66 O. S. 621). However, it must be also understood that the character of a statute as penal or remedial is not determined solely by reference to its criminal or civil character. That is to say, penal statutes include "all statute which command or prohibit certain acts and establish penalties for their violation, (36 Cyc. 1181) even though the penalty when recovered does not inure to the benefi of the public. On the contrary,

> "laws enacted for the prevention of fraud, for the suppression of a public wrong, or to effect a public good are not, in a strict sense, penal acts, although they may inflict a penalty for their violation."

In this case before proceeding further with the discussion it must be determined whether an act which does impose a penalty in the nature of a punishment for a wrong to the public, as this statute does, comes within the class of penal statutes or is removed therefrom by consideration of the fact that its main purpose is to secure the collection of the public revenue. Here we must remember that revenue laws are themselves not remedial in character—not founded upon any permanent public policy but, on the contrary, are subject in their entirety to the rule of strict construction.

The rule is stated in the text cited as follows:

> "The doctrine of the strict construction of revenue statutes * * * should be applied with due regard to the intention of the legislature as expressed in the statute, and with a view to promoting the object of the statute; and especially those provisions of the statute which are intended to prevent fraud should receive a liberal construction."

These principles are believed to be correct and, as stated, the first task in the consideration of the question which you submit is to apply them to the statute under consideration. Is it a statute to prevent fraud? Undoubtedly it is to some extent. But its scope goes considerably beyond these bounds, and it may with accuracy, I think, be described as a statute the purpose of which is to secure the collection of the public revenue. There would be no "fraud" involved on the part of a corporation in transferring a share of stock on its books in accordance with a duly executed indorsement, nor even in transferring such a share to an executor or administrator of a deceased stockholder. These acts are not fraudulent in themselves; they are perfectly innocent even as reflecting on the assessment and collection of the inheritance tax. To be sure, in the case of non-residents especially, such transfer might prove to be a step in a process undertaken with intent to defraud the state of its revenues and actually succeed in so doing. But this would be the only fraudulent aspect of even such a transaction. The transfer itself, as has been hereinbefore pointed out, is essentially an innocent act and indeed the mere exercise of a legal right.

Consideration being given, then, to the fact that the liability imposed upon the corporation or financial institution by section 5348-2 is a tertiary liability aimed to secure the state, rather than a primary liability for the taxes in the first instance, the conclusion is reaffirmed that the statute, if open to any construction at all, is subject to strict construction unless that construction will defeat its manifest object.

This leaves the two further questions previously suggested, which will be taken up in their order.

First: Is the statute susceptible to any "interpretation" at all? It provides in that part of it which is involved in your inquiry that

> "No corporation organized or existing under the laws of this state, shall transfer on its books or issue a new certificate for any share or shares of its capital stock belonging to or standing in the name of a decedent or in trust for a decedent, or belonging to or standing in the joint names of a decedent and one or more persons, without," etc.

The crux of the question which is here encountered is presented by the word "decedent." What are the implications of this word? Does it connote an objective fact, or a state of mind with respect to such fact? In other words, does this language clearly import a prohibition directed against the corporation from acting in case the facts are thus and so, or only against acting in case it knows or by the exercise of due care should know that they are so? Putting it in still another way: Does the corporation act at its peril?

On careful consideration it appears that this question cannot be satisfactorily considered or answered without considering also the next question above suggested, viz.: as to the purpose for which the requirement was made by the legislature. Without citing cases, which are in great confusion on the subject, the general trend of the authorities may be said to be to the effect that if the legislative purpose would be thwarted in the preponderant number of probable cases by construing a statute like the one under consideration so as to condition the prohibited act upon knowledge or intent, such a construction will be rejected and the statute will be interpreted so as to place the burden of ascertaining the objective facts upon the persons to whom it applies.

Instances of the application of this principle are afforded by cases under the food and drug laws. The following is quoted from the opinion of Shauck, J., in State vs. Kelly, 54 O. S. 166-178, 179:

> "The act is not a provision for the punishment of those who sell adulterated food or drugs, because of any supposed turpitude prompting such sales or indicated by them. * * * It is 'an act to provide against the adulteration of food and drugs.' It is a plan devised by the general assembly to protect the public against the hurtful consequences of the sales of adulterated food and drugs, those consequences being in no degree increased by the vendor's knowledge, or diminished by his ignorance, of the adulteration of the articles which he offers for sale. * * * If this statute had imposed upon the state the burden of proving the purpose of the vendor in selling an article of food or his knowledge of its adulteration, it would thereby have defeated its declared purpose. * * *"

The statute involved in that case provided that > "No person shall within this state * * * offer for sale or sell any drug or article of food which is adulterated."

It will be seen that the question is quite similar to the one involved in your inquiry, the trend of the court's reasoning is further illustrated by Judge Shauck's quotation from the case of Commonwealth vs. Murphy, 42 N. E. 574, as follows:

> "Considering the nature of the offense, the purpose to be accomplished, the practical methods available for the enforcement of the law, and such other matters as throw light upon the meaning of the language, the question in interpreting a criminal statute is whether the intention of the legislature was to make knowledge of the facts an essential element of the offense, or to put upon everyone the burden of finding out whether his contemplated act is prohibited, and of refraining from it if it is."

The concluding paragraph of Judge Shauck's opinion is as follows:

> "In the enactment of this statute it was the evident purpose of the general assembly to protect the public against the harmful consequences of the sales of adulterated food and drugs, and, to the end that its purpose might not be defeated, to require the seller at his peril to know that the article which he offers for sale is not adulterated, or to demand of those from whom he purchases indemnity against the penalties that may be imposed upon him because of their concealment of the adulteration of the articles."

On the other hand, laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor under the constitutional authority then existing to "provide against the evils resulting from the traffic in intoxicating liquors" and, of course, referable to such a legislative motive were otherwise construed. The earlier cases adopted the rule that in spite of the absence of the word "knowingly" or its equivalent in statutes of this character, such statutes would be construed as if such word had been actually employed so that the prosecution would have to allege and prove guilty knowledge (Miller and Gibson vs. State, 3 O. S. 475), though, of course, knowledge might be inferred from circumstances.

Later on, however, this rule was modified so as to dispense with the necessity of allegation and proof of guilty knowledge on the part of the prosecution, but to permit the defendant to show want of knowledge to rebut the prima facie case established by the prosecution on proof of the objective facts.

Crabtree vs. State, 30 O. S. 382;
Farrell vs. State, 32 O. S. 456.

I cannot find that this last line of cases has been overruled or modified in any reported case, though it is my impression that the trend of decision in this class of cases is toward the Kelly case. Be that as it may however, the mere statement of these various rules shows that statutes like the one under consideration in this opinion are to be regarded as susceptible to interpretation. That is to say, such statutes are sufficiently doubtful in meaning to call into play the principles which determined the various decisions of the courts in the cases mentioned.

It is concluded therefore that the connotation of the word "decedent" in section 5348-2 is sufficiently uncertain to justify the further inquiry into the purpose and intent of the legislature with a view to its interpretation. At this point it may be well to repeat the rule, which is that where such uncertainty appears, and the statute is penal, as this one is, it will be construed favorably to the person or corporation who would be subject to the penalty unless to do so would defeat the declared or otherwise manifest purpose of the law.

Now the purpose of section 5348-2 has already been roughly described. It is to secure the collection of revenue. To this end a duty is cast upon the corporation to act so as to protect the interests of the state. The thing which would happen should the desired action not be taken, for good reason or otherwise, would be the loss of revenue which another person is primarily liable to pay to the state. This is no such consequence as would attend the promiscuous sale of adulterated food. It is not even such a consequence as would attend the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor or the sale of such liquor to persons in the habit of becoming intoxicated. It is not even the kind of a consequence that would ensue from the innocent remarriage of a person having a husband or wife living but supposed to be dead, as in Commonwealth vs. Murphy, supra. In other words, the collection of the revenue is not an end in behalf of which a legislative intent to provide for action at peril can be at least as plausibly inferred as would be the prevention of the class of evils suggested by the cases encountered. That this last statement is true is proved, it is believed, by the strict construction given to revenue acts themselves, especially where such acts constitute special impositions or excises as distinguished from general property taxes levied under constitutional provisions, like article XII, section 2 in its present form. That is to say, where the revenue act as a whole is susceptible to a strict construction in favor of the tax payer, it would be going too far to hold that an ancillary provision like section 5348-2 should be given liberal interpretation in favor of the state and against the corporation, which is not even primarily liable for the taxes.

But there is another point of view from which questions of statutory construction like that under consideration have been approached. This point of view is suggested by the celebrated criminal case of Regina vs. Prince, L. R. 2, C. C. R. 154. In that case, the facts of which need not be stated, the court took cognizance of the quality of the act actually committed by the defendant as reflecting upon the probable intent of the legislature to make it an act at peril. The act was highly immoral in itself, and if certain facts existed was declared to be criminal. The court applied the statute in such manner as under these circumstances to place upon the defendant the burden of discovering whether or not such additional circumstances existed.

This test is one which could be satisfactorily applied, for example, to the food and drug cases, or even to the liquor cases, though it would produce a result opposite to that actually arrived at by the supreme court of this state in the latter class of cases. Selling food is in itself not an immoral act, of course, but one directly affecting the health of the people. The business of selling intoxicating liquors is in itself one attended by more or less public evil. In both cases the addition of certain circumstances—adulteration in the one, and, for example, the fact that the purchaser of the liquor is in the habit of getting intoxicated in the other—make the acts penal. Under such circumstances it is reasonable to assume that the legislature intended to prohibit such acts at all events, and thereby to place upon the actor the burden of satisfying himself that the facts introducing the criminal element are not present.

But transferring stock properly presented for transfer on the books of the corporation is not an act which in itself is attended by any possible deleterious consequence to the public.

Moreover, I think we must take cognizance of a fact already alluded to, namely, that in the vast majority of cases which would arise under section 5348-2 G. C. the corporation would have knowledge apparent on the face of the papers presented to it or the records in its possession that a death had occurred, and indeed that the transfer requested was made necessary by that death. The case which you submit is one which would occur very infrequently, to say the least, in the natural course of events. Shall we assume that the legislature intended to provide against such cases, or that the policy of the legislature is such as to dictate such an interpretation of the statute? It seems to me unreasonable so to hold. The legislature did indeed fail to use the word "knowingly" and hence in an action to enforce the penalty a prima facie case would be made out by allegation and proof without a showing of facts from which knowledge would be inferred. But when the legislature acted it doubtless was taking cognizance of the normal or typical case—the one which would occur perhaps ninety-nine times out of a hundred, in which a certificate of stock would be presented for transfer with the indorsement of an executor or administrator thereon, or in which an executor or administrator would request a transfer to the estate of shares standing in the name of a deceased person. This being true, and the kind of transfer described by you being an inherently innocent act—not subversive of any public policy—it seems to follow that it should not be regarded as within the contemplation of the statute.

In other words, though in an action against a corporation by the county treasurer, under favor of section 5348-2 G. C., a prima facie case might be stated by the treasurer by merely showing that a taxable succession had occurred and that the corporation had failed to get the consent of the tax commission to the transfer of the shares, yet evidence would be admissible on behalf of the corporation to show its want of knowledge of the facts making the succession taxable, the exercise of due care on its part and such other facts as might show good faith.

Subject, therefore, to the qualification that the corporation in question must have exercised due care so that if there were anything about the circumstances of the case to put it on its inquiry in relation to the transfer, it would be at fault did it not make such inquiry, it is the opinion of this department that a corporation transferring on its books, and without knowledge of the facts, a share of stock the certificate for which indorsed in blank by the owner of record, is presented to it for transfer after the death of such owner of record, is not liable for any inheritance tax which might become due in respect of such share, if it should subsequently develop that the share was transferred without consideration, in contemplation of the death of the donor.

The importance of the qualification expressed in the foregoing paragraph and elsewhere in this opinion must not be overlooked. In the case you put, for example, a very slight alteration of the facts as stated would be sufficient to put the corporation upon its inquiry. For example, if the corporation knew that B, the deceased person, was dead when the certificate bearing his endorsement was presented to it for transfer, this of itself would be enough, in the opinion of this department, to make it incumbent upon the corporation to make inquiry as to whether or not the delivery and endorsement of the share was a commercial transaction as distinguished from a gift. In short, knowledge of the fact of death would open up to the corporation an inquiry which it would then be its duty to make. The above answer is therefore confined to the circumstances as actually stated by you, from which statement it does not appear that the corporation when it transferred the stock on its books even knew that B was dead.

In so holding, however, I do not mean to intimate that the statute does not apply at all to such a state of affairs. The section has been heretofore described for purpose of discussion as one designed to secure the collection of the state's revenue. This is to be done, as the section shows on its face, by securing the consent of the tax commission before the transfer is made. The latter part of the section, which is of similar purport, affords two methods of securing the state's revenue, in that not only is consent required, but enough of the assets of the decedent to pay the tax is to be retained unless the consent is given.

What is the purpose in getting the consent of the commission? For we must remember that when the consent is obtained the duty of the corporation is discharged and all liability under it is avoided. It seems clear that the answer to this question is that the purpose in requiring the commission's consent to be secured is to give information to the taxing authorities as to the existence of a taxable succession and an opportunity to them to act so as to protect the state's interests.

This being true, it seems to me that the spirit of the section at least requires the corporation, which has innocently made a transfer of its stock under the very exceptional circumstances mentioned by you, to notify the tax commission after the transfer is made if and when the true facts come to its attention. In this way a substantial compliance with the section would be effected. As to whether or not failure so to notify the commission would give rise to liability under the latter part of the section, no direct opinion is, however, expressed as none is required by the statement of facts which you make.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

3. Judges of the courts of appeals are entitled to be reimbursed for expenses actually incurred during the official year up to $600, irrespective of the time during the year the expenses were incurred.

4. Whether or not section 20 of article 11 of the state constitution applies to judges of the courts of appeals, query.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date calling attention to the recent amendment of section 2253 G. C. (108 O. L. 374; H. B. No. 20), and inquiring whether or not the $300 increase in the allowance to judges of the courts of appeals for expenses incurred in holding court in counties in which they do not reside inures to the benefit of the judges in office at the time the amendatory law became effective, was duly received.

The statute as amended reads as follows:

> "In addition to the annual salary and expenses provided for in sections 1529, 2251, 2252-1, each judge of the court of common pleas and of the court of appeals, shall receive his actual and necessary expenses, not exceeding three hundred dollars in any one year for a judge of the court of common pleas and not exceeding six hundred dollars in any one year for a judge of the court of appeals, incurred while holding court in a county in which he does not reside, to be paid from the state treasury upon the warrant of the auditor of state, issued to such judge; each judge of the court of common pleas who is assigned by the chief justice by virtue of section 1469, to aid in disposing of business of some county other than that in which he resides, shall receive ten dollars per day for each day of such assignment, and his actual and necessary expenses incurred in holding court under such assignment, to be paid from the treasury of the county to which he is so assigned upon the warrant of the auditor of such county, and the amount allowed herein for actual and necessary expenses shall not exceed three hundred dollars in any one year for a judge of the court of common pleas nor six hundred dollars for a judge of the court of appeals."

Original section 2253 applied exclusively to the judges of the courts of common pleas, and the maximum amount for expenses was limited to $150.00. The first amendment of that section was made by the act of April 29, 1913 (103 O. L. 405-419). The amendment brought the judges of the courts of appeals within its provisions and fixed the maximum allowance to both classes of judges at $300.00 per year. The section was again amended by the act of February 16, 1914 (104 O. L. 251), but in a respect not material to the present inquiry. The third and last amendment was made by the act of April 17, 1919 (108 O. L. 374; H. B. No. 20), and increased the amount of the allowance to judges of the courts of appeals to $600.00 a year.

Under the authority of previous opinions of former attorneys-general hereinafter referred to, the increased allowance for expenses inures to the benefit of the judges of the courts of appeals in office at the time the amendatory act became effective, and such judges are entitled to be reimbursed for expenses actually expended during the present official year of the term which began on February 9, 1919 (section 1514 G. C.), but not to exceed the maximum amount of $600.00 for the year.

In 1914 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 241, it was held that the allowance to the judges of the courts of appeals made by the act of April 29, 1913, was not a change in salary or compensation within the inhibition of section 20 of article II of the state constitution applicable to officers generally; and in 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 206, the holding was that the increase in the allowance made to the judges of the courts of common pleas by the same act was not violative of section 14 of article IV prohibiting an increase in the compensation of judges of the courts of common pleas, and that consequently judges in office at the time the amendatory act became effective were entitled to the benefit of the increased allowance. Whether or not section 20 of article II of the state constitution applies to judges of the courts of appeals, and prohibits the general assembly from increasing their salary or compensation during their terms of office, is a debatable question in view of section 14 of article IV, and the recent decision of the supreme court in Fulton vs. Smith, 99 O. S. 230, Ohio Law Reporter of September 1, 1919. See also State vs. Board of Education, 21 G. C. 785, 786, wherein it was said that section 20 of article II refers to officers created by the general assembly. Courts of appeals are created, and the term of office of the judges are fixed by section 6 of article IV of the constitution. See also 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 206, 218, to the effect that section 14 of article IV only, and not section 20 of article II, applies to judges of the courts of common pleas.

In 1914 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 71; 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 368; and in 1916 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 143, it was held that the year referred to in section 2253 G. C. was not the calendar year, nor the fiscal year, nor the year beginning when the law went into effect, but, to quote the exact language of those opinions, referred to the "year of the term of office," the "official year of the term," or the "official year."

In 1914 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, p. 71, it was held that the judges were entitled to be reimbursed for expenses actually incurred during the official year up to the maximum allowance irrespective of the time during the year the expenses were incurred, and that it is not required that the expenses be apportioned between the amount that was allowed prior to the amendment and the amount allowed by the amendment.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BONDS, PAULDING COUNTY, OHIO, FOR IMPROVEMENT OF JOINT COUNTY ROADS IN THE SUM OF $26,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

Inaustrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Paulding county, in the amount of $26,000.00, for the improvement of joint county road between Van Wert and Paulding counties—being five bonds of $4,000.00 each and two bonds of $3,000.00 each.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue, and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the reason that the county commissioners failed to publish for the required length of time before the hearing of objections to said improvement the notice required by section 6912 G. C. The hearing was held July 30, 1919; the notice was published in the Paulding County Republican on July 17th and 24th, and in the Van Wert Bulletin on July 18th and 25th. Two full weeks, or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held: (quoting from the syllabus)

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report, p. 342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C., and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

For the reason just stated I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Paulding county and advise you to decline to accept them.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BONDS, AUGLAIZE COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $148,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 25, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Auglaize county, in the amount of $148,000, for the improvement of I. C. H. No. 168—being 16 bonds of $7,500 each and 4 bonds of $7,000 each.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers of Auglaize county relative to the above bond issue, and decline to approve the validity of said bonds because the amount of the bond issue is in excess of the engineer's estimate of the cost and expense of said improvement. The estimate of the county's share of the cost and expense of improving section "B" is $67,000; the estimate of the county's share of improving section "C" is $74,000, making a total for both sections of $141,000; the bond issue is for $148,000. Section 1223 of the General Code, under authority of which these bonds are issued, authorizes the issuance of bonds only to the extent of the estimated cost and expense of said improvement.

I therefore advise you to decline to accept the bonds.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—AUTOMOBILES—"WIDTH OF TIRE SURFACE" AS USED IN SECTION 7248 G. C. CONSTRUED—JUSTICES OF PEACE ARE VESTED WITH EXAMINING JURISDICTION ONLY IN MATTER OF VIOLATION OF SECTIONS 7246 TO 7249 G. C.

1. The expression "width of tire surface" as used in section 7248 G. C. in reference to tires of rubber or other similar substance means (a) as to solid tires the width that comes in contact with the road, without any addition or allowance for expansion at point of contact; and (b) as to pneumatic tires, the perpendicular distance between planes touching the extreme edges of the tire and parallelling the plane of the wheel to which the tire is attached.

2. Justices of the peace are vested with examining jurisdiction only, and not with final jurisdiction, in the matter of violations of sections 7246 to 7249 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1919.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication asking an interpretation of section 7248 as appearing in 107 O. L. 140, and also inquiring whether a justice of the peace has final jurisdiction in the matter of violation of said section.

Said section 7248 reads as follows:

"No person, firm or corporation shall transport over the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within this state, in a vehicle propelled by either motor or muscular power, a burden, including weight of load and vehicle, greater than the following:

In vehicles having iron or steel tires three inches or less in width a load of five hundred pounds for each inch of the total width of tire surface on all wheels. When the tires on such vehicles exceed three inches in width an additional load of eight hundred pounds shall be permitted for each inch by which the total width of the tire surface on all wheels exceeds twelve inches;

In vehicles having tires of rubber or other similar substance a load of eight hundred pounds for each inch of the total width of tire surface on all wheels. The provisions of this section shall not apply to iron or steel tire horse drawn vehicles when in use upon the streets or thoroughfares of cities or upon the streets and thoroughfares of villages, except such streets and thoroughfares therein as have been or may hereafter be improved by the state or county."

These provisions are to be read in connection with sections 7246 and 7247, prohibiting a load of more than twelve tons except in certain instances by special permit.

A penalty for the violation of the provisions of said sections is provided by section 13421-17 (107 O. L. 69) reading as follows:

"Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 7246 to 7249 inclusive of the General Code shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars."

In connection with your inquiry you state that:

"Thus far all trucks apprehended are equipped with solid tires of rubber and similar material and the manner and way in which we determine whether such trucks are overloaded is by measuring the 'total width of tire surface on all wheels' and by tire surface we take it that the law means that part of the tire which actually comes in contact with the road, in other words, the bearing surface or tread."

You ask in the course of your letter "What measurement shall govern if it appears that the width of the rubber tire increases upon its point of contact with the road?"

It is believed that the statute upon its face disposes of any claim that an alleged violator is entitled to the advantage, so to speak, of the expansion of a rubber tire at point of contact. It has been seen that the statute makes a distinction between vehicles having iron or steel tires and those having tires of rubber or other similar substance. To state this distinction concretely, let us take for example a four-wheeled vehicle having steel tires four inches in width on all wheels, a total tire surface of sixteen inches. For the first twelve inches, there is permissible a load of 6,000 pounds; and for the remaining four inches an additional load of 800 pounds per inch, or 3,200 pounds, thus giving, for the vehicle supposed, a total permissible load of 9,200 pounds, including weight of load and vehicle. Taking this same vehicle and supposing it to be equipped with rubber tires of the same width, the total load allowable is 12,800 pounds, 800 pounds to each inch of tire surface.

The greater load thus allowed for the rubber tired vehicle is certainly to be accounted for in part by the very fact that rubber tires will expand at point of contact; for it is readily understood that the expansion of iron or steel tires at point of contact is so minute as to be hardly susceptible of calculation. True, the principal difference between iron or steel tires and rubber tires is that less shock to the road results from the use of rubber tires; but plainly one of the factors entering into the lessening of shock is the expansion of the rubber tire at point of contact.

Hence, considering this distinction made by the legislature in favor of rubber tires, a conclusion that a further allowance is to be made on account of expansion is unjustified as going beyond the scope of what was intended by the legislature. Further, as a practical proposition, we are not at liberty to indulge the assumption that the legislature intended to cast on enforcing officials the duty on the one hand of making minute measurements of expansion, or on the other hand, of setting up in different localities shifting and arbitrary allowances for expansion.

Upon the whole, then, such difficulty as may arise in the practical application of the statute comes not from the fact of expansion, but rather in determining whether the expression "total width of tire surface on all wheels" is so rigid that it may not be applied to the measurement of both solid rubber tires and pneumatic tires. It is of course a matter of common knowledge that there is an essential difference between these two types of tires. Their appearance and construction are entirely dissimilar. Their effect upon road surface must be considered from entirely different angles; for it is plain enough that as between two loads of equal weight, a much greater shock to the road and consequent wear and tear upon it will result from the load borne upon solid tires than from that borne upon pneumatic tires of width at point of contact equal to that of the solid tires, since the pneumatic tire by reason of its inflation serves in the greater degree as a cushion in relieving the road of shock.

Mention of these differences may possibly in a narrow sense be irrelevant to a consideration of your inquiry, since you state that all trucks thus far apprehended in your county have been equipped with solid tires. However, a fair consideration of the statute must proceed upon the theory that while it does not make any distinction in terms between solid rubber tires and pneumatic tires, it was nevertheless intended to provide for both classes, since both were well known to be in common use when the statute was enacted. Therefore, the statute cannot be invoked as to one type and disregarded as to the other, but must be treated as having failed of its purpose unless it permits of a practical standard for measuring both types.

If it be conceded that the statute is broad enough to make provision for the practical measurement of both classes of tires, no difficulty is encountered in concluding that so far as concerns solid tires, your position is entirely correct and in accord with what would be the general understanding of the terms of the statute—namely, that "total width of tire surface on all wheels" means the aggregate width of that part of all tires on the vehicle which actually comes in contact with the road—in other words, the bearing surface or tread, not allowing for any expansion at point of contact. Putting this proposition in another way, if the vehicle were run over a layer of tar or some other adhesive substance, the impression left on the tire through the adherence of the substance would represent the true width of tire surface to be considered in calculating the total width. Force is lent to this conclusion by the fact that the bearing surface is readily discernible after slight usage, and the further fact that there is no inherent practical objection to accepting as within the plain intent of the statute the width as shown by simple instruments of lineal measure, just as the width of a steel tire is measured. And certainly, the conclusion is not in the least weakened by the fact that trade usage, because of the shape of the tire or the requirements of proper manufacture, may designate the standard width as somewhat in excess of that which comes in contact with the road.

Is this rule as to solid tire measurement necessarily to be applied to pneumatic tire measurement, with the result in practice that the use of pneumatic tires for truck hauling will have to be discontinued? Since the statute in question is regulatory in character, a pertinent rule for its construction is that quoted with approval by our supreme court in the case of Gas & Fuel Co. vs. City of Chillicothe, 65 O. S. 186, at page 206 of the opinion:

> "When the real design of the legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceivable, or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect, even though in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed, or although the construction be, indeed, contrary to the latter."

It should be kept in mind that while the statute fixes a maximum load for each inch of tire surface, it does not give a definition of tire surface. Therefore, we must conclude that the term "total width of tire surface" is to be given its reasonable and practicable meaning.

The word "surface" is defined as follows:

> "The exterior part of anything that has length and breadth; one of the limits that bound a solid; superficies; outside; as, the surface of the earth; the surface of a diamond; the surface of the body; a spherical surface."
> Webster's Dictionary.

> "The exterior part of anything that has length, breadth and thickness; the outside of a body; superficies; exterior."
> Standard Dictionary.

Clearly, then, the legislature did not use the word surface in a strictly literal sense, for taken in that sense "total width of tire surface" would as to a pneumatic tire represent its exposed width measured in circumference from one side to the other of the rim to which it is attached. Neither could the legislature have intended the other extreme in measurement, namely, the width of that part of a pneumatic tire actually coming in contact with the road, for in that case, for the practical reason given above, the effect would be to cause the discontinuance of the use of pneumatic tires in truck hauling. To illustrate: The width at point of contact of a so-called ten-inch solid tire is approximately eight inches, whereas with a so-called ten-inch pneumatic tire the width at point of contact is approximately three and one-half inches, depending in part on degree of inflation, with the result in the case supposed that the weight allowed the solid tire would be 6,400 pounds and the pneumatic tire but 2,800 pounds.

We are thus left to the middle ground that the intent of the legislature was that the width of pneumatic tires should be taken as measured by the only practicable method remaining after the exclusion of the two methods above mentioned, namely, by taking the distance between parallel lines produced from the extreme edges of the tire,—the word "edges" as here used being referable to the sides as distinguished from the face and back of the tire; or, stating the rule in another form, by taking the perpendicular distance between planes touching the extreme edges of the tire and parallelling the plane of the wheel to which the tire is attached.

It may be urged that inasmuch as the method just stated gives approximately the width as to pneumatic tires as understood in trade usage, the seemingly arbitrary terms of the statute would by parity of reasoning make trade usage measurement applicable to solid tires also. The answer is that the plain terms of the statute permit, without untoward practical results, the measuring of tire surface of solid tires by the simple process hereinbefore mentioned, thus making unnecessary any resort to extraneous considerations; whereas, with pneumatic tires, the only practical method of measurement is by a process of calculation which happens to accord approximately with trade usage measurement.

You have also requested an opinion as to whether justices of the peace have final jurisdiction of offenses under section 13421-17 G. C. That section, as has been seen, makes the violation of section 7248 G. C. a misdemeanor punishable by fine. As part of the act in which section 13421-17 appears, there is also found section 13421-21, reading as follows:

> "All courts of competent jurisdiction, including police judges, mayors of villages and cities, shall have jurisdiction as provided by law in all cases of violation of any of the sections contained in this act."

Clearly, there is not in this section any affirmative grant to justices of the peace of final jurisdiction, whatever may have been the intent of the legislature in that respect. The expression "including police judges, mayors of villages and cities" is an excrescence, since the final jurisdiction of these officers in misdemeanor cases had already been defined by sections 4577, 4536 and 4528, respectfully. As compared with the broad provisions of the three sections just named, limited provision is made in section 13423 G. C. for final jurisdiction in justices of the peace in certain classes of cases. However, there is not to be found in the last named section any reference to final jurisdiction in road traffic violations, nor has any provision been found elsewhere in the General Code conferring final jurisdiction in such matters upon justices of the peace. Hence, we are reverted to sections 13510 and 13511 G. C. in the matter of jurisdiction of justices of the peace as to violations of sections 7246 to 7249 G. C., and as there is no authority vested in a justice of the peace to accept a plea of guilty as to such violations because there is no way by which the complaint may be filed by the "party injured" as those words are used in section 13510, it follows that the only jurisdiction vested in a justice of the peace as to violations of said sections 7246 to 7249 is solely an examining, and not a final, jurisdiction.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY DEPOSITARY—PROPOSALS FOR COUNTY FUNDS MUST CONTAIN NAMES OF SURETIES—WHEN FIDELITY INSURANCE COMPANY MAY BE ACCEPTED AS SURETY FOR SUCH FUNDS —PROPOSAL SHOULD BE RESPONSIVE TO ADVERTISEMENT INVITING BIDS—COMBINATION TO SUPPRESS COMPETITION IN BIDDING—NO AUTHORITY FOR DEPOSIT EXCESS FUNDS OUTSIDE OF COUNTY UNLESS COUNTY COMMISSIONERS ADVERTISE FOR PROPOSALS.

1. The commissioners are without authority to accept a proposal for county funds under the county depository act (sections 2715 et seq. G. C.) which does not contain the names of the sureties or securities that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted.

2. A fidelity insurance company which is authorized to do business in this state and has an authorized paid up capital stock of not less than $250,000, may be accepted as surety under the county depositary act, subject to the limitation prescribed by section 2726 G. C. (See section 2723 G. C.).

3. A proposal for the deposit of funds under the county depositary act should be responsive to the advertisement inviting bids.

4. When all the banks and trust companies submitting proposals for county funds to be awarded under the county depositary act were in a combination to suppress competition among themselves in bidding, the commissioners should reject all the proposals.

5. When the aggregate amount placed with all banks and trust companies does not equal the amount that may be placed in inactive depositaries, and the banks and trust companies are unwilling to increase the amount of their bids so as to absorb the excess funds, the commissioners are without authority under section 2715-1 G. C. to enter into private negotiations with banks or trust companies located without the county for the deposit of such excess funds, but must advertise for proposals and proceed in the same manner for designating depositaries within the county.

6. The commissioners are without authority under the county depositary act to advertise for proposals from banks and trust companies located outside the county for the deposit of county funds other than the excess funds referred to in section 2715-1 G. C., although all the banks and trust companies within the county are in a combination to suppress competition among themselves in such bidding. In such case the funds must remain in the county treasury until a depositary can be designated.

7. An advertisement under the county depositary act for proposals for the deposit of county funds should invite proposals from the class of banks referred to in section 710-84 G. C. as well as from banks and trust companies coming under the provisions of the depositary act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1919.

HON. CHESTER A. MECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date relating to certain proposals or bids made for county funds under the county depositary act, was duly received.

The act is somewhat lengthy and will not be quoted in this opinion.

1. The first question for decision is whether a proposal for county funds must contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted. The question must be answered in the affirmative. Section 2716 G. C. specifically provides that "each proposal shall contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted," and under the provisions of section 2717 G. C. the commissioners are only authorized to award the money to the bank or trust company that tenders proper sureties or securities "in the proposal." See also 1912 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1332, in which it was held that a bank bidding as a depositary for county funds must name its security, and that a general statement to the effect that a reliable surety company bond will be furnished is not of sufficient definiteness. The statement of facts contained in your letter discloses that the proposal of one of the banks tendered a choice of three sureties or securities, viz: first "a satisfactory surety bond," second, "a personal bond signed by the following directors of this bank (naming them)," or, third, "collateral consisting of good municipal (securities)." The first and third choice could not be accepted for reasons already mentioned, but there would be no objection to accepting the second choice if the persons therein named are satisfactory to the commissioners.

2. The commissioners would be warranted by section 2723 G. C., as construed in 1916 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1428, in accepting a fidelity insurance company having an authorized paid up capital stock of not less than $250,000.00, and authorized to do business in this state, as surety under the act, subject, however, to the limitation as to amount prescribed by section 2726 G. C.

3. The advertisement for bids enclosed with your letter discloses that bids were invited for the deposit of county funds for a "period of three years from the 28th day of November, 1919." All bids under the advertisement should be responsive to the invitation; and the commissioners would not be warranted in accepting a bid covering a different three years period of time, such as "three years from and after the 14th day of November, 1919."

4. In case it can be established by competent evidence that all the banks and trust companies submitting bids under the act, were in combination or collusion to suppress competition among themselves in bidding for county funds, the commissioners would not only be justified, but it would be their duty to reject all the bids.

5. You next inquire whether the commissioners in case some of the proposals for inactive funds are legal and some illegal, and the amount bid for in the legal proposals is not enough to take up the entire amount of such funds, and the banks making legal proposals will not increase the amount of their bids, would be authorized under section 2715-1 G. C. in awarding the excess of such funds to a bank located outside the county on private negotiations.

You will observe that section 2715-1 G. C. authorizes the commissioners to designate a bank or trust company located outside the county as a depositary for excess inactive funds "in the manner herein provided." The phrase just quoted refers to the manner in which depositaries generally are designated, namely, after advertising under section 2716 G. C. for sealed proposals, and not to private negotiation. See 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. III, p. 2065.

6. Your final question is whether or not the county commissioners are authorized under the act to invite bids from banks and trust companies located outside the county in the event there is collusion among all the banks located in the county to stifle competitive bidding among themselves.

There appears to be no authority in the act to invite proposals from banks and trust companies located outside the county, except for the excess inactive funds referred to in section 2715-1 G. C. See Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. III, p. 2065. In such situation the funds must remain in the county treasury. See section 2745 G. C.

7. Another question, however, is presented by the form of advertisement used by the commissioners of your county in inviting proposals for the deposit of county funds, the answer to which, in my opinion, requires the rejection of all the proposals submitted thereunder. The advertisement, copy of which you enclosed with your letter, invites proposals only from banks or trust companies "coming under the provisions of the said law," viz: the county depositary act, sections 2715 et seq. G. C.

In 1915 Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. II, p. 1279, it was held that > "A board of county commissioners in its advertisement for bids for the deposit of public funds, should invite proposals under both sections 2715 and 744-12 G. C. If such advertisement is not so worded as to invite bids from the classes of banking concerns mentioned in both sections, either by appropriate language or by express reference to said sections, said advertisement is not sufficient in law."

Section 744 12 G. C. referred to in the foregoing opinion was section 13 of the act passed April 17, 1913 (103 O. L. 379), providing for the examination and supervision of certain banking concerns therein referred to. The section, however, was repealed by the recent act revising and codifying the laws of Ohio relating to the organization and inspection of banks (sections 710-1 et seq. G. C.; 108 O. L. 80), but by the same act, however, another section somewhat kindred in terms was enacted (section 710-84 G. C.), providing that

> "Whenever any of the funds of the state, or any of the political subdivisions of the state, shall be deposited under any of the depositary laws of the state, every unincorporated bank shall be permitted to bid upon and be designated as depositary of such funds, upon furnishing such surety or securities therefor as is prescribed by the law."

Under authority of the opinion last referred to, the advertisement for proposals for the deposit of county funds should have invited proposals from the class of banks mentioned in section 710-84 G. C. as well as those coming under the provisions of the depositary act.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF DEED, 120 ACRES LOCATED IN MADISON COUNTY, OHIO, BY IVA F. DALBEY AND HUSBAND TO STATE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1919.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted for my approval the proposed deed for conveyance to the state of Ohio of a 120 acre tract of land located in Madison county, by Iva F. Dalbey and husband, it being understood that the tract in question is the same as that involved in the abstract of title approved by this office under date of November 19, 1919.

I have examined the deed and find it to be in such form and substance that when properly executed and delivered it will convey the legal title of said grantors to the state.

Accordingly said deed is approved as above indicated.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, BOND FOR $1,000 GIVEN TO STATE OF OHIO BY WILLIAM J. LEONARD, STATE FIRE MARSHAL—CHICAGO BONDING AND INSURANCE COMPANY, SURETY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am transmitting herewith, endorsed with the approval of the Governor as to amount, and with my approval as to form, bond in the sum of $1,000.00 given to the state of Ohio by William J. Leonard as principal and the Chicago Bonding and Insurance Company as surety, covering the faithful performance by Mr. Leonard, as state fire marshal of the additional duties imposed on that office by the hotel inspection act,—the bond in question being provided for by section 843 G. C. as found in 108 O. L. 288.

The act in question does not specify the place of the filing of the bond, and under hese circumstances, I take it that your office is the proper place for its safekeeping.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, CONTRACT AND BOND, BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BOWLING GREEN STATE NORMAL COLLEGE AND THE BRYCE HEATING & VENTILATING COMPANY OF TOLEDO, OHIO, FOR COMPLETION OF HEATING AND VENTILATING SYSTEM—ORIGINAL CONTRACTOR, THE STEINLE CONSTRUCTION COMPANY DEFAULTED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1919.

Board of Trustees of Bowling Green State Normal College, Bowling Green, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On November 19 there was submitted to me for approval a contract, in triplicate, between your board and the Bryce Heating & Ventilating Company of Toledo, Ohio, for the construction and completion of a heating and ventilating system in the teachers' training school building at your institution; also the bond covering said contract.

It appears that the letting of this contract has become necessary by reason of the default of the original contractor, the Steinle Construction Company. It further appears that the contract price, to wit, $11,470, is to be met by an emergency appropriation heretofore made by the state emergency board. I have before me the certificate of the auditor of state that said emergency appropriation is available and sufficient for the purpose set forth in said contract.

I have this day approved said contract and bond, and have filed same with the auditor of state, together with all miscellaneous papers submitted to me in this connection.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL—FEES PAID UNDER SECTION 3, HOUSE BILL No. 259, 108 O. L. 306, SHOULD BE REMITTED TO TREASURER OF STATE—FEES PAID BY APPLICANT MAY NOT BE LEGALLY REMITTED OR RETURNED TO SAID APPLICANT.

1. Fees paid to the state fire marshal as required by section 3 of house bill No. 259, 108 O. L. 306, should be remitted to the treasurer of state as provided in section 24 G. C

2. The state fire marshal may not legally remit or return to the applicant any part of the fee said applicant may have paid under the provision of said section 3.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date which is as follows:

"This department in accordance with the law has made an examination of the office of the state fire marshal. During the course of the examination two questions arose on which we desire your written opinion.

1st. It has been the policy of the state fire marshal to deposit the fees collected under section 3, H. B. 259, in the New First National Bank, Columbus, Ohio, and pay the same fees into the state treasury only as the permits are issued. Do these fees belong to the state when the application is filed and should they be paid into the state treasury in compliance with section 24 G.C.?"

2nd. A fee of $10.00 collected under section 3, H. B. 259, has been returned to W. O. D. of Washington C. H. Ohio. This man made application for an inspection and permit and the records of the state fire marshal show that the inspector called upon him. The inspector reported that the man had decided not to open his establishment and recommended the return of the fee, said fee was returned by the state fire marshal. Can the state fire marshal legally return said fee; if he cannot whom shall we hold responsible?"

House bill No. 259, passed by the legislature on April 14, 1919 (108 O. L. 306) which is now in force, provides for the construction, maintenance and inspection by the state fire marshal of dry cleaning and dry dyeing buildings and establishments. Sections 2, 3 and 4 of said act provide as follows:

"Section 2. No building or establishment shall be used for the business of dry cleaning or dry dyeing as above defined, or for the storage of inflammable or volatile substances for use in such business until an application for permission to do so shall have been filed with and approved by the state fire marshal of the state of Ohio, and on blanks provided by him for that purpose.

Section 3. Upon the filing of every such application, the applicant shall pay to the state fire marshal a filing and inspection fee of ten ($10.00) dollars.

Section 4. When any application is filed with the state fire marshal and the fee paid as above mentioned the state fire marshal by himself, his deputies or assistants shall make an inspection of such building, buildings or establishments, and if the same conforms to the requirements of law and rules which may be prescribed by the state fire marshal for such places, then the state fire marshal shall issue a permit to the applicant for the conduct of such business, which permit shall extend until the first day of January next after the date of the issuing of same."

Evidently the intention of the legislature in requiring the payment of the fees as provided in section 3 was to provide for the maintenance of the office of the state fire marshal, as section 35 of the same act specifically provides as follows:

> "Section 35. All fees, penalties or forfeitures collected by the state fire marshal, his deputies or assistants under the provisions of this act, shall when paid into the state treasury be credited to the special fund for the maintenance of the office of the state fire marshal and shall be disbursed in the same manner as other moneys which come into said fund are disbursed."

Said section should be construed with section 841 G. C., which provides as follows:

> "Section 841. For the purpose of maintaining the department of state fire marshal and the payment of the expenses incident thereto, each fire insurance company doing business in this state shall pay to the state in the month of November each year, in addition to the taxes required to be paid by it, one-half of one per cent. on the gross premium receipts after deducting return premiums and considerations received for reinsurances as shown by the next preceding annual statement of such company made pursuant to section fifty-four hundred and thirty-two and section ninety-five hundred and ninety of the General Code. The money so received shall be placed to the credit of a special fund for the maintenance of the office of state fire marshal. If any portion of such special fund remain unexpended at the end of the year for which it was required to be paid, and the state fire marshal so certifies, it shall be transferred to the general fund of the state."

Section 34 of said H. B. No. 359 charges the state fire marshal with the enforcement of this act in the following language:

> "Section 34. It shall be the duty of the state fire marshal, his deputies and assistants, to enforce the provisions of this act, and he shall have the same power and authority in the enforcement of the provisions hereof as are given to the state fire marshal under the provisions of the state fire marshal law, namely section 820, et seq. of the General Code of Ohio."

Section 821 G. C. provides:

> "The state fire marshal shall appoint a first deputy fire marshal, a second deputy fire marshal, and a chief assistant, each of whom he may remove for cause. He may employ such clerks and assistants, and incur such other expenses as are necessary in the performance of the duties of his office."

In view of the foregoing, it can not be successfully disputed that the express intention of the legislature, in providing for a fee to be charged applicants under this law, was to provide funds to cover whatever additional expenditures the state fire marshal might incur in the administration of the said law.

Section 3, as above set forth, is mandatory and we think there can be no doubt as to its meaning. The application is not complete, in the sense that the state fire marshal is authorized or required to make an inspection as provided in section 4 of said law, until the fee is paid. If the applicant, after having paid his fee, can recover the same by giving notice of his abandonment of his business, then under the same rule, after the inspection is completed, perhaps at a great expense to the state, when nothing remains to be done except the formality of granting a permit or making a refusal, he may at this time decide to withdraw his application and have his fees remitted.

We do not think this view can be regarded as sound. If the legislature had contemplated the fee being remitted, unless the permit was actually granted or inspection actually made under said law, it would have so stipulated.

Specifically in answer to your first request, I am of the opinion that section 3 is mandatory and that the fee therein required to be paid shall be paid at the time of the application, the payment of which is essential before the state fire marshal can take further action under the law in making an inspection or taking other action in reference thereto, and at the time of payment the right to said fee is vested in the state and the state fire marshal can not legally remit or return to the applicant any part thereof.

It is my further opinion that it is the duty of said state fire marshal to remit fees received by him by virtue of said section to the treasurer of the state in accordance with the provisions of section 24 G. C. which provides as follows:

> "Section 24. On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, or for the use of any such state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid, during the preceding week, from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed, verified statement of such receipts. Where tuitions and fees are paid to the officer or officers of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid, said officer or officers shall retain a sufficient amount of said tuition fund and fees to enable said officer to make refunds of tuition and fees incident to conducting of said tuition fund and fees. At the end of each term of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid the officer or officers having in charge said tuition fund and fees shall make and file with the auditor of state an itemized statement of all tuitions and fees received and disposition of the same."

Said fees should be remitted, when paid, to the state treasurer in accordance with the provision of the law, irrespective of what future action is taken relative to the application for which said fee is paid.

Your second inquiry is covered in the main by the foregoing reply to your first inquiry. There seems to be no doubt, from the facts recited, but that the said applicant, to whom you refer in your second inquiry, had made application and paid the fee under the provision of the law. In fact, the state fire marshal was without authority to inspect his premises or take any action in reference to said application under said law, until he had made application and paid the fee. Unquestionably the state fire marshal is charged with the collection of this fee before he could act and it was his duty under the law to remit the same to the treasurer of state in accordance with the provisions of section 24 G. C.

It being clear that the fee was received in accordance with the official duties of the state fire marshal, as provided by law, and the statutes requiring said funds to be remitted to the treasurer of state being mandatory and the plain provisions of said statutes being ignored by the state fire marshal, it follows that said state fire marshal is responsible for the fee which came into his hands in his official capacity, which he has remitted or returned without legal authority.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ELMER McDANIEL COAL LEASE FOR LAND, PART OF "DONATION LOT No. 8" IN WINDSOR TOWNSHIP, MORGAN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent letter transmitting the Elmer McDaniel coal lease for the approval of this department. It is noted that the land so leased is a part of "Donation Lot No. 8" in Windsor township, Morgan county, Ohio.

This lease is made and executed expressly under the authority of section 3209-1 (105 O. L., p. 6), which authorizes the auditor of state to lease for coal or other minerals any unsold portions "of sections 16 and 29, or other lands granted in lieu thereof, of the original surveyed township, for the support of schools and religion, * * * upon such terms and for such time as will be for the best interest of the beneficiaries thereof."

Consideration has been given the question as to whether this section is applicable to such land as the "Donation Tract."

The congressional grant to the Ohio Land Company contained certain reservations, which it is believed include the real estate described in this lease, as shown by Swan's land laws (1825), pages 16 and 17, as follows:

> "There shall be reserved to the United States out of every township, the four lots, being numbered 8, 11, 26, 29 * * * for future sales. There shall be reserved the lot No. 16 of every township for the maintenance of public schools within the said township."

I am also informed through personal conference with Mr. Hyneman, of your department, that the lessee has received a deed for this real estate in which the coal and mineral rights were reserved, and it is the intention and purpose of this lease to convey the coal rights upon the terms and in the manner stated in the lease. Investigation of the land laws pertinent to the "Donation Tract" convinces me that the real estate is embraced in the provisions of section 3209-1 (supra), in that it is lands "granted in lieu" of sections 16 and 29, and this lease, having been executed in conformity to that section, is therefore approved.

Very respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

RURAL BOARDS OF EDUCATION—PROVISIONS OF SECTION 20 ARTICLE 11 OF THE CONSTITUTION DO NOT APPLY—MEMBERS CAN DRAW INCREASED COMPENSATION PROVIDED UNDER SECTION 4715 G. C. EVEN THOUGH HOLDING OFFICE WHEN AMENDMENT BECAME EFFECTIVE—WHEN MEETINGS HELD ON AND AFTER AUGUST 28, 1919—COMPENSATION—ATTENDANCE AT MEETINGS—WHEN ONE AND TWO DOLLARS PAID—REGULAR MEETINGS.

1. The provisions of section 20 of article 2 of the constitution do not apply to members of rural boards of education and they can draw the increased compensation as provided for in section 4715 G. C., 108 O. L., 506, even though they were holding office at the time said amendment became effective, for the reason that they do not draw a salary as contemplated in the constitution, but merely compensation.

2. Members of rural boards of education attending regular meetings of such board of education, if such meetings are held on and after August 28, 1919, H. B. 43, 108 O. L., are entitled to two dollars compensation for such attendance where the school district contains sixteen square miles or more, and members of boards of education in rural school districts containing less than sixteen square miles are entitled to receive one dollar compensation for each meeting attended; but no member of any rural board of education shall be paid for more than ten meetings during the year 1919, and only regular meetings of the board of education can be paid for.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1919.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your recent request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "In the recent amendment to section 4715, General Code, compensation is provided for ten meetings instead of five, as per original section.
> The question arises as to when the members of rural boards of education begin to draw the increased compensation.
> I have given it as my opinion that the salary of an officer cannot be increased during his term of office; therefore members who were elected two years ago for four years could not draw the increased compensation for two years to come. Members of these boards naturally do not agree but wish to begin the increased compensation at once.
> Please give me your opinion. Will the increased compensation begin in each instance with the new term of a member of such board, or will it begin at the time the recent act became effective?"

Your question grows out of the amendment made to section 4715 G. C., as appearing in house bill 43, which was filed in the office of the secretary of state on May 29, 1919, and became effective 90 days thereafter, viz., August 28, 1919.

Section 4715 G. C., as amended in 108 O. L., 506, reads as follows:

> "Each member of the board of education of rural school districts, except such districts as contain less than sixteen square miles, shall receive as compensation two dollars for each regular meeting actually attended by such member, and members of such boards in rural school districts containing less than sixteen square miles shall receive one dollar for each meeting, but for not more than ten meetings in any year. The compensation allowed members of the board shall be paid from the contingent fund."

You indicate that since members of boards of education are officers elected for a definite term, there can be no change in their compensation because of the provisions of section 20, article 2 of the constitution, which reads as follows:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

It is noted in your statement of facts that you use the word "salary" as being synonymous with "compensation," and it is therefore necessary to distinguish between these two terms. Salary is always compensation but compensation does not necessarily mean salary, as the courts have shown in a number of instances. Thus compensation might be salary, wages, hire, allowance, stipend, damages, or a number of other kinds of remuneration. Salary is but one kind of compensation and the constitution says that it is the salary of any officer during his existing term that shall not be changed unless the office be abolished.

> "Worcester defines salary to mean an annual or periodical payment for services; a stipulated periodical recompense." School Commissioners of the city of Indianapolis vs. Wasson, 74 Ind., 133.

Webster defines salary to be "the recompense or consideration stipulated to be paid to a person for services; annual or periodical wages or pay; hire."

The Century Dictionary defines salary to be "the recompense or consideration stipulated to be paid to a person periodically for services."

> "The reward paid to a public officer for the performance of his official duties." Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 492; State vs. Raine, 49 O. S., 580.

The Standard Dictionary defines compensation as pecuniary amends for loss, privation or injury. The same dictionary defines salary to be a periodical allowance made as compensation for regular work.

> "Salary is a fixed, annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the time, and not the amount of services rendered."

> "The term compensation in its ordinary acceptation applies not only to salary but to compensation by fees for specific services * * *." Commonwealth vs. Curtis, (Ky.) 55 Southwestern.
> "As used in the constitution, article 4, paragraph 26, forbidding the compensation of any officer to be increased or diminished during his term of office, the word compensation signifies a return for the services of such officers as receive a fixed salary payable out of the treasury of the state, and does not and was not intended to apply to the remuneration of that large class of officers such as sheriffs, constables, clerks of courts and other officers who receive specific fees for services as they are from time to time required to render them." State vs. Kalb, 50 Wis., 178.
> See also Milwaukee County Commissioners vs. Hackett, 21 Wis., 613.

Possibly the best Ohio case in point as to whether these members of rural boards of education are entitled during their term to receive additional compensation for their attendance at regular meetings, is that of Gobrecht vs. Cincinnati, 51 O. S. p. 68, the syllabus of which case reads as follows:

"1. Compensation of a public officer fixed by a provision that 'each member of the board who is present during the entire session of any regular meeting, and not otherwise, shall be entitled to receive five dollars for his attendance,' is not 'salary' within the meaning of section 20, of article 2, of the constitution, which provides that 'the general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office, and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished.'

2. An increase in the compensation of such officer during his term is not prohibited by the constitution."

In rendering the opinion upon this case Judge Spear said:

"(a) Can the compensation of members of the board of legislation be increased during the existing term? * * *

At the commencement of the term of plaintiff as a member of the board of legislation the compensation provided by statute was five dollars for attendance during the entire session of any regular meeting. By the act of February 19, 1892, it was provided that 'each member of the board who is present during the entire session of any regular meeting, and not otherwise, shall be entitled to receive ten dollars for his attendance, and shall receive no other compensation whatever.'

1. It is contended that section 20, of article 2, of the constitution, prohibits an increase of compensation during the existing term. That section is as follows: 'The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office, and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished.'

The question, therefore, is whether or not the pay of a member of the board is 'salary' within the meaning of the above section?

We think it is not. A general definition of salary includes compensation. General definitions do not, however, cover all cases. Salary is compensation, but, under the section quoted, compensation is not, in every instance, salary. The point is emphasized by this court in the case of Thompson vs. Phillips, 12 Ohio St., 617, where it is said that 'it is manifest from the change of expression in the two clauses of the section that the word 'salary' was not used in a general sense, embracing any compensation fixed for an officer, but in its limited sense, of an annual or periodical payment for services—a payment dependent on the time and not on the amount of the services rendered. And it was there held that a percentage compensation allowed by law to a public treasurer for official duties, could be altered during his term. It is the 'salary' which shall not be changed during the term, not necessarily, the compensation.

We think the compensation in the case at bar comes within the principle of the case cited, although a per diem compensation. It is not within the meaning of the section quoted, 'salary.'"

The board of legislation, mentioned in the above case, was one of the branches of the law making body of the city of Cincinnati under the form of government at that time in that city, and the members chosen for a definite time just as members of boards of education are so chosen today; the compensation of the members of the board of legislation was that they should receive a certain sum for actual attendance at each meeting of the board which they attended, which provision is practically the same as that governing compensation of members of rural boards of education provided for in section 4715 G. C. The compensation given to these members of rural boards of education for attendance at the regular meetings is dependent entirely upon their being present at such meetings and they are not paid for any meeting at which they are not present. On the other hand, if this remuneration which they received during the year was a salary, they would receive such salary whether they were present at such meetings or not because salary is not wholly dependent upon duties performed but is governed rather by the element of time.

In opinion 1370 issued by the Attorney-General, in July 27, 1918 (Opinions of the Attorney-General 1918, Vol. 2 page 1034) the syllabus reads:

> "Salary is incidental to the office and not to the performance of the duties of the same. Hence, so long as an officer does not resign, die or is removed, he is entitled to the salary pertaining to that office."

Attention is also invited to Opinion 1630, issued by the Attorney-General on December 20, 1918, and appearing at page 1565, Vol. 2, Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, the syllabus reading as follows:

> "The provisions of section 20 of article 2 of the constitution do not apply to members of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, and they can draw the increased compensation as provided for in section 4943 G. C. (107 O. L., 684), even though they were holding office at the time said amndment became effective, for the reason that they do not draw a salary as therein contemplated,but merely compensation."

In arriving at such conclusion the Attorney-General cited the more recent case of State ex rel. Taylor vs. Carlisle, et al., 3 O. N. P., (n. s.) 544, wherein the court was passing upon the question as to an increase in salary for the county commissioners of Franklin county from $2,000.00 to $3,500.00 per annum. Here the compensation of the county commissioners for any one year was to be determined by the amount of the tax duplicate in each county for real and personal property, and Judge Evans held that this did not come within the inhibition of section 20 of article 2 of the constitution. After holding that the law under which the county commissioners had formerly drawn compensation was unconstitutional and void, and hence in reality there was no law fixing the compensation of county commissioners until the amended act was passed, the court went further and used this language:

> "The act does not provide for any definite fixed salary. The compensation depends on the aggregate of the tax duplicate from year to year. It may be less one year and greater another, depending on the variation of the tax duplicate, and the amount from one year to another can not be determined until December of each year when the aggregate is ascertained."

This statement of Judge Evans is also true of section 4715, providing for the compensation of members of rural boards of education, which says that they shall receive in the larger districts $2.00 for each meeting attended and $1.00 in the smaller districts for each meeting attended, but that not more than ten meetings shall be paid for to each individual in any year; so that while the duties of the members of the board of education in the rural district are practically the same, one would not be drawing the same remuneration as another member if he failed to attend the same number of regular meetings. It would seem, therefore, in view of the decision of the courts, above cited, that there is little question but what members of rural boards of education can receive additional compensation during the term for which they were elected, for the reason that they receive a compensation for duties performed and not a salary for the time they are in office. On the other hand, there is no question that where a public officer receives a definite stated salary per annum, such officer cannot be increased or diminished in his salary during the term for which he was either elected or appointed, neither does this rule hold on the classified civil service employes of the state because they are chosen for an indefinite period and not for a stated term.

You now ask as to when the members of rural boards of education begin to draw increased compensation. The act amending section 4715, increasing such compensation, became effective August 28, 1919. An examination of the history of this statute shows that prior to its amendment in 104 O. L., it read:

> "Each member of the township board of education shall receive as compensation two dollars for each meeting actually attended by such member, but for not more than ten meetings in any year. * * *"

This was amended in 104 O. L., page 135, to read:

> "Each member of the board of education of rural school districts, except such districts as contain less than sixteen square miles, shall receive as compensation two dollars for each regular meeting actually attended by such member, but not more than five meetings in any year * * *."

It will thus be seen that prior to the amendment in 104 O. L., every member of the township board of education, whether the district contained less than sixteen square miles or more, was to receive two dollars for each meeting, but not more than ten meetings in any year. Then came the amendment in 104 O. L., cutting down the number of meetings for which the members could be paid from ten to five during any year, but excepting those districts which contained less than sixteen square miles, the members in such districts to receive nothing for their attendance at board meetings. The present legislature has now amended section 4715 by increasing the number of meetings from five to ten, for which payment can be made, and the law is similar to that in force prior to the amendment in 104 O. L., except that the present legislature has seen fit to provide that:

> "Members of such boards in rural school districts containing less than sixteen square miles, shall receive one dollar for each meeting;"

The two changes, therefore, are providing for ten meetings instead of five in any year and permitting the payment of members of boards in those districts which contain less than sixteen square miles by the provision that they shall receive one dollar for each meeting. This compensation is not salary to either of these two classes of members of rural boards of education, but is rather a compensation for time on a particular date, or payment for expenses in going to and from such meetings, the wear and tear on vehicles, the using of gasoline if motor cars are used, etc., and this is likely what the legislature had in mind when it changed this section and provided, as the law read some few years ago, that every member of a rural board of education should receive something in the way of remuneration for his attendance at the regular meetings of such board.

The more difficult question is as to the meaning of the words "in any year." This might mean the school year which begins on September 1st, and ends on August 31st, or it might mean one year's service on the part of a certain member, that is, twelve months from the time he might have been appointed to a vacancy in the middle of the calendar year, or, on the other hand, it might mean the calendar year which begins in January and ends in December, the latter being the year which governs the term of office of members of boards of education in that they enter upon their duties in January and retire in January, at the end of their term.

When the former compensation of these members of rural boards of education was reduced in 1914, by changing the number of meetings for which they could be paid from ten meetings to five meetings, the Attorney-General rendered an opinion (No. 1283, p. 1510, Vol. 2, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914) in which held as follows:

> "Your question presents an entanglement of legal difficulties. Whatever theory of solution is adopted in answer to the difficulty presented meets with an obstruction of serious legal consequence, and I am unable to arrive at any conclusion which presents a clearly smooth and satisfactory legal answer. I, therefore, feel urged to present that solution which has the best appearance of fairness and logical practicability. To my mind the best construction that the conflicting provisions can be given would be the holding that the officers in question be permitted to draw the salaries prescribed by statute prior to the amendment above referred to, for the entire year of 1914. I, therefore, advise that the officers be permitted to draw their salaries for the year 1914 under section 4715, General Code, under assumption that said statute remains in force and effect until the first Monday of January, 1915. The officers, therefore, will receive $2.00 per meeting for each meeting actually attended during the year 1914, but for not more than ten meetings in the year. After that time, the compensation prescribed by the amended statute above quoted may, in equity and fairness, be permitted to control."

Here the law changing the remuneration of members of boards of education became effective June 10, 1914, but the Attorney-General, "under assumption that said statute remains in force and effect until the first Monday in January, 1915," held that these school officers therefore would receive the old scale of salaries for the entire year of 1914, that is, ten meetings in the year, though the law after June 10, 1914, provided that but five meetings should be paid for. In this former opinion the Attorney-General held the calendar year was the year to be computed in construing the language of section 4715 G. C., and that is really the practicable year to consider in this matter, since members enter upon their duties in January and retire the following December. It having been established that compensation can be increased at any time during the term of an officer, clearly then those members of boards of education who are serving during the year 1919 are entitled to this increase in compensation, which the legislature desired they should have but which many of them would not receive if construed to be effective in January, 1920, for the reason that a large number of members of boards of education in Ohio retire January, 1920, since the regular elections for members of rural boards of education were held in November, 1919.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. The provisions of section 20 of article 2 of the constitution do not apply to members of rural boards of education and they can draw the increased compensation as provided for in section 4715 G. C., 108 O. L., 506, even though they were holding office at the time said amendment became effective, for the reason that they do not draw a salary as contemplated in the constitution, but merely compensation.

2. Members of rural boards of education attending regular meetings of such board of education, if such meetings are held on and after August 28, 1919, (H. B. 43, 108 O. L.) are entitled to two dollars compensation for such attendance where the school district contains sixteen square miles or more, and members of boards of education in rural school districts containing less than sixteen square miles are entitled to receive one dollar compensation for each meeting attended; but no member of any rural board of education shall be paid for more than ten meetings during the year 1919 and only regular meetings of the board of education can be paid for.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, ABSTRACT, PREMISES KNOWN AS LOT No. 54, WOOD BROWN PLACE ADDITION, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1919.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have made an examination of an abstract certified by J. C. Erwin, attorney-at-law, February 19, 1914, to be a copy of an abstract certified by E. E. Corwin, attorney-at-law, April 26, 1899, and further continued by John K. Kennedy, November 26, 1919, with reference to the following described premises:

> "Situated in the state of Ohio, county of Franklin, city of Columbus, and being known as lot No. 54 in Wood Brown Place addition, of record in plat book 5, pages 196 and 197, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio."

Said abstract in my opinion shows a good and clear title to said premises to be in the name of Leonidas S. Wells at the date of the last continuation thereof, November 26, 1919, with the exception of the following liens:

Unpaid taxes for the year 1918, twenty-two cents.

Taxes for the year 1919.

A special assessment for the improvement of Ridgeview Road amounting to thirty cents with two cents interest.

Said abstract does not show that any examination was made in the United States court.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, RESOLUTION FOR SALE OF LAND TO UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, AT CAMP SHERMAN, CHILLICOTHE, OHIO, AT A PRICE OF $7,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of this date is received transmitting in duplicate transcript of the record of the proceedings of your department relating to sale to the United States of America of 32.016 acres of land in Ross county, constituting part of the national army encampment known as Camp Sherman; and requesting my approval of the sale of said lands to the United States government at the price of $7,500.00

I note from the papers transmitted that the land in question is abandoned state canal lands; that you have made a finding that said lands are not necessary or required for the use, maintenance or operation of any of the canals of the state, and that the same cannot be leased so as to yield six per cent on the value thereof; also that you have appraised the lands at the sum of $10,000.00.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted and find that the sale has been legally made, and I therefore return the transcript in duplicate with my approval of the sale.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, BOND OF WILLIAM E. MARTIN, DEPUTY STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER IN THE SUM OF $5,000.00—CHICAGO BONDING AND INSURANCE COMPANY, SURETY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am transmitting herewith bond of William E. Martin in the sum of $5,000.00, with the Chicago Bonding and Insurance Company as surety, covering faithful performance by Mr. Martin of his duties as deputy state highway commissioner, to which office he has recently been appointed. The bond is given in accordance with section 1181 G. C.

I have approved the bond as to form, and it has also been approved by the state highway commissioner as to surety.

The law is not specific in naming a custodian of the bond, but I am filing it with you in line with the statute providing that the bond of the state highway commissioner shall be filed in your office.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

EXAMINATION OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOT NUMBER EIGHTY-EIGHT, WOOD-BROWN PLACE, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1919.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have made an examination of an abstract of title certified by L. J. Hegelheimer on January 12, 1914, to be a copy of an abstract prepared by William A. Poste & Company May 16, 1893, continued January 11, 1914, by L. J. Hegelheimer further continued on March 3, 1915, and on June 26, 1918, by L. P. McCullough, and continued November 19, 1919, by Guy V. Fridley, attorney-at-law, with reference to the following described property:

> "Situated in the county of Franklin, in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Clinton, and being lot number eighty-eight (88) of Wood-Brown Place, as the same is numbered and delineated on the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, pages 196-197, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio."

I am of the opinion that said abstract and the continuations thereto show the title to said premises to be in the name of Annie R. Bowen on November 19, 1919, the date of the last continuation of said abstract, subject to the following liens and encumbrances:

A mortgage for $300.00 given by Elmer E. Clark and wife to the Buckeye State Building and Loan Company on March 4, 1915, as shown in section 1 of the continuation of said abstract dated June 26, 1918.

Also a mortgage for $1,050.00 given by Annie R. Bowen to Elmer E. Clark, executed October 30, 1918, and given to secure a note for said amount with interest at six per cent. per annum.

The abstract does not show that said mortgages have been released in any manner on the record.

The taxes for the last half of the year 1918, amounting to $3.52, are unpaid and a lien; also the taxes for 1919 are a lien upon said premises.

A special assessment for Ridgeview road improvement, amounting to 30 cents, is a lien upon said premises, the third annual payment of 10 cents, with 2 cents interest being due in December, 1919.

Said abstract does not show that any examination was made in any of the United States courts.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

EXAMINATION, ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO PREMISES KNOWN AS LOTS Nos. EIGHTY-NINE, NINETY, AND NINETY-ONE OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1919.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted to this department abstract of title covering the following described premises:

> "Situated in the state of Ohio, in the county of Franklin, and in the township of Clinton, and bounded and described as follows:
> Being lots Nos. eighty-nine (89), ninety (90) and ninety-one (91) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio."

I have made an examination of said abstract certified by J. C. Erwin, attorney at law, February 19, 1914, to be a copy of an abstract certified by E. E. Corwin, attorney at law, April 26, 1899, continued by J. C. Erwin, February 19, 1914, and March 1, 1915, further continued by L. P. McCullough, June 26, 1918, and continued November 19, 1919, by Guy V. Fridley, attorney at law, and am of the opinion that said abstract shows the title to the above described premises to be in the name of Annie R. Bowen on November 19, 1919, the date of the last continuation thereof, subject to the following liens and encumbrances:

A mor gage for $300.00 executed by Elmer E. Clark and Mary J. Clark to the Buckeye State Building and Loan Company March 4, 1915; also a mortgage for $1,050.00 executed by Annie R. Bowen to Elmer E. Clark, given to secure the payment of a note for $1,050.00 with interest at six per cent payable semi-annually. Said abstract does not show that the said mortgages have been in any manner released on the records.

The taxes for the last half of the year 1918, amounting to 22 cents on each lot or 66 cents on all, and the taxes for the year 1919 are unpaid and a lien.

A special assessment for the Ridgeview road improvement, amounting to 30 cents on each lot, is unpaid, the third annual payment of 10 cents, with 2 cents interest, is due in December, 1919.

Said abstract does not show that any examination was made in any of the United States courts.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, BOND OF IRA R. PONTIUS, SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS IN THE SUM OF $50,000—CHICAGO BONDING AND INSURANCE COMPANY, SURETY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am transmitting herewith, endorsed with my approval as to form, bond of Ira R. Pontius, in the sum of $50,000, with the Chicago Bonding and Insurance Company, as surety, covering the faithful performance of Mr. Pontius of his duties as superintendent of banks. The bond is given in accordance with section 710-10 G. C. (108 O. L., 83). You will note that it has been approved by the Governor as to surety.

The statutes are not specific in naming a custodian of the bond; and in the absence of direct authority, I am transmitting it to you.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF SEVEN LEASES OF CANAL AND OTHER LANDS ALONG WATER FRONTS OWNED BY THE STATE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 2, 1919, in which you enclose, among others, the following leases, in triplicate, for my approval:

	Valuation.
To R. R. Shellenbarger, Millersport, Ohio. Cottage site and dock purposes. Lease of water front lot No. 3, on south shore of Buckeye Lake, Ohio	$400 00
To Clara Y. Ellis, Buckeye Lake, Ohio. Cottage purposes. Lease of inner slope and water front 100 feet wide near wasteway gates, Buckeye Lake, Ohio	500 00
To Sall Mountain Company, 230 LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. Building and storage purposes, a portion of the berme bank of the M. & E. canal, 537 feet long, in Butler county, Ohio	333 33
To The Gordon Hauss & Folk Company, St. Marys, Ohio. Storage purposes, state canal land in Auglaize county, St. Marys, Ohio	1,900 00
To Roland A. Zurbee, 3167 Detroit avenue, Toledo, Ohio. Cottage site and dock landing, the water front lot No. 120, Indian Lake, Ohio	300 00
To E. Kiesewetter, National Bank Building, Columbus, Ohio. Cottage purposes only, the inner slope and water front and the outer slope and barrow pit in the rear thereof lot No. 78 of the waste gates, Buckeye Lake, Ohio	400 00
To The County Commissioners of Stark county, Ohio. Highway purposes, use of 600 lineal feet of berme bank of the Ohio & Erie Canal in Jackson township, Stark county, Ohio	200 00

I have carefully examined said leases, find them correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning the same with my approval endorsed thereon.

It is noted that of the above leases two of them are to corporations, namely, the Sall Mountain Company and the Gordon, Hauss & Folk Company. These leases are not accompanied by the usual certificates of authority on the part of corporation officers to execute. However, I do not regard this as at all vital so far as the interests of the state are concerned, and am only calling attention to it so that the leases may be completed in accordance with your usual practice.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BONDS OF WYANDOT COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $6,161.30.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Bonds of Wyandot county in the amount of $6,161.30 to pay the cost and expense of Sycamore township road improvement No. 89, being 1 bond of $461.30 and 19 bonds of $300.00 each.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the reason that the transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to cause the notice required by section 6912 G. C. to be published for the length of time provided in said section. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." The hearing upon the question of allowing the improvement was held June 11, 1919. The notice of such hearing was published June 3, 1919, and June 10, 1919, in the Daily Chief. Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of hearing.

In the case of Fenner vs. City of Cincinnati, 8 N. P. 340, Judge Smith, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in special term, held (quoting from the syllabus):

> "Where a statute provides that municipal bonds can only be issued 'After advertising the same for sale once per week for four consecutive weeks of the same day of the week in some newspaper of general circulation in such city,' no sale of such bonds can be had until notice of four weeks or twenty-eight days shall have been given; and the statute is not complied with where an advertisement is inserted on the 8th, 15th, 22d and 29th of the month calling for sealed bids to be submitted on or before 12 o'clock on the 31st."

This decision was reversed by the same court in general term (see same report, p..342). The supreme court of Ohio on October 15, 1901, in case No. 7473, without reported opinion, reversed the judgment of the superior court and affirmed the judgment of Judge Smith rendered in special term. Therefore, the rule laid down by Judge Smith must be taken as the holding of the supreme court of Ohio.

I believe that the interpretation laid down by Judge Smith in the case referred to is applicable to the language used in section 6912 G. C. and that the notice there required must be published once a week for two full weeks or fourteen days prior to the hearing.

For the reason just stated I am of the opinion that the bonds above described are not valid obligations of Wyandot county and advise that you decline to accept them.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL, BOND ISSUE, WYANDOT COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $11,482.44.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Bonds of Wyandot county in the amount of $11,482.44, to pay the cost and expense of improving Sycamore-Tymochtee road No. 91, being 1 bond of $82.44 and 19 bonds of $600.00 each.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relative to the above bond issue and decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the reason that the transcript reveals that the county commissioners failed to cause the notice required by section 6912 G. C. to be published for the length of time provided in said section. The language of this section is that such notice shall be published "once a week for two consecutive weeks." Two full weeks or fourteen days should have intervened between the first publication and the date of hearing.

In support of this holding I refer you to the authorities cited in opinion No. 845 of even date herewith, a copy of which is enclosed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,

DISAPPROVAL, DEFICIENCY BONDS, CITY OF NEWARK, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $15,377.80.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

RE: Deficiency bonds of the city of Newark in the amount of $15,377.80.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of council and other officers of the city of Newark relative to the above bond issue and herewith decline to approve the validity of said bonds for the following reasons:

(1) Section 3 of house bill 567, under authority of which said bonds are issued, provides that council by resolution by a two-thirds vote of all members elected thereto, "shall determine whether or not such deficiency exists and the amount thereof, which shall not be greater than that certified to it by the accounting officer, * * *" The transcript fails to show that council of the city of Newark, either in ordinance No. 3054 under authority of which the bonds in question are issued, or in any other proceedings, have made the finding or determination required by said section 3.

(2) Section 4 of said house bill 567 provides that such bonds "shall run for a period not exceeding eight years. * * *" Under ordinance 3054, under authority of which the bonds in question are issued, the last bond runs for a period of nine years from the date of its issuance.

For the reasons above cited I advise you to decline to accept the bonds.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, LEASE FOR OIL, GAS, COAL AND OTHER MINERALS TO MAYBELLE D. DYAR, MARIETTA, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter transmitting the Maybelle D. Dyar oil and gas lease for the approval of this department. It is noted that your letter states that "this is another of the lots lying in the ministerial section in the city of Marietta."

This lease has been examined in connection with section 3209-1, as amended in 105 O. L., page 6, wherein the auditor of state is authorized to lease for oil, gas, coal and other minerals, any unsold portions of section 16 and section 29, or other lands granted in lieu thereof, upon such terms and for such time as will be for the "best interest of the beneficiaries thereof." The purpose of this lease is stated in your letter to be:

> "To make it impossible for the state or any officer of the state, at any time in the next one hundred years or more to erect or threaten to erect a derrick upon the lands."

It is also noted that it is for the protection of purchasers of titles to such lands from the state and that it is in accordance with the policy of the state in such cases in the past.

While some doubt might exist whether such a purpose, in a strict technical sense, would be considered as being in the "interest of the beneficiaries" of such ministerial land, yet in view of the fact that the lessees in such cases are the grantees of the state, and the land in question is located inside a municipal corporation, I am not inclined to give it such a strict technical construction as would unnecessarily interfere with or obstruct the established policy of the state of Ohio in such matters, and in view of these considerations, I am returning this lease with the approval of this department as to form endorsed thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BANKS AND BANKING—WHERE BANK FURNISHES SURETY FOR DEPOSIT OF PUBLIC FUNDS—NOT LEGAL TO ACCEPT COLLATERAL SECURITY BONDS OTHER THAN THOSE DEFINED IN SECTION 4295 G. C.

Where a bank furnishes a surety (other than a surety company), as security for the deposit of public funds, it is not legal to accept as collateral security bonds other than those defined in section 4295, to make such surety "good and sufficient" as required by that section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department on the following:

> "The G. S. and Trust Company, of C., Ohio, is protesting against a ruling made by one of the state examiners relating to the kind of security deposited with the treasurer of the city of C., securing city money on deposit. The state examiner rules that the personal bond offered by the trust company, which in turn was secured by collateral other than interest bearing obligations of the United States,etc., was not sufficient under the statutes of the state regulating such security. This section is number 4295. The contention of the G. S. and Trust Company is that under the second provision of said statute, reading as follows: 'or furnish good and sufficient surety,' that the law has been complied with and that the examiner is in error when he rules that the collaterals of the personal bond must be interest bearing obligations of the United States or such other bonds as are described in section 4295 in the third provision.
> "May the city treasurer legally accept as security for deposit of public funds collateral securities other than those listed in section 4295 G. C., to further secure personal bond furnished by the bank?
> (By other securities in our question we mean industrial bonds or mortgages not authorized by sections 4295 or 2288-1 G. C.)"

The brief of the G. S. & Trust Company has also been noted and considered.

Section 4295 G. C. is the section under which your question arises and in part is as follows:

> "The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public monies * * * in such bank * * * as officers * * * the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state or furnish good and sufficient surety or secure said monies by a deposit of bonds or other interest bearing obligations of the United States or those for the payment of principal and interest of which the faith of the United States is pledged, including bonds of the District of Columbia;"

Other requirements and restrictions as to such bonds are set out in the statute, but it is not necessary to quote that part of the section in full.

It will be observed that this section authorizes council to deposit such money where the security is affected by any one of the three methods therein provided and that these methods appear to be alternatives.

The matter reaches this department in your effort to determine which, if either, of the positions taken by your examiner and the trust company, above referred to is correct.

On the one hand your examiner's position appears to be, as stated in your letter, that "he rules that the collaterals of the personal bond must be interest bearing obligations of the United States or such other bonds as are described in section 4295 in the third provision." On the the other hand the trust company's position may be shown by a quotation from page 2 of their brief, as follows:

> "We contend that if we comply with the second alternative by furnishing 'good and sufficient surety' we have complied with the requirements of section 4295 of the General Code, particularly when the form of assurance not only complies with the law as to form, but has been approved by the proper municipal officers, authorized by law to pass upon the sufficiency thereof and approve the same.
> We understand that your office has taken the position that the form of assurance referred to in the second alternative above referred to should be ignored and that the depositary banks should comply either with the first alternative by giving a surety company bond, or with the third alternative by pledging United States, state, county or other bonds or obligations of political subdivision as expressly defined in section 4295.
> The undersigned respectfully submits that the second alternative form of security is not only warranted by law but when supplemented by property or securities to an excessive margin of safety meets the entire power of the act and furthermore that the property or securities which make the surety 'good and sufficient' as required by section 4295 need not be bonds of the United States nor of the state or the political subdivision thereof as defined in the third alternative."

It is noted that reference is made in the brief of the trust company to sections 115 and 128 of the revised ordinances of the city of Cleveland. These sections designate certain municipal officers as the depositary commission and require their approval of the bond or securities offered by the depositary. No reference to any other Cleveland ordinance is made which would indicate that there is any conflict between the ordinances or charter provision of Cleveland and section 4295, and for this reason it is assumed that section 4295 governs and this opinion is limited to that section and the ordinances to which attention is called, as above indicated.

The question involved may be raised and re-stated in another way, viz., does the word "surety" refer to persons contracting in and sustaining the relation of suretyship or does it refer to things such as securities, and is it used in the sense of "security?" Are the three alternative methods provided in section 4295 separately exclusive, or may they be used conjunctively in furnishing the security for public funds?

The purpose of depositary laws, as pointed out in opinion No. 761 addressed to your department under date of November 7, 1919, is "to safeguard and insure the proper custody of public money, but they go further than that and require that such part of the increment of the public funds as is agreed upon shall inure to the benefit of the public." To this it may also be added that the evident purpose was to secure for the public the highest possible rate of interest, with the minimum risk. As to the meaning of the phrase "good and sufficient surety," as used in what may be termed the second alternative, it is suggested that in the construction of statutes words are to be given their ordinary meaning rather than a special restricted or enlarged meaning and must be interpreted in connection with other parts of the act in which it is used.

What is the meaning of the word "surety" as used in that phrase?

It is defined in Standard Dictionary to be:

"1. A person who engages to be responsible for the debt, default or miscarriage of another; guarantor; bail.

2 A pledge of money deposited or of credit given to secure against loss or damage; * * *

3. That which gives security or confidence; * * * the state of being secure * * *."

Bouviers Law Dictionary, page 3191, defines "surety" to be:

"A person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money or for the performance of something else for another."

In words and phrases, Vol. 8, page 6809, numerous definitions from different jurisdictions are given, which are, as to the pertinent part quoted here:

"A surety is a person who binds himself." Young vs. McFadden, 125 Ind., 254.

"* * * In law one who enters into a bond, etc." Pitkins vs. Boyd (Iowa), 4 Green, 255.

A surety is defined as "a person who," etc., citing authorities from numerous states.

These definitions are recognized by the supreme court of this state in Wise vs. Miller, 45 O. S., 399, where the court quoted Smith vs. Sheldon, 35 Mich., 42:

"A surety, it is said, is a person who being liable to pay a debt," etc.

These authorities are cited as showing that the word "surety" had an accepted meaning both in popular usage and in law, which meant a person sustained certain legal relations.

It appearing reasonably certain that this word had an accepted meaning, that meaning must be attributed to the legislature unless a different meaning is evidenced by other provisions of the section.

It is noted that the grant and direction of this state is to the city council, which may do certain things when certain requirements are met, and these are stated disjunctively and in substance are: (1) giving a surety bond, (2) furnishing good and sufficient surety, and (3) depositing bonds or other obligations. The first two contemplate the same method, viz., some corporation or person in the capacity of surety, incurring a secondary liability in behalf of the principal and for his benefit.

The third alternate substitutes things, viz., certain kinds of bonds and obligations, for persons, and it is noticeable also that in the substitution great particularity is used in defining the character of bonds and obligations referred to.

It would seem that these different alternative plans authorize the council to deposit the public money in a bank which (1) gives the surety bond or (2) furnishes a good and safe surety or (3) furnishes the prescribed security by the hypothecation of the bonds described and that each plan is exclusive and may not be used in whole or in part with the other alternative. However, in view of your exact question, the final consideration and decision on this question is withheld.

It may be claimed with logical justification that the phrase "good and sufficient surety" implies a self sufficiency in the surety which is inconsistent with the idea of reenforcing such suretyship agreement with collateral security. The requirement of such collateral carries with it an implied admission of insufficiency of the surety, whose surety obligation of itself, under the statute, must be "good and sufficient."

The result to which these observations lead may be regarded as rather technical, but it must be remembered that the legislature was dealing with the subject of public money and great care is attributable to it in safeguarding its deposit in every possible practical manner. It is common knowledge which is also attributable to the legislature that the value of industrial stocks and other securities fluctuates greatly and does not have the permanence and stability in value and security approaching the value and security of the bonds and obligations referred to in section 4295, and if the pledging of such non-statutory bonds and obligations were permissible under the second alternative, the great care and particularity with which the legislature defined the bonds in the third alternative would seem to have been useless.

Therefore, the character and purpose of this legislation furnishes a practical reason for agreement with the conclusion technically arrived at, which is that where a bank furnishes a surety (other than a surety company), as security for the deposit of public funds, it is not legal to accept as collateral security bonds other than those defined in section 4295, to make such surety "good and sufficient," as required by that section.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—PUPILS OF SCHOOL DISTRICT ASSIGNED TO ANOTHER DISTRICT UNDER PROVISIONS OF SECTION 7684 G. C.—SUSPENSION OF SCHOOL OPERATES THOUGH NO FORMAL ACTION TAKEN UNDER SECTION 7730 G. C.—HOW SUCH SCHOOL RE-ESTABLISHED—SALARY OF TEACHER MATTER OF CONTRACT BETWEEN TEACHER AND BOARD OF EDUCATION WHEN SCHOOL DOES NOT RECEIVE STATE AID.

1. Where a board of education, acting under the provisions of section 7684 G. C., assigns all of the pupils of a school district to another district school or schools, such assignment operates as a suspension of the school in question, even though formal action regarding suspension was not taken under section 7730 G. C.; and where the district school has been closed in this manner, the patrons of the district have recourse to the provisions of section 7730 G. C., providing for the presentation to the board of education of a petition signed by a majority of the electors in the territory of the suspended district and showing also that the average daily attendance of the pupils who reside in such district, though attending other schools to which assigned, is twelve or more, such school must be-establishd.

2. Where a school district does not receive state aid, the salary to be agreed upon in the contract between the teacher and a board of education is a matter of voluntary arrangement between such board and such teacher, not governed by any maximum in amount.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

HON. V. W. FILIATRAULT, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "District No. 2, Randolph township rural school district had an enrollment of about twenty-five pupils last year. The board at the beginning of the school year this fall was unable to secure a teacher for the school in question and as a result the school was not in session for four weeks after which the board acting under authority of section 7684 of the General Code assigned the pupils, made a contract with the driver to haul them to a school at Randolph center. This assignment, of course, operated as a suspension of the school. A petition signed by a majority of the voters of the school district in question, has been filed with the board asking for a re-establishment of such school. The board believing that it is compelled to do so by section 7730 of the General Code as defined in the case of Myers vs. the Board of Education, 95 C. S., 367, has granted the petition and agreed to reopen the school if it is able to secure a teacher. The highest salary paid for school teaching in this district is eighty-five dollars.

It will be observed that the school was not suspended because of the small attendance at any time but that the children were assigned for the proper accommodation of the schools.

1st. Would the school board be required to open this school under the facts as stated?

2nd. Would the board be required to pay more than the maximum, eighty-five dollars, now being paid to secure a teacher for this district? "

Section 7684 G. C. reads as follows:

"Boards of education may make such assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion best will promote the interests of education in their districts."

In your statement of facts you indicate that the district in question had an enrollment of about twenty-five pupils during the preceding school year and thus there was no occasion for the county board of education to direct the suspension of such school under the provisions of section 7730 G. C., nor was there any reason, as far as enrollment or average daily attendance was concerned, for the local board of education to suspend such district school. You indicate that the board at the time of opening school this fall was unable to secure a teacher for the school in question and that as a result the school was not in session for four weeks during which it should have been in session. The board of education then acted under the provisions of section 7684 and assigned the pupils residing in the district to another district school at Randolph Center and provided for their transportation to such school by contract with a driver. When the local board of education of Randolph township did this, it settled the question as to having any school at least for a temporary period in district No. 2, that is, the district in question, and therefore while the board did not act under the provisions of section 7730, in formally suspending such school, their action under section 7684 G. C., in transferring all the pupils, under their authority to do so, to another district school, brought about the suspension of the public school in district No. 2, at least for the current term.

You indicate further that the school having been closed by the board of education, through the assigning of the pupils to another district, there was a petition signed by a majority of the voters of district No. 2, asking for the re-establishment of such school. Inasmuch as the school in question had twenty-five pupils last year, and you do not indicate that any question of low attendance enters herein, it will be presumed that district No. 2 had the necessary number of pupils under the provisions of section 7730 to entitle them to a re-established school in the place of one that had been suspended. Section 7730 G. C. provides that the local board of education can suspend the schools temporarily or permanently at any time and for any cause, but the section further provides that the patrons of any particular territory must be protected in their rights in that they have been granted the petitioning power to bring about the re-establishment of a school in their district and all that is necessary is to show that the average daily attendance of the pupils who reside in their school district, although going to other schools to which assigned, is twelve or more, and the local board of education must re-establish the school as decided in the case of State ex rel. Myers vs. Board of Education, 95 O. S., 367, wherein the court, passing on a case similar to the one at hand, decided that the word "may", occurring in the last sentence of section 7730 G. C., shall be construed as meaning "shall," and therefore where a majority of the voters in such old school district sign a petition to the board of education, asking for the re-establishment of such school that has been suspended, and proving that the average daily attendance of the pupils in schools to which assigned is twelve or more, the board of education has no leeway, but must re-establish such school.

It may be said that were it not for the closing sentence of section 7730, the patrons of such district would have no recourse to bring about the re-establishment of their school, where a board of education had arbitrarily decided, without ample cause, that the school in their particular district should be discontinued, closed or suspended, such terms meaning practically the same thing. Here the school was discontinued; the school was closed and it was not in operation, and it would therefore be idle to say that the school was not suspended in effect simply because the procedure mentioned in section 7730 had not been complied with by the local board of education in showing on their minutes that such school was suspended in but one way, but had transferred the pupils, by virtue of section 7684, to another school or schools. The effect was a suspension of the school in question, and the patrons must come to the provisions of section 7730 if they desire to have such school re-established where the board does not voluntarily establsh the school.

Section 7730 G. C. in part reads:

> "* * * Upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing in the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, was twelve or more, then upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may (shall) re-establish such school."

Referring to this language of section 7730 G. C., in the case of State ex rel. Myers, vs. Board of Education, 95 O. S., 367, Judge Johnson said:

> "As already pointed out, the first clause confers upon the board absolute authority to re-establish the suspended school * * *. Unless the word 'may' was used in a mandatory sense, the remaining part of the proviso is wholly meaningless and vain. By this last clause, it is provided that the district may be re-established upon a petition signed by a majority of the voters of the district; but under the first clause the same board might re-establish the school on the petition of a small minority, or upon no petition at all. We cannot conceive, and we find nothing in the language to indicate, that the legislature enacted the additional clause without any purpose whatever in view.
> We think it clear that the legislature intended that the word 'may' when applied to the last clause in the proviso should be held to be mandatory. It intended to secure to the residents of the rural and village school district, which has twelve or more pupils of lawful school age (average daily attendance now required) the privileges of the residents of other similar districts, that have not been centralized by the affirmative vote of the people pursuant to the statute (4726 G. C.)"

You also say that the highest salary paid for school teaching in this district is eighty-five dollars per month, and desire to know if the board would be required to pay more than the maximum of eighty-five dollars, now being paid, to secure a teacher for this district after the school is re-established.

In reply to this question it may be said that the amount of salary paid a teacher by a board of education is a voluntary agreement between the board of education and the teacher, and there might be cases in which the board would be required to pay ninety dollars or one hundred dollars per month, if they could get no teacher for less money, and yet this requirement is one, if it can be called such, that requires the voluntary acquiescence of the board itself.

It is, therefore, the opinion of the Attorney-General that (1) where a board of education, acting under the provisions of section 7684 G. C., assigns all of the pupils of a school district to another district school or schools, such assignment operates as a suspension of the school in question, even though formal action regarding suspension was not taken under section 7730 G. C.; and where the district school has been closed in this manner, the patrons of the district have recourse to the provisions of section 7730 providing for the presentation to the board of education of a petition signed by a majority of the electors in the territory of the suspended district and showing also that the average daily attendance of the pupils who reside in such district, though attending other schools to which assigned, is twelve or more, such school must be re-established.

(2) Where a school district does not receive state aid, the salary to be agreed upon in the contract between the teacher and a board of education is a matter of voluntary arrangement between such board and such teacher, not governed by any maximum in amount.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—MAY ENACT ORDINANCES TO REGULATE CARRYING OF CONCEALED WEAPONS—JURISDICTION OF MAGISTRATES UNDER SECTION 12819 G. C.—NO FINAL JURISDICTION IN FELONY CASES.

1. Municipalities may legally enact ordinances regulating the carrying of concealed weapons.

2. Justices of the peace, mayors, police judges and municipal judges have jurisdiction in cases arising under section 12819 G. C., as examining magistrates only, and do not have final jurisdiction in felony cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of recent date in which you submit the following question:

> "We are taking it in view of opinion of the Attorney-General, page 1839 of the 1916 annual reports, that a municipality may not legally enact an ordinance covering the carrying of concealed weapons, and in connection therewith we respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> In view of section 12819 G. C. (107 O. L. 28), may a justice of the peace, mayor, judge of police court or judge of municipal court legally have jurisdiction in case of carrying concealed weapons?"

In reference to the first proposition presented as to the legality of an ordinance enacted by a municipality, regulating the carrying of concealed weapons, will say, that municipal corporations in their public capacity possess such powers and only such powers as are expressly granted by statute, and such as are by implication essential to carry into effect those that are expressly granted, together with such powers as are granted to them by the amended constitution of 1912.

While in the general and special powers granted by the legislature there is no express provision authorizing the enactment of ordinances by municipalities covering the carrying of concealed weapons, section 3658 of the General Code, which relates to the general powers granted to a municipality, provides as follows:

> "To prevent riot, gambling, noise and disturbance, indecent and disorderly conduct or assemblages, and to preserve the peace and good order, and to protect the property of the corporation and its inhabitants."

It would seem that by implication to enable a municipality to carry into effect the express provisions of this section "to preserve the peace and good order" the power to enact ordinances regulating the carrying of concealed weapons is reasonably implied.

Section 3628 G. C., which relates to the powers of municipalities, provides as follows:

> "To make the violation of ordinances a misdemeanor, and to provide for the punishment thereof by fine or imprisonment, or both, but such fine shall not exceed five hundred dollars and such imprisonment shall not exceed six months."

Article XVIII, section 3 of the amended constitution of Ohio provides as follows:

> "Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws."

The supreme court of Ohio, in the case of city of Fremont vs. Keating, 96 O. S. 468, clearly holds that under said constitutional provision municipalities may "adopt, and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Said opinion makes no distinction as to the application of such rule as between chartered and non-chartered municipalities.

Therefore, in view of the foregoing, I am of the opinion that non-chartered as well as chartered municipalities may enact proper ordinances regulating the carrying of concealed weapons.

In answer to your second inquiry relative to the jurisdiction of certain named courts, in cases arising under section 12819 G. C. (107 O. L. 208), you are advised that said offense as prescribed by said statute constitutes a felony under the laws of this state.

Section 13422 G. C., which relates to the jurisdiction of justices of the peace provides as follows:

> "A justice of the peace shall be a conservator of the peace and have jurisdiction in criminal cases throughout the county in which he is elected and where he resides, on view or on sworn complaint, to cause a person, charged with the commission of a felony or misdemeanor, to be arrested and brought before himself or another justice of the peace, and, if such person is brought before him, to inquire into the complaint and either discharge or recognize him to be and appear before the proper court at the time named in such recognizance, or otherwise dispose of the complaint as provided by law. He also may hear complaints of the peace and issue search warrants."

Section 4534 G. C., which relates to the jurisdiction of mayors in felony cases, provides in part as follows:

> "In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace."

Section 4577 G. C., which relates to the jurisdiction of police courts, contains the following:

> "The jurisdiction of such court to make inquiry in criminal cases shall be the same as that of a justice of the peace."

With reference to the jurisdiction of municipal courts it is necessary to look to the statute creating and establishing the power of said courts in their respective localities, to determine the extent of their jurisdiction. However, I am of the opinion that in most cases, if not in all cases, where municipal courts have been established their jurisdiction in felony cases is the same as that given to justices of the peace, mayors and police judges.

From the above it follows that said courts have jurisdiction as examining magistrates in cases arising under section 12819 G. C. However, said courts do not have final jurisdiction as under section 10 of the bill of rights of the Ohio constitution, the accused may not be convicted of the felony unless indicted by a grand jury, and the law does not provide for such action by a grand jury except in a court of common pleas, nor in fact do the statutes purport to confer upon said lower courts final jurisdiction in felony cases. However, the fact that section 12819 G. C. makes said offense a felony does not prevent a municipality from making the same act a misdemeanor by ordinance and granting final jurisdiction to proper tribunals in misdemeanor cases.

I am further of the opinion that a prosecution under such an ordinance does not prevent a prosecution under section 12819 G. C., as in the case of Koch vs. State, 53 O. S. 433, the syllabus reads:

> "A former conviction before a mayor for the violation of an ordinance is not a bar to the prosecution of an information charging the same act as a violation of the statute."

The rule in Ohio seems to be that municipalities, within the limits of the power granted to them, may pass ordinances regulating the same acts as state statutes have regulated so long as the said ordinance prescribes a punishment which limits the offense to a misdemeanor. If a city ordinance should prescribe such a punishment as would result in placing the accused in jeopardy when being prosecuted under said ordinance, this would defeat the operation of the state statute providing an offense for the same act and render said ordinance invalid.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—MAYOR OR MAGISTRATE MAY LEGALLY SUSPEND OR MODIFY A SENTENCE—WHEN TIME MAY BE GRANTED TO DEFENDANT FOR PAYMENT OF FINE—BEFORE SENTENCE IS CARRIED INTO EXECUTION.

A mayor or magistrate may legally suspend or modify a sentence, including the power to grant time to the defendant for the payment of a fine, if the same is done before said sentence is carried into execution and in the manner as provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of recent date, which is as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> The judge of a municipal court of a certain city in Ohio sentenced a defendant to pay $50.00 and costs, and allows the defendant thirty days in which to pay $25.00 of the fine and costs and sixty days in which to pay the balance, immediately releasing the accused from custody, the terms of payment being entered on the docket and made a part of the court record.
> Question: May a mayor or magistrate legally grant time for payment of fines and costs and release the prisoner as above stated?"

The suspension or modification of a sentence is controlled by what are known as the probation statutes of Ohio, and those sections of said law which I think advisable to consider in connection with your question are as follows:

> Section 13706 G. C. (108 O. L., 144). "In prosecutions for crime, except as hereinafter provided, where the defendant has pleaded or been found guilty, and the court or magistrate has power to sentence such defendant to be confined in or committed to the penitentiary, the reformatory, a jail, workhouse, or correctional institution, and the defendant has never before been imprisoned for crime, either in this state or elsewhere, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court or magistrate that the character of the defendant and circumstances of the case are such that he is not likely again to engage in an offensive course of conduct, and that the public good does not demand or require that he shall suffer the penalty imposed by law, such court or magistrate may suspend the execution of the sentence, at any time before such sentence is carried into execution, and place the defendant on probation in the manner provided by law."
> Section 13707 G. C. "This subdivision of this chapter shall not affect the laws providing the method of dealing with juvenile delinquents, nor shall detention in an institution for such juvenile delinquents be considered as imprisonment."
> Section 13708 G. C. "No person convicted of murder, arson, burglary of an inhabited dwelling house, incest, sodomy, rape without consent, assault with intent to rape, or administering poison shall have the benefit of probation."
> Section 13711 G. C. "When the sentence of the court or magistrate is that the defendant be imprisoned in a workhouse, jail, or other institution, except the penitentiary or the reformatory, or that the defendant be fined and committed until such fine be paid, the court or magistrate may suspend the execution of said sentence and place the defendant on probation, and in charge of a probation officer named in such order, in the following manner:

1. In case of sentence to a workhouse, jail or other correctional institution, the court or magistrate may suspend the execution of the sentence and direct that such suspension continue for such time, not exceeding two years, and upon such terms and conditions as it shall determine;

2. In case of a judgment of imprisonment until a fine is paid, the court may direct that the execution of the sentence be suspended on such terms as it may determine and shall place the defendant on probation to the end that said defendant may be given the opportunity to pay such fine within a reasonable time; provided, that upon payment of such fine, judgment shall be satisfied and the probation cease."

While the statutes are reasonably clear as to the authority of courts or magistrates to suspend or modify a sentence, when the accused has not been previously imprisoned for crime, in the construing of such law the courts have encountered some difficulty in determining the time at which the authority to suspend a sentence terminates after the same is pronounced. However, section 13706 supra was amended (108 O. L. 144), evidently for the manifest purpose of clearing up this point. Said section is the same as the original with the exception of the following clause, which was added in the amendment: "at any time before such sentence is carried into execution."

Paragraph 2 of section 13711 supra, specifically authorizes a court or magistrate o suspend the execution of a sentence in case of a judgment of imprisonment until the fine is paid, permitting the defendant to pay such fine within a reasonable time.

In specific answer to your inquiry I am of the opinion that a mayor or magistrate may legally suspend or modify a sentence, including the power to grant time to the defendant for the payment of a fine, provided the suspension is not for a longer period than two years and that the defendant has not previously been imprisoned for crime, if the same is done before said sentence is carried into execution and in the manner as provided by law.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

FISH AND GAME LAWS—OFFENSE COMMITTED IN PRESENCE OF GAME PROTECTOR—SECTION 1452 G. C. AUTHORIZES SUCH OFFICERS TO PROSECUTE WITHOUT APPROVAL OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY OR ATTORNEY-GENERAL—COSTS, HOW PAID, IN CASE DEFENDANT ACQUITTED OR DISCHARGED FROM CUSTODY.

1. Where an offense under the fish and game laws of Ohio has been committed in the presence of a game protector, that officer is, in contemplation of section 1452 G. C. "a person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this act," it being unnecessary, under such circumstances, that such a prosecution have the approval of either the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein the offense was committed or of the attorney-general.

2. If, in such a case, the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, the costs of prosecution, when properly certified under oath by the justice of peace or other magistrate to the county auditor, are payable upon the county auditor's warrant out of the county treasury. Section 1452 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

HON. ROBERT M. NOLL, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date, after citing sections 62 and 54 of the new fish and game code, being sections 1452 and 1444 G. C. respectively, reads in part thus:

> "In the particular case of which I inquire, J. L., deputy game protector, made affidavit that one W. D. had interfered with the said J. L. as such game protector, while making an arrest.
> The arrest of W. D. was not made at the time of such claimed interference, but later the affidavit was filed by J. L. against W. D. and he was duly arrested upon warrant issued upon such affidavit. The affidavit was not approved by the prosecuting attorney or by the attorney-general. A trial was had before the justice of the peace, and at the close of the evidence for the state, introduced by J. L., deputy game warden, the case was dismissed on the grounds that there were not facts sufficient to show a violation of the law. The affidavit filed by J. L., deputy game warden, was filed before a justice of the peace directly across the street from the office of the prosecuting attorney, but no request was made by the deputy game protector to have the prosecuting attorney approve the affidavit. The defendant having been acquitted, the justice of the peace files under section 59 a cost bill before the county auditor, and the county auditor desires my recommendation before he will pay the same. I do not desire to recommend its payment unless the law is absolutely mandatory that the same shall be paid.
> Personally, I am of the opinion that the provisions in section 5 4 providing that the protector or other public officer may make arrests without the approval of the prosecuting attorney when the offense is committed in his presence, are for the purpose of authorizing the protector or public officer to make the arrest at such time without a warrant, but that when the procedure of filing the affidavit and securing a warrant for the arrest, then such affidavit requires the endorsement or approval of the prosecuting attorney or the attorney general."

From a subsequent letter received from you, it appears it was claimed that while J. L., the game protector, was endeavoring to arrest some third party for an offense under the fish and game laws, he, W. D., interfered with him (J. L.) in respect of such arrest.

It is assumed that the affidavit against said W. D. was based on section 1442 G. C. (108 O. L. 577), which, so far as pertinent, reads:

> "No person shall interfere with, threaten, abuse, assault, obstruct or in any manner attempt to deter a protector or other police officer from carrying into effect any of the provisions of this act, or refuse to accompany a protector or other police officer when placed under arrest. Any game protector shall have the authority to make arrests under the provisions of this section for any such violations."

Said section 1452 G. C. (108 O. L. 577), and section 1444 G. C. (108 O. L. 577), are as follows:

> "Section 1452. A person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this act shall not be required to advance or secure costs therein. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, or if he be convicted and committed in default of payment of fine and costs, such costs shall be certified, under oath by the justice of the peace or other magistrate to the county auditor who shall correct all errors therein and issue his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the person or persons entitled.

Section 1444. Sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers shall enforce the laws for the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish, game and fur-bearing animals, and for this purpose they shall have the power conferred upon the fish and game protectors and receive like fees for similar services. Prosecutions by a protector or other public officer for offenses not committed in his presence shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed or upon the approval of the attorney general."

What is now section 1452 G. C. was, until the recent recodification of the fish and game laws, known as section 1404 G. C., and what is now section 1444 G. C. was known as section 1397 G. C. Construing these sections, the Attorney-General, on September 21, 1916, in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices (1916 Opin. of Atty.-Gen., Vol. II, p. 1601), said:

> "Where a prosecution is instituted under the fish and game laws of the state by a warden or other police officer authorized by law to prosecute, and the provisions of section 1397 are not observed, costs incurred therein should not be paid from the county treasury."

Other opinions of the Attorney-General to the same effect are found in 1912 Atty.-Gen. Ann. Rep., Vol. II, p. 1075, and in Opinions of Atty.-Gen., 1917, Vol. III, p. 2362.

If, however, the prosecution by a warden (or "protector," as he is now called) or other public officer, is for an offense under the fish and game laws which was committed in the presence of such protector or other public officer, then clearly the approval of either the prosecuting attorney or the Attorney-General is unnecessary.

From the statement contained in your letter, we take the fact to be that the alleged offense committed by the said W. D. was committed in the presence of the protector who instituted the prosecution. The approval of either the prosecuting attorney or the Attorney-General was, therefore, not necessary.

Careful attention has been given to your suggestion that the language in section 1444 G. C., viz.:

> "Prosecutions by a protector or other public officer for offenses not committed in his presence shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed or upon the approval of the Attorney-General," means this: That the fact of the commission of the offense in the presence of the protector or other public officer authorizes such protector or officer to arrest the defendant at such time and without a warrant; but that if the protector or officer does not arrest at that time, but goes through the procedure of first filing an affidavit and causing a warrant to be issued, then the prosecution must be upon the approval of either the prosecuting attorney or Attorney-General.

At least two objections are seen to this theory: First, the authority of the protector to arrest upon sight and without a warrant is not given by the provision in question at all. If it exists in any given case, it exists by reason of some other provision of the statutes, possibly that part of section 1442 G. C. which says:

"* * * and he may arrest on sight and without warrant a person found violating any such law."

Secondly, such a theory does violence to the clear intent expressed in section 1444 G. C., which was to require the prosecuting attorney's or the Attorney-General's approval only where the offense was not committed in the protector's presence.

That part of section 1444 G. C. which we have been considering was enacted for a purpose and was doubtless intended to further some policy of administering the fish and game laws. What was that policy? Was it a policy with respect to the manner of arresting a person found violating the fish and game laws, arrests upon warrant being made a mere formal matter (because requiring the precedent approval of the prosecuting attorney or the Attorney-General) than arrests upon sight without a warrant? Or was it a policy of safeguarding the public and the public's money from the consequences of ill-advised, unnecessary arrests?

Upon reflection it seems to me that the statute in question reflects the policy last above stated. In this connection attention is called to that part of the opinion of the Attorney-General hereinbefore referred to (1916 Opin. of Atty.-Gen., Vol. II, p. 1601) which speaks of what is now section 1444 G. C. in the f llowing language:

"It is quite evident from the foregoing provisions of law that one of the purposes, if not the moving purpose, of the legislature in providing for approval by the prosecuting attorney or Attorney-General of prosecutions for offenses not committed in the presence of the officer * * * was to prevent the institution and the consequent incurring of costs in cases in which the facts or the available evidence did not justify such action."

Answering your question directly, I advise you that where an offense under the fish and game laws of Ohio has been committed in the presence of a game protector, that officer is, in contemplation of section 1452 G. C. "a person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this act," it being unnecessary, under such circumstances, that such a prosecution have the approval of either the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein the offense was committed, or of the Attorney-General. If, in such a case, the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, the costs of prosecution, when properly certified under oath by the justice of peace or other magistrate to the county auditor, are payable upon the county auditor's warrant out of the county treasury. Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, ABSTRACT OF TITLE AND DEED OF ELSWORTH CLAAR TO STATE OF OHIO FOR PART OF LOT No. 14 OF GEORGE STEVENSON'S HEIRS' SUBDIVISION, RANGE 18, UNITED STATES MILITARY LANDS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am transmitting herewith deed of Elsworth Claar to the state of Ohio for a lot approximately 42 feet by 125 feet, part of lot No. 14 of George Stevenson's heirs' subdivision, quarter township 4, township 1, range 18, United States military lands.

The lot conveyed adjoins the state fair grounds, and was purchased by the state in conformity with authority granted by section 1095-1 (107 O. L. 463). The consideration named in the deed is $800.00; but $100.00 of this is being contributed by the city of Columbus.

For your information I may say that the revenue stamp has been omitted from the deed because of rulings of the United States treasury department that a stamp is not required on conveyances made to the state.

The deed is to be recorded in the office of the recorder of Franklin county, Ohio, and the state is to pay the last half of the 1919 taxes payable in June, 1920. The present tenant of the premises is Will Hall, who pays $8.00 per month rent. His rent is paid up to and including November 30, 1919, and the state is entitled to the rent from December 1, 1919.

I transmit also abstract of title covering the premises conveyed. In my opinion this abstract shows in Elsworth Claar a good and indefeasible title free of all encumbrances except 1919 taxes, though not a perfect record title.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

TOWN HALL—TWO-THIRDS MAJORITY OF ALL BALLOTS CAST AT AN ELECTION NOT NECESSARY ON QUESTION OF BUILDING OR ENLARGING TOWN HALL AT A GREATER COST THAN $2,000.

A two-thirds majority of all the ballots cast at an election, on the question of building or enlarging a town hall, at a greater cost than $2,000, is not necessary to carry such election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1919.

HON. GEORGE W. SHEPPARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department, as follows:

> "When a township hall is to be constructed at a greater cost than $2,000, and the proposition of constructing such hall at a greater cost than $2,000 is submitted to a vote of the people of the township, is a majority vote sufficient to authorize the trustees to issue bonds of the township for the purpose of constructing said hall or does it require a two-thirds vote? "

Sections 3260, 3395 and 3396 G. C. are pertinent to your inquiry.

Section 3260 authorizes the township trustees to purchase a site and erect thereon a town hall "if a majority of the electors of the township * * * voting at a general election vote in favor thereof." Under this section the cost of such hall may not exceed two thousand dollars.

Section 3395 authorizes the erection of a town hall, at a greater cost than is otherwise allowed by law, "upon submission of the question of the erection of such hall to the electors of the township."

Section 3396 further provides the manner of submission of such question and provides:

> "If a majority of all the votes cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax."

The language used in this section leaves no doubt as to what quantity of ballots the affirmative ballots are to be compared with, viz., "all the ballots cast." This does not require a two-thirds majority.

It is possible that this section has been confused with section 3402 in the same chapter which reads:

> "If at such election two-thirds of the electors of the township and of the village voting, vote in favor of such improvement, the trustees of such township and the council of the village shall jointly take such action as is necessary to carry out such improvement."

This section, however, relates to the joint improvement provided for in section 3399 and not to the election referred to in section 3396 (supra). It rather emphasizes the lack of a necessity for a two-thirds majority in section 3396, both from its position in the chapter and the later enactment of 3402, as well as the different language employed in the two sections.

You are therefore advised that it is the opinion of the Attorney-General that a two-thirds majority of all the ballots cast at an election, on the question of building or enlarging a town hall, at a greater cost than $2,000, is not necessary to carry such election.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—DAY WHEN LIEN OF ASSESSMENT ATTACHES UNDER HIGHWAY ACT, 106 O. L., 574, AND ALSO UNDER HIGHWAY ACT, 107 O. L., 69—DUTY OF DESIGNATING LOCATIONS WHERE MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR WORK TO BE DONE ON HIGHWAYS—SECTIONS 6956-1 AND 6956-1a G. C., 108 O. L., 503, CONSIDERED.

2. The duty of designating locations where maintenance and repair work is to be done on highways which the county is directed or authorized to maintain and repair by the use of funds mentioned in sections 6956-1 and 6956-1a G. C., 108 O. L. 503, rests with the county commissioners and not with the county surveyor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1919.

HON. W. R. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date is received reading as follows:

> "I desire the opinion of your department on two separate questions.
> I have been requested by the county auditor and treasurer to ask your department for an opinion as to when the lien attaches on road assessments, that is:
> When does the assessment made against the abutting property for the purpose of paying a part of the construction cost of an inter-county highway constructed under the supervision of the state highway department become a lien on said property?
> My contention is that the last two or three paragraphs of section 1214 as found on page 129 of Ohio Laws, Vol. 107, fixes the time when the lien attaches.
> The second question I desire to ask your department is:
> Are the commissioners compelled to turn over to the county surveyor all of the road repair money to be used and expended by him as he may see fit or shall the commissioners retain control of the money and direct the surveyor on which roads they desire the repairs to be made. In other words, if the surveyor is authorized to repair the roads do the commissioners lose control of the money and lose their right to dictate where the money shall be expended?"

Your first question as to the date at which an assessment in connection with the state aid highway improvement became a lien, cannot be answered generally, but must have reference to the statutes which were in force at the time the improvement became a pending proceeding. This latter subject is dealt with in an opinion of this department of date April 29, 1918, found in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1918 at page 624.

As to the improvements which became pending proceedings on and after June 28, 1917, the answer to your first question is comparatively simple, since the statutes in point are sections 1214 and 1216 as amended in 107 O. L. pages 129, 130. Section 1214 because of its length need not be here quoted in full. It makes provision as to the shares to be borne by the county, township and property owners concerned in a state aid highway improvement, and specifies the steps to be taken by the county commissioners or township trustees as the case may be, in connection with the asessment against the adjoining lands. Briefly, these steps embrace the making of a tentative apportionment by the county surveyor, the filing of such apportionment with the county commissioners or township trustees; publication of notice that such apportionment has been made; opportunity to property owners to object to the apportionment, and hearing by the commissioners upon such apportionment with the right of said commissioners to make such change in the apportionment as they find just and equitable. The last sentence of said section is:

> "Such assessments when so approved and confirmed shall be a lien on the land chargeable therewith."

Section 1216, among other things, provides that the assessments shall be certified to and placed by the county auditor upon a special duplicate to be collected as other taxes, etc. Very plainly, by the provisions of the last sentence of section 1214 as above quoted, the assessments become a lien upon the date on which they are approved and confirmed by the county commissioners.

The answer to your first question, so far as it concerns assessments made in connection with improvements which became pending proceedings under the so-called Cass highway act is not so readily arrived at. The sections of the Cass law which relate to assessments are applicable to proceedings which became pending proceedings between the first Monday in September, 1915, and the 28th day of June, 1917.

Section 1214 as it appeared in said Cass law (106 O. L. 637), after providing for the percentages to be borne by the county, township and property owners, recited:

> "* * * The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of the land so located. At least ten days' notice of the time and place of making such apportionment shall be given to the persons affected thereby, and an opportunity given them to be heard. The township trustees shall cause a notice to be served upon the abutting property owners, stating the time and place for hearing on the apportionment and the amount to be paid by each abutting property owner. In case any of the abutting property owners are non-residents, such notice shall be given by one publication in some newspaper of general circulation in the county. If the improvement lies in two or more townships, the amount to be paid by each, shall be apportioned according to the number of lineal feet of the improvement lying in each township."

Section 1216 as it appeared in the Cass law (106 O. L. 638) reads as follows:

> "The township trustees shall certify the assessments so made to the county auditor, who shall place them upon the tax duplicate against the several properties benefited as shown by said assessment list. The county treasurer shall collect such assessments in the same manner as other taxes are collected. The township trustees shall pay to the county the portion of the cost and expense apportioned to the township, in the same manner as other claims against the township are paid."

We are thus left without any exact statement in the statutes themselves as to when the assessment should actually become a lien. However, we are not without judicial authority which by analogy furnishes an answer to your inquiry.

In the case of Cattell vs. Putnam, 73 O. S. 147, the supreme court had occasion to consider the question of the time at which the lien of an assessment under the then existing ditch statutes attached to affected lands. The supreme court, in the course of the opinion, makes a brief abstract of the county ditch statutes; and it will be seen that those statutes do not in terms fix the date at which the lien attached. It will be noted also that the statutes provided for a preliminary apportionment before the time set for letting the work. The fact that such preliminary apportionment was provided for gave rise to the claim which was being made in the case that the lien attached when the preliminary apportionment was approved. However, the supreme court called attention to and quoted the provisions of section 4479 of the Revised Statutes as follows:

> "When the working sections of the improvement are let, as hereinbefore provided, and the costs and expenses of location and construction, and all compensation and damages are ascertained, the commissioners shall meet and determine in what time and in what number of assessments they will require the same to be paid, and order that the assessments, as made by them, be placed on the duplicate accordingly, against all the lots or lands, or corporate roads or railroads assessed, and they shall also determine whether they will issue bonds to pay such costs and expenses."

The conclusion of the supreme court as set out in the syllabus is as follows:

> "An assessment for a county ditch is not made by the county commissioners until it is ordered by them to be placed on the duplicate against the lots or lands or corporations or railroads assessed as provided by section 4479 of the Revised Statutes."

Another case which may be mentioned, arising under the same ditch statutes as those just referred to, was that of Lackey vs. Sheriff, 33 W. L. B. 38. The report of that case shows that in connection with ditch proceedings pending before them, certain county commissioners on February 2, 1886, made a finding to the effect that assessments be placed on the special duplicate, etc., and that on February 16, 1886, plaintiff delivered to defendant his warranty deed dated February 13, 1886, for the affected premises, and at the time of delivery of said deed no part of the ditch had been constructed and neither of the parties had any actual knowledge of the location. The common pleas court found as its conclusion of law that the ditch assessment became a valid lien on February 2, 1886, "and that on both February 13th, and February 16th, 1886, it was an encumbrance against the real estate in the petition described."

The report of the case further shows that the circuit court affirmed the judgment of the court of common pleas, and that the supreme court on January 15, 1895, affirmed the judgment without report.

The principles embodied in the two cases cited would seem to be fully applicable to sections 1214 and 1216 as they existed in the Cass law, with the result that it is to be concluded that the lien of an assessment under those sections attaches on the date that the township trustees approve the assessments. This conclusion is not affected by the fact that the further duty rests with the township trustees of certifying the assessments to the county auditor; because it is quite evident that such action is to be considered as a mere ministerial duty on the part of the trustees, and hence is not to be treated as a jurisdictional step in the perfection of the lien. See Otte vs. State, 9 C. C. (N. S.) 293; 19 O. C. D. 203.

The assessment statutes as they existed before the passage of the Cass act were quite similar to their form as appearing in the Cass act; so that it is believed that the foregoing discussion will serve to answer fully your inquiry, although, as above noted, the exact form of the statutes as applicable to a given proceeding must be considered in determining the date at which the lien attaches.

In your second question you refer to "road repair money;" and from the nature of your inquiry, it is assumed that you refer to the proceeds of the levy which has been heretofore authorized by section 6956-1. That section was amended and supplemented at the recent session of the general assembly, and its new form set forth in sections 6956-1 and 6956-1a (108 O. L. 503) is as follows:

> "Sec. 6956-1. After the annual estimate for the county has been filed with the county commissioners by the county surveyor, and the county commissioners have made such changes and modifications in said estimate as they deem proper, they shall then make their levy for the purpose set forth in said estimate, upon all the taxable property of the county not exceeding in the aggregate two mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said county. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for said purposes, but subject, however, to the limitations upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. The provisions of this section shall not, however, prevent the commissioners from using any surplus in the general funds of the county for the purposes set forth in said estimate.
> Sec. 6956-1a. The board of county commissioners of each county shall provide annually by taxation an adequate fund for the maintenance and repair of improved county highways. Such fund shall be provided by levies made under sections 6926, 6927 and 6956-1 of the General Code and the several sections amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto. The maintenance and repair fund so provided shall not be less than one hundred dollars for each mile of improved county highway within the county. Such levy or levies for maintenance and repair purposes shall be separately set forth in the annual budget of the county commissioners presented to the budget commission, and the maintenance and repair levies so made by the county commissioners pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be preferred levies as against any other levies made by the commissioners for county road purposes. Should the budget commission of any county be unable, by reason of the limitations of law, to allow all of the road levies made by county commissioners, such reductions as are necessary therein shall be first made in levies other than those for maintenance and repair purposes made under the provisions of this section. The fund produced by such levy or levies for maintenance and repair purposes shall not be subject to transfer by order of court or otherwise and shall be used solely for the maintenance and repair of the improved county roads within the county. The provisions of this section shall not prevent the county commissioners from using any other available road funds for the maintenence and repair of improved county roads."

Your inquiry as to whether the expenditure of the accruals of such levy is to be made under the direction of the county surveyor or of the county commissioners doubtless arises through consideration of certain broad provisions of the duties of the county surveyor. As to that officer, it is noted that section 7184 opens with the statement:

> "The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners."

Section 7192 provides in part:

> "The county surveyor shall supervise the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the highways, bridges and culverts under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners."

Section 2792, in referring to the county surveyor, contains the statement:

"He shall prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads * * * constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county."

However, in contrast to the provisions just quoted, there are other statutory provisions which leave no doubt that the primary duty of directing the expenditure of the proceeds of the levy above authorized rests with the county commissioners; among which provisions may be noted the following:

The last sentence of section 6956-1 and the last sentence of section 6956-1a above quoted are to the effect that the provisions of said respective sections shall not prevent the county commissioners "from using other available road funds for the maintenance and repair of improved county roads."

Section 2788-1 as recently enacted (108 O. L. 497) after making reference to road maintenance and repair work under the supervision of the county surveyor, states that:

"The county surveyor when authorized by the county commissioners, shall appoint a maintenance supervisor or supervisors to have charge of the maintenance of improved highways within a district or districts established by the commissioners and surveyor and containing not less than ten miles of improved county roads. Such maintenance supervisor shall act under the direction of the county surveyor; and the county surveyor, when authorized by the county commissioners, shall establish a patrol or gang system of maintenance under the direct charge of such supervisor. The compensation of such supervisor shall be fixed upon a per diem basis by the county commissioners and shall be paid out of the road repair or county road fund upon the approval of the county surveyor."

Section 7198 provides that:

"The county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account."

Section 7200 authorizes the county commissioners to purchase machinery, tools and equipment for use in road maintenance and repair—the cost to be paid out of the road funds of the county.

Section 7203 permits the county commissioners or the county surveyor when authorized by the county commissioners to make purchase of road material, etc., from public institutions.

Section 7214 reads in part:

"The county commissioners or township trustees may contract for and purchase material as is necessary for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing any highways, bridges or culverts within the county * * *."

The foregoing references make plain that there is no conflict beteeen the statutes relating to county commissioners and those prescribing the duties of the county surveyor. On the one hand, direct authority is conferred on the county commissioners to purchase machinery, equipment and material, and on the other hand, the county surveyor is without authority to make purchases or employ teams and labor without the previous authorization of the county commissioners. In this situation, it necessarily follows that power is lodged in the commissioners to say where the material will be used and where the laborers will be employed; for otherwise the commissioners might refuse to purchase material or to authorize the county surveyor to employ teams and laborers, etc. The various statutes quoted with reference to the county surveyor plainly indicate that the range of his activity is confined to taking charge and supervision of repair and maintenance work after such work has been provided for and ordered by the county commissioners.

Two other statutes lending strong support to the conclusion just stated are sections 7464 and 7467. Subdivision (b) of section 7464 reads:

> "* * * (b) County roads shall include all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon, or heretofore built by the state and not a part of the inter-county or main market system of roads, together with such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, and all such roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners."

The first sentence of section 7467 reads:

> 'The state, county and township shall each maintain their respective roads as designated in the classification hereinabove set forth; provided, however, that either the county or township may, by agreement between the county commissioners and township trustees, contribute to the repair and maintenance of the road under the control of the other."

Specific answer to your two questions may there ore be found in the following summary:

(1) The lien of assessments growing out of proceedings under the so-called Cass highway act (106 O. L. 574) attaches on the day that such assessments are approved by the township trustees, and the lien of assessments growing out of proceedings under the so-called White-Mulcahy act (107 O. L. 69) attaches on the day that such assessments are approved and confirmed by the county commissioners or township trustees.

(2) The duty of des gnating locations where maintenance and repair work is to be done on highways which the county is directed or authorized to maintain and repair by the use of funds mentioned in sections 6956-1 and 6956-1a G. C. (108 O. L. 503), rests with the county commissioners and not with the county surveyor.

INHERITANCE TAX LAW—EXEMPTIONS APPLICABLE TO SHARES OF THE INDIVIDUAL SUCCESSORS AND NOT TO ESTATE AS A WHOLE—FEES AND COSTS PAYABLE OUT OF TAXES COLLECTED.

1. The exemptions of the inheritance tax law apply to the shares of the individual successors, and not to the estate as a whole.

2. Fees and costs charged and incurred in inheritance tax proceedings are payable out of the taxes collected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1919.

HON. ROBERT B. MCMULLEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You submit for the opinion of this department the following questions:

"1. Under section 5334 General Code, do the exemptions referred to apply to the estate as a whole or do they apply to the succession passing to each person? For example, under sub-paragraph 2 of section 5334 G. C., if an estate valued at $15,000.00 passes to five heirs, one of whom received $5,000, and the other four receive $2,500 each, will the exemption of $3,500 apply to the entire estate of $15,000 or does it apply to the share received by each individual heir?

2. Are the fees and costs payable from the estate?"

In reply to your first question, you are referred to the following provisions of the inheritance tax law:

"Sec. 5331. As used in this subdivision of this chapter:

1. The words 'estate' and 'property' include everything capable of ownership, * * * which passes to any one person * * * from any one person, whether by a single succession or not.

Sec. 5334. * * * Successions passing to other persons shall be subject to the provisions of said section to the extent only of the value of the property transferred above the following exemptions: * * *."

These provisions suggest that the particular exemptions are to be subtracted from the amount passing from the decedent to a given person. Assuming, as you apparently assume, that all the successors to the estate referred to by you belong in the second class with respect to the exemptions, there would be but one taxable succession in the estate, namely, that of $5,000.00, the tax on which would be one per cent. of $1,500.00, or $15.00. The other successions being less than the exemption of $3,500.00 would not be taxable.

Your second question is answered by section 5348-10 of the law.

"Sec. 5348-10. Such fees as are allowed by law to the probate judge for services performed under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be fixed in each case and certified by him on the order fixing the taxes, together with the fees of the sheriff or other officers and the expenses of the county auditor. The county auditor shall allow such fees and expenses out of said taxes when paid and credit the same to such fee funds, and draw his warrants on the treasurer in favor of the officers personally entitled thereto, payable from such taxes, as the case may require."

This is a full provision for the taxation and payment of fees incurred in the judicial proceeding to assess the tax. The official fees of the county auditor and the county treasurer, which of course are not in the nature of "costs," are provided for by sections 2624-1 and 2685-1 G. C. as enacted.

Under all these circumstances, the fees charged and costs incurred are to be payable out of the taxes collected, and not out of the estate.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

CORONER—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO HOLD INQUEST UNDER SECTION 921 G. C. UNLESS DEATH OCCURRED AT A MINE OR UNDER SECTION 2856 G. C. THERE IS REASON TO BELIEVE DEATH WAS CAUSED BY UNLAWFUL MEANS.

The coroner is without authority to hold an inquest under section 921 G. C. unless death occurred at a mine, or under section 2856 G. C. unless he has substantial reaason for believing or surmising that death was caused by unlawful means.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEECH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date inquiring whether or not the coroner of your county should hold an inquest over the body of one B. M., late of your county was duly received.

The statutes of this state imposing duties upon the coroner with respect to inquests over the body of deceased persons are sections 921 and 2856 G. C.

The former section provides for the holding of an inquest upon the body of a person whose death occurred at a mine, but since your letter discloses that decedent's death did not occur at a mine, but was the result of an injury which had been received at a mine sometime prior thereto, that section has no application to the present inquiry. The latter section provides that the coroner shall hold an inquest when informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been "caused by violence" has been found within the county, and that he shall proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, etc.

In State vs. Bellows, 62 O. S. 307, the court held that death is supposed to have been caused by violence within the meaning of the section just referred to, whenever the coroner has substantial reason for believing or surmising that death was caused by unlawful means. In the opinion, at page 310, the court, after stating that the inquest is intended to aid in the detection of crime and in the punishment of those who perpetrated it, said:

> "A death 'caused by violence' is a death caused by unlwaful means, such as usually calls for the punishment of those who employ them. * * * 'Death is supposed to have been caused by violence whenever from such observation as he may be able to make, and from such information as may come to him, the coroner is for reasons of substance led to surmise or think that the death has been so caused."

In 1914 Annual Report of the Attorney-General, Vol. II, page 1529, it was held that death by accidental drowning is not a death caused by violence, so as to justify the coroner in holding an inquest under authority of section 2856 G. C.

In 1913 Annual Report of the Attorney-General, Vol. II, page 1281, it was said:

> "The coroner * * * can only hold an inquest when he knows or has good reason to suspect that death has been caused by violence, by the use of unlawful means.
> He would not be authorized to hold an inquest over a body of a person whose death was caused by railroad accident, or by accident in a factory, if the accident was not caused by unlawful means, or if there was no reason to suspect that it was caused by unlawful means.
> An inquest would not be authorized where death was caused by or resulted from disease, such as asthma, pneumonia, bronchitis, still born, starved to death, tuberculosis, and other similar diseases.
> In order to hold an inquest it must be a death by violence, and not a natural or mere accidental death. An accidental death without reasonable ground to believe that it was caused by unlawful means, would not authorize an inquest."

In 1918 Opinions of the Attorney-General, Vol. II, page 1226, it was held that if there was ground for a suspicion that death was caused by "criminal negligence or violence" an inquest should be held. Citing 1905 Annual Report of the Attorney-General, page 125.

You are therefore advised that section 921 G. C. has no application to the facts stated in your letter, and, also that the coroner is without authority to hold an inquest under section 2856 G. C. unless the death of Mr. M. was "caused by violence," as that phrase has been defined in the authorities above referred to, which, I gather from your letter, is not the case. However, if the coroner is, for reasons of substance, led to believe that death was "caused by violence," an inquest should be held, and for such service he would be entitled to the regular fees in such cases.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO CERTAIN LANDS IN TOWNSHIP OF ATHENS, ATHENS COUNTY, TO BE TRANSFERRED TO STATE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1919.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have made an examination of an abstract submitted to me, certified by R. W. Finsterwald, Athens, Ohio, November 1, 1919, and supplemented by him by letter with enclosures, dated December 8, 1919, with reference to the title to the following described premises:

> Situate in the township of Athens, in the county of Athens, and state of Ohio, and in the city of Athens, to-wit: Outlots numbered ninety-one (91), ninety-two (92), ninety-three (93), ninety-five (95), ninety-six (96) and ninety-seven (97); also all that part of outlots numbered eighty-nine (89), ninety (90), ninety-eight (98) and ninety-nine (99), lying on the south side of the fence, now in use along the south side of the old canal bed, as shown and indicated upon the survey of said premises made by S. H. Hibbard, surveyor, and dated December 3 to 7, 1915, and containing thirty-eight (38) acres more or less, as shown by said survey.

I find it somewhat difficult to trace the chain of title to said premises in the early transfers as shown by the abstract. However, by the transfer of Moses Arnold and wife to Henry B. Lindley, September 27, 1854, as shown on page 67 of said abstract, and various transfers previous to this date, as shown in the abstract, the said Henry B. Lindley acquired the title to all the property included in the above description, and from this time the title can be definitely traced.

The abstract is somewhat complicated because of the various leases which were granted by the Ohio University. However, in my opinion, whatever imperfections there may be in this respect are cured by the governor's deed to William A. Moore, Trustee, dated March 23, 1917, made in pursuance of an act of the General Assembly of the state of Ohio entitled: "An act authorizing the conveyance of lands held under leases from the Ohio University" passed April 19, 1883.

According to the abstract, a mortgage given by C. T. Arms and wife to Henry B. Lindley, June 9, 1856 for $240.00, as shown on p. 73, has not been released. Also a mortgage of C. T. Arms and wife given to Henry B. Lindley, dated January 27, 1858, for $216.25, has not been released (p. 74). However, the court proceedings as shown on p. 76 indicate that these mortgages should be released.

On p. 79 the mortgage given by John B. Paul to Henry B. Lindley on May 1, 1862, for $700.00 is not released upon the record.

However, I am of the opinion that because of the lapse of time since the right of action of the mortgagees would have accrued, they would be barred by the statute of limitations from claiming any interest in the premises described. I base my opinion in this respect upon the following cases:

51 O. S. 240.
67 O. S. 316.
16 O. C. C. (n. s.) 427.

I am further of the opinion that said abstract shows a good and sufficient title to said premises to be in the name of John Finsterwald at the date of said abstract, subject to taxes for the year 1919, which are a lien upon said premises.

Said abstract does not show that any examination was made of the records of any of the United States courts.

I have also examined a deed submitted for approval, wherein John Finsterwald and Mary Finsterwald, his wife, are named as grantors, and the state of Ohio is the grantee; consideration $10,000.00; executed November 1, 1919. I am of the opinion that said deed is sufficient to convey the title of said John Finsterwald to the premises above described, to the state of Ohio when properly delivered. The proper amount of documentary stamps should be placed upon said deed and cancelled.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, LEASE TO CANAL LANDS, AKRON, OHIO, TO THE STAR PLANING MILL COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 22, in which you enclose lease, in triplicate, for my approval, as follows:

	Valuation.
To The Star Planing Mill Company, canal lands in the city of Akron, Ohio	$14,400 00

I have carefully examined said lease, find it correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning the same with my approval endorsed thereon.

It is noted that the above lease is to a corporation, namely, The Star Planing Mill Company. This lease is not accompanied by the usual certificate of authority on the part of corporation officers to execute. However, I do not regard this as at all vital so far as the interests of the state are concerned, and am only calling your attention to it so that the lease may be completed in accordance with your usual practice.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS—PAR VALUE OF SHARES OF CAPITAL STOCK MAY BE INCREASED OR REDUCED UNDER SECTION 8719 G. C. BY INCREASING OR DECREASING NUMBER OF SHARES INTO WHICH CAPITAL STOCK DIVIDED, PROVIDED AUTHORIZED CAPITAL STOCK IS NOT INCREASED OR DIMINISHED—PAR VALUE OF SHARES MAY BE REDUCED UNDER SECTION 8700 G. C.

The par value of the shares of capital stock of corporations organized under the general corporation laws of this state, may be increased or reduced in the exercise of the power conferred upon such corporations by section 8719 G. C. to amend their articles of incorporation so as to increase or decrease the number of shares into which their capital stock is divided, provided the authorized capital stock of the companies is not increased or diminished thereby; and the par value of shares may also be reduced under section 8700 G. C. governing the reduction of capital stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1919.

HON. HARVEY C. SMITH, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date inquiring whether a domestic corporation has authority under section 8719 G. C. to change the par value of its shares by amending its articles of incorporation, was duly received.

The statute referred to, so far as pertinent to your inquiry, provides that a corporation organized under the general corporation laws of this state may amend its articles of incorporation:

> "So as to increase or decrease the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided; to provide for preferred stock, or dispense with unissued preferred stock; to change unissued common stock to preferred stock, within the limits permitted by law; to change unissued preferred stock to common stock; to add any or all of the provisions permitted by sections 8668 and 8669 of the General Code, or to make new provisions of such nature with respect to newly authorized preferred stock; or to amend or eliminate such provisions as to unissued preferred stock; or to add to the articles anything omitted from, or which lawfully might have been provided for originally, or to take out of the articles any unnecessary provisions or provisions which might lawfully have been omitted from them originally. But the authorized capital stock of a corporation shall not be increased or diminished by such amendment."

The general rule is that a corporation cannot increase or reduce the amount of its capital stock, or the number or par value of its shares, without warrant of statutory authority (2 Clark & Marshall, Corps. pp. 1272 et seq., and 1302; 1 Cook, Corps. sections 281, 290; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, section 290; Beach, Corps. section 468; 5 Fletcher, Corps. section 3473), and then only in the mode and subject to the limitations or restrictions prescribed by the statute which confers the authority (5 Fletcher, Corps., sections 3460, 3471).

The authority conferred upon corporations by section 8719 G. C. to increase or decrease the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided, subject to the limitation or restriction that the company's authorized capital stock shall not be increased or diminished thereby, warrants the company in either increasing the number of shares of capital stock and making a corresponding reduction in their par value (as where the number of shares is doubled and the par value of each share is reduced one-half), or in reducing the number of its shares and making a corresponding increase in their par value (as where the number of shares is decreased one-half and the par value of each share doubled). In neither case would there be an increase or reduction in the amount of the company's authorized capital stock. Indeed, the only way in which the power to increase or decrease the number of shares could be exercised, without effecting an increase or reduction in authorized capital stock, would be to either increase or reduce the number of shares and change the par value of the shares to such an amount which, when multiplied by the total number of new shares, would produce a result equal to the amount of the company's authorized capital stock. Any other method of exercising the power would result in either increasing or decreasing the company's authorized capital stock—a result which the statute expressly forbids.

In the event it is desired to increase or reduce the amount of authorized capital stock, companies subject to the general corporation laws must proceed under sections 8698 and 8700 G. C.—the former governing the increase, and the latter the reduction. Of course, if the original articles of incorporation do not provide for preferred stock, and it is desired to increase the authorized capital stock by issuing preferred stock, the company must, in addition thereto, also amend its articles so as to provide for the new class of stock. See section 8698, fifth paragraph.

In 1911-12 Annual Report of Attorney-General, Vol. I, p. 126, it was held that a domestic corporation was not authorized by section 8719 G. C. to change the par value of its shares, but since that opinion was rendered the statute has been amended so as to empower the company to increase or decrease the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided, provided the authorized capital stock is not increased or diminished thereby. As already pointed out, the only way in which the number of shares into which the company's capital stock is divided can be increased or diminished without increasing or diminishing its authorized capital stock, would be to either increase the number of shares and make a reduction in their par value, or reduce the number of shares and make an increase in their par value.

The only other general statute authorizing a change in the par value of shares is section 8700 G. C., which provides that a corporation may reduce the amount of its capital stock and the nominal value of its shares. The change is effected, not by amending the articles under section 8719 G. C., but by the board of directors acting with the written consent of the persons in whose names a majority of the shares stand on the books of the company. The object to be effected by section 8700 G .C. is a reduction in capital stock, whereas section 8719 G. C. expressly prohibits such a change being made by amendment.

You are therefore advised that the par value of the shares of corporations organized under the general corporation laws of this state may be increased or reduced in the exercise of the power conferred upon such corporations by section 8719 G. C. to amend their articles of incorporation so as to increase or decrease the number of shares into which their capital stock is divided, provided the authorized capital stock of the companies is not increased or diminished thereby, and also that the par value of shares may be reduced under section 8700 G. C. governing the reduction of capital stock.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—ASSESSMENTS UNDER SECTIONS 6922 AND 1214 G. C. MAY BE PAID IN INSTALLMENTS ONLY AND NOT AS LUMP SUM UNLESS INTEREST INCLUDED—ASSESSMENTS UNDER SECTION 1214 G. C. NOT TO BE MADE BEFORE BONDS ISSUED UNDER SECTION 1223 G. C.—WORK MUST BE COMPLETED.

1. The road improvement assessments mentioned in sections 6922 and 1214 *G. 2. The assessment referred to in section 1214 G. C. is not to be made before bonds are issued under section 1223 G. C., but is to be made upon completion of the work and apportionment of the cost by the state highway commissioner as directed by section 1211 G. C. (Opinion of Attorney-General of date July 3, 1916, Opinions of Attorney-General 1916, p. 1141, not followed.)

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt is acknowledged of your communication submitting for opinion two inquiries, the first of which is as follows:

> "What, if any, provision, is there for the payment of cash by the property owner whose lands are assessed by the county commissioners for the improvement of a county road or an inter-county highway? Old section 6924 made such provision for the improvement of a county road, but this is repealed. My opinion is that there is no authority for the property owner to pay cash when bonds are issued."

It is assumed that your inquiry relates to assessments on account of improvements made by county commissioners as authorized by sections 6906 to 6955-2, as well as to assessments on account of state aid improvements made under the provisions of section 1178 to 1231-11.

So far as concern improvements of the class first named, it is to be noted that there appeared as part of the so-called Cass act (106 O. L. 574), section 6924, since repealed, reading as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall fix a time within which such assessments may be paid in cash, and they shall give notice by publication once a week for two consecutive weeks in a newspaper published and of general circulation in said county, if there be any such paper published in said county, but if there be no such paper published in said county then in a newspaper having general circulation in said county, of the time within which such assessment may be paid."

The repeal of said section 6924 as of June 28, 1917 (107 O. L. 69), leaves the county commissioners without any express statutory authority for accepting payment in cash of assessments made in connection with improvements authorized by said sections 6906 to 6955-2. However, it might well be urged as a practical proposition that if the assessments made in connection with improvements so authorized must be made and levied against affected lands before bonds may be issued under section 6929 in anticipation of such assessments and in anticipation of the taxes provided for by sections 6926 and 6927, then there would be no objection to provision by the commissioners for a period of time before bonds are issued during which said assessments might be paid in cash, and a pro tanto reduction made in the amount of the bond issue. It therefore becomes necessary to inquire whether in fact the assessment must be made and levied before bonds in anticipation thereof may lawfully be issued under section 6929.

In this connection it is proper to refer to an opinion of this department of date of July 3, 1916, appearing in Opinions of Attorney-General for that year at page 1141. The following is taken from said opinion:

> "If any part of the cost and expense of the improvement is to be specially assessed upon benefited real estate, the further steps provided by sections 6922 to 6924, G. C., inclusive, should be taken before bonds are issued. That is to say, the surveyor should make his estimated assessment and file the same in the office of the county commissioners, notice that the estimated assessment has been made and is on file and that objections will be heard at a certain time should be given, the assessment should be approved and confirmed either as originally made or as modified by the commissioners and the persons specially assessed should be given an opportunity to pay their assessments in cash. When all the above requirements have been complied with, the county commissioners will be authorized to issue and sell the bonds of the county, if in their judgment it is deemed necessary, in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expenses of the improvement. If any of the cost and expense of the improvement has been specially assessed and any part of the special assessments has been paid in cash, then, of course, it will not, under any circumstances, be necessary to sell bonds in anticipation of the collection of the special assessments already paid. Answering your question specifically, I advise you that the steps above outlined are jurisdictional to the authority of the county commissioners to issue bonds under section 6929 G. C."

It is to be observed in connection with the opinion just quoted from that at the time of its rendition said section 6924, as above quoted, was in full force and effect. This fact may have had much to do with the conclusion reached in said opinion that the making and levying of the assessment was jurisdictional to the authority of the county commissioners to issue bonds under section 6929 G. C.; although it is to be said, on the other hand, that county commissioners were not as a matter of law under the necessity of issuing bonds to produce funds with which to undertake the improvement, since the improvement might have been paid for directly out of tax funds, and for that reason, the legislature may have intended section 6924 for those cases only in which the improvement should be paid for out of tax funds rather than with the proceeds of bonds. It is also worthy of note that the attorneys who were acting on behalf of a prospective purchaser of the bonds whose proposed issue gave rise to the opinion in question, did not express the view that there was a necessity for the making of the assessment before bonds were issued—in fact, these attorneys seem to have been of the very opposite belief (see p. 1143 of opinion).

At all events, a careful study of the statutes as they now exist, in connection with the opinion referred to, fails to reveal any real ground for the conclusion that the making and levying of assessments is a condition precedent to the authority of the commissioners to issue bonds. In that connection, you are referred to an opinion of this department (No. 887) of even date herewith, directed to Hon.

P. A. Taylor, prosecuting attorney, Eaton, Ohio, a copy of which is enclosed. That opinion does not pass upon the question now being considered; but the discussion therein points clearly to the conclusion that the issue of bonds rather than the making of the assessment comes first in point of time.

In addition to the matters mentioned in said last named opinion, mention should be made of certain language appearing in section 6922 G. C. That section as amended 107 O. L. 100, reads as follows:

> "As soon as all questions of compensation and damages have been determined, the county surveyor shall make, upon actual view, an estimated assessment upon the real estate to be charged therewith of such part of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of said improvement as is to be specially assessed. Such estimated assessment shall be according to the benefits which will result to such real estate. In making such estimated assessment the surveyor may take into consideration any previous special assessments made upon such real estate for road improvements. The schedule of such estimated assessment shall be filed in the office of the county commissioners for the inspection of the persons interested. Before adopting the estimated assessment so made and reported, the commissioners shall publish once each week for two consecutive weeks in some newspaper published and of general circulation in the county, if there be any such paper published in the county, but if there be no such paper published in said county then in a newspaper having general circulation in said county, notice that such estimated assessment has been made, and that the same is on file in the office of the county commissioners, and the date when objections, if any, will be heard to such assessment. If any owner of property affected thereby desires to make objections, he may file his objections to said assessments in writing with the county commissioners before the time for said hearing. If any objections are filed the county commissioners shall hear the same and act as an equalizing board, and they may change said assessments if, in their opinion, any change is necessary to make the same just and equitable, and such commissioners shall approve and confirm said assessments as reported by the surveyor or modified by them. Such assessments, when so approved and confirmed, shall be a lien on the land chargeable therewith."

Upon first impression, it might be thought that the opening sentence of said section implies that the next step to be taken after the passage of the resolution to proceed with the improvement as referred to in section 6917 is the making of the assessment; and that such an implication carries the further implication that all proceedings relative to the making of the assessment must be complete before the bonds are issued. Any such argument, however, is wholly without foundation, not only for the reasons given in said opinion of even date herewith, but also for the further reason that there is absolutely nothing in the terms of section 6929 which indicates that the resolution of the commissioners for the issue of bonds may not be passed immediately after the passage of the resolution provided for in section 6917. In other words, even on the assumption that by reason of the provisions of section 6922 the matter of assessment proceedings must be begun immediately upon the passage of the resolution provided for in section 6917 and carried on without interruption until the assessments are approved and confirmed as provided in the last sentence of section 6922, there is no provision in section 6929 which prevents the proceedings respecting the issue of bonds from being begun and carried on contemporaneously with the proceedings respecting the making of the assessment.

It is often found that the history of legislation is helpful in arriving at the meaning of a statute whose terms are of doubtful import. This aid to statutory construction may not be invoked with any particular force in construing sections 6922 and 6929 as they now exist, for the reason that prior to the passage of the Cass act a number of different systems of county road improvement had been in use. However, a passing reference to certain statutes in force on January 1, 1912, may not be amiss.

Sections 6903 to 6914 as in force at that date, provided for road improvement by county commissioners upon petition of abutting owners. Section 6904 of said series provided for an assessment either upon the foot frontage or benefit plan, and sections 6907 to 6912 provide for notice, equalization and confirmation of the assessment. Then follows section 6912-1 which reads as follows:

> "After so certifying said assessment to the auditor of the county, the commissioners may, in anticipation of the collection of all moneys from all sources required to be raised for said improvement, whether by assessment, taxation, or by agreement with the township trustees or village council, borrow a sum of money sufficient to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement, and may issue and sell negotiable notes or bonds of the county, bearing a rate of interest not to exceed five per cent per annum. For the purpose of paying their respective shares of the principal and interest on the notes or bonds authorized to be sold, the county commissioners and township trustees may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county or township in addition to all other taxes authorized by law of not to exceed two mills in any one year until said notes or bonds and interest are paid."

Another series of statutes in existence at the date named were sections 6926 to 6956 G. C. providing for the improvement of "stone and gravel roads" upon petition of property owners. That series of sections also contained provision for an assessment upon adjoining property, and this assessment, according to the terms of section 6937 might be made "either before the improvement is commenced, or after it is completed." Bonds were authorized by section 6949 in an amount necessary to pay the cost and expense of the improvement.

Still another series of sections in force at that date providing for improvement of roads by county commissioners, were sections 6956-1 to 6956-15. Included in that series of sections were provisions for the making of an assessment against adjoining real estate. By the provisions of section 6956-12 the assessment was not to be made until the improvement had been completed. Bonds were authorized by section 6956-15, the first sentence of which reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of said taxes and assessments, and whenever, in their judgment, it is necessary or desirable, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such improvement is to be or has been constructed to any amount not exceeding in the aggregate the amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the land owners whose lands in such county are benefited by such improvement."

It is to be noted from these three sets of statutes that in the case of the first of them positive provision was made that bonds should not be issued until the assessment had been completed; in the case of the second of them, bonds might be issued before the assessment was made, since by the terms of section 6937 the assessment might be made either before the improvement was commenced or after it was completed, and naturally, if the assessment were made after the work were completed, the money represented by the assessment could in many instances be made available only by the issuance of bonds, and bonds would therefore have to be issued before either the work was done or the assessment was made; and in the case of the third of them, the assessment could only be made when the work were completed (section 6956-12), and thence the authority in section 6956-15 for the issue of bonds necessarily meant that the bonds would in many cases be issued before the assessment was made, in order to provide funds for the work. It is thus seen from a comparison of the three sets of statutes that in the instance where the legislature intended the assessment to be made before bonds were issued, it said so in plain terms (section 6912-1); whereas, in the remaining two instances where bonds might be issued before the assessment was made, the fact that bonds might be issued at that stage of the proceedings appears from necessary implication rather than by express words. There is a strong similarity between the terms of said former section 6956-15 and present section 6929; and as has already been pointed out, the authority to issue bonds as provided for in section 6956-15 very plainly included the power to issue them before the assessments were made.

To say the least, the terminology of the former legislation just noted gives no grounds of objection to the conclusions herein stated relative to the construction of sections 6922 and 6929.

From what has been said, it follows that the opinion first above mentioned is not adhered to in so far as it may conflict with the view herein expressed that bonds may be issued under section 6929 prior to the making of the assessment named in section 6922.

The views above expressed do not furnish a complete answer to your first question, for the reason that nothing has so far been said indicating that the commissioners may not at their option make the assessment before the bonds are issued. It therefore remains to dispose of the question whether any such option lies with the commissioners.

Section 6922 has already been quoted. That section in effect, provides that such part of the "compensation, damages, costs and expenses" of the improvement as in accordance with one of the several plans named in section 6919 is to be borne by the property owners, shall be specially assessed by the method outlined in section 6922. Said section 6919 in setting forth the several plans covering division of cost, nowhere indicates that the shares are to be apportioned on the basis of an estimated cost. The whole import of the section is that the actual cost and not the estimated cost is to be used as the basis of division. Hence, if the first sentence of section 6922 is taken literally, it is inconsistent with the provisions of section 6919, for the reason that the actual cost and expenses of the improvement are not known "as soon as all questions of compensation and damages have been determined," and cannot be known until the improvemet work is completed. This inconsistency becomes the more evident when it is borne in mind that there is absolutely no provision of statute for an adjustment of such assessments once they have been made and confirmed—in other words, if the sum total of the part of the cost of an improvement to be specially assessed turns out to be more or less than as shown by the original estimates of the surveyor, and an assessment is made on the original estimates of the surveyor, then there is no authority of statute which provides for a lien for any greater amount than as determined by the assessment made on the estimated cost, and on the other hand, there is no provision whereby the county can return to the property owner any sum of money if his assessment turns out to be less whan based on actual cost than when based on estimated cost.

As the view has already been expressed herein that the assessments named in section 6922 need not be made before bonds are issued, it would seem that the inconsistency between sections 6919 and the first sentence in section 6922 when read literally becomes immaterial to the practical working of the statutes. In other words, since the making of the assessment named in section 6922 at a particular time, is not jurisdictional to the issue of bonds, the mere matter of time at which the assessment is made must yield to and be governed by the broad intent of section 6919 that the actual cost be used as the basis of the assessment. It is certainly in line with just and reasonable practice that a property owner be required, in the absence of express statutory provision to the contrary, to pay his assessment only on the basis of actual cost, and not on the basis of an estimate which may be greatly in excess of actual cost; and furthermore, it is hardly consistent with good business that the county be placed by mere implication in the position either of rebating sums of money or collecting sums of money consequent upon a difference between an estimated cost and an actual cost. In short, it is to be presumed that the legislature intended that there be but one assessment, and that such assessment have reference to actual cost rather than mere estimates.

This view of the situation solves any seeming difficulties that may appear by reason of the inconsistency mentioned. When the work is done the surveyor is then in position to make an assessment of the part of the cost to be borne by the property owners. He makes up an assessment in estimated form in the sense that he calculates what share each affected tract of real estate is to bear as compared with the percentage of the actual cost borne by the assessed realty as a whole. Such estimate of the share of each property owner is then filed in the form of a schedule with the commissioners, who give notice of its filing, etc. In brief, the estimated assessment made by the surveyor is not made upon the basis of an estimated cost; but it is an estimated assessment made upon actual cost, and the purpose of the estimated assessment is merely to afford a means for the giving of notice and the equalizing of the assessment before its final confirmation and adjustment by the county commissioners.

The views above expressed necessarily lead to the conclusion that no method is open to the county commissioners whereby they may accept assessments in cash without interest. The assessments may be made only after the bonds are issued and the work done, and they must bear interest from the date of and at the same rate as the bonds (section 6923).

The conclusion just expressed in connection with assessments named in section 6922 is equally applicable to assessments named in section 1214. The latter section is part of the series 1178 to 1231-11 providing for state aid improvements, and owing to the similarity of the two sets of statutes the same general principles respecting assessments are applicable as much to the one set of statutes as to the other.

Your second question is:

> "Must the apportionment as provided in section 1214 be made before the bonds are issued?"

In a general way, the discussion herein as to the assessments mentioned in section 6922 is applicable to assessments under section 1214, and furnishes a negative answer to your second question. It may be added that section 1214 and related statutes contain no language similar to that of the opening sentence of section 6922; hence there is even less ground for supposing that bonds mentioned in section 1223 may not be issued until after the assessment is first made as directed in section 1214, than there is for supposing that an issue of bonds under section 6929 must await the making and levying of the assessment described in section 6922. Clearly, the assessment proceedings provided for by section 1214 are to be had only after completion of the improvement and apportionment of cost thereof the state highway commissioner as directed by section 1211.

It is perhaps proper to make mention here of an opinion of this department (No. 126) dated March 15, 1919, and directed to Hon. Lloyd S. Leech, prosecuting attorney, Coshocton, Ohio. The particular inquiry to which said opinion related was the construction to be placed upon the word "tentative" as used in section 1214, that is, whether the word referred to a percentage assessment or to a concrete assessment in dollars and cents. The conclusion expressed in the opinion was:

> "The words 'tentative apportionment' as used in section 1214 G. C. contemplate the setting forth in dollars and cents of the amount proposed to be assessed against each tract within the zone or district determined upon for assessment purposes."

Said opinion did not involve the question of the proper time of making the assessment, and there is nothing in the opinion indicating directly or indirectly an expression of view as to the time at which the assessment should be made.

Specific answer to your questions is therefore as follows:

1. The road improvement assessment mentioned in sections 6922 and 1214 G. C. may be paid in installments only and not as a lump sum, unless the tender of payment in lump includes interest on the assessments in full from date of issue to date of maturity of bonds issued in anticipation of such assessments, rate of interest to be the same as that named in the bonds.

2. The assessment referred to in section 1214 G. C. is not to be made before bonds are issued under section 1223 G. C., but is to be made upon completion of the work and apportionment of the cost by the state highway commissioner as directed by section 1211 G. C.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY ISSUE BONDS UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C. FOR SPECIFIC IMPROVEMENT WITHOUT HAVING MADE LEVY UNDER SECTION 6926 G. C.

The county commissioners may issue bonds under section 6929 G. C. for a specific improvement, but not otherwise, without having made as yet any levy for the county road improvement fund under section 6926 G. C. or its supplementary sections. In issuing such bonds, however, the commissioners must, by resolution, bind themselves and their successors to make the anticipated levies to the extent necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes in connection with the bonds and to make the underlying levy spoken of in section 6929 for the purpose of guaranteeing the collection of the township taxes and special assessments anticipated. It then becomes incumbent upon the commissioners and their successors to raise by taxation or otherwise a sufficient amount during the years covered by the bonds to meet the interest and sinking fund charges thereon. This duty may be enforced by mandamus.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date advising that at the November election in Preble county the electors approved a proposition to levy to the extent of one mill for a period of two years for a purpose which you do not state. Inasmuch, however, as you speak of the issuance of bonds and refer to the levy as an "extra levy," it is assumed that the reference is to action under sections 6926-1 et seq. of the General Code, and that the effect of the vote of the electors is to exempt the levy provided by section 6926 for a county road improvement fund from all the limitations of the law relating to tax levies.

Please find enclosed herewith copy of an opinion to the Tax Commission of Ohio in which the legal possibility of extending such levy on the tax duplicate for the year 1919-20 is considered. It is pointed out in that opinion that with the co-operation of the various officials concerned it is possible to do this.

However, in your case the tax collecting officials have chosen to proceed without reference to the fact that the proposition to exempt the levy was pending and have not withheld the duplicate to ascertain the will of the electors. On the contrary, the duplicate was delivered, as you state, on October 1st and some tax collections have already been made. Meanwhile all the tax receipts have been made out and it would be very inconvenient to attempt to alter the situation at this time.

In the absence of any affirmative action on the part of the commissioners or the Tax Commission of Ohio, it is the opinion of this department that the collection of taxes should proceed without attempting to disturb the levies as made. The previous opinion, copy of which is enclosed herewith, is not out of harmony with this conclusion inasmuch as the topic of discussion therein was the authority of the various officers to place the levy on the current duplicate, and the consequence of their failure to exercise such authority was not considered.

It is also presumed from your letter that the proposition submitted to the electors was not specific in the naming of the years in which the levy should be made. In other words, it is supposed that your statement "a period of two years" reflects the exact proposition that was submitted to the electors and that no particular years were mentioned. That being the case, the favorable vote of the electors affords authority to the commissioners to make the levy outside of the limitations during the next two years, viz.: 1920-21 and 1921-22.

All this you apparently assume, and inquire whether or not bonds can now be issued in anticipation of the levy and collection to be made in future under this authority. As you state your question, even with the assumptions above made it can be shortly answered by the statement that no authority to borrow money in anticipation of the yield of a special tax levy of the kind referred to, or any other kind, without reference to some specific purpose, such as road improvement, exists. That is to say, assuming that the levy in question is a road levy under section 6926 G. C. exempted from tax limitations by reason of the favorable vote of the electors under sections 6926-1 to 6926-3 inclusive of the General Code, the county commissioners may not issue bonds in anticipation of the levy and collection thereof without having some specific road improvement in mind and limiting the amount of the issue to the estimated cost of the improvement, in which event the anticipation of the taxes under the sections named would extend only to the county's share of the total cost and expense of the improvement. The only authority which exists in the premises is that conferred by section 6929 G. C., which provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said county in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expenses of such improvement. * * *"

From this section it is apparent that a specific improvement must be in mind and that the borrowing power is limited by reference to the estimated cost of the improvement itself.

No other statute authorizes the anticipation of such levies in any way. It would therefore follow that if your question be interpreted in the broad manner just suggested a negative answer would have to be returned thereto.

It may be supposed, however, that your commissioners have under advisement the making of certain specific improvements, and desire to know whether or not they may proceed with these improvements and issue bonds therefor in anticipation, in whole or in part, of the levy in question.

In answering this question I shall make one further assumption—not because it is necessary to do so but in order to put the case which may exist in the strongest light. This assumption is that the commissioners of Preble county did not levy any tax under section 6926 on the duplicate for the year 1919-20, so that the levy outside the limitations which they are now authorized to make is the only levy for such purpose which is in existence or in contemplation.

Referring again to section 6929 G. C. and to that part of it which has been previously quoted, it will be observed that it speaks of the anticipation of the "collection of such taxes and assessments". The word "levy" is not used. It might be argued from this omission that the taxes and assessments to be anticipated must be levied and in process of collection before the power to issue bonds exists. This argument is very plausible but it overlooks certain very important considerations.

In the first place, we must bear in mind that although by force of sections 6926-1 to 6926-3, inclusive, authority may be acquired by the commissioners to make certain exempt levies for a particular period of years, yet the result is no more than this, and the favorable vote of the electors does not in and of itself automatically make the levy for the number of years referred to. This is made clear if in no other way by the express provision of section 6926-3, which is to the following effect:

> "If a majority of the electors * * * vote in favor of such levy * * * it shall be lawful to levy taxes within such county at a rate not to exceed such increased rate for and during the period provided for in such resolution."

In other words, the vote of the electors does not make the levy, but merely makes it lawful for somebody else, i. e., the commissioners, to levy outside of certain limitations.

Nor is there anything in these sections to indicate that such authority is to be exercised once and for all by a single act effective through the period of years covered by the vote of the electors. More language than has been used in the provision last quoted will be necessary to convey this meaning. The presumption is to the contrary, for under the general scheme of taxing machinery which obtains in this state and is embodied in numerous sections which need not be quoted, particularly in the Smith one per cent law so-called, sections 5649-1 to 5649-6 inclusive of the General Code, the act of levying taxes is an annual affair. In this respect taxes differ from special assessments, which are levied once and for all and must then be placed upon the duplicates of the years during which they are to be collected. Taxes are levied each year at the proper time by the levying authorities.

But the argument just made is not the only one which may be brought to the support of the conclusion which has been expressed. Section 6926-1 G. C. refers to the proposition submitted to the electors in the following terms:

> "The question of exempting from all tax limitations the levy of two mills provided by section 6926 of the General Code for the purpose of paying the county's proportion of the * * * cost and expense of constructing * * * county roads, or the question of so exempting a part of such levy * * *."

As pointed out in the previous opinion, copy of which is enclosed herewith, this language has the effect of making the act of levying referable not to sections 6926-1 et seq. of the General Code, but to section 6926, the result of the election under sections 6926-1 et seq. being merely to give to such action a legal effect which it would not otherwise have.

This being so, the real levying authority after all is found in section 6926, which provides merely

"* * * For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the costs and expenses of constructing * * * roads under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding two mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said county."

What is the purpose of this levy? It is to provide a "fund"—not to meet any specific proportion of the cost and expense of constructing, improving or repairing a particular road. It is very clear that this levy may be made whether particular road improvements are in contemplation or not, and is not limited in amount by the cost and expense of any such improvement. Conversely, there is nothing to indicate that the making of such levy in any given year is a prerequisite to lawful action to improve a given road, provided the necessary money can be lawfully secured by the issuance of bonds.

But in addition to these considerations it is very clear that this levy under section 6926, the purpose of which is merely to provide a fund, is, like tax levies generally are under the policy of this state to which reference has been made, an annual affair. The commissioners are to determine, each year for themselves, how much they will levy within the limits specified in the section for the purpose of keeping up, as it were, the county road improvement fund. Then they are at liberty to draw upon this fund for the purpose of making particular county road improvements under the provisions of the chapter, which include, of course, contribution of the county's share of the road improvement to be paid for in part by township levies or by assessments.

From all these considerations it is very clear that the whole amount to be raised by taxation under section 6926 or section 6926-1 and succeeding sections for the purpose of a particular road improvement is not to be "levied" in any sense in order to make such fund the lawful subject of "anticipation" under section 6929 G. C. Any other interpretation would be absurd. It would require that the entire cost and expense of a particular road be levied for in a single year, and would limit the office and function of the issuance of bonds to securing the money only a few months in advance of its accrual to the treasury through the processes of tax collection. This cannot be the correct result because the bonds under section 6929 may run for "not more than ten years". Clearly, therefore, levies to be made during a period not in excess of ten years may lawfully be anticipated by the issuance of bonds.

This last provision of itself evidences a very clear index to the correct interpretation of the sections involved when coupled up with the statement that levies under section 6926 are to be made annually.

But there is still another consideration which reflects upon the meaning of the clause of section 6929 now under consideration. The bonds may be issued not only in anticipation of the county taxes, but also in anticipation of the township taxes, to which the arguments already made would apply. Moreover, they are issued not only in anticipation of taxes but also in anticipation of assessments. Here, as previously intimated, even stronger reasons exist for arguing that the omission of the word "levy" is significant because assessments are not levied annually but are estimated and apportioned once for all, and when certified must go on the duplicate during the years within which they are to run without further action by the levying authorities. Hence the arguments already adduced would not apply to the anticipation of assessments in and of itself except in so far as the conclusions previously reached with respect to the anticipation of taxes might reflect upon the true meaning of the sentence under examination in respect of the anticipation of assessments.

Attention may be called to section 6923 G. C., which provides as follows:

> "All assessments, with interest accrued thereon, made under the provisions of this chapter, shall be placed by the auditor upon a special duplicate to be collected as other taxes, and the principal shall be payable in not more than twenty semi-annual installments extending over a period of not more than ten years, as determined by the county commissioners. In the event that bonds are issued to pay the compensation, damages, costs and expenses incident to such improvement, the principal sum of such assessments shall be payable in such number of equal semi-annual installments as will provide a fund for the redemption of the bonds so issued, and such assessments shall bear interest from the date of and at the same rate as the bonds, and the interest shall be collected in like manner as the principal of such assessments."

The latter part of this section would be impossible of application if the levy of the assessments preceded the issuance of the bonds; for it is very clear therefrom that the maturities and interest rate of the bonds condition the installments and the interest rate of the assessment, rather than that the installments and interest rate of the assessments condition the maturities and interest rate of the bonds. It is very clear therefore that an assessment cannot at least be finally and unalterably made until after the bonds are issued. While no opinion is expressed herein as to whether or not the "estimated assessment" spoken of in section 6922 G. C. must be adopted by the commissioners before the bonds are issued, it is very clear that no final levy can be made until the bonds are issued.

The conclusion which follows is that, despite the omission in the first sentence of section 6929 of the word "levy", the section is to be read as if it were actually there. In other words, though what may be "anticipated" under section 6929 according to its literal terms is merely the "collection of such taxes and assessments", so that it is arguable that "such taxes and assessments" must be in process of collection before the bonds may be issued; yet this cannot be the result for the reasons indicated and the word "collection" must be interpreted practically as if it were "levy and collection".

Thus far consideration has not been given to Article XII, section 11 of the constitution, which provides as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

As construed in Link vs. Karb, 89 O. S., 326, this section does not require that a levy be actually made for interest and sinking fund purposes before the bonds are issued. On the contrary, the doctrine of that case as expressed in the third branch of the syllabus thereof is as follows:

> "This provision of the Constitution does not require that at the time the issue of bonds is authorized there shall then be levied any specified amount or any specific rate, but it does require that provision shall then be made for an annual levy during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds proposed to be issued and to provide for their final redemption at maturity, which levy must be made annually in pursuance of the provisions of the original ordinance or resolution requiring the same. The amount necessary to be levied for the purposes specified is to be determined by the taxing officials at the time the levy is made."

Applying this doctrine to section 6929 and related sections, the following considerations appear:

(1 The "anticipation" of the county levy to pay the county's share is of itself an appropriation of a ratable proportion of that levy for the purpose of meeting such proportion of the interest and sinking fund requirements of the issue as should be borne by that levy. When so much of the tax has been thus "anticipated" the duty exists on the part of the county commissioners in making their levies under sections 6926 and 6926-3 G. C. to levy and apportion a sufficient amount for this purpose. This duty can be enforced by mandamus once the bonds are so issued. In the resolution under which the bonds are issued this duty should be specifically declared in order to comply with Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution as interpreted in the case cited.

(2) The remainder of the interest and sinking fund charges of the bonds is to be met by the township taxes and assessments. There may conceivably be a failure on the part of such township taxes and assessments to meet their respective shares of the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bonds. To provide for this contingency the commissioners must in their resolution "provide for the levying of a tax upon all the taxable property of the county to cover any deficiencies in the payment or collection of any special assessments or township taxes anticipated by such bonds." (Section 6929.) By this double method of providing for the interest and sinking fund levies and guaranteeing the raising of a sufficient amount by taxation in each year for such purposes, the commissioners will have declared in their resolution that the bonds are ultimate general tax obligations of the county and that the full faith and credit of the county as a whole is back of them; they will also by their resolution have made it mandatory upon themselves and their successors in office, during each of the years within which the bonds are to run, to provide fully by the means thus designated for the interest and sinking fund charges on the bonds. This mandate is just as effective whether the first levy of taxes has been made at the time the bonds are issued or not. Thus the Constitution will have been complied with to the extent at least that it is possible to comply with it by following the statute. No opinion is, of course, invited or expressed upon the constitutionality of the section, which does not seem to be questioned.

The word "annually" in the Constitution must have reference to the years in which, after the bonds are issued, it would be possible according to the laws regulating the levy of taxes, to make such levies. If bonds are issued at any time shortly after the levies for a given year are made up it is obvious that the first yield of taxes which may be levied for interest and sinking fund purposes on account of such bonds may not accrue until after the expiration of the first twelve months following the date of the issuance of the bonds. It does not therefore follow that bonds may not be issued at such times. If the tax is duly levied at the first opportunity provision for the first accruing interest may be made by applying general sinking fund balances where they exist or by temporary transfer of general fund balances to the sinking fund in anticipation of the yield of the sinking fund levy. At all events the Constitution will have been complied with when the interest and sinking fund levies are made at the first opportunity, and they are sufficient in amount to meet the charges that will have accrued or will accrue during the period to be provided for by such initial levy.

The full answer to your question therefore is as follows:

The county commissioners may issue bonds under section 6929 G. C. for a specific improvement, but not otherwise, without having made as yet any levy for the county road improvement fund under section 6926 G. C. or its supplementary sections. In issuing such bonds, however, the commissioners must, by resolution, bind themselves and their successors to make the anticipated levies to the extent necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes in connection with the bonds and to make the underlying levy spoken of in section 6929 for the purpose of guaranteeing the collection of the township taxes and special assessments anticipated. It then becomes incumbent upon the commissioners and their successors to raise by taxation or otherwise a sufficient amount during the years covered by the bonds to meet the interest and sinking fund charges thereon. This duty may be enforced by mandamus.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS HAS AUTHORITY TO INSTALL TELEPHONE IN OFFICE OF SUCH BOARD—TELEPHONE OPERATOR CANNOT BE EMPLOYED.

A board of deputy state supervisors of elections in a county has authority to install a telephone in the office of such board when in its judgment it should be done, but where the state supervisor of elections has requested that returns be telephoned to him for his tabulation on the night of election, the employment of an operator to operate such a telephone for the board of deputy state supervisors is unauthorized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "At the request of the county commissioners I am sending you bill of A. A. U., Dr., against the county, for services of and installing telephone by the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of Putnam county, and calling your attention to section 4821 of the General Code which provides that all necessary expenses of the deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor.

The facts are that some time prior to the November election, 1918, the board of deputy state supervisors of this county received a communication from the state supervisors of election, requesting them to keep their office open and give returns until the county had been reported to the state headquarters.

In order to do this it seems to be necessary to install in the room occupied by the deputy state supervisors a telephone, for which you will find a charge of $2.00, also it was necessary to employ a night operator at Kalida, Ohio, which charge you will find on the bill, making total of $6.00. This bill coming to the county commissioners, the question was raised whether it was a proper and necessary expense of the board of deputy state supervisors, or not, and at their request I am referring same to you."

Section 4821 of the General Code reads as follows:

"All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. * * *."

You state that prior to the general state election in November, 1918, the state supervisor of elections requested the board of deputy state supervisors of Putnam county to keep their office open on the night of the election and furnish returns to said supervisor of elections until all the precincts in the county had been reported in his office, presumably by telephone, and further say that it was necessary to install in the room occupied by the deputy state supervisors a telephone for which installation was made a charge of $2.00, and it was also necessary to employ a night operator at Kalida, in your county, for which there was made a charge of $4.00, making a total of $6.00 for these services directed by the state supervisor of elections to be furnished to him on the night in question.

The state supervisor of elections is the official head of the election machinery in the state and has charge of the details in securing prompt election returns. The request not only of the deputy state supervisor of Putnam county, but of all the counties in the state, is more than likely made with the view of good administration of his offices and following the criticism that was general in Ohio that election returns from the counties of the state were always very much delayed.

It would seem that the use of a telephone in the room occupied by the deputy board of supervisors in a county during the election period, is necessary, for there would be times when election officers throughout the hours of election day, when on duty in their respective precincts, might have occasion to call up the office of the county election board to decide some question of law, or a question of supplies, or a number of other contingencies that might arise during the course of the election, and the office of the county board of elections should be in a position on election day that it might be reached by telphone by its various election judges and clerks on duty throughout the county.

It is found that the question of the installation of a telephone in the office of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in a county has never been passed upon by the Attorney-General, but it could well be considered as being one of the legitimate furnishings of an office that was active, and the board of deputy state supervisors of election has authority to say whether such telephone should be installed, either temporarily or permanently, there being in Ohio a number of the offices of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections which have need for a telephone throughout the year. Hence there could be little objection to a temporary installation of a telephone. The employment of a night operator, at some point in your county, is not a legitimate expense that should be allowed, for nowhere in the law is authority found for the hiring of such employe at the expense of the county.

It is conclusive that the General Assembly contemplated that the secretary of state shall have authority to communicate with those persons with whom he is conducting the business of the state. Such communication can be either by letter, telephone or telegraph, for in each annual appropriation bill passed by the General Assembly there is the item

"Maintenance * * * F. 7 communication, $——— * * *."

A great deal of the work of the secretary of state is that pertaining to elections, for the secretary of state is by law the state supervisor of elections and each year the General Assembly has appropriated a sufficient amount to care for such communication, thus indicating that the necessary communication with election officers is contemplated. It must follow, then, that if the secretary of state is annually given an ample appropriation for "communication" purposes, there must necessarily be some one at the other end of the line to answer such communications and it is not to be presumed that the legislature contemplated that the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections in any county at election time should go out and hunt a telephone in order to communicate with their chief, that is, the secretary of state. Similarly, since such communication is countenanced by the General Assembly in its appropriation for the purposes of any communication in the office of the secretary of state, the latter official should be in a position to know where to call in order to get those officers with whom he desires to communicate in the issuance of orders and instructions.

Section 4787 G. C. reads as follows:

> "By virtue of his office the secretary of state shall be the state supervisor and inspector of elections and the state supervisor of elections, and, in addition to the duties now imposed upon him by law, he shall perform the duties of such offices as prescribed in this title."

In passing upon a question relative to the payment of "communication" by the secretary of state, the Attorney-General, in opinion 2132, issued December 29, 1916, and appearing in Volume II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, used the following language:

> "While I find no express statutory provision covering the exact situation revealed by your letter, yet it is apparent from an examination of the current appropriation measure that the legislature, in the passage of the same, had in mind the fact that the secretary of state would at times find it proper and even necessary to communicate with the several boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections and state supervisors of elections, and other persons performing duties under his supervision or having official relations with his office.
> Section 3 of House bill No. 701, 106 O. L., 666, being an act to make general appropriations, and said section being especially intended to cover expenditures during the year ending June 30, 1917, contains the following appropriations for the secretary of state:
> 'Maintenance * * * F7 communication, $400.00 * * *.'

In view of the general supervisory character of the duties of the secretary of state with reference to elections, as indicated by his title and by the several statutes relating to the subject of elections, to which statutes it is unnecessary to refer in this connection, it is my view that the secretary of state is authorized to expend all or any part of the appropriation referred to above for telegraph tolls in communicating with the several boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections and deputy state supervisors of elections upon any matter pertaining to the operation of the election machinery of the state which in his judgment it is proper to bring to their attention, and that he has such a measure of discretion as to the matters proper to be so communicated that his actions are not subject to review."

In the syllabus of the above opinion it was held:

"A charge for telegraph tolls incurred by the secretary of state in communicating with the several boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections and deputy state supervisors of elections is, under the facts as submitted, a legal charge against funds appropriated for the use of the secretary of state for communication purposes, the validity or invalidity of the order contained in said communication being immaterial."

There has been no legislation passed which would warrant a change in the view held by the Attorney-General in 1916. On the contrary the General Assembly, at each and every session, made an annual appropriation for "F7 communication" in various amounts recommended by the budget commissioner upon request of the secretary of state.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that a board of deputy state supervisors of elections in a county has authority to install a telephone in the office of such board when in its judgment it should be done, but the employment of an operator to operate a telephone for the board of deputy state supervisors is unauthorized.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

NURSE IN INDUSTRIAL PLANTS—MAY NOT LEGALLY RENDER MEDICAL SERVICES OR ADMINISTER DRUGS EXCEPT IN CASES OF EMERGENCY—SEE SECTION 1287 G. C.—CONSTRUCTION OF PHRASE "IN CASES OF EMERGENCY."

A nurse employed and paid by the owner of an industrial plant to render service and be in charge of a factory first aid station may not legally render medical services or administer drugs or medicines, except in cases of emergency, as provided in section 1287 G. C. Such term "in cases of emergency" does not, in the absence of other facts, include treatments consisting of medicines or drugs for

"colds, pleurisy pains, sunburns, dysentery and biliousness." To render such services legally, such nurse must also be duly licensed to practice medicine in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

DR. H. M. PLATTER, Secretary, State Medical Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR DOCTOR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

> "I am directed by the state medical board to obtain from you an opinion upon the subject of services rendered by nurses employed in industrial plants. The questions at issue are fully set out in correspondence, copies of which you will find enclosed.
> The board desires to know whether such practice does not constitute a violation of the medical practice act. In short, is a nurse performing duties as outlined, permitted to do so or is she practicing medicine?"

The character of services rendered by the nurses referred to in your letter is best shown by the following quotation from the correspondence accompanying your request:

> "Such procedures as suturing cuts, removing foreign bodies from the eye under cocaine, routine treatment of burns and other more or less severe injuries, removing splinters even if some dissection is necessary—are being done by nurses in several factories.
> They also treat other conditions which are not caused by work in the factories, as treating injuries received out of the shop, eye and ear conditions, remove impacted cerumen, treat skin diseases and any other conditions reported to them by the employes. They even prescribe and supply medicines for employes to take at home."

By personal conference it is also learned that the services performed by the nurses, as above stated, are not performed in the presence or under the direction of a physician and that such nurses are compensated by the employer and not by the employes who are treated. What purports to be a record of treatments rendered by a nurse in charge of a factory first aid station is also enclosed with your request. This contains a report showing the number of previous treatments, the name of the patient, the illness or injury and the treatment rendered. Part of this record will be quoted, omitting the other parts of the report, but indicating the illness or injury and the treatment rendered, as follows:

> "Cold—Treatment: Magnesium sulphate, cold tablets, aspirin.
> Boil, right axilla—Treatment: Opened drainage.
> Pleurisy pains—Treatment: Aspirin.
> Sunburned leg while swimming—Treatment: Alcohol iodine.
> Headache—Treatment—Salts, aspirin.
> Dysentery—Treatment: Paregoric, lacto pepsin, bismuth.
> Biliousness—Treatment: Calomel."

Sections 1262 and 1295 G. C. (state medical board act), 1295-1, 1295-20 (trained nurses' act) and 12694 G. C. are pertinent to your inquiry.

Section 1286 defines the practice of medicine. This section, so far as it is pertinent, is as follows:

"A person shall be regarded as practicing medicine * * *, within the meaning of this chapter. * * * who examines or diagnosis for a fee or compensation of any kind, or prescribes, advises, recommends, administers or dispenses for a fee or compensation of any kind, direct or indirect, a drug or medicine, appliance, application, operation or treatment of whatever nature for the cure or relief of a wound * * *, injury, * * * or disease."

The first sentence of section 1287 is:

"Nothing in this chapter shall prohibit service in the case of emergency or domestic administration of family remedies."

The rest of the sentence contains other exceptions to section 1286, not pertinent to the question under consideration at present.

Section 12694 G. C. makes it an offense for any person to practice medicine without first obtaining a license so to do from the state medical board.

Sections 1295-1 to 1295-20, and sections 12715-1 and 12715-2 (106 O. L. 191), constitute the registered nurse's act. This act regulates and defines the practice of nursing as registered nurses only.

Section 1295-16 in part is:

"All persons shall be regarded as practicing nursing as registered nurses, within the meaning of this act, who use the words or letters 'R. N.,' 'Registered Nurse,' or any other title in connection with their names which in any way represent them as registered nurses, or who by any means accept employment by representing themselves as registered nurses."

This section does not define nursing generally, nor does it in any way qualify or affect section 1286 (supra), nor does it enlarge or further define in any manner the matter of emergency referred to in section 1287.

The comprehensive definition of the practice of medicine, as construed by the Supreme Court of this state in Marble vs. State, 72 O. S., 177, and other cases, certainly brings the treatments above quoted from the record of treatments submitted, within the term "practice of medicine," as defined in that section, and the person rendering such service must have a certificate from the state medical board before he or she may legally render such service for a "fee or compensation of any kind, direct or indirect," unless such services come within the purview of the first sentence of section 1287, in that the illness or injury for the cure or relief of which they were performed was an "emergency."

The fact that the compensation to the nurse for her services is not paid by the persons whose illness or injury is treated, but paid for by their employer, does not destroy the character of such compensation and it is deemed to be within the provisions of section 1286 (supra).

The legislature did not see fit to more closely define the term "emergency," and in the absence of other evidence or expression of the legislative intention, this term must receive its usual and ordinary meaning.

"Emergency" is defined in Standard dictionary to be:

"1. Sudden or unexpected occurrence or condition calling for immediate action; a perplexing or pressing combination of circumstances; sometimes, less properly, used in the sense of urgent need or exigency."

It must be observed that it would be impractical, if not impossible, to define a hard and fast rule as to emergencies which would be applicable in all cases, but so far as the present opinion is concerned, with the facts submitted, it may be stated that the term "emergency," as used in this section, would include such cases of sudden or unexpected illness or injury which call for immediate medical attention.

Without further facts, it would be impossible for this department to pass upon the emergency character of some of the treatments in the enclosed record of treatments, and no opinion is here expressed as to such, but those quoted above are sufficiently definite and complete as statements of fact that this department is of the opinion that in the absence of further facts evidencing emergency character of the illness or injury treated, service in such cases, consisting of examination or diagnosis, prescription, advice or administration of a drug or medicine or treatment for the cure of the illnesses or injuries therein described, for compensation, direct or indirect, are not services performed in cases of emergency, as described in section 1287, and that in connection with the other facts included in your statement, such services may be rendered only by or under the direct personal supervision of a person duly licensed to practice medicine in the state of Ohio.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—FRANCHISE TAXES OF CORPORATIONS—SUBSCRIBED OR ISSUED AND OUTSTANDING STOCK FORM BASIS OF ASSESSMENT UNDER SECTION 5498 G. C. DURING MONTH OF MAY—WHERE CHANGES OCCUR DURING MONTH—LAST CONDITION OF STOCK TO BE REPORTED—WHEN REPORT MADE LATER, CONDITION AT END OF MONTH OF MAY REPORTED—HOW STOCK REDUCED—WHEN EFFECTIVE.

The subscribed or issued and outstanding stock of a corporation which forms the basis of the assessment of its franchise tax under section 5498 G. C. is that which it has during the month of May preceding; where changes occur therein during that month the last condition of such subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock may be reported. But even though a report is not made by the corporation within the time limited by section 5495 G. C., the report when made must exhibit the conditions as they existed at the end of said month of May.

It seems that the issued and outstanding common stock of a corporation cannot be reduced in amount save by reducing the authorized capital stock in the manner prescribed by law; and that as against the state for the purpose of franchise taxation such reduction is not effective until a certificate of the action of the directors and stockholders is filed in the office of the Secretary of State.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date submitting the following questions:

> "The G. E. Conkey company filed its 1919 report as a domestic corporation for profit June 13, 1919. Upon the basis of the report the commission, on the first Monday in July, determined the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding stock to be $138,960.

The attorneys for the company state that the capital stock was reduced July 1 to $1,000. The certificate of reduction was filed in the office of the secretary of state July 18. They now contend that the franchise fee should have been based upon the reduced amount. Should the fee have been based upon the subscribed or issued and outstanding stock as of May 31 or as of the first Monday in July? The fee upon the basis determined by the commission was paid to the treasurer of state under protest.

If the fee was erroneously assessed, by what process may the company obtain a refund of the excess payment?"

In the opinion of this department, the corporation tax in question was properly assessed by the tax commission, so that the second question submitted does not even arise.

It would seem to be unnecessary to decide the question as to whether or not the issued and outstanding capital stock as it was on the day when the tax commission acted constitutes the basis of the assessment. For from your statement of facts it appears that one of the steps required by statute to be taken in order to reduce the capital stock was not taken until after the assessment was made; that is to say, the certificate of reduction was filed in the office of the secretary of state on July 18, the commission's action having been taken on the first Monday in July, a prior date.

Section 8700 of the General Code deals with the reduction of authorized capital stock. It provides as follows:

"With the written consent of the persons in whose names a majority of the shares of the capital stock thereof stands on its books, the board of directors of such a corporation may reduce the amount of its capital stock and the nominal value of all the shares thereof, and issue certificates therefor. The rights of creditors shall not be affected thereby; and a certificate of such action shall be filed with the secretary of state."

As between the corporation and the state, it seems clear that action under this section is not complete until the required certificate has been filed. Corporations have no inherent or implied authority to increase or reduce their capital stock, especially where the laws of the state provide for such a thing as an authorized capital stock and undertake to prescribe the conditions upon which it may be altered. This is especially true where the reduction involves, or may involve, an alteration of the nominal or par value of the outstanding shares, as seems to be the case under section 8700 above quoted. See Cook on Corporations, sections 288-290, inclusive.

Without, therefore, expressing any opinion as to the effect of the action by the board of directors and stockholders with respect to the rights of the latter among themselves, it is at least very doubtful whether creditors dealing with the corporation after such action is taken but before the certificate of reduction is filed can be affected by such intra-corporate action; and, as above stated, it seems even clearer that the state in any relation it may sustain toward the corporation with respect to the condition of its capital stock is not affected by such action, but is only affected when the required certificate is filed.

If these observations are well taken, there is no theory upon which the corporation in question could escape franchise taxation on the basis of the issued and outstanding capital stock, as based upon the authorized capital stock appearing of record in the office of the secretary of state on the first Monday in July. For it is not contended that the issued and outstanding capital stock was or could lawfully have been decreased in amount otherwise than by compliance with section 8700 in the reduction of the authorized capital stock. Corporations have no authority to retire shares of their common stock. Exceptional circumstances might exist leading to a reduction in the amount of the subscribed capital stock of the corporation through the defeat of conditional subscriptions and the like, but when once issued a share of common stock cannot be extinguished as against the state without complying with the section cited. This has been the uniform holding of this department.

No claim is made that what happened on July 1 was the retirement of preferred stock in conformity to law. This could hardly be the case inasmuch as the alleged reduction was from $138,960 par value to $1,000 par value. This difference could not have represented lawfully retired preferred stock.

But inasmuch as the question is discussed at some length in the correspondence submitted to me in connection with your request, and for the future guidance of the commission, it is deemed proper to discuss in this opinion also the question as to whether or not the basis of the assessment of the franchise tax is the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock as of the time when report is made or that in existence at the time the commission acts. It is conceded that it must be one or the other. The assessment is complete when the commission acts, and what follows is merely the collection of a lawfully assessed tax. Changes occurring between assessment and collection are therefore obviously not to be considered.

It is the opinion of this department that the condition of the capital stock as of the time when the annual report is made, or if such report is not made in time then as of the last date at which report should have been made if made in time, controls the assessment of the tax. The pertinent statutes are as follows:

> "Section 5495.—* * * annually * * * during the month of May, each corporation, * * * shall make a report * * * to the commission, * * *."
> "Section 5497.—Such report shall contain:
> * * * * * * * * * *
> 5. The amount of authorized capital stock and the par value of each share.
> 6. The amount of capital stock subscribed, the amount of capital stock issued and outstanding, and the amount of capital stock paid up.
> * * * * * * * * * *
> 8. The change or changes, if any, in the above particulars, made since the last annual report."
> "Section 5498.—Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last three preceding sections, the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall, on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, * * *."

Section 5504 may also have some slight bearing. It provides that between the two dates last mentioned in section 5498 the commission may review and correct its findings.

Section 5514 may also be considered. It directs the secretary of state to make monthly reports to the tax commission showing new corporations and increases or decreases of capital stock, among other information.

The sections as to foreign corporations are similar excepting that the commission is expressly given the authority to have recourse to "any other facts coming to its knowledge bearing upon the question," in addition to the facts reported to it, in making its assessment.

The examination of sections might be extended to other sections relating to powers and duties of the tax commission in the assessment of excise taxes. A general examination of these sections would show that in all such instances the tax is to be based upon a state of affairs existing some time prior to the time when the commission is required to perform the function of assessment or apportionment of the tax.

It is true that the statute is not explicit upon the point under consideration, so that an ambiguity exists requiring interpretation. It cannot therefore be argued, however, that we must give to the statute an interpretation favorable to this particular taxpayer on the principle that statutes imposing a special burden are subject to strict construction; for if it is held that the latter of the two dates rather than the former is the proper one, such a holding will operate disadvantageously to corporations increasing their capital stock in the interim. If the principle last alluded to is permissible at all it should support a holding that the earlier date is to be preferred, because it is common knowledge that increases in capital stock occur with vastly greater frequency than decreases therein; so that the greater degree of benefit to corporations in general would accrue from the holding which has already been intimated.

Upon careful consideration it appears that the only argument which can be brought to the support of the contention that the date on which the tax commission is required to act is the date as of which it should ascertain facts respecting the capital stock of the corporation subject to the tax, is that this date is definite and specific, whereas the reporting time covers a whole month and is therefore indefinite. It is not an argument in support of this particular date that the tax may be regarded as a tax on the privilege of doing business for a year in future, as urged by counsel for the company. The reasoning of the cases cited, viz.: Emmerman vs. Specialty Co., 14 Ohio Federal Dec., 289, and First National Bank vs. Aultman, Miller & Co., 14 Ohio Federal Dec., 298, is not specially satisfactory on this point; but granting that point, we have as yet no light on the date of the commencement of the "ensuing year" referred to in those decisions. Indeed, the intimations that are found in these cases tend to support a conclusion that the earlier date is the proper one. Thus, in the opinion of Doyle, Referee, in the first case appears the following: (p. 290)

> "The fee * * * is a tax * * * required to be paid to the state for the privilege of exercising its corporate franchise for the year ensuing after the filing of the annual report within the month of September."

The same referee makes a similar statement as to domestic corporations in the second of the two cases cited.

The referee in these dicta was not speaking of the date as of which the assessment is made, but rather the year for which the tax is imposed, i. e., the "year" the enjoyment of the corporate franchises for which constitutes the theoretical basis for the incidence of the tax. In this connection it is pointed out that in State vs. Harris, 229 Fed., 892, this dictum of Referee Doyle was disapproved. The lower court in that case had held that the year in question was the current calendar year, instead of the "year ensuing after the filing of the annual report" as held by Referee Doyle. Warrington, C. J., of the circuit court of appeals, noting this diversity of federal judicial opinion, remarked in the case last cited (p. 895) that "It is not necessary to determine which of these periods is the correct one * * * but we are disposed to believe Judge Clarke's conclusion is right."

This decision virtually overrules the two cases relied upon, without, however, furnishing us with any real light on the present question.

Coming back, then, to the thought that the date when the commission must act is at least specific, while that for the filing of the report is more or less indefinite, it nevertheless appears that there is express warrant in section 5498 for the conclusion which has been intimated. The thing which the commission is to do preliminary to its actual determination is to "find such report to be correct." This shows that the commission is acting on the basis of the report and not otherwise. In the case at hand it is not contended that the report was not correct, but rather that the facts had changed, from which it is to be inferred that inasmuch as the commission must act on a report if it has one before it, the right exists to file an amended report if the facts have changed between the filing of the original report and the first Monday in July. This right may be conceded by implication subject to the provisions of the statute relative to the time in which reports may be filed. Here we have it by section 5495 that the report shall be filed "during the month of May." Presumably if a corporation had on the first day of May filed a report and then later in the same month had made changes in its capital stock, it would be proper for it to file an amended report during the month of May, or even thereafter, setting forth any state of affairs that existed during the month of May. But there is no warrant in the statutes for exhibiting in a report any state of affairs other than that which existed during the month of May; nor is there any warrant in the statute for action on the part of the commission predicated upon any report other than the one filed in accordance with the statute.

These plain inferences shown by the language of sections 5495 and 5498 G. C. are supported by a consideration previously referred to, which is that throughout the scheme of administration embodied in the tax commission act generally, we find action by the commission based upon reports filed at an earlier date, and in some instances relating themselves to conditions existing as of the still earlier date than the date at which the report is filed. This is indeed a feature common to all taxation laws. Personal property is listed for taxation as of the day preceding the second Monday in April. The lists, however, need not be handed in to the county auditor or assessor until a later date. The old statute on this subject prescribed the third Monday of May as this date. The returns thus made are subject to revision for the purposes of assessment, and do not find place on the tax duplicate in the form of a final assessment until October. The tax so laid on property is for the purposes of an ensuing year. But save where modified by express provision of law, as in the case of the destruction of buildings between April and October, the assessment is not changed because personal property had in ownership or possession on the day preceding the second Monday of April has been lost or alienated before the final assessment is made or even before the taxpayer makes his return.

Indeed administrative convenience dictates a certain lapse of time between the date as of which the conditions upon which the apportionment of the tax depends and the taxation machinery is initiated, on the one hand, and the date on which the administrative action which constitutes the preliminary or final assessment is taken.

For all these reasons, then, it is the opinion of this department that the tax commission was right in determining the amount of the subscribed, issued and outstanding stock of the corporation in question to be that which was in existence during the month of May.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY BRIDGES—CONTRACTS COSTING LESS THAN $1,000—PLANS MUST BE SUBMITTED TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, COUNTY AUDITOR AND SURVEYOR AND APPROVED BY THEM.

Contracts for the construction, alteration or repair of county bridges, costing less than $1,000, cannot be made by the county commissioners unless the plans, specifications and estimates of the cost thereof have been submitted to the board of county commissioners, county auditor and surveyor and approved by them and filed in the auditor's office, nor can such contract be made for more than the estimated cost.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. WALTER B. MOORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department as follows:

"I am writing you at this time asking your opinion upon the question submitted below:

Statement of Facts: On July 7, 1919, the commissioners of Monroe county, Ohio, instructed the county auditor to advertise for sale the contract to build what was known as the Trembly Run bridge. This appears upon their journal, under the above date. So far as the records show, the county surveyor was not ordered to prepare any plans and specifications or make any estimate for the same.

There is no further record in this case until August 4, 1919, when the county auditor was again instructed to advertise this bridge, and after that date, there was no entry upon the journal of any kind relating to the bridge until the commissioners began to allow claims as hereinafter set out.

It might be well to state here that said bridge was, in fact, advertised twice, and no bids were received on the day fixed for the same in either notice. The estimate on the bridge was in the neighborhood of $450.00.

The commissioners without any record, except as above stated, have attempted to build this bridge under what they call 'force account'.

An examination of the auditor's records this morning discloses that they have allowed bills to the amount of more than $1,250.00 in connection with this bridge and its construction.

I beg to submit the following questions upon the foregoing statement of facts:

(1) Can the county commissioners build a bridge costing more than $200.00 by 'force account'?

(2) If they can construct such a bridge by 'force account', are they permitted to expend more than the original estimate for its construction?

(3) If they can construct bridge by 'force account' would it be necessary for them to pass a resolution to proceed to build this bridge in that manner?

(4) Is the record above submitted sufficient to authorize them to build this bridge either by contract or by 'force account'?

(5) If this bridge could be built by 'force account', is it necessary that the county surveyor have direct supervision over its construction?

(6) Who has authority to employ the labor and furnish the material (that is, purchase it) for such bridge?

I would like very much to have your opinion as soon as possible upon the above questions, as there are some other bridges which are either in process of construction or in contemplation, under the same plan as the one referred to above, in this county, and I am sending you herewith my idea of this matter in letter enclosed."

The outstanding facts here are that judging from the record, no plans, specifications or estimates of this bridge were ordered or made, nor any action taken by the commissioners approving or adopting any such plans, specifications or estimates. It also appears that so far as the record shows, no contract to build the bridge was made by the commissioners except by what is referred to as "force account".

It is noted that you have some six questions stated, but if a negative answer is given to question No. 1, it would be unnecessary to further consider and decide the following questions.

Section 2343 of the chapter entitled "Building Regulations" provides that when it becomes necessary to erect, alter or repair a bridge, the commissioners shall cause full and accurate plans to be made, particularizing the details of such plans.

Sections 2344, 2345 and 2346 relate to contracts for the superstructure of bridges.

Section 2347 provides that the plans and specifications "shall be kept on file in the office of the auditor".

Section 2350 provides:

"If the plans, drawings, representations, bills of material and specifications of work and estimates of the cost thereof relate to the building; addition to, or alteration of an infirmary, they shall be submitted to the commissioners and infirmary directors. If approved by a majority of them, a copy thereof shall be deposited in the office of the auditor and kept for the inspection and use of parties interested."

Section 2353 defines the bridge contracts, in the letting of which advertisement for bids is not necessary. Under this section bridges, the cost of which does not exceed one thousand dollars, may be contracted for without advertisement.

Under section 2354 the commissioners may let at private contract without publication or notice, a contract for a bridge when its estimated cost does not exceed two hundred dollars.

Section 2358 prohibits the making of any contract for a bridge, additions thereto or repairs thereon, at a price in excess of the estimates "required to be made by the preceding sections." Your letter states that the records do not show the making, submission or approval of any plans, specifications or estimates for the bridge described in your letter, and as the commissioners speak by their records, it is inferred from this and your other statements that no such plans, specifications or estimates were in fact so made, submitted and approved. These sections were reviewed in the common pleas court of Ashland county in the case of State ex rel. vs. Ashland County Commissioners, 14 O. D., 563, the first and second paragraphs of the syllabus of that case being:

1. "The office of county commissioners is a creature of statute, and the incumbent thereof can exercise no power or do any act in his official capacity which will bind the county unless expressly authorized and done in the manner provided by statute; and when the statute conferring power directs what shall be done preliminary to the expenditure of public money, these requirements, if mandatory, must be complied with or the contract is illegal.

2. The provisions of sections 795, 796, 797 and 798 Rev. Stat., requiring county commissioners, before contracting for the construction of bridges, to procure certain plans, determine the dimensions of the superstructure, advertise for bids and proposals, submit plans, specifications and estimates to the board of county commissioners, county auditor and surveyor, etc., is mandatory. Contracts made in disregard thereof are illegal and will be enjoined."

With reference to the necessity of the commissioners recording their transactions on their journal, the sixth paragraph of the syllabus would be pertinent. It is:

"Contracts made by county commissioners should appear on their journal, and also be entered into at the place where the law provides they shall transact public business, and not at the other contracting party's private office or hotel."

This was an action against the county commissioners in a case in which it was alleged that they were proceeding to award bridge contracts without such plans, as appears on page 571, as follows:

"They never submitted, as commissioners, any plans or specifications, bills of material or estimates, to the auditor or surveyor with the three commissioners for approval."

The effect of the section requiring the submission and adoption of plans and estimates, whether the cost of the bridge is such that it must be advertised or not, is also considered in this case at page 574, where the court observes:

"While the commissioners may let a contract when the estimated cost of the bridge and the substructure does not exceed $1,000, the other requirements of the statutes cannot be omitted.

This estimated cost must be passed upon by the auditor and the surveyor in conjunction with the commissioners, before the commissioners can enter into any contract whatsoever, and in no instance was there any estimated cost of the bridge and substructure, or either. * * * This (section 2358, prohibiting contracts in excess of estimates) applies to all contracts."

In the case of Buchanan Bridge Co. vs. Campbell et al., 60 O. S., 406, the syllabus is:

"A contract made by county commissioners for the purchase and erection of a bridge in violation or disregard of the statutes on that subject, is void, and no recovery can be had against the county for the value of such bridge. Courts will leave the parties to such unlawful transaction where they have placed themselves, and will refuse to grant relief to either party."

In a statement of this case, pages 422 and 423, the court reviews the various sections relating to the duties of county commissioners in the matter of bridge contracts, saying of section 2358, then section 800 R. S., that it provides that no contract for a bridge or bridge substructure, shall be made at a price in excess of the estimate so required to be made, and

> "To make a valid contract of sale by the bridge company to the county commissioners, and a valid contract of purchase of a bridge exceeding one thousand dollars by the commissioners, it is essential that the foregoing provisions of the statute should be substantially complied with."

On page 425, in the enumeration of the defects in the commissioners' proceedings and contract with the bridge company, it is stated:

> "No plans or specifications were ever made, approved or deposited with the auditor; * * *
> These omissions are fatal to the validity of the contract, and by force of the above cited sections of the statute, the contract is totally void and imposed no obligations on either party to it."

This department is not aware of any later decision reversing or modifying the rule laid down in these cases, and it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that contracts for the construction, alteration or repair of county bridges, costing less than $1,000, cannot be made by the county commissioners unless the plans, specifications and estimates of the cost thereof have been submitted to the board of county commissioners, county auditor and surveyor and approved by them and filed in the auditor's office, nor can such contract be made for more than the estimated cost.

In view of the conclusion arrived at in the consideration of your first question, it is not deemed necessary to consider and answer the remaining questions in detail, as it is believed that the authorities above referred to contain an answer to all your questions.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—RURAL OR VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT BOARD MAY SUSPEND ANY OR ALL SCHOOLS TEMPORARILY OR PERMANENTLY—BOARD TO DETERMINE WHAT CONSTITUTES SUFFICIENT CAUSE TO SUSPEND—CONTRACT OF TEACHERS TERMINATED BY LAW WHEN SCHOOL SUSPENDED.

1. The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently at any time any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause.

2. As to what constitutes sufficient cause to suspend temporarily or permanently a school in a village or rural school district, it is for the board of education of such district in its discretion to say.

3. Where a board of education has decided to suspend such school, either temporarily or permanently, and where such school is suspended during the school term, the contract of the teacher is thereby terminated by law, since such contract was made with knowledge of the provisions appearing in section 7730 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. A. HARMON HOLDERNESS, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your request for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "The board of education employed a teacher in a district where the normal attendance was fourteen. Some of the patrons wanted another teacher, so are transporting their children to a neighboring village at their own expense and paying their tuition, leaving the teacher in the district only two pupils.
> In another district a petition was submitted stating that there would be thirteen pupils in the district to attend school. As the enumeration showed the same a school was established there. Since that time a number of the patrons have moved away leaving the school only seven pupils.
> May these schools be abolished while the school term is going on? Whose duty is it to abolish them? If abolished is the teacher's contract terminated, or is the board of education still required to pay her salary for the remainder of the year?"

Attention is invited to section 7730 G. C. as amended 108 O. L., 708, effective September 22, 1919, which reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause. Whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten the county board of education shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school. Whenever any school is suspended the board of education of the district shall provide for the transfer of the pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school to other schools. Upon such suspension the board of education of such village or rural district shall provide for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age who reside in the territory of the suspended district and who live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned, to a public school in the rural or village district or to a public school in another district. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district by the board of education within ten days after the resolution providing for such suspension is adopted. Wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more then, upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school."

Your statement of facts indicates that there are two school districts in which certain conditions obtain, in the first district there being but two pupils in attendance at the public school in that district although the normal attendance in such district was fourteen. You indicate this is due to the fact that the patrons desired another teacher and are transporting their children to a neighboring village at their own expense and paying their tuition. In the second district the enumeration showed that there would be thirteen pupils in the district to attend a school if established and this was followed by a petition from the patrons in the district, which resulted in the establishment of the school in that district. Since the establishment of the school, several of the patrons have moved away, leaving the school with only seven pupils, and your first question is whether either or both of these schools may be abolished while the school term is going on, there being two pupils in the one district and seven pupils in the other district.

It will be noted that section 7730 G. C. supra, says:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause."

This is the opening sentence of the section and is one giving broad authority to boards of education in the use of their discretion. This language is followed by the remainder of the section providing that where the local board fails to act it is the duty of the county board to direct the suspension of such school provided that the average daily attendance in the school district for the preceding year was below ten. The language of the statute indicates that the county board of education has no direct authority to suspend a public school in a rural or a village district, but its authority is that it can direct the suspension and "thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school." This means that the initiative in suspending the school lies with the local board of education and the county board of education is not presumed to act unless the local board of education has failed to suspend a school where during the preceding year the average daily attendance was below ten. It will be noted that section 7730 says the board of education may "suspend temporarily or permanently" and it would thus appear that since the power to suspend temporarily is given, this must mean that the board of education has authority to suspend the school in question at any time, even during the term, as in the instance at hand. You indicate that in one of these districts there are but two pupils in the district and it was clearly not the intent of the legislature that a school should be maintained with a teacher when such school had but two pupils in the district, for if both were absent from the school on any particular day, the daily attendance for that day in that school presided over by a teacher would be nothing.

You also ask as to whose duty it is to abolish these schools, and if abolished are the contracts of the teachers terminated or is the board of education still required to pay the salaries of the teachers for the remainder of the year.

Attention is invited to opinion No. 1321, issued December 23, 1914, and appearing at page 1625, Vol. II, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, the syllabus of which reads in part as follows:

> "* * * If a township board of education entered into a contract with a teacher for teaching a subdistrict under its jurisdiction, and such subdistrict was abolished in accordance with section 7730, General Code, such act operated as a termination of the contract, provided such act occurred before the termination of the contract because of the lapse of time such contract was to run. Likewise such contract would be terminated if the school should be suspended in accordance with the mandatory provisions of section 7730, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 139. An expenditure of money upon such contract, after being so terminated under the provisions contained in said section as the same existed both prior to its amendment and since its amendment above referred to would be illegal. * * *"

After citing the cases of Railroad Co. vs. Defiance, 52 O. S., 262, and Smith vs. Parsons, 1 Ohio Report, 239, in arriving at the above conclusion the Attorney-General further said:

"The contract with the teacher referred to in your first question was made at a time when the provision contained in said section 7730 was in effect, and it would follow that such provision impliedly became a part of the contract. * * * The teacher so employed entered into the contract under the statutory limitation in section 7730 * * * that the school by which such teacher was so employed to teach might be suspended by the board of education, * * * Therefore, in answer to your first question, it is my opinion that if a township board of education entered into a contract with a teacher for teaching a subdistrict under its jurisdiction and said subdistrict was abolished by such board under and in accordance with the provisions contained in section 7730, then this act operated as a termination of the contract, provided such act occurred before the termination of such contract."

While section 7730 G. C. has been amended practically by all of the recent legislatures, the present legislature having amended it twice, it is noticed that the sentence which provides that boards of education may suspend temporarily or permanently the schools in their respective jurisdictions has remained the same throughout all of the various sections that have been amended. Thus, at one time section 7730 provided as follows:

"The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all subdistricts in the township district."

This was amended in 104 Ohio Laws so that the sentence read as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district."

This sentence has now been further amended giving boards much more latitude in this matter, so that it reads at present as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause."

It thus will be seen that the words "temporarily or permanently" have been added to the statute as well as specifying that such suspension can be made for "disadvantageous location or any other cause," and it therefore seems that it is within the discretion of the board of education to say what schools, if any, are to be suspended and whether such suspension is to be temporary or permanent.

Upon the question of the discretion permitted to boards of education the Ohio Supreme Court has spoken recently in the case of Brannon et al. vs. Board of Education, 99 O. S. 369, appearing in the Ohio Law Bulletin for September 29, 1919, in the following language:

> "A court has no authority to control the discretion vested in a board of education by the statutes of this state, or to substitute its judgment for the judgment of such board, upon any question it is authorized by law to determine. Nor will a court restrain such board of education from carrying into effect its determination of any question within its jurisdiction, except for an abuse of discretion or for fraud or collusion on the part of such board in the exercise of its statutory authority."

In conclusion it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General:

(1) The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently at any time any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause.

(2) As to what constitutes sufficient cause to suspend temporarily or permanently a school in a village or rural school district, it is for the board of education of such district in its discretion to say.

(3) Where a board of education has decided to suspend such school, either temporarily or permanently, and where such school is suspended during the school term, the contract of the teacher is thereby terminated by law, since such contract was made with knowledge of the provisions appearing in section 7730 G. C.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOL SUSPENDED BY COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—HOW IT CAN BE RE-ESTABLISHED BY LOCAL BOARD—AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE OF ENROLLED PUPILS RESIDING WITHIN TERRITORY OF SUSPENDED SCHOOL—REASONABLE TERMS FOR COMPUTING AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE.

1. When a school is suspended on the direction of the county board of education, as provided in section 7730 G. C., such school can be re-established by the local board of education and without further direction by the county board of education, when it has been made to appear to the local board that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, is twelve or more pupils attending any other school.

2. The average daily attendance of enrolled pupils mentioned in section 7730 G. C. refers to the attendance computed at some time during the current school year.

3. A public school that has been suspended by a board of education must be re-established upon proper petition at any time within the school year following such suspension, when it has been made to appear to the local board that there is an average daily attendance of enrolled pupils, residing within the territory of the suspended school, of twelve or more.

4. Under the provisions of section 7730 G. C. there is no time mentioned dur- ing which the average daily attendance should be computed, but such computation to establish the average daily attendance mentioned in section 7730 G. C. should be a reasonable time, which it is suggested should be not less than one week nor necessarily more than one school month.

5. In establishing the average daily attendance in other schools of those pupils who reside in the territory of a district whose school has been suspended, the daily attendance records of pupils in the separate schools should be assembled for the same specific days and the average daily attendance computed therefrom for a reasonable time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your request for an opinion upon five questions growing out of section 7730 G. C., as amended by the present general assembly and effective September 22, 1919. Your first question is:

> "When a school is suspended on the direction of the county board of education as provided in section 7730, H. B. 348, of the eighty-third general assembly, can such school be re-established, except upon the direction of the county board of education, if it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, is twelve or more?"

Your first question is whether the county board of education has anything to do with the re-establishment of a district school when it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, is twelve or more, even though such school was, in the first instance, suspended in its operation by direction of the county board of education. The law which is pertinent on this question reads as follows:

> "* * * Wherever such suspension is had on the direction of the county board of education, then upon the direction of such county board, and in other cases upon the finding by the board of education ordering such suspension that such school ought to be re-established, such school shall be re-established. If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more then, upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school." (Section 7730, 108 O. L., 704.)

In analyzing section 7730 G. C., from which the above is taken, it may be said that the county board of education has no authority to actually close the district school, for the section says that the county board of education "shall direct the suspension and thereupon the board of education of the village or rural school district shall suspend such school". The county board of education can direct the suspension of a district school in only one instance in any year, that is, "whenever the average daily attendance of any school in the school district for the preceding year has been below ten", and naturally this would take place during the summer months following the end of the school term of the preceding year, and before arrangements were completed for the operation of the district schools for the new school year beginning on the following September 1st. This, then, is the only instance in which the county board of education can cause the suspension of a district school, and this rests entirely on the figures of the preceding year, which figures must show that the average daily attendance for that year has been below ten. On the other hand the authority of the local board of education in any rural or village school district is much broader in that it has authority to suspend such schools temporarily or permanently at any time, the opening sentence of section 7730 G. C. reading as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend temporarily or permanently any or all schools in such village or rural school district because of disadvantageous location or any other cause."

The powers of the county board of education, under section 7730, are limited, as above stated, to the one instance in which, following the figures of the preceding year, the county board of education can direct the suspension of a district school whose average daily attendance has fallen below ten.

Your first question then is, where the county board of education has exercised the authority of directing the suspension of a district school, can such school be re-established except upon the direction of the same county board of education? That is to say, is it possible for circumstances to arise that will bring about the re-establishment of a school, whose suspension has been directed by the county board of education except by the direction of the county board of education that such school shall be re-established? The answer to this question appears to be in the closing sentence of section 7730, the saving clause which reserves to the people of the district their rights of having a school conducted in that district. This closing language, it will be noted, reads as follows:

> "If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more, then, upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school."

The question here is, what was meant by the general assembly in using the words "the board of education may re-establish such school" while speaking of the territory contiguous to the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension. It is believed that the general assembly meant the local board of education of the village or rural school district as having the power to re-establish any school where the voters in their own territory signed a petition requesting that such school be re-established and then clearly showing that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils was twelve or more.

An examination of the statutes bearing upon the county board of education shows that where the county board of education is meant, the general assembly uses the words "county board of education" and not the general words "the board of education". Under the decision of the Ohio supreme court, in the case of State ex rel. Myers vs. Board of Education, decided February 13, 1917, and appearing at page 367, 95 O. S. Reports, the court held that the word "may", appearing at the end of section 7730 G. C., must be construed as meaning the word "shall", the syllabus of such decision being as follows:

> "1. The literal meaning of the words 'may' and 'shall' is not always conclusive in the construction of statutes in which they are employed; and one shall be regarded as having the meaning of the other when that is required to give effect to other language found in the statute, or to carry out the purpose of the legislature as it may appear from a general view of the statute under consideration.

2. Where power is granted by statute to public officers by permissive language, coupled with a provision for invoking the exercise of such power by a petition of voters, or of any part of the public, such language will be regarded as peremptory unless a contrary construction is manifestly required.

3. Under the proviso contained in section 7730, General Code, as amended May 27, 1915 (106 O. L., 398), the board of education of any rural or village district, which has theretofore suspended any or all schools in such village or school district, is required to re-establish such suspended school on a petition therefor, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age."

In arriving at this decision the court cited State vs. Budd, 65 O. S., p. 5, Supervisors vs. United States ex rel, 71 U. S., 446, and Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati Railroad Company vs. Mowatt, 35 O. S., 287. In the latter case this very important language occurs:

"Where authority is conferred to perform an act which the public interest demands, may is generally regarded as imperative."

The Myers decision was rendered directly upon section 7730, regarding the suspension of a district school, and applies to section 7730 as it reads today, except that the present general assembly has changed the language of section 7730 to provide that instead of basing the right to have the school re-established at any time on the school enrollment of the said suspended district, under the present law, it must be the average daily attendance of the school enrollment in the territory, which, it will be noted, is quite a different thing from mere enrollment. Thus the school enrollment in a district might be fifteen pupils and the average daily attendance might be less than twelve.

Your second question reads as follows:

"Section 7730 of the same law provides: 'If at any time it appears that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school as it was prior to such suspension is twelve or more, then upon a petition asking for re-establishment signed by a majority of the voters of the said territory, the board of education may re-establish such school.'

Does the 'average daily attendance' of enrolled pupils refer to the attendance the year previous to such suspension or to the year following such suspension?"

The words "average daily attendance" of enrolled pupils occurring in section 7730 G. C. refers to the average daily attendance at the time it is proposed to re-establish a suspended school, that is, the current year and not the preceding year, for the section says, "if at any time it appears", and again, the word "is" occurs rather than the word "was", which latter word would be used if it was intended that such average daily attendance should be computed on the preceding year.

Your third question reads as follows:

"Must the enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school be permitted to attend another school or other schools for the entire term in order that the average daily attendance for the year may be determined or may it be re-established at any time within the school year following such suspension that it appears that there is an average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school?"

The answer to this question is that the suspended school may be re-established at any time within the school year following such suspension, whenever it appears there is an average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school, amounting in number to twelve or more pupils, and it is not required that such attendance should be computed for an entire term in order to discover the "average daily attendance at any time".

Your fourth question reads:

"If the school may be re-established at any time within the following year, for how long a time must the average daily attendance be computed?"

Section 7730 does not say for how long a time the average daily attendance is to be computed in order that the patrons residing in such district where the school has been suspended can again have for their children the educational facilities which they had before. Nowhere in the section is there found any language as to how long the pupils would have to attend school in order to clearly establish what is meant by the average daily attendance, as herein used. This section says "at any time" and this could mean a short period as well as a long period, and rather seems to mean a time when a discovery is made that the average daily attendance is twelve or more, in which event, from that time, the right to have a public school in such district would be clearly established and all that would remain would be for the voters in the territory of the old district to prepare a proper petition, signed by a majority of them, to be presented to the local board of education; and if the average daily attendance at any time appears to be twelve or more, the local board of education shall re-establish the school under the decision in the case of State ex rel Myers vs. Board of Education, 95 O. S., 367. As long as the law does not say for how long such average daily attendance shall be computed, except in the words "if at any time it appears", it is left for the local board of education to use its sound discretion as to whether an average daily attendance has been established for a reasonable time. Under the section no person seems to have the authority to say how long this period shall be in arriving at the average daily attendance, but the average grades of school children are frequently computed on only five subjects, and the average daily attendance for a school week could be the sum total of the attendance for five school days in that week, divided by the five days, and thus we would have the average daily attendance established at that time, and the law says "at any time".

Your last question reads:

"Since these pupils may be enrolled in several schools, how must the daily attendance be determined?"

It is but natural that if a school has been suspended in a district, the pupils would be enrolled in several adjacent schools, since section 7730 G. C. says that the board of education of the district shall provide for the transfer to other schools and for their proper conveyance where they live more than two miles from the school to which they have been assigned. The only method of arriving at the daily attendance and thus getting at the average daily attendance of a certain group of pupils who attended different schools, would be to take their individual record of attendance in the school where they attended and assemble such record with the records of other pupils for exactly the same specific days and the average thus attained from the records of the several schools which are available through the district superintendents would establish the average daily attendance of the group of pupils in question.

It is believed that not more than a school month of twenty days is necessary in order to establish the average daily attendance "at any time", as contemplated by the legislature, and a period less than one week would hardly be a fair criterion for establishing such average daily attendance. The petitioners must show conclusively to the board of education that such average daily attendance is twelve or more in a material way, that is, that twelve or more pupils are, on the average, attending some adjacent school while having their school residence in the old district, and such time of computaton should be a reasonable time in order that the board of education would not re-establish the school and employ a teacher therefor where there was some question as to whether the average daily attendance would keep up in number to the requirement contemplated in section 7730 G. C. The section says that "if at any time it appears", and this means that it must be apparent to any one who might question it that the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, contains a number of pupils whose average daily attendance in the schools to which they have been assigned is twelve or more.

It is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that:

1. When a school is suspended on the direction of the county board of education, as provided in section 7730 G. C., such school can be re-established by the local board of education and without further direction by the county board of education, when it has been made to appear to the local board that the average daily attendance of enrolled pupils residing within the territory of the suspended school, as it was prior to such suspension, is twelve or more pupils attending any other school.

2. The average daily attendance of enrolled pupils mentioned in section 7730 G. C. refers to the attendance computed at some time during the current school year.

3. A public school that has been suspended by a board of education must be re-established upon proper petition at any time within the school year following such suspension, when it has been made to appear to the local board that there is an average daily attendance of enrolled pupils, residing within the territory of the suspended school, of twelve or more.

4. Under the provisions of section 7730 G. C. there is no time mentioned during which the average daily attendance should be computed, but such computation to establish the average daily attendance mentioned in section 7730 G. C. should be a reasonable time, which it is suggested should be not less than one week nor necessarily more than one school month.

5. In establishing the average daily attendance in other schools of those pupils who reside in the territory of a district whose school has been suspended, the daily attendance records of pupils in the separate schools should be assembled for the same specific days and the average daily attendance computed therefrom for a reasonable time.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—VILLAGE—CANDIDATES FOR LONG AND SHORT TERMS NOT DESIGNATED ON BALLOTS—ELECTION INVALID.

Where five members of a village board of education were to be elected, two members for the term of two years and three for the term of four years, and the ballots cast did not designate who were the candidates for the long and short terms, no valid election was held, and the present incumbents will hold over until their successors are properly elected and qualified.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. HOMER HARPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter in which you submit the following question for my opinion:

> "At the November election, 1919, five persons were elected members of the board of education of Wickliffe (village) school district, some for short terms and some for full terms. There was no designation on the ballot to determine who were the candidates for the long term and who for the short term. Would it be valid for the board to designate the two persons receiving the highest number of votes to be elected for four years and the remaining three persons for two years?
> In April, 1919, the county commissioners appointed five persons to serve as members of the board of education until the next legal election. This newly elected board succeeds the board appointed by the commissioners."

It is assumed from the facts stated in your letter that the board of education for Wickliffe village school district was appointed under authority of section 4710 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "In villages hereafter created, a board of education shall be elected as provided in the preceding section. When villages hereafter created, or which have been heretofore created, fail or have failed to elect a board of education as provided in the preceding section, the commissioners of the county to which said district belongs, shall appoint such board, and the members so appointed shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified. The successors of the members so appointed, shall be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment; two members to serve for two years and three members for four years, and thereafter their successors shall be elected in the manner and for the term as provided by section 4709 of the General Code. The board so appointed by the county commissioners shall organize on the second Monday after their appointment. If the members of such board are elected at a special election held in such district the members so elected shall serve for the term indicated in the preceding section, from the first Monday in January after the preceding election for members of the board of education and the board shall organize on the second Monday after such election."

Under the provisions of this section, at the November election in 1919 two members should have been elected for the term of two years and three for the term of four years, to succeed the board appointed by the commissioners. However it appearing that in said election there was no designation upon the ballots as to the candidates for the two and four year terms, it was impossible for the electors to make their choice as to which of the candidates they desired to be elected for the long and short terms. Therefore there was no legal election held for the members of the school board of said village

In the case of State ex rel. O'Donnell, etc., vs. Adam Schafer, et al., 18 C. C. 525, the syllabus reads in part as follows:

> "Where several members of the board are to be elected at one election, but for different terms of office, the ballots must state to which term the candidate is elected, otherwise the ballots will be declared void, although the entire election may be invalidated thereby."

A careful analysis of the opinion shows it to support the syllabus above quoted. In short this case is on all fours in point with the question raised by the facts stated in your communication.

From an opinion of the Attorney-General recorded in Vol. II, Ann. Rep. of Atty. Gen. for 1912, p. 1102, the following, which is pertinent to your inquiry, is quoted:

> "Where at an election five positions were to be filled, two for four years and three for approximately two years, and there was no designation upon the ballot to determine who were the candidates for the long terms and who were the candidates for the short terms, the terms were not definitely settled and there was no valid election."

The rule seems to be that no one can make the selection for the different terms except the electors, and the ballots, not designating the terms, are void and should be cast out and not counted.

Inasmuch as you state there was nothing designated on the ballots to indicate the terms for which the candidates were seeking election, it therefore follows that no valid election was held at the November election in 1919, for the members of the board of education of the village of Wickliffe.

You are further advised that under the provisions of section 4710, supra, the members of the board of education appointed by the commissioners "shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified." There having been no valid election in November, 1919, the members of the original board will hold over until such time as a proper and valid election is held, selecting their successors, and until said successors are qualified.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—COUNTY AND DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS —CANNOT INCREASE SALARIES DURING TERM—BOARD OF EDUCATION UNAUTHORIZED TO PASS RETROACTIVE RESOLUTION WHEN TERM AND SALARY OF SUPERINTENDENT PREVIOUSLY FIXED.

1. In effect there is no material distinction in the authority or power granted to appoint and fix the salary or compensation of a county and a district superin- tendent of schools. It is the duty of the board of education to fix the salary of a county superintendent before August 1, and when said salary is fixed, the said board can not legally increase the same during the term for which he was appointed.

2. A resolution passed by a board of education on September 4, 1918, increasing the salary of a county superintendent of schools for the term he was appointed, which said term begins August 1 of said year, when his term and salary had been previously fixed on March 13 of the same year, is retroactive and illegal in so far as it applies to the services rendered prior to its passage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Acknowledgment is made of your inquiry of recent date in which you submit the following question:

> "On March 13, 1918, the county board of education of Ashtabula county employed H. D. C. as county superintendent for a term of three years beginning August 1, 1918. On September 4, 1918, the county board of education increased the salary of the county superintendent from $3,000.00 to $3,450.00 per annum. The resolution appearing on their records being as follows:
> 'S. moved that the salary of H. D. C., county superintendent, be increased to $3,450.00 per annum for the term of his election.'
> Superintendent C. on September 9, 1918, drew the sum of $287.50, the same being his August salary. Was it legal under the terms of this employment for the superintendent to go back to August 1, 1918, to secure the increase, or should finding for recovery of $37.50 be made against him in this instance on the ground that this action was retroactive?"

Before considering whether a county superintendent of schools can legally draw increased salary for services rendered during the month of August, 1918, by virtue of a resolution of the county board of education passed September 4 of the same year, granting an increase in the salary of said superintendent which said board had previously fixed on March 13 of the same year, it seems important to first consider whether said board had legal authority to increase the salary of said superintendent during the period for which he was appointed.

Sections 4744, 4744-1, 4744-2 and 4744-3 G. C., which relate to the appointment, powers and duties of the county superintendent of schools, are as follows:

> "Section 4744.—The county board of education at a regular meeting held not later than July 20, shall appoint a county superintendent for a term not longer than three years commencing on the first day of August. Such county superintendent shall have the educational qualifications mentioned in section 4744-4. He shall be in all respects the executive officer of the county board of education, and shall attend all meetings with the privilege of discussion but not of voting."
> "Section 4744-1.—(108 O. L. 707). The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary up to the amount of two thousand dollars shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and may employ an efficient stenographer or clerk for such superintendent. The part of all salaries and expenses paid by the county school district shall be prorated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district, but the county board of education must take into consideration and use any funds secured from the county dog and kennel fund or from any other source and which is not already appropriated before the amount is prorated to the various rural and village districts."

"Section 4744-2.—(108 O. L. 233). On or before the first day of August of each year the county board of education shall certify to the county auditor the number of teachers to be employed for the ensuing year in the various rural and village school districts within the county school district, and also the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation and the compensation of the county superintendent; and such board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents and of the local expense of the normal school in the county."

"Section 4744-3.—The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents and for contingent expenses, as may be certified by the county board. Such moneys shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund.' The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount; which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

Under the provisions of the law relating to the appointment, powers and duties of the county superintendent of schools, it will be observed that the legislature provided with great care that said superintendent should be appointed and his salary fixed before August first of each year, the date upon which the county board of education shall make its certificate to the county auditor as provided in section 4744-2 G. C., for the purpose of enabling the said auditor to make the proper apportionments of the school fund. In fact the other section of said law which relates to teachers and district superintendents discloses the same purpose in the mind of the legislature relative to definitely fixing the amount of funds necessary prior to said date of each year.

In an opinion (No. 797) to Hon. Frank B. Pearson, superintendent of public instruction, which I rendered on November 19, 1919, I held that the salary or compensation of the district superintendent of the county schools could not be increased during the term of service for which he was elected. The following, which logically is applicable to the question under consideration, is quoted from said opinion:

"The above section (Sec. 4744-2 G. C.) provides that the county auditor shall have received prior to the first day of August of each year the certificate from the county board of education as to the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation, along with the certification as to the compensation of the county superintendent.

This certification is made to the auditor in order that the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salary of a district superintendent may be properly entered on the records and provided for in the allotment of school funds. It would thus be seen that promiscuous increases of salary for district superintendents made at any time during the calendar year would have a tendency to disturb the original certificate made by the county board of education to the county auditor prior to the first day of August in each year.

Attention is invited to Opinion 2069, appearing at page 1855, Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, wherein it was held:

'There is no power in the appointing authority provided by section 4739 G. C., 104 O. L., 140, to increase the compensation of a district superintendent during the term of service for which he was elected, and his compensation fixed pursuant to the provisions of section 4743 G. C., 104 O. L., 142, after the appointment has been accepted by the person so elected.'

After holding that district superintendents are not officers and are, therefore, not subject to the provisions of section 20, Article II of the constitution, the Attorney-General further said:

'The presidents of the village and rural boards of education and the members of such boards, when in joint session, are, however, in the employment of district superintendents, subject to the familiar rule that public officers, in the discharge of their official duties, have only such powers as are expressly conferred by law or are necessary to the proper performance of duties imposed or the exercise of powers conferred by express provision of law.

The particular officers referred to, in the employment of district superintendents, and the fixing of their compensation, pursuant to sections 4739 and 4743 G. C., supra, have not conferred upon them the general power to contract and be contracted with, as in the case of boards of education, under the provision of section 4749 G. C.

There is found no express statutory provision authorizing the presidents of the board of education of rural and village districts, or the members of such boards in joint session, authorized by section 4739 G. C., supra, to increase or decrease the compensation of a district superintendent, after the same has once been determined, pursuant to the provisions of section 4743 G. C., supra, and the same accepted by the person so elected, and it is not believed that the exercise of such power is in the way necessary to a proper performance of the duties imposed by law upon such officers in respect to the election of and determining the compensation of district superintendents.'

Speaking of the certification to be made by the county board of education to the county auditor prior to August 1, in each year, as provided under section 4744-2 G. C., the then Attorney-General further said:

'I am aware of no authority to make a second certification under this section and am of the opinion that when a certification has once been made to the county auditor, according to the provisions of section 4744-2 G. C., supra, no subsequent certification may be made for that year.'

In Opinion No. 334, addressed to Hon. Donald F. Melhorn, prosecuting attorney, Kenton, Ohio, under date of June 2, 1917, a later Attorney-General, upholding the view taken by his predecessor, further said:

'Following the reasoning of said opinion (2069), the term, then, of the district superintendents who were elected in 1914 would extend, as above noted, to August 31, 1915. How, then, could any district superintendents receive another or a different salary covering the said period? If the same district superintendents were re-elected, they had already been paid for said time, or at least their contract covered said period. * * * The various presidents or members of the boards of education who made up the supervision district were without authority to enter into contracts covering a period which was included in the contracts previously entered into. * * * The officers who employed such district superintendents could exercise only such powers as are conferred upon them by law. They had no authority to make a contract overlapping any other contract. The money having been paid thereon, recovery of the same back can be had.'

Section 4743 G. C., supra, has not been amended in any wise since it was enacted in 104 O. L., page 133, and containing the language in the text upon which the two opinions by former Attorneys General were based.

Section 4744-2, providing for the certification by the county board of education to the county auditor of the number of district superintendents and the compensation of the county superintendent prior to the first day of August of each year, was amended in 108 O. L., 233, but such amendment was that the local expense of the normal school in the county should also be certified by the county board of education at the time of the regular August certification.

There has been no change in the law that the salary of the district superintendent shall be fixed by the appointing authority at the same time that the appointment is made, and it is therefore the opinion of the Attorney-General that the appointing authority provided in section 4739 G. C., whose duty it is to elect the district superintendent of schools, has no power to increase the compensation of such district superintendent during the term of service for which he was elected. Under the provisions of section 4743 G. C., the compensation of such district superintendent shall be fixed at the time of his election and such compensation cannot be changed after the appointment has been accepted by the person so elected."

Section 4744, supra, provides that the board of education shall appoint the county superintendent on or before July 20, for a term not longer than three years commencing August 1.

Section 4744-1, supra, provides for the fixing of the salary of the county superintendent, and while said section does not specify the time when said salary shall be fixed, it must be construed with section 4744-2, which requires the county board of education to certify to the county auditor the amount of the compensation of the county superintendent, as it does teachers and district superintendents, on or before August 1. It is very evident that unless the salary of the superintendent is fixed on or before August 1, the board can not comply with the provisions of the law relative to making the proper certification.

There is no authority under the law granting the county board of education the power to increase the salary of the county superintendent during his term of appointment. On the other hand, the legislature granted to county boards of education the power to appoint a county superintendent for a definite term and fix the salary, and it may fairly be implied that it was its intention to provide against the disturbance of the auditor's apportionment of school funds by promiscuous change of salaries.

In effect there is no material distinction between the authority and power granted to appoint and fix the salary of a county school superintendent and a district school superintendent.

In specific answer to your inquiry as to whether it is legal for a county superintendent of schools to draw an increase in salary which was granted by the board of education on September 4, 1918, when said superintendent had been appointed and his salary fixed on March 13 of the same year by said board, you are advised that if by any possible construction of the law it can be maintained that the county board of education could legally increase the salary of the county superintendent during the term for which he was appointed, said superintendent could not legally draw said increase for services rendered previous to the date upon which said increase in compensation was granted. Such a resolution is retroactive in its provision, in so far as it applies to the compensation of said superintendent prior to the date of its passage. A board of this character has only such powers as are delegated to it by the legislature, and Article II, section 28 of the constitution of Ohio provides in part as follows:

> "The General Assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts; * * *."

It is evident that the legislature has not the power to enact retroactive measures and it can not delegate a power it does not possess.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

DITCHES—PROCEEDINGS COMMENCED PRIOR TO ENACTMENT OF AMENDED SENATE BILL NO. 100, 108 O. L., 956—COMPENSATION OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS GOVERNED BY RECENT LAW FROM OCTOBER 10, 1919.

The provisions of section 57 of amended Senate bill No. 100, 108 O. L., 956, fixing compensation of county commissioners while engaged on improvements under such law, became operative on October 10, 1919, and are applicable to ditch proceedings commenced prior to the enactment of such law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter submitting the following question:

> "Do the provisions of section 57 of amended Senate bill No. 100 become operative with the taking effect of the bill October 10, 1919? If so, can the present county commissioners charge $5.00 a day for ditch work in ditch proceedings that were commenced prior to enactment of amended Senate bill No. 100, in view of the provisions of section 26 of the General Code?"

Section 3001 G. C., a part of amended Senate bill No. 100 (108 O. L. 969) fixes the "annual compensation" of county commissioners. I have given you my construction of this section in opinions rendered to you on September 12, 1919, (No. 623) and November 17, 1919, (No. 791).

Section 57 of the same bill (which, as you say, became operative October 10, 1919) is as follows:

> "In addition to the regular salary provided by law for the county commisioners, each county commisioner shall receive five dollars per day for each day he is actually engaged on improvements under this act, but in no case shall any commissioner receive an aggregate of more than twenty-five dollars for services on one improvement, nor shall they receive pay for two separate improvements on the same day. Such amounts shall be paid by warrants issued by the county auditor upon the county treasurer, upon the filing in his office of an itemized statement by the commissioner of such service; provided, however, that the aggregate compensation paid a county commissioner under this section for said service shall not exceed in one year five hundred dollars."

Prior to that date, the per diem payment to each county commissioner for similar service was three dollars. Clearly, the provision for a compensation of five dollars a day is applicable after October 10, 1919, unless Article II, section 20 of the constitution prevents officers whose terms began prior to October 10, 1919, from receiving the increased rate of compensation during such terms. The constitutional provision referred to is:

> "The General Assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

It will be noted that the inhibition is against changing the salary of any officer during his existing term. Is the per diem payment provided in section 57 a salary? In the first place, as I have stated, the provision which we are considering occurs in an entirely different section from that which purports to fix the annual compensation of county commissioners.

In Thompson vs. Phillips, 12 O. S. 617, the court said, in construing section 20, Article II:

> "It is manifest, from the change of expression in the two clauses of the section, that the word 'salary' was not used in a general sense, embracing any compensation fixed for an officer, but in its limited sense, of an annual or periodical payment for services—a payment dependent on the time, and not on the amount of the service rendered."

The syllabus of Gobrecht vs. Cincinnati, 51 O. S. 68, is in part as follows:

> "Compensation of a public officer fixed by a provision that 'each member of the board who is present during the entire session of any regular meeting, and not otherwise, shall be entitled to receive five dollars for his attendance,' is not 'salary' within the meaning of section 20, of Article II, of the constitution, which provides that 'the General Assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office, and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished.'
> An increase in the compensation of such officer during his term is not prohibited by the constitution."

Spear, J., speaking for the court, after approving Thompson vs. Phillips, supra, said (p. 72):

"We think the compensation in the case at bar comes within the principle of the case cited, although a per diem compensation. It is not, within the meaning of the section quoted, 'salary.' Hence, an increase in the pay of a member during his term, is not prohibited by the constitution."

The syllabus of Theobold vs. The State, 10 C. C. (n. s.) 175, is in part as follows and accurately states the law of the case:

"A salary is a determined and stipulated sum to be paid for a fixed period. Officers receiving their compensation under a fee system are not salaried officers, and a change in the method of compensation from fees to a salary is not a change which 'affects the salary of any officer during his existing term.'"

Newby, J., in State ex rel. Taylor, Auditor, vs. Madison County, 13 O. D. (N. P.) 97, after reviewing the Ohio authorities in point said: (p. 100)

"From these cases we may extract the rule that certainty as to the amount to be paid is a distinguishing feature of a salary. Where the amount of the pay of an officer is to be ascertained by a method which at different times will produce varying amounts, the pay of the officer thus ascertained is not a 'salary' within the meaning of the constitution."

People ex rel., vs. Wemple, 52 Hun 414, is an authority exactly in point. The statute of New York gave a per diem allowance of five dollars to the judges of the supreme court while officially engaged away from their homes, for their reasonable expenses. Subsequently this provision was changed so as to allow a gross sum of twelve hundred dollars per year in full of all expenses allowed by law. The constitution of the state permitted judges to retire at seventy years of age and provided that compensation must be continued during the remainder of the terms for which they were elected. It was held that relator, having retired as provided by law, was not entitled to receive the twelve hundred dollars per year in addition to the compensation provided.

Other interesting and instructive cases upon which it is not necessary to comment are:

Blick vs. Mercantile Trust & Dep. Co., 77 Atl. 846.
Beach vs. Kent, 105 N. W. 867.
Ruperich vs. Baehr, 75 Pac. 783.
Board of Com'rs. vs. Trowbridge, 95 Pac. 555.

A statement by Maxwell, J., who wrote the opinion in the case last above cited, announces the distinction recognized by the authorities everywhere:

"A salary is a fixed compensation for regular work, while fees are compensation for particular services rendered at irregular periods, payable at the time the services are rendered."

I am clearly of the opinion that the compensation provided in section 57 of Am. S. B. No. 100 is not a "salary" and not within the inhibition of the last clause of Art. II, section 20 of the Ohio constitution.

Is the question affected by section 26 G. C., the provisions of which are as follows:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

Section 3001 G. C., prior to its last amendment, contained this language:

"In counties where ditch work is carried on by the commissioners, in addition to the salary herein provided, each commissioner shall receive three dollars for each day of time he is actually employed in ditch work, the total amount so received for such ditch work not to exceed three hundred dollars in any one year."

By the amendment to section 3001 G. C., this provision is no longer a part of the law. The right to receive three dollars per day is gone. This provision as to compensation was in my judgment no part of any proceeding referred to in section 26. It might be well argued under the latter section that a proceeding for a ditch should not be affected by any amendment to a statute under which it originated, but to say that the compensation of those who were to supervise the work remains the same, is another matter. The statute did not provide that the commissioners should be compensated for their attention to any particular proceeding, but that they were to have three dollars a day for time actually employed in ditch work. I do not think a construction of section 26 G. C., which would make it applicable to these provisions for compensation, is at all warranted.

A more serious question arises, however, from this language in section 57, supra:

"* * *each county commissioner shall receive five dollars per day for each day he is actually engaged on improvements under this act, * *."

The right to compensation of three dollars per day has been taken away by the amendment to section 3001 G. C. and the right to receive it at the rate of five dollars a day seems to be limited to improvements "under this act." Is a ditch proceeding, begun prior to October 10, 1919, within the meaning of this term? In my opinion such was the intention of the legislature. The language is not "begun under this act," but "under this act," and it would be difficult to conceive of an improvement to be finished subsequent to October 10, 1919, to which some provision of the act would not be in some manner applicable. While there is some obscurity in the language used in section 57, supra, I am of the opinion that the intention of the legislature, that the daily compensation of commissioners on ditch work should be increased to five dollars per day on the going into effect of the amendment, is reasonably clear. It is therefore my view that compensation at this rate may be allowed in ditch proceedings, although they were commenced prior to the enactment of Senate bill No. 100.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY MAKE AN ALLOWANCE TO MAGISTRATES, AND CONSTABLES FOR FEES EARNED IN FELONY CASES WHEREIN STATE HAS FAILED UNDER SECTION 3019 G. C.—WHEN STATE HAS OR HAS NOT "FAILED."

1. Under the provisions of section 3019 G. C. an allowance may be made by the county commissioners to the proper officers for fees earned in felony cases wherein the state has failed.

2. The state has "failed" when at any time after the filing of an affidavit before a magistrate having jurisdiction, charging the accused with an offense against the state, the case is terminated before conviction.

3. When the accused under indictment has broken jail and is at large, the case has not terminated, the state has not failed and an allowance for fees can not be made under section 3019 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. FLOYD E. STINE, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication of recent date, which reads as follows:

> "Will you kindly advise me whether or not fees earned by a magistrate, constable or marshal, in a state case wherein the defendant has been bound over to the grand jury, and the case is ignored by the grand jury, can be allowed by the county commissioners under section 3019 of the General Code? Also whether or not the bill can be allowed where the defendant after being bound over by the magistrate and placed in the county jail, under bond, has broken jail and is at large."

Section 3019 of the General Code, which relates to allowances for fees to officers by the county commissioners in cases wherein the state has failed, provides as follows:

> "In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such cases, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

It is assumed that the persons mentioned in your letter were charged with the commission of a felony. Your inquiry raises the issue as to what constitutes a "state failure" under the provisions of the above statute. It is believed that at any time after the affidavit has been filed before a magistrate having jurisdiction charging the accused with an offense against the state, the case is begun and at any time thereafter the case is terminated before conviction, regardless of the method, the state has failed in view of said statute.

In an opinion found in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, Volume I, page 226, the then Attorney-General held substantially as above stated. The following is quoted from said opinion:

> "* * * I am of the opinion that prosecution for a felony has been instituted as soon as the affidavit charging the crime has been presented to and filed by the magistrate, and if any time thereafter the prosecution is terminated by any means other than conviction, the state has 'failed' within the meaning of section 3019 G. C., and the county commissioners may make an allowance to the officer in place of fees under said section."

You are advised that in the first situation your letter presents the county commissioners may allow the fees as provided in said section to the proper officers, provided, of course, that the total amount of said allowance for any year is not more than the legal fees to which said officers are entitled in said cause and does not exceed one hundred dollars in the aggregate.

In reply to the second state of facts you present it would seem that there has been no termination of the case in which the defendant has broken jail and is at large. He may be rearrested, tried and convicted. By no process of reasoning could the conclusion be reached that the state has failed in this instance. Therefore, the statute being clear that the allowance may be made by the county commissioners only in cases wherein the state has failed, it follows that the allowance for fees under section 3019 G. C. cannot be legally made until there is some termination of said case definitely indicating that the state has failed.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY EXPERIMENT FARMS—PROCEEDS FROM SALE OF PRODUCE MAY NOT BE PAID OUT FOR ERECTION OF FARM DWELLINGS.

Under existing statutes, the proceeds arising from the sale of the produce of county experiment farms may not be paid out for the erection on such farms of dwelling houses for employes and other farm buildings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. CHARLES E. THORNE, Director, Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt of your recent letter is acknowledged, reading as follows:

"For the equipment of the county experiment farms operated by this station one or two dwellings and as many barns are necessary on each farm in addition to those found on the farms when purchased, to house the necessary help, as from two to three or more men must be kept on each farm throughout the year, and in order to secure the steady and trained help essential to the successful conduct of such work as is done on these farms, it is necessary to employ married men in so far as possible.

Before the present era of high priees it was possible to erect houses suitable for this purpose at a cost of $2,500 to $3,000; but such houses now cost from $4,000 to $5,000.

After the original equipment funds provided for under sections 1177-4 have been exhausted, it is desirable to employ the proceeds of produce sales for this purpose, and as a matter of economy it is desirable to build the houses as far as possible with the ordinary labor of the farms, which may be employed for this purpose at times when they are not urgently needed for farm work, or when weather conditions are unfavorable for such work. Of course, some parts of the work, such as carpentry, masonry, etc., would be let upon competitive bids.

We therefore ask your advice upon the following points:

1. Under the county farm law can dwelling houses for employes and other farm buildings be erected on county experiment farms and be paid for out of the receipts of said farm?

2. If such buildings can be erected must the approval and consent of the county commissioners be first obtained before such buildings can be erected?

3. Will the erection of such buildings come under the state building code, or can such erection be performed, in part, by the regular county farm laborers?"

The so-called County Experiment Farm law is found in sections 1174 to 1177-9, both inclusive, of the General Code.

Especially important in the consideration of your questions are sections 1177-4 and 1177-8 G. C., which read:

"Section 1177-4.—The equipment of an experiment farm shall consist of such buildings, drains, fences, implements, live stock, stock feed and teams as shall be deemed necessary by the board of control for the successful work of such farm, and the initial equipment shall be provided by the county in which the farm is established, together with a sufficient fund to pay the wages of the laborers required to conduct the work of such farm during the first season. The county commissioners shall appropriate for the payment of the wages of laborers employed in the management of such farms as may be established under this act, and for the purpose of supplies and materials necessary to the proper conduct of such farms such sums not exceeding two thousand dollars annually for any farm, as may be agreed upon between such county commissioners and the board of control."

"Section 1177-8.—The produce of each county experiment farm as may be established under this act, over and above that required for the support of the teams and live stock kept on the farm, shall be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the labor and to the purchase of the supplies and materials required for the proper management of the farm as contemplated by this act, and for the maintenance of its equipment. Any surplus beyond these requirements shall be covered into the county treasury and placed to the credit of the general fund of the county, except in the case of the use of farms already belonging to the county, in which case the proceeds shall be placed to the credit of such fund as the county commissioners may designate."

In using the expression "the receipts of said farm," you mean, it is assumed, the proceeds resulting from the sale, pursuant to section 1177-8 G. C., of that part of the produce of the county experiment farm which is not required for the support of the teams and live stock kept thereon.

Section 1177-8 G. C. clearly indicates the disposition of such proceeds. The same are to be applied to the payment of the labor and to the purchase of supplies and materials required for the proper management of the farm, and also to the maintenance of its equipment, any surplus arising after the accomplishment of these objects to be covered into the county treasury.

It would clearly be impossible to construe the phrase "for the maintenance of its equipment" in such a way as to include the erection of new buildings on the farm, such as houses for employes and other farm buildings. The term "maintenance" refers to the up-keep of something already subsisting.

The word "equipment" is given a kind of special definition in this connection by the opening provisions of section 1177-4 G .C., which says that "the equipment of an experiment farm shall consist of" certain enumerated things, some seven in number. In the enumeration we find the word "buildings." The further provision is that the "initial equipment" shall be provided by the county in which the farm is established. The occurrence of the adjective "initial" leads one to expect that somewhere else in the act will be found provisions as to the acquisition of equipment which is not "initial," that is, subsequent equipment. Upon examining the further provisions of the act, however, we find that out of the seven enumerated items of equipment, there are but two, to wit, live stock and teams, as to which any further definite provision is made. As to these, the provision is, in effect, that the farm produce shall first be applied to the support of the teams and live stock kept on the farm. The only mention made of the other five items of equipment is the blanket reference to the effect that the proceeds of the sale of the farm produce shall be used for the "maintenance of its equipment."

In connection with your first question, I have also given consideration to the provision in section 1177-8 G. C. authorizing the application of the proceeds of the sale of farm produce to > "the purchase of the supplies and materials required for the proper management of the farm as contemplated by this act."

The same words "supplies and materials" also occur in section 1177-4 G. C.

While the words in question are capable of broad meaning, yet having regard to the connection in which they are used, I am inclined to think the legislature did not intend that they should include the idea of new buildings on the county experiment farms, but rather that they refer to things necessary to the operation of the farm when the same was once established in pursuance of a given plan.

You are therefore advised that, under existing statutes, the proceeds arising from the sale of the produce of county experiment farms may not be paid out for the erection on such farms of dwelling houses for employes and other farm buildings.

The nature of my answer to your first question makes it unnecessary to further consider your second and third questions.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—PART TIME TEACHER IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOL—SALARY, HOW COMPUTED—DISTRICT SUPPLYING PART TIME TEACHERS CAN OBTAIN STATE AID—HOW TO COMPUTE NUMBER OF FULL TIME TEACHERS.

1. Where a school district employs teachers in the elementary grades, such district is not required to pay such teachers the scale of salaries prescribed in section 7595-1 G. C. and require them to teach full time in order to obtain state aid, for there can be a part time teacher in an elementary school as well as in a high school and there is no prohibition in the law against paying part time teachers in elementary schools the part time salary mentioned in section 7595-1 G. C., such part time salary to be computed on the full time hours of service performed in each month.

2. Where a district employs part time teachers in the elementary schools, the fractions representing service of part time teachers shall be added together to ascertain the number of full time teachers employed in such district; that is, two half time teachers to be computed as one full time teacher and the number of persons of school age in such district desiring state aid must be at least twenty times the number of full time teachers employed therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your recent request for the opinion of this department on the following statement of facts:

> "In one of the school districts seeking state aid the application discloses that they are employing their primary teachers on a part time basis; that is to say, all of the teachers are represented as serving one-half, one-third and two-thirds time in the elementary schools. The application further discloses that they are apparently paying these teachers at the rate per month provided by statute: that is, to a one-half time teacher they are paying one-half of the statutory salary.
> The Freeman law makes clear the right of a high school to have state aid where teachers in the high school are employed part time. But the statute is not clear as to the elementary grades and we would like to have an opinion upon the following:
> Where a school district employs teachers in the elementary grades, must the district pay them salaries prescribed by the Freeman law and require them to teach full time in order to obtain state aid?
> Co-related to the above question is another, namely: If the school district in question employs four part time teachers in the elementary grades, how shall we calculate the number of teachers to the enumeration; that is, how shall we determine whether a district is employing not to exceed one teacher for every twenty pupils?"

Section 7690 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. * * * Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished, during the term for which the appointment is made. * * *"

The discretion resting in boards of education has been recently described in the case of Brannon et al. vs. Board of Education, 99 O. S., reported in the Ohio Law Bulletin, September 29, 1919, the court saying:

> "2. A court has no authority to control the discretion vested in a board of education by the statutes of this state or to substitute its judgment for the judgment of such board on any question it is authorized by law to determine.
> 3. A court will not restrain a board of education from carrying into effect its determination of any question within its discretion, except for an abuse of discretion or for fraud or collusion on the part of such board in the exercise of its statutory authority."

It is apparent, therefore, that under the provisions of section 7690 G. C., a board of education can employ a teacher for part time or for full time, as such board in its discretion, having in mind the needs of the district, may determine.

The question which you submit is whether a board of education, exercising its discretion in the employing of part time teachers, in its elementary schools, by so doing eliminates itself from consideration for state aid for such school district.

The state aid law (sections 7594-1 and 7597 G. C.) was enacted by the legislature for the purpose of assisting the public schools in weak school districts and not to hamper them in their progress. It would therefore seem that the intent of the law is, that it should not be construed against weak districts, but rather in favor of weak districts, if the language of such state aid law permits it. The question, therefore, in the first instance is, whether this district, which on account of local contingencies and conditions, saw fit to employ certain teachers below the high school for part time rather than full time, has cut itself off from state aid under the provisions of section 7595-1 G. C. The pertinent part of such section bearing upon the question at hand, reads as follows:

"A school district may make application for state aid to cover deficiencies in its tuition fund, by filing with the auditor of state an application therefor in such form as the auditor of state shall prescribe, by first complying and showing compliance with the following conditions: * * *

3. It shall pay its teachers neither more nor less than the following salaries: In elementary schools teachers without having less than one year's professional training or less than three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty dollars per month; teachers having at least one year's professional training or three years' teaching experience in the state, sixty-five dollars a month; teachers having completed the full two years' course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, or who have had five years' teaching experience in the state, seventy-five dollars a month. In high schools, inclusive of joint high school districts, an average of ninety dollars a month in each high school. Such salaries shall be for full time and in high schools if any teacher be not employed full time, then, in computing the average, the salary for each hour of service paid such part time teacher shall, for the purposes of the calculation, be multiplied by the number of full time hours in each month, and the sum so ascertained shall be assumed to be the salary paid such part time teacher. In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time, or at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time."

It is true, as you indicate, that in the above section there is no clear provision for the employment of a part time teacher below the high school, and yet there is no specific prohibition in such section against a board of education in their discretion employing a part time teacher in the elementary schools. As far as the question at hand is concerned, such paragraph might be condensed to read as follows:

"* * * Such salaries shall be for full time * * *. In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time, or at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time."

What did the legislature mean when it said "such salaries shall be for full time" if it did not also mean thereby that there would be teachers who would teach part time? The sentence "in no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month", etc., is the closing sentence of paragraph 3 of section 7595-1 G. C., and the language is "a teacher", and does not necessarily mean that it is limited to any kind of teacher in particular, but rather it means all teachers.

If certain other sections of the statutes are read in connection with the question at hand, it is apparent that the general assembly had in mind that teachers, though teaching in schools that were elementary and not high schools, could be part time teachers in that in certain instances the remainder of their time would be taken up as principal or superintendent, for paragraph 5 of section 7595-1 G. C. reads as follows:

> "It (the board of education) shall not transfer or cause to be transferred to any other fund any monies that may be in the tuition fund, nor shall it expend any monies that may be in the tuition fund except for the following purposes: * * *
> (2) Salaries of principals or superintendents, or additional salaries paid teachers as compensation for duties performed as principals or superintendents. Provided, however, that if additional salaries are paid as compensation for duties performed by teachers, as principals or superintendents, the state superintendent of public instruction shall first certify that such additional duties are required and performed."

Thus in an elementary school there could be and the law contemplates that there should be a principal where schools are consolidated, for section 7705 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "In all high schools and consolidated schools, one of the teachers shall be designated by the board as principal and shall be the administrative head of such school."

A consolidated school is one that in most instances is an elementary school and it is not necessary that there be any large number of schools placed in one building to have a consolidated school, that is to say, if but two or three schools were suspended and consolidated, one of the teachers in such consolidated school under section 7705 G. C. must be designated as the principal of such school, and in performing the duties of principal in such school it is entirely possible that the duties of principal would take part of the time of the teacher, in which event there would be a teacher who was a part time teacher and a part time principal in a consolidated school which taught the elementary subjects. A consolidated school of this kind could exist in a weak school district as well as in any of the other school districts of the state and it can easily be seen how a person employed by the board of education as principal of such consolidated school might very well be a part time teacher.

The language in paragraph 3 of section 7595-1 says that in high schools if any teacher be not employed full time, then in computing the average (which is to be ninety dollars per month) the salary for each hour of service paid such part time teacher shall, for the purposes of calculation, be multiplied by the number of full time hours each month, and the sum so ascertained shall be assumed to be the salary paid such part time teacher. The language here used is simply to show a method for the purposes of calculation and there is nothing in such section which prohibits the same kind of calculation being made for a part time teacher in an elementary school, it having been shown before that a board of education, in its discretion, may hire a part time teacher in an elementary school.

It is believed that the general assembly did not intend to discriminate against part time teachers in elementary schools by providing that while the high school teacher should have his salary computed on the number of full time hours in each month, the elementary teacher teaching part time should be denied that privilege. This seems rather to be an inadvertence on the part of the legislature, because in the sweeping clause at the end it says that in no case shall "a teacher be employed * * * at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time". This is but one of the oversights occurring in House Bill No. 406 amending the state aid law providing funds for weak school districts. Thus the sentence above says that in no case shall a teacher be employed at the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time. Technically, this means that no part time teacher can be employed at the rate of sixty dollars per month but could be employed at fifty-nine dollars per month, or sixty-one dollars per month, or a greater amount. As the law reads, as passed by the assembly, the figures arbitrarily put the rate of sixty dollars per month so that no part time teacher shall be paid at the rate of sixty dollars per month. Certain words must have been omitted in this sentence, for the legislature possibly intended that the sentence should read:

> "In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time, or more than the rate of sixty dollars per month for part time."

But no one has authority to add these or any other words in the sentence under discussion, and it can hardly be believed that the legislature meant that for part time teachers the exact rate of sixty dollars per month was denied, but any lesser or greater figures could be used. Again, in section 7595-4 provision is made for state aid for a joint high school and the subject under discussion is a joint high school, yet the section says that

> "The high school committee shall place in the tuition fund that part of tuition received from other districts which represents the expense for salaries of teachers as computed pursuant to section 7736."

It is found that section 7736 is the section which provides for the computation of the cost of tuition in elementary schools and the section that was possibly meant by the general assembly was section 7747, which is the section which treats upon the cost of tuition for high school pupils, the subject discussed in section 7595-4.

Again, section 7595-2 provides that:

> "The application to the state auditor for state aid shall be filed between the first day of September and the first day of October for the then current school year."

While section 7596 says:

> "Whenever any board of education finds that it will have such a deficit for the current school year, such board shall on the first day of October, or any time prior to the first day of January of said year, make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor."

Again, section 7595 G. C. reads:

"No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than fifty dollars per month", while paragraph 3 of section 7595-1 G. C. says:

"In no case shall a teacher be employed at less than sixty dollars per month for full time * * *."

It is believed that these discrepancies in the state aid law, as well as others that could be given in order to clear up certain situations, should be corrected by the general assembly while the opportunity is at hand, because it is apparent that the time of application conflicts in the two sections named above, and such law uses fifty dollars as the minimum salary for teachers in one place and sixty dollars as the minimum salary for teachers in another place, and high school tuition could not be computed under section 7736, as provided for in section 7595-4. It is entirely possible that the whole question of state aid for weak school districts will be taken from the statute books of Ohio by changes in the taxation laws of the state and providing for such school districts in some other manner, but if the state aid statute is to remain upon the statute books, the errors pointed out herein should be corrected that their meaning might be clear.

Bearing upon the two questions which you submit, it would hardly seem necessary that teachers should teach full time in elementary schools in order that such school districts might receive state aid, and a board of education employing part time teachers in elementary schools is acting wholly within its own discretion as to the needs in its particular district, and such discretion cannot be disturbed as long as it comes within the meaning of section 7690 and section 7620 G. C., giving the board general powers, or, if such discretion is had under other special sections occurring under the school laws.

You ask:

"If the school district in question employs four part time teachers in the elementary grades, how shall we calculate the number of teachers to the enumeration; that is, how shall we determine whether a district is employing not to exceed one teacher for every twenty pupils?"

Section 7597 G. C., the closing section of the state aid statute, reads in part as follows:

"No district shall be entitled to state aid * * * unless the number of persons of school age in such district is at least twenty times the number of teachers employed therein. * * *"

What is meant by the words "the number of teachers employed therein?" It is apparent that the meaning intended here in this section is the number of full time teachers employed therein, and if part time teachers are employed to make up the time of a full time teacher, then the fractional parts of full time put in by the several teachers in such district should be added together and the sum of such fractional parts of service, even though performed by different persons, would be the number of full time teachers employed therein. The section requires that when this number of teachers is ascertained, the number of persons of school age in such district must be at least twenty times the number of teachers so ascertained. Thus, two half time teachers should be figured as one full time teacher, three one-third time teachers should be figured as one full time teacher, if there are districts which have fractions of this kind in computing the service of the teachers in their district.

Your attention is invited to opinion No. 572, issued to the Auditor of State under date of August 16, 1919, which goes very fully into the matter of what is meant by a full time teacher and what is meant by a part time teacher, and such opinion should be read in conjunction with the one here submitted.

Based upon the discussion above made, and the law as herein quoted, it is the opinion of the Attorney-General:

1. Where a school district employs teachers in the elementary grades, such district is not required to pay such teachers the scale of salaries prescribed in section 7595-1 G. C. and require them to teach full time in order to obtain state aid, for there can be a part time teacher in an elementary school as well as in a high school and there is no prohibition in the law against paying part time teachers in elementary schools the part time salary mentioned in section 7595-1 G. C., such part time salary to be computed on the full time hours of service performed in each month.

2. Where a district employs part time teachers in the elementary schools, the fractions representing service of part time teachers shall be added together to ascertain the number of full time teachers employed in such district; that is, two half time teachers to be computed as one full time teacher and the number of persons of school age in such district desiring state aid must be at least twenty times the number of full time teachers employed therein.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

BRIDGES—WHEN COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OR MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ARE REQUIRED TO KEEP IN REPAIR CERTAIN BRIDGES WITHIN CITIES—SECTIONS 2421, 7557 AND 2421-1 G. C. DISCUSSED.

1. County commissioners are by virtue of sections 2421 and 7557 under the duty of keeping in repair those necessary bridges within the cities of the state which are over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use; and they are under a like duty as to similar bridges within those villages which do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund as authorized by section 2421-1 (108 O. L. 259.) If a village does demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund from the county, then the village is under the duty of maintaining such of the bridges mentioned as are wholly within the village.

2. Municipal corporations, both cities and villages, are under the duty of maintaining bridges on streets established by the city or village for the use and convenience of the municipality and not a part of a state road, county road, free turnpike, improved road, abandoned turnpike or plank road.

3. Section 2421-1 (108 O. L. 259), in so far as it purports to grant to cities of under fifteen thousand population the right to request from the county a portion of the bridge fund, is in contravention of section 1 of Article XVIII of the constitution of Ohio, and to that extent is unconstitutional and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—The receipt is acknowledged of your letter calling attention to a communication of your department to the city auditor of Lima, Ohio, wherein, after referring to an opinion of this department of date October 28, 1910, on the subject of the right of cities to receive from counties a portion of the bridge fund, you expressed the view that under section 2421 G. C. the commissioners of the county would have to keep in repair bridges within cities.

You state that exception has been taken to your views in this connection, and you are therefore led to submit to this department the question "are bridges within a municipality to be maintained by the county or municipality?"

You say in connection with your inquiry that certain municipalities are without funds to maintain the bridges within the municipality, and that the county in most cases has heretofore taken care of the repair and upkeep.

Section 2421 reads as follows:

> "The commisioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

As was pointed out in said opinion of this department dated October 28, 1910, and found in Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1910-1911 at page 781, former section 2824 of the Revised Statutes which made provision that certain cities might receive part of the bridge fund from the county, was omitted from the new General Code of 1910 in so far as it made such provision.

The statutes so far as such omission is concerned remained in the same form as pointed out in said opinion until the present year when on April 16, 1919, section 2421-1 was enacted as appears in 108 O. L. 259.

However, your question will first be considered without reference to said supplementary section, and the latter section will be then discussed.

The real intent and meaning of said section 2421 as it has existed without any accompanying provision of statute permitting cities and villages to demand and receive part of the bridge fund from the county is made plain by the opinion of our Supreme Court in the case of City of Piqua vs. Geist, 59 O. S. 163. As passed on in that case, the section in question was known by its old number, section 860 R. S., and while some slight verbal changes have been since made, the statute for present purposes was substantially the same when passed on by the Supreme Court as it is now. The purport of the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case referred to is fully shown by the syllabus, reading as follows:

> "Under the amendment made February 8, 1894, of section 860, Revised Statutes (91 Laws, 19), county commmissioners are not required to construct and keep in repair bridges over natural streams and public canals, on streets established by a city or village for the use and convenience of the municipality, and not a part of a state or county road, though the city or village receive no part of the bridge fund levied on the property within the same. It is the duty of the city or village to construct and keep in repair such bridges, and is liable in damages to one injured by its neglect to do so."

The Supreme Court in arriving at the conclusion just set out did not find it necessary to go beyond the terms of the statute itself. However, support is lent to the views of the court by the fact that there are found in the Municipal Code provisions relating to bridges, in substance as follows: By section 3677 municipal corporations have power to appropriate real estate for bridges, aqueducts, viaducts and approaches thereto; by section 3629 they have power to improve, keep in order and repair, light, clean and sprinkle bridges and viaducts within the corporation; by section 3939 they have power to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring real estate and right of way for viaducts, bridges and culverts, and for the purpose of constructing them; by section 4325 the duty of supervising the improvement and repair of bridges, viaducts and aqueducts is in cities charged upon the director of public service, and by section 4364 is in villages charged upon the street commissioner or engineer, under the direction of council.

Section 7557 G. C. reads:

> "The county commissioners shall cause to be constructed and kept in repair, as provided by law, all necessary bridges in villages and cities not having the right to demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund levied upon property within such corporations, on all state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, transferred and abandoned turnpikes and plank roads, which are of general and public utility, running into or through such village or city."

This section is practically the same as section 2421, so that what has been said as to the latter section applies to the former.

Previous to the enactment of the General Code of 1910, as has been stated, section 2824 was in effect providing in substance that a number of cities throughout the state might receive from the county a portion of the bridge tax. Said section 2824 was held constitutional in the case of State ex rel. Cline vs. Wright, Auditor, 9 N. P. (N. S.) 321. The theory of the opinion in that case seems to be that section 2824 was not special legislation in the sense of conferring corporate power, but on the contrary, constituted a mere agency through which the money thus received was to be expended, and that in constituting such agency it was within the power of the legislature to consider local conditions in authorizing certain cities to receive a portion of the bridge fund.

We are thus brought to said section 2421-1, reading as follows:

> "When the council of any city having a population not exceeding fifteen thousand or of a village shall cause to be filed in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such corporation is situated in whole or in part a certified copy of a resolution of such council demanding some portion of the county bridge fund levied upon property within such corporation, the county commissioners of such county may, by resolution, authorize the county auditor to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of such corporation for not to exceed sixty per cent of the county bridge fund then levied or collected, or in process of collection, upon the property in such corporation. Such fund so received by such corporation shall be used by it for the construction, repair and maintenance of any bridges and viaducts within such corporation."

It is to be noted that this section does not purport to be based upon local conditions, but is a general enactment applying to all villages in the state, and to all cities having a population not exceeding 15,000. Hence, even if the theory underlying the opinion in the case last cited is correct, it would seem to have no application to said section 2421-1. But in any event the case was decided before the adoption of the constitutional amendments of 1912. Our Supreme Court has recently held in the case of the City of Elyria vs. Roy F. Vandemark, Ohio Law Reporter for December 15, 1919, at page 379, as shown by the second and third paragraphs of the syllabus, as follows:

> "2. The constitution of the state having classified municipalities on a basis of population, the Legislature is without authority to make further classification thereof for the purpose of legislation affecting municipal government.
> 3. The provisions of section 4250 General Code, as amended 106 O. L. 483, purporting to authorize the council in cities having a population of less than twenty thousand to merge the office of director of public safety with that of the director of public service, are in conflict with the provisions of section 1, Article XVIII of the constitution of Ohio."

The principles embodied in these two paragraphs of the syllabus would seem to have full application to said section 2421-1. It is true that the latter section does not relate to broad governmental functions nor to the organization of municipal government; and yet it does purport to confer upon certain cities power to take municipal action which is not granted to other cities, and in that sense is "legislation affecting municipal government." Therefore, it must be concluded that said section 2421-1 is unconstitutional as applied to cities.

The same thing may not be said of it as applied to villages; for it has long been a rule of statutory construction in Ohio that "in construing statutes the rule is to enforce them so far as they are constitutionally made, rejecting only those provisions which show an excess of authority by the enacting power." (Cincinnati vs. Bryson, 15 O. 625-645). See also Bowles vs. State, 37 O. S. 35. The form of section 2421-1 is hardly such as to lay it open to the objection that the unconstitutional provisions in it are so interwoven with the other provisions as to be inseparable, or to the further objection that the whole statute taken together warrants the belief that the legislature would not have passed the valid portions alone. For these reasons, then, and inasmuch as the legislature may constitutionally provide that all villages have the right to demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund, there is no reason for believing the statute unconstitutional so far as it concerns villages.

In conformity with the foregoing, the answer to your question is as follows:

(1) County commissioners are by virtue of sections 2421 and 7557 under the duty of keeping in repair those necessary bridges within the cities of the state which are over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use; and they are under a like duty as to similar bridges within those villages which do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund as authorized by section 2421-1 (108 O. L. 259). If a village does demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund from the county, then the village is under the duty of maintaining such of the bridges mentioned as are wholly within the village.

(2) Municipal corporations, both cities and villages, are under the duty of maintaining bridges on streets established by the city or village for the use and convenience of the municipality and not a part of a state road, county road, free turnpike, improved road, abandoned turnpike or plank road.

Respectfully,

JOHN G. PRICE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—NEWLY CREATED VILLAGE INCLUDES WITHIN ITS LIMITS SCHOOL PROPERTY WHICH WAS ORIGINALLY OWNED BY TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICT—TITLE REMAINS VESTED IN TOWNSHIP—HOW TRANSFER OF LEGAL TITLE MADE.

When a newly created village includes within its corporate limits school property which was originally owned by the township school district, the title to said property remains vested in the township district and may be transferred by warranty deed at a time agreed upon by the several boards of education, the village board of education entering into an agreement to reimburse the township for the payment of bonds issued for the erection of the school building, as a consideration for said transfer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. HOMER HARPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of your communication of recent date in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "In 1915 the township of Willoughby, Lake county, built a school building and issued bonds therefor in the amount of $60,000, dated April 1.
> In 1916 the village of Wickliffe, in said township was incorporated, and the territory included within the corporate limits of said village includes the land of said school house and said new building.
> No separation was had of school funds or schools until March, 1919, when the county commissioners, acting in pursuance of law, duly appointed a board of education which organized and took charge of the schools and school funds of said village. I believe that there was no disagreement between the township (rural) board of education and the village board; but the question of the school lands and new school house is not so easy of solution.
> The township board has not yet deeded the land, with the new building upon it, to the village board. The building is commodious and modern, and the land, some five acres, valuable and increasing in value.
> Twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) of the bonded indebtedness has been paid, leaving $48,000 and interest outstanding.
> Inasmuch as the village, when part of the township helped to pay for the land and the first payments on the building, and inasmuch as it was used by both township and village up to 1919, and inasmuch as the village now has the exclusive use of said building and land, I have suggested that the township board deed the village board all said school lands lying within the corporate limits of the village (including, of course, the parcel on which the building stands), and the village on its part assume the payment of the remaining indebtedness represented by the unpaid bonds. In view of all the facts, including the size of the respective duplicates, I think that this would be equitable.
> Cannot this be done, the township board executing a deed, and the village agreeing to levy, collect and pay to the township such an amount annually as will pay the bonds and interest as they become due?"

From the statements in your letter, it is assumed that the board of education appointed by the commissioners for the village of Wickliffe in March, 1919, was appointed under the provisions of section 4710 G. C. The question of the disposition of school property, especially real estate, brought about by the transfer of territory from one district to another, and the establishment of a new district, has been one difficult to solve.

The recent enactment of section 4696 G. C. has solved the problem relative to transfers made by the county board of education. However, this has no application to a village district created in the manner the Wickliffe village school district was established.

Section 4690 G. C. provides:

> "When territory is annexed to a city or village, such territory thereby becomes a part of the city or village school district, and the legal title to school property in such territory for school purposes shall remain vested in the board of education of the school district from which such territory was detached, until such time as may be agreed upon by the several boards of education when such property may be transferred by warranty deed."

It will be observed that if the school building to which you refer, had been outside of the corporate limits of the village of Wickliffe when it was incorporated; and later included in territory "annexed" to said village, the above statute would apply. The question then is, will the same rule apply to territory "detached" from the township district and placed within the corporate limits of a newly created village?

An examination of the various statutes providing for the creation of new districts and transfers of territory, etc., discloses the purpose in the mind of the legislature to provide for the equitable adjustment of the property and financial rights among the districts and boards of education involved.

In the case of Cist vs. State, ex rel. reported in 21 O. S. 339, the court said:

> "In considering questions arising under the school legislation of the state, such construction should be placed on the various enactments, and their several provisions, as will give harmony to the school system and secure, as far as practicable, its equal benefits, and the reasonable facilities for their enjoyment, to every locality, without doing marked injustice to any."

It cannot be argued that it was the intention of the legislature to provide for the transfer of property when "annexed" to a village district and leave no remedy when the newly created village might include the same territory within its corporate limits.

It is believed that section 4690, supra, referred to by analogy furnishes a reasonable rule for a case such as the present one.

Therefore, the title to said premises remains in the township board of education, and may be transferred by warranty deed at such time as may be agreed upon by the several boards of education, the village board agreeing to reimburse the township board for the payment of the bonds issued for the erection of the new school building, as a consideration for said transfer.

JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

POOR RELIEF—DUTY OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES TO FURNISH SUCH RELIEF TO POOR IN CITY WITHIN TOWNSHIP WHEN THEY HAVE FUNDS BY REASON OF LEVIES MADE PRIOR TO TAKING EFFECT OF SECTION 3476, 108 O. L. 272—UNDER AMENDED ACT CITY REQUIRED TO LEVY AND FURNISH TEMPORARY RELIEF TO POOR OF CITY.

1. It is the duty of the township trustees to furnish "outside" relief to the poor residing in a city within the township when they have poor funds by reason of levies made prior to the taking effect of section 3476 G. C. as amended, 108 O. L. 272.

2. The act amending section 3476 G. C. was filed in the office of the secretary of state May 16, 1919, and did not become effective until ninety days thereafter. Under its provisions the city shall furnish all the temporary relief to be given to the poor residing in the city, and it is the duty of the city officials to provide for same in making future levies. However, poor relief funds collected or in process of collection by the township shall be expended in accordance with the law in force at the time the levies were made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1919.

HON. LLOYD S. LEECH, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledgment is made of the receipt of your letter of recent date, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "The incorporated city of Coshocton is located in Tuscarawas township, in Coshocton county, and for a number of years the incorporated city has not made any levy for a poor fund, but the levy has been entirely made by the Tuscarawas township, and paid into the Tuscarawas township treasury, and the necessary relief for both the city and the township has been paid for out of the township treasury. At the present time there is about $1,400.00 in the poor fund, being the balance remaining from the collection of the 1918 year assessments, and the township has made the levy for the poor fund for the tax year of 1919, while the city has made no levy for 1919, and therefore cannot collect any taxes for said purpose for the period of another year.
> We have in the city of Coshocton quite a number of families who are in great need of temporary relief, and as Sec. 3476 of the Ohio Laws, Vol. 108, page 272, provides that such cases are not city charges, and the board of trustees of said Tuscarawas township has refused to tender any aid to those who live within the incorporated limits, we desire an opinion from your office as to whether or not the board of trustees under the above section can lawfully use the township poor funds for poor relief within the incorporated city.
> I might further add that at least 90% of the poor fund in the hands of the township treasurer was paid by the tax payers of the incorporated city.
> In the event that you should be of the opinion that the board of trustees cannot use this money for relief purposes within the city, would an action lie as against the township to recover the city's portion of the poor tax thus collected?"

Section 3476 G. C., as amended in 108 O. L. 272, which pertains to your inquiry, reads as follows:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each city therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it. It is the intent of this act that townships and cities shall furnish relief in their homes to all persons needing temporary or partial relief who are residents of the state, county and township or city as described in sections 3477 and 3479. Relief to be granted by the county shall be given to those persons who do not have the necessary residence requirements, and to those who are permanently disabled or have become paupers and to such other persons whose peculiar condition is such they cannot be satisfactorily cared for except at the county infirmary or under county control. When a city is located within one or more townships, such temporary relief shall be given only by the proper municipal officers, and in such cases the jurisdiction of the township trustees shall be limited to persons who reside outside of such a city."

Prior to the enactment of said amendment, the rule was that the trustees of the township under the provisions of said section were required to furnish relief to those whose residences and disabilities entitled them to such, regardless of whether they were residing in the township or within the limits of a city situated within the township, except in those cases wherein the confines of a city or village were co-extensive with the township. Ann. Rep. of Atty. Gen., 1911-1912, Vol I, p. 250; Opin. of Atty. Gen., 1917, Vol. I, p. 138.

While concurrent powers are granted to both the city and township, enabling each to furnish "outside" relief under the provisions of said original section, notwithstanding that the indigent entitled to relief reside within the city, it is conceded that the duty finally devolved upon the township trustees. The said trustees are furnished ample means in other sections of the statutes whereby to levy and collect taxes upon the entire township for such purposes, which has ever been considered in fixing their responsibility. However the amended section, as above quoted, in the last paragraph thereof definitely fixes the responsibility and jurisdiction of the township trustees and the city authorities respectively, in connection with temporary relief to be granted under said statute.

The trustees of the township are limited to territory outside of the city and the proper city officers shall furnish relief to those who reside within its corporate limits. The language used in said amendment, "when a city is located within one or more townships", includes every city in the state except cities the confines of which are co-extensive with the township, in which case of course the proper city officials are charged with the furnishing of said relief.

It must be kept in mind in the consideration of this question that the levies made by the trustees in the case at hand were made in accordance with the provisions of law before the amendment to section 3476 G. C. became effective. This amendment was filed in the office of the secretary of state May 16, 1919, and became effective ninety days thereafter. The law requires that the levy for the poor relief and other purposes shall be made by the township trustees on or before the fifteenth day of May, annually. It therefore follows that the trustees in the case under consideration could not have contemplated the provisions of section 3476 G. C. as amended, nor could the city be charged with such notice.

It is the view of this department that when taxes have been levied and collected or are in the process of collection by the trustees of the township for a given purpose as provided by law, it is the duty of said trustees to expend said funds in accordance with the provisions of law in force at the time said levies were made. Art. XII, Sec. 5 of the Constitution provides:

> "No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax, shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only, it shall be applied."

Construing the constitutional provision in connection with the present statement of facts, it seems clear that the poor funds under control of the township trustees should be expended in the manner provided by the law in force at the time said levies were made.

Therefore you are advised that it is the duty of the trustees in the case you mention to grant relief to those legally entitled to the same, even though they reside in the city of Coshocton, so long as they have funds for said purposes, collected by reason of the levy made prior to the amendment to section 3476 becoming effective.

It is believed that the construction given to Sec. 5 of Art. XII of the Constitution by the Supreme Court in the case of State ex rel. Grant vs. Sayre, 89 O. S. 351, supports the view herein taken.

Undoubtedly under the provisions of section 3476 as amended, it is the manifest duty of city authorities, in making future levies, to provide for sufficient funds for all the temporary relief to be given to the poor within its corporate limits. On the other hand, the trustees in making their next levy may take into consideration the fact that the township will be relieved of furnishing temporary relief to those who reside in the city.

In view of the foregoing it is assumed that a reply to your second inquiry is unnecessary.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, CONTRACT WITH L. G. FOLTZ AND SONS, OF COLUMBUS, OHIO, FOR COMPLETION OF TEACHERS' TRAINING SCHOOL BUILDING—CONTRACT WITH THE STEINLE CONSTRUCTION COMPANY, TERMINATED—SEE OPINION NO. 627, SEPTEMBER 13, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1919.

Board of Trustees, Bowling Green State Normal College, Bowling Green, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On December 19, 1919, you submitted to me for my approval, as per section 2319 G. C. (107 O. L. 455), a contract between your board and L. G. Foltz and Sons, of Columbus, Ohio, relative to the construction and completion of the teachers 'training school building (exclusive of plumbing and heating and ventilating systems) at the Bowling Green State Normal College. You have also submitted the bond covering said contract. The amount payable to said contractor under said contract is $56,600.

It is understood that the letting of such contract becomes necessary by reason of the fact that the employment of the original contractor, The Steinle Construction Company, was terminated, following the refusal, neglect and failure of said contractor to carry on the work.

The certificate of the Industrial Commission of Ohio is now before me, to the effect that said contractor, L. G. Foltz and Sons, has complied with the act of February 26, 1913, known as the workmen's compensation law, in the matter of premium payment.

Following the opinion of this department, No. 627, rendered to you on September 13, 1919, holding that the unexpended balance in the appropriation for the building in question (106 O. L. 739, 814) was not available to discharge liabilities arising under the contemplated new contract, your board made application, under section 2313 G. C., to the state emergency board, and received from that body authority to expend, for the purpose stated in the contract hereinabove mentioned, the sum of $56,600, which is the amount payable under the Foltz contract.

I have before me the certificate of the auditor of state, that there are funds in the emergency appropriation heretofore made for the purpose set forth in said contract, sufficient to cover the amount payable thereunder.

Being satisfied that said contract and bond are according to law, I am this day certifying my approval thereon.

I have this day filed with the auditor of state the contract, bond and all other papers submitted to me relative to the improvement above stated.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL, LEASE OF OHIO CANAL LANDS IN CITY OF AKRON, OHIO, TO THE HIPPODROME ARCADE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1919.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 30, 1919, enclosing for my approval lease in triplicate form to the Hippodrome Arcade Company, of Akron, Ohio, covering Ohio canal property in the city of Akron.

I note that the rental is arranged on a sliding scale, and is based upon a valuation of $48,888.89.

While, as I have heretofore advised you, it is, to say the least, doubtful whether the statutes permit of the arrangement of rentals on a sliding scale, I note that the lease above mentioned is being entered into as the result of the cancellation of a previous lease, and that such previous lease was approved by the then Attorney-General with the rental stipulated as payable on a sliding scale.

Under the circumstances, I am approving the lease and returning it with such approval endorsed thereon.

Respectfully,
JOHN G. PRICE,
Attorney-General.
