

'Application for Parole.

Notice is hereby given that John Doe a prisoner now confined in the Ohio penitentiary, has been recommended to the Ohio Board of Clemency, by the warden and chaplain as legally eligible to a hearing for parole. Said application will be for hearing on or after _____. This notice is recommendation for hearing only.

D. J. Bonzo, Parole and Record Clerk.'

In view of the words of negation found in the last sentence of the notice, we beg to ask if such notice is a substantial compliance with the statute? And we inquire further, in view of the language of the statute above mentioned, if this board has a right to grant a parole to an Ohio penitentiary prisoner in the absence of any affirmative recommendation of such action by the warden and chaplain of the institution, all other conditions having been complied with?"

From a reading of the section which you quote, it is clear that an application for parole shall not be considered by your board unless the prisoner under consideration is recommended as worthy of such consideration by the warden and chaplain of the penitentiary.

It further is clear that no such consideration shall be made until a notice of the recommendation of the warden and chaplain is published as required by law in the county from which such prisoner was sentenced. A form of notice to make an absolute compliance with the statute should indicate that a prisoner is recommended as worthy of parole by the warden and the chaplain.

The notice which you quote states in substance that the prisoner has been recommended by the warden and chaplain "as legally eligible to a hearing for parole." While the words last quoted are not the same as mentioned by the statute, undoubtedly it is a substantial compliance with the provision of the statute. The additional words "This notice is recommendation for hearing only" would seem to have no legal significance, such language being surplusage.

It is therefore the opinion of this department that such notice is a substantial compliance with the statute, even though it is in bad form. It is my judgment that this notice in effect proclaims the information that the warden and chaplain have recommended such a prisoner as worthy of consideration for parole.

Respectfully,

C. C. CRABBE,

Attorney General.
