"In municipal corporations in which no newspaper is published, it shall be sufficient publication of ordinances, resolutions, statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports, required by this title to be published, to post up copies thereof at not less than five of the most public places in the corporation, to be determined by the council, for a period of not less than fifteen days prior to the taking effect thereof. Advertising for bids for the construction of public improvements shall be published in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks. Notices of the sale of bonds shall be published in such manner and for such time as is provided in this title for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation, when not sold to the sinking fund. The clerk shall make a certificate of such posting and the times when and places where done, in the manner provided in the preceding section, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the copies were posted up as required."

Section 4676, which reads:

"When in this title a notice is directed to be published in a newspaper, and no such paper is published at the place mentioned, or if such newspaper is published at the place, but the publisher refuses on tender of his usual charge for a similar notice, to insert it in his newspaper, a publication in any newspaper of general circulation at such place shall be sufficient. Nothing in this section shall be construed to dispense with posters where they are provided for."

Section 6255, which reads:

"For sufficient publication of a notice or advertisement, required by law to be published for a definite period, at least one side of the newspaper in which such publication is made shall be printed in the county or municipal corporation in which such notice or advertisement is required to be published."

With the language restored to section 4227 as above shown, I am of the opinion,

1. That where there are two newspapers of opposite politics in a municipality, publication must be made in both. Section 4228, G. C.

2. Where there is only one newspaper published in a municipality, and it is of general circulation therein, publication may be made in it under favor of the restored language of section 4227, G. C.

3. When the ordinances are codified, revised or rearranged and published in book form, such publication is sufficient. Section 4230, G. C.

4. Where there is no newspaper published in the municipality, publication may be made by posting as provided in section 4232, General Code.

5. Where there is one newspaper published, and it refuses to publish on tender of the usual charge made in such newspaper for a similar notice, publication may be made in a newspaper of general circulation in such municipality under the provisions of section 4676, General Code.

6. The fact that only one side of a newspaper is printed in the municipality will not deprive it of the right to make required publications, provided it is of general circulation in the municipality and publication therein, in the manner and for the times specified will be sufficient under section 6255 of the General Code.

I am of the opinion, coming now to specifically answering your question, that if the newspaper refuses to publish notices upon being tendered the usual price for publication of similar notices in such paper, publication may lawfully be made in a newspaper of general circulation in your city under section 4676, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—RABE CASE.

The decision in the case of Rabe et al. vs. Board of Education, does not in any way affect the rights of the board of education under section 5656, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 11, 1914.

HON. R. M. KNEPPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 21st, wherein you inquire respecting the effect of the decision of the supreme court in the case of Rabe et al. vs. Board of Education of Canton school district, recently decided, upon the power of the board of education to issue funding or refunding bonds under section 5656, General Code.

The full text of the decision referred to appears in recent issues of the current legal publications, and I assume that you have had an opportunity to examine them.

This case arose under the law as it existed in the year 1912, and its conclusions are to be limited to the state of the law as it then existed. So much is apparent from the following paragraph of the opinion of Donahue J., which appears at page 277 of the Ohio Law Bulletin Supplement (issued March 23, 1914):

> "At this time under the amendment to the constitution (section 11, article XII) which provides that no bonded indebtedness of the state or any political subdivision thereof shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay said bonds and provide for a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, it is of the utmost importance that at the time of the incurring of such indebtedness the other needs of the political subdivision proposing to issue the bonds should be taken into account, for this levy must continue during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption, even though the amount should exhaust the entire income available from taxation and without regard to the current expenses. In other words, under this provision of the constitution, the payment of interest and the retirement of bonds are to be provided for first, and the current expenses become a secondary consideration. This amendment, however, has no application to this case."

Article XII, section 11 of the constitution provides that:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity."

As interpreted by Judge Donahue this amendment has the effect of creating a preference among tax levies within the limitations prescribed by law in favor of those for the retirement of bonds issued subject to its provisions and against those for current expenses. Accordingly, if section 5656, General Code is still in force, and was not repealed by implication when the Smith law was enacted, it would appear that the power to borrow money under its provisions would not in any way be limited or affected by the ability of the taxing district to provide, within the limitations of the latter, sufficient revenue for its current expenses.

In this particular, then, the Rabe case is to be distinguished from a case arising under the constitutional amendment, and so much of the decision therein as holds, or seems to hold, that levies for the retirement of bonded indebtedness are to be postponed to levies for current expenses does not apply to such cases.

In my judgment, there is nothing in the Rabe case which would support the conclusion that sections 5656, et seq., General Code, were repealed by implication when the Smith law was passed. The reasoning of the court respecting the implied repeal of the sections involved in that case, viz., 7630 and possibly 7629 may be abstracted as follows:

Section 7630 refers by name to the limitations of sections 7591 and 7592, General Code. These limitations were certainly repealed by implication when the Smith law was passed, because the latter imposed other limitations upon the levying power of boards of education. Therefore, section 7630 must be regarded as also repealing by implication, and the effect upon section 7629 is problematical.

Sections 5656, et seq., are as follows:

"Section 5656. The trustees of a township, the board of education of a school district and the commissioners of a county, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation such township, district or county is unable to pay at maturity, may borrow money or issue the bonds thereof, so as to change, but not increase the indebtedness in the amounts, for the length of time, and at the rate of interest that said trustees, board or commissioners deem proper, not to exceed the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually.

"Section 5657. When it appears to the trustees of a township, board of education of a school district or commissioners of a county, to be for the best interests of such township, school district or county to renew, refund or extend the time of payment of any bonded indebtedness which has not matured and thereby reduce the rate of interest thereon, they may issue, for that purpose, new bonds, and exchange the bonds with the holder or holders of such outstanding bonds, if such holder or holders consent to make such exchange and to such reduction of interest.

"Section 5658. No indebtedness of a township, school district or county shall be funded, refunded or extended unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of such township, school district or county by a formal resolution of the trustees, board of education or commissioners thereof, respectively. Such resolution shall state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of their maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear and the place of payment of principal and interest.

"Section 5659. For the payment of the bonds issued under the next three preceding sections, the township trustees, board of education or county commissioners shall levy a tax, in addition to the amount otherwise authorized, each year during the period the bonds have to run sufficient in amount to pay the accruing interest and the bonds as they mature."

It will be observed that there is no reference in any of these sections to any specific limitations although there is a general reference in section 5656 to the "limits of taxation of the district." Therefore in my opinion the reasoning of the court in the Rabe case cannot be applied in considering the effect of the adoption of the Smith law upon these sections.

In my opinion, then, the decision in Rabe vs. board of education does not in any way affect the rights of a board of education under section 5656, General Code.

I may state, however, that in my judgment the board of education may not issue either funding or refunding bonds under section 5656 in the face of the limitations of the Smith law, and the requirements of section 11, of article XII of the constitution, unless at the time the bonds are issued it can be anticipated that the annual sinking fund and interest requirements thereof can be provided for within the limitations of the Smith law without reference, however, to the probable needs of the district for current expenses. That is to say, the Smith law and article XII, section 11 of the constitution, are both to be applied when any bonds are issued, whether under section 5656, General Code, or under any other section authorizing the issuance of bonds by any subdivision of the state. The situation, then, is similar to that which exists in certain states whose constitutions contain both provisions limiting tax rates and provisions requiring coincidental tax levies for the retirement of bonds. The states in question are Texas and Louisiana.

As to the joint effect of provisions like these Dillon on Municipal Corporations, volume 1, section 212, says:

"* * * In these constitutions there is * * * not only a requirement that provision shall be made for the levying of a tax for the payment of the principal and interest of the indebtedness, but the amount of the tax which may be levied is also limited. The direct requirement is that the tax shall be 'sufficient' to pay the debt, and this requirement carries with it a correlative prohibition against incurring any debt greater than such amount as may be satisfied and paid by the levy of a tax within the limit of the constitution. In other words, the constitution requires not only that no debt shall ever be created above such a sum as the levy directed will pay, but also that when and before the debt is created it shall be ascertained whether the maximum amount of the tax permitted by the constitution will annually pay the interest and provide for the principal or for the sinking fund required by the constitution. The debt is not to go beyond what a tax can be levied to pay. If at the time when the debt is incurred a tax is levied which is not sufficient in amount to pay the interest and to create the prescribed sinking fund, the debt will be sustained up to the amount which is justified by the tax directed to be levied and will be held to be invalid as to the excess. The law contemplates that the provision should appear to be sufficient, based on existing valuations when made, and unless it is so the issue of bonds or the debt incurred would not be authorized. * * *."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—WATERWORKS IMPROVEMENT—MANNER IN WHICH CONTRACT FOR SUCH IMPROVEMENT SHALL BE ENTERED INTO—LIABILITY INSURANCE—PREMIUM NOT TO BE PAID FROM BOND ISSUE.

A certain city is engaged in the construction of a dam in connection with its water supply; the work is repeatedly advertised and no bids received; the director of public service enters into a contract with a construction company whereby the company was to install and operate certain devices and equipments and thereby to construct the improvement, while the city through the department of public service was to furnish all the material and all the labor. This arrangement is illegal. The payments that have been made for the work done under this arrangement should not be disturbed, but a contract should be entered into according to law for the construction of this work.

In December, 1913, there was no authority for the city to insure itself against liability to its employes on account of injuries received by them in the course of their employment. Payments made for said insurance from the proceeds of a bond issue are invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 11, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 13, 1913, you requested my opinion upon four certain questions. I have been unable to answer one of these questions because it involves consideration of a decision of a court of appeals which has not, to the best of my knowledge, been reported, and I have been striving to procure a copy of this decision without success so far.

At your further request I have separated two of the questions asked in your letter referred to from the others therein and make them the subject of a separate opinion. These questions are as follows:

"1. A certain city is engaged in the construction of a dam in connection with its water supply at a very large cost. After repeated advertisements for bids and successive failures to receive any bids, the director of public service entered into a contract with a construction company, by the terms of which the company was to install and operate certain devices and equipments and thereby to construct the improvement, while the city, through the department of public service, was to furnish all the material and all the labor, presumably, other than that of a managerial nature. Your request is as to, 'what, if any, recommendation should be made by this department in regard to the methods employed in said construction work.'

"2. The city is also paying a casualty company liability insurance to the extent of $4.00 per $100.00 in protection of the city's employes on said work, said insurance being paid out of the bond issue. Is the same legal?"

You are familiar, of course, with the provisions of section 4328, General Code. As its provisions require careful analysis in connection with the question at hand however, I venture to quote it: It is in full as follows:

"The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The enclosed opinion to Hon. G. W. Adams, city solicitor of Wellsville, places upon this section an interpretation which affects the answer to your question. You will observe that in that opinion I hold that if the work contemplated in making an improvement involves a gross or aggregate expenditure of more than five hundred dollars in addition to the services of regular employes of the service department, the necessary contract must be authorized by council and let upon competitive bids.

In connection with this opinion I refer you to my opinion under date of February 3, 1911, volume 2, opinions of attorney general for that year, page 1510. In that opinion I cite the case of Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S., 558, upon the proposition that where the total cost of an improvement exceeds $500.00, it is not competent under section 4328 to divide it into parts so as to make the cost of each part less than $500.00 and to contract separately for the construction of each part thus avoiding the statute.

I also call attention to an opinion under date of July 12, 1913, to the city solicitor of Lima, a copy of which I think you have. In this opinion I held that it is not lawful for the director of public service to employ day laborers to perform public work without advertisement and receiving bids, and to pay such laborers from moneys arising from the sale of bonds, where the cost of the whole improvement will exceed $500.00. These conclusions taken together furnish a complete answer to your question.

Without holding whether or not a director of public service might lawfully enter into a series of contracts through competitive bidding, etc., looking to the completion of an improvement which when done will constitute a single public work, I am satisfied that it is not lawful for such a director of public service to furnish labor other than that regularly employed in the department on a large improvement of this kind. In furnishing such labor he would not be inviting competitive bids and yet he would be contracting for public work, the cost of which exceeds $500.00; so that even though he might advertise for bids for the furnishing of all materials as needed by the contractor who was conducting the work, he would be evading section 4328 to the extent of the cost of the labor involved.

In the case which you submit the improvement is a single one, and has evidently been so regarded by the director of public service who has repeatedly sought to secure bids for the doing of the entire work, and the furnishing of all necessary labor and materials, but without success. The effort made by the director to meet the emergency, while ingenious, constitutes a violation of the statute just as much as if the work had been separated into different parts, each costing less than $500.00, and no competitive bids had been invited as to any part of it.

The purpose of the statute is to provide competition, and the competition must cover the entire work. This does not mean that the work must be let in a single contract, at least when the total of the improvement exceeds $10,000 (see section 2362 to section 2364, inclusive, General Code); but it does mean that competitive bids must be invited so as to cover every branch of the work including the furnishing of labor.

I take it that in the case mentioned by you, the labor furnished by the director of public service is not the regular force of the city, and that the laborers are compensated out of the proceeds of a bond issue. This fact has been assumed. Therefore, though it might be competent for the city to let separate contracts at the same time for different branches of the entire work, or for different kinds of material, it is not competent for the city to dispense with contracting for any part of the necessary labor when the burden of paying that labor rests upon the bond issue, i. e., when the labor to be furnished is not that of regular employes of the department.

For these reasons I conclude that the arrangement to which you refer is illegal.

You ask me to advise what recommendation should be made by your department.

Whether the demonstrated impossibility of getting the work done in any other way than that chosen by the director of public service may influence your department in its action or not, I should certainly advise that the recommendation be that a contract to cover the entire work remaining undone be now entered into, but that payments already made on account of work done under the arrangement above described be left undisturbed.

As to your second question, I beg to state that in December, 1913, there was no authority for a city to insure itself against liability to its employes on account of injuries received by them in the course of their employment. A municipal corporation has such powers and such only as are expressly conferred upon it by law and those which flow therefrom by necessary implication. I note that it has been held that power to insure buildings is incidental to the power to erect and maintain them. French vs. Millville, 66 N. J. L., 392.

It might, therefore, be urged that the power to insure against liability on account of injury to employes results from the power to employ. I would be of a contrary opinion on this point, but do not deem it material because, as already held, in answer to your first question, there is no power to employ laborers in the manner in which they have been employed for the purposes stated.

In addition to what has already been said, I notice that the premiums on account of the liability insurance have been paid from the proceeds of a bond issue for the construction of the improvement. This is clearly invalid.

Your second question would, therefore, be answered, generally, in the negative.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SCHOOL EXAMINERS—SCHOOL EXAMINATION—COMPENSATION.

Where an examination for the granting of a teacher's certificate is not held on the date advertised, school examiners who attend such meeting and issue temporary certificates are not entitled to any compensation therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 11, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 17, 1914, you submitted to this department the following request for an opinion:

> "If for any reason an examination for the granting of teachers' certificates be not held on an advertised examination date, may the school examiners who attended said meeting and issued one or more temporary certificates legally receive the compensation provided for their services by section 7834, General Code?"

In reply thereto section 7811 of the General Code provides for the appointment of a county board of examiners by the probate judge, said board to consist of three competent persons, and further specifies the qualifications of the members of such examining board.

Section 7817 provides that each county examining board shall hold public meetings on the first Saturday of every month of the year unless Saturday falls on a legal holiday, in which event such examination shall be held on the succeeding Saturday; and further that notice thereof shall be published in two weekly newspapers of different politics, printed in the county, if two such papers are published. If not, then publication in one only is required.

Section 7834 provides for the compensation of the members of such board, as follows:

> "Each member of the county board of school examiners is entitled to receive ten dollars for each examination of fifty applicants or less, fourteen dollars for each examination of more than fifty applicants and less than one hundred, eighteen dollars for each examination of one hundred applicants and less than one hundred and fifty, twenty-two dollars for each examination of one hundred and fifty applicants and less than two hundred, and four dollars for each additional fifty applicants or fraction thereof, to be paid out of the county treasury on the order of the county auditor. Books, blanks and stationery required by the board shall be furnished by the county auditor."

It is to be noted that under section 7834 the compensation of the members of the county examining boards is based upon the number of examinations only and not upon the number of certificates that may be issued by such board. The fact that the board of examiners attend a meeting on a date that was advertised as being a day for holding such examination and also issued one or more temporary certificates at that time, in no wise affects the provision contained in section 7834, supra, regarding their compensation. The members can only be compensated in accordance with said section 7834, General Code, supra, and that amount of compensation depends upon the number of persons examined. Inasmuch as no examination was held at all, I am of the opinion, in direct answer to your question as stated in your request, that the school examiners are not entitled to any compensation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL TAX—FRANCHISE TAX—METHOD OF CALCULATION OF SUCH TAX.

The state fire marshal tax not being a franchise tax, the method prescribed by section 841 for calculating the same on gross premium receipts being explicit, and never having been changed since the original enactment of section 5432, et seq., has no bearing whatever on the question. The proper method of calculation is one-half of one per cent. of the gross premium receipts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 22, 1914.

HON. R. M. SMALL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 8, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

"In behalf of the insurance department of the state of Ohio, I request that you kindly give your opinion on that part of section 841, General Code, which is as follows:

"'For the purpose of maintaining the department of state fire marshal and the payment of the expenses incident thereto, each fire insurance company doing business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of insurance in the month of November, each year, in addition to the taxes required by law to be paid by it, one-half of one per cent. on the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business transacted by it in Ohio during the year next preceding as shown by its annual statement under oath to the insurance department.'

"Section 5433 of the General Code provides another source of revenue to this department, and is, in part, as follows:

"'If the superintendent of insurance finds such report (as referred to in section 5432, G. C.) to be correct prior to the month of November in each year, he shall compute an amount of two and one-half per cent. on the balance of such gross amount, after deducting such return premiums and considerations received for reinsurance, as shown by the next preceding annual statement and charge them to such company as a tax upon the business done by it in this state for the period shown by such annual statement.'

"The state fire marshal department was first organized in accordance with an act passed April 16, 1900 (Laws of Ohio 94, page 386), which act was amended by an act passed May 9, 1902 (Laws of Ohio 95, page 471), which act was amended by an act passed April 25, 1904 (Laws of Ohio 97, page 418).

"The law as found in section 841, General Code, as quoted above, is in exact accord with its relative part of section 409-56, of the above act, passed April 25, 1904, and its relative part of section 409-56 of the above act, passed May 9, 1902, and only differs with its relative part of section 7 of the above act passed April 16, 1900, in this—that in said act passed April 16, 1900, the month of December is the month designated in which taxes as provided therein are to be paid, while in the other enumerated sections providing for a fire marshal tax the month of payment thereof is November of each year.

"The two and one-half per cent. tax, as provided in that part of section 5433, General Code, quoted above, became a law by an act passed April 29, 1902 (Laws of Ohio 95, page 290), and the basis of calculation of such tax as therein provided is in strict accord with the basis of calculation of such tax, as provided by said section 5433, General Code.

"Prior to the passage of the act (Laws of Ohio 95, page 290), the basis of calculation of the two and one-half per cent. tax by this department was in accordance with an act passed March 27, 1894 (Laws of Ohio 91, page 91), i. e., the two and one-half per cent. was charged upon the gross premium receipts, and the basis of calculation of the fire marshal tax was also on the gross premium receipts.

"Since the passage of said act, passed April 29, 1902 (Laws of Ohio 95, page 290), the basis on which this department has calculated both the two and one-half per cent. tax and the fire marshal tax has been the balance of such gross premium receipts after deducting such return premiums and considerations received for reinsurance, as shown by its next annual preceding statement, in accordance with the said act passed April 29, 1902, and in accordance with its relative part of said section 5433, General Code.

"I have no question to raise concerning the method of calculating the two and one-half per cent. tax since the act passed April 29, 1902 became a law, but I do question the method of calculating the one-half per cent. fire marshal tax since the above date of April 29, 1902.

"If it was logical to levy one-half of one per cent. fire marshal tax on the gross premium receipts as provided by said act (Laws of Ohio 94, page 386), the original act to establish the office of and to prescribe the duties and powers of the state fire marshal, and which has continued to be the law from the date of its passage to the present time, as prescribed in said section 841, General Code, prior to said date of April 29, 1902, why is it not logical to use the same basis of calculation for the one-half per cent. fire marshal tax since the said date of April 29, 1902, the law never having been changed?

"If you should decide that the method of calculation for the one-half per cent. fire marshal tax is based on the gross premium receipts and not on the balance of such gross premium receipts after deducting such return premiums and considerations received for reinsurance, what effect would the act passed April 18, 1913 (Laws of Ohio 103, page 713), have on the method of calculation for fire marshal tax relative to mutual fire insurance companies authorized to do business under the laws of this state?"

Your request goes into the matter so thoroughly that it is unnecessary for me to again restate the history of the statutes to which you refer, as I find, upon examination, that your statements in regard to the same are correct.

Section 841 of the General Code, the portion of which is necessary to this inquiry is quoted by you, was originally passed, as you state, April 16, 1900, 94 O. L., 386. This particular section being contained in section 7 of said act at page 388. The material words of the section as it was passed were,

"one-half of one per cent. of the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business done in Ohio the year next preceding * * *."

This language was carried verbatim in the amendments of the act found in 95 O. L., 471 and 97 O. L., 418. The only change whatever was made by the codifying commission in codifying this section, so that this particular portion now reads,

> "one-half of one per cent. of the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business transacted by it in Ohio during the year next preceding * * *."

I think it will be admitted that this is simply a change in the form of the language and does not change the substance or the meaning at all.

The section as it was actually passed and as it stands now was a part of the act establishing the office and prescribing the duties and powers of the state fire marshal. It is entirely independent of the other provision of our Ohio laws relative to insurance and insurance companies, and I can conceive of no analogy whatever between it and sections 5432, et seq., of the General Code providing a tax upon foreign insurance companies for their right to do business in this state.

I am, therefore, compelled to entirely disregard sections 5432, et seq., as having any bearing whatever upon this question. As the method prescribed by section 841 for calculating the so-called fire marshal tax is explicit, and as it has never been changed since the original enactment, and is now the law, I can conceive of no reason why it should not be followed in computing this tax; and it seems to me that so long, as said section is in force the duty is absolutely enjoined upon you to compute said tax upon the basis prescribed by said section, viz., upon the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business transacted by them in Ohio during the year next preceding.

As to your further question as to what effect the act passed April 18, 1913, 103 O. L., 713, has on the method of calculating this tax, my answer is, none whatever. The act to which you refer is entitled, "An act defining, for the purpose of taxation, the term 'gross premiums' as applied to mutual fire insurance companies receiving premium deposits in excess of the cost of insurance to the insured, and returning such excess ratably to their policyholders."

But the very first section of this act shows that it relates only to franchise taxes, said first paragraph being as follows:

> "For the purpose of computing franchise taxes, on gross premiums, to be paid under any law of this state now or hereafter in force, by any mutual fire insurance company authorized to do business under the laws of this state, the amount of premium deposits received by such company upon any risk within this state in excess of the net cost of insurance to the insured, shall not be included where such excess deposit is returned ratably by such company to its policyholders; but the amount of gross or aggregate premiums received by any such company shall be deemed to be the balance remaining after deducting from the gross amount of premium deposits received or collected by it on risks in the state during the preceding calendar year ending on the thirty-first day of December, that portion of gross premium deposits returned by it to policyholders during said preceding calendar year, upon the cancellation or expiration of risks upon property situated within this state. In addition to the matters of return required to be made by insurance companies for the purpose of computing taxes, any such company shall also return for such purpose in its annual statement:
> "(a) The total gross amount of premium deposits received or collected by it on risks in this state during the preceding calendar year ending on the thirty-first day of December.

"(b) The total amount of gross premium deposits returned to policyholders during such preceding calendar year upon cancellation and upon expiration of risks upon property situated within this state."

The state fire marshal tax, so-called, is not a franchise tax, and as this act only refers to franchise taxes, it can have no effect upon the method of calculation provided by section 841.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUDGE OF THE JUVENILE COURT—HOW DESIGNATED—LENGTH OF TERM OF SUCH JUDGE.

In a county where there is one common pleas judge and one probate judge and said judges have designated the probate judge to act as judge of the juvenile court, but have not specified the time; when such designation is once made, it should continue until the judge has retired from office, unless there was unanimous agreement by the judges to designate someone else to act.

In a county where there is only one common pleas judge and one probate judge, the one already chosen should continue to act as judge of the juvenile court until such time as the judges can mutually agree upon a change of designation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. CHARLES E. CAPPLE, Probate Judge, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 7th, you request opinion of this department upon a question stated by you as follows:

"In a county where there is one common pleas judge and one probate judge, and said judges have designated the probate judge to act as judge of the juvenile court, but for no specified time, when in the opinion of your department does such time cease? Would such time cease when such judge saw fit and a new designation as to whom should serve as juvenile judge was made? And supposing the common pleas judge when they, the probate and common pleas judges, came to designate one of themselves to act as juvenile judge, the present designated one feeling it was time for the other fellow to take his turn, designated the probate judge, and the probate judge at the same time for the same purpose designated the common pleas judge to act as such judge, who would have to assume the authority of such juvenile judge? In other words, when a designation has been made of one judge to act as juvenile judge for a time not specified, and he now feels it is the other follow's time to be juvenile judge, what is the opinion of your department as to how he may terminate such designation, and make the other fellow do part of the work that should necessarily belong to him? Again in other words, when a designation has been made for no specified time, if each one of the aforesaid judges, when the one designated thinks it is the other follow's turn, designate the other one to act as juvenile judge, then what?"

Section 1639 of the General Code, 103 O. L., 868, provides as follows:

> "Courts of common pleas, probate courts, and insolvency courts and superior courts, where established, shall have and exercise, concurrently, the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter. The judge of such courts in each county, at such times as they determine, shall designate one of their number to transact the business arising under such jurisdiction. When the term of the judge so designated expires, or his office terminates, another designation shall be made in like manner. The words 'juvenile court' when used in the statutes of Ohio shall be understood as meaning the court in which the judge so designated may be sitting while exercising such jurisdiction, and the words 'judge of the juvenile court' or 'juvenile judge' as meaning such judge while exercising such jurisdiction."

This section has been amended in 104 O. L., 176, but insofar as it pertains to your situation the language of the section quoted and of the amendment thereto is similar.

The common pleas and probate court of your county are, under the general terms of the statute, given concurrent jurisdiction in matters calling for the exercise of the powers of the juvenile court, and it is probable that in case no designation had been made each would have jurisdiction over juvenile cases, but, according to the statement of facts presented by you, the two courts designated one as juvenile judge, but specified no length of time within which those powers should be exercised by him. The statute is silent as to the time such power should be exercised, unless the word "term" as used in the foregoing italicized language, be construed to mean the term for which the judge was elected as probate or common pleas judge. If such construction may be placed upon the statute, the provision governing your case would be that when a judge has been designated to transact juvenile business, he shall continue so to exercise such jurisdiction until his term of office terminates. Even if that interpretation should be correct, it would not follow that he could not be divested of his authority provided he and the other designating judges were to agree, as, if they should mutually decide to make a change in the designation, the acting judge of the juvenile court would, by concurring in such action, be treated as having resigned, and the second designation would, no doubt, then be valid. Therefore, it would follow that when the designation was once made it should continue until the judge has retired from office, unless there was unanimous agreement by the judges to designate someone else to act. If, on the other hand, the word "term" as used in the italicized sentence, be construed to mean the time fixed by the judges within which the designated judge should act as juvenile judge, then it would seem to follow that if the designation was for an indefinite period, that judge would continue to act as judge of the juvenile court until his successor has been selected.

As you and the common pleas judge have failed to agree upon this question, and as you and he are the only judges in your county having jurisdiction to decide this matter, I am of the opinion that he already chosen should continue to act as judge of the juvenile court until such time as you can mutually agree upon a change of designation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHILDREN'S HOMES—ASSIGNMENT OF CHILDREN FROM SUCH A HOME—FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Where a child is received by assignment from a county children's home and kept in accordance with such assignment until the death of the child, the board of trustees of the children's home have a legal right to defray a portion of the funeral expenses in such a case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. FRED W. CROW, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 14, 1914, was received and is as follows:

"I desire to ask your opinion on the following question submitted to me by the president of the board of trustees of the Meigs county children's home to wit:

"On March 1, 1909, Mr. John V. Davis received by assignment from the Meigs county children's home, a boy whose name was Edgar Nelson Manley, then past ten years of age, and kept him in accordance therewith until his death in the year 1913. Mr. Davis defrayed all expenses, both medical and funeral, and now asks the board of trustees of the said home to reimburse him in part in the funeral expenses, which amounted to about $70.00. Has the board of trustees a legal right to defray a portion of the funeral expenses in this case? A copy of said assignment being as follows, to wit:

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

"The undersigned, John Davis, Langsville, Ohio, has this day received by assignment from the Meigs county children's home, subject to the laws of the state of Ohio, under which it acts, the entire charge, management and control of Edgar Nelson Manley, a minor child, born August 24, 1898, at Middleport, Ohio, and I do hereby agree to take the said Edgar Nelson Manley into my family, to treat him kindly and as my own child, to clothe, feed and educate him to the best of my ability, and will have him attend each year the regular terms of the district school, for at least six months in the year; and train him up, so far as I am able, in the precepts of virtue and the Christian Religion, and so as to be able to engage creditably in the ordinary business of life."

Sections 3093 and 3096 of the General Code, in force at the time Davis entered into the agreement, read as follows:

"Section 3093. All inmates of such home who by reason of abandonment, neglect, or dependence have been admitted, or who have been by the parent or guardian voluntarily surrendered to the trustees, shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home, until they are eighteen years of age, and if such child is placed out, indentured or adopted, such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age.

"Section 3096. The trustees shall require an agreement in writing to be entered into, that such child so placed out shall be furnished with good and sufficient food, clothing and a public school education, and the payment to it of a reasonable amount, to be named in the agreement, upon his or her becoming of age, provided he or she remains in such foster family until becoming of age and not otherwise. For the purpose of securing the well-being and progress of such children, and the enforcement of the agreement, the trustees shall have the control and guardianship of such children until they become of age."

But the agreement entered into by Davis with the trustees, and quoted above, must be presumed to contain every provision and arrangement entered into between them. No contingency is specified or provided for in the memorandum signed by Davis, either authorizing any enlargement or waiver of its terms. Mr. Davis' obligation in this matter certainly did not extend beyond the terms of the agreement and I can see nothing in the agreement that thrusts upon him the burden of meeting the burial expenses of the child. The child's death was not anticipated nor provided for when the agreement was written and it follows that the expense of its burial should have been cared for as if no agreement had been executed.

Under section 3096, General Code, the trustees "shall have control and guardianship of such children until they become of age." When a child dies in the children's home, it is the duty of the trustees to provide for its burial. Nothing in the agreement of Mr. Davis in the case of the Manley child relieved the trustees of this duty and the expense of the burial should have been defrayed by them. However, Mr. Davis saw fit to pay the burial expenses and it is now asked whether the trustees of the home may reimburse him in part for such expenditure.

In Rockel's Complete Ohio Probate Practice, volume 1, I find the following note to section 649:

"The immediate duty of burying the body rests upon the husband or the wife, or other relative of the decedent, or may rest upon a stranger under whose roof the death occurred. He cannot keep the body unburied, or by exposing it to violation, offend the feelings or endanger the health of the living. By whomsoever the duty is performed, the estate of the deceased is ultimately liable to defray the necessary reasonable expenses of the burial. It is analogous to the duty and obligation of a father to furnish necessaries to a child and of a husband to a wife, from which the law implies a promise to pay him who does what the father or the husband, in that respect, omits to do."

This, it seems, justifies the conclusion that it is now the legal duty of the trustees of the children's home to reimburse Mr. Davis for the funeral expense of the Manley child; but even if this is not conceded and the trustees cannot be compelled to reimburse Mr. Davis, I do not think that any one will doubt that a moral obligation rests upon the trustees to meet this expense and this conceded, it follows that the trustees may allow the claim. See Elliott on Municipal Corporations, page 43, section 40; McQuillen on Municipal Corporations, section 2168.

Therefore, answering your question directly, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees of the Meigs county children's home have a legal right to defray a portion of the funeral expenses in the case submitted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—BOARD OF TRUSTEES—RECORD OF NAMES TO BE KEPT IN COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOMES.

The county commissioners should appoint a board of trustees under section 3081, whose duty it will be to see that a separate record of each inmate of county children's homes is kept. It is not proper to keep the names of inmates of children's homes in the same record as the names of inmates of the county infirmary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 23rd, wherein you state:

"In one county of this state there exists a condition relative to the care of children, concerning which we desire your opinion as to the legality of the arrangement.

"On the infirmary farm there is a separate building, known as the children's home, located approximately three hundred yards from the building in which the adult poor are housed. Both institutions are under the management of the county commissioners, who succeeded the former infirmary board of directors on January 1, 1913. One superintendent is the resident officer of both. No attempt is made to keep a separate record of the inmates, but their names appear upon the same book as if actual residents of the infirmary proper.

"It appears to us that this arrangement which was begun about 1888 is contrary to the policy expressed in the second sentence of section 3091 of the General Code. Prior to 1898 this section then known as R. S. 931b, provides that the children could be kept at a county infirmary if they were in separate appartments, but in 1898 this condition was stricken out of the law.

"As there will have to be some radical changes made in the present arrangements to meet the minimum standard of this board for approval, we wish to know whether in your opinion the present arrangement is in accordance to law."

The statute cited and commented upon by you is not directly in point because the children in question are maintained in a building separate and apart from the county infirmary and not in the infirmary proper. It is of importance only insofar as it discloses the changed policy of the law with respect to the maintenance of children in county children's home instead of in county infirmaries.

Section 3081 of the General Code and section 3097 as amended (103 O. L., 864), furnish a complete answer to your questions. These sections are as follows:

"(3081) When the necessary site and buildings are provided by the county, the commissioners shall appoint a board of four trustees, as follows: One for one year, one for two years, one for three years and one for four years, from the first Monday of March thereafter. Not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party. Annually thereafter on the first Monday of March the county commissioners shall appoint one such trustee, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

"(3097) Full and complete records of the inmates shall be kept in the children's home and they shall be uniform throughout the state. It shall be the duty of the board of state charities to secure uniformity by providing a standard form of blanks and records for the guidance of such institutions wherein shall be recorded the full name, age, place of residence, name of parent or other relatives, so far as obtainable, and other information as the board of state charities requires, which records shall not be open to inspection unless on special permission of the trustees. The name and place of residence of the person with whom a child is placed or by whom adopted shall be recorded together with the terms of the agreement in a separate record, which shall not be open to inspection except by special permission of the trustees, having regard at all times to the well-being of the child, except that duly authorized representatives of the board of state charities, may see such record at any time."

I am clearly of the opinion that the system of management of said home is illegal. In order to comply with the law, the county commissioners should appoint a board of trustees under section 3081, whose duty it will be to see that a separate record of each inmate of the county children's home is kept in accordance with section 3097, as amended, and that the other provisions of statute for the government of such institutions are observed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARSON—POWER OF BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION TO PAROLE A PRISONER CONVICTED FOR ARSON FROM THE MANSFIELD REFORMATORY.

Where a person is convicted of arson and sentenced under section 12433 to the Mansfield reformatory, the board of administration may release him any time after he begins his sentence, since the statute provides the maximum term of imprisonment for this crime, but does not provide for the minimum sentence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. J. GUY O'DONNELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 24, 1914, as follows:

"I am writing to inquire as to what construction you have or will place upon section 12433 as to the minimum sentence. A conviction was had of a party in our court for arson and sentenced under this section to the Mansfield reformatory. The question arises: Can the board of managers in discharging its duty release this party on parole within a less period than one year?"

Section 12433 of the General Code reads in part:

"Whoever maliciously burns or attempts to burn a dwelling house, kitchen, * * * or other building * * * if the value of such building * * * is $50.00 or more, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than twenty years."

Section 2131 of the General Code, as amended (103 O. L., p. 885) reads in part:

"* * * Male persons between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one years convicted of felony shall be sentenced to the reformatory instead of the penitentiary."

Under this latter section the court was empowered to sentence the prisoner in question to the Ohio state reformatory instead of the Ohio penitentiary.

Section 2132 of the General Code as amended (103 O. L., 885) reads:

" Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio state reformatory shall make them general, and not fixed or limited in their duration. The term of imprisonment of prisoners shall be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter, but the term of such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term, nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for such felony."

Section 2141 and 2142 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 887, reads as follows:

"Section 2141. The Ohio board of administration shall establish rules and regulations under which prisoners may be allowed to go upon parole in legal custody, under the control of the Ohio board of administration and subject to be taken back into the enclosure of the reformatory. A prisoner shall not be eligible to parole, and an application for parole shall not be considered by the board, until such prisoner has been recommended as worthy of such consideration by the superintendent and chaplain of the reformatory.

"Section 2142. Before consideration by the Ohio board of administration notice of such recommendation shall be published for three consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics in the county from which the prisoner is sentenced, or in the county of the residence of the prisoner. The expense of such publication shall not exceed one dollar for each paper. A prisoner shall not be released upon parole unless, in the judgment of the board, there is reasonable ground to believe that, if so released he will be and remain at liberty without violating the law, and that such release is not incompatible with the welfare of society. Such judgment shall be based upon the record and character of the prisoner in the reformatory, his previous record, the nature and character of the crime committed and other facts which the board may be able to obtain bearing upon the advisability of such parole. A prisoner shall not be paroled without receiving the votes of all members of the board present at a regular or special meeting, and when a prisoner so paroled, has during such parole, performed all the conditions imposed, the Ohio board of administration may finally release and discharge him."

Section 2132 gives the Ohio board of administration the power to release prisoners sentenced to the Ohio state reformatory in the manner provided in sections 2141 and 2142. Nothing is said about the maximum or minimum term in section 2141 or section 2142. Section 2132, however, provides that and the question is when, if at all, can the Ohio board of administration parole a prisoner when no minimum term is provided by law for the crime for which he was convicted?

"The term of such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term or be less than the minimum term provided by law for such felony."

Under section 2132 the general power to terminate sentences of prisoners in the reformatory, as provided in sections 2141 and 2142, is conferred on the Ohio board of administration and that power is then qualified by the further provision that

"The term of such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for such felony."

This clause limits the general power of the board only when a minimum or maximum term, or both, are provided by law. In the case before us, the prisoner was convicted of the crime of arson. The statute provides that the maximum term of imprisonment shall be twenty years, but provides no minimum. Therefore the power of the Ohio board of administration to terminate the imprisonment is limited only in this one respect, that it cannot detain the prisoner beyond the maximum term and it is my opinion that the board may release him on parole at any time after his incarceration in the reformatory.

This opinion is to be distinguished from the opinion of this department to the Ohio board of administration under date of March 4, 1912, in which it was held that a prisoner sentenced for life could not be paroled when the statute read "whoever, is guilty * * * shall be imprisoned for life." In that case the court could impose no sentence other than life and the life term was the minimum as well as the maximum term. Owing then, to the provision of section 2169, G. C., that a parole could not be granted until the minimum term was served, it is evident that the prisoner in that case could never become eligible for parole.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY SHERIFFS AND DEPUTY CLERKS MAY ACT IN PLACE OF SHERIFFS AND CLERKS.

Under the provisions of section 11426, General Code, the duties of sheriff and clerk are purely ministerial; the deputy sheriff and deputy clerk may act in the place of such sheriff or clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 10, 1914, as follows:

"Under section 11426, General Code, (103 O. L., 514), in the absence of either the clerk or sheriff, or both, may the deputy clerk or deputy sheriff, or both deputies, act in the place of such clerk or sheriff?"

Section 11426, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., page 514, reads:

"When by order of a court of record or judge thereof in any county, except a police court or judge thereof, the clerk of the common pleas court is directed to cause the summoning of persons to serve as grand or petit jurors in such court, in the presence of the sheriff, judge and the jury commissioners, he at once shall turn the jury wheel several times until the pieces of paper therein are thoroughly mixed, then draw from it the number of names specified in the order, and unless otherwise therein directed, forthwith shall issue a venire facias to the sheriff commanding him to summon the person whose names were so drawn, to attend as jurors at the time and place in the order stated. Except as otherwise provided by law, all grand and petit juries shall be impaneled from persons so selected and summoned. Should the jury commissioners be unable to attend because of sickness or absence from the county, the judge before whom the drawing is had shall designate two persons of opposite political parties to act as jury commissioners for the purpose of drawing the requisite names."

Section 2830, General Code, reads in part:

"The sheriff may appoint in writing one or more deputies * * *."

Section 2871, General Code reads in part:

"The clerk may appoint one or more deputies to be approved by the court of common pleas, if in session, or by one of the judges thereof, if not in session. * * *"

Section 9 of the General Code, reads in part:

"A deputy, when duly qualified, may perform all and singular the duties of his principal. * * *"

In volume 7 of Cyc. page 248, the following rule is stated:

"In the absence of any statutory provision, or implication to the contrary, a deputy clerk is authorized to perform any official or ministerial act that may be done by his principal, except to make a deputy."

and on page 1516 of volume 35 of the same work, the following rule is stated:

"While the judicial functions of a sheriff cannot be delegated to another the ministerial duties of the office may be performed by a deputy sheriff or under sheriff."

In the case of Willingham vs. The State, 21 Fla. p. 761, it was held:

"The duty imposed by statute upon the clerk of the circuit court to draw from the box the names of persons to serve as grand jurors at the term of court, may be performed by a deputy."

In that case the statute provided that:

"The clerk of the circuit court, in the presence of the sheriff or deputy sheriff and the county judge, or in his absence a justice of the peace of the county, shall proceed to draw from the box the names of not less than fifteen nor more than eighteen persons to serve as grand jurors at such court."

The court at page 776 said:

"There is nothing in the duty or function of drawing the pieces of paper or the names from the box that is judicial in its character or involves an exercise of discretion or personal skill. Nothing could be more ministerial. The measure of ability or skill which its performance requires, is the smallest. The language of the statute does not indicate that the personal judgment of a clerk himself is relied on. Ordinary intelligence and simple honesty are all that are required by the nature of the duty."

And again at page 778:

"It seems to us that as a general rule, all purely ministerial functions can be performed by a deputy and that such is the character of the drawing in question. * * * Any authority seeming to conflict with our conclusions will be found, on careful examination, to involve the exercise of a discretion or personal judgment."

In accordance with the views taken by the court in the case just cited, I am of the opinion that the duties imposed upon the clerk of the court and the sheriff by section 11426 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 514, are purely ministerial in their character and may therefore be discharged by the deputy clerk and deputy sheriff in the absence of their principals.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROBATE JUDGE—EXAMINERS OF THE COUNTY TREASURY—APPOINTMENT OF SUCH EXAMINERS.

Under the provisions of section 2700, General Code, it is mandatory upon a probate judge to appoint examiners of the county treasury once every six months; it is discretionary with him to do so oftener, if he deems it necessary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. EDWARD W. PORTER, Probate Judge, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 19th, you request a construction of section 2700, General Code, as to whether it is mandatory upon a probate judge to appoint examiners of the county treasury at intervals of six months. Said section provides:

"On the day and at the time the county treasurer turns over his office and its effects to his successor in office, once every six months or oftener, if he deems it necessary, or whenever requested in writing so to do by one or more bondsmen of the county treasurer, without notice to anyone, the probate judge shall appoint in writing under the seal of such court two competent and trustworthy accountants of opposite politics to examine the treasurer's office."

Before the adoption of the report of the codifying commission in 1910, the foregoing provision appeared as part of section 1129, Revised Statutes, in the following form:

"* * * the probate judge shall, once every six months, or oftener, if he deems it necessary or whenever he is requested so to do in writing by one or more of the bondsmen of the treasurer; and on the day and at the time the treasurer turns over his office and its effects to his successor in office, without notice to any one, he shall appoint, in writing, under the seal of said court, two competent and trustworthy accountants of opposite politics, * * *."

It will be observed that but for a difference in punctuation and in the arrangement of the phraseology, this section is identical with section 2700.

It is well settled in Ohio that codification is not presumed to change the meaning of a statute unless such intention is clearly manifest. There is no doubt that under section 1129 it was mandatory upon the probate judge to appoint two persons to examine the county treasury every six months. The only justification for placing a construction on section 2700 different from that given to section 1129 Revised Statutes, would be the change in the punctuation. In section 1129 a comma was inserted after the word "months and this comma has been omitted from section 2700.

The province of punctuation in the interpretation of statutes, is discussed in section 361 of Lewis Sutherland Statutory Construction, as follows:

"The questions in court relating to punctuation or affecting construction have generally arisen on the presence, omission or misplacing of commas.

"In Ewing vs. Burnet, the court says: 'Punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret a writing. It may be resorted to when all other means fail; but the court will first take the instrument by the four corners in order to ascertain its true meaning. If that is apparent on judicially inspecting it, the punctuation will not be suffered to change it.'

"Where effect may be given to all the words of a statute by transposing a comma, the alternative being the disregard of a material and significant word, or grossly straining and perverting it, the former course is to be adopted. Courts, in the construction of statutes, for the purpose of arriving at or maintaining the real meaning and intention of the lawmaker, will disregard the punctuation, or transpose the same, or substitute one mark for another, or repunctuate. When the intent is uncertain, punctuation may afford some indication of the true intent and may be looked to as an aid, and may even determine the construction, but it is never allowed to have a controlling effect."

The language of this statute is certainly entitled to greater weight than its punctuation.

If it was the intention to change the meaning of the statute, the codifying commission, at least, would have employed such language as would have clearly indicated such intention, but as this was not done, I am constrained to hold that the present statute should be construed in accordance with its meaning before codification.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that it is mandatory upon the probate judge, under section 2700, General Code, to appoint examiners of the county treasury once every six months.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—AUTHORITY TO TEST GAS METER PROVERS—AUTHORITY OF PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION TO TEST SUCH METERS.

The state sealer of weights and measures has authority to test gas meter provers under section 3398, General Code, before the same can be used, but thereafter, the public utilities commission may test such meters to see that they are still correct, or upon request of the consumer as provided in sections 614-36 and 614-37, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. S. E. STRODE, Commissioner in Charge, Dairy and Food Division, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 23, 1914, as follows:

"The question arises whether this commission as state sealer of weights and measures, has authority to test gas meter provers as provided in sections 9326, 9327, 9328, 9329, 9330, 9338 and 7970 of the Ohio food and drug laws. Sections 614-36 and 614-37 of the General Code, public utilities act, seem to confer such authority upon that department, in that it is provided that the public utilities commission may test such provers. We wish also to call your attention to the agricultural commission act, passed April 15, 1913, sections 7965 and 7965-1, conferring the authority of state sealer upon the agricultural commission or its deputies.

"The claim has been made that the public utilities law was later than the sections conferring upon the state sealer the duties of testing meter provers. That may be true, but the Agricultural commission act, which re-enacted all of these sections is a still later law than the public utilities act. Further the testing of such meter provers is optional with the public utilities commission, while it is mandatory with the agricultural commission."

Section 9338 General Code, provides:

"All gas companies supplying the public with illuminating gas, either natural or artificial, which are not supplied with such apparatus forthwith shall provide for their use a meter-prover, the holder of which must contain not less than five feet, such prover to be tested, stamped, and sealed by the state sealer of weights and measures, at the Ohio State University, before being used; and a photo-meter for the comparison of the lights of gases and candles by means of a disk. The failure on the part of any person, firm or corporation supplying the public with illuminating gas to comply with the provisions of this section shall cause said person, firm or corporation to forfeit and pay to the state not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, to be recovered upon the complaint of any such consumer, in the name of the state, before any court of competent jurisdiction."

This section when read literally means but one meter prover for each company and one test for each meter prover by the state sealer of weights and measures. Compliance with it is a condition precedent to the installation of meters by a gas company; and any company violating this section (that is installing and selling gas measured by a meter not previously tested by a meter prover as provided), is subject to a penalty from $25.00 to $100.00, to be recovered in a suit brought by any consumer in the name of the state in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Sections 614-36 and 614-37 (sections 38 and 39 of the public utilities act) read:

"The commission may ascertain and fix adequate and serviceable standards for the measurement of quality, pressure, initial voltage or other condition pertaining to the supply or quality or the product or service rendered by any public utility and prescribe reasonable regulations for examination and testing of such product or service and for the measurements thereof. It may establish reasonable rules, regulations, specifications and standards to secure the accuracy of all meters and appliances for measurements, and every public utility is required to carry into effect all orders issued by the commission relative thereto.

"The commission may provide for the examination and testing of any and all appliances used for the measurement of any product or service of a public utility. Any consumer or user may have any such appliance tested upon payment of the fees fixed by the commission. The commission may declare and establish reasonable fees to be paid for testing such appliances on the request of the consumers or users, the fees to be paid by the consumer or user at the time the request is made, but to be paid by the public utility and repaid to the consumer or user if the appliance is found commercially defective or incorrect to the disadvantage of the consumer or user."

These sections are very general in their terms and while meter provers are not named in section 9338, yet I think them included, for the reason that if it be ascertained that a gas meter is not measuring the gas correctly it is because there is something wrong with, or defect in the meter, and if it had been tested by the meter prover provided by the company, and found sufficient, then it would follow either that a mistake had been made in testing the meter, or the meter prover was itself inaccurate.

Under section 9338, the duty of the state sealer is plain and easily understood, while under section 614-36 and 614-37, the duty of the utilities commission is equally clear, although not so clearly expressed. The question of which of these is the later enactment is not at all controlling. A gas company before installing meters for measuring gas for consumers must provide itself with a meter prover and have it tested by the state sealer before using the same. This is mandatory on the gas company, and there is no other or further provision in the statutes in regard to testing meter provers. However, it does not necessarily follow from this that no other or further test may be made.

The public utilities law (so named) described certain activities as public utilities, among which are:

"* * * when engaged in the business of supplying artificial gas for lighting, power or heating purposes to consumers within this state as a gas company.

"* * * when engaged in the business of supplying natural gas for lighting, heating, or purposes to consumers within this state as a natural gas company."

Under this act, gas companies and natural gas companies are public utilities and as such are under the control and supervision of the public utilities commission, whose duty it is to see to it that each utility furnishes proper and adequate service; that its customers get what they bargain for and are charged with, and that all means and appliances by it used are correct, and that consumers are neither asked nor required to pay for more than they receive.

In carrying out this object, the powers of the commission are much broader than those of the state sealer. While there is no power in the state sealer to require a meter prover to be submitted to a second test, it is not merely within the power, but clearly a duty upon the part of the public utilities commission to ascertain whether meters are or are not correct, and if they are not, to learn why, and if it should develop that the meter had not been properly tested, or the meter prover was out of order, to take such steps and make such orders as would cure the difficulty, regardless of the fact that the meter prover had received its initial test as required by section 9338, General Code.

I am of the opinion that there is no inconsistency nor conflict between these sections nor in the duties of the state sealer and the public utilities commission, however it may look to some that it is unnecessary to have two boards, officers or bodies looking after the same matter and apparently performing the same duty.

It will be remembered all the time that the meter prover is to be used by the gas company. When it provides itself with a prover and has it tested, its duty to the state is fulfilled. It may permit the prover after its inspection and return to get out of order; it may place the use of it in the hands of an incompetent or careless person, one who may not use it at all before installing a meter. The detection of any of these things it beyond the power of the state sealer, but clearly within that of the public utilities commission, so that it is clearly seen that while the power of the utilities commission is greater, broader and more effective in securing the direct result than that of the state sealer can possibly be claimed to be, there is no conflict of power. The state sealer should enforce section 9338 the same as if the utilities act had never been passed, and the public utilities commission should see to it that all gas meters measure correctly, regardless of the fact that the terms of section 9338 had or had not been complied with, not only by the state sealer, but by the gas company.

The paramount duty of the public utilities commission in this regard is to see to it that consumers of gas burn what they are asked to pay for and no more. A further discussion of this subject might be entered into, but it is believed unnecessary at this time.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE DEPARTMENT—LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE DEPARTMENT—UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—DISCHARGE OF EMPLOYES FROM PUBLIC LIBRARY—OFFICES COMPATIBLE, CLERK OF THE HOUSE AND DIRECTOR OF LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE DEPARTMENT.

1. Since the legislative reference department is in effect a legislative reference library and was so recognized when the first act on the subject was passed, placing the department under the state librarian, the employes thereof would be considered as in the unclassified service within the term "library staff of any library in the state, etc."

2. Since the employes of the department are appointed by the director, subject to the approval of the board of library commissioners, the director of the legislative reference library would have the right to discharge employes of the department, subject to the approval of the board of library commissioners.

3. There is no statutory inhibition that will prevent the clerk of the house of representatives from accepting the position of director of the legislative reference department, providing it is physically possible for him to perform the duties of both positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 21, 1914, Hon. John R. Cassidy, acting director of the legislative reference department submits the following inquiries:

I wish you to advise me:

"First. If in your opinion the employes of the 'legislative reference department' created under the provisions of 103 Ohio Laws page 8 are included in the unclassified service of the state as prescribed in section 8 of the act found in 103 Ohio Laws page 698 and especially in subdivision a (6) of said section 8.

"Second. In the event that it becomes necessary to reduce the number of the employes of such legislative reference department, does the director have full power to discharge and, if not, in whom does such power of discharge rest?"

Under date of April 27, 1914, he further inquires:

"Can the clerk of the house of representatives continue to serve during the year 1914 as such clerk and receive compensation as such and at the same time accept the position of director of the legislative reference department and serve as such without compensation?"

As the first question concerns the civil service law this opinion is addressed to the state civil service commission.

The legislative reference department is provided for by act of 103 Ohio Laws 8, and said act is known as sections 798-1 to 798-8, inclusive, of the General Code.

A similar department was created by act of 101 Ohio Laws 221, to be known as the legislative reference and information department and was to be maintained in connection with the state library. Under this act the person in charge of the department was designated as "legislative reference librarian," and he had charge of the department under the supervision of the state librarian. These features have been changed by the new act.

Section 1 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws 8, section 798-1, General Code, provides:

> "There is hereby created and shall hereafter be maintained a department to be known as the 'legislative reference department,' for the use and information especially of the members of the general assembly, the officers of the several state departments and the public. The department shall be under the direction and supervision of the state board of library commissioners who shall provide suitable quarters in the state capitol for said department."

Section 2 thereof, section 798-2, General Code, provides:

> "The state board of library commissioners shall employ a director and fix his compensation. He shall have charge of such department and shall be an expert in political science, economics and public law. The salary and appointment of the director shall be approved by the governor and the director shall be removed by the board only for misconduct, incompetency or disability. Upon the recommendation of the director such board shall make rules for the direction of the department and its service as it deems necessary.

Section 3 of the act, section 798-3, General Code, prescribes the duties of the director, as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the director to collect and compare the laws of this and other states pertaining to any subject upon which he may be requested to report by the governor or any committee or member of the general assembly; to collect all available information relating to any matter which shall be the subject of proposed legislation by the general assembly; to prepare or advise in the preparation of any bill or resolution when requested to do so by the governor or by any member of the general assembly; to preserve and collate all information obtained and carefully index and arrange the same so that it may be at all times easily accessible to the members of the general assembly, other state officials and to the general public for reference purposes; to collect such books, pamphlets, periodicals, documents and other literature as may be of use to the general assembly or other state officials, and to keep the same on file in the quarters of the department, temporarily or permanently, according to the time for which such literature may be needed. It shall further be the duty of the director to collect, compile, classify and index the documents of the state, including senate and house journals, executive and legislative documents and departmental reports of this and other states; to keep on file all bills and resolutions printed by order of either house of the general assembly; to accumulate data and statistics regarding the practical operation and effect of statutes of this and other states."

Section 4 of the act, section 798-4, General Code, provides for the employment of assistants, draftsmen and clerical help, as follows:

> "Subject to the approval of the board, the director may employ and fix the compensation of such assistants, draftsmen and clerical help as may be necessary to effect the purpose of this act and to incur necessary and incidental expenses in the conduct of the department, which expense may include costs of traveling of the director or assistants. The compensation of the director and employes and such expenses shall be paid out of the state treasury upon the warrant of the auditor of state upon vouchers approved by the director of the department and paid out of the appropriations made. All vouchers for expenses shall be itemized and sworn to by the director."

The employes of this department are appointed by the director subject to the approval of the board of library commissioners.

Section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-4, General Code, places ten classes of positions in the unclassified service. Only one of these classes need be considered.

Subdivision (a) 6 of said section 8 provides:

"All presidents, superintendents, directors, teachers and instructors in the public schools, colleges and universities; the library staff of any library in the state supported wholly or in part at public expense."

Is the department in question to be considered a library within the meaning of the above provision?

The legislative reference department as created by act of 103 Ohio Laws 8, is under the direction and supervision of the board of state library commissioners.

The department has varied purposes. It is created to collect and compare laws of this state and other states; to collect information relating to proposed legislation; to prepare or advise in the preparation of bills; to collect books, pamphlets, periodicals, documents and other literature for the use of the general assembly, other state officials, and of the general public; and to collect, compile, classify and index the documents of the state and other similar duties. This information is to be gathered upon subjects pertaining principally to legislation or proposed legislation.

Many of the duties performed by this department are similar to duties performed by a library. Its purposes are to secure books, pamphlets and information for the use and reference of the general assembly and state officials and of the general public. A library gathers information, books and pamphlets on these and other subjects for the use and reference of its patrons.

This department is in effect a legislative reference library, and the legislature recognized it as such when the first act was passed, placing the department under the state librarian. The fact that it has now been made a separate department does not change its character. Its principal characteristics are those of a library.

Subdivision (a) 6 of section 8 of the civil service act places in the unclassified service the "library staff of any library in the state supported wholly or in part at public expense."

The employes of the legislative reference department would come within the above class and are in the unclassified service.

By virtue of section 4 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws 8, supra, the employes of this department are appointed by the director subject to the approval of the board of library commissioners. The act does not provide for the discharge or removal of the employes.

Where the manner of removal is not fixed by law it is held that the right of removal is incident to the power of appointment. The appointments are made by the director with the approval of the library commission and removals should be made in the same way.

Therefore the director of the legislative reference department has the right to discharge the employes of this department subject to the approval of the board of library commissioners.

The next inquiry involves the compatibiliy of the positions of director of the legislative reference department and that of clerk of the house of representatives.

The rule of incompatibility of office is stated by Dustin J. at page 275 of State ex rel. vs. Gebhart, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S., 274, where he says:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The duties of the director of the legislative reference department have been above given. He acts under the direction and supervision of the board of library commissioners.

Section 6 of the act creating this department, section 798-6, General Code, provides:

> "At the close of each session of the general assembly the clerk of the senate and the clerk of the house shall deliver to the director copies of all bills, joint resolutions, important petitions, memorials, and other legislative documents passed or presented during such session of the legislature."

The compensation and duties of the clerk of the house of representatives are prescribed in the following sections:

Section 51, General Code, provides:

> "The clerks and sergeants-at-arms of the senate and house of representatives, and their assistants, shall each be paid five dollars for each day's attendance during the session. For services rendered at the organization of the general assembly, each of the officers named in section thirty-three, unless re-elected to his position, shall be paid five dollars for each day, for not exceeding ten days."

Section 53, General Code, provides:

> "The clerks of the senate and house of representatives shall be paid five dollars per day, each, for the time employed after the adjournment of the general assembly in making indexes to the recorded and printed journals, and reading the proof sheets of the printed journals. The bills therefor must be approved by the commissioners of public printing or a majority of them. Such clerks shall have no other allowance or compensation for services after the adjournment of the general assembly, except as provided by law or resolution."

Section 71, General Code, provides:

> "Each clerk shall make an index to the journal kept by him, and an index of its appendix, and deliver them to the printer, who shall print them at the close of the proper volumes. Each clerk shall make an index to the recorded journal and deliver it to the secretary of state, who shall preserve it with the recorded journal."

Sections 73, 74, 75 and 76, General Code, prescribe certain duties upon the clerk of each house pertaining to the papers and documents laid before the house of which he is clerk as to their preservation and printing.

The duty of the clerk of the house of representatives to turn over to the director of the legislative reference department copies of bills and joint resolutions, important petitions, memorials and other legislative documents does not make these positions incompatible.

The two positions are not a check one upon the other, and they are not subordinate one to the other. Whether or not it is physically possible for the same person to perform the duties of each position is a question of fact to be determined by the time required to perform the duties of each position.

As the clerk of the house of representatives is paid upon a per diem basis, a question would arise as to his right to draw compensation as director of the legislative reference department for the days he draws pay as clerk of the house of representatives. This question is not now considered as it appears that the present clerk of the house of representatives is to serve as director of the legislative reference department without compensation.

I am of opinion that the same person may at the same time hold the two positions in question, provided it is physically possible for him to perform the duties of both positions.

The clerk of the house of representatives would be entitled to pay as such clerk if he performs the duties thereof, even though he also performs the duties of director of the legislative reference department.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP WARRANTS—TO BE ENDORSED BY TOWNSHIP TREASURER BEFORE BEING PAID.

Township warrants are required to be endorsed by the township treasurer before being paid by the township depository of township funds. The treasurer proceeds as if no depository had been provided for and his signature should appear on the warrant before being honored by the depository.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 24th, you asked my opinion as to whether or not township warrants are required to be endorsed by the township treasurer before being paid by the township depository of township funds.

The sections of the Code providing for the establishment of a township depository are sections 3320 to 3326, inclusive. A perusal of these sections will show that the depository was not intended to supplant the treasurer or to perform his duties, but that thereby provision was made for a township treasury. Nowhere in any of said sections is there anything changing the duties of the treasurer or enlarging the powers of the other township officers.

Consequently, the treasurer proceeds as if no depository had been provided for and his signature should appear on the warrant before being honored by the depository.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RAILROAD COMPANIES—EXPRESS COMPANIES—SALE OF STEAMSHIP OR RAILROAD TICKETS TO AND FROM FOREIGN COUNTRIES—PERSONALLY CONDUCTED PARTIES.

1. The agents of express companies when acting within the scope of their agencies are not required to give the bond required by sections 290-294 by reason of the exemption of express companies in section 295, General Code.

2. Individuals organizing personally conducted parties for foreign travel are not within the provisions of such sections for the reason that they are not selling railroad tickets to the parties organized by them, but are buying the railroad tickets as agents of such parties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 19, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of April 6th asking me for opinion as to the interpretation of sections 290-295, G. C., is before me; also the enclosures you submit.

The sections above mentioned read as follows:

"Section 290. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.

"Section 291. Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful holding and transmission of any money or the equivalent thereof, delivered to it for transmission to a foreign country, or conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or both if to be engaged in both of such businesses.

"Section 292. The bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good sufficient sureties, who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved, or cash may be accepted in place of surety. The bond shall be approved by the auditor of state, and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction.

"Section 293. The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipts, the name or names of the principals and place or places of residence, and place or places of transacting their business, the names of the surety upon the bond, and the name of the officr before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed.

"Section 294. A person, firm or corporation which engages in such business, contrary to the provisions of the second and third preceding sections, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

"Section 295. Nothing herein shall apply to drafts, money orders or travelers' crecks issued by trans-Atlantic steamship companies or their duly authorized agents or to national banks, express companies, state banks or trust companies."

As I understand it, your first question is as to whether or not the agents of an express company are required to comply with sections 290-294, supra. In answer, I would say that express companies do their business through their agents, the nature of such business making any other method impracticable. While section 295, G. C., provides that express companies are exempt from the operations of sections 290-294, and does not specifically mention agents of express companies, yet I hold that the agents of the express company are included under that term, and consequently are not required to give bond.

However, should the agent of an express company also desire to act in his individual capacity, in that event he must give bond as provided by sections 290-294, supra. Of course your department has no means of knowing whether or not an agent will endeavor to act part of the time as the agent of the express company, and part of the time as an individual. If he should simply use the fact that he was the agent of the express company as an excuse to evade the giving of the bond, and then attempted to act as an individual, such agent would make himself liable to the penalties imposed by section 294, G. C.

Your other question, as I understand it, is as to whether or not individuals who are organizing personally conducted parties from whom they collect deposits and finally furnish transportation and steamer tickets, are within the provisions of sections 290-295, G. C., inclusive, these parties claiming that they get no profit or commission out of the tickets sold, but do collect a fee for arranging the tour, route, etc.

I do not believe these parties come under the statute and consequently they should not be required to give bond. From your statement it will appear that they are not engaged in selling the tickets but simply act as agent for the purchasers.

I trust the above furnishes you the information you desire.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ESTABLISHMENT OF FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND—ABOLITION OF FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND—ORDINANCE.

The council of a city having an established firemen's pension fund may abolish the same by ordinance when all that has been done in regard to the establishment of such fund is the passage of an ordinance declaring the necessity of establishment and maintenance of a police fund and levy made the same year and no persons are drawing payment from such fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 7, 1914, you ask for my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the council of a city, having an established firemen's pension fund, by ordinance abolish fund?"

Supplementary to this request the following statement of facts has been received from the city solicitor of Chillicothe, Ohio:

> "On March 6, 1905, council passed an ordinance declaring the necessity of establishment and maintenance of a police relief fund and a levy was made accordingly the same year. It is said a board of trustees of the police relief fund were elected and rules adopted, but since the organization of the board as stated, nothing else has been done to administer this fund. In fact at the present time no one knows who the members of the board of trustees of said fund were, nor is there any copy of the rules adopted obtainable. Subsequent to the above levy no levies were made, no meetings were held by the board of trustees, no elections were held for their successors, and in fact, nothing has been done with this fund except that the money has remained in the hands of the city treasurer who has obtained a small interest for it. The same facts as here stated are true of the firemen's pension fund of this city."

I shall assume the city solicitor has stated all the facts, and therefore this opinion must be taken as based upon his statement. You will note that he has not stated that there were ever voluntary contributions to the fund, or that there were any moneys placed therein, excepting that received from a tax levy; consequently this opinion does not deal with circumstances which might arise where there had been premiums paid by foreign insurance companies, donations, or other augmentations of the fund derived from sources other than by virtue of a tax levy.

The law with reference to firemen's pension funds is embodied in sections 4600-4615 of the General Code, and its purport may be briefly stated as follows:

Any municipal corporation having a fire department supported at public expense, may, through its council, declare the necessity for the establishment of a firemen's pension fund. When this is done trustees are to be elected who shall serve for a term prescribed by the statute, which board of trustees shall organize as provided in section 4604. In each municipality availing itself of these provisions council may levy a tax of not to exceed three-tenths of one mill in addition to other levies authorized by law. In case of the failure of the trustees to act in the manner required by law, such failure shall not limit the power of council to make the levy, and if it fails to make the maximum levy, there shall be passed to the credit of the fund such portion of the annual tax on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquor, as when added to the amount realized from the levy, will equal what would be realized from a full levy of three-tenths of a mill, or such part as is necessary to meet the pension payroll. The portion taken from the intoxicating liquor tax shall not exceed sixteen-thirtieths of the amount of such tax required to be passed to the credit of the general fund in the municipality.

As the statement of facts does not show any levy since the passage of the "Smith one per cent. law," I shall not discuss the bearing of that upon the firemen's pension fund tax. In addition to this tax, all fines imposed upon the members of the fire department and the proceeds of all suits for penalties for violation of statutes or ordinances, with the execution of which the fire department is charged, and license fees, shall be credited to the pension fund. The trustees are also authorized to receive donations.

The treasurer of the municipality is made custodian of the fund, and is to pay it out on the proper order of the trustees. These trustees may invest moneys as prescribed in section 4611, and may make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund "including the qualification of those to whom any portion of it shall be paid and the amount thereof;" but no rules shall be enforced until approved by the director of public safety or the fire chief of the municipality.

The section last referred to can have no bearing here because I have assumed that there are no persons drawing pensions from the fund in Chillicothe. At this point I also desire to call attention to the fact that this obviates a discussion of the question of vested rights in a fund after the happening of the contingency upon which the pension vests.

Prior to the happening of the contingency upon which the pensioner is to receive compensation it is fundamental that such pensioner has no vested right to any part of such fund.

22 Am. Eng. Enc. of Law, 2d Ed. 658.
8 Cyc., 904.

Mr. Dillon in section 431 of the 5th edition of his work on "Municipal Corporations," says:

> "The fund from which municipal pensions are paid is usually created by setting aside certain sources of public income, and frequently provision is made that a stated sum per month shall be retained or deducted from the compensation of each or the officers in the department who may become entitled to a pension. Although the sum so deducted from the officer's compensation is called a part of the officer's compensation in the statute, yet the officer never receives it or controls it, and he cannot prevent its appropriation to the fund in question. He has no power of disposition over it such as always accompanies ownership of property. A statute providing for such a deduction in legal effect says that the officer shall receive as compensation each month the net amount payable to him, and that in addition thereto the state or municipality will create a fund by appropriating the amount retained each month for that purpose, from which, upon his resignation for bad health or bodily infirmity, or dismissal after long and meritorious service, a certain sum shall be paid to him, or at his death to his widow and children where the statute so provides. Being a fund raised in that way, it is entirely at the disposal of the government until, by the happening of one of the events stated—the resignation, retirement, or death of the officer—the right to the specific sum becomes vested in the officer or his representative. In making a change in the disposition of a fund of that character previous to the happening of one of the events mentioned, the state impairs no absolute right of property in the officer. The direction of the state that the fund should be one for the benefit of the officer or his representative under certain conditions is subject to change or revocation at any time at the time at the will of the legislature. There is no contract on the part of the state that its disposition shall always continue as originally provided. Until the particular event should happen upon which the money, or a part of it is to be paid, there is no vested right in the officers to such payment. His interest in the fund is, until then, a mere expectancy created by the law and liable to be revoked or destroyed by the same authority. But when the particular event has happened upon which the money or a part of it is to be paid, the beneficiary of the pension under the pension system acquires, it has been held, a vested right and it is not competent for the legislature or any other authority to deprive him of that vested right. But the existence of a vested right is dependent upon statutory provisions conferring the pension without qualification and without any reserve right to terminate it. If the statute reserves the power to the local authorities to discontinue the pension in their discretion, the beneficiary does not acquire a right in it."

The gist of the matter may be thus stated where the funds are derived solely from taxation; it is a matter of bounty given or withheld at the pleasure of the municipality, and may be repealed at any time, before the happening of the contingency upon which the right to the pension vests.

State vs. Trustees, 121 Wis., 44.
Cohrn vs. Henderson, 124 Pac., 1034.
Pennie vs. Bois, 132 U. S., 454.
Head vs. Jones, 150 S. W., 349.
Eddy vs. Morgan, 216 Ill., 437, 449.

The following language is taken from the case of Price vs. Parley 22 C. C., 48:

"It is within the power of the legislature wholly to abolish or to change a law granting pensions to disabled members of a fire department, and no such member is entitled to any other or different pension than that provided by the existing statute."

From this it seems to me to be clear that the city council has the right to abolish the firemen's pension fund in the case in question, as it is optional with the municipality to create a fund and provide for the pensioning of the firemen, and under these circumstances the power to create carries with it the power to destroy.

You also ask what disposition should be made of the money remaining in this fund in case of the repeal of the ordinance establishing firemen's pensions.

It has been suggested that under section 5654 of the General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 521, council may transfer the moneys to the sinking fund. That part of this section which is claimed to be in point reads thus:

"When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district, a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or of the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used, or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

It will be observed that this section has reference to the disposition of the surplus of a special tax or the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used. These funds are, of course, not derived from a loan or bond issue, and therefore if section 5654 is to obtain it must be because the moneys in question are the proceeds of a special tax. It is extremely difficult to ascertain what was in the legislative mind when it used the term "special tax."

In Zimmerman vs. Canfield, 42 O. S., 462, 469, the supreme court had under discussion a ditch assessment law. Section 4449, R. S., provided for assessment on benefited lands to raise the amount of compensation and damages, and the court held that section 2834, R. S. (now 5654) provided for the transfer of these special funds so raised to the general fund. This would carry with it the implication that the court regarded a special assessment as a special tax. This construction may not be entirely warranted by the provisions of section 3799 of the General Code, (103 O. L., 522), which provides for a transfer by a vote of the council. Any fund may be so transferred except the proceeds of a special levy, bond issue or loan, and there shall be no transfer except among funds raised by tax upon all the real and personal property in the corporation. As a special assessment is not levied upon all real and personal property in the corporation, it would be unnecessary to insert this exception if the proceeds of a special levy were the same thing as money derived from special assessments, and we cannot assume that the legislature inserted meaningless language. Again, section 2296 (103 O. L., 522) provides for transfer of certain funds, excepting balances of special levies by the board of education. As the board of education has no authority to levy special assessments, the general assembly must have intended to refer to something other than a levy for a special assessment, by the use of the words "special levies." Be this as it may, I am, nevertheless, inclined to the opinion that the fund here in question is not the proceeds of a special tax, within the meaning of that term as used in section 5654. This section as originally enacted (75 O. L., 132) provided for the transfer of the balance of funds derived from a special act. It was subsequently amended (92 O. L., 77) to read, insofar as it is pertinent here, very similarly to section 5654. From this it is apparent that the general assembly originally had in mind some unusual or extraordinary fund, while the firemen's pension fund is recognized as one for a proper municipal purpose, and as providing for the covering of an ordinary municipal expense. Funds of this character have almost universally been sustained upon the ground that they are incident to the general powers reposed in municipalities, and the general assembly when it provided for a levy to take care of this expenditure did not provide a special levy, but rather provided an additional levy of those theretofore recognized as being proper for general revenue purposes. A special tax is a particular one—that is limited in contra-distinction to general or ordinary. Here the authorization contemplates continual duties, perpetual powers, and involves no unusual matter, but, on the contrary, is a recognition of an ordinary municipal function. In drawing the law in the way in which it appears, the general assembly recognized these principles and gave the fund its characteristic of one derived for a general rather than a special purpose. In my judgment a special fund is one designed for a particular and limited purpose, which has not the element of perpetuity or continuity involved therein. Here continuity is an essential element and there may be perpetuity.

For these reasons it is my judgment that this money may not be transferred by virtue of section 5654. Sections 2296, et seq., provide for the transfer of funds under court procedure, and section 3799 authorizes council by the vote of three-fourths of all the members elected thereto, and the approval of the mayor, to transfer all or a portion of one fund, with certain exceptions, within which the fund here under discussion does not come, to the credit of another fund. There shall be no such transfer except among funds raised by taxation upon all the real and personal property in the corporation, nor until the object of the fund from which the transfer is to be effected has been accomplished or abandoned.

As the fund here has been raised by taxation upon all the real and personal property in the corporation, according to the statement of facts, and as the object of the fund has been abandoned, I am of the opinion that by compliance with this section the money in question may be transferred to such other fund as council deems proper. The method provided by sections 2296, et seq., is in addition to the method just outlined, and may be taken advantage of if the municipal authorities desire so to do.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET RAILWAY—FRANCHISE—PAVING BETWEEN THE RAILS.

When the franchise of a street railway company requires it to pave between the rails, the city cannot give to such railway company the option of paying the cost of such paving in annual deferred installments for the reason that if the railroad company does not do the paving itself, the city may do the paving and recover from the railroad company the amount so expended, and any agreement to accept repayment of the installments disbursed by the municipality on behalf of the railroad company would be without consideration.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1914.

HON. C. L. SHAYLOR, City Solicitor, Ashtabula, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 20th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The franchise of a street railway company requires it to pave between rails whenever the city paves the street in which such rails are located. May the city give to the street railway company the option of paying the cost of paving between the rails in annual deferred installments like an assessment in the event that the city does the work and charges its cost to the railroad company?"

I enclose herewith copy of an opinion to Hon. C. C. Crabbe, prosecuting attorney, London, Ohio, in which you will observe that I held that a city is without authority to assess street railway property for the cost of paving between the rails on the theory that the property is specially benefited by the improvement. In this opinion I discussed the case of Cleveland vs. Cleveland Ry. Co., 4 Ohio Decisions, Reprint 315, cited by you. I adhere to the judgment expressed therein, which is to the effect that a technical assessment cannot be made against the railway company.

The test upon such a question would arise if the county auditor should refuse to extend an alleged "assessment" of this sort upon the county duplicate so as to charge the treasurer with the collection thereof. In my judgment the county auditor could not be compelled to do this, so that in all events an "assessment" against the railroad company on this behalf could not be collected like other assessments.

But in my opinion it is immaterial for the purpose of your question whether the charge be called an "assessment" or not; for you inquire, not whether the charge can be collected on the county tax duplicate, but merely whether the city can give to the railroad company the option of paying it in deferred installments.

The question is, therefore, to be determined by the application of general principles of law. If the franchise, of which the railroad is enjoying its occupancy of the municipal streets, itself contains the requirement that the railway company pave between the rails whenever the city paves the street in which the rails are located, which is the case concerning which you inquire, it follows that the obligation of the railway company to pay arises immediately upon the doing by the municipality of the thing contemplated by the franchise, viz., the paving of the street. As a necessary implication it is, of course, properly held that should the railway company fail to pave between the rails, the municipality may as a part of the improvement lay the pavement between the rails, in which event there arises a liability on the part of the railway company to the municipality. Columbus vs. Railroad, 45 O. S., 98.

In other words, the liability is created by the acts of the parties under the contract incorporated in a franchise ordinance. Should the municipality, then extend the time of payment of such liability and agree upon special terms thereof, its action would be without consideration, and for that reason not binding, for the relation between the parties is contractual merely. Ry vs. Columbus, 3 N. P. n. s., 438.

The contract is executed and the liabilities fixed. Any further arrangement between the parties is, therefore, nugatory.

In another view of the case, where bonds have been issued by the municipality to pay for the improvement, and the railroad company owes the city on account of the transaction, like that about which you inquire, the city meantime owing the holders of the bonds, the extension of credit, by deferred payments, to a railroad, might be said to constitute a loaning of the municipality's credit to the company, which is prohibited by positive constitutional provision.

For all of the above reasons, I am of the opinion that the arrangement about which you inquire may not lawfully be entered into.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RECEIVER—ASSIGNEE—TRUSTEES IN BANKRUPTCY—LISTING OF PROPERTY FOR TAXATION.

6. An assignee of a corporation, whose affairs are being wound up under order of the court is not required to list the assets in his possession for taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 27, 1914, in which you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Are receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, and assignees in charge of the assets of individuals, partnerships or corporations which are being wound up under order of court required to make returns of such assets for taxation?"

Your question impresses me as somewhat ambiguous and I, therefore, take the liberty of defining the exact questions which I shall consider. I shall assume that you are inquiring concerning the duty of the following persons in their representative capacity to make return of the personal property in their possession in such capacity, viz.:

"1. A receiver of the business of an individual.
"2. A trustee in bankruptcy.
"3. An assignee for the benefit of the creditors of an individual.
"4. An assignee for the benefit of the creditors of a partnership.
"5. A receiver of a corporation which is being wound up under order of court.
"6. An assignee of a corporation whose assets are being wound up under order of court."

If I fail to cover all the questions you had in mind in submitting your request for an opinion, I shall be pleased to consider such other questions as are intended to be contemplated therein.

Section 5370, General Code, is the only section of the taxation laws which imposes any specific duty to list for taxation property held in a representative capacity. Its pertinent provisions are as follows:

> "* * * the property of a * * * person for whose benefit property is held in trust, by the trustees; * * * of corporations whose assets are in the hands of receivers, by such receivers."

It is true that section 5369, General Code in prescribing the form of oath to be taken and subscribed by the person listing the property requires that such oath, being adapted in form to the capacity in which the person making the return acts, shall state that the return contains, among other things "a true account of all taxable personal property, moneys, credits and investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, annuities or otherwise, owned or controlled by such person * * * as trustee * * * receiver, * * * agent or otherwise, and also of all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise, held for him, or any one residing in this state, * * * and every interest and right, legal or equitable, of the person listing and of those for whom he is required by law to list in bonds, etc., which he is required by law to list for taxation."

However, this statute of itself does not impose the duty to list in a representative capacity, and its provisions cannot be in my opinion looked to for the purpose of enlarging in any way the positive requirements of section 5370. A similar observation may be made with reference to section 5379, the purpose of which is to fix the time as of which personal property shall be listed.

In addition to these substantive statutes certain provisions found in the laws relative to the duties of assignees, etc., are to a certain extent material. Thus it is provided in section 11138 with reference to assignees for the benefit of creditors that,

> "Taxes of every description assessed against the assignor upon personal property held by him before his assignment must be paid by the assignee or trustee out of the proceeds of the property assigned in preference to any other claim against the assignor."

I find no other positive requirements of statutory law applicable in the premises, although other statutes are, of course, to be considered in the application of the principles which the courts have laid down in cases which I shall hereinafter cite.

In McNeill vs. Hagerty, 51 O. S., 255, the syllabus is as follows:

> "Personal property, whether in the form of moneys, bills receivable, bonds, certificates of stock, or otherwise, held by an assignee of an insolvent debtor whose estate is being settled in the probate court, is not subject to taxation, and it is not the duty of such assignee to make return of the assets of such estate to the county auditor for taxation."

The facts in that case were pleaded in the petition which is abstracted at pages 255, et seq. It appears therefrom that the plaintiff was assignee of a corporation for the benefit of its creditors; that at the date of listing personal property he had in his possession assets consisting of notes, accounts and money in bank, which assets were insufficient to pay the costs of administration and the claims against the assignor.

In the opinion of Spear, J., pages 262, et seq., is found the following language:

"Our statutes * * * place the disposition of insolvent estates within the control of the probate court, and direct the duties of the assignee, and the procedure in the administration of the trust. * * * Necessarily that court * * * upon the filing of the instrument of assignment, acquires control of all the property and estate embraced therein, subject, of course, to all liens and just claims then existing upon the property, whether by the state or by creditors. It is made the duty of the assignee to convert the assigned property into money and * * * file an account, as a step preliminary to an order distributing the money to creditors * * *. The effect of the assignment is to devote the property absolutely to the satisfaction of the debts of the assignor, just as they existed at the time of the assignment, subject, necessarily, to be depleted by the expenses of the trust.

"Provision is made for the payment by the assignee * * * of taxes in preference to any other claim against the assignor. The language in this regard is significant: (here follows a quotation of what is now section 11138). Nowhere is it in terms provided that the assignee shall list the property for taxation, nor is provision made for the payment of any taxes save those existing against the assignor. This omission seems to us significant when contrasted with the duty enjoined by other sections of the statute upon other trustees. * * * (Here follows a quotation of the taxation statutes above cited and of the statutes applicable to executors and administrators.) If we apply the familiar rule expressio unius exclusio alterius, it would seem that those are the only taxes, payment of which may properly be included in his accounts.

"The omission referred to would seem also to suggest a distinction between the relation of an assignee to creditors of the assignor and to the trust property held by him, and the relation sustained by a guardian, an administrator, or a receiver of a corporation, to beneficiaries interested in the trust property, as well as to the property itself; and, we think a distinction is observable between the relation sustained by creditors of an insolvent assignor to the assigned property, and that of beneficiaries of property in charge of the other functionaries above named.

"The relation of guardian to the ward is, while it lasts, a permanent one. He manages the estate for the benefit of the ward, and it is his duty to so manage as to make profit and interest for the ward. As to the property, the ward has no power over it, nor duty respecting it.

"As to administrators, it is true that property in their hands is subject to the payment of the debts of the decedent, and that creditors are expected to list their claims as credits, and often it happens that the debts consume the entire assets. But usually there is in fact, as well as in contemplation, a residue going to widows and legatees or heirs, and they are not required to list for taxation any amount until it is actually received.

"The duty enjoined upon receivers to list is confined to receivers of corporations. Such receivers are usually empowered to prosecute the business for the benefit of the parties interested. This carries the idea of a continuance of the business as by the corporation, and its eventual surrender to the corporation again. Receivers for partnerships, concerns whose affairs are to be wound up and dissolved, are not named. Certainly this omission is also significant. Such receivers perform duties similar, in many ways, to the duties of assignees of insolvent, and had it been intended to enjoin them the duty of listing property in their hands for taxation, one would suppose that the discrimination found in the statute would not have been made."

Again at page 267, Judge Spear says:

"To hold that property in possession of an assignee, as in these cases, must be listed and taxes paid on it is, in effect, to hold that the creditors must be taxed twice on the same value. While the legal title to the property is in the assignee, it is so only for the purpose of facilitating the settlement of the trust. Equitably, the property is vested in the creditors. Every dollar paid in taxes by the assignee reduces by that amount the dividend which the creditors will receive. To say it is the duty of creditors, under the law, to list their claims as creditors, admits, we suppose of no doubt, and, we submit, that it is no answer to say that creditors cannot know the value of such credits. Such condition attaches to a very large proportion of credits held by the commercial, and especially the mercantile, world. Nor, is it any answer to say that, as matter of fact, they will not list the claims. No good reason why they should not exist, unless it would be furnished by a requirement compelling the assignee to do so. A statutory construction which, to use the language of Judge Cooley, 'requires that one person, or any one subject of taxation, shall directly contribute twice to the same burden, while other subjects of taxation belonging to the same class are required to contribute but once,' is to be avoided, because, in the judgment of that author, it is duplicate taxation, and is not permissible under a constitution which requires equality and uniformity. This proposition seems to be applicable to the present cases, as our constitution requires both equality and uniformity. It is not necessary to hold that the legislature might not include assignees in the class of trustees who are required to list property in their hands, even though duplicate taxation results; it is enough, for the disposition of the present cases, if the purpose to do so has not been expressed.

"The assignee is in every essential particular, an officer of the court. The fund is in his hands as such, and he is bound to do with it just what the court directs. The fund, therefore, is really in the custody of the court, and as before stated, the beneficial interest is in the creditors. They cannot, it is true, receive their own at once, but that is because it requires some time to reduce the assets to money, and for the adjustment of the debts and claims. To require the listing of any of the property thus held by the assignee, and the payment of taxes on it, would manifestly interfere with the orderly execution of the trust. And if, as is claimed in argument, in case payment of taxes so levied is not voluntarily made by the assignee, distraint might be resorted to by the tax collector and the property seized and taken forcibly from the possession of the assignee, thus taking it from the control of the court, so much the more apparent is it that the construction claimed by the defendant in error is inadmissible because it would result in unreasonable interference with the rightful exercise of authority by the probate court. It cannot have been the purpose of the legislature, by one statute to lodge exclusive jurisdiction and dominion over property in a court, and by another statute, authorizing a taxing officer to cast contempt upon the court by ousting its jurisdiction and over-riding its powers.

"If the clause of section 2734, relating to the listing of trust property by trustees, requires a listing of property by the assignee of an insolvent whose estate is being settled in the probate court, no reason can be given why the same duty would not devolve upon receivers of partnerships, clerks of courts, sheriffs or master commissioners, as to funds which may chance to be in their hands on the day preceding the second Monday of April, subject to payment upon order of court. To state such a proposition is to refute it. And this because it is unreasonable to assume that, in the absence of express authority, the duty to list embraces property which the law has taken into its own hands simply to collect and distribute, and of which it has designated a temporary trustee for the better accomplishment of its work."

However in the case of French vs. Bobe, 64 O. S., 323, the rather broad statements found in the opinion and syllabus of the case from which quotation has just been made, are somewhat limited. The syllabus in the case just cited is as follows:

"Personal property in the possession of an assignee for the benefit of creditors of a manufacturing corporation, which is not being reduced to money for distribution among the creditors of the corporation, but is being held and operated, under the orders of the insolvency court, and at the joint request of the creditors of the assignee, in the conduct of a going business being conducted as it had been theretofore by the corporation itself, is subject to taxation, and it is the duty of the assignee to list such property for taxation."

The facts involved in the French case are sufficiently disclosed in the language of the syllabus as quoted. Speaking of the McNeill opinion, Spear, J., who writes both opinions, says at page 338 in French vs. Bobe:

"We are of opinion * * * that the case at bar is so clearly distinguishable from the case cited, that its decision is not controlled by that case. * * * There the indebtedness largely exceeded the value of the assets, and the assignee was proceeding strictly under section 6346, Revised Statutes, and following, to reduce the assigned property to money and close out the estate by a distribution of the proceeds among the creditors. He sold all the property and held only its avails; he was neither holding the property of the assignor, or any of it, nor operating the business. Here the appraised value of the property exceeds the indebtedness. The assignee is not selling, and has not attempted to sell, any of the assigned property but is proceeding * * * to operate the plant * * * the corporation having ceased to do business because insolvent, and the property thus being held in trust for the benefit of creditors, they—the cestuis que trustent—have, in effect invested the property in a scheme to continue the business, and the assignee has advanced his own personal funds in the venture. * * * Thus the business has been conducted like any other business of similar character and has proved a source of profit apparently to all concerned, and yet has yielded to the state no taxes during all these years. A controlling distinction between the case cited and the present case at bar is that in the former the assigned property had been sold and the estate was, in substance as well as form, being settled in the probate court, while in this case the assigned property is being held and operated in the management of a manufacturing business, and the estate is thus being continued as before, but is not being settled. Hence, the rule of law applied to the McNeill case has no application to the present case.

"In substance and in all essential particulars, the position of the assignee in this case is much like that of a receiver. He is clothed with the legal title to the property of which he has possession (which cannot be said as to a receiver), but in no other particular is there any real difference, He has held and is holding property, not for the purpose of operating the same for profit. Indeed the very order which directs him to operate in effect forbids him to sell. It may be conceded that in form, and from the strict legal standpoint, the estate is in the court of insolvency for settlement, but in reality it is not being settled, but, on the other hand, the arrangement amounts to an investment of the creditors' money in the management of a going concern. There is no present effort nor purpose to sell, but simply a purpose to hold and operate. As a receiver, if directed by the court, manages the property in the interest of creditors, so this assignee manages under the order of the court for the benefit of creditors; and as a receiver, where all debts and expenses have been paid, may be ordered by the court to turn over the remaining property to the original debtor, so may the assignee in case all of the debts of this corporation, including the expenses of the trust, are satisfied, be required to reconvey the remaining property of the assignor. Each is equally an officer of the court and bound to carry out its behests. As a general rule it may be stated that there is no sound principle upon which the property of a person or corporation in the hands of a receiver to be managed for the interests of those concerned, can be regarded as exempt from the burden of taxation; and this principle is distinctly recognized in our statute by the requirement of section 2734, defining by whom property shall be listed for taxation: 'Of corporations whose assets are in the hands of receivers, by such receivers.' In spirit this requirement applies to the case at bar."

As far as I know these two decisions constitute the only ones by which any light can be thrown upon the questions which you present. The supreme court of this state has not dealt further with any of these questions, and as the questions themselves arise, in part at least, under the peculiar language of our statutes, it is at once apparent that the decisions from other states are not of service.

While I do not know that I can add anything to what judge Spear has said in the language above quoted, it seems to me that a clearer statement of the rule laid down by the court is as follows:

Where a person acting in a representative capacity is converting the assets of the original owner of personal property into money for the purpose of distributing the fund among his creditors and it appears that the amount of the estate is not sufficient to satisfy the creditors' claims, it is not the duty of such representative to return the personal property so held for taxation, but the creditors are to list their separate interest in the fund as creditors. Where, on the other hand, the representative is making no effort at distribution, but is managing the estate for the benefit of the creditors, and the amount of the estate exceeds the aggregate claims of the creditors, the representative must list as a trustee or agent of the creditors, even though he be an "assignee," an officer not mentioned in section 5370.

Of course this rule is not complete; it does not furnish disposition for a case where the person, acting in a representative capacity, is proceeding to wind up, but has not sold the property; or for a case where the estate has been converted into money, and the fund exceeds the aggregate claims of the creditors. The supreme court has merely left cases like these in doubt.

A further investigation, amounting possibly to speculation, must be indulged before a complete rule can be laid down. In this connection it seems to me that the two cases can be still further harmonized by giving effect to what Judge Spear speaks of in the McNeill case in referring to the exact language of section 5370. He points out that the statutes do not require an assignee to list property in his possession for taxation, nor to pay as a preferred claim personal property taxes other than those assessed against the insolvent debtor before the assignment, yet in the face of these remarks he holds in the French case that an assignee must, under certain circumstances, list the property held by him in such capacity. In order to affect a complete reconciliation of the two opinions, then, it seems to me that it is necessary to accept all that Judge Spear says relative to the effect of the omission of the word "assignee" from section 5370, and to hold as to an assignee, that presumptively he is not required to list the property in his possession, whether in the form of specific items turned over to him by his assignee, or in the form of cash and credits; but that, when it appears that by reason of the adoption of a policy with respect to the management of the estate other than the mere winding up of its assets, and the distribution thereof among the creditors, the assignee, though technically continuing to act in the same capacity, has acquired the special aspect of a receiver, i. e., a mere manager of an estate or a business rather than a distributor thereof, the presumption is overthrown, and the technical assignee is to be held for taxes as if he were in name what he is in fact.

Such a hypothesis of reconciliation renders immaterial, perhaps, the facts respecting the relative amount of the aggregate claims of creditors as compared with the assets in the hands of an assignee or other representative; for although Judge Spear adverts to such facts in both opinions it hardly seems likely if the issue were squarely raised, a court would hold that the question of the assignee's duty to list, could be dependent upon such a fact.

The underlying principle found in these two cases, then, appears to me to be that section 5370, General Code, is to be given a substantial rather than a formal interpretation, so that the words "trustee" and "receiver," as therein used, are to include all persons acting in a representative capacity, who are in point of fact dealing with the property of another as trustee or receiver. Thus, in the French case, not as the representative of the insolvent corporation was the assignee held for taxes, but rather as the representative of the creditors who had elected to have him continue the business for their benefit instead of requiring him to distribute the assets of the insolvent.

It seems to me that this underlying principle, based, as it is, upon such fundamental reasons as those advanced by Judge Spear cannot be applied in any other way to the interpretation of section 5370. It seems to me clearly logical to hold that if one acting in a representative capacity, technically as a "trustee" or "receiver" of a corporation is actually proceeding to wind up the assets in his possession and distribute them in the manner in which an assignee of an insolvent person or partnership would legally act he would be held excused from the duty to list the property controlled by him. That is to say, being a trustee or receiver of a corporation he would be prima facie charged with the duty of listing the property in his possession in that capacity. But the presumption would be overthrown as in the case of the assignee in the French case by a showing that he was dealing with the assets like an assignee, i. e., was proceeding to convert into cash and to distribute.

I believe that the statement which I have just made would be held to be the law if a strictly logical application of the two cases which I have been discussing were made.

Coming now to the specific questions asked by you, which must be answered in the light of the two decisions above cited, with such inferences as can be drawn therefrom, I beg leave to submit my conclusions as follows:

1. The receiver of the business of an individual who is conducting such business in the manner ordinarily followed by such receivers must list the property in his charge for taxation. Primarily a receiver is appointed for the purpose of conducting the affairs of a party and preserving the assets pending the determination of legal rights affecting such assets. The receiver of a business is of this character and is to be distinguished from certain kinds of corporate receivers to which I shall hereafter allude.

2. The question as to the duty of trustees in bankruptcy to list property in their possession is extremely doubtful. The bankruptcy law vests in the trustee complete legal title to the property of the bankrupt. Section 64a of that law specifies what taxes shall be paid as preferred claims by the trustee, and is almost identical in purport with section 11138 of the General Code above quoted. Had this section of the bankruptcy law received no interpretation in the federal courts, then the interpretation of the similar state statute found in McNeill vs. Hagerty, supra, would indicate that the trustee is not liable for taxes, and therefore, should not list the property in his possession. However, the federal courts have taken a view of the federal statute entirely different from that taken by the state supreme court with respect to the statute cited, and in the cases of In re Conhaim, 100 Fed., 268; In re Keller, 109 Fed., 131 and In re Sims 118, Fed., 356, all of which have been approved by the supreme court of the United States in Swarts vs. Hammer, 194 U. S., 144, it has been held that despite the strict and literal meaning of section 64a, it should not be interpreted so as to relieve the trustee in bankruptcy from listing the property in his possession as well as paying taxes previously assessed against the bankrupt.

The question thus made being a doubtful one, I am disposed to follow the view of the federal courts whose interpretation of the federal statute is binding upon the state courts, and to assume that the state court, if called upon to decide the question, would hold that section 5370, General Code, in speaking of a "trustee" applies to a trustee in bankruptcy. Therefore I am of the opinion that trustees in bankruptcy should list property in their possession for taxation.

3. As perhaps sufficiently indicated by the general discussion in the earlier portion of this opinion, I am of the opinion that an assignee for the benefit of the creditors of an individual is presumptively not required to list the assets in his possession for taxation; but if in accordance with the statutes and by agreement of the parties, and the order of the court, he is preserving the corpus of the estate and managing it for the benefit of all concerned rather than proceeding to distribute it, then, while technically an assignee, he has become virtually a receiver and should make the return in accordance with the principles laid down in French vs. Bobe, supra.

4. The question respecting the duty of an assignee for the benefit of the creditors of a partnership to return the assets in his possession, can be answered in the same manner as the similar question respecting the assignee of an individual which has just been answered.

5. Perhaps the most difficult question which you submit is that respecting the duty of a winding up receiver of a corporation to make return of the assets in his possession. The statute, section 5370, expressly requires the property of corporations whose assets are in the hands of a receiver to be returned by such receiver. As, perhaps already suggested a receivership is an ancillary remedy, receivers being appointed for various purposes in connection with other proceedings. The receiver of a corporation who is merely in control of its assets and business for a temporary purpose to prevent the waste of assets or mismanagement of business, or the doing of illegal acts or the like, merely stands in the place of the corporation, and is clearly, within the statute, required to make a return. However, a receiver of a corporation which is being wound up stands, in my mind, in an entirely different situation. Such a receiver is appointed for the very purpose of winding up the corporation, and has no power to do anything else. His appointment is provided for by sections 11938, et seq., General Code. These sections provide a method for the dissolution of corporations. I quote section 11943 General Code, as follows:

"When the report is made, if it appears to the court that the corporation is insolvent, or that its dissolution will be beneficial to the stockholders, and not injurious to the public interest, or that the objects of the corporation have wholly failed, or been entirely abandoned, or that it is impracticable to accomplish such objects, a judgment shall be entered dissolving the corporation, and appointing one or more receivers of its estate and effects. The corporation thereupon shall be dissolved, and cease."

It appears from this section that the corporation, as such, is defunct before the receiver is appointed. I quote also section 11945.

"Such receiver shall be vested with all the estate, real or personal, of the corporation, from the time of filing the security required by law, be trustee of such estate for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation and its stockholders, and have all the power conferred by law upon trustees to whom assignments are made for the benefit of creditors."

These considerations would seem to bring a dissolution receiver of a corporation within the class of those receivers so-called, who are in reality assignees, and under the strictly logical doctrine which might be deducted from the two cases above discussed, would excuse him from the duty of listing the assets in his possession for taxation. However, in the case of In re Patent Wood Keg Co. 13 N. P. n. s., 321, the contrary has been held by Judge Dickson of the Hamilton county common pleas court. Judge Dickson finds obvious difficulty in reconciling his decision with the Hagerty case. I confess that I experienced the same difficulty. I learn that the Patent Wood Keg Co. case was not taken to a higher court. Being disposed, however, to follow the decisions of our courts wherever possible, and finding that the case last cited was decided in full view of the two supreme court decisions already discussed I hold in accordance therewith, that a winding up receiver of a corporation, appointed in dissolution proceedings, is required to list the property in their possession for taxation.

I know of no case of corporate receivership in which the functions of the receiver fall more clearly within the rule of McNeill vs. Hagerty, supra, than such a receiver as was involved in the Patent Wood Keg Co. case. If such a receiver must list for taxation then, in my opinion, every receiver of a corporation, whatever be the status of the receivership, is obliged to list the assets in his hands for taxation.

6. Insofar as your question relates to the duty of an assignee of a corporation whose affairs are being wound up under order of court, it seems to me that the case of McNeill vs. Hagerty, supra, furnishes an explicit answer to the effect that such an assignee is not required to list the assets in his possession for taxation.

In passing, I beg leave to point out a consideration which is not directly involved in answer to your questions, viz., that under the first part of section 5370, General Code, every person is required to return all "moneys invested, loaned or otherwise controlled by him * * * on account of any other person or persons, company or corporation." This part of the section is not, in my opinion applicable to the case of any officer of a court, or any one acting under orders of a court, because it is essential to its application that the moneys be invested, loaned or otherwise controlled by the person required to list: whereas an assignee, for example, of the kind involved in the case of McNeill vs. Hagerty, supra, possesses on his own part no "control" whatever over the funds in his possession except that of custody, subject to the order of the court.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLE XII, SECTION 11 OF THE CONSTITUTION AS APPLIED TO BONDS ISSUED BY A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

1. Article XII, section 11 of the constitution applies to bonds issued by a municipal corporation, in anticipation of a special assessment, and requires the inclusion in the bond issuing ordinance of a provision for the annual levy and collection of taxes on the general duplicate sufficient to pay the interest and create the necessary sinking fund for the retirement of such bonds in the event and to the extent that the assessments themselves, balances, premiums, etc., available for payment of interest and creation of a sinking fund are insufficient for such purposes.

2. There being no necessity for any new relation between the assessing ordinance and the bond issuing ordinance under article XII, section 11 of the constitution, it is not necessary because of that provision or for any other reason to have the assessing ordinance published.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of January 6th, in which you submit for my opinion what amount, inferentially at least, to two questions, viz.:

> "1. How is the self-executing provision of article XII, section 11 of the constitution, as amended, to be applied when bonds are issued by a municipal corporation in anticipation of the collection of special assessments?
> "2. Assuming that the assessing ordinance must contain a provision for the levying of a general tax, sufficient for the purpose of the bond issue, in the event of deficit in the collection of special assessments, would such a requirement make necessary the publication of such assessing ordinance?"

Article XII, section 11 of the constitution, as amended provides as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The supreme court in the recently decided case of Link vs. Karb, so far interpreted this provision as to establish the following conclusions:

1. The section is self-executing and requires no legislation by the general assembly or the people of the state.

2. Its effect is to require the borrowing authorities to incorporate in the measure authorizing the issuance of bonds a provision substantially in the language of the constitution itself and not necessarily more detailed than such language.

3. Such provision cannot be adopted by the borrowing authority subsequently to the authorization of the issuance of bonds and before the actual incurring of the indebtedness, by the issuance and sale of bonds.

All of these conclusions are quite clearly established in the syllabus and opinion of the above cited case. The supreme court, in the case cited, did not have before it any question respecting the application of the constitution to the issuance of bonds in anticipation of special assessments; nor in fact did the court consider or pass upon in the syllabus or opinion the question as to how the constitution is to be applied to the issuance of bonds to be paid for from any sources of revenue other than general taxation.

The first question, subsidiary to your general questions, which is encountered then, is as to whether, in the event special assessments are levied and bonds issued in anticipation thereof, the levy of the assessment constitutes "provision for the annual levy and collection by taxation of a sufficient amount," etc., within the meaning of the constitution?

This question suggests other questions even more fundamental: Thus, does the constitutional provision apply at all when bonds are issued in anticipation of specific revenues—either taxes or assessments—and it is apparent from the statutes that the money to pay the bonds is to be limited to such revenues; i. e., that the bonds are really not general indebtedness of the subdivision but rather evidences of indebtedness to which specific revenues only are pledged? Or has the constitutional amendment the effect of rendering such statutes (of which there are several) unconstitutional?

Fortunately this question which is very difficult of solution, and upon which the case of Link vs. Karb sheds no light whatever, is not necessarily involved in answering your specific question.

There is no doubt whatever in any mind that the constitutional provision applies to the issuance of all bonds which are an "indebtedness of a political subdivision," to use the language of the section. I observe a wide distinction between bonds of the kind just referred to, viz., those, the security for which, consists of special revenues, and bonds for the payment of which the subdivision, as such, is primarily or ultimately liable, so that the holder of the bonds upon default is entitled to a judgment which can be enforced against the tax duplicate of the subdivision. The one class might correctly be deemed an indebtedness of a special taxing district or assessing district, as distinguished from an indebtedness of a political subdivision; the other is, in the most exact sense an indebtedness of the subdivision itself.

I have had occasion to consider the application of the constitutional amendment to bonds of the first class in an opinion to Hon. William H. Vodrey, prosecuting attorney of Columbiana county, a copy of which I think you have. I did not reach any definite conclusion therein as to the application of the constitution to such bonds, the question not being exactly material to the query submitted. However, I am satisfied, as I have already stated, that questions like that involved in the opinion referred to are distinguishable from the one which you submit. Bonds issued by municipal corporations in anticipation of special assessments constitute a general obligation of the municipality for the payment of which it is answerable as a "political subdivision." The purpose of making street improvements and other improvements, the cost of which is to be partly charged upon owners of specially benefited property on the part of a municipal corporation, may be characterized as a municipal function in the most exact sense. The municipality relies for its revenue upon the assessments which it levies, but those who deal with it in making the improvement, i. e., those to whom it becomes indebted on that behalf, such as the contractors on the one hand, and those who lend it money for such a purpose on the other hand, are not obliged to rely exclusively upon such sources of revenue. The rule as I have stated it, is not, perhaps, a universal one, but it certainly obtains in Ohio.

Many statutes might be cited and commented upon to establish this conclusion. The following, however, will be sufficient for all purposes:

> "Section 3914. Municipal corporations may issue bonds in anticipation of special assessments. Such bonds may be in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement for which the assessments are levied. In the issuance and sale of such bonds the municipality shall be governed by all restrictions and limitations with respect to the issuance and sale of other bonds, and the assessments as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of such bonds."

This section, it will be observed, imposes upon the issuance and sale of special assessment bonds all the restrictions and limitations which govern municipalities in the issuance and sale of other bonds. While it provides that the assessment as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of the bonds it does not limit the means of liquidation to the assessments.

Section 3918, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Bonds issued under authority of this chapter shall express upon their face the purpose for which they were issued, and under what ordinance."

Compliance with this section notifies the holder of the bond, of course, that it is issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments; but of itself it is insufficient to establish the conclusion that the bondholder's exclusive remedy for the enforcement of his claim is the collection of such assessments.

Section 3932, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Premiums and accrued interest received by the corporation from a sale of its bonds shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be by them applied on the bonded debt and interest account of the corporation, but the premiums and accrued interest upon bonds issued for special assessments shall be applied to by the trustees of the sinking fund to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds and no other."

The latter portion of this section, insofar as it requires a specific application of the premium and accrued interest received by the corporation from the sale of special assessment bonds, tends, perhaps, to support the view that the bonds are not to be treated as general obligations of the corporation, but it is not of itself sufficient to establish such a conclusion.

Section 3804, General Code is as follows:

> "When any unexpended balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which bonds are still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied to the payment of the bonds."

I quote this section merely to complete the legislative idea as to the sources of revenue for the payment of special assessment bonds, although the section itself imposes no different rule with respect to assessment bonds than is laid down for all other bonds.

Section 4506, General Code, is as follows:

> "Municipal corporations having outstanding bonds or funded debts shall, through their councils and in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, levy and collect annually a tax upon all the real and personal property in the corporation sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases, and the taxes so raised shall be used for no other purpose whatever."

Section 4512, General Code, is as follows:

"Upon demand of the board, the city auditor or village clerk, shall report to it balances belonging to the city or village, to the credit of the sinking fund, interest acounts, or for any bonds issued for or by the corporation, and all officers or persons having them shall immediately pay them over to the trustees of the sinking fund, who shall deposit them in such place or places as the majority of such board shall select."

Section 4517, General Code provides as follows:

"The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

These sections relating to the powers and duties of the trustees of the sinking fund show conclusively that it is the duty of such trustees to provide absolutely for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation. The necessary inference from these provisions is that if the special revenues applicable to the payment of any bonds and which are to be turned over to the sinking fund trustees are not sufficient for their sinking fund purposes the deficiency shall be made up by the general tax levy for sinking fund purposes, which the sinking fund trustees are authorized and directed to make.

In this connection I mention the fact that in Link vs. Karb, supra, Judge Donahue delivering the opinion of the supreme court said that the municipal sinking fund statutes are consistent with article XII, section 11 of the constitution.

If it were not sufficiently apparent from the statutes that they not only authorize but require the levying of a general tax sufficient in amount to provide for the interest and sinking fund requirements of special assessment bonds issued by a municipal corporation in the event that the assessments themselves together with the other special revenues applicable thereto, are insufficient for such purposes. The principles laid down in State vs. Commissioners 37 O. S., 597, and Chamberlain vs. Cleveland 34 O. S., 551, would establish such a conclusion.

Now from the nature of the constitutional provision itself and in the light of the decision in Link vs. Karb, it seems to me that the following principle may be deduced:

Whenever the law of the state authorizes the levy of a general tax in a political subdivision for the payment of bonds issued by or on behalf of such subdivision the constitution compels such a tax to be provided for in the legislation under which the indebtedness is incurred.

That is to say, if a general tax levy is authorized the indebtedness is in the exact sense that of the political subdivision. To all such indebtedness original or renewal when bonded, the constitution applies, and requires provision for the taxes which shall meet the obligation to be made in the legislation under which the indebtedness is incurred.

A paraphrase or corollary to the above stated principle may be stated thus:

The constitutional requirement is that the exercise of the taxing power of the subdivision, to the extent that it is to be exercised in the premises be provided for at the time mentioned in the section. That is to say, I do not believe that the provisions of the constitution are to be so interpreted as to require bonds to the payment of which special revenues are applicable, to be provided for in the first instance by tax levies sufficient to take care of the entire sinking fund and interest requirements thereof. This would necessitate a double exercise of the taxing and assessing power so as to leave at the end of the process an unexpended balance of public funds for which the law provides no use. Furthermore, such an interpretation would repeal by implication that provision of section 3914, supra, which is to the effect that the assessments as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of the bonds. Such an interpretation would not, I think, be viewed with favor nor do I think any such hard and fast rendition of the language "by taxation an amount sufficient" is to be given thereto. On the contrary, I do think, as I have already indicated that the exercise of the taxing power which the constitution requires to be provided for is precisely that exercise thereof which in the nature of the case, under the statutes authorizing the incurring of the bond indebtedness, must be otherwise asserted by the political subdivision and no other.

Applying this principle to the case at hand it appears that under the sinking fund statutes the exercise of the taxing power of the municipality, which is required, is that which the constitution contemplates, viz., the levying of sufficient taxes to meet the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bond issue to the extent that such requirements are not met by the special revenues applicable to the payment of bonds. Inasmuch as the constitutional provision as interpreted in Link vs. Karb, is to require that the exercise of this power be provided for in the legislation under which the indebtedness is incurred it is in my judgment, sufficient if the ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds contain a requirement to this effect. The question which you ask necessitates consideration of the relation of the assessing power to the taxing power. If "provision for a sufficient amount"—language of the constitution—contemplates the enactment of "legislation" (in the constitutional sense) respecting all revenues which are to be applied to the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bonds then it would follow that the assessment would have to be provided for in the same "legislation" in which the provision for the levy of taxes must be included.

Putting it in another way, if special assessments constitute "taxation" within the meaning of the constitution, then "provision" for such assessments must be made at the same time and in the same place with the provision for the levy of the tax. Stated still more concretely, such a view would necessitate the combining of the assessing ordinance and the ordinance providing for the issuance of the bonds, the supreme court having held that the bond issuing ordinance must contain the tax levy provision.

I have rejected this view for the reason that the constitution deals solely with the taxing power and its provisions are not by forced interpretation to be extended so as to require municipal legislation with reference to special sources of revenue. For example, the Municipal Code requires certain waterworks revenues to be applied to bonds issued for the purpose of constructing or enlarging a waterworks plant. The application of such revenues could in no sense be regarded as taxation and I do not believe that the makers of the constitution intended that when waterworks bonds are issued the ordinance authorizing them should make provision for the application of such revenues. So, while the power of assessment is sometimes regarded as a branch of the taxing power, though inaccurately I do not believe that such assessment constitutes "taxation" within the meaning of the constitution; and I am of the opinion that the word "taxation," as used in the constitution, is to be limited to its exact and technical sense, viz., a general levy on all the taxable property of the subdivision or some other exercise of its general taxing power as distinguished from its power to levy exactions upon limited territory or otherwise to create revenues applicable to the payment of the bonds.

I reach the conclusion, therefore, that the assessing ordinance bears no necessary relation to the ordinance providing for the issuance of bonds, by reason of the provisions of article XII, section 11 of the constitution; that the section does not require the assessment to be levied prior to or at the time bonds issued in anticipation of its collection are authorized; and that the section is satisfied if the sinking fund tax levy, which is authorized by statute to be made for the purpose of providing for the bonds in the event and to the extent that the special revenues applicable thereto prove insufficient, "is provided for" in the bond issuing ordinance.

Having considered in connection with your question communications received from the solicitor of Fostoria and from Messrs. Peck, Shaffer & Peck, attorneys of Cincinnati, in which inquiry was made as to the proper form of the provision, such as is required by the section of the constitution above cited, I beg leave to submit for the guidance of those who are interested therein, my judgment as to such form:

> "There shall be levied and collected annually, during the period for which said bonds are to run, by taxation on all taxable property on the tax duplicate of the city of _____, an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon as herein provided, and to provide a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at maturity; provided that the amount of such annual levy shall be such as to provide for and make up any deficiency in the revenues of said city available for the payment of such interest and the creation of such sinking fund, from the collection of said special assessment or any special assessment hereafter levied in lieu thereof, or otherwise; and the proper taxing authorities shall compute the amount of such general tax levies and certify the same for collection as other taxes are certified and collected."

Of course this form is suggestive merely, but it appears to me that the substance of it should be in every ordinance issuing bonds in anticipation of the collection of special assessments by a municipal corporation.

In direct answer to the first question as I have phrased it, I beg to state that article XII, section 11 of the constitution does not, in my opinion, in any way affect the form of assessing ordinances, nor does it require such an ordinance to be passed before, or together with, that authorizing the issuance of special assessment bonds.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion the adoption of article XII, section 11 has not effected any change in the law relative to the necessity for publishing the assessment ordinance.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INCUMBENTS—MAYOR—TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT—STREET COMMISSIONER—MARSHAL—INCUMBENCY.

1. A mayor cannot make a temporary appointment of a street commissioner.

2. Confirmation by council is an essential element of the appointment, under section 4363, and until appointment and until confirmation, a person appointed by the mayor cannot assume office.

3. A street commission temporarily appointed, since the appointment is invalid, will not hold until a successor is appointed and qualified.

4. A mayor has no power arbitrarily to remove a street commissioner from office, and can only prefer charges under section 4263, to be heard by council under section 4264.

5. Under sections 4363 to 4365, General Code, confirmation of council being necessary to the appointment of a street commissioner, it can, by refusing to confirm, keep the person so appointed by the mayor from serving.

6. Under section 4363, the marshal is made eligible to the appointment of street commissioner, and council is without power to combine the two offices into one. It is the prerogative of the mayor to appoint and of council to affirm.

7. The appointment of a marshal to the office of street commissioner by the mayor is necessary notwithstanding that the incumbent of said office is also to hold the office of street commissioner.

8. Under section 4669, a person appointed to the office of street commissioner must before entering upon his duties give bond in the amount prescribed by ordinance of council; if such person takes office before giving bond, the incumbency is illegal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. W. J. TOSSELL, Solicitor, Village of New London, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 12th, you requested the opinion of this department upon the following questions:

"(1) Has a village council under section 4216, General Code, at a called meeting to organize and confirm the mayor's appointments, power to confirm the temporary appointment of the marshal as street commissioner (in this case for a month)?

"(2) Is confirmation by the council a prerequisite to the appointment and 'qualification' of such officer under section 4363, General Code?

"(3) Does a street commissioner temporarily appointed and confirmed for a month hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified?

"(4) Has the mayor power, arbitrarily and without cause on the part of a street commissioner, to remove him from office and appoint his successor to fill, without confirmation by the council the vacancy thus caused?

"(5) Do sections 4363 to 4365 make the office of street commissioner the particular agent of the council rather than that of the mayor, and as such give the council in effect a veto power on the mayor's appointment?

"(6) Has a village council power under the last clause of section 4363, to combine the office of marshal and street commissioner, thereby excluding appointment of a street commissioner by the mayor?

"(7) Given the custom of combining the offices of marshal and street commissioner, in the person of the marshal, the election of the marshal, upon a general and popular understanding of the combination of such offices, and the acceptance of his candidacy with such understanding by the marshal elected; is an appointment of the marshal, by the mayor, as street commissioner, necessary?

"(8) Does failure of a marshal so elected, having given bond and qualified as marshal, to give bond as street commissioner for more than a month after his appointment, confirmation and service as such, affect his rights to hold such office until his successor is appointed and qualified?

"(9) Given a marshal elected as such and to serve as street commissioner, under the respective salaries of ten and fifty dollars per month, provided by ordinance, and no provision made for other compensation, his appointment for a month, refusal of the council to confirm the appointment of another person as street commissioner, can the mayor legally appoint the latter, after such refusal to confirm, to serve temporarily?

"(10) Should the mayor, in the first instance, appoint a commissioner for less than a year?"

The sections of the statutes, cited by you, provide:

"Section 4216. At the first meeting in January of each year, the council shall immediately proceed to elect a president pro tem. from their own number, who shall serve until the first meeting of the council in January next after his election. From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council. When the mayor is absent from the village or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president pro tem. of council becomes acting mayor, and shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as the mayor.

"Section 4363. The street commissioner shall be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council for a term of one year, and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. Vacancies in the office of street commissioner shall be filled by the mayor for the unexpired term. In any village the marshal shall be eligible to appointment as street commissioner.

"Section 4364. Under the direction of council, the street commissoner, or an engineer, when one is so provided by council, shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wards, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, sidewalks, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, streams and water courses. Such commissioner or engineer shall also supervise the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of all public places, and shall perform such other duties consistent with the nature of his office as council may require.

"Section 4365. Such street commissioner or engineer shall have such assistants as council may provide, who shall be employed by the street commissioner and shall serve for such time and for such compensation as is fixed by council."

Section 4363 fixes the term of a street commissioner at one year and until his successor is elected and qualified.

As there is no statutory authority for the making of temporary appointments to this office, I am of the opinion that the mayor has no power to make and council has no power to confirm an appointment for a period of time less than the term fixed by the statute, and a temporary appointment, even if made and confirmed, would be of no effect. The council has no power of appointment in such case; it can only confirm the appointment made by the mayor.

The power of council to appoint employes of the village, under section 4216, does not give to council the power to appoint a street commissioner, because his appointment is specifically provided for by section 4363.

The answer to this question also answers the ninth and tenth questions.

(2) Confirmation by council is, by the express and positive provisions of section 4363, made a prerequisite to the qualification of a street commissioner. Without the favorable action of council, a person appointed by the mayor to the office of street commissioner could not assume the office.

(3) From the answer given to your first question it necessarily follows that a person appointed to the office of street commissioner for one month, or for any other time short of the statutory term, does not hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified. Such an appointment, as heretofore stated, would be null and void.

(4) The mayor, by virtue of section 4263, may file written charges with council against an officer or head of a department who "has been guilty, in the performance of an official duty, of bribery, misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, misconduct in office, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality or habitual drunkenness," when the removal of such officer is not otherwise provided for.

Section 4263 provides that such charges shall be heard by the council, and that the judgment of council shall be final; but before any officer or head of a department can be removed from office, two-thirds of all the members elected to council must vote in favor of such removal. The removal of a street commissioner from office is not otherwise provided for, and, therefore, he can be removed only by council in accordance with the provisions of section 4263 and 4264.

The mayor has no legal right or authority to remove a street commissioner for cause or otherwise, not to appoint a successor except when the office is legally vacant. The arbitrary removal of a street commissioner, by the mayor, would not create a legal vacancy in the office that the mayor could fill under section 4363.

(5) Section 4364 requires of the street commissioner, the performance of certain well defined duties, under the direction of council. The council, not only in effect but in fact has a veto power over the mayor's appointment to the office of street commissioner.

(6) Under the last clause of section 4363, the marshal is made eligible to appointment to the office of street commissioner, but council is without any power to combine the two offices into one; it is the prerogative of the mayor to appoint and of the council to confirm. An ordinance which purports to combine these two offices so as to deprive the mayor of his power to appoint a street commissioner, is void.

(7) An appointment of the marshal to the office of street commissioner by the mayor is necessary, notwithstanding the acceptance of the office of marshal with the understanding that the incumbent of said office is also to hold the office of street commissioner. Popular understanding and custom will not suffice to change the statutes.

(8) Section 4667, General Code, provides that the bonds of municipal officers, except as otherwise provided, shall be in such sum as council, by ordinance, may prescribe and shall be subject to the approval of the mayor. The amount of bond of a street commissioner is not "otherwise provided" for by statute; consequently section 4667 applies as to the amount of such bond. Your letter does not cover the point as to whether the village of New London has an ordinance prescribing the amount of the bond to be given by the street commissioner, but I will assume that such an ordinance is in force.

Section 4669, General Code, provides in part:

> "Each officer required by law or ordinance to give bond shall do so before entering upon the duties of the office, except as otherwise provided in this title. * * *"

I am of the opinion that before a person appointed to the office of street commissioner can enter upon his duties, he must give bond in an amount prescribed by ordinance of council. If he takes possession of the office without giving such bond, his incumbency is illegal and he has no right to continue to exercise the functions of the office until a successor is regularly appointed and qualified.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION—DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS AND THEIR CLERKS.

Neither the deputy state supervisors of elections nor their clerks are entitled to compensation for holding special elections, the compensation fixed by section 4822 being for all services required to be performed by them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. I. H. BLYTHE, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrolton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of April 28, 1914, is received is which you inquire:

> "The Carrolton village school directors passed a resolution to submit the question of the issuing of bonds of the village school district in the sum of $12,000.00 to the voters of said district to be voted on on the 13th day of April, 1914, at a special election. And in accordance with the statute certified their resolution to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections.
> "The deputy state supervisors of elections, in compliance with said notice, held a special election on the question of issuing the bonds, on the 13th day of April, 1914.
> "The deputy state supervisors of elections propounded the question to me whether they, together with their clerk, were entitled to, and could collect, compensation for holding said special election."

Section 4822, General Code, fixes the compensation to be paid the members and clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections. This sections reads:

> "Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and the clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

This section does not provide that the compensation provided for therein shall be paid only for services in conducting general elections. It fixes a yearly compensation based upon so much per precinct for their services in performing the duties required of them in conducting elections.

The statutes do not authorize an additional compensation for conducting special elections, and without such authority no such additional compensation can be paid.

Therefore, the members and clerks of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections are not entitled to any additional compensation for conducting a special election.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SECTION 4505, GENERAL CODE, NOT REPEALED.

Section 4505, General Code, was not repealed by implication and is not inconsistent with the state civil service law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 22, 1914, the Hon. Daniel P. Conway, assistant city solicitor of Youngstown, Ohio, inquires:

> "Whether or not section 4505, General Code, is inconsistent with the provisions of the act as enacted in 103 Ohio Laws, 698, or whether it is repealed by implication."

This department in an opinion addressed to you has held that section 4505, General Code, was not specifically repealed by the new civil service act.

Section 4505, General Code, provides:

> "Any person in the police or fire department who is suspended, reduced in rank or dismissed from the department by the director of public safety may appeal from the decision of such officer to the civil service commission within ten days from and after the date of such suspension, reduction or dismissal, in which event said director shall, upon notice from the commission of such appeal, forthwith transmit to the commission a copy of the charges and proceedings thereunder, and the commission shall hear such appeal within ten days from and after the filing of the same with it, and may affirm, disaffirm or modify the judgment of the director of public safety, and its judgment in the matter shall be final. The commission, in all hearings or appeals before it, shall have the same powers to administer oaths and to secure the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers as are conferred in this chapter upon the mayor."

This section provides for an appeal to the civil service commission in case of a discharge, suspension or reduction of any person in the police or fire department.

Section 2 of the new civil service act, section 486-2, General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * and on and after January 1, 1914, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service under the government of this state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

Section 17 of this act, section 486-17, General Code, provides for reductions, suspensions and removals, as follows:

> "No person shall be discharged from the classified service reduced in pay or position, laid off, suspended or otherwise discriminated against by the appointing officer for religious or political reasons. In all cases of discharge, lay off, reduction or suspension of a subordinate, whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise, the appointing officer shall furnish the subordinate discharged, laid off, reduced, or suspended with a copy of the order of discharge, lay off, reduction, or suspension, and his reasons for the same, and give such subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. Such order together with the explanation, if any, of the subordinate shall be filed with the commission.
> "Nothing in this act shall limit the power of an officer to suspend without pay, for purposes of discipline a subordinate for a reasonable period, not exceeding thirty days; provided, however, that successive suspensions shall not be allowed."

Section 19 of the act, section 486-19, General Code, provides in part:

> "The mayor shall have the exclusive right to suspend the chief of the police department or the chief of the fire department for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority or for any other reasonable and just cause. If either the chief of police or chief of the fire department is so suspended the mayor forthwith shall certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the civil service commission, who within five days from the date of receipt of such notice shall proceed to hear such charges and render judgment thereon, which shall be final."

This part of section 19 was taken verbatim from the old municipal civil service law. It applies only to the positions of chief of police and chief of the fire department.

Section 4505, General Code, provides for a hearing before the civil service commission. The new act does not provide for an appeal or hearing, except as to the positions of chief of police and chief of the fire department, and it does not prohibit such a hearing.

The provisions of section 4505, General Code, may be complied with and followed without conflicting with any of the provisions of the new civil service act, and it is not, therefore, inconsistent, with any of the provisions of the new civil service act.

Section 4505 General Code, is not repealed by implication.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTHORITY OF BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION TO ADOPT RULES RELATIVE TO PAROLING PRISONERS FROM THE OHIO PENITENTIARY.

The board of administration has authority to adopt rules relative to the time of making application for paroles of those serving indeterminate sentences in the Ohio penitentiary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—We have your letter of May 5, 1914, as follows:

"I am directed by the board of administration to request your opinion as to whether or not they have the authority to adopt the following rules for prisoners serving an indeterminate sentence in the Ohio penitentiary.

"Under the indeterminate sentence law, first offenders, that is, those who have not been convicted of a felony or served a term in a penal institution, may make application for parole at the expiration of the minimum time fixed by law for the offense for which they were committed; but no application for parole will be considered until the applicant has served twelve full months.

"All applications for parole must be advertised in accordance with the provisions of the law, and the full minimum must have been served prior to the meeting at which the application for parole is to be heard.

"No prisoner in the Ohio penitentiary committed under the indeterminate sentence law, except a first offender, is eligible for parole. Others than first offenders who have been committed under the indeterminate sentence law must serve the maximum time, unless sooner released by the Ohio board of administration after a hearing. (Section 2160, General Code).

"A prisoner to be eligible for a hearing for release must have a perfect record and be recommended by the warden and chaplin.

"On recommendation, a hearing for release will be granted to second offender after serving twice the minimum; to third offenders after serving three times the minimum; to fourth offenders after serving four times the minimum for the offense for which they were committed."

In reply to your letter, it is my opinion that your board has the authority to adopt the rules set forth therein.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AMENDING BONDS FOR SEWERAGE SYSTEM—ENACTING ORDINANCE ON SAME—BOND ISSUE.

1. If council desires to amend plans for a sewerage system after the various ordinances and resolutions leading up to the making of the contract for the improvement have been enacted, the safer plan would be to begin all over again.

2. Council may proceed with necessary legislation leading up to an election to authorize the issuing of bonds to cover the share of the village in the cost of the improvement and also the election thereon at the same time that it is carrying on the election for the improvement itself.

3. If the people vote for the bonds in any one year, there is no reason why the bonds should not be issued in the following year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. CHARLES L. FLORY, Solicitor of Granville, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 4, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "During the year 1913, the village council passed the necessary legislation for the installing of a general sewerage system, but for various reasons the contract was not let. Including the plans for the system was a sewerage disposal plant. It will be necessary to have an election to authorize the issuing of bonds to cover the share of the village in the cost of the improvement. It is now desired to alter the plans, adopted and approved by resolution of the council, by reducing the size of the disposal plant, and changing the location of the same.
> "1. May the council now amend the adopted plans, in the respect above mentioned, without again enacting all the various resolutions and ordinances leading up to the making of the contract for the improvement? In other words, will it be necessary to alter the plans and then adopt the resolutions of necessity and ordinance to proceed, etc., or may the already existing legislation stand with an ordinance modifying, in the respect mentioned, the adopted plans?
> "2. May the council proceed with the necessary legislation leading up to the election, also the election, on the question of issuing the bonds at the same time that it is carrying on the legislation for the improvement itself?
> "3. If the people vote in the year 1914 to issue such bonds, may such bonds, although thus authorized in 1914, be actually issued and sold in the year 1915?
> "4. May the cost of the sewage disposal plant be included in the village's share of the cost of the improvement to be paid for by general taxation?"

In answer to your first question, if I understand your statement the change of location and size of the disposal plant is a substantial and material change from the original plans and specifications of the system, and, to my mind, it would be much safer and better to commence anew and re-enact all legislation necessary to the installation of the system, than to attempt to proceed by amendment and modification of past legislation.

In answer to your second question, I desire to say that I can see no reason why legislation going to the question of issuing bonds and for an election upon the subject may not proceed at the same time with the preliminary legislation inaugurating the improvement, but of course no contract might be entered into until after the bonds had been sold so that sections 3806-3810 might not be violated.

In answer to your third question, I can see no reason why, if the people vote in favor of the issuing of bonds in the year 1914, they may not be so issued and sold in the year 1915. In fact, I think an examination into the history of like transactions will find that it has been a very common occurrence to authorize bonds in the fall of one year and issue and sell them in the winter or spring of the year following.

Assuming from your letter that the sewer is being constructed on the assessment plan, that the village is paying at least 1/50 and the cost of intersections under section 3820, I desire to say: In Close vs. Parker, 11 C. C., n. s., 85 it is held that the provisions as to payment of "cost of intersections" has no application to the crossing of a street by a sewer for purposes of local sanitary drainage, for which reason, and because assessments are against abutting owners, and the further fact that a disposal plant is not an improvement affecting abutters in any way different from the general public, I make no specific answer to your fourth question, but will do so if you so request after considering Close vs. Parker, supra, and the fact that it has been affirmed by the supreme court without opinion, 79 O. S., 444.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE OIL INSPECTOR—CERTIFICATE TO BE PLACED ON THE WAGON FROM WHICH THE OIL IS SOLD.

Section 862, General Code, should be read as an exception to section 863, therefore, a wagon bearing a certificate issued by the state inspector of oils or his deputy would cover all the oil sold from the wagon, whether the same be contained in one large tank or in gallon cans.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM F. MASON, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 23, 1914, submitting substantially the following:

> "The Standard Oil Company in Cleveland, has tank wagons which deliver oil to consumers about the city. A duplicate certificate is placed on these wagons under section 862 of the General Code, covering the contents of the tank wagon and guaranteeing to all consumers that the oil purchased from the wagon has been taken from a storage tank which was duly inspected. Now the Standard Oil Company also delivers oil to consumers in wagons loaded with gallon cans which have been filled from the storage tank. These cans are left with the consumer. The wagons bear a certificate to the effect that the oil on the wagon has been taken from a storage tank which was duly inspected. Is this sufficient or must each of these gallon cans also bear a certificate under section 863? The practice has been to make the one certificate on the wagon cover the contents of all the gallon cans."

Section 862 of the General Code reads:

"Wagons from which oil intended for consumption for illuminating purposes within this state is delivered to consumers or dealers, shall bear a certificate in duplicate with that issued by the inspector or his deputy, covering the contents of the car last emptied into the storage or receiving tank from which such wagon was filled. Such duplicate certificate shall be issued without additional fee. Whoever, being a driver of such wagon, violates this provision shall be fined ten dollars for each day of such violation."

Section 863 reads:

"Barrels or packages filled from such storage or receiving tank with oil intended for illuminating purposes within this state shall be branded by the inspector or his deputy without additional fee. Whoever offers for sale to dealers or consumers for illuminating purposes within this state such oil not so branded, shall be fined ten dollars."

While section 863 provides that a package must bear a certificate of inspection and while the word "package" as used in this section is broad enough to include "cans," yet I do not believe that section 863 applies to oil sold from the wagon. On the contrary, to my mind section 862 must be read as an exception to section 863 and covers all oil sold from wagons, whether the wagon carries but one large tank or a number of smaller receptacles, such as gallon cans. The oil on the wagon in either case is taken from the storage tank and the duplicate certificate placed on the wagon covers all the oil so transferred from the tank to the wagon. This certificate is a guarantee to all who purchase from the wagon that all the oil sold therefrom has been duly inspected and answers fully the purpose of the statute.

I am therefore of the opinion that when the wagon from which the gallon cans are sold bears a certificate, as provided by section 862, it is not necessary that each gallon can be labeled with such certificate.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING—THE WORD "DOCUMENT" AS USED IN SECTION 749, GENERAL CODE, DEFINED—PRESERVATION OF DOCUMENTS IN THE OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

The word "document" used in section 749, General Code, will not include all pieces of printing done for the several departments in the state, but only such as would ordinarily and generally be considered as documents. The words "or items" left out in the codification of section 312, Revised Statues, should be read into said section. The supervisor of public printing should audit all accounts of both documents and items, but he should only preserve documents in his office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. FRANK HARPER, Supervisor of Public Printing, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 22, 1914, as follows:

> "Will you please render this department an opinion as to the scope of the word 'document' as used in the second sentence of section 749, Page & Adams Annotated Ohio General Code—'A copy of each document with the cost endorsed on it shall be filed and preserved in his office.' Does the word 'document' in the section mentioned include all pieces of printing done for the several departments of the state, such as cards, letter heads, blanks, etc., or is 'document' a distinct class? What I desire to know is whether a copy of each piece of printing done for the departments shall be filed and preserved in this office?"

Section 749, General Code, reads:

> "The supervisor of public printing shall audit the accounts for printing and binding and keep a record of the cost thereof, the amount of paper used, and the expense of each document. A copy of each document with the cost indorsed on it shall be filed and preserved in his office."

The New Standard Dictionary gives the following definition of the word "document:"

> "A manuscript or piece of printed matter regarded as conveying information or evidence; as legal or political documents."

To read this definition of the word "document" into section 749, would compel the conclusion that the state printer would not only be relieved of the task of filing letter heads, blanks, cards and other small items of printing, but also of the duty of auditing and keeping a record of the cost of printing them. This conclusion is inconsistent with the other provisions of the statute, concerning the duty of the superintendent of printing and beclouds the wording of the section with such doubt as to justify our resorting to the Revised Statutes for assistance in arriving at the proper construction of the section before us.

Section 749 of the General Code, was formerly part of section 312 and reads in part:

> "He shall audit all accounts for printing and binding and keep a record of the cost of printing and binding, the amount of paper used, and the entire expense of each document or item; and a copy of each document shall be duly filed and preserved by him with the cost endorsed upon it."

From a reading of this section of the Revised Statutes, it is clear that under that section it was the duty of the state printer to keep a record of the entire expense of each "document" or "item" printed, but to file and preserve only the "documents." In other words, the statute then did not oblige him to burden his files with a copy of every letter head, blank, card or other small item printed, and I do not think that the omission of the word "item" from the statute by the codifying commission is such a change as to indicate a legislative intention of effecting a change of meaning, nor does it make the present language of the statute so read as to plainly require such change of construction to be made. It follows then that section 749 of the General Code must receive the same construction as would have been placed upon the former section before revision, and it is therefore my opinion that it is your duty to file and preserve only such printed matter as would come within the ordinary and generally accepted definition of the word "document," such as the one above quoted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—WHEN STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER MAY USE ANNUAL HALF-MILL TAX LEVIED FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

The state highway commissioner may, after the annual half-mill tax has been levied and in process of collection, enter into contracts for road improvements for the total amount that will become available from the proceeds of such levy for the year without waiting until all of said money is in the treasury. He should exercise great care that contracts are not let for an amount in excess of the sum that will come into the treasury from this source.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. JAMES R. MARKER, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 30th, wherein you state:

"Your interpretation and opinion is respectfully asked in re section 6859-2 and section 1222 of the General Code.

"After the collection of the taxes and the settlement by the respective counties with the state auditor, in compliance with the law governing the same, that officer certifies to this department, a lump sum, three-fourths of the half-mill levy, which he terms, 'the state road building fund.' Whereupon, we divide this gross sum by eighty-eight, the number of counties in the state, and regard such amount as set aside for use in each county.

"Some of the counties, which are at times delinquent, do not make use of this particular allotment during the year in which it is appropriated; while other counties wish to anticipate the collection of the June taxes, and enter into contracts for road improvement.

"Would it be proper for this department to contract for the aggregate amount of money that has been levied for the entire calendar year to construct roads, while the last half of such levy is in the process of collection, taking into account the fact that such amount has been levied and placed on the tax list and is due the state from the respective counties?

"In other words, this department desires to enter into contracts at present, the money to pay same being due the state, and which will be paid into the state treasury immediately following the August settlement."

Section 6859-2 as enacted in 1913 (103 O. L., p. 155) provides:

"Seventy-five per cent. of all money paid into the treasury of the state by reason of said levy shall be applied to the maintenance of the state highway department and for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of an intercounty system of highways in the state, in the manner designated in the act of the general assembly, entitled, 'An act creating a state highway department, defining the duties thereof, and providing aid in the construction and maintenance of highways, and to repeal certain sections of the General Code,' approved June 9, 1911 (102 O. L., pages 333-349), and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto."

Section 1222, as amended, (103 O. L., p. 458) provides:

"Moneys appropriated by the state for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this chapter, shall not be used in any manner or for any purpose, except as provided herein. Moneys so appropriated shall be equally divided among the counties of the state, except such moneys as are appropriated for the use of the department and for surveys, plans and estimates, and the maintenance and repair of state highways."

Section 6859-2 above quoted is incorporated in what is popularly termed the Hite act. Section 1 of that act provides for the levy of "a tax of one-half of one mill on all the taxable property within the state, to be collected as are other taxes due the state and the proceeds of which shall constitute the state highway improvement fund."

Section 3 provides for the setting aside of twenty-five per cent. of the money paid into the state treasury, by reason of said levy, the same to be used for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads established by said section. No part of this portion of the half-mill levy can be used for any other purpose than that specifically mentioned, to wit, construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of main market roads.

Section 1222 is a part of the law providing for the improvement, maintenance and repair of intercounty highways.

It will be observed that the cost of the maintenance of your department must first be taken out of the seventy-five per cent. of the half-mill levy and when this is done the remainder is to be divided equally among the counties of the state for the use of construction, etc., of intercounty highways.

Before the enactment of this legislation, it was customary for the legislature to make an appropriation out of the general revenue fund of a specific amount to the state highway commissioner for state aid in road building. This enabled the state highway commissioner to know, before letting any contracts, exactly how much money would be available for each county.

Under the present order, the legislature makes an appropriation to the state highway commissioner of the proceeds of the fund arising from the half-mill levy and motor vehicle license fees. The exact amount is not stated because it cannot be definitely ascertained at the time the appropriation is made. The act providing for this half-mill levy was declared by the supreme court, in the case of State of Ohio ex rel. Donahey, Auditor vs. R. E. Edmondson, Auditor of Hamilton County, Ohio et al., No. 14406, decided November 18, 1913, to be constitutional and this removed all legal obstacles to the bringing of the money into the state treasury. The first installment of this levy for the tax year 1913, is now in the state treasury and the amount that will come into the treasury in the August settlement is, therefore, not difficult of determination. Of course you must pay the expenses of conducting your department out of this fund before it can be used for the construction of roads in the several counties of the state, but as such expenses for the year may be estimated with reasonable accuracy in advance, I see no reason why you should not apportion to the respective counties the amount that will be due them, without waiting until all of the money is in the state treasury.

I am of the opinion that it would be both proper and legal for your department to contract for the aggregate amount of money that has been levied for the entire tax year, less the expenses of the department, even though the second installment of the tax will not come into the state treasury until August, because it is now in process of collection and will be in the state treasury before it is actually needed and before the fund arising from the first installment will have been exhausted in payment to contractors on estimates.

You should exercise great care that contracts are not awarded in excess of the amount of money that will probably become available to your department for the improvement of roads in each county in the state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND—WHEN NOT TO BE CLASSED AS COUNTY BONDS UNDER SECTION 9778, GENERAL CODE.

The bond of the county of Marion, Fairmont magisterial district, permanent road improvement bond, state of West Virginia, is not to be classed as a county bond under section 9778, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. J. P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 4th, in which you make the following request for my opinion:

> "I herewith hand you copy of bond, 'County of Marion, Fairmont magisterial district, permanent road improvement bond. (State of West Virginia.)'
> "I would be pleased to have you give me your opinion as to whether or not the treasurer of state may accept bonds of this issue for faithful performance of trusts as provided for in section 9778 of the General Code."

Section 9778 of the General Code is as follows:

"No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of a least three per cent. on its common stock."

The question to be determined is whether the issue of bonds, a copy of one which is submitted by you, can be classed as bonds of the county of Marion, West Virginia, and so accepted by you as a deposit under said section 9778?

The bond which you submit is entitled as follows:

Number 383.

"United States of America, State of West Virginia, County of Marion, Fairmont Magisterial District, 5 per cent. Permanent Road Improvement Bond, $1,000.00. Dated September 1, 1913. Due September 1, 1943. Optional September 1, 1933. Interest payable March 1st and September 1st.

"Principal payable at the office of the county court of Marion county, Fairmont, West Virginia, or at the National City Bank, New York, N. Y.

"Interest payable at the office of the county court, Marion County, Fairmont, West Virginia, or at the Guaranty Trust Company, New York, N. Y."

And from the face of the bond it appears that it is one of an issue of $400,000 permanent road improvement bonds, issued by the county court of Marion county, a corporation in Marion county, West Virginia, for and on behalf of, and in the name of, the magisterial district of Fairmont in said county of Marion. It is certified in said bond, among other things that,

"* * * the amount of this bond, together with all other indebtedness of said county of Marion, and of the said district of Fairmont, does not exceed any limit prescribed by the constitution and laws of said state."

The case of Neal et al. vs. County Court of Wood County, et al., 43 W. Va., 90, has been cited as deciding that bonds of this character are county bonds. The second paragraph of the syllabus in this case is as follows:

"A magisterial district court, by subscription to works of internal improvement, become indebted up to five per cent. of its taxable property, and, in addition, the county up to five per cent. of its whole taxable property; but such district subscription, for the purposes of the limitation upon county indebtedness fixed by section 8, article X, of the constitution, is to be regarded as county indebtedness, and included with other county indebtedness in determining whether the total county indebtedness will exceed that limitation."

The decision is quite lengthy, and the court holds in this case that a magisterial district has no authority as a separate body to create a debt, and, hence, has no power, independently, to issue bonds, but that the bonds must be issued by the county on its behalf and are, for the purpose of determining the total county indebtedness, county bonds; though the only property back of them is the property within the magisterial district, and it does not decide that such bonds are to be classed as county bonds for any other purpose.

The fact remains, however, that though the magisterial district has in and of itself no power to incur indebtedness or issue bonds directly, the same purpose is implied indirectly by having the bonds issued by the county court "for and on behalf, and in the name of" the magisterial district; and such bonds are payable from a tax on the property of the magisterial district, and not from a tax on the property of the entire county; and in case of foreclosure, the property which could be subjected to the payment of the bonds would be, not the property of the entire county but only so much thereof as might be included within the boundaries of the magisterial district; all this, it seems to me, makes these bonds in fact the bonds of the magisterial district and not of the county; and, hence, as our statute, section 9778, expressly states that the deposit by it required instead of cash "may be bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state * * *."

Only county bonds of the same character as county bonds issued by counties in this state can be accepted—that is—bonds for the payment of which the credit of the entire county is pledged.

I do not wish to be understood in any way as expressing any doubt as to the sufficiency of the bonds offered as security; my holding is based solely on the fact that they are not county bonds as contemplated by section 9778, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO PAY TAXES.

Under the provisions of section 5678, General Code, a penalty of 15 per cent. may be charged for failure to pay the second half of the year's taxes, although the first half has been duly paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. THEO. H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 19th, receipt of which has already been acknowledged, requests my opinion upon the following question:

> "When the first half of the taxes charged against an entry of real estate on the duplicate of a county is paid within the time specified by law, but the second half of the taxes charged against the same entry is not paid within the time limited for the payment of such second half, what, if any, penalty may be charged and collected by the county treasurer on account of such failure to pay the second half of the taxes?"

Section 5678, General Code, gives rise to the question which you submit and is as follows:

"If one-half the taxes charged against an entry of real estate is not paid on or before the twentieth day of December, in that year, or collected by distress or otherwise prior to the February settlement, a penalty of fifteen per cent. thereon shall be added to such half of said taxes on the duplicate. If such taxes and penalty including the remaining half thereof, are not paid on or before the twentieth of June next thereafter, or collected by distress or otherwise prior to the next August settlement, a like penalty shall be charged on the last half of such taxes. The total of such amounts shall constitute the delinquent taxes on such real estate to be collected in the manner prescribed by law."

A somewhat over-nice reading of the second sentence of the above section would colorably support the view that the penalty for non-payment of the second half of the taxes is not chargeable unless the first half is unpaid when the second half is due. I am of the opinion, however, though authorities are lacking, that the penalty for non-payment of the June installment attaches in the case you submit. Though, as a general rule, statutes imposing penalties and statutes relating to the exaction of taxes are alike strictly construed against the exaction and in favor of the taxpayer, and though, as I have already intimated, the statute may be fairly termed ambiguous, in the respect under consideration, yet it would be an absurd interpretation thereof to limit the right to charge and collect the 15 per cent. penalty on the June installment to cases in which there has been a failure to pay the December installment.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY — FIRE INSURANCE — CONTRACT.

A director of public safety who went out of office on January 1, 1914, can become interested in a contract with the city to sell it fire insurance during the year 1914.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1914.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 21st, you requested my opinion upon the following questions:

"Can a director of public safety, who went out of office January 1, 1914, become interested in a contract with the city, or sell it (the city) fire insurance during the year 1914?

"Is the director of public safety prohibited from so doing under section 12912 of the General Code or any other law?

"This man who now desires to sell fire insurance to the city was director of public safety for four years prior to January 1, 1914, when he went out of office."

Sections 12910 and 12912 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 12910. Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years.

"Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or service for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

It will be noted that section 12910 deals specifically with contracts for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the subdivisions enumerated, while section 12912 prohibits interest in the profits of a contract, job, work or service for a corporation or township.

In an opinion rendered to Hon. William B. James, city solicitor of Bowling Green, Ohio, a copy of which I enclose, I held that section 12912 of the General Code does not extend to interests by an officer in a contract, after the expiration of his term of office. There can be no question that section 12910 is expressly limited to a like application. I cannot find any other statute prohibiting the form of contract referred to and therefore conclude that the director of public safety is not prohibited by the statutes from selling fire insurance to the city, after the expiration of his time of service in office.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUDGET COMMISSION—RIGHT OF DEPUTY TO ACT ON BEHALF OF HIS PRINCIPAL—MAYOR—PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.

The deputies of the budget commission prescribed by section 5649-3b, General Code, involve the exercise of judgment and discretion, and consequently a deputy cannot exercise the same on behalf of his principal.

A deputy auditor cannot act for the auditor, nor an assistant city solicitor for the solicitor. The president of council may act on behalf of the mayor for the reason that such president of council is not a deputy of the mayor and in the absence of the mayor becomes acting mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1914.

HON. WALTER M. SCHOENLE, City Solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of April 15th, receipt of which has already been acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"Will you kindly give me your opinion as to whether, in case of disability of the mayor the president of council may, as acting mayor, under section 4273, General Code, take the place of and perform the duties of the mayor upon the budget commission?

"Also, whether in case of disability of the auditor, the chief deputy of the auditor may take the place of and act in place of the auditor on the budget commission?

"Also, whether in case of disability of the city solicitor, an assistant city solicitor may take the place of the city solicitor on the budget commission under an ordinance of the city providing:

" 'In the absence or disability of the solicitor, or in case of a vacancy in said office, said assistants above provided shall perform the duties of the solicitor until other provision is made therefor by council.' "

And further providing:

"Said assistants and subordinates shall aid the solicitor in the discharge of his official duties and shall perform such duties as he shall from time to time assign to them respectively."

The powers and duties of the budget commission, the membership of which, in Hamilton county, consists, under section 5649-3b, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 237, of the mayor and solicitor of Cincinnati and the auditor of Hamilton county, are prescribed by section 5649-3c, General Code, as follows:

"The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him by the boards and officers named in section 5649-3a of this act, together with an estimate to be prepared by the auditor of the amount of money to be raised for state purposes in each taxing district in the county, and such other information as the budget commissioners may request, or the tax commission of Ohio may prescribe. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district purposes. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law.

"When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property therein of such county, and of each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, returned on the grand duplicate, and place it on the tax list of the county."

I think that it will be readily agreed that these duties and resultant powers involve the exercise of judgment and discretion in the highest sense. The well established rule is that a deputy may exercise the ministerial functions of his principal, and those only, in the absence of explicit statutory authority.

Davies vs. State, 11 C. C. n. s., 209.

Measured by this test, it follows clearly, I think, that the right of the deputy county auditor to act for the auditor does not extend to service as a member of the budget commission.

The relation of the president of council to the office of mayor is established by the following:

Section 4273, General Code:

"When the mayor is absent from the city, or is unable for any cause to perform his duties, the president of the council shall be the acting mayor. While the president of the city council is acting as mayor, he shall not serve as president of council."

Section 4274, General Code:

"In case of the death, resignation or removal of the mayor, the president of council shall become the mayor, and serve for the unexpired term, and until the successor is elected and qualified. Thereupon the president pro tem. of council shall become president thereof, and shall have the same rights, duties and powers as his predecessor. The vacancy thus created in council shall be filled as other vacancies, and council shall elect another president pro tem."

The president of council, by virtue of this section, is not a deputy of the mayor. He becomes, upon the happening of one of the specified contingencies, the acting mayor, and is at least vested with all the executive functions of the mayor in his own right. He is an elective officer. Therefore, I am of the opinion that in the absence or disability of the mayor, the president of council may act as a member of the budget commission. The absence or disability of the mayor, which will devolve his powers and duties in this behalf upon the president of council, must, however, be such as to prevent him from serving in any respect as mayor. It is not sufficient that the mayor be unable to attend the meetings of the commission, if he is able, generally, to act as mayor. The statute providing for the temporary or permanent occupancy of the office of mayor by the president of council contemplated the existence of a vacancy in the office as such.

I am of the opinion that the assistant city solicitor is without authority to represent the solicitor as a member of the budget commission. While it is true that the ordinance quoted by you attempts to constitute the assistant solicitor the acting solicitor ad interim, upon the happening of the specified contingencies, yet, without passing upon its validity for other purposes, I am satisfied that it is beyond the power of council to legislate so as to furnish a temporary successor to the city solicitor for the purpose of the statute relative to the constitution of the budget commission. That succession must be provided by law, operating uniformly throughout the state. The assistant is not an elective officer—a fact the hearing of which, if any, supports the view above expressed. Insofar as the assistant may be regarded as a deputy, his rights in the premises are governed by the principle above outlined in dealing with the question relative to the deputy county auditor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SMITH LAW—10 MILL LIMITATION—15 MILL LIMITATION—SINKING FUND—INTEREST LEVY.

The amendment to section 5649-2, a part of the so-called Smith law and affecting the 10 mill limitation, though subsequent to amendment to section 5649-5b imposing the 15 mill limitation, is to be read together with the latter so that sinking fund and interest levies necessary to provide for previously incurred bonded indebtedness, such indebtedness authorized by vote of the people is still subject to the 15 mill limitation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1914.

HON. FRED W. CROW, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 17, 1914, already acknowledged, invites my opinion upon the following question:

> "During the eightieth session of the general assembly of Ohio, section 5649-5b of the General Code was amended, fixing the maximum rate of taxation for any taxing district at fifteen mills (volume 103, page 57, Ohio Laws). This act was passed February 27, 1913, and approved by the governor February 28, 1913. At the same session of the general assembly, an act was passed on April 16, 1913, and approved by the governor May 6, 1913 (volume 103, page 552, Ohio Laws), which seems to have no limitation in regard to the rate of taxation that may be levied for sinking fund and interest purposes. The last act passed by the general assembly of Ohio, limits the general levy of any taxing district to ten mills, which may be increased by a vote of the people of said district, and in addition to this a sufficient levy may be made that may be necessary to provide for all indebtedness. The last act seems to conflict with the former in regard to the maximum rate of taxation that may be levied in any taxing district, as there appears to be no limitation to the amount that may be levied for sinking fund and interest purposes. Is this true or not?"

I do not think that there is any such irreconcilable inconsistency between amended section 5649-5b, General Code, and the subsequently amended section 5649-2, General Code as to work an implied repeal or amendment of the former. Prior to the amendment of section 5649-2, or, to be more exact, between the time when the two amendments took effect, the two sections, placed in juxtaposition, would have read as follows:

Section 5649-5b (as amended, p. 57):

> "If a majority of the electors voting thereon at such election vote in favor thereof, it shall be lawful to levy taxes within such taxing district at a rate not to exceed such increased rate for and during the period provided for in such resolution, but in no case shall the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any county, city, village, school district or other taxing district, under the provisions of this and the two preceding sections and sections 5649-1, 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the General Code as herein enacted, exceed fifteen mills."

Section 5649-2 (original):

"Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for the year 1911, and any year thereafter, including taxes levied under authority of section 5649-1 of the General Code, and levies for state, county, township, municipal, school and all other purposes, shall not in any one year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for all purposes in the year 1910, provided, however, that the maximum rate of taxes that may be levied for all purposes, upon the taxable property therein, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

These two statutes, so compared, are not inconsistent. Their respective limitations are cumulative; one is a limitation upon certain levies, the other controls those and other levies.

Now, when section 5649-2 was amended, the only change therein was the elimination of the 1910 tax levy limitation, effected by the omission of certain words, so that the section now reads:

"Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

The language creating and imposing the ten-mill limitation was not, therefore, substantially changed. Accordingly, it is my view that there is not to be imputed to the general assembly any purpose to change the scope or nature of that limitation. Therefore, it is to continue to bear to the fifteen-mill limitation the same relation borne thereto by the ten-mill limitation under original section 5649-2.

Again, if the opposite result could follow at all, it would come about through a mere inference, not warranted on the face of amended section 5649-2, viz., that there is to be no limitation upon levies, for interest and sinking fund purposes, excepted from the operation of that section. If anything pertaining to the amended section would be said to conflict with amended section 5649-5b, it would be the inference, not any positive language of amended section 5649-2. Such a "conflict" would produce no implied repeal, first, because such a repeal must be founded upon an irreconcilable inconsistency, so that, if resulting from inference the inference must be the only one possible and second, because not only is another and an opposite inference possible, in the case at hand, but such other inference is clearly indicated by the legislative history.

Lastly, section 5649-2 as amended cannot be regarded as a disassociated legislative idea. The section bearing this number was, originally, part of a certain act. It will be presumed that it was amended with a view to its continuance as part of the same act. This presumption is raised to a certainty by the discovery, that another section of the same original act was amended by the same session of the assembly. The two amendments, so passed will be presumed to have been intended as parts of a single harmonious act, and this presumption is almost conclusive.

I conclude, therefore, that under the law as it now stands, levies for interest and sinking fund purposes, excluded from the operation of the ten-mill limitation of the "Smith one per cent. law" are subject to the fifteen-mill limitation imposed by section 5649-5b as amended.

Of course, the positive language of the last mentioned section leaves no room for doubt as to its inclusion of such levies, unless such an implied repeal or amendment as I have been discussing has occurred.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—RIGHT TO SEND ASSISTANTS OUT OF THE STATE TO CONDUCT INVESTIGATIONS RELATIVE TO THE BEST METHODS OF ROAD CONSTRUCTION.

The state highway commissioner has the right under section 1183, General Code, to send assistants and division engineers outside of the state to conduct investigations relative to the best methods of road construction.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 9th, you requested my opinion upon the following state of facts:

> "On or about February 28, 1914, State Highway Commissioner, Hon. James R. Marker, found it expedient to send about ten of his assistants and division engineers to Chicago to attend a series of cement shows and conventions. He did this under the authority, so he claims, of section 1183 of the General Code.
> "We have held up the expense accounts until we can get an opinion from your department as to whether the same is a legal charge against the highway funds. Enclosed is statement of facts which you will consider in connection with the same."

Your request calls for a construction of that portion of section 1183 of the General Code, as amended in 1913 (103 O. L., page 449), which reads:

"* * * He shall make inquiry in regard to systems of road and bridge construction and maintenance wherever he may deem it advisable, conduct investigations and experiments, either in person, by deputy or engineer, in regard to the best methods of road and bridge construction and the best kinds of road and bridge materials, examine the chemical and physical character of such materials, * * *."

In his statement of facts accompanying your letter, Mr. Marker, in substance, says that he directed one deputy highway commissioner and seven division engineers to attend a series of congresses, conventions and cement shows held in connection with the national conference of state highway departments at Chicago, Illinois, from February 12 to 18, 1914. Each of these men was deputized to make inquiry on different phases of road and bridge construction, maintenance and repair, to conduct investigations and experiments in regard to the best methods of road and bridge construction and repair, the best materials therefor, and to report his findings to the state highway commission, all of which, I understand, was done.

The state highway commissioner is given a very wide discretion under section 1183. It is clear that his territorial jurisdiction in the making of such investigations, inquiries, experiments, etc., is not limited to the state of Ohio, because he is expressly authorized to make such inquiries, etc., "wherever he may deem it advisable." I find no objection to the payment of these expenses on the ground that they were incurred in traveling outside of the state.

As I understand it, the question raised by you is whether the state highway commissioner could send more than one deputy or engineer to Chicago for the above specified purpose.

It will be noted that the statute authorizes the highway commissioner to make such inquiries, etc., "either in person, by deputy or engineer." This is a grant of power merely, and the fact that the statute mentions the classes of persons that may be assigned to the making of such inquiries, etc., in the singular number, does not warrant the conclusion that not more than one of the designated persons can be assigned to such duty.

The work in the state highway department is divided into three subdivisions or bureaus, each having a separate and distinct branch of the work, viz.: the bureau of construction of roads, the bureau of maintenance and repair of roads, and the bureau of construction, maintenance and repair of bridges. In order to secure greater efficiency, the men in each of these bureaus specialize in certain branches of the work, so that while one man may be proficient in the knowledge of one type of construction, maintenance or repair of highways and bridges, he may know very little of other types.

I am informed that at the meetings to which these gentlemen were sent, a great many phases of the question of construction, maintenance and repair of roads and bridges were considered, and that the discussions resulted in material benefit to those present, and indirectly to the state, in determining the most advantageous methods of road and bridge construction, maintenance and repair, and the best materials therefor. These meetings were held simultaneously in separate sections or divisions, and it would have been physically impossible for one man to attend all of them, even if he were fully conversant with all of the subjects under consideration.

It is well to keep a distinction in mind between those cases where departments may seek merely to send men to conventions in the ordinary sense, where the benefit is more personal than it is official, and cases like this where the benefit is direct and in the first instance for the state.

Section 1183 recognizes this itself because the statute calls upon the highway commissioner to make inquiries in regard to systems of road and bridge construction and maintenance wherever he may deem it advisable, conduct experiments and investigations in person or by deputy or engineer, in regard to the best methods of road and bridge construction and the best kinds of road and bridge materials. The doctrine of good common sense is particularly to be applied in these cases, and you are to be commended in keeping a close watch on all of the expenditures that are incurred, particularly outside of the state.

I am of the opinion that in view of section 1183 of the General Code, and in view of the further fact that road construction work is new in Ohio and that much may be saved or lost to the public by reason of following a good plan or a bad one, as the case may be, that the expenses incurred by the state highway department in respect to the subject-matter about which you inquire are lawful.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—MANAGING OFFICERS OF INSTITUTIONS UNDER CONTROL OF THE OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION.

Superintendents or county officers of the various institutions under the management and control of the Ohio board of administration are not placed in the unclassified service. Practicability of competitive examination of applicant shall be determined by state civil service commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—The Ohio board of administration has submitted the following inquiry under date of February 18, 1914:

> "Are the managing officers of the institutions under the control of the Ohio board of administration exempt from the provisions of senate bill No. 7, being an act to regulate the civil service of Ohio (Ohio Laws 103, page 698)?"

Section 1835, General Code, enumerates the institutions which shall be under the control and management of the board of administration. Said section reads in part:

> "The board shall assume its duties on August 15, 1911, and shall have full power to manage and govern the following institutions:
> "The Athens State Hospital.
> "The Cleveland State Hospital.
> "The Columbus State Hospital.

"The Dayton State Hospital.
"The Toledo State Hospital.
"The Lima State Hospital.
"The Massillon State Hospital.
"The Ohio Hospital for Epileptics.
"The Institution for Feeble-Minded youth, which shall be known hereafter as "The Institution for Feeble-Minded.
"The State School for the Deaf.
"The State School for the Blind.
"The Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.
"The Home of the Ohio Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, Their Wives, Mothers and Widows and Army Nurses to be known hereafter as "The Madison Home.
"The Boys' Industrial School.
"The Girls' Industrial Home.
"The Ohio State Reformatory.
"The Ohio Penitentiary.
"The Ohio State Sanatorium."

By virtue of section 1842, General Code, the board of administration is authorized to appoint a superintendent or other chief officer of each of said institutions. This section further prescribes certain duties of such superintendent or other chief officer.

Said section 1842, General Code, provides:

"Each of said institutions shall be under the executive control of a superintendent or other chief officer designated by the title peculiar to the institution, subject to the rules and regulations of the board and the provisions of this act. Such chief officer shall be appointed by the board to serve for the term of four years unless removed for want of moral character, incompetency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance, after opportunity to be heard.

"The chief officer shall have entire executive charge of the institution for which he is appointed, except as otherwise provided herein. He shall select and appoint the necessary employes, but not more than ten per cent. of the total number of officers and employes of any institution shall be appointed from the same county. He shall have power to discharge them for cause, which shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, and a report of all appointments and resignations and discharges shall be filed with the board at the close of each month.

"For reasons set forth in writing the board may order the discharge of any employe of any institution.

"This act shall not be construed as affecting the term of any chief officer which shall be unexpired at the organization of the board; but he shall be subject to removal as hereinbefore provided.

"The board after conference with the managing officer of each institution shall determine the number of officers and employes to be appointed therein. It shall from time to time fix the salaries and wages to be paid at various institutions, which shall be uniform, as far as possible, for like service, provided that the salaries of all officers shall be approved in writing by the governor."

Section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places ten classes of positions in the unclassified service. All others for which it is practicable to determine merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations, are placed in the classified service.

Of the ten classes placed in the unclassified service only two need to be considered, as the others are clearly not applicable to the positions in question.

Subdivisions 2 and 8 of branch (a) of said section 8, provides:

> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district.
> "8. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

In order to come within the terms of subdivision 2, the officers must be heads of "principal departments, boards and commissions" and they must be appointed "by the governor or by and with his consent."

By virtue of section 1842, General Code, supra, the various managing officers of the institutions under the control of the board of administration are appointed by that board and not by the governor or by and with his consent. They do not, therefore, come within the terms of subdivision 2 of said section 8, supra.

Subdivision 8 of said section 8 applies to deputies. These deputies must be "authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals" and they must hold a fiduciary relation to such principals. Both of these conditions must exist.

It is urged that the board of administration delegates power to these managing officers to purchase supplies; to act for the board in awarding contracts; in classifying prisoners and to act for it in other matters of a general and special nature. This does not make these managing officers deputies of the board of administration. Furthermore by subdivision 8 of section 8, supra, deputies must be "authorized by law" and not by the principal "to act generally for and in place of their principals."

In volume 5, page 623 of Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1st Ed., a deputy is defined:

> "A deputy is one who by appointment exercises an office in another's right, having no interest therein, but doing all things in his principal's name, and for whose misconduct the principal is answerable. He must be one whose acts are of equal force with those of the officer himself, must act in pursuance of law, performing official functions, and is required to take oath of office before acting."

A "deputy" is similarly defined at page 1043, volume 13 of Cyc. and in volume 9, page 368, Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2nd Edition.

A deputy is one who acts in the name of his principal and not in his own right. The managing officers in question act in their own right as granted by the statute. They do not act in the name of their principal, the board of administration. In many instances they may act as agents of the board, but this does not make them deputies.

The managing officers in question are not deputies within the meaning of subdivision 8 of section 8 of the civil service act.

It is further urged that it is not practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants for these positions by competitive examinations. This phase of the question is covered by branch (b) of section 8 of the civil service act.

This part of said section reads:

> "(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class.
> "1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. Appointments shall be made to, or employment shall be given in, all positions in the competitive class that are not filled by promotion, reinstatement, transfer or reduction, as provided in sections 15, 16 and 17 of this act and the rules of the commission, by appointment from those certified to the appointing officer in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of this act."

It will be observed that the competitive class, which is the classified service, shall include such positions for "which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations." A similar provision is contained in the constitutional amendment pertaining to civil service.

The question arises, who shall determine the practicability of competitive examinations as to particular positions.

This department has followed the ruling made in People vs. McWilliams, 185 N. Y. 92, wherein it is held:

> "The determination of a municipal civil service commission in classifying positions in the public service, although involving the exercise of judgment and discretion is more of a legislative or executive character than judicial or quasi-judicial, and therefore is not reviewable by certiorari.
> "Such determination, however, is not final, but is subject to a limited and qualified judicial control to be exercised in a proper case by mandamus. * * * If the determination clearly violates the constitution or the statute, mandamus will lie to correct it; if not, the courts should not intervene; and to this extent only should they exercise the power of review."

The state civil service commission by virtue of the provisions of section 9 of the civil service act, which grants it the power to classify positions, would be authorized in the first instance to determine whether or not it is practicable to hold examinations for positions in the state and county.

Said section 9 reads in part:

> "Within six months after the taking effect of this act, the commission shall put into effect rules for the classification of offices, positions and employments in the classified service of the state and the counties thereof * * *."

The power of the civil service commission to classify positions is subject to a limited judicial control. As to some positions it can be determined as a matter of law that it is impracticable to hold examinations therefor. Where this is doubtful it is left to the determination of the civil service commission.

Can it be determined as a matter of law that it is impracticable to hold examinations for these positions?

By virtue of section 1842, General Code, supra, the chief officer "has entire executive charge of the institution for which he is appointed." He has power to appoint the necessary employes and to discharge them for cause. These are the general duties of such officers and it cannot be said as a matter of law that it is impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of persons to perform such duties by competitive examinations.

My attention has been called to the provisions of section 1871, General Code. This section reads:

> "The board shall make rules and regulations for the strictly non-partisan management of the institutions under its control. Any member or employe of the board or any officer or employe of any institution under its control, who, by solicitation or otherwise, shall exert his influence directly or indirectly to induce any other officer or employe of any such institutions to adopt his political views or to favor any particular person or candidate for office, or who shall in any manner contribute money or other thing of value to any person for election purposes, shall be removed from his office or position, by the board in case of an officer or employe and by the governor in case of a member of the board. And no member or officer or employe of the board shall recommend or in any other way seek to secure the appointment, employment or promotion of any person at any institution, the intent and purpose of this act being to improve the service and discipline at said institutions by entrusting the same to the managing officers thereof without interference save by the rules, regulations and orders of the board."

The provisions of this section are in keeping with the spirit and intent of the civil service act and they do not change the rule of practicability of examinations.

My attention has also been called to certain provisions of the statutes granting certain powers to certain superintendents to receive and discharge inmates without the consent of the board of administration.

The following are examples of these provisions pertaining to the superintendents of the various hospitals for the insane:

Section 1958, General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * Upon receiving the application and certificate, the superintendent shall immediately advise the probate judge whether the patient can be received, and, if so, at what time."

Section 1968, General Code, provides:

> "When the superintendent deems it for the best interests of a patient, who has no homicidal or suicidal propensities, he may permit such patient to leave the institution on a trial visit, which shall not exceed ninety days. Such patient, if necessary, may be returned at any time within such period without further legal proceedings."

Section 1972, General Code, provides:

> "A person in an incipient stage of mental derangement may apply for admission to and treatment in the state hospital for the district in which he or she resides. A person in an incipient stage of epilepsy may apply for admission to and treatment in the Ohio hospital for epileptics. The superintendent of such hospital may receive such person as a patient therein for not more than sixty days, if from his own examination and the written statement of a reputable physician familiar with the applicant's condition, and which covers the interrogatories and answers prescribed by the state board of charities in other applications, he is satisfied that the applicant is in an incipient stage of mental derangement or epilepsy, in need of such treatment as the hospital affords, and likely to be benefited thereby."

Section 1998, General Code, applies to the superintendent of the Lima state hospital. Said section reads:

"The superintendent may discharge an inmate, not under sentence for crime, who in his judgment, is recovered, or who has not recovered, but whose condition has improved to such extent that his discharge will not be detrimental to the public welfare or injurious to him. Before ordering such discharge, the superintendent shall ascertain that some friend will properly care for him at his home."

Section 2044, General Code, applies to the superintendent of the Ohio hospital for epileptics. Said section reads:

"In the commitment and conveyance to the hospital, the care and custody while there, and the discharge therefrom, of epileptic insane or epileptics whose being at large is dangerous to the community, like proceedings shall be had, and like powers exercised by officers charged with like duties in the premises as is provided by law for the commitment and care of the insane."

These various sections prescribe certain discretionary duties upon the various superintendents concerned, which they are to exercise independent of the board of administration. These duties do not bring these superintendents within any of the ten classes of positions placed in the unclassified service by section 8 of the civil service act.

The only question of doubt as to these positions is whether or not it can be said as a matter of law that it is practicable to hold competitive examinations for these positions.

Since the decision of People ex rel. Schau, vs. McWilliams, 185 N. Y., 92, supra, referred to as the Schau case, a number of cases have been before the court of appeals for review. The court of appeals has universally, so far as I have been able to find, upheld the civil service commission when it placed a position in the classified service and required competitive examinations. The only times when the civil service commission has been overruled has been when it placed certain positions in the exempt class, and the courts have placed them in the competitive class.

The tendency, therefore, of the New York courts is not to disturb the decision of the civil service commission when it determines that it is practicable to hold competitive examinations, and since the decision in the Schau case, I find no decision by the court of appeals which holds that as a matter of law it is not practicable to hold competitive examinations.

The constitution and statutes of New York as to the practicability of holding competitive examinations are almost identical with the constitution and statutes of Ohio upon the same subject.

A further discussion of the cases in New York may be of profit.

In the case of People ex rel. Schau vs. McWilliams, supra, Cullen, C. J., says on page 98 of the opinion:

"If it should appear that there was a plain violation by the commission of its duty to classify as competitive an office which was clearly and manifestly so, there should be a remedy in the courts. But there is necessarily a large debatable field as to cases within which there will be great differences of opinion, even among the most intelligent and fair-minded men, and as to this field it seems to me that it is not reasonable that the judgment of an appellate court should be substituted for that of the commissioners."

Also on page 99 he says:

"The proper classificaion of a part of the civil service depends in no small degree on the practical operation of the classification. A priori arguments must often yield to actual experience."

On same page he further says:

"It does not at all follow that the action of the civil service commission is not in any case subject to judicial control; but that such control is a limited and qualified one to be exercised by mandamus. If the position is clearly one properly subject to competitive examinations the commissioners may be compelled to so classify it. On the other hand if the position be by statute or from its nature exempt from examination and the action of the commission be palpably illegal the commission may be compelled to strike the position from the competitive examination class, though in such case redress by mandamus would often be unnecessary, as a valid appointment could be made notwithstanding the classification. But where the position is one, as to the proper mode of filling which there is fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion among intelligent and conscientious officials, the action of the commission should stand, even though the court may differ from the commission as to the wisdom of the classification."

The principle of this case was followed in Matter of Simons vs. McGuire, 204 N. Y., 253, wherein it was held:

"It cannot be held as a matter of law, that the position of probation officer, under section 96 of chapter 659 of the laws of 1910, is one which cannot be properly placed in the competitive class of the civil service, and for that reason the question must be left to the decision of the civil service commission."

The court through Werner, J., quotes from the Schau case, supra, and says on page 258:

"The respondent, one of the appointees, and the justices of the court of special sessions, assert that the position of probation officer is one which, by reason of its peculiar and manifold duties as defined in section 11a of the Code of criminal procedure, no less than by the express terms of the statute creating the court of special sessions and defining the duties and powers of its officers, belongs in the exempt class. This view has been sustained by the supreme court at special term and in the appellate division. The civil service commission, the probation commission, and some eminent experts who are familiar with the workings of each, contend that it is practicable to formulate workable rules for a competitive examination, for the position of probation officer. This variance of opinion is alone sufficient to bring the case at bar within the rule laid down in the Schau case. The position is one 'as to the proper mode of filling which there is a fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion among intelligent and conscientious officials' and, therefore, 'the action of the commission should stand, even though the courts may differ from the commission as to the wisdom of the classification.'"

It appears that the probation officer had varied duties. He gave advice to families and persons coming before the court and placed on probation, and the court was required to rely upon his judgment and upon the facts submitted by him, in a great measure, as to its disposition of persons under probation.

Another case wherein the civil service commission was sustained is that of People vs. Kraft, 145 App. Div., 662, which was affirmed without report in 204 N. Y., 626.

This case concerned examiners of stock transfers and the civil service commission placed the positions in the competitive class.

Smith, P. J., of the appellate division, defines their duties as follows:

"These examiners are in fact secret service men. Their sole duties are of a detective nature, involving not only thorough knowledge of bookkeeping, but a general commercial experience, which will enable them to detect the many devices by which this law may be sought to be evaded. Not only extensive business experience, but a keen acumen is a necessary qualification for the successful performance of duties which are unusually exacting."

These positions passed upon by the court of last resort of New York, required men of judgment, discretion and of varied experience, yet the courts upheld the decision of the civil service commission in placing these positions in the competitive class. The New York cases are the only ones which I find upon this question.

It appears, therefore, that the question of holding competitive examinations to determine the merit and fitness of applicants is largely a matter of fact to be determined by practical experience in the operation of the civil service law. It is more a matter of fact than a matter of law.

The legislature has placed upon the civil service commission the duty of determining whether as a matter of fact a competitive examination is practicable. The civil service commission has not passed upon the positions now in question. Their right to pass upon this question should not be precluded by the opinion of this department, unless it is clearly apparent that as a matter of law competitive examinations are not practicable.

It is not the province of this department to control the discretionary duties of the civil service commission. By virtue of section 9 of the civil service act the civil service commission is given the power to adopt rules for the classification of positions.

Section 14, paragraph 2 of the civil service act, provides:

"2. In case of vacancy in a position in the competitive class where peculiar and exceptional qualifications of a scientific, managerial, professional, or educational character are required, and upon satisfactory evidence that for specified reasons competition in such special case is impracticable and that the position can best be filled by a selection of some designated person of high and recognized attainments in such qualities, the commission may suspend the provisions of the statute requiring competition in such case, but no suspension shall be general in its application to such place, and all such cases of suspension shall be reported in the annual report of the commission with the reasons for the same."

By virtue of this provision the civil service commission determines the facts and suspends competitive examination. This section recognizes the fact that there may be competitive examinations for positions which require scientific, managerial, professional or educational qualifications.

Section 15 of the civil service act, which requires the filling of positions by promotion, should also be considered in this connection.

Said section provides:

"Vacancies in positions in the competitive class shall be filled so far as practicable by promotions. The commission shall provide in its rules for keeping a record of efficiency for each employe in the competitive classified service, and for making promotions in the competitive classified service on the basis of merit, to be ascertained as far as practicable by promotional examinations, by conduct and capacity in office, and by seniority in service; and shall provide that vacancies shall be filled by promotion in all cases where, in the judgment of the commission, it shall be for the best interest of the service so to fill such vacancies. All examinations for promotion shall be competitive. In promotional examinations efficiency and seniority in service shall form a part of the maximum mark attainable in such examination. In all cases where vacancies are to be filled by promotion, the commission shall certify to the appointing power only the name of the person having the highest rating. The method of examination for promotions, the manner of giving notice thereof, and the rules governing the same shall be in general the same as those provided for original examinations."

It will be observed that efficiency and seniority in service is made an important factor in promotional examinations. The civil service commission is to determine what positions shall be filled by promotion, and it may determine that the positions can best be filled by promotion and the state thus benefit by the experience of the subordinate employes gained in the service of the state.

The discretionary duties required of the superintendents of the various hospitals for the insane raise a question of doubt as to the practicability of holding competitive examinations of applicants.

And as said by the court of appeals of New York, the positions are ones "'as to the proper mode of filling which there is a fair and reasonable ground for difference of opinion among intelligent and conscientious officials' and, therefore, 'the action of the commission should stand, even though the courts may differ from the commissioners as to the wisdom of the classification.'"

As to the positions now in question the civil service commission has not yet acted and this department should not preclude it from passing upon the question.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the superintendents or other managing officer of the various institutions under the management and control of the board of administration are not placed in the unclassified service by section 8 of the civil service act, and that the practicability of holding competitive examinations of applicants for such positions shall be determined by the state civil service commission.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BUDGET COMMISSIONER—APPROPRIATION BILL—APPENDIX TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

The auditor of state is authorized under section 3 of the budget bill, 104 O. L., 64, to require all departments of the state government to conform to and follow in their disbursements, the subclassifications of the appendix to house bill No. 47, which is a part of the law, but he is not authorized to require the departments to follow the disbursements set out in their estimated budget, filed by the budget commissioner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 27th you requested me to advise you as to the following questions:

> "The appropriation bill for the year 1914, enacted by the special session of the general assembly, separates all grants to the various state boards, commissions and departments into two general classifications, 'Personal Service' and 'Maintenance.' Included in the bill as passed, and following the general classification, is an appendix which contains a subclassification of items for maintenance.
> "Is the auditor of state authorized by this act to require all departments of the state government to conform to and follow in their disbursements during the appropriation year, this appendix subclassification?
> "A certified copy of the detailed requests made by the various departments to the budget commissioner has been filed with the auditor of state. This gives specific amounts for each officer and employe for personal service, but this detailed matter as to personal service is not included in the appropriation bill as passed by the general assembly and certified to this department. Has the auditor of state any authority to require departments to follow this classification in their expenditures for personal service?"

I quote the following provisions of the appropriation bill referred to, found in 104 O. L., 64:

> "Section 3. A detailed and itemized budget of the several departments, institutions, boards and commissions of the state is attached hereto as an appendix. The moneys appropriated in section 1 of this act under the general headings of 'Personal Service,' 'Maintenance,' or under like designations, each department, institution, board or commission, shall be and constitute the summary controlling account, and shall be expended only in accordance with such detailed classifications as are provided in said budget, and as provided in section 5 of this act, except as hereinafter in this section provided.
> "Copies of this said budget shall be certified by the secretary of state and delivered, one to the governor and one to the auditor of state.
> "Authority to expend the moneys appropriated in section 1 of this act, otherwise than in accordance with detailed classifications of the said budget, but within the same summary controlling account, may be granted to any such department, institution, board or commission by a board consisting of the governor, and any competent disinterested person to be appointed by him for such purpose, the chairman of the finance committees of the house of representatives and the state respectively, the attorney general, and the auditor of state. Said board may, upon the application made to it in writing by a two-thirds vote of all members, authorize moneys set aside under any detailed classification of the budget of such department, institution, board or commission, to be expended for any purpose within the purview of any other detailed classification within the same summary controlling account thereof.

"In case of any variance between the amount of any summary controlling account and the aggregate amount of the corresponding detailed classifications in said budget the board provided for herein shall, with the advice and assistance of the department, institution, board or commission affected thereby, adjust the amounts of the detailed classifications so as to correspond in the aggregate with the corresponding summary controlling account.

"The governor, or the person appointed by him, shall be president, and the auditor of state shall be secretary of the board provided herein. The secretary shall keep a complete record of all the proceedings. All actions of the board shall be certified in duplicate by its secretary to the governor and to the auditor of state.

"All meetings of the board shall be open to the public.

"The necessary expenses of the chairman of the senate and house finance committees, while engaged in their duties as such members, shall be paid from the fund for expenses of legislative committees upon itemized vouchers approved by the board.

"Section 5. No money appropriated in section 1 of this act shall be drawn except in accordance with the detailed classifications of the budget of authorized expenditures, and upon a requisition or voucher presented to the auditor, approved by the head of a department or by the trustees of an institution or by the members of a board or commission, or by an officer or employe of such department, institution, board or commission, specially designated by resolution or order to approve and present such requisition or voucher, a copy of which resolution or order shall be filed with the auditor of state. Such requisition or vouchers shall set forth, in itemized form and specify the budgetary classification of, the service rendered, or material furnished, or expenses incurred, and the date of purchase, and time of service, and showing that competitive bids were secured or that it was an emergency requiring purchase; and all institutions, boards, commissions and departments to which appropriations are herein made shall render to the auditor of state an itemized account of such receipts and expenditures, as may be required by the auditor of state; and such institutions, boards, commissions or departments shall be subject to inspection by the auditor of state; and it shall be the duty of the auditor of state to see that these provisions are complied with."

These sections, together with the general powers of the auditor of state, as fixed by statute, clearly authorize him to require all departments of the state government for whose use appropriations are made by the remaining provisions of the act to conform to and follow the subclassifications of the appendix of house bill No. 47, which is a part of the law, made so by the provisions of section 3. This statement, however, is subject to qualifications inasmuch as section 3 itself provides a method by which the detailed classifications of the budget may be changed within the same summary controlling account on the approval of the board therein provided for. This procedure, however, is the only method by which a department may be relieved of the obligation to conform its disbursements to such subclassifications as are set forth in the appendix.

Subject, then, to the qualification above stated your first question is to be answered in the affirmative.

Your second question must be answered in the negative except insofar as the appendix to the appropriation bill makes the distinction between "Personal Service A-1," and "Personal Service B-1," that is to say between fixed salaries and wages. A department, for the use of which both classes of personal service appropriations are made, can expend for salaries only the amount appropriated for "Personal Service A-1" and for wages only the amount appropriated for "Personal Service B-1," unless the proportions of the aggregate appropriation for personal service are changed as provided in section 3 of the appropriation bill already quoted, (and in the absence, of course, of an allowance by the emergency board); but within the item for salaries, for example, the department may disburse its appropriation as the head thereof seems best until the gross amount is exhausted, except as to salaries fixed by law. It need not conform to the specific requests made to the budget commissioner. These requests are no part of the appropriation law and bind no one. Accordingly it follows that the auditor of state may not require a department to conform its salary expenditures to the budget requests referred to in your second question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—PRIMARY ELECTIONS—REGISTRATION CITY—COMPENSATION.

The compensation to be paid to members and clerks of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections for conducting primary elections as provided for in section 4990, General Code, shall be paid by the county in the same manner as the compensation fixed by section 4822, General Code. No part of such compensation is paid by the registration city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 11, 1914, you inquire:

> "We respectfully request your consideration of the apparent conflict in opinion rendered by your department relative to the payment of the salaries of members and clerk of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections for their services in primary elections, as found in opinions dated February 27, 1912, and March 28, 1914. We would more particularly refer you to that portion of the opinion of February 27, 1912, found at the bottom of page 6 and on page 7 following; also the last two paragraphs of the opinion of March 28, 1914.
> "We now desire to know, in order to give definite instructions to our examiners, whether or not a registration city is required by law to pay any portion of the said salaries, and if so what method is to be employed in making subdivision between the city and the county?"

Section 4990, General Code, fixes the compensation per precinct to be paid the members and clerk of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections, and section 4991, General Code, prescribes how it shall be paid.

Section 4991, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 510, provides in part:

"All expenses of primary elections, including cost of supplies for election precincts and compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors, and judges and clerks of election, shall be paid in the manner provided by law for the payment of similar expenses for general elections * * *."

The provision above quoted was not changed by the amendatory act of 103 Ohio Laws, 510. What expenses of general election are similar to the compensation paid the members and clerk of these boards for conducting primaries?

In the opinion to you of March 28, 1914, it was held that the compensation to be paid by virtue of sections 4990 and 4991, General Code, should be paid by the county, and should not be charged back. In this opinion no consideration was taken as to the division of this expense between a county and a registration city. The sole question was as to the authority to charge back under section 4991, General Code.

In the opinion of February 27, 1912, it was held that in counties having no registration city, this compensation was paid by the county, and as to counties having a registration city or cities, this compensation was to be prorated between the county and the registration city in the same proportion as such county and city paid the compensation to such members and clerks under sections 4822 and 4942, General Code. In the opinion of March 28, 1914, section 4942, General Code, was not taken into consideration, and it was not intended by this opinion to overrule the former holding.

However, you have pointed out the difficulties which have confronted your department in putting into operation the rule laid down in the opinion of February 27, 1914, and the question will be reconsidered.

In reaching the conclusion in the opinion of February 27, 1912, the words "similar expenses for general elections" contained in section 4991, General Code, were in effect construed to apply to the compensation authorized by section 4822 and 4942, General Code.

Section 4822, General Code, provides:

"Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and the clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

This section does not specifically say that this compensation is paid for conducting elections, but it is placed under the chapter entitled "Supervision of Elections," and it is applicable alike to all counties in the state. The compensation authorized by this section is apparently for services in conducting elections.

Section 4942, General Code, provides:

> "In addition to the compensation provided in section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, each deputy state supervisor of elections in counties containing cities in which registration is required shall receive for his services the sum of five dollars for each election precinct in such city, and the clerk in such counties, in addition to his compensation so provided, shall receive for his services the sum of six dollars for each election precinct in such cities. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such city at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each such deputy state supervisor under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. The additional compensation provided by this section shall be paid monthly from the city treasury on warrants drawn by the city auditor upon vouchers signed by the chief deputy and clerk of the board."

This section is placed under the chapter entitled "Registration of Electors," and is paid only in counties having a registration city, and only for the precincts in such registration city, while it is not so specified in the section, this compensation is evidently provided for the extra services required in registering voters.

The compensation authorized by section 4990, General Code, is for services "in conducting primary elections." This section reads:

> "For their services in conducting primary elections, members of boards of deputy state supervisors shall each receive for his services the sum of two dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his county, and judges and clerks of election shall receive the same compensation as is provided by law for such officers at general elections."

In the Mahoning county case, to which you refer and which is reported in the Ohio Law Reporter of April 20, 1914, as State ex rel. vs. Hogg, County Auditor, Circuit and Appeals, page 380, was an action in mandamus to require the county auditor to draw a voucher for two dollars for each precinct in the county for the members of the boards of elections. The writ was allowed and the effect of the decision was to require the county to pay the entire compensation allowed under section 4990, General Code.

Mahoning county has a registration city, but no question as to a division of this compensation between the registration city and the county was considered by the court. Therefore this opinion is not an authority upon the question now under consideration.

It is evident that the compensation paid by virtue of section 4942, General Code, is for services for conducting registrations, and that the compensation paid by section 4822, General Code, is for services in conducting elections. Section 4990, General Code, specifically provides that the compensation therein provided is for services "in conducting primary elections." In conducting primary elections, it is necessary to make provision for registration of electors and this is specifically required by section 4975, General Code.

The holding that this compensation should be prorated between a county and a registration city, in the opinion of February 27, 1912, was upon the theory that inasmuch as registrations were required for primaries, it was just and equitable that the registration city should pay a part of the compensation for conducting primaries in such registration city. This was based upon the fact that under section 4942, General Code, the registration city pays all the compensation for conducting registrations, and under section 4822, General Code, the county paid all the compensation for conducting elections.

This division, however, is unfair to the city. The compensation per precinct for conducting primaries is the same whether registration is required in such precinct or not. As to the other compensation paid these members and clerks, that fixed by section 4822, General Code, is the same in all precincts in the county, while that fixed by section 4942, General Code, is limited to the precincts in the registration city. Under these two sections the city taxpayers pay their proportion of the compensation fixed by section 4822, General Code, and all of the compensation fixed by section 4942, General Code.

In prorating the compensation for primaries the county would be required to pay two dollars per precinct for precincts outside of a registration city, and only a part of two dollars per precinct for the precincts in the registration city, the remainder would be paid by such city. The result is that the city taxpayers would be required to pay their proportion of the amount paid by the county, and also the part prorated to the city.

The statutes are not free from doubt as to the proper construction, yet the above inequitable operations of prorating the compensation leads me to the conclusion that in applying the words "similar expenses for general elections" as used in section 4991, General Code, to the compensation of the members and clerks of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections, they must be construed to apply to such compensation for conducting elections and not to the compensation fixed for services in registering electors.

The compensation for conducting elections is paid by the county by section 4822, General Code, and therefore, the compensation for conducting primaries as authorized by section 4990, General Code, is also paid by the county, whether such county has a registration city or not, and is not charged back to the political subdivision.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—BRANCH BANK.

A bank incorporated under the laws of Ohio may operate a branch bank in a particular city, village or township, named in its articles of incorporation, provided such bank is operated as an integral part of the corporation and the books of the corporation at all times show its financial situation in such manner as to make it unnecessary for an examiner of the banking department to make separate examination of the branch or branches.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked me to amplify my opinion rendered to you on June 16, 1913, relative to the establishment of branch banks by state banks, either within or outside of the corporate limits of the city or village named in the bank's charter as its principal place of business. In this opinion I held that branch banks could not be established, either within or without the corporate limits of the city, village or township where the bank is located, and you now ask whether this inhibition would apply to branch offices of a bank operated in the corporate limits of the city, village or township named in the articles of incorporation of the bank as the place where its business is to be transacted, such branches or branch offices having no independent capital, offices or books, and being in reality an integral part of the bank proper; controlled by the same board of directors; and the books of the main bank showing at all times the exact status of the assets, business and transactions of the bank as a whole.

Section 9703 of the General Code, which prescribes the form of articles of incorporation to be subscribed and acknowledged by persons desiring to incorporate a banking company, provides:

> "(a) The place where its business is to be transacted, designating the particular city, village or township."

This paragraph was a part of section 2 of the Thomas act, 99 O. L., 269. As originally passed it provided:

> "(b) The city, village or township where its principal office is to be located, or where its principal business is to be transacted."

Prior to the passage of the Thomas act no question had ever been raised as to the right of banks to establish branches in the cities or villages in which they were located, and in almost all the large cities of the state such branches were established and are still in operation.

Since the passage of said act, my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, held that branch banks could not be established (see opinions of attorney general 1910-1911 at page 565), and I came to the same conclusion in the opinion to which I have above referred. This opinion I think is correct. The statute clearly provides that the business of a bank incorporated under the laws of Ohio must be transacted in the particular city, village or township named in its articles of incorporation; and by section 724 of the General Code it is made your duty to ascertain that such corporation is conducting its business at the place designated in its articles of incorporation. This clearly forbids the establishment of branches outside the limits of the particular city, village or township named. But it will be noted that there is nothing in the sections which I have quoted, nor, so far as I know, in any law of Ohio, which provides that the business of such a corporation must be transacted at a particular office or banking house in such city, village or township, and nowhere else.

Therefore, if the business of the corporation is transacted within the limits of the city, village or township named in its articles of incorporation, as an entirety, controlled by one board of directors and with its assets, liabilities, earnings and expenses combined on one set of books, so that its books and assets located at one place, would at all times be accessible for the purposes of examination, and would show at all times its exact financial condition; then it seems to me the law would be complied with; and if branch banks or offices can be operated in the same city, village or township in such manner as at all times to compose an integral part of the corporate entity, and in no way a separate or distinct institution, then there is nothing in our laws to prohibit their establishment.

The certificate of organization required from persons desiring to establish a national bank, under the laws of the United States, is quite similar to the articles of incorporation required by our laws. The United States statute (section 5134) provides as to the place of location of the proposed bank.

> "(2) Place—Second—The place where its operations of discount and deposit are to be carried on, designating the state, territory, or district, and the particular county and city, town or village."

but the United States law also provides, section 5190,

> "The usual business of each national bank association shall be transacted at an office or banking house located in the place specified in its organization certificate."

Under section 5190, above quoted, and not under section 5134, it has been held that a national bank cannot maintain branches. This holding is made expressly upon the provisions of section 5190, and there is no similar provision in our law, and so far as I have been able to ascertain, it has never been held by the comptroller of currency nor by the courts, that section 5134 providing for the place where the business of a bank is to be transacted, inferentially prohibits the establishment of branch banks; the inference seems to be that were it not for section 5190, branch banks might be established.

My opinion, therefore, is that there is nothing in our laws which would prohibit a bank incorporated under the laws of Ohio from operating a branch in the particular city, village or township named in its articles of incorporation, provided such branch is operated as an integral part of the corporation; and provided the books of the corporation at all times show its financial situation in such manner as to make it unnecessary for an examiner to make a separate examination of the branch or branches; but that such banks cannot establish branches of any kind outside the limits of the particular city, village or township named in the articles of incorporation, nor within the limits of such city, village or township, if such branch in any manner, except physical location, is separate or distinct from the main institution.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOLS—TOWNSHIP BOARD OF EDUCATION—BOXWELL-PATTERSON GRADUATE—TUITION.

A township board of education not maintaining a high school is not required to pay the tuition of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate who received a diploma from said township board of education, who has moved with his parent into a village school district, provided his parents have an actual residence in such village. The mere fact that the father of the pupil holds a voting residence in the township, if he has an actual residence in the village would not require the township to pay the tuition.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

HON. CLARK GOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 10, 1914, you submitted a communication to this department containing the following statement of facts:

"I desire to submit the following: A Boxwell-Patterson graduate receives a diploma from York township board of education of Van Wert county, Ohio, and before he enters a high school he and his parents move into the village of Venedocia, which village is in York and Jennings townships, Van Wert county, Ohio; the pupil and his parents reside on the York township side of the Venedocia school district, the father of the boy being the owner of a farm in York township still votes in the township, and continues to hold his residence in the township, and that he moved to Venedocia for the sole purpose of sending his boy to Venedocia high school. These circumstances took place about three years ago, the father at that time purchasing a home within the village school district of Venedocia and has since resided there, and his son who holds the Boxwell-Patterson diploma has during that time resided with the father and attended the Venedocia high school.

"During the first and second years he attended the Venedocia high school, the York township board of education paid his tuition to the Venedocia board of education under and in accordance with an opinion rendered by former prosecuting attorney O. W. Kerns. This year the board of education of York township have refused to pay the tuition by reason of an opinion to that effect having been given them by me."

You further inquire as follows in reference thereto:

"Under the above statement of facts, is the board of education of York township liable for the pupil's tuition?"

In reply thereto section 7747 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

In an opinion which was rendered by this department to the Hon. D. W. Murphy, prosecuting attorney of Clermont county, under date of July 22, 1912, appears the following statement of facts:

"A Patterson graduate in Miami township, Clermont county, Ohio, attended the Milford, Ohio, school for three years as such graduate, gave due notice to the Miami township school board, and the Miami township school board paid her tuition for three years at the Milford high school.

"In March of her third year in the Milford school she moved from Miami township to Owensville special school district in Stone Lick township, Clermont county, Ohio. She continued from March to June to go to the Milford school which was her third year at that school, the Milford school maintaining a four years' course. In the following fall she again attended the Milford school for her fourth year, being then a resident of the Owensville school district in Stone Lick township, there being maintained by the Owensville school board a high school having three years' course. She did not notify the Owensville board of her attendance at the Milford high school for the fourth year. After she attended the Milford school and graduated therefrom the Owensville board of Stone Lick township refused to pay her tuition at the Milford school on the ground, first, that she had never gone to the Owensville school, second, that she was not a graduate of Stone Lick township, and, third, that she gave no notice of attending the Milford school during the fourth year.

"The board of education of both the Milford school in Miami township where she attended high school, and the board of education of the Owenville school where she resided, have requested an opinion from me as to who is liable for the payment of her tuition."

Said opinion in reference to the foregoing statement of facts, cites and comments upon section 7747 of the General Code, supra, as follows:

"After said graduate removed from Miami township where she received her diploma, to the Owensville school district, she lost her legal school residence in said township.

"It is to be noted that said section 7747 of the General Code specifically states that the board of education is only required to pay the tuition of pupils holding diplomas, and residing in township or special districts in which no high school is maintained and in which such pupils have legal school residence."

The conclusion contained in said opinion is as follows:

"For the reason herein stated, I am of the opinion that the school board of Miami township is not liable the tuition of the said graduate for and during the time she attended the Milford high school after she removed from said township."

Furthemore, section 7681 of the General Code, as amended by the 80th general assembly, April 20, 1913, and approved May 9, 1913, and found at page 897 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws, provides as follows:

"The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district children's home or orphans' asylum located in such a school district but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work at the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

It is to be noted that said section contains the specific provision to the effect that the schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district.

The provision so contained in this section seems to apply to the situation as set forth in the statement of facts contained in your inquiry for the reason that the particular people inquired about are actual residents in the Venedocia school district and the fact that the parents, or rather the father, owns a farm in York township and still votes in said township, does not in my judgment alter or change the said provision contained in said section 7681 of the General Code, supra. In other words, while the parent of the child in question still has a legal residence in York township for the purpose of voting, nevertheless, his actual residence under the facts stated in your inquiry, is within the Venedocia school district and this entitles his son to attend the Venedocia school free of charge, provided he is within the age of six and twenty-one years.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that the board of education of York township is not liable for such pupil's tuition while so attending the schools of Venedocia school district.

This opinion is written in the assumption that the actual residence of the parents of the scholar has been established in the Venedocia district not for the mere purpose of permitting said children to attend in such school district without paying tuition, such residence only continuing during the school term or part thereof.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE PLUMBING CODE—PRIVATE DWELLING—PLUMBING RESOLUTIONS—MUNICIPAL BOARD OF HEALTH—PLUMBER'S LICENSE.

1. The state building code does not cover private dwellings, therefore, there are no state plumbing resolutions in regard to private dwellings. To regulate plumbing in private dwellings in a city or in a village, not having a building department, it is necessary under section 4420, General Code, that the board of health pass resolutions governing the same.

2. Council of a municipality has a duty under section 4457, General Code, which may be compelled by mandamus to make appropriations for municipal board of health expenses which would include expenditures for publishing regulations and for the salary of plumbing inspector.

3. Under sample regulations submitted, a man could do plumbing in his own residence without a license, but would be required to secure a permit and be subject to further requirements with respect to inspection, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 29th, you submit the following communication:
HON. CHARLES W. CHEW, City Solicitor, Mansfield, Ohio.

"I am sending you a matter that was put up to me, as city solicitor, by the board of health of this city.

"The plumbers of this city are agitating the matter of the appointment of a plumbing inspector for the city.

"It is my opinion that the Code is not broad enough to cover the inspection of private residences and that it only applies to buildings that are mentioned, and that if a plumbing inspector was appointed he would be without authority to act in case of private residences. However, I would like to have your opinion on this matter before we act."

Enclosed therewith you sent a copy of a list of inquiries from the board of health with respect to their powers under a sample regulation furnished said board by the state board of health. A copy of this ordinance was enclosed with your letter.

Many of the inquiries submitted by the board of health overlap as regards the substance covered by them. It seems that primarily the board of health desires to know whether or not under the sample regulation the right and power is conferred to inspect and supervise plumbing in private residences. This inquiry is prompted in the main by section 7 of the sample regulation, which section is as follows:

"The inspector shall be notified by the person doing same, when any plumbing work is ready for inspection. All parts of every plumbing system shall be made perfectly gas tight. All soil, waste and vent pipes when placed in position shall be tested by the water test in the presence of the inspector All plumbing systems when completed, and before being used, shall be tested by the water test in the presence of the inspector, and if he is satisfied that the work is done in accordance with the laws of the state or the rules and regulations of the board of health, he shall issue a certificate of approval; but otherwise shall disapprove same, and said plumbing system shall not be put to any use until they have been altered as prescribed by him, and received his approval. All plumbing work shall be left uncovered and convenient for inspection, until examined and approved by the inspector."

Under section 3637 of the General Code municipalities are empowered to provide for the licensing of plumbers, and under section 3639 of the General Code they are authorized to regulate by ordinance the use, control, repair and maintenance of buildings used for human occupancy or habitation * * *, the mode and manner of occupancy, for the purpose of insuring the healthful, safe and sanitary environment of the occupants thereof.

Under section 4420 of the General Code, it is provided that except in cities having a building department or otherwise exercising the power to regulate the erection of buildings, the board of health may regulate the location, construction and repair of water-closets, privies, cesspools, sinks, plumbing and the drains. In cities having such departments or exercising such power, the council by ordinance shall prescribe such rules and regulations as are approved by the board of health, and shall provide for their enforcement.

Under section 4421 the board of health is also given power to regulate plumbing, drains and other places where dangerous or offensive substances are or may accumulate; and under the same statute the board may prosecute for failure to have plumbing systems maintained in a sanitary and wholesome condition.

Under section 4413 of the General Code a municipal board of health is empowered to make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances; and under this statute orders and regulations intended for the general public must be advertised, recorded and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record of such are to be given the same effect in the courts as is given ordinances.

Under these provisions it is clear that the board of health of a municipality, where a building department is not maintained, or where the power to regulate the erection of buildings is not otherwise exercised, is empowered to enact rules and regulations regulating the licensing of plumbers, and providing for the inspection of plumbing systems with a view to compelling such systems to be installed in accordance with the rules laid down by the board or by the state laws. It is needless to say that where the state itself has prescribed a restriction or a requirement the law of the state takes precedence, and any order or regulation of a municipal corporation or board of health in conflict therewith would be to the extent, at least, of such conflict, invalid.

Coming then to the sample regulation submitted by the state board, under the provisions above referred to, it will not be disputed that if your city has no building department, and is not otherwise exercising the regulation of building construction, the board of health is empowered to pass the sample regulation submitted. It is manifest, however, that the regulation existing for and of itself alone, would be very incomplete in its terms. It is clear from the terms of this ordinance that all persons engaging in the business of plumbing in the city will be required to procure licenses (section 1), and that no plumbing work may be done in said city (with certain exceptions in the nature of repairs or leaks) without a permit being first issued therefor by the said board of health, (sections 3 and 8), and that such permit will not be issued until suitable plans and a description in duplicate of the work to be done has been submitted to the inspector in plumbing and approved by him.

It is clear that these provisions have a direct and undoubted application to all manner and forms of plumbing upon buildings of every class. A doubt arises, however, with respect to the construction of section 7 above quoted, pertaining to the certificate of approval of the plumbing inspector. Under this section it is clear that he may not approve until all parts of every plumbing system are made perfectly gas tight and have been subjected to the water test. The further prescription of this section, however, "that he shall be satisfied that the work is done in accordance with the laws of the state or the rules and regulations of the board of health," is under the present condition of affairs in the city very indefinite and unsatisfactory as regards private dwellings. It has always been regarded as settled by this department that the state building code has no application to private dwellings. The inspector, therefore, with reference to the inspection of such has no guidance whatever so far as state laws are concerned, and inasmuch as your board of health have as yet passed no regulations in this connection, it is clear that this part of section 7 is of absolutely no force and effect and can have no bearing whatever with reference to private dwellings. The answer is that it is necessary for the board of health to prescribe such rules and regulations as are thought desirable with respect to the installation of plumbing in private residences. Until this is done the board of health in this connection will have only such powers as are granted by sections 4420, et seq., of the General Code, when the plumbing in question amounts to a nuisance or may be regarded as dangerous to life or health.

It is further desired to know how the expense of paying for publication of regulations by the board of health is to be provided for and met. Section 4451 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "When expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified. The council may levy and set apart the necessary sum to pay such expenses and to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter. Such levy shall, however, be subject to the restrictions contained in this title."

By this statute it is made the duty of the council to make the necessary appropriations to meet expenses lawfully incurred by the board of health, and council may be compelled to comply with this duty by means of mandamus if necessary, either by making an appropriation if the funds are available, and if not, by making a levy to provide the same. The same applies with reference to the provisions for the salary of the plumbing inspector.

Lastly you inquire whether under this sample regulation, the man may do his own plumbing in his private residence without having a plumbing license, or whether he must hire a licensed plumber. The sample regulation in question under section 1 requires only those persons, firms or corporations to obtain a license who engage "in the business of plumbing." A man installing plumbing in his own residence, and not doing such work for others for compensation, is not engaged in the business of plumbing. I must conclude, therefore, that under this regulation a man would not ipso facto be prevented from doing plumbing work in his own residence without a license. Such an individual, however, would not be exempted from the other requirements of this ordinance with respect to the obtaining of a permit, the necessity of approval by the plumbing inspector, and compliance with all rules and regulations of the board of health and the state law.

Whilst the questions submitted to you by the board of health are about sixteen in number, I have endeavored to reduce the same to the above answers. I trust that I have, in substance, covered the entire ground of the inquiries submitted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES—CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The state examiners appointed by the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices are within the classified service and subject to examination, unless the civil service commission shall determine that as a matter of fact it is impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of state examiners by competitive examination.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 8, 1914, you inquire:

"The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices has submitted to us the question as to whether or not the state examiners in that bureau are within the classified service, and whether or not they are subject to examination as provided by the state civil service act."

The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices is governed by the provisions of sections 274 to 289, both inclusive of the General Code.

Section 274, General Code, provides:

"There shall be a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of the auditor of state which shall have power as hereinafter provided in sections two hundred and seventy-five to two hundred and eighty-nine, inclusive, to inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state officers including every state educational, benevolent, penal and reformatory institution, public institution and the offices of each taxing district, or public institution in the state of Ohio. By virtue of his office the auditor of state shall be chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and as such appoint not exceeding three deputy inspectors and supervisors, and a clerk. No more than two deputy inspectors and supervisors shall belong to the same political party."

Section 276, General Code, authorizes the appointment of assistants who shall be known as "state examiners." Said section reads:

"The chief inspector and supervisor shall appoint such assistants as he deems necessary, who shall be known as state examiners, and such other assistants as he deems necessary, who shall be known as assistant state examiners. State examiners and assistant state examiners shall receive the following compensation for each day necessarily employed by them in the discharge of such duties as may be assigned to them: (Here follows amount of compensation.)

Section 284, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 506, provides:

"The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall examine each public office. Such examination of township, village and school district offices shall be made at least once in every two years and all other examinations shall be made at least once a year, except that the offices of justices of the peace shall be examined at such times as the bureau shall determine. On examination, inquiry shall be made into the methods, accuracy and legality of the accounts, records, files and reports of the office, whether the laws, ordinances and orders pertaining to the office have been observed, and whether the requirements of the bureau have been complied with."

By virtue of this section as amended the bureau is required to make the examination. Prior to this amendment this section provided in part:

"The chief inspector and supervisor, a deputy inspector and supervisor, or a state examiner, shall examine the condition of each public office, * * *"

By virtue of this section prior to its amendment, the state examiner was required by statute to make the examination, but by the amendatory act the bureau of inspecion and supervision of public offices is required to make the examination. The state examiner now makes his examination by virtue of the authority granted to the bureau, and not by authority granted directly to him.

The statute designates these state examiners as assistants of the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices. In making a report of their examination they in fact certify to it in their own names. They are assistants within the meaning of subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, which reads:

"Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

They are not deputies within the meaning of subdivision 8 (a) of said section 8, which reads:

"The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

By virtue of section 274, General Code, supra, the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices is authorized to appoint a clerk, and section 275, General Code, fixes the salary of such clerk.

Section 2249, General Code, fixes a salary for the chief clerk of the auditor of state as follows:

"The annual salaries of the appointees herein enumerated of elective state officers shall be as follows:

"Deputy auditor of state, three thousand dollars; chief clerk to auditor of state, two thousand four hundred dollars; deputy inspectors and supervisors of public offices, each, two thousand five hundred dollars."

Section 271, General Code, provides:

"Not less than six times each year, the financial transactions of each public institution of the state, including the monthly financial statements required by law to be filed by the officers thereof with the auditor of state, shall be thoroughly and critically inspected and examined. Such further inspection and examination shall be made as is deemed necessary by the governor and auditor of state."

These duties are similar in character to those required of the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices.

The duties required by the auditor by section 274, General Code, wherein he is designated as the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, do not give him an additional office, but this section adds new duties to the office of auditor of state.

The auditor of state as an elective and principal executive officer would be entitled under subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, to two clerks or assistants in the unclassified service, and the auditor of state may designate such positions. He may select two state examiners, or two clerks, or one of each.

However, there are more than two state examiners, and these are not placed in the unclassified service by section 8 of the civil service act, but are in the classified service, unless taken out by the state civil service commission because it is impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations.

You call my attention to the provisions of section 285, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 506, which reads:

"The chief inspector and supervisor, each deputy inspector and each state examiner, shall have such authority to issue subpoena and compulsory process, to direct service thereof by a sheriff or constable, to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers before him, to administer oaths, and to punish for disobedience of subpoena, refusal to be sworn, or to answer as a witness, or to produce books and papers, as is conferred upon officers authorized to take depositions. Sheriffs and constables shall receive the same fees as for like services in similar cases, and witnesses shall receive the same fees as are allowed in the common pleas court. The chief inspector, and, subject to his approval, each deputy inspector and each state examiner, shall likewise have authority to employ such experts or other assistants as may be necessary to disclose the facts concerning any matter under investigation, and fix their compensation."

The employment of experts and assistants by the state examiner is subject to the approval of the chief inspector.

The state examiners are authorized to subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance and may punish for disobedience of subpoena, refusal to be sworn, or for refusal to answer questions or furnish books and papers. This power is granted to enable the state examiner to make a thorough examination of the public offices and is an incident to their power to make an investigation. Their main duties are to examine and investigate. The examination of witnesses is a part of that investigation.

The case of People vs. Kraft, 145 App. Div. (N. Y.), 662, which was affirmed without report in 204 N. Y., 626, concerned examiners of stock transfers. The civil service commission placed the positions in the classified service and it was sought to have the court place them in the unclassified service on the ground that as a matter of law it was impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. The action of the civil service commission was sustained.

"These examiners are in fact secret service men. Their sole duties are of a detective nature, involving not only thorough knowledge of bookkeeping, but a general commercial experience, which will enable them to detect the many devices by which this law may be sought to be evaded. Not only extensive business experience, but a keen acumen is a necessary qualification for the successful performance of duties which are unusually exacting."

The duties of these examiners are very much like the duties of the state examiners now under consideration.

Section 15 of the civil service act, section 486-15, General Code, as to promotions, must be considered. This section reads:

"Vacancies in positions in the competitive class shall be filled so far as practicable by promotions. The commission shall provide in its rules for keeping a record of efficiency for each employe in the competitive classified service, and for making promotions in the competitive classified service on the basis of merit, to be ascertained as far as practicable by promotional examinations, by conduct and capacity in office, and by seniority in service; and shall provide that vacancies shall be filled by promotion in all cases where, in the judgment of the commission, it shall be for the best interest of the service so to fill such vacancies. All examinations for promotion shall be competitive. In promotional examinations efficiency and seniority in service shall form a part of the maximum mark attainable in such examination. In all cases where vacancies are to be filled by promotion, the commission shall certify to the appointing power only the name of the person having the highest rating. The method of examination for promotions, the manner of giving notice thereof, and the rules governing the same shall be in general the same as those provided for original examinations."

It will be observed that efficiency and seniority of service is an important factor in examinations for promotions.

Section 276, General Code, authorizes the appointment of assistant state examiners, and who are in fact assistants to such state examiners. These assistants are in the field and are acquiring knowledge which should fit them for the positions of state examiners. One of the purposes of the civil service act is to secure and retain the benefit of the experience gained in office or in the employ of the state.

It is therefore my conclusion that it cannot be determined as a matter of law that it is impracticable to hold competitive examinations of applicants for the positions of state examiners in the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices. The question of the practicability of examinations should be determined by the state civil service commission.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY ASSESSOR—CLERK OF BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—TAX COMMISSION.

A deputy assessor cannot be appointed as clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, without first resigning as deputy assessor, for the reason that under a rule of the tax commission the term of office of deputy assessor has been prescribed as indefinite or indeterminate, and, consequently, such term of office is not over as soon as the time within which personal property is to be assessed and passed. The law prescribes that a deputy assessor shall not hold any office of profit, except office in the state militia, and office of notary public; the clerk of the board of elections is an office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 28, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 29th, submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

"A person holding the position of clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections resigned said position to accept appointment as a deputy assessor. He has now completed the work of assessing the property for the year 1914.

"Question. May he be reappointed as clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections without first resigning as deputy assessor?

"This commission calls your attention to the journal entry fixing the time of employment of deputy assessors, which was submitted to it by your department as follows:

"'For the purposes of sections 3 and 17 of the act of April 18, 1913, G. C., sections 5581 and 5595 and with a view to avoiding difficulties under the state civil service law, it is hereby ordered that all deputy assessors shall hold their respective offices for indefinite periods of time.

"'The commission determined and fixed the subassessment districts, the number of deputy assessors to be employed in each and the time within which the work of assessing property for the year 1914 shall be completed in each as follows, to wit:'"

Your question involves consideration of the following sections of the so-called Warnes Law, 103 O. L., 786:

"Section 3. Each district assessor shall appoint such number of deputy assessors, assistants, experts, clerks and employes as may, from time to time, be prescribed for his district by the tax commission of Ohio. Such deputy assessor, assistants, experts, clerks and employes shall hold their respective offices and employments for such times as may be prescribed by the tax commission.

"Section 38. A district assessor, deputy assessor, member of a district board of complaints or any assistant, clerk or other employe of a district assessor or district board of complaints shall not, during his term of office or period of service or employment, as fixed by law or prescribed by the tax commission of Ohio, hold any office of profit, except offices in the state militia and the office of notary public.

"Section 54. The tax commission of Ohio shall, from time to time, prescribe such general and uniform rules and regulations and issue such orders and instructions, not inconsistent with any provision of law, as may be deemed necessary respecting the manner of the exercise of the powers and the discharge of the duties of any and all officers, relating to the assessment of real and personal property and the levy and collection of taxes.

"Section 4. * * * The deputy assessor shall have and perform, under the direction of the district assessor, and in such territory as may be assigned to him by the district assessor, all powers and duties of the district assessor, except those provided for by sections 7, 8, 12, 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 31, 32, 47, 49, 53, 58, 63, 64 and 65 of this act.

"Section 46. In addition to the duties specifically imposed by law upon district assessors, deputy assessors and district boards of complaints, they and each of them shall perform such other duties as the tax commission of Ohio in the exercise of its powers may from time to time direct, and in the discharge of such duties they and each of them shall exercise all and singular the powers in them vested by this act."

Except in section 54, supra, I find no authority on the part of the tax commission to prescribe the time within which the work of assessing property shall be completed. I think the power clearly exists in the commission, and raise no question as to that; I mention the point because by its order fixing the time within which the personal property shall be assessed the commission has not fixed the "period of employment" of deputy assessors within the meaning of sections 3 and 38 of the act, but has merely by order prescribed the time within which such deputies shall perform certain functions. Their term of office having been prescribed as an indefinite one by other provisions of the same order, it is clear that the deputies so employed or appointed, may at any time be called upon to furnish services either by the adoption of a new rule by the tax commission, similar to the one fixing the time within which the assessment of personal property shall be completed, extending that time; or otherwise in a number of ways which might be imagined but need not be mentioned.

I am of the opinion that the commission's order has the effect of fixing the term of office or period of employment of a deputy assessor as indefinite; and that such indefinite duration of service is the "term of office or period of employment" contemplated in sections 3 and 38 of the act. It follows, therefore, that the deputy assessor mentioned by you must resign his office in order to accept appointment as clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CERTIFICATE—APPROPRIATED FUNDS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS —RAILROAD COMPANY—GRADE CROSSINGS.

It is not necessary that a certificate of an appropriated fund be furnished when the county commissioners enter into a contract with a railroad company to make a change in grade crossings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of April 18th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Is it necessary that a certificate of the appropriated funds be furnished where the county commissioners enter into contract with a railroad company to make a change in a grade crossing?"

The statutes providing for the procedure pertinent to the alteration of a grade crossing by agreement between the county and the railroad are sections 8863-8873 of the General Code. I quote the following sections as those having an immediate bearing on your inquiry:

> "Section 8864. When it is deemed necessary by a municipality or a county to join with any railroad company or companies in the alteration or abolition of a grade or other crossing, the council of the municipality, by a two-thirds vote of all the members elected thereto, or the commissioners of the county, by a unanimous vote, by resolution, shall declare such necessity and intent, and state therein the manner in which the alterations in the crossing are to be made, giving the method of constructing the new crossing with the grades for the railroad or railroads and the public way or ways; also what land or other property it is necessary to appropriate, and how their cost is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies; also by whom the work of construction is to be done and how its cost is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies.
> "Section 8866. In not less than thirty nor more than ninety days after the passage of such resolution the council or commissioners shall determine whether it or they will proceed with the proposed improvement or not. If it is decided to proceed therewith, an ordinance by the council or resolution by the commissioners shall be passed, which ordinance or resolution must contain, in addition to the terms and conditions stated in such resolution, the plans and specifications of the proposed alteration and improvement, a statement of the damages claimed or likely to accrue by reason thereof, and how their payment is to be apportioned between the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies; also who shall supervise the work of construction. Upon the acceptance of this resolution or ordinance by resolution by the railroad company or companies, through their directors, it shall constitute an agreement, valid and binding on the municipality or county and the railroad company or companies respectively. Such agreement shall thereupon be filed in the common pleas court of the county in which the crossing is located, for entry upon its records, whereupon it shall have the same force and effect as a decree of the court.

"Section 8867. The land or property required to make the alteration in the street or highway necessitated by the proposed improvement, shall be purchased or appropriated by the municipality or county in the manner provided by law for the appropriation of private property for public use, and the land or property required to make the alteration in the railroad or railroads necessitated by the proposed improvement, shall be purchased or appropriated by the railroad company or companies in the manner provided for the appropriation of private property by such corporation.

"Section 8868. The cost of the construction of the improvement in the crossing, including the cost of land or property purchased or appropriated, and the payment of damages to abutting property shall be apportioned as follows: The railroad company or companies, if several railroads cross a public way at or near the same point, shall pay not less than sixty-five per cent. and the municipality or county not more than thirty-five per cent. of such cost. Within these limits the apportionment may be fixed by the agreement hereinbefore provided for."

"The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county, township or board of education, is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

Under the above statutes after council, under section 8866 of the General Code, passes its ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement, the question of the cost of the improvement, and the amount apportioned between the railroad and the county have all been determined and agreed upon, the acceptance of the ordinance determining to proceed completes the contract between the railroad and the county.

The issuance of bonds for the purpose of raising money to pay the county's portion of the cost of such improvement under section 8870 of the General Code, is done subsequent to the completion of the agreement.

It is clear, therefore, that these statutes cannot contemplate that the money is in the treasury at the time the agreement is entered into. These provisions, therefore, must be construed as an exception to the general provisions of section 5660 above quoted, requiring a certificate of the clerk with respect to the moneys in the treasury, or placed on the duplicate or in process of collection.

In support of this construction the following language of Judge Minshall in the case of Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S., 104, may be presented:

> "The plain purpose of the Burns law was to prevent the incurring of an indebtedness by a municipal corporation beyond the ordinary resources of its revenue and whereby an annual excess of indebtedness will be created over these revenues. But it has not the vigor of a constitutional provision, and cannot therefore apply to a statute that not only authorizes the making of a particular kind of improvement, but also provides the mode and manner in which the funds are to be raised to defray the costs and expense of it. Under this statute the burden of the taxpayer will neither be increased nor diminished by the time when the contract is let for the work of the improvement. The making of the contract has reference, for its performance on the part of the village, to a fund to be raised by taxation and assessment, authorized by the act for the particular purpose, and which can be applied to no other. These considerations show the inapplicability of the Burns law to improvements made under a statute like the one in question. Where a contract is made to be discharged from a general fund, that may be applied to a variety of purposes, more obligations may be incurred by way of anticipation than can be discharged from it, this causing an annual deficit, to meet which increased taxation must be resorted to. Hence the wisdom of the Burns law, which in such cases requires that the money must be in the treasury, applicable to the particular expenditure before it is made. Here, however, the fund to be raised is appropriated by the statute to a particular improvement; and all taxation and assessment authorized must be limited to the costs and expenses of the improvement. All the limitations in this regard are in the statute. The bonds to be issued shall not exceed twelve and a half per centum of the total tax valuation of the property of the village; shall be made payable in thirty years and bear interest at a rate not to exceed four per centum.
> "It is a rule observed constantly in the construction of statutes, that where the general provisions of a statute conflict with the more specific provisions of another, or are incompatible with its provisions, the latter is to be read as an exception to the former"

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the certificate of the clerk is not necessary for the proceedings under these statutes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—BUDGET APPROPRIATION BILL—AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE—ASSIGNMENT OF VOUCHER.

The auditor of state does not have general power under section 5 of the budget appropriation bill to require all departments to present their vouchers for the auditor's warrant before delivering them to parties in whose favor they are drawn. The auditor of state, has the right, and it is his duty to refuse to issue a warrant in any amount on a voucher or requisition which has not been properly assigned.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of February 26th, requests my opinion upon the following question arising under section 5 of the 1914 appropriation bill, 104 O. L., 73.

> "Under the following section of the 1914 appropriation bill, can the auditor of state require all departments of the state government to present their vouchers for the auditor's warrant, and would the same be lawful?
> "Would it, under this section, be lawful for the auditor of state to refuse payment on vouchers presented by banks, unless properly assigned?"

Said section 5 is in full as follows:

> "No money appropriated in section 1 of this act shall be drawn except in accordance with the detailed classification of the budget of authorized expenditures, and upon a requisition or voucher presented to the auditor, approved by the head of a department or by the trustees of an institution or by the members of a board or commission, or by an officer or employe of such department, institution, board or commission, specially designated by resolution or order to approve and present such requisition or voucher, a copy of which resolution or order shall be filed with the auditor of state. Such requisitions or vouchers shall set forth, in itemized form and specify the budgetary classification of, the service rendered, or material furnished, or expenses incurred, and the date of purchase, and time of service, and showing that competitive bids were secured, or that it was an emergency requiring purchase; and all institutions, boards, commissions and departments to which appropriations are herein made shall render to the auditor of state an itemized account of such receipts and expenditures, as may be required by the auditor of state; and such institutions, boards, commissions or departments shall be subject to inspection by the auditor of state; and it shall be the duty of the auditor of state to see that these provisions are complied with."

As throwing light upon the interpretation of this section for the purpose of this question I refer to section 21 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "On or before the sixth day of each month each officer or board of the state shall furnish the auditor of state, upon blanks prepared and furnished by him, a detailed and itemized statement with the certificate of such officer or board as to the truth thereof thereto attached, of all checks or requisitions issued on behalf of such department on the auditor of state for warrants on the treasurer of state, during the preceding month. As soon as such statements have been received, the auditor of state shall compare them with the accounts in his office, and certify to each such officer or board a list of checks or requisitions which have been presented, and the warrants issued upon the treasury for the payment of requisitions presented during the preceding month, and which do not appear upon the certified list of such officer or board. The auditor of state shall file and carefully preserve the original statement in his office, and he shall not issue his warrant on the treasurer of state for the salary of any such officer or board until the provisions of this section have been complied with."

Of course this section of the General Code is of no higher dignity than section 5 of the appropriation bill and if there is any irreconcilable inconsistency between the two, the latter would control the expenditure of the moneys appropriated by other sections of the same act, and section 21 of the General Code and all inferences to be drawn therefrom would have to be held inapplicable to the case at hand. However, I am of the opinion that no such irreconcilable inconsistency exists and that the two sections can and must be harmonized.

The inference to be drawn from section 21, standing by itself, is to the effect that a department has the right to issue a voucher to one in whose favor the department may legally create an obligation against the state, without first presenting the claim to the auditor of state for his examination and approval.

Section 5 of the appropriation law is not inconsistent with this inference except in part. The first sentence thereof provides really for two kinds of vouchers, viz., those approved by the head of a department or by the trustees of an institution or by the members of a board or commission, and those approved by an officer and employe of such department, institution, board or commission specially designated by resolution or order to approve and present such requisition or voucher.

The requirement of the section as to the first class of requisitions or vouchers is merely that they be "presented to the auditor." The section does not require that the presentation be made by any representative of the department, board, institution or commission; therefore to this extent the section is harmonious with the inference to be drawn from section 21 of the General Code, and any holder of the requisition or voucher to whom it has been properly assigned may make presentation, subject, of course, to audit by the auditor of state.

This means, of course, that the assignee of such a voucher takes the same subject to correction in process of audit. The requisitions or vouchers are not negotiable and no one can acquire as to them the status of a bona fide holder, and therefore, the state could in no way be damaged by reason of the failure of the department, board, officer, institution or commission to present a voucher before delivering it to the party in whose name the claim exists.

With respect to the second class of vouchers and requisitions a distinction may exist. It appears from the language of the section that if the voucher is to be approved by a designated representative of the department, board, institution or commission, such representative is to have authority both to approve and present. I express no opinion as to the exact meaning of this language, particularly as to whether or not such vouchers, so approved by a representative rather than by the head of the department are required to be presented before being delivered. I content myself merely with the remark already made to the effect that there may be a distinction between the two classes of vouchers in this respect, because what I have stated relative to the first class of vouchers is sufficient, it seems to me, to show that your first question must be answered generally in the negative. That is to say, the auditor of state does not have general power under section 5 of the appropriation bill to require all departments to present their vouchers for the auditor's warrant before delivering them to the parties in whose favor they are drawn.

Your second question must be answered in the affirmative. While the auditor of state has the right, and it is his duty to pay a claim against the state on account of which a voucher or requisition has been issued to any person to whom, or bank to which the same has been assigned, it is the right and duty to refuse to issue a warrant in any amount on a voucher or requisition which has not been properly assigned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW—EFFECT AS TO PRISONERS SENTENCED, AFTER ITS BECOMING EFFECTIVE, FOR CRIMES COMMITTED PRIOR TO THAT TIME—HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS—POWER OF COURTS TO IMPOSE INDETERMINATE SENTENCES.

The indeterminate sentence law passed February 13, 1913, is ex post facto and void as to prisoners sentenced after it became effective, for crimes committed prior to that date. Where the courts impose definite sentences after that date upon such prisoners, such sentences should stand regardless of the indeterminate sentence law, and such prisoners should be released on the expiration of such definite term.

The question of the legal effect of indeterminate sentences imposed upon prisoners after May 29, 1913, for crimes committed prior to that date should be determined by habeas corpus proceedings in view of the question of the power of the court to impose indeterminate sentences under the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 4, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a request for an opinion from one Chas Murray, serial No. 42149, of your institution, asking whether he is legally detained in the Ohio penitentiary. His letter states that he was sentenced by the court of common pleas of Crawford county, Ohio, to a term of one year on the ------day of July, 1913, for grand larceny, and was received at the Ohio penitentiary on the 16th day of July, 1913; that the crime for which he was sentenced was committed in August, 1912, and that after he was received at the penitentiary he was entered on the records as serving an indeterminate sentence of from one to seven years for grand larceny instead of one year as fixed by the court, and that he is still confined by the penitentiary, although the "short time" on a one year's sentence (10 months) under section 2163 of the General Code, expired May 15, 1914.

This department would ordinarily decline to pass upon any such question until it has been submitted by yourself or the Ohio board of administration, but because of the opinion rendered by this department on September 26, 1913, to you, I feel it necessary to advise you in this case without waiting for a request to be submitted in the regular manner.

The opinion referred to was written in reply to your inquiry of August 28, 1913, part of which was as follows:

> "Am I right in my understanding that where a sentence is passed subsequent to the effective date of the new indeterminate sentence law, 103 O. L., p. 29, and the commitment papers provide for a definite term of years, that the parties so sentenced are to be entered on our records as indeterminates and subject to the provisions of this law, regardless of the date of conviction?"

The opinion written in response to this inquiry held that:

> "In view of the fact that this statute (indeterminate sentence law, 103 O. L., p. 29) relates only to the sentence, the court should impose an indeterminate one, and you should enter such persons on your records as indeterminates if sentenced after the above section was in force."

While the holding of the opinion is correct when standing alone, it is incorrect when read as an answer to the question submitted by you in your letter of August 28, 1913, and I wish to substitute the following opinion for the one given under date of September 26, 1913, to which reference has just been made.

The indeterminate sentence law, passed February 13, 1913 (103 O. L., p. 29), reads:

> "Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio penitentiary for felonies, except treason, and murder in the first degree, shall make them general and not fixed or limited in their duration. All terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter, but no such terms shall exceed the maximum, nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for the felony of which the prisoner was convicted. If a prisoner is sentenced for two or more separate felonies, his term of imprisonment may equal, but shall not exceed, the aggregate of the maximum terms of all the felonies for which he was sentenced and, for the purposes of this chapter, he shall be held to the serving one continuous term of imprisonment. If through oversight, or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary, should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter, and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section."

Before the passage of this act, the courts of this state were empowered by section 7388-6 Revised Statutes, to impose general sentences to the penitentiary. In adopting the General Code, a part of these statutes was omitted and a question was raised later as to whether the change was sufficient to divest the courts of this power. In an opinion under date of March 31, 1913, this department held that such power was still in the courts. However, the courts in this state seldom imposed indeterminate sentences to the penitentiary under the old statute and I am informed that but few prisoners were received in your institution to serve indeterminate sentences until after the new indeterminate sentence law became effective, which made it compulsory on the courts to impose such general sentences. The indeterminate sentence law above quoted, besides amending section 2166 of the General Code, repealed by implication section 12374 of the General Code, which read:

"When sentencing a person to imprisonment in the penitentiary, the court shall declare for what period he shall be kept at hard labor, and for what period, if any, he shall be kept in solitary confinement without labor."

since it is clear that the court cannot make the sentence "general and not fixed or limited in duration" and at the same time comply with section 12374, supra. This section was in full force and effect on August 29, 1912, the day upon which Chas. Murray committed the crime of grand larceny for which he was sentenced to serve his prison term in the Ohio penitentiary, and the question is, should Chas. Murray, who was sentenced on the ____day of July, 1913, have been sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law passed Feb. 13, 1913, and which became effective on the 29th day of May, 1913?

Section 26, General Code, reads:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution, or proceeding, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

It has been held that the commission of a crime is a cause of prosecution within the meaning of this section and that the subsequent amendment or repeal of such criminal statute does not affect the prosecution of such prior offenses.

Bergin vs. State, 31 O. S., 111.
Chinn vs. State, 47 O. S., 575.
State vs. Lawrence, 74 O. S., p. 25.

In the case of Bergin vs. State, supra, the court said at page 113:

"The phrase 'causes of prosecution' is somewhat vague, and if standing alone, its meaning might not be easily ascertainable; but when applied to criminal prosecutions, standing as it does in connection with 'causes of action in civil actions' there can be no doubt as to the sense in which it is used in this act. A statutory cause of action in a civil case, is that given by the statute and upon which the action is based. So in this statute the phrase 'causes of prosecution' must be held to mean the offense or crime defined in the statutes, and which gives rise to the prosecution."

The cause of prosecution in the case submitted by Murray was the statute defining the crime of larceny and the indeterminate sentence act in no way affected that statute. Therefore, unless arrest was made and the prosecution commenced at the time of the passage of this act, section 26 would not apply nor have any bearing on the case. However, if the arrest was made before the act began to operate, the prosecution was pending when the act became a law.

Section 12374 above quoted provides that:

"When sentencing a person to imprisonment in the penitentiary, the courts shall declare for what period he shall be kept at hard labor and for what period, if any, he shall be kept in solitary confinement without labor."

Now it has been shown that the indeterminate sentence act, passed February 13, 1913, repeals this section by implication, but inasmuch as this section relates to the remedy, its repeal cannot affect prosecutions pending before the indeterminate sentence act of February 13, 1913, became effective or operate upon prisoners arrested prior to that date for the crime for which they are now serving.

Palmer vs. State, 42 O. S., 595.

In other words, my interpretation of section 26, General Code, with respect to the indeterminate sentence law passed on February 13, 1913, leads me to this conclusion: that where prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary were arrested and charged with the crime for which they are now serving, prior to the date upon which the indeterminate sentence law became effective, viz., May 29, 1913, that law does not apply and such prisoners should have been sentenced as if such law did not exist. Other than this, section 26 has no bearing on the situation.

But aside from section 26, General Code, we must view the passage of the new indeterminate sentence law from a constitutional standpoint and determine whether or not it can operate upon all prisoners sentenced after the date it became effective, viz., May 29, 1913, or only upon those who have committed crimes since the date on which it became a law.

Article 1, section 10 of the constitution of the United States, reads:

> "No state shall enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation; grant letters of marque or reprisal; coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver, coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility."

In the case of Kring vs. Missouri, 107 U. S., 221, 27 Lawyer's Edition, 505, it was held:

> "Any law is an ex post facto law, within the meaning of the constitution, passed after the commission of a crime charged against a defendant, which, in relation to that offense or its consequences, alters the situation of the party to his disadvantage and no one can be criminally punished in this country, except according to a law prescribed for his government by the sovereign authority before the imputed offense was committed, and which existed as a law at the time."

Section 2163 of the General Code, reads:

> "A person confined in the penitentiary, or hereafter sentenced thereto for a definite term other than life, having passed the entire period of his imprisonment without violation of the rules and discipline, except such as the board of managers shall excuse, will be entitled to the following diminution of his sentence:
> "(a) A prisoner sentenced for a term of one year shall be allowed a deduction of five days from each of the twelve months of his sentence.
> "(b) A prisoner sentenced for a term of two years shall be allowed a deduction of six days from each of the twenty-four months of his sentence.
> "(c) A prisoner sentenced for a term of three years shall be allowed a deduction of eight days from each of the thirty-six months of his sentence.

"(d) A prisoner sentenced for a term of four years shall be allowed a deduction of nine days from each of the forty-eight months of his sentence.

"(e) A prisoner sentenced for a term of six or more years shall be allowed a deduction of eleven days from each of the months of his full sentence.

"(g) A prisoner sentenced for a number of months or fraction of years shall be allowed the same time per month as is provided for the year next higher than maximum sentence."

This statute was rendered nugatory by the indeterminate sentence law of February 13, 1913, since definite terms in the penitentiary were dispensed with by that act and the prisoners sentenced to the penitentiary under the new indeterminate sentence law receive no deduction of time for good behavior by force of the provisions of any statute such as section 2163 above quoted. For example, a prisoner committed the crime of burglary before the passage of the indeterminate sentence law and was sentenced under it after its passage, to a term of from one to fifteen years, as provided by section 12438. Under this sentence the Ohio board of administration may keep the prisoner imprisoned 15 full years if they see fit. If he had been given a definite sentence, as was the almost universal custom prior to the enactment of the new indeterminate sentence law, under the law in force at the time the crime was committed, and the judge had given him a maximum sentence of fifteen years, he would, if his behavior in the penitentiary was good, have been entitled as a matter of law, to his release in nine years and six months. The new indeterminate law compels the court to impose upon the prisoner an indeterminate sentence instead of a definite one and thereby grants to the Ohio board of administration the power to compel the prisoner to serve five years and six months more than they could have compelled him to serve had he been convicted and sentenced under the definite sentence law in force at the time he committed the crime.

It seems clear to me, therefore, that the indeterminate sentence law passed February 13, 1913, "alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage" when it is made to operate upon prisoners who committed crime before it became effective; that as to these prisoners it is ex post facto and void and cannot be made to operate upon any prisoners save those who are sentenced for crimes committed on or after the 29th day of May, 1913, upon which date the indeterminate sentence law became effective.

This conclusion is supported by the case of Murphy vs. Commonwealth, 172 Mass., 264. In that case on a petition for a writ of error to reverse a sentence of the superior court by which the petitioner was confined in the state prison, it appears that the offenses of which he was convicted, were committed between July 19, 1892, and November 17, 1893, but that he was sentenced on May 28, 1896, under Statute 1895c, 504, entitled "An act relative to sentences to the state prison," which took effect on January 1, 1896. As the law stood when the offense was committed, the petitioner was entitled to a deduction for good behavior and to a permit to be at liberty for the time thus deducted on such terms as the prison commissioners should fix and subject to revocation by them. Held, that, as to the petitioner, the statute of 1895 was void as an ex post facto law, and that the case must be remanded to the superior court for sentence, according to the law as it was before the passage of the statute. The court in that case said on page 270:

"As the law formerly stood in this state, the effect of good conduct on the part of the prisoner was to shorten his term of imprisonment, and to give him a right to his discharge at the expiration of the shortened term * * * It would seem plain, therefore, that a subsequent statute which interfered to his disadvantage with the right of deduction for good behavior to which a convict was entitled at the time of the commission of the offense under the acts of 1857, 1858 and 1859, would have been unconstitutional and void, notwithstanding the fact that those acts related, according to their titles, to the discipline of the state prison, and to that of jails and houses of correction, and therefore appeared to pertain to prison regulation. To have taken away the right of deduction for good behavior, or to have interfered with it to the disadvantage of the convict, would have been in effect to lengthen the sentence which was provided by law for the offense at the time when it was committed; and a statute which did that clearly would have been ex post facto. See opinion of the Justices, 13 Gray, 618; Kring vs. Missouri, 107 U. S., 221; Medley, petitioner, 134 U. S., 160; Thompson vs. Utah, 170 U. S., 343; Commonwealth vs. McDonough, 13 Allen, 581; In re Cenfield, 98 Mich., 644; Ex parte Hunt, 28 Tex. App. 361."

After a consideration, therefore, of section 26, of the General Code, and section 10 of article I of the constitution of the United States, it is my opinion that the indeterminate sentence law (103 O. L., page 29) passed February 13, 1913, and effective May 29, 1913, is to operate only upon prisoners who have committed crimes on or after May 29, 1913, the day upon which that law became effective. I would therefore advise you as follows: with respect to the sentences of prisoners received at your institution since May 29, 1913.

First. Where the court has imposed a definite sentence:

If the prisoner was sentenced on or after May 29, 1913, and the crime was committed before that date, the definite sentence imposed by the court should stand and the prisoner should be released at the expiration of his "short term" in accordance with section 2163. If a person was sentenced on or after May 29, 1913, and the crime was committed on or after that date, the definite sentence imposes by the court should be made to read upon your records as an indeterminate sentence, in accordance with the provisions of the new indeterminate sentence act, to the effect that:

"If through oversight or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section."

Second. Where the court has imposed an indeterminate sentence:

If the prisoner was sentenced for a crime committed before May 29, 1913, he should not have been sentenced under the indeterminate sentence law (103 O. L., p. 29). But whether such sentence would be legal in view of the power of the court under the old section of the Revised Statues to impose an indeterminate sentence, is another question, and one which I think could better be settled by habeas corpus than by an opinion from this department and I would therefore suggest this as the proper proceeding to determine this question.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—MAY NOT REFUSE TO RECEIVE A CHILD COMMITTED BY JUVENILE COURT, EXCEPT IN CERTAIN CASES—JUVENILE COURT—GUARDIANSHIP OF CHILDREN—DEPENDENT CHILDREN—RIGHT OF BOARD OF TRUSTEES TO CONTRACT WITH FAMILIES FOR THE CARE OF CHILDREN.

1. The trustees of the county children's home cannot refuse to receive a child committed by the juvenile court to such home, unless such child so presented for admission is afflicted with an infectious or contagious disease.

2. The trustees of a children's home have the right to accept through arrangement with parents children for temporary care and custody.

3. In the commitment of a child to the children's home by the juvenile court, the trustees of the institution are immediately vested with the guardianship and control of the child, subject to the continuing jurisdiction of the juvenile court for the purpose of discipline and protection.

4. A dependent child of parents resident of the county, both of which parents have died, is eligible for admission to the county children's home, although such child is not yet one year of age. Section 3089, General Code, providing that a child should have resided in the county not less than one year not being one made for the purpose of placing a limitation upon the age of the child, but for the purpose of establishing residence.

5. The board of trustees have the legal right to enter into a contract with proper families to board and care for a child of tender years, when such children's home is not properly equipped to care for such children.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, 1010 Hartman Bldg., Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 3, 1914, as follows:

"1. May the trustees of a county children's home refuse to accept dependent or neglected children committed by the juvenile court?

"2. Have trustees of a children's home the right to accept through arrangement with parents children for temporary care and custody, such as may be incidental to sickness or other physical handicaps of a nature that a mother's pension law will not cover? For example: father is dead, mother in a hospital for several months' treatment, two children are without proper care. May such children be received at the home until this temporary disability is removed?

"3. In case of commitment of a child to the institution by the juvenile court, when nothing is said in the commitment relative to guardianship, do the trustees of the institution automatically become the guardian of the child with full power to place such child in foster home with or without adoption? (See sections 1653, 1672 and 3089 of the General Code.)

"4. In section 3089 there is a provision that a dependent child shall have resided in the county not less than one year before it is eligible for admission to a county children's home. John Doe and wife have resided in a county for one year. Shortly before the birth of their child he dies. The mother dies within a week after the child is born. Is not the child through the prior residence of its parents, if without other means of care, entitled to admission to a county children's home?

"5. In case a children's home is not properly equipped to care for babies, have the board of trustees the legal right to enter into contract with proper families or persons to board such young children until they arrive at an age suitable for care at the institution? Some county homes refuse to care for children until three years of age on the ground that they have not the equipment to care for such children satisfactorily and without risk of heavy mortality."

Answering your first question, I beg to call your attention to sections 3089 and 3090 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 890, which read:

"Section 3089. The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of sixteen years, of sound mind and free from infectious or contagious diseases, who have resided in the county not less than one year, and for such other children under such age from other counties in the state where there is no home, as the trustees of such home and the persons or authority having the custody and control of such children, by contract agree upon, who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them.

"Section 3090. They shall be admitted by the superintendent on the order of a majority of such trustees, accompanied by a statement of facts, signed by them, setting forth the name, age, birthplace, and present condition of the child named in such order, which statement of facts contained in the order, together with any additional facts connected with the history and condition of such children shall be, by the superintendent, recorded in a record provided for that purpose, which shall be confidential and only open for inspection at the discretion of the trustees."

Section 1645, General Code, relating to the juvenile court, defines the term "dependent child" and section 1653 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 872, reads in part:

"When a minor, under the age of 18 years, or any ward of the court under this chapter, is found to be dependent or neglected, the judge may make an order committing such child to the care of the children's home, if there be one in the county where such court is held."

While it is true that section 3089 allows the trustees of the children's home to determine who are "suitable children for admission," yet section 1653 confers the same authority on the juvenile judge, and when such judge orders a dependent or neglected child committed to the children's home, it is made the duty of the superintendent of such home to receive the child under section 3090. Section 3090 in providing that the children "shall be admitted by the superintendent on the order of the juvenile court or of a majority of such trustees," makes it clear that the juvenile judge, in cases that come within his jurisdiction, has the same authority as the trustees of the children's home have in other cases, in determining what children shall be admitted to such home. Of course, he is bound by the provisions of the law concerning the age, mental and moral qualifications of the child, when committing it to the children's home, but when he has passed upon these questions, his judgment is final and not subject to review by the board of trustees, and they may not, therefore, refuse to receive a child so committed to the home. The only ground I can see, upon which they might make such refusal, is this; that the child presented for admission is afflicted with an infectious or contagious disease. Such disease might, of course, appear after the order of the juvenile court had been made, and would justify the superintendent in refusing to accept the child. Other than this, I can see no legitimate reason for such refusal.

In reply to your second inquiry, I desire to call your attention to section 3089, which provides in part:

> "The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of 18 years * * * who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them."

Nothing is said in this section as to how long the inability of the parents to provide for the children must continue. It is my opinion that in the case you submit, where the father of the children is dead and the mother is in the hospital for several months' treatment, the children may be admitted to the children's home by the trustees thereof.

Your third question compels a consideration of sections 1643 and 3093, General Code, as amended (103 O. L., pages 869 and 891 respectively). These sections read:

> "Section 1643. When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age.
> "Section 3093. All inmates of such home who by reason of abandonment, neglect or dependence have been admitted or who have been by the parent or guardian voluntarily surrendered to the trustees, shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home, until they are eighteen years of age, and if such child is placed out or adopted such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age. A child shall be deemed abandoned, if at any time the parents or persons having control thereof are in arrears for his or her board for a period of one year or more. Payment of such board thereafter shall not reinstate such parents or persons in the control or guardianship of such child, unless such board shall deem it wise."

Section 1352-3 as amended, 103 O. L., p. 866, reads in part:

> "The board of state charities shall when able to do so, receive as its wards such dependent or neglected minors as may be committed to it by the juvenile court. County, district, or semi-public children's homes or any institution entitled to receive children from the juvenile court may, with the consent of the board, transfer to it the guardianship of minor wards of such institutions. If such children have been committed to such institutions by the juvenile court that court must first consent to such transfer."

Section 3089 as amended (103 O. L., p. 890) reads in part:

> "If an inmate of such home (county children's home) is found to be incorrigible, he or she shall be brought before a juvenile court for further disposition."

From a reading of these sections, it is apparent that although under section 3093, the trustees of the children's home are given "sole and exclusive guardianship" of children admitted to the home by reason of neglect or dependence, there is a continuing jurisdiction vested in the juvenile court, which such court retains "for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection" until the child attains the age of twenty-one years. The words "sole and exclusive guardianship" in section 3093 are limited in their meaning by these other sections of the Code, which plainly indicate that the protecting arm of the juvenile court remains about the child until it has attained the age of twenty years.

Answering your third question then, it is my opinion that when a dependent or neglected child is committed by the juvenile court to the county children's home, the trustees of such home are immediately vested with the guardianship and control of the child, subject to the continuing jurisdiction of the juvenile court for the purpose of discipline and protection.

Whether the juvenile court in its commitment makes the trustees of the home the guardian of the child, is of no consequence. The statute (section 3093) does this to the extent above mentioned.

Replying to your fourth inquiry, I beg to again call your attention to that part of section 3089, which reads:

> "The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of 18 years * * * who have resided in the county not less than one year."

While it is true that the child in question has not resided in the county for one year, yet I do not think this fact would make it ineligible for admission to the county children's home. The provision that the child should have "resided in the county not less than one year" is not one made for the purpose of placing a limitation upon the ages of children to be admitted to the home, but to my mind was made for the sole purpose of establishing a residence in the county. In the case referred to, this is not necessary since the child was born of parents who were residents of the county and had been for more than one year. In volume 14 of cyc., page 843, the following doctrine is stated:

> "An infant being non sui juris is incapable of fixing his domicile, which therefore during his minority follows that of the father."

At page 845 it is stated:

> "The domicile of an infant, after the death of both parents, will be that of the parent who died last."

The provision, therefore, that a child should have "resided in the county not less than one year," is not applicable to the case mentioned and the child may be admitted to the home.

Attention is called, however, to that part of section 3089, which reads:

> "The house shall be an asylum for children under the age of 18 years * * * who are in the opinion of the trustees suitable children for admission * * *."

By virtue of this provision, if the trustees are of the opinion that there are not proper facilities in the home to care for a child of such tender age, and for that reason deem it a child not "suitable for admission," they may refuse to accept it.

In answering your fourth question I have stated that the infant, whose parents are residents of the county, may be admitted by the trustees to the children's home. I have also stated that if the trustees deem the child, by reason of its tender age, not suitable for admission, they may refuse to accept it. However, inasmuch as they may accept it, it follows that if they desire to do so, and yet deem it unwise to keep the child in the home, they may contract with proper families to board and care for it, regardless of whether it is below or above the age of three years. This answers the fifth and last question submitted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HITCHING POST—RIGHT OF MUNICIPALITY TO COMPEL REPLACING A HITCHING POST ORIGINALLY PLACED BY PROPERTY OWNER.

A municipality has no authority to compel a property owner to replace a hitching post in front of his property, which had originally been placed there by a property owner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1914.

HON. GEO. C. VON BESELER, City Solicitor, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 17th, which is in part as follows:

> "'A' is the owner of a business block in the city of Painesville which abuts upon a public street in the closely built up business section of the city.
> "'A' has erected at the edge of the sidewalk hitching posts (so called) which consist of upright iron pipe embedded in concrete.
> "'A' sells to 'B' said property.
> "'B' not desiring the public to hitch in front of his property removes all said hitching posts.
> "Query. Has the city of Painesville the authority to compel the replacing of such hitching posts, they not having been maintained there continuously during a period of twenty-one years (if such condition, did it exist, affects the question)."

It appears from your statement of facts that the hitching posts were originally erected in front of this property by the person who then owned the same, presumably for some benefit which he believed would accrue to him in a business way from permitting the hitching of horses in front of his place of business. The erection of such posts was wholly voluntary on the part of such owner and the municipality was without power or authority to compel him to erect them. The present owner of this property has the right to say whether he will maintain hitching posts for the benefit of the public and if he does not desire to do this, the municipality cannot compel him to do it.

I am of the opinion that the city of Painesville cannot compel "B" to replace such hitching posts in front of his property.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—RIGHT TO CHARGE FOR WATER USED IN WATERING TROUGH OR PUBLIC DRINKING FOUNTAIN IN VILLAGE STREET—CITY HALL.

The board of trustees of public affairs cannot require the village council to pay for water furnished for watering troughs or public drinking fountains installed on a village street, said water being furnished from a municipally owned plant. Such board of public affairs cannot charge for water furnished and used in village city hall, even though part of such hall is rented as a lodge room.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1914.

HON. W. B. MOORE, Legal Counsel, Village of Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 8, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion on certain questions stated by you, as follows:

> "(a) Can the board of trustees of public affairs conducting a municipal waterworks require the village council to pay for water furnished for a watering trough installed on a village street jointly by the council and the board of trustees of public affairs for public use, and generally so used?
> "(b) Can such charge be so made for water supplied to a public drinking fountain installed by the village council upon a public square?
> "(c) Can such charge be made for water furnished and used at the village city hall, which is owned by the village and used for village purposes, but part of which is rented as a lodge room?"

Among the enumerated powers of municipal corporations, section 3619, General Code, provides as follows:

> "To provide for a supply of water, by the construction of wells, pumps, cisterns, aqueducts, water pipes, reservoirs and waterworks, for the protection thereof, and to prevent unnecessary waste of water, and the pollution thereof. To apply moneys received as charges for water to the maintenance, construction, enlargement and extension of the works, and to the extinguishment of any indebtedness created therefor."

By section 3648 of the General Code, among other things, municipalities are given power to establish, maintain and regulate drinking fountains and water troughs. By section 4357, General Code, it is provided among other things, that in each village in which a waterworks is situated, or when council orders waterworks to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years.

Section 4361 of the General Code, as amended 103 O. L., p. 561, provides that the board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control the waterworks, furnish supplies of water, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. It is further provided that such board may make such by-laws and regulations as it may deem necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of such works, and that such by-laws and regulations, when not repugnant to the ordinances of the village or to the constitution or laws of the state, shall have the same validity as ordinances. The section further provides that for the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing such waterworks, of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, and of making necessary repairs thereon, such trustees may assess a water rent of sufficient amount, in such manner as they deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water, and that when such rents are not paid, the trustees may certify the same over to the auditor of the county in which such plant is located, to be placed on the duplicate and collected as other village taxes. Or, they may collect the same by action at law in the name of the village.

By section 4362, General Code, it is provided that when waterworks are owned and operated by a village which receives its fire protection therefrom, and the proceeds from the operation of such plant is insufficient to pay the expenses of operating the same, the council of the village may levy a tax not to exceed five mills on each dollar valuation of the taxable property listed for taxation in such village, real and personal, to pay the running expenses and extensions made thereto, after applying the proceeds therefrom, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law.

The council of municipalities is given certain supervision over the management of waterworks therein situated. Touching this point, section 3962, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The council of a municipality in which waterworks are situated or in progress of construction may appoint a committee for the investigation of all books and papers, and all matters pertaining to the management of the waterworks, at least once a year, and oftener, if necessary, by reason of neglect of duty or malfeasance on the part of any officer of the works. Any such officer found by such committee so offending shall be liable to removal from office by the council."

Section 3963 of the General Code, provides that no charge shall be made by the board for supplying water for certain purposes, among which are "the use of any public building belonging to the corporation." I note that no mention is made in this section of water troughs and drinking fountains.

It is evident from the foregoing that the primary control and management of a waterworks in villages are vested in the board of trustees of public affairs and that for most purposes such board in its management of the waterworks is not subject to the control of council. Nevertheless, as a matter of course, the village in its corporate capacity is the sole owner of the waterworks and all its accessories of pipes, plugs, hydrants, buildings, machinery and all fixtures and appurtenances belonging thereto, and the board of trustees has no interest or ownership in any of these. The board as such, is a mere agency of the village for maintaining and operating the waterworks, with full power for effectuating those purposes.

With respect to the particular questions presented, it may be noted that with respect to third persons at least, exemption from payment for water supplied is never inferred and where a charter or statute requires water to be furnished free of charge to certain institutions, this duty will be confined to the uses substantially provided for in the statute and to no other.

People vs. Willis, 23 Misc. N. Y., 545.

It has been held that where a municipality operates waterworks through its agents, it may be supplied with water for certain municipal purposes free of charge.

Thus in the case of Waterworks Commissioners vs. Sewickley, supra, it was held that where a municipality erects and maintains waterworks and the board of water commissioners act as its agent, in so doing the municipality may, without the consent of the commissioners, use the water from the waterworks to sprinkle the streets, and lay sewers.

With respect to the question at issue, in the case just noted the court in its opinion says:

> "It is apparent that the sole and exclusive right and power to determine when water is required for cleaning streets and constructing and using sewers, is vested in the borough. But if the borough possesses this right and power, it cannot be trammeled or controlled by any other authority in the full performance of its functions in these regards. It must have the water, and it has the sole power to determine when and to what extent the water must be used. It is the exclusive owner of the entire water supply and works of the municipality; the purposes for which it needs the water are of an entirely public character and to deny the borough the right to use the water for those purposes is to simply prevent it from performing its plain legal duties. We are very clear that this power is possessed by the borough exclusively, and that the water commissioners have no right or power to interfere with the borough in the exercise of this class of its functions."

In the case of Water Commissioners vs. Detroit Citizen's Street Railway, 131 Mich., page 1, it was held that where a city water board is authorized to fix and collect rates for furnishing water to private consumers, this gives no implied authority to levy rates on the city for water used by it for hydrant and drinking purposes. The purposes to be subserved in the establishment and maintenance of waterworks in a municipality is to furnish water for the public and private uses of the inhabitants of the city, and there is no express provision for payments for water used for general and ordinary public purposes, nor is any pertinent or effective provision made for the collection by the board of trustees for water used by the village for public purposes. As has been suggested, it would seem that it would be taking an anomalous position to hold that the board of trustees, which is but the authorized agency of a village in operating waterworks therein, may charge the village itself for water used for authorized public purposes, and on these considerations I am constrained to the position that the questions submitted by you should be answered in the negative.

With respect to your third question, I note that it is specifically provided in section 3963, that no charge shall be made for water supplied for the use of any public building belonging to the corporation. The "city hall" of a village is undoubtedly in every sense a public building and the fact that a part of it may be rented by the village for private use occasionally, does not make such building any the less a public building.

Greenbanks vs. Boutwell, 43 Vt., 207.
Camden vs. Camden, 77 Me., 530.
Wheelock vs. Lowell, 196 Mass., 220.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the board of trustees cannot require the village to pay for water furnished for the purposes indicated by the questions presented by you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSING OF STOCK AND BONDS RECEIVED PRIOR TO THE ENACTMENT OF THE "BLUE SKY LAW" AND PRIOR TO THE LAW CREATING THE PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION—"BLUE SKY LAW"—PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION.

Where a railroad entered into a contract with A for building a part of a road, and assigned in payment thereof certain bonds and stock of the corporation; A failed to turn back such stock and bonds, and the railroad company then entered into a contract with B in the same manner. B subsequently assigned the contract to C, together with stock and bonds. B received the stock and bonds prior to the "blue sky" law, and prior to the law creating the public utilities commission, consequently the securities were not authorized by the public utilities commission. B assigned to C subsequent to the "blue sky law" and subsequent to the enactment of the public utilities act; C now desires to dispose of such stock and bonds to raise money to carry out the contract.

In such case, B and his assignee C are bona fide owners of such stock; B was not a dealer under the "blue sky law" in his assigning the stock to C. C can dispose of such stock and bonds in his hands for the purpose of raising money to carry out his contract with the railroad company without securing a license as provided in the "blue sky law" by reason of the exception (a) stated in section 6373-2, General Code, not being a dealer, but a bona fide owner of such stock and bonds, and disposing of the same for his own account; further, the proposed disposal of the stock and bonds in the hands of C is not required to be certified, since C would be acting solely in his own right in the disposal thereof.

The disposal of stock and bonds received prior to the enactment of the "blue sky law" and prior to the law creating the public utilities commission does not come within the provisions of the statute with respect to either the license or certification therein provided for, and they may be disposed of without either such license or certificate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 21, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion on facts stated by you, as follows:

> "The Cleveland, Barberton, Coshocton and Zanesville Railway Company was incorporated in April, 1909, under the laws of the state of Ohio with a capital stock of $1,000,000.00 for the purpose of constructing, equipping and operating a line of electric railway between Cleveland, Zanesville and other points in the state of Ohio, and on the 22nd day of October, 1910, for the purpose of constructing and equipping a line of its road between Cleveland and Orrville, the railway company increased its capital stock to $2,000,000.00 and authorized and executed the issue of first mortgage coupon bonds to the amount of $2,000,000.00 in the amount of $1,000.00 each, and to secure payment of said bonds, executed and delivered to the Guardian Savings & Trust Company of Cleveland, as trustee, a mortgage on this property, and on the 3rd day of November, 1910, the railway company caused said bonds to be placed in the hands of said trust company as trustee, and in September, 1910, the company sold and assigned to A. D. Mayo & Company, $1,750,000.00 of its bonds and $1,050,000.00 of its capital stock, and in consideration therefor Mayo & Company agreed to construct and equip said line of railway.

"Later, on the 9th day of February, 1911, the railway company entered into an agreement with one William Knox, whereby the said company sold, assigned and transferred to said Knox $2,000,000.00 face value of its bonds and $1,400,000.00 par value of its stock, the portion of its bonds and stock theretofore assigned to Mayo having been reassigned to said company, on failure of said Mayo to complete the contract, and said Knox agreeing to construct and equip said line between Cleveland and Orrville.

"Later, in December, 1913, the said Knox sold and assigned to one O. F. Clifford, of Clarence Hobson & Company, of Newark, N. J., all his right, title and interest in and to said construction contract and the bonds and stock heretofore mentioned. These securities were issued by the company prior to the enactment of the law creating the public utilities commission of Ohio, and consequently the issuance of said securities was not authorized by the public utilities commission of Ohio.

"Are the securities, being those of a character which would properly come within the jurisdiction of the public utilities commission had that commission been in existence at the time of their issuance, subject to exemption, and do they require certification at the hands of the banking department under the act of April 28, 1913, entitled, 'An act to regulate the sale of bonds, stocks, etc?' Second. Is Mr. Clifford's right to such securities such as would constitute him a bona fide holder for value prior to the enactment of the said act of April 28, 1913, and is his holding one which would authorize him to dispose of the securities in Ohio without the necessity of obtaining a license so to do?

"Mr. Clifford and his associates are now actively engaged in the work of organizing for a disposal of the securities and realizing funds to push the construction and equipment of the road, and an early reply to this request will be appreciated both by the department and Mr. Clifford and his associates."

Section 6373-1, General Code, provides as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall, within this state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stock, stock certificates, bonds, debentures, collateral trust certificates or other similar instruments (all hereinafter termed 'securities') evidencing title to or interest in property, issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, copartnership or association (except corporations not for profit), or by any taxing subdivision of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so to do as hereinafter provided."

Section 6373-2 excepts from the meaning of the term "securities," certain instruments therein designated, and among them the following:

(1) "Mortgage bonds and notes (other than corporate bonds where more than fifty per cent. of the entire issue is not included in a sale to one purchaser) secured by a bona fide mortgage on real estate."

(2) "Securities of quasi-public corporations, the issuance of which has been authorized by the public service commission of this state."

This section, further excepting conditionally certain persons both natural and artificial from the meaning of the term "dealer," defines that term as follows:

"The term 'dealer,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to include any person or company, except national banks, disposing, or offering to dispose, of any such security, through agents or otherwise, and any such security, through agents or otherwise, and any company engaged in the marketing or flotation of its own securities either indirectly or through agents or underwriters or any stock promotion scheme whatsoever."

Among those so excepted from the meaning of the term "dealer" are the following:

"(a) An owner, not the issuer of the security, who disposes of his own property, for his own account; when such disposal is not made in the course of repeated and successive transactions of a similar character by such owner; or a natural person, other than the underwriter of the security, who is the bona fide owner of the security and disposes of his own property for his own account."

The sections of the General Code, above noted, are part of an act passed originally April 28, 1913, entitled "An act to regulate the sale of bonds, stocks and other securities * * * and to prevent fraud in such sales;" and of course the transactions mentioned in your communication as occurring prior to this date, are in nowise affected by said provision. It is likewise apparent that the transaction in December, 1913, whereby said William Knox sold and assigned to O. F. Clifford, all his right, title and interest in the construction contract and to the stock and bonds mentioned in your communication, was not as to such stock and bonds an act requiring a license from your department, for the reason that with respect to said transaction, Knox was not a dealer "but came within the exception (a) of section 6373-2, General Code, before noted, as a bona fide owner of stock and bonds, who disposes of the same for his own account and not in the course of repeated and successive transactions of a similar character."

The only questions presented are those affecting O. F. Clifford and concerning his right to dispose of the stock and bonds in his hands without securing the license provided for in the act, and without having his disposals of said stock and bonds certificated as in said act provided.

In the first place, I am inclined to the view that the fact that this stock and these bonds were of such a character as would, if issued now, require the authorization of the public utility commission, is wholly immaterial. All securities which otherwise come within the provisions of the act in question are subject to its provisions except insofar as excepted by the provisions of the act itself. It suffices to say that although the securities of a quasi-public corporation, the issuance of which has been authorized by the public service commission, are excepted from the provisions of the act requiring that their sale or disposal be by a licensed person, the fact remains that the issue of the securities here in question has not been authorized by any such commission.

However, it appears from the facts stated, that the contract for the construction of the railway line of the company issuing these securities, being held by said Knox, was assigned and transferred by him to said Clifford, and that as a consideration for the contract of said Clifford to construct said line, the stock and bonds received by Knox from the company were assigned and transferred to Clifford. It further also fairly appears that the only purpose of Clifford in effecting the proposed disposal of such stock and bonds is to secure money with which to carry out his contract for the construction of said line. Under these facts, I am of the opinion that the proposed disposal of this stock and these bonds by Clifford likewise comes within exception (a) of section 6373-3, above noted.

A further question presented is whether the proposed disposal of the stock and bonds in his hands is required to be certificated under the provisions of the act, above noted.

Section 6373-14, General Code, provides:

> "For the purpose of organizing or promoting any company, or assisting in the flotation of the securities of any company after organization, no issuer or underwriter of such securities and no person or company for or on behalf of such issuer or underwriter shall, within this state, dispose or attempt to dispose of any such security until such commissioner shall issue his certificate as provided in section 6373-16 of the General Code, which shall not be done until; together with a filing fee of five dollars, there be filed with the commissioner the application of such issuer or underwriter for the certificate provided for in section 6373-16, General Code."

Section 6373-16, above referred to, provides that the superintendent of banks as "commissioner" shall have power to make such examination of the securities mentioned in section 6373-14 as he may deem advisable; and if it shall appear that the law has been complied with and the business of the applicant is not fraudulently conducted, and that the proposed disposal of such securities is not on grossly unfair terms, and that the issuer of the same is solvent, then upon the payment of a fee of $10.00, the commissioner shall issue his certificate to that effect, authorizing such disposal; but that if it shall not affirmatively so appear, he shall notify the applicant in writing, of his refusal to issue such certificate authorizing the disposal of the securities.

It is manifest that the only regulation provided for with respect to the sale of securities is that affecting an issuer or underwriter of such securities, and any person or company acting for or on behalf of such issuer or underwriter in organizing or promoting a corporation or assisting in the flotation of its securities.

The issuer of the securities in question, to wit, The Cleveland, Barberton, Coshocton & Zanesville Railway Company is not affected by the provisions of the sections above noted, providing for certification, for the reason that the securities in question were issued before this act was passed. As before noted, it appears that said O. F. Clifford is now the bona fide holder of said bonds of the company, and of its stock to the amount of $1,400,000.00, and that the same was transferred to him in consideration of his contractual obligations to construct the line of said railway company.

On the foregoing facts I am of the opinion that Mr. Clifford is not an underwriter of the securities in question, nor is he a person acting on behalf of the issuer or any underwriter in his proposed disposal of the same for the purposes of raising money to enable him to carry out his contract.

The terms "underwriting" and "underwriter" have a well defined meaning in the affairs of corporate organization and promotion, and it is quite clear that word "underwriter," as used in section 6373-14, was used in such defined and understood sense.

> "Underwriting means an agreement made before the shares are brought before the public, that in the event of the public taking all the shares or the number mentioned in the agreement, the underwriter will take the shares which the public do not take. (Cook on Corporations, section 14.)
> "Underwriting is a guarantee of the sale of the underwritten securities at a specified minimum price. It is, in fact, a conditional subscription for such securities, the underwriters obligating themselves to purchase at a specified price all of the underwritten securities not sold at an advanced price at public offering or otherwise, on or before a fixed date, or within a certain time of the underwriting. (Conyngton on Corporate Organization, section 218.)"

That the term "underwriter" is used in this sense in the provisions of section 6373-14 above noted is apparent from other provisions of this section providing, among other things, that the section shall not apply where the issuance of the securities has been approved by the public service commission or like body, or where the sale is made by or on behalf of an underwriter who, in good faith and not for the purposes of avoiding the provisions of the act, purchases the securities so afterwards sold by him, and pays therefor in cash or its equivalent, before attempting to sell the same, not less than ninety per centum of the price at which such securities are thereafter sold by him.

On the considerations above noted, I am of the opinion that Mr. Clifford does not come within the provisions of section 6373-14, making provision with reference to certification, at all. I further note that this section provides that it shall not apply to the securities of a common carrier. There are not enough facts stated in your communication to advise me whether the company issuing these securities comes within the designation of a common carrier, as the terms are here used. On the whole, however, I am of the opinion that the proposed disposal of the securities of this railway company, now in the hands of Mr. Clifford, does not come within the provisions of the statutes with respect to either the license or certification therein provided for, and that he may dispose of the same without either such license or certificate.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—DIRECTING COMMISSIONER—COMPENSATION—VOUCHER—REIMBURSEMENT.

Under the provisions of house bill No. 8, 104 O. L., the directing commissioner of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition has the right to draw a voucher on the auditor of state without the concurrence of the governor and the other deputy commissioners.

This commission also has the right to draw from the state reimbursement for his expenses incurred since his original appointment as deputy commissioner in November, 1913, to date and for compensation from January 1, 1914, to date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1914.

HON. D. B. TORPY, Directing Commissioner for Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of even date herewith, requesting my opinion as to your authority, as deputy and directing commissioner for Ohio at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to draw a voucher on the auditor of state without the concurrence of the governor and the other deputy commissioners.

You also request my opinion as to your authority to draw from the state reimbursement for your expenses incurred since your original appointment as deputy commissioner, in November, 1913, to date; and for compensation from January 1, 1914, to date.

With respect to your second question you state the fact that in January, 1914, the governor fixed your compensation and directed that it begin on January 1, 1914.

Your questions invite consideration of several related acts of the general assembly. However, it will be sufficient for my purpose to consider house bill No. 8, passed by the late extraordinary session. This act, in a somewhat lengthy preamble, refers to previous legislation authorizing the governor to act as commissioner for the state of Ohio at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, with power to appoint and employ deputy commissioners. It then enacts that,

> "the governor is * * * authorized and empowered to appoint a special commissioner as directing commissioner * * * which directing commissioner shall have such exclusive powers and duties with regard to such exposition as the governor may confer upon him and shall receive such compensation for his services as the governor may prescribe. (Section 1.)"

Section 2, in full, is as follows:

> "That to further carry out the provisions of the act heretofore mentioned, passed May 31, 1911, there is hereby appropriated from any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund, and not otherwise appropriated, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, for the purpose of erecting a state building in which to house and exhibit the state products, of securing complete and creditable display of the interests of the state at such international exposition and of paying the expenses and compensation, including such as have already been incurred and remain unpaid, of said board of deputy commissioners and such directing commissioner and the state auditor is hereby directed to draw his warrant from time to time for such portions of said sum so hereby appropriated and in favor of such persons as said board of deputy commissioners or directing commissioner shall designate and the state treasurer is hereby directed and empowered to pay the same."

This act, I am informed, received an affirmative vote of more than two-thirds of the members of each house of the general assembly.

I am clearly of the opinion that, by reason of the disjunctive phraseology of section 2, when it provides who may designate the person in whose favor warrants on the appropriation may be drawn, the directing commissioner, without the concurrence of the other deputy commissioners or of the governor, is authorized to make the necessary designation; which, I take it, amounts to the presentation of a voucher to the auditor of state.

In acting under this authority, of course, the directing commissioner should present with his designation or voucher such evidence of the nature of the claim upon which it is founded, and the items thereof, as will enable the auditor of state to discharge the duties imposed upon him by the general statutes of the state.

Accordingly, my answer to your first question is in the affirmative.

The answer to your second question is likewise in the affirmative. It is true that, at the time your expenses as directing commissioner were incurred, and prior to the passage of the act above referred to, there was no express authority of law for your reimbursement from the state treasury; nor was there any authority of law for the governor to act as he did in January, 1914, and to fix a salary payable from the present appropriation, which was subsequently passed. But the general assembly of the state, however, has special authority, under article II, section 29, of the constitution, to pay extra compensation for services already rendered, and to allow claims the subject-matter of which has not been provided for by pre-existing law, upon the single condition that such legislation shall receive the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members elected to both houses thereof. This being the fact, in the present case, I am of the opinion that you are authorized to draw upon the present appropriation, which by express terms recognizes the expenses and compensation already incurred, for the payments referred to in your second question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD—ENTITLED TO TWO SECRETARIES OR CLERKS IN THE UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The county liquor licensing board is entitled to two secretaries or clerks in the unclassified service, under the civil service, since the county liquor licensing board is by law authorized to appoint a secretary upon authorization of the state board, and to appoint clerks, said boards being such a board as would come under subdivision 7a, section 8 of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 12, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Inquiry has been made of this department as to whether the county liquor licensing board is entitled to two secretaries or clerks in the unclassified service under the civil service act.

Subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places the following positions in the unclassified service:

> "Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

The act providing for the appointment of liquor license commissioners and prescribing their duties is found in 103 Ohio Laws, 216, et seq.

Section 7 of said act, section 1261-22, General Code, provides for the appointment of county liquor licensing boards.

Section 12 of the act, section 1261-27, General Code, authorizes such a board to appoint a secretary when approved by the state liquor licensing board. Said section provides in part:

> "* * * Should the duties of the county board demand, and upon authorization first had from the state board, the county board may appoint a secretary and fix his compensation. Such appointment and compensation shall be first approved by the state board. * * *"

Section 13 of the act, section 1261-28, General Code, provides in part:

> " * * * Each board may employ such clerks and employes as it deems necessary for the transaction of business and fix their compensation. * * *"

It appears, therefore, that the county liquor licensing board is authorized "by law" to appoint clerks, and a secretary upon authorization of the state board.

In answering the question in hand it is not necessary to determine whether the word "principal" as used in subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, qualifies the words "boards or commissions."

Section 9 of article XV of the constitution of Ohio as amended, provides in part:

> "* * * License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. * * *"

The legislature has carried out this provision of the constitution when it enacted section 16 of the liquor license act, section 1261-31, General Code. This section reads in part:

> "It shall be the duty of the county liquor licensing boards of the respective counties of the state, and they are hereby authorized to grant, issue, renew and transfer, as provided by law, all licenses to traffic in intoxicating liquors in the county wherein the board is situated; also to suspend or revoke, subject to the conditions and in the manner provided by law, all licenses granted or renewed in said county; and to perform such other duties as may be required by law."

By virtue of the provisions of this section licenses are granted, renewed or revoked by the county liquor licensing board and not by or through the state board.

It is my opinion that if the word "principal" as used in subdivision 7 (a), supra, of the civil service act, qualifies the word "boards," the county liquor licensing board is such a board. This conclusion is reached on consideration of the constitutional provision, as well as of the statutory provisions.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the county liquor licensing board is entitled to one secretary and one clerk, or to two clerks in the unclassified service. Section 12 of the liquor licensing act authorizes the appointment of but one secretary, and section 13 authorizes the appointment of more than one clerk if such are deemed necessary for the transaction of business.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCE DEFINING A MISDEMEANOR AND IMPOSING A PENALTY—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SUCH AN ORDINANCE.

An ordinance defining a misdemeanor and imposing a penalty of $500.00 only, without a further alternative of imposing a sentence of imprisonment, is not unconstitutional as depriving a man of his liberty without trial by jury, even though a person convicted thereunder on failure to pay such fine could be imprisoned until the fine and costs are paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. WM. F. POTTING, Member of Ohio Senate, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your communication of May 3, 1914, asking opinion of me with respect to the validity of a certain ordinance passed by the council of the city of Akron, April 28, 1913. I have deferred more immediate reply to your communication for the reason that on account of the importance of the question presented, I desired to give this matter my most considerate attention.

The ordinance in question provides as follows:

> "Whoever shall engage in or promote any riot, disturbance or disorderly assemblage, or shall organize, promote or be engaged in any party, dance or carousal for dissolute persons, or persons of bad repute, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars ($500.00)."

Among the enumerated powers of municipal corporations in this state, section 3628, General Code, provides that they shall have power

> "To make the violation of ordinances a misdemeanor and provide for the punishment thereof by fine or imprisonment, or both, but such fine shall not exceed five hundred dollars, and such imprisonment shall not exceed six months."

Pertinent to the power of the city to enact the ordinance in question, section 3658, General Code, provides that municipal corporations shall have power

> "To prevent riot, gambling, noise and disturbance, indecent conduct or assemblage and to preserve peace and good order and to protect the property of the corporation and its inhabitants."

With respect to the power of the court to enforce the payment of the fines inflicted as punishment for a misdemeanor committed in violation of a statute or ordinance, sections 4559 and 4563, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Section 4559. When a fine is the whole or part of a sentence, the court or mayor may order that the person sentenced shall remain confined in the county jail, workhouse or prison, until the fine and costs be paid, or secured to be paid, or the offender be otherwise legally discharged.
> "Section 4563. When a fine, imposed for the violation of an ordinance of the corporation, is not paid, the party convicted shall, by order of the mayor, or other proper authority, or on process issued for the purposes, be committed until such fine and the costs of prosecution are paid, or the party is discharged by due process of law."

The ordinance in question makes no provision for imprisonment as a penalty for the commission of any of the offenses defined by its terms and this being true, it follows that the person charged with the commission of any such offense defined by this ordinance, is not on a prosecution of any such offense under this ordinance, entitled to a jury trial, notwithstanding that, upon such conviction such person may be imprisoned for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the fine imposed by the court under the provisions of the ordinance.

Inwood vs. State, 42 O. S., 186.
State vs. Smith, 69 O. S., 200.
State vs. Borham, 72 O. S., 363.
Fletcher vs. State, 18 C. C., 674.
Markle vs. Akron, 14 Ohio, 587.
Kuback vs. State, 1 N. P. (n. s.), 405.

These cases for the most part consider the constitutional provisions of this state, preserving the right of trial by jury to persons accused of crime, and arrive at the conclusion that the constitutional guarantee does not cover the case of prosecutions for offenses defined by statutes or ordinances, where imprisonment is not provided as a penalty for the violation of the offense. You inquire particularly, however, with respect to the validity of this ordinance in view of article VI of the amendments to the constitution of the United States, which provides as follows:

> "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense."

It may well be doubted whether the provisions of this article of the United States constitution is any more inclusive in its language than the constitutional provisions of our own state; but however that may be, it has been established by the decisions of the federal courts, that the provisions of article VI, as well as of all other articles of the first ten amendments to the United States constitution, prescribe limitations on the federal government only and have no relation to the governmental regulations of the several states or of their political subdivisions.

In the case of ex parte Spies, 123 U. S., 166, the court held:

> "The first ten articles of the amendment of the constitution of the United States, were not intended to limit the powers of the state government in respect to their own people, but to operate on the national government alone."

In its opinion in this case, the court says:

> "That the first ten articles of amendment were not intended to limit the powers of the state governments in respect to their own people, but to operate on the national government alone, was decided more than a half century ago and that decision has been steadily adhered to since."

In support of its conclusion, the court in the above case cited the following cases:

Barrow vs. Baltimore, 32 U. S., 243, 247.
Livingston vs. Moore, 32 U. S., 469, 552.
Fox vs. Ohio, 46 U. S., 410, 434.
Smith vs. Maryland, 59 U. S., 71, 76.
Withers vs. Buckley, 61 U. S., 84, 91.
Walker vs. Sauvinet, 92 U. S., 90.
Pearson vs. Yewdall, 95 U. S., 294, 296.

The foregoing decisions, above state and federal, being of course binding on me in the consideration of the question presented by you, I am compelled to the conclusion that the ordinance in question is not violative of the constitutional provisions.

With respect to some of the offenses at least, defined by the provisions of this ordinance, the maximum fine prescribed seems unreasonably high. It is to be presumed, however, that the court in imposing sentence for the violation of any of the offenses thus defined in the ordinance, will fix the fine at an amount commensurate with the nature of the offense. However, in the consideration of the question presented by you, I have addressed myself only to the constitutional fees presented by the enactment of this ordinance and on the considerations above noted. I am compelled to the conclusion that there is no constitutional infirmities in the ordinance in question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE RIGHT OF A CITY OR VILLAGE TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT WHEREBY THE CITY FURNISHES ELECTRIC CURRENT TO THE VILLAGE—SUCH CONTRACT SHOULD CONFORM TO THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 6, ARTICLE XVIII OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The amendatory provisions of section 3809, General Code, 103 O. L., 526, granting to a city or village the power to purchase electric current, are to be considered in connection with the other provisions of said section, as amended, and so considered the legislative intent appears to grant to a city or village authority to purchase such electric current from another municipal corporation, as well as from persons, firms, corporations, etc. The authority of a city or village to purchase electric current from another municipality clearly appears from the consideration of the provisions of section 3809, General Code, authorizing a city or village to purchase electric current, when considered in connection with the provisions of section 6, article XVIII of the constitution of the state, which provides that any municipality holding and operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants may sell and deliver to others the surplus product of such public utility in an amount not exceeding fifty per centum of the service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality. The opinion holds that such contract between a city or village for the purchase of electric current from another municipality, should be governed by the limitations of said section of the state constitution as to the amount of the current to be taken, and by the provisions of section 3809 as to the term or duration of the contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. C. C. MCCORMICK, City Solicitor, Wellston, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of April 3, 1914, in which you advise that the city of Wellston has its own electric light plant and that there is a proposition pending between that city and the village of Hamden, whereby the city is to furnish electric current for lighting to the village. Your inquiry is with respect to the validity of the proposed and contemplated contract.

As I view this question, authority for the proposed agreement between the municipalities named is to be found, if at all, in the provisions of section 3809, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 526. This section as so amended, reads as follows:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm, company or municipality or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or to the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury, shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contracts made by a village for the employment of legal counsel, nor to contracts by a municipality for the leasing or acquisition of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or corporation therein situated."

Independent of the amendatory provisions of this section, municipal corporations have power to establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat (section 3618). By section 3990, General Code, a municipality may not only erect electric works but may purchase or, if necessary, appropriate existing plants within the municipality belonging to any person or company.

By sections 3809 and 3994, municipalities may contract with any person, firm or corporation for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places therein. Furthermore, independent of the amendatory provisions in section 3809, as amended in 103 O. L., 526, a municipal corporation might make a contract for the leasing of the electric light plant of any person, firm or company therein (section 3809, General Code).

From the foregoing statutory provisions, defining the powers of municipal corporations, it is clear that independent of the amendatory provisions of section 3809, such municipalities do not have power to lease an electric light plant and equipment of another municipality, neither do the powers so granted authorize a municipality to purchase electric current for its own use or for supplying the same to its inhabitants.

Ottawa Electric Light Company vs. Ottawa, 12 Ont., Law Rep., 290.

Conversely, the power given to a municipality to establish, maintain and operate an electric light plant and to furnish the municipality and its inhabitants light, heat and power, does not authorize such municipality to furnish electricity as a commodity to other municipalities.

Reahill vs. East Newark, 73 N. J. Law, 220.

However, in this connection I note a decision by the Kentucky court of appeals, 119 Ky., 224, holding that under a statute authorizing certain cities to provide "the city and the inhabitants thereof" with light, a city was not prohibited from extending its electric light service to points without the city limits, when it can do so with very little additional expense and in such a way as to result in advantage to the city and its inhabitants. The case just cited is not one where current was sold or service was rendered to another municipality, but is one where service was rendered to inhabitants outside of the city. The conclusions of the court were predicated upon the proposition that in the management and operation of an electric light plant, a city does not exercise governmental or legislative powers, but mere business powers, and it may conduct such plant in a manner which in the judgment of the city council promises the greatest benefit to the city and its inhabitants, and that courts will not interfere with the reasonable discretion of council in such matters. A like decision was made by the same court in the case of Rogers vs. City of Wickliffe, 94 S. W., Rep., 94, with reference to city waterworks, the court holding that a city owning and operating a waterworks system may contract to supply water for use outside of the city, where there will be sufficient water remaining to supply the residents of the city.

On the authority of the above cited cases the same court in the case of Dyer vs. City of Newport, 123 Ky., 203, held, if a municipality desiring to be supplied with water from the city of Newport had constructed a plant of mains, pipes, etc., to supply its citizens with water, that Newport might lawfully sell it water from its plant, but that Newport could not extend its main into another municipality for the purpose of supplying such municipality with water.

Under the strict rule as to municipalities obtaining in this state, I am not persuaded that the above noted decisions are sufficient authority for holding that a municipality in this state may sell either water or electric current to another municipality without express legislative authority to do so.

Wright vs. Village of Kennedy Heights, 25 C. C. 409; 1 C. C. (n.s.) 195.

As to water, I note that express authority is given to a municipality having waterworks to supply another municipality therewith, or to extend its service to persons living outside the corporate limits (sections 3973, 3967, G. C.).

Looking to the amendatory provisions of section 3809, it will be noted that thereby a "municipality" is added to the list of persons, natural and artificial, of whom a city or village may lease an electric light plant and equipment and such city or village is given power to contract for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat and power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof. So that, with respect to the question at hand, said section 3809, G. C., now provides:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make a contract * * * for the leasing of an electric light plant and equipment * * * of any person, firm, company or municipality or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof, for a period of not exceeding ten years."

The authority of the municipalities named in your inquiry to enter into the contract contemplated, if it exists at all, must rest upon the power granted cities and villages to contract for the purchase of electric current, found in this section. A valid contract contemplates that both parties are competent to do the things required by the contract by them respectively to be done, and if the provisions of this section, authorizing cities and villages to contract for the purchase of electric current, stood alone and unaided, there would be no hesitation in holding that the power of purchasing current was limited to a purchase from some person, firm or company having a right to sell such commodity; and that a general power in a municipality to purchase confers no right in another municipality to sell the current desired. I apprehend, however, that if it should fairly appear that a city or village is given power to purchase electric current from another municipality, power in such other municipality to sell may be inferred.

Conformable to accepted rules of construction, however, whether a city or village is authorized by this section to purchase current from another municipality, must be determined upon a consideration of all its provisions and particularly upon a consideration of the provisions of the section with which the power granted to purchase current stands in association. Looking to the provisions of section 3809 as it stands amended, I am inclined to the view that it was the legislative intention to grant to cities and villages authority to purchase electric current for the purposes named in the statute, from another municipality; as much so as it was the legislative intention to authorize a city or village to lease the electric light plant and equipment of another municipality. However this may be, I note that section 6 of article XVIII of the constitution of the state, as adopted September 3, 1912, provides as follows:

> "Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility, and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality."

The provisions of this section of the constitution indicate that it was intended as a present enactment, complete in itself as definitive legislation and that it does not contemplate subsequent legislation to carry it into effect. Construed in the light of these considerations, this section of the constitution is self-executing.

Willis vs. Mabon, 48 Minn., 140, 150.

By force of its provisions, municipalities owning and operating a public utility such as an electric light plant, may within the limitations of the section, sell and deliver their product to others and as has been before noted, a city or village by the provisions of section 3809, is authorized to purchase current for the purposes therein designated. It follows on a consideration of the provisions of this section, together with those of the constitutional amendment above noted, that within the limitations of such constitutional provisions, a city or village may purchase such current from another municipality.

The purchase of electric current by one municipality from another may result in the necessity of carrying such current for some considerable distance over wires on poles or through conduits. In this connection I note that by the provisions of section 3995, General Code, a municipal corporation is authorized to enter upon private lands and appropriate so much thereof as is necessary for applying or laying down poles, wires and conduits for the purpose of carrying and transmitting electricity, while by the provisions of section 3996, General Code, it is provided that as far as the rights of the public therein are concerned, the county commissioners as to county and state roads, township trustees as to township roads and the council of municipal corporations as to streets and alleys, in their respective jurisdictions, may grant to such municipal corporation the right to construct and lay poles and wires, and conduits therein, subject to such regulations and restrictions as may be prescribed.

On considerations before noted, I am of the opinion that the city of Wellston and the village of Hamden have power to enter into the proposed contract, whereby the city is to furnish electric current for lighting, to the village. Such contract if made, should of course conform to the limitations of the constitutional provision above noted, with respect to the amount of current to be sold, and also with the provisions of section 3809, General Code, with respect to the duration of the contract.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF PARK COMMISSIONERS—LICENSE FOR AUTOMOBILES AND MOTORCYCLES USED BY THIS DEPARTMENT.

It is necessary for the board of park commissioners to take out a license for automobiles and motorcycles used in such department, since the same is not excepted in section 6290, 103 O. L., 763.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. WALTER M. SCHOENLE, City Solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 12, 1914, you submitted for my opinion the following:

> "Recently the board of park commissioners wanted to know whether it is necessary for it to take out licenses for its automobiles and motorcycles. The automobiles have large numbers printed on them and also the seal of the city of Cincinnati. The motorcycles are used by the police of the park department in patroling their beats. I wrote to the secretary of state regarding this, and he was of the opinion that it would be necessary for the board to take out licenses. He based this upon the opinion rendered by former Attorney General U. G. Denman, dated February 11, 1910. However, I wish to call your attention to a letter sent our department on May 22, 1909, wherein the secretary of state held that it would not be necessary for us to take out licenses for the automobile used by the chief of fire department, providing that it was used solely for municipal purposes. Therefore, I would be glad if you would be kind enough to send me an opinion under the present and existing law."

The opinion to which you refer is found on page 231 of the annual report of the attorney general for the year 1910.

My predecessor took the position that only those motor vehicles were exempt from the provisions of the registration act as were expressly exempted by section 6290; that is to say, the provisions of that section should be strictly construed and the language should not be extended beyond its plain and ordinary signification. I agree with the conclusion reached by my predecessor as well as the reasoning upon which it was based.

Section 6290 was amended in 1913 (103 O. L., page 763) so as to provide:

> "The term 'motor vehicle' as used in this chapter and in the penal laws, except where otherwise provided, includes all vehicles propelled by power other than muscular power, except road rollers, traction engines, fire engines, fire trucks, police patrol wagons, public ambulances and vehicles run upon rails or tracks."

It will be noted that while the amended statute made some changes in the classes of vehicles to be exempt from registration, it did not include automobiles and motorcycles owned and used by a municipal board of park commissioners in the exempted class, and I am of the opinion that such vehicles must be registered.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DEPUTY SHERIFF MAY NOT RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR USE OF AUTOMOBILE BY HIMSELF OR SHERIFF—PUBLIC POLICY

A deputy sheriff owning an automobile cannot receive pay from the county for trips driven by himself and sheriff, on the ground that it is against public policy to permit such practice.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. J. B. TEMPLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 15th, wherein you inquire:

> "Can the deputy sheriff own an automobile and receive pay from the county for trips driven by himself and the sheriff, just the same as an outsider or one not connected with the affairs of the county can? That is to say, when a drive is necessary to be made for the service of a summons or the capture of an indicted party, can such deputy sheriff receive from the county pay for the same by order of the sheriff."

Section 2997 of the General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * the county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

The question of whether the words "livery hire" as used in this statute would include the hire of automobiles, was decided in the affirmative in the case of State of Ohio ex rel. Sartin, vs. Sayre, Franklin County Common Pleas Court.

This department has followed that decision and has advised county officials to do likewise. The official relationship between a sheriff and his deputy is so close that I deem it contrary to public policy for a sheriff to deal with his deputy in matters of this kind. I am of the opinion, therefore, that a deputy sheriff may not receive pay from the county for the use of his automobile in the transaction of business pertaining to the office of sheriff.

On April 11, 1913, in an opinion addressed to Hon. Wm. C. Hudson, prosecuting attorney of Vinton county, I held that a sheriff under the power given to him under section 2997, would have the right to employ members of his own family to take care of his horses and vehicles used by him in the discharge of his official duties, and if he did employ them, the commissioners should allow for their services, providing the charges were just and reasonable. That opinion, however, was based solely upon statutory provisions and did not go into the question of public policy.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

VILLAGE—TELEPHONE COMPANY FRANCHISE—TELEPHONE COMPANY CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO MAINTAIN THE RATE AGREED TO IN THE ORDINANCE GRANTING THE FRANCHISE —RIGHT TO USE VILLAGE STREETS—PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION MAY FIX REASONABLE RATE.

1. Where a village by ordinance grants a franchise to a telephone company for the use of the village streets for the company's poles, wires, etc., and where, as one of the conditions of said grant, the telephone company by said ordinance and its acceptance thereof agrees to charge only certain designated rates for telephone service to its patrons within the municipality, the village cannot compel the telephone company to maintain the agreed rates for the reason that the telephone company takes its right to use the village streets for its poles and wires from the state rather than the municipality, and there is no consideration supporting the agreement of the company to maintain the designated rates.

2. If the present rates of the telephone company for service within the village are unreasonable, the public utilities commission may on proper written complaint, and after a hearing of such complaint fix such rates for telephone service by the company as are reasonable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. F. H. PELTON, Village Solicitor of Willoughby, Society for Savings Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 14, 1914, you wrote asking an opinion of me as follows:

> "In 1896, an ordinance granting a twenty-five year franchise to the Willoughby Telephone Company was passed by the council of the village of Willoughby, and among other provisions section 4 reads as follows:
> "'It is further understood and agreed as one of the conditions of this grant, that the price of rental charged by the said Willoughby Telephone Company, its successors or assigns to any individual company or corporation subscribers for the use of each telephone instrument shall not exceed for residences the sum of eighteen dollars per year and for places of business shall not exceed the sum of twenty-four dollars per year.'
> "Since the passage of this ordinance this company has without consulting the council or anyone else on two occasions raised these rates. Is it possible for the village to hold the company to the rates as agreed upon in the franchise, and if not what powers have the council in this regard? Also if the council does not have this power, what procedure must be followed to determine whether the rates now charged are reasonable or not?"

At the time this contract between the village and the telephone company, fixing the rates for telephone service, was entered into, the statutory provisions pertinent to the right of such companies to enter municipalities were sections 3454, 3461 and 3471, Revised Statutes, since carried into the General Code as sections 9170, 9178 and 9191. These sections are as follows:

"Section 3454. A magnetic telegraph company heretofore or hereafter created may construct telegraph lines from point to point along and upon any public road, by the erection of the necessary fixtures, including posts, piers, and abutments necessary for the wires; but the same shall not incommode the public use of such road.

"Section 3461. When any lands authorized to be appropriated to the use of a company are subject to the easement of a street, alley, public way, or other public use, within the limits of any city or village, the mode of use shall be such as shall be agreed upon between the municipal authorities of the city or village and the company; and if they cannot agree or the municipal authorities unreasonably delay to enter into any agreement, the probate court of the county in a proceeding instituted for the purpose, shall direct in what mode such telegraph line shall be constructed along such street, alley or public way, so as not to incommode the public in the use of the same; but nothing in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any municipal corporation to demand or receive any compensation for the use of a street, alley, or public way, beyond what may be necessary to restore the pavement to its former state of usefulness.

"Section 3471. The provisions of this chapter (chapter 4) shall apply also to any company organized to construct any line or lines of telephone; and every such company shall have the same powers and be subject to the same restrictions as are herein prescribed for magnetic telegraph companies."

Construing these sections, the court in the case of State vs. Telephone Company, 72 O. S., 60, 70, says:

"Taking these sections with others in the same chapter, it seems clear that telephones have their grant directly from the state through its general assembly, to occupy the roads, streets and highways with their lines and fixtures and that a grant for that purpose from the municipality is not necessary. These statutes were so construed in Zanesville vs. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 64 O. S., 67."

In the case of Farmer vs. Telephone Company, 72 O. S., 526, it was held that a stipulation fixing rates of telephone service in an ordinance, permitting a telephone company to use the city streets for its poles and wires, was not a valid and enforceable contract, though the ordinance together with the rates so fixed had been accepted by the telephone company. In this case the court followed the case of Macklin vs. Home Telephone Company, I. C. C. (n. s.) 373, 70 O. S., 507, where the same question was involved. In both cases the decision as to the invalidity of the contract as to rates, was placed on the ground that the telephone company took its right to use the streets and public ways of a municipality by legislative grant from the state, and that the municipality possessed nothing in the way of a valuable right to bestow upon the telephone company, as a consideration for its agreement to maintain the rates fixed by the ordinance.

It follows from these decisions that the village of Willoughby is without power to compel the telephone company to observe the rates fixed in the ordinance or to maintain the same.

Sections 614-2 and 614-2a, General Code, the same being a part of the public utilities act, define and classify a telephone company as a public utility; and as such it is made subject to the provisions of that act. Section 614-16 of the General Code, provides in part as follows.

"Every public utility shall print and file with the commission, within 90 days after this act takes effect, schedules showing all the rates, joint rates, rentals, tolls, classifications and charges for service of each and every kind by it rendered or furnished, which were in effect at the time this act takes effect and the length of time the same has been in force, and all rules and regulations in any manner affecting the same."

Section 614-18 provides:

"No public utility shall charge, demand, exact, receive or collect a different rate, rental, toll or charge for any service rendered, or to be rendered than that applicable to such service as specified in its schedule filed with the commission and in effect at the time. * * *"

Section 614-21, General Code, provides:

"Upon complaint in writing, against any public utility, by any person, firm or corporation, or upon the initiative or complaint of the commission that any rate, fare, charge, toll, rental, schedule, classification or service, or any joint rate, fare, charge, toll, rental, schedule, classification or service rendered, charged, demanded, exacted or proposed to be rendered, charged, demanded, or exacted, is in any respect unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unjustly preferential or in violation of law * * * the commission shall notify the public utility complained of that complaint has been made and of the time and place when the same will be considered and determined which notice shall be served upon the public utility not less than 15 days before such hearing and shall plainly state the matters or things complained of. The commission shall, if it appears that there are reasonable grounds for the complaint, at such time and place proceed to consider such complaint and may adjourn the hearing thereof from time to time. The parties thereto shall be entitled to be heard, represented by counsel and to have process to enforce the attendance of witnesses."

Section 614-23, provides:

"Whenever the commission shall be of the opinion, after hearing, that any rate, fare, charge, toll, rental, schedule, classification or service, or any joint rate, fare, charge, toll, rental, schedule, classification or service rendered, charged, demanded, exacted or proposed to be rendered, charged, demanded or exacted, is, or will be unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory or unjustly preferential or in violation of law * * * the commission shall, with due regard among other things, to the value of all the property of the public utility actually used and useful for the convenience of the public, * * * and all such other matters as may be proper, according to the facts in each case, fix and determine the just and reasonable rate, fare, charge, toll, rental or service to be thereafter rendered, charged, demanded, exacted, or collected for the performance or rendition of the service, and order the same substituted therefor; and thereafter, no change in the rate, fare, toll, charge, rental, schedule, classification or service, shall be made, rendered, charged, demanded, exacted or charged by such public utility without the order of the commission, and any other rate, fare, toll, charge, rental, classification or service shall be deemed and held to be unjust and unreasonable, prohibited and unlawful."

It thus appears that though the village is without power to compel the telephone company to maintain the rates fixed in its contract, yet that it may be compelled on proper complaint to the public utilities commission to maintain such rates as are reasonable. On the hearing of such complaint, though the contract as to rates is not binding or enforceable against the company, it would be of evidential value as indicating that the rates fixed in such contract were at the time reasonable.

In reaching the conclusion that the village cannot compel the telephone company to observe its contract rates as to service, I assume that in pursuance of the contract, the company entered the streets of the village in the usual way, by the erection of the necessary fixtures, including posts, piers, and abutments necessary for the wires and that the matter of underground conduits for such wires did not enter into the contract between the village and the company. The point to the suggestion just noted is, that though a telephone company may under statutory provision, enter the streets of a municipal corporation with its usual overhead fixtures, without the consent of the municipality, yet it does not have the right to enter upon such streets for the purpose of digging them up and laying conduits for its wires without municipal consent, (73 O. S.,64), and an agreement by the municipality, granting such consent would, I believe, be a sufficient consideration to support any agreement by the company having proper relation to the franchise granted, whether such agreement be one as to rates or otherwise.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—THE RIGHT OF ADMINISTRATOR OR PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE TO RECEIVE A BALANCE WHERE THE AWARD HAS NOT BEEN FULLY PAID TO THE INJURED EMPLOYE.

The payment of compensation under the compensation act does not cease upon the death of the injured employe to whom an award has been made under section 33 of said act and to whom the whole amount of the award has not been paid prior to his death, for the reason that as soon as an award is made, the full amount immediately becomes vested, though paid in installments, and the unpaid balance becomes part of the employe's estate; said balance should be paid to the administrator or to those entitled thereto, and if the estate is settled without an administrator, those receiving such unpaid balance should be required to give bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 23, 1913, you write as follows:

"We desire your opinion as to whether payments of compensation should cease upon the death of an injured employe to whom an award has been made under section 33 of the compensation act of 1913, and to whom the whole amount of the award had not been paid prior to his death.

"To give you a concrete example: On May 29, 1913, an award for the sum of $536.23 was made to an applicant to cover a permanent partial disability. Under the rules of this department compensation is not paid in a lump sum but is paid in installments every two weeks. In this instance the claimant was paid $16.50 every two weeks from the date of the award until the date of his decease, a total of $172.05, having thus been paid, leaving an unpaid balance of $364.18.

"If your answer be that payment of this balance should be made from the state insurance fund, will you kindly advise us whether we can lawfully pay it to any other than the personal representative of the deceased."

Section 21 of the workmen's compensation act provides for the payment to injured employes such compensation on account of injuries received in the course of employment, and such medical, nurse, hospital services and medicine as is provided in sections 32-40 of the act.

Section 32 provides for compensation for temporary disability, but I note in your communication that the award was based on a permanent, partial disability. This, as you suggest, is governed by section 33, which provides:

"In case of injury resulting in partial disability, the employe shall receive sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the impairment of his earning capacity during the continuance thereof, not to exceed a maximum of $12.00 per week, or a greater sum in the aggregate than $3,750.00. In cases included in the following schedule the disability in each case shall be deemed to continue for the period specified, and the compensation so paid for such injury shall be specified, to wit.: (Here follows a schedule prescribing a definite time during which payments shall be made in case specified injuries are received).

As illustrative I shall merely call attention to the first item specified which is as follows:

"For the loss of a thumb sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the average weekly wages."

In view of the fact that the award made by you is for a specified amount, I assume that the injury must have been comprehended within one of the items of the schedule to which I have just referred, as otherwise it would be impossible for you to arrive at a specified amount, for the reason that in other cases of parital disability the employe is to receive sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the impairment of his earning capacity "during the continuance thereof," such continuance being indefinite it would be impossible to determine the lump sum to be paid prior to the recovery of the injured employe. It is with reference to this class of cases wherein no definite sum has been prescribed that Mr. Ruegg on page 404 of his work on "employers' liability and workmen's compensation," says:

"It is thought that the right to compensation given by the act vests in the workman as soon as each weekly payment becomes due. If the workman dies leaving arrears of compensation, they could, therefore, be recovered by his legal representative."

The provision of the English act upon which the foregoing statement is based authorizes a weekly payment during the incapacity in cases of partial disability. After such payments have been continued for six months the employer may pay a lump sum, which, if the incapacity is permanent, shall be sufficient to purchase an annuity equal to seventy-five per cent. of the annual value of the weekly payments. It will be noted that in the Ohio schedule the injury is presumed to continue for a definite length of time, and consequently in order to arrive at a proper sum to be paid, it is only necessary to multiply the number of weeks of the conclusively presumed continuance by two-thirds of the average weekly wage. This is in practical effect a fixing of the sum to be paid, and the full amount of compensation becomes vested immediately upon the happening of the injury.

This is in harmony with the decision of the House of Lords in United Collieries vs. Simpson, 78 L. J. P. C., 129, wherein it was held that the personal representative of the mother of an employe killed in the course of his employment, was entitled to the compensation provided by the English law, even though the mother had died prior to making application for such compensation, she being the sole dependent of the killed workman. In other words, the court held that the right became vested in the dependent even though she died before she had an opportunity of presenting her claim in the manner prescribed by law, and even though, as a result of her death, the money paid would not be for the benefit of any dependent of the decedent.

This emphasizes the theory that the right of him who is entitled to compensation vests immediately upon the happening of such injury. When this right is to a definite amount, the whole of such amount immediately becomes vested even though it is to be paid in weekly installments, and if the beneficiary should die before all of the sum has been paid, the unpaid balance becomes part of his estate. As the statute makes no provision for the payment of such balance to any designated heirs at law, dependents, or next of kin, it must follow that it should be dealt with as other personal property of an intestate, and therefore should pass to the personal representative.

I think it would be legal for your board to pay money, however, to those persons who would be entitled to take under the laws of distribution, provided such persons were of full age, without the intervention of an administrator, if those interested in the estate desired to dispense with such appointment, and there was no question or doubt as to there being no unpaid claims against the estate, and all those entitled to distribution received the same from your commission.

Should the estate be settled in the way last suggested, it would be advisable to take a bond from those receiving the money to save your commission and the state insurance fund harmless from any and all claims that might arise against such said fund from any person or persons other than those receiving the unpaid compensation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS—BOND ISSUE—SMITH LAW—TEN-MILL LIMITATION—LONGWORTH ACT—MAIN MARKET ROAD—HITE ROAD LAW.

1. Bonds issued now or hereafter without a vote of the people must be provided for by levies within the 10-mill limitation of the Smith law.

2. The county commissioners may levy for the state highway improvement fund from year to year; the authority to make a levy for a given road is not exhausted when a single levy has been made.

3. The phrase "subject, however, to the maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies now in force" found in the new state highway law denotes the 10-mill limitation of the Smith law, and not the 15-mill limitation.

4. The debt limit of the state highway improvement law is exclusive and the Longworth act does not apply to the township's portion.

5. Bonds issued under the new highway law are county bonds upon which judgment could be obtained against the county, but the satisfaction of such judgment would have to be by levying or assessing against the township, or specially benefited property, and not by levying against the whole county, unless the deficiency is in the county's portion.

6. Levies upon the property of the township and assessments upon specially benefited property as contemplated by the state highway improvement law constitute taxation within the meaning of article XII, section 11 of the constitution.

7. A main market road designated as such by the state highway commissioner is but another name for an intercounty highway, so that such a road may be improved in the manner provided for the improvement of such highways, and main market roads designated as such by the legislature in the Hite law are routes of travel upon which an intercounty highway improvement may be made, as well as the kind of an improvement provided for in the Hite law itself.

8. "The total amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of 1 per cent. of the tax duplicate" means that the amount of outstanding bonds of this kind shall not be in excess of 1 per cent. and not that a single issue of this kind of bonds is limited to 1 per cent., subject to repetition indefinitely, nor that when 1 per cent. has been issued regardless of the retirement of those first issued, the limit is reached.

9. There is no authority of law for the submission to the electors of the county of a proposition to issue bonds for the purpose of general road improvements, the object being to escape the 10-mill limitation of the Smith law. An election upon the question of levying taxes for the state highway fund outside of this limitation may be held under section 5649-5 of the Smith law.

10. Under sections 7181 to 7231, General Code, the whole county is to be taxed for the improvement of the specific roads, except insofar as a portion of the cost of the improvement is assumed by the taxpayers.

11. Sections 7219 to 7231, General Code, though in the same chapter are parts of different acts, and for that reason do not conflict one with the other.

12. Section 7217 as amended has the effect of taking the levy to which it relates outside of the 10-mill limit.

13. The levy authorized by section 7217, General Code, may not be made without a vote of the people, under section 7203.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM H. VODREY, Prosecuting Attorney, East Liverpool, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 19th, supplementary to that of February 26th, already acknowledged. In these two letters you submit some fourteen questions arising under the state highway laws, stated with particular reference to the matter of taxation and the issuance of bonds.

The first of your questions differs from the others in certain respects and has no peculiar relation to the subject-matter of highways. I have made my answer to it the subject of a separate opinion which you either will have received by the time this opinion reaches you, or will receive soon thereafter. Your other questions are as follows:

"2. If bonds are either now or hereafter issued without a vote of the people, must the levy providing for interest and sinking fund be included within the ten-mill limitation of the Smith one per cent. law, as amended 103 O. L., 552?

"3. May the county commissioners levy the tax provided for in section 1222-1, General Code, annually, or is the authority to levy therein provided for, limited to one year?

"4. What is meant by the phrase, 'subject however to the maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies now in force,' as found in section 1222-1, General Code? Does the phrase denote the ten-mill limitation or the fifteen-mill limitation of the Smith law?

"5. Is the power of the county commissioners to issue bonds to pay the share of the township in a road improvement under the state highway department law, as provided for particularly by section 1223, General Code, limited by the provisions of the Longworth act and particularly section 3940, General Code, referred to and adopted in section 3295, General Code?

"6. (a) Are bonds issued under section 1223, General Code for the purpose of paying the respective shares of the township and the lands assessed only general obligations of the county, or is the county's liability representative only the ultimate security for the payment of the bonds, being the assessments and taxes to be levied upon the property of the township only?

"(b) The requirement of article XII, section 11 of the constitution being that no bonded indebtedness shall be incurred unless provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds and to create a sinking fund for their ultimate retirement, what provision of this character must be made by the county commissioners when issuing bonds to pay the respective shares of the townships and the assessed lands only? That is, would the commissioners be required to provide for the levying and collecting of an annual county tax sufficient to create a sinking fund to pay the interest on the bonds, the county to recoup itself out of the proceeds of the taxes collected from the abutting property? Or would the taxes levied against the township's property and the assessments levied against the abutting property be considered an adequate provision under the constitution?

"7. Does section 1222-1, General Code, provide for levying taxes for both intercounty highways and main market roads?

"8. Does section 1223, General Code, authorize the county commissioners to issue bonds for both intercounty highways and main market roads?

"9. Does the one per cent. limitation of section 1223, General Code, refer to the total amount of bonds issued in a county, the total amount of bonds issued in any one year, or the total amount of outstanding bonded indebtedness existing at any one time?

"10. Is there any authority whatever for the submission to the electors of a county, of a proposition to issue bonds for the purpose of general road improvements; the object being to avoid the ten-mill limitation of the Smith law, assuming this limitation to apply to the levies made under section 1222-1, General Code?

"11. Under sections 7181 to 7231, General Code, both inclusive, may the entire county be taxed for the payment of the interest and redemption of the bonds issued for the building of the road or must this tax be limited to a special district situated within two miles of the road to be improved?

"12. Is there a conflict between section 7219 and section 7231, General Code, particularly with respect to the time within which the bonds to which both refer shall be payable? If there is such a conflict, which section controls?

"13. Section 7217, General Code, as amended, requires the tax authorized thereunder to 'conform to the restrictive limitation of the maximum 15-mill limit,' does this language by inference exclude the tax provided for in the section from the operation of the other limitations of the Smith one per cent. law?

"14. Does section 7217, General Code, authorize the levy of a tax without a vote of the people?"

For convenience I shall repeat the statement of your separate questions in connection with my discussion of each one of them.

Your second question, which I need not fully repeat, inquires whether interest and sinking fund levies, for the purposes of providing for the retirement of bonds issued now or hereafter without a vote of the people are to be included within the 10-mill limitation of the Smith law?

I may answer this question in the affirmative without quoting the statute, which is section 5649-2, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 552. This section provides for a limitation of ten mills on the aggregate levies of a taxing district and excludes certain levies from the operation thereof. The excluded levies are those for interest and sinking fund purposes to provide for the payment of indebtedness, "heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

The indebtedness which you describe would not fall within either of the classes referred to in the statute, and levies for the purpose of providing for it would, therefore, come within the 10-mill limit.

You refer in your question to the amendment of section 5649-5b, 103 O. L., 57. This section, as amended, relates solely to the 15-mill limit of the Smith law, and the mere fact that it provides that levies under section 5649-1 (which provides for the making of sinking fund levies) shall be subject to the 15-mill limitation, in no way militates against the conclusion above expressed with respect to the operation of the 10-mill limit. The two limitations are cumulative, and each is operative within its proper sphere.

Your third question is as follows:

"3. May the county commissioners levy the tax provided for in section 1222-1, General Code, annually, or is the authority to levy therein provided for, limited to one year?"

This question requires a consideration of section 1222-1, General Code, as found in 103 O. L., 458. I quote the entire section as therein found, together with section 1223, General Code, as amended in the same act, which has some bearing upon this interpretation:

"Section 1222-1. For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the county for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding one mill upon all taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law, for county purposes, subject however to the maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies now in force.

"For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township or townships for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners or township trustees are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding three mills upon all taxable property of the township or townships in which such road improvement is situated, in whole or in part. Such levies shall be made in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes, subject, however to the maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies now in force. A county may use moneys lawfully transferred from any fund in place of the taxes required under the provisions of this chapter.

"Section 1223. The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments, and whenever in their judgment it is necessary, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement, maintenance or repair is to be made to an amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the lands assessed for such improvement, but the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county. Such bonds shall state for what purposes issued, and bear interest at a rate not in excess of five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts to mature in not more than ten years after they are issued, as the county commissioners shall determine. Such bonds shall be advertised once each week for four consecutive weeks in two newspapers published and having a general circulation within the county. Such bonds shall be sold to the highest responsible bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway for which the bonds were issued."

Your question relates primarily to the interpretation of the first paragraph of section 1222-1. It is true that in order perfectly to express an intention to authorize the county commissioners to levy an annual tax the general assembly should have used the word "annually" in this context. However, the true intention of the legislature may be gathered from all the related provisions.

Section 1223, General Code, which I have quoted, authorizes the anticipation of the collection of the tax provided for in section 1222-1 by the issuance of bonds. These bonds may run for a period of ten years. It seems to me from a fair reading of the related provisions, that the intention of the legislature was to authorize the annual levy of the tax provided for in section 1222-1; so that the power therein conferred is not exhausted when it is once exercised; and so also that the power to issue bonds under section 1223 is not limited to the anticipation of the collection of a single levy.

There may be a distinction between the first and second paragraphs of section 1222-1 in this particular: The first paragraph authorizes a levy "for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion * * * to be paid by the county for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter." That is to say, the purpose is to provide for and to keep up a county highway improvement fund, not with reference to a particular road improvement or a particular enterprise of maintenance or repair but for the purpose generally of paying such charges under the state highway improvement law as may lawfully be made from time to time against the county. Strictly speaking, of course, this levy is actually for the purpose of providing for the payment of bonds to be issued under section 1223, General Code; or at least becomes so whenever the bonds are issued, for in that event the proceeds of the tax are applied to the payment of the bonds and may not be directly expended for the purpose mentioned in section 1222-1.

On the other hand, the second paragraph of section 1222-1 authorizes a levy "for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township or townships for construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways * * * in which such road improvement is situated in whole or in part." The power to make this levy depends upon the actual location of a contemplated road improvement in a given township or townships. The commissioners or trustees may not simply levy this tax for the mere purpose of providing a continuing fund, but the tax must be related to a particular road improvement. Of course, if there is such a road improvement, then for the purpose of maintenance or repair a continuing fund may be created. But I do not find it necessary to go further into the interpretation of paragraph two of section 1222-1 as your question does not directly relate to it. However, the distinction made between the language respecting the levying power created by the second paragraph of section 1222-1 and that created by the first paragraph of the same section is such as to shed some light at least upon the interpretation of the latter.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I repeat my conclusion upon your third question, which is that the county commissioners may make an annual levy of taxes under the authority of the first paragraph of section 1222-1, General Code.

Your fourth question is as follows:

> "4. What is meant by the phrase 'subject, however to the maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies now in force,' as found in section 1222-1, General Code? Does the phrase denote the ten-mill limitation or the fifteen-mill limitation of the Smith law?"

Your question here arises out of the failure of the general assembly to be specific in its description of the limitation which it had in mind in using this language. As you point out it could have obviated all doubt by referring directly to "the restrictive limitations of the maximum 15-mill limit" as was done in section 7217, General Code, 103 O. L., 515. Doubtless, however, this course was not followed because it may have been feared that the exact number of mills constituting a given limitation might be changed by subsequent amendment of the Smith one per cent. law.

I enclose herewith copy of an opinion addressed to Hon. Charles M. Milroy, prosecuting attorney of Lucas county, with reference to the interpretation of similar language in section 6945, General Code, as re-enacted in 103 O. L., 198-202. By comparing the language of the last clause of that section with that of the last sentence of the first paragraph of section 1222-1 as above quoted, it will appear that the two phrases are in identically the same words with the exception of the word "total" which is found in section 1222-1 and is not found in section 6945. In my opinion this difference in phraseology is immaterial for reasons pointed out in the enclosed opinion. These reasons find expression in the statement that in order to denote the 15-mill limitation otherwise than has been done in the amendment to section 7217 above quoted it is necessary to use the phraseology "the combined maximum rate for all taxes" as found in section 5649-5b, as amended 103 O. L., 57. The 10-mill limitation as I have interpreted it in the opinion upon your first question, sent, or to be sent under separate cover, is accurately described by the phraseology used in section 1222-1, it being a "maximum limitation upon the total aggregate amount of all levies," just as is the 15-mill limitation. In other words, the phraseology of section 1222-1 described both the 15 and the 10-mill limitation; whereas the only appropriate language which could be used to describe the 15-mill limitation only would be that found in section 5649-5b.

> "5. Is the power of the county commissioners to issue bonds to pay the share of the township in a road improvement under the state highway department law, as provided for particularly by section 1223, General Code, limited by the provisions of the Longworth act and particularly section 3940, General Code, referred to and adopted in section 3295, General Code?"

In my opinion the limitations of the Longworth act, so-called, do not apply to bonds issued under section 1223, General Code, which has already been quoted. There are several reasons for this conclusion. In the first place section 1223, General Code, provides a limitation of its own. There is, therefore, presented a case of two statutes, one of them general and one of them particular. The familiar rule of construction is that the particular statute is to be interpreted where it conflicts with the general statute as an exception to the former. It seems to me that there is a conflict here, so that it will be impossible to superimpose one of these statutes upon the other and to regard them as merely cumulative. However, I concede that there may be some doubt about this.

In the second place, the limitations of section 3939 and succeeding sections, as adopted by reference in section 3295, General Code, apply to bonds issued by the township trustees. The sections themselves insofar as their quotation is necessary here, are as follows:

> "Section 3295. The trustees of any township may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such periods of time and at such rate of interest, not to exceed six per cent., in such manner as provided by law for the sale of bonds by such township, for any of the purposes authorized by law for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation for specific purposes, when not less than two of such trustees, by an affirmative vote, by resolution deem it necessary and the provisions of law applicable to municipal corporations in the issue and sale of bonds for specific purposes, the limitations thereon, and for the submission thereof to the voters, shall extend and apply to the trustees of townships.
> "Section 3939. When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto by resolution or ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent., and in the manner as provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:
> "4. For improving highways leading into the corporation, or for building or improving a turnpike, or for purchasing one or more turnpike roads and making them free.

"22. For resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways. * * *."

"Section 3940. Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation, under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation.

"Section 3941. The net indebtedness created or incurred by the council under the authority granted it in section one of this act, and in an act passed April 29, 1902, to amend sections 2835, 2836 and 2837 and to repeal section 2837a of the Revised Statutes (O. L. v. p. 318) together with its subsequent amendments, shall never exceed four (4) per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation.

"Section 2942. In addition to the authority granted in section one (1) (G. C. 3939) of this act and supplementary thereto, the council of a municipal corporation, whenever it deems it necessary, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts, or denomination, and for such period of time and rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as it may determine upon for any of the purposes set forth in said section one (G. C., 3939) upon obtaining the approval of the electors of the corporation at a general or special election in the following manner."

It will be observed that the limitations of the above sections are applicable only to the issue of bonds by the township trustees. Bonds to be issued under section 1223, however, are to be issued by the county commissioners.

In the third place I do not believe that the township trustees could issue bonds under section 3939, as adopted by reference to section 3295, for the purpose of paying a township's proportion of a state highway improvement. This is quite a different thing from "building or improving turnpikes," or "resurfacing, repairing or improving * * * public highways." The obvious reference in section 3939 is to improvements to be carried on by the township itself. The section does not refer to the issuance of bonds for a purpose like that contemplated in section 1223, General Code, nor in my opinion could it be properly interpreted so as to refer thereto.

In an opinion to your predecessor, Hon. Lewis P. Metzger, rendered some time ago, I held that a joint reading of sections 3295 and 3939, General Code, is not of itself sufficient to authorize township trustees to borrow money for any one of the purposes enumerated in section 3939. In addition to these two sections there must also exist independent power on the part of the township trustees to do the thing for which, under section 3939, money may be borrowed. In the case at hand, the township trustees do not have the independent power to improve public roads under the highway commission act.

The scheme of the law contemplates the contribution by the township of a part of the cost and expense of making the improvement; but this is quite a different thing from making the improvement as a township enterprise.

Again, it seems to me that if the Longworth act is to apply at all then the township trustees or the county commissioners would have the authority to exceed the limit by proceeding under section 3942, General Code, above quoted. I think it must be conceded, however, upon a fair reading of the highway law that this authority does not exist, and that the latter law does not contemplate the submission of any question relative to exceeding the debt limit to a vote of the people. Finally, the bonds to be issued under sections 3939, et seq., are, generally speaking, such bonds as are to be provided for by subsequent tax levies. This is perhaps not universally true as evidenced by section 3952, General Code, which I need not quote. However, it is true that section 1223, General Code, contemplates the issue of bonds in anticipation of taxes. The taxes themselves being levied under prescribed limitations as provided in section 1222-1, General Code, this, of itself, constitutes a limitation upon the power to create indebtedness. Furthermore, the thing to be anticipated is not only the taxes to be collected from the township, but also the other revenues which are to be available to pay any part of the cost of a given improvement. Again, the limitation is applicable not only to a single improvement but to all improvements for which bonds are to be issued in any one year. Hence, it seems to me that the whole scheme of the state highway improvement law, and of section 1223 in particular, is incompatible with the idea of the Longworth act.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion, in answer to your fifth question, that county commissioners, in issuing bonds under section 1223, General Code, are not controlled by the limitations of sections 3940, et seq., General Code, when the taxes to be anticipated are those levied against the township or townships in which one or more road improvements are situated.

The first part of your sixth question is as follows:

> "6. (a) Are bonds issued under section 1223, General Code, for the purpose of paying the respective shares of the township and lands assessed only, general obligations of the county, or is the county's liability representative only of the ultimate security for the payment of the bonds, being the assessments and taxes to be levied upon the property of the township only?"

In answer to this question, I would say that in my opinion the bonds are county bonds to the extent that if default were made in their payment a suit would lie against the county or against the county commissioners as such, and judgment would be rendered against the defendant therein. But the only way in which such a judgment could be enforced would be by a writ of mandamus to compel the levy of a tax within the prescribed limitations of section 1222-1, General Code, sufficient to pay the respective proportions; that is to say, should the default arise through a shrinkage in the assessment against abutting property owners the proportions of the state, county and township respectively having been fully paid into the fund by appropriate tax levies, etc., the specially benefited property, and that only, would be liable for the satisfaction of the judgment through proceedings in mandamus. So also, if the deficiency should arise from the failure of the township tax to meet the township's proportion, the remedy of the judgment creditor would be limited to a securing of a writ of mandamus compelling the levy of additional township taxes within the limitations of section 1222-1 until the township's proportion has been provided for and the deficiency made up.

The leading case on this point is Davenport vs. County of Dodge, 105 U. S., 237, to which I refer you generally.

In this connection I beg leave to point out that the respective proportions chargeable against the county, township or townships and the specially benefited property are prescribed by section 1208 as amended 103 O. L., 456, subject to certain waivers and other arrangements which may be entered into by and among the different authorities. I do not think mandamus would lie to compel taxes to be levied, for example, against a township in an amount which would charge against the township ultimately a greater proportion of the expense of a given improvement than that prescribed by this section, or agreed upon otherwise under authority of the law.

In a word, then, after the holder of a bond issued, under section 1223, General Code, had secured judgment against the county he could enforce his judgment only by compelling the necessary taxes and assessments to be levied so as to charge against each contributor to the fund, in anticipation of which the bonds are issued, the amount for which it, or they, are liable under the provisions of the state highway department law; and I may add, that this is especially true in that the bonds are issued in anticipation of the taxes and assessments, and with particular reference to the "respective shares of the county, township or townships and the lands assessed," so that a buyer of such bonds is put upon this notice as to what these shares are, and as to how they are to be provided for.

The second part of your sixth question is as follows:

> "(b) The requirement of article XII, section 11 of the constitution being that no bonded indebtedness shall be incurred unless provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds and to create a sinking fund for their ultimate retirement, what provision of this character must be made by the county commissioners when issuing bonds to pay the respective shares of the townships and the assessed lands only? That is, would the commissioners be required to provide for the levying and collecting of an annual county tax sufficient to create a sinking fund to pay the interest on the bonds, the county to recoup itself out of the proceeds of the taxes collected from the abutting property? Or would the taxes levied against the township's property and the assessment levied against the abutting property be considered an adequate provision under the constitution?"

This second part of your sixth question requires consideration of article XII, section 11 of the constitution which is as follows:

> "Section 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The supreme court of this state in the recently decided case of Linke vs. Karb, has expressed the opinion that this provision requires a resolution or other similar measure to be passed or incorporated in the proceedings to issue the bonds, to the effect that taxes shall be annually levied and collected, sufficient in amount, to provide for the sinking fund and interest charges on account of a bond issue. The court did not have the constitutional amendment squarely before it in this case; much less did it have the case of bonds to be provided for in part by special assessments.

I confess that the question which you submit is involved in considerable doubt, as article XII, section 11 embodies a distinct departure from the former policy of this state, and we are without precedents as to its interpretation. However, I am of the opinion, generally speaking, that where bonds are issued in anticipation of taxes levied, or to be levied, and of special assessments, the contemporaneous or subsequent levying of sufficient taxes and assessments to provide for the sinking fund and interest charges on account of the bond issue, is a substantial compliance with the constitution. In other words, "by taxation" as found in the constitution, is not to be so interpreted as to require the bonds to be provided for by tax levies, and to preclude the issuance of special assessment bonds, or bonds to be paid partially in this way. Indeed, there is some question in my mind whether article XII, section 11 applies at all when the bonds are issued in anticipation of all taxes and assessments levied or to be levied, especially when the amount of the taxes and assessments which can be levied is definitely ascertainable in advance. As I have already pointed out, the buyer of bonds issued under section 1223, General Code, as amended, is charged with knowledge of the amounts which will be contributed to the cost of a given improvement by the various taxing districts, etc., contributing thereto. Furthermore, he is charged with knowledge of the tax limitation applicable to the levying of the tax in question. The case is quite different from those instances in which bonds are issued to provide for the cost of an improvement, which bonds are to be paid for by general sinking fund levies made without reference to any particular apportionment of cost, and under rate limitations not especially applicable to the particular levy in a given district. With a very great show of reason it could be urged that in the case of anticipation of such levies and assessments the constitutional provision does not apply at all. Whatever may be the ultimate decision of the courts as to the scope of section 11 of article XII of the constitution, I feel justified in hazarding the opinion that it would not be necessary for the county commissioners to provide at the time of issuing bonds under section 1223, General Code, for an annual tax levy against all the property in the county, making this tax levy the primary source of revenue for the payment of the sinking fund and interest charges on account of the bond issue, and relying, on behalf of the county, upon the reimbursement which should be afforded to the county by the contemporaneous collection of the township taxes and assessments upon special benefited property. In other words, I think that the taxes for the township's portion and the special assessments for the proportion chargeable to the abutting property, constitute the "taxation" required by article XII, section 11 of the constitution; if that section applies at all and that the provisions of the state highway department law prescribing what proportion of the total cost of an improvement shall be paid by the county, township and abutting property owners, respectively, together with the fact that the bonds are issued in anticipation of the collection of the taxes and assessments for these respective shares constitute "provision for" the annual levy and collection of such taxes with a view to meeting interests and sinking fund requirements on account of the bond issue within the intendment of that section, if a formal resolution to the effect of the constitutional language be passed at the time.

Your seventh and eighth questions, which may be considered together, are as follows:

> "7. Does section 1222-1, General Code, provide for levying taxes for both intercounty highways and main market roads?
> "8. Does section 1223, General Code, authorize the county commissioners to issue bonds for both intercounty highways and main market roads?"

I am at a loss as to just how to interpret these two questions. I shall assume, however, that both of them relate to the construction of a state highway improvement along a "main market road." That is to say, I shall eliminate the question of repair and maintenance, and shall consider only as to whether or not bonds may be issued under section 1223, and taxes levied under section 1222-1 of the General Code, as amended, for the purpose of providing for the cost and expense, or part thereof, of constructing an improvement upon and over a part of the route designated as a "main market road."

Of course it is perfectly clear that all the provisions of the state highway commission law apply to the improvement of roads lying along the routes designated as "intercounty highways."

The question respecting "main market roads" is somewhat more difficult. It involves an interpretation of the following sections:

"Section 1227. The word 'highway' as used in this chapter, includes an existing causeway or bridge, or a new causeway or bridge, or a drain or watercourse which forms a part of a road authorized by law. The term 'state highway' as used in this chapter shall be held to mean such part or parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads which have been constructed by the state, by the aid of state money or have been taken over by the state."

The term "state highway" however, is not used in any of the sections of the highway commission act relating to the original improvement of highways. The term is used in section 1222 as follows:

"Moneys appropriated by the state for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this chapter, shall not be used in any manner or for any purpose, except as provided herein. Moneys so appropriated shall be equally divided among the counties of the state, except such moneys as are appropriated for the use of the department and for surveys, plans and estimates, and the maintenance and repair of state highways."

The term is also used in section 1225 as follows:

"The state highway commissioner shall maintain and repair all intercounty highways, main market roads, bridges and culverts, constructed by the state by the aid of state money, or taken over by the state, the state may pay the entire cost and expense thereof. Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as to prohibit any county, township, municipality or the federal government or any individual, firm or corporation from contributing any portion of the cost of the maintenance and repair of state highways.

"When any bridge or culvert on a state highway, shall require renewing, it shall be constructed and the cost apportioned as herein provided for the construction and improvement of bridges and culverts on intercounty highways."

Wherever in the chapter a descriptive term is used to refer to a road, the improvement of which is contemplated or in process of construction, the language is "public road," "highways constructed under the provisions of this act," "intercounty highway" or some other term. In fact it is clear from the language of section 1227 itself that the technical phrase "state highway" applies only to a road which has actually been constructed or taken over by the state. Therefore, in the very nature of the case it could have no necessary reference, so far as section 1227 is concerned to a highway, the improvement of which is contemplated or in course of construction. Hence, it follows that section 1227 does not itself authorize anything with respect to the construction of main market road improvements.

Main market roads are referred to by name in several sections of the act, among them, sections 1183 and 1183-4 for example, which authorize the state highway commissioner to make surveys, plans, specifications, etc., for the improvement of main market roads and to designate routes of travel which shall be called main market roads. Again, the term is used in section 1197 in the following negative manner:

"Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as preventing or forbidding the local authorities from constructing, maintaining or repairing any part > of the intercounty highways or main market roads, provided, however that the plans and specifications shall first have been submitted to the highway commissioner and shall have received his approval."

Of course this section cannot be pointed to as giving authority to improve a main market road under the state highway department law, i. e., under the apportionment plan and upon contracts to be let by the state highway commissioner. It does negatively authorize the local authorities to make an improvement over the route of a main market road under plans submitted to and approved by the state highway commissioner, but in my opinion levies for this purpose cannot be made under section 1222-1, General Code, nor could bonds be issued under section 1223, General Code, therefor.

In section 1225, already quoted, is found reference to the maintenance and repair of main market roads, but as my interpretation of your question limits it to the original construction of the improvement, this section is obviously not pertinent to the inquiry.

It is not clear to me whether there are any main market roads in the state, designated as such by the state highway commissioner, other than those designated by the general assembly itself in the act found in 103 O. L., 155. This act provides for a half-mill levy on all the taxable property in the state, 25 per cent. of the proceeds of which, under section 3 thereof, is to be "used for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of certain main market roads in said state, and the same shall be located upon the route or portions of said intercounty highways designated as follows." Here follows the description of twelve routes, none of which appear to pass through Columbiana county.

As to the improvement of these roads the following provision of section 4 of the act just cited governs, viz.,

> "and as to such main market roads * * * no procedure for construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of roads as is provided for in any other act or acts of the general assembly shall apply to such main market roads."

But I am led to believe that there is in your county some route of travel designated as a main market road by the state highway commissioner, possibly under authority of section 1184-4, General Code, but not so designated by the general assembly. The statutes are practically silent as to the status of such a main market road. Inasmuch as the phrase is also used in connection with intercounty highways as "intercounty highway or main market road," I am of the opinion that the two terms are used practically interchangeably and that a main market road," designated as such by the state highway commissioner, is for the proper purpose of the act, merely an "intercounty highway." That being the case, your seventh and eight questions are answered by saying that there is no difference at all between the procedure in the construction of an intercounty highway and a main market road, designated as such by the state highway commissioner, so that sections 1222-1 and 1223 are equally applicable to both kinds of improvement if they may be so characterized.

If the main market road be one of those designated by the general assembly, sections 1222-1 and 1223, General Code, do not apply to or authorize the raising of money for the purpose of making an improvement by the use of the 25 per cent. of the proceeds of the tax levied and apportioned for this purpose under section 3 of the act in 103 O. L., 155, nor do any of the other sections of the state highway department law apply thereto.

Upon the assumption that you may have in mind a road designated as a main market road and changed from one of the routes named by the legislature under the supposed authority of section 1184-4, General Code, I feel that I should elaborate a little further upon my view as to the meaning of section 4 of the act found in 103 O. L., 155. As already pointed out, one clause of this section provides that in the construction of main market roads none of the procedure provided for by any of the other laws of the state shall apply. Two meanings are possible, first, that along the entire route of a main market road no improvement shall be made except by the sole and exclusive use of the 25 per cent. of the proceeds of the special levy set apart for this purpose under section 3 of the act, and second, by the sole and exclusive efforts of the local authorities under section 1227, General Code, as amended.

The other possible interpretation is that the money set aside under section 3 of the act providing for the tax levy, when used shall be the only money used on a particular job or improvement.

This interpretation fits in perhaps more satisfactorily with the language of section 3, which is to the effect that the main market roads to be constructed under the act shall "be located along and upon the routes or portions of state intercounty highways, designated as follows." In other words, the routes referred to in section 3 of the act, and similarly referred to in section 1184-4, General Code, as amended, are not the "main market roads" nor are they, strictly speaking, the "intercounty highways." They are merely the routes along which main market roads or intercounty highways may be constructed. This distinction would lead to the following definition of a main market road for the purpose of section 4 of the act found in 103 O. L., 155, viz., a main market road improvement is the improvement of any part of one of the routes of travel, designated by the general assembly, or (possibly) as altered by the state highway commissioner under section 1184-4, General Code, made by the use of the fund consisting of 25 per cent. of the proceeds of the hilf-mill levy.

From this it would follow that the making of a main market road improvement over a part of the main market road route would not prevent the improvement of another part of the same route under the state highway department law by the use of the 75 per cent. of the proceeds of the half-mill levy and the other revenues of the state highway department as an "intercounty highway." In other words, when the state highway commissioner applies the 25 per cent. set aside for main market roads he must make the improvement himself without any aid or assistance from the county, but he may entertain application for state aid for the improvement of any part of a main market road route as an intercounty highway. That being the case, the answer to your seventh and eighth questions becomes quite simplified, and it appears that in any event a levy to pay the county's and township's portion of an improvement along a main market road route may be made under section 1222-4, General Code, and bonds may be issued in anticipation thereof under section 1223, General Code, as amended, unless the proposed improvement is to be made by the use of moneys in the fund created by setting aside 25 per cent. of the proceeds of the half-mill levy.

Your ninth question is as follows:

> "9. Does the one per cent. limitation of section 1223, General Code, refer to the total amount of bonds issued in a county, the total amount of bonds issued in any one year, or the total amount of outstanding bonded indebtedness existing at any one time?"

Section 1223, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 459, provides in part that, "the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of the one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county."

The question turns on the meaning of the word "issued." Shall it be interpreted by reading in the qualifying clause "in any one year;" shall it be interpreted as equivalent to the word "outstanding;" shall it and the clauses in which it is found be interpreted so as to put a stop to the power of the county commissioners when they have once issued up to one per cent. of the tax duplicate of the county; or shall it be interpreted so as to put a temporary stop to the exercise of such power until such time as the duplicate may be increased?

Stated in another way, what bonds are to be counted in ascertaining whether the limitation has been or is to be exceeded; those which have been issued in a given year, those which are outstanding or those which have been issued in the past, whether they have been redeemed or not?

This question is not free from doubt. Prima facie, it seems to me the last of the meanings above suggested must be chosen, that being the primary and natural meaning of the word and the clause. Bonds which have been redeemed are nevertheless bonds which have been issued. If the word "issued" was not in the clause at all, and if the clause read "the aggregate amount of such bonds shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county," then the second meaning above suggested would be the natural one, as the obvious import of such a clause would be to refer to the amount of bonds outstanding at a given time. At all events, I think the first meaning above suggested must be rejected as it would do too much violence to the plain language of the section to interpolate the phrase "in any one year" therein. Nor would it do, in my opinion, to interpret the whole clause merely as a limitation upon the amount of bonds that could be issued at one time, i. e., in one exercise of the borrowing power. The evident intention of the statute is to impose a real debt limit upon the county with reference to this particular class of obligations. To interpret the section as just suggested would destroy the effectiveness of the limitation in any real sense. The choice is, therefore, narrowed to that interpretation which counts as "issued" bonds which have been retired and that which regards as " issued" only those bonds which happen to be outstanding at a given time. Although as I have stated, the first of these two interpretations is perhaps more strictly in accord with the primary meaning of the word "issued," yet there is some evidence of the use of the term in the other sense to which I think it is susceptible. The exact phraseology is "the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate." This peculiar use of the word "be" indicates continuity. It denotes a continuation. Therefore, it relates to a thing which may be changed from time to time. Evidently the legislature had in mind an amount which might fluctuate when it provided that such amount should not be in excess of a certain per cent. of the duplicate. It seems to me that the reasonable intendment of the legislature is suggested by this language, together with the whole context, and that in spite of the technical and exact meaning of the word "issued" it may very well be read as if equivalent to "issued and outstanding." Indeed, in one sense there is a distinction between a provision to the effect that the county commissioners "shall not issue bonds in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate" and a further provision to the effect that the "total amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate." The one would seem to forbid the act of issuing bonds after a certain amount had been issued. The other would seem to make the right to issue bonds dependent upon the "bonds issued." There is some indication here then that the legislature conceived of the phrase "bonds issued" as applicable to bonds actually in existence. In this case when a bond is paid and retired it has ceased to be a "bond issued." Looking at it in still another light it must not be forgotten that the word "bonds" is used in connection with the word "issued" as already pointed out, so that it is the amount of the bonds (issued) that is to be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining whether the limitation has been or is likely to be exhausted. The shade of meaning here can perhaps be suggested by transposing the noun and the adjective so as to make the phrase read "total amount of issued bonds shall not be in excess of one per cent., etc." In the sense suggested by this transposition, an issued bond would cease to be such when it had been paid and retired. It would then become a cancelled or retired bond.

I am convinced then that when regard is had to the peculiar context in which the word "issued" is found it must be held that the phrase as a whole means that the bonds outstanding and not paid at any one time may not exceed one per cent. of the tax duplicate of the county.

Your tenth question is as follows:

> "10. Is there any authority whatever for the submission to the electors of a county, of a proposition to issue bonds for the purpose of general road improvements; the object being to avoid the ten-mill limitation of the Smith law, assuming this limitation to apply to the levies made under section 1222-1, General Code?"

You refer to section 7181 to section 7231, inclusive, of the General Code. I need not quote these sections in full but the following provisions will suffice to show their nature:

> "Section 7181. The county commissioners, when satisfied that the public interests of the county demand and justify special action for the improvement of the roads therein, may appoint three disinterested freeholders thereof as road commissioners to view, survey and locate one or more roads, beginning at and leading from the county seat of the county, or such other eligible points as are deemed proper, running by such direct and eligible route as they find best for the public convenience, and terminating at a point within or at the county line.
> "Section 7184. The roads so established and constructed under this chapter shall be opened not more than sixty nor less than forty feet wide. At least twenty feet in width shall be turnpiked with earth so as to drain freely to the sides, and be raised with stone, brick, gravel or other material equally as good not less than eight nor more than sixteen feet in width, nor less than twelve inches thick at the outer edges of such bed or stone, brick or gravel, compact together in such manner as to secure a firm, even and substantial road. The road commissioners may cause the road to be constructed wholly of earth, when stone, brick or gravel or other material equally as good is not accessible to the line of the road.
> "Section 7203. The county commissioners shall not levy a general tax, nor appropriate money, except so far as is necessary to pay the expense of preliminary surveys already commenced, or other liabilities already incurred, to be expended in the construction of such turnpikes, without first submitting to the qualified voters of the county the question of constructing such roads by general tax, which submission shall be at a general election."

It is evident from these and related sections that the procedure of the chapter in which they are found is not appropriate for the general improvement of roads. It is a method of laying out, establishing and constructing particular roads. This, of itself, answers so much of your question as relates to this chapter. You inquire, however, whether there is any way in which the voters of the county may authorize an improvement of the roads and thus place the tax levy outside of the ten-mill limit.

Generally speaking, I may say that I know of no such authority of law, although I may have overlooked some statutory provision. I refer you, however, to sections 5649-5, et seq., being parts of the Smith one per cent. law. These sections authorize the levy of taxes outside of the ten-mill limit and within the fifteen-mill limit for any purpose upon a vote of the electors. In my opinion any county levy for the construction of road improvements such as, for example, the levy for the county's portion of the cost of the state highway improvement under section 1222-1, General Code, may be taken out of the ten-mill limitation by an election under the provisions last above cited—not an election upon the question of issuing bonds, but an election upon the question of an increased tax levy. Of course, the authority to have an increased tax levy would last for five years; on the other hand, however, under section 1223, General Code, the bonds may be made to mature in ten years. Some question might arise under section 11 of article XII of the constitution as to whether or not provision could be made for the retirement of the bonds when the authority to levy the tax necessary for that purpose would expire in five years, and the bonds themselves would run for ten years. For that reason I would advise that if the procedure which I have suggested is followed the life of the bonds be limited to five years or their retirement be provided for by levies to be made within the five-year period provided for by section 5649-5a, General Code.

Your eleventh question is as follows:

> "11. Under sections 7181 to 7231, General Code, both inclusive, may the entire county be taxed for the payment of the interest and redemption of the bonds issued for the building of the road or must this tax be limited to a special district situated within two miles of the road to be improved?"

I assume that you desire an aswer to this question notwithstanding my answer to your tenth question. The statutes involved are as follows:

> "Section 7212. When the county commissioners receive or require donations of money, or written agreements on the part of taxpayers subjecting their taxable property to taxation annually, to aid in the location and construction of such roads, and a majority of the taxpayers within the boundaries of the road sign such subscription or agreement, the county commissioners thereupon may levy the amount thereof upon all the taxable property within the boundaries of the road, according to the benefits of the property, taking into consideration assessments that have been heretofore made."

It will not be necessary to quote the other sections to which you refer. I am of the opinion that the effect of this section is to provide a special method of taxation upon the subscription or written agreement of the taxpayers within the boundaries of the road. In the absence of any special written agreement, sections 7217 to 7219, inclusive, control. They are as follows:

> "Section 7217. Upon the location and establishment of such turnpike road by the county commissioners, and after an affirmative vote by the electors, for the purpose of aiding in the construction and to provide a permanent fund for the maintenance and expense thereof, they may levy annually, in addition to other road taxes authorized by law, a tax for turnpike road purposes of not more than six mills on the dollar of valuation on the grand duplicate of taxable property in the county, and continue such levy from year to year, until the road or roads which have been commenced are completed.
> "Section 7218. Such taxes shall not be levied on lands which have heretofore been assessed for the construction of free turnpikes, or improved roads, already constructed, or in the course of construction at the time of the levy of the tax, unless the amount that would be ratably levied upon such lands exceeds the amount of such assessment. In such cases, the excess only shall be levied and collected.

"Section 7219. For the purpose of raising the money necessary to meet the expenses of such improvements, the county commissioners, if in their opinion advisable, may issue the bonds of the county, payable at such times as they deem advisable, with interest not exceeding the legal rate per annum, payable semi-annually. Such bonds shall not be sold for less than their par value."

The special assessment or subscription provided for in section 7212 is, as that section provides, "to aid in the location and construction" of the road. The remainder of the cost, or all of it, in the absence of any special agreement, is to be provided for under other sections cited.

Your twelfth question is as follows:

"12. Is there a conflict between section 7219 and section 7231, General Code, particularly with respect to the time within which the bonds to which both refer shall be payable? If there is such a conflict, which section controls?"

There is no conflict between sections 7219 and 7231, General Code. The provisions beginning with section 7223, General Code, constitute an act quite separate and apart from that portion of the chapter which precedes them. (See 93 O. L., 234.) I need not go into detail as to the nature of the procedure under the two parts of the chapter respectively.

Your thirteenth question is as follows:

"13. Section 7217, General Code, as amended, requires the tax authorized thereunder to 'conform to the restrictive limitation of the maximum 15-mill limit.' Does this language by inference exclude the tax provided for in the section from the operation of the other limitations of the Smith one per cent. law?"

Section 7217, as amended, 103 O. L., 515, provides as follows:

"Upon the location and establishment of any such turnpike road by the county commissioners and for the purpose in aiding in the construction and to provide a permanent fund for the maintenance and expense thereof, they may levy annually, in addition to other road taxes authorized by law, a tax for turnpike road purposes of not more than two mills on the dollar of valuation on the grand duplicate of taxable property in the county, and continue such levy from year to year, provided, however, that the levying of such tax shall conform to the restrictive limits of the maximum fifteen-mill limit."

In my opinion the general assembly has clearly expressed in this section the intention of excluding the levy provided for therein from the ten-mill limitation of the Smith law. As already stated in this opinion, the ten-mill and fifteen-mill limitations are cumulative and co-ordinate provisions. While it is possible for the general assembly to have appropriately described both of them, as in the case of section 1222-1, yet where one is so explicitly referred to as to leave no doubt as to the intention of the legislature, as in the case of section 7217, as amended, it seems clear to me that by this expression, the general assembly has excluded all possibility of reference to the other. Therefore, in my opinion, the levy provided for under section 7217, General Code, as amended is subject to the fifteen-mill limitation of the Smith law but not to the ten-mill limitation thereof.

Your fourteenth question is as follows:

"14. Does section 7217, General Code, authorize the levy of a tax without a vote of the people?"

Section 7217, General Code, has already been quoted.

In the law amending section 7217 (103 O. L., 515), section 7203, and that group of statutes providing for the submission to the electors the proposition to improve designated roads, were repealed. (Section 2 of the act).

I am of the opinion, in the light of the statutes as they are, that all the powers of the county commissioners under sections 7181 to 7224, inclusive, General Code, may be exercised without a vote of the people. Indeed, I am of the opinion that there is no present authority to submit any question pertaining to the exercise of such powers to a vote of the people.

With respect to the last group of questions stated by you, however, I feel impelled to repeat that the chapter of the General Code beginning with section 7181 thereof has no reference to the improvement of existing roads generally, but only to the construction of particular turnpikes.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY MANAGER OF CHARTERED CITY—NOT REQUIRED TO REGARD SENIORITY OF SERVICE IN REDUCING THE NUMBER OF POSITIONS IN A DEPARTMENT.

The city manager of a chartered city subject to the state laws pertaining to civil service, acting on behalf of the department of public safety in discharging a sufficient number of patrolmen and foremen to meet a reduction in the number of positions in said department is not required to consider solely the number or seniority in service by discharging the appointees last appointed in said department. He has the right to consider the relative merit, record and efficiency together with seniority in service in retaining those showing the highest general average.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 22, 1914, you submit an agreed statement of facts in the matter of the complaint of several former employes in the police and fire departments of the city of Springfield.

The agreed statement of facts is somewhat lengthy and I shall not copy it in full, but will refer to the material facts.

The civil service commission of Springfield has submitted the question as to the legality of the discharge of the complainants, and ask an opinion upon the following question:

"Whether upon the facts as above stated, the city manager as acting head of the department of public safety, in discharging a sufficient number of patrolmen and firemen to meet the situation occasioned by the reduction in the number of positions in said departments, was under a legal duty to consider solely the question of seniority in service, and to discharge the appointees last appointed in said departments, or had he the right to consider the relative merit, records and efficiency together with the seniority in service of each of the men in the department and retain those showing the highest general average of efficiency based upon such considerations."

I assume that the city of Springfield is subject to the state law pertaining to civil service.

It appears that the city of Springfield has a home rule charter, establishing a "city commission," which has the power to appoint a "city manager."

The city commission on January 19, 1914, duly passed an ordinance reducing the number of positions in the fire and police departments. Said ordinance did not designate the employes to be retained. The city manager as acting head of the department of public safety reorganized these departments and reduced the number of employes by discharging the complainants. A copy of such discharge and the reasons therefor was given to each discharged employe, and also filed with the civil service commission. It is uncertain whether said departments can be restored at any time in the future to their former number.

The city manager made an impartial investigation into the relative merits of each member of the departments and discharged the complainants "as the best solution in his opinion, for the city's interests under the above circumstances." The city manager acted in good faith and wherever possible discharged those who would be eligible to receive pensions as upon honorable discharge. That no charges were preferred, and no formal notice of the proposed action was given. Said discharges were termed to be "honorable discharges from the city's service," and each person so discharged was placed at the head of the proper eligible lists by the civil service commission.

It is further agreed :

"That none of said discharges, however, were controlled solely by the length of time for which the discharged officer had been in service of said city and such position. That there are now in the regular service of the city of Springfield nine firemen who were appointed to their respective positions of firemen subsequent to the original appointment of the nine complainant firemen in this cause, and who were retained in the city's service in preference to the said complainant firemen.

"That there are now in the service of said city seven patrolmen, duly appointed to and serving in said positions, who were appointed thereto at a date subsequent to the original appointment of the seven patrolmen, complainants herein; and that said patrolmen, were retained in the city's service in preference to the eight patrolmen, complainants herein."

It is admitted that the proceedings in the adoption of the ordinance were regular and that the city manager had the power to reorganize the departments by reducing the number of officers and employes.

The gravamen of the complaint is that the city manager retained in the service men who were appointed after those who were discharged. In other words, he did not recognize, solely, seniority of service, by discharging those who had been last appointed.

Cities are sometimes compelled to reduce the number of positions and this makes it necessary to discharge employes who were efficient. It is an unfortunate situation for those who are discharged, but someone must be discharged.

The courts have met a similar situation under the old municipal civil service law, and there is nothing in the new act to change the principles applicable to such cases.

In State ex rel., vs. Searcy, Mayor, 21 Cir. Dec. 83, it is held:

> "Seniority of employment in the classified service of municipalities entitles incumbents in office thereunder to no preference over others subsequently acquiring positions in such service by virtue of examinations under the merit system, except as provided by section 165 of the Municipal Code of 1902 in cases of promotion from one rank to another. Hence, in reducing the number of patrolmen of a city, pursuant to ordinance of its council, the board of public safety may reclassify its police force regardless of length of service of its members.
> "Section 227 of the Municipal Code of 1902, authorizing municipal councils to fix the number of employes in the department of public safety, gives councils authority to reduce the number of its patrolmen.
> "Sections 167 and 213, providing that no removals in the civil service list shall be made except for cause, and continuing in office certain municipal employes, are provisional in their scope and were intended to give incumbents their status under the new code, but they give no higher status or greater right to position than those subsequently placed in employment by examination under the merit system."

This case was affirmed by the supreme court without report in 80 Ohio State 740.

In the case cited the number of positions was reduced by ordinance and the appointing authority did not retain the employes according to seniority of service. The situation in the case at bar is identical.

Section 2 of the new civil service act, section 486-2, General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * and on and after January 1, 1914, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service under the government of this state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

Section 16 of said act, section 486-16, General Code, provides in part:

> "Any person holding an office or position under the classified service who has been separated from the service without delinquency or misconduct on his part may, with the consent of the commission, he reinstated within one year from the date of such separation to a vacancy in the same or similar office or position in the same department; and whenever any permanent office or position in the classified service is abolished or made unnecessary, the person holding such office or position shall be placed by the commission at the head of an appropriate eligible list, and for a period of not to exceed one year shall be certified to an appointing officer as in the case of original appointments."

In accordance with the provisions of this section the discharged employes have been placed at the head of the eligible lists.

Section 17 of the act, section 486-17, General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * In all cases of discharge, lay off, reduction for a definite term or otherwise, the appointing officer shall furnish the subordinate discharged, laid off, reduced or suspended with a copy of the order of discharge, lay off, reduction or suspension, and his reasons for the same, and give such subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. Such order together with the explanation, if any, of the subordinate shall be filed with the commission."

These provisions do not prevent a reduction in the number of employes, but recognize the right to do so.

The civil service act makes no other provision for reducing the number of positions in a department. It does not provide that in making reductions the oldest in time of service or appointment shall be retained. In the absence of such provision in the act, no one in the classified service would have any preference over any other. All stand upon an equal footing.

Therefore, in making reductions, the appointing authority may choose whom he shall retain, regardless of the time of service, or time of appointment. He may take into consideration other things in addition to seniority of service. He is not required to consider solely the seniority of service.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the discharges in question were made according to law.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORGANIZING TOWNSHIP INTO A ROAD DISTRICT—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES ARE NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION FOR SUCH SERVICE—TOWNSHIP TREASURER—TOWNSHIP ROAD DISTRICT FUNDS—INTERCOUNTY HIGHWAY—STATE AID HIGHWAY LAW.

Township treasurers are entitled to no compensation for services rendered in the organizing of a township into a road district, etc., and supervision of the working sections in the construction of roads under section 7052, since the statutes are silent with reference to any payment therein, nor are they entitled to any reimbursement for actual expenses incurred.

A township treasurer is not entitled to any compensation for the handling of township road district funds. The township trustees cannot expend money derived from the sale of bonds of a township road district for the purpose of paying the township's proportion of the cost and expense of improvement of an intercounty highway, under the provisions of the state aid highway law, since such law provides the method for raising money to pay the township's portion for the cost of such improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

HON. ARCHER L. PHELPS Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 4th, wherein you submit for opinion the four questions following:

"First. What compensation, if any, are township trustees entitled to for their services rendered in the organization of the township into a road district, the issuing of bonds, the letting of contracts and the supervision of working sections, in the construction of roads under section 7082?

"Second. Are township trustees entitled to receive their actual expenses incurred in the organization of the township into a road district, and the issuing of bonds, the letting of contracts and the supervision of the work of construction?

"Third. To what compensation, if any, is the township treasurer entitled for the handling of township road district funds?

"Fourth. Can the township trustees expend money derived from the sale of bonds of a township road district, for the purpose of paying the township's proportion of the cost and expense of the improvement of an intercounty highway, under the provisions of the state aid highway law?"

Section 7052, General Code, provides:

"The trustees shall designate one of their number to supervise the improvement of each working section of the public ways. They shall provide such blanks, books and records, as are necessary, and allow to the township clerk for the services to be rendered by him, reasonable compensation; all of which shall be paid out of the funds provided for such improvement on the order and allowance of the township trustees."

The foregoing is the last section of the subdivision of the statutes providing for the improvement of public roads, when the trustees of a township have erected the township or part thereof into a road district. Township trustees are not entitled to compensation for services rendered by them under this subdivision, by virtue of any provision in the subdivision itself, because section 7052 which is the only place where the subject of compensation of officers is at all mentioned, makes no provision for the payment of anything to the trustees. If the trustees are entitled to any compensation for such services, it is only by virtue of section 3294, which provides that there may be paid to the township trustees a compensation of "one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the business of the township, to be paid from the township treasury," but no trustee may receive more than $150.00 in any year. The answer to your first question depends upon whether the services required by sections 7033 -7052 to be performed by township trustees, are services in the business of the township for which trustees would be entitled to the per diem mentioned in section 3294. In the consideration of this question, it should be noted that township trustees under section 7033, may erect the whole township, an election precinct, or part thereof in the township, or the township not including municipal corporations therein, into a road district.

The next section provides that a district so erected shall have an appropriate name by which it shall be known and designated. The trustees are authorized by other sections to borrow money and issue bonds of the district to obtain funds for the improvement of the roads therein, and to levy a tax upon the taxable property of the district to pay the cost of such improvements, and to pay the principal and interest on the bonds. All through the act the district, rather than the township, is spoken of, so that it is evident that the district was intended to be a separate entity from the township, and it is clear to me that when the trustees are performing services under these sections, they are doing so for the district and not for the township. I am therefore of the opinion that the trustees are not entitled to the per diem mentioned in section 3294, for services performed by them under sections 7033-7052; payment under the latter sections not having been specifically provided for, such services under a well known rule of law, must be regarded either as gratuitous or as compensated by the other fees and emoluments pertaining to the office. No provision is made, either in the general statutes or in sections 7033, et seq., for payment out of the township treasury or from funds of the road district, of the personal expenses of the trustees.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the trustees are not entitled to have such expenses paid from either of the sources above indicated.

The statutes we are considering are likewise silent with reference to the payment of any compensation to a township treasurer for his services in handling the funds of a road district. The compensation of the township treasurer is provided for by section 3318, General Code, which read:

> "The treasurer shall be allowed and may receive as his fees for receiving, safekeeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees."

The compensation of the township treasurer is computed upon the moneys belonging to the township treasury, paid out by the treasurer upon the order of the township trustees.

The money raised under section 7033, et seq., belongs to the road district and not to the township treasury, hence it is my opinion that the township treasurer is not entitled to any compensation for handling the same.

The answer to your fourth question must be in the negative. Money raised by virtue of these statutes should be expended only as the statutes direct, that is by the township trustees. They cannot use any of the money so raised to pay the township's portion of the cost of the improvement of the intercounty highway under the state highway law. That law provides a method for raising money to pay the township's portion of the cost of an improvement and should be followed when roads are being improved under its provisions.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INCORPORATION OF A TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICT INTO A SPECIAL DISTRICT—DUTY OF BOARD OF EDUCATION TO TRANSPORT PUPILS UNPROVIDED FOR TO A SCHOOL.

Where part of a subdistrict of a township school district has been incorporated into a special school district leaving the balance of said township school district unprovided for as to a schoolhouse, the board of education of the township school district must either provide a schoolhouse in the remaining part of said subdistrict, or transport the pupils to a school.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

HON. THOS. H. MOORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 5, 1914, you submitted to this department for an official opinion thereon, the following request:

"A special school district was formed in Lakeville, Holmes county, Ohio, taking in part of subdistrict No. 6, Lake township, Ashland county, Ohio, and the school in the said No. 6 subdistrict, Lake township, Ashland county, was abolished by the order and decree of the probate court of Holmes county.

"There were several families that were part of the No. 6 subdistrict in Lake township, Ashland county, that were not included in the new Lakeville special school district, and the nearest school which they can now attend in Lake township is over two miles distance and there is no school nearer in any other district.

"Now the question I raised is in the interpretation of section 7730—must the board of education of Lake township, Ashland county, convey the children of the above mentioned families to the nearest school?"

In reply thereto section 7730 of the General Code (section 3922, Bates Revised Statutes), provides in part as follows:

"The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all subdistricts in the township district. Upon such suspension the board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such subdistrict or subdistricts to a public school in the township district, or to a public school in another district, the cost thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Or, the board may abolish all the subdistricts providing conveyance is furnished to one or more central schools, the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district."

Said section was considered and construed by the court in the case of Board of Education vs. Shaul et al., 17 C. D., N. P., p. 269, wherein the second syllabus holds as follows:

"A township board of education having exercised its judicial discretion in suspending school in certain subdistricts and changing the district boundaries and having provided transportation for the pupils of such schools to other schools, the court will not interfere with such discretion on the ground of expediency or because of popular disapproval of such action."

In further construing said section, together with other sections, the court at page 275 of the opinion, says:

"These several sections of the statute clearly authorize the board of education to suspend the schools in its discretion in any and all of the subdistricts in the township district, and to provide for conveyance of the pupils in such district or subdistricts to other public schools; or to abolish all the subdistricts and provide conveyance to one or more central schools."

And again at page 278 of the opinion, appears the following:

"It is clear from these acts that the board of education of Wayne township had the right to suspend these schools and provide for transportation of the pupils to another public school in the township, and the evidence before the commissioners shows that this is what the board of education of Wayne township had done."

Section 7730 above quoted applies to township school districts.

If the said subdistrict referred to in your inquiry had been abolished by the board of education of Lake township, Ashland county, by reason of the centralization of the schools of said township or by reason of suspending the operation of the school subdistrict by the board of education of said township school district, then section 7730 of the General Code would clearly apply, and the board of education of said township school district would be legally required to furnish conveyance to all the pupils in said township school district including those in said subdistrict No. 6.

But as stated in your inquiry, the situation in your case is different in that the said subdistrict No. 6 was abolished by reason of the fact that a special school district was formed which takes in part of subdistrict No. 6, Lake township, Ashland county, Ohio, in Lakeville, Holmes county, Ohio, by the order and decree of the probate court of Holmes county. The statutory provisions providing for the formation of special school districts are contained in chapter 5 of title 13 of the General Code. Section 4728 defines a special school district; section 4729 provides the procedure for the establishment of a special school district as follows:

> "To establish a special school district, a petition, signed by not less than ten male citizens who are electors of the proposed special district, shall be filed in the office of the probate judge of the county in which such special district is situated, or, if such district is situated in two or more counties, then with the probate judge of the county having the greatest total tax valuation of such proposed district. Such petition shall set forth the desires of the petitioners, shall contain a description of the territory to be included in the proposed special district and be accompanied by a statement giving the total tax valuation of such territory certified to by the county auditor or auditors, and an accurate map of the territory, to be included in such district, which map shall be prepared to the satisfaction of the probate judge."

Section 4731 specified the duty of the probate court upon the filing of such petition as follows:

> "Upon the filing of a petition for the establishment of a special school district, the probate judge shall fix the time for the hearing of the petition, which shall be within sixty days of the filing thereof. Thereupon he shall cause to be published for four consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics, printed and of general circulation in the county where the petition is filed, notice of the filing of the petition and the time of the hearing thereon. Such notices shall be mailed to the clerk or clerks of the boards of education having territory in the proposed special school district."

Section 4732 of the General Code provides that the probate judge may hear and determine the question of establishment of such special school district and that he may change the boundaries of the proposed districts as follows:

> "The probate judge may hear and determine the question of the establishment of such special school district and may subpoena and examine witnesses under oath. He may change the boundaries of the proposed special school district, and shall fix and determine the amount of money due and payable to the special district from the surplus money in the treasury or in process of collection in the district or districts from which it was formed, or, in case of indebtedness of such district or districts, he shall determine the amount of money due and payable by the special school district to the district or districts from which it was formed. In either case the amount so found due shall be a valid and binding obligation upon the board of education of such district or districts."

The special school district of Lakeville, Holmes county, Ohio, as you state in your inquiry, was formed in accordance with the statutes providing for the formation of special school districts, (a portion of which are above quoted), the result being that said subdistrict No. 6 was thereby deprived of school facilities by reason of the fact that a considerable portion of subdistrict No. 6 of Lake township, Ashland county, was included within the boundaries of such special district so formed. This was done under section 4729, General Code, whereby a special school district may be formed in two or more counties but in such case the procedure so provided must be brought in the county which has the greatest tax valuation of such proposed district. This procedure is entirely separate and distinct from that provided by section 7730, supra. The provisions of said section 7730 apply only when the abolishment or suspension is made by the board of education of township school districts.

Section 7646 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Each township board of education shall establish and maintain at least one elementary school in each subdistrict under its control, unless transportation is furnished to the pupils thereof as provided by law."

Said section was amended at the recent special session of the legislature February 16, 1914, and was filed in the office of the secretary of state, March 9, 1914. The recent amendment appears at page 228 of the 104th volume of Ohio Laws, and reads as follows:

"The board of education of each rural school district shall establish and maintain at least one elementary school in each subdistrict under its control, unless transportation is furnished to the pupils thereof as provided by law."

As amended, its provisions are practically identical to those contained in said section (7646) prior to such recent amendment, and while as amended this section is not in effect for the reason that the same will not become effective until after 90 days after it is filed in the office of the secretary of state, nevertheless, because its provisions as before stated are practically the same, the fact that the amended section is not yet in effect does not make any material difference in this instance. Said section 7646 is specific in its provision that each township board of education shall at least establish and maintain one elementary school in each subdistrict, under its control, unless transportation is furnished to the pupils thereof as provided by law. Subdistrict No. 6 in Lake township, Ashland county, Ohio, still exists even though a part of it has been added to the special district which was formed in Lakeville, Holmes county, Ohio. Said subdistrict still being in existence, then it would seem to follow, under the provision contained in section 7646, that the board of education of such township district must either establish and maintain an elementary school in such subdistrict, or provide transportation as provided by law, such as the provisions therefor as contained in section 7730, General Code, supra.

Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, it is my opinion that the board of education of Lake township must provide an elementary school in said subdistrict No. 6 thereof, unless transportation is furnished to the pupils thereof as provided by law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOILER INSPECTOR'S CERTIFICATE—FEE TO BE PAID BEFORE CERTIFICATE IS ISSUED.

It is not proper to issue a boiler inspector's certificate and forward the same before the certificate has been paid for, there being no authority in law for such a practice, and therefore, before the certificate is issued, the fee therefore should be paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of February 2nd, wherein you state:,

"Please advise this department if the boiler inspection certificate mentioned in section 1058-20 and section 1058-21 of the Ohio boiler inspection law may be issued and forwarded with a bill covering the same, before the certificate has been paid for.

"It has been the practice of this department not to forward the certificate until the fee has been received.

"In order that certificates may be issued promptly upon receipt of inspection reports, all owners are billed for their certificate fees in advance. A number of concerns pay a lump sum, which is placed to their credit and charged off as inspection reports are received and certificates issued.

"The above arrangement necessitates our department carrying a trust fund in the bank, which makes a complicated accounting system.

"In event the certificates were sent out with a bill for the amount of the fee, upon receipt of the fee, the department could make a record of the same and deposit the amount in the state treasury."

Sections 1058-20 and 1058-21, General Code, insofar as they have any bearing on your inquiry, provide:

Section 1058-20:

"If, upon making the internal and external inspection, the inspector finds the boiler to be in safe working order, with the fittings necessary to safety, and properly set up, upon his report to the chief inspector of steam boilers, the chief inspector shall issue to the owner or user thereof, a certificate of inspection stating the maximum pressure at which the boiler may be operated, as ascertained by the rules established by the board of boiler rules, and thereupon such owner or user may operate the boiler mentioned in the certificate for one year from the date of inspection, unless such certificate shall be sooner withdrawn. * * *"

Section 1058-21:

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"The owner or user of a steam boiler herein required to be inspected shall pay to the chief inspector of steam boilers the sum of one dollar for each certificate issued."

It will be observed that section 1058-20 required the chief inspector of steam boilers, upon the report to him of a deputy inspector that a boiler is in safe working order, etc., to issue to the owner or user thereof, a certificate; and section 1058-21 fixes the fee for such certificate at one dollar.

These statutes contemplate that in the issuance of certificates, your department should do a cash business, that is to say, the fee of $1.00 prescribed by section 1058-21 should be in your possession before the certificate is issued and forwarded to the person entitled thereto, otherwise your department would be put to the trouble and expense of collecting these fees after the certificates were issued, and this would place upon your department a burden not intended by the statutes.

I am of the opinion that the practice of collecting fees in advance of the issuance of certificates is legal.

The acceptance by you of a lump sum of money to cover the costs of certificates to be issued in the future is a matter that concerns you and the parties paying the money under such arrangement. You receive the money as the agent of the payer and not as the agent of the state of Ohio, and no claim attached to the money in favor of the state until an inspection is made and a certificate issued. I am of the opinion that this practice is not contrary to law, but it should be made clear to the persons contributing to this fund that you accept the same in your private or individual capacity and not as a representative of the state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PLATS FOR QUADRENNIAL APPRAISEMENT—CONTRACT FOR THE MAKING OF SUCH PLATS MUST BE ENTERED INTO ACCORDING TO LAW—MORAL OBLIGATION TO PAY FOR SUCH MAPS AND PLATS WHERE THE SAME ARE FURNISHED ON AN ILLEGAL CONTRACT.

There is no legal liability on the part of the county to pay a printing company a claim for making plats for quadrennial appraisement and district board of assessors by the county auditor, when the only contract was a telephone conversation, for the reason that the expenditure involved more than $1,000.00 and the provisions of sections 2414, 2445 and 5660, General Code, were not complied with. Since the county has gotten the benefit of the maps and retained the same, there is a moral obligation that such bill be paid, and the county commissioners may in their discretion pay such sum for the maps furnished as they deem reasonable and proper.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 17th, you presented for my opinion the following question:

> "Should a bill for making plats for quadrennial appraisement and district board of assessors and county auditor against the county commissioners, the only authorization for which was a telephone conversation, be allowed?"

From the communications it appears that the total amount of the bill for maps amounted to $6,616.05. These maps were provided from time to time as they were desired; there was no special contract for the furnishing of these maps other than a telephone conversation between the company furnishing the maps and a Mr. Edmondson, in which conversation the price for medium prints, measuring 24x30 was agreed upon at $1.25. With respect to the smaller prints (18x24), no price was agreed upon, but it was arranged that the amount charged would be proportional.

> "The county commissioners shall furnish for the district assessor and the district board of complaints for their county, and their deputies, assistants, experts, clerks, and employes suitable office rooms at the county seat and the district assessors shall furnish for his own office for the district board of complaints all maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, furniture and other equipment necessary for the proper discharge of their duties and for the preservation and safe keeping of their books, records and files. Provided, however, that the maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, and other supplies and equipment used by the district assessor, shall so far is practicable, be used also by the district board of complaints. In case any board of county commissioners fails or refuses to furnish such rooms, maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, furniture and other equipment, the tax commission of Ohio, upon complaint of the district assessor or district board of complaints, may authorize the district assessor or the district board of complaints, as the case may be, to procure such rooms, furniture, maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies and other equipment, as may be deemed necessary by the commission, and the amount so authorized to be expended for such purpose shall constitute a charge against the county, regardless of the money in the county treasury appropriated for such purposes and notwithstanding any failure of the county commissioners to levy or appropriate funds therefor."

Under this enactment it is clear that the duty of providing the necessary maps rests upon the county commissioners when application is made therefor by the district assessor, but that in the refusal or failure of the county commissioners to so provide, the district assessors may be authorized themselves to procure the maps, upon the authorization of the tax commission. There is nothing whatever in this statute upon which to base the presumption that contracts made by the county commissioners for such maps are to be, in any way, excepted from the general restrictions and safeguards provided by the statutes with respect to the making of contracts by the county commissioners, and when such maps are procured by the county commissioners, all provisions of statute respecting contracts by that board, must be complied with.

When the general assembly passed the act above referred to, providing for a new method of assessment for taxation, they expressly repealed many sections of the old law pertaining to these matters. Sections 5549, et seq., of the old law, however, requiring the county commissioners to advertise for bids for the construction of necessary maps for the purpose of appraisement of real estate, on or before June, 1913, and every fourth year thereafter, were not repealed nor amended by the general assembly.

Since these provisions have special application and make direct reference to the quadrennial appraisement of real property, it is difficult to see their application in the present case, and I, therefore, conclude that section 5549 of the General Code was left unrepealed by the legislature in its session in 1913, for the reason that such repeal might seriously interfere with contracts entered into during that year under this statute.

Since I cannot, therefore, see the application of an authorization for a contract of this nature once in four years under the present system, I conclude that this statute has no application at the present time, and county commissioners are not, therefore, required to comply with its terms in procuring these maps.

Section 2414, and sections 2445 and 5660 of the General Code, are as follows:

> "Section 2414. No proposition involving an expenditure of one thousand dollars or more shall be agreed to by the board, unless twenty days have elapsed since the introduction of the proposition, unless by the unanimous consent of all the members present of the board, which consent shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered on the record.
> "Section 2445. No contract entered into by the county commissioners, or order made by them, shall be valid unless it has been assented to at a regular or special session thereof, and entered in the minutes of their proceedings by the auditor.
> "Section 5660. The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county, township or board of education, is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

Such arrangement as existed, in this case, between the county commissioners and the printing company, clearly contemplated the total number of maps supplied and the total amount to be paid for the same, and the arrangement can, by no means, be separated into a number of smaller transactions for orders for a lesser number of maps as they were supplied.

The proposition, therefore, comes clearly and directly within the terms of section 2414, requiring a proposition involving an expenditure of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) or more, to wait over twenty days after the introduction of the proposition, in the absence of unanimous consent of all members present, shown by yeas and nays entered upon the journal. The arrangement, therefore, was irregular and invalid for this reason. The terms of section 2445, requiring every contract of the county commissioners to be assented to at a regular or special session, and entered in the minutes, has also a direct application, and from the facts before me, evidently was not complied with.

Moreover, it is furthermore manifest, from the statement of facts, that the auditor's certificate, with reference to the existence of a properly appropriated fund for the purpose of the expenditures, was not procured.

It is unnecessary to set forth the decisions of this state, that failure to comply with statutory provisions, pertaining to the execution of contracts by the county commissioners of the nature of those above set forth, renders the contract invalid and prevents any recovery upon the same, or any recognition of the contract by the courts.

The fact that the courts will not assist in the enforcement of any claim on such a contract, however, does not necessarily operate to prevent the county commissioners from paying, as a moral obligation, what they deem to be a reasonable amount, for property received or things of value obtained by the county by virtue of such irregular transactions.

In Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., on page 194, the court says:

> "But, because a municipality is not legally liable to pay for a public improvement, it does not follow that it is not under a moral obligation to do so or that a court because it will not enforce payment will enjoin it. The contract for paving this street is not ultra vires. If invalid it is so merely because the contract was made before the bonds to provide the money to pay for it were sold. Now that the work has been done in accordance with the contract and the bonds have been sold and the money to pay for it is in the treasury, it is right that it should be paid for and a court of equity ought not, unless its failure to do so would defeat the purpose of the law, prevent the municipality from doing what equity and fair dealing would exact from an individual."

In Caldwell vs. Morgan, 8 N. P. n. s., at page 391, the court says:

> "Where services have been rendered, or property obtained, for which a valid contract could have been made, and the parties cannot be put in statu quo, a court of equity will not interfere with the payment of the reasonable value of such services or property. Mere invalidity in the incurring of an obligation, although sufficient to destroy its effect as a legal obligation, where by the granting of an injunction public health or welfare would be seriously or irreparably jeopardized and where strong equities have arisen by reason of the expenditures of money or rendition of services which have and will innure to the benefit of the public, is not sufficient to call into action the powers of a court of equity to enjoin. (Cases cited.)"

In direct answer to your question, therefore, I am of the opinion that the printing company in question has no legal claim enforcible against the county for the maps provided by virute of the arrangement set forth. The county commissioners may, however, in their discretion, pay such sum for the maps furnished as they deem reasonable and proper to reimburse the company in question for the expenses incurred and the services rendered.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MILEAGE FOR TESTIFYING TO AN OFFICER AUTHORIZED TO TAKE DEPOSITIONS—MILEAGE ALLOWED A WITNESS FOR TESTIFYING IN A COURT OF RECORD—NO CONFLICT BETWEEN SECTIONS 3016, 3018 and 4555, GENERAL CODE.

The words "and such mileage," as used in section 3012, General Code, in the following phrase: for attending a trial before a justice of the peace, or mayor of a municipal corporation, fifty cents for each day and such mileage" refers to the mileage given for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions, and does not refer to the mileage allowed a witness in testifying in a court of record.

There is no conflict between sections 3016 to 3018 and 4555, General Code, therefore, the payment of witness fees from the county treasury in criminal cases is authorized in all cases of felony and in misdemeanor only when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected, and no conviction had. The effect of section 4555, General Code, is solely to require a certificate of the mayor as a condition precedent to the payment of such fees as are authorized by sections 3016 to 3018, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 2nd, you submit the following:

"1. What mileage can be legally allowed and paid to witnesses in the various courts, and for testimony given, as set forth in sections 3012 and 3014, G. C.?

"We are of the opinion that it is the general practice all over Ohio to allow witnesses mileage both ways in all cases. It seems to be clear that mileage can only be allowed one way for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions and before a coroner, but what is meant by the words 'and such mileage,' with reference to witnesses attending a trial before a justice of the peace, or mayor of a municipal corporation?

"2. In view of the provisions of sections 3016, 3017 and 3018, G. C., it appears that fees of witnesses in misdemeanor cases are not payable from the county treasury when testifying before justices of the peace, mayors and police justices, yet section 4555, G. C., seems to authorize a mayor to to certify such fees out of the county treasury. Because of these apparent conflictions this department requests your ruling or opinion upon the questions herein set forth."

Section 3012 of the General Code is as follows:

"Each witness in civil causes shall receive the following fees: For each day's attendance at a court of record, to be paid on demand by the party at whose instance he is summoned, and taxed in the bill of costs, one dollar, and five cents for each mile from his place of residence to the place of holding such court, and return; for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions, under a subpoena, seventy-five cents, and five cents for each mile from his place of residence to the place of taking depositions, to be paid on demand by the party at whose instance he is summoned; for attending a coroner's inquest, one dollar for each day and the same mileage allowed a witness in the taking of depositions, to be paid from the county treasury; for attending a trial before a justice of the peace, or mayor of a municipal corporation, fifty cents for each day and such mileage. No mileage shall be allowed if the distance from the place of residence of the witness to the place where called to testify is less than one mile."

Under this statute it is clear that a witness testifying in a court of record is entitled to 5 cents per mile both going to and returning from the place of holding court. For testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions, and for attending a coroner's inquest, however, it is clear that authorization for payment of mileage for the return journey is absent, and a witness in each of these cases, therefore, can be allowed his 5 cents per mile only for the journey from his place of residence to the place where testimony is given.

You desire a construction, however, of the term "such mileage" under the clause authorizing the payment of the same attending a trial before a justice of the peace or a mayor of a municipal corporation. I am of the opinion that the word "such," as used in this connection, can very clearly refer only to its relations in the clause immediately preceding the term as it is used in the statute. By no mode of construction could the word "such," as herein used, be refused relation to an antecedent immediately preceding and given a relation to an antecedent employed in a prior clause of the statute.

For testifying before a justice of the peace or a mayor, therefore, a witness is entitled to such mileage as is prescribed in the case of testimony rendered at a coroner's inquest, that being the same, by the terms of the statute, as is allowed a witness in the taking of depositions, to wit: 5 cents per mile only from place of residence to place of giving testimony.

Answering your second question. Sections 3016 and 3018 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 3016. In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgment of conviction so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury.

"Section 3018. In felonies, fees of witnesses before justices of the peace, mayors and police justices, shall be paid upon the allowance of the commissioners from the county treasury, on the certificate of such officer, notwithstanding the state has failed."

Under these sections payment of witness fees from the county treasury in criminal cases is authorized in all cases of felony, and in misdemeanors only when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected upon failure of conviction.

Section 4555, General Code, to which you refer, is as follows:

"In cases for the violation of ordinances, the fees of witnesses and jurors shall be paid, on the certificate of the officer presiding at the trial, from the corporation treasury, and in state cases on like certificate from the county treasury."

This statute requires fees of witnesses in state cases to be paid from the county treasury upon the certificate of the presiding officer at the trial.

I am of the opinion that the effect of this statute is not to authorize the payment of fees, but rather to specify the mode of procedure requisite for the payment of such fees as are authorized by sections 3016 and 3018 above quoted. The effect of section 4555, General Code, therefore, is to require a certificate of the mayor as a condition precedent to the payment of such fees as are authorized by the above sections, to wit: those that accrue in the prosecution of felonies before a mayor, and in those misdemeanors only where recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction had.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MATTRESS INSPECTION LAW—LABELING OF PILLOWS NOT REQUIRED BY LAW.

Under sections 12798-1 and 12798-3, the mattress inspection law, it is not compulsory to place a label on pillows, which are made or stuffed with material other than feathers, similar to that prescribed for mattresses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On April 9, 1914, you submitted to this department a request for an opinion as follows:

> "A question has been raised as to the proper interpretation of the mattress inspection law with reference to labeling of pillows.
> "I would be pleased to have you advise me whether or not in your opinion, under the provisions of sections 12798-1-2-3 of the General Code, it is compulsory to place a label similar to that prescribed for mattresses on pillows which are made or stuffed with material other than feathers."

Sections 12798-1 and 12798-3 provide:

> "Section 12798-1. Whoever manufactures for sale, offers for sale, sells, delivers or has in his possession with intent to sell or deliver any mattress which is not properly branded or labeled as hereinafter provided, or which is falsely branded or labeled, or whoever used, either in whole or in part, in the manufacture of mattresses any cotton or other material which has been used or has formed a part of any mattress, pillow or bedding, used in or about any public or private hospital, or in or about any person having infectious or contagious disease, or whoever dealing in mattresses has a mattress in his possession for the purpose of sale or offers it for sale without a brand or label as herein required, or removes, conceals or defaces the brand or label thereon, shall be fined not less than $25.00 nor more than $500.00, or be imprisoned in the county jail not more than six months or both."

Section 12798-2 prescribes the form of label to be placed on mattresses, and is not pertinent to the question you raise.

It should be borne in mind that these are criminal statutes and must be strictly construed. The only reference in this law to pillows is the provision in section 12798-1, whereby the use in the manufacture of mattresses, of any cotton or other material that had theretofore been used or formed a part of a pillow, etc., used in hospitals, or in or about any person having contagious or infectious diseases, is made a criminal offense. This provision, however, does not of itself require the labeling of pillows. It is the placing in mattresses of material theretofore used in certain designated pillows that is made a crime, and not the failure to brand or label the pillows themselves.

One of the elements of the definition of a mattress given in section 12798-3, viz.: that it shall be a quilted pad, is lacking from a pillow, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that this law does not require the labeling of pillows, regardless of the material of which they may be made.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—VALUING ESTATE—COLLATERAL RELATIVE—MASSACHUSETTS RULING—RULE FOR DETERMINING VALUE OF ESTATE.

Where A bequeathed a certain sum to B in trust the income to be paid to C, a collateral relative, during C's life, and at the death of C said trust to be discharged, and the principal sum to be paid to D, another collateral relative; the proper way of ascertaining the value of D's estate, dependent upon a prior taxable estate, is to take the value of the prior estate together with the sum of $500.00 from the appraised value of the whole estate, that is the whole inheritance subject to taxation. The Massachusetts rule is followed in this opinion.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 23rd, receipt whereof has been acknowledged, requests my opinion upon the following question arising under the collateral inheritance tax law:

> "'A' bequeaths the sum of $10,000.00 to 'B' in trust, the income thereof to be paid to 'C,' a collateral relative, during 'C's' life; at the death of 'C,' the trust is to be discharged and the principal sum paid to 'D,' another collateral relative of 'A.'
> "What is the rule valuing 'D's' estate?"

One way which will readily occur to a person seeking an answer to your question is the determination of the present worth of the principal sum of the estate; that is, the computation of that amount, which, at a given rate of interest, will produce the principal sum of the estate in the period of time corresponding to the expectancy of life of the owner of the beneficial interest of the life estate. (In re estate of Dows, 167 N. Y., 227). In no event, I think, ought the remainderman be subject to taxation on the full value of his estate, at the death of the testator.

However, section 5333, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 463, must be considered. That section provides:

"When a person bequeaths or devises property to or for the use of father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant, or adopted child, during life or for a term of years, and the remainder to a collateral heir, or to a stranger to the blood, the value of the prior estate, shall be appraised, within sixty days after the death of the testator, in the manner hereinafter provided, and deducted, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, from the appraised value of such property."

It is clear, of course, that this statute does not, in terms, govern the ascertainment of the value of a subsequent estate save when the prior estate is not taxable. However, in Dow vs. Abbott, 197 Mass., 283, under statutes, in this respect identical with those of Ohio, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts held that the section corresponding to section 5333, as amended, should be applied in a case like that stated by you. In the language of Rugg, J., "the statute makes no specific provision for a case exactly like this, but the valuation can be ascertained according to the method pointed out in R. L. c. 15 section 2 * * * for analagous cases," (the statute referred to being the one which corresponds to section 5333, General Code, and the case before the court being one in which the prior and ultimate estate were subject to taxation).

I can find no other authorities upon the question. Under similar statutes the supreme court of Illinois holds that a section corresponding to section 5333, General Code, should be strictly construed. —(In re Kingman, 220 Ill., 563.) Such a strict construction would, of course, lead to a result opposite to that indicated by the Massachusetts decision above cited and would support the view that the actual present value of the subsequent estate should be ascertained in the way pointed out in In re Estate of Dow, supra. However, the Illinois decisions are not on the exact point, and for various reasons I have come to the conclusion that the Massachusetts rule should be followed in Ohio.

Among the reasons which have led me to adopt this conclusion I may state that the Ohio Statute makes specific provision for the computation of future values of annuities and life estates, (section 5353 of the General Code), the provision being that such computation shall be at five per cent. compound interest. There is no like provision for computing present worth of vested estates to be enjoyed in futuro. It does not seem possible to me that the legislature would have adopted the statutory rate and method of computation above referred to, had it not been intended that the same rate and method, if applicable at all, should be used in computing present worth. We are thus forced to the conclusion that in order to make the statute harmonious, the analogy of either section 5353, or that of section 5343, or that of both, must be applied to a case which neither one of them covers, viz.: the ascertainment of the value of a future estate dependent upon the value of a life estate which is taxable. That is to say, if neither statute controls, we have no statutory rate of interest for the computation of present worth, and it seems unlikely that the legislature intended a different rate of interest to be used in computing present worth from that which it has prescribed for the valuation of life estates and annuities; and if section 5343 be held applicable, it is equally as reasonable to hold section 5333, as amended, applicable.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the way to ascertain the value of a vested future estate, dependent upon a prior taxable estate, under the collateral inheritance tax law, is to ascertain the value of the prior estate and to take that value, together with the sum of $500.00, from the appraised value of the whole estate, meaning, of course, the whole inheritance subject to taxation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMBER OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY—RIGHT TO SERVE UPON COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION.

There are no provisions in the constitution prohibiting a member of the board of education from serving upon the county board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1914.

HON. JOHN H. LOWRY Member, House of Representatives, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 11th, wherein you request my opinion upon a question stated in your letter as follows:

> "Will you kindly inform me if there are any provisions in the constitution prohibiting a member of the legislature from serving upon the county board of education?"

A county board of education is provided for in sections 4728 to 4734, General Code, inclusive.

Section 4728, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of a county board of education composed of five members who shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district. Each district shall have one vote in the election of members of the county board of education except as is provided in section 4728-1. At least one member of the county board of education shall be a resident of a village school district if such district is located in the county school district and at least three members of such board shall be residents of rural school districts, but no more than one member of the county board of education shall reside in any one village or rural school district within the county school district."

Section 4728-1:

> "All school districts other than village and city school districts within a civil township shall be jointly entitled to one vote in the election of members of the county board of education. The presidents of the board of education of all such districts in a civil township shall meet for the purpose of choosing one from their number to cast the vote for members of the county board of education. If no such meeting is held in any year for the purpose of choosing one from their number to cast the vote of such boards, the president of the board having the largest tax valuation shall represent all such districts of the civil township at the election of the county board members. A board of education of a rural district having territory in two or more civil townships shall vote with the boards of education of the districts of the civil township in which the greater part of its taxable property is located."

Section 4729:

> "On the second Saturday in June, 1914, the presidents of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts in each county school district shall meet and elect the five members of the county board of education, one for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years and one for five years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. The terms of office of such members shall begin on the fifteenth of July, 1914, and each year thereafter on the third Saturday of January. Each year thereafter one member of the county board of education shall be elected in the same manner for a term of five years. The presidents of the various boards of education within the county school district shall be paid their necessary and actual expenses incurred while meeting for the purpose of electing members of the county board of education. Such expenses shall be allowed by the county auditor and paid out of the county treasury upon the order of the chairman and clerk of the meeting."

Section 4730:

"The county auditor of each county shall issue the call for the first meeting, giving at least ten days' notice of the place where such meeting will be held. The call for all future meetings shall be issued by the county superintendent. The meeting shall organize by electing a chairman and a clerk. The vote of a majority of the members present shall be necessary to elect each member of the county board. The members of the county board so elected, may or may not be members or officers of any village or rural board of education. The result of the election of members of the county board of education shall be certified to the county auditor by the chairman and clerk of the meeting."

Section 4734:

"Each member of the county board of education shall be paid his actual and necessary expenses incurred during his attendance upon any meeting of the board. Such expenses, and the expenses of the county superintendent, itemized and verified shall be paid from the county board of education fund upon vouchers signed by the president of the board."

The foregoing sections provide the manner in which the county board of education is to be elected and the length of the term of each member; it also provides for the payment of their expenses. No salary is provided for in any of these sections.

The question may arise as to whether or not the members of the county board of education are chosen by election, or by appointment. In the case of State of Ohio vs. Squire, 39 O. S., 197, the terms "appointment" and "election" are defined as follows:

"The word appointment as used in the statutes generally means the designation of a person to hold an office of trust, by an individual, or a limited number of individuals to whom an appointment or selection has been delegated.

"The word election is properly applied to the choice of an officer by the votes of those upon whom the law has conferred the right of electing such officer."

The statutes have conferred the right of electing the members of the county board of education upon the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education and the county school districts, and provides that a vote of the majority of the members present shall be necessary to elect each member of the county board.

There is no question but what the selection of the county board of education is by election and not by appointment. Consequently the inhibition contained in section 19 of article II, constitution of Ohio, which provides:

> "No senator or representative shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, or for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office under this state, which shall be created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased, during the term for which he shall have been elected."

does not prevent a member of the general assembly from being elected to the county board of education, since the members of this board are elected and not appointed.

Article II, section 4 of the constitution of Ohio, which provides:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

will not prevent members of the general assembly from being elected to the county board of education, because the office of member of the county board of education is not a lucrative office, nor do I find any other provision in the constitution that would prevent a member of the general assembly being elected to this office.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that there is no provision in the constitution that will prohibit a member of the present general assembly from being elected to the county board of education, regardless of the fact that the act providing for the county board of education was passed during a special session of the general assembly, held during the year 1914.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REMOVAL OF MEMBER OF A CITY SCHOOL BOARD FROM DISTRICT—EFFECT OF SUCH REMOVAL.

The removal from a city school district, indefinitely, of a member of a board of education creates a vacancy in said board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 19, 1914.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 7, 1914, you submitted for an opinion the following request:

"A legally elected member of the Canton board of education has temporarily removed from the city of Canton. Under these conditions is he still a member of the city board of education, with all the rights and powers of a member of the city board?"

In reference to the qualifications of members of school boards, of city school districts, section 4704 of the General Code, prior to its recent amendment, provided as follows:

"Members elected at large must be electors of the city district, and members elected from subdistricts must be electors of the city subdistricts from which they are chosen or of the territory attached to the subdistrict for school purposes. A removal of a member of the board from such subdistrict, territory or city school district shall vacate his office."

Section 4218 of the General Code, in reference to the qualifications of members of council of villages, contains a provision very similar to that contained in section 4704, General Code, supra. Said section 4218 reads as follows:

"Each member of council shall have resided in the village one year next preceding his election, and shall be an elector thereof. No member of the council shall hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia or to be interested in any contract with the village. Any member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required or removes from the village, shall forfeit his office."

Said sections are similar in this respect—that one provides that the removal of a member of the board from such subdistrict, subterritory or city school district, shall vacate his office, while the other (section 4218) contains the provision that if a member of the village council removes from the village, such removal shall operate as a forfeiture of his office.

In an opinion rendered by this department, on October 25, 1911, to Hon. John S. Roller, city solicitor of Lowellville, Ohio, this department in substance held, that when a member of a village council removes from the village with his family, even though such removal is only temporary and is for an indefinite period of time, he thereby changes his domicile and forfeits his office.

Because of the similarity in the provisions of the two sections as above pointed out, the reasoning in said opinion would apply equally as well to section 4704, General Code, as it existed prior to its last amendment, as it does to section 4218, General Code, which is construed in said opinion. Said section 4704 of the General Code was amended April 28, 1913, and appears at page 277 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws; and as the same is now amended its provisions have been entirely changed and relates to an entirely different subject-matter than that contained therein prior to its said amendment. So that said section does not now specifically provide that the removal from a city school district of a member of the board of education of a city school district shall have the effect of vacating his office therein. The only other provisions upon this subject relating to members of boards of education, are those contained in section 4748 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, nonresidence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

In the statement of facts attached to your inquiry, it appears that the member of the board of education of the Canton city school district has removed from such school district for an indefinite period of time and that he is now living on a farm outside of the city school district of the city of Canton. It is to be noted that section 4748 of the General Code, supra, specifically provides that a vacancy in any board of education may be caused by removal from the district. According to the facts above referred to, the member in question has removed from the school district wherein he was formerly elected as a member of the board of education. It is my opinion that the word "may" used in said section should be read as "shall." In accordance with this view, as heretofore stated, it is my opinion therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, that the removal of the said member of the Canton board of education indefinitely from the city school district of Canton, creates a vacancy in said board and therefore he is no longer a member of the Canton city board of education, with all the rights and power of a member thereof.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POLICE JUDGE MADE PRESIDING JUDGE OF MUNICIPAL COURT MAY RECEIVE ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION—SUCH COMPENSATION NOT TO BE RECEIVED UNTIL THE ORGANIZATION OF THE COURT, JANUARY 1, 1914.

1. The police judge may by law be the presiding judge of the municipal court and may receive additional compensation under section 47, Cincinnati municipal court law, but such additional compensation is not established by section 20 of article II of the constitution of Ohio.

2. The Cincinnati municipal court was not organized until January 1, 1914, there being no judge prior to that time, the judge of the police court would not be entitled to any salary other than that of police judge until the complete organization of the court on January 1, 1914.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 19, 1914.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 9, 1914, you write as follows:

"The Cincinnati municipal court law, filed with the secretary of state on May 2, 1913, became a law on August 1, 1913, but no appointment of associate judges, as provided for in section 45 of said act, was made by the governor, and in fact said municipal court was not organized until January 1, 1914, when the elective associate judges entered upon their term of office. During the time from August 1, 1913, until January 1, 1914, the justices of the peace of said city of Cincinnati (Cincinnati township) continued to serve and to transact their usual judicial functions and to receive the salaries provided by ordinance during the fiscal year 1913, and the Cincinnati police court continued in actual operation without any change of method and without exercising additional jurisdiction. Judge Fricke was elected police judge under the old law at the November election, 1911, and was commissioned and assumed his judicial office for a term of four years beginning January 1, 1912. Section 2 of said municipal court law denominates the present police judge of Cincinnati as the presiding judge of the municipal court until the expiration of his present term.

"Question. May said police judge, made by law presiding judge of said court, receive the additional compensation or increase of salary provided in section 4 of said municipal court law, or would such increase of salary be prohibited by section 20 of article 2 of the constitution of Ohio?

"Question. If said judge is legally entitled to such increase of salary, may he receive the same from and after August 1, 1913, or will he be denied such increase until the organization of the court on January 1, 1914?"

1. The law in question is an act providing for enlarging and extending the jurisdiction of the police court in the city of Cincinnati, and changing its name to the "municipal court of Cincinnati." This court is to consist of five judges, one of whom shall be the presiding judge, and the present police judge of Cincinnati shall be the presiding judge of the municipal court until the expiration of his present term, and all of said judges are to be qualified electors of the city of Cincinnati, and shall have been admitted to the practice of law for not less than four years. Additional judges provided for by the act, including the presiding judge after the expiration of his term as police judge, shall be elected by the electors of the city of Cincinnati, at the municipal election of 1913, two judges are to be elected for four years and two for two years, and at each regular municipal election next preceding the expiration of the terms of office of each judge, including the present police judge, a successor shall be elected for a term of four years.

The salary of the judge of a municipal court shall be $4,000.00 per annum, $3,000.00 of which shall be paid out of the treasury of the city of Cincinnati and $1,000.00 out of the treasury of Hamilton county. The presiding judge shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum, of which $4,000.00 shall be paid from the city treasury and $2,000.00 from the county treasury.

The municipal court shall have the same jurisdiction in criminal matters and prosecutions for misdemeanors or violations of ordinances as heretofore had by the police court of Cincinnati, and in addition thereto shall have certain civil jurisdiction which is definitely set out in the law. In all actions and proceedings of which the municipal court has jurisdiction, all laws conferring jurisdiction upon the court of common pleas, a police court or a justice of the peace, prescribing the force and effect of their judgments, orders or decrees, shall be held to extend to the municipal court, unless inconsistent with the act or plainly inapplicable.

The presiding judge shall have the general superintendence of the business of the court, and may classify and distribute among the judges the business pending in said court. He is to render a complete annual report to the city council showing the work performed by the court, a summary of its expenses, the number of cases heard, decided and settled, the number of decisions reversed or affirmed, the number of days and hours of attendance in court of each judge, and such other data as council may require. Each judge is to devote an equal length of time to the conduct of the criminal branch of the court as nearly as practical. The judges are authorized to sit separately or otherwise, shall meet at least once a month, and at such other times as the presiding judge may determine, for consideration of the business of the court; shall prescribe forms; establish a system for the docketing of causes, motions and demurrers; adopt rules governing the practice and procedure, and designate the mode of keeping the record of proceedings. The judges or a judge may summon and impanel jurors, tax costs, compel the attendance of witnesses, jurors and parties, issue process and exercise all powers conferred upon courts of common pleas, the judges thereof, justices of the peace, police courts or such other powers as are necessary for the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by the act and for the enforcement of the orders of the court.

The present clerk of police court must act for the municipal court until his successor is elected and qualified. Before entering upon the duties of his office the clerk shall give bond in the sum of not less than $10,000.00, to be determined by the judges of the court, which bond is to be given for the benefit of the city of Cincinnati and for all persons who may suffer loss by reason of the default of any of the conditions of the bond. A vacancy in the office of clerk shall be filled by the mayor of Cincinnati.

The chief deputy clerk and not less than three other deputy clerks shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by the council, which shall not be less than $1,500.00 a year, $900.00 of such compensation to be paid by the county of Hamilton, which shall also pay $300.00 to each of the three other deputy clerks. The other deputy clerks shall receive not less than $1,200.00 per annum.

All deputy clerks, the bailiff and deputy bailiffs are to be nominated by the clerk and confirmed by the council of the city of Cincinnati. Every police officer of the city of Cincinnati is ex-officio a deputy bailiff of the municipal court.

The council of the city of Cincinnati is to provide suitable accommodations for this court and necessary supplies, etc. The solicitor of the city of Cincinnati is to be the prosecuting attorney thereof and council shall provide for the appointment of interpreters and stenographers and fix their compensation, which shall be payable out of the city treasury.

Provision is made for the removal of proceedings from courts of justices of the peace to the municipal court, and there shall be no future elections of justices or constables in Cincinnati township. Until the beginning of the terms of office of the judges elected at the first municipal election after the passage of this act, the law provides that the governor shall appoint four persons to act as judges of the municipal court who shall receive compensation proportionately equal to the salaries provided in the act, and who shall have the power and authority therein vested in regularly elected judges in conformity with the provisions of the act.

I have detailed at some length the powers, duties, method of organization and jurisdiction of this court for the reason that all of this is pertinent to the discussion which shall follow.

While you do not state what salary the police judge was receiving at the time of the passage and taking effect of the law in question, I assume from your question that it was less than the amount prescribed in the law.

In state ex rel. Fox vs. Yeatman, et al., 89 O. S. ____, the supreme court held that the law here under consideration was a valid enactment, one of the objections urged being that the legislature by designating the judge of the police court as presiding judge of the municipal court had exercised the power of appointment. The court held that the presiding judge did not hold an office additional to the office of judge, and consequently there was no merit in the contention discussed.

I call attention to this in order that you will be advised that the supreme court has upheld the constitutionality of this law.

Your first question calls for the consideration of section 20 of article II of the constitution of this state. This section reads as follows:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

The first thing to be determined in construing this constitutional provision is what officers are comprehended within the inhibition contained in the italicized language. Under a similar constitutional provision it has been held in Nebraska that this limitation prohibited the change in compensation of those holding offices created by the constitution, but this decision is contrary to the holding of the supreme court of this state in State ex rel. vs. Raine, 49 O. S., 580, wherein it was held that section 29 of article II of the constitution of this state was contravened by the allowance of $1,000.00 per annum to each county commissioner for expenses incurred by him in the discharge of his duties, unless it can be successfully maintained that county commissioners are constitutional officers because they are referred to in section 7 of article X of the constitution of this state, and as county officers have recognized existence under the constitution by virtue of their being such officials. The article of the constitution just referred to requries that provision be made for the election of such county and township officers as may be necessary, and when the general assembly has designated these officers, they receive, in a sense, constitutional recognition.

As it is not necessary to pass upon this point in order to arrive at a conclusion in this matter, I shall not here discuss the soundness of the suggested distinction between the Ohio decision and that of Nebraska, which latter may be found reported sub nom. County vs. Timms 32 Neb., 272.

In State vs. Kalb 50 Wis. 178, the following syllabus may be found:

> "An act of the legislature creating a county court of limited civil and criminal jurisdiction and fixing the salary of the judge, payable out of the county treasury, may be amended so as to change the salary of the judge of such court during the term for which he has been elected; and the constitutional provision which forbids 'the compensation of any public officer to be increased or diminisheed during his term of office,' is inapplicable to such case."

The reasoning of this case, however, is not entirely applicable to the law of Ohio as announced in the case of State ex rel. vs. Raine, supra, unless the foregoing suggested distinction between the Ohio and Nebraska cases may also be made between the decision just cited and the Raine case.

We are not, however, without precedent in Ohio upon this question. In the case of State ex rel. Ferry vs. Board of Education 21 C. C., 785, it was held that section 20 of article II of the constitution did not refer to such offices as a member of a board of examiners or to officers of a municipal corporation.

The matter was directly decided by the court of common pleas of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the case of State ex rel. Thompson vs. Wall, et al., wherein the municipal court law of Dayton was involved. That law is very similar to the Cincinnati law excepting that it makes provision for the fixing by council of the salaries of the judges in not less than a specified sum. In compliance with this act council fixed salaries by ordinance and the relator, who was a judge of the Dayton municipal court, presented a voucher for $291.66, the installment of his salary for the month of January, 1914, and demanded a warrant for that sum. The director of finance and city accountant of the city of Dayton refused to issue such warrant upon the ground that the law was unconstitutional in that it directed council to fix the relator's salary, the contention being that the act was in contravention of section 20 of article II, upon the ground that under this section the salary should be fixed by the legislature. In answer to this it was said that the judges of the municipal court were municipal and not state officers, and they were not included within the term "officers" as used in the said section. The court recognized the fact that the jurisdiction of the municipal court was of a dual character, but held that this did not alter the aspect of the case, and that a judge of such court was a municipal and not a state officer.

In this view the court was supported by State ex rel. vs. Churchman, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 361, wherein it was distinctly held that the judge of a municipal court was an officer of the municipal corporation even though criminal jurisdiction in cases of violation of state laws was vested in such court. The court there held that the agents and officers of a municipality do not cease to be corporate officers and corporation agents, and did not lose their character of officers of the corporation by reason of their exercise of power and their performance of duties other than corporate.

The supreme court of Illinois in Wolf vs. Hope, 210 Ill. 50, held that the judge of the municipal court is a municipal officer, and the fact that he had power to interchange with and perform the duties of circuit, superior, county and probate courts throughout the state, was without significance. See also Cooke vs. Sennet, 136 Ill., 314.

It having been established that the judges of the municipal court are municipal rather than state or county officers, it follows that the next point in logical order for decision is whether section 20 of article II applies to municipal officers.

It must be remembered that the constitution did not create the municipalities of the state, but rather recognized them as already in being, or, as has been well expressed in State ex rel. vs. Hawkins 44 O. S., 98, 110:

> "Not one of the officers of a city or village has any recognized existence in the constitution. It is different as to county and township officers."

It is also held in the foregoing decision that section 6 of article X did not extend to officers of a municipal corporation,

> "for the obvious reason, as already stated, such officers have no recognized existence in the constitution. They are to be created and provided for by the legislature."

If they do not come within the purview of one section of the constitution because they have no recognized existence under that organic instrument, it should follow that they do not come within the purview of any other section unless they are expressly mentioned. There is no express reference to them in the section here under discussion, nor in any other part of the constitution touching the matter in hand. From this it should logically follow that section 29 of article II is not applicable to municipal courts. Upon this point Judge Snediker says, in State ex rel. vs. Wall, et al., supra:

> "In our opinion only such officers are referred to as are incumbents of offices created by the constitution itself. The relator is not such an officer.

> The court here created by the legislature is under its fullest control, and the final determination of such court may properly be left to the legal authorities by the body which had full power to give the court its existence, regulate its jurisdiction, fix its terms, etc."

This theory has been followed in this state so long that "the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." The general assembly has not attempted to fix the compensation of municipal officers, but has left that to the local authorities almost invariably, and this constitutional construction, which has been continued from the time of the adoption of the constitution, should receive weight in a matter of this kind.

The first and second clauses of the section are correlative and if the one is inapplicable to municipal officers it must necessarily follow that the other cannot apply. The word "therein," occurring in the last clause, has reference to "term" and "compensation," as used in the first clause. This shows how closely knit and interwoven are the two phrases.

Another matter to be taken into consideration is that the jurisdiction conferred upon the police judge by the municipal court act is much broader than that theretofore vested in him, it includes new duties which were not incident to the original position and which were not within the scope of the office. This is not a case where after the commencement of the term the police judge is called upon to exercise a power which already inhered in his office. The jurisdiction of a police judge does not potentially embrace the exercise of such civil jurisdiction as has been conferred by the municipal court law, It entails work which did not belong to the office of police judge, and which could not have been contemplated at the time the salary of the judge of police court was fixed. In other words, the additional duties required by the passage of the municipal court law were not germane to the old office. Under such circumstances it is fundamental, we think, that additional compensation may be allowed for the added duties without any infringement of the constitutional provision, if such provision were here applicable. It has been held under a similar constitutional provision that when new duties are imposed, which are not within the scope of the office, and extra compensation is provided, such increase is not violative of such constitutional inhibition.

Love vs. Baehr, 47 Calif., 364.
County vs. Fels., 37 Pac., 780.
County vs. Collinge, 28 Pac., 175.
Thomas vs. O'Brien, 129 S. W., 103.
State vs. Carson, 6 Wash., 250.

This doctrine has received approval in the following Ohio cases:

Lewis vs. State, 21 C. C., 410.
State ex rel. vs. Coughlin, 6 N. P. n. s., 101.

In passing it is interesting to note that in the case of Commonwealth vs. Mathues, 210 Pa. St., 372, the supreme court of Pennsylvania held that a constitutional provision like the one here under discussion was not applicable to the judiciary as it was discussed in a separate constitutional provision. Under this decision the judges of the supreme court of Pennsylvania were permitted to receive increased compensation under a statute passed after their taking office.

Therefore, it is my opinion that the police judge made by law the presiding judge of the municipal court, may receive the additional compensation provided in section

4 of the Cincinnati municipal court law, and such additional compensation is not prohibited by section 20 of article II of the constitution of Ohio.

2. From the statement of facts submitted by you, it is apparent that the municipal court was not organized until January 1, 1914, as no judges were appointed as provided in the act, no action was taken by the presiding judge under the new law, and none of the jurisdiction, powers or duties of the municipal court are exercised or performed until the elected judges were inducted into office. While in their popular senses the words "judge" and "court" are often used interchangeably, I do not think that in the present instance they should receive such construction. As Judge Story well says in United States vs. Clarke, 25 Federal Cases No. 14804,

> "a court is not a judge, nor a judge a court. A judge is a public officer who by virtue of his office is clothed with judicial authorities."

"Court," as used in its technical sense, is a judicial assembly. When a judge is called a "court," he is only rightly so called when the tribunal over which he presides is in session.

State vs. Woodson, 161 Mo., 444.

In 8 Am. Eng. Enc. of Law, 2nd edition, 22, a court is defined as "a body in the government, organized for the public administration of justice at the time and place prescribed by law."

In re Choate, 18 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.), 186, it is held that a judge is a constituent part of the organization, but he is not the court, which consists of the entire judicial organization for the trial of cases and which is present whenever these constituent parts are actually performing the functions devolving upon them by law.

In Greenwood vs. Bradford, 128 Mass., 296, Chief Justice Gray said:

> "The court as used in the statutes means the court held whether by one or more judges, at a term established by law."

In order that the court prescribed by this law shall come into being and organize, it must be composed in the manner prescribed by statute; in order to perform its functions the presence of the officers constituing it is necessary. From the statement made by you it appears that there was no judicial organization in the manner prescribed by law, and the proper statutory officers had not been chosen. Section 2 distinctly states that the municipal court shall consist of five judges, while as a matter of fact, there was only one. In granting jurisdiction formerly exercised by the police courts, it is vested in the municipal court, and not in the judge thereof. In section 9, extending to it jurisdiction of the common pleas court, such extension applies to the municipal court, and not to the presiding judge. In section 10 the municipal court is authorized to render judgment. Civil actions and proceedings are to be commenced in the municipal court. The duties of the presiding judge very clearly show that the court must be in existence before he can act, because it is his duty to "classify and distribute among the judges the business pending in said court." While the judges may sit separately or otherwise they are required to meet at least once a month, adopt rules, etc. The clerk and his deputies are important and constituent parts of the court, and before the former can enter upon his duties he must give bond to be determined by the judges of the court. From this it is apparent that while the clerk of the police court becomes clerk of the municipal court, he is not authorized to act until the judges approve his bond.

Many other sections might be cited more fully developing the fact that this court was not organized prior to January 1, 1914, but what I have said here suffices, I think, to show that this court was not in actual active existence until January 1, 1914. There being no court prior to that time, the judge of the police court would not be entitled to any salary other than that of police judge until the complete organization of the court on January 1, 1914.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MINE RESCUE CAR—TRANSPORTATION OF SUCH CAR FREE OF CHARGE BY RAILROADS.

State mine rescue car is a car used for first aid work in mine and other disasters may be transported over the railroads of the state without charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 19, 1914.

MR. J. M. ROAN, Chief Deputy Safety Commissioner, Division of Mines, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 28, 1914, you state that Ohio has procured a car known as the "state mine rescue car," which is used for first aid work not only in mine disasters, but in all other great casualties occurring in mines, factories, hotels or upon railroads. This car is equipped with all of the latest apparatus and devices for first aid work, is kept in Columbus and is ready for immediate use in any disaster occurring in the state. The railroad officials of this state have indicated that they are inclined to favor the free transportation, over their lines, of this car, together with those in charge of the car, when it is to be used in first aid or rescue work, provided the railroads in so carrying the car are assured they will not be violating any law.

You ask for my decision as to the legality of the free transportation of such car and its attendants, under the circumstances set out, when the car is being used for the purpose of aiding those who have been injured in a disaster.

You have limited this request to the transportation of the car within the boundaries of the state.

Section 915 of the General Code of Ohio, as amended 103 O. L., 468, requires the chief inspector of mines to provide and maintain, at the expense of the state, a rescue car, fully equipped with certain designated devices and all necessary instruments, chemical tests, supplies and applicances. This car shall be stationed at a point designated by the chief inspector of mines, and may be transferred, by his direction, at any time to any point within the state, for the purpose of facilitating the efficient inspection of mines and conducting rescue work, and to demonstrate the various appliances and instruct persons in their use in first aid and rescue work. It and its equipment are to be continuously in charge of one person, who is required to give bond for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office.

It will be noted that this car is not only for the purpose of conducting rescue work, but also for the purpose of facilitating the inspection of mines, but it is only with the former that your request deals, and consequently, I shall only discuss that phase of the question.

The statute is part of the code of laws dealing with mines and mining, and if construed in a narrow sense would only permit the use of the car in connection with mine disasters, but as the statute is humanitarian in its purpose, and as it will be of great benefit and advantage to the people of the state of Ohio, if given a wider and broader scope than that of solely affording first aid to those injured in mine accidents, it should follow that it should receive a liberal construction in order that the humane and worthy object for which it was designed may be given as complete attainment as possible.

The chief inspector of mines may, at any time, transfer it for the purpose of conducting rescue work; and in defining rescue work, the statute is not in any way limited to mines, and consequently, under the circumstances, I do not think that I should be warranted in restricting its meaning because of the fact that it appears among other statutes dealing exclusively with mines, or because the equipment set out in the statute is especially adapted to mine rescue work. So to construe the law would be to disregard that warning so beautifully expressed ages ago: "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life."

In addition to this, great consideration should be given the construction placed upon the statute by your department, and from your letter, it is clear that you have construed the statute so as to permit the use of the car in cases of all disasters.

I make this preliminary statement for the reason that the character of the car has great bearing upon the construction of the statutes with which your request directly deals.

Section 516 of the General Code prohibits free transportation, by railroad companies, to passengers, except, among other designated persons, to and section 517 expressly states that the preceding section shall not be construed to prohibit any railroad company from carrying passengers free in order to provide relief in cases of general epidemics, pestilence, or other calamitous visitation.

"persons exclusively engaged in charitable and eleemosynary work"

These sections indicate that it was not the intent of the general assembly, in prohibiting free transportation, to deny such free transportation, when the purpose thereof was to help those who were a proper subject of charity or aid by reason of some calamity which had overtaken them.

The whole question, however, seems to me to be governed by section 614-77 of the General Code. This statute deals with the public service commission and railroad companies, and provides:

> "Nothing in this act contained shall prevent any public utility or railroad from granting the whole or any part of its property for any public purpose, or granting reduced rate or free service of any kind to the United States government, the state government, or any political division or subdivision thereof, or for charitable purposes * * *."

As the rescue car referred to in your communication is maintained by your department under authority of the state, any use of such car is the use of a governmental agency, and the free transportation of such agency would be the rendering of free service to the state government, and consequently would come within the purview of the language just quoted. This would not only include the transportation of the car itself, but would also include the carriage of those whose duty it is to see that such car and its equipment are used in the proper way in the furnishing of first aid to the injured, and in rescue work,

In addition to this it must be, I think, conceded that when this car is in use in the manner set out in your communication, it is being operated for charitable purposes. When it is used for the purpose of relieving those who have been injured, or rescuing those who are in danger, it must assuredly be treated as promoting the welfare of the community, or some indefinite part of it. It bestows relief in a manner otherwise impossible.

This doctrine has also received recognition in section 22 of the interstate commerce act, adopted by the congress of the United States, the following language appearing therein:

> "Nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage or handling of property, free or at reduced rates, for the United States, state or municipal governments, or for charitable purposes."

For the foregoing reasons, I not only think it legal for railroad companies to transport such car and its attendants without charge, but would regard such action on the part of the railroad companies as eminently just and proper and as deserving of the highest commendation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHILD LABOR—PROHIBITED IN CERTAIN INSTITUTIONS UNTIL CERTAIN AGE IS REACHED—PERMITTED IN OTHER KINDS OF EMPLOYMENT WHEN THE SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT IN WHICH SUCH CHILD RESIDES ARE NOT IN SESSION.

Under the provisions of section 12993, General Code, no male child under fifteen years or female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed or suffered to work in the twenty-five establishments or businesses enumerated in the first paragraph of said section; this prohibition applies, no matter whether or not the public schools are in session.

When an employment does not come within the descriptive terms of the first paragraph of the section in question, no child under fifteen years of age may be employed or suffered to work in such establishment not so included, when the public schools of the district in which such child resides are in session.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 19, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 19, 1914, you ask for my interpretation of section 12993 of the General Code and refer to the first and second paragraphs thereof, saying:

> "what we would like to know is, should the words 'during any of the hours when the public schools of the district in which he resides are in session,' be construed as qualifying the language used in the first paragraph of this section? In other words, is section 12993 to be construed in such a manner as to permit a male child under fifteen years or a female child under sixteen years of age to work in any occupation or establishment enumerated in said section during any of the hours when the public schools of the district in which the child resides are in session?"

> "No male child under fifteen years or female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in, about or in connection with any (1) mill; (2) factory; (3) workshop; (4) mercantile or mechanical establishments; (5) tenement houses, manufactory or workshop; (6) store; (7) office; (8) office building; (9) restaurant; (10) boarding house; (11) bakery; (12) barber shop; (13) hotel; (14) apartment house; (15) bootblack stand or establishment; (16) public stable; (17) garage; (18) laundry; (19) place of amusement; (20) club; (21) or as a driver; (22) or in any brick or lumber yard; (23) or in the construction or repair of buildings; (24) or in the distribution, transmission or sale of merchandise; (25) nor any boy under fifteen or female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages.
> "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to employ, permit or suffer to work any child under fifteen years of age in any business whatever during any of the hours when the public schools of the district in which the child resides are in session."

It is the evident intent of the general assembly that no male child under fifteen years, or female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed or suffered to work in the twenty-five establishments or businesses enumerated in the first paragraph of said section; and that this prohibition applies no matter whether or not the public schools are in session. There is a positive denial of the right of employment of the said minors, there being no exception to or limitation of the operation of the act.

The second paragraph of this section cannot be construed as in any way modifying or restricting the first paragraph, but, on the contrary, is intended to apply to those employments which are not comprehended within the first paragraph. The object of the law is to preclude the employment of male children under fifteen years and female children under sixteen years of age in any of the designated employments and to prevent the employment or working of any child under fifteen years of age in any business not enumerated in the first section, during the hours when the public schools are in session. In other words, when an employment does not come within the descriptive terms of the first paragraph of the section in question, no child under fifteen years of age may be employed or suffered to work in such employment not so included, when the public schools of the district in which such child resides are in session. When the work is in connection with any of the employments referred to in the first paragraph, no male child under fifteen, or female child under sixteen years of age, under any circumstances, can be suffered to work therein.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHERE A VILLAGE THAT IS SUPPLIED WITH WATER BY A MUNICIPALITY HAS A WATERWORKS SYSTEM.

Where a municipality having a waterworks, supplies water to another municipality, a village under the authority of section 3973, General Code, and the municipality thus supplied constructs a system of pipes for distributing such water to its inhabitants, it has "waterworks" within the meaning of section 4357, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1914.

HON. E. C. IRVINE, Solicitor for Village of Bexley, 8 E. Long St., Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of April 9, 1914, asking opinion of me, in which you advise me as to the following facts:

> "In the summer of 1912, the village of Bexley of this county, took the necessary steps to provide a water supply for the inhabitants of the village, and after issuing bonds therefor, commenced to complete the construction of a system of water pipes throughout the village for the distribution of water to the residents. Instead of sinking wells, and installing machinery to pump water through said system of pipes, the village negotiated with the city of Columbus to furnish the necessary supply delivered by meter into the pipes of the village. Under the direction of a former solicitor of the village, the council established and appointed a board of trustees of public affairs."

The question submitted is whether the village council was authorized to create a board of trustees of public affairs under the facts and circumstances above stated.

Section 4357, General Code, provides as follows:

> "In each village in which waterworks, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders waterworks, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

Section 4361, General Code, has since been amended, but at the time of the creation of the board of trustees of public affairs of the village of Bexley, it read as follows:

> "The board of trustees of public affairs shall have all the powers and perform all the duties provided in this title to be exercised and performed by the trustees of waterworks, and such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinances not inconsistent herewith."

Among the enumerated powers of municipal corporation, section 3619, General Code, provides:

> "To provide for a supply of water, by the construction of wells, pumps, cisterns, aqueducts, water pipes, reservoirs, and waterworks, for the protection thereof, and to prevent unnecessary waste of water, and the pollution thereof. To apply moneys received as charges for water to the maintenance, construction, enlargement and extension of the works, and to the extinguishment of any indebtedness created therefor."

In pursuance of this power, municipalities are further authorized to appropriate, enter upon and hold real estate, either within or without the corporate limits, for the purpose of providing for a supply of water for itself and its inhabitants, by the construction of wells, pumps, cisterns, aqueducts, water pipes, reservoirs, reservoir sites and waterworks and for the protection thereof (sections 3677, G. C., sub 13; 3678, G. C.), while by section 3939, such corporations are authorized to issue and sell bonds for erecting or purchasing waterworks for supplying water to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof.

Authorizing the contract between the village of Bexley and the city of Columbus, pursuant to which the conditions arise which occasioned the appointment of a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, section 3973, General Code, provides:

> "A municipality which has waterworks may contract with any other municipality for the supplying of the latter with water upon such terms as are agreed upon by their respective councils."

Precisely then, the question presented is whether a municipal corporation which is supplied with water by another such corporation, under the provisions of this section, has by reason of the construction of a system of water pipes, to distribute the water to its inhabitants, a waterworks within the meaning of section 4357, General Code, above noted. It is apparent that a municipality thus supplied with water has not waterworks in any complete sense such as is possessed by the municipality supplying such water, within the contemplation of section 3973, yet it is likewise apparent that a municipality thus supplied with water, which it distributes to its inhabitants, can be said to have waterworks as compared with the condition of a municipality which has no distributed municipal water at all. Again, the same original act of the legislature, which authorized one municipal corporation to ask for a supply of water from another (66 O. L., 208, 209), recognized that the corporation just supplied might have waterworks as a result of facilities installed for the purpose of distributing the water thus supplied to its inhabitants. Section 355 of this act has been carried into the General Code as section 3976, which provides that where a contract entered into by one municipal corporation for the supply of water to another, shall be terminated by annexation, "so much of the debt incurred by either, in the construction of waterworks, as remains unpaid, shall thereafter be a charge upon the united corporation, to the same extent that the separate debt of either, incurred as aforesaid, was, before the union, a charge upon the corporation which constructed it."

Looking to the provisions of section 4357 alone, it is not apparent that waterworks, the construction of which by the village, authorizes the council to establish a board of trustees of public affairs, is in contemplation of the section any different from waterworks, the purchase or lease of which by the village authorizes the council to establish such board. Section 4357 was originally enacted as section 205 of the Municipal Code of 1902. By section 45 of the Municipal Code, since carried into the General Code as section 3809, municipalities were authorized to contract for the leasing of the waterworks plant of any person, firm or company therein situated. The natural significance of the term "waterworks plant" would seem originally to include the source or means of water supply, as well as the means of distributing the same. Looking to the provisions of section 4357 therefore, it is not in and of its own terms apparent that the legislature had in contemplation a situation such as here presented in the village of Bexley. In construing the provisions of this section, however, it is to be presumed that the legislature had knowledge of the existing legislation upon the subject-matter, and in this connection I know that section 3974, General Code, provides with reference to water supplied to one municipality by another that "the amount to be paid for such supply shall be raised by such municipality in the manner provided for the payment of the expense of conducting and managing waterworks, constructed wholly by a municipality." That is, the municipality thus supplied with water must pay for such supply through water rents to be fixed and collected by proper municipal authorities. Since the enactment of the Municipal Code of 1902, and the amendatory provisions of the Paine law, the only authority with respect to the fixing and collection of water rents is the director of public service in cities and the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, no authority in either instance being vested in the city or village council with respect thereto.

Hutchins vs. Cleveland, 9 C. C. (n.s.),226; 79 O. S., 478.

Looking to the significance of the term "waterworks," it is now apparent that it necessarily includes within its signification the source or means of water supply, such as wells, pumps, etc. For instance, as a public utility, a waterworks company is defined as one engaged in the business of supplying water through pipes or tubing, or in a similar manner to consumers within this state (614-2, G. C.); while for purposes of taxation, the legislature has defined a waterworks company in the same terms (section 5416, G. C.).

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that the village of Bexley has waterworks such as, under the provisions of section 4357, General Code, authorized the council of the village to establish a board of trustees of public affairs.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—NATIONAL MUTUAL AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION—PURPOSE CLAUSE DISAPPROVED.

The purpose clause of the proposed articles of incorporation of The National Mutual Automobile Insurance Association is broader than the provisions of section 9593, General Code, which covers such class of corporations, and is, therefore, disapproved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of May 28th, transmitting to this department, for examination and approval, the proposed articles of incorporation of The National Mutual Automobile Insurance Association, the purpose of which is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring its members against loss sustained by them, on automobiles owned by them and insured in this association, by reason of direct loss or damage caused by fire, arising from any cause whatever, including explosion, self-ignition or lightning, while within the limits of the United States (exclusive of Alaska, the Hawaiian Island, the Phillipine Islands and PortoRico) and Canada, including while in building, on road, or railroad car or other conveyance, on ferry or inland steamer, or on coastwise steamer between ports within said limits. And also against loss or damage by theft, robbery or pilferage by any person or persons other than those in the employment, service or household of the insured."

This association falls within the class of mutual protection associations and is governed by section 9593, General Code. This section is very lengthy and I shall not quote it in full. It provides, however, that any number of persons of lawful age, not less than ten in number, residents of this state or an adjoining state, and owning insurable property in this state, may form such an association and may insure against loss by fire the property of its members located in this state.

The proposed articles of incorporation attempt to confer authority upon a mutual company to insure against loss by fire the property located outside of this state and in transit; also to insure against loss or damage by theft, robbery or "pilferage." Furthermore, the articles are signed by only seven persons and the certificate does not state whether or not the persons are of "lawful age."

For the foregoing reasons, I am unable to approve the articles of incorporation and return them herewith.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—"ADOPTED CHILD" DOES NOT INCLUDE "STEP-CHILD" UNLESS SUCH CHILD IS ADOPTED.

The term "adopted child" as used in section 5331, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 463, providing for collateral inheritance tax against property passing to others than the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child of descendant, is not broad enough to include a step child where no proceedings have been had to adopt the child.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1914.

HON. E. C. TURNER, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 9th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "Section 5331, G, C., as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, page 463, provides for collateral inheritance tax against property passing to others than the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child of the decedent. Is the term 'adopted child' as used in this statute broad enough to include a step-child where no proceedings have been had under the statute to adopt that child?"

The amended statute, insofar as it is material, reads as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of this state or not, and whether tangible or intangible, which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of five hundred dollars. * * *"

The original section provided a specific exemption in favor of "a person recognized as an adopted child and made a legal heir under the provisions of the statutes of this state." (Reference being, of course, to section 8598, General Code, which provides procedure for designating an heir at law, who shall stand in the relation of an adopted child.) Under the original section, then, the conclusion would follow that a step-child, not formally adopted or recognized, under the statute, as an heir at law, would not be entitled to the benefit of the exemption. A decision to this effect was found In re Will of William Hooper, 4 N. P., 186, which holds that legacies to step-sons are taxable, although there is no reason given in the report of the case.

In my judgment, the exclusion of reference to the person recognized as legal heir, from the amended section, has the effect of narrowing, rather than broadening its exemptions. I believe that the term "adopted child," as it remains in the statute, is to have the same narrow meaning as it evidently had under the original section.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion, then, that the term in question is not broad enough to include a step-child where no proceedings have been had to adopt that child.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SPECIAL ELECTION—WHEN A PETITION IS SIGNED BY TWENTY PER CENT. OF THE ELECTORS SUCH ELECTION MAY NOT BE HELD IF REGULAR ELECTION OCCURS NOT LATER THAN NINETY DAYS AFTER THE PETITION IS FILED—REFERENDUM PETITION.

When ten per cent. of the electors file with the city auditor or village clerk a referendum petition within thirty days after an ordinance has been filed with the mayor, such petition cannot be voted upon at any election, except at the regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of the petition with the auditor or clerk.

When twenty per cent. of the electors file a referendum petition with the auditor or clerk, requesting the submission of such ordinance at a special election, the same may be submitted at a special election to be held on the fifth Tuesday after the petition is filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1914.

HON. M. C. GOWEY, Legal Adviser for the Village of North Lewisburg, North Lewisburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 14th, you write requesting my opinion as to whether a village council can call a special election on a referendum petition within thirty days after its filing, or is compelled to wait until the next general election.

Sections 4227-2 and 4227-5 of the General Code, as they appear in 104 Ohio Laws, page 238, are as follows:

"Any ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city or passed by the council in a village, except as hereinafter provided.

"When a petition signed by ten per cent. of the electors of any municipal corporation shall have been filed with the city auditor or village clerk in such municipal corporation, within thirty days after any ordinance, or other measure shall have been filed with the mayor, or passed by the council of a village, ordering that such ordinance or measure be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such city auditor or village clerk shall, after ten days, certify the petition to the board of deputy supervisors of elections of the county wherein such municipality is situated and said board shall cause to be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such ordinance, or measure at the next succeeding regular or general election, in any year, occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of such petition.

"No such ordinance or measure shall go into effect until approved by the majority of those voting upon the same. Nothing in this act shall prevent a municipality after the passage of any ordinance or other measure from proceeding at once, to give any notice, or make any publication, required by such ordinance or other measure.

"Section 4227-5. Whenever twenty per cent. of the electors of any municipality file a petition with the city auditor if it be a city, or village clerk, if it be a village, proposing or against an ordinance or other measure, requesting in the petition that the ordinance or measure be submitted to the electors of the municipality at a special election, the auditor or village clerk, after ten days, shall certify the same to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections who shall submit the same at a special election to be held on the fifth Tuesday after the petition is filed. The petition shall not be submitted at a special election if a regular or general election will occur not later than ninety days after the petition is filed but shall be submitted at the regular or general election."

Under these statutes it is clear that when a petition is signed by ten per cent. of the electors and filed with the clerk within thirty days after the ordinance has been filed with the mayor, such petition cannot be voted on at any election except a regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of the petition with the clerk. Under section 4227-5, however, when twenty per cent. of the electors file a referendum petition with the village clerk, requesting the submission of the ordinance at a special election, the board of elections may submit the same at a special election to be held on the fifth Tuesday after the petition is filed. The same may not be presented at such time, however, at a special election, if a regular or general election will occur not later than ninety days after the petition is filed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BLANKET BOND FOR OHIO NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS—LEGALITY OF SUCH BOND—PAYMENT OF PREMIUM FOR SUCH BOND.

The giving of a blanket bond by the adjutant general's department to bond all officers, quartermasters and clerks of the Ohio National Guard is proper and an expenditure for the premium thereof is a proper charge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 25, 1914.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 20th, submitting to this department a blanket bond to be given by The Illinois Surety Company to bond all officers, quartermasters and clerks of the Ohio National Guard, and wherein you request my opinion as to whether the expenditure for the premium on said bonds would be a proper expenditure and charge.

In view of the decision of the court of appeals, eighth district, that the expense of bonds of officers, etc., of the Ohio National Guard is properly included in the appropriations for the incidental expense of military organizations, especially inasmuch as the military code governing such matters has affirmatively declared such expenditure to be a proper one, and in view of the order which was transmitted with your inquiry which recites that your department will take care of the expense of a blanket bond and ordering officers, captains, quartermasters and treasurers to take no action respecting the securing of their official bonds as such, I am of the opinion that the giving of such a blanket bond is proper and that an expenditure for the premium thereof is a proper expenditure and charge.

I have carefully examined the bond which you have submitted and the same seems to me in proper form save and except that I suggest that you add to the first paragraph on page three after the word "intention," striking out the period after such word, the following: "So to terminate. Provided that this bond shall be and remain in full force and effect for the full period of thirty days from and after receipt of notice of such said intention to terminate." With such addition the bond seems to me to be satisfactory and a valid obligation. We are herewith enclosing you the papers and bond submitted.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL ROAD DISTRICTS—TAXES LEVIED FOR SPECIAL ROAD IMPROVEMENT PURPOSES—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—BOND ISSUE UNDER LONGWORTH ACT—COUNCIL—BUDGET ORDINANCE SHOULD BE PUBLISHED.

1. A municipal road district formed under sections 3734 to 3736, General Code, is not entitled to specific distribution of taxes levied for special road improvement purposes.

2. Township trustees may not issue bonds, under the Longworth act, for the purpose of providing for the township's assumed proportion of the expense of a road improvement, under sections 6903, et seq., General Code.

3. Where bonds have been offered for sale, and bid for, and awarded, but have not been delivered nor paid for, there is no liability against the duplicate of the taxing district.

4. Under such circumstances, the contract to be paid for from proceeds of bonds cannot lawfully be entered into by a public officer.

5. Council, in making up its annual budget for the use of the budget commission, should act by ordinance, and the ordinance should be published.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. W. O. WALLACE, Solicitor for the Village of Columbiana, Columbiana, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of your letter of May 26, 1914, in which you request my opinion upon several questions arising under a state of facts set forth in some detail therein, as follows:

The village of Columbiana is located in Fairfield township, Columbiana county, Ohio. Some years ago the council of the village passed an ordinance creating the village a special road district, under the provisions of what are now sections 3734-3736, inclusive, General Code.

Subsequently, the township, including the village of Columbiana, by electoral vote, authorized the township trustees to make a special levy for road purposes, in an amount not to exceed six mills.

Still more recently, to wit, in the year 1914, the trustees of the township passed a resolution declaring that it was necessary to improve by paving, as might be agreed upon between the trustees and the county commissioners, a certain road in the township, outside of the corporate limits of the village. The resolution declares that the board of trustees requests the county commissioners to improve said road, under the provisions of section 6903, et seq., General Code, and agrees, on behalf of the township, to assume and pay the total cost and expense of the improvement not assessed on specially benefited property, as provided in section 6905, General Code.

Subsequently, and in evident pursuance of the purpose to proceed with the improvement of said road, the trustees attempted to issue, and did issue the bonds of the township under the supposed authority of sections 3295 and 3939, et seq., of the General Code. The bonds, after being offered to the liability board of awards (the industrial commission) and refused by them, were bid off by a certain bank and awarded to it, but some question having arisen, the bonds have not been delivered and the bank refuses to pay for them until the dispute is settled.

The current expenses and sinking fund requirements of the village and school districts are such as, with the anticipated county and state levy, together with any levy that might be necessary to provide for the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bonds above referred to, would produce an aggregate levy in excess of the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law. That is to say, if taxes are to be levied by the township, within the limits of the corporation, for the purpose suggested, and if such taxes obtain preference over the current expenses and sinking fund levies of the village, the municipality will suffer.

The questions that you submit are as follows:

(1) Does the creation of the village, as a special road district, have the effect of excluding it from subjection to taxes levied by the township trustees for the purpose of retiring township bonds issued for road improvement purposes?

(2) Does a vote to permit an extra levy authorize the trustees to issue bonds of the township in anticipation of such special levy?

(3) Does the Longworth act, under which the bonds in question were issued, authorize the township trustees to issue bonds for the purpose of paving public roads in the township?

(4) Do taxes for the purpose of retiring bonds issued by a township, under the circumstances mentioned, take precedence over levies to meet prior indebtedness and current expenses of a village in the township?

(5) May the budget commission lawfully permit such a township levy to be made against the property on the duplicate of a village, when the effect of so doing would be to reduce the village levies for necessary current expenses, and the payment of existing indebtedness?

(6) When the issuance of bonds has been authorized, assuming their legality, and the bonds have been bid for and awarded to a prospective purchaser, but the latter has not accepted them, nor paid for them, do the bonds constitute an indebtedness of whatever district is required to pay them?

(7) Would a contract, entered into for the expenditure of money to be derived from such a bond issue, be lawful, if made prior to the delivery of and payment for such bonds?

You also ask another question not arising under the foregoing facts, as follows:

(8) Should the annual budget of the council be passed as a resolution and published as provided by law for ordinances and resolutions of a general nature?

I find that I shall have to eliminate your second question for two reasons:

(1) You do not state under what authority of law the action which you describe, namely, the submission to the electors of the proposition to levy special road taxes, was taken.

Without an exhaustive examination of the statutes, I may say that I know of no authority to submit such a proposition to the electors, under the circumstances mentioned by you; but my statement here is not to be regarded as the expression of an opinion.

(2) The facts submitted by you show that the trustees are attempting to issue bonds, under the Longworth act, for the purpose of paying the assumed part of the cost and expense of a road improvement, under section 6903, et seq., General Code; therefore, whatever may be the authority of the township trustees to levy extra road taxes by reason of the special vote to which you refer, the bonds in question are clearly not issued in anticipation of such taxes.

For these reasons, and especially the second one, I feel that I must put aside your second question on the ground that it is not presented by the facts which you submit.

Your first question involves considerations of the following sections of the General Code:

> "Section 3734. The council may form road districts within the limits of the corporation, and when contiguous territory is attached to the corporation for road purposes, such power shall extend to the territory so attached.
> "Section 3735. No tax assessed upon property within the territory so attached to a corporation, shall be applied otherwise than within the territory in which it is assessed. All taxes charged for road purposes on the property within the limits of the corporation, or the territory so attached, and collected by the county treasurer, shall be paid to the corporation treasurer, to be specially appropriated by the council to street and road purposes within the corporate limits and territory so attached. The trustees of the township in which such territory is located, and the council, may agree upon a different distribution or division of the funds.
> "Section 3736. The council and the trustees of townships, respectively, in which such corporation is situated, when it has not already been done, where from the spareness of population the public interest requires it, shall attach to the corporation any territory lying contiguous thereto, for such purposes, and any portion of the territory so attached may be detached, and replaced under the control of the township trustees for road purposes, by the council, with the concurrence of the township trustees."

These sections, and especially the provisions thereof which exempt the territory within such a specially created road district from taxation for road purposes not to be applied within the territory of the district, were interpreted by the supreme court, in the early case of Lima vs. McBride, 34 O. S., 338. Without quoting from the decision, I may say that the holding is that these sections do not have the effect of exempting the territory of the corporation, when it has been constituted as a special road district, from taxation, for special road improvements or repairs, but only from general road levies. The requirement, in effect, is that the general road levies of the county and township, made within the territory of the village or the district, shall be accounted for and paid into the treasury of the village, to be used for road purposes therein. But, as the section was interpreted in the case cited, this does not prevent the taxation of property within the district for a special road purpose, or entitle the village treasury to share in the proceeds of the tax for such a special purpose.

Your first question, then, is to be answered by saying that if the trustees have authority to issue bonds for general road purposes and levy taxes to retire the same, perhaps an affirmative answer could be given to your question, though this is not decided; but that where it appears, as it does from the facts you submit, that the effort is to provide specially for the improvement of a designated road, the statutes cited do not apply.

Your third question is answered, generally, in an opinion to Honorable Louis P. Metzger, formerly prosecuting attorney of Columbiana county, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. In it I hold, as you will observe, that the Longworth act does not confer upon township trustees the authority to make any particular improvement for which bonds may be issued, as provided for therein; but that authority to make the improvement, as distinguished from authority to borrow the money, must be sought elsewhere; and if it cannot be found, the power to borrow the money by issuing bonds, under sections 3295 and 3939, General Code, which is, of course, dependent upon such other power, must be likewise denied.

The question whether or not, in the given case, township trustees may issue bonds for road improvements, under the Longworth act, then resolves itself into the further question as to whether or not the trustees are proceeding under statutes authorizing the township, as such, to improve roads. Inasmuch as your statement of facts discloses the exact sections under which the trustees are assuming to proceed, viz.: 6903, et seq., General Code, it remains to be inquired whether township trustees may issue bonds, under the Longworth act, for the purposes of said section.

I quote the pertinent provisions of the statutes thus involved:

"Section 6903. On a petition therefor signed by the owners of at least a majority of the foot frontage on a county road or part thereof, the county commissioners may do any one or more of the following acts or things:

"(1) Cause the county surveyor to establish a grade along it, or part thereof, subject to their approval.

"(2) Cause it or part thereof to be widened, altered or established to a greater width than sixty feet and not more than one hundred feet, to be determined by the viewers as provided in this chapter.

"(3) Grade, drain, curb, pave and improve it or part thereof.

"Section 6904. The county commissioners may assess the damages on account of the widening, altering or establishing of such road, or part thereof, and the costs and expenses of any or all of the improvement or such part of said damages, costs and expenses as they deem equitable under the circumstances upon the taxable property abutting upon the road or part thereof, either according to the foot frontage or according to the benefits. The commissioners shall be an assessing board for the purpose of assessing the damages, costs and expenses, as herein set forth, upon the abutting property as aforesaid.

"Section 6905. The board of county commissioners may enter into an agreement with the board of trustees of any township or the council of any village, or both, into or through which a state or county road improvement is contemplated, whereby said board of trustees or council may assume and pay such a proportion of the costs and expenses of such improvement not assessed upon abutting land in accordance with section 6904 of the General Code, as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said board of trustees or council, and such agreement or agreements may be entered into at any time before the contract for said improvement is let.

"Section 6906. The county commissioners may order such part of the damages, cost and expense of such improvement as they deem equitable, to be paid out of the county treasury, or any state and county road improvement fund.

"Section 6912. The assessment so made shall be certified by the commissioners to the auditor of the county, who shall place it on the tax list against such taxable property as other taxes, and it shall thereupon become a lien thereon, and be collected in not to exceed ten annual installments.

"Section 6912-1. After so certifying said assessment to the auditor of the county, the commissioners may, in anticipation of the collection of all moneys from all sources, required to be raised for said improvement, whether by assessment, taxation, or by agreement with the township trustees or village council, borrow a sum of money sufficient to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement, and may issue and sell negotiable notes or bonds of the county, bearing a rate of interest not to exceed five per cent. per annum. For the purpose of paying their respective shares of the principal and interest on the notes or bonds authorized to be sold, the county commissioners and township trustees may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county or township in addition to all other taxes authorized by law of not to exceed two mills in any one year until said notes or bonds and interest are paid.

"Section 6912-2. The commissioners shall cause the damages, if determined, to be paid and the improvement made forthwith, and may add interest at the rate of not to exceed five per cent. per annum to all unpaid installments of the assessment, and to all sums agreed to be paid by the township trustees or village council, and collect said interest, together with the assessment or amounts so agreed to be paid.

"Section 6913. The total amount of notes and bonds of the county issued and outstanding on the account of road improvement as herein provided shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the total tax duplicate of the county."

The following facts are apparent, from the examination of these sections:

(1) The improvement constitutes a county enterprise, not a township undertaking.

(2) The statutes provide, specifically, for the issuance of bonds and the power is to be exercised by the county commissioners, not the township trustees. Bonds are to be in an amount sufficient to pay the entire estimated cost and expense of the improvement, and are to be met by taxes levied by the trustees (in case they assume any part of the county's share), and by the assessments as levied by the commissioners. In my opinion, these sections constitute special authority in the county commissioners and township trustees, respectively, and upon the most familiar principle of statutory interpretation, such a special provision is to be regarded as an exception to a general provision such as is found in section 3939, G. C.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that township trustees have no authority to issue bonds, under the Longworth act, for the purpose of paying the proportion of the cost and expense of a road improvement, under sections 6903, et seq., General Code, which is assumed by the township, but that the improvement is a county enterprise and bonds must be issued by the county commissioners.

This question, of course, is answered upon the assumption that the bonds issued are for the purpose stated, and no other purpose. The resolution issuing the bonds, a copy of which you enclose, does not specifically state that the bonds are so issued, but the purpose of the issuance is therein described, as follows:

"For the purpose of improving highways lying within the said township of Fairfield."

The transcript submitted with the bonds, however, for the use of prospective lenders, includes the resolution adopted under section 6903, et seq., General Code, and I have, therefore, assumed, in answering your question, that the sole purpose for which the bonds are issued, is to provide a fund to pay the township's assumed proportion of the road improvement, under those sections. As already stated in my opinion, the proceedings are not lawful.

Your fourth and fifth questions, in the face of the conclusion which I have just reached, need not be answered unless your sixth and seventh questions are answered in the affirmative. I, therefore, pass to a consideration of these questions.

I am of the opinion, in answer to your sixth question, that until the bidder for the bonds has accepted and paid for them, i. e., has loaned its money to the township on the sale of the bonds, no liability as against the township or the duplicate of the village, can arise.

Your seventh question is determined by consideration of section 5660, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county, township or board of education, is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

Inasmuch as the bonds in question have not been "lawfully authorized," and inasmuch, further, as, in my judgment, they have not yet been sold, nor are they in process of delivery, I am of the opinion that the commissioners, or the commissioners and trustees are without authority to enter into a contract for road improvement, at the present time, upon the facts submitted by you.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the proceedings of the trustees thus far had, as set forth in your statement of facts, are not lawful, and no liability has been created against the tax duplicate of the village thereunder, I need not answer your fifth and sixth questions, which relate to the respective rights of the township and the village, and the powers of the budget commission in relation thereto.

Your eighth question involves a consideration of section 3794, General Code, in connection with the Smith one per cent. law, so-called section 5649-3a, General Code. These sections are as follows:

> "Section 3794. On or before the first Monday in July, each year, council shall cause to be certified to the auditor of the county, the rate of taxes levied by it on the real and personal property in the corporation returned on the grand duplicate, who shall place it on the tax list of the county in the same manner as township taxes are by law placed thereon. The ordinance prescribing the levy shall specify distinctly each and every purpose for which the levy is made and the per cent. thereof, and if he finds that the tax levy so certified to him exceeds the aggregate limit allowed by law, the county auditor shall not place it on the tax list, and the levy for such municipal corporation shall not be valid or collectable against any real or personal property in the corporation. If such levy is in excess of the limit allowed by law, the auditor shall immediately notify the council making it, and within ten days after the receipt of such notification council shall revise its levy so as to bring it within the law.

"Section 5649-3a. On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education and all other boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes, within the county, except taxes for state purposes, shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth: * * *.

"Such budget shall be made up annually at the time or times now fixed by law when such boards or officers are required to determine the amount in money to be raised or the rate of taxes to be levied in their respective taxing districts.

"The county auditor shall provide and furnish such boards and officers blank forms and instructions for making up such budgets."

While the question is not free from doubt, I am of the opinion that the effect of the Smith one per cent. law on the previously enacted section 3794, General Code, is merely to constitute the levying ordinance the budget for the purpose of the county auditor and the budget commission. That being the case, I am of the opinion that it is, at least, safer for the municipal budget to be passed as an ordinance, as required by section 3794, which has never been expressly amended or repealed. Inasmuch as an ordinance of this character is clearly one "of a general nature," I am of the opinion that under section 4227 and relating sections, it must be published as other ordinances of the same character.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUVENILE JUDGE—ALLOWANCE UNDER MOTHERS' PENSION LAW—WHEN SAME BECOMES AVAILABLE.

If a juvenile judge has made allowance under the mothers' pension law, prior to the time when the money to pay such pension first becomes available, pensions under the allowance will start, not from the date of adjudication and allowance, but from the date when the money first becomes available.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. GEORGE M. HOKE, Probate Judge, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 22, 1914, your letter, receipt of which has been acknowledged, requests my opinion as follows:

"In case a widow, under the mothers' pension law, should be adjudged a certain amount as pension, say February 1, 1914, will her pay start from the date of the adjudication and allowance, or will it start on the day when the money for same first becomes available?"

This question seems to me to be of considerable difficulty. The so-called mothers' pension provisions found in 103 O. L., 877, consist of sections 1683-2 to 1683-9, inclusive. The material provisions of these sections are as follows:

"* * * The juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women, as follows: Not to exceed fifteen dollars a month, when she has but one child not entitled to an age and schooling certificate, and if she has more than one child not entitled to an age and schooling certificate, it shall not exceed fifteen dollars a month for the first child and seven dollars a month for each of the other children not entitled to an age and schooling certificate. The order making such allowance shall not be effective for a longer period than six months, but upon the expiration of such period, said court may from time to time extend such allowance for a period of six months, or less."

This last provision is somewhat inconsistent with section 1683-4 which provides that:

"Whenever any child shall reach the age for legal employment, any allowance made to the mother of such child for the benefit of such child shall cease. The juvenile court may, in its discretion, at any time before such child reaches such age, discontinue or modify the allowance to any mother and for any child."

Section 1683-5 provides:

"Should the fund at the disposal of the court for this purpose be sufficient to permit an allowance to only part of the persons coming within the provisions of this act, the juvenile court shall select those cases in most urgent need of such allowance."

Section 1683-9 provides:

"It is hereby made the duty of the county commissioners to provide out of the money in the county treasury such sum each year thereafter as will meet the requirements of the court in these proceedings. To provide the same they shall levy a tax not to exceed one-tenth of a mill on the dollar valuation of the taxable property of the county. Such levy shall be subject to all the limitations provided by law upon the aggregate amount, rate, maximum rate and combined maximum rate of taxation. The county auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of such allowance as may be ordered by the juvenile judge."

So far as the same constitutes a legislative interpretation of the foregoing provisions, the following, enacted by the last general assembly, at its extraordinary session (104 O. L., page 199), may be of interest:

"For the purpose of providing a sum which will meet the requirements of the juvenile court until the proceeds of the tax required to be levied under the provisions of section 1683-9 of the General Code, shall become available, any board of county commissioners may transfer from any surplus moneys in the county treasury to the credit of any fund therein to a fund for the use of the juvenile court under the provisions of sections 1683-2 to 1683-9, inclusive, of the General Code, the creation of which for such purpose is hereby authorized. The moneys so transferred shall be paid as provided in section 1683-9 of the General Code, upon the order of the juvenile judge, under allowances made either before or after this act shall become effective."

While this supplementary act recognizes the validity of allowances made prior to its passage, yet, it does not imply the power to pay from the fund, the creation of which it authorizes, the full amount of what might be deemed the deferred installments. Its force is prospective only, and so far as it operates on such allowances previously made, it would, of itself, authorize only the payment of the monthly allowance from the date when the funds became payable.

In my mind, section 1683-5, supra, is of controlling significance. The plain inference from this section is that the juvenile judge has no authority to make a final and binding allowance to any person when he has not, at his command, funds sufficient to pay it. Surely, if it is the duty of the juvenile court to select certain cases, when the fund at his disposal is not sufficient to permit allowances to all qualifying persons, it must then follow that he is without power to create a liability by making an allowance when there are no funds, whatever, available.

I think it follows as a conclusion, from the considerations upon which I have commented, that an allowance made at a time when no funds are at the disposal of the juvenile court, cannot create such a liability or claim as would permit a subsequent payment of deferred installments on account of such allowance, when the funds once become available. This conclusion is not inconsistent with the provisions of the temporary act authorizing transfers to be made for the purpose of creating such a fund.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that if the juvenile judge has made an allowance prior to the time when the money to pay mothers' pensions first became available, payments under the allowance will start, not from the date of adjudication and allowance, but from the date when the money first becomes available.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL OFFICERS—RIGHT TO BE INTERESTED OR CONNECTED WITH CONTRACTING FOR SUPPLIES WHILE IN OFFICE.

A corporation of which a member of the sinking fund trustees or trustees of a municipal library is a stockholder cannot legally sell merchandise to the city with which he is officially connected, or be interested in any way in contracting for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance while such member is in office. Such officers may not be interested in contracts during the term for which they were elected, but may after the expiration of their term.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 28th, you request my opinion as follows:

"May a firm, or corporation, of which a member of the sinking fund trustees, or a trustee of a municipal (Carnegie) library is a stockholder, legally sell merchandise of any character to the city with which he is officially connected, or be interested in any way in contracts for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance?

"May such officers be interested in contracts of any nature during the term for which they were elected, or for one year thereafter?"

Sections 12910 and 12912 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 12910. Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years.

"Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work, or services, while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

Trustees of the sinking fund are provided by sections 4507, et seq. of the General Code, and library trustees are provided by section 4004 of the General Code. I am of the opinion that the incumbents of these positions are holders of an office of trust, within the meaning of section 12910 of the General Code, and that they are officers of a municipal corporation, as intended by section 12912 of the General Code. Such officers, therefore, are prohibited by the first section, from being interested, in a pecuniary way, in contracts for the purchase of property supplies or fire insurance made with the city with which they are connected, and by section 12912 of the General Code, such officers are prohibited from being pecuniarily interested in the profits of any contract to which the municipal corporation is a party, while they are in office. A purchase of merchandise would be such a contract.

The holding of stock in a corporation purchasing such merchandise, or contracting for the selling of property supplies or fire insurance to the municipal corporation would constitute an interest in the profits of such contract on the part of such officers. I am of the opinion, therefore, that such contracts would be invalidated by virtue of the statutes above quoted.

I have heretofore held that the prohibition of section 12912, with reference to interest in the profits of a contract by a municipal officer, supplies only to contracts entered into during his term of office. Such contracts entered into after the expiration of such term could not be affected.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCE—EFFECT OF THE REPEAL OF AN ORDINANCE AND THE SIMULTANEOUS RE-ENACTMENT OF A NEW ORDINANCE—EFFECT ON OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT WILL BE BY VIRTUE OF THE OLD ORDINANCE WHEN SUCH OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT IS RETAINED BY THE NEW ORDINANCE.

The repeal of an ordinance and the simultaneous re-enactment of a new ordinance does not deprive one of an office or employment held by virtue of the old ordinance, when such office or employment with similar duties is retained by the new ordinance.

Where an ordinance provides for the organization of a police department with a chief of police, lieutenant of police and five patrolmen, and this ordinance is repealed and a new ordinance simultaneously enacted providing for a chief of police and five patrolmen, the officers of lieutenant of police and sergeant of police are abolished and the incumbents of these positions and are not reduced in rank. They would be placed at the head of an appropriate eligible list for appointment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 2, 1914, Hon. David H. James, City Solicitor of Martins Ferry, Ohio, states and inquires:

> "On March 5, 1910, the council of this city passed an ordinance, section two of which ordinance provided that in the police department there should be one chief of police and seven patrolmen and fixed the salaries of said officers.
> "May 4, 1914, said council passed another ordinance amending said section two of said original ordinance and repealing said original section two. Said section two as amended provides that in the police department there shall be one chief of police, one lieutenant, one sergeant and five patrolmen, and fixes the salaries of said officers.
> "Now there is pending before council an ordinance which provides that in the police department there shall be one chief of police and five patrolmen and fixes the salaries of said officers? Said ordinance contains a section repealing said section two of the ordinance passed March 5, 1910, as amended May 4, 1914.

"All the officers now in the police department have qualified and hold their positions under the provisions of the civil service laws. Both the present lieutenant and sergeant of police have been promoted to their present positions from the office of patrolman.

"I desire your opinion as to whether, upon the final passage of said ordinance now pending, the persons now holding the positions of lieutenant and sergeant of police, respectively, must necessarily be removed from the service and the five persons now holding the positions of patrolmen be reappointed, or whether the director of public safety may reappoint as patrolmen any five of the seven persons now holding the positions of lieutenant, sergeant and patrolmen, at his discretion.

"This request is made at this time at the instance of the city council."

In an opinion rendered to Hon. Howard E. MacGregor, city solicitor of Springfield, Ohio, under date of September 26, 1912, it was held that council had a right to abolish a position in the police department. The position involved in that opinion was that of inspector of police, and it was held that upon abolition of that position the incumbent loses all right thereto and that he has no legal right to any other position. A copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed.

The opinion above referred to construed the old municipal civil service act and the ordinance in question therein was not a general ordinance reorganizing the entire police department. It was assumed that the ordinance was applicable only to the position of inspector of police.

In the case submitted the ordinance applies to all the positions in the police department, some of which are retained and otherwise abolished. The effect of the proposed ordinance would be to abolish the positions of lieutenant and sergeant of police and retain the positions of chief of police and patrolmen. The repealing part of the ordinance and the new provisions take effect at the same time. There is no interim.

In case of State ex rel. vs. Bish, 22 Ohio Dec., 480, the second syllabus reads:

"A municipal council by virtue of General Code 3617 and 4374, providing for a police department, has authority to provide by ordinance for the number, salaries, etc., of members of such department and to repeal at the same time a former ordinance under which the department was operated; hence, such action having been taken, all the members of the police force lose their positions as of the date of such repeal, then it becomes the duty of the director of public safety to appoint members thereof pursuant to the contemplated reorganization and upon such salaries as council has provided. General Code, 4484, refers only to individual removals for cause."

No authority is cited in the opinion in support of this conclusion. In that case the question involved was the right to increase the salaries of policemen after they were appointed. No question was involved as to abolishing an office. The conclusion of that case as to the right to increase or diminish salaries has been followed by this department. In reaching that conclusion, however, it is not necessary to hold that a repealing ordinance and a simultaneous re-enactment of the old ordinance, or a part thereof, abolished all right to offices secured under and provided for under the old ordinance and retained in the new.

The rule is stated at section 238 of Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction, second edition, as follows:

> "Where there is an express repeal of an existing statute, and a re-enactment of it at the same time, or a repeal and a re-enactment of a portion of it, the re-enactment neutralizes the repeal so far as the old law is continued in force. It operates without interruption where the re-enactment takes effect at the same time. The intention manifested is the same as in an amendment enacted in the form noticed in the preceding section. Offices are not lost; corporate existence is not ended; inchoate statutory rights are not defeated; a statutory power is not taken away, nor pending proceedings or criminal charges affected by such repeal and re-enactment of the law on which they respectively depend."

In State ex rel. vs. Baldwin, 45 Conn., 134, it is held:

> "It is provided by section 1, chapter 2, title 3, of the General Statutes of 1875, that county commissioners shall be appointed by the general assembly for New Haven county, their powers and duties and terms of office being fixed by later sections of the same chapter. In 1877 the legislature passed an act as follows: 'Sec. 1. So much of sec. 1, ch. 2, tit. 3, of the General Statutes as provides that county commissioners shall be appointed for New Haven county is hereby repealed, and the board of county commissioners of New Haven county is hereby created, to be appointed by the general assembly, and said board shall perform in and for New Haven county all the duties and have all the powers provided by chapter 2, tit. 3, of the General Statutes for county commissioners.' Later sections made the same provisions as the former law with regard to their number and terms of office, and the act was made to take effect on its passage. Held, that the instantaneous re-enactment of the second section of the same act that was repealed by the first, rendered the repeal inoperative and left the former law in force, and that the commissioners appointed under the old law and whose terms had not expired remained in office."

The above case directly involved the right of the former incumbents to retain their positions, as new officers had been appointed by virtue of the new act.

In the White Sewing Machine Company vs. Harris, 252 Ill., 361, the general rule is stated in the syllabus as follows:

> "Where there is an express repeal of a statute and a re-enactment of all or a portion of it at the same time, the re-enactment neutralizes the repeal so far as the provisions of the old law are unchanged in form or substance; and offices are not lost, statutory rights are not defeated, statutory powers are not taken away or criminal charges affected by the repeal and re-enactment of the provisions upon which such matters respectively depend."

No right of office was involved in the above case.

On page 366 the court cite State vs. Baldwin, supra, as to offices and a number of other cases as to other classes of legislation.

The conclusion reached in State vs. Bish, supra, that all incumbents lose their offices when the ordinance organizing a police department is repealed and re-enacted in part at the same time, is not supported by the weight of authority. Such a conclusion would lead to confusion under the civil service act.

Section 16 of the civil service law, section 486-16, General Code, provides in part:

> "Any person holding an office or position under the classified service who has been separated from the service without delinquency or misconduct on his part may, with the consent of the commission, be reinstated within one year from the date of such separation to a vacancy in the same or similar office or position in the same department; and whenever any permanent office or position in the classified service is abolished or made unnecessary, the person holding such office or position shall be placed by the commission at the head of an appropriate eligible list, and for a period of not to exceed one year shall be certified to an appointing officer as in the case of original appointments."

By virtue of this provision the incumbent of a position which is abolished is placed at the head of an appropriate eligible list to be certified for reappointment as in case of original appointments.

It is my opinion that the repeal of an ordinance and the simultaneous reenactment of a new ordinance does not deprive one of an office or employment held by virtue of the old ordinance, when such office or employment with similar duties is retained by the new ordinance.

The effect, therefore, of the proposed ordinance would be to retain in office the chief of police and the fire patrolmen.

The provisions of the new civil service act do not provide for the status of an incumbent of a position which is abolished, except as provided in section 16, supra.

The lieutenant and sergeant of police in question would not be reduced in rank, but they would lose all right to a position and would be placed at the head of the eligible list as provided in section 16 of the civil service act.

Enclosure.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—LEVY FOR SOLDIERS' RELIEF COMMISSION.

County commissioners are not required to levy the exact amount which the soldiers' relief commission finds to be necessary for its purpose, even though such an amount would require a levy less than one-half of one mill.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. JAMES A. TOBIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of June 3, already acknowledged, requests my opinion upon the following question:

> "Under section number 2936 of the General Code, have the county commissioners any discretion as to the amount of levy to be made for the soldiers' relief fund, or are they compelled to levy the amount certified to them by the soldiers' relief commission, provided it is under the five-tenths of a mill, as provided for in said section?"

Section 2936, General Code, provides as follows:

"On such last Monday in May the commission shall meet and determine from such lists the probable amount necessary for the aid and relief of such indigent persons for the ensuing year, together with an amount sufficient in the judgment of the commission, to furnish relief to any such indigent persons not named on such lists, whose rights to relief shall be established to the satisfaction of the commission. After determining the probable amount necessary for such purpose, the commission shall certify to the county commissioners, who, at their June session shall make the levy necessary to raise the required relief, not to exceed five-tenths of a mill per dollar on the assessed value of the property of the county hereinafter authorized."

The "commission" referred to therein is the soldiers' relief commission, which is composed of three persons residents of the county, the members of which are appointed by the judge of the common pleas court.

The section as I have quoted it is a relatively old one and was last amended in 94 O. L., 158. It is to be read in connection with section 2942, General Code, which provides as follows:

"The board of county commissioners of each county shall levy, in addition to the taxes now levied by law for other purposes than those herein provided, a tax not exceeding five-tenths of one mill per dollar on the assessed value of the property of the county, to be levied and collected as provided by law for the assessment and collection of taxes, for the purpose of creating a fund for the relief of the honorably discharged soldiers, indigent soldiers and marines of the United States, and the indigent wives, parents, widows and minor children under fifteen years of age, of such indigent or deceased soldiers, sailors or marines, to be disbursed as hereinbefore provided."

This section was last amended in 99 O. L., 526. These sections, one of which seems to impose a duty and the other of which seems to create a power, which, so far as the section is concerned, is a duty only so far as making some levy is concerned, both provide a maximum limitation upon the amount of the levy of which they respectively speak, viz., five-tenths of a mill.

Both of these sections were last amended prior to the enactment of the so-called Smith 1% law which in its original form, so far as this question is concerned, was passed in 102 O. L., 266. Section 5649-3 of this measure provided in part as follows:

"The maximum rate of taxation in any taxing district for any purpose, as now fixed, shall be and is hereby changed so that such maximum rate, as levied on the total valuation of all taxable property in the district for the year 1911 and any year thereafter would produce no greater amount of taxes, than the present maximum rate for such purpose, if levied on the total valuation for all taxable property therein for the year 1910, would produce. Any minimum rate required by law to be levied for any purpose, is hereby reduced in like proportion that the maximum rate is herein reduced.

"If in any year the taxing district shall desire to raise a less amount of taxes for a particular purpose than was levied for such purpose in the year 1910, the amount of taxes that may be levied for another or other purposes may be correspondingly increased. * *"

The effect of section 5649-3 upon the sections immediately under consideration is very evident. The five-tenths of a mill limitation was abolished and in its stead while section 5649-3 was in force there was created a limitation consisting of an amount equal to such amount as would have been produced by extension of a five-tenths of a mill levy upon the duplicate of the county for the year 1910.

Thus while there was no express amendment, and the amendment was in a way an implied one, yet the intention of the legislature to abolish the five-tenths of a mill limitation found in sections 2936 and 2942, respectively, is made very clear by the language found in section 5649-3.

However, the amount limitation which the Smith law substituted for the rate limitation was not a hard and fast one as is apparent from the language of the second paragraph of section 5649-3 above quoted. That is to say, if in any year the taxing authorities should desire to raise more for one purpose than had been levied in the year 1910 they could do so provided less was raised for another purpose than had been levied in that year. Apparently a situation of this sort constituted an exception to the limitations upon maximum and minimum rates for particular purposes found in the first paragraph of the same section. It is not necessary of course to decide this point in passing upon your question.

I mention section 5649-3, whatever may be its exact meaning, as showing that the legislature really did do away with the half-mill limitation, which is found in the soldiers' relief statutes, when the Smith law was adopted. Later the legislature passed what was known as the Kilpatrick law, 103 O. L., 552. This act, which is effective for the first time this year, repealed section 5649-3, General Code.

The effect of such a repeal is to restore the law as it existed before the repealed statute was enacted. Such a result is prohibited by article II, section 16 of the constitution, the provisions of which have been, in other respects, held to be directory merely, but which has not been construed by the courts in this respect. However, under similar constitutional provisions it has been held that where the first repeal is by implication merely, the repeal of the act which has the implied repealing effect, results in a revival of the original act. Wallace vs. Bradshaw, 54 N. J. Law, 175; State vs. King, 104 Tenn., 156; Zickler vs. Union Bank & T. Co., 104 Tenn., 277. Contra Renter vs. Bauer, 3 Kan., 505.

> "Whatever may be the law as to the revival of laws which have been expressly repealed by repealing the repealing act, it has been held in this state, and we think upon sound principle, that when a law has been repealed by implication merely, the repeal of the act which thus impliedly repeals the former law revives such law, and this for the reason such former law was never, in fact, repealed, but its operation merely suspended or interrupted by the adoption of another rule."

Although as I have already stated the intention of the legislature, when it enacted section 5649-3 was to do away with all specific limitations, it seems to me clear that within the rule as laid down by the decisions cited, its effect upon statutes creating such limitations is technically that of implied, rather than expressed repeal or amendment. The courts treat such implied amendments or modifications as suspensions of other laws rather than abolishments thereof.

While there have been no decisions in this state, as already stated, there is some evidence of the trend of judicial thought in Ohio on this subject which shows that it is in the direction indicated by the decisions cited from other states. Bank vs. Russell, 1 O. S., 313; Colston vs. Hastings, 11 O. D., 125.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that at the present time sections 2936 and 2942 of the General Code are to be regarded as unaffected by the action of the legislature in passing and subsequently repealing section 5649-3 of the General Code.

However, these sections remain subject to whatever modification of their force and effect may have been worked by the remaining provisions of the Smith law. I need not detail such provisions. Suffice it to say, that they impose certain maximum limitations upon the aggregate amount which may be levied within a taxing district by all the levying authorities thereof, and create the tribunal known as the budget commission whose duty and power it is to reduce levies submitted to them so that all shall come within such limitations.

Under this law it is obvious that all levies alike are subject to revision by the budget commission excepting those specifically excluded from its jurisdiction by sections 5649-3a, i. e., the state levies and levies and assessments in special road districts, etc. The inference is, as I have already stated, that all other levies are subject to revision. At least this is true of all current levies. Probably it would not be true of levies for interest and sinking fund purposes made in pursuance of legislation under article XII, section 11 of the constitution as amended, but that question is not involved here.

It is clear, therefore, that whether the commissioners, as such, have discretion with respect to the amount of the levy for soldiers' relief purposes, the budget commission not only possess but are required to exercise revisionary authority with respect to such levy. Hence, it is, that the estimate of the soldiers' relief commission, whether or not it was originally absolutely binding upon the levying authorities, no longer is so. If the commissioners may not reduce it, the budget commission at least may do so.

But I am of the opinion that the commissioners have the authority to reduce the amount asked for and to place at a lower figure the amount which they will levy for soldiers' relief.

To give to the county and township soldiers' relief commissions absolute control of the county duplicate in any particular would come dangerously near to constituting them officers of the county, and in as much as they are appointed and not elected, such a conclusion would tend to put in question the constitutionality of the entire law by reason of the provisions of article X, sections 1 and 2 of the constitution, requiring all county officers to be elected by the people. It is true that the state government and its legislature are the repository of the state's sovereignty and that all power to levy taxes is an attribute of that sovereignty, so that the state may, where principles of local self-government are not concerned, coerce local levying agencies into making a levy for an object which constitutes a state purpose. It will not do, however, to hold that soldiers' relief constitutes a state purpose, and that the commissions are merely state agents for that purpose, and are, therefore, not county officers, or agents of the county, because such a conclusion would render the law unconstitutional on another ground, viz., the fact that it clearly authorizes levies at different amounts in different counties, whereas if the purpose is a state one, then under article XII, section 2, the levy must be made, if at all, by a uniform rate upon all property on the grand duplicate of the state. Hubbard vs. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S., 436.

I conclude, therefore, that the soldiers' relief commission is not an official body, or at least that its members do not constitute county or state officers, that conclusion being necessary in order to sustain the constitutionality of the law. The commission not constituting a board of officers may, nevertheless, constitute an agency of the county (not of the state, of course) for the purpose of distributing certain funds. The rule of law might be stated thus: The county commissioners must levy such sum as will provide for the needs of those entitled to soldiers' relief. Such needs are to be determined by the soldiers' relief commission, which is merely a subordinate tribunal whose sole duty is to ascertain facts. I cannot accept this view, however. It is clear to me that under section 2936 a high degree of official discretion is required to be exercised by somebody. This official discretion involves the exercise of the levying power. The levying power, in my judgment, is such an attribute of sovereignty as cannot be placed in non-official hands. The power to levy is essentially legislative and may be delegated to local tribunals having quasi legislative functions, but not to non-official bodies or official bodies not made up of officers.

Therefore, I reach the conclusion that under the sections as they stand, and despite their language, the county commissioners have final discretion as between themselves and the soldiers' relief commission as to the amount that is to be levied for this purpose.

I might add that even if this were not so the Smith law, already mentioned, requires all county levies to be compassed within a space of three mills. It seems to me that it would be held, that in the face of such a limitation, other statutes like sections 3936 and 2942 would have to be construed so as to permit the commissioners to limit their gross levy to the statutory rate instead of leaving that duty to be discharged by the budget commission; nor do I think that the joint effect of the limitation of the Smith law, and of the statutes under consideration, is such as to entitle the soldiers' relief commission as a matter of right to one-sixth of the entire current levy of the county.

For all these reasons I have reached the conclusion that while the commissioners are required to exercise reasonably the discretion which is imposed in them, and while they may not discriminate against the needs of the soldiers' relief commission, they may not be required to levy the exact amount which that commission finds to be necessary for its purpose, even though such an amount would require a levy of less than one-half of a mill.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHIEF OF POLICE—RIGHT TO SUSPEND PATROLMAN—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY—JURISDICTION OVER PATROLMAN.

The chief of police having found that the facts in a case did not warrant the suspension of a patrolman, and dismissing the charge, the director of public safety has no jurisdiction to make a contrary finding; the action of the chief of police in ordering a suspension being final.

The director of public safety is unauthorized to direct the chief of police to suspend a patrolman, therefore, the patrolman, if suspended, would be entitled to reinstatement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. C. E. VAN DEUSEN, City Solicitor, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of May 27, 1914, is received in which you state and inquire:

"A complaint was duly lodged with the director of public safety against a patrolman. The director of public safety placed the written charges against the patrolman in the hands of the chief of police and directed an investigation. The chief of police caused an investigation to be made of the charges and having gone into the matter fully, found that the facts in the case did not warrant a suspension of the patrolman, or any other disposition, and formally dismissed the proceedings.

"Thereafter the director of public safety requested that all the evidence and matters and things connected with the investigation be placed in his hands for review, and upon review, made a finding contrary to that made by the chief of police and directed the chief to suspend the patrolman for a period of two weeks without pay.

"The chief of police claims to have original and final jurisdiction in cases where the charges against a patrolman do not warrant suspension or other disposition.

"Query:—

"First. Having found that the facts in the case did not warrant a suspension and the charges being dismissed by the chief of police, can the director of public safety make a contrary finding?

"Second. If the director of safety has a right to review such matter, can the chief, as a matter of law, suspend the officer and pass judgment as authorized by the director?

"Third. In the event that the chief should suspend the officer, as authorized by the director, as in the case above cited, would such suspended patrolman have recourse upon the chief for his act, and would he have the right of reinstatement by law?"

Section 4372, General Code, provides:

"The chief of police shall have exclusive control of the stationing and transfer of all patrolmen and other officers and employes in the department, under such general rules and regulations as the director of public safety prescribes."

Section 4379, General Code, provides:

"The chief of police and the chief of the fire department shall have exclusive right to suspend any of the deputies, officers or employes in his respective department and under his management and control, for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority, or for any other reasonable and just cause."

By virtue of these sections the chief of police has the "exclusive" right to suspend a patrolman.

Section 4380, General Code, provides:

"If any such employe is suspended as herein provided, the chief of police or the chief of the fire department, as the case may be, forthwith in writing, shall certify such fact, together with the cause for such suspension to the director of public safety, who within five days from the receipt thereof, shall proceed to inquire into the cause of such suspension and render judgment thereon, which judgment, if the charge be sustained, may be either suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal from the department, and such judgment in the matter shall be final except as otherwise provided in this subdivision. * * *"

This section applies when an employe is suspended by the chief of police or chief of the fire department.

Section 4505, General Code, provides in part:

"Any person in the police or fire department who is suspended, reduced in rank or dismissed from the department by the director of public safety may appeal from the decision of such officer to the civil service commission within ten days from and after the date of such suspension, reduction or dismissal, in which event said director shall, upon notice from the commission of such appeal, forthwith transmit to the commission a copy of the charges and proceedings thereunder. * * *"

This provision applies when the suspension is made by the director of public safety and not when made by the chief of police.

The effect of these statutes is that the chief of police makes the suspension in the first instance and certifies such suspension to the director of public safety. The director of public safety then investigates the cause of suspension and makes his finding, which may be suspension, reduction in rank or dismissal, or the finding of the chief of police may be reversed. The finding of the director of public safety suspending, reducing in rank or dismissing the employe is appealable to the civil service commission.

In the case at bar the chief of police has declined to suspend. Therefore, section 4380, General Code, does not apply.

In State ex rel. vs. Baldwin, 77 Ohio St., 532, it is held:

"Under the new Municipal Code the mayor —has authority to remove an officer or appointee in the police department, upon inquiry into the cause of suspension, by the chief of police, of such officer or appointee; but he is without original jurisdiction to inquire into charges against such an officer (other than the chief of police) or appointee, and upon such an inquiry he is without authority to remove an officer or appointee."

The statutes under consideration in the above case were substantially the same as at present, so far as the case at bar is concerned, except that the chief of police certified the suspension of an officer to the mayor, and the mayor made the inquiry now required of the director of public safety.

In the case of State, ex rel. vs. Kohler, 11 Nisi Prius, N. S., 497, Estep, J., on page 502, quotes from the opinion in State vs. Baldwin, supra, and then says:

"The chief of police under section 4379, General Code, has the initiative. The director of public safety cannot begin a proceeding against an officer of the police department for any of the causes specified in that statute, but obtains his jurisdiction to try and determine charges by reason of the certification provided for in 4380, General Code."

Section 4380, General Code, only requires a certification to the director of public safety when a suspension is made by the chief of police. It does not require a certification of charges against an officer when the chief of police does not suspend such officer. There is no provision of statute which authorizes the director of public safety to require the chief of police to certify to him the proceedings of the chief, when the chief declines to suspend an employe or officer.

The director of public safety cannot act upon his own initiative in making suspension of an employe or officer who is under the control of the chief of police.

In answer to your first inquiry, the director of public safety had no jurisdiction to order the chief of police to make a suspension. The refusal of the chief to make the suspension in the first instance was final.

This disposes of your second inquiry.

There are two parts to your third inquiry. You ask if the patrolman would have recourse upon the chief for his act. I do not deem it necessary to answer this question.

As the suspension ordered by the director of public safety is unauthorized, the patrolman, if he was suspended, would be entitled to re-instatement.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY COUNCIL—AUTHORITY TO AUTHORIZE CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY THE WRONGFUL ACT OF A POLICE OFFICER.

The city council is without authority to authorize and direct the solicitor of said city to confess judgment against said city in an action brought for damages caused by the wrongful act of one of its police officers, since there is neither legal nor moral obligation on the city to pay a claim of such kind.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. CLYDE SHERICK, City Solicitor, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 20, 1914, you submit to this department an ordinance passed by the council of the city of Ashland, authorizing and directing the solicitor of said city to confess judgment against said city for the sum of $3,000.00 in a certain action pending against the city for damages caused by the wrongful act of one of its police officers.

You submit a copy of the ordinance, and a copy of the petition in said damage suit, and you state as follows in your letter of inquiry:

> "The whereas clauses as are contained in said ordinance No. 116 are in part explanatory of the origin of the suit which is now pending in the court of common pleas, in and for Ashland county, Ohio, wherein Jessie Ebert as administratrix of the estate of Cloyd Ebert, deceased, is plaintiff and the city of Ashland, Ohio, is defendant."

The further facts of the case are as follows:

> "On the 23rd day of July, 1912, one Cloyd Ebert together with five or six other men, met together on what is known in this city as Moss Hill, which is an unfrequented place, within the corporate limits of the city of Ashland, and which place lies immediately south of the C. & S. W. Ry. Co.'s right of way, and which right of way is bounded on the north by the city's burial ground. On the night of the day above mentioned, T. L. S., then a police officer, in the course of his regular duty, together with C. W., a brother officer, followed two unmarried couples to said burial ground believing that they were resorting to that place for the purpose of prostitution, prior complaints having been made by various parties to the police department that such practices were going on there frequently, the officers seeing a light and hearing voices crossed the right of way of said railway and went up said hill and on the top thereof found a beer party going on, in which party was C. E., who, with the others, seeing the officers, started to run, and failing to halt upon the command of the officers, were fired upon by the said T. L. S., which resulted in the wounding of the said C. E., and from which wound he died within the year.

"T. L. S. was indicted, tried and convicted of second degree murder and is now in the penitentiary.

"It has come to my knowledge that evidence was introduced in said criminal action showing that C. E., and those with him, had jointly purchased the beer in Mansfield, Richland county, Ohio, which is wet territory, and had had the same shipped to this county and city, which is dry territory; and that there was some evidence introduced to the effect that the officers met with resistance, such as breaking away and being struck with stones.

"Feeling in my mind that the city of Ashland is not legally responsible for the killing of C. E., and being now placed in a peculiar situation by reason of the fact that the retiring council of 1913 passed ordinance No. 116, herein enclosed, authorizing and directing me, the incoming solicitor to confess a judgment for $3,000.00, I would be pleased to have you render me a written opinion as to what is my duty in said case now pending as solicitor of the city of Ashland, Ohio, and that the copy of the petition herein, may then be returned to me."

The petition charges negligence in the city of Ashland through its officers in the appointment of the officer who did the wrongful act. The negligence alleged against the city is not material to a solution of the question you submit.

The city of Ashland in the appointment of patrolmen and policemen acts in its governmental capacity and it thereby exercises a part of the sovereignty of the state.

It is well established in Ohio that a municipal corporation is not legally liable for the torts of its officers and agents when acting in its governmental capacity.

The leading case in Ohio upon this question is that of Western College, etc., vs. The City of Cleveland, 12 Ohio State, 375. This case has been followed and cited with approval by the supreme court in a number of decisions.

The principle therein enunciated is applied to a guard of a workhouse in Bell vs. The City of Cincinnati, 80 Ohio State, 1, wherein it is held:

"1. By paragraph twenty (20) of section 1536-100, Revised Statutes (section 7, Municipal Code), a municipal corporation is authorized to establish, maintain and regulate a workhouse therein; and by section 1536-677, Revised Statutes (section 141, Municipal Code), the directors of public service are invested with the management and control of such workhouse in behalf of the corporation, and in so managing and controlling said workhouse, the municipal corporation, through its directors of public service, acts in a governmental capacity, and not in a proprietary or business relation to the inmates or persons in its employ.

"5. One employed and acting at the time as a guard of prisoners working in a stone quarry within the corporation, and who is injured by explosion while attempting to remove the lid of a box of percussion caps to be used in setting off a blast in the quarry, cannot recover damages of the municipal corporation for injuries sustained by the explosion."

On page 17, Price, J., says:

"If the relation the city bore to the workhouse and quarry was governmental, and their operation and control were the exercise of governtal power, the city is not liable to plaintiff, even if he was injured through the neglect and want of care of some other or superior officer of the institution, where the statute creates no such liability. This has been held in numerous cases, such as Western College vs. Cleveland, 12 Ohio St., 375; Wheeler vs. Cincinnati, 19 Ohio St., 19; City of Cincinnati vs. Cameron, 33 Ohio St., 336; Robinson vs. Greenville, 42 Ohio St., 625; Frederick, Admx., vs. Columbus, 58 Ohio St., 538.

In the case at bar the policeman when he committed the tort complained of, was in the employ of the city in its governmental capacity and there is no legal liability against the city for damages caused by said wrongful act.

Council, however, has authorized a confession of judgment. There is no legal liability of the city which council was authorized to recognize, and the only other ground upon which the ordinance can be sustained is that there is a moral obligation of the city to pay for the injuries incurred.

In Ohio the courts have held that council has a right to recognize and pay a moral obligation.

In State, ex rel., vs. Brown, 4 Cir. Dec. 345, it is held:

"Where equity and justice require the payment of a claim against a municipal corporation, though it may not be collectible at law, an ordinance of such city or village legally passed, directing and authorizing its payment, is legal and valid."

In State, ex rel., vs. Wall, 15 Ohio Dec., 349, it is held:

"A municipal corporation may recognize and pay claims against it of a moral and equitable nature, whether required by law to do so or not."

These decisions are based upon the principle that equity and justice require the payment of the claim.

In the case at bar, the officer who committed the tort has been convicted of a serious crime on account thereof. This shows that he was clearly in the wrong and that he acted beyond the discretion of his official duty. The offense charged against the person killed was a misdemeanor and the arresting officer was not authorized to shed blood in making an arrest of one charged with the commission of a misdemeanor. (See 3 Cyc., page 892.)

The city has received no benefit from the wrongful act and equity and justice do not require payment by the city of the claim in question.

There is no moral obligation upon the part of the city to respond in damages for the tort complained of.

In the absence of both a legal and a moral obligation, council is not authorized to make payment of a claim, or to direct a confession of judgment thereof., The ordinance in question is ultra vires and is beyond the power of council to enact.

The solicitor is not authorized thereby to confess judgment. It is, therefore, your duty to refuse to confess judgment and you should defend the pending action.

Enclosed find copy of petition as requested by you.

Enclosure.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOLS—BOARD OF EDUCATION CANNOT BE COMPELLED TO PAY TUITION OF PUPIL ATTENDING SCHOOL IN ANOTHER TOWNSHIP WHEN THE PUPIL LIVES MORE THAN ONE AND ONE-HALF MILES FROM A SCHOOL IN HIS OWN TOWNSHIP.

When a pupil lives more than one and one-half miles from the school to which he is assigned and has been attending a nearer school in another township, when such other township centralizes its schools, and thus makes the centralized school further than the school to which he has been assigned, the board of education of his township cannot be compelled to pay tuition to the centralized school under the provisions of section 7735, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 9, 1914, you submitted for an opinion the following request:

> "The home of a certain pupil living in township B is over one and one-half miles from the nearest school in his township. There is a nearer school in the adjoining township A. The pupil attends the nearer school in township A under section 7735. The schools of township A are now centralized in a building located at a greater distance from the pupil's home than his own school, and the board of education of township B refuses to pay the tuition of said pupil who is attending school in township A. Can the board of education of township B be compelled to pay the tuition in question?"

Section 7735 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils without an agreement to that effect. But a board of education shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education of the district where the pupils reside. Nothing herein shall require the consent of the board of education of the district where the pupils reside, to such attendance."

This section has been construed by our supreme court in the case of Boyce vs. Board of Education of Mt. Carmel special school district, 76 O. S., 365, wherein it appears that the plaintiff brought suit in the court of common pleas for a writ of mandamus to compel defendant in error to admit his children of school age to the school located in the Mt. Carmel school district. The plaintiff in error alleged that the children resided with him in Beachwood special school district in Union township; that there is but one school in the district in which he resides, which is located more than a mile and a half from the relator's home and that that is the school to which his children are assigned, relator alleging that such children were entitled to admission to the school under the control of the defendants for the reason that the school so controlled by the defendants was the nearest school to his residence outside of his own school district, and in an adjoining school district. The petition admitted that the school to which such children were assigned was nearer his residence than the one to which he sought to have them admitted, but claimed that if his children were compelled to attend the school in the district where they resided, they would be required to travel along the public highway, which was shaded for a great distance with woods on either side, and quite lonesome and dangerous for children to travel without protection. The alleged right was based upon section 7735 of the General Code (4022a, Rev. Statutes). In the syllabus of the case the court held as follows:

"Section 4022a, Revised Statutes, does not require the board of education of a school district to admit children to a school outside of the district in which they reside, unless the school in their own district is more than a mile and a half from their residence and more remote from their residence than the school to which admission is sought."

And at page 368 of the opinion, the court says:

"It is equally clear from the language which the legislature has employed that the only purpose to be accomplished by the section is to relieve school children from the necessity of attending a school in their own district which is more than one mile and a half from their residence if there is a nearer school in another district. Since the petition admits that the school which is under the control of the defendants is more remote from the residence of the relator than is the school of the district in which he resides, the circuit court correctly determined that the statute does not authorize the transfer."

It appears in your inquiry that the pupil living in township B lives more than one and one-half miles from the nearest school in his township and that prior to the centralization of the schools in township A such pupil lived nearer a school in said adjoining township A than he did to the school provided in his own township. It further appears that since the schools in township A have been centralized, the schools in township A so centralized are located a greater distance from such pupil's home than his own school and that therefore the board of education of township B wherein such pupil resides refused to pay the tuition of said pupil who is attending school in township A. Inasmuch as such pupil not only lives more than one and one-half miles from the nearest school in his own township, but also lives a greater distance from the centralized school of township A than he does from his own school, it would seem to follow that such pupil, therefore, comes within the holding of the court in the case of Bryce vs. Board of Education of Mt. Carmel special school district, supra, and that the Board of Education of township A is not legally required to admit such child to such school. If this is true, then the converse is also true and the Board of Education of township B cannot legally be required to pay the tuition of such pupil in attending the school located in township A, for the reason, as stated by the court, that the schools in township A since their centralization, are now more remote from the residence of such pupil than the school in the district in which he resides.

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—AUTHORITY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO TURN OVER TO A MUNICIPALITY ITS SHARE OF THE TAX LEVY FOR ROAD PURPOSES—AUTHORITY TO TURN OVER ITS PROPORTIONATE SHARE OF COUNTY BRIDGE FUND.

County commissioners had no authority to turn over to a municipality, which has not established the city into a road district, its proportionate share of a tax levy for road purposes.

County commissioners have no authority to turn over to the city its proportionate share of the county bridge fund, under section 2421, General Code, since under our present statutes no city or village is entitled to demand or receive any portion of the county bridge fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. H. B. EMERSON, City Solicitor, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 21st you requested my opinion upon the following questions:

(1) "Have the county commissioners authority under the law to turn over to a municipality its proportionate share of the taxes levied for road purposes?

(2) "Have the county commissioners authority to turn over to the city its proportionate share of the county bridge fund?"

I know of no statute which authorizes county commissioners to turn over to a municipality in the county any portion of the taxes levied by them on the general duplicate of the county for road purposes.

It is apparent from a perusal of your letter that you had in mind the provisions of sections 3734 and 3735, General Code, which are as follows:

(3734) "The council may form road districts within the limits of the corporation, and when contiguous territory is attached to the corporation, such power shall extend to the territory so attached.

erty within the limits of the corporation, or the territory so attached, and collected by the county treasurer, shall be paid to the corporation treasurer, to be specially appropriated by the council to street and road purposes within the corporate limits and territory so attached. The trustees of the township in which such territory is located and the council, may agree upon a different distribution or division of the funds."

You state that the council of the city of Bellefontaine has not taken advantage of the power granted to it by these statutes, to establish the city into a road district nor to attach contiguous territory thereto for such purpose. Since this has not been done, I do not deem it necessary to decide whether, in the event such district were formed, it would be obligatory upon the county treasurer to pay over to the treasurer of the corporation the portion of the tax levied by the county commissioner for road purposes on the property therein.

Your second question involves a consideration of section 2421, General Code, which provides:

"The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levies upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

The foregoing was formerly section 860 of the Revised Statutes. Section 2824, Revised Statutes, provides that the commissioners of any county could levy annually, a tax for road and bridge purposes at a certain rate, based upon the value of the taxable property of the county. The county commissioners were required to set aside such portion of said fund as they deemed proper for the construction and repair of bridges. Said section also provided that the county commissioners, upon demand, should turn over to certain named cities and villages, a portion of the bridge tax to be used exclusively for the building and repair of bridges wholly within such municipality. Section 2824 was expressly repealed by section 13767, General Code. That portion of section 2824 which provided for the levying of the annual tax by the county commissioners for road and bridge purposes, was re-enacted as section 5635 of the General Code, but the provision for turning over a portion of the bridge tax to certain cities and villages, seems to have been left out of the General Code entirely. Under our present statutes no city or village is entitled to demand or receive any portion of the county bridge fund, and I am of the opinion, therefore, that county commissioners are without authority of law to turn over to them any part of said fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—NO JURISDICTION OVER CEMETERIES—POWER TO LEVY AND COLLECT TAX FOR CARING FOR CEMETERIES.

The board of trustees of public affairs have no jurisdiction over cemeteries, therefore, no power to assess lot owners for caring for the same. A village has the power to levy and collect a tax for the keeping of a cemetery clean and in good order.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. W. O. WALLACE, City Solicitor, Columbiana, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 26th in which you inquire:

> "I desire your opinion in regard to the duties of board of trustees of public affairs in the care and maintenance of a cemetery in the village of Columbiana, a small portion of the cemetery being in the township outside of the village, the cemetery having been purchased by the council of the village.
> "Does the board of trustees of public affairs have complete control of the cemetery, and do they have power to make assessment against the lot owners for the care of same? Does the village council have authority to make levy on tax duplicate to assist in keeping cemetery clean and in order when the revenues from the cemetery are not sufficient to meet current expenses?
> "While there is an endowment fund created for care of cemetery lots does the board having charge of cemetery have right to expend any of the principal for purpose of improvement of cemetery?"

The council of the village having purchased the cemetery, and having power to provide for the interment of the dead either within or without the corporate limits, under section 4154, General Code, it necessarily follows that the fact of a portion of the cemetery being outside the village has no effect upon the control or management of the cemetery.

Section 4154 above referred to, reads:

> "The council may provide place for the interment of the dead outside of the corporate limits, and the police powers of the corporation shall extend to those places."

Section 4357, General Code, reads:

> "In each village in which water works, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders water works, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

From this it is apparent that boards of trustees of public affairs in villages are only to be appointed where the village owns water works, electric light, natural or artificial gas plant, or other similar public utility, and the duties of such boards are prescribed in amended section 4361, now found in 103 O. L., 561.

Inasmuch as the duties of said board as set forth in said section, do not include anything in regard to cemeteries, and it is provided in section 4175, General Code, that the mayor of a village owning a public burial ground or cemetery shall appoint a board of cemetery trustees, it necessarily follows that the board of trustees of public affairs has nothing whatever to do in connection with cemeteries, and, therefore, no power to assess lot owners for the care of the same.

Section 4155, General Code, reads:

> "The council of a municipality owning a public burial ground or cemetery, whether within or without the corporation, may pass and provide for the enforcement of ordinances necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter, and regulate such public burial grounds and cemeteries, the improvement thereof, the burial of the dead therein, define the tenure and conditions on which lots therein shall be held and protect such burial grounds and cemeteries and all fixtures thereon."

While this section does not in express terms authorize the levying of a tax upon the general duplicate of the village for the keeping of cemeteries in repair, yet when considered in connection with the powers granted under section 3784, which reads:

> "Each municipal corporation shall have special powers, to be exercised as provided by law, to levy and collect taxes upon the real and personal property within the corporation for the purposes of paying the expenses of the corporation, constructing improvements authorized, and exercising the general and special powers conferred by law," it must be concluded that the village possesses the power to levy and collect a tax for the keeping of such cemetery clean and in good order, and to protect it from becoming overgrown with briers, shrubs, brush and thus becoming unsightly, and an eyesore to all coming within sight of it.

As to your last question, it is impossible to answer the same in the absence of specific knowledge of the character of the endowment fund in question, for it must be conceded that where in the will, deed, or other writing, the expenditure is limited as to purpose, no portion of the principal fund may be used except for the purposes mentioned in the instrument creating it.

Believing that this answers your questions, I am,

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—POWER OF CORPORATIONS ORGANIZED FOR FURNISHING ABSTRACTS OF TITLE.

A corporation organized for the purpose of preparing and furnishing abstracts of title may not so amend its articles of incorporation as to acquire power to act, generally, as a title guarantee and trust company, nor so as to acquire the single power of guaranteeing titles.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 18th enclosing a letter from The Land Title Abstract Company and correspondence in connection therewith including a letter addressed to you from Messrs. Tolles, Hogsett, Ginn & Morley, attorneys of Cleveland.

The correspondence presents the following question:

> "May a corporation organized with original power to promote the purpose 'of searching land titles and land and other records; preparing, procuring and furnishing abstracts and certificates of title to real property; preparing, procuring and furnishing abstracts and certificates of title to bonds, mortgages and other evidences of indebtedness and affecting investments in the same; purchasing and owning real estate as a place for carrying on its business, and doing any and all things necessary or incidental to such business' by amendment to its articles of incorporation acquire power to guarantee titles?"

Two sections of the General Code must be considered in connection with this specific question as follows:

> "Sec. 8719. A corporation organized under the general corporation laws of the state, may amend its articles of incorporation as follows:
> "1. So as to change its corporate name—but not to one already appropriated, or to one likely to mislead the public.
> "2. So as to change the place where it is to be located, or its principal business transacted.
> "3. So as to modify, enlarge or diminish the objects or purposes for which it was formed.
> "4. So as to add to them anything omitted from, or which lawfully might have been provided for originally, in such articles. But the capital stock of a corporation shall not be increased or diminished, by such amendment, nor the purpose of its original organization substantially changed.
> "Sec. 9850. A title guarantee and trust company may prepare and furnish abstracts and certificates of title to real estate, bonds, mortgages and other securities, and guarantee such titles, the validity and due execution of such securities, and the performance of contracts incident thereto, make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and guarantee the collection of interest and principal of such loans; take charge of and sell, mortgage, rent or otherwise dispose of real estate for others, and perform all the duties of an agent relative to property deeded or otherwise entrusted to it."

Sections 9851 to 9856, inclusive, may be mentioned. These sections provide the conditions upon which a corporation may do business as a title guarantee and trust company. They are material in the present connection only in so far as they tend to show the peculiar nature of the power to guarantee titles.

As far as section 9850 itself is concerned, it clearly established the conclusion that a company formed for the principal purpose of guaranteeing titles may engage in the business of preparing abstracts and, indeed, in all the related activities contemplated in the declared purpose of the incorporation of the company which raises the present question. It follows from this that if the purpose of guaranteeing titles may lawfully be added to the purpose for which the company was originally formed the resultant enumeration of purposes would be substantially that outlined in section 9850, General Code. That is to say, a corporation might have been originally formed for the purpose of doing the things described by the proposed reformed or amended articles of incorporation of the company in question.

This situation at once brings into play the principle which has been explicitly laid down by the supreme court in the interpretation of section 8719 in the case of Picard vs. Hughey, 58 O. S., 577. The principle may be stated thus:

> "Whatever powers might be granted to a single corporation by its original articles of incorporation, may be acquired by amendment by a corporation possessing a part only of such powers under its original charter."

If this principle is of universal application it furnishes a complete answer to the question submitted, and supports the contention of the company that it is entitled to amend its articles of incorporation in the manner stated.

But I am certain that the principle has no such universal application whatever may have been the language used by the court in the decision of Picard vs. Hughey, supra. It certainly can have no application in a type of extreme case which could easily be imagined; such as, for example, where a power is by express provision of statute conferred upon one kind of a corporation as an incidental power subordinate to the described principal purpose, and of itself a proper purpose for which a corporation might be formed. I am sure that it would not do to say that if a corporation were formed for such a purpose it would not substantially change the objects of its incorporation by attempting to add to its articles, the power to pursue the paramount object, especially when the pursuit of such an object constitutes a special franchise. As an instance of what I have in mind see sections 8145 and 9170, General Code.

The case I have described is an extreme one, yet in certain aspects it is similar to the question submitted. One reason for denying the right of a company organized for the purpose of constructing a telegraph line to acquire by amendment the right to operate a railroad would be that the operation of a railroad is a peculiar franchise, so that it is the paramount power granted under section 8145, the power to construct telegraph lines being in the nature of an incidental one. Therefore, though a railroad company whose articles of incorporation might lack specific mention of power to construct telegraph lines, might so amend its articles as to acquire such power by specific grant, a company organized for the mere purpose of operating telegraph lines might not acquire the peculiar franchise to operate a railroad in the sense above described by amending its articles of incorporation. Such a change, for the reasons stated, would probably be held to be a "substantial" one within the meaning of section 8719, General Code.

How different, then, is it with the question as submitted? The inquiring corporation now has those powers enumerated under section 9850, which constitute, broadly speaking, the incidental powers of a title guarantee company. That is to say, it has those powers which a title guarantee company would have if incorporated for the mere purpose of guaranteeing titles, without specific mention of such powers in its articles of incorporation. Of what nature then is the business of guaranteeing titles? Obviously, it is a species of special franchise, similar to that of banking, possessing in some respects the attributes of insurance. Section 9851, for example, requires as a condition of doing business a deposit with the treasurer of state of securities as in the case of banking and insurance companies.

Section 9853 speaks in so many words of the "issuance of policies of title insurance," indicating the character of that branch of the business of such company.

Section 9856 requires annual reports to be made to the auditor of state in the same manner as safe deposit and trust companies are required to report.

So that it follows from all these provisions that if I am right in my assumption with respect to section 9816 the principle which I have laid down would apply equally well with respect to section 9850, General Code.

But the authorities in this state clearly indicate the correctness of the view just suggested. The case already cited, Picard vs. Hughey, must be read in connection with State ex rel. vs. Taylor, 55 O. S., 61. So much is perfectly apparent from an examination of Judge Bradbury's opinion in the Picard case at page 598. In other words the court in deciding Picard vs. Hughey, so far from overruling the then very recent case of State ex rel. vs. Taylor, expressly reaffirmed its decision in that case and adhered to the principle therein announced.

The actual decisions in the two cases may be described as follows:

In State ex rel. vs. Taylor, it was held that a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing gas and electricity, and furnishing these commodities for light, heat and power, might not acquire by amendment, power to construct and operate a traction railway, such a change being regarded as "substantial" within the meaning of present section 8719.

In Picard vs. Hughey, it was held that a corporation organized for the purpose of furnishing gas for light, might, by amendment, acquire power to furnish electricity for similar purposes; such a change not being regarded as "substantial" within the meaning of section 8719.

Wherein, then, lies the distinction between the two cases? I think the distinction is found in a principle which is to be regarded as a limitation upon the broad language stated by Bradbury J., at page 597 of Picard vs. Hughey, the purport of which has been above abstracted.

Furthermore, I think the principle which I have in mind is suggested at page 65 of the opinion of Spear J., in State ex rel. vs. Taylor. Discussing the nature of the power originally granted to the corporation in that case in connection with the powers sought to be added thereto by amendment, he says:

> "It would seem that a company organized for the principal purpose of acquiring and operating a street railway by electricity might naturally, having obtained authority to do so, join with the incidental purpose of furnishing light and power within the location where it is authorized to operate. And no substantial reason is perceived why, if a company had been incorporated for either of the main purposes here indicated, it might not, by proper amendment, be also authorized to join the incidental purpose referred to."

Thereupon Judge Spear proceeds to hold that while furnishing light, heat and power is incidental to the operation of a railroad, the operation of a railroad is not incidental to the furnishing of light, heat and power.

It will thus be seen that the court in the Taylor case has carefully distinguished between the main or principal purpose or powers and incidental ones.

There are statutes which I need not mention authorizing the combination of more than one main or principal purpose in the charter powers of a single corporation, constituting exceptions to the general rule laid down by section 8623, General Code, as interpreted in the Taylor case, supra. If the general principle announced in the Picard vs. Hughey case applied in cases arising under such statutes, it would result, in my judgment, in permitting a corporation organized for one of the related main purposes to acquire by amendment the power to pursue both or all of them. An instance of this kind is found in section 9510, General Code. Let paragraph 2 of that section be taken as an example. It prescribes a number of different co-ordinate purposes which a single insurance company, other than life, may lawfully be authorized to pursue. I think it is clear that if a corporation be originally organized for the purpose of pursuing a part only of these enumerated objects it may, by amendment, acquire authority to pursue any or all the others. But there are other statutes which define the incidental powers of corporations organized for certain purposes. Such incidental powers are those which would be possessed by a corporation organized for the main purpose therein mentioned without specific mention in the articles of incorporation. Under the doctrine evolved from the two decisions just discussed, a corporation organized originally for the main purpose specified in such a statute may, if it desires, have written in its articles of incorporation the express power to pursue the incidental purposes (although such action would amount to nothing in a legal sense, the power being possessed without specific enumeration); but a corporation organized for the purpose of doing some of the things declared to be incidental, to such a specific main purpose cannot under the decision in State ex rel. vs. Taylor, as I understand it, by amendment, acquire authority to pursue the principal or main purpose. How, then, is it with respect to section 9850, General Code?

I have possibly already indicated my conclusion respecting this statute. I am of the opinion that if a corporation was organized with the following purpose clause, viz., "said corporation is formed for the purpose of doing business of a title guarantee trust company," it would have all the powers enumerated in section 9850, General Code, without specific mention in such articles of incorporation. I do not go so far as to hold that all of the enumerated powers found in section 9850 are co-ordinate; but I am sure that the power of preparing and furnishing abstracts and certificates of title to real estate, bonds, mortgages and other securities is an incidental one, whether in the most exact sense of the word or not. At least it is not co-ordinate with the power to guarantee titles which is a special franchise, such as, in my opinion, cannot be exercised by an individual.

Viewing the question from a somewhat more liberal angle it seems to me that in the very nature of the case the addition of the power to guarantee titles to that respecting the preparation of abstracts would constitute a substantial change in the purpose for which the corporation is formed, for the reason that the preparation of abstracts and the making of certificates thereto involves the assumption of a certain degree of contingent liability on the part of the corporation; whereas the guaranteeing of titles through the issuance of policies of title insurance involves the incurring of the highest degree of contingent liability, viz., that of an insurer.

From the standpoint of the stockholders (from whose point of view and not that of the third person dealing with the corporation the amendment sought is, it seems to me, to be regarded) such a change would involve the addition of an investment risk of a character quite different from that originally contemplated. Furthermore, the requirement that assets of the corporation be converted into securities to be deposited with the treasurer of state as a condition precedent to engaging in the business of guaranteeing titles of itself fundamentally changes the nature of the investment from the standpoint of the stockholders.

From still another point of view, it may be said that the trust company feature of the group of powers enumerated in section 9350 is of equal importance to the power of guaranteeing titles and that the kind of company which sections 9850 and 9856, inclusive, contemplate is neither a title guarantee company, with incidental power to furnish abstracts, etc., nor an abstract company, with incidental power to guarantee titles, but a title guarantee and trust company. Therefore, I question very seriously whether a single corporation can lawfully be formed and do business under these sections with the declared purpose of merely furnishing abstracts and guaranteeing titles. Whether or not this is so, the fact that the title guarantee features are bound up with the trust company features, as they are in the statute, further supports the view that the status of such companies, from the viewpoint of the franchise conferred, and from the viewpoint of the investment risk involved, is a peculiar one; so that to add to the charter powers of a mere abstracting company all the other powers mentioned in section 9850, whether co-ordinate or not, would be to effect a substantial change in the objects of its incorporation.

Upon the principles above announced, then, I am of the opinion that a corporation organized for the purpose of preparing and furnishing abstracts of title, may not lawfully acquire, by amendment to its articles of incorporation, the power of guaranteeing titles and of exercising the other peculiar franchises enumerated in section 9850, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CENTRAL STANDARD TIME—APPLICATION OF SUCH TIME TO BANKS.

Banks are without power to act under any other than central standard time, and also the provision of law dealing with banks must be construed with a view of the application of such time under section 5979, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HONORABLE EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand the following communication:

> "This city having adopted eastern standard time, the question has arisen among the banks as to whether or not we have a right to advertise and follow eastern time.
> "May I trouble you to ask your opinion on the same that I may have it to use in connection with adjusting our hours and in having the four banks act together.
> "The question has been raised today whether or not we can close on Saturday at 12 o'clock eastern time, while the law says it is a half holiday from twelve on, presumably meaning central standard time; also in your opinion is it necessary and are we obliged to advertise on our doors central standard time in connection with eastern time, or, in other words, is it illegal for us to adopt and follow eastern standard time?"

with respect to which an opinion is desired.

Under date of February 4th, I rendered an opinion to the Honorable Herman Fellinger, member of the general assembly, Cleveland, Ohio, wherein the powers of municipalities with reference to the adoption of eastern time and the consequences of such action with reference to matters under the jurisdiction of the general assembly, is dealt with.

I feel that this opinion covers the ground of your inquiry. You will note that section 5979 of the General Code expressly requires banks to be regulated by the central standard time prescribed by this statute.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that banks are without power to act under any other than central standard time, and all provisions of law dealing with banks must be construed within view of the application of such time.

I am enclosing a copy of the opinion above referred to.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—EMPLOYMENT OF A PLUMBING INSPECTOR IN A MUNICIPALITY.

The state board of health is without authority to direct a municipality to pass an ordinance relative to the employment of a plumbing inspector for such municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HONORABLE DAVID R. GILBERT, City Solicitor, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 25 you submit the following request for an opinion:

> "As city solicitor of the city of Warren, I have been requested by our board of health to communicate with you with reference to a certain matter arising under the rules and regulations of the state board of health covering the construction, installation and inspection of plumbing and drainage.
> "I have before me a copy of a proposed order sent by the state inspector or some officer to me as solicitor. Section 9 of the said proposed order reads as follows:
> "'Sec. 9. (Plumbing Inspector.) The board of health shall appoint for the purpose of the enforcement of these rules and regulations and the provisions thereof, an inspector of plumbing. Said inspector of plumbing shall be a practical plumber with at least seven (7) years' experience, selected from those persons who are well informed as to practical plumbing, skilled and well trained in matters pertaining to the sanitary regulations concerning plumbing work. The inspector so appointed shall not, during his term of office, be engaged or interested in the plumbing business or the sale of any plumbing supplies, nor shall he act as agent, directly or indirectly, for any person or persons so engaged. The salary of the inspector shall be _____ hundred dollars ($_____) per annum, payable semi-annually.'
> "The question that I desire an opinion upon is this: This section, as you will notice, provides for an inspector to be a practical plumber with at least seven years' experience. I am informed that to obtain such a man would mean that the salary would necessarily be in the neighborhood of $1,200.00 per year. This means a great hardship where in a city like Warren, we are all working on small salaries. The mayor of the city receives only $1,200.00, and he is the highest paid officer. The solicitor works on a salary of not over one-half what the mayor gets. To pay a plumber for inspecting sewers $1,200.00 seems outrageous. Can you cite me to any law that requires our board of health to employ an inspector under these circumstances? I will say this, we have had in the city of Warren for years a most excellent board of health and sanitary code, which has been regarded as a model of completeness. We have connected with our board of health as an officer one Thomas B. Webb, who has been a very efficient man, a man who has heretofore acted as inspector of plumbing, and if we are compelled to provide for an inspector our board desires to continue him in that capacity in connection with his other duties as sanitary policeman."

The statutes of Ohio do not confer power upon the state board of health to dictate to municipal corporations of their boards of health, the form and substance of the rules and regulations which are to be adopted by such board. The proposed regulation sent by the state board of health is undoubtedly intended merely in the way of a suggestion or a recommendation. The city board of health is in no wise obliged to enact or enforce the proposed regulation. They may accept or reject the same, or change or modify it as they deem best for the accomplishment of the purposes of the city.

If the present sanitary code existing in Warren appears ample to the authorities in charge, and if your present plumbing inspector is properly accomplishing the necessary ends, there is no reason whatever for any change to be made in these matters.

Suffice it to say that the enactment of such rules and regulations for the inspection of plumbing and the licensing of inspectors, as may be necessary, rests in the first instance with the city board of health, and while these officers are performing their duties in a reasonably efficient manner, their action is controlling and subject to no power of veto or substitution by the state board of health.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—COMMERCIAL BANK AND SAVINGS BANK—TEN PER CENT. RESERVE TO BE MAINTAINED BY SUCH BANKS.

Where a banking institution has the power of a commercial bank and also of a savings bank, it is not entitled to maintain simply a reserve of ten per cent. on the whole of its time deposits under section 9764, General Code. The ten per cent. reserve of the time deposits applies only to the savings department of such institution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 26, 1914.

HONORABLE EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 19, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

"Referring to section 9764 of the General Code, which requires that savings banks shall carry at least ten per cent. of time deposits, beg to inquire whether this refers to savings banks strictly or commercial banks and savings banks combined.

"That is where a bank has the power of a commercial bank and also a savings bank, is it entitled to claim this reserve of ten per cent. on its time deposits?"

Section 9702, General Code, provides as follows:

"Any number of persons, not less than five, a majority of whom are citizens of this state, may associate and become incorporated to establish a commercial bank, a savings bank, a safe deposit company, a trust company, or to establish a company having departments for two or more, or all of such classes of business, upon the terms and conditions and subject to the limitations hereinafter and by law prescribed."

It appears from the provisions of this section that a single banking company may be authorized to conduct both a commercial and savings bank business.

With respect to the reserve required to be maintained by commercial and savings banks respectively, section 9759, General Code, and section 9764, General Code, as amended 104 O. L. 186, provide:

Section 9759:

"Commercial banks shall keep as reserve at least fifteen per cent. of their total deposits, at least six per cent. of that part of such deposits which is payable on demand, and at least four per cent. of that part of such deposits which are time deposits shall be kept in the vaults of the bank in lawful money, national bank notes or bills, notes, and gold or silver certificates issued by the United States. That part of such reserve not so kept, shall be kept, subject to demand, in other banks or trust companies, designated by resolution of the board of directors for that purpose, a copy of which upon its adoption, shall be forthwith certified to the superintendent of banks, and the depository thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the superintendent of banks."

Section 9764:

"Savings banks shall keep as reserve at least ten per cent. of their time deposits, and at least fifteen per cent. of their demand deposits; at least six per cent. of that part of such deposits which is payable on demand, and at least two per cent. of that part of such deposits which are time deposits shall be kept in the vaults of the bank in lawful money, national bank notes, or bills, notes and gold or silver certificates issued by the United States; not more than three-tenths of such reserve for time deposits may be invested in the securities named in paragraphs "b" and "c" of section 9758 of the General Code or the bonds of any city or county within this state; that part of such reserve not so kept or invested, shall be kept subject to demand in other banks or trust companies, as designated by resolution of the board of directors for that purpose, a copy of which, upon its adoption, shall be forthwith certified to the superintendent of banks and the depositary thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the superintendent of banks."

The reserve required to be maintained by both commercial and savings banks is computed and determined on deposits in such respective institutions, the receipt of which in both is, in a measure, authorized and regulated by statutory provisions. Both kinds of banking institutions possess, of course, a considerable measure of implied power with respect to these and other matters incident to the nature of their business and the efficient exercise of their granted powers; but special statutory provisions with respect to deposits in commercial and savings banks may be noted.

Section 9757, General Code, provides:

> "A commercial bank may receive deposits on which interest may be allowed. All deposits in such banks shall be payable on demand without notice, except when the contract of deposit otherwise provides. * * *"

As to savings banks, it is, by section 9763, provided generally that such banks may receive money on deposit. It is further provided (section 9767) that the board of directors shall prescribe the terms on which deposits shall be received and paid out, and that a passbook shall be issued to each depositor in each department, containing the rules and regulations adopted by the board of directors governing such deposits, in which shall be entered each deposit made, the interest allowed thereon, and each payment made to each depositor (section 9768); and it is further provided that no payment or check against any savings bank account shall be made or paid unless accompanied by and entered in the passbook issued therefore, except for good cause and on assurance satisfactory to the officers of the bank. Special provision is made, however, giving to savings banks authority to issue time certificates of deposit or certificates for deposit specially issued according to the rules and regulations governing savings deposits.

From the foregoing statutory provisions it is manifest that an intention is evinced to observe a distinction with reference to deposit in commercial and savings banks, and it is quite apparent that this distinction follows when both kinds of banking business are done by one institution under separate departments. In such case the reserve to be maintained by the institution as a whole, must be that maintained by its separate departments conducted as if they were separate institutions.

With respect to the particular question presented by you, I am of the opinion that where a banking institution has the power of a commercial bank, and also that of a savings bank, it is not entitled to maintain simply a reserve of ten per cent. of the whole of its time deposits, but that the ten per cent. reserve of time deposits applies only to the deposits in the savings department of such institution.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHIEF INSPECTOR OF MINES—HIS DUTIES RELATING TO OIL AND GAS WELLS ON LANDS INTERLAID WITH WORKABLE SEAMS OF COAL.

Under the provisions of section 914, General Code, the chief inspector of mines upon receiving a notice from a person, firm or corporation intending to drill oil or gas wells which will likely penetrate working seams of coal, shall make a record thereof, and shall comply with the provisions of the section relating to the manner in which to proceed. It is the duty of the chief inspector of mines to see that the provisions of the General Code relating to the drilling and operating or abandonment of such wells are complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Department of Inspection, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 4, 1914, you state that drillers of oil and gas wells are drilling through territories underlaid with coal, regardless of suggestions made by your department and the mine operators, as a result of which an explosion involving the loss of life may occur. You ask if you have power to locate these wells and to insist upon records being kept and mining maps presented to your department. You also say that no record is kept of strata through which the oil and gas wells are passing, and consequently you are unable to obtain information as to the seams or thickness of coal through which the wells pass. This latter information you think the state should have in order to protect itself against dangers when casing is being withdrawn, as if you knew the workable seams, when the well is abandoned you would insist upon the well being plugged a safe distance below the lowest workable seam.

I think that your question is answered by the sections of the General Code, to which I shall here refer.

Section 973 provides that a written notice shall be given to the mine inspector before drilling a gas or oil well within the limits of any coal producing county. It is the duty of the person, firm or corporation causing any well to be drilled, to have prepared an accurate map of a scale of one inch to four hundred feet, showing the location and number of wells, the property lines of the property upon which they are to be located in the township, section and quarter section in which such well is being drilled, together with the measurement from the section line and the quarter section line, and a sworn statement of the maker of the map, which map is to be kept on file in the office of the state mining department, and open for inspection at all reasonable hours. The original map is to be retained by the owner or surveyor, and a blue print filed with the chief inspector of mines, and another with the county recorder, within sixty days after the passage and approval of the act, or after commencing to drill the well, and if drilling is still continued on the property already surveyed, a complete blue print must be filed at the end of each year.

The following language is taken from this section:

> "No oil or gas well shall be drilled nearer than three hundred feet to any opening to a mine used as a means of ingress or egress for the persons employed therein, nor nearer than one hundred feet to any building or inflammable structure connected therewith and actually used as a part of the operating equipment of said mine.

"In the event that a well being drilled for oil or gas penetrates the excavations of any mine, it must be cased with casing of approximately the same diameter as the diameter of the hole, the hole to be drilled thirty feet or to solid slate or rock and not less than ten feet below the floor of such mine, and the casing shall be placed in the following manner: one string of casing shall be placed at a point above the roof of said mine so as to shut off all of the surface water and then the hole drilled through said mine and another string of casing put in and the bottom of the second string of casing, or the one passing through said mine shall not be nearer than ten feet or more than thirty feet from the floor of the mine where it passes through the same.

"When any well which has been drilled for oil or gas is to be abandoned and has passed through the excavations of any coal mine from which the mineral coal has not all been removed, the person, firm or corporation owning said well shall leave in said well the casing passing through said mine from a point not less than ten feet nor more than thirty feet below the floor of said mine and extending above the roof of said mine five feet and a seasoned wooden plug or iron ball shall be driven to a point forty feet below the floor of the mine and shall then fill the hole and casing left in with the cement or a seasoned wooden plug or iron ball shall be driven on top of the same, and the hole shall then be filled for a distance of not less than twenty feet with cement. If any oil or gas well has passed through a workable vein or seam of coal it shall when it is abandoned be plugged in the following manner: a seasoned wooden plug or iron ball shall be driven to a point thirty feet below the lowest workable seam of coal and the hole filled with cement to a point twenty feet above the first seam of coal and another wooden plug or iron ball driven and the hole filled for a distance of twenty feet with cement.

"The property owner or owners shall report to the chief inspector of mines of the commencing to drill of any well or wells for oil or gas on his or their property and shall report at the end of each year thereafter if drilling is continued the number of wells drilled on his or their property, the date drilled and by whom drilled.

"When any oil or gas well is to be abandoned, the person, firm or corporation having drilled or operated such well, shall notify the chief inspector of mines, at least ten days in advance so that he may direct one of his district inspectors to be present at the time of abandonment."

Section 976 prescribes a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred dolars for the first offense, and a fine of not less than two hundred dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisonment not less than thirty days nor more than six months, for a second offense in case any person, firm or corporation violates or wilfully refuses or neglects to comply with the provisions of the foregoing quoted section.

Section 914 provides that the chief inspector of mines, upon receiving notice from a person, firm or corporation of an intention to drill an oil or gas well which will likely penetrate a workable seam of coal, shall make a record thereof, and if such well is to be drilled so as to comply with the provisions of this act relating thereto, he shall give his permission to the parties to proceed. He shall keep on file in his office all the papers and maps pertaining to oil and gas wells, and see that the provisions relating to the drilling, operating and abandonment of such wells are complied with.

From these sections you will see the statute is specific as to the manner in which wells shall be drilled in coal producing counties. Such well must not be drilled nearer than three hundred feet to any opening of any mine used as a means of ingress or egress for persons employed therein, or nearer than one hundred feet to any building or inflammable structure connected therewith. When the well is drilling for oil or gas and penetrates the excavations of a mine, the manner of a casing is specifically prescribed by the section which I have quoted; and when the well is to be abandoned the statute clearly defines the manner in which the mine may be protected. This statute outlines in detail the duty of your department, as well as the obligation imposed upon the owner of the well. You should see that the provisions of this statute are complied with, and when this is done, the owner of the well has complied with his statutory duty.

I note that you say that the owners of wells are neglecting the keeping of a record of the strata through which the oil and gas wells are passing. The statute provides that if the oil or gas well passes through a workable seam of coal it shall, when abandoned, be plugged in a specified manner. As there may be some doubt as to what constitutes a workable vein or seam of coal, I can readily see that your department should be advised by the driller of the well when any stratum of coal is penetrated in order that it may determine whether or not such stratum is a workable vein, as otherwise it would not know whether or not this statute was being complied with when the well was abandoned.

As your department is now under the charge of the industrial commission, I think it well to call your attention to the powers reposed in that commission with reference to prescribing reasonable standards for the maintenance of places of employment in order to render them safe. Among other powers reposed in the commission is that prescribed by paragraph 10 of section 22 of the industrial commission act (103 O. L. 102), wherein this language is used in defining the powers of that commission:

> "to collect, collate and publish all statistical and other information relating to employes, employers, employments, places of employments and such other statistics as may be necessary. * * *"

This language empowers the commission to collect any information relating to places of employment, employers and employes, as may be necessary. Should the commission determine that it was necessary to obtain this information in order that it might render a place of employment safe, it would seem that it could require the driller of the well to report fully to it all facts regarding the veins of coal through which the well passes.

There is other language in this act which carries with it similar powers. If from such information the commission is of the opinion that a workable seam or vein of coal has been penetrated, the well should be plugged in the manner required by section 973, it being the duty of the owner of the well to notify your department at least ten days prior to abandonment, in order that one of your district inspectors may be present at the time of abandonment and see that the statutory requirements have been followed.

I have not at length explained the statute in full, as that part quoted is too clear to require interpretation.

In conclusion I should like to call your attention to sections 6311 et seq., which also deal with the drilling of natural gas and oil wells and the abandonment thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—STATE TREASURER—THE TERM "OTHER EXPENSES OF THE BOARD" DEFINED.

1. It is the duty of the state board of embalming examiners to turn over the money in its possession to the state treasurer, even though there has been no appropriation made by the general assembly to take care of the expenses of said embalming board, and even though it is not a matter that can be recognized by the emergency board.

2. Since each appointed member of the state board of embalming examiners, except the secretary, receives ten dollars for each day of actual service during the meetings, and mileage at the rate of three cents per mile in attendance upon said meetings, personal hotel bills of said members cannot be paid as "other expenses of the board. The per diem and mileage is the only compensation for members while attending meetings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHAW, Secretary and Treasurer, The Ohio State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 21st you request my opinion as follows:

"We respectfully ask your department for an opinion as to the advisability of the Ohio state board of embalming examiners placing the funds in their possession on deposit with the state treasurer.

"No appropriation has ever been asked for or received from the general assembly as this board has been self-sustaining.

"We would like an opinion as to whether the members of this board other than the secretary-treasurer can legally charge for hotel expenses, incurred at board meetings."

The regulation governing the board of embalming examiners are contained in section 1335 and following of the General Code.

Section 1339 of these provisions is as follows:

"Each appointed member of the state board of embalming examiners, except the secretary, shall receive ten dollars for each day of actual service during the meetings of the board, and mileage at the rate of three cents for each mile of travel in attendance upon such meetings. The secretary shall receive such salary as the board directs, and his necessary traveling expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties. Salaries, mileage and other expenses of the board, shall be paid from fees received under the provisions of this chapter.

Section 24 of the General Code as amended in 104 O. L., 178, is as follows:

"Sec. 24. On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid shall pay to the treasurer of state, all moneys. checks and drafts received from the state, or for the use of any such officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid, during the preceding week from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed, verified, statement of such receipts. Where tuitions and fees are paid to the officer or officers of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid, said officer or officers shall retain a sufficient amount of said tuition fund and fees to enable said officer or officers to make refunds of tuition and fees incident to conducting of said tuition fund and fees. At the end of each term of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid, the officer or officers having in charge said tuition fund and fees shall make and file with the auditor of state an itemized statement of all tuitions and fees received and disposition of the same.

"Section 2. That said original section 24 of the General Code be and the same is hereby repealed.

"Section 3. All sections and parts of sections of the General Code which provide for the custody, management and control of moneys arising from the payment to any state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid of any fees, taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or other charges or indebtedness and which are inconsitent with the provisions of section 24 of the General Code as herein amended, are, to the extent of such inconsistency hereby repealed.

"Section 4. Immediately upon the taking effect of this act, all moneys, checks and drafts in the possession of any state officer, state institution, department, board, commission or institution, received from the state or for any such state officer, department, board of commission from the sources mentioned in section 24 of the General Code, as herein amended, shall be paid into the state treasury in the manner provided by said section."

Article II, section 22 of the constitution of Ohio, is as follows:

"No money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

The intention of the amendment to section 24 of the General Code, as it appears in the 104th volume of Ohio Laws, cannot be subjected to the slightest doubt. The object of the statute as it now appears, is to require such moneys as are received by the board of embalming examiners, to be paid to the treasurer of state.

The provisions of section 3 of this act, to the effect that all sections or parts of sections of the General Code, which provide for the custody, management and control of such moneys, and which are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are to the extent of such inconsistency, repealed, clearly reverse to such a provision as that set out in section 1338 of the General Code, making the secretary the treasurer, and section 1339 of the General Code, permitting salaries, mileage and other expenses to be paid from fees received. These are provisions clearly for the control and management of funds received which are inconsistent with section 24, requiring such funds to be paid to the state treasurer weekly.

Were it not for this provision of section 3 above set out, it would be readily possible to reconcile the two sections and permit the secretary to keep out of the fees received, a sufficient amount to pay the salary, mileage and expenses of the board referred to in section 1339 of the General Code, but in view of the clear import of section 3, no other construction may be ventured except that the provision providing for the control of the funds by the secretary has been repealed.

I recognize that this construction presents a very apparent hardship in view of the constitutional provision above set forth, prohibiting moneys to be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law. Under this requirement, since the legislature has failed to make an appropriation for the said board of embalming examiners, it is clear that we are at the present time presented with no legal method of enabling the members of the board and the secretary to receive their salary and expenses. The only existing remedy would be a presentation of the claims to the legislature, which body might make an appropriation for the amount due. Undoubtedly, through inadvertance, the legislature has failed to care for the state board of embalming examiners as it has other departments of a similar nature. In other cases, the practice is adopted of appropriating receipts and balances and requiring boards of this nature to pay the moneys received into a specific fund, which by reason of the appropriation of receipts and balances is made available for the purpose of drawing therefrom to meet the expenses of the department. Until the legislature makes this provision, or at least until it makes a specific appropriation for the purposes of the board, it will be impossible to legally pay the salaries and expenses authorized by section 1339 of the General Code.

In your second question, you inquire whether members of this board, other than the secretary-treasurer, can legally charge for hotel expenses incurred at board meetings. Under the terms of section 1339 above quoted, the members of the board are entitled to receive $10.00 for each day of actual service during meetings and mileage at the rate of three cents for each mile of travel in attendance on such meetings. By this provision, the intention of the legislature to set forth specifically and in detail the allowance to be permitted the members, is manifest, and the allowance of hotel expenses is clearly not provided for by these terms. In the latter part of this section, the board is authorized to pay salaries, mileage and other expenses of the board. I am of the opinion that this term "other expenses of the board" cannot be construed to extend further than a reference to such other expenses of the board as a whole, as are authorized otherwise by the statutes. Such term clearly may not be construed to in any way enlarge the authorization of the statute with reference to expenses permitted individual members of the board. I can find nothing in this statute, therefore, or in any other statute, which authorizes members of the board of embalming examiners to charge for hotel expenses in addition to their compensation whilst attending a meeting. In accordance with the established rule of construction, the manifest intent of the statute is that the compensation allowed to members of the board while in attendance at meetings, is intended to cover expenses incurred.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL—HOW VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT MAY BECOME PART OF COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT—RIGHT OF SUCH VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT TO BECOME PART OF THE COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

1. If a village school district, containing a village, which according to the last federal census, has a population of 3,000 or more, decides by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, not to become a part of the county school district, and notifies the county board of education of its decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, as provided by section 4688, General Code, then such village school district cannot after such date through its board of education rescind its action and become a part of the county school district.

2. If such village school board, by its own action becomes a part of the county school district, because it does not act in accordance with section 4688, General Code, then such village school district cannot through its board of education, at a later date, withdraw from the county school district, and again become a village school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 9, 1914, you submitted the following request for an opinion:

> "First. May a village school district after having taken advantage of the provisions of section 4688, Ohio school laws, enacted by the general assembly at its extraordinary session 1914, at a later date return to the county school district?
> "Second. May such a village school district deciding to remain in the county school district, at a later date withdraw therefrom and accept the provisions of section 4688?"

In reply to your inquiry, section 4688 of the General Code, as passed February 5, 1914 (104 Ohio Laws, page 134), provides as follows:

> "The board of education of any village school district containing a village which according to the last federal census had a population of three thousand or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof not to become a part of the county school district. Such village district by notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, shall be exempt from the supervision of the board."

Under the provisions of said section, it appears that in a village school district, containing a village which, according to the last federal census had a population of 3,000 or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, not to become a part of the county school district, but such decision becomes effective only upon giving notice to the county board of education on or before the third Saturday of July, 1914, and when such notice is given, said section specifically provides that the board of education of any such village school shall then be exempt from the supervision of the board. If the board of education of any such village decides not to become a part of the county school district, in the manner provided by said section, and gives notice thereof, to the county board of education, then it is my judgment that such school district is exempt from the supervision of such county board of education and the action so taken on the part of the board of education cannot be rescinded, for by its action it has decided not to become a part of the county school district. Therefore, answering your first question directly, it is my opinion that if a village school district, containing a village which according to the last federal census had a population of 3,000 or more, decides by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, not to become a part of the county school district, and notifies the county board of education of its decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, as provided by section 4688, that then such village school district cannot after such date through its board of education, rescind its action and become a part of the county school district. If the board of education of any school district containing a village which, according to the last federal census, had a population of 3,000 or more, fails to take any action in regard to not becoming a part of the county school district, then such village school district, ipso facto, becomes a part of the county school district. The only way such village school district can escape becoming a part of the county school district, is in the manner provided by section 4688, General Code, supra; that is, by its board of education deciding by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, not to become a part of the county school district, and notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914. If such village school district, by its own action, becomes a part of the county school district, because it does not act in accordance with section 4688, then, in answer to your second question, it is my opinion that such village school district cannot, through its board of education, at a later date, withdraw from the county school district, and again become a village school district.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MOTHERS' PENSION—PERSONS ENTITLED TO MOTHERS' PENSION—PERSONS NOT ENTITLED TO MOTHERS' PENSION.

1. The word "poor" as used in section 1683-2, General Code, is not to be construed to mean "pauper." A mother is not required to sell her home and use the proceeds thereof to sustain herself and family before being entitled to relief under the mothers' pension law.

2. A mother living at home with her parents, who support her and her children, and makes no charge therefor, would not be entitled to relief under section 1683-3 of the mothers' pension act.

3. If a husband has deserted more than three years before and the mother has secured a divorce, she falls within the provisions of section 1863-2, since nothing is said in such statute relative to divorce.

4. If the mother is divorced by the husband for her aggressions, and though three years have elapsed, it would not be regarded as desertion on the part of the husband within the meaning of section 1683-2.

5. The unmarried mother of illegitimate children is not entitled to an allowance under section 1683-2, General Code.

6. An adopting mother is not entitled to a pension, since the term "mother" cannot be construed as extending to an "adopting mother."

7. A grandmother who is keeping and supporting a child of her son or daughter, when both parents are dead, cannot be regarded as a mother.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. CHARLES KRICHBAUM, Probate Judge and Juvenile Judge, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Receipt of your letter submitting eight separate questions arising under the mothers' pension law has already been acknowledged, and your request for early consideration thereof has been noted.

Your questions are as follows:

"First. What is the legal meaning as used in the act, of the word 'poor' (when such women are poor)? Does this mean indigent? We have a number of cases in which the mother owns a home (some subject to a mortgage of about one-half the value), but have no income to support themselves or children, and while they have no income, yet by selling the home, would have sufficient to support themselves for a period. In other words, they are property poor. Do they fall within the meaning of the word 'poor?'

"Second. In some cases the mother is living at home with her parents, who support her and the children and make no charge therefor. Is such mother entitled to the pension, provided her case falls within the other requirements of the act?

"Third. If the husband has deserted more than three years before and the mother has secured a divorce, does she fall within the provision of the three years' desertion?

"Fourth. If the mother is divorced by the husband for her aggressions, and the three years have elapsed, is this within the provision of three years' desertion?

"Fifth. Suppose the mother was never married and has illegitimate children, and the putative father is dead or deserted, will she be entitled to the pension?

"Sixth. Will an adopted mother (other conditions being met), be entitled to the pension?

"Seventh. We have several cases where both parents are dead, and the children are being kept and supported by the grandmother, who is a widow and poor, as well as nearest relation; can a pension be granted to her?

"Eighth. Must the two years' residence of the mother and children be for said period, in the county in which the application is filed?"

In an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, copy of which is enclosed herewith, I have stated reasons for giving to the mothers' pension provisions of the act found in 103 Ohio Laws, 864, a very liberal construction, to accomplish the end sought thereby. My answer to your questions will be based upon such a construction of the statute.

Your first question involves joint consideration of the first sentence of section 1683-2 and the entire section 1683-3, General Code. These provisions are as follows:

"Section 1683-2. For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled for work by reasons of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive an age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have been legal residents in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women, as follows. * * * *"

"Sec. 1863-3. Such allowance may be made by the juvenile court, only upon the following conditions: First. The child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made, must be living with the mother of such child or children; second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable; third, the mother must, in the judgment of the juvenile court, be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally, for the bringing up of her children; fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman; fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother; sixth, a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made by the probation officer, an associated charities organization, humane society, or such other competent person or agency as the court may direct, and a written report of such examination filed."

In my opinion, the word "poor," as used in section 1683-2, is not to be given the technical meaning which your question implies. It is not required that the woman be a pauper in order to be entitled to receive the allowance. The contrary, indeed, clearly appears, from the provisions of section 1863-3, which set forth the conditions upon which the allowance is to be made. None of these conditions are such as to require the mother to have the status of a pauper before she is eligible for relief.

Again, I do not believe any interpretation of the law would be favored, which would require a mother to sell a home which she might own, and thus to exhaust her property resources, in order to qualify for relief, for the very reason that the object of the law, itself, as stated in the opinion to the bureau, is to preserve the integrity of the home. To require the mother to sell her homestead property, in order to qualify for relief, would seem to do violence to this underlying principle, and in addition, would merely have the effect of substituting the payment of rent for the payment of interest, taxes, repairs, etc., incident to the ownership of a home, as it is the intention of the statute that the mother shall occupy her own home with her children, and in order to do this, she would either have to own such a home or pay rent to some other owner.

I am of the opinion that the second case described by you is not one properly within the purview of the law. If the mother is living at home with her parents who support her and the child, and make no charges therefor, it is obvious that, in the absence of an allowance, she would not be required to work regularly away from her child, nor does it appear that the allowance is necessarily to save the child, or children, from neglect and to save the breaking up of the home of the woman. Therefore, at least two of the essential conditions, mentioned in section 1683-3, would not be satisfied by the case mentioned by you.

The third case, which you mention, is one which, in my opinion, falls within the provisions of the law. Section 1683-2, the pertinent provision of which has already been quoted, mentions the desertion of the husband, continuing for a period of three years, as a condition of relief. Nothing is said about divorce. If the actual desertion, on the part of the husband, is established, in my mind, it is immaterial whether a divorce has been obtained by the mother on that account or not.

The fourth case stated by you, on the other hand, is one which I think does not come within the provisions of law. By specifically mentioning the desertion of the husband, the general assembly has, in my mind, clearly indicated that other causes, producing separation of husband and wife, while both remain living and in health, are not sufficient foundation for qualification for allowance. In my judgment, the procuring of a divorce, by the husband, for the wife's aggression, could not, in the most liberal view, be regarded as desertion, on the part of the husband, within the meaning of the statute.

Your fifth question may be answered, generally, by the statement that the unmarried mother of illegitimate children is clearly not entitled to an allowance. It is only those women "whose husbands are dead or * * permanently disabled or * * prisoners or * * have deserted," who are entitled to relief. Therefore, if a woman was never married and has illegitimate children, she is not entitled to a pension to enable her to remain at home with them.

Answering your sixth question, I am of the opinion that an adopted mother, other conditions being met, is not entitled to the pension. While the act is to be given a liberal interpretation to accomplish the result at which it is aimed, yet, to my mind, the word "mother" as repeatedly used therein, does not have, naturally, the significance of the term "adopted mother;" and, in my judgment, such a meaning is too artificial to be given to the former term, even under sanction of a liberal interpretation.

For similar reasons, a grandmother, who is keeping and supporting a child of her son or daughter, when both parents of the children are dead, cannot be, in my judgment, regarded as a mother, within the meaning of the act, even though her situation satisfies the other conditions enumerated therein.

Your eighth question is answered in the enclosed opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices.

Of course, your questions, many of which are difficult, arise under legislation which is novel, and, so far as I am advised, there are no authorities interpreting such legislation. Consequently, my views cannot be supported by such authorities.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OIL AND GAS WELLS—IN COAL REGIONS MAPS SHOULD BE FILED WITH THE CHIEF INSPECTOR OF MINES SHOWING THE LOCATION OF SUCH WELLS.

A company maintaining oil or gas wells drilled a number of years prior to the passage and approval of section 973, General Code, as it now stands, should make and file copy of maps showing the location of such wells. Where the sixty day limit for the filing of such maps has expired, they should be filed immediately.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

MR. J. M. ROAN, Chief Deputy and Safety Commissioner of Mines, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 21, 1914, you present the following state of facts and questions:

"Section 973 of the General Code reads as follows:

" 'Any person, firm or corporation causing to be drilled any well for oil or gas or elevator well or any test well within the limits of any coal producing county of this state, must give notice, in writing of such fact to the chief inspector of mines, stating the location of the land upon which such well is to be drilled.

" 'It shall be the duty of any such person, firm or corporation to make or cause to be made an accurate map on a scale of one inch to four hundred feet, showing on said map the location and number of wells, * * * The original map shall be retained by the owner or surveyor and one blue print filed with the chief inspector of mines and one with the recorder of the county in which such well is located within sixty days after the passage and approval of this act, or after commencing to drill any oil or gas well, and if drilling is still continued on the property already surveyed, a complete blue print shall be made and filed at the end of each year.' "

"The question has arisen as to whether or not a company, having drilled wells a number of years prior to the passage and approval of this act, should have made and filed maps showing the location of such wells within the sixty-day time limit mentioned above, and having failed to do this, should they do so now?

"In the paragraph first quoted the present tense is used, leading one to believe that the section refers only to wells being drilled at the time the act was passed, and those drilled subsequent to that date; but the last of the second paragraph provides that maps be filed 'within sixty days of the passage and approval of this act,' which may refer to any wells drilled in the past."

In your inquiry you have very accurately stated the difficulties arising in the construction of this law. If the paragraph first quoted stood alone, it would be apparent that the law should be treated as prospective in its nature, and hence as applicable only to those who caused wells to be drilled subsequent to the taking effect of the statute; but the context of the immediately following paragraph seems to express a contrary legislative intent, in that it requires the filing of a blue print, showing the location of the number of wells, with the chief inspector of mines and with the county recorder, "within sixty days after the passage and approval of this act, or after commencing to drill any oil or gas well."

If the statute were intended to be purely prospective, it would have been unnecessary for the general assembly to have inserted the language just quoted in the alternative. In other words, there would have been one definite measure of time fixed, or rather one certain period from which time should run, instead of naming two, as is done in the act.

It is hard to understand why the blue print should be filed either within sixty days after the passage and approval of the act, or after commencing to drill any oil or gas well, unless there were in the legislative mind two classes of wells, viz.: Those in existence at the time the act went into effect, and those which should be thereafter drilled.

In cases of ambiguity, such as the foregoing, in statutes, the authoritative doctrine is that the intention of the general assembly should be ascertained and given effect. In ascertaining such intent, however, there are certain fundamental rules which the courts almost universally adopt. An epitome of those rules which are here applicable may be thus expressed:

Every statute must be interpreted with reference to the object intended to be accomplished by it, and that construction should be given it which is best calculated to advance its objects by suppressing the mischief and securing the benefits intended, the courts going so far as to hold that if the clear object of a statute is inconsistent with its precise words, the latter must yield to the controlling influence of the legislative will as apparent from the tenor of the law. In cases where the meaning of the statute is doubtful, the effect of the construction should be kept in mind to the end that inconvenience, absurdity and prejudice to public interests should be eliminated. In other words, a reasonable result should be produced if possible.

Now it does not seem to me that it could have been the legislative intent in this statute to make a distinction between wells which were in operation prior to the taking effect in section 973, and those which were drilled subsequent to that time. Such design on the part of the general assembly would not be promotive of the public interests to the same extent as if the location of all wells were to be shown. The legislature clearly had in mind the idea that the designation of the location and number of wells was promotive of the public interest, and the policy and purpose of the act was to require this to be done. Such being the object, the statute should be so interpreted as to accomplish this purpose and suppress the mischief which evidently arose by reason of their being no record of the number and location of wells. The most complete and efficient accomplishment of this purpose is to be attained by records pertaining to all wells. If the law be given such meaning it will prevent inconvenience, absurdity and injustice.

As before suggested these rules would not be applicable if the sense and meaning of the law were plain, but here the letter of the statute being both doubtful and ambiguous, we think that the rules we have suggested should be given due weight.

Merely because the first paragraph of this section seems to be, as you well suggest, in the present tense, it does not follow that it may not be construed in the past tense, for, as stated in Lewis Sutherland's "Statutory Construction," page 795:

> "An act expressed in words of the future tense may still show an intent to have a present effect."

A leading case on this subject is that of Maysville & Lexington R. R. Co. vs. Herrick, 13 Bush (Ky.), 122. Section 10 of article II of chapter 52, of the General Statutes of Kentucky provided that:

> "a married woman who shall come to this commonwealth without her husband * * *"

A Mrs. Herrick went to Kentucky prior to the adoption of the statute just referred to, and it was claimed that she could not take advantage of the act because it was to be given a prospective effect. The court says:

> "To exclude her because the statute speaks of only married women 'who shall come, etc.,' would be to adhere to the letter of the law and to disregard its spirit. * * * A person clearly within this class will not be denied the benefit of a remedial statute by grammatical construction at the expense of the manifest legislative intent."

See also Malloy vs. Railway, 85 N. W., 130.

This intent seems to me to be manifest, as before suggested, by the second paragraph of the section, in stipulating the period from which the time, within which the blue print is to be filed, shall run. If such were not the case, we should have to assume that the legislature inserted the words "after the passage and approval of this act," in the statute without any reason therefor. This language must have contemplated the existence of those wells which had been drilled prior to and were in existence at the time of the passage and approval of the act in question, as otherwise we should have the absurdity of two different periods of time applying to the same wells—that is to say if the law only applied to wells drilled after the enactment thereof, then the person, firm or corporation causing the well to be drilled could file the blue prints either in sixty days after the passage and approval of the act or after commencing to drill. As soon as the law had been effective for sixty days, the clause "after the passage and approval of this act" would become obsolete and would be of no force or effect; and not only is this true, but such clause would be absolutely unnecessary, as the other period of time expressed in the law would completely and fully cover every case that could have been contemplated by the former clause which we have just quoted.

It would be an extremely violent presumption to assume that the general assembly inserted, without necessity or reason, language which would, in a short time, become obsolete and ineffective, when the immediately following language amply provided for every situation that might arise.

From these considerations it must necessarily follow that there should be some other purpose and effect given the words "after the passage and approval of this act," and it is my judgment that this purpose was to require the filing of blue prints showing the number and location of wells which had been drilled before the amendment of section 973, 102 O. L., 149.

Another rule of statutory construction which has some bearing upon this case, is that when doubt arises as to the proper construction of a section, regard may be had to the original law, of which the act was an amendment. The supreme court of this state has frequently decided this question, and I shall here only refer to two decisions.

In Hamilton vs. Steamboat, 16 O. S., 429, there was dispute as to proper meaning of a law. The court on page 433 say:

> "But we think all doubt as to the proper construction of this section may be settled by the application of the rule that, in the construction of revised or amended statutes, the original statute will not be regarded as changed further than clearly appears to have been intended by the legislature."

In State vs. Commissioners, 36 O. S., 326, it is held that the court is only warranted in holding the construction of a statute which has undergone revision to be changed when the intent of the legislature to make such change is clear, or the language used in the new act clearly requires such change of construction to be made. The intent to give the new act a different effect from the old should be clearly manifest. With this in view it is proper to resort to section 973 as amended 101 O. L., 87. It was there provided that any person, firm or corporation who drills or causes to be drilled * * * any oil or gas well, shall observe the following:

> "Any person, firm or corporation intending to drill an oil or gas well * * * shall give notice * * * stating the location. * * *
> "The person, firm or corporation drilling or operating an oil or gas well shall make or cause to be made a map showing the location of such well and the surface upon which located, and for a distance of 500 feet contiguous thereto. Such a map shall bear the sworn certificate of the engineer and shall be filed with the chief inspector of mines within ten days from the time the drilling of such well is commenced; provided, however, that wells previously drilled and in operation upon the passage and approval of this act, such map shall be filed within thirty days, and such map shall show the location of each oil or gas well, building and mine opening within the limits of such map."

It is apparent from a comparison of these two sections that it was the manifest intention of the legislature to require greater publicity and more detailed information in regard to the location and number of wells in the amended statute than was provided for in the law in existence at the time of the passage of such amendment. There is nothing, however, to indicate that the new law was intended to be less broad or inclusive. The policy actuating the alteration was to require more complete information to be furnished by the person drilling or causing to be drilled any oil or gas well. Therefore, the only change which one can see was clearly intended by the general assembly in passing this law, was to accomplish the purpose of enabling your department to obtain more detailed information than was theretofore possible for it to secure. Such being the case it seems to me that the italicised language just quoted should be treated as a clear indication not only of how the old act should operate, but also as shedding light upon the clause of the new act which I have before discussed, viz., "after the passage and approval of this act." That is to say, in the old statute this language had reference to those wells previously drilled and in operation, the time for filing a map thereof being within thirty days after the taking effect of the law; and it was the intention of the law makers in amending the statute to require the filing of these maps within an extended period of sixty days. The fact that both statutes refer to two separate periods from which the time shall begin to run, one applicable, in the earlier statute to previously drilled wells, and the other applying to those thereafter constructed—indicates to my mind that it was the obvious aim of the general assembly to continue in the second the policy outlined in the first law. It is not likely that the legislature would pass a statute of this character, under circumstances like this, requiring maps of all wells to be made, and by a subsequent amendment dispense with such maps as to wells drilled prior to the going into effect of the amendatory section. I can conceive of no reason for this, and feel that the general assembly altered the language in this regard for the purpose of rendering the amendment more concise and without any design to exempt any driller from the requirement of making and filing the map.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, it is my opinion that a company maintaining wells drilled a number of years prior to the passage and approval of section 973 of the General Code, as it now stands, should make and file copies showing the location of such wells, and as the sixty-day limit for so doing has expired, they should now do so.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY SOLICITOR MAY NOT RECEIVE EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SUPERVISING THE CODIFICATION OF CITY ORDINANCES—THE ASSISTANT CITY SOLICITOR MAY RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED IN THE CODIFICATION OF CITY ORDINANCES.

1. The city solicitor may not legally receive compensation in addition to his regular salary for services rendered in supervising the codification of city ordinances.

2. The assistant city solicitor may legally be appointed to membership upon such commission and may receive the compensation fixed for his services in this connection, and in addition to receiving his regular annual salary as assistant city solicitor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 2, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

> "1st. May a city solicitor legally receive compensation, in addition to his regular salary, for services rendered in supervising the codification of city ordinances?
> "Council, by ordinance, creates a commission to codify ordinances, vesting the appointing authority in the city solicitor; said solicitor appointing an attorney and one of his assistants to perform said services.
> "2nd. May said assistant city solicitor legally receive compensation for service rendered in codification of said ordinances in addition to his regular annual salary?"

First question: Sections 3808 and 12912 of the General Code, are as follows:

> "Sec. 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom.

"Sec. 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

The statutes do not impose upon the city solicitor or his department the duty of supervision or making a codification of the city ordinances. It is not work, therefore, which the salary of the city solicitor is intended as a compensation for. The work is outside of the duty regularly contemplated by his position. Were the city solicitor to receive compensation for such work, therefore, he would necessarily be interested in the profits of work or services for such corporation, in contravention of section 12912, and he would furthermore be interested in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation, in violation of the explicit terms of section 3808.

I am of the opinion therefore, that a city solicitor may not legally receive compensation in addition to his regular salary for services of this nature. My predecessor has similarly held in an opinion appearing on page 959 of the attorney general's report for the year 1910.

Second question: The assistant city solicitor is an employe of the city solicitor, whose salary is fixed by council under section 4213 of the General Code for assisting the city solicitor in the performance of duties enjoined by statute upon that officer.

Section 4213 of the General Code would prohibit the increase of the salary of such an assistant during the term for which he was appointed, if, in fact, he was appointed for a definite term. The work of codifying ordinances, however, is work not contemplated by his position, and such duties are not compensated by the salary attached to his position. The appointment of such assistant to membership on the codifying commission would not entail the performance of duties incompatible with his position as assistant city solicitor. The compensation fixed for serving as member of this commission will be paid in the capacity of an employment independent from his position as city solicitor and could not be construed as increase of salary during the term fixed for him as such assistant solicitor.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that he may legally be appointed to membership upon such commission, and may receive the compensation fixed for his services in this connection in addition to receiving his regular annual salary as assistant city solicitor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PLUMBING ORDINANCE—RIGHT OF THE VILLAGE TO REGULATE THE PLUMBING CONNECTED WITH THE EXTENSION OF THE WATERWORKS SYSTEM TO A SUBURB OF SAID VILLAGE—VILLAGE HAS NO RIGHT TO PREVENT BILL POSTING.

1. The fact that a plumber has procured a license in an outside municipality will not compel the recognition of the license by a municipal corporation.

2. Where the waterworks department is furnishing water for a so-called suburb of the village, the village council has jurisdiction over the persons using such water with respect to their plumbing.

3. Such municipality has the right to require plumbers under its own ordinance to do the work connected with the supplying of water to such suburb.

4. Such municipality can compel the people in the suburb to have their plumbing inspected by the village plumbing inspector before the water is turned on. In the event of their refusing to have their plumbing inspected, water may not be turned on.

5. A village has no right to charge a fee to bill posters or persons distributing advertising matter, such being a restriction of interstate commerce.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. L. E. HARVEY, Village Solicitor, Bradford, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 12, 1913, you present the following questions:

> "1. We have a plumbing ordinance, requiring all persons to pay a license before doing any plumbing in our village. Some of our people have been employing out-of-town plumbers recently, and these plumbers claim that if they have taken out a license to do plumbing in their home towns, this qualifies them to do plumbing in our town. My contention and advice to our council is that it does not. Is this the right view of the matter in your opinion?
> "2. Our waterworks department is furnishing water for a so-called suburb of the village. Does this give our council jurisdiction over the persons using the city water, with respect to their plumbing?
> "3. Have we a right to require plumbers under our ordinance to pay a license to do this plumbing?
> "4. Can we require these people to have their plumbing inspected by our inspector, before turning their water on?
> "5. Can we turn it off if they refuse?
> "6. We have also been bothered not a little with bill distributors, who have been distributing advertising matter for out-of-town firms. These distributors contend that we have no right to charge them a fee to distribute their advertising matter. Is this a restriction on interstate commerce that would prevent us from doing this?"

Answering your first question. The authority of a municipal corporation to license plumbers is granted by section 3637 of the General Code. It is fundamental that in the absence of clear and express authorization extending its control, a municipality has jurisdiction in matters of police regulation only within the boundaries of the municipality. The power of a municipality to license plumbers, therefore, does not extend beyond the boundaries of the municipal corporation. A license is construed as a privilege granted upon payment of a fee by the one complying with the conditions prescribed, which permits to the one so receiving said license powers not possessed by others who do not comply with the same terms. The right to grant this privilege and charge a fee therefor necessarily implies the right to deny the privilege to those not paying the fee or complying with other conditions precedent. One municipality has nothing whatsoever to do with the license privileges of another, and there is no requirement of law making it necessary for one corporation to recognize the licensees of another.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the fact that a plumber has procured a license in an outside municipality will not compel the recognition of the license by a municipal corporation.

Answering your second question. Sections 3966, 3967, 3968 and 3969 are as follows:

> "Sec. 3966. On the written request of any number of citizens living outside of the limits of a municipal corporation, the corporation may extend, construct, lay down and maintain aqueduct and water pipes to any distance outside the corporate limits not to exceed four miles, and for such purpose may make use of such of the public streets, roads, alleys and public grounds as may be necessary therefor.
> "Sec. 3967. When a person or persons at his or their expense have laid down and extended mains and water pipes beyond the limits of a municipal corporation, and the corporation, by resolution of the council, has authorized the proper officer of the waterworks to superintend or supervise the laying and extension of such mains and water pipes, the corporation shall furnish water to the residents and property holders on the line of such mains and water pipes, subject to the same rules and regulations that it furnished water to its own citizens, except that the rates charged therefor shall not exceed those within the corporation by more than one-tenth thereof.
> "Sec. 3968. All ordinances, except those relative to taxation or assessment, resolutions, rules and regulations relative to the construction, maintenance and operation of waterworks, mains, hydrants, service pipes and connections, and the protection thereof, shall operate in like manner in the territory outside the municipality when such extensions have been made, and for the enforcement thereof the jurisdiction of the mayor and police shall extend into and over such territory.
> "Sec. 3969. The corporation shall take full charge and control of such mains and water pipes, keep them in repair at its own expense, and, in case of annexation to the corporation of such territory, the corporation shall pay to such person or persons a just compensation therefor and shall thereupon become the owner of them."

Under these statutes council and the director of public service of a municipal corporation is given substantially the same control and jurisdiction over matters pertaining to waterworks, with reference to those persons lying outside of a municipal corporation who lay down pipes themselves and receive water from the municipal corporation, as is had by council and the director of public service over persons being supplied with water within the municipal corporation.

Sections 3971 and 3972 of the General Code are as follows:

> "Sec. 3971. A municipality owning waterworks whose territory is contiguous to that of another municipality with the assent of such other municipality, may establish and maintain such portion of its waterworks as it deems advisable within the limits of such other municipality and may make such use of the public streets, alleys and public grounds thereof as is necessary to construct, lay down and maintain all such aqueducts and waterworks for the conveyance of water along and across such streets, alleys and public grounds.

"Sec. 3972. Such aqueducts and pipes shall be so constructed and laid as not to interfere unnecessarily with the use of such streets, alleys and public grounds as public highways and public grounds. A municipality so establishing a part of its waterworks within the limits of such other municipality shall have jurisdiction to prevent or punish the pollution of or injury to water so conveyed or of the stream or source from which it is obtained or any injury to any portion of the waterworks so located within the limits of such other municipality."

Section 3972 confers upon the municipality supplying water to another municipality jurisdiction over the latter for the purpose of preventing and punishing the pollution of or injury to water so supplied. Your facts do not state whether the parties outside the village who are receiving water therefrom are living within another municipal corporation, or whether they are merely private individuals who are receiving water upon their written request and who have themselves constructed their water pipes. In either event, I am of the opinion that the above statutes amply provide for such jurisdiction on the part of the council of the municipality which supplies the water as will enable it to pass ordinances with respect to the plumbing.

Answering your third question. The licensing of plumbers being a well recognized means of regulating the use of water, I am of the opinion that the statutes above set forth empower the municipality supplying the water to require its own licensed plumbers to do the work connected with the supplying of the water to the suburb.

Your fourth and fifth questions must also be answered in the affirmative for the same reasons and under the same authority.

With respect to your sixth question. Section 3674 of the General Code is as follows:

"To license bill posters, advertising sign painters, bill distributors, card tackers and advertising matter of any article or compound which has not been manufactured or compounded within the corporation limits of such municipality. In granting such license, the council may exact and receive such sums of money as it may think expedient, and may delegate to the mayor thereof the authority to grant, issue and revoke such license. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the council of a municipality to exact and receive a license fee from merchants doing business therein, for advertising their own business."

This section purports to authorize municipalities to license bill posters, bill distributors, etc., but in the latter part of this section the municipality is prohibited from licensing its own merchants doing business within the municipalites. It is settled beyond all doubt that a municipality is without power to enact police regulations of this character which discriminate against business as existing in other states.

Sipe vs. Murphy, 49 O. S. 536 at p. 546.

Section 3674, above quoted, by prohibiting the municipal corporation from licensing the advertisement of business conducted by its own merchants authorizes only such ordinances as discriminate against those doing business outside of the municipality. Such an ordinance is, therefore, necessarily unequal in its operation, not only with respect to commerce conducted within the state of Ohio, but it also discriminates against interstate commerce. Such an ordinance is clearly impossible under the federal and state authorities. An ordinance of this nature was declared unconstitutional therefor in the case of Angove vs. State, 8 O. N. P. p. 514, the syllabus of which is as follows:

"An ordinance requiring bill posters to take out a license before posting bills or distributing advertising matter, is in conflict with the federal constitution providing that the rights of the citizens of one state shall not be abridged by the residents of another."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE—FUNDING BONDS TO REPLACE NOTES ISSUED IN ANTICIPATION OF THE COLLECTION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—STATUS OF SUCH BONDS—NOTES ISSUED IN ANTICIPATION OF THE COLLECTION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—ISSUING OF SUCH BONDS AND NOTES BEFORE THE ANTICIPATED LEVY IS ACTUALLY LEVIED.

It is at least bad policy to issue funding bonds under section 3916, General Code, to replace notes issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments under section 3915, General Code, because such funding bonds have not the status of special assessment bonds, for which special provision is made in the General Code.

It is lawful to issue notes, under section 3915, General Code, in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for short terms payable when the assessment is payable, and therefore, on account of the same improvement to issue bonds under section 3914, General Code, in anticipation of the duplicate collection and with the proceeds of such bonds to take up unpaid notes.

Both bonds under section 3914 and notes under section 3915, General Code, may be issued before the anticipated levy is actually levied.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 10th, requesting my opinion, generally, upon the question as to whether or not the council of a municipal corporation may fund an issue of notes made in anticipation of the collection of special assessments under section 3915, General Code, such action being taken under section 3916, General Code, provided the amount of the indebtedness is not thereby increased.

On or about the same date on which I received your letter I received other letters pertaining to the same subject and submitting inquiries somewhat more specific than that in your letter.

Thus, Hon. F. M. Hamilton, Jr., solicitor for the village of Lebanon, asks the following question among others:

> "Does the statute providing for the issuing of short term notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for street improvement authorize the issuing of such notes for short terms to meet monthly estimates of amounts due contractor, said notes to be taken up and discharged by the issuing of assessment bonds after the improvement is completed?"

Hon. E. F. McKee, solicitor of the city of Springfield, asks the following question:

> "1. May bonds be issued in anticipation of special assessments prior to the levy thereof under section 3914?
> "2. May notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments be issued prior to the levy of said assessments under 3915?
> "3. Has the city authority, acting under 3915, to issue notes to mature at the time of the completion of the proposed improvement, and then to levy assessments and issue bonds in anticipation of the collection thereof and apply the proceeds of same to the payment of said notes by virtue of section 3914, or is the adoption of one of the authorized methods exclusive of the other?
> "4. Has a municipality any power other than that provided in section 3915 to issue its notes in order to provide a fund for the property owners' share of public improvements prior to the completion of the improvement, and which notes might then be taken up by proceeds of a bond issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments then levied?
> "5. If notes are issued by virtue of section 3915 or otherwise if possible prior to the completion of an improvement, and for a short period of time, say not to exceed one year, which will cover the time required for the making of such improvement, and the assessments are payable in either five or ten annual installments, could such indebtedness then be funded or refunded by virtue of the provisions of section 3916 G. C.?"

All these questions involve consideration of a group of statutes consisting of the following sections:

> "Sec. 3914. Municipal corporations may issue bonds in anticipation of special assessments. Such bonds may be in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement for which the assessments are levied. * * * the assessments as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of such bonds.
> "Sec. 3915. Municipal corporations may borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. * * * All assessments collected for the improvement, and all unexpended balances remaining in the fund after the cost and expense of the improvement have been paid, shall be applied to the payment of the notes and the interest thereon until both are fully provided for. * * *

"Sec. 3916. For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually.

"Sec. 3917. No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the place of payment of principal and interest."

I find it most convenient to discuss the language of the sections as I have quoted them before undertaking separate consideration of the different questions submitted.

Analyzing section 3914 supra, it appears that so far as this section is concerned the proceeds of the special assessment bonds need not be used directly to pay the cost of the improvement for which the assessments are levied. The only requirement is that the bonds may be in amount sufficient to pay the estimated cost of the improvement. This, however, is not a limitation but a grant of power and its effect, in my judgment, is to enable the municipality to issue bonds before the actual cost of the improvement is ascertained and to anticipate assessments therefor before they have been actually levied. The grant of power as such relates to the amount of the issue and not to the application of the proceeds. Hence, it follows that so far as this section is concerned it would be lawful to take up an issue of notes anticipatory of the collection of a special assessment and so to use the proceeds of the bonds.

Further, in connection with this section I beg to leave to point out that it does not itself designate the means of retiring the bonds otherwise than by inference from the statement that they are to be issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. Other sections, which I need not quote, and the effect of which is somewhat elaborately discussed in a recent opinion to your department respecting the application of article XII, section 11 of the constitution to bonds of this character, establish the conclusion that there are four sources of revenue applicable to their payment, viz.:

1. Unexpended balances in the improvement fund. 2. Premiums and accrued interest received from the sale of bonds. 3. The special assessments themselves. 4. General taxation for the maintenance of the sinking fund.

I mention this fact because of the difference in this respect between the phraseology of the section just discussed and that of the next succeeding section.

Coming now to section 3915, I note that if there is any requirement in this section to the effect that the notes, the issuance of which it authorizes, be taken up only by the use of the assessments themselves and the unexpended balances of the improvement fund, such a requirement, amounting to a prohibition against taking up said notes in any other way, could result only from inference. That is to say, the statute first provides for the issuance of notes in "anticipation of the collection of special assessments." It then provides that the assessments, when collected, and the unexpended balance of the improvement fund, produced by the issuance of the notes, shall be applied to their payment and that of the interest thereon until both are fully provided for. These provisions might be held to have the effect of prohibiting the use of any other revenues or moneys than those specifically mentioned for the purpose of providing for the notes and the interest thereon, but such an interpretation would be, as already stated, inferential. I do not think that the statute can be given this meaning. To give it such a meaning would involve the result that in the event of a deficiency in the collection of the assessments, the municipality would be without power to levy taxes for the payment of the notes or to refund them under the section next to be discussed, as valid existing indebtedness of the municipality as such. An interpretation having such a result is not to be favored on authorities cited in the opinion referred to.

I am of the opinion that the notes issued under favor of section 3915 constitute a general indebtedness of the municipality and that the requirement that certain specific moneys be applied to their retirement and payment of the interest thereon is not to be interpreted as preventing the application of moneys lawfully procured by the municipality for that purpose other than those specifically mentioned.

Therefore, I reach the conclusion that in spite of the fact that section 3916 requires the assessments and unexpended balances to be applied to the notes and interest thereon until both are "fully provided for" the section does not require that the "full provision" of which it speaks be made by the use of these moneys alone (which might prove to be impossible in a given case); and that, therefore, the section is not to be interpreted as preventing the application of other moneys to these purposes. It follows, therefore, that the language which I have been considering is not to be regarded as an implied prohibition against taking up notes issued under section 3916, either by an issue of bonds under section 3914 or by refunding bonds under section 3916. Before leaving section 3915 it may be well to inquire whether the power given to a municipality under this section is exclusive of the power given under section 3914. That is to say, if a municipality has issued notes under section 3915 may it subsequently, on account of the same improvement, issue special assessment bonds under section 3914? I find nothing in the statutes which expressly or by inference necessitates a conclusion that the two means of raising money are exclusive so that a municipality may elect which of the two it will choose, and so electing, is thereby precluded from making subsequent use of the other method with respect to a single improvement. That is to say, assuming that some ground might be found for holding that the proceeds of bonds issued under section 3914 might be used to take up notes under section 3915, there is nothing in the sections themselves to prevent such a course. It may be well to consider section 3892, General Code, in connection with the sections which have been discussed. That section provides as follows:

> "When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

It is apparent from this section that the methods of collection are the same whether bonds or notes have been issued in anticipation of the assessment. Therefore, the word "collection" as used in section 3914 must mean the same thing as the same word when used in section 3915. From this it follows that in either event, whether notes or bonds are issued, the collection anticipated is not the optional payment to the treasurer of the municipality, provided for by section 3893, not above quoted, but includes also the duplicate collection made by the county auditor.

I may state here that I have ignored in this connection the provisions of section 3905, which is as follows:

"The council may order the clerk, or other proper officer of the corporation to certify any unpaid assessment or tax to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount of such assessment or tax so certified, shall be placed upon the tax list by the county auditor, and shall, with ten per cent. penalty to cover interest and cost of collection, be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes, and credited to the corporation. Such ten per cent. penalty shall in no case be added unless at least thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the ordinance making the levy and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection."

In my judgment, this section is inconsistent with section 3892, General Code, in so far as the former applies to assessments. The one imposes the mandatory duty upon the clerk of council to certify an assessment, for which bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued, to the county auditor for collection; and the other authorizes the council to order the clerk or other proper officer to certify the unpaid assessment to the auditor which, however, must be done prior to the making up of the duplicate. Markley vs. Whitmore, 61 O. S. 587.

This question seems to have been involved in Fox vs. Cincinnati, 13 C. C. n. s. 144, but was not passed upon therein. I express no positive opinion upon it here, but will continue to regard section 3892 as the controlling statute in so far as the group of sections of which it is one may be said to shed any light upon the interpretation of sections 3914 and 3915 G. C.

Another section which has come to my attention in this connection is section 3896, General Code. This section includes in the cost of the improvement for which assessments may be made "interest on bonds, where bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments and other necessary expenditures." Similarly section 3817, General Code, provides as follows:

"When bonds are issued in anticipation of the collection of the assessment, the interest thereon shall be treated as part of the cost of the improvement for which assessment may be made. If such assessment or any installment thereof is not paid when due, it shall bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as the bonds issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, and the county auditor shall annually place upon the tax duplicate the penalty and interest as therein provided."

These sections if they have any significance go to show that a distinction is made between the interest on bonds and the interest on notes as constituting a part of the cost of an improvement for which an assessment may be levied. That is to say, while section 3915 requires the assessments, together with the unexpended balance in the improvement fund, to be applied to the payment of the notes issued in anticipation and the interest thereon, until the same are fully provided for, yet no section specifically authorizes the inclusion of interest on notes as a part of the cost of the improvement for which assessments may be made, while the two sections which do deal with the subject-matter, do specifically mention the interest on the bonds in this category, and one of them limits the interest on deferred installments of assessments so as to correspond with the interest on the bonds issued in anticipation thereof.

I may summarize what slight evidences of legislative intent are found outside of sections 3914 and 3915 as follows:

On the one hand it appears that the phrase "in anticipation of the collection of assessments" as used in both of them must have the same meaning and not a different one in each, because the method of collection of assessments, in anticipation of the collection of which bonds have been issued, is the same as that of assessments in anticipation of which notes only have been issued. This would tend to establish the conclusion that once a collection had been "anticipated," the same collection cannot be again anticipated; so that if a municipality had once issued notes it could not thereafter issue bonds in anticipation of the same collection. On the other hand, the fact that a distinction is made between the inclusion of interest on the obligations of the municipality as an item of cost, for which assessments may be levied, as between bonds and notes, seems to me to constitute some slight evidence, at least, tending to show that it was not intended by section 3915 to authorize the issuance of notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, so as to preclude the subsequent issue of bonds for the same purpose. That is to say, it does not seem reasonable to suppose that the general assembly would have made the distinction which it has made between bonds and notes with respect to the inclusion of the interest in the total cost of the improvement had it not had in mind the possibility, at least, and perhaps the necessity of the issue of bonds instead of and in place of notes, before the assessment was actually made. In view of these conflicting clues to the legislative intent, and in view of the lack of explicit provision in sections 3914 and 3915, General Code, I have deemed it best to take a broad view of the question. I reach the conclusion that when notes have been issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments such notes may be taken up, and bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of the same assessments and in place of such notes.

One slight verbal difference between the two sections seems to support this view. Section 3914, relating to bonds, provides that "such bonds may be in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement for which the assessments are levied." Section 3915, on the other hand, provides that the "notes shall not exceed in amount the estimated cost of the improvement." While the distinction may be far-fetched, it seems to me that the legislature at least conceived of the bond issue as a single borrowing act, i. e., contemplated the likelihood, at least, that the bonds would be issued all at once; while, on the other hand, the legislature seemed to conceive of the borrowing of money by the issuance of notes as being piece-meal, i. e., as money to pay for the improvement might be needed. This is a very reasonable view to take of the language of the two sections, and I believe they should be given such interpretation. To give them such interpretation would lead to the conclusion that section 3915 was intended as a means whereby a municipality, without paying interest on the entire amount required for the improvement during the progress of the work, and before the assessments were available, might, from time to time, as the contractor's estimates were presented for payment, issue notes under section 3915, anticipatory, to be sure, of the collection of the assessments, and to be paid for from the assessments, if the assessments happen to be paid by the property owners in time to meet the notes as they mature; but saving further power to issue bonds covering the entire cost of the improvement, if necessary, upon the completion of the improvement and before the making of the assessment.

Sections 3916 et seq., General Code, have been considered by this department many times, and I have always held that these sections are available whenever the municipality, as such, owes an unfunded debt. The power therein is very broad and is limited only by the phrase "but not to increase the indebtedness." I would not undertake to hold as a matter of law that this section could not be employed for the purpose of funding an issue of special assessment notes when the period of the collection of the assessments, as ultimately fixed, extends beyond the maturity of the notes or when there is a deficiency in the assessment. However, the fact that there is a relation established by the statutes already quoted, between the rate of interest on deferred installments of assessments and the rate of interest on bonds issued in anticipation of assessments, indicates, with some degree of strength, that the legislature never intended that a municipality should borrow money in reality in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, otherwise than under sections 3914 and 3915, General Code. And it would be a virtual anticipation of the collection of special assessments if notes were first issued and then funded under section 3916, General Code.

Furthermore, I venture to point out in this connection that section 3932, General Code, distinguishes between special assessment bonds and other bonds in a very material way, viz.:

> "Premiums and accrued interest received by the corporation from a sale of its bonds shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be by them applied on the bonded debt and interest account of the corporation, but the premiums and accrued interest upon bonds issued for special assessments shall be applied by the trustees of the sinking fund to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds and no others."

Bonds issued under section 3916, General Code, would not be technically, although they would be substantially, "bonds issued for special assessments" under section 3932, and if issued for the purpose of funding notes issued in anticipation of assessments, the sinking fund for the retirement of such particular bonds would not receive special credit for the premiums and accrued interest received by the corporation from their sale.

In another aspect of the case, bonds issued under section 3916 would be fully subject to the provisions of article XII, section 11 of the constitution. Taxes would have to be levied to pay the sinking fund and interest requirements of such bonds. Only by inference could it be held that the special assessments themselves would be directly applied to the payment of such funding bonds as is specifically provided with respect to special assessment bonds by section 3914, General Code. By perhaps less remote inference, and by such an inference only, could it be held that the sinking fund trustees would have the right to receive assessments as paid to the municipal treasurer when the bonds to be retired were not special assessment bonds but only general funding bonds. In fact there would be no explicit statutory provision for the disposition of the assessments if bonds were issued under section 3916 for the purpose of funding notes issued in anticipation of special assessments.

For the reasons above set forth, then, I have arrived at the conclusion that whether or not as a strict and technical matter of law there is power in a municipal council to borrow money under section 3916, and subject to its limitations, for the purpose of funding notes issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, there are strong reasons for advising against any such procedure. The same result can be practically obtained by issuing bonds under section 3914, General Code, and while the question is not free from doubt, I am of the opinion that it is the intention and spirit of the related provisions that a special assessment improvement may be financed in this way, i. e., first by the issuance of notes from time to time to pay the contractor and second by the issuance of bonds under section 3914 and the distinguishment of the notes by the use of the proceeds of such bonds. But one section seems to stand in the way of such an interpretation, and that is section 3804, which provides as follows:

> "When any unexpended balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which bonds are still outstanding, unpaid and provided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the bonds."

Is this section equivalent to that provision of section 3915 which requires that "all unexpended balances remaining in the fund after the cost and expenses of the improvement have been paid, shall be applied to the payment of the notes and interest thereon?"

In other words, is the difference between the improvement fund created by the issuance of bonds, and the actual expenses of the improvement the "unexpended balances" to which section 3804 refers, or may such a balance be arrived at by applying the proceeds of the bonds in part to the liquidation of notes issued in anticipation of assessments?

I see no reason why this section may not be interpreted in the second manner above outlined, and think that such an interpretation is clearly indicated by the difference between the phraseology of section 3804 and that of the corresponding provision of section 3815.

Coming now to the answer to your general question, I may say that it is my opinion that it is not proper to issue funding bonds for the purpose of providing for an indebtedness created by the issuance of notes under section 3915, General Code.

Answering the question submitted by Mr. Hamilton, I am of the opinion that the proceeds of assessment bonds may be used to take up and discharge notes issued in anticipation of the same assessment; and that such special assessment notes may be issued in small amounts and for short terms to meet monthly estimates of amounts due to the contractor.

Answering Mr. McKee's first question, I may say, generally, that numerous provisions of the General Code recognize the propriety of issuing bonds in anticipation of special assessments prior to the levy thereof. These sections above quoted which require the interest on bonds to be included in the cost of the improvement for which assessments are to be levied, clearly imply that in the ordinary course of affairs, the bonds will have been issued prior to the levying of the assessment.

Mr. McKee's first question is, accordingly, answered in the affirmative.

Answering Mr. McKee's second question, I beg to state that inasmuch as the statutes, as I interpret them, are such as to make the issuance of notes the first or preliminary step, it follows that notes as well as bonds in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, may be issued prior to a levy of such assessments under section 3915.

Mr. McKee's third question is substantially the same as Mr. Hamilton's question, and may be answered by saying that the city has authority under section 3915 to issue notes to mature at the time of the completion of the proposed improvement, then to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of the same assessment, levy the assessment, and apply the proceeds of the bonds to the payment of the notes theretofore issued, the bonds being issued under section 3914, General Code; and that the exercise of the power to issue notes does not preclude the subsequent exercise of the power to borrow money under section 3914, General Code.

Answering Mr. McKee's fourth question, I beg to say that I have no knowledge of any statutory or other authority in a municipality to issue notes in order to provide a fund for the property owners' share of a public improvement prior to the completion of the improvement, aside from that provided in section 3915, General Code.

Mr. McKee's fifth question is substantially equivalent to your general question and is answered in the same way, viz., by the statement that it is questionable whether or not a municipal corporation may lawfully issue bonds under section 3916, General Code, to fund notes issued under section 3915, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE THREE ARTS CLUB—PROPERTY OF SUCH CLUB EXEMPT FROM TAXATION—INSTITUTION OF PUBLIC CHARITY.

The real estate belonging to the three arts club is exempt from taxation under the provisions of section 5353, General Code, for the reason that such club is not only charitable, but also public. This club is an organization which contemplates furnishing a club house, a social center for the use of women students of music, painting and drama, the intention being to provide rooms for the use of such students at reduced cost. Fees are to be charged to persons patronizing this club for the purpose of providing for the operating expenses of the institution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of a letter from your office, under date of December 17, 1913, in which my opinion is requested as to whether or not the real estate given to and used by the three arts club, a corporation not for profit, is, or would be exempt from taxation, assuming the use of the real estate to be in furtherance of the purposes of the organization.

The purposes in question, as defined by the articles of incorporation, are set forth fully in your letter. Epitomized, they contemplate the furnishing of a club house, a social center for the use of women students of music, painting and the drama. The intention is to provide rooms for the use of such students at a reduced cost. The enterprise will not be fostered with a view to profit, and is now being operated in its present quarters at a loss which is met by voluntary contributions from benevolently disposed persons.

Of course the occupants and patrons of the club are charged fees for the use of its privileges, which fees, however, are not sufficient to provide for the operating expenses of the institution.

The object of the institution and the proposed use of its property are, in my opinion, charitable within the meaning of the constitution as it existed prior to its recent amendment and the statutes as they still exist. That is to say, when an institution is not operated for profit, but with a view to meeting a need which is public, or promoting any of the branches of learning it is charitable, and when the means chosen for the dissemination of charity consists of the use of property by the objects of the charity, the mere fact that a charge by way of rent or fee is exacted for such use, does not deprive the enterprise of its charitable nature, if the rent or fee is nominal, i. e., is inadequate in a commercial sense, so that the enterprise can only be maintained by independent donation.

Cases like Cleveland Library Association vs. Pelton, 36 O. S., 253, are not controlling because they typify a condition of affairs in which property is used commercially and not in direct connection or furtherance of the charitable purpose, the profits of such use, however, being in turn devoted to the charity. But where the renting of a room, for example, is itself in furtherance of the charitable object, because the room used by the person to whom it is rented is within the purview of the charity, there is not the protanto subjection to taxation resulting from the rule in the Pelton case.

Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 O. S., 229-241.
Davis vs. Campmeeting Association, 57 O. S., 257.
McDonald vs. Mass. General Hospital, 120 Mass., 432.
Engleside Association vs. Nation, 109 Pac., 984.
29 L. R. A. n. s., 190.

But there is an element in the question which you ask that makes its solution very difficult. I refer to the fact that the charity is limited in its scope to students of the so-called "Three Arts." Whether or not this limitation is such as to deprive the charity of its "public" nature, is the precise doubtful question.

There are no decisions in Ohio on the point which is here raised as far as I am able to ascertain. In fact I have found no decisions anywhere upon the exact point. The general principle is that some discrimination in the selection of the objects of the charity is permitted to be made without affecting its public nature. Thus reasonable restrictions of a territorial nature; those pertaining to race; those pertaining to the particular nature of the relief to be awarded or the suffering to be ameliorated; those based upon age and sex; and, at least, broadly speaking, those based upon general occupation, as for example, the relief of needy working girls or mechanics, are of this kind.

On the other hand, there are certain discriminations and restrictions which are clearly not permissible, such as a restriction of the objects of the charity to the members of families of a particular fraternal order. Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S., 144; Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, 160 Pa., 572.

The general line of distinction between what are permissible and what are not permissible restrictions with respect to the objects of the charity is perhaps best stated in Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, supra, as follows:

> "A charity may restrict its admissions to a class of humanity, and still be public; it may be for the blind, the mute, those suffering from special disease; for the aged, for infants, for women, for men, for different callings or trades by which humanity earns its bread, and as long as the classification is determined by some distinction which involuntarily affects or may affect any of the whole people, although only a small number may be directly benefited, it is public. But when the right to admission depends on the fact of voluntary association with some particular society then a distinction is made which concerns not the public at large. The public is interested in the relief of its members, because they are men, women and children, not because they are Masons. A home without charge, exclusively for Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Catholics or Methodists, would not be a public charity. But then to exclude every other idea of public, as distinguished from private, the word 'purely' is prefixed by the constitution; this is to intensify the word 'public,' not 'charity.' It must be purely public; that is, there must be no admixture of any qualification for admission, heterogeneous, and not solely relating to the public. That the appellee is wholly without profit or gain only shows that it is purely a charity, and not that it is a purely public charity.

"Nor does the argument that, to the extent it benefits Masons, it necessarily relieves the public burden, affect the question; there is no public burden for the relief of aged and indigent Masons; there is the public burden of caring for and relieving aged and indigent men whether they be Masons or anti-Masons; but age and indigence concern the public no further than the fact of them; it makes no inquiry into the social relations of the subjects of them."

I think it is apparent that so far as the authorities cited themselves go there is a class of charities, or alleged charities which are found in a twilight zone, so to speak, lying so close to the line of demarkation as to make it difficult to determine on which side of it they are located. I regard the "Three Arts Club," of which you speak, as being of this character, and accordingly, the conclusion which I reach will not be a positive one, but must be qualified by the statement that the question is an extremely doubtful one. Yet this conclusion is reached with full deference to the general principle applicable to exemptions from taxation, which is that such exemptions are not favored, and that at the outset every presumption is against them. Lee vs. Sturges, 46 O. S., 153-159. So that I do not mean, when I say that the question is doubtful, that the doubt arises in my mind before recourse is had to the last stated principle, but rather that doubt exists after that principle has been considered.

I call your attention now to the language of the first sentence quoted from Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, supra, wherein it is stated that:

"A charity may restrict its admissions to a class of humanity, and still be public; it may be * * * for different callings or trades by which humanity earns its bread and * * * although only a small number may be directly benefited, it is public. * * *"

This language is, of course a mere dictum so far as the question then before the court was concerned; nor do I find, as I have already stated, any positive decisions in support of this language. I find, however, other similar statements, themselves of an obiter nature, which seem to justify the principle as an abstract one. Thus in Burbank vs. Burbank, 9 L. R. A., 348-9, 152 Mass., 254, is found the following dictum:

"A gift is a public charity when there is a benefit to be conferred upon the public at large, or some portion thereof, or upon an indefinite class of persons. Even if its benefits are confined to specific classes, as to decayed seamen, laborers, farmers, etc., of a particular town, it is well settled that it is a public charity (Citing Kent vs. Dunham, 142 Mass., 216, which, however, of itself does not establish the rule stated)."

I find, then, a principle recognized as established by several dicta which, applied to the case submitted by you, would result in the conclusion that the real property used by the institution which you mention, would be exempt from taxation. For if a bequest or devise to an institution for the relief of destitute sailors is a public charity, then I should think a similar institution for the relief of destitute artists, musicians and dramatists or actors would be likewise a public charity; and if such a devise constitutes a public charity, I should think that one to an institution for the assistance of impecunious students of art, music and drama would partake of the same nature.

But while my research has disclosed nothing more positive than obiter dicta in support of the rule just stated, I find no authority whatever in opposition to it. Therefore, authorities to the extent that they may be said to be such, do support that rule.

But there is another reason which has occurred to me in support of the conclusion that the property in question is exempt. The purpose of the gift is undoubtedly to promote the study of the "Three Arts" mentioned. The institution to which the gift is made, has this general object in view, and the means by which it seeks to attain that object are appropriate to that end. The furnishing of a club house and dormitory for women students for these and kindred or allied arts on a charitable basis, all tend to promote this general object, by making it perhaps easier and safer from the standpoint of the perils which beset, or may beset a woman student without some co-operation and guidance, for such students to devote themselves to the study of these arts. In other words, the ultimate objects of the institution may be stated as being the promotion of the study of the fine arts and the protection of women engaged in such study. That the foregoing safeguards thrown around women of whatever class, meets a public need, is too obvious for discussion in the light of police legislation of the state along similar lines; that the promotion of the fine arts through the encouragement of the study, by individuals, of such arts, serves a public object, it seems to me is equally obvious. Our public schools, supported by taxation, themselves impart instruction of an elementary nature in the fine arts, and to say that no public need is subserved by promoting the advanced study thereof, would be inconsistent with the state's established policy in this respect.

In this connection I have in mind the fact that the supreme court of this state in Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 O. S., 229, has held (4th syllabus):

> "A charity, in a legal sense, includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, without any particular reference to the poor."

Viewed from this angle, then, I have become satisfied, despite the unsatisfactory state of the authorities on the question, and despite the presumption against exemptions, that a charitable institution of the kind described by you is, notwithstanding the restriction as to the class of persons to be benefited by its activities, a public one.

It is only necessary to add the word "only" as used in the statute, like the word "purely" as used in the phrase "purely public charity" used in the former constitution and statutes relating to exemption from property taxation, exerts its principal modifying effect upon the noun "charity" and not upon the adjective "public."

In Burd's Orphans' Asylum vs. School District, 19 Pa., 21, and Widows' and Orphans' Home vs. Commonwealth, 16 L. R. A. n. s., 829, the case of Gerke vs. Purcell, supra, is cited as establishing the principle that, "when the charity is public, the exclusion of all idea of private gain or profit is equivalent in effect to the force of 'purely' as applied to public charity."

It is believed that Gerke vs. Purcell, supra, does establish this principle. In other words a charity is either public or private; there can be no degrees of its public nature; the question of degree can only arise with respect to the charitable nature of the institution.

In the case which you submit I am satisfied that the objects of the institution are charitable only, or purely charitable. This conclusion having been reached, and being satisfied that the charity is public in its nature, I am of the opinion that the real property owned by the institution which you mention, in connection with its declared objects, is exempt from taxation.

Perhaps I have made it clear that were it not for the authorities which I have cited I should feel that the case described by you is one beyond the pale of exemption. In view of the decisions which I have cited, however, and in spite of my preconceived notion, I have come to the above conclusion.

Your letter inquires also as to the personal property which it is proposed to present to the club. My conclusions do not apply fully to such property. If the personal property is used by the club for its declared purpose, as for example, in the case of household furniture installed in a club house, it would unquestionably be exempt if the real estate is exempt. If the personal property consists of moneys and credits, the income of which is used to sustain the property, however, I would find myself unable to answer your question because this point is involved in a case now pending in the supreme court and is, therefore, unsettled.

I need only add to this opinion that I have assumed throughout that the "club" is open to all classes designated, upon the same terms, and does not consist of an organization, the benefits of which are limited to its own members. Were the facts otherwise then as I have assumed them, of course the cases of Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip and Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, would indicate a contrary answer.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUOR LICENSE—OFFICIAL CENSUS IS TO BE USED TO DETERMINE THE NUMBER OF SALOONS THAT MAY BE PERMITTED IN A PARTICULAR SUBDIVISION.

If a duly authenticated census has been taken at any time prior to the beginning of the license year for which the licenses are to be granted, and not earlier than the year preceding the first year in which the license law went into effect, then that official census will remain the official census until a new census is taken.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of June 4th, you desire to know whether under section 44 of the license act it will be necessary to take an official census each year to determine the number of licenses for the succeeding year in case an official census is to govern, or whether the fact that an official census is once taken shall govern until another official census is taken?

Section 44 of the license act provides in part as follows:

> "In determining the maximum number of licenses which shall be granted in any municipal corporation or township of the state, the license commissioners shall be governed in determining the population of said political subdivision by any official census which shall have been taken therein within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted. If no such official census of the population has been taken, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau. * * * *"

It will be noted that the official census spoken of shall have been taken "within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted" and that if no "such official census" has been taken, then the latest estimates of the United States census bureau shall govern. It must be borne in mind that the legislature in making this provision had more particularly before it the putting into effect of the law and the starting of the machinery necessary to make the license law workable. If no official census had been taken during the year previous to the putting into operation of the license law, then the board would have been relegated to the latest estimates of the United States census bureau for the population on which they would determine the maximum number of licenses, for then no such official census would have been taken. But it strikes me that when an official census is once taken it is an official census for all purposes and obtains so long as no other official census, duly authenticated, has been taken, and when such an official census so subsists it cannot be said that "no such official census" has been taken.

It would be needless expense to require that each succeeding year a census should be officially taken by the subdivision to determine the maximum number of licenses for the next succeeding year. The presumption would be that after an official census had once been taken, each succeeding year there would be a ratio of increase, and while this ratio of increase could not be taken into consideration in the fixing of the maximum number of licenses. I do not think that it would devolve upon the subdivision to take a new census unless they so desired.

As I interpret the clause in section 44, "if no such official census of the population has been taken, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau" it means that if prior to the year for which the licenses are to be granted, no official census of the population has been taken, then the latest estimates of the United States census bureau shall govern; but if a duly authenticated census has been taken at any time prior to the beginning of the license year for which the licenses are to be granted and not earlier than the year preceding the first year in which the license law went into effect, then that official census shall remain the official census until a new census is taken.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that if at the beginning of this license year, an official census has been taken prior to the beginning of the current license year, that that official census would determine the maximum number of licenses to be granted in the particular subdivision for the next ensuing year.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CITY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—IN THE UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE—ASSISTANTS TO THE CITY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE—COUNTY AUDITOR—COUNTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—DEPUTY COUNTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES IN THE UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

1. The city sealer of weights and measures is the head of a principal department, is appointed by the mayor, and, therefore, is in the unclassified service. The city sealer of weights and measures is not authorized by law to appoint assistants; such assistants are in the classified service.

2. The county auditor is by virtue of his office the county sealer of weights and measures, and it is simply one office with duties attached, and the deputy county sealer is by reason of the duties imposed upon him a "deputy" within the meaning of subdivision 8 of section 8, and is, therefore, in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Hon. S. E. Strode, the commissioner of the dairy and food division of the agricultural commission of Ohio, has submitted to this department, under date of January 7, 1914, the following inquiries:

> "First. Are city sealers of weights and measures whose appointments are made by the mayor and are confirmed by the city council under civil service?
> "Second. Are assistant city sealers of weights and measures whose appointments are made by the mayor and are confirmed by the city council under civil service?
> "Third. Are deputy county sealers of weights and measures whose appointments are made by the county auditors under civil service?"

As these questions involve a construction of the civil service law, the opinion is addressed to the state civil service commission.

The city sealer of weights and measures is appointed by virtue of section 4318, General Code, which provides:

> "The mayor may appoint a sealer of weights and measures, who shall hold office co-extensive with the term of office of the mayor who made his appointment, and until his successor is appointed and qualified, unless otherwise removed from office."

Section 4322, General Code, prescribes the duties of the city sealer of weights and measures, as follows:

> "The sealer of weights and measures shall compare all weights and measures, balances, weighing and measuring devices used in the purchase and sale of commodities with the copies in his possession. Any weights and measures, balances and weighing and measuring devices having a device for indicating or registering the price as well as the weight or quantity of commodities shall be tested by him both as to correctness of weight or quantity and value indicated by them; such sealer shall seal such weights and measures, balances and weighing and measuring devices as shall be tested and found correct, and, after ten days' notice in writing to the owner, shall condemn or seize such as are found to be incorrect, and shall seal such weights and measures, balances, weighing and measuring devices having a device for indicating or registering the price as well as the weight or quantity of commodities only when correct both in indications of weight or quantity and value, and shall condemn or seize such in which the graduations or indications are found to be false or inaccurately placed either as to weight or quantity or value."

The city sealer of weights and measures is not under any principal department. He is not in the department of service, of safety, or of health. He is appointed by the mayor and is responsible directly to the mayor. He is, therefore, at the head of a principal department.

Branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law, section 486-8, General Code, places ten classes of positions in the unclassified service.

Subdivision 2 thereof provides:

"All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district."

The city sealer of weights and measures is at the head of a principal department and he is appointed by the mayor. By virtue of subdivision 2, supra, he is placed in the unclassified service.

The position of assistant city sealer of weights and measures is not created by statute. By virtue of section 4214, General Code, council is authorized to determine by ordinance or resolution the number of clerks and employes in each department of the city.

Subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, provides:

"Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

In order to come within the provisions of this subdivision, the executive officer, board or commission must be authorized by "law" to appoint such clerks, assistants or secretaries.

In State vs. Collingsworth, 82 Ohio St., 154, it is held:

"The violation of a penal ordinance of a municipality, as a result of which violation death ensues, is not an unlawful killing within the provisions of section 6811, Revised Statutes, which defines the crime of manslaughter."

This decision holds in effect that the word "law" does not apply to an ordinance. The word "law" as used in subdivision 7 (a) of section 8, supra, refers to a statutory law and not to an ordinance. As the city sealer of weights and measures is not authorized by law to appoint assistants, such assistants are in the classified service.

The county auditor is made county sealer of weights and measures by section 2615, General Code, which reads:

> "By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be county sealer of weights and measures and shall be responsible for the preservation of the copies of the original standards delivered to his office. It shall be the duty of the county auditor to see that all state laws relating to weights and measures be strictly enforced throughout his county and to assist generally in the prosecution of all violations of such laws."

Section 2622, General Code, authorizes the appointment of a deputy sealer of weights and measures, as follows:

> "Each county sealer of weights and measures shall appoint by writing under his hand and seal, a deputy who shall compare weights and measures wherever the same are used or maintained for use within his county, or which are brought to the office of the county sealer for that purpose, with the copies of the original standards in the possession of the county sealer, who shall receive a salary fixed by the county commissioners, to be paid by the county, which salary shall be instead of all fees or charges otherwise allowed by law. Such deputy shall also be employed by the county sealer to assist in the prosecution of all violations of laws relating to weights and measures."

The duties of the county sealer of weights and measures are prescribed by section 2616, General Code, which as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 332, reads in part:

> "The county sealer shall compare all weights and measures, brought to him for that purpose, with the copies of standards in his possession. When they are made to conform to the legal standards, the officer comparing them shall seal and mark such weights and measures. No weight, measure, balance or other weighing or measuring device shall be used or maintained for weighing and measuring in this state unless such weight, measure, balance or other weighing or measuring device has been sealed or marked by the agricultural commission or any employe of the commission detailed for that purpose, or by the county sealer or by the sealer of the city or village in which the same is used or maintained, by stamping upon each the letter 'O' and the last two figures of the year in which it has been compared with legal standards, adjusted and found or made to conform to said standards, with seals to be provided by said agricultural commission for that purpose. * * *"

The first question to be determined is whether section 2615, General Code, merely adds additional duties to the office of county auditor, or whether it creates a new and independent office. The auditor is made county sealer of weights and measures, by virtue of his office, that is, ex-officio.

In Bounchard vs. D'Herbert, 21 La. Ann., 139, it is held that a statute which creates the office of parish clerk and makes the clerk of the district court, ex-officio parish clerk, creates a separate office. In State vs. Somnier, 33 La. Ann., 273, it was held that where a clerk is made ex-officio jury commissioner, the clerk does not occupy a new office, but has had additional duties placed upon him.

In People vs. Stewart, 6 Ill. App., 62, the clerk of courts was ex-officio recorder, held, that they were not distinct offices but that the duties of the recorder attached to the office of clerk. In Town of Redwood City vs. Grimmenstein, 68 Cal., 512, a marshal was made ex-officio tax collector and it was held that the act did not create a new office, but added new duties to the office of marshal.

In Lathrop vs. Brittain, 30 Cal., 680, the sheriff was made ex-officio tax collector and it was held that he had two distinct offices. While in Wood vs. Cook, 31 Ill., 271, the sheriff was ex-officio tax collector, held to be one office. In the California case last cited, the constitution required that the occupants of both positions should be elected. The court held that although the officer was elected by the name of sheriff he was also elected at the same time as tax collector.

The principle upon which these various cases are decided is not given. No attempt has been made to harmonize them. It appears that each case must stand upon its own bottom.

The act creating the county sealer of weights and measures was passed April 11, 1861, 58 Ohio Laws, 78. Section 7 of this act provided:

> "That copies of the said original standards, made in the manner aforesaid, shall be deposited by the state sealer, or some one under his direction, in the auditor's office of each county in this state, not already furnished in pursuance of the act referred to in the preceding section, and the county auditor of each county in this state, is hereby made county sealer of weights and measures in his county, and shall be responsible for the preservation of the copies respectively delivered to them."

Section 17 of this act authorized the appointment of a deputy county sealer of weights and measures.

Section 1054 of Bates' Revised Statutes, 1908, provided:

> "The county auditor is constituted county sealer of weights and measures in his county, and he shall be responsible for the preservation of the copies of the original standards delivered to his office."

In adopting the General Code this was made section 2615, and read:

> "By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be county sealer of weights and measures, and shall be responsible for the preservation of the copies of the original standards delivered to his office."

This section was placed in its present form, as hereinbefore quoted, by act of 101 Ohio Laws, 234.

In section 7965, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 331, it is provided among other things:

> "* * * The agricultural commission shall, upon the passage of this act, and once every three years thereafter, require each county auditor and city or village sealer, in this state, to present all standards of weights and measures in their possession to him for comparison with the standards adopted by the state. * * * Each county auditor and each city and village sealer shall be required to procure copies of all the original standards adopted by the state."

It will be observed that in this section when reference is made to the county sealer of weights and measures he is designated the county auditor. The county auditor is required to get the copies and to present the same for comparison.

In 1861, when the provision in question was first enacted, the duties of a county sealer of weights and measures could not have been very great. They were small compared with the other duties of a county auditor. It could hardly be said at that time that the imposition of these duties upon the county auditor created a new office.

The fact that at the present time the duties are more exacting, and stricter regulations are being made, would not change the nature of the position or duties.

In 101 Ohio Laws, 234, this provision was added to section 2615, General Code:

> "It shall be the duty of the county auditor to see that all state laws relating to weights and measures be strictly enforced throughout his county and to assist generally in the prosecution of all violations of such laws."

The adding of this provision did not change the character of the position, although it enlarged the duties of the county sealer of weights and measures.

In view of the history of the act, and the fact that the county sealer is designated as county auditor and also as county sealer of weights and measures, I am of opinion that the statute imposes new duties upon the county auditor and does not create a new office, when it makes the county auditor by virtue of his office the county sealer of weights and measures.

The civil service law is next to be considered.

In determining whether a deputy county sealer of weights and measures is in the classified service, two subdivisions of section 8 of the civil service act are to be considered.

Subdivisions 7 and 8 of said section 8, provide:

> "Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.
> "The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

Positions within the above classes are in the unclassified service.

Is the deputy county sealer of weights and measures a deputy within the meaning of subdivision 8, supra.

The county sealer is authorized by law to appoint a deputy sealer. The use of the word "deputy" in designating the position is not controlling. The duties must be looked to.

Is the deputy county sealer authorized to act "generally for and in place of" his principal, and does he hold a fiduciary relation to his principal?

By virtue of section 2622, General Code, the deputy county sealer acts in his own right and not in the right of the county sealer. But in section 2616, General Code, in fixing the offense the deputy county sealer is not mentioned? This section prohibits the use of weights and measures unless > "such weight, measure, balance or other weighing or measuring device has been sealed or marked by the agricultural commission or any employe of the commission detailed for that purpose, or by the county sealer or by the sealer of the city or village in which the same is used or maintanied, by stamping upon each the letter 'O,' and the last two figures of the year in which it has been compared with legal standards, adjusted and found or made to conform to said standards, with seals to be provided by said agricultural commission for that purpose."

In order to comply with this provision the deputy county sealer would be acting for and in place of his principal.

The county sealer of weights and measures is bound by the act of his deputy when he tests measures and weights. He must rely upon the deputy's tests and measurements. Furthermore the deputy is employed to assist the county sealer in the prosecution of all violations of laws relating to weights and measures. These duties make the relation between the county sealer and his deputy a fiduciary relation.

While the use of the word "deputy" in a statute is not controlling, as above stated, yet it is persuasive.

Therefore, the deputy county sealer of weights and measures is a "deputy" within the meaning of section 8, subdivision 8 of the civil service act.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the city sealer of weights and measures is in the unclassified service and that the deputy county sealer of weights and measures is also in the unclassified service. The assistant city sealers of weights and measures are in the classified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE CONEY ISLAND TRANSPORTATION COMPANY—THE CONEY ISLAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY—RECEIPTS FROM THIS BUSINESS INTRASTATE IN CHARACTER.

The Coney Island Transportation Company, which operates river steamers between Cincinnati and Coney Island park, having the exclusive privilege of landing at the latter point and selling tickets, good both for transportation and admission to the park, but being a concern separate from the amusement company operating Coney Island, is a "public utility," and on the authority of a previous opinion, its receipts from this business are intrastate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some months ago the commission requested my opinion as to whether or not the Coney Island Company is a public utility for the purpose of excise and property taxation. The request for opinion was in some unaccountable manner laid aside and an apology is tendered for failure to reply sooner thereto.

The facts upon which my opinion is requested are as follows:

"The Coney Island Company is incorporated under the laws of West Virginia, with corporate authority to operate an amusement park and steamboats in connection therewith or for excursion purposes. The company does not itself operate any amusement resort but does own and operate on the Ohio river two passenger steamboats. These steamboats are run in connection with the operation of a certain pleasure resort, and during the season of such resort the company has the exclusive privilege of carrying the patrons of the latter to and from the same by water. During said season the steamboats in question sell tickets for transportation to and from the resort and for admission to the resort, the admission ticket being sold as agent for the resort company. The boats are provided with dancing cabins, refreshment stands and other amusement devices, and the tickets are sold under the reserved right to return to the holder thereof the cost price and to refuse to honor its provisions—in other words, the company does not hold itself out as a common carrier.

"At different times during the season, and generally prior to the opening of and after the closing of the season of the pleasure resort, the steamboats in question are used for occasional excursions to points of interest in Ohio and in other states.

"Except during high water in the early spring the wharfboats at which the steamer lands, both in Cincinnati and at the pleasure resort lie beyond low water mark and are, consequently, in the state of Kentucky."

Two questions are presented by the above statement of facts:

"1st. Whether the nature of the business in which the company is engaged constitutes it a 'public utility' within the meaning of the statute?

"2nd. Whether the fact that the steamers in question ply the Ohio river and customarily land outside of the low water mark, is sufficient to constitute its business 'interstate' within the meaning of the statute?"

Other opinions to the commission have discussed many of the questions which lie at the threshold of your inquiries. Thus, on principles already laid down the company is a "public utility" if it answers the description of a "water transportation company" within the meaning of section 5416, General Code. That is to say, the fact that the company does not hold itself out as being a common carrier does not effect its status as a "public utility" unless that fact bears upon its status as a "water transportation company."

The definition of a "water transportation company" found in section 5416, General Code, is as follows:

"When engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, by boat or other water craft, over any water way, whether natural or artificial, from one point within this state to another point within this state, or between points within this state and points without this state, is a water transportation company."

Two questions are suggested by this definition and its application to the facts stated by you, viz.:

1. Is the activity of the company above described "transportation" within the meaning of the word as used by the statute?

2. Are the persons who ride on the company's boats for the purposes above stated "passengers" within the meaning of the statute?

Of course I take it that the company's boats do not carry "property" in the commercial sense, but that the company confines itself to the carrying of persons.

The first of these terms is defined by the Standard Dictionary as follows:

"The carriage of persons or commodities from one place to another."

The word "passenger" is defined by the same lexicographer as follows:

"A person who travels in a public conveyance, as a railway car or steamship; one carried for a fare by a common carrier."

While the first of these terms imports no technical or commercial usage, the second of them, especially when used in connection with the first, does to my mind indicate some such idea. Authorities are not lacking in support of the definition of the word "passenger" given by the Standard Dictionary, above quoted, which limits it to those who patronize a common carrier. As none of them, however, are strictly in point or decisive of the question I do not cite them.

But though the operation of the water craft in question ministers in a way chiefly to the pleasure of the persons who pay for the privilege of riding on them, yet it is in an exact sense, it seems to me, "transportation." The boats in question, during the resort season, make regular trips from one point in this state to another point in this state and carry persons whose object it is to be transported from the one point to the other point. That they may choose this vehicle of transportation because of the greater pleasure involved in such choice as compared with other vehicles of transportation, is immaterial. The case is not like that of a sailing vessel at a summer resort, for example, nor is the case purely one of an excursion boat used for pleasure rides exclusively.

It seems to me, then, that in even the strictest view of the meaning of the word "passenger" under discussion, a person taking passage on a boat for the purpose of being carried from one point to another, is such a passenger, although the operators of the craft do not hold themselves out as common carriers.

This conclusion, however, is predicated upon the facts which clearly appear from the statement furnished by you. There are suggestions in the correspondence enclosed in your letter to the effect that some peculiar relation may exist between the resort company and the transportation company, such as to constitute the latter virtually an agency of the former. The relation is not so described and, therefore, my conclusion has been reached without reference thereto. If, however, upon a complete investigation, which for the sake of accuracy should be made, it appears that the transportation company is virtually an appendage of the resort company, and is operated as such, then on the authority of Meisner vs. Detroit Belle Isle Co., 154 Mich., 545, a conclusion opposite to that above stated should be reached.

With respect to the question arising from the fact that the navigable waters of the Ohio river lie within the state of Kentucky, I beg leave to refer the commission to the opinion in the matter of the steamer "Grey Hound."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that, subject to the above qualification, the Coney Island Company is a "water transportation company" within the meaning of the taxation laws; that, therefore, it is a "public utility" and subject to valuation of its property by the tax commission; that its receipts from the transportation of passengers between points in Ohio, although over a route extending into the state of Kentucky, are receipts from intrastate business, and, therefore, it is subject to excise taxation measured by such receipts and by other receipts not of an interstate character.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RESOLUTION—THE RIGHT OF THE WIDOW OF ONE WHO HAS BEEN A BENEFICIARY TO PARTICIPATE IN A FIREMEN'S PENSION FUND.

The trustees of the firemen's pension fund may adopt a resolution which will make it possible for the widow of one who has been a beneficiary of the fund to participate as a beneficiary on the ground that under section 4612, General Code, the trustees are authorized to make rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualifications of those to whom any portion of it shall be paid, and the amount thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

HON. W. S. JACKSON, City Solicitor, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of February 6th, receipt of which has already been acknowledged, requests my opinion on the following question:

> "By virtue of the regulations adopted by the trustees of the firemen's pension fund, for this city, any person who has served in the department continuously for a period of twenty-five (25) years, is entitled, upon retirement, to the sum of fifty ($50.00) dollars per month.
> "There are no regulations for the distribution of this fund to any person except one who has served as a regular fireman.
> "Query: May the trustees of the firemen's pension fund adopt a regulation which will make it possible for the widow of one who has been a beneficiary of this fund, to participate as a beneficiary?"

The following provisions of the General Code may be considered in connection therewith:

> "Sec. 4600. In any municipal corporation, having a fire department supported in whole or in part at public expense, the council by ordinance may declare the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of a firemen's pension fund. Thereupon a board of trustees, who shall be known as 'trustees of the firemen's pension fund' shall be created, which shall consist of the director of public safety, and in villages of the fire chief, and five other persons members of such department. * * *"
> "Sec. 4603. * * * Such board of trustees shall administer and distribute the firemen's pension fund.
> "Sec. 4605. In each municipality availing itself of these provisions, to maintain the firemen's pension fund, the council thereof each year, in the manner provided by law for other municipal levies, and in addition to all other levies authorized by law, may levy a tax of not to exceed three-tenths of a mill on each dollar upon all the real and personal property, as listed for taxation in such municipality. * * *."
> "Sec. 4608. The trustees of the fund may take by gift, grant, devise or bequest, moneys, or real or personal property, upon such terms as to the investment or expenditure thereof as is fixed by the grantor or determined by such trustees."
> "Sec. 4609. The trustees of the fund may also receive such uniform amounts from each person designated by the rules of the fire department, a member thereof, as he voluntarily agrees to, to be deducted from his monthly pay, and the amount so received shall be used as a fund to increase the pension which may be granted to such person or his beneficiaries."

"Sec. 4612. Such trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualifications of those to whom any portion of it shall be paid and the amount thereof, but no rules or regulations shall be in force until approved by the director of public safety or the fire chief of the municipality, as the case may be."

It is clear that the legislation above abstracted contemplates the possibility of the inclusion of others than the members or former members of a fire department in the class of beneficiaries of the pension fund. It is also clear that it lies within the power of the trustees of the fund to determine the qualifications of beneficiaries, and that they must act by general rules and regulations subject to the approval of the director of public safety or fire chief as the case may be.

The only question which your query presents is as to whether or not after the rights of a member of the department as to participation in the benefits of the fund have become fixed by reason of the happening of the contingency upon which they are predicated, under the existing rules of the trustees, they may be enlarged or changed by reason of the subsequent amendment of those rules?

Your question seems to indicate that the particular contingency upon which the rights of the individual concerned in your question were predicated is retirement. Thus upon retirement, under the existing rules, the former member of the department became entitled to receive a stipulated monthly allowance. You do not state whether or not there are voluntary contributors to the pension fund as provided in section 4609; nor as to whether or not there are any specific gifts, grants, devices or bequests upon terms which might preclude the use of the proceeds thereof for any particular purpose. The facts in these respects not being before me I express no opinion as to the legal propriety of using for the purpose mentioned by you the proceeds of specific gifts, etc., or amounts voluntarily paid by deduction from monthly pay under section 4609. My opinion is to be regarded as limited to the use of the funds raised by general taxation under sections 4605 and 4606, General Code, and as to these funds I am of the opinion that it is lawful for the trustees so to amend their rule as to include widows of retired firemen within the class of beneficiaries, and by regulation to make such an amended rule of effective as to the widow of one whose status as a beneficiary has become fixed prior to the amendment. Pensions paid wholly out of public funds constitute bounties and the laws and regulations respecting them are subject to repeal or modification at any time, notwithstanding the interests of those who at the time of the change may be entitled directly or contingently to their benefits. Such interests not being contractual in their nature, and not being founded upon valuable consideration moving from the actual or prospective beneficiary cannot become "vested." (Price vs. Farley, 22 C. C., 48.)

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that, in so far as the proposed regulation of the trustees of the firemen's pension fund affects the disbursement of moneys raised by general taxation it would be valid; withholding my opinion, however, as to the application of moneys in the pension fund derived from other sources than taxation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MOTHERS' PENSION—RESIDENCE REQUIRED IN ORDER TO OBTAIN MOTHERS' PENSION—LEGAL RESIDENCE OF MOTHERS APPLYING FOR MOTHERS' PENSION.

Under the provisions of Section 1683-2, General Code, a mother is not required to have resided two years in a county before applying in that county for a mothers' pension, but residence for two years on the part of the mother and children in any county in the state, whether that county be the county in which the two years' residence is established or not, entitles the mother to an allowance within a county of the state. Legal residence is not to be computed or ascertained by adding together periods of residence less than two years in different counties of the state. The mother and children must have resided legally for two years in some one county of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of May 12th, requesting my opinion upon the following question arising under the so-called mothers' pension law:

> "Under section 1683-2 is a mother required to have resided two years in a county before applying in that county for aid, or can she have resided in 'A' county two years and then move to 'B' county, reside there for three months, and then be entitled to aid; or can she live six months in one, two months in another, and six months in another, then move into another county, reside there three months and apply for aid?"

The pertinent provision of section 1683-2 (103 O. L., 877), is as follows:

> "For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled for work by reason of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive an age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have been legal residents in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women, as follows. * * *"

None of the related provisions of the statutes shed any light, whatever, on the meaning of this language. The analogy between the scheme of legislation, of which this sentence is a part, and the poor laws, is so remote, in my judgment, as not to permit a strict construction to be given to a doubtful provision of this kind because of any principle embodied in the poor laws. Therefore, I am satisfied that merely because a pauper is required, by other sections of the statute, to have acquired a legal settlement in the county before being entitled to public support therein, it by no means follows that, by analogy, it should be held that a mother must have obtained a legal settlement, of which the statute speaks, in the county in which she is to have relief, before being qualified to receive relief from such county.

In fact, very cogent reasons prevent the adoption of such an analogy. The very object of the mothers' pension law is to permit those who are qualified to obtain the relief which it affords to maintain the integrity of their respective homes.

As much is apparent from section 1683-3, where it is stated, as a condition of making the allowance, that the mother must be in a situation which would require her, otherwise, to work regularly away from her home and family, and the allowance must be in such an amount as to enable her to remain at home with her family.

The poor laws, on the other hand, contemplate the removal of a pauper to the county infirmary, and if he is found in the county where he has no legal settlement, he is to be deported to the county which is legally charged with his support. Therefore, the very reasons which, in the one case underlie a strict construction of the poor laws, in the other case made for a liberal interpretation of the mothers' pension law, in this regard. Again, section 1683-2 and succeeding sections of the General Code, as enacted, are placed, by the legislature, itself, in the juvenile court law, which, by force of section 1683-3, is to be "liberally construed to the end that proper guardianship may be provided for the child in order that it may have such attention and care as best subserves its moral and physical welfare, and that, as far as practicable, the child's parents, or guardian of such child, may be compelled to perform their moral and legal duty in the interest of the child."

Having regard to these controlling considerations, I am of the opinion that the phrase "in any county of the state," as used in the first sentence of section 1683-2, is to be given its broad and primary meaning, and that, as a result thereof, legal residence on the part of the mother and child, in any county of the state, would entitle the mother to an allowance, by the juvenile court, in any county of the state, whether that county be the county in which the two years' residence has been established or not.

However, the liberal construction, which I think the section requires, cannot be extended so as to fit the second case which you present, if your statement is intended to describe a case in which the mother and children have never acquired legal residence for a period of two years in any county of the state. That is to say, two years' legal residence in any county of the state is not to be computed or ascertained by adding together periods of residence less than two years in different counties in the state. The mother and children must have resided, legally, for two years, in some one county of the state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FLOOR COVERING FOR STATE ARMORY MAY NOT BE PURCHASED FROM THE STATE ARMORY CONSTRUCTION FUNDS.

The purchasing of a canvas floor covering for a state armory, to be used on the floor for drill purposes, cannot be made from the construction fund of the state armory, since such an item is not properly a part of the construction.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 30, 1914.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 3rd, wherein you state:

> "The local board of control of the Sidney armory has requested the state armory board to provide a canvas floor covering for the drill hall.

This building was accepted on Saturday, February 28th., and it is necessary to use the floor for various civic purposes while the canvas covering will make it more suitable for drill purposes. In considering this request for floor covering the board found a very substantial balance in the certified construction fund for this armory, but the board was not sure if it could provide the floor covering from construction fund, as the floor covering might not be considered such part of the building as could be supplied under the law."

It is elementary that for an item to properly come under the head of "construction," it must become a permanent part of the building. A canvas floor covering would not be such part of the building as would authorize it to be paid for from the construction fund.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that you may not expend any of said fund for that purpose.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLOSING OF SALOONS ON ELECTION DAY.

The same rule of law applies to the closing of saloons on primary election day as on a general election day.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—Hon. Herman Fellinger, of Cleveland, enquired of this department as to whether or not the primary election laws require the saloons to be closed on the day of holding that election. Having examined into the matter we find an opinion rendered by Hon. U. G. Denman, on August 31, 1909, on the subject, to be found in the annual report of the attorney general, 1909-1910, page 118, copy of said opinion being as follows:

PRIMARY ELECTION—SALOONS MUST BE CLOSED.

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 31st, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

" 'Does the primary election or the general election laws require the saloons to be closed on the day of holding the primary election?'

"Section 43 of the primary election law, 99 O. L., 214-224, is as follows:

" 'All provisions and requirements of the law of the state to preserve and protect the purity of elections, and all the penalties for violation of such laws shall apply and shall be enforced as to all primary elections held under this act.'

"The above section, in my judgment, refers to and adopts the following sections of the Revised Statutes:

" 'Whoever sells or gives away, any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors on any election day, or, being the keeper of a place where any such liquors are habitually sold and drank, fails on any election day to keep the same closed, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars and imprisoned not more than ten days.'

"Section (1536-628a) R. S., Sec. 1838:

" 'The mayor shall, three days previous to and on the day of any election issue a proclamation to the public setting forth therein the substance of the enactments to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors on that day; and it shall be the duty of the mayor to take proper measures for the enforcement of such enactments.'

"In my judgment, therefore, it is the duty of the mayor to publish his proclamation respecting the closing of saloons on the day of holding the primary election, and it is unlawful for any person, whether located within or outside of a municipality, to sell or to give away any intoxicating liquors on said day.

"Very truly yours,
"U. G. DENMAN,
"Attorney General."

I concur fully in the reasoning of Mr. Denman.

Section 4967 of the General Code, provides, amongst other things, as follows:

"All statutory provisions relating to general elections, including the requirement that part of such election day shall be a legal holiday, shall, so far as applicable, apply to and govern primary elections."

This provision is substantially the same as section 43 of the primary election laws, upon which General Denman relied for authority for his conclusion.

Section 13197 of the General Code, provides:

"Whoever sells or gives away spirituous, vinous or malt liquors on an election day, or, being the keeper of a place where such liquors are habitually sold and drank, fails, on an election day, to keep it closed, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars and imprisoned not more than ten days."

My opinion is, therefore, that the same rule of law applies to the closing of saloons on primary election day as on the general election day.

While you did not request this opinion, I am forwarding it to you inasmuch as we had already made the investigation; and as the question is an important one I am assuming the liberty of addressing it to you without request.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF BOARD OF ELECTION ARBITRATOR BETWEEN THE VILLAGE AND PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION.

There is no incompatibility between the position of member of board of election and an arbitrator appointed to go over matters at issue between a village and public service corporation, and, therefore, a member of the board of elections can be chosen as one of such arbitrators.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. ROBERT J. BUCHWALTER, Member of Board of Elections, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 22, 1914, you inquire:

> "Some of the political subdivisions, to wit: Villages in this county, are going to submit certain matters which are at issue between them and certain public service corporations to arbitration, and I believe each side is to pick one arbitrator and the two to select a third.
> "Would the fact that I am a member of the board of elections in any way interfere with my being chosen as one of such arbitrators?"

Section 5092, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 496, reads:

> "No person, being a candidate for an office to be filled at an election, other than for committeeman or delegate or alternate to any convention, shall serve as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, or as a judge or clerk of elections, in any precinct at such election. A person serving as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, judge or clerk of elections contrary to this section shall be ineligible to any office to which he may be elected at such election."

This section does not apply to the question in hand.

The same person may hold two or more public positions if they are not incompatible.

The rule of incompatibility of office is stated by Dustin, J., in State ex rel., vs. Gebert, 12 C. C. N. S., 274, where he says:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

You do not state whether you are to be selected as arbitrator by the village and paid from public funds or otherwise. I will assume, however, for the purposes of this opinion that the position of arbitrator in question is a public position. I do not deem it necessary to decide that question.

The statutes do not prohibit deputy state supervisors of elections from being an arbitrator. The two employments are not subordinate one to the other, and they are not a check one upon the other.

If it is physically possible for the same person to discharge the duties of both positions they are not incompatible. The physical possibility of performing the duties of both positions is a question of fact to be determined by the requirements of the two positions.

It is my conclusion that a deputy state supervisor of elections may act as arbitrator of a controversy between a village and a private corporation.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—NOT PERMITTED TO FURNISH NOMINATION PETITIONS TO CANDIDATES AT THE EXPENSE OF THE COUNTY.

Neither section 4819 nor section 4967, General Code, justify deputy state supervisors of elections and deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections to furnish nomination petitions to candidates at the expense of the county. Each candidate must furnish the same for himself.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of June 22, 1914, is received in which you inquire:

> "Do sections 4819, General Code, and 4967, as amended 103 Ohio Laws, page 481, justify deputy state supervisors of elections and deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections to furnish nomination petitions to candidates at the expense of the counties?"

Section 4819, General Code, provides:

> "The deputy state supervisors for each county shall advertise and let the printing of ballots, cards of instruction and other required books and papers to be printed by the county; receive the ballots from the printer, and cause them to be securely sealed up in their presence in packages, one for each precinct, containing the designated number of ballots for each precinct, and make the necessary endorsements thereon as provided by law; provide for the delivery of ballots, poll books and other required books and papers at the polling places in the several precincts; cause the polling places to be suitably provided with booths, guard rails and other supplies, as provided by law, and provide for the care and custody of them during the intervals between elections; receive the returns of elections, canvass them, make abstracts thereof, and transmit such abstracts to the proper officers at the times and in the manner provided by law, and issue certificates to persons entitled to them."

Section 4821, General Code, provides in part:

> "All proper and necessary expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors shall be paid from the county treasury as other county expenses, and the county commissioners shall make the necessary levy to provide therefor. * * *"

These sections refer to expenses for elections, proper.

Section 4967, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 481, reads:

"County boards of deputy state supervisors of elections shall have all the powers granted and perform all the duties imposed by the laws governing general elections, including furnishing materials and supplies, printing and distributing ballots, providing voting places, protecting electors, guarding the secrecy of the ballot, and making rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, for the guidance of election officers. All statutory provisions relating to general elections, including the requirement that part of such election day shall be a legal holiday, shall so far as applicable, apply to and govern primary elections.

Section 4991, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 510, reads in part:

"All expenses of primary elections, including cost of supplies for election precincts and compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors, and judges and clerks of election, shall be paid in the same manner provided by law for the payment of similar expenses for general elections. * * *"

These sections provide for the payment of all proper expenses of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in conducting primaries.

The statutes do not specifically provide that the boards of elections shall provide prospective candidates with blank nomination petitions.

Nomination petitions are to be filed with the board of deputy supervisors and then its duty as to these petitions begins. Nomination petitions are necessary to the person who seeks to be a candidate, but they are not necessary or required supplies of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections in conducting a primary election. The board is not officially concerned in the circulation of petitions or in having the petitions of any particular candidate filed. It is concerned with providing the means of permitting the electors to choose between respective candidates who have filed nomination petitions.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the board of deputy state supervisors of elections and the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections are not authorized to furnish blank nomination petitions to candidates at public expense.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION—POWER OF SUCH COMMISSION TO ISSUE PROCESS FOR WITNESSES APPLIES ONLY TO CERTAIN HEARINGS—INFORMAL HEARINGS—COMMISSION MAY PRESCRIBE RULES FOR INFORMAL HEARINGS.

Section 27 of the agricultural act empowering the commissioner to issue process for witnesses in its hearings applies only to such hearings and investigations as expressly authorized in other parts of the act.

The commissioner is impliedly authorized to hold an informal hearing for the purpose of investigating charges against the state veterinarian; in such case, however, testimony must be voluntary.

The commissioner, under section 20, may prescribe rules and regulations for the purpose of such informal hearing.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. BENJ. F. GAYMAN, Secy. The Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 30th, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "I desire to call your attention to sections 7, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28 and 32, said sections being a portion of an act entitled 'An act to create the agricultural commission of Ohio,' found on pages 304 and 341, inclusive, O. L., Vol. 103.
> "These sections relate to the powers of the agricultural commission of Ohio in conducting hearings and investigations. The commission desires particularly your opinion concerning the proper officer to serve the subpoenas and orders of the commission authorized in section 22 and whether or not the commission can pay from fund appropriated to it, for uses and purposes, fees of witnesses who are subpoenaed to testify before the commission.
> "Within a few weeks the commission will have a very important investigation to make and will be very glad if you can render us a prompt opinion covering the points upon which we are doubtful, as outlined above."

Since receiving the above, you have, personally, informed me that the investigation which your commission has in mind is in the nature of a hearing for the purpose of determining the foundation of certain complaints which have been filed with your board, charging misconduct or inefficiency in office, of the state veterinarian.

Sections 7, 22 and 32 of the agricultural commission act, above referred to, are as follows:

> "Sec. 7. Any investigation, inquiry or hearing which the agricultural commission is empowered by law to hold or to undertake, may be held or undertaken by or before any one member of the commission or before any member or members of the commission. All investigations, inquiries, hearings, decisions, and orders made by any one or any two members of the commission shall when approved and confirmed by the agricultural commission be deemed to be the order of the agricultural commission, and each members shall be responsible to the commission for the general work of that one of the institutions or activities which the commission may allot to him; all matters of general policy shall be decided by the entire commission.

"Sec. 22. The agricultural commission or any member thereof, the secretary and every person appointed by the commission to conduct investigations, inquiries or hearings shall, for the purposes contemplated by this act have power to administer oaths, certify to official acts, take depositions, issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, accounts, papers, records, documents and testimony.

"Sec. 32. Sheriffs and constables in the several counties shall execute all lawful orders of the agricultural commission in such counties, and immediately communicate to the commission any notice given them under the provisions of law relating to live stock."

The provisions of section 7 are restricted to such investigations, inquiries or hearings as the agricultural commission is empowered by law to hold. The terms of section 22 are limited to the same restriction which is expressed in section 7. The same may be said of section 32, with respect to the duties of sheriffs and constables to execute lawful orders of the agricultural commission.

The limitation referred to is the restriction upon investigations, inquiries and hearings expressed in section 7, confining the provisions of these statutes to such investigations, inquiries or hearings as the commission is empowered by law to hold or undertake.

In brief, the commission is given power to "administer oaths, certify to official acts, take depositions, issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, accounts, papers, records, documents and testimony," only in those hearings and investigations which are expressly authorized and provided for by statute, e. g., the investigation of insect pests, plant diseases, the existence of infectious and contagious disease among live stock, the inspection of nursery stock, and other matters with respect to which the commission is given express power to investigate.

Your commission is given no express power to hold hearings for the purpose of investigating charges against its officers or employes. There clearly exists an implied power, necessary and incidental to the proper administration of its offices, to look into and determine the requisite merit and fitness of its subordinates. Such a situation is covered by section 20 of the act in question. This section is as follows:

"The agricultural commission shall adopt reasonable and proper rules and regulations to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all investigations, inspections and hearings not otherwise specifically provided for."

This provision, which has express reference to those hearings and investigations not otherwise specifically provided for, would enable your board to provide reasonably for such a hearing as you have in mind. The power to provide such rules and regulations, however, must not be overstepped, and manifestly cannot be resorted to for the purpose of intruding upon the powers of the legislature. Your board, under this authority, manifestly could not impose obligations upon individuals to testify, or upon public officers to serve writs and orders in matters wherein the legislature, itself, has not seen fit to impose such duties. I am of the opinion, however, that your board may, with perfect propriety, fix a date for the purpose of looking into and examining the complaints in question. You might notify the complaining parties to have present, on this date, such witnesses and matters of evidence as they desire to present, and also the officer in question to have present such parties and matters of evidence as he might desire to have on hand for purposes of defending himself against the charges to be considered. Such reasonable rules and regulations might be adopted for the orderly hearing of the representatives of both parties, with method and dispatch.

My conclusion in brief, therefore, is that the agricultural commission has no power of compulsory process with respect to the matter in question, but that they may readily provide a hearing, whereupon all information, voluntarily offered, may be considered.

I may further say that, in the event that it is considered more desirable to have compulsory process, that the civil service commission, under section 486-18, General Code, is empowered to make investigations for the purpose of ascertaining the manner in which officers and employes in the classified service are performing their duties, and under section 486-7 of the General Code, they may subpoena and require attendance of witnesses and all necessary evidence in the course of such investigation.

While the question asked by you is much broader than the scope of this opinion, yet, since you have stated that the investigation which your commission had in mind was of the state veterinarian, I have confined my answer solely to such question. Therefore, you will understand that this opinion in no way, undertakes to answer the question as to the power of your commission in any investigation other than the one relating to the state veterinarian.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SECTION 13 OF THE PRIVATE BANK ACT DOES NOT APPLY TO MUNICIPAL FUNDS.

Section 13 of the private bank act making it lawful to designate private banks as depositories for municipal funds, and the provision as to the deposit not being in excess of the capital stock and surplus being no longer contained in the section relating to the deposit of municipal funds, the fact that a private bank has no capital stock would not disqualify it from being designated as a depository for municipal funds. Section 4515, General Code, contains a provision that there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of said bank; the above rule does not apply to municipal funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. L. E. HARVEY, Village Solicitor, Bradford, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 8, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Would you kindly favor me with an opinion as to whether or not a private bank which has complied with the provisions of the new banking law is eligible to bid for municipal funds although the private bank has no capital stock?"

Section 13 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the examination, regulation, supervision and dissolution of certain banking concerns" (commonly known as the private bank act) 103 O. L., 379, provides;

"Whenever any of the funds of the state, or any of the political subdivisions of the state, shall be deposited under any of the depository laws of the state, every corporation, person, partnership and association coming within the purview of this act shall be permitted to bid upon and be designated as depositories of such funds upon furnishing such security or securities therefor as is prescribed by the laws of the state of Ohio; provided, however, that there shall not be deposited with any such corporation, persons, partnership, or association by any such political subdivision an amount in excess of $500,000, nor in any event an amount in excess of fifty (50) per cent. of the amount of the funds of such political subdivision so at any time to be deposited."

Sections 4294, et seq., of the General Code, provide for the deposit of municipal funds.

Section 4295, as it formerly stood, contained the provision:

"But there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in capital stock and surplus of such bank, and not in any event to exceed $1,000,000."

This section was amended by an act found in 103 O. L., 113, and in this amendment the above quoted restriction was eliminated. Therefore, section 13 of the private bank act, making it lawful to designate private banks as depositories for municipal funds, and the provision as to the deposit not being in excess of the capital stock and surplus being no longer contained in the section relating to the deposit of municipal funds, the fact that a private bank has no capital stock would not disqualify it from being designated as a depository for municipal funds.

This, however, does not apply to municipal sinking funds, the deposit of which is provided for by sections 4515, et seq., General Code.

Section 4515 contains a provision that there shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid in stock and surplus of said bank.

In my opinion, as section 13 of the private bank act does not repeal by implication this provision of section 4515 (nor any similar provision found in any of the depository laws of the state) a private bank, without capital stock, cannot qualify as a depository for funds belonging to the sinking fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—BOND ISSUE—ENLARGING AND IMPROVING A MUNICIPAL WATER WORKS PLANT—SINKING FUND AND INTEREST LEVIES—ORDINANCE—LONGWORTH ACT.

An ordinance authorizing an issue of bonds for extending, enlarging and improving a municipal water works plant, provides for the levy of a sinking fund, and interest tax sufficient to pay the bonds. The fact that the bonds were authorized by vote of the people are together not sufficient to determine whether the issue is to be considered in arriving at the debt limitations of the city under the Longworth act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision Public Offices, Department Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 28th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "An ordinance authorizing an issue of bonds for extending, enlarging and improving a municipal water works plant provides:
> " '(Section 5). That there be and hereby is levied annually until the redemption of the above described indebtedness upon the taxable property in the city of Cincinnati, a sum sufficient to pay the interest and sinking fund charges on the above described indebtedness.'
> "Said bonds were authorized by vote of the people.
> "Question: Is said issue to be considered in arriving at the debt limitations of said city under the Longworth act?"

Your question involves consideration of section 3949, General Code, being a part of the so-called Longworth law in its revised form.

This section provides in part that,

> "In ascertaining the limitations of one per cent., four per cent. and eight per cent. herein prescribed, the following bonds shall not be considered:
> * * * * * * * * * *
> "f. Bonds issued for the purpose of * * * improving and extending waterworks when the income from such waterworks is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due."

You do not state in your letter whether or not as a matter of fact the waterworks to be extended and enlarged produces an income sufficient to provide for all operating expenses and to pay the interest charges and sinking fund requirements of the bonds in addition to other bonds which may have been issued for the original construction of the waterworks or their previous extension and enlargement. The only suggestion which is found in your letter along this line is the fact that the bonds were authorized by a vote of the people.

Under section 3942, General Code, which I do not quote, the council of a municipal corporation desiring to issue bonds, may submit the issue to a vote of the people, whether the debt limits require such submission or not. This section enables council to submit the policy of issuing bonds for a given purpose to a vote of the people, even though such submission is not necessary in order to avoid the operation of one of the limitations upon the bonded indebtedness of the city nor to obtain more latitude in the levying of taxes under the provisions of section 5649-2, General Code, popularly known as the "Smith law."

Therefore, the mere fact that council has secured the approval of the electors before issuing the bonds in question does not indicate anything with respect to the application of paragraph "f" of section 3949, General Code.

The fifth section of the ordinance quoted by you may also be considered as an intimation that the bonds are within paragraph "f" of section 3949.

Said paragraph "f" is not conditioned upon the actual payment of the interest charges and sinking fund requirements of the bond issue out of the operation revenues. Its conditions are satisfied if the revenues are sufficient to pay such interest charges and to provide for such sinking fund requirements. The theory seemingly is that if the operation revenues are sufficient for these purposes they will relieve the burden of taxation and perhaps avoid the incurring of other indebtedness even though not directly applied to these purposes. At any rate the plain language of section 3949, paragraph "f" is such as seemingly to negative the idea that it is necessary for the operation revenues actually to be applied to the objects therein referred to in order that the waterworks bonds may be exempt from computation in ascertaining any one of the debt limitations.

Section 3959, General Code, provides for applying the surplus of waterworks revenues to the payment of bonded interest and the liquidation of bonded indebtedness. The same section also requires that taxes levied and assessed for waterworks purposes shall be applied by the council to the creation of a sinking fund and for the payment of an indebtedness and for no other purpose whatever. This section then does not require surplus revenues to be used in the liquidation of bonded indebtedness, but on the contrary prohibits the use of tax levies to pay current expenses and authorizes the use of such levies for the liquidation of bonded indebtedness.

It follows from a joint reading of the two sections last considered that there is no requirement that waterworks revenues over and above the actual cost of operation be used for sinking fund purposes. On the contrary section 3959 expressly authorizes them to be used for extensions and betterments. Yet even if so used and accumulated into a surplus for that purpose, if they are sufficient to pay sinking fund and interest charges of a bond issue after deducting operating expenses, the bonds are not to be counted in ascertaining any of the debt limitations.

But section 5 of the ordinance, as you quote it, suggests another consideration illustrated by my opinion to your department in the matter of the application of article XII, section 11 of the constitution to special assessment bonds of municipal corporations. As stated in that opinion, to the extent that the taxing power of the subdivision may be exerted for the payment of bonds and the creation of a sinking fund, it must be exerted in the ordinance authorizing their issue. As also stated therein, the provision for an annual tax levy which the constitution requires need not be such as to provide exclusively for the retirement of the bonds and to preclude the application of other revenues, such as in this instance, the water rents in excess of operating expenses, to the same purpose. So that it would by no means follow because a municipal corporation in complying with article XII, section 11 of the constitution had provided for the annual levy and collection of a tax sufficient to pay the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bond issue, that no other revenues are to be applied thereto. In point of fact, although such a provision as section 5 of the ordinance which you quote would have to be included in every waterworks bond issue, it might, nevertheless, so happen that no taxes would ever be levied under such a provision on account of the application of surplus water rentals to the liquidation of the bonds.

From all these considerations, then, I conclude that the necessary premise upon which to base a categorical answer to your question is not found in the facts stated in your letter. Accordingly, I am unable to state whether the issue of bonds which you describe is to be considered in arriving at the debt limitations of said city.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

KENT STATE NORMAL SCHOOL—AGRICULTURAL BUILDING AND TRAINING SCHOOL—RESTRICTION CONTAINED IN 1913 APPROPRIATION BILL AS TO THE AMOUNT TO BE SPENT ON AGRICULTURAL BUILDING AND TRAINING SCHOOL NOT CARRIED IN 1914 APPROPRIATION BILL.

Although the original appropriation bill for 1913 for the Kent state normal school for an agricultural building and training school specified that such building was to cost not to exceed $100,000, yet the budget bill of 1914 for construction and betterments for said normal school appropriated a lump sum of $151,000 without further specification of the amount to be expended for the agricultural building and training school. Since the appropriation for the budget bill is made without restrictions as to building or improvement for which the amount appropriated for construction and betterments must be used, the said normal school is authorized to expend to exceed $100,000 for the agricultural building and training school, there being no expressed intention of the legislature to continue the restriction contained in the appropriation bill of 1913.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 13th, wherein you state as follows:

"Your written opinion is respectfully requested on the following matter:
"Appropriations were made for the Kent state normal school as follows:

"1913—103 O. L., p. 624:
" 'Agricultural building and training school, cost not to exceed $100,000.00 ---------- $50,000 00'

"1914—103 O. L., p. 644:
" 'Agricultural building and training school---------- $50,000 00'

"1914—Special Session:
" 'Maintenance F-10 (construction and betterments)---------- $151,000 00'

"Inasmuch as the first appropriation (1913) specified the cost should not exceed $100,000.00, would it be legal for said institution to erect a building with an estimated cost of $147,000.00, the additional amount to be paid from the budget appropriation of 1914?"

It will appear from the above statement that the eightieth general assembly appropriated in its appropriation bill for 1913, $50,000.00 for the agricultural building and training school, but specified therein that it should not cost to exceed $100,000.00, and then the 1914 appropriation, which was passed at the same session of the legislature, appropriated the balance of $50,000.00. However, the last named appropriation bill for 1914 was repealed and a new appropriation bill on an entirely different plan was enacted and known as the budget bill. Under such plan the amounts that were given the Kent state normal school for "construction and betterments" were placed under what is known as "maintenance F-10," and the amount thereof was fixed at $151,000.00.

The budget bill did not undertake to further classify the $151,000.00, and it has been the ruling of this department that there was no power to go back of the classified budget as the same was passed by the legislature. Such being the fact, there is at the disposal of the Kent state normal school for "construction and betterments" the entire sum of $151,000.00 without any restriction or limitation whatever, and while it is true that in the appropriation of the original $50,000.00 for the agricultural building and training school as found in the 1913 appropriation bill the legislature at that time restricted the entire cost of the building not to exceed $100,000.00, yet I do not believe in view of the unrestricted appropriation of $151,000.00 that the legislature can be presumed to have intended the restriction as found in the 1913 appropriation bill to continue. Had the legislature intended the restriction to continue it would in its general appropriation of $151,000.00 have again specified that only $50,000.00 of such amount was to be used for said agricultural building and training school. Not having done so it is my opinion that the restriction contained in the 1913 appropriation bill has been removed. Therefore, in answer to your question I am of the opinion that it would be legal for said institution to erect an agricultural building and training school at an estimated cost of $147,000.00, the additional amount to be paid from the budget appropriation of 1914, providing, of course, that there are still funds sufficient in the 1914 appropriation for "construction and betterments" to pay said additional amount.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—RIGHT TO RESCIND MISTAKE MADE BY THE BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE OHIO PENITENTIARY.

The state board of administration, which is the successor of the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, has full powers to rescind an action taken by mistake of the board of managers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of June 26, 1914, submitting papers in the matter of the petition of Frank Hironomous, No. 37886, and asking whether or not the board has power to rescind the action of the former board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary in this case. The facts submitted are these:

On December 31, 1909, one William Davis, escaped from the Ohio penitentiary and one Frank Hironomous, a paroled prisoner working in Columbus, was accused by prison officials of assisting Davis to escape. Hironomous seeing his picture in the papers with an offer of reward for his capture, and knowing that if captured he would be returned to prison, fled to Canada. At the next meeting of the board of managers of the penitentiary, Hironomous' parole was declared violated and he was entered on the prison journal as a delinquent. This action of the board of managers caused him to lose his "good time," owing to the provisions of section 2174, General Code, which reads:

> "A prisoner violating the conditions of his parole or conditional release, having been entered in the proceedings of the board of managers and declared to be delinquent, shall thereafter be treated as an escaped prisoner owing service to the state, and, when arrested, shall serve the unexpired period of the maximum term of his imprisonment. The time from the date of his declared delinquency to the date of his arrest shall not be counted as a part of time served."

The "good time" lost by Hironomous on his ten-year sentence amounted to three years and eight months. Later Hironomous was arrested in Canada and returned to the Ohio penitentiary on the 27th day of August, 1910, and is now confined in that institution. His "short time" on his ten-year sentence expired on March 12, 1914, and he is now serving the three years and eight months' "good time" which was taken from him by reason of the board's revocation of his parole.

It is now made clear by a statement of former Deputy Warden Charles L. Resch, the present sheriff of Franklin county, Ohio, that the prison officials were in error in suspecting and accusing Hironomous of any connection with the escape of Davis, and that the man who assisted Davis was one O'Donnell, as later discovered by Deputy Warden Resch. The question now is, can the Ohio board of administration, which has succeeded to the powers and duties of the former board of managers of the penitentiary, correct the mistake made by the former board and thereby restore to Hironomous the time taken from him by reason of such mistake.

This question is one that can be easily answered. The board of managers declared Hironomous' parole revoked under a mistaken idea of the facts and the Ohio board of administration now has full power to rescind such action and restore said Hironomous to his former status. The power to make an order carries with it the power to rescind it, if it has been issued through mistake, when the rights of third parties have not intervened.

It appears from the papers submitted that the board of managers revoked Hironomous' parole because they believed he had assisted Davis to escape. If your board now is of the opinion that Hironomous was not guilty of this offense and desires for that reason to restore him the three years and eight months "good time" taken, I am of the opinion that you may do so.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT—RIGHT OF A VILLAGE TO SELL ELECTRIC CURRENT TO A TOWNSHIP WITHIN THE VILLAGE FOR THE PURPOSE OF BEING RESOLD TO ANOTHER VILLAGE.

A village owning and operating an electric light plant may not legally contract with a partnership within the municipal limits, to furnish said partnership electric current for the purpose of being resold by the partnership to another village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 28, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion as follows:

> "May the board of public affairs, having the control and management of a village electric light plant, legally contract with a partnership composed of resident citizens of the municipality to furnish current, which in turn will be sold by said partnership firm to a village situated four miles distant from the municipality owning and operating the electric light plant?"

By section 3618 of the General Code, municipal corporations are given power:

> "To establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat to procure everything necessary therefor, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands for such purposes, within and without the municipality."

By section 3990, General Code, a municipality may not only erect electric light plants, but may purchase or, if necessary, appropriate existing plants within the municipality belonging to any person or company.

As indicated by the provisions of section 3618 of the General Code, the purpose for which a municipality is authorized to establish, maintain and operate an electric light plant, is to supply its own needs and the needs of its inhabitants. Under this power, the municipality may undoubtedly furnish electricity to any person or concern within the city limits, for domestic or commercial lighting. The provisions of this section, however, carry no implication of power in the municipalty to furnsh electricity to persons or concerns outside of its limits, nor to furnish the same to persons and concerns within the municipality, for purposes other than their own use for light, heat and power.

Pertinent to the consideration of the inquiry here presented, I note the provisions of section 6 of article XVIII of the state constitution, adopted September 3, 1912, and the provisions of section 3809 of the General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 526. These provisions are as follows:

Sec. 6, Art. XVIII, Con.:

> "Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality."

Section 3809 of the General Code:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract * * * for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, * * * of any person, firm, company or municipality or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury, shall not apply to such contract * * *"

As I understand the question here made, its solution depends entirely upon a consideration and construction of the provisions just noted; for certainly aside from the provisions of section 6, article XVIII of the constitution, no authority exists in a municipality, on the one hand, to furnish electric current to others than its inhabitants for their own use for light, heat or power; nor, on the other hand, aside from the provisions of section 3809, does there exist any authority in a municipality to purchase electric current for the purpose of using the same to meet its own needs or for distribution to its inhabitants.

From a consideration of the provisions of section 3809, General Code, above noted, it is apparent that if it can be here determined that the partnership desiring to purchase electric current from the village owned and operating the electric light plant may lawfully do so, no obstacle is presented with respect to the right of the other village to purchase such current from said partnership; and the whole question resolves itself, then, to the consideration whether, by force of the provisions of the constitution, above noted, the municipal corporation owning and operating the electric light plant, has power to sell the same to a partnership composed of resident citizens of the municipality in which said electric light plant is located.

Aside from the provisions of the constitution, there can be no doubt but what a municipality, owning and operating an electric light plant, could furnish electric current to a partnership, located and doing business in such municipality, but such current could be sold to the partnership for only its own private or commercial use, for light, heat or power, and could not be sold to it by such municipality for the purpose of being resold by such partnership to other persons.

Taking the provisions of the section of the constitution under consideration, it will be noted that they provide that any municipality, owning and operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof, to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others, any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility, in an amount not exceeding, in either case, fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility, within the municipality. I have no doubt but that a partnership, located in a municipality, owning and operating an electric light plant, and composed of citizens of such municipality, is an inhabitant of such municipality, within the purview of section 3618 of the General Code, authorizing such municipality to furnish electricity to its inhabitants for light, heat or power, nor that such partnership is an inhabitant, within the meaning of section 6, article XVIII of the constitution.

The authority of the provisions of this section of the constitution only goes to the right of a municipality owning and operating an electric light plant as a public utility, to sell its product to others than its inhabitants to whom, prior to the adoption of the constitutional provisions, the municipality might furnish electric current for purposes of light, heat or power. It results from this consideration that the authority of the constitutional provisions is limited to sales of electric current by such municipality, to persons, natural or artificial, outside of and beyond its corporate limits; and that with respect to the question here made, although the village owning and operating the electric light plant, might legally sell surplus current, within the limitations of the constitutional provisions, to the other village in question, the village owning and operating such electric light plant cannot sell the same to any person or concern within the corporate limits for purpose of resale. In conclusion I may add that I am inclined to the view that a municipality owning and operating an electric light plant is not authorized to sell electric current to persons and concerns outside of the corporate limits for any purpose other than the use of the same by such persons or concerns for light, heat or power. With respect to the question here presented, however, it is enough to know that such municipality is not authorized to sell current to persons and concerns within its limits for any purpose other than the use of such current for the purposes indicated by section 3618, General Code.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the board of public affairs, having the control and management of a village electric light plant, may not legally contract with a partnership composed of resident citizens of the municipality, to furnish to such partnership, current for the purpose of being resold by said partnership to another village.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROPER CUSTODIAN OF LIBRARY FUNDS—CITY TREASURER—HOW BILLS FOR MAINTENANCE OF LIBRARY MUST BE PAID—CITY AUDITOR.

The city treasurer is the proper custodian of money appropriated by the city council for the use of library trustees appointed under section 4004, General Code, since there are no statutes creating such board of trustees, and prescribing their duties which would entitle the board to control funds appropriated by council, for its purposes. All bills for the maintenance of the library must be paid under the direction of the board of trustees on a voucher signed by the auditor and drawn on the city treasurer, in accordance with section 3795, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. IRA R. WADE, City Solicitor, Fostoria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 22nd, you request my opinion as follows:

> "The city of Fostoria has a board of library trustees appointed under section 4004 of the General Code, and appropriates $2,000 a year for the maintenance of a free public library. This board of trustees has organized and elected one of their number treasurer, and has demanded that the city pay over this $2,000 to the treasurer of their board. The city auditor contends that the city treasurer is the proper custodian of these funds, and that all bills for maintenance of library must be paid out on vouchers signed by him and drawn on the city treasurer, and has refused to issue a voucher to pay this amount over to the treasurer of the board of library trustees.
> "Will you please advise me which of these two officers is entitled to this money, and whether or not the library board can pay their bills and accounts without having voucher signed by the city auditor."

Section 4297, 4298, 4300, 4301 of the General Code, are as follows:

"Sec. 4297. The treasurer shall keep an accurate account of all moneys by him received, showing the amount thereof, the time when, from whom, and on what account received, and of all disbursements by him made, showing the amount thereof, the time when, to whom, and on what account paid. He shall so arrange his books that the amount received and paid on account of separate funds, or specific appropriations, shall be exhibited in separate accounts. In addition to the ordinary duties of such officer, he shall have such powers and perform such duties as may be required by ordinance of the corporation not inconsistent with this title, and not incompatible with the nature of his office.

"Sec. 4298. The treasurer shall demand and receive from the county treasurer taxes levied and assessments made and certified to the county auditor by authority of the council, and by the auditor placed on the tax list for collection, and from persons authorized to collect or required to pay them, moneys accruing to the corporation from judgments, fines, penalties, forfeitures, licenses, and costs taxed in the mayor's or police courts, and debts due the corporation, and he shall disburse them on the order of such person or persons as may be authorized by law or ordinance to issue orders therefor.

"Sec 4300. The treasurer shall receive and disburse all funds of the corporation including the school funds, and such other funds as arise in or belong to any department or part of the corporation government.

"Sec. 4301. On the first Monday of February and August in each year, the county treasurer shall pay over to the treasurer of the corporation all moneys received by him up to that date arising from taxes levied and assessments made belonging to the corporation."

Under these sections the control of all municipal funds is given to the treasurer, and he is required to maintain a detailed record and account of all receipts and disbursements of all municipal funds.

Sections 4276 and 4285 are as follows:

"Sec. 4276. The auditor shall keep the books of the city, exhibit accurate statements of all moneys received and expended, and of all property owned by the city and the income derived therefrom, and of all taxes and assessments.

"Sec. 4285. The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn, or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

Under these sections it is made the duty of the auditor to keep up accurate records and accounts of all moneys received and expended, on the part of the municipality, by or in behalf of any and all of its departments.

Section 3795, General Code, is as follows:

"The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council."

The moneys appropriated by council for the benefit of the library board, or moneys derived from the general taxes of the corporation, and such moneys must be paid into the municipal treasury and controlled and disbursed in the manner set forth in the above statutes.

Sections 4004 to 4013 of the General Code, provide for a board of library trustees, charged with the custody, control and administration of free public municipal libraries.

Section 4005 empowers such trustees to employ librarians and assistants, fix their compensation, adopt the necessary by-laws and regulation for the protection and government of the libraries, and all property belonging thereto, and exercise all of the powers and duties connected with and incident to the government and maintenance thereof.

I find nothing in these statutes creating such board of trustees and prescribing their duties, which would entitle the board to the control of funds appropriated by council for its purposes, in contravention to the statutes above set forth, providing for such control through the auditor and treasurer of the corporation.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the city treasurer is the proper custodian of these funds, and that all bills for maintenance of libraries must be paid out under the direction of the board of trustees, on voucher signed by the auditor and drawn on the city treasurer in accordance with section 3795 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIMARY ELECTION NOT A GENERAL ELECTION.

The state primary election to be held this year is not a regular general election, within the meaning of section 4227-1, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, City Solicitor, Niles, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 12, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Section 4227-1 and those following (103 Laws, 211), provide for a vote at the next regular or general election upon proper referendum petitions before an ordinance becomes effective. The question in my mind is whether or not the primary election held August 11th, can properly be called a regular or general election. Referendum petitions are now being circulated upon an ordinance passed on June 6th in our council. If the primary is a general or regular election the question should be voted upon then. If not, it should wait until November.
> "The term 'general election,' as defined by section 4948 is confined to the November election. It would seem that if the question could be considered at the primary it would be for the reason that the primary is a regular election."

The term "general election," is defined in section 4948, of the General Code, as follows:

> "Unless inconsistent with the context, the words and phrases in this chapter shall be construed as follows: * * * The words 'general election' the November election in the years when state and county officers are to be elected. * * *"

Section 4826, appearing in 103 O. L., p. 23, is as follows:

> "All general elections for elective state and county offices and for the office of judge of the court of appeals shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the even numbered years. All votes for any judge for an elective office except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or by the people, shall be void."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that your interpretation of the term "general election" is correct, and that such term must be restricted to those elections which are held in November for state and county offices, which are held in the even numbered years.

In an opinion rendered to Honorable Don J. Young, prosecuting attorney, Norwalk, Ohio, under date of February 27, 1912, I said:

> "Then again, the requirement of the present primary election law only applies to voluntary political parties or associations, which at the next preceding general election polled in the state or any district, county or subdivision thereof, or municipality, at least ten per cent. of the entire vote cast (section 4949, G. C.), and as the object of the legislature in providing for the submission of the question of the issuance of bonds must have been to obtain an expression of the whole of the entire electorate at the election whereat every voter of the county would be eligible to vote, it is readily perceived that this could not always be had at a primary election, limited as it is to partisan voters. The right of the independent voter and of the Socialist or other party voter whose party may not have received the required percentage at the next preceding election to have his vote recorded for or against the bond issue must be jealously preserved.

"I am, therefore, of the opinion that the primary election is not such an election as is included in the phrase 'regular election' contained in section 3077, General Code."

I am of the opinion that the same argument applies to referendum elections held in a municipality, and that the term "regular election" can have no application to primaries.

My conclusion is, therefore, that a primary may not be considered a "regular" or a "general" election within the meaning of the initiative and referendum act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN HAMS AND BACON ARE TO BE CONSIDERED IN PACKAGE FORM.

Hams and sides of bacon, when the covering is burlap, paper, gelatin, or cloth, are to be considered in package form, within the meaning of section 13128, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. S. E. STRODE, Member Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 12, 1914, you request my opinion whether hams and sides of bacon when covered with burlap, paper, gelatin or cloth, are to be considered in package form within the meaning of section 13128 of the General Code.

Section 13128 is as follows:

"Whoever puts up or packs goods or articles sold by weight, into a case or package, and fails to mark thereon the gross, tare and net weights thereof in pounds and fractions thereof, or, with intent to defraud, transfers a brand, mark or stamp placed upon a case or package by a manufacturer, to another case or package, or, with like intent, repacks a case or package so marked, branded or stamped with goods or articles of a quality inferior to those of such manufacturer, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

The word "pack" is defined in Funk & Wagnall's Standard Dictionary as follows:

"To dispose with orderly arrangement in compact shape for convenience in carrying, keeping, or handling; to stow in any receptacle, as a box, a barrel, or package.

"To fill compactly or to overflowing; also to crowd together in close order. To compress tightly; press into a hard, dense mass."

The word "package" in the same work is defined as follows:

"An article or a quantity of anything wrapped up or bound together."

Question arises as to whether or not the wrapping of a single article, such as a ham or bacon, might be considered as a putting up or packing. The definition of the term "pack," as above set forth, seems to comprehend primarily the putting up or packing of either bulk substance or of articles, several of which are packed and sold together in a compact bundle or package. In other words, there is a possibility that the language used by the legislature in this section might have no application to wrapping a single article, as opposed to packing numerous articles or a bulk substance.

The definition of the term "package," as above set forth, has a clear application to a wrapped single article.

From the definition of the word "pack," as above quoted, I am of the opinion that one who wrapped a single article could not be viewed as one who packs goods or articles into a case or package within the meaning of this statute. On the other hand, it seems equally clear that one who wraps a single article may be described as one who "puts up" into a case or package, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the wrapping of a ham or a bacon is to be considered a putting up of an article into a package. I, therefore, conclude that section 13128 of the General Code includes within its terms hams and sides of bacon when covered with burlap, paper, gelatin or cloth.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL—POWER TO COMPEL THE MAYOR TO ENFORCE ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS.

The council is without power of itself to compel the mayor to enforce ordinances and resolutions passed by it. Reference is made to remedies provided by the General Code for preferring charges before the council by the mayor against officers guilty of misconduct, and to those provisions of the General Code which provide for charges before the probate court against municipal officers for misconduct, and also to the remedy providing for a hearing before the governor against the mayor for misfeasance in office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. C. E. DEWALD, Legal Adviser, Crestline, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 14th you request my opinion as follows:

"Some time ago the council of our village passed the enclosed resolution pertaining to the police department. The mayor to date has refused to see that same is carried into effect.

"Will you kindly advise as to what rights and power a council of any village have in compelling the mayor to enforce ordinances or resolutions they may pass?"

A copy of the resolution referred to, and submitted with your letter is as follows:

"RESOLUTION

"Defining, regulating the duties of marshal and patrolman and regulation of police headquarters.

"Be it Resolved by the Council of the Village of Crestline, Ohio, a Majority of the Members Elected Thereto Concurring:

"Section One. That the night patrolmen with the exception of captain report for duty at 6 p. m. each evening and remain continuously on duty until 6 a. m. next morning.

"Section Two. That the captain of patrolmen report for duty at 7 p. m. each evening and remain continuously on duty until 7 a. m. the next morning or until relieved by the marshal.

"Section Three. That one patrolman be continuously on duty in police headquarters in town hall from 6 p. m. unto 7 a. m. each night unless called out on emergency matters pertaining to police duties.

"Section Four. That no curtain or curtains be drawn or placed over the lower half of the windows in police headquarters, except during police investigations. That a light be kept continuously burning in both rooms occupied by police.

"Section Five. That hall and rooms on first floor of the town hall, with exception of water works board room, be cared for by the police department; also the walks surrounding town hall be kept clean by police department, same to be done under supervision of marshal.

"This resolution to take effect and be in force on and after its passage."

In answering your question, I do not enter into the question of the validity of the resolution in question.

Your specific inquiry is with respect to the right and power of a council to compel a mayor to enforce ordinances and resolutions they may pass. Under section 4258 of the General Code, it is explicitly made the duty of the mayor to perform all duties prescribed by the by-laws and ordinances of the corporation, and to see that all ordinances, by-laws and resolutions are faithfully upheld and enforced.

Under section 4262 of the General Code, the mayor is required to "supervise the conduct of all officers of the corporation, and to inquire into and examine the grounds of all reasonable complaints against them, and to cause all their violations or neglect of duty to be promptly punished, or reported to the proper authority for correction."

Under section 4263 and following of the General Code, the mayor is empowered to file reports with council with respect to officers guilty of misconduct, whereupon trial of such officers is had before the council, which body may remove upon substantiation of the charges set forth. The mayor, furthermore, under section 4384 of the General Code, is empowered to remove for cause such patrolmen, night watchmen, deputy marshals, etc., as fail in their duties when the mayor cites such causes to council in writing.

Under Section 4385 of the General Code, the marshal is made the executive head, under the mayor, of the police force, and it is primarily the obligation of that official to see that such department is properly conducted, and that its individual members perform their specific duties. The marshal in so doing, however, by the terms of section 4385, is subject to the direction of the mayor.

It is clear, therefore, that the duties of seeing that a valid resolution of the nature of that presented by you is enforced, rest upon the mayor and the marshal.

There is no express power conferred by statute, however, upon council enabling that body as such to compel these officers to comply with their duties in this respect. It is council's primary function to enact legislation; the enforcement of such legislation rests with the executive department of the city government, in this case, the mayor and the marshal.

A remedy provided for non-performance of clear official obligation on the part of municipal officers is provided by the statutes by other methods. I have mentioned above the mayor's power to prefer charges against the marshal for misconduct with the council under section 4262 and following of the General Code. Under section 4670 and following of the General Code complaint under oath may be filed with the probate judge of the county against an officer of the corporation who has been guilty of misconduct, such complaint being signed by an elector and approved by four other electors of the corporation. After a trial upon such charges the court is empowered to remove such officers upon substantiation of the same. Provision is, furthermore, made under section 4268 and following of the General Code, for a hearing before the governor against a mayor upon charges of misconduct or gross neglect of duty, etc., in office.

In 103 O. L., p. 851, twenty per cent. of the electors of a village may file a complaint with the common pleas court against an officer of the municipal corporation for gross neglect of duty, misfeasance, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office, whereupon the court of common pleas may remove or suspend such officer.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE FOR SANITARY POLICE PENSION FUND.

Under section 4632, General Code, a municipal corporation having only one sanitary policeman, instead of a sanitary police force, is not authorized to provide a sanitary police pension fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. W. B. KILPATRICK, Member House of Representatives, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 16, 1914, you state that in Warren there is one sanitary police officer, that section 4632 of the General Code provides for a sanitary police pension fund, but the law anticipates a city with more than one policeman, and you inquire if there is any way under this law that a city council could provide means of giving a pension where only one policeman is employed.

Section 4632 reads as follows:

> "In any municipal corporation having a sanitary police force, supported in whole or in part at public expense, the council by ordinance may declare it necessary to establish and maintain a sanitary police pension fund. Thereupon a board of trustees, who shall be known as trustees of the sanitary police fund, shall be created which shall consist of a board or officer having charge or control of the health department in such municipality, and five persons, members of the sanitary police force, but upon petition of a majority of the members of the sanitary police force, such board or officer, as the case may be, may designate a less number than five to be elected trustees."

Section 4633 defines the manner in which trustees shall be chosen. In this section reference is had "to each person in the sanitary police force." You will observe that the word "police force" is used in the statute quoted, and the other sections referred to seem to contemplate that there shall be more than one policeman in order that a pension fund may be established. The word "force," used in the sense in which it appears in the statute, carries with it the same implication. It contemplates an organization of individuals, or, as defined in the Century Dictionary, "a union of individuals and means for a common purpose; a body of persons prepared for joint action of any kind."

These definitions would not describe a single individual, and I do not think there has been any such popular usage of the word force as would sanction its acceptance in any other sense than that expressed in the foregoing definition.

In White vs. Supervisors 105 Mich., 609, it is said:

> "A police force is an organization having the controlling mind by which its members may be made to act in concert."

With these considerations in mind, I am constrained to hold that section 4638 does not authorize the establishment of a sanitary police pension fund in a municipal corporation which has only one sanitary policeman instead of a sanitary police force.

An interesting question arises in this connection, however, upon the proposition that a municipal corporation might have the inherent right to establish a pension fund for its employes. It must be remembered that pensions for municipal services are sustained as constitutional upon the ground that legislation of this character is not a grant of a gratuity or charity but a recognition of an obligation founded upon services rendered. These payments after the expiration of a period of service are treated as in the nature of compensation for services previously rendered for which full and adequate compensation was not received at the time of the rendition of the services. It is said to be in effect pay withheld to induce long, continued and faithful service and the public is benefited by the encouraging of competent employes to remain in the public service and by retiring from such service those who become incapacitated from performing the duties as well as they might be performed by others more youthful or in greater physical or mental vigor. This doctrine is very clearly and lucidly expressed in section 430 of Mr. Dillon's work on "Municipal Corporations."

In Commonwealth vs. Walton 182, Pa., 373, it was held that a contribution to a pension fund association was for a proper municipal purpose. It was said to be a potent agency in securing and retaining the services of the most faithful and efficient class of men connected with that arm of municipal service in which every property owner and resident of the city was most vitally interested.

Now if the constitutionality of laws of this character is sustained upon the ground that such laws are for the benefit of the municipality, the city might be said to have the inherent power of establishing such fund without regard to state legislative authority, but as this question has not been decided in this state, and so far as I know, has never been here raised, I should not like to advise any municipality to proceed upon the assumption that it has any such power except as conferred by statute. The very fact that the statute itself authorizes the pensioning of certain public servants by a municipal corporation would seem to carry with it the implication that it was the intent of the general assembly that all other methods of creating pension funds were to be inhibited. In other words, the expression of the one was the exclusion of all others. This is one of the strong arguments against the theory which I have suggested with reference to the inherent power of the municipal corporation to provide for pensioning of employes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—MAY NOT ISSUE WARRANT TO DISBURSING OFFICER OF STATE DEPARTMENT—HOW SUCH WARRANT MUST BE ISSUED.

The auditor of state may not issue a warrant to a disbursing officer of a state department or institution upon a claim created by such department or institution in favor of a third party; such warrant must be issued to such third party, or to his legal assigns.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 7, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 7th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the auditor of state lawfully issue a warrant to the disbursing officer of a state department or institution upon a claim created by such department or institution in favor of a third party, the purpose being to permit the department in question to issue checks instead of warrants to its creditors; the intention being that the warrants so issued by the auditor of state shall be banked by the department or institution so that such checks can be issued?"

As a condition of this question it is supposed that the warrants to be issued if payable to the disbursing officer of the institution or department shall be predicated upon detailed and itemized vouchers, sufficient in all respects for auditing purposes. It is also understood that the object of such a scheme is to reduce the number of warrants required to be issued by permitting a single warrant to be drawn covering all the vouchers chargeable to any one specific appropriation account which happen to be presented at a given time.

It is further understood that the proposed plan does not involve the consent or authority of the person to whom payment is due.

You inquire further as to what would be the liability of the auditor of state in the event such a scheme were adopted, and in the event further that the bank employed by the department or institution for the described purpose should become insolvent.

Your question requires consideration of section 243, General Code, which provides as follows:

"The auditor of state shall examine each claim presented for payment from the state treasury, and, if he finds it legally due and that there is money in the treasury duly appropriated to pay it, he shall issue to the person entitled to receive the money thereon a warrant on the treasurer of state for the amount found due, take a receipt on the face of the claim for the warrant so issued, and file and preserve the claim in his office. He shall draw no warrant on the treasurer of state for any claim unless he finds it legal, and that there is money in the treasury which has been duly appropriated to pay it."

In practice extending over a large number of years the phrase "person entitled to receive the money thereon" used in the section as above quoted has been interpreted to mean a person in whose favor a claim is created by the state agency having authority to incur the liability and not the department or institution or officer creating the liability. Of course this interpretation really is the primary meaning of the phrase. I mention the practice, however, because the usual form of appropriation bills which has been employed by succeeding sessions of the general assembly has been such as possibly to give color to a condition to the effect that the appropriations are for the use of the various departments as such rather than to pay liabilities incurred by the various departments. Such a contention, however, in my judgment, could not be upheld in the face of the express language of section 243, General Code, and in the light of the uniform practice as I have described it.

Such being the meaning of the section above cited, then, it follows that your question must be answered generally in the negative. It is the duty of the auditor of state to issue his warrant to the person entitled to receive the money on a claim presented for payment from the state treasury, and this implies that the auditor of state is without authority to issue his warrant on account of a given liability, to any person other than the one in whose favor the liability exists. Of course the auditor of state may lawfully recognize an assignment of a voucher or a written agreement on the part of the person in whose favor the liability exists to permit the warrant to be issued to another as his representative. Such is the practice, for example, in the matter of the pay rolls of the various departments and the propriety of such practice is sanctioned by express legislative recognition through the medium of provisions found in the last budget appropriation bill to the effect that certain requisitions or vouchers may be presented by properly designated representatives of departments, institutions, etc. But your question is conditioned upon failure to secure the authority of the person in whose favor the liability exists.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the auditor of state may not, under the conditions mentioned by you, lawfully issue a warrant upon a claim created in favor of the third party by an institution or department of the state government except to such third party or his assigns.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the liability of the auditor of state in the event of the contingency mentioned by you in your second question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO REPLACE PAVING ON STREET AND SIDEWALKS DESTROYED BY THE CONSTRUCTION OF APPROACHES TO A BRIDGE WITHIN A MUNICIPALITY.

Where the replacing of a bridge by the county commissioners has necessitated the raising of the street of a municipality, and the county commissioners have entered into a contract with a contractor whereby the building of sidewalks and relaying of blocks in the approaches to said bridge is to be done, the county commissioners have the authority to complete the construction of the bridge approaches and sidewalks contracted for, providing that the paving on the sidewalks and streets was destroyed by the making of the approaches to the bridge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 8, 1914.

HON. CLYDE C. PORTER, City Solicitor, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of late date in which you inquire:

"Sometime during the fall of 1913, the county commissioners of Seneca county sold bonds for the construction of two bridges, Washington street and Perry street, within the city of Tiffin, and afterward let contracts for the construction of said bridges.

"The contract for the Washington street bridge provided for the building of the sidewalks and the relaying of the blocks on the approaches to said bridge. The contractor has practically completed this bridge and filled the approaches thereto. We have been informed that the commissioners have now taken the stand that they cannot relay the brick or construct the sidewalks on the approaches though the contract let by them and for which bonds were sold provided that the contractor should relay the brick to the approaches to the bridge and replace the sidewalks on the approaches to said bridge made necessary by the change in grade. * * *

"We might further say for your information that the contract let for the bridge provided for bridge two feet higher than the original bridge. This necessitates the raising of the grade of the streets for about 125 feet and this the city has done. We desire to know whether or not the city of Tiffin, under the circumstances detailed must pay for the paving and sidewalks necessitated by the raising of the bridge two feet by the county."

The sections of the General Code for consideration in answering your question are:

"Section 2421, G. C. The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners.

"Section 2422, G. C. Except as therein provided, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair, approaches or ways to all bridges named in the preceding section. But when the cost of the construction or repair of the approaches or ways to any such bridge does not exceed fifty dollars, such construction or repair shall be performed by the township trustees.

"Section 7444, G. C. The county commissioners shall keep in repair the portions of such roads within their respective counties, as are included within the corporate limits of a city or village in such counties, to points therein where the sidewalks have been curbed and guttered, and no further."

A consideration of these sections places the duty of constructing bridges and approaches upon the county commissioners, and this seems to have been conceded by the county authorities up to and until after making the contract for the Washington street bridge.

You state that the new bridge is located some two feet higher than the old bridge, thus necessitating a change of street grades for about 125 feet, which the city has done; and as I understand, the commissioners have filled the approach to the level of the new grade, but deny power or duty to place the sidewalk upon the approach. Nothing is said as to whether the approach to the bridge was taken out by the flood when the bridge was destroyed, nor what was the condition of the approach and the pavement thereon, when the contract was let for the construction of the bridge.

Assuming that the flood did not destroy the approach to the bridge, and that it, with the pavement thereon, was intact when the bridge contract was let, a very different question is presented from what would exist in the event of the approaches and sidewalks thereon having been destroyed by the flood. In other language, if the bridge, the approaches thereto and sidewalks thereon were all destroyed by the flood, the replacing or rebuilding of them would fall to the lot of those whose duty it was to originally construct them, and then it would be the duty of the county to rebuild the bridge and its approaches and the city to replace the pavements on the approaches leading to the bridge.

Upon this question the case of Slusser vs. City of Sidney, 11 O. N. P., n. s., 297, is cited and relied upon, but to my mind, it is not in point and the language of Mather J., to which my attention has been called, appears to me to be purely obiter. However, I am of the opinion that the case of Saunders vs. Gun Plains township, 76 Mich., 183, is in point and to the effect that as an elementary proposition, the pavement upon the approach to a bridge is not such part of either the bridge or the approach as to make it the duty of the county commissioners, in the case under consideration, to construct it, but such duty would primarily rest with the city.

However, this does not necessarily answer your question, for the reason that this is not original construction; is not, so far as I am advised, the rebuilding and replacing pavements or sidewalks destroyed by a flood, but the reconstruction of a bridge so destroyed and the changing of a street grade upon the approach to such bridge made necessary by the acts of the commissioners in raising the level of the bridge; such being the case, it is not only exceedingly doubtful whether the matter is to be governed by the strict and literal legal rights and duties of the parties, or whether it is to be controlled by the broad principle that where one party, by his act, destroys a portion of a public way, in the lawful exercise of a power granted, the person so acting should be held liable to place such public way in the same, or substantially the same condition as before the doing of the act. Such was the view taken by the commissioners when, as you state, "the contract let by them and for which bonds were sold provided that the contractor should relay the brick to the approaches to the bridge and replace the sidewalks on the approaches made necessary by the change of grade."

Taking this view of the matter, I am of the opinion that the commissioners should complete the construction of the bridge, approaches and sidewalks, as contracted for, and should make no claim against the city for the doing of the same.

Of course, this opinion is based upon the assumption that the pavement on the approach to the bridge was not destroyed by the flood and the paving in question was not made necessary by the flood, but by the action of the commissioners in raising the level of the bridge, thus necessitating a raising of the street and pavement level on the approach, and the building of a new pavement thereon.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO LIQUIDATE AN INDEBTEDNESS OF THE COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY WHEN SUCH INDEBTEDNESS HAS BEEN CAUSED BY PLACING IMPROVEMENTS ON FAIR GROUNDS.

The county commissioners may under authority of a vote of the people liquidate an indebtedness of the county agricultural society, when the same amounts to $15,000 or more, and if the indebtedness amounts to less than $15,000, and has been caused by placing improvements on the fair grounds, the commissioners may contribute such sum as will equal half the cost of the purchase and improvement, and apply the same to the liquidation of such indebtedness, and under authority of a vote of the people may contribute more than half of such cost and so apply it, providing the same can be done by a levy of taxes at a rate not exceeding half a mill.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 8, 1914.

The Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago you submitted to this department a question asked of the commission by the secretary of the Muskingum county agricultural society. Your letter of submission stated a general question relative to the power of county commissioners to levy taxes or appropriate money to pay debts incurred by agricultural societies. I find, however, that the statutes are such that it will be most convenient to take the specific case submitted by the Muskingum county agricultural society as a basis of my discussion.

That question is as follows:

The title to the Muskingum county fair grounds is vested in the agricultural society. It was purchased so long ago that the nature of the proceedings had at that time cannot now be ascertained; however, it appears from the records of the county commissioners that the latter have repeatedly entered upon their journal their consent and approval to the mortgaging of the fair grounds by the agricultural society. It also appears that on numerous occasions the commissioners have levied taxes and paid off such mortgage indebtedness.

At the present time, the fair grounds are encumbered by mortgage, given as security for money borrowed for the purpose of placing buildings and improvements on the grounds.

May the commissioners lawfully levy taxes for the purpose of paying such indebtedness?

I have considered the following sections of the General Code:

"Section 9885. County societies which have been, or may hereafter be organized, are declared bodies corporate and politic, and as such, shall be capable of suing and being sued, and of holding in fee simple such real estate as they have heretofore purchased, or may hereafter purchase, as sites whereon to hold their fairs. They may mortgage the grounds of the society for the purpose of renewing or extending pre-existing debts, and for the purpose of furnishing money to purchase additional land. But if the county commissioners have paid money out of the county treasury to aid in the purchase of the site of such grounds, no mortgage shall be given without the consent of such commissioners."

From this section it appears that if, as is stated, the county commissioners have repeatedly given formal approval, and consent to the creation of incumbrances against the fair grounds, it must be that originally the county commissioners paid money out of the county treasury to aid in the purchase of the site.

"Section 9887. When a county society has purchased, or leased real estate whereon to hold fairs for a term of not less than twenty years, or the title to the grounds is vested in fee in the county, but the society has the control and management of the lands and buildings; if they think it for the interests of the county, and society, the county commissioners may pay out of the county treasury the same amount of money for the purchase or lease and improvement of such site as is paid by such society or individuals for that purpose, and may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county sufficient to meet such payment.

"Sec. 9863. In counties wherein there is a county agricultural society which has purchased a site whereon to hold fairs, or if the title to such grounds is vested in fee in the county, and such society is indebted fifteen thousand dollars or more, upon the presentation of a petition signed by not less than five hundred resident electors of the county praying for the submission to the electors of the county of the question whether or not county bonds shall be issued and sold to liquidate such indebtedness, such commissioners, within ten days thereafter by resolution shall fix a date which shall be within thirty days, upon which the question of issuing and selling such bonds, in amount and denomination such as are necessary for the purpose in view, shall be submitted to the electors of the county. * * *

"Sec. 9889. Such election shall be held at the regular place of voting in the county and conducted, canvassed and certified except as otherwise provided by law, as are elections for the election of county officers. * * * If a majority of the voters voting upon the question of issuing the bonds vote in favor thereof, then and not otherwise they shall be issued, and the tax hereinafter mentioned be levied.

"Sec. 9891. Such bonds shall be issued for a period of not less than ten nor more than twenty years. The county commissioners thereupon shall levy a tax upon all the taxable property on the duplicate of the county to pay such bonds as they mature and the interest thereon, at the rate and for such length of time as may be necessary for the purpose.

"Sec. 9892. From the proceeds arising from the sale of such bonds, the county commissioners shall pay off and liquidate the indebtedness for which they were so sold.

"Sec. 9894. When a county or a county agricultural society, owns or holds under a lease, real estate used as a site whereon to hold fairs, and the county agricultural society therein has the control and management of such lands and buildings, for the purpose of encouraging agricultural fairs, the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society annually levy taxes of not exceeding a tenth of one mill upon all taxable property of the county, but in no event to exceed the sum of one thousand five hundred dollars, which sum shall be paid by the treasurer of the county to the treasurer of the agricultural society, upon an order from the county auditor duly issued therefor. Such commissioners shall pay out of the treasury any sum from money in the general fund not otherwise appropriated, in anticipation of such levy.

"Sec. 9895. If a county society and the county commissioners decide that the interests of the society and county demand an appropriation from the county treasury for the purchase and improvement of county fair grounds greater than that authorized by the preceding section, or without action of or purchase by the society, the commissioners may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county, the amount of which they shall fix, but shall not exceed half a mill thereon, in addition to the amount authorized in the preceding section to be paid for such purpose.

"Sec. 9896. No such tax shall be levied until the question as to the amount is submitted by the commissioners to the qualified electors of the county at some general election, a notice of which specifying the amount to be levied, has been given at least thirty days previous to such election, in one or more newspapers published and of general circulation in the county. Those voting at the election in favor of the tax shall have written or printed on their ballots 'Agricultural tax, Yes,' and those voting against it, 'Agricultural tax, No.' If a majority of the votes cast be in favor of paying such tax, it may be levied and collected as other taxes.

"Sec. 9898. When a society is dissolved or ceases to exist, in a county where payments have been made for real estate, or improvements thereon, or for the liquidation of indebtedness, for the use of such society, all such real estate and improvements shall vest in fee simple in the county by which the payments were made.

"Sec. 9899. The county commissioners of a county may keep the buildings owned by the county agricultural society or county insured, if deemed proper by them, for the benefit of such society, or the county, as the case may be.

"Sec. 9908. When the commissioners of a county have paid, or pay, money out of the county treasury for the purchase of real estate as a site for an agricultural society whereon to hold its fairs, the society shall not encumber such real estate with any debt, by mortgage or otherwise, without the consent of the commissioners duly entered upon their journal. * * *"

Other sections in paria materia might be quoted showing that where the county has advanced money to aid in the purchase of the fair grounds, or their improvement, the agricultural society does not hold perfect title thereto. Thus, it is provided in such sections that such fair grounds may not be sold without the consent of the county, when the purpose of sale is to secure funds to procure another site. However, I think it is sufficiently apparent, from what has been quoted, that when the proceeds of county taxes have been used to aid in the purchase of fair grounds, the grounds, themselves, are, in a remote and qualified sense, county property.

Looking now for an answer to your question, in the provisions above quoted, I observe that sections 9888 to 9892, supra, provide very clearly for the assumption by the county of an indebtedness of an agricultural society, amounting to $15,000.00 or more, by the issuance of bonds, upon the approval of the electors of the county. If the facts in a given case show that the indebtedness to be liquidated amounts to $15,000.00 or more, then it would appear that the only manner in which the county commissioners could lawfully liquidate such indebtedness, at least by issuing bonds therefor, would be under authority of the vote of the electors; but it would likewise appear that the commissioners clearly have authority to proceed in this manner when the facts are as above stated.

It would seem unreasonable to hold that the county commissioners, even under sanction of the vote of the electors, would have authority to levy taxes for the assumption of an indebtedness of $15,000.00 or more, but would not have authority to levy taxes for the liquidation of a similar indebtedness amounting to less than $15,000.00. Of course, such a result might conceivably follow from the plain terms, or lack of them, used in the statutes themselves. But if other statutes than those above specifically referred to by fair inference, afford power to the commissioners to liquidate indebtedness of a county agricultural society, less in amount than $15,000 00, it would seem that some presumption, at least, that such is the legislative intention is afforded by consideration of the fact that explicit authority is given to the commissioners to assume an indebtedness exceeding $15,000.00 in amount, and to issue bonds therefor, upon the vote of the electors.

It seems to me that provisions of this nature are found in sections 9887, 9895 and 9896 of the General Code. These sections, as they now appear, seem somewhat at variance. One of them authorizes the county commissioners to pay, out of the county treasury, for the improvement of a fair ground site owned by the agricultural society, an amount equal to that advanced by the society for such purpose. The other group of sections, however, provides that, in addition to the current levy in aid of the society, the commissioners may make an additional levy for the purpose of purchase and improvement of grounds, provided the electors of the county approve the proposition.

It appears, however, that the two sections or groups of sections were not intended, at least, to be at variance with one another, because they were originally all a part of the same act of the legislature. I find that reference to the original act serves to clear up the difficulties encountered; and I further find that there is such an ambiguity in the statutes, as they now stand, as to justify reference to the original act, for the purpose of determining the meaning of the present law on well understood principles of statutory construction.

The original act is found in 68 O. L., 50, and is in form amendatory of section 3 of an act supplementary to an act for the encouragement of agriculture, passed February 15, 1853, as amended, April 8, 1868. Without quoting all of its provisions it suffices to say that the first sentence is substantially the equivalent of the present section 9887, General Code, and the remaining provisions are substantially the equivalent of section 9895, et seq., General Code (although what is now section 9887 has been subsequently amended; 84 O. L., 230).

When the statutes were codified in 1880, the first part of this act became section 3702, R. S., and the latter part became section 3703, et seq., when it was that the phrase "the preceding section" was first used in what is now section 9895, General Code. (See. R. S. of 1880, sec. 3703.)

Subsequently, the intervening sections, now designated by sections 9888-9894, inclusive, were independently enacted, receiving publishers' section numbers 3702-1-3702-4, inclusive, and 3702b.

Despite the insertion of these sections out of their appropriate place, I am of the opinion that the words "the preceding section" continue to mean what they originally meant, and as they are found in section 9895, they refer not to section 9894 but to section 9887.

The joint effect of section 9887 and 9895, et seq., General Code, may be described as follows:

The county commissioners may, if they think it for the interest of the county and their society, pay out of the county treasury, without a vote of the people, an amount equal to the amount expended by the agricultural society, for the purchase and improvement of the fair ground site. This may be done at any time, regardless of when the expenditure, on the part of the society, was made. Of course, the law does not contemplate that the society shall be reimbursed for expenditures already made by it; but where the grounds have been purchased or the improvement made and the society has paid one-half the cost and expense thereof, the remainder being unpaid, the commissioners may act.

Then sections 9815, et seq., have the effect of authorizing commissioners, on agreement of the society, to pay a greater portion of the total cost and expense of purchasing and improving county fair grounds than one-half thereof, if such payment can be provided for by a levy of not to exceed one-half a mill on the taxable property of the county, and if, further, such tax is authorized by the affirmative vote of the electors.

While, therefore, the county commissioners are not authorized by any provision of law other than those of sections 9888, et seq., General Code, to levy taxes or borrow money directly for the purpose of liquidating the indebtedness of an agricultural society, yet, if it appears that the county has not paid one-half the cost of the purchase and improvement of the site used as a fair ground, and primarily owned by the society, and the grounds or improvement are not paid for, the commissioners may lawfully levy taxes and appropriate money for the purpose of having the county pay such part; and if it appears that the county has already paid one-half the cost of such improvement of the fair ground property, the commissioners may submit to the vote of the electors the proposition of levying taxes at a rate of not exceeding one-half mill on the county duplicate for the purpose of assisting, further, in the purchase and improvement of such site. The proceeds of such levies, if made, should be, of course, applied, directly or indirectly, to such purchase and improvement; but, in my judgment, the liquidation of indebtedness, incurred in the improvement of the grounds, would constitute the proper application of such funds.

As I have intimated, the interpretation which I have placed upon the statutes is a very liberal one and is justified, principally, by consideration of the fact that the liquidation of an indebtedness, amounting to $15,000.00 or more, is specifically authorized by statute so that it would appear that the sections which I have been discussing should receive such an interpretation as to permit the liquidation of an indebtedness of less than that amount.

Aside from the statutes which I have mentioned, I find no authority of law enabling the county commissioners, either directly or indirectly, to levy taxes for the liquidation of an indebtedness by an agricultural society, for placing improvements upon a fair ground.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BONDS ISSUED CONTRARY TO LAW IN EXCESS OF THE ONE PER CENT. LIMIT—BONA FIDE HOLDER—DUTY TO PAY SUCH BONDS—ILLEGAL TO LEVY TAX TO PAY SUCH BONDS WHERE NO OBLIGATION HAS BEEN CREATED.

Bonds issued in excess of the one per cent. limit, provided in the Longworth act, may nevertheless, be valid obligations of a municipality in the hands of bona fide holders, if the amount of the single issue exceeds the limit, and if the ordinance, or the bonds contain recitals to the effect that all provisions of law have been complied with.

The same rule applies in the federal and state courts, and such a bona fide holder can compel the levy of a tax to pay bonds so issued.

It would be legal to levy taxes for the payment of such bonds so illegally issued, under the circumstances stated; but where no obligation has been created, it would be illegal to levy taxes to pay the bonds, and under the circumstances, as stated, the budget commissioner and the county auditor might lawfully refuse to extend a levy certified by the council for the purpose of paying bonds, which do not constitute a lawful obligation of the municipality even though it is no part of the statutory duty of the budget commission to pass upon the regularity of the bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 8, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection & Supervision of Public Office, Department of Auditor of State Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 7th, asking an opinion upon the following questions:

> "If a municipality issued bonds without a vote of the people in excess of the one per cent. limit provided in the Longworth act, may council or the budget commission permit a levy to be made upon the taxable property of the municipality to meet all or a portion of the said indebtedness thus illegally issued and floated?
> "Said bonds were issued for the construction of a municipal waterworks plant, and the revenues resulting from the operation of said plant are not sufficient to meet the interest charges. In the event that the council or budget commission refuses to levy a tax to meet said interest charges, would mandamus action in the common pleas court lie to compel said council or budget commission to provide for such indebtedness?
> "If said bonds were held by non-residents of the state, would payment be enforced by the federal courts?"

Your first question may be answered generally by saying that it is at least the right of the proper taxing authorities of the municipal corporation, and other officers having power respecting municipal levies, to cause taxes to be levied for the payment of any bonded indebtedness which constitutes a binding obligation of the municipality. (Section 5506, General Code.)

This being true, it follows that, unless the fact that the Longworth act limitations have been violated, together with the other facts surrounding the transaction, is sufficient under the given circumstances to absolve the municipality from total or partial liability on account of the bonds which have been issued, it would be lawful, notwithstanding such violation of the law governing the issuance of the bonds, for the taxing officers to levy taxes for their payment.

The answer to your first question, then, becomes dependent upon considerations suggested by the form of your second question. The sections of the Longworth act to which you refer impose certain limitations upon the bonded indebtedness of municipal corporations. Unquestionably, from the point of view of the municipality and its taxpayers, the issuance of bonds in violation of these limitations is unlawful, and unless paramount rights intervene it is the right of the public to refuse to be bound by the obligation thus attempted to be incurred.

This being the public right it would seem also to follow that it is the duty of the public officer charged with the raising of revenues to refuse to levy taxes for the purpose of providing for the payment of such unlawfully issued bonds, on the theory that the bonds are simply void. Such is, indeed, the inference from section 3953, a part of the Longworth act, which requires an annual sinking fund and interest levy "for the payment of all bonds herein authorized."

But municipal bonds are negotiable instruments; and the power to issue them as such carries with it the liability on the part of the municipality to be governed by the rules of law peculiarly applicable to such instruments, qualified only by such considerations as may arise out of the fact that the municipal government is a public agency with limited powers.

The rules to which the municipality, as a maker of a negotiable security, is subject, may be summarized by the familiar statement that despite an infirmity in the original issuance of such securities, they may constitute valid, binding obligations of the corporation in the hands of one who, for value, has purchased them before maturity without notice of the infirmities which they originally possessed. This rule is opposed in a sense by the rule above referred to, viz.: that those who deal directly or indirectly with municipal agents are charged with notice of the law governing their action and with the limited extent of the authority which they possess, and to bind their principal, the public. Really, then, the opposite force of these two rules makes the ultimate question in each case depend upon the question of notice. Of what is the purchaser or holder of negotiable bonds charged with notice?

In Dillon on municipal corporations, volume 2, section 924, will be found an admirable summary of the application of the rules surrounding this question to the case of bonds issued under the restraint of debt limitation.

It will be found by consulting this author that, regardless of the form of the security, there are certain things, the knowledge of which, all takers of such securities are charged and put upon their inquiry. These are the public records specified in the law under which the bonds are issued. Consulting the chapter of the General Code authorizing the issuance of bonds, we find the following reference to specific public records:

> "Section 3918. Bonds issued under authority of this chapter shall express upon their face the purpose for which they were issued, and under what ordinance.
> "Section 3940. Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation, as listed and assessed for taxation."

Two public records are here specified, viz., the ordinance under which the bonds are issued, and the tax duplicate of the municipality. The one would notify the holder of the bonds as to whether or not two-thirds of all the members elected to council had concurred in its passage as required by section 3939, and as to whether or not a vote of the electors had been taken as required in certain contingencies by section 3940.

It would also charge the holder of the bond with notice as to the total amount of the whole issue of bonds of which his particular securities are a part. The other would charge the purchaser with notice as to the amount of bonds which the municipality might issue at one time and, therefore, within any one year, without a vote of the people.

By putting together the facts of which he would thus have constructive knowledge, the puchaser of the bonds would know whether or not the single issue itself exceeded in amount one per cent. of the tax duplicate of the municipality; and he would likewise know whether or not a vote of the people had been taken. So that if the amount of the single issue itself exceeded the one per cent. without counting other bonds issued in the same year, the purchaser would be bound to know that the bonds were invalid and could not claim to be a bona fide holder of them.

Buchanan vs. Litchfield, 102 U. S., 278.
Dickson County, vs. Field, 111 U. S., 83.
Lake County vs. Graham, 130 U. S., 674.
Sutliff vs. Lake County, 147 U. S., 230.
Nesbitt vs. Riverside, Ind. District, 144 U. S., 610.

As against such notice as this, the purchaser of the bonds cannot claim reliance upon recitals upon the face of the bonds, which, under circumstances hereinafter to be discussed, might work an estoppel against the municipality.

Therefore, it follows that under the circumstances already discussed, viz., where the single issue exceeds the limitation without counting other bonds issued in the same year, the bonds would be absolutely void, and no one could acquire as against the municipality any rights whatever under them as such; so that they would neither form the basis of a valid tax within the meaning of your first question, nor the foundation for an action in mandamus or otherwise as inquired in your second question

Before leaving the question, permit me to say, that in my judgment, waterworks, bonds issued for the construction of a plant (which carries with it the idea that there has been no plant in existence theretofor) are always to be counted at the time of their issue in ascertaining the one-per cent. limitation of the Longworth act. The section which exempts them under certain circumstances from consideration in ascertaining the limitations of that law describes the exempted bonds as follows:

Section 3949, General Code, paragraph f.:

> "f. Bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks when the income from such waterworks is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges, and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due."

It is perfectly apparent that the bonds do not acquire the attribute of exemption from consideration until it is established as a fact that the income from the waterworks is sufficient for the purpose mentioned. The anticipated sufficiency of waterworks revenues will not serve to accomplish this result, nor is this conclusion shaken by consideration of the fact that the sufficiency of such revenues for the purpose stated could hardly be ascertained in a single year following the issuance of the bonds; because purchase and construction are not the only kinds of waterworks bonds mentioned in the paragraph. Improvement and extension bonds are likewise mentioned, and as such bonds would naturally be issued while the waterworks was a going concern, it would follow as to them that the one-per-cent. limit could have perfect application, and, hence, the exemption of such bonds from consideration in ascertaining the one-per-cent. limit is not a vain thing.

As to the purchase and construction bonds issued when there is no waterworks in existence, however, I am persuaded that the one-per-cent. limitation is concerned. That limitation differs from the other two limitations prescribed by the Longworth act in certain essential particulars, which I need not dwell upon. Suffice it to say that the limitation is upon the gross indebtedness created in a year. If the waterworks is not being operated so that it can be ascertained what the income is, or whether or not it is sufficient to satisfy the requirements of paragraph "f" of section 3949, it is obvious that all purchase and construction bonds issued for waterworks purposes under the circumstances supposed, must, at the out-set, be counted in ascertaining the one-per-cent. limitation and are themselves subject thereto.

Consideration of the language of the one-per-cent. limitation as compared with the other two which relate to the outstanding net indebtedness, net indebtedness being computed by ascertaining the difference between the par value of the bonds and the amount held in the sinking fund for their redemption, it at once appears that the fact that premiums, accrued interest and the balance in the improvement fund may reduce the net indebtedness created by an issue of bonds, is not material in so far as the one-per-cent. limitation is concerned; that limitation, as already stated, being upon the gross indebtedness created in a given year without deduction for credits to the sinking fund on account of the bond issue.

From all these considerations it follows that in the case of waterworks construction bonds where no plant has been in operation, and where it cannot be determined at the time of the issuance whether or not the waterworks is satisfying paragraph "f" of section 3949, General Code, all the facts required to put the purchaser of such bonds upon his notice as to their infirmity would appear from the tax duplicate and a recital on the face of the bonds showing the total amount of the issue. I mention these facts because were the situation otherwise, and if the illegality of the bond issue was dependent upon the application of paragraph "f" of section 3949, i e., upon whether or not the waterworks was producing sufficient income for the purpose therein stated; and if the one-per-cent. limitation applied to the net indebtedness instead of to the gross indebtedness, then it would not be true that a purchaser of bonds could tell by looking at the face of the bonds and taking cognizance of the amount of the tax duplicate that the limitations of the law had been violated even where, as in the case thus far supposed, the amount of the bond issue itself is in excess of one per cent. of the duplicate. Instead, the legality of the bonds would depend upon facts of an entirely different nature within the rule subsequently to be discussed in this opinion, and under such circumstances, appropriate recitals upon the face of the bonds might estop a municipality from contesting their validity in the hands of subsequent purchasers for value before maturity.

But no statute requires any specified public record to be kept by the municipality showing the amount of bonds issued in a given year within the meaning of the rule as stated by Judge Dillon. Therefore, if the municipality's violation of the 1% limit of the Longworth act occurs by reason of successive issues in the same year, and not by reason of the single issue involved, an innocent purchaser would not be advised by any such public record, or by anything which would come to his notice as mere possessor of the bonds, that there was a defect underlying their issuance. He might, of course, satisfy himself as to the existence of such defects by examining the other ordinances of the municipality. This he is required to do at his own peril, unless there is something on the face of the bonds imputing compliance with the necessary requirements of law. That is to say, if the face of the bonds or the ordinance to which they are required to refer on their face by section 3918, General Code, does not advise the purchaser that they have been lawfully issued, he is put upon his inquiry; but if sufficient recitals are there found he is excused from making any such inquiry, and becomes a bona fide holder without notice of such infirmities as might be disclosed by such an inquiry.

This is what is known as the estoppel of the municipality by recitals made by its officers from asserting as against such a bona fide holder the defense which it might otherwise have. As stated by Judge Dillon, such a recital must be in terms sufficient to satisfy the statutes themselves, and to lead the purchaser to believe, in the face of facts, with notice of which he is charged, that the bonds are valid.

Whatever may be the rule as to the exact form of such a recital, which will be sufficient for this purpose, it is clear that if there is an explicit declaration to the effect that all the requirements of law have been complied with in the issuance of the bonds, the same will amount to an insurance that the bonds are within the statutory limit.

Judge Dillon also lays down the rule that, the fact, against which as a defense an estoppel is claimed by reason of a recital in the bond, or in the ordinance, must be one, which, either expressly or by necessary or reasonable implication, the issuing officers have authority to adjudicate and determine.

Underlying the doctrine of estoppel is the familiar rule that the adjudications of judicial and administrative officers are not open to collateral attack. (State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 27 O. S., 96, 97.)

If the recital itself amounts to a finding and determination relative to a fact which the issuers are expressly or by necessary implication authorized to find and determine on behalf of a municipality, it is the recital of the municipality; otherwise it is a mere unauthorized statement and cannot bind the public.

The statutes, as I have stated, do not confer upon council express authority to make recitals either in the ordinance or on the face of the bonds. However, by conferring the power upon council, subject to the limitations, they necessarily repose in council, the duty of determining as a condition of each separate exercise thereof, whether the statute has been complied with thereby.

It has been held in State ex rel. vs. Board of Education 27 O. S. 96, that when a municipal authority having power to issue bonds, proceeds to exercise such power and send into the market bonds upon which the affirmation appears that they are under and in pursuance of a given law, that affirmation cannot afterwards be denied as against a bona fide holder. Similarly in State vs. Commissioners, 37 O. S., 526, it is held that where a municipal authority (in this case the board of county commissioners) is given power to issue bonds only under certain conditions, there is implied the power to pass upon the question as to whether or not the conditions exist and to incorporate a finding to the effect that they do exist, as one of the recitals on the face of the bonds.

Again, in Commissioners vs. Nichols, 14 O. S. 260, at page 271, Peck, C. J., used the following language:

> "No person or tribunal is expressly invested by the statute with power to determine this question, and we are, therefore, of the opinion that the statute, in imposing the duty upon the commissioners, of issuing the bonds if a sufficient sum is provided, and prohibiting them from doing so if the sum is insufficient, necessarily invests them with the power to determine as to the sufficiency of the means provided for the completion of the road."

These decisions support the conclusion that under a statute like sections 3939 et seq., General Code, and under circumstances like those which we are now discussing (that is where the question whether or not the limitation is exceeded, depends upon the counting of other bonds issued during the year without a vote of the people, and is not foreclosed by the amount of the issue itself) the council has necessarily the implied authority to determine whether or not the jurisdictional facts underlying its action exist; and if a recital with respect to those facts is incorporated in the bonds, such recital is binding upon the municipality and estops it from asserting the contrary as a defense against the bonds in the hands of bona fide purchasers who have or may have relied upon such recitals.

Before passing from this subject, I beg leave to state that I have considered in this question the effect of article XII, section 11 of the constitution taken in connection with the general provisions of the Smith law imposing limitations upon the taxing power. If my opinion is desired with reference to whether or not recitals on the face of the bonds that all provisions of the constitution and laws have been complied with etc., will estop a municipality from contesting the validity of the bonds in the hands of bona fide purchasers, where the tax limitations are such that the provision for levying and collecting sufficient taxes to pay bonds cannot be made, I shall be pleased to consider this question further.

From all that has been said it follows, of course, that where the total amount of the particular issue, does not of itself exceed 1% of the tax duplicate, the municipality may be estopped by a recital to the effect that all provisions of law have been complied with in the issuance of the bonds, found upon the face of each bond, to assert against the claim of a bona fide holder thereof the defense that the 1% limitation of the Longworth act has been exceeded.

In such event, and to the extent at least that the bonds may have passed into the hands of bona fide holders, it would be not only lawful for, but obligatory upon the council and the budget commission to permit a levy to be made upon the taxable property of the municipality to meet the indebtedness, though the same had been illegally created.

In this connection it may be stated that actual notice on the part of a subsequent taker is not sufficient to deprive him of the rights of a bona fide holder where he has purchased from one who might assert such title.

The question as to whether such action on the part of the council or the budget commission could be enforced by mandamus in the state courts may be answered as follows:

The federal courts have not always distinguished between fundamental lack of power, as in the case of the issuance of bonds without any authority whatsoever, and mere defective issuance as where the power exists, but may be exercised only under certain circumstances. The courts of this state have made this distinction quite clearly, I think, with respect to bonds issued without any authority whatever, the Ohio courts have applied the logical rule, that the bonds are totally void even in the hands of so-called bona fide holders; for the reason that all persons are charged with notice of the purposes for which bonds may be issued by a municipal corporation and of the constitution and laws of the state. But with respect to more defective execution of authority which is clearly granted, the courts of Ohio have followed the federal rule, as is evident from the authorities already cited.

The question then is as to nature of the violation of a debt limit. Does it constitute a fundamental lack of power or a case of defective execution of power? The supreme court of the United States has treated it as the latter. There are no decisions in Ohio under the Longworth act, but those already cited seem to establish the conclusion that the trend of judicial thought in this state is that the observance of a debt limit is a mere condition precedent, or rather, an incident to a power granted rather than the excessive issuance of bonds being an instance of a total lack of power. Thus, in State vs. Commissioners, supra, a statute authorized certain road improvement proceedings to be instituted only upon the petition of a majority of the land owners resident along and adjacent to the line of the road. A case was presented in which proof was offered to the effect that a majority of the land owners had not subscribed the petition; nevertheless, the county was held to be estopped as against the bona fide holder from asserting its defense.

The general rule is that in the case of bonds not issued under a law providing for a specific tax levy, mandamus to compel a general tax levy will not lie until the municipality has defaulted and the bond holder has put his claim in judgment. In other words, such general rule is to the effect that the remedy by mandamus is virtually a proceeding in aid of execution. However, it appears that in some of the cases above cited mandamus was entertained at the suit of a bona fide holder to compel a tax levy without a preceding judgment. (State vs. Commissioners, supra; State vs. Board of Education, supra.) Under these authorities it appears that the rule in Ohio differs from the general rule, and that the right to the issuance of a writ of mandamus is not dependent upon the securing of a previous judgment.

However this may be, it is sufficient for the purpose of your question to say that whether before or after judgment, a bona fide holder of the bonds would be entitled to the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel an appropriate tax levy for their payment in the courts of the state, as the state courts have applied the same rule as that followed by the federal courts in such cases. From the decisions already cited it follows, too, that if bonds were held by non-residents of the state, so that the federal courts might have jurisdiction, and if such bond holders were bona fide purchasers relying upon appropriate recitals on the face of the bonds to such an effect as to estop the municipality from asserting its defense against them, payment of the bonds could be enforced by the federal courts.

If you have in mind the power of the budget commission to question the legality of a given tax levy sought to be made by council when the limitations of the Smith law are not in danger of being exceeded so that the budget commission really has no official duties in the premises, but the levy is, nevertheless, clearly illegal, I beg to state that in my judgment if a given levy is separable from the remaining levies of the municipality and does not merely enter into a general levy for a given purpose by way of increasing the amount thereof—in other words, if the levy can be separated from the other levies of the municipality and identified—and if the levy is clearly illegal, the county auditor or the budget commission (in short any of the officers whose action follows that of the council), can assuredly refuse to extend such an illegal levy, for the only remedy of council to compel such an extension would be by action in mandamus; and inasmuch as the writ of mandamus would only issue where the relator's right is clear, it follows of course, that such an action could not be maintained.

I think it follows from this too, that if the budget commission or the county auditor knowing the illegality of a given levy, cannot be compelled to extend it, they can likewise be enjoined from extending it, for under sections 12075, et seq., General Code, special provision is made for enjoining illegal levies. Such an action is to be instituted primarily against the county auditor. So that if the budget commission and the county auditor cannot be compelled to put on an illegal levy; and if the county auditor can be enjoined from extending such a levy; from these considerations it seems to follow that notwithstanding the silence of the Smith law in the premises, and notwithstanding that the primary and real or only function of the budget commission is to enforce the rate limitations without paying any attention to the legality of levies certified to them, nevertheless, it is the duty of that body, in the broad sense, to give heed to such considerations, and to refuse to approve and cause to be extended a levy which is known to be illegal, regardless of the necessity of so doing for any of the purposes of the Smith law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SAVINGS BANKS—RIGHT TO INVEST THREE-TENTHS OF THEIR TEN PER CENT. RESERVE ON TIME DEPOSITS, IN SECURITIES.

Under amended section 9764, savings banks may invest three-tenths of their total of ten per cent. reserve on time deposits in securities named in said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 9, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 2, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not amended section 9764 provides that savings banks may invest three-tenths of their total of 10 per cent. reserve on time deposits in certain municipal bonds."

Section 9764, General Code, as amended by an act passed February 6, 1914, 104 O. L., 186, is as follows:

> "Savings banks shall keep as reserve at least ten per cent. of their time deposits, and at least fifteen per cent. of their demand deposits; at least six per cent. of that part of such deposits which is payable on demand, and at least two per cent. of that part of such deposits which are time deposits shall be kept in the vaults of the bank in lawful money, national bank notes, and gold or silver certificates issued by the United States; not more than three-tenths of such reserve for time deposits may be invested in the securities named in paragraphs 'b' and 'c' of section 9758 of the General Code or the bonds of any city or county within this state; that part of such reserve not so kept or invested shall be kept subject to demand in other banks or trust companies, as designated by resolution of the board of directors for that purpose, a copy of which, upon its adoption, shall be forthwith certified to the superintendent of banks and the depositary thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the superintendent of banks. If the superintendent of banks withholds his approval, appeal may be made in the manner provided in section 9759 of the General Code."

Under this section as it stands savings banks must keep a reserve of at least ten per cent. of their time deposits. This ten per cent, for the purpose of determining the meaning of the rest of the section, may be treated as an entity, that is as a total reserve. Of this total reserve three-tenths may be invested in the securities named in this section, that is, suppose the total reserve of a savings bank, on its time deposits, amounted to $100,000, three-tenths of this, or $30,000, could be invested in the securities specified in this section.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND OF NOTARY APPLICANT—FEE FOR CLERKS OF COURT FOR CERTIFYING UNDER SEAL TO THE GENUINENESS OF THE SIGNATURE OF SUCH BOND.

The clerks of courts may charge for certifying, under seal, to the sufficiency of a bond of a notary applicant, and also to the genuineness of the signature by reason of the provisions of section 2901, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 21st, you asked my opinion upon the following question:

> "Should clerks charge for certifying to the sufficiency of a bond of a notary applicant and also to the genuineness of the signature?"

The certificate referred to appears on the application for appointment as notary public and is prepared and issued under the direction of the governor. It reads as follows: "(The following certificate must be made by a judge, clerk of the court or justice of the peace.) I certify that the security of the above bond is in my opinion sufficient for the amount specified, and that the signatures thereto are genuine....."

The provision under which the clerk can charge for making the certificate is Code section 2901, which provides that the clerk shall receive thirty-five cents "for certificates of fact under seal of the court, to be paid by the party demanding same."

The certificate required by the governor is clearly a certificate of fact and being made by the clerk, a public official, requires seal thereto; consequently, I hold that the clerk should charge for making such certificate.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE NATIONAL MUTUAL AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION NOT APPROVED.

The articles of incorporation of The National Mutual Automobile Insurance Association not approved for the reason that they fail to comply with sections 9593 and 9594, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 10, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 9th enclosing proposed articles of incorporation of The National Mutual Automobile Insurance Association. The articles of incorporation of this association have already been presented to this department and rejected for failure to comply with sections 9593 and 9594, General Code.

I regret to be obliged to state that in their present form the articles still fail to comply with these provisions in the following particulars:

1. They do not limit the property to be insured, consisting of automobiles, to that in the state of Ohio, as the statute requires.

2. They attempt to authorize insurance against theft, etc., which cannot be undertaken by an association of this kind. This criticism affects the entire second sentence of the purpose clause.

3. The articles do not specifically state that the members agree to be assessed for the payment of incidental expenses, losses, etc., as required by section 9594, General Code.

The articles in question are accordingly returned to you with the advice that they be not filed or recorded until corrected as above stated.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARDS OF EDUCATION REQUIRED TO PROVIDE SCHOOLS AND SUFFICIENT EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES FOR INMATES OF COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOMES—PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE STATE ARE FREE TO INMATES OF PUBLIC OR PRIVATE ORPHAN ASYLUMS.

Under the provisions of section 7676, General Code, the board of education of the respective school districts of the state wherein are located county or children's homes, are required to provide schools and sufficient educational facilities for the inmates of such county or children's homes, either by the establishment of special schools located at such county or district children's homes or in the regular schools of the respective districts.

Under section 7681, General Code, the public schools of the state are free to the inmates of orphan asylums located in such respective school districts, regardless of whether or not such orphan asylums are private or public institutions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 22, 1914, you wrote to this department as follows:

> "A number of children's homes, public and private, have raised a question relative to public school attendance of the inmates of their institutions. In section 7681 of the juvenile code we find a statement: 'The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including the children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district children's home or orphan asylum located in such a school district * * *.'
> "Sections 7676 to 7678 refer to a method of public school control over school work of a children's home or orphan's asylum which is established by law, but is not sufficiently near to a public school to make attendance thereat practical."

In relation thereto you submitted the following request:

> "1. Do all of these sections permit a board of education in any school district in which a county or district children's home is located to refuse to admit the children to a public school when the trustees of such institution desire that the children attend such school, even though the number of children in such home of school age is greater than the capacity of the school house in that school district?

"2. Are the school authorities under obligation to make adequate provision by enlargement of their school buildings to accommodate children from a children's home?

"3. Does section 7681 include an institution which cares for orphan and other dependent children, but which is under private management?

"4. Does the term 'children's home or orphan asylum established by law' in section 7677 include privately managed institutions?

"5. A certain private institution in the city of Cincinnati has established a branch outside of that municipality. Are the residents inmates of the branch entitled to attend the public schools of the district in which the branch is located?"

Sections 7676 to 7678, inclusive, of the General Code, which provide for schools at children's homes, orphan asylums and infirmaries, and provide for the management and regulation thereof, were amended April 28, 1913, by the legislature and approved by the governor on May 9, 1913, and appears in the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws, at page 896 thereof.

Section 7681 of the General Code to which you refer in your inquiry, was also amended at the same time and appears at page 897 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws. Said section 7681 of the General Code was formerly 3013 of the Revised Statutes, and prior to the last amendment thereof this section read as follows:

"The school of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards, or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age, who are inmates of a county or district children's home, located in such a school district, at the discretion of its board of education, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

In construing this last mentioned section, in an opinion rendered to Hon. J. W. Zeller, commissioner of common schools, Columbus, Ohio, under date of October 14, 1909, this department held in substance, so far as the operation of said section concerns inmates of county children's homes, that such inmates are entitled to free tuition in the public schools. Said opinion is as follows:

"Your communication of September 24th, in which you ask my opinion on the following question, is received:

"Children from the Morgan county children's home, situated in Malta, Ohio, some eight or ten in number, have attended the Malta school. The Malta board of education have presented a bill to the board of trustees of said home for the tuition of these pupils, and demand payment. The board of trustees of said home are of the opinion that these children are entitled, under section 4013 R. S., to free tuition.

"Query: Are these children, in your opinion, so entitled to free tuition under said section 4013 R. S.?"

"In reply thereto I beg leave to submit the following opinion. Section 4013 R. S., reads in part as follows:

" 'The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are or may be inmates of a county or district children's home located in any such school district, at the discretion of the board of education of said school district; * * *'

"The only question in interpreting this section of the statute is as to what meaning shall be put upon the phrase 'at the discretion of the board of education of said school district' and I am of the opinion that the discretion here given to such board of education is not intended to give them the right to charge tuition to pupils coming within the meaning of this section. The section evinces the intention that the schools of each district shall be free to all school children of proper age, who are or may be inmates of a county or district children's home located in any such school district, and the discretion given to the board in this section is such as it may exercise in the case of any school child of proper age coming within the scope of this section, and pertains to the educational, moral and other qualifications of such children. This discretion is by this section given to the board of education in all cases, and if the board were empowered under this section to charge tuition for inmates of county or district children's homes, it would also be possible for them to charge tuition for children of school age, 'who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district,' for the phrase 'at the discretion of the board of education' is a limitation upon all of the section that precedes it.

"I am further strengthened in this opinion by the provisions of section 4010 of the Revised Statutes, which makes it mandatory upon the board of education of a school district, upon request by the board of trustees of a county or district children's home located in said school district to 'establish in such home * * * separate school, so as to afford to the children therein, as far as practicable, the advantages and privileges of a common school education; * * * such schools * * * shall be continued in operation each year * * * at such homes * * * not less than forty-four weeks. If the distributive share of the school funds to which such school at any such home or asylum is entitled by the enumeration of children in the institution is not sufficient to continue the schools hereby required, the deficiency shall be paid out of the funds of the institution; * * *.

"This section shows that it was the intention of the legislature to furnish free schooling in one of two ways to the children who are or may be inmates of a county or district children's home.

"I am therefore, of the opinion that the children of the Morgan county children's home are entitled, under section 4013 R. S., to free tuition in the schools of the Malta school district, if otherwise qualified."

Subsequent to the date of the rendering of the opinion above quoted, this department followed the reasoning used in that opinion in an official opinion to Hon. T. E. McElhiney, prosecuting attorney, McConnellsville, Ohio, under date of December 22, 1911, and said opinion holds in effect as follows:

"Inmates of a children's home are classed equally with other youth under the meaning of section 7681, General Code, and such inmates may attend a village school not within their own district, if there is no school within their own district within one and one-half miles of the home or at closer proximity than the village school. The board of education of said village cannot charge tuition for said inmates until they have notified the board of education of the district in which the pupils reside.

"The duty of providing for the education of such inmates devolves upon the board of education of the township in which they reside and not upon the trustees of the home."

Attached hereto I am enclosing a copy of the last mentioned opinion.

Section 7676 as last amended, and as the same now appears in the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws, page 896, supra, provides as follows:

"The board of education in any district in which a children's home or orphans' asylum is established by law, when requested by the board of trustees of such children's home or orphans' asylum when no public school is situated reasonably near such home or asylum, shall establish a separate school in such home or asylum, so as to afford to the children therein, as far as practicable, the advantages and privileges of a common school education. Such schools must be continued in operation for such period as is provided by law for public schools. If the distributive share of school funds to which the school at such home or asylum is entitled by the enumeration of children in the institution is not sufficient to continue the schools for that length of time, the deficiency shall be paid out of the funds of the institution or by the county commissioners."

Section 7681 of the General Code as last amended, as the same appears at page 897 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws, provides as follows:

"The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district children's home or orphan's asylum located in such a school district but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

It will be noted that in section 7681 as last amended, the clause "or orphans' asylum" has been added and the clause "at the discretion of its board of education" has been left out of said section. The amendment relating to said section 7676, it will be noted, has dropped out the reference formerly contained therein prior to its last amendment, to schools established at county infirmaries, and has added the clause that schools shall be established by the board of any district at children's homes or orphans' asylums "when no public school is situated reasonably near such home or asylum." From the phraseology now employed in said sections, it seems reasonably clear that it was the intent of the legislature to furnish free schools in one of the two ways to children who are or may be inmates of county or district children's homes or orphans' asylums; that is to say, either by establishing a separate school at such homes on the part of the board of any district in which such homes or asylums are located, or by furnishing sufficient educational facilities at the schools of the district wherein such homes or asylums are located, on the part of the board of education of such respective districts.

Therefore, in answer to your first question, it is my opinion that the sections referred to in your inquiry do not permit boards of education in school districts, where county or children's homes are located, to refuse to admit the children to such public schools, unless such board provides schools and sufficient educational facilities by the establishment of separate schools located at such county or district children's homes, in accordance with section 7676, General Code, supra.

In answer to your second question, it is my opinion that such boards are legally obligated to make adequate provision for the accommodation of the children from such children's homes, unless they provide a separate school located at the county or district children's home, as provided by said section 7676, supra.

Your remaining three questions relate entirely to the education of children who reside at orphans' asylums. Section 7677, as amended, 103 O. L., 896, provides that the control and management of schools established under section 7676, supra, shall be under the respective boards of education of the school district in which such homes and institutions are located, as follows:

> "All schools so established in any such home or asylum shall be under the control and management of the respective boards of education of the school districts in which such homes and institutions are located, and courses of study, length of school term, and all other school matters shall be uniform in the respective school districts. Teachers employed in such homes or institutions must have a teacher's elementary school certificate as provided by section seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code."

Section 7678 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 896, provides that the county commissioners shall provide the necessary school room or rooms, furniture, fuel, etc., as follows:

> "In the establishment of such schools the commissioners of the county in which such children's home or orphans' asylum is established shall provide the necessary school room or rooms, furniture, fuel, apparatus and books, the cost of which for such schools must be paid out of the funds provided for such institution. The board of education shall incur no expense in supporting such schools."

In the case of State ex rel. The German Protestant Orphan Asylum of Cincinnati vs. The Directors of School District No. 14, Millcreek township, Hamilton county, 10 O. S., 448, the court held as follows:

> "BY THE COURT. Held, that the children, inmates of the German Protestant Orphan Asylum of Cincinnati, are not 'children, wards, or apprentices of actual residents' in the school district within which said asylum is located, and therefore, under the 10th section of the act of February 21, 1849, 'for the better regulation of the public schools in cities, towns,' etc. (Swan, Revised Statutes 860), not entitled to gratuitous admission to the privileges of the public schools of said district."

The wording of the 10th section of the act of February 21, 1849, under which this decision was rendered, to all intents and purposes is the same as section 4013, Revised Statutes, now section 7681 of the General Code, and reads in part as follows:

> "Admission to said schools shall be gratuitous to the children, wards and apprentices of all actual residents in said district, who may be entitled to the privileges of the public schools, under the general laws of this state."

In an opinion rendered by this department October 19, 1909, to Hon. Jno. W. Zeller, state commissioner of common schools, Columbus, Ohio, this department held in substance as follows:

> "Inmates of Baptist missionary home, who are children of parents who are in foreign countries, and their maintenance is provided for by their parents who are not residents of Granville school district, must pay tuition to Granville public school."

As before stated, it is to be noted that section 7681 of the General Code, prior to its last amendment, did not contain the clause "orphans' asylum." It is well to further note that said section 7676 of the General Code includes the phrase "orphans' asylum" established by law, and it is further to be noted that section 7677 contains the language that all schools so established in any such home or asylum shall be under the control and maintenance of the respective board of education of the school district in which such homes and institutions are located, etc., and the schools so established means schools established in any district in which a children's home is established by law, as the same is provided in section 7676, General Code, supra. It would seem, therefore, to be the intent of the legislature, by virtue of the last amendment of said section, to obviate the holding of the court in the case of State ex rel. Asylum vs. Directors of School District, etc., supra, to avail the children of orphans' asylums of the advantages provided in said sections 7676, 7677, 7678 and 7681 of the General Code, supra. This would seem to follow, as above stated, by reason of the fact that the legislature has specifically included in said sections, as last amended, the term "orphans' asylum," and has specifically made the provision of said sections applicable to such institutions, when the same are established in accordance with law.

Section 7681 of the General Code, supra, refers to and includes orphans' asylums generally without any limitation thereon.

Section 7676 of the General Code refers to, and seems to apply to children's homes or orphans' asylums established by law.

Therefore, answering your third question, I am of the opinion that section 7681 of the General Code applies to and includes institutions which care for orphans and other dependent children, even though the same may be under private management.

Answering your question number four, I am of the opinion that section 7677 and section 7676 of the General Code do not include privately managed institutions, because said sections seem only to refer to children's homes or orphans' asylums which are established by law.

Answering your fifth question, it is my view that if the private institution referred to is an orphans' asylum, and they have established a branch thereof in another part of the municipality, then such children or orphans would be entitled to attend the public schools of the district in which the branch is located, as coming within the provisions of section 7681 of the General Code, supra, being children or inmates of an orphans' asylum; but that such institution could not avail itself of the provisions of sections 7676 and 7677, unless it comes within the expression of said sections as being a children's home or orphans' asylum established by law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY BE TRUSTEE OF SINKING FUND OF CITY.

The prosecuting attorney may legally be appointed to serve as trustee of the sinking fund of a city, there being no incompatibility.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1914.

HON. HARRY T. NOLAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 18, 1914, as follows:

"Will you kindly advise me whether, in your opinion, a person holding the office of prosecuting attorney of a county may legally be appointed and serve as a trustee of the sinking fund of a city. Inasmuch as I am the person affected by the question submitted, I prefer the opinion of someone else as to the legality of such procedure."

Throop on public officers, section 33, lays down the following rule:

"Officers are said to be incompatible and inconsistent, so as not to be executed by the same person, when from the multiplicity of business in them they cannot be executed with care and ability, or when, their being subordinate and interfering with each other, it induces a presumption that they cannot be executed with impartiality and honesty."

In Dillon on municipal corporations, in a note to section 419, it is said that:

"Incompatibility in offices exist, where the nature and duty of the two offices are such as to render it improper from considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to retain both."

I can see nothing in the rules above stated, nor find anything in the statutory law of the state that makes the office of sinking fund trustee incompatible with that of prosecuting attorney, and it is therefore my opinion that these two offices may be held by one and the same person.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWERS OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH DO NOT EXTEND BEYOND THE TERRITORIAL LIMITS OF THE STATE—POWER OF STATE TO REGULATE MUNICIPALITY IN OTHER STATE.

The state board of health is but a state agency for the purposes indicated by the statutes providing for its organization and defining its duties. As such agency, its jurisdiction does not extend for any purpose beyond the territorial limits of the state, and it has no power to take effective official action with respect to a nuisance created by a city in an adjoining state in permitting sewage to flow into streams in an adjoining state, by which such sewage is carried into a river which may be the source of the water supply of a city in this state.

This state in its quasi-sovereign capacity to meet the situation, has power to enjoin and abate such nuisance by action in a court of competent jurisdiction against the offending municipality in the adjoining state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1914.

HON. JOHN W. HILL, President, The State Board of Health, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 14, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion as follows:

> "A city in this state desires to use a certain stream for a public water supply, and a city in an adjoining state is or was a few years ago permitting considerable sewage from its outskirts to be carried either directly or through small rills, which were water courses in time of flood, into the main stream. The collection and proper disposal of this sewage of the city in the other state would be of no benefit to that city, but would be a benefit to a city in this state.
> "Will you kindly let me know what, if any, jurisdiction we would have with respect to the sewage pollution of a stream by a city in another state where that stream is liable to be drawn on for public water supply by a city in this state."

The state board of health is a state agency for the purposes indicated by the statutes providing for its organization and defining its duties. As such state agency its jurisdiction does not extend, for any purpose, beyond the territorial limits of the state, and if the river, the pollution of which is complained of in your communication, is the Ohio, the territorial limits of this state, with respect to the river in question, does not, probably, extend further than the low water mark of the same.

Booth vs. Shepard, 8 O. S., 243.
Handly's Lessee vs. Anthony, 5 Wheat., 374.
Board of Health vs. Greenville, 86 O. S., 1, 37.

It does not follow, however, that by reason of the lack of jurisdiction on the part of the state board of health to act in the premises, there is no remedy for the condition complained of. The state of Ohio, in its quasi-sovereign capacity has undoubted power to institute, in a court of competent jurisdiction, an action to enjoin and abate the nuisance complained of.

Dillon, in his work on municipal corporations, states the interest and legal rights of the several states in questions of this kind, as follows:

"* * * The pollution of the streams with the consequent annoyance and injury to the health, not only of the residents and citizens of the state where the pollution originates, but also to the residents and citizens of adjoining states with the consequent injury to property therein, has raised questions affecting the right of a state to use or authorize the use of the waters of rivers and streams for such purposes within its own limits, when the effect thereof is to cause loss and injury to the citizens of, and property within, a sister state. These questions have newly arisen, and the law on the subject is in an undeveloped condition requiring discussion and consideration fully to define the rights of the respective states and their citizens. It may, however, be said that the power of a state within which a river or stream rises is not absolute, and that it can neither unduly appropriate the waters of such river or stream to the loss and detriment of an adjoining state and the citizens thereof, nor can it pollute the same by the discharge of sewage in such a manner as to cause loss and damage to a sister state and its citizens unreasonably and unnecessarily. The state is sovereign within its own boundaries, and as to the public uses to which the waters of its rivers and streams may be applied therein by its citizens and residents, but in its relation to sister states, it is only municipal in its functions and powers, and it is bound to respect the rights of the sister state and its citizens. Hence a state has, under the provisions of the federal constitution extending the judicial power of the federal courts over controversies between two or more states and between a state and citizens of another state, a standing in those courts to protect its lawful interests in rivers and streams flowing from an adjoining state from injury or damage to its detriment. And where a navigable stream rises in one state and flows thence into another, it has been held that the lower state is entitled to maintain a suit in equity against the upper or higher state (of which the supreme court of the United States has original jurisdiction), to prevent an undue and improper appropriation of the waters of the stream, which otherwise would flow through and across her territory, and the consequent destruction of her property and of the property of her citizens, and injury to their health and comfort.

"Similarly, it is within the power of a state to invoke the original jurisdiction of the supreme court of the United States to restrain an adjoining state and a municipality therein from contaminating the waters of a stream flowing along, past, or through the plaintiff's territory by discharging therein sewage in great quantities to the serious detriment and annoyance of the citizens and property owners of the plaintiff state. * * *"

In the case of Georgia vs. Tennessee Copper Company, 206 U. S., 230, which was one instituted by the state of Georgia against the Copper Company to enjoin it from discharging noxious gas from its works in Tennessee, in and over the territory of the plaintiff state, the court held:

"When the states by their union made the forcible abatement of outside nuisances impossible to each, they did not thereby agree to submit to whatever might be done. They retained the right to make reasonable demands on the grounds of their still remaining quasi-sovereign interests, and the alternative to force a suit in this court.

"This court has jurisdiction to, and at the suit of a state will, enjoin a corporation, citizen of another state, from discharging over its territory noxious fumes from works in another state where it appears that those fumes cause and threaten damage on a considerable scale to the forests and vegetable life, if not to health, within the plaintiff's state."

The court, in its opinion in this case, says:

"This is a suit by a state for an injury to it, in its capacity of quasi-sovereign. In that capacity, the state has an interest, independent of and behind the titles of its citizens, in all the earth and air within its domain. It has the last word as to whether its mountains shall be stripped of their forests and its inhabitants shall breathe pure air."

In the case of Missouri vs. Illinois and the sanitary district of Chicago, 180 U. S., 208, suit was brought by the plaintiff state against the defendants named for an injunction restraining the defendants from receiving or permitting any sewage to be received or discharged into an artificial channel or drain, constructed by the sanitary district under authority of the state of Illinois, in order to carry off and eventually discharge into the Mississippi river, through the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, sewage of the city of Chicago, which had previously been discharged into Lake Michigan. The bill did not assail the drainage channel as an unlawful structure, nor aim to prevent its use as a water way, but it sought relief against the pouring of sewage and filth through it into the above named rivers in the state of Illinois, into the Mississippi river, to the detriment of the state of Missouri and its inhabitants. Upon demurrer of the defendants to this bill for an injunction, it was held that the action could be maintained.

In addition to the right of the state of Ohio to abate and enjoin the nuisance here complained of, by action against the municipality of another state responsible for the nuisance, I am inclined to the opinion that a municipality of this state, if legally injured in the exercise of its corporate functions, such as the maintenance of a water supply for its citizens, would likewise have proper standing to institute an action in a court of competent jurisdiction, for the purpose of redressing the wrong.

You do not state, in your communication, sufficient facts to warrant me in expressing my opinion as to the merits of an action which might be brought with respect to the matter complained of, and I do not, therefore, express any opinion on this question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF PRIVATE BANK TO OWN STOCK IN A STATE BANK.

A private bank may own stock in a state bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 14, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 15, 1913, you made the following request for my opinion:

"Under section 9 of the private banking act, and section 9765, paragraph "b" of the savings banking law, has a private bank the right to own stock in a state bank?"

Section 9 of what is commonly called the "private banking act" (section 744-9, General Code, 103 O. L., 379) is as follows:

"Sections 720, 724, 725, 729, 734, 735, 737, 738, 740, 741, 742, 742-1, 742-2, 742-3, 742-4, 742-5, 742-6, 742-7, 742-8, 742-9, 742-10, 742-11, 742-12, 742-13, 742-14, 742-16 and 743 of the General Code of Ohio, shall refer to and include every and all corporations not organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking' or 'trust' or 'trust company' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is or may be conducted in this state, and every such corporation, person, partnership or association shall be governed by and shall conduct all their business and transactions as provided in said sections in the same manner as if such corporations, persons, partnerships or associations were specifically mentioned in each of said sections; and every such corporation, person, partnership or association shall do and perform all things required by each and all said sections, and the superintendent of banks shall have the power and authority over such corporations, persons, partnerships and associations, as is given to him over banking corporations in Ohio by said sections; and each and every other section of the General Code providing for the inspection, examination and regulation of banking corporations, except the provisions as to capital stock and the amount of loans and investments computed on the basis of capital stock, and except the provisions for the publication of reports, shall be held to apply to each and every such corporation, person, partnership or association so far as said sections and parts of sections may be applicable."

Section 720 and the other sections to which explicit reference is made by this section are the sections of the General Code governing the examination, supervision and liquidation of banking corporations by the superintendent of banks. All of these sections are, by reference, made applicable to private banks, and by this section all other sections of the General Code providing for the inspection, examination and regulation of banking corporations (except those specifically referred to) are made to apply to private banks in so far as such sections may be applicable.

Section 9765 of the General Code is as follows:

"A savings bank may invest the residue of its funds in, or loan money on, discount, buy, sell or assign promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt and also invest its capital, surplus and deposits, in, and buy and sell the following:

"a. The securities mentioned in section ninety-seven hundred and fifty-eight, subject to the limitations and restrictions therein contained, except that savings banks may loan not more than seventy-five per cent. of the amount of the paid in capital, surplus and deposits on notes secured by mortgage on real estate. But all loans made upon personal security shall be made upon notes with two or more signers or one or more indorsers, payable and to be paid at a time not exceeding six months from the date thereof. In the aggregate not exceeding thirty per cent. of the capital surplus and deposits of a savings bank shall be so invested.

"b. Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds and promissory notes of corporations, when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of such savings bank. No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter. The superintendent of banks may order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months.

"c. Promissory notes of individuals, firms, or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

This section applies solely and only to savings banks, that is, banking corporations organized under the laws of Ohio as savings banks; and could only be made applicable to a private bank, or to any banking corporation other than a savings bank, by a direct statutory provision. None of the statutory provisions relative to the amount and character of investments by banking corporations are applicable to private banks; and there is nothing in our laws to prevent a private bank from investing in stock of another bank, or in fact to prevent a private bank from making any investment of its funds which an individual can make.

This is one of the defects of our banking laws at the present time, and is one reason why so many private banks have failed. It can only be remedied by careful legislation on the subject, and this legislation must start by prescribing that private banks must have a fixed capital stock. Without a provision of this character there can be no basis upon which to regulate the amount of investments, and unless the amount of investments by a bank is fixed and subject to regulation, regulations as to the character of investments would be practically worthless.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION TO REGULATE THE NUMBER AND SALARIES OF OFFICERS REFERRED TO IN SECTION 2180, GENERAL CODE.

Section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act, passed May 11, 1911, did not become effective until August 15, 1911; on that date it expressly repealed section 2180 of the General Code, as amended by house bill 621, 102 O. L., 474, passed May 31, 1911. The Ohio board of administration can, therefore, regulate the number and salaries of officers referred to in section 2180, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 26, 1914, as follows:

"May the board of administration, under the provisions of section 1842, regulate the number and salaries of the employes mentioned in section 2180, General Code?"

Section 1842, General Code, was originally section 11 of the Ohio board of administration act, and read:

"Section 11. Each of said institutions shall be under the executive control and management of a superintendent or other chief officer designated by the title peculiar to the institution, subject to the rules and regulations of the board and the provisions of this act * * *. The chief officer shall have entire executive charge of the institution for which he is appointed, except as otherwise provided therein. He shall select and appoint the necessary employes, but not more than ten per cent. of the total number of officers and employes of any institution shall be appointed from the same county * * *.

"The board after conference with the managing officer of each institution shall determine the number of officers and employes to be appointed therein. It shall from time to time fix the salaries and wages to be paid at the various institutions which shall be uniform, as far as possible, for like service, provided that the salaries of all officers shall be approved in writing by the governor."

This act was passed on May 11, 1911. Section 39 of the act and section 41 read as follows:

"Section 39. To give the board adequate time to prepare the necessary details no part of this act relating to said board shall take effect until August 15, 1911, except section two, three, four, five, six and seven, but this act shall be in full force and effect from and after said date, when the board shall assume all of its duties * * *.

"Section 41. That sections 1824, 1825 * * * 2180 * * * of the General Code be, and the same are hereby repealed, and that all parts of sections inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed in so far as said inconsistencies exist."

On May 31st the legislature passed house bill 621, 102 O. L., p. 474, which reads:

"Be It Enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"Section 1. That section 2180 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

"Section 2180. There shall be appointed an assistant clerk at an annual salary not to exceed one thousand and eighty dollars, a chaplain, who shall act as librarian, at a salary not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars a year, a physician, a superintendent of schools who shall be accredited as a guard, a superintendent of construction at a salary not to exceed thirteen hundred and twenty dollars a year, a superintendent of gas and electric light at a salary not to exceed thirteen hundred and twenty dollars a year, a captain of night watch at a salary not to exceed twelve hundred dollars a year, a superintendent of subsistence at a salary not to exceed eleven hundred and twenty dollars a year, and a stenographer at a salary not to exceed sixty dollars per month.

"Section 2. That said original section 2180 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The question now is, did section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act, which expressly repealed section 2180 of the General Code, affect such repeal on May 11, 1911, the date of its passage, or upon August 15, 1911, the date upon which, according to section 39 of the act, it became effective. If section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act worked a repeal of section 2180 on the date of its passage, viz., May 11, 1911, then house bill 621 in amending section 2180 on May 31, 1911, reenacted that section, and it (section 2180) should be held to control. If, however, section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act did not affect a repeal of section 2180 until August 15, 1911, when according to section 39 of the act it became effective, then it repealed on that date section 2180, as that section stood amended by house bill 621 passed on May 31, 1911.

Section 280 of Lewis Sutherland's work on statutory construction, reads in part:

"Statutes speak from the time they take effect, and from that time they have posteriority. If passed to take effect at a future date, they are to be construed, as a general rule, as if passed on that date, and ordered to take immediate effect."

State vs. Edwards, 136 Mo., 360.
Rice vs. Reddiman, 10 Mich., 125.
Harrington vs. Harrington's Estate, 53 Vt., 649.
Metrop. Board of Health vs. Schmades, 10 Abb. Pr. (n. s.), 205.

This doctrine would support the conclusion that section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act, which was the repealing section, did not work a repeal of section 2180 of the General Code until August 15, 1911, when it repealed said section as it stood amended by house bill 621, passed May 31, 1911; and this, it seems to me, is exactly what the legislature intended.

The sections of the General Code repealed by section 41 of the Ohio board of administration act, related to the powers and duties of the trustees and officers of the different institutions of the state, and it was necessary for all of these sections to continue in full force and effect until August 15, 1911, when the Ohio board of administration act became effective. To my mind it seems very clear that the legislature in amending section 2180 of the General Code, meant such amendment to continue in full force only until August 15th, when the Ohio board of administration act should become effective, repealing all such sections as 2180, relating to positions and salaries of officers and employes in the various institutions of the state, and granting to the board the power to establish a uniform system with respect to such matters operating upon all of the institutions of the state.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that section 41, the repealing section of the Ohio board of administration act (102 O. L., p. 223), did not work a repeal of section 2180 of the General Code until August 15, 1911, and it then repealed such section as amended, in house bill 621, passed May 31, 1911; and in direct answer to your question, that the Ohio board of administration may, by virtue of section 1842 of the General Code, regulate the number and salaries of the employes of the Ohio penitentiary mentioned in section 2180 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS—RIGHT OF A DISTRICT BOARD EMPLOYING A SUPERINTENDENT TO JOIN WITH A RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT WHICH NEVER EMPLOYED A SUPERINTENDENT—POWER OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS TO JOIN, BY MUTUAL CONSENT WITH THE BOARDS OF EDUCATION.

Under section 4740, General Code, as amended, a village district already employing a superintendent, cannot join with a rural school district which never employed a superintendent and which said districts were never heretofore joined together for supervisory purposes by employing a superintendent in common upon application to the county board of education to be joined and continue as separate districts as authorized by said section.

Under the recently enacted school code, appearing in 104 O. L., 133, school districts formerly designated as "special school districts" now constitute rural school districts, which said rural school districts are a part of the respective county school districts of the state. Part of any county school districts may be transferred to an adjoining school district or city or village school district by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1914.

HON. THOMAS S. MADDOX, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 14, 1914, you requested an official opinion upon the following questions:

> "First. Our county board of education in Fayette county, Ohio, desires your construction of section 4740, Ohio Laws, 104, page 141, in this:
> "Can a village district already employing a superintendent, join with a rural school district which never employed one, resolving that it will employ a superintendent, etc., and upon application to the county board be continued as a separate district, etc.?
> "Second. Can a special school district under any of the sections of the school code, Ohio Laws, page 135, after May 19, 1914, join with a village district in another county, for school purposes?"

Section 4740 of the General Code, 104 O. L., 141, provides as follows:

> "Any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employs a superintendent and which officially certifies by the clerk or clerks of the board of education on or before July 20, 1914, that it will employ a superintendent who gives at least one-half of his time in supervision, shall upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district so long as the superintendent receives a salary of at least one thousand dollars and continues to give one-half of his time to supervision work. Such districts shall receive such portion of state aid for the payment of the salary of the district superintendent as is based on the ratio of the number of teachers employed to forty, multiplied by the fraction which represents that fraction of the regular school day which the superintendent gives to supervision. The county superintendent shall make no nomination of a district superintendent in such district until a vacancy in such superintendency occurs. After the first vacancy occurs in the superintendency of such district all appointments shall be made on the nomination of the county superintendent in the manner provided in section 4739. A vacancy shall occur only when such superintendent resigns, dies or fails of re-election.

"Any school district or districts, having less than twenty teachers, isolated from the remainder of the county school district by supervision districts provided for in this section shall be joined for supervision purposes to one or more of such supervision districts, but the superintendent or superintendents already employed in such supervision district or districts shall be in charge of the enlarged supervision district or districts until a vacancy occurs."

Section 7705 of the General Code, prior to its repeal and amendment by House Bill No. 13, enacted February 5, 1914, 104 O. L., 144, provided as follows:

"The board of education of each village, township and special school district may appoint a suitable person to act as superintendent, and to employ the teachers of the public schools of the district for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. But nothing herein shall prevent two or more districts uniting and appointing the same person as superintendent."

It would seem to follow, therefore, that the phrase employed in section 4740, "union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employ a superintendent," means to refer to schools which under said section 7705, prior to its said repeal and amendment, united for supervision purposes. It is to be noted that said section 7705, General Code, prior to its amendment specifically provided that nothing therein should prevent two or more districts uniting and appointing some person as superintendent.

Again, reverting to section 4740, General Code, as amended 104 O. L., 141, it is to be noted that any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employed a superintendent at the time of the amendment thereof, shall, upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district, etc.

Under the terms of your first question it appears that the village district inquired about has for some time past been employing a superintendent. It further appears that the rural school district inquired about does not now and never has employed a superintendent. I take it from the form of your question also that these two districts never joined together for supervisory purposes under section 7705 of the General Code, supra.

Therefore, the two districts cannot be said to be a village or rural district which have heretofore employed a superintendent, and they are not districts which have heretofore entered into a union for the purpose of supervision by employing one common superintendent. The provisions of section 4740, as amended, apply only to such districts as have heretofore employed a superintendent and which were so employing such superintendent at the date of such amendment, either as a village or rural district or a union of school districts for supervision purposes.

Therefore, in direct answer to your first question, it is my opinion that a village district already employing a superintendent cannot join with a rural school district which never employed a superintendent, and which said districts were never heretofore joined together for supervisory purposes by employing a superintendent in common, upon application to the county board of education to be joined and continued as separate districts in accordance with said section 4740, supra.

Answering your second question, section 4692 as it appears in 104 O. L., 135, provides as follows:

"Part of any county school district may be transferred to an adjoining county school district or city or village school district by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts. To secure such consent, it shall be necessary for each of the boards to pass a resolution indicating the action taken and definitely describing the territory to be transferred. The passage of such a resolution shall require a majority vote of the full membership of each board by yea and nay vote, and the vote of each member shall be entered on the records of such boards. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, is placed upon the records of such boards and copies of the resolution certified to the president and clerk of each board, together with a copy of such map are filed with the auditors of the counties in which such transferred territory is situated."

Under the above section only territory of a county school district may be transferred to an adjoining county school district or a city or village school district by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts.

Special school districts were formerly provided for by section 4728 of the General Code. Said section provided as follows:

"A special school district may be formed of any contiguous territory, not included within the limits of a city or village, which has a total tax valuation of not less than one hundred thousand dollars."

Said section 4728 was repealed by said House Bill No. 13, passed on February 5, 1914, so that under the statutes as now amended, we no longer have the term or phrase "special school districts." The new act heretofore referred to in section 4679, 104 O. L., 133, divides the school districts of the state into city, village, rural and county school districts as follows:

"The school districts of the state shall be styled, respectively, city school districts, village school districts, rural school districts and county school districts."

Section 4680, General Code, defines a city school district as follows:

"Each city, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, shall constitute a city school district."

Section 4681 as amended 103 O. L., 545, defines a village school district as follows:

"Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

The last two sections were not in any wise changed by the recently enacted school code.

Section 4684 of the General Code, prior to its amendment, provided that any school district, other than a city, village or township school district, etc., shall constitute a special school district as follows:

"Any school district, other than a city, village or township school district and any school district organized under the provisions of chapter five of this title, shall constitute a special school district."

The above section as amended in 104 O. L., 133, provides for and defines county school districts as follows:

"Each county, exclusive of the territory embraced in any city school district and the territory in any village school district exempted from the supervision of the county board of education by the provisions of sections 4688 and 4688-1, and the territory detached for school purposes, and including the territory attached to it for school purposes, shall constitute a county school district. In each case where any village or rural school district is situated in more than one county such district shall become a part of the county school district in which the greatest part of the territory of such village or rural district is situated."

Section 4735 as amended, 104 O. L., 138, provides that existing special school districts shall constitute rural districts as follows:

"The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

Under the new school code there is no provision whereby a special school district may be joined to a village school district in another county for school purposes. Such districts so formerly designated as special school districts now constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education. Under section 4684 (104 O. L., 133) supra, rural school districts are constituted and go to make up either the whole or a part of the respective county school districts of the state.

Section 4728, as amended, 104 O. L., page 136, provides that each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of the county board of education, as follows:

"Each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of a county board of education composed of five members who shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district. Each district shall have one vote in the election of members of the county board of education except as is provided in section 4728-1. At least one member of the county board of education shall be a resident of a village school district if such district is located in the county school district and at least three members of such board shall be residents of rural school districts, but not more than one member of the county board of education shall reside in any one village or rural school district within the county school district."

Section 4692 supra, provides that part of any county school district may be transferred to an adjoining county, city or village school district by mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts.

Inasmuch as school districts formerly designated "special school districts" now constitute rural school districts and form a part of the county school districts, which latter districts are under the control of the county board of education, I am of the opinion, therefore, that school districts formerly designated "special school districts" may be joined with a village district in another county, provided such village district is an adjoining district, by transferring the same in accordance with section 4692, which transfer can be made by the mutual consent thereto by the boards of education of the respective districts.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO BORROW MONEY TO PROVIDE FOR THE MAINTENANCE OF COUNTY TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL, UNTIL MARCH 1, 1915.

Under section 2434, General Code, which grants authority to commissioners to borrow money and issue bonds for the relief and support of the poor, bonds may be issued to provide for the maintenance of a county tuberculosis hospital between the present and March 1, 1915, when the proceeds of the special levy authorized for that purpose will first become available. This question is somewhat obscure, and the conclusion is based upon the fact that it is clearly the legislative intention that tubercular paupers shall be kept in this hospital and not elsewhere during the time mentioned.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1914.

HON. EDWARD C. TURNER, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 5th, receipt whereof has already been acknowledged, you enclosed a copy of an opinion given by Hon. H. C. Sherman, assistant prosecuting attorney, to the county commissioners of Franklin county, and a letter addressed by Messrs. Squire, Sanders and Dempsey to Messrs. Hayden, Miller and company of Cleveland, Ohio, both referring to a certain issue of bonds authorized, or attempted to be authorized by the commissioners of Franklin county, for the purpose of providing temporarily for the maintenance of the Franklin County Tuberculosis Hospital. I note that there is a difference of opinion between your office and Messrs. Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, respecting the legality of this issue of bonds, and that my opinion in the premises is requested.

I have not before me the exact phraseology of the resolution authorizing issuance of the bonds, therefore, I do not know what is the declared purpose of the commissioners in issuing them. I note, however, that it is agreed that the authority to issue such bonds, if it exists at all, is referable to section 2434, General Code, which empowers the county commissioners, inter alia to borrow money and issue bonds "for the relief or support of the poor."

I may pause here to say, that in my opinion, this assumption is correct, there being no other provision of law under which authority to borrow money for the maintenance of a county tuberculosis hospital or of any class of persons therein, could be claimed.

The question, then, is, as to whether or not, the maintenance of a county tuberculosis hospital, constitutes the "support of the poor." At the outset, I may say that I quite agree with Messrs. Squire, Sanders and Dempsey in their views that the word "poor," as used in section 2434, General Code, has a limited meaning, and refers to the destitute, or such persons as are dependent on the county for support.

But this premise does not lead in my judgment to the conclusion at which Messrs. Squire, Sanders and Dempsey have arrived. The present statutes relative to the county tuberculosis hospital are found in 103 O. L., 492, and consist of sections 3139, et seq., General Code, as amended. The prior legislative history of these sections is of interest in this connection, but in the view I take of this question, it need not be considered.

Of these sections, the first, section 3139, provides as follows:

> "On and after January 1st, nineteen hundred and fourteen, no person suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, commonly known as consumption, shall be kept in any county infirmary."

The related sections contain the following provisions:

> "Section 3141. In any county where a county hospital for tuberculosis has been erected such county hospital for tuberculosis may be maintained by the county commissioners, and for the purpose of maintaining such hospital the county commissioners shall annually levy a tax and set aside the sum necessary for such maintenance. Such sum shall not be used for any other purpose.
> "Section 3142. An accurate account shall be kept of all moneys received from patients or from other sources, which shall be applied towards the payment of maintaining a tuberculosis hospital. * * *
> "Section 3145. The medical superintendent shall investigate applicants for admission to the hospital for tuberculosis who are not inmates of the county infirmary and may require satisfactory proofs that they are in need of proper care and have pulmonary tuberculosis. The board of trustees may require from any such applicant admitted from the county or counties maintaining the hospital a payment not exceeding the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment, including necessaries and cost of transportation, or such less sum as they may deem advisable, owing to the financial condition of the applicant."

It is clear from these provisions that the county tuberculosis hospital is a place for the care and support of a certain class of indigent persons who would otherwise be kept in the infirmary, viz.: the tubercular poor. The keeping of such persons in the county tuberculosis hospital, or in some district tuberculosis hospital, is not only authorized as a means of supporting the poor, but is required by the positive provision of section 3139, General Code, supra.

True, persons who are not inmates of the county infirmary, may also be admitted to the county tuberculosis hospital, but such admission is conditioned upon the right of the "trustees" (which word as used in section 3145, General Code, is evidently intended to apply to the county commissioners, as directors of the infirmary, as well as to the trustees of the district hospital), to require the payment of the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment. The intention is that to the extent of their ability to pay, tubercular persons, other than those who are inmates of the county infirmary, are to provide for their own maintenance in the county tuberculosis hospital.

It is true that the provisions of section 3145, General Code, constitute a grant of power, and not the imposition of a duty; it is true also that the commissioners as "trustees" may require from those other than the inmates of the infirmary, the payment of a sum less than that which corresponds to the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment, etc., if they deem such action advisable "owing to the financial condition of the applicant."

As to this last feature of the statute, it may be said that furnishing medical treatment to persons who, if in good health, would be able to support themselves, but who are not able to provide for themselves in sickness, or to procure the services of a physician, has always been regarded as a proper function of the relief of the poor, and is so recognized in our statutes: see section 3490, General Code. It is true that the furnishing of medical relief has been heretofore a function of the township trustees and municipal authorities, instead of the infirmary directors, or county commissioners; but as to the tubercular poor, it is clearly the intention of the law that medical relief to them shall be provided for through the agency of the county tuberculosis hospital.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the mere fact that the county commissioners as trustees are authorized to exact from applicants, other than inmates of the infirmary, the payment of a less sum than that corresponding to the actual cost of maintenance and treatment, does not deprive the care and relief of such persons of the nature of poor relief.

The only question, then, which seems at all doubtful to me, arises out of the fact that the commissioners are authorized by inference to maintain in the county tuberculosis hospital, if they so desire, persons other than the inmates of the infirmary, without exacting from such persons the payment of a sum sufficient to meet the cost and expense of their care and treatment, etc., and without reference, also, to the ability of such persons to pay. To the extent that the commissioners might by such action cast upon the public the burden of providing for the care and treatment of tubercular patients, who are able to pay for their own maintenance and treatment, to that extent at least, the maintenance of the county tuberculosis hospital would not constitute the relief and support of the poor.

But I am unable to see that such a consideration is material to the present question. I assume that the commissioners have authority to borrow money for the relief of the poor, without the declared intention of applying it to the maintenance of a tuberculosis hospital as constituting such poor relief; there would be no question in my mind (nor I take it in the mind of any other person) as to the legality of the bond issue, had the commissioners not disclosed their exact purpose by recitals made in their resolution. In fact, then the bonds would have sold without question, and when sold, the manner of the application of their proceeds could in no event have affected their validity; this proposition is elementary.

Now the mere fact that the commissioners stated the exact manner in which they intended to apply the money derived from the sale of these bonds, to the relief and support of the poor, does not in my opinion materially alter the case. Had the commissioners stated in their resolution that the money derived from the sale of the bonds was to be applied to the maintenance and treatment in the tuberculosis hospital of all those persons, who, but for the provisions of section 3139, General Code, would be kept in the county infirmary, and such other persons, afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis as might not be able to provide the necessary care and medical treatment for themselves, then it would clearly appear that the money in question would be used for the relief and support of the poor.

Not having been quite so explicit as this, however, but having (apparently), stated merely their purpose to apply the proceeds of the bond issue, generally to the maintenance of the county tuberculosis hospital, the commissioners have nevertheless, in my opinion, stated a purpose for which it is lawful to issue bonds. For, having the power to provide for the maintenance of the county tuberculosis hospital, as a function of poor relief, it will be presumed that they harbor no intention to violate the law and exceed their authority. It follows that the authority to issue the bonds exists, in spite of the possibility of the wrongful application of their proceeds. Should the commissioners in point of fact apply the proceeds of the bonds to the maintenance of the hospital generally, and then fail to exact from those who are able, such charges as would compensate the county for their maintenance, thereby the validity of the bonds would not be affected, and such misapplication of public moneys as might be involved would be a matter to be restrained or corrected by proper action of the prosecuting attorney, the county auditor, or some tax payer.

In arriving at this conclusion, I have not been unmindful of certain considerations which make the question doubtful. It is true, that the permanent maintenance of the county tuberculosis hospital is to be provided for by a special levy, authorized by section 3141, as amended, General Code, (which said levy will not produce funds until March, 1915, whence the necessity for procuring them otherwise); so that the general assembly has evidently not considered the general levies for the county poor fund and the revenues otherwise accruing to that fund as available for the maintenance of the county tuberculosis hospital. This point is not without its weight, but to my mind, it is not conclusive. In fact consideration of section 3141, General Code, has led me to take the very view, which I have adopted. It is true that when this section becomes practically available, it might be considered as affording the exclusive means of providing for the maintenance of a county hospital for tuberculosis, it is equally true that until that time there rests upon the commissioners the positive duty to keep the tubercular poor in some hospital, and not in the county infirmary. The discharge of this duty requires the use of some public moneys. Obviously, no funds other than the poor funds could properly be used for this purpose. Therefore, it follows of necessity, it seems to me, that until the moneys derived from the levies made under authority of section 3141, General Code, as amended, become available, it must be the legislative intention that the poor fund shall be used for the maintenance and treatment of the indigent patients, who must be provided for outside of the county infirmary, and in a tuberculosis hospital. To hold otherwise would render impossble compliance with section 3139; and this section to my mind, is the keynote of the legislative intention embodied in the act of which it is a part. If then, the poor fund, if sufficient, is the only fund available until March, 1915, for the purpose of carrying out the explicit command of the legislature with reference to the care and treatment of the tubercular poor, then it follows, I think, that in the event such fund is insufficient at the present time, it may be augmented by borrowing money, under section 2434, General Code, just as it might be in the event that it proved insufficient to provide for the maintenance of the infirmary itself.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWERS OF THE FORT MEIGS MEMORIAL COMMISSION TO MAKE REASONABLE RULES PROHIBITING TRESPASSING ON THE GROUNDS UNDER ITS CONTROL.

Under section 12500, General Code, the Fort Meigs memorial commission may make a reasonable ruling prohibiting trespassing on grounds under its control, and any person violating such rule may be subjected to the penalty prescribed by this statute. The word "person" as used in this statute may be read "persons" by authorization of section 12368, General Code. Under the provisions of section 12522, General Code, the commission may be considered the occupant of the lands in question and persons may be arrested for trespassing upon such lands after notice is given to "keep off" by the commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM CORLETT, Secretary The Fort Meigs Memorial Commission, Waterville, O.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 15th you request my opinion as to whether or not your commission may enact rules prohibiting trespassing upon the grounds, under their control, after nightfall, and whether arrests may be made for violation of such rules.

The Fort Meigs memorial commission is authorized by sections 15292-15295 of the General Code. Section 15294, General Code, is as follows:

> "Such commission shall have the entire management and control of said memorial and grounds, and of all improvements thereon, including the location and erection of all memorials upon such property; the maintenance, improvement and protection thereof, and the expenditure of all moneys hereafter appropriated therefor.
> "And for the purpose of carrying these powers into effect said commission may adopt such rules and regulations governing the use, protection, improvement and management of said property as may be necessary."

Section 12500 of the General Code is as follows:

> "Whoever wilfully violates a reasonable rule governing the access to prehistoric parks or historic grounds made by a person, association or company, owning or having custody of such parks or grounds, or injures or marks structures, trees or plants therein, shall be fined not more than fifty dollars or imprisoned not more than sixty days, or both, and be liable to such owners or custodians for damages."

Section 12368 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "In the interpretation of part fourth, the words "person" and "another," when used to designate the owner of property, the subject of an offense, include not only natural persons, but every other owner of property * * * words in * * * the singular number include the plural number * * *."

Under authorization of this latter statute, therefore, the word "person," as used in section 12500 of the General Code, may be read "persons," and this section, therefore, has a clear application to a board or a commission such as the Fort Meigs memorial commission having custody of the grounds in question. The board may, therefore, make a reasonable rule prohibiting access to the grounds after nightfall, and any person refusing to comply with said rule may be arrested by any police officer and be subjected to the penalty prescribed by this statute.

Section 12522 of the General Code is the only remaining authority having possible bearing upon your situation. This statute is as follows:

> "Whoever, being about to enter unlawfully upon the lands or premises of another, is forbidden so to do by the owner or occupant, his agent or servant, or, being unlawfully upon the lands or premises of another, is notified to depart therefrom by the owner or occupant, his agent or servant, and refuses to depart therefrom, shall be fined not less than one dollar nor more than five dollars."

I am of the opinion that the commission may be deemed the occupant of the premises in question, within the meaning of this statute, and when, by virtue of the commission's authority under section 15294, above quoted, to enact rules for the management of the grounds, it has prescribed a rule against trespassing upon the premises after nightfall, I am of the opinion that such a rule operates as a prohibition, by the occupant against unlawfully entering his lands within the meaning of section 12522 of the General Code, above quoted.

When such prohibition was brought to the notice of an individual, and he, nevertheless, enters upon such grounds in contravention thereto, he is guilty of a violation of this statute and may be arrested by any police officer therefor.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF MUNICIPALITY TO SELL BONDS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ERECTING POLES, WIRES AND OTHER FIXTURES FOR TRANSMITTING AND DISTRIBUTING ELECTRIC CURRENT PURCHASED BY SUCH MUNICIPALITY FROM OTHERS.

Of the two acts passed May 15, 1911, amending section 3939, General Code, to the extent that said acts are in conflict or substantially different, effect is to be given to the act later approved by the governor. The provisions of subdivision 12 of this section as amended authorizing municipal corporations to issue and sell their bonds for erecting or purchasing works for the generation and transmission of electricity, are to be construed as authorizing a municipality to issue and sell its bonds for the purpose of erecting poles, wires and other fixtures for transmitting and distributing for lighting purposes electric current purchased by such municipality from others.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. MICHAEL MINGES, Village Solicitor of Cleves, First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of July 7, 1914, in which you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "As solicitor of the village of Cleves, I am writing you asking your opinion, if consistent with your duties, upon the construction of two acts of the legislature, the first being senate bill No. 281, found in 102 O. L., page 153, and the second being senate bill No. 131, found in 102 O. L., page 262.

"The particular part to which I desire to call your attention is the twelfth specific purpose under section 1, relative to the right and power of municipal corporations to issue bonds for the erecting of electric light works.

"The question which I have before me is as to whether or not a village has the right to issue bonds for the purpose of erecting works for the transmission only of electricity, it being the desire of counsel with their limited means not to erect works for the generation of electricity, but they desire only to erect the necessary poles, wires and fixtures to transmit current throughout the village and after having the system erected they desire to purchase the necessary current for furnishing light to the village and the inhabitants thereof.

"As senate bill No. 131 provides for the issuance of bonds for erecting works for the generation and transmission of electricity, I am undecided as to whether or not we would have authority under this act to issue bonds for the transmission only of electricity.

"Will you therefore, kindly give me your ideas of construction of these two acts, and whether or not, in your opinion, the village of Cleves has the right to issue bonds for the transmission only of the necessary current."

As pertinent to the questions presented it is provided by section 3618, General Code, that municipal corporations shall have power to establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat.

By section 3990, General Code, a municipal corporation may not only erect electric works, but in villages where electric works have already been erected by any person or company, which works are being operated under existing franchise, the municipality is authorized to purchase the same, if an agreement can be had with the owner of such works; if not, the municipality is authorized to appropriate such electric works by action.

Section 3809, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 526, provides:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make a contract * * * for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment * * * of any person, firm, company or municipality, or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years."

It thus appears, that with respect to the right of a municipal corporation to furnish electric light to meet its own needs and those of its inhabitants, that it may do so by the construction or acquirement and maintenance of an electric light plant for generating the necessary electric current, or it may purchase such current from others.

The question presented, however, is one with respect to the right and power of this village to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring the money necessary for the erection of poles, wires and fixtures in the municipality for the transmission of current which it expects to purchase.

Section 3912, General Code, provides:

"Municipal corporations shall have special power to borrow money and maintain and protect a sinking fund. The power to borrow money shall be exercised in the manner provided in this chapter."

Section 2835 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, authorizing municipal corporations to issue and sell their bonds for certain specific purposes, was amended in 1893 (90 O. L., 229), so as to authorize for the first time the issuance and sale of bonds for the purpose, among others, of electric light works. This section of the Revised Statutes was amended from time to time prior to 1910, when the General Code went into effect; at which time said section 2835, Revised Statutes, was carried into the General Code as section 3939. On May 15, 1911, said section 3939 was amended, but in such amendment the subdivision of the section relating to electric light works was not changed and reads as follows:

> "12. For erecting or purchasing gas works or electric light works and for supplying light to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

This act was approved by the governor on May 22, 1911. On the same date, to wit: May 15, 1911, the legislature again amended section 3939, and in such amendment the subdivision of the section relating to electric light works reads as follows:

> "12. For erecting or purchasing gas works or works for the generation and transmission of electricity for the supply of gas or electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

This act was approved by the governor May 26, 1911.

With respect to the question at hand, there may be room for doubt whether there is any practical and substantial difference in the intent and purpose evinced by the legislature in the enactment of the language found in section 12 of these respective acts. To the extent, however, that there is or may be any conflict or substantial difference in the enactments, the effect is to be given to the later act, to wit: the one approved by the governor May 26, 1911. In acting on the approval or disapproval of bills enacted by the house and senate, the governor acts as a branch of the legislative power, and his approval is the last legislative act which imparts life and effect to the statute.

Lukens vs. Nye, 156 Calif., 498.
Stuart vs. Chapman, 104 Me., 17.
Drum vs. Cleveland, 13 N. P., n. s., 281, 290.
State ex rel. Halladay, 63 O. S., 165.

By section 3939 of the General Code, as amended by the latter act above noted, a municipal corporation may in the manner therein provided issue and sell bonds "for erecting or purchasing gas works or works for the generation and transmission of electricity, for the supplying of gas or electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

Undoubtedly under the authority of this section a municipal corporation has authority to issue and sell bonds for erecting or purchasing works having for its purpose both the generation and transmission of electricity for supplying the same to the corporation and its inhabitants. The question is whether under the authority of this section a municipal corporation may issue and sell its bonds for the erection of works for the purpose only of transmitting electricity for supplying the same to the corporation and its inhabitants. I am of the opinion that it may do so. I am inclined to the view that the word "and," as used between the words generation and transmission in subdivision 12 of this section, is to be given a distributive, as well as a conjunctive effect, and authorizing the issuance and sale of bonds for the purpose of erecting works for the purpose of both generating and transmitting electricity, or for the purpose of transmitting electricity which may be otherwise acquired. In a consideration of this question, it is, of course, to be noted that the statutory power of municipal corporations to erect and construct municipal improvements and utilities and their power to borrow money by the issuance and sale of bonds for such purposes, are in a measure separate and distinct powers, yet a consideration of the statutes relating to municipal corporations indicates an aim on the part of the legislature to make the power of such corporation to borrow money by the issuance and sale of bonds, as broad with respect to the erection and construction of improvements and utilities calling for large sums of money, as its power to erect and construct such improvements or utilities.

> "It is a well established rule that the provisions of a statute are to be construed in connection with all laws in pari materia, and especially with reference to the system of legislation of which they form a part, and so that all the provisions may, if possible, have operation according to their plain import. It is to be presumed that a code of statutes relating to one subject, was governed by one spirit and policy, and intended to be consistent and harmonious in its several parts. And where, in a code or system of laws relating to a particular subject, a general policy is plainly declared, special provisions should, when possible, be given a construction which will bring them in harmony with that policy.
> "Cincinnati vs. Conner, 55 O. S., 82, 89."

The general subject under consideration is the power of a municipality to furnish electric light to meet its own needs and those of its inhabitants. As before noted, such municipality is given express power to furnish electric light for these purposes by purchasing the necessary electric current from others. To transmit and distribute the current so purchased for the purpose of furnishing light to the corporation and its inhabitants, it is necessary to erect poles, wires and other fixtures for the purpose of effecting the sole purpose for which the current is purchased. To do these things it may be necessary for the corporation to borrow money by the issuance and sale of bonds, and consonant to the rule of statutory construction before noted, I am of the opinion that the language of subdivision 12 of section 3939 is to be construed as authorizing a municipality to issue and sell its bonds for such purposes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE TO LAY PIPES AND FURNISH OTHER INCIDENTAL CONNECTIONS FOR THE PURPOSE OF FURNISHING WATER TO FIRE HYDRANTS—CONNECTIONS TO BE FURNISHED—COST OF REPAVING STREET TORN UP BY WATERWORKS DEPARTMENT PRIMARILY CHARGEABLE TO THE WATERWORKS FUND, COUNCIL MAY DIRECT, HOWEVER, THAT IT BE CHARGED AGAINST THE STREET REPAIR FUND; SUCH EXPENSE IS NOT CHARGEABLE AGAINST THE SAFETY FUND.

1. Under the provisions of section 3963, General Code, it is the duty of the director of public service, by the use of the waterworks fund, and without charge against the safety department, to lay pipes and furnish other incidental connections for the purpose of furnishing water to fire hydrants.

2. The connections to be furnished are such connections as will carry the water to the fire hydrant, as furnished by the department of public safety.

3. The expense of restoring a paved street, torn up by the waterworks department, in process of making such connection, is primarily chargeable to the waterworks fund; but council, by appropriate legislation, may direct the director of public service to charge it against the street repair fund, but it may not be charged against the safety fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 28th requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "What interpretation should be placed upon that part of section 3963, which reads as follows 'no charge shall be made by the director of service in cities * * * for furnishing and supplying connections with fire hydrants?'
> "What connections are to be furnished with fire hydrants and must said connections be installed by the municipal waterworks plant?
> "Must a municipal waterworks plant bear the expense of restoring a paved street torn up in order to repair the pipe connections leading from the mains to the fire hydrants?
> "We would refer you to your former opinion construing said section 3963 in connection with 4371, rendered July 28, 1913."

In the previous opinion referred to I held that sections 3961 and 4371, General Code, were inconsistent, and that as a matter of law the one last enacted, viz., section 4371 must control; so that the furnishing of fire hydrants or plugs is a matter within the department of public safety, to be paid for out of funds raised by taxation and appropriated for the use of that department.

My examination of the question submitted, and particularly of the language of section 3963, General Code, wherein the same words, viz., "furnishing and supplying with connections * * * fire hydrants," are used save that the word "with" follows instead of precedes the word "connection," leads me to the conclusion that while my previous opinion was right, there is no inconsistency between section 3961 and 4371, General Code, but that section 3961 is to be so interpreted as to limit the power of the director of public service to "furnishing and supplying" connections with fire hydrants, and is not to be extended to furnishing fire hydrants themselves.

It is at least possible to read section 3961 in this way, and I mention this view as at least an additional reason justifying the conclusion reached by me in the former opinion. It will be assumed at any rate that sections 3961 and 3963, General Code, are limited to supplying connections with fire hydrants.

Under section 4371 and related sections of the General Code, it is the power and duty of the director of public safety, in my opinion, to designate the location of any fire hydrant or plug and it is also his duty to purchase such plug or hydrant ready for connection with the water distribution system of the city. It is then the duty of the director of public service, under section 3963, to lay down such pipes and to furnish such incidental connections as are necessary to carry the water from the distribution mains of the city waterworks department to the fire plugs as located by the director of public safety. It is also his duty to keep such connections so furnished by him in repair.

All this must be done by the director of public service as the chief administrative authority of the waterworks department and with the use of waterworks funds. Section 3963 prohibits him from making any charge against the safety department for such services. If it were not for this section, however, it would be quite proper for such a charge to be made as the expense is one which really ought to be met by the taxpayers and not the users of water. This statement, however, involves a general criticism of the policy of section 3963, General Code; there can be no question as to the meaning of the section.

I believe the general statements which I have made constitute as much of an answer to your first two questions as I could furnish in the absence of a more specific request.

Your third question is more difficult. In principle it might be extended to cover any case of restoring a paved street, torn up for the purpose of repairing waterworks mains and plug connections. Of course work of this sort is to be done by the department of public service which has charge of the streets as well as the waterworks, but the question as to whether or not it should be paid for out of waterworks funds or out of street repair funds, derived from general taxation, is one which is difficult of solution.

Section 3963 does not furnish any answer to this question. It prohibits the director from charging the department of public safety for the expense of keeping waterworks connections with fire hydrants in repair, and to this extent I think its express language may be interpreted so as to prohibit charging the cost of the restoration of the pavement to that department; but it does not specify as to what fund under the supervision of the department of public service may be drawn upon for the purpose of meeting such expense. I quote, however, section 3964, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Attachments of whatever nature made to the water pipes or other fixtures belonging to the waterworks and intended for public use shall be subject to the same supervision, rules and regulations as are made for the protection of waterworks against abuse, destruction and unnecessary use or waste of water or the director of public service may make general or special rules and regulations for such purpose."

I do not believe that under this section the director of public service has authority to make a rule charging the cost of restoring the paved street against any proprietor, either public or private. Service connections have to be repaired, at least, in the absence of abuse or destruction on the part of the proprietor; and I do not believe that the director of public service may, under a joint interpretation of this and preceding sections, hold the department of public safety for alleged "abuse or destruction" of any kind. Under section 3714, General Code, council has the special power to exercise care, supervision and control of the streets within a corporation and to cause them to be kept open, in repair and free from nuisances. Council must act, of course, through the agency of the director of public service but this power is evidently paramount.

I find no express authority for the use of waterworks money to restore paved streets under any circumstances. In a sense the restoration of a street to its original condition might be regarded as a part of an extension or laying down of pipe which is an enterprise, the expense of which is payable out of the waterworks fund. In another sense the re-surfacing of the street is an independent undertaking necessitated by the original excavation, of course, but not being a part of it.

In the absence of any more explicit statutory provisions than those which I have found, I am of the opinion that the director of public service, who has general management of the waterworks, even to the extent that his disposition of waterworks money cannot be in detail controlled by the council, may, in the exercise of his administrative discretion, expend such moneys for the reimbursement of the city on account of the expense of restoring paved streets torn up by any repairing and fire hydrant connection. The council, through the department of public service and the sub-department of street repairs may, of course, provide otherwise for the doing of such work, as it has general power over the repair of streets.

In the case of service connections other than those with fire hydrants it is, I believe, customary for the waterworks department to charge the consumer with the cost of replacing the pavement as well as with making the excavation, laying the pipe and refilling the trench. This is, of course, on the theory that the restoration of the pavement is an expenditure on the part of the city for the benefit of the consumer, and the result is that no municipal funds are drawn upon for this purpose, at least ultimately.

The sections already considered, however, preclude the possibility of charging the department of public safety for any expense connected with making connections with fire plugs. The burden must fall upon some public fund and primarily, at least, it must fall upon the waterworks fund, because the restoration of the pavement, as already stated, is in a sense, at least, a part of the process of making the connection.

Now the statute is negatively phrased. It is a prohibition against charging any part of the expense to the safety department; and it is directed against the director of public service in his peculiar capacity as manager of the waterworks and administrator of the waterworks fund. It is controlling upon the council only in so far as expenditures from the safety fund are concerned. It does not amount inferentially to a prohibition against the expenditure of any other fund than the waterworks fund for any part of the expense of such an enterprise which might lawfully or appropriately become a charge upon any such other fund. The digging of the trench, the laying of the pipe and the refilling of the trench are not expenses which might lawfully be charged to any fund other than the waterworks or safety fund, and the sections under consideration prevent them from being charged against the latter, therefore, they must be charged against the former. But the restoration of the pavement being a matter which if not provided for out of the waterworks fund may appropriately become the subject of legislation by council in the exercise of its duty to keep the streets open and free from nuisances, is one that when authorized and directed by council may, in my opinion, be charged against the street repair division of the service fund.

My conclusion is that in the absence of legislation by council authorizing and directing the director of public service to restore pavements torn up for the purpose of making connection with fire hydrants by the use of the street repair fund and making appropriations from that fund for that purpose, an expense of this kind falls upon the waterworks fund as a part of the expense of making the connection; but that council may legislate as suggested, and in so doing may relieve the waterworks fund of the burden of making such expenditure. Such action on the part of council ought to be looked upon with favor in my opinion, because of the fact that in the absence of statutes, a governmental expense, or rather an expenditure made necessary for governmental purposes, is one which ought to be borne by the taxpayers rather than by the users of water; and statutes preventing such a result ought in my judgment, to receive a very strict interpretation.

So that your third question, while it is to be answered in the negative, in the sense that the expense of restoring streets is one that must be charged to the waterworks fund under all the circumstances mentioned, is not fully answered by such a statement; because it is only in the absence of the taking of proper steps that such expense is to be so charged.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES TO WRITE OHIO POLICIES INDEMNIFYING PHYSICIANS AGAINST MALPRACTICE.

A foreign insurance company may not write in Ohio policies indemnifying physicians against malpractice.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. ROBERT M. SMALL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 18, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Enclosed you will find 'Physicians' Liability Policy' No. 1427235, issued to Dr. John Larkin of Hillsboro, Ohio, by the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York as of date January 5, 1912.
> "This policy was renewed on January 5, 1913, for a period of one year on the payment of $15.00 premium by the insured as is evidenced by the enclosed renewal certificate No. 21337.
>
> "The above insurance policy covers the insured and provides indemnity as follows:
> " 'To INDEMNIFY the person named in statement number 1 of the schedule of warranties and herein called the assured, AGAINST LOSS FROM THE LIABILITY IMPOSED BY LAW UPON THE ASSURED for damages on account of bodily injuries or death, suffered by any person or persons in consequence of any malpractice, error, or mistake—(a) of the assured in the practice of his profession during the term of this policy; (b) of any assistant of the assured while assisting the assured in the administration of medical or surgical treatment during the said term.
> " 'TO DEFEND in the name and on behalf of the assured any suit brought against the assured to enforce a claim, whether groundless or not, for damages on account of bodily injuries or death suffered, or alleged to have been suffered, by any person or persons in consequence of any malpractice, error or mistake —(a) of the assured in the practice of his profession during the term of this policy; (b) of any assistant of the assured while assisting the assured in the administration of medical or surgical treatment during the said term.' "
> "Its limit of indemnity is set out in paragraph one of that part thereof designated 'subject to following conditions,' and is as follows:

" '1. The company's liability for loss from any malpractice, error or mistake resulting in bodily injuries to or in the death of one person is limited to five thousand dollars, and subject to the same limit for each person, the company's total liability under this policy is limited to fifteen thousand dollars. The expenses incurred by the company in defending any suit, including the interest on any verdict or judgment and any costs taxed against the assured, will be paid by the company irrespective of the limit expressed above.'

"The said Fidelity and Casualty Company was licensed by this department for the years 1911, 1912 and 1913 dated as March 1st, each year and authorized accordingly to transact business in this state.

" 'Its appropriate business of making insurance on the health of individuals and against personal injury, disablement or death, resulting from traveling or general accidents by land and water; making insurance against loss or damage resulting from accident to property, from cause other than fire or lightning, guaranteeing the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trust, who may be required to, or do, in their trust capacity, receive, hold, control, disburse public or private moneys or property; guaranteeing the performance of contracts other than insurance policies, and executing and guaranteeing bonds and undertakings required or permitted in all actions or proceedings, or by law allowed; making insurance to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes, and to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations, as prescribed in section 9510, paragraph second, General Code, in accordance with law, during the current year.'

"You will find also enclosed a certified copy of declaration and charter of the Fidelity and Casualty Company of New York, also a letter from the Hon. Charles C. Nadal, its general counsel, bearing upon the subject of 'Physicians' Liability Insurance.'

"A study of these enclosures prompts two queries and I respectfully request your opinion relative thereto.

"First. Do the laws of Ohio permit the issuance of insurance therein as of a character as provided in the above paragraphs one and two by insurance companies organized under the laws of Ohio, or by insurance companies organized under the laws of any other state in the United States and admitted thereto?

"Second. If you should conclude affirmatively as to query number one, does section 9510 provide for such insurance?"

The agreement entered into by the Fidelity and Casualty Company under the policy submitted by you is two-fold. First, it is an agreement to indemnify and second to defend. As this agreement is fully set forth in your letter, I do not again copy it from the policy.

In the first place I desire to call your attention to the case of State ex rel. The Physicians' Defense Co. vs. Laylin, Secretary of State, 73 O. S., 90, where it was held that a contract or agreement to defend a physician against a suit for malpractice (such contract or agreement not including a judgment should one be recovered against the physician) is not a contract of insurance, as there is no agreement to indemnify, and that such an agreement or contract on the part of the corporation constitutes professional business, and is expressly prohibited to corporations by section 3235 R. S. O., now section 8623, General Code. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

"1. A foreign corporation, the sole business of which as authorized by its charter, is that of defending physicians and surgeons against civil prosecution for malpractice, which, in the prosecution and conduct of said business, issues and sells to members of the medical profession a contract whereby it undertakes and agrees to defend the holder of said contract against any suit for malpractice that may be brought against him during the term therein specified, but does not assume, or agree to assume or pay, any judgment that shall be rendered against him in such suit, is not engaged in the business of insurance, nor is the contract so issued and sold an insurance contract.

"2. But a foreign corporation created for the purpose of engaging in and carrying on such business, is not entitled to have or receive from the secretary of the state of Ohio, a certificate authorizing it to transact such business in this state for the reason that the business proposed is professional business, and as such is expressly prohibited to corporations by section 3235 of the revised statutes of Ohio."

As the second portion of the contract contained in the policy submitted by you expressly provides that the company is "to defend in the name and on behalf of the assured any suit brought against the assured to enforce a claim, whether groundless or not, for damages on account of bodily injuries or death suffered, or alleged to have been suffered, by any person or persons in consequence of any malpractice, error or mistake (a) of the assured in the practice of his profession during the term of this policy; (b) of any assistant of the assured while assisting the assured in the administration of medical or surgical treatment during the said term;" in other words, is to defend the assured against any or all civil suits for damages for malpractice on the part of himself or his assistants brought during the term of the policy, this portion of the policy would seem to come fairly within the decision to which I have above referred, and would be prohibited to a corporation either foreign or domestic.

Under this decision of the court, and its construction of section 8623, General Code, an insurance company cannot enter into contracts of this character unless expressly authorized so to do. That is, in the absence of a special and specific provision authorizing contracts of this character by an insurance corporation, the general statute would control. There is no such special or specific statute giving such authority to insurance corporations and, therefore, it must be considered that they come within, and are bound by, the rule announced in said case of State ex rel. Physicians' Defense Co. vs. Laylin.

Answering your questions specifically:

First. Do the laws of Ohio permit the issuance of insurance therein as of a character as provided in the above paragraphs one and two by insurance companies organized under the laws of Ohio, or by insurance companies organized under the laws of any other state in the United States and admitted thereto?

Section 9510, General Code, specifies the kinds of insurance which companies may be organized in this state to transact, or which companies organized in other states may be allowed to transact in this state. This section is as follows:

"A company may be organized or admitted under this chapter to—

"1. Insure houses, buildings and all other kinds of property in and out of the state against loss or damage by fire, lightning and tornadoes, and make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of transportation on land, water or on a vessel, boat or wherever it may be.

"2. Make insurance on the health of individuals and against personal injury, disablement or death resulting from traveling or general accidents by land and water; make insurance against loss or damage resulting from accident to property, from cause other than fire or lightning; guarantee the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trusts, who are required to, or, in their trust capacity do receive, hold, control, disburse public or private moneys or property; guarantee the performance of contracts other than insurance policies and execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings required or permitted in all actions or proceedings, or by law allowed; make insurance to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes and to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations. But a company of another state, territory, district or country admitted to transact the business of indemnifying employers and others, in addition to any other deposit required by other laws of this state, shall deposit with the superintendent of insurance for the benefit and security of all its policyholders, fifty thousand dollars in bonds of the United States or of the state of Ohio, or of a county, township, city or other municipality in this state, which shall not be received by the superintendent at a rate above their par value. The securities so deposited may be exchanged from time to time for other securities. So long as such company continues solvent and complies with the laws of this state it shall be permitted by the superintendent to collect the interest on such deposits.

"3. Make insurance on the lives of horses, cattle or other live stock against loss by death caused by accident, disease, fire or lightning, and against loss by theft and damage by accident. But such companies shall have a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, with at least twenty-five per cent. of the capital stock paid up.

"Receive on deposit and insure the safe keeping of books, papers, moneys, stocks, bonds and all kinds of personal property; lend money on bottomry or respondentia and cause itself to be insured against any loss or risk it has incurred in the course of its business, and upon the interest which it has in any property by means of any loan which it has made on mortgage or bottomry or respondentia, and generally to do all other things proper to promote these objects."

Section 665 of the General Code provides that the only insurance business which can be transacted in this state, either by domestic or foreign insurance companies, is that expressly authorized by the laws of this state. This section is as follows:

"No company, corporation or association, whether organized in this state or elsewhere shall engage either directly or indirectly in this state in the business of insurance, or enter into any contracts substantially amounting to insurance, or in any manner aid therein, or engage in the business of guaranteeing against liability, loss or damage, unless it is expressly authorized by the laws of this state, and the laws regulating it and applicable thereto, have been complied with."

It is, therefore, necessary to determine whether the insurance of physicians against claims for malpractice is authorized by the laws of this state, that is by section 9510 of the General Code which I have quoted above. A careful examination of this section fails to disclose authority for insurance of this character. The only language which could possibly be claimed to apply in any way to insurance of this kind is that authorizing companies to "indemnify persons and corporations other than employers, against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations."

The contingency insured against in the policy submitted to me cannot be classed as an accident. The policy specifically states that it is to indemnify "against loss from or liability * * * in consequence of any malpractice, error or mistake." It may perhaps be claimed that the paragraph of section 9510 dealing with liability insurance can reasonably be held to include and authorize liability insurance of every character, and thus include the insurance of physicians against the results of malpractice.

A consideration of the statute itself is perhaps the strongest argument against this intention. It will be found that the statute specifies with great care the different kinds of liability or casualty insurance which may be written, and if it were intended to authorize generally all kinds of liability and casualty insurance there is no reason nor excuse for the careful detail with which the different kinds of insurance are specified; again, by examination of the legislation of the state, it is found that this statute has from time to time been amended so as to authorize additional classes of insurance to those contained in it at the time of its enactment. (See 102 O. L., 359; 90 O. L 157; 93 O. L., 17; 97 O. L., 408.)

The last amendment was made in order to authorize casualty companies to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accident to employes, and further to indemnify persons other than employers against such loss or damage.

Had the statute authorized all kinds of liability and casualty insurance these amendments would be entirely unnecessary. The civil action for recovery of damages on account of malpractice by a physician is not of recent origin. I have not taken the trouble to trace the history of this action, but I am quite positive it is older than the state of Ohio, and the liability of physicians to actions of this character must have been known to the first legislature which passed a statute on the subject of insurance, as well as to every legislature that has experimented in the dangerous but attractive field of making and amending laws, and, therefore, so far as I can see, there is no reason whatever upon which to base the contention that insurance of this character was intended by the legislature to be embraced by the terms of section 9510.

It is unnecessary to determine whether this particular company is authorized by the laws of the state, under which it is organized, to write policies of insurance indemnifying physicians against loss from liability on account of malpractice, and agreeing to defend physicians from actions for damages for malpractice for the reason, as above stated, that under section 665 of the General Code, no insurance company can, in this state, transact insurance business not authorized by the laws of this state, no matter whether such company is organized in this state or elsewhere; and I fail to find in the statutes of Ohio any authority express or implied for the issuance of policies to idemnify physicians against or defend them from claims for damages on account of malpractice.

My position, I think, is sustained by the case of State ex rel. Sheets Attorney General vs. Aetna Life Insurance Co., 69 O. S., 317. This case has been cited to sustain the contention that an insurance company may write any class of insurance in this state if such business is within the charter powers of such company, and is not obnoxious to the policy of the laws of this state, unless such business is expressly prohibited by the laws of this state, upon the assumption that under the rule of comity that prevails between the states of the union, this state will permit a corporation, organized in another state, to do any act authorized by its charter or the law under which it is created, unless said act be expressly prohibited by the laws of this state, or be obnoxious to the public policy of this state. This rule may be generally true, but it does not apply to the question now under consideration and is not sustained by the case referred to. The syllabus of said case is as follows:

"1. A life insurance company incorporated and organized under the laws of another state, and authorized by its charter to engage in the business of 'indemnifying employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes,' may, upon complying with the statutory requirements regulating deposits by foreign corporations, be licensed and permitted, under favor of section 3596, Revised Statutes, to engage in and transact such employers' liability insurance in this state.

"2. In the absence of any statute in Ohio prohibiting life insurance companies from doing an employers' liability insurance in this state, and the business itself being by statute expressly authorized; a life insurance company, incorporated and organized under the laws of a sister state, and empowered by its charter to engage in the business of employers' liability insurance, may, by the comity that prevails between the states, be licensed and permitted to transact such business in this state, although our statute has not in express terms conferred upon domestic life insurance companies authority to engage in or transact that particular kind of insurance."

It is seen from this that the court bases its holding upon the fact that the kind of insurance under consideration in said case was expressly authorized by our statutes; and the presumption necessarily arises, from a careful consideration of this syllabus (which is the law of the case), that the court would have no hesitancy in holding that insurance business of a kind not authorized by the laws of this state cannot be transacted in this state by either a domestic or foreign insurance company.

For a more complete discussion of this matter I refer you to my opinion to your predecessor, Hon. Edmond H. Moore, dated July 12, 1912, in which I held that the superintendent of insurance was not warranted under the laws of Ohio in issuing a license to the Aetna Accident and Liability Company, a foreign corporation, organized to do a casualty business other than fire, to issue a policy insuring against the loss of use of an automobile caused by fire.

My answer to your first question, therefore, is that the laws of Ohio do not authorize insurance companies to issue policies agreeing to indemnify physicians from and defend them against claims arising from malpractice.

My answer to your first question also answers your second question.

I herewith return to you the enclosures referred to in your letter.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BONDS OF THE ST. FRANCIS LEVEE DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS AND THE BONDS OF THE HARRIS COUNTY HOUSTON SHIP CHANNEL NAVIGATION DISTRICT OF HARRIS COUNTY, TEXAS, NOT COUNTY BONDS.

The bonds of the St. Francis levee district of Arkansas are not county bonds, and under the provisions of section 9778, General Code, do not, therefore, come within the classes specified in said section. The same is true of the bonds of the Harris County Houston Ship Channel Navigation District of Harris county, Texas.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 20, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

"I herewith submit for your consideration papers describing an issue of bonds by the St. Francis levee district of Arkansas, and would request an opinion as to whether or not said bonds may be deposited with the treasurer of state as security for the faithful performance of trusts as provided for by section 9778, General Code, of Ohio.

"I would also request an opinion as to whether or not bonds issued by the Harris County Houston Ship Channel Navigation District of Harris county, Texas, are acceptable for the purpose referred to above. The following certificate appears on the back of said bonds:

" 'Office of the Comptroller of the State of Texas.'

" 'I, W. P. Lane, comptroller of public accounts, certify that there is on file and of record in my office a certificate of the attorney general of the state of Texas to the effect that this bond has been examined by him, as required by section 17, chap. 15, acts 31st legislature, and that he finds that it has been issued in conformity with the constitution and the laws of the state of Texas, and that it is valid and binding obligation upon said Harris county, state of Texas, and said bond has this day been registered by me.

" 'Witness my hand and the seal of my office, this the 4th day of January, A. D., 1912.' "

[Signed] A. P. Lane,
Comptroller of the State of Texas.

Section 9778 of the General Code is as follows:

"No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock."

Under this section the only bonds which may be received by you are bonds issued by the United States, or by this state or by a county or municipality therein, or by a county or municipality in any other state, or the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock. The naming of certain bonds which may be accepted for deposit under this section necessarily excludes all classes of bonds which are not named, and, therefore, this being a provision to secure the faithful performance of trusts by trust companies should be strictly construed, and no bonds should be accepted which do not come squarely within one of the specified classes.

In regard to the bonds of the Harris County Houston Ship Channel Navigation District of Harris county, Texas, I, of course, give full faith and credit to the certificate of the comptroller of the state of Texas that such bonds are valid and binding obligations upon Harris county, Texas, but it appears that these bonds are issued by a certain district of Harris county, Texas, and, therefore, cannot be properly classed as "county bonds." They are, primarily, the bonds of the district by which they are issued, and, therefore, cannot be classed as county bonds for the purpose of deposit under section 9778.

As to the bonds of the St. Francis Levee District of Arizona, it appears that the St. Francis Levee District embraces all or parts of seven counties in the northeastern part of Arkansas. This particular district was organized in 1893 and has the power to issue bonds. These bonds, however, are not the bonds of any county, nor of a municipality, but are bonds of the St. Francis Levee District, and as such do not come under any classification of bonds which are made acceptable for deposit under section 9778, as stated in a former opinion to you upon a question analogous to this, I do not wish to be considered as in any way passing upon the validity or worth of these bonds. My holding is merely upon a strict construction of the terms of the statute under consideration.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SECTION 7748, GENERAL CODE, PROVIDING FOR TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS WHO ARE REQUIRED TO GO TO A SCHOOL MORE THAN FOUR MILES DISTANT, DOES NOT APPLY TO VILLAGE AND CITY BOARDS OF EDUCATION.

Section 7748, General Code, providing for the transportation, by the board of education, of pupils who are required to go to school more than four miles distant from the pupil's residence, in lieu of the payment of tuition at a nearer school in another district, by said board, does not have any application to village and city boards of education, but only to boards of education of rural districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 3, 1914, this department received a communication from you, wherein you say:

> "Enclosed find a letter. Please give me your opinion on the question contained therein."

The communication referred to reads as follows:

> State Superintendent of Schools, Columbus, Ohio.
> Dear Sir:—"Having been interested in board of education matters for a good many years past, I am taking the liberty of writing you direct for a legal opinion regarding whether or not the board of education of the city of Cleveland are not compelled to pay the transportation of high school pupils in the junior and senior years, who are obliged to go more than four miles from their homes to a school. Going into detail, I might add that a little over a year ago at the regular election, Nottingham was voted into the city of Cleveland.
> "Prior to annexation, Nottingham village school maintained a full four year course of high school, but after being taken in by Cleveland (our schools coming under the board of education of said city), the pupils of the junior and senior years of old Nottingham (now Cleveland) were instructed to report at the Glenville high school of Cleveland, Ohio, at the September opening.
> "The first and second years of high school are still maintained in old Nottingham, and a similar high school for the same years maintained in Collinwood, which is midway between Glenville high and old Nottingham, the distance between old Nottingham and Glenville being five miles.
> "The question is, are not these juniors and seniors from old Nottingham (now Cleveland) entitled to their transportation from the board of education of the city of Cleveland?"

Sections 7747 and 7748, General Code, as the same now appear on pages 125 and 126 of 104 O. L., are as follows:

> "The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month. No more shall be charged per capita than the amount ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the high school of the district attended, exclusive of permanent improvements and repair, by the average monthly enrollment in the high school of the district. The district superintendent shall certify to the county superintendent each year the names of all pupils in his supervision district who have completed the elementary school work, and are eligible for admission to high school. The county superintendent shall thereupon issue to each pupil so certified a certificate of promotion which shall entitle the holder to admission to any high school. Such certificate shall be furnished by the superintendent of public instruction.

Section 7748. "A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years, or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

Under section 7747, above quoted, it will be noted that it is only the tuition of pupils eligible to high school admission who reside in rural districts in which no high school is maintained, which must be paid by the board of education of the district in which they have legal school residence. The italicized portion of section 7748 allows an alternative to boards of education, maintaining high schools of their own, with reference to pupils who live more than four miles from such high school, permitting such boards, instead of paying the tuition, to a nearer outside school, of all successful applicants, to transport the successful applicants to their own school. The term "applicant" has a well recognized reference, in these statutes, throughout, to Boxwell-Patterson graduates. The italicized portion of section 7748, when standing alone, has a possible general application to rural, as well as city and village school districts, only, if we disregard the habitual application, in the statutes, of the word "applicant," to Boxwell-Patterson graduates. The use of the term "applicant," however, will, at least, be conceded to make the provision, even when read alone, ambiguous in its nature.

When we regard the following last portion of section 7748, which is as follows:

"A pupil living in a village or city district, who has completed the elementary school course, and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

It is clear to me that if the italicized portion, above referred to, applied to residents of a village or city district, as well as those of a rural district, the language of the above quoted latter portion of section 7748 would have been unnecessary or, at least, the legislature would have taken the pains to reserve the same rights to a graduate in a rural district, who removed to a city or village district, after having completed his elementary course and received a Boxwell degree.

It would seem that these provisions, of themselves, would be sufficient to justify, clearly, the conclusion that section 7748, General Code, has no application to residents of village and city districts. This conclusion is fortified when we read these statutes as a whole, in view, particularly, of the consideration that 7747, General Code, imposes the obligation of paying tuition only for residents of rural districts. A history of these statutes, however, would seem to remove the question of all doubt. Sections 7747, 7748, 7749, 7750 and 7751, as originally enacted in 95 O. L., page 72, were all comprised within one enactment of the legislature, and they appeared in the statutes, in the form of one enactment, as 4029-3, Revised Statutes, until the codifying commission, in 1910, separated them and gave them the designated numbers they now bear.

Section 4029-3, Revised Statutes, as it first appeared on page 72, 95 O. L., is as follows:

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township, special or joint sub-districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month and an attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall charge no more tuition than it charges for other nonresident pupils, and no board of education shall be required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; provided the board of education shall be required to pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the provisions of this act, residing more than three miles from the high school provided by said board, when said applicants attend a nearer high school. The tuition of pupils residing in joint sub-districts shall be paid by the boards of education, having control of such districts, from the contingent funds of said districts. A board of education not maintaining a high school may enter into an agreement with one or more boards of education maintaining such school for the schooling of all its high school pupils and when such agreement is entered into the board making the same shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools; provided the school or schools selected are located in the same civil township, or some adjoining township, as that of the board making the agreement. Where no such agreement is entered into the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma; provided, due notice in writing, is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin, said notice to be filed not less than five days previous to said beginning of attendance. Said tuition can be paid from either the tuition or contingent funds, and in case the board of education deems it necessary it may levy a tax of not to exceed two mills on each dollar of taxable property in the district or joint subdistrict in excess of that allowed by section 3959 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio; the proceeds of said levy shall be kept in a separate fund and applied only to the payment of such tuition."

Under the application of the rule noscitur a sociis, having in view the use of the term "applicants," as therein used, considering the fact that provision for payment of tuition, in this statute, provides only for a levy upon the taxable property in the district or joint subdistrict, it is clear that the original statute had not application to village or city districts. The act was next amended in 100 O. L., page 74. The statute then appeared as follows:

"The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township, special or joint subdistricts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month and an attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall charge no more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils. A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from said school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. A board of education providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; provided, however, any such board of education maintaining a second or third grade high school shall not be required to pay any such tuition after the rate of taxation permitted by law for such district shall have been reached and all the funds so raised are required for the support of the schools of said district. No board of education shall be required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; provided the board of education shall be required to pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the provisions of this act, residing more than three miles from the high school provided by said board, when said applicants attend a nearer high school. When the elementary schools of any township school district in which a high school is maintained are centralized and transportation of pupils is provided, all pupils resident of the township school district holding diplomas shall be entitled to transportation to the high school of said township school district, and the board of education of said school district shall be exempt from the payment of the tuition of said pupils in any other high school for such a portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education may include. The tuition of pupils residing in joint subdistricts shall be paid by the boards of education, having control of such districts, from the contingent funds of said districts. A board of education not maintaining a high school may enter into an agreement with one or more boards of education maintaining such school for the schooling of all its high school pupils and when such agreement is entered into the board making the same shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools of pupils living within three miles of the school designated in the agreement; provided the school or schools selected by the board are located in the same civil township, or some adjoining township, as that of the board making the agreement. Where no such agreement is entered into the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma; provided, due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin, said notice to be filed not less than five days previous to said beginning of attendance. Said tuition can be paid from either the tuition or contingent funds and in case the board of education deems it necessary it may levy a tax of not to exceed two mills on each dollar of taxable property in the district or joint subdistrict in excess of that allowed by section 3959 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio; the proceeds of said levy shall be kept in a separate fund and applied only to the payment of such tuition."

It is apparent that there was no change in this statute at this time which could possibly be construed to extend its application beyond township, special or joint subdistricts. The codifying commission then separated the statutes, after which section 7748 of the General Code was amended, on page 296 of 101 O. L., to read as follows:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

If we disregard the separation of the sections by the codifying commission, we find nothing in this last quoted amendment to justify an extension of these sections to village and city school districts. Through all these changes of the statutes it must be remembered that the provision for the method of paying such tuition by levying upon the district, when the tuition or contingent funds were insufficient for the purpose, ever remain the same, and this provision still appears in the General Code as section 7751. This provision is as follows:

"Such tuition shall be paid from either the tuition or contingent funds and when the board of education deems it necessary it may levy a tax of not to exceed two mills on each dollar of taxable property in the district in excess of that allowed by law for school purposes. The proceeds of such levy shall be kept in a separate fund and applied only to the payment of such tuition."

In 104 Ohio Laws the legislature changed the application of these statutes to rural districts instead of to township or special districts, in conformance with the newly enacted statutes providing for reformed school jurisdiction over rural districts.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that section 7748 of the General Code has no application to the case presented by you, for the reason that city districts are not within the comprehension of these statutes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COSTS INCURRED IN PROCEEDINGS UNDER MOTHERS' PENSION ACT—PAYMENT OF SUCH COSTS.

The only costs chargeable under the mothers' pension act are those incident to the hearing motion provided for under section 1683-8, General Code.

The fees in such proceedings as are provided by law for services in the court, the judge of which is exercising the juvenile jurisdiction at the time, may be taxed as costs in such proceedings. Such costs cannot be paid out of the county treasury in the event that they are not paid by the contestor, as provided in section 1683-8, they must go unpaid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of February 12th, you request my opinion as to the following questions arising under the so-called mothers' pension act, sections 1683-2 to 1683-9, inclusive, 103 O. L., 877:

(1). Does the use of the term "costs" in section 1683-8 imply that the judge of the juvenile court may tax fees for himself, for officers serving writs and for witnesses? If so, in what proceedings may such costs be taxed; for the implication that the judge may tax fees for issuing orders, filing reports, making a record and indexing, the same in all proceedings under the act, or is the authority of the judge to tax fees limited to proceedings on a motion filed under section 1683-8 by a citizen to set aside, vacate or modify a judgment of allowance?

(2). Under what circumstances are the fees taxable, if any, to be paid out of the county treasury, and under what circumstances are they to be taxed against a contestor, under section 1683-8?

(3). Are the taxable fees, in case a probate judge is acting as juvenile judge, those fixed by sections 2900 and 2901 General Code, and when collected are the same to be paid into the fee fund of the probate judge?

(4). In case a common pleas judge has been designated to act as juvenile judge, what fees are to be taxed? In such event, would the fees, when collected, be paid into the fee fund of the clerk of the common pleas court?

I have paraphrased your statement of the questions that you desire to submit to me, and I shall be pleased if you will call my attention to any misunderstanding which I may have of the exact scope of your inquiry.

All of these questions involve consideration of the following provisions of law:

> "Section 1683-2 as enacted, 103 O. L., 877. For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled for work by reasons of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive an age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have been legal residents in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women, as follows: Not to exceed fifteen dollars a month, when she has but one child not entitled to an age and schooling certificate, and if she has more than one child not entitled to an age and schooling certificate, it shall not exceed fifteen dollars a month for the first child and seven dollars a month for each of the other children not entitled to an age and schooling certificate. The order making such allowance shall not be effective for a longer period than six months, but upon the expiration of such period, said court may from time to time extend such allowance for a period of six months, or less. * * *.

"Section 1683-3. Such allowance may be made by the juvenile court, only upon the following conditions: First, the child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made, must be living with the mother of such child or children: Second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent from work for such time as the court deems advisable: Third, the mother must, in the judgment of the juvenile court, be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally, for the bringing up of her children: Fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman: Fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother: Sixth, a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made by the probation officer, an associated charities organization, humane society, or such other competent person or agency as the court may direct, and a written report of such examination filed.

"Section 1683-4. * * * The juvenile court may, in its discretion, at any time before such child reaches such age, discontinue or modify the allowance to any mother and for any child.

"Section 1683-8. In each case where an allowance is made to any woman under the provisions of this act, a record shall be kept of the proceedings, and any citizen of the county may, at any time, file a motion to set aside, or vacate or modify such judgment and on such motion said juvenile court shall hear evidence, and may make a new order sustaining the former allowance, modify or vacate the same, and from such order, error may be prosecuted, or an appeal may be taken as in civil actions. If the judgment be not appealed from, or error prosecuted, or if appealed or error prosecuted, and the judgment of the juvenile court be sustained or affirmed, the person filing such motion shall pay all the costs incident to the hearing of such motion."

Certain general principles underlie the consideration of the specific statutes above quoted, with a view to answering your questions. The statutes, prescribing fees for public officers, will be found, on examination, to contemplate two kinds of fees, viz.: those to be paid by the person for whom the services are to be rendered, and those to be paid out of the public treasury. As a general rule, all fees that may be taxed as costs are of the first class. Therefore, it becomes, to my mind, material to inquire what services, under the statutes cited, are to be regarded as rendered for the public and what for the individual requesting them.

Section 1683-8 speaks of a record of proceedings, but the remaining provisions of the act fail to require or to define any such proceedings. For example, the allowance which the statutes contemplate is not predicated on any application, as in the case of the allowance of a blind pension, or an order for soldier's relief, or other similar matters. There is no provision for a hearing, as in the case of blind pensions or lunacy inquests, or other ex parte proceedings of a similar character. There is no express authority to subpoena witnesses, with relation to an original allowance; on the contrary, one of the precedent conditions of an allowance is that a careful preliminary examination of the home in question shall be made and a written report of the examination filed.

Of course, in order to render the statute workable, some sort of an informal application must be entertained by the juvenile judge in order to start proceedings. But it is clear to my mind that, in the legal sense, the original allowance is not a proceeding of a private character. That is to say, for this purpose the appropriate analogy is found in the "poor laws" which provide for complaint to the proper officers, visitation and investigation by them, or by some public charities organization, and the granting of relief. The discharge of the official function partakes more of the nature of a general public duty than of the nature of a proceeding for the establishment of a private right or privilege.

So that, while section 1683-8 speaks of a record of the previous proceedings, I am, nevertheless, of the opinion that no proceedings of a judicial nature are required or authorized until the filing of a motion, of which that section speaks. Of course, by proceedings of a judicial nature I mean that idea of judicial power expressed in State ex rel. vs. Guilbert, 56 O. S., 575, quoting Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 109:

> "To adjudicate upon and protect the rights and interests of individual citizens, and to that end to construe and apply the laws is the peculiar province of the judicial department."

But whatever be the character of the proceedings for the original allowance of the pension, it is clear to me that the duties devolving upon the Judge of the juvenile court, in connection therewith, are, in the philosophical sense, owing to the public and not to the recipient of the benefits contemplated by the act.

As to services of this character, the courts have laid down the principle that no compensation, by way of fees, is payable from the public treasury, in the absence of specific provisions of law.

> Commissioners vs. Miller, 4 N. P. 53; 13 C. C. 518.
> Miller vs. Conradi, 5 C. C. n. s. 145.

To anticipate slightly, because the same is pertinent in this case, the services of the juvenile judge, in connection with mothers' pensions, other than those following the filing of a motion to set aside, etc., are of a character similar to his services in hearing juvenile delinquency cases, under the juvenile court act proper. He conducts no trial in the ordinary juvenile case, and he acts, not as a judicial officer meting out judgment, but as the representative of the state, as parens-patriae, exercising benevolent guardianship over persons of abnormal status; and if this jurisdiction is being exercised by the probate judge, the fees chargeable in his favor are those enumerated in section 1602, viz.: "when acting as a judge of the juvenile court, for each case filed against a delinquent, dependent or neglected child, two dollars and fifty cents;" these fees are to be paid out of the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor and the certificate of the probate judge, and are not to be taxed against any individual or regarded as costs in any "case."

I take it, therefore, that if it were the intention of the general assembly that the judge, exercising the juvenile jurisdiction, or any officer of his court, should be entitled to fees, as such, payable from the county treasury, in matters of this kind, it would be specifically provided for as a payment out of the county treasury.

I am able to find but one provision of this nature, viz.: that of section 2903, as follows:

> "The clerk (of courts) shall receive out of the county treasury upon the allowance of the county commissioners the following fees: * * * for each entry on journal required by law to be made, and not otherwise provided for, per one hundred words or fraction thereof, ten cents. * * *"

By section 1603 the probate judge is to be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services. By section 1682, General Code, it is provided that "fees and costs in all such cases * * * (cases under the juvenile act) shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers, certified to by the judge of the court," so that if the above quoted provision of section 2903 is applicable to the record required to be kept of the "proceedings" in mothers' pension matters, by section 1683-8, it would seem to provide a fee payable out of the county treasury for performing such services.

But, I am of the opinion that the record of which section 1683-8 speaks is not a "journal" within the meaning of section 2903. In Miller vs. Conradi, supra, it was held that what is now section 1603, General Code, then section 547, R. S., was not intended to apply to the class of fees which I have designated by the term "fees payable from the public treasury," The language of Parker J., at page 151, is that the court was "of the opinion that section 547, which allows compensation such as is allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas, has no relation to services of this character (inquests of lunacy) performed by the probate judge, which are to be paid for by the public; that it has relation to causes and proceedings between private parties, and that that is what is provided for by section 546 and section 547, is intended to cover the cases that may have been omitted from section 546."

Continuing in the immediate context, and speaking of the statute relating to inquests of lunacy, the court points out that that statute does not provide compensation for making up a record.

For the reason, then, that the circuit court of this state has held that what is now section 1603, General Code, is not applicable to fees payable out of the county treasury, and for the further reason that, in my judgment, there is no statute which could be stretched so as to cover the case of the record of proceedings provided for by section 1683-8, I am of the opinion that neither the judge of the juvenile court nor any of the officers of his court are entitled to any specific compensation for making up such record.

It is even clearer that no compensation, by way of fees, is to be charged or collected from any source by the probation officer, associated charities organization, humane society or other competent person or agency, directed by the court to prepare and file a written report of preliminary examination, as provided in section 1683-3.

In short, then, for the foregoing reasons, and also, because of the fact that section 1683-3 specifically provides for costs incidental to the hearing of the motion and makes no specific provision for any other costs, I am of the opinion that no fees or costs of any character, whatever, are to be charged or collected from any source on account of "proceedings" under the mothers' pension act prior to the filing of a motion to set aside or vacate or modify the judgment of allowance.

Coming now to the question as to what costs are taxable, as incident to the hearing of the motion, I observe that the juvenile court, upon the filing of such motion, is authorized to hear evidence and to make a new order sustaining, modifying or vacating the former allowance. This implies, of course, that the juvenile judge may be called upon to issue subpoenas and to swear witnesses, etc., and that persons may be called upon, under process, to testify. I think this implication is not unwarranted, for while the previous course of the "proceedings" has been non-judicial, this particular feature of them is clearly judicial, and, being conducted by a tribunal which is designated as a court, subject to review by appeal or error, in the same manner as civil action, it would seem reasonable, at least, to hold that the implied power to issue subpoenas and to enforce the attendance of witnesses, etc., must exist.

Your question, however, raises the point as to whether the mere provision for the payment of "costs" incident to the hearing of such motion by the person filing same, is, of itself, sufficient to imply authority to tax fees as costs. In my opinion, this provision is sufficient authority to tax, as costs, such fees as are lawfully chargeable. Of course, one must look elsewhere than in this act to find what fees are chargeable. In my opinion, the schedule of taxable fees is to be found in the statutes prescribing the fees chargeable in probate courts and in courts of common pleas. Your question being general, however, I feel that it is not necessary for me to go into detail and to point out precisely what fees are chargeable for each specific service, and precisely how they are to be handled. It is sufficient for your purposes, I believe, to say that, in my opinion, the identity of the court, the judge of which happens to be exercising the juvenile jurisdiction, governs the matter of fees. Thus, if the judge of the common pleas court is exercising jurisdiction, then the schedule of fees of witnesses, officers serving processes, clerk of court, etc., for services in the common pleas court, governs; if the probate judge is exercising jurisdiction, then the fees which may be charged are those provided by law for services in the probate court.

In my opinion, fees are chargeable for filing the motion provided for in section 1683-8, for issuing and serving processes, for compelling the attendance of witnesses, to witnesses for attending under subpoena and for making the "new order" of which section 1683-8 speaks; and as already indicated, the precise fees chargeable in the given instance are to be determined by reference to the statutes regulating fee bills, in the court which happens, at the time, to be exercising juvenile jurisdiction.

My conclusions here are based upon section 1639, which, as amended in 103 O. L., 836, provides as follows:

> "Courts of common pleas, probate courts, and insolvency courts and superior courts, where established shall have and exercise, concurrently, the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter. The judges of such courts in each county, at such times as they determine, shall designate one of their number to transact the business arising under such jurisdiction. When the term of the judge so designated expires, or his office terminates, another designation shall be made in like manner.
> "The words, juvenile court when used in the statutes of Ohio shall be understood as meaning the court in which the judge so designated may be sitting while exercising such jurisdiction, and the words 'judge of the juvenile court' or 'juvenile judge' as meaning such judge while exercising such jurisdiction.
> "The foregoing provisions shall not apply to Hamilton county, in which county the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter shall be exercised by the court of common pleas. * * *"

From this it is clear that the juvenile court is not a separate court, but merely the common pleas, probate, insolvency or superior court, as the case may be, the judge of which happens, at the time, to be exercising the juvenile jurisdiction.

In my opinion, all fees received by any of the officers subject to the provisions of the county officers' salary law, (including probate judge, clerk of court and sheriff), under the provisions of section 1683-8, are to be paid into their respective fee funds. The principles underlying this conclusion have been outlined in other opinions to your department.

You ask, also, as to payment of fees out of the county treasury. I have already stated my opinion to the effect that no fees of any kind are to be charged and collected from any source, on account of services other than those incident to the hearing of the motion referred to in section 1683-8. A careful reading of this section will disclose that the person filing the motion must pay the costs, whether his motion is sustained or not, unless the second judgement of the court is appealed from or error prosecuted, in which event he must also pay the costs if the judgment of the juvenile court is sustained or affirmed, regardless of the effect of such an affirmance, upon the end sought to be attained by his motion. Thus, the contestor may move to vacate an allowance; the motion may be granted by the court. If error is to be prosecuted or appeal taken "as in civil actions," the implication would seem to follow that the pensioner might be the plaintiff in error, or the appellant. Should she appeal and the judgment be affirmed or sustained, then, though such affirmance would establish the object of the original motion, nevertheless, the contestor must pay the costs.

On the other hand, under the circumstances just imagined, should the appellate court reverse the juvenile court, thus ultimately denying the object of the contestor's motion, and putting him in the light, so to speak, of a wrongful inter-meddler, yet he would not be charged with the costs, under the section.

It will thus be seen that section 1683-8 is a very strange provision. The ridiculous consequences that must necessarily flow from its practical application raise some doubt in my mind as to its validity, but my opinion is not invited on this point.

As to the case in which the judgment of the juvenile court is reversed or modified by the appellate court, I am of the opinion that there is no provision, whatever, for costs in such a case. It will not do to say that, in that event, the losing party in the appellate court must pay all the costs, for the reason that the statues make provision for the payment of costs, on affirmance, in such a way as to show that the losing party is not, on that account, to be made liable for the costs. Nor will it do to say that the appellate court may dispose of the matter of costs in the exercise of its implied power; for the general assembly has so clearly provided for the payment of certain costs, in the event of the judgment of affirmance, as, in my opinion, to remove the case from the field of judicial discretion.

In my opinion, while the costs are taxable in such case, there is no authority for their payment. I am clearly of the opinion that they cannot be taxed against the pensioner, for the reason that she is, in no proper sense, a party. I doubt the authority to charge the county treasury with their payment unless it be under section 1682, General Code, supra. However, the reference there to "all such cases" is clearly limited, in my mind, to juvenile court cases proper, and the scope of the section cannot be extended to cover mothers' pension proceedings. The case is somewhat analogous to that of misdemeanor cases where the defendant proves insolvent. Unless there is some statutory authority, the costs, though legally chargeable, cannot be recovered by those entitled to the fees.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOILER INSPECTION FEE NOT A PREFERRED CLAIM.

The claim of the state for boiler inspection fee is not a preferred claim.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS:—I have your letter of June 6, 1914, asking whether your claim of $16.00 against the Lennox Hotel Company, of Columbus, for boiler inspection fees, must be considered by the receiver as a preferred claim.

Section 11138, of the General Code, reads:

> "Taxes of every description assessed against the assignor upon personal property held by him before his assignment must be paid by the assignee or trustee out of the proceeds of the property assigned in preference to any other claims against the assignor. Each person who has performed labor as an operative in the service of the assignor, within twelve months preceding the assignment, shall be entitled to receive out of the trust funds before the paying of other creditors, the full amount of wages due for such labor, not exceeding three hundred dollars."

The fees your bill covers are not taxes and it can not come within the provisions of this section, nor am I able to find any other statute that makes them a preferred claim. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the state in the case you refer to, must be content to receive the same dividends as the general creditors of the corporation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COSTS OF THE PROCEEDING ON A FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE—WHERE SUCH COSTS ARE CHARGEABLE.

The cost of a proceeding before a magistrate on a fugitive from justice warrant sworn out by the sheriff of a foreign state is chargeable to the foreign state, but the witness fees of the defendant's witnesses are not a part of the costs, and, therefore, are not to be so charged.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 20, 1914.

HON. CHAS. L. MILROY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 1, 1914, inquiring substantially as follows:

> "A trial was had in the city and justice court of the city of Toledo, Port Lawrence township, Lucas county, on a fugitive from justice warrant, sworn out by the sheriff of Lenawee county, Mich. To whom were the costs of such proceedings chargeable?"

Section 1772 of the General Code reads:

> "In the city of Toledo and the township lying wholly therein, the boundaries whereof are or hereafter may be concurrent with the boundaries of such city, there shall be three judges and justices of the peace in and for such city and township. They shall be elected at the regular municipal election therein in the same manner, shall hold office for the same term, possess the same jurisdiction, powers, duties and liabilities, and be subject to the same qualifications and disqualifications as justices of the peace for townships."

Section 109 to 118 of the General Code, in regard to fugitives from justice, make provision for costs only in cases where a hearing is had before a judge of the supreme, circuit or common pleas court. Sections 13520 to 13522, General Code, deal with fugitives from other states, but make no provision for costs. Section 13520 reads:

"When an affidavit is filed before a judge of a common pleas, probate or police court or a justice of the peace, setting forth that a person charged with the commission of an offense against the laws of another state or territory of the United States, which, if committed in this state would, by the laws thereof, have been a crime, at the time of filing such affidavit, within the county where it is filed, such judge or justice of the peace shall issue a warrant directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county, commanding him forthwith to arrest and bring before him the person so charged."

Section 13521 of the General Code, reads:

"When a person is arrested in pursuance of the next preceding section, and brought before the officer who issued the warrant, he shall hear and examine such charge, and, upon proof, adjudged by him to be sufficient, commit such person to the jail of the county in which such examination is had or cause him to be delivered to a suitable person to be removed before such judge or justice of the proper county in which to take such examination, who shall take it and proceed as if the warrant had been issued by him."

Section 13522 of the General Code, reads:

"When a person is committed to jail by a judge or justice of the peace, under the next preceding section, such judge or justice shall forthwith give notice, by letter or otherwise, to the sheriff of the county in which such offense was committed, or to the person injured by such offense. A person so committed shall not be detained in jail longer than to allow a reasonable time to the persons receiving such notice to apply for and obtain the proper requisition for such person."

Since the accused must be a fugitive from justice before he can be extradited (19 O. D., N. P., 587), the proceeding had in the case submitted seems to me to have been a necessary part of the extradition proceeding, and inasmuch as section 5278 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides that:

"Whenever the executive authority of any state or territory demands any person as fugitive from justice, of the executive authority of any state or territory to which such person has fled, * * *. All costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing and transmitting such fugitive to the state or territory making such demand, shall be paid by such state or territory."

It seems clear that the costs in this case should be paid by the state of Michigan. The only remaining question then is, are the fees of witnesses summoned on behalf of the defendant to be included in such costs? In volume 11 of Cyc., page 283, is stated:

> "Ordinarily, statutes imposing payment of costs on a county, do not render it liable for costs made by the defendant."
> Williams vs. Northumberland County, 110 Pa. State, 48.
> Com. vs. Kurren, 2 Chest. County Reports, (Pa.) 393.
> Shaunee County vs. Whiting, 4 Kans., 273.
> Fremont County vs. Wilson, 3 Colo. App., 492.

In the case of Williams vs. Northumberland County, 110 Pa., page 48, the statute provided that:

> "In all cases of conviction of any felony, all costs shall be paid forthwith by the county unless the party convicted shall pay the same."

A defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced, and was unable to pay the costs. Held:

> "The fees and mileage of witnesses called and examined on behalf of the defendants in trials for felony cannot be recovered by such witnesses from the county."

The court at page 53 said:

> "Officers do not know why they are required to serve subpoenas and attachments in criminal cases without pay unless they can get it of the defendant. The answer is, that this duty or burden is an incident of their office. The law required this when they took it. If persons are unwilling to perform the duties pertaining to the office to which they ask to be elected, they must not ask for or accept them. As to witnesses, the law requires their attendance, and if the defendant is too poor to pay their fees, they must set it down to the duty they owe to the government that protects them in the enjoyment of all their rights, civil and religious."

In the case of Wayne County vs. Waller, 9 Norris, 104, which was decided four years after the statute quoted in the above case was passed, Mr. Justice Sterrett says:

> "We are not aware of any law, common or statutory, that required the county to pay a defendant's costs in a criminal case, or authorizes the court to call upon the county to advance money to be expensed by a prisoner or his counsel in subpoenaing witnesses and otherwise preparing for trial."

From a consideration of these authorities, it is my opinion that the state of Michigan in the case submitted should pay the costs, exclusive of the fees of witnesses summoned by the defendant. It is assumed in this opinion that extradition papers were issued in this case.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE WORD "CHAUFFEUR" DEFINED—THOSE WHO OPERATE MOTOR VEHICLES FOR HIRE—THOSE WHO OPERATE SUCH VEHICLES AS AN EMPLOYE OF THE OWNER.

Under the provisions of section 6291, General Code, chauffeurs are divided into two classes:

First, those who operate motor vehicles for hire, and Second, those who operate such vehicles as an employe of the owner thereof.

The first class is held to include an owner of an automobile who personally operates the same for hire. The second class includes only those employes whose employment contemplates the operation of a motor vehicle and not those who operate their employer's vehicles occasionally. The latter are not chauffeurs under the statute, and need not register.

The driver of a motor truck used to deliver goods for a wholesale house, which is the owner of the truck, and persons employed by doctors to run automobiles, are chauffeurs and must register. The registration act does not apply solely to persons operating vehicles for hire or the carrying of passengers and freight.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1914.

HON. L. T. CROMLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 8, 1914, Mr. O. G. Taylor, deputy clerk of Knox county, submitted to this department for opinion the following:

> "Section 6291, General Code, defines a chauffeur as follows: 'The term chauffeur, as used in this chapter and in the penal laws, includes every person operating a motor vehicle for hire or as an employe of the owner thereof.' The point of difference is this: for example, we have a wholesale house here that employs a man to drive a truck. Is the driver of this truck required to be a licensed chauffeur? Again, we have doctors that employ drivers for machines. Are these drivers compelled to have a chauffeur's license, or does this law apply only to machines that are run for hire, that is, livery business, to haul passengers?"

Two classes of persons are designated by the statute as chauffeurs; first, every person operating a motor vehicle for hire; second, every person operating a motor vehicle as an employe of the owner thereof. The first class includes the owner of a motor vehicle who personally operates the same for hire.

Not every employe would come within the provisions of the statute defining a chauffeur. The employes intended to be included in the second class are those whose employment contemplates the operation of a motor vehicle, and not those who might be permitted by their employer to operate such vehicle occasionally, but whose employment does not contemplate such service.

In both of the illustrations given, it will be necessary for the parties to be registered chauffeurs because their respective employments expressly require them to operate motor vehicles.

The registration act does not apply solely to persons operating motor vehicles for hire in the carrying of passengers or merchandise.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT—RIGHT TO EXPEND HIGHWAY FUNDS FOR THE PUBLICATION OF A MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

The state highway commissioner has the right to expend highway funds for the publication of a monthly devoted to the interest of good roads, since section 1183, General Code, empowers said highway commissioner to "prepare, publish and distribute bulletins and reports."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 14th, wherein you state:

> "Enclosed you will find a letter from Hon. James R. Marker, state highway commissioner, in which he purports to publish a monthly devoted to the interests of good roads.
> "The question has been called to my attention as to whether Mr. Marker has the right to expend the highway funds in this capacity, and I shall ask you to render me an opinion as to whether the same, in your opinion, is a legal charge against the funds available in the highway appropriations."

The letter from Mr. Marker calls attention to the fact that his department has entered upon the publication of a bulletin known as the Highway Monthly. The purpose of this bulletin, as stated by Mr. Marker, in his letter, and in the initial issue, is to conduct an educational campaign to the end that the funds raised by the half-mill levy under the Hite law, may be wisely and economically expended and that a greater degree of co-operation between the state highway department and local authorities may be secured. That issue contains a series of special articles, giving information relating to various phases of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways, reports to the state highway commissioner by his deputies of the progress of the work in their respective departments, illustrations of the various kinds of road construction and material, and a department for the answering of queries relating to the construction, maintenance and repair of highways. In the subsequent issues of this bulletin, the general plan outlined above has been carried out. Under authority of section 1183, General Code, as amended in 1913, (103 O. L., p. 449), the state highway commissioner is empowered to "prepare, publish and distribute bulletins and reports." It is further provided in said section, that "all expenses incurred by reason of the provisions of this chapter shall be paid out of any fund or funds available for the use of the department." The statute does not furnish any specific definition of what was intended by the words "bulletin" and "report," so the legislature must have been regarded as having used these words in their ordinary sense.

The meaning of the word "report" is so well known that it is not necessary to quote definitions. Insofar as this publication contains statements of the progress of the work of the state highway department, it is a report within the meaning of section 1183.

The word "bulletin" is defined in Funk & Wagnall's new standard dictionary as:

> "1. An announcement of news, orders or the like, written or placarded in a conspicuous place.
> "2. An official summary or statement of intelligence on some matter of public interest.
> "3. A periodical publication as of proceedings of a society."

This highway monthly, it seems to me, has the elements of the above definition of a bulletin, and I am of the opinion that the cost of printing the same is a legal charge against the funds available for the use of the state highway department.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUIDATION OF A BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION—INTEREST ON DEPOSITS—BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION DEPOSITING MONEY WITH ANOTHER BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION—RIGHTS.

1. In the case of the liquidation of a building and loan association receiving deposits at a stipulated rate of interest, the claimants are entitled to their claim including interest up to the date of insolvency. Such claimants are entitled to interest at six per cent from the date of the insolvency up to the date of payment, provided there are sufficient funds; the amount which is available for this purpose must be shared pro rata.

2. A building and loan association having money in another building and loan association becomes a depositor upon the same basis as other depositors. In order to make such depositor a preferred creditor the deposit would have to be made under some trust agreement, expressed or implied.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1914.

HON. JAMES A. DEVINE, Inspector of Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 27, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "I desire your opinion upon the following questions:
> (1) "In case of the liquidation of a building and loan association receiving deposits at a stipulated rate of interest, would the depositors be allowed interest to the date of payment of their claims or only to the date of notice of liquidation?
> (2) "Would a building and loan association having money on deposit in another building and loan association at a stipulated rate of interest different from the specified rate of interest paid to other depositors be preferred as a creditor in the matter of liquidation of the association in which they had the deposit?"

Answering your questions in their order, first: The matter of the allowance of interest on claims against a building and loan association, in process of liquidation, is governed by the same rules as to allowance of interest on claims against any other corporation in the process of liquidation.

It seems to be well settled, in the United States at least, that in the matter of the distribution of an insolvent estate, interest should be computed up to the time of the insolvency, (that is, up to the time of the closing of the doors of the institution, for the purpose of liquidation), upon all claims bearing interest, either by contract or as legal damages for non-payment.

The matter of Murray, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 204.
Clemmons vs. Clemmons, 69 Vt., 545.
22 Cyc. 1316.

In the first cited case, 6 Paige, 204, being a decision of the court of chancery, in the state of New York, the chancellor, on page 205, makes the following pertinent statement as to this matter:

> "Equality among creditors is equity; and where interest is recoverable either upon the express agreement of the parties or as legal damages, for the non-payment of the debt when it should have been paid, the creditors are all entitled to participate in the distribution of the fund, ratably, in proportion to the amount due to them respectively for principal and interest up to the date of the assignment. In settling the tableau of distribution, therefore, the interest upon those debts which bear interest, or upon which it is recoverable as damages, upon settled legal principles, should be computed at that time; * * *"

It would make no difference when the claims were presented, just so they are presented within the statutory time; all claims proven should be proved for the amount of the principal including interest at the rate contracted for, or the rate at which the claim is entitled, up to the date of the insolvency.

It also seems to be well settled in the United States that if there is a surplus of the funds of the insolvent institution remaining after payment of the principal and interest, up to the date of the insolvency on all claims, then all claims are entitled to interest from the date of the insolvency, up to the time of the final payment of the claims. That is, interest should be allowed on all claims, and, of course, at the same rate, from the date of the appointment of the trustee or receiver. 5 Cyc. 569 and cases there cited.

In the case of Richmond vs. Irons, 121 U. S., 27, Mr. Justice Maxwell says:

> "In the case of book accounts in favor of depositors * * * interest would begin to accrue, as against the bank, on the date of its suspension. The act of going into liquidation dispenses with the necessity of any demand on the part of the creditors, and it follows that interest should be computed upon the accounts then due, as against the shareholders, to the time of payment."

Claims against insolvent institutions, for the purpose of interest, may be regarded in the same manner as judgments. That is, the claim would be regarded, in law, in exactly the same manner as if the creditor had sued the corporation and obtained a judgment against it for the amount claimed. This judgment would bear interest from the date of its rendition until the date of its satisfaction.

> The National Bank of Commonwealth vs. The Mechanics National Bank, (94 U. S., 437).

Though different claims might bear different rates of interest, up to the date of insolvency from the time of the insolvency, for the purpose of interest, all claims are on an equality, and would bear the same rate of interest, which, in this state, would be six per cent.

The whole matter may be summed up, thus: Claimants are entitled to prove their claims against an insolvent institution, including interest up to the date of the insolvency. All such claims are entitled to interest at six per cent. from the date of the insolvency until the date of payment, provided there are sufficient funds with which to pay the interest. If there are not sufficient funds to pay interest in full, but enough to pay something on account of interest, then the amount which is available for this purpose must be shared, pro rata, by the respective claim holders.

Answering your second question, if a building and loan association deposits money in another building and loan association, it thereby becomes a depositor upon the same basis as other depositors; the fact that it, by contract, received a different rate of interest upon its deposits from that received by other depositors, would have no bearing, whatever, upon the nature of the deposit and would not make it a preferred creditor. To make it a preferred creditor the deposit would have to be made under some trust agreement, expressed or implied.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF HEALTH OF THE CITY OF CLEVELAND (CREATED BY CHARTER) MUST YIELD TO THE GENERAL LAWS WHEN IN CONFLICT WITH THEM.

The health board of the city of Cleveland (created by charter) does not have absolute power locally, but its regulations must yield to the general laws when in conflict with them. Such local regulations do not conflict with the general laws if they merely add to the requirements of the latter and are otherwise consistent with them.

Sections 4425 and 4436, General Code, though a part of the municipal code, were intended to be general laws applicable in part at least to the health agencies so that these provisions constitute general laws within the meaning of the home rule amendment, with which local sanitary regulations are not permitted to conflict.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1914.

HON. HERMAN FELLINGER, Member House of Representatives, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 1st, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is the health board of the city of Cleveland subject to the general laws of Ohio, or has it absolute power locally?"
> "2. Do sections 4425-4436, inclusively, of the General Code of Ohio, govern and control the action of the health board of the city of Cleveland?"

The city of Cleveland being at present governed by a charter, framed and adopted by its people, these questions involve consideration of sections 3 and 7 of article XVIII of the constitution, known as the "Home Rule Amendment." They are as follows:

> "Section 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.
> "Section 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government, and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government."

I have not before me a copy of the Cleveland charter; I assume, however, that it provides independently of the general law for the health department, or at leas makes provision in some manner for the exercise of local legislative and administrativ powers, with respect to the subjects committed by the general laws to the municipal boards of health, as municipal officers created and governed by such general law. In other words, I assume that the charter provides a frame work of local government for health matters different from that provided for cities generally by the municipal code of the state.

Without knowledge of the exact provisions of the charter, I cannot, of course, determine whether or not they are in such detail as to constitute a code of regulations defining or attempting to define the powers and duties of the health agency which they create, i. e., as to regulate substantively the exercise of power in addition to the mere creation of an arm of government, and the delegation to it of general power or jurisdiction in health matters. In the view which I take, however, the presence or absence of such provisions in the charter is immaterial for the purposes of your question.

The interpretation of sections 3 and 7 of the newly enacted article XVIII of the constitution, with reference to the limitations therein upon the exercise of the power to enforce or adopt local police, sanitary or other similar regulations, was called in question in the case of Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, 88 O. S., 338.

The syllabus in that case does not throw light upon the views of the members of the court in this particular. However, there were four opinions, three supporting the judgment of the court and one dissenting therefrom. On this question there may be found in the opinion of Johnson, J., at page 359, the following:

> "Concerning the provision in section 3, article XVIII (may adopt such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws), the general laws referred to are obviously such as relate to police, sanitary and other similar regulations, and which apply uniformly throughout the state. They involve the concern of the state for the peace, health and safety of all of its people, wholly separate and distinct from, and without reference to, any of its political subdivisions—such as regulate the morals of the people, the purity of their food, the protection of the streams, and safety of buildings and similar matters.
> "Manifestly, therefore, it was necessary, when the constitutional convention was conferring all powers of local self-government on cities, to provide that, in the adoption of such regulations by any city for itself (police, sanitary and similar ones), they should not conflict with general laws on the subject.
> "It is a well settled rule that the body adopting amendments, such as are here involved, will be presumed to have had in mind the course of legislation and existing statutes touching the subjects dealt with. People ex rel. Jackson vs. Potter, 47 N. Y., 380, and cases cited. The legislature of Ohio, in the codifications adopted by it, covering many years, including the last one adopted, has included a separate title, designated by it 'Police Regulations,' in which it has included the general laws of the character we have above described. If it had been intended that the limitation should comprise the wide and elastic scope contended for, it would have been so expressed.
> "We think it clear that the regulations referred to in section 3 are such, and such only, as we have indicated, and that it would be contrary to the import of the language and to the intent of the framers of the amendment to hold that by this clause there is denied to cities the authority to adopt charter provisions concerning the manifold subjects within the field of proper municipal activity, unless they are 'not in conflict with general laws' on the subjects proposed to be dealt with."

Wanamaker, J., concurring, expresses the view at pages 366, et seq., that the power to regulate the method of making a nomination is not within the purview of the police power.

The same idea seems to have been in the mind of Wilkin, J., although it is not expressed exactly as I have phrased it.

The dissenting opinion of Donahue, J., is devoted almost exclusively to a discussion of the bearing of section 7 of article V of the constitution, as amended, upon the question then before the court.

From all the foregoing, I do not think that it can be said that the case of Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, supra, throws much light upon the question which you submit. I might say in passing, however, that I do not believe that the above quoted remarks of Judge Johnson are to be taken as indicating that the only states law, which under article XVIII, sections 3 and 7 of the constitution, which are paramount to local regulations, are those which happen to be codified under the title "Police Regulations." On the contrary, I interpret them as meaning that he regards the laws found under that title as indicative of the kind of general laws that are paramount; or rather, the kind of local regulations that must yield to such general laws.

Concluding then that the question which lies at the threshold of the consideration of your inquiry is not foreclosed by anything in the decision cited, I feel free to express the opinion that public health regulations, and particularly those of the kind concerning which you specifically inquire, are within the category of the "local police, sanitary and other similar regulations," which may not conflict with the general laws.

Such is the rule in Michigan, where in People vs. Hurlbut, 24 Mich., 44, a distinguished bench declared the existence of the right of local self-government superior to state legislative control.

In Davock vs. Moore, 20 L. R. A., 783, the supreme court of that state held that the protection of the public health is not a matter of purely local concern, so that in the face of decisions like that in People vs. Hurlbut, supra, the general assembly might provide for the appointment of members of a local health board by the governor of the state. Numerous authorities are cited in support of the fundamental proposition upon which the decision is based, among them, Judge Cooley's own language, page 62, second edition of his work on taxation, which is as follows:

> "The state may have a state board of health, but it will provide for local boards of health also; and as their duties concern the community at large, their members are to be regarded as state rather than local officers."

But, it is to be admitted that the Michigan decisions are not analogous under the Ohio constitution, although the principle laid down has a certain manifest application.

The reason why the Ohio rule is not established by the Michigan authorities is disclosed by consideration of the case of People ex rel. vs. Williamson, 135 Cal., 415. The constitution of the state of California at the time provided for municipal home rule through language to the general effect that in municipal affairs the provisions of the city charter should supersede those of the general laws. The general law provided for a board of health of the city and county of San Francisco; a charter adopted by the people of that city and county provided for a similar health agency. Action was brought to determine the validity of the provisions of the charter; the court, four out of seven judges rendering supporting and concurring opinions, held that the establishment of a local board of health was a "municipal affair," and that such police regulations as might be promulgated through its agency, though constituting an exercise of the police power, would be local in character. All the judges, however, conceded that the superior necessities of the state might require a subsequent holding in an appropriate case, that in certain matters the laws of the state should be paramount.

California cases are relied upon by Johnson, J., in his principal opinion in Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, supra, and I am of the opinion, as already indicated, that the rule of Ohio, as well as in California, is that so far as the frame-work of government pertaining to the creation of local health agencies is concerned, the power to provide for it resides in the people of the charter city, so that the general laws of the state, insofar as they provide for the creation of the board of health for the exercise of certain powers and duties within, and as a part of the government of the municipality, are superseded by the provisions of the charter.

But the principle established in the Michigan case, and also conceded in the California case, is to the effect that whatever may be the agency and the means of its operation, the subject matter, i. e., the protection of the public health from danger of epidemics etc., is not one of purely municipal concern.

Under article XVIII, section 3 of the Ohio constitution, however, it is not necessary to establish that a given subject matter is not one of municipal concern, either purely or partly in order to establish the superior force of the state laws, for by the plain reading of the sections, local police, sanitary and other similar regulations are to yield to general laws, so that the regulation may be in every sense a local one, and yet if it is one of a police, sanitary or other similar nature, its force is destroyed if it conflicts, with the general law of the state.

The present constitution of the state of California contains language identical with that of the latter part of article XVIII, section 3, of the constitution of Ohio; article XI, section 11, of the constitution of that state, empowers the making and enforcing within its limits all such police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws. In re Hoffman, 155 Cal., 114, it was held that a municipal ordinance regulating the sale of milk, and prescribing a standard of pure milk within a city, must yield to a general law respecting the same subject-matter, to the extent that it conflicts therewith. Proceeding to define what constitutes a conflict, the court holds that where the standards of the city ordinance are more exacting than those of the state law, there is no conflict, in other words, where the general law makes certain regulations respecting a given matter within the field of police, sanitary and other similar activities, the authority of the city to act in the premises is not thereby taken away as in the case of the exercise of a power of congress within a certain field in which the states may act until congress has entered; but the city may impose additional requirements of the same nature.

The principle then may be stated thus: where the local regulations are more exacting than those of the state law, there is no conflict, and in a sense, both are operative; but where the local regulations are less exacting than those of the state law, there is a conflict, and the latter governs.

I am convinced that the principles laid down in the case last cited are applicable to the solution of the question which you submit, insofar as it depends upon an interpretation of article XVIII, section 3 of the constitution.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that regulations, whether found in the charter itself, or imposed by the local authority, having legislative and administrative control under the charter, of the subject of public health, are effective so long as they do not conflict with any requirements of the general law applicable to the subject matter, and in force in the city of Cleveland; and if that the local regulations pertain to the subject matter which state laws deal with is not of itself sufficient to establish a conflict, but both will stand, if it appears that the municipal regulations are merely additional to those of the state law and are otherwise harmonious with the latter.

This brings me to a consideration of the specific sections of the General Code, the application of which in the city of Cleveland you question. Said sections are as follows:

> "Section 4425. In time of epidemic or threatened epidemic, or when a dangerous communicable disease is unusually prevalent, the board of health, after a personal investigation by the members or executive officer thereof, to establish the facts in the case, and not otherwise, may impose a quarantine on vessels, railroads, stages, or other public or private vehicles conveying persons, baggage or freight, or used for such purpose. It may make and enforce such rules and regulations as such board deems wise and necessary for the protection of the health of the people of the community or state, but the running of any train or car on any steam or electric railroad, or of steamboats, vessels or other public conveyances shall not be prohibited. A true copy of such quarantine rules and regulations adopted by such board of health, shall be immediately furnished by it to the state board of health, and thereafter no change shall be made except by the order of the state board of health or by the local board to meet a new and sudden emergency.

"Section 4426. The board of health shall not close public highways, prohibit travel thereon, interfere with public officers in the discharge of their official duties not afflicted with or directly exposed to a contagious or infectious disease, nor establish a quarantine of one city, village or township against another city, village or township, as such, without permission first obtained from the state board of health and under regulations established by the state board.

"Section 4427. Each physician or other person called to attend a person suffering from smallpox, * * * or any other disease dangerous to the public health, or required by the state board of health to be reported, shall report to the health officer within whose jurisdiction such person is found, the name, age, sex, and color of the patient, and the house and place in which such person may be found. In like manner, the owner or agent of the owner of a building in which a person resides who has any of the diseases herein named or provided against, or in which are the remains of a person having died of any such disease, and the head of the family, immediately after becoming aware of the fact, shall give notice thereof to the health officer."

Sections 4425 and 4426 originally constituted sections 188 and 189 of the municipal code of 1902, 96 O. L., 80. The question at once arises as to whether or not these sections, which were enacted as a part of the scheme of government for all municipalities were intended to be applicable to any municipality other than those to which the provisions of the code should apply; in other words, is the phrase "the board of health" as therein used to be interpreted as meaning any local health agency; or, having regard to the purpose of its original enactment, is it to be interpreted as meaning the board of health created and existing under the municipal code of 1902?

To my mind, the exact relation of the health provisions of the municipal code to the remaining provisions thereof, is shown by consideration of certain other sections of the municipal code of 1902. By examining sections 187-189, inclusive, of that act, it will be found that all the body of the state laws relating to boards of health in municipalities as in existence prior to the adoption of the municipal code, with the exception of those provisions which are included within the three sections cited. That is to say, the existing provisions of sections 2115, 2116, 2118, etc., Revised Statutes of Ohio, now found in sections 4406 to 4476, inclusive, General Code, (with the exception of the two sections now under discussion) constituted certain substantive regulations and groups of powers and duties imposed upon local boards of health, meaning thereby local health agencies. These sections were not amended or repealed; instead they were retained in force in the manner following:

Section 189, municipal code of 1902, was as follows:

"The board of health herein provided for shall have all the powers and perform all the duties, not inconsistent with this act, which are conferred or required in sections 2115, 2116, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, and 2148 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, as amended May 7, 1902 (95 O. L., 421), and section 2114, of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, as amended May 12, 1902, (95 O. L., 643), and for all purposes such sections as amended shall remain in full force and effect; and nothing therein contained shall be held to impair, restrict or repeal any portion of the act passed April 23, 1902, entitled 'An act authorizing the levy of taxes in municipalities to provide for firemen's, police and sanitary police pension or relief funds, and to create and perpetuate boards of trustees for the administration of such funds;' provided, further, that local boards of health shall not have power to close public highways or to prohibit travel thereon, nor to interfere with public officers not afflicted with or directly exposed to any contagious or infectious disease, in the discharge of their official duties; nor to establish a quarantine of one city, village or township against another city, village or township, as such, without permission first obtained from the state board of health, and under such regulations as may be established by the state board. All employes now serving in the health department shall continue to hold their said positions and shall not be removed from office or reduced in rank or pay, except for cause, assigned and after a hearing has been afforded them before the board."

In this provision the general assembly clearly recognized the independent force and effect of the sections thus referred to and perpetuated that force for all proper purposes. The boards of health provided for in the municipal code were to have the powers and duties created by the general statutes referred to; but, these powers and duties were not created as mere incidents to the creation of the offices as such. From this it follows that the clearly expressed intention of the legislature of 1902 was that at least such regulations as come within the purview of section 189 of the municipal code of that year are to be regarded as regulations of general character, applicable to health agencies and not merely as the powers and duties of a board created by the act of which it is a part, and hence, subject to destruction when the board itself is destroyed.

But, what is so clear of the provisions of section 189 is not less clear to my mind of the provisions of sections 187-188. These were as follows:

"Section 187. The council of each city and village shall establish a board of health; such board shall be composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council, who shall serve without compensation, and a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum; and the mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. In villages the council may appoint a health officer instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office; such appointee to be approved by the state board of health, who shall have all the powers and perform all the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that all rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health. And if any city, village or township fails or refuses to establish a board of health or appoint a health officer, the state board of health may appoint a health officer for such city, village or township and fix his salary and term of office, and such health officer shall have the same powers and duties as health officers appointed in villages in lieu of a board of health, as herein provided, and the salary of such health officer, as fixed by the state board of health, and all necessary expenses incurred by him in performing the duties of a board of health shall be paid by and be a valid claim against the city, village or township for which such health officer is appointed to serve.

"Section 138. The state board of health, or the board of health of any city, village or township, in time of epidemic or threatened epidemic, or when any dangerous communicable disease is unusually prevalent, may, after a personal investigation by the members or executive officer of such board to establish the facts in the case, and not otherwise, impose a quarantine on vessels, railroads, stages, or any other public or private vehicles conveying persons, baggage or freight, or used for such purpose, and may make and enforce such rules and regulations as such board may deem wise and necessary for the protection of the health of the people of the community or state; provided, however, that the running of any train or of any cars on any steam or electric railroad, or of steamboats, vessels or other public conveyances shall not be prohibited. A true copy of such quarantine rules and regulations adopted by a local board of health, shall be immediately furnished by such board to the state board of health. Such quarantine rules and regulations, when established by a local board of health, after careful investigation by the state board of health, may be altered, relaxed or abolished by order of said state board and thereafter no change shall be made except by the order of the state board of health, or by the local board, to meet some new and sudden emergency."

The pertinent provisions of section 187 are now found in sections 4404 and 4405, General Code; except that in process of codification, reference to township boards of health has been eliminated and a corresponding provision inserted in the statutes relating to township trustees.

The same is true of section 188, which has now become section 4425, with the addition that the reference to the state board of health therein has been eliminated in codification and is found in the appropriate provision relating to the powers and duties of the state board of health.

The very fact that these two sections treat of the powers and duties of township boards of health, and the state board of health as well as of the powers and duties of city and village boards of health, shows, I think, that these sections are not merely provisions for the frame work of municipal government, but were intended to be of universal application, so that the withdrawal of a given municipality from the field of the operation of the municipal code, as a framework of government, would not establish the immunity of its health agencies from the force of their provisions.

I am of the opinion then that section 4425, General Code, is intended to be of universal application, and that its force is not limited to the boards of health created by and existing under the general municipal code.

This statement, however, must be qualified insofar as section 4425 constitutes a grant of power affecting matters of local concern. I am constrained to hold that it is to be superseded by the provisions of a charter to the extent that if the local charter provides for a health agency, which it calls a "board of health," yet reposes in some other agency of the municipal government, such as the council, the power to impose quarantine, such a distribution of power would control; but I am satisfied that by force of these statutes the state may compel the creation of some adequate health agency in a charter city, and however the group of powers pertaining to such an agency may be distributed under the charter, or even in the absence of any provisions of a health agency in the charter (in which case the state board of health might appoint a health officer, as provided in section 4405, General Code), the necessary health measures contemplated in section 4425 must be taken.

But insofar as section 4425 constitutes a prohibition interfering with the running of trains and other public conveyances, it is to be given controlling effect, and a charter board of health or other health agency, is in my mind without authority to prohibit the running of trains, or cars, or other public conveyances.

Furthermore, I am of the opinion that when a charter board of health establishes quarantine rules and regulations, it is its duty immediately to furnish a true copy thereof to the state board of health, which thereupon acquires jurisdiction in the premises to the extent that no change is to be made, except by its order.

Coming now to section 4426, it will be noted that its provisions were found in original section 189 of the municipal code. In my mind there is even more reason for characterizing its prohibitions as universal than there is for reaching a similar conclusion with respect to the negative provisions of section 4425. The very subject matter of these provisions—both those found in section 4426 and those found in section 4425—in point of fact is such as to remove them from the field of purely municipal affairs.

A quarantine established by one city against another is not a municipal affair; it involves an inter-relation of two or more municipalities and becomes ipso facto a matter of state-wide concern; so also with respect to the running of trains and other public conveyances.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a charter board of health, or other health agency, is without power to prohibit travel on public highways or interfere with public officers in the discharge of their official duties not exposed to a contagious or infectious disease, or to establish a quarantine against another locality without permission or consent of the state board of health, under the regulations established by the state board.

As already remarked, the remaining provisions concerning which you inquire, viz., sections 4427 to 4436, inclusive, constitute laws of early origin and of application clearly independent of the mere frame work of the municipal code of 1902. Indeed, the nature of these provisions is such as to establish this conclusion by reasoning independent of their legislative history.

Section 4427, for example, relates to the duty of the physician called to attend a person suffering from certain contagious or infectious diseases, and likewise to the duty of the owner or agent of a building in which such person resides. The provision is that the fact of the existence of the disease, together with the facts relating to the identity of the person and the place in which he is found, shall be reported to the health officers, under the provisions already laid down. The charter board of health, or other health agency, may add to these requirements, others of a similar or not inconsistent nature; but such an agency may not subtract from them.

Section 4428 requires the local health agency to cause an inspection to be made of any house or other locality wherein the existence of an infectious or contagious disease has not been reported by the physician, or by the owner of the building, or his agent. To this extent, it is in effect a command to the charter board of health, binding upon such a tribunal; but in so far as it is a grant of power to establish a quarantine or to send a diseased person to a quarantined hospital, I am of the opinion that its provisions are superfluous as applied to the health agency created by charter, if the charter itself vests like power. I am inclined to the belief, however, that in the absence of any distinct provision in a charter, a charter-created board of health, or other health agency would have the powers enumerated in this section.

Section 4429 provides for the placing of quarantine cards and prohibits their removal until after the patient has been removed, or has recovered, and the house and its contents have been properly disinfected. This is a regulation of universal character, controlling with respect to the action of a charter-created health agency in the sense already discussed; that is, local regulations consistent with these, or additional to them may be imposed by such health agency, but regulations inconsistent with them, or less stringent than those found in the statute may not be imposed.

Section 4430 relates to the duration of quarantine. Upon the authorities above cited, a charter-created board of health may increase the duration of quarantine in connection with any of the specified diseases, but may not reduce it.

Section 4431 authorizes the local board of health to employ quarantine guards, and vests in such guards certain police powers. The relation of this provision to a board of health created by a charter is established by the same principles already outlined in dealing with grants of power.

The same remark may be made with respect to sections 4433 and 4434.

With respect to section 4432, I am of the opinion that its provisions are of universal application and that they are binding upon a health agency created by a charter. In fact, I am of the opinion that the disinfection and purification of a house and its contents, which the statutes require to be done, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the state board of health, cannot be done in any other way. Perhaps as a matter of strict law, the local board of health, created by a charter, might add to the rules of the state board of health other similar and not inconsistent regulations, but if the state board of health should be of the opinion that there is any inconsistency, I would be inclined to hold that its opinion would control.

Sections 4435 and 4436 provide for the payment, by the council of the municipality, of certain expenses incidental to quarantine. In my opinion, these things are binding upon a charter municipality.

As to section 4436, I might say that if the board of health of a chartered municipality sees fit to incur expenses for purposes other than therein specified, and the charter authorizes such action, such payment may be made and such expenses incurred other than for the protection of the public may be charged to the person or persons quarantined.

I have discussed in a general way the manner in which the provisions of the General Code of the state apply to the health board of the city of Cleveland. From the detailed discussion in which I have indulged, the following general answer may be given to your questions.

1. The health board of the city of Cleveland is subject to such general laws of the state as constitute regulations of a police and sanitary nature, and is without power, even in local matters to make and enforce regulations which are inconsistent with those of the general laws.

2. Sections 4425 to 4436 of the General Code of Ohio, inclusive, govern and control the action of the health board of the city of Cleveland to the extent that insofar as the rules of that board may affect individuals, other localities and public conveyances, the Cleveland board can impose no regulations prohibited by these sections, nor any inconsistent with them. Where the thing required by the regulation of the local board is not prohibited by the general law, the local regulation will stand, if it is supplementary to and consistent with those found in the general law, but not if it destroys the force of any provision of the general law, or is otherwise inconsistent therewith.

I think I have made clear, however, that so far as the mere machinery, which may be found in these sections is concerned, the provisions of the general law are not controlling; the local health agency so long as its action is consistent with the provisions just outlined, may proceed by methods authorized by the charter, if such there are and need not rely upon the general laws as a grant of power to do any specific thing nor as a rule of action prescribing how such a thing shall be done.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE 1914 BUDGET BILL—CONSTRUCTION AS IT APPLIES TO CONVICT LABOR.

Section 2314, General Code, in reference to requiring buildings and improvements involving a cost in excess of $3,000 to be constructed and made only on contracts let on competitive bidding is susceptible by force of its own terms to two constructions:

First: As meaning to the extent that the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements are to be exempt under section 2314, General Code.

Second: As meaning that in cases where or whenever the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements are to be exempt under section 2314, General Code.

On consideration of the convict labor law the second construction should be adopted and said language held to mean that in cases where or whenever the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, repairs and improvements are to be exempt from the operation of section 2314, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 21, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently submitted to this department an inquiry with reference to the proper construction of certain language in House Bill No. 47, commonly known as the Budget Bill, (104 O. L., 64, 69), making appropriations for the board of administration.

So much of the act, making appropriations for your board, as is pertinent to the particular inquiry you make, reads as follows:

> "Maintenance receipts from federal government ---------- and $2,103,995.00. Balances in the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements and balances, in all appropriations for specific purposes.
> "In so far as the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio."

The particular language of the act, the construction of which is sought, is that last contained in the language above of the act above quoted, as follows:

> "In so far as the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio."

Section 2314 of the General Code, referred to in the language quoted, provides as follows:

> "Before entering into contract for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, or for the supply of materials therefore, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars, each officer, board, or other authority by law charged with the supervision thereof, shall make or cause to be made the following: full and accurate plans, showing all necessary details of the work, with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, so drawn and represented as to be plain and easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact amount of different kinds of material necessary to the construction to accompany such plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed, showing the manner and style required with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof."

It seems plain that the intent and purpose of the language of the act last above quoted is to exempt expenditures for repairs and improvements, coming within the meaning of the language employed, from the requirement that repairs and improvements of public buildings of the state shall be made on contracts entered into after competitive bidding. The inquiry is as to the proper construction and meaning of the language of the act, last above quoted.

Looking to the language in question alone, two, and, as I see it, only two possible constructions, of the language in question can be made. The first construction of the language in question, which is suggested, is that it means that to the extent that the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements are to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code. The other construction as to the meaning of this language, which suggests itself, is that it means that in cases where or whenever the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements are to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code.

Pertinent to a consideration of the question as to which of these two suggested constructions is correct, I note the provisions of sections 2228, 2229 and 2230, General Code, which read as follows:

"Section 2228. The board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, the board of managers of the Ohio state reformatory, or other authority, shall make no contract by which the labor or time of a prisoner in the penitentiary or reformatory, or the product or profit of his work, shall be let, farmed out, given or sold to any person, firm, association or corporation. Convicts in such institution may work for, and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof, or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter.

"Section 2229. The board of managers of the penitentiary and the board of managers of the reformatory, so far as practicable, shall cause all prisoners serving sentences in such institutions, physically capable, to be employed at hard labor for not to exceed nine hours of each day other than Sundays and public holidays.

"Section 2230. Such labor shall be for the purpose of the manufacture and production of supplies for such institutions, the state or political divisions thereof; for a public institution owned, managed and controlled by the state or a political division thereof; for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or on the work of such construction or repair; for the purpose of industrial training and instruction, or partly for one and partly for the other of such purposes; in the manufacture and production of crushed stone, brick, tile and culvert pipe, suitable for draining wagon roads of the state, or in the preparation of road building and ballasting material."

These sections, the proper execution of which is now vested in the Ohio board of administration, are part of an act passed March 29, 1906 (98 O. L., 177), the primary purpose of which was to withdraw convict labor from competition with free labor in the manufacture of trade commodities, and to confine the labor of such convicts to work for the state and other public agencies or institutions, or in the production of commodities to be used by such public agencies or institutions.

Looking to the provisions of section 2230, General Code, I note that it provides that such convict labor shall be "for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or in the work of such construction or repair."

It is obvious that to the extent that convict labor is employed, pursuant to the authority of these sections, in the repair, improvement or construction of buildings and institutions of the state, to that extent such repair, improvement or construction and the cost and expense thereof is withdrawn from the operation of section 2314, et seq. of the General Code, providing for the making and construction of such repairs and improvements upon contracts entered into after competitive bidding.

A familiar and fundamental rule of interpretation requires that in the construction of a statute, meaning must, if possible, be given to every part and word, and the presumption always is that every word in a statute is designed to have some effect, and hence the rule that in putting a construction upon any statute, every part shall be regarded and it shall be so expounded, if practicable, as to give some effect to every part of it.

Lewis' Sutherland Stat. Con., section 380.
State ex rel. vs. Durflinger, 73 O. S., 154, 159.
Turley vs. Turley, 11 O. S., 173, 179.

It quite clearly follows, from the application of the rule of construction just noted that the first suggested construction as to the meaning of the language in question, is wholly inadmissible, for the reason that wholly independent of this language in House Bill No. 47 (104 O. L., 69), expenditures in the repair and improvement of state institutions are necessarily exempt from the operation of section 2314, to the extent of labor performed thereon by inmates of state institutions. In fact, if the language in question is to be so construed, it becomes wholly meaningless, in view of prior provisions of section 2230, authorizing such labor. The only other alternative as to the proper construction of this language is that above suggested, to wit, it means in cases where and whenever the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, expenditures for repairs and improvements are to be exempt from the requirement as to competitive bidding contracts.

Pertinent to the consideration of questions of this kind, the following rule of construction has been stated:

> "Where the meaning of a statute or any statutory provision is not plain, the court is warranted in availing itself of all legitimate aids to ascertain the true intention; and among them are some extraneous facts. The object sought to be accomplished exercises a potent influence in determining the meaning of not only the principal but also the minor provisions of a statute. To ascertain it fully the court will be greatly assisted by knowing, and it is permitted to consider, the mischief intended to be removed or suppressed, or the necessity of any kind which induced the enactment."

Lewis' Sutherland Stat. Con., section 456.

Looking to the provisions above noted, with reference to the employment of convict labor, it is plain that the same policy that dictated the withdrawal of such labor from competition with free labor, in the manufacture of trade commodities, also dictated that such labor should be employed as far as possible, in the several matters coming within the authority of the convict labor statutes above noted; among which matters covered by said statutes is the employment of such labor, in the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of state institutions and in the work of such construction or repair. As a result of the use of such labor, in the repair and improvement of state buildings and institutions, and on a consideration of the policy dictating that as to such repairs and improvements, such labor should be employed as far as possible, it was difficult, as to any particular repair or improvement to anticipate or estimate just how far such labor would or could be used in such repair or improvement, with the further and consequent result that it became likewise difficult to estimate just what the expenditure for such repair or improvement would be, over and above such convict labor so employed. As a result of this condition, the legislature, prior to the enactment of House Bill No. 47 (104 O. L., 69), with respect to previous appropriations to the board of administration for repairs and improvements of state buildings and institutions, provided that the expenditures from the appropriations for this purpose should be exempt from the operation of section 2314, General Code. As witness, the language of the same legislature, in regular session, making appropriation for such purposes to said board as follows:

> "Ordinary repairs and improvements; balance and..... $326,000 00 > Expenditures from the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements to be exempt from section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio."

It is obvious that the provisions of the legislative act, just noted, were broader in their result than the considerations which induced their enactment; for, by the provisions of this particular act, just noted, expenditures for repairs and improvements out of the appropriation made, were exempted from the operation of section 2314, even though no convict labor was employed in such work at all. To correct this, and to limit the exemption of expenditures for repairs and improvements on state buildings and institutions from the operation of section 2314, to cases where such labor was actually employed, the legislature, in making appropriation to the board of administration for such purposes, stated such exemption and the limitation thereof, in the language, the consideration of which has been the subject of this opinion.

Upon the foregoing considerations, I am of the opinion that in cases where and whenever the labor of inmates of state institutions is employed, pursuant to authority of law, on repairs and improvements to state buildings and institutions, such repairs and improvements and all expenditures therefor, payable out of the appropriation made for such purposes, are exempted from the operation of section 2314, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ATTACHMENT CASES—AMOUNT OF COSTS TO BE TAXED AGAINST DEFENDANT—JURY TRIAL IN ANY SUCH CASES—FEES FOR MAGISTRATES, CONSTABLES, JURORS.

Section 10271, General Code, does not provide that full fees cannot be taxed in attachment and garnishee cases, but on the contrary holds that said section specifically provides that when personal earnings are attached under the provisions thereof, only ten per cent. of such personal earnings plus two dollars, court costs, and fifty cents garnishee fee for the garnishee, if such garnishee demands the same, shall be subject to such attachment. Any additional fees over and above this amount may be legally taxed and collected the same as in any other cause of action, but cannot be collected from the defendant in such ancillary proceedings.

Where a jury trial is had, persons summoned as jurors are required to serve, unless exempt by virtue of the General Code. When so required to serve as jurors, section 10357, General Code, in substance provides that upon the verdict being delivered to the justice before judgment is rendered thereon, each juror shall be entitled to receive seventy-five cents per day for each day of service at the hands of the successful party, which shall be taxed in the bill of costs against the losing party, the same to be then collected according to the procedure provided for the collection of such fees, the same as in the case of the collection of other court costs.

The term "costs" employed in section 10271, General Code, includes magistrates' and constables' fees as well as the fees of witnesses and jurors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 16, 1914, you request an opinion of this department upon the following questions:

> "First. May additional fees be taxed in attachment and garnishee cases if the defendant demands jury?
> "Second. We presume that witnesses may demand their fees of the party subpoenaing them, but how may a juror receive compensation for his services, and may he be compelled to serve as such juror without compensation?
> "Third. Does the recent amendment to section 10271, General Code, relate only to magistrates' and constables' fees, and may the fees of witnesses and jurors be taxed as costs in the case in addition to the fees of the officers?"

Section 1746 of the General Code, provides for the fees that may be charged by justices of the peace, and covers fees that accrue in attachment and garnishee cases, as well as providing for fees in cases where a jury is demanded for the trial of cases, for the impaneling of the same and issuing venire therefor.

Section 3347 of the General Code provides for the fees of constables and the provisions therein contained cover attachment and garnishee proceedings, as well as the matter of summoning and serving jurors.

Section 11725, General Code, provides for exemptions to heads of families and widows as follows:

> "Every person, who has a family, and every widow, may hold property exempt from execution, and attachment or sale, for debt, damage, fine or amercement, as follows:
> * * * * * * * * * *
> "6. The personal earnings of the debtor, and the personal earnings of his or her minor child or children, for three months, when it is made to appear by affidavit of the debtor, or otherwise, that such earnings are necessary to the support of the debtor or of his or her family. Such period of three months shall date from the time of issuing an attachment or other process, the rendition of a judgment, or the making of an order, under which the attempt may be made to subject such earnings to the payment of a debt. If the claim, debt or demand for the payment of which it is sought to subject personal earnings, is one for necessarries furnished to the debtor, his wife or family, only ninety per cent. of such earnings shall be so exempt as against such claim, debt or demand. Nothing herein contained shall render the personal earnings of such debtor's minor child or children, for three months, subject to its payment;

* * * * * * * * *."

Section 10271 of the General Code, as amended April 11, 1913, 103 O. L., 567, provides as follows:

"The personal earnings now exempted by law, in addition to the ten per cent. for necessaries, shall be further liable to the plaintiff for the actual costs of any proceeding brought to recover a judgment for such necessaries, in any sum not to exceed two dollars and the necessary garnishee fee. Such garnishee may pay to such debtor an amount equal to ninety per cent. of such personal earnings, less the sum of two dollars and the necessary garnishee of fee not to exceed fifty cents, if the same is demanded by the garnishee, for actual costs as herein provided, due at the time of the service of process or which may become due thereafter and before trial and be released from any further liability to such creditor, or to the court or any officers thereof, in such proceeding, or in any other proceeding, brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action. Both the debtor and the creditor shall likewise be released from any further liability to the court or any officers thereof in such proceeding or in any other proceeding brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action."

So that ten per cent. of the personal earnings of a debtor are not now exempt by statute when a claim for necessaries is asserted against such personal earnings, under the provisions of sections 11725 and 10271 of the General Code, supra. It will be noted that said section 10271, supra, does not provide that the full fees cannot be taxed in attachment and garnishee cases, but on the other hand, specifically provides that when personal earnings are attached under the provisions of said section, only 10 per cent. of such personal earnings, plus $2.00 court costs, and 50 cents garnishee fee for the garnishee, if the garnishee demands the same, shall be subject to such attachment. So far as the costs are concerned, I take it that it was the intent of the legislature in enacting this section, to limit the amount of costs which could be taken from the defendant in such attachment proceedings, to the sum of $2.00, and no more, to apply on the costs of the court, plus 50 cents for the garnishee if the latter demand such fee. Any additional fees over and above this amount may be legally taxed and collected the same as in any other case, but cannot be collected from the defendant in such ancillary proceedings. This answers your first question.

In answer to your second question, I wish to say that witnesses have the right to demand their fees from the party subpoenaing them, by virtue of the provisions contained in section 11508 and 11509 of the General Code. As regards jurors in justices' courts, section 10324 provides that in all civil actions, after the appearance of the defendant and before the court proceeds to inquire into the merits of the cause either party may demand a jury to try the action, which shall be composed of six lawful men, having the qualifications of electors, etc.

Section 10327, General Code, provides a method of selecting such jurors.

Section 10343, General Code, provides for the service of summons.

Section 10344, General Code, provides the penalty for neglecting or refusing to attend, when properly summoned as a juror, as follows:

> "For neglecting or refusing to attend when properly summoned, or refusing to serve when in attendance, jurors shall be liable to the like penalty, and be proceeded against in the same manner as witnesses who fail to attend, or refuse to testify."

By virtue of the immediate foregoing sections, as cited and referred to, it follows that it is compulsory for parties who are selected as jurors, to serve as such unless they come within the exemption of the General Code, otherwise provided, or are excused from such service by the court. It manifestly was not the intention of the legislature that such jurors should serve without compensation, by virtue of the provisions contained in section 10357 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Upon the verdict being delivered to the justice and before judgment rendered thereon, each juror shall be entitled to receive seventy-five cents per day for each day's service as such juror, at the hands of the successful party, which shall be taxed in the costs against his adversary. When the jury is not able to agree upon a verdict, the same compensation shall be paid them by the party calling the jury, and it must be taxed in the cost bill against the losing party, except as otherwise provided."

Said section specifically provides that upon the verdict being delivered to the justice and before judgment rendered thereon, each juror shall be entitled to receive 75 cents per day for each day's service as such juror, at the hands of the successful party, which shall be taxed in the bill of costs against the losing party and the same to be collected in accordance with the procedure provided for the collection of such costs if the collection can be enforced against such losing or unsuccessful party. Therefore, in answer to your second question, I wish to say that a juror may be compelled to serve as such, in accordance with the foregoing provisions and must receive his compensation in accordance with said section 10357, supra. That is to say, the successful party paying the jury fees and the same then being taxed in the cost bill against his adversary, the losing party, to be collected in accordance with the procedure provided for the collection of such fees, the same as in the case of the collection of other court costs.

In answer to your third question, section 10271, supra, says that the personal earnings shall be further liable to the plaintiff for the actual cost of any proceedings brought to recover a judgment for such necessaries, etc. The term "actual cost" involves all costs accruing in such cases and is not limited to the magistrates' and constables' fees only, but includes witness fees and the fees of jurors, if a jury is demanded in the trial of such cases. In attachment and garnishee actions for the attachment of ten per cent. of the personal earnings of a debtor, for a claim for necessaries, the cost accruing in such cases including the fees of the justices, the constable, the witnesses and the jurors are to be taxed and collected in accordance with the procedure provided for the collection of such costs the same as in other cases but with the limitation that in such attachment proceedings only $2.50 can be collected from the debtor by reason of the provisions contained in section 10271 of the General Code supra.

Yours very truly

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO REDUCE OR INCREASE AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION AND DAMAGES ASSESSED BY ROAD VIEWERS FOR THE OPENING OF A COUNTY ROAD.

County commissioners may not reduce or increase the amount of compensation and damages assessed by viewers in favor of persons whose land is taken for the opening of a county road.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On April 6th you inquired of me as follows:

> "May the county commissioners either reduce or increase the amounts of compensation and damages assessed and determined by county road viewers as provided by sections 6867 and 6882, General Code, as seems to be implied by the language of a clause in section 6883, General Code, which reads: 'and they are satisfied that the amount so assessed and determined is just and equitable?' "

The sections cited by you are a part of the statutes relating to the laying out, altering, changing, widening of or vacating county roads. Section 6867 provides for the appointment by the county commissioners, on the presentation of a petition, and if they are satisfied that lawful notice has been given, of three disinterested freeholders of the county, as viewers, who are also made a jury to assess and determine the compensation and damages to be paid by reason of the opening and construction of a county road. The intervening sections deal with the procedure for making a view of the road and for assessment of compensation and damages, and need not be quoted.

Section 6883, General Code, reads:

> "The county commissioners shall cause such report to be publicly read on the third day of the session at which it was received, and if no petition for review or alteration has been presented and received, and they are satisfied that the amount so assessed and determined is just and equitable, and that the road will be of sufficient importance to the public to cause the damages which have been assessed to be paid by the county, they shall order them to be paid to the applicants from the county treasury. If in their opinion the road is not of sufficient importance to the public to cause the damages to be paid by the county, they may refuse to establish the road as a public highway unless the damages which have been assessed are paid by the petitioners. The commissioners may order a portion of such damages to be paid out of the county treasury and require the petitioners to pay the remainder thereof before such roads are opened."

The county commissioners may pay all of the amount awarded by the viewers out of the county treasury; they may require the petitioners to pay all or may order part to be paid by the petitioners and part by the county. Before the county commissioners can order the whole amount assessed as compensation and damages to be paid out of the county treasury, they must find that such amount is just and equitable and that the road will be of sufficient importance to the public to cause the damages to be paid by the county. The language of section 6883, quoted in your letter, does not justify the interpretation that the commissioners have implied power to increase or decrease the amount allowed by the viewers as compensation and damages. If the commissioners do not deem the amount so assessed to be just and equitable, there is but one course open to them, viz.: they may refuse to order the amount assessed to be paid out of the county treasury, but they cannot increase or decrease the amount fixed by the viewers.

That the commissioners have no such power is manifest from section 7078, General Code, wherein it is provided that a claimant for compensation and damages for land taken for the establishment of a county road may appeal to the probate court "from the final decision of the county commissioners or township trustees, confirming the assessment of compensation and damages made by the viewers in his behalf, or the refusal of the viewers to award damages to him."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORGANIZATION FOR THE DETECTION AND ARREST OF HORSE THIEVES —RIGHT OF MEMBERS OF SUCH ORGANIZATION TO CARRY CONCEALED WEAPONS.

The officers of a county or township organization for the detection and arrest of horse thieves are not entitled to carry concealed weapons without giving bond as required by section 12819, General Code.

The members of such association are not specially appointed police officers, and consequently are not entitled to carry concealed weapons at all; if they did carry such concealed weapons, section 13693 would apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

HON. E. E. KERLIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Darke County, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 10, 1914, you present to this department the following questions:

> "First: Does section 12819, of the General Code of Ohio, as amended April 7, 1913, (103 vol. O. L., page 553) prohibit officers of a county or township organization for the detection and arrest of horse thieves and other criminals, from pursuing criminals as provided by section 10199 and subsequent sections of the General Code, unless they comply with the requirements as to the giving of bonds?
> "Second: Are such pursuing officers, such police officers, within the meaning of said section, as are authorized to go armed when on duty within the meaning of said amended section 12819?
> "Third: If such officers are authorized to give such bond and go armed when on duty would it be necessary for each pursuer who is appointed for a short period of three or six months required to give an individual bond, or could each company give a blanket bond for all of the pursuing officers of such company or society?"

Before directly answering your questions, I shall briefly state the purport of the sections authorizing the organization of a township society for the detection and arrest of horse thieves and criminals.

Under section 10199 when a society of persons in a township is formed for the detection and arrest of horse thieves and other criminals, and for the mutual protection of the property of its members, such society may become a body corporate with the right to levy such assessment, not exceeding $3.00 annually from each member, as may be required to carry out the objects of the society. In addition to this it is provided by following sections that any number of persons, not less than fifteen, a majority of whom must be residents of the state, may become incorporated for the purpose of apprehending and convicting any person or persons accused of either a felony or misdemeanor. An association so incorporated is authorized to adopt a constitution, provide a seal, elect or appoint officers, and perform the duties required by law. The presiding officer may appoint deputies, not exceeding one in each township in the county where the corporation is located. The officers and members of the association upon proper certificate of the presiding officer, if a felony has been committed, may pursue and arrest without warrant any person whom they believe, or have reasonable cause to believe guilty of the offense, and arrest and detain the alleged criminal in any county of the state to which he has fled, and return him to any officer of the county wherein the offense was committed, and there detain him until a legal warrant can be obtained for his arrest. An officer or member of the association may, under such certificate of authority, obtain a warrant for the arrest of a person accused of a felony, and shall have the same power to arrest and detain offenders as is vested in constables. This latter association is authorized to make and collect assessments from each of the members and also to indemnify them for losses caused by horse thieves or other felons. Upon the apprehension and conviction of a person charged with felony by such association, the commissioners of a county may reimburse it in any sum not exceeding $100.00 for necessary expenses, not otherwise provided by law, incurred in the apprehension and conviction of such criminal. When the crime is a misdemeanor the amount of reimbursement shall not exceed $75.00.

I am unable to tell from your question whether the association which you have in mind was formed under section 10199, or under the following sections. As the first cited section simply provides for the organization of an association, and does not vest in it the same powers reposed in organizations under sections 10200 et seq., it would seem that there is a radical difference between the two classes of associations. As the former is not given the same power of making arrests as is the latter, it stands on a parity with a private individual who has a right to arrest a person who has committed a felony, but this does not convey any right of any character to carry concealed weapons. Therefore, my opinion will deal principally with those associations upon whose members is conferred the right of making arrests.

Section 12819, as amended 103 O. L., 553, reads thus:

> "Whoever carries a pistol, bowie knife, dirk, or other dangerous weapon concealed on or about his person shall be fined not to exceed five hundred dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years. Provided, however, that this act shall not affect the right of sheriffs, regularly appointed police officers of incorporated cities and villages, regularly elected constables and special officers as provided by sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857, of the General Code, to go armed when on duty. Provided, further, that it shall be lawful for deputy sheriffs and specially appointed police officers, except as are appointed or called into service by virtue of the authority of said sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857, of the General Code, to go armed if they first give bond to the state of Ohio, to be approved by the clerk of the court of common pleas, in the sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned to save the public harmless by reason of any unlawful use of such weapons carried by them; and any person injured by such improper use may have recourse on said bond."

The inhibition of this section against the carrying of concealed weapons does not apply to sheriffs, regularly appointed police officers of incorporated cities and villages, regularly appointed constables and special officers, as provided by sections 2833, 4373 10070, 10108 and 12857, of the General Code, when such designated persons are on duty. The members and officers of the organizations to which you refer in your question do not come within the foregoing exception.

It will be observed that it is also made lawful for deputy sheriffs and specially appointed police officers to go armed if they first give the bond required by the foregoing quoted section.

I can find no authority under section 10199 which authorizes a township society for the detection and arrest of horse thieves and criminals, or the members of such association or organization to make arrests or pursue felons. This power, however, is vested in associations organized under section 10200 et seq., to which I have before referred.

This brings us to your second question. I cannot bring myself to the belief that the members of these associations are specially appointed police officers, as in its ordinary signification the expression "police officer" means one who is charged with the detection and arrest of those who violate any of the laws of the state or ordinances of a municipality, and who, during the time he is acting, has the obligation of continually engaging in such service. It does not comprehend the doing of police work in a particular case, nor is the expression "specially appointed" to be regarded as in any way modifying the view which I have just expressed. These terms last quoted have reference to those officers who are not members of a regular police force, but who while on duty are performing the work or service of police officers as hereinbefore defined, and such designation, no doubt, was intended to refer to those officers designated in sections 151, 1821 et seq., 5889 et seq., 9150 et seq. and 9913 of the General Code. From this it must follow that the answer to your second question must be in the negative.

Having answered your second question in the foregoing manner, it is unnecessary to discuss your third inquiry, because if these persons are not authorized to go armed when on duty, within the meaning of section 12819, it must follow that they cannot give bond as prescribed in section 12819.

I have not directly answered your first question for the reason that I wish to call your attention to section 13693 of the General Code as modifying, to some extent at least, the provisions of section 12819. The section last quoted does not in any way prohibit the officers of the organizations referred to from pursuing criminals, and I take it you desire merely to know whether there are any circumstances under which they may carry concealed weapons. It is because of this that I have called attention to the following section:

> "Section 13693: Upon trial of an indictment for carrying a concealed weapon the jury shall acquit the defendant if it appear that he was at the time engaging in a lawful business, calling or employment, and that the circumstances in which he was placed justified a prudent man in carrying such weapon for the defense of his person, property or family."

Under sections 10200 et seq., a member of the organizations therein referred to would be engaged in a lawful calling when he was pursuing, arresting or detaining criminals or alleged criminals, whether with or without a warrant, if a felony had been committed, and with a warrant when the accused was charged with a misdemeanor provided, however, that when acting without a warrant he believed or had reasonable cause to believe the accused to be guilty of the offense. Hence it follows that if the persons mentioned were in pursuit of criminals, or alleged criminal in the manner herein specified, and the circumstances would have justified a prudent man in carrying a concealed weapon for the defense of his person it would follow that it would be the duty of the jury to acquit such persons if they were charged with carrying concealed weapons. Of course, they would have to assume this risk, as a jury might find that they were not justified under the circumstances in carrying such weapons. In any event, the foregoing is the section upon which they must rely for their right to carry the weapons in question, as they can place no reliance on section 12819.

The question as to the right of members and officers of associations, organized under sections 10200 et seq. to carry concealed weapons upon giving bond, is an extremely difficult one, and my answer is not free from doubt, but in view of the fact that it might cause members and officers of such associations serious difficulty if I should hold they were entitled to carry such weapons and my holding should be reversed by the courts, I have regarded the foregoing as the safer rule to adopt.

You can readily see the very grave danger of holding that these persons have the right to carry concealed weapons and then have a court hold otherwise when they were prosecuted for so doing.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PAYMENT OF CONTINGENT EXPENSES INCIDENT TO THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE MOTHERS' PENSION LAW—FROM WHAT FUND SUCH EXPENSES ARE PAYABLE.

The contingent expenses incident to the administration of the mothers' pension law are expenses of the juvenile court, payable out of the fund for its support, not out of the mothers' pension levy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

HON. SAMUEL L. BLACK, Probate Judge and Juvenile Judge, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of June 26th, you call my attention to the fact that under sections 1683-2 and 1683-3 of the General Code, constituting parts of the so-called "Mothers' Pension Law," it is required that the juvenile court shall cause preliminary and periodical investigations and examinations to be made of the homes of the mothers applying for and receiving pensions, and request my opinion as to whether or not these administrative expenses are chargeable to the fund to be created by the levy, under section 1683-9, General Code.

The pertinent provisions of the statutes are as follows:

> "Section 1683-2. * * * Such homes shall be visited from time to time by a probation officer, agent of an associated charities organization, a humane society, or such other agents as the court may direct, provided that the person who actually makes such visits shall be thoroughly trained in charitable relief work, and the report or reports of such visiting agent shall be considered by the court in making such order.
> "Section 1683-3. Such allowance may be made by the juvenile court, only upon the following conditions: * * *. Sixth:—a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made by the probation officer, an associated charities organization, humane society, or such other competent person or agency as the court may direct, and a written report of such examination filed.

"Section 1683-9. It is hereby made the duty of the county commissioners to provide out of the money in the county treasury such sum each year thereafter as will meet the requirements of the court in these proceedings. To provide the same they shall levy a tax not to exceed one-tenth of a mill on the dollar valuation of the taxable property of the county. Such levy shall be subject to all the limitations provided by law upon the aggregate amount, rate, maximum rate and combined maximum rate of taxation. The county auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of such allowance as may be ordered by the juvenile judge."

It will be observed that the salaries of the probation officer and other specially designated agents referred to in these sections are not specifically made a charge upon the fund to be created by the levy under section 1683-9. The administration of mothers' pensions is a function of the juvenile court, as such, and in my opinion, expenses of this sort must be provided for in the same manner as other expenses of that court and are not payable out of the levy provided for in section 1683-9.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSESSMENT OF LOTS IN MAKING A STREET IMPROVEMENT—POWER OF COUNCIL TO SETTLE AND ADJUST EXCESS ASSESSMENTS.

1. Where in making a street improvement certain lots are assessed in excess of the limitations provided in section 3819, General Code, council has power under the statutes authorizing assessment to settle and adjust such excess and distribute the same to the other lots abutting on such improvement, provided such settlement and adjustment is made with the persons interested and made effective by a reassessing ordinance passed in the form and manner required for original assessing ordinances.

2. A property owner who signs a petition for an improvement wherein he states the number of feet front he owns is estopped to attack the validity of an assessment therefor. Bremen vs. Gibson, 14 O. C. C., n. s. 48, 77 O. S., 602. It does not follow from this that one who owns two lots abutting on an improvement is estopped to question an assessment where in signing the petition he describes the one and says nothing as to the other.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

HON. DEAN C. TALBOTT, City Solicitor, Galion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 22nd, in which you inquire:

"Several years ago the city of Galion improved a street by paving and constructed a sewer and made special assesments upon the abutting property which were, on a number of lots, far in excess of the thirty-three and one-third per cent. limitation of General Code section 3819. Some of these assessments have been paid under protest and some of the other lot owners have refused to pay any taxes whatever and as there have been no purchasers at tax sales, there lots will soon revert to the state according to General Code.

"I am writing you to inquire if you know of any provision of law by which the council may adjust these assessments to conform to General Code 3819, without suit being brought by the property owners. The violation of General Code 3819 is so flagrant that it is a matter of expediency for the city to adjust this matter without legal proceedings if possible.

"2nd. If the property owner waives the limitation imposed by General Code 3819 as to one lot, by signing his name, foot frontage and lot number, would this waiver be construed as a waiver of the limitation upon another lot owned by him upon the same street?"

In answer to your first question, I desire to state that no express authority to settle, adjust and compromise claims may be found as is the case in section 2416, General Code, in regard to county commissioners. However, it is not always necessary that such express authority be found; it may exist as a necessary incident to the carrying granted powers into effect, or it may be deduced from other granted powers, and as being in effect, the doing of the things authorized but not in the manner prescribed.

By section 3902, the council, under certain circumstances, may authorize the making of a reassessment, and by section 3903, the proceedings upon such reassessment are the same as upon an original.

Provision is made in sections 3848, 3849 and 3850 whereby, when an assessment is objected to, an equalizing board may be appointed by council, which board shall equalize the assessments, report the same to the council, where it may be confirmed, set aside or a new appraisement ordered.

From your statement, the assessment under consideration is invalid, and the power of the council to direct a reassessment cannot be questioned. When it comes to a consideration of the duty of this board, it must take from the lots the excess above the limitations fixed in section 3819, and distribute the same justly, equitably and in accordance with the foot frontage of the residue of the improvement. This reassessment must be reported to council and collected in the same manner as an original assessment. (Section 3903, General Code).

That this end may be as well reached by agreement of parties cannot be doubted, and if council may make the correction in the specific manner stated, and by legislative action, why may it not do so by entering into an agreement with the parties in interest, and all of them, by which the amount of the deductions and the lots subject thereto shall be set forth, and the lots upon the same are to be added, and the amount of addition stipulated?

I think the remedy under sections 3902 and 3903 is not exclusive; neither is it necessary to compel the owner of the lot excessively assessed to go to the trouble and expense of a lawsuit to enjoin, in which the court will have power to adjudge the amount of the over-assessment, fix the amount the plaintiff should pay, and still leave it up to council to make a reassessment to take care of such excess, and consequently I am of the opinion that council may fully adjust the matter by an agreement, not merely with those who are, or claim to be excessively assessed, but with them and all others who may be in any manner affected by the re-assessment. Of course this would not do away with the duty of council to make a reassessment in the formal and usual manner, which, when done, would end the matter insofar as future action concerning collection was concerned.

Your second question as to whether the waiver of a limitation as to one lot waives as to others, will depend entirely upon the character of the petition signed. In a case as you state, where the signing is accompanied with the lot number and foot frontage, the waiver would only extend to the property described, whereas, if it was signed generally to a petition, it would operate as a waiver to all lots owned and abutting on the improvement. In other words, a person may sign a petition generally and thereby make a general agreement to the improvement, or, he may own several lots abutting on the improvement and word his waiver so that it applies only to the described lots, it being clear that a person might own a lot abutting on an improvement, where he would desire the improvement very greatly, and another lot along the same proposed improvement where he would not want to be charged with the expense of the improvement. Such being the case, I construe the signing as you describe it, as a waiver attaching to the described property only and not to any lot or lots abutting on the improvement.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT FOR PURCHASE OF ELECTRIC CURRENT FOR A VILLAGE MUST BE MADE ON BEHALF OF THE VILLAGE BY THE COUNCIL—NOT BY THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS.

Since prior to the enactment of the amendatory provisions of section 3809, General Code, (103 O. L., 526), municipalities in this state had no power to purchase electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to the municipality or its inhabitants, and inasmuch as by the express provisions of this section as amended, the council of a village is given express authority to contract for the purchase of such current, a contract between a village and a public service company furnishing electricity must be made on behalf of the village by the council, and not the board of trustees of public affairs of such village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 22, 1914.

HON. HERBERT W. MITCHELL, City Solicitor, St. Clairsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 30, 1914, you write asking my opinion upon questions stated by you as follows:

> "The village of St. Clairsville owns and operates a municipal electric light plant. This plant is under the control of the board of trustees of public affairs. A proposition has been made by an electric lighting company of Wheeling, that has a power and service line through this county, to sell electricity to the village on the switch-board of the local plant for considerably less than it now costs the municipality to manufacture the same. The question now arises as to whether a contract should be entered into by the board of trustees of public affairs or by the council with the company selling the electricity."

By the provisions of section 3618, General Code, municipal corporations have power to establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, heat and power. By section 3990, General Code, municipalities may not only erect electric works, but may purchase, or if necessary, appropriate existing plants belonging to any person or company within the municipality.

Section 4357, General Code, provides, among other things, that in each village in which an electric light plant is situated, or when council orders an electric light plant, it, (council) shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall each be elected for a term of two years.

Section 4361, General Code, as amended (103 O. L., 561), provides, with respect to the question at hand, that the board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control electric light plants, furnish electricity, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. It provides further, that such board may make by-laws and regulations for the management and protection of such plants, and for the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the same and making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, it may assess rents for light furnished upon all tenements and premises supplied. This section further provides, generally, that this board shall have the same power and perform the same duties as are possessed by and are incumbent upon the director of public service with respect to municipal utilities, and more specifically provides that all powers and duties relating to waterworks in certain sections therein named shall extend to and include electric light plants, and that such board shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent with the provisions of the section.

It is manifest from the provisions of the foregoing sections that comprehensive powers have been invested in municipalities with respect to the establishment, operation and management of electric light plants. I see nothing, however, in the provisions of any of these sections authorizing municipal corporations to purchase electric current, for clearly the power granted to municipalities to establish, maintain and operate an electric light plant for the purpose of manufacturing a certain product to wit, electricity, for the purpose of furnishing the municipality and its inhabitants with light, power or heat, does not authorize the municipality to purchase that product from others to be used for such purposes.

Ottawa Electric Light Co. vs. Ottawa 12 Ont. Law Rep. 290.

Express power, however, has been given to municipalities to purchase electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to the municipality or its inhabitants. In granting this power, section 3809, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 526, provides:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village my make a contract * * * for the leasing of an electric light plant and equipment * * * of any person, firm, company or municipality, or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years."

It appearing that prior to the enactment of the amendatory provisions of section 3809, General Code, municipal corporations in this state had no power to purchase electric current for the purpose of furnishing light, heat or power to the municipality or its inhabitants, and that by the provisions of this section, as amended, the power of contracting for the purchase of electric current for said purpose is vested in the council of villages making such contracts, it follows that this is the body having sole authority to enter into the contract in question.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the proposed contract between the electric light company and your village should be entered into on behalf of the village by the council and not the board of trustees of public affairs.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO PAY COST OF REMOVAL AND MAINTENANCE OF A TUBERCULOSIS PATIENT FROM A CITY OF THE COUNTY TO A HOSPITAL OWNED BY ANOTHER CITY OF THAT COUNTY.

It is the duty of the county commissioners of a county to pay the cost of removal and maintenance of a tuberculosis patient from a city of the county to a hospital owned and maintained by another city in that county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of July 1, 1914, wherein you request my opinion as to whether or not the county commissioners of Hamilton County have to pay the cost of removal and maintenance of a tuberculosis patient from the city of Norwood to a hospital owned and maintained by the city of Cincinnati.

You state in your letter that your poor or infirmary fund is made up entirely from Dow tax receipts, and that the city of Norwood and the city of Cincinnati have their receipts from the same source.

I have read your opinion of June 26th to the board of county commissioners of your county in reference to this question; I agree with your conclusion in that opinion.

I wish to call your attention to house bill No. 265 relating to county and district tuberculosis hospitals, found on page 492, 103 O. L., and especially to section 3143 of this act, which provides as follows:

> "Instead of joining in the erection of a district hospital for tuberculosis, as hereinafter provided for, the county commissioners may contract with the board of trustees, as hereinafter provided for, of a district hospital, the county commisssioners of a county now maintaining a county hospital for tuberculosis or with the proper officer of a municipality where such hospital has been constructed, for the care and treatment of the inmates of such infirmary or other residents of the county who are suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis. The commissioners of the county in which such patients reside shall pay to the board of trustees of the district hospital or into the proper fund of the county maintaining a hospital for tuberculosis, or into the proper fund of the city receiving such patients, the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment, and other necessaries, and they shall also pay for their transportation. Provided, that the county commissioners of any county may contract for the care and treatment of the inmates of the county infirmary or other resident of the county suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis with an association or corporation, incorporated under the laws of Ohio for the exclusive purpose of caring for and treating persons suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis; but no such contract shall be made until the institution has been inspected and approved by the state board of health, and such approval may be withdrawn and such contracts shall be cancelled if, in the judgment of the state board of health, the institution is not managed in a proper manner. Provided, however, that if such approval is withdrawn, the board of trustees of such institution may have the right of appeal to the governor and attorney general and their decision shall be final."

Under the provisions of this section, I am clearly of the opinion that it is the duty of the county commissioners of the county in which such patients reside to pay into the proper funds of the city receiving such patients, the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment, and other necessaries, and they shall also pay for their transportation thereto.

I am enclosing herewith correspondence sent by you with this request.

Trusting that this fully answers your question, I am,

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION TO REVIEW THE ACTION OF THE STATE BOARD OF CENSORS IN REFUSING TO APPROVE MOTION PICTURE FILMS.

The industrial commission of Ohio has no authority to review or entertain an appeal from the action of the state board of censors in refusing to approve motion picture films.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your commission has presented to this department the following inquiry:

> "Has the industrial commission of Ohio authority to review or entertain an appeal from the action of the state board of censors in refusing to approve motion picture films, there being no charge that the board of censors has been in any way influenced by improper motives in such refusal?"

The act providing for a board of censors of motion picture films and prescribing its duties, is to be found in 103 O. L., 399, et seq. The first section contains the following language:

> "There is created under the authority and supervision of the industrial commission of Ohio a board of censors of motion picture films. Upon the taking effect of this act the industrial commission shall appoint, with the approval of the governor, three persons * * * who shall constitute such board."

Under section 2 it is made the duty of the industrial commission to furnish this board with suitable office rooms and equipment; the board being empowered to organize by electing one of its members president. The secretary of the industrial commission is to act as secretary of the board. The following is the concluding paragraph of this section:

> "The members of the board shall be considered as employes of the industrial commission and shall be paid as other employes of such commission are paid. The industrial commission shall appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board."

Section 3 makes it

> "The duty of the board of censors to examine and censor as herein provided, all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the state of Ohio."

The following language appears in section 4:

> "Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational, or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board * * * Before any motion picture shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words "Approved by the Ohio board of censors" and the number of the film."

Section 5 authorizes this board to work in conjunction with censor boards of other states as a congress. Section 6 prohibits the exhibition of pictures within this state "unless they have been passed and approved by the board or the censor congress." Section 7 provides a penalty for violation of the law. Section 8 reads thus:

> "Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied witht the orders of the industrial commission."

While this act in plain and unambiguous language places the board of censors under the supervision of the industrial commission, and designates its members as employes thereof, nevertheless, the act contains language, which, in my judgment, substantially modifies or limits the broad expressions contained in sections 1 and 2 to which I have above referred. It will be noted that it is made the express duty of the censors to examine the films to be publicly exhibited, provision being made for the submission of these pictures to the board, which shall approve only such films as are in its judgment and discretion of a moral, educational, or amusing and harmless character. Under language such as this the only conclusion at which one can arrive is that the board of censors is to exercise its judgment and discretion in determining whether the films meet with the statutory requirements. There is nothing to indicate that the aesthetic taste or moral perception of any other board or commission is to be substituted for that of the censors, nor is there anything to indicate that such censors act purely in a ministerial capacity as agents of the industrial commission when they pass upon the films. In addition to this, the board is authorized to work in conjunction with other censors boards, and no films may be shown until they have been approved by the board or the censor congress. If the general assembly had intended to authorize review of the action of the censor board by any other body, it seems to me that there would have been some distinct statement to that effect in the statute, especially when provision is made for action in conjunction with other censor boards. If the action were to be jointly with or under the control of the industrial commission, apt language to accomplish this purpose would, no doubt, have been employed. It is worthy to note that the only public servants who are referred to in the conferring of power to approve or disapprove films, is the board of censors, or the censor congress. This is clearly and definitely stated in unequivocal language, and the discretion and judgment of such board seem to be the determining features in the authorization of the exhibition of motion pictures.

Section 8, I think, fully recognizes the foregoing theory of the law and is decisive on the question. A person dissatisfied with the order of the board of censors has the right to file a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of this board, if he is dissatisfied, and he may ask to set aside any order of such board in the same manner as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the orders of the industrial commission. Here the general assembly clearly evidenced the fact that it had in mind the powers of the industrial commission, as well as the powers of the board of censors, and it is plain that there was no aim or desire on the part of the general assembly to require dissatisfied persons to file a petition for hearing with the industrial commission. The statute provides that the petition may be filed for hearing. The same provision is to be found in the industrial commission act, 103 O. L. 95, section 27; and it is there made patent that, after the order of the commission is made, a hearing may be had on the reasonableness and lawfulness of such order. In other words, the commission is to act first without any hearing, but may subsequently grant a hearing if the petition shows that it should be granted.

It was the intention of the general assembly to provide the same machinery and methods of procedure when the board of censors had acted on matters within its jurisdiction. It is to approve or disapprove all the films without any hearing in the first instance, then if objection is made, such board may conduct a hearing to decide whether its ruling should be adhered to. In case it should have erred in its judgment and would not correct the same, it may be that appeal may be had to the court, as is authorized by the industrial commission act in cases coming before that commission, but it is not necessary here to decide that question, and I shall not for that reason discuss the same. Section 8 very carefully avoids any vesting of authority in the industrial commission to review the action of the board of censors in a case such as that suggested in your inquiry, and it does not appear to me that the other provisions of the statute contain such language as would justify the holding that such authority has been conferred by implication. It may very well be, and probably is true, that the industrial commission has a certain degree of authority and supervision over the board of censors, and in that respect the members of that board are to be treated as employes of the commission with reference to their official conduct and certain phases of their ministerial work, but when they have exercised their discretion in the manner suggested by the question submitted, it is my judgment that your commission has no authority to consider their action for the purpose of determining whether it should be affirmed or set aside.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE EFFECT OF THE CHANGE IN THE LANGUAGE OF ARTICLE XII, SECTION 2, OF THE CONSTITUTION FROM "INSTITUTIONS OF PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY" TO "INSTITUTIONS USED EXCLUSIVELY FOR CHARITABLE PURPOSES."

The change in the language of article XII, section 2 of the constitution from that authorizing the exemption of "institutions of purely public charity" to that authorizing the exemption of "institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes," has no effect upon statutes passed prior to the amendment. If invalid under the constitution of 1851 such invalidity is not cured by the constitutional amendment alone, but the legislature must act under the new constitution before its provisions become operative.

In particular sections 5364, 5365 and 5365-1, General Code, if and to the extent that they were unconstitutional before the amendment are not rendered valid by the amendment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 13, 1914, you requested my opinion upon the following general questions:

> "By the opinion of yourself and former attorneys general, it has been held that most, if not all, of the exemptions provided for in sections 5364, 5365 and 5365-1 are in contravention of section 2 of article XII of the constitution. These opinions were rendered prior to the action of the recent constitutional convention, which changed the words 'institutions of purely public charity' to 'institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes.'
> "The commission requests an opinion from you as to the effect of the change in wording of this section upon the exemptions provided for in the sections of the General Code above referred to.
> "Does the amended constitution, without additional action of the legislature, make any or all of the provisions of these sections constitutional?"

The sections, as they stand in the General Code, are as follows:

> "Section 5364. Real or personal property belonging to an incorporated post of the grand army of the republic, union veterans' union, grand lodge of free and accepted masons, grand lodge of the independent order of odd fellows, grand lodge of the knights of Pythias, association for the exclusive benefit, use and care of aged, infirm and dependent women, a religious or secret benevolent organization maintaining a lodge system, an incorporated association of ministers of any church, or incorporated association of commercial traveling men, an association which is intended to create a fund or is used or intended to be used for the care and maintenance of indigent soldiers of the late war, indigent members of said organizations, and the widows, orphans and beneficiaries of the deceased members of such organizations, and not operated with a view to profit or having as their principal object the issuance of insurance certificates of membership, and the interest or income derived therefrom, shall not be taxable, and the trustees of any such organizations shall not be required to return or list such property for taxation.
> "Section 5365. Moneys, funds or credits belonging to the representative body of Indiana meeting of friends or the religious society known as the German baptists or dunkers, in this state, which moneys, funds or credits or the income therefrom are exclusively used for the support of the poor of such denomination, society or congregation, shall be exempt from taxation. The person or persons having the care and supervision of such moneys, funds or credits, shall not be required to return or list them for taxation.

"Section 5365-1. Every fraternal benefit society organized or licensed under this act is hereby declared to be a charitable and benevolent institution, and all of its funds shall be exempt from all and every state, county, district, municipal and school tax, other than taxes on real estate and office equipment."

I shall not under take in this opinion, to interpret these sections. For example, I shall not undertake to determine what the phrase "belonging to," as used in the first line of section 5364 means—whether it signifies that all real or personal property of the societies therein mentioned, is, on account of its mere ownership, attempted to be exempted from taxation, or whether, as held under similar statutes, the implied limitation of use is to be read into the statute, so that such property belonging to such associations and societies is not to be exempted from taxation unless directly used for the purposes of such association or societies, and not leased or otherwise used for profit. (Library Association vs. Pelton, 36 O. S., 253.)

Again, I shall not attempt to analyze the inconsistency between section 5365-1 and section 5364; the former of which limits the exemption to fraternal benefit societies to taxes other than taxes on real estate and office equipment, while section 5364 attempts to exempt all real or personal property belonging to "* * * secret benevolent organizations maintaining a lodge system."

Nor shall I consider what portions of the related statutes were constitutional under original article XII, section 2 (assuming the statute to be separable), nor what portions would still be unconstitutional under amended article XII, section 2.

In the view which I take of the broad question which you submit, it will be sufficient if I confine myself to the single question as to whether or not the amendment to the constitution had the effect of making these sections constitutional, in so far as they were not constitutional before and in so far, also, as they do not violate the amended constitution.

If the question were doubtful, and, if under the familiar rules, recourse to the debates were permitted, it would be found that the author of the change desired to accomplish the result which you question, and was of the opinion that the change would accomplish it.

I quote from page 1880, Vol. 2 of the Proceedings and Debates of the Constitutional Convention of 1912:

"Mr. Winn: 'I offer an amendment.' The amendment was read as follows:

"In line 15, strike out the words 'of purely public charity,' and insert in lieu thereof the words, 'used exclusively for charitable purposes.'

" 'If I may have your attention for just a minute I will explain the importance of this amendment. It will not exempt from taxation any property now taxed, but it will make constitutional some laws enacted by the general assembly exempting certain property from taxation, which laws are now unconstitutional. I will call your attention to three institutions in the city of Springfield, used exclusively for charitable purposes. For thirteen years I was intimately connected with one of them, which was the Pythian Home, at which there are now being kept, housed, clothed and educated at the hands of the members of the order of the State two hundred little boys and girls. Since that institution was established probably fifteen or sixteen years ago, there had been admitted to that institution probably five or six hundred orphan children. Just out to the right of this institution is the Masonic Home, where old men and old women who are not able to support themselves, and who but for that institution would be public charges, are given a home and all the comforts of life during their old age. Just off to the left of the Pythian Home is the Odd Fellows institution, where orphan children, old men and old women are kept. There are other institutions of that sort. I know one in the city of Cleveland, a splendid institution, maintained by the Jews. There are institutions of a similar kind maintained by capitalists and maintained by other civic institutions besides those which I have mentioned.

* * * * * * * * * *

"Mr. Winn: 'A few years ago the members of these different fraternities and different societies and organizations came before the general assembly and asked the general assembly to pass a law exempting them from taxation, and that law was passed almost unanimously. But I have always had very grave doubts respecting the constitutionality of that law. A committee of these institutions has visited some of the members of this convention since we have been here and has asked that this be inserted, removing all doubt on the subject. It will not exempt any property from taxation that is now taxed, but it will make constitutional the exemption of all institutions used purely for charitable purposes. I hope the amendment will be agreed to and I hope the agreement will be unanimous.'

"The amendment was agreed to."

However, in the case presented, the question is not doubtful. The effect of an amendment to a constitution upon the statutes of this kind, unconstitutional when enacted and not re-enacted after the amendment, is well understood and perfectly established; so that no expression of opinion, on the part of members of the convention, or otherwise, could, in any way, affect the application of the settled rules in question.

The principle which I have in mind will be found stated in 8 Cyc. 768, as follows:

"An unconstitutional statute is absolutely null and void ab initio, having no binding force; and cannot be validated by a subsequent constitutional amendment removing the legislative restriction by which its enactment was prohibited. * * *. But if from the language of the validating amendment or other provision it expressly or by necessary implication appears that it was intended to operate retrospectively by validating antecedent unconstitutional legislation, all such legislation to which such a provision relates will be rendered valid, without re-enactment by the legislature. * * *."

(See the authorities cited in the notes at the above page).

Again in 37 Cyc., 886, is found the following:

"A constitutional provision merely authorizing the legislature to exempt certain kinds of property does not, of itself, grant any exemption. Nor do constitutional provisions, defining or limiting the power of the legislature in regard to the granting of exemptions, affect or repeal exemptions already existing."

I regard these propositions as so elementary as not to require the support of cases or authorities other than those cited in the notes.

The situation with respect to article XII, section 2, may be described in a word, so far as the matter of the exemption of charitable institutions is concerned. The original section, as adopted in 1851, authorized the legislature, by general laws, to exempt from taxation "institutions of purely public charity." Of course, this provision was not self executing. Of course, too, the legislature had no power to exempt, from taxation, any charitable institution not "purely public." The constitutional provision afforded an apt example of the application of the doctrine that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of all others.

In this state of the constitutional law, the sections under consideration were passed, and to a certain extent, at least, they undoubtedly exceeded the legislative authority and were, to that extent, at least, void.

(Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S., 144).

The only change made in 1912 was to substitute for the phrase "institution of purely public charity," the phrase "institution used exclusively for charitable purposes." (Though just what is meant by an "institution" being "used" is not exactly clear—probably the idea relates to the use of the property of the institution and not to the "use" of the institution, itself, but it is certainly very awkwardly expressed). There is no express language in the article itself, nor in the schedule of the amendments of 1912 showing an intention on the part of the electors, in adopting the same, to validate unconstitutional acts theretofore passed. On the contrary, the general schedule provided as follows:

> "The several amendments passed and submitted by this convention, when adopted at the election, shall take effect on the first day of January, 1913. * * *. All laws then in force, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue in force until amended or repealed. * * *."

The sections in question, in so far as they were violative of the constitution of 1851, never were "laws;" similarly, they were not in effect on January 1, 1913. Therefore, the mere fact that they are not inconsistent with the amended constitution, which became effective on that date, does not render them valid.

In a word, in order to validate the sections of the General Code, under consideration, to the extent that conformity with amended section 2 of article XII might have validated them, it would have been necessary for the amended section or the schedule to the constitution to reach back and by appropriate, express language, exert a retrospective and curative effect. So, far from doing so, the amended section is, like the one which it supplemented, merely permissive in so far as it relates to exemptions; it provides that by general laws the legislature may exempt the property of institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes. Surely, on the face of the amended constitution, itself, this provision can only become effective by subsequent action of the law-making power.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am clearly of the opinion that in spite of the declared purpose of the mover of the particular amendment in question, the verbal change in article XII, section 2 of the constitution, respecting the exemption from taxation of the property of charitable institutions, in no way affects the validity of any provisions of sections 5364, 5365 and 5365-1 of the General Code.

As already stated, the question as to the partial validity of these sections, or any of them, measured by the constitution of 1851, under which they were passed, has not been considered.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REVISION OF A SCHOOL BOOK—WHEN THE LISTING OF SCHOOL BOOKS EXPIRES.

The revision of a school book is the same as the offering of a new book under sections 7709 and 7710, and therefore, the expiration of the listing of such revised school book expires five years from the date such revised edition is filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1914.

HON. F. W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 22, 1914, you submitted for an official opinion the following request:

> "Sections 7709 and 7710 of the General Code prescribe the manner in which books shall be listed by publishers and also prescribes the time these books shall be listed. A certain company offers a book for listing in 1910. A revision of the book is made in 1912 and the book is relisted.
> "The question I desire to know is when will the expiration of the listing occur? Five years from the time it was listed in 1910 or five years from the time the book was listed in 1912?"

Said sections 7709 and 7710 of the General Code, which you mention in your request, were both amended February 16, 1914, in 104 Ohio Laws, pages 230 and 231. Section 7709, as amended, provides as follows:

> "Any publisher or publishers of school books in the United States desiring to offer school books for use by pupils in the common schools of Ohio as hereinafter provided, before such books may be lawfully adopted and purchased by any school board, must file in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, a copy of each book proposed to be so offered, together with the published list wholesale price thereof. No revised edition of any such book shall be used in common schools until a copy of such edition has been filed in the office of the superintendent together with the published list wholesale price thereof. The superintendent must carefully preserve in his office all such copies of books and the price thereof."

Section 7710 of the General Code, as amended in 104 Ohio Laws, at page 231 provides as follows:

> "When and so often as any book and the price thereof is filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction as provided in section 7709 a commission consisting of the governor, secretary of state and superintendent of public instruction, immediately shall fix the maximum price at which such books may be sold to or purchased by boards of education, as hereinafter provided, which price must not exceed seventy-five per cent. of the published list wholesale price thereof. The superintendent of public instruction immediately shall notify the publisher of such book so filed, of the maximum price fixed. If the publisher so notified, notifies the superintendent in writing to furnish such book during a period of five years at that price, such written acceptance and agreement shall entitle the publisher to offer the book so filed for sale to such boards of education."

It will be noted that said section 7709, supra, carries a provision to the effect that no revised edition of any such book shall be used in common schools until a copy of such edition has been filed in the office of the superintendent together with a published list wholesale price thereof, and closes with a further provision to the effect that the superintendent must carefully preserve in his office all such copies of books and the price thereof. In other words, the superintendent must carefully preserve such copies of books, etc. This, I take it, means that he must preserve the books which are lawfully adopted and filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, in the first instance, as well as the revised edition of such books, which, also must be filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction before such revised editions can legally be used in the common schools of Ohio. At this point, I direct attention to the language employed in section 7710, supra, wherein it says "when and so often as any book and the price thereof is filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, as provided in section 7709, a commission consisting of the governor, secretary of state and the superintendent of public instruction immediately shall fix the maximum price at which such books may be sold to or purchased by boards of education, etc., then follows the provision, in substance, that the superintendent of public instruction shall immediately notify the publisher of such book so filed and of the maximum price fixed, and if the publisher so notified in turn notifies the superintendent in writing that he accepts the price fixed and agrees in writing to furnish such books during a period of five years at such price, then such written acceptance and agreement shall entitle the publisher to offer the book so filed for sale to such boards of education. This latter clause refers to the first part of the section wherein it says that when and so often as any book and the price thereof is filed in the office of the superintendent, etc.

In my judgment, a revised edition of a book which is required to be filed in the office of the state superintendent of public instruction before it can be used in the common schools of the state constitutes a filing thereof, just as much and to the same extent as the filing of the original book, in the first instance, before its revision.

In an opinion which this department rendered to your department under date of July 26, 1911, I held, in substance, that after a certain publisher fixes the price at which his books may be sold, to wit, at seventy-five per cent. of the wholesale price, the state school commissioner cannot, within five years, reduce such price unless the publisher re-files such books for listing with the commissioner.

It is my judgment that the filing of a revised edition of a book, within the meaning of sections 7709 and 7710, supra, constitutes a re-filing of such book, and that the five year period, mentioned in section 7710, supra, means a period of five years from and after such refiling, or rather, the filing of the revised edition.

Now, answering your question, specifically, I am of the opinion that the expiration of the listing of such books, as revised, expires five years from the date such revised edition was filed, which, as stated in your question, would be five years from the year 1912.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE TO ASSIGN A JUDGE OF THE COMMON PLEAS COURT TO HOLD COURT IN ANY COUNTY OF THE STATE—COMPENSATION AND EXPENSES OF A JUDGE SO HOLDING COURT.

1. Under favor of amended section 3 of article 4 of the constitution, and section 1469, General Code, passed in pursuance thereof, a chief justice is authorized to assign a judge of the common pleas court to hold court and try causes in any county of the state.

2. In virtue of an order so made, it is the duty of the judge named in the order to follow the directions mentioned, and he is entitled under amended section 2253, General Code, to his actual expenses and $10.00 per day when employed in so holding court.

3. The payment of expenses and per diem as above mentioned is neither a change nor an increase of the compensation or salary of such judge and is not in violation of section 20, article 2, of the constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 6. 1914.

HON. CYRUS NEWBY, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of July 28, 1914, is at hand. You inquire:

> "The chief justice of the state, acting under section 1469, 103 O. L. 408, has assigned me to go to Darke county, Ohio, and try a cause pending in the court of common pleas of that county.
> "I would like your opinion as to whether under section 2253, as amended 104 O. L. 251, Darke county is liable to pay my per diem and expenses while performing the service directed by the chief justice, and if not the per diem, are the expenses payable? I was elected and in office before the enactment of amended section 2253."

Section 1469, General Code (103 O. L. 408), to which you refer, reads:

> "The chief justice shall preside at all terms of the supreme court. When he receives satisfactory information that an unusual amount of business has accumulated in the common pleas court of any county, he may assign a judge or judges from another county in the state to aid in disposing of such business. In case of the absence or disability of the chief justice, the elder of the two judges having the shortest time to serve, and not holding office by appointment to fill a vacancy, shall preside and perform the duties of chief justice."

Section 2253, as amended February 16, 1914 (104 O. L. 251), insofar as pertinent here, reads:

> "Each judge of the court of common pleas who is assigned by the chief justice by virtue of section 1469, to aid in disposing of business of some county other than that in which he resides, shall receive ten dollars per day for each day of such assignment, and his actual and necessary expenses incurred in holding court under such assignment, to be paid from the treasury of the county to which he is so assigned upon the warrant of the auditor of such county, and the amount allowed herein for actual and necessary expenses shall not exceed three hundred dollars in any one year."

The above sections are plain and unambiguous, and do not require construction, for which reason I refer to your statement at the close of your letter—"I was elected and in office before the enactment of amended section 2253," and conclude that what you really want to know is whether, under the provisions of section 20 of article II of the constitution, you are precluded from receiving and Darke county would have no right to pay you the per diem and expenses described in the latter part of amended section 2253.

Section 20 of article II reads:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office is abolished."

Section 3 of article IV of the constitution, as amended September 3, 1912, provides that the chief justice "may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein." This provision, which was not found in the constitution prior to said amendment, clearly authorizes the enactment of section 1469, and the order of the chief justice in sending you to Darke county.

Prior to this amendment, judges of the court of common pleas were neither authorized nor required to hold court outside of the district in which they were elected, and the provision for their expenses, found in section 2253, prior to the amendment referred to and still retained as the first part of said section, has reference, solely, to the holding of courts in counties of the district in which they were elected outside of the one in which the judge resided. The salary and expenses of common pleas judges were fixed on this basis and with reference thereto prior to 1912.

The amendment of section 3 of article IV, above referred to, created a new order of things and the amendment of February 16, 1914, had reference to this change, and undertook to provide the expenses of a common pleas judge when directed to hold court (which might be in any county of the state), by the chief justice, under the authority of the amendment to the constitution and section 1469, as found in 103 Ohio Laws, 408.

The question then arises, may a common pleas judge, elected and in office prior to the amendment of section 2253, above cited, receive the per diem and expenses provided by said section, or, does it operate as a change of his salary so as to preclude him from receiving it because of section 20 of article II? The question so stated is not so readily solved as some might think.

In the case of Thompson vs. Phillips, 12 O. S., 617, Thompson, who was the treasurer of Franklin county, Ohio, claimed that his compensation was fixed by section 8 as found in S. & C. statutes, 1477, being the act in force when his term commenced, first Monday of September, 1860, while the auditor claimed that his compensation was fixed by the act of April 9, 1861 (58 O. L. 110), and under instructions from the state auditor refused to allow Thompson more than was provided in such later act. It made a difference of about four hundred dollars ($400.00) to Mr. Thompson, and he brought proceedings in mandamus to compel the allowance of the compensation he claimed. Thompson, through his counsel, Judges Thurman and Bartley, relied upon section 20 of article II, of the constitution as exempting him from the effect of the act of April 9, 1861. The decision is per curiam, is brief and as follows:

BY THE COURT. The relator, to show that he is not affected by the act of April 9, 1861, relies on the following section of the constitution:

> " 'The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office, and the compensation of all officers, but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished. Section 20, article II.

" 'It is manifest, from the change of expression in the two clauses of the section, that the word "salary" was not used in a general sense, embracing any compensation fixed for an officer, but in its limited sense, of an annual or periodical payment for services—payment dependent on the time, and not on the amount of the service rendered. Where the compensation, as in this case, is to be ascertained by a percentage on the amount of money received and disbursed, we think it is not a salary within the meaning of the section of the constitution.

" 'Peremptory mandamus refused.' "

The above cause was followed in Gobrecht vs. Cincinnati, 51 O. S., 68. Various other cases may be found in which the above cases were cited, including Harrison vs. Lewis, 8 N. P., 84, wherein the Gobrecht case was distinguished. In this last case, Speigel, J., very aptly states the rule to be:

"When a public officer is employed to render services in an independent employment not germane or incidental to his official duties, to which the law has annexed compensation, he may receive for such services additional compensation."

In Lewis, Auditor, vs. Harrison, 11 O. C. D., 647, the syllabus reads:

"The services performed on the decennial county board of equalization, under the Hendley-Royer law, by the auditor, county surveyor and county commissioners are without the scope of their official duties as such, and are not so 'incident' or 'germane' to the regular duties of the offices to which they have been respectively elected, as to make the provisions for compensation contained in the Hendley law, in contravention of the act of the legislature, 94 O. L., 396, or of the constitution, article 2, section 20."

The question of incident or germane duties is considered in this last case, and it is, therefore, thought best to inquire whether the sending you to Darke county is incident or germane to your election as a common pleas judge for the third subdivision of the fifth district. Because of the fact that you had no right to go to Darke county to hold court, and prior to the late changes alluded to above, there was no power to send you there, I am of the opinion that your services under the assignment in question are neither incident nor germane to your office, as above described.

However, I am of the opinion and state the rule to be that where, after an officer has been elected and entered upon the discharge of his duties, the legislature sees fit to charge him with additional duties not included in his office when he was elected, and prescribe compensation therefor, such officer may receive such compensation notwithstanding the constitutional provision above discussed, for the reason that it is not an addition to or change of his salary as fixed when he accepted the office, but merely compensation for duties devolving upon him, because and on account of legislative action after entering upon the discharge of his official duties, and for which the act, adding the duties, fixed the compensation.

In an opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices on June 19, 1914, in which the question of the right of Judge Fricke to receive an increase of salary after August, 1913, under the Cincinnati municipal court law, Judge Fricke, having by said law been made presiding judge of said municipal court, he might receive the salary of a municipal judge, which was greater than that of a police judge, after reviewing a number of authorities, and in line with what has been above quoted, it is said:

"In other words, the additional duties required by the passage of the municipal court law were not germane to the old office. Under such circumstances it is fundamental, we think, that additional compensation may be allowed for the added duties without any infringement of the constitutional provision, if such provision were here applicable. It has been held under a similar constitutional provision that when new duties are imposed, which are not within the scope of the office, and extra compensation is provided, such increase is not violative of such constitutional inhibition.

"Love vs. Baehr, 47 Calif., 364.
"County vs. Fols., 37 Pac., 780.
"County vs. Collings, 28 Pac., 175.
"Thomas vs. O'Brien, 129 S. W., 103.
"State vs. Carson, 6 Wash., 250.

"This doctrine has received approval in the following Ohio cases:

"Lewis vs. State, 21 O. C., 410.
"State ex rel. vs. Coughlin, 6 N. P. n. s., 101."

I, therefore, conclude that you are entitled to receive the expenses incident to your holding court in Darke county, under the last part of section 2253, for the reasons herein above set forth, and the further reason that under section 2253, prior to its amendment, you would have been entitled to receive your expenses had Darke county been in your district. You may also receive the $10.00 per diem for the reasons above stated, that it is not compensation for your services as common pleas judge of your district, does not change your salary, as such, being the compensation fixed by the legislature for and at the time of imposing duties you were not required to perform under your election, and which were beyond your jurisdiction until after the constitution and section 2253 were amended.

Believing that this answers your question, and hoping that it may settle the matter, I am

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTOMOBILES OPERATED BY CHIEF OF FIRE DEPARTMENT CONTAINING FIRE EXTINGUISHERS MUST BE REGISTERED.

Automobiles operated by the chief of the fire department and other city employes, containing small fire extinguishers, are not exempt from registration under section 6290, General Code, because they are neither fire extinguishers nor fire trucks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. J. A. SHEARER, Registrar of Automobiles, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 24, 1914, wherein you state:

"Section 6290 of the automobile law exempts from registration fire engines and fire trucks. We now find that in many municipalities the city authorities place small fire extinguishers in automobiles operated by the fire chief, and other city employes, and do not register such motor vehicles. They claim that inasmuch as the machine carries a fire extinguisher, it should be exempt from registration, under the provisions of section 6290."

My immediate predecessor had occasion to consider whether, under section 6290 General Code, as originally enacted, an automobile used by a city fire department was exempt from registration. That section then exempted from the definition of a motor vehicle, among others, fire engines, and my predecessor held that the term "fire engine" should not be extended beyond its ordinary meaning and could not be held to include other motor vehicles used by city fire departments. I agree with the opinion of my predecessor, which will be found on page 231 of the annual report of this department for 1910.

The only change made by the present statute insofar as fire apparatus is concerned was to bring fire trucks within the exempted class, while retaining fire engines therein.

Unless an automobile comes clearly within the exemption, it must be registered. The principle purpose for which an automobile is designed and used should be looked to to determine whether it would be exempt from registration. The difference between fire engines and fire trucks and automobiles designed to carry passengers and ordinary freight is so apparent that it needs no more than casual mention. Certainly it would not be seriously contended by any one that a fire engine or fire truck would lose its character as such merely because it was capable of carrying firemen to a fire, nor would an ordinary passenger automobile lose its character as such because a fire extinguisher was carried in it. The placing of a fire extinguisher in such an automobile certainly would not convert it into a fire engine or fire truck.

I am firmly of the opinion that automobiles such as those you describe are subject to registration.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 12664, GENERAL CODE, IN REFERENCE TO POISON AND PROPRIETARY MEDICINE DELETERIOUS TO HEALTH.

The words "that contain poison or other ingredient that is deleterious to health" in section 12664, General Code, qualifies the words "a drug or medicine" only, and therefore a patent or proprietary medicine or tablet is within the statute whether the same contains poison or other ingredient deleterious to health or not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. FRED M. CROMLEY, City Solicitor, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 28, 1914, you submitted the following request for an opinion, to wit:

"Under section 12664 of the General Code, is it a violation of the same if the medicine or tablet, etc., does not contain poison or is not deleterious to health?"

In reply thereto section 12664 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Whoever leaves, throws or deposits upon the doorstep of premises owned or occupied by another or hands, gives or delivers or causes the same to be done to any person, except in a place where it is kept for sale, a patent or proprietary medicine, preparation, pill, tablet, powder, cosmetic, disinfectant or antiseptic, or a drug or medicine that contains poison or any ingredient that is deleterious to health, as a sample, or for the purpose of advertising, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one hundred days, or both."

It will be noted that the clause in the foregoing section "that contains poison or any ingredient that is deleterious to health" follows the phrase "or a drug or medicine" and that there is no comma between the words "medicine" and "that." Therefore, in strict accordance with grammatical construction, the clause "that contains poison or any ingredient that is deleterious to health" modifies the phrase "or a drug or medicine" only and does not modify anything that precedes. Under this construction, then, it would be unlawful for one to leave, throw, deposit upon the doorstep or premises owned or occupied by another, or to hand, give or deliver or to cause the same to be done to any person, etc., a patent or proprietary medicine, a preparation, pill, tablet, powder, cosmetic, disinfectant or antiseptic, whether the same contained a poison or ingredient deleterious to health or not.

Therefore, answering your question directly, I am of the opinion that it is a violation of section 12664, General Code, to leave, throw, deposit upon the doorstep or premises owned or occupied by another, or to hand, give or deliver or cause the same to be done, except in a place where it is kept for sale, a patent or proprietary medicine, preparation, pill, tablet, etc., even though the same does not contain a poison or an ingredient that is deleterious to health.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT—SUCH TEACHERS ATTENDING COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTES NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION—A CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT TEACHER MAY ACT AS SECRETARY OF COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTE AND RECEIVE COMPENSATION THEREFOR.

Teachers who are teaching in city school districts are not entitled to compensation when attending county teachers' institutes, when the board of education of the city school district wherein such teachers are teaching provides a city teachers' institute for the teachers of its district.

If a teacher who is teaching in a city school district wherein a city teachers' institute is provided, attends the county institute, and such teacher acts as secretary, then such teacher is entitled to the compensation provided for under section 7866, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. R. G. CURREN, City Solicitor of Lakewood, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 10, 1914, this department rendered to Hon. T. J. Ross, solicitor of the village of Lakewood, an official opinion upon the following questions:

"Whether or not, a teacher attending the county institute and receiving compensation as secretary, and for making the report provided for in sections 7865 and 7866, General Code, is also entitled to compensation under section 7870, General Code, the county institute having been held during vacation."

Under date of April 28, 1914, this department received from you a request for an opinion on said question, but modified to the extent of attaching the following clause:

"When the school board of the city in which said teacher is employed has established an institute for the teachers employed in the schools of said city and which institute was held the week following the county institute, all teachers having knowledge thereof, including the one who attended the county institute."

Regarding the city institutes concerning which you request an opinion in your questions as modified, section 7871 of the General Code provides that the board of education of each city school district may provide for holding an institute yearly for the improvement of the teachers of the common schools therein.

Section 7872, General Code, provides that the expenses of such institute shall be paid from the city institute fund hereinbefore provided for, as follows:

"The expenses of such institute shall be paid from the city institute fund hereinbefore provided for. In addition to this fund the board of education of any district annually may expend for the instruction of the teachers thereof, in an institute or in such other manner as it prescribes, a sum not to exceed five hundred dollars, to be paid from its contingent fund."

Said city institute fund is provided for by section 7855 of the General Code.

Section 7870 of the General Code provides the pay that shall be given to teachers and superintendents for attending such institutes, as follows:

"The board of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendent presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance, as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four, nor more than six days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

It will be noted that section 7870 applies to boards of education of all school districts, city school districts as well as all other school districts, and the provision for such payment to teachers attending institutes applies to city institutes as well as county institutes. So that if teachers of city school districts attend a city teachers' institute in such city district, then they are entitled to the compensation provided in section 7870 of the General Code, supra.

Section 7873 of the General Code provides that if a board of a city district does not provide for such institute in any year, then the institute funds in the hands of the district treasurer shall be paid to the treasurer of the county wherein the district is situated, who shall then place it to the credit of the county institute fund, as follows:

> "If the board of a district does not provide for such institute in any year, it shall cause the institute fund in the hands of the district treasurer for the year to be paid to the treasurer of the county wherein the district is situated, who shall place it to the credit of the county institute fund. The teachers of the schools of such district in such case, shall be entitled to the advantages of the county institute, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-eight hundred and sixty-nine and seventy-eight hundred and seventy. The clerk of the board shall make the report of the institute required by the next following section."

It will be noted that said last cited section further provides that if the board of a city district does not provide for such institute in any year, then the teachers of the schools of such district, in such case, shall be entitled to the advantages of the county institute, subject to the provisions of sections 7869 and 7870.

From the phraseology employed in section 7873, it seems to follow if a city school district provides for the holding of an institute in such district, then the teachers of such district are not entitled to the advantages of the county institute. In other words, it is only when a board of education of a city district fails to provide a teachers' institute, that the teachers of such city district are entitled to the advantages of a county institute and entitled to the pay for attending such institute, under section 7870 of the General Code.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, as modified, I am of the opinion that teachers teaching in city school districts are not entitled to compensation for attending county institutes when the board of education of the city district wherein they teach provides a city teachers' institute for the teachers of its district.

Regarding the fees of the secretary of the executive committee, I wish to say that my opinion rendered to Hon. T. J. Ross, on April 10, 1914, covers that point and it is not necessary to change the same for the reason that if such teacher, even though teaching in a city school district, and the board of education of such district provided a city teachers' institute—nevertheless, the teacher having performed the services required by sections 7863, 7864 and 7865, is entitled to the compensation provided under section 7866 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS IN PROCESS OF LIQUIDATION LIABLE FOR WILLIS LAW TAXES AND PENALTIES UNTIL ITS DISSOLUTION—DUTY OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS IN REFERENCE TO SUCH TAXES AND PENALTIES.

A banking corporation, the assets of which have been seized by the superintendent of banks for the purpose of liquidation continues to be liable for Willis law taxes and penalties until its dissolution. In the case of a bank that is hopelessly insolvent, the superintendent of banks, upon determining that fact may take an order of dissolution or winding up in the common pleas court of the county in which the corporation had its office and cause a certificate thereof to be filed with the secretary of state as provided by section 11975, General Code.

In the case of a bank whose assets are sufficient to pay all debts and to leave a balance for distribution among the stockholders, such order may be taken and certificate issued after the meeting of the stockholders provided for in section 742-11, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 7th you request my opinion as to whether or not banks incorporated under the laws of Ohio that have been closed for the purpose of liquidation by your department, must make annual reports and pay annual fees thereon under the provisions of the act of May 31, 1911, which now consists of section 5495 to 5521 inclusive of the General Code.

You state in this communication that when a bank has been taken over for liquidation by your department the payment of taxes of this character is virtually an exaction from the depositors; that the corporation does not have the right to exercise any of its franchise powers; that there are no officers of the corporation to make the report; that the corporation is not doing business; and that in your judgment it should not be compelled to pay the tax.

It will not be necessary to quote fully from the taxation statutes in question. It is sufficient to state that they require annual reports in the month of May from each corporation organized under the laws of this state for profit, with certain exceptions, which do not include banking corporations; that on the filing of such report a fee is charged, based upon the total subscribed or issued and out-standing capital stock of the company and must be paid to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following December. Such annual fees are made a lien on the property of the corporation, whether employed by it in the transaction of its business or in the hands of an assignee, trustee or receiver for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders thereof. In the event of failure to make the report or to pay the tax or fee certain drastic provisions become operative, among which is the cancellation of the articles of incorporation of the company.

The following related sections, however, deserve perhaps specific quotation:

> "Section 5520. The mere retirement from business of voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation, without filing the certificate provided for in sections eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-four, eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six of the General Code, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees or taxes in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"Section 5521. In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, on the part of a domestic corporation, or of the retirement from business in this state, on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him unless the commission shall certify that all reports, required to be made by it, have been filed in pursuance of law, and that all taxes or fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid.

"Section 11974. In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter, every domestic corporation shall file with the secretary of state a certificate thereof. If the dissolution is by voluntary action of the corporation, such certificate shall be signed by the president and secretary of the corporation.

"Section 11975. In case of dissolution or revocation of charter by action of a competent court, or the winding up of a corporation either domestic or foreign, by proceedings in assignment or bankruptcy, such certificate shall be signed by the clerk of the court in which such proceedings were had. The fees for making and filing it shall be taxed as costs in the proceeding, be paid out of the corporate funds, and have the same priority as other costs."

A few general observations as to the effect of the provisions which have been abstracted and quoted will suffice for the present purpose.

In the first place, so long as a corporation remains alive, so to speak, the liability for the reports and taxes continues. In the second place, the existence of the corporation is not terminated except by the filing of the proper certificate in the office of the secretary of state. In the third place, it is immaterial under this statute that the effect of exacting a fee or tax from a corporation may be to the detriment of its creditors only. In fact, it clearly appears that the tax is to be a lien upon the property even though the property is held for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders by some person acting in an official or representative capacity.

In my opinion your question is to be answered as much by a consideration of the laws governing the liquidation of banks by your department as by consideration of the statutes already referred to. I direct your attention to sections 737 et seq., General Code, and particularly the following:

"Section 742-1. Upon taking possession of the property and business of any such corporation, company, society or association, the superintendent of banks shall forthwith give written notice of such fact to all banks, trust companies, associations and individuals holding or in possession of any assets of such corporation, company, society or association. No bank, trust company, association or individual knowing that the superintendent of banks has taken possession of such company or association, shall have a lien or charge for any payment advanced or any clearance thereafter made, or liability thereafter incurred against any of the assets of the corporation, company, society or association of whose property and business the superintendent of banks shall have taken possession. Such corporation, company, society or association may, with the consent of the superintendent of banks resume business upon such conditions as may be approved by him."

It is clear that by failing to mention the lien of the state for franchise taxes in the second sentence of this section the general assembly has left that lien unaffected by its provision.

The last sentence of this section makes it clear that after the property and business of the corporation has been taken possession of by the superintendent of banks, the corporation, as such, continues to exist and to have the corporate power to resume business with the consent of the superintendent of banks, and upon the conditions approved by him. This last point is of special importance. From this provision it becomes clear that you are in error when you assume that the corporate powers of the company are cut off when you, as superintendent, assume charge of its assets for the purpose of liquidation. So long as the corporation continues to have the power to resume business with your consent, it is an existing corporation. Furthermore, it must exist with its corporate organization as such, unimpaired, for the implication of the section is that the corporation is to enter into an agreement of a contractual nature with the superintendent of banks, and that being the case its officers must continue to act as such because a corporation can only act through its officers. Section 742-1, then, is sufficient authority for the statement that the assumption by the superintendent of banks of control of the assets and business of a bank does not destroy the corporation nor in any way impair the corporate organization. The president, secretary and directors of the corporation continue to hold their offices and the corporation, as such, continues to exist.

Section 742-2, as amended, and certain other succeeding sections need not be quoted as they direct what shall be done by the superintendent of banks in the liquidation of the assets of the bank.

The next provision to which I desire to call your attention is section 742-11, which is as follows:

> "Whenever the superintendent of banks shall have paid to each depositor and creditor of such corporation, company, society or association (not including stockholders) whose claim or claims as such depositor or creditor shall have been duly proved and allowed, the full amount of such claims, and shall have made proper provision for unclaimed or unpaid deposits or dividends, and shall have paid all the expenses of the liquidation, the superintendent of banks shall call a meeting of the stockholders of such corporation, company, society or association, by giving notice thereof for thirty days in one or more newspapers published in the county wherein the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located."

Section 742-12 must be read in connection with this section. It provides as follows:

> "At such meeting of the stockholders shall determine whether the superintendent of banks shall continue to administer the assets and wind up the affairs of such corporation, company, society or association, or whether an agent or agents shall be elected for that purpose; and in so determining the said stockholders shall vote by ballot in person, or by proxy, each share entitling the holder to one vote and the majority of the stock shall be necessary to a determination. In case it is determined to continue the liquidation under the superintendent of banks, he shall complete the liquidation of the affairs of such corporation, company, society or association, and after paying the expenses thereof shall distribute the proceeds among the stockholders in proportion to the several holders of stock, in such manner and upon such notice as may be directed by the common pleas court of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located."

Sections 742-13 and 742-14 provide for the powers and duties of the agents appointed by the stockholders to liquidate the affairs of the bank.

In my opinion the life of the corporation is terminated when all of its debts have been paid, and its stockholders' meeting referred to in section 742-11 has been held, and the method of distribution of the remaining assets determined upon, for after this takes place the bank cannot again resume business. The corporation, as such, is at an end and nothing remains to be done except to divide its remaining assets among its members and stockholders. In short, then, I am of the opinion that the dissolution of the corporation, as such, automatically occurs when the meeting referred to in section 742-11 has been held and one or the other alternatives therein prescribed has been chosen.

In my opinion the case falls within the spirit, if not within the exact letter, of section 11975, supra, General Code. The related statutes provide for numerous actions on the part of the common pleas court of the county in which the office of the corporation is located, such as the approval of the sale of bad debts, the approval of the sale of real estate and the direction of the terms thereof, etc., (section 742-2). In other words, the proceedings for liquidation, while carried on by the superintendent of banks, as an executive officer, partake of the nature of court proceedings, giving to section 11975 the general and not limited application that it was doubtless designed to have, it follows that when the liquidation has progressed to the point at which the corporation must necessarily cease to exist a case is presented of "dissolution by action of a competent court," or of "winding up * * * by proceedings in assignment" as contemplated by section 11975.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that an order of dissolution should be taken in the common pleas court when the meeting referred to in section 742-11 has been held and a certificate thereof should be transmitted to the secretary of state as prescribed in section 11975, General Code.

In my opinion the taking of a court order is to be preferred to formal action to dissolve at the meeting provided for in section 742-11 for the sufficient reason that when this meeting has been held the effect thereof is to dissolve the corporation in the substantive sense. So that the corporation would stand dissolved whether any formal resolution to dissolve were passed or not.

I presume, however, that there are numerous cases in which the state of the proceedings provided for in sections 742-11 et seq., would never be reached, i. e., in which the assets of the corporation are insufficient to pay the depositors and creditors, the expenses of the liquidation, and to make adequate provision for unclaimed deposits, etc. Here is where the difficulty arises. The superintendent of banks knows that the corporation is hopelessly insolvent. Therefore he would, of course, never consent to the resumption of business by it. The corporation is virtually at an end, although no formal steps, such as the holding of the meeting provided for in section 742-11, have been or ever will be taken. The debts of the corporation never will be paid, so that it cannot dissolve by resolution of its stockholders as provided in the case of solvent corporations by section 8740, General Code. The corporation cannot be dissolved by court proceedings as provided in section 11938, because this method of dissolution involves the appointment of a receiver and is absolutely inconsistent with the provisions of the banking law and particularly with section 742-10, General Code, which provides for the ousting of any receiver appointed for the property of any bank upon action by the court on the relation of the superintendent of banks. Therefore, unless some way be found other than those already discussed, there is no way whatever by which the formal dissolution of an insolvent banking corporation can be compassed. Yet at some point or another the corporation surely comes to an end, for its power to resume business would appear at the end of the liquidation to have been previously cut off.

In my opinion there is presented a case where the courts would devise a remedy within the purview of the most appropriate statute for the purpose of serving an obvious necessity. Section 11975, already discussed, seems to contemplate just such a situation as this. It speaks of the winding up of a corporation by proceedings in assignment and at least by implication creates the inference that a corporation may be wound up by proceedings in assignment. Without further discussion, I may state that my opinion is that when the superintendent of banks has determined that the assets of which he has taken possession will certainly be insufficient to leave any balance for distribution among the stockholders after the payment of the cost of liquidation and the claims of depositors and creditors he should so represent to the common pleas court of the county in which the office of the bank was situated and should secure from that court a decree winding up or dissolving the corporation as such; a certificate of which action should be filed with the secretary of state as provided in section 11975.

The foregoing is a technical discussion of the law as applicable to the questions which you present. It is impossible to avoid the exaction of the tax as a claim superior to that of the depositors, because of the provision of section 5506, General Code, above referred to, to the effect that such fees, taxes and penalties, "shall be the first and best lien on all property of the * * * corporation, whether such property is employed by the * * * corporation in the prosecution of its business or is in the hands of an assignee, trustee or receiver for the benefit of the creditors and stockholders thereof." In my opinion the superintendent of banks in exercising the powers and discharging the duties cast upon him by the statute as a liquidating agent, is such an officer as is contemplated by the foregoing section, although he is not specifically mentioned therein. Therefore, it would not be practicable, as you suggest, merely to ignore the matter of reports and fees and permit the tax commission to order a cancellation of the articles of incorporation of a hopelessly insolvent banking company; because by so doing certain penalties would be incurred and these penalties would be a lien superior to the rights of the depositors and general creditors under the section last above referred to.

It is possible that the law should be amended, as it seems that the policy of the taxing laws of the state runs counter to that of the banking laws which seek to promote the interest of the depositors. However, there is an existing provision of law which might be taken advantage of to ameliorate the conditions which your letter discloses. I refer to section 5524, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "With the advice and consent of the commission, the attorney general may, before or after any action for the recovery of fees, taxes or penalties certified to him as delinquent, under the provisions of this act, compromise or settle any claim for delinquent taxes, fees or penalties so certified.
> "And all claims compromised or settled as herein provided shall be set forth in the annual report of the tax commission to the general assembly and governor, giving in detail the terms and conditions of such compromise or settlement."

While I am not authorized to speak for the tax commission, on my own part I feel that whenever the superintendent of banks would give assurance that a banking corporation, the property and business of which is under liquidation in his hands, is hopelessly insolvent so that there will be nothing left for the stockholders, such a case would afford a proper instance for the exercise of the power of compromise; and the basis of such compromise should be one which would reduce the payment out of the assets of the bank to the minimum.

In passing I beg leave to point out that your assumption that the annual report required by the statute must be made by the superintendent of banks is not clearly correct. The officers of the corporation have the right to make reports so long as the corporation remains in existence which is, as already indicated, until its debts have been paid or its total assets distributed among creditors and depositors, unless it has been previously dissolved. In case the officers fail or refuse to make such report, then I believe, however, it would be the duty of the superintendent of banks, in order to avoid incurring the penalty which might further impair the assets in his hands, to assume the function of a "general manager" and make the report himself.

It is my opinion, then, upon the legal questions involved in your inquiry that where a bank is found by the superintendent, upon taking possession of its assets, to be hopelessly insolvent, he should take immediate action in the court of common pleas of the county in which the office of the bank is situated to secure a decree winding up the corporation, upon the filing of the certificate of which, and the payment of taxes then due, the corporation would be dissolved and liability for the payment of franchise taxes would terminate. Where, however, the superintendent finds that there will be a balance for distribution to the stockholders after the payment of other claims such action should not be taken by him, but upon the holding of the meeting provided for in section 742-11 a similar order of court should be taken and a like certificate filed. In either event the superintendent should see that proper reports are filed and that the annual fees thereon are paid out of the assets up to the time of the filing of said certificate.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISTRIBUTION OF SCHOOL FUNDS AT THE RATE OF THIRTY DOLLARS FOR EACH TEACHER EMPLOYED—MUSIC TEACHERS EMPLOYED IN MORE THAN ONE DISTRICT ARE TO BE COUNTED AS TEACHERS IN EACH DISTRICT IN WHICH THEY ARE EMPLOYED—AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE OF PUPILS IN DISTRIBUTION OF COMMON SCHOOL FUNDS TO BE COMPUTED ON THE BASIS OF THE LEGAL SCHOOL YEAR—INTEREST ON COMMON SCHOOL FUND MONEY—DISTRIBUTION OF SCHOOL FUNDS UNDER SECTION 7600, GENERAL CODE.

1. Under section 7600, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 159, requiring state common school funds to be distributed among school districts on the basis of thirty dollars for each teacher employed, each regular member of the teaching force of the district, though employed for part time only, as in the case of music and drawing teachers, is to be counted as a teacher. Substitute teachers or teachers elected to fill vacancies in the regular force are not to be counted as additional teachers.

2. Music teachers, etc., regularly employed in more than one district are to be counted as teachers in each district, and each district is entitled to thirty dollars on account of such a teacher.

3. Average daily attendance under section 7600 as amended, in the distribution of common school funds is to be computed for the time during which the schools are in session during the current year, but in no event less than a legal school year.

4. The interest on common school fund moneys received from the sale of school lands and constituting a part of the irreducible debt of the state is to be distributed by the state to the counties at the February settlement, and by the county treasurer to the districts at the same settlement. In case more than one school district is located within the territorial limits of an original surveyed township, section 7600, General Code, governs the distribution of such interest, except in parts of such districts located in the original surveyed township only, which are to be taken into consideration. In the event the territory of a school district is co-extensive with that of an original surveyed township, there is no need of applying the rule of section 7600, because the district will receive all of the interest in such case.

5. Section 7600 requires the distribution of common school funds among the districts of the county, to be made at the August settlement, and it is applicable to the settlement to be made in August, 1914, but the succeeding February distribution of such funds is to be made in accordance with the apportionment of the preceding August and need not await distribution until the succeeding August.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 9th requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First. Is it necessary for an instructor to teach continuously during a legal school year in order to entitle the district to receive $30.00 provided in section 7600 (104 O. L., 159), General Code?
> "Second. In case a teacher in music divides his time teaching a stated number of hours each week in a number of districts, how shall this part of the state common school moneys be apportioned in the various districts in which he is employed?

"Third. For what period should average daily attendance be taken in estimating amount due a district?

"Fourth. Should money received since the last distribution by a county treasurer under provisions of section 7579 be disbursed as are the funds referred to in section 7600? If so, in which one of the semi-annual settlements should it be included (section 2689, General Code)?"

Said section 7600, General Code, as amended, provides as follows:

"After each annual settlement with the county treasurer, each county auditor shall immediately apportion school funds for his county. The state common school funds shall be apportioned as follows:

"Each school district within the county shall receive thirty dollars for each teacher employed in such district, and the balance of such funds shall be apportioned among the various school districts according to the average daily attendance of pupils in the schools of such districts. If the enumeration of the youth of any district has not been taken and returned for any year and the average daily attendance of such district has not been certified to the county auditor such district shall not be entitled to receive any portion of that fund. The local school tax collected from the several districts shall be paid to the districts from which it was collected. Money received from the state on account of interest on the common school fund shall be apportioned to the school districts and parts of districts within the territory designated by the auditor of state as entitled thereto on the basis of thirty dollars for each teacher employed and the balance according to the average daily attendance. All other money in the county treasury for the support of common schools and not otherwise appropriated by law, shall be apportioned annually in the same manner as the state common school fund."

In connection with this request you submit a letter from one of the examiners to the auditor of state, which seems to raise a somewhat different question, viz., as to when the first apportionment under section 7600 is to be made. I shall consider this as a separate and distinct question.

As to your first two questions, I confess that they require what substantially amounts to a conjecture as to the legislative intention, which is not expressed in the section above quoted with clearness. The language is, "each teacher employed in such district." No test is found in the statute as to what constitutes "employment" within the meaning of this provision. I am of the opinion, however, that the phrase as a whole indicates the number of positions in a permanent teaching force, so that it would exclude substitute teachers employed for the purpose of filling temporary vacancies.

In answer to your first question, then, I would say that in my opinion it is necessary for an instructor to teach regularly during the school year in order to entitle the district to count him as one teacher for the purpose of receiving the $30.00 apportionment provided for in section 7600. I observe, however, a possible distinction between a teacher whose services are regular and one whose services are continuous if by your use of the adverb "continuously" you mean that a teacher shall serve the district every day, i. e., give full time. It is well understood that in certain branches such as music and drawing, and possibly some others, the practice is to employ a teacher for regular but not continuous service. That is, such a teacher may be employed in a district, the enumeration of which is not large, to teach on certain days of the week only; such a teacher would be a regular member of the teaching force, but would not in a sense be serving continuously. I am of the opinion that regularity rather than continuity is the test, and that a teacher who gives only a portion of his time to the district, but is nevertheless giving his services with regularity, should be counted as a teacher employed in the district within the meaning of section 7600, as amended.

Fully answering your first question, then, I am of the opinion that the number of regular positions in the teaching force of a school district, including those positions, the requirements of which do not contemplate the giving of full time, is the number of 'teachers employed in such district," within the meaning of section 7600, as amended, but that substitute teachers permanently employed to fill permanent vacancies are not to be counted for this purpose. So that if a teacher should be employed at the beginning of the year, and should die or resign before the end of the school year, and a successor should be chosen, there would be an instance of one teacher and not two for the purposes of the section.

The answer to your second question has already been suggested. In my opinion, if a music teacher divides his time in the manner in which you describe, he is to be counted as a teacher employed in both or all of the districts, and each of the several districts would be entitled to a distribution of $30.00 on his behalf.

Answering your third question, I may say that I find that the section explicitly requires the return of the enumeration "for any year," and in the same sentence speaks of the "average daily attendance" of the district. I gather, therefore, that the legislative intention is that the "average daily attendance" shall be that ascertained from the figures for the entire school year then current, during which the schools were held and in no event less than a legal school year. Accordingly I so hold.

Your fourth question requires consideration of section 7579, General Code, which has not been amended, and which reads as follows:

> "The money which has been and may be paid into the state treasury on account of sales of land granted by congress for the support of public schools in any original surveyed township, or other district of country, shall constitute the "common school fund," of which the auditor of state shall be superintendent, and the income of which must be applied exclusively to the support of common schools, in the manner designated in this chapter."

This section must be read in connection with the following provisions of the General Code:

> "Section 3227. The county auditor shall keep an account with the county treasurer of all sales made and leases surrendered and moneys paid thereon by each purchaser or lessee, and on the first day of February, May, August and November, in each year, make a report thereof to the auditor of state, which report shall distinguish between the amount paid in as principal and the amount paid in as interest. From the time of such report the state shall be liable to pay interest on all sums of principal so reported as paid. On receiving a certified copy of such account from the auditor of state, the treasurer of state may immediately draw the money paid in as principal, from the county treasury. The amount so reported as interest shall be retained in the county treasury, and apportioned to the several civil townships and parts of civil townships, in the original surveyed townships or fractional township to which such lands belong."
> "Section 7580. The common school fund shall constitute an irreducible debt of the state, on which it shall pay interest annually, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, to be computed for the calendar year, the first computation on any payment of principal hereafter made to be from the time of payment to and including the thirty-first day of December next succeeding. The auditor of state shall keep an account of the fund, and of the interest which accrues thereon, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, with each original surveyed township and other district of country to which any part of the fund belongs, crediting each with its share of the fund, and showing the amount of interest thereon which accrues and the amount which is disbursed annually to each."

Section 7582, as amended 104 O. L., 159.

"The auditor of state shall apportion the state common school fund to the several counties of the state semi-annually, upon the basis of the enumeration of youth therein, as shown by the latest abstract of enumeration transmitted to him by the superintendent of public instruction. Before making his February settlement with county treasurers, he shall apportion such amount thereof as he estimates to have been collected up to that time, and, in the settlement sheet which he transmits to the auditor of each county, shall certify the amount payable to the treasurer of his county. Before making his final settlement with county treasurers each year he shall apportion the remainder of the whole fund collected, as nearly as it can be ascertained, and in the August settlement sheet which he transmits to the auditor of each county shall certify the amount payable to the treasurer of his county."

"Section 7583. In each February settlement sheet the state auditor shall enter the amount of money payable to the county treasurer on the apportionment of interest specified in section seventy-five hundred and seventy-seven, and also enter in each February settlement sheet the amount of money payable to the county treasurer on account of interest for the preceding year on the common school fund, and designate the source or sources from which the interest accrued. With each February settlement sheet he shall transmit a certified statement, showing the amount of interest derived from the common school fund payable to each original surveyed township or other district of country within the county.

"Section 2689. Immediately after each semi-annual settlement with the county auditor, on demand, and presentation of the warrant of the county auditor therefor, the county treasurer shall pay to the township treasurer, city treasurer, or other proper officer thereof, all moneys in the county treasury belonging to such township, city, village or school district."

It is apparent from these sections that:

1. The proceeds of the sale of section 16 lands constitute a trust fund, and a part of the irreducible debt of the state, the interest on which is to be paid out for the benefit of the schools of a given original surveyed township.

2. Therefore, such interest moneys are not to be distributed to the counties upon any basis of enumeration. Unless the words "in the manner designated in this chapter" can be construed as referring to the provisions of amended section 7600, General Code, there is no way by which division or distribution can be made as among different school districts maintaining schools within a single original surveyed township.

3. The distribution of interest on the common school fund is not governed by section 7582, but by section 7583. Section 2689, General Code, is general and does not specify what moneys are to be distributed at a given settlement time. It seems to me that section 7583 specifically answers the last part of your fourth question and that disbursement of interest moneys belonging to the schools of an original surveyed township as between the state and the county takes place at the February settlement.

Answering the first part of your fourth question, I beg to state that section 7600, General Code is the only section governing the distribution of the common school fund within the county, i. e., to the several school districts. When, therefore, at the February settlement the county treasurer has received from the state the interest moneys due to the schools of a given original surveyed township, such moneys shall not be immediately distributed but must await the distribution provided for in section 7600. This distribution, if among different school districts, i. e., if the property of the original surveyed township comprises parts of more than one school district, will be made on the basis outlined in section 7600, regard being had, however, not to the number of teachers and enumerated youth in the whole district but rather to the number of teachers and enumerated youth in the territory of the district embraced within the original surveyed township. In the event, however, that the original surveyed township is co-extensive with a single school district, then the whole amount due is to be paid to the district and no calculations under section 7600 are neceassary.

Answering the question suggested by the letter of your examiner, I beg to state that in my opinion "each annual settlement" as used in section 7600, General Code, means and designates the August settlement. This term has a well defined meaning established by the provisions of sections 2596 and 2683, General Code. See also section 5401, General Code.

The August settlement is the final distribution as distinguished from that which takes place in February, which is to be regarded as a partial distribution. In this case, however, there is an additional reason for holding that the August settlement is to be regarded as the annual settlement. Under the Smith one per cent. law, so-called, and particularly section 5649-3c thereof, the expenditures of a school district must be provided for out of appropriations made at the beginning of each fiscal half-year, which, in turn, must be made from moneys known to be in the treasury at that time.

It follows therefore, that the moneys distributed in August are to be applied to the operations of the schools during the succeeding half of the school year which begins in September. Inasmuch as the legislature at its first extraordinary session in 1914 revised the whole school code, and inasmuch as the amendment to section 7600 is a part of that revision; and inasmuch further as the other new laws, with respect to the schools will become operative in a practical sense at the beginning of the school year in September, 1914, it would seem at least appropriate to hold that the revised scheme of distribution provided for in amended section 7600 should be put into effect at the same time.

I may add that there is nothing inconsistent with this conclusion in the fact that the current appropriation from the common school fund provides for distribution on the basis of the enumeration of youth. This is the distribution among the counties and is governed by section 7582, which still provides for apportionment upon the basis of enumerated youth. The apportionment within the counties and among the school districts is a separate thing, and in my opinion, moneys apportioned to the counties under the appropriation referred to, may, without violating the appropriation, and without the necessity of making a new appropriation, be distributed within the counties at the August settlement, 1914, in accordance with section 7600, General Code.

In holding that section 7600 designates the August settlement as the time of apportioning among the several school districts of the county the amount received from the state on account of the distribution of the state school funds, however, I do not mean to indicate that the actual distribution of money must all take place at this time. The statute speaks of "apportionment" and in my judgment its intention is that the basis of apportionment shall be fixed annually, in August. That is to say, at that time the number of teachers and the average daily attendance, both for the school year just closing in August, shall be ascertained by the auditor, and shall become the basis of the distribution of funds by him for the following year.

The requirement of the statute that $30.00 for each teacher employed be received by the school districts at the time of the apportionment seems to be mandatory, and, in my judgment, this part of the distribution must all take place at once if there is sufficient money in the hands of the county and received from the auditor of state to make a complete distribution on the basis of employed teachers; but at the succeeding February settlement additional funds will be coming to the county from the state under the provisions of amended section 7582, General Code. This money, in my judgment, should be applied immediately to the support of the schools and not held in the possession of the county treasurer for ultimate distribution until the following August. The basis of distribution of such money is that adopted at the preceding August. If in August the entire amount due the various districts on account of employed teachers has not been distributed, the balances of such amounts due to the several districts should be first distributed out of the succeeding February common school funds moneys; then further distribution should take place on the basis of the average daily attendance ascertained at the preceding August settlement. If, however, at the August settlement the entire amount due the several districts on account of employed teachers has been distributed, then the entire distribution of the succeeding February will be on the basis of the average daily attendance.

The conclusion just expressed is arrived at by giving a liberal interpretation to section 7600, General Code. That section has always provided in terms for an annual apportionment; yet it is my understanding that the practice has always been to make the actual distribution of money semi-annually. In my judgment, the legislature in amending section 7600, intended to preserve this practice.

It is in accordance with this interpretation of section 7600 that I have held already in this opinion that the interest on the irreducible debt due to the schools of designated territories within the county is to be paid out to such schools in February when it comes into the possession of the county treasurer by settlement with the auditor of state, on the basis outlined in section 7600 instead of awaiting the succeeding August settlement.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REPAIRS ON SCHOOL BUILDING—WHEN COMPETITIVE BIDDING FOR SUCH REPAIRS MAY BE DISPENSED WITH—URGENT NEED.

In case the state building inspector orders repairs on a school building to be made by a date certain, the impossibility of completing them by such date without dispensing with competitive bidding, etc., does not create a case of "urgent need," or for the "security and protection of school property" within the meaning of section 7623, General Code, permitting such bidding and other formalities to be dispensed with in such cases.

The interests of the schools themselves, that is, the use of the building by the pupils with safety and convenience must be consulted in order to determine whether a case for dispensing with the statutory requirements exists so that if it is anticipated that although the work cannot be completed before the building must be used for school purposes, the part remaining undone can be prosecuted without impairing the safety and usefulness of the schools, the statutory requirements may not be dispensed with; otherwise they may be disregarded.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. H. STANLEY MCCALL, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 2nd you requested my opinion on the following question:

> "Section 7623 of the Ohio General Code provides that when a board of education of a city school district makes repairs to a school house that will cost in excess of $1,500.00, except in cases of urgent necessity or for the security and protection of school property, it must advertise for bids in some newspaper of general circulation and in two if there are that many, for a period of four weeks.
> "The state inspector of school houses has served notice on the local board to make certain changes in the plumbing and toilet room equipment, drinking fountains, floors and ventilation systems of certain school houses by September 1, 1914. These conditions for which changes have been ordered have been known to exist for several years past by both the board of education and the inspector. As soon as the order was received the board having no other funds available, called a special election requesting authority to issue bonds in the amount of $115,000. The people voted favorably on same and they are now being advertised for sale.
> "However, the board of education is of the opinion that if it is required to advertise four weeks for bids that the work cannot be gotten out by September 1, 1914, as ordered by the inspector and that all of said work cannot be completed during this vacation period."

Your question is as to whether or not the circumstances mentioned constitute a case of "urgent necessity" within the meaning of section 7623, General Code.

Section 7623, General Code, is in part as follows:

> "When a board of education determines to build, repair, enlarge or furnish a school house or school houses, or make any improvement or repair provided for in this chapter, the cost of which will exceed in city districts, fifteen hundred dollars, and in other districts five hundred dollars, except in cases of urgent necessity, or for the security and protection of school property, it must proceed as follows: * * *."

There is no universal rule by which one can define the term "urgent necessity" or the term "for the security and protection of school property" as used in this section. (Mueller vs. Board of Education, 11 N. P. n. s. 113.)

Despite the fact, however, that each case must be determined upon its own conditions, it is true that if the facts do not justify a finding of urgency, or that the security and protection of school property is at stake, failure to comply with the requirements of the section renders a contract void. (Mueller vs. Board of Education, supra.)

Upon the authority of the case which I have cited, I am of the opinion that if the work in question can be so far completed by the time that it is necessary for the pupils to use the school building that it can be used by them with safety and without great inconvenience, the board of education may not lawfully dispense with competitive bidding.

I agree with you that the date fixed in the order of the state inspector should not be controlling with respect to the question at hand, it being his practice, as you correctly state to extend the time for the completion of work in cases of this sort where it is undertaken and prosecuted with good faith and diligence.

If, therefore, before the schoolhouse in question must be used by pupils for school purposes the next school year such changes, for example, in the floors and ventilating systems or otherwise as might seriously interfere with the use of the schools can be completed, and the remaining repairs, such as changes in the plumbing, toilet room equipment, drinking fountains, etc., can be undertaken and prosecuted without endangering the safety of the pupils of the efficiency of the schools during the sessions of the school, or can be done outside of school hours, in such event it would be unlawful to dispense with competitive bidding as required by section 7623. But if, on the other hand, and without regard to the date fixed by the inspector the work cannot be completed before it would be necessary to use the school building for the accommodation of pupils, and if such work as would remain undone at that time would be such as to interfere with the use of the schools, in that event I would be of the opinion that the board of education might lawfully declare a case of "urgent necessity" involving the "security and protection of school property," and proceed without inviting competitive bids.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISCUSSION OF SECTION 7629, GENERAL CODE, PROVIDING FOR THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY BOARDS OF EDUCATION—OPERATION OF THIS SECTION UNDER SMITH LAW AND ARTICLE 12, SECTION 11, OF THE CONSTITUTION.

On authority of Rabe vs. Board of Education, 88 O. S., 403, section 7629, General Code, providing for the issuance of bonds under certain circumstances, by boards of education, is still in effect. This opinion discusses the present operation under the Smith law and article 12, section 11, of the constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1914.

HON. H. F. CASTLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 16th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"Is section 7629, General Code, in force?"

As bearing upon this question I quote sections 7629,7630, 7591, 7592 and 5649-2 General Code, as follows:

"Section 7629. The board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied, from time to time, as occasion requires, may issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven. The board shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but provide that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year preceding such issue. The order to issue bonds shall be made only at a regular meeting of the board and by a vote of two-thirds of its full membership, taken by yeas and nays and entered upon its journal.

"Section 7630. In no case shall a board of education issue bonds under the provisions of the next preceding section in a greater amount than can be provided for and paid with the tax levy authorized by sections seventy-five hundred and ninety-one and seventy-five hundred and ninety-two, and paid within forty years after the issue on the basis of the tax valuation at the time of issue.

"Section 7591. Except as hereinafter provided, the local tax levy for all school purposes shall not exceed twelve mills on the dollar of valuation of taxable property in any school district, and in city school districts shall not be less than six mills. Such levy shall not include any special levy for a specified purpose, provided for by a vote of the people.

"Section 7692. A greater or less tax than is authorized above may be levied for any school purposes. Any board of education may make an additional annual levy of not more than five mills for any number of consecutive years not exceeding five, if the proposition to make such levy or levies has been submitted by the board, to a vote of the electors of the school district, under a resolution prescribing the time, place and nature of the proposition to be submitted, and approved by a majority of those voting on the proposition.

"Section 5649-2. Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

The last section above quoted has been amended since its original enactment in 1911. From its inception, however, it has provided maximum limitations upon the rate or amount of taxes levied in the territory of a taxing district, including those for school purposes, less than the school levies, authorized by sections 7591 and 7592. Obviously, sections 7591 and 7592 were impliedly repealed or at least suspended by the statutory force of the subsequently enacted section 5649-2.

The question then being as to whether or not the repeal or suspension of sections 7591 and 7592 repeal or suspend section 7630, General Code, I beg to refer you to the case of Rabe vs. Board of Education of Canton, 88 O. S., 403,wherein it is definitely held that such is the case. The earlier decision of State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, 84

O. S., 506, which has been cited by you, would afford a basis for this conclusion, but it is explicitly so held in the case which I have cited.

As stated in the language of Donahue, J., at page 409, Rabe vs. Bd. Education:

> "The provisions of sections 5649-2 et seq., in reference to the rate that may be levied in any taxing district, are so clearly in conflict with the provisions of sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, that these sections are necessarily repealed by implication. That being true, section 7630, General Code, must fall with them, for that section provides only for the application of the limitation in these repealed sections to the issue of bonds under section 7629, General Code. It is suggested in the brief of counsel for defendant in error that section 7630, General Code, is not necessarily repealed, but that, on the contrary, the provisions of this later legislation, limiting the rate of taxes that may be levied in any taxing district, should be read into this section, instead of the specific sections named, to wit, sections 7591 and 7592, General Code. In answer to this it is only necessary to suggest that a law cannot be amended in this way. If sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, are no longer the law of Ohio, it necessarily follows that section 7630, General Code, furnishes no rule for determining the rate of taxes levied or to be levied which may be anticipated by an issue of bonds under the provisions of section 7629, General Code.
> Our attention is called to the fact that the general assembly of Ohio passes an act amending sections 5649-3a, 5649-3b, 5649-3c, 5649-3d, 5649-3e and sections 5640-5a, 5649-5b, General Code, relating to the maximum tax rate which may be levied in any one taxing district, on the same day it passed an act amending sections 7620 and 7625, General Code; that the former act was approved June 2, 1911, and the latter act was approved June 7, 1911; that in the act amending section 7625, sections 7629 and 7630 are referred to, and that, therefore, if there is to be a repeal by implication, this act amending sections 7620 and 7625, being the later act, sections 5649-2 et seq., General Code, are the sections that are repealed by implication.
> "Section 5649-2 was passed May 10, 1910, and its provisions being in conflict with sections 7591 and 7592, these statutes were necessarily repealed by implication.
> "Section 16 of article II of the constitution of Ohio, provides that no law shall be revived or amended unless the act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. It therefore follows that if these statutes were repealed by implication by the passage of sections 5649-2 et seq., General Code, and of this there can be no doubt, then there could not be revived, reenacted or amended by any method in direct conflict with the positive prohibition of the constitution. Sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, were not even referred to in the act amending section 7625, General Code; but it is claimed that as that act refers to section 7630, General Code, and section 7630 in turn refers to sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, it clearly indicates that the legislature of Ohio did not consider these sections repealed. The fact remains, however, that these sections were repealed by implication regardless of whether the general assembly recognized that fact or not."

If, then, section 7630, General Code, is to be regarded as clearly repealed, as the supreme court holds, what becomes of section 7629, General Code, which is a part of the scheme of issuing bonds without a vote of the people?

On this point, Donahue, J., continuing, used the following language:

"It is claimed on behalf of the plaintiff in error that the board of education has no authority to issue bonds under the provisions of section 7629, without first submitting the question of issuing such bonds to a vote of the electors.

"The history of this legislation is of very great importance in the consideration of this question. The first school code of Ohio was passed by the legislature on May 1, 1873. Section 1 of this Code divided school districts into city districts of the first class, city districts of the second class, village districts, special districts and township districts, and this distinction was carefully observed in all the sections of the Code. Section 61 of that code was the original of section 7625, General Code, and specifically applied to the board of education of any school district, except a city school district of the first class. Section 56 of this code, a part of which is the original of section 7629, General Code, provided that any board of education of any city district of the first class might issue bonds in anticipation of income from taxes levied or to be levied.

"On the 25th day of April, 1904, the legislature of Ohio adopted a new code of laws for the government of the common schools of the state of Ohio. In this code, adopted in 1904, the distinction between the boards of education of the different school districts is eliminated. Section 3991, Revised Statutes, now section 7625, General Code, reads: 'When the board of education of any school district determines,' etc., while the original act read:'Whenever the board of education of any school district, except city districts of the first class, shall determine,' etc. Section 3994, Revised Statutes, now section 7629, General Code, reads: 'The board of education of any school district may issue bonds.' The original act read: 'Any board of education of any school district of the first class.'

"It is insisted that these two sections as amended apply to every board of education of any school district in Ohio, and can now serve no separate or several purpose if a vote of the electors is necesary to authorize the issue of bonds under both sections; and that it clearly appears that the limitation of section 7629, General Code, to the amount of bonds equal to the aggregate of a two-mill levy on the preceding year payable from taxes levied under the provisions of sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, means that to this extent the board of education has authority to issue bonds without submitting the question to a vote, but when bonds are to be issued in excess of this amount, and to be paid by a levy additional to the levies authorized by section 7591 and 7592, General Code, then a vote is required

"In view of the change in the wording of these sections from their original form in the school code of 1873, making the provisions of each section applicable to all boards of education of any school district in Ohio, it would appear that this is the only possible purpose in retaining both sections 7625 and 7629, General Code. Unless this distinction does obtain the rendition of these separate sections, applicable as amended to any and all boards of education, could serve no purpose whatever. The contention that the provisions in section 7629, General Code, stipulating that the bonds issued under that statute must be issued subject to the restriction specified in section 7626 and 7627, General Code, which requires that the issue of such bonds shall be submitted to the electors, because by the provision of section 7626, General Code, it is provided that 'If a majority of the electors, voting on a proposition to issue bonds, vote in favor thereof, the board thereby shall be authorized to issue bonds for the amount indicated by the vote' cannot be sustained in view of the provisions of section 7628, General Code. This section authorizes a tax levy in addition to the maximum levy authorized by sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, for the purpose of providing for the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds issued under the authority of the next three preceding sections when the proposition to issue such bonds has been approved by a majority vote of the electors, while section 7630, General Code, provides that the tax that may be levied for the payment of principal and interest of bonds issued under section 7629, General Code, shall not exceed the levy authorized by sections 7591 and 7592, General Code; so that if in both cases the question of the issue of bonds is to be submitted to the electors, there would be no reason whatever for the separate provisions of sections 7628 and 7630, General Code.

"Conceding then the authority of the board of education to issue bonds under the provisions of this section, without first submitting the question of their issue to a vote of the electors of the school district, how stands this case? This school code of 1873, and its successor of 1904, were designed to cover the whole subject-matter. The sections therein were related to each other and mutally interdependent one upon the other. The provisions of section 7629, General Code, were modified, aided and restricted by the provisions of sections 7626, 7627, 7630, 7591 and 7592, General Code. These material parts of this code being no longer in force or effect, the whole plan and scheme is weakened and possibly destroyed.

"If section 7629, General Code, has survived the wreck of the plan provided by the school code of 1904, for the issuing of bonds by the board of education, it is not only bereft of its fellow sections of that code in reference to the same subject-matter, but it is deprived of the aid of their correlative provisions with reference not only to the issuing but to the retirement of bonds."

Thereupon the judge who writes the opinion proceeds to discuss the possibility of providing for the interest and sinking fund requirements of the particular bond issue involved in the case in addition to the levies for current expenses, and at least, for the purpose of argument, seems to take the view that there is authority to issue bonds under section 7629, provided the limitations of that section are not exceeded, and provided also that the interest and sinking fund requirements can be taken care of within the Smith law limitation without impairing current levies. His conclusion is that under the facts of the case adequate provision for the retirement of the bonds could not be made within the Smith law limitations if the sinking fund levies were postponed to the current expense levies.

It appears, therefore, that the court has distinctly held that section 7630, General Code, was repealed in 1911 because of the inconsistencies existing between its provisions and those of the then enacted Smith law. On the other hand, it appears that the court did not consider that section 7629 had been similarly repealed; for if that had been the court's conclusion, the portion of the opinion last above quoted would not have been necessary. The general rule is that a later statute will repeal or modify a former statute only to the extent that the two cannot be harmonized. In my opinion, and I think in the opinion of the supreme court, as indicated by the decision in the case cited, it is possible to reconcile section 7629 with the Smith law and to preserve the essential legislative idea embodied originally in sections 7629 and 7630, except in so far as that idea is modified by the Smith law. That is to say, the power to issue bonds without a vote of the electors continued to exist after the Smith law was passed, as provided for in section 7629, but the limitation upon the right to issue bonds, growing out of a limited levying power, is to be found now in the provisions of the Smith law instead of the provisions of section 7630. In other words, the board of education could, after the passage of the Smith law, issue bonds in an amount not exceeding a levy of two mills on the duplicate for the preceding year under section 7629, provided t could meet the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bonds by levying taxes n addition to those for current needs within all the limitations of the Smith law.

Subsequently in 1914, viz., in the act found in 104 O. L., 12, the general assembly so amended section 5649-1 as to require that interest and sinking fund levies should be placed upon the duplicate "before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof." It seems that the effect of this legislation is to reverse the rule laid down in the Rabe case and to do away with the necessity of determining whether or not there is a margin, so to speak, between the amount of the levy which the board of education will require for current needs and the total amount which, under the practical operation of the Smith law limitations it may levy within the district. If that is the case, of course the only limitation upon the power to issue bonds without a vote of the people other than that specifically set forth in section 7629 is the difference between the amount which can be levied for all purposes and the amount already required for sinking fund purposes; it being possible, apparently, to incur indebtedness without reference to the needs of the district for current expenses. The question presented in your letter, however, does not require me to pass upon this question and I express no opinion in respect to it.

There is another similar consideration which may be mentioned. The Rabe case was decided under the state of the law as it existed prior to the adoption of article XII section 11, of the constitution. The court distinctly states in the opinion that that section of the constitution does not enter into the case then before it (see page 422). There are certain states in the union, the constitutions of which contain provisions similar to that of article XII, section 11, and in addition provide limitations upon the levying power similar to those found in the Smith law. In these states it has been held that where provision cannot be made for levying and collecting the tax necessary to meet the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bond issue because of the effect of the limitations upon the levying power, the bonds, to the extent that their interest and sinking fund requirements would necessitate such excessive levy, are void; or at the very least could be enjoined by such an action as that of Rabe vs. Board of Education, for example.

I need not discuss this feature of the case you present further, because your question is, as already stated, limited to the single proposition as to whether or not section 7629 of the General Code is in force.

Having reached the conclusion then, that the section about which you inquire was not repealed by the Smith law, and being of the opinion that subsequent legislation and the subsequent adoption of the constitutional amendments in question have not affected the question, I am of the opinion that at the present time said section 7629, General Code, is in force and, subject to the implied limitations which I have discussed, may be looked to by a board of education as authority to issue bonds without a vote of the people.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCY—CONTRACT WITH RAILROAD COMPANIES TO FURNISH LABOR.

A firm contracting with railroad companies and others in Ohio to furnish laborers to such companies is within the purview of sections 886 and 893, General Code, and must therefore be construed as a private employment agency.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. KENT P. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 29, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

"Does the following state of affairs bring a person or firm within the definition of section 893, General Code?

"The person or firm desires to contract with railway companies and others in Ohio to furnish laborers to such company. No registration fee is to be charged and no applications taken. The person or firm does not offer itself as an institution to secure positions or jobs for laborers, but solely as an institution to furnish laborers to such railway companies and others.

"In examining the sections relating to employment agencies, it has seemed to me that they were designed for the protection of laborers and not for any other purpose. The foregoing would indicate to me that the person or firm does not intend to exploit laborers in any way and therefore the business would not come within the purview of section 893."

Section 886, General Code, is as follows:

"No person, firm or corporation shall open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, or in which a fee is charged an applicant for employment or an applicant for help without obtaining a license from the commissioner of labor statistics and paying to him a fee according to the population of the municipality as shown by the last preceding federal census * * *."

Section 893, General Code, is as follows:

"Except an employment agency of a charitable organization, a person, firm or corporation, furnishing or agreeing to furnish employment or help * * * shall be deemed a private employment agency, and subject to the laws governing such agencies."

It will not be denied that the person, firm or corporation in question makes it a practice to agree to furnish help, and that while it does not charge what may possibly be properly regarded as a registration fee, it does contemplate making a charge and realizing a profit for the furnishing of help to the railroad companies in question. Such a charge may be regarded as the charging of a fee within the broad comprehension of that term, and within its meaning, as the word is employed in the statutes above quoted.

While perhaps no regulated form of receiving specific or actual applications is followed, nevertheless, I have no hesitancy in concluding that the co-contracting parties, to wit, the railroads, may be deemed applicants for help without doing violence to that term as the same is employed in these statutes.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the firm in question charges applicants for help, a fee for supplying such help, and that compliance by it must be made with the statutes relating to employment agencies.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

RIGHT TO TAKE EARNINGS OF PRISONERS CONFINED IN THE OHIO PENITENTIARY FOR COST OF CONVICTION—GARNISHEE PROCEEDINGS—EXEMPTION ALLOWED PRISONERS.

The earnings of prisoners at the Ohio penitentiary cannot be seized to satisfy a judgment for costs of conviction, but proceedings in aid of execution or garnishee proceedings against the warden may be had for such purpose, to take the money belonging to such prisoners and in the hands of the warden when such money has been brought to the penitentiary by such prisoners, or has been sent to them by others during the period of their imprisonment. When such proceedings are had, the prisoners are entitled to the same exemptions in each case as though they were free men.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 26, 1914, as follows:

> "Do homestead exemptions run against executions for costs of conviction in felonies?
> "Are the funds standing to the credit of convicts who are not heads of families subject to execution for the costs of conviction? (Some of this money comes with them to the penitentiary, some of it is sent to them by friends, and some of it is earnings.)
> "If these funds are subject to execution for such purposes, who should issue the writ, and what should the proceedings be to reimburse the state which has paid the costs?"

The first question presented by your inquiry is whether or not the state, after having paid the costs, may recover from the prisoner.

Sections 13726 and 13727 of the General Code read:

> "Section 13726. When the clerk certifies on the cost-bill that execution was issued according to the provisions of this chapter, and returned by the sheriff "No goods, chattels, lands or tenements, found whereon to levy," the warden of the penitentiary shall allow so much of the cost-bill and charges for transportation as is correct, and certify such allowance, which shall be paid by the state.
> "Section 13727. Upon the return of the writ against the convict, if an amount of money has not been made sufficient for the payment of the costs of conviction, and no additional property is found whereon to levy, the clerk shall so certify to the auditor of state, under his seal, with a statement of the total amount of costs, the amount made and the amount remaining unpaid. Such amount so unpaid as the auditor finds to be correct, shall be paid by the state, to the order of such clerk."

In the case of Libby vs. Nicola, 21 O. S., p. 414, one Hosea W. Libby was received by the penitentiary on March 13, '66, to serve eight months for manslaughter, and was later pardoned by the governor. Prior to the time he was received at the penitentiary, an effort was made to compel him to pay the costs of prosecution, but the sheriff made a return of "no property found" and the state paid the costs. After he was pardoned, he brought suit to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered against him for the cost of the prosecution, claiming that he was released from the judgment for costs by virtue of the pardon from the governor. In that case it was held that such pardon did not operate to release him from the judgment for costs.

In the case of Anglea vs. Commonwealth, 10 Gratton (Va.) 696, it was held that where a person convicted and sentenced for a felony and afterwards given a pardon by the governor, releasing him from all pains, penalties and forfeitures, incurred by the conviction of sentence, such pardon did not release such person from the costs where an execution for such costs had been issued previous to the pardon. The court said at page 201:

"The right to enforce payment of costs is a mere incident to the conviction, and thereby vested in the commonwealth for the sole purpose of replacing in the treasury the amount which the defendant himself has caused to be withdrawn from it, and it can make no substantial difference whether the money is going directly to the witness and others who are entitled to be paid for their services in the prosecution or the commonwealth having paid them, stands by substitution in their place."

These cases, I think, make it clear that after the state has paid the costs in a felony case by virtue of the provisions of sections 13726 and 13727, it may recover such costs from the prisoner at a later date if property is found upon which levy may be made.

In your letter you state that the prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary have funds standing to their credit, some of which they bring with them to the penitentiary, some of which is sent to them by their friends, and some of which they earn by their labor while behind the prison walls. Some of these prisoners are the heads of families and others are not, and you ask in what cases, if any, the state may recover the costs.

House Bill No. 133, passed February 25, 1913 (103 O. L., p. 65) provides in part:

"That section 2183 of the General Code be amended and supplemented by additional sections 2183-1 and 2183-2 to read as follows:

"Section 2183. Under the direction of the state board of administration the warden may employ a portion of the convicts in the manufacture of articles used by the state in carrying on the penitentiary, procure machinery and prepare shop room for that purpose. He may also employ a portion of the convicts in the preparation and manufacture of any or all forms of road making material for use in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads and highways within the state of Ohio. For such purposes the state board of administration is authorized with the approval of the governor to purchase the necessary land, quarries, buildings, machinery, and to erect buildings and shops for said purposes, and employ such persons as may be necessary to instruct the convicts in such manufacture. The terms and manner of employment of such persons shall be fixed and determined by the board.

"Section 2183-1. A strict account shall be kept of the labor of such convicts so employed or assigned to the manufacture of such articles, or road making material. Such convicts may receive credit for such portions of the amount of their labor as the board deems equitable and just, taking into account the character of the prisoners, the nature of the crime for which they are imprisoned, and their general deportment. Such amount so determined shall be credited to each prisoner as his earnings, and it may be paid to him or his family, or those dependent upon him, in such amounts, at such time, and in such manner, as such board deems best; but at least ten per cent. of such earnings shall be kept for and paid to such convict at the time of his discharge. The warden, with the approval of such board, for a violation of the rules, want of propriety, or other misconduct, may cancel a portion of such credit or credits."

House Bill No. 612, passed April 16, 1913, 103 O. L., 551, provides as follows:

"BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO:

"Section 1. That section 1866 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

"Section 1866. For the purchase of material and machinery used in manufacturing industries, and for providing a fund out of which prisoners confined in penal institutions may be paid a portion of their earnings in the manner hereinafter provided, a special appropriation shall be made to be known as the manufacturing fund.. Receipts from the sales of manufactured articles shall not be turned into the state treasury, but shall be credited to said fund, to be used for the purchase of further materials, machinery and supplies for such industries, and for payments to convicts or their families as hereinafter provided and the board of administration shall make a full monthly report of the products, sales, receipts, disbursements and payments to and from said fund to the state auditor.

The board of administration may place to the credit of each prisoner such amount of his earnings as it deems equitable and just, taking into consideration the character of the prisoner, the nature of the crime for which he was imprisoned and his general deportment. Such credit shall not exceed the difference between the cost of maintaining such prisoner and the amount his labor, in the opinion of the board of administration, is reasonably worth. The earnings so credited to such prisoner shall be paid to him or his family out of said manufacturing fund at such time, in such manner and in such amounts as the board of administration directs. The board of administration may cancel all or any portion of the earnings credited to a prisoner, for violation of rules, want of propriety or any other reason which in its judgment justifies such action."

In the above acts are found the only provision in the Ohio statutes for the payment of earnings to prisoners. From a reading of them it will be seen that all such earnings, with the exception of the ten per cent. referred to in section 2183-1, supra, may be cancelled in whole or in part by the warden of the Ohio State penitentiary, at any time prior to the day upon which they are paid to the prisoner, which day under the rules of the penitentiary, is the day of the prisoner's discharge from the institution. The amount which the prisoner is to receive is not determined until it is paid to him upon that day and the prisoner is then a free man. If the state, after this time, believes the ex-prisoner has property out of which the cost of conviction can be recovered, and desires to recover the same, it must locate the ex-prisoner and proceed against him in the same manner as it would had he never been imprisoned.

As to the ten per cent. referred to in Section 2183-1, supra, this is to be held for the prisoner until the day of his discharge and I am of the opinion that the legislature in making provision for such payment, intended to afford the prisoner an opportunity to equip himself to some extent financially, for a new start in the world upon his release. It would therefore be clearly contrary to the legislative intention to hold that this money could be seized by the state in satisfaction of the cost of conviction, and it is accordingly my opinion that this money is exempt from sequestration. The situation, however, is different as to the money which the prisoners bring with them to the penitentiary or which is sent to them by friends or relatives during the term of their imprisonment. This money is the property of the prisoner in the custody of the warden during the prisoner's confinement and it is my opinion that it can be reached by proceedings in aid of execution or by garnishee proceedings under section 11829 of the General Code, which reads:

> "The service of process of garnishment upon the sheriff, coroner, clerk, constable, master commissioner, marshal of a municipal corporation, or other officer having in his possession any money, claim or other property of the defendant, or in which the defendant has an interest, shall bind it from the time of service, and be a legal excuse to such officers, to the extent of the demand of the plaintiff, for not paying such money or delivering such claim or property to the defendant, as by law, or the terms of the process in his hands, he would otherwise be bound to do."

since the term "other officer" is broad enough to include the warden of the Ohio penitentiary.

No hard and fast rule can be laid down which would cover all cases where prisoners have such money to their credit on deposit at the penitentiary and inasmuch as the prisoners in the penitentiary are entitled to the same exemptions in such proceedings as they would have been entitled to before their imprisonment, the question of whether or not the state can recover from the different prisoners must depend upon the facts of each individual case.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COMMON PLEAS COURT TO APPOINT ATTORNEY, A NON-RESIDENT OF THE COUNTY AS EXAMINER OF TITLES—RIGHT OF SUCH EXAMINER OF TITLES TO REPRESENT PARTIES IN PROCEEDINGS IN REFERENCE TO LAND TITLES.

The common pleas court has authority to appoint a competent attorney at law, with skill and experience in the examination of titles to real estate, as examiner of title, even though such an attorney be a non-resident of the county wherein he is appointed.

If more than one examiner of title has been appointed in a county, under the land registration act, none of such examiners is permitted, by law, to represent any of the interested parties in real estate proceedings wherein registration is involved, or in any suit relating to registered lands. This precludes any examiner from acting in any registration proceeding, or in any suit relating to registered land, even though title thereto has been referred to one of the other examiners for examination.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. I. H. BLYTHE, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 13, 1914, you presented the following inquiries:

> "1. If no attorney in a county will accept the position of examiner of titles under the land registration system, 103 Ohio Laws, 914, what can be done in regard to the matter?
> "2. Can the common pleas judge appoint two attorneys to act as examiners under the land registration act, with the understanding that if one acts as attorney in a land sale the other may act as examiner in such sale?"

Section 3 of an act to provide for the settlement, registration, transfer and assurance of land titles, 103 O. L., 914, provides that:

> "The common pleas court in each county shall appoint, subject to removal at any time by and at the will of said court, one or more examiners of title who shall be officers of the court, and who shall be competent attorneys-at-law, with skill and experience in the examination of titles to real estate, each of whom, before entering on the discharge of his duties, shall give a bond payable to the state of Ohio for the use of whom it may concern in an amount and with such sureties as shall be approved by a judge of said court * * *.
> "No examiner of titles shall in any way act as attorney for or represent any party or person in interest, in any matters in any way relating to proceedings to register title to land, or any interest or estate therein, or lien or charge thereon, or in any suit or proceeding relating to registered land."

It is apparent from an examination of the first sentence of the foregoing quotation that there is no requirement that the examiners of title shall be residents of the county wherein they are appointed, therefore, if the attorneys within the county decline to act as examiners of title I see no reason why the common pleas court may not appoint non-residents to act as such examiners, provided, of course, that they possess the statutory qualifications, viz.: that they "shall be competent attorneys-at-law with skill and experience in the examination of titles to real estate." The situation is akin to that arising upon the appointment of court stenographer.

2. The common pleas court may, under the foregoing quoted section, appoint as many examiners of title as it deems proper, but I do not think that any examiner of titles is permitted by law to represent any of the interested parties in real estate proceedings wherein registration is involved, or in any suit relating to registered land. The language seems to be extremely plain that no examiner of titles shall in any way act as attorney for or represent any party or person in interest, in any matters in any way relating to proceedings to register title to land or any suit or proceeding relating to registered land. There has been no narrowing, in any other provision of the law, of the broad exclusion contained in section 3. When it is stated that no examiner shall in any way act in any matter relating to proceedings to register title or to registered land it was intended to prohibit an examiner of titles from acting as an attorney in a case where his co-examiner would report upon the title.

The history of the law throws some light upon this question. From this it will be found that the clause in question was a compromise made to meet objections of those who were opposing the bill. Mr. Jones, who drafted amended house bill No. 17, states that following the last word "land" of the present section 3, he had inserted in said bill the following language:

> "in which he may be called upon to in any way act in his capacity as examiner of titles."

This provision would have permitted an examiner to act as attorney in all cases where he was not called upon to serve as examiner. The opponents of the bill insisted that an examiner should not engage in the practice of law involving registration, claiming that it would give him an undue advantage over other attorneys. As a compromise the quoted clause was omitted, leaving the matter as it now stands, viz.: that an examiner of titles is prohibited from acting as attorney in that class of cases in which he might or could be called upon to act officially.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SANITARY POLICE PENSION FUND INCLUDED WITHIN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Sanitary policemen in cities maintaining a sanitary police pension fund are included within the workmen's compensation act, and are not within the statutory proviso excluding from the operation of said act policemen and firemen in cities having established policemen's and firemen's pension funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 16, 1914, you presented the following statement and inquiry:

> "A member of the sanitary police force of an Ohio city, which maintains a pension fund for sanitary policemen, was killed while in the course of his employment.
> "Should compensation be paid to the dependents of the deceased sanitary policeman out of the state insurance fund, the county in which said city is situated having paid its contribution into the fund as required by law?"

When you state that the county paid its contribution into the state insurance fund, I assume that you mean that the amount of premium turned over by the county treasurer upon the warrant of the county auditor to the state insurance fund included the sum due from the municipality wherein the sanitary policeman was employed and consequently shall render the opinion upon this basis.

Section 14 of the workmen's compensation act, 103 O. L. 72, defines "employe," "workman" and "operative" as:

> "Every person in the service of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein, including regular members of lawfully constituted police and fire departments of cities and villages, under any appointment or contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except any official of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein. Provided that nothing in this act shall apply to policemen or firemen in cities where policemen's and firemen's pension funds are now or hereafter may be established and maintained by municipal authority under existing laws."

The sole question here to be determined is whether the proviso excluding policemen and firemen in cities where policemen's and firemen's pension funds are established includes sanitary policemen. Sections 4600 et seq. provide for the creation of a firemen's pension fund and sections 4616 et seq. authorize the establishment of a police relief fund, which, no doubt, the general assembly had in mind when it referred to a police pension fund. Sections 4632 et seq. are authority for the maintenance of a sanitary police pension fund. The fact that these funds are authorized by separate enactments shows that the general assembly recognized the distinction between them, and was under the impression that sanitary policemen were not to be included within the term "police department," as, otherwise, there would have been no necessity for providing by separate statute for the creation of a sanitary police pension fund. This is true because if sanitary policemen were members of the police department they would be entitled to the benefits of the police relief fund, and there would be no necessity for the establishment of a separate pension for them.

Having recognized the distinction between policemen and sanitary policemen, in other provisions of the law, it would seem that the general assembly must be regarded as having had in mind this distinction, and when it referred to a police pension fund it did not intend to include, within that term, a sanitary police pension fund. Force is added to this reasoning by the first sentence of section 14, as herein quoted. It will be observed that it contains the language "including regular members of lawfully constituted police and fire departments." Here again sanitary police are omitted. The use of the word "department," in this connection, is of some importance when we remember that under the law there is no such thing as sanitary police department.

Section 4411, authorizing the appointment of persons for sanitary duty, expressly states that these persons shall "be known as the sanitary police." Now, the fact that reference is made in one section of the law to what must be regarded as the regular police department indicates that this was the character of policemen which it had in mind in the proviso. In other words, construing this section as a whole, it seems reasonably clear that the legislature was considering regular policemen and did not have in mind sanitary policemen.

While, perhaps, every reason that would justify the exemption of regular policemen, who are paid through a pension fund, from the operation of the workmen's compensation act would be applicable to sanitary policemen where a fund of this character is maintained, nevertheless, the rule of reason cannot be applied to statutes which are plain upon their face. Rules of construction are only to be applied when the language of the law is ambiguous or indefinite and uncertain of character. With the wisdom or policy of laws, courts are not concerned, and when a statute is plain upon its face, no resort should be had to subtilty or refinement of reasoning in order to add to or detract from its scope.

It has been suggested that if the legislature intended to exclude any particular kind of policemen, the exclusion should have been expressed, and that in as much as no exception was made after the word "policemen" in the compensation act, this was meant to include all kinds of policemen, the distinguishing characteristic being whether or not pension funds were established. This reasoning does not strike me as being especially forcible as it seems to me that the word "policemen" was intended by the statute to include members of a regularly constituted police department, sanitary policemen being definitely known to the law and recognized as a body of men separate and distinct from the regular policemen. The modifying adjective "sanitary" is used wherever these policemen are referred to in the statute, and the omission of such adjective in the law here under consideration would indicate such character of policemen were to be excluded rather than included. In other words, inclusion rather than exclusion should be expressed if the general assembly desired to accomplish the result of bringing sanitary policemen within the proviso. The exemption in the proviso is specific in its terms and should not be extended beyond its letter. As the statute in question is remedial in its nature and should be given broad inclusive scope, it seems to me that there should be a clear expression of intention to exempt from its operation any class of public employes before there is justification for holding to that effect. The proviso should not be extended by implication.

With these considerations in mind, I am of the opinion that sanitary policemen are included within the expression "every person in the service of," etc., and consequently compensation should be paid to the dependents of such sanitary policemen as are killed in the course of their employment.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS IS THE PROPER AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS FOR THE VILLAGE ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT--SUBJECT TO STATUTORY PROVISIONS WITH REFERENCE TO COMPETITIVE BIDDING.

The board of trustees of public affairs is the proper authority to enter into contracts for the purchase of machinery and equipment for the village electric light plant, or for the repair thereof. This is true where the expense of such machinery and equipment and the repair of such plant is to be paid out of the proceeds of a bond issue made by the village.

Contracts for such purposes calling for an expenditure of more than $500 are subject to the statutory provisions with reference to competitive bidding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. JAMES J. WEADOCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged I have your favor of July 24, 1914, asking opinion of me in which you say:

> "The village of Spencerville in this county recently voted on and now are about to issue bonds in the sum of $10,000.00, the money from said bond issue to be used for the purpose of repairing the village electric light plant.

Should the contracts for the purchase of the necessary machinery, etc., be entered into by the board of public affairs of said village, or by the common council? A dispute has arisen, I am informed by the mayor of the village, between these two bodies as to which has the authority to spend the money raised by the bond issue."

By the provisions of section 3618, General Code, municipal corporations have power to establish, maintain and operate light, heating and power plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, heat and power.

Section 4357, General Code, provides among other things that in each village in which an electric light plant is situated, or when council orders an electric light plant, it (council) shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be elected for a term of two years.

Section 4361, General Code, as amended (103 O. L., 561), provides as follows:

"The board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control the waterworks, electric light plants, artificial or natural gas plants, or other similar public utilities, furnish supplies of water, electricity or gas, collect all water, electrical and gas rents, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. The board of trustees of public affairs may make such by-laws and regulations as it may deem necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of such works, plants and public utilities. Such by-laws and regulations, when not repugnant to the ordinances, to the constitution or to the laws of the state, shall have the same validity as ordinances. For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing such waterworks, plants and public utilities of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, and of making necessary repairs thereon, such trustees may assess a water, light, power, gas or utility rent, of sufficient amount, in such manner as they deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water, light, power, or gas, and, when such rents are not paid such trustees may certify the same over to the auditor of the county, in which such village is located, to be placed on the duplicate, and collect as other village taxes, or may collect the same by actions at law in the name of the village. The board of trustees of public affairs shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are possessed by, and are incumbent upon, the director of public service, as provided in sections 3955, 3959, 3960, 3961, 3964, 3965, 3974, 3981, 4328, 4329, 4330, 4332, 4333, 4334 of the General Code, and all powers and duties relating to waterworks in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants and such other similar public utilities, and such boards shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent herewith."

I recently held in the case of a village owning an electric light plant which desired to purchase electric current for furnishing light to the village and its inhabitants, rather than to generate the same at its own plant, that the contract for the purchase of such electric current should be entered into on behalf of the village by the council, and not by the board of trustees of public affairs. This conclusion followed on the consideration that prior to the enactment of the amendatory provisions of section 3809, General Code, 103 O. L., 526, no authority was vested in municipal corporations to purchase electric current for such purposes, and, on the further consideration, that the amendatory provisions of section 3809 expressly authorize the contract for purchase of electric current to be made by the council of a village purchasing the same.

The question here presented, however, is one with respect to the purchase of machinery and equipment for the electric light plant itself, a utility which is under the sole control and management of the board of trustees of public affairs.

Section 4361, General Code, above quoted in full, confers on the board of trustees of public affairs of villages all powers and duties with respect to both waterworks and electric light plants which have been conferred upon the director of public service in cities relating to waterworks by the particular sections of the General Code therein designated. One of the sections so designated in this connection is section 4361, General Code, as amended, is section 3961, which provides as follows:

> "Subject to the provisions of this title, the director of public service may make contracts for the building of machinery, waterworks buildings, reservoirs and the enlargement and repair thereof, the manufacture and laying down of pipe, the furnishing and supplying with connections all necessary fire hydrants for fire department purposes, keeping them in repair, and for all other purposes necessary to the full and efficient management and construction of waterworks."

It is entirely clear, therefore, that the board of trustees of public affairs in villages is vested with all the powers and subject to all the duties with respect to the management and control of utilities of this kind as fully as is the director of public service in cities, and that the contracts for the purchase of necessary machinery and equipment for the electric light plant of this village are to be entered into by the board of trustees of public affairs rather than by the council of the village. In making contracts for the purchase of machinery or other equipment, calling for an expenditure exceeding $500.00, such contracts can be entered into only after competitive bidding in a manner provided by the statute in such cases.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO CONTRACT WITH THE OHIO SANITORIUM FOR THE CARE OF TUBERCULOSIS PATIENTS.

The county commissioners are without authority in law to contract with the Ohio Sanitorium for the care and treatment of tuberculosis patients.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. L. T. CROMLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 1, 1914, as follows:

> "Can the board of county commissioners, of any Ohio county, legally pay the cost of maintaining and supporting a patient in the Ohio state sanitorium, located near Mt. Vernon, Knox county, Ohio, unless such patient is or has been until removal to said sanitorium, an inmate of the county infirmary? In other words, can any resident of Knox county suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, although not an inmate of the county infirmary, compel the board of county commissioners of the said Knox county to pay the expense of his or her maintenance at the above sanitorium, where there is no county, municipal or district hospital located in said Knox county?"

On September 6, 1911, this department rendered an opinion in which it was held that "the county commissioners have been granted no statutory authority to provide for expenses of tubercular patients from the county, at the Ohio state sanitorium."

On April 17, 1913, an act was passed to amend sections 3139, 3140, etc., General Code of Ohio, relating to county and district tuberculosis hospitals (103 O. L., p. 492). Below will be found four of the sections as amended by this act.

"Section 3139. On and after January 1st, nineteen hundred and fourteen, no person suffering from pulmonary tubersulosis, commonly known as consumption, shall be kept in any county infirmary.

"Section 3140. Whenever complaint is made to the state board of health that a person is being kept or maintained in any county infirmary in violation of section 3139 of this act, such state board of health may make arrangements for the maintenance of such person in some hospital or other institution in this state, devoted to the care and treatment of cases of tuberculosis, and the cost of removal to, and the cost of maintenance of, such person in such hospital or institution shall become a legal charge against, and be paid by the county in which such person has a legal residence. If such person is not a legal resident of this state, then such expense shall be paid by the county maintaining the infirmary from which removal is made.

"Section 3143. Instead of joining in the erection of a district hospital for tuberculosis, as hereinafter provided for, the county commissioners may contract with the board of trustees, as hereinafter provided for, of a district hospital, the county commissioners of a county now maintaining a county hospital for tuberculosis or with the proper officer of a municipality where such hospital has been constructed, for the care and treatment of the inmates of such infirmary or other residents of the county who are suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis. The commissioners of the county in which such patients reside shall pay to the board of trustees of the district hospital or into the proper funds of the county maintaining a hospital for tuberculosis, or into the proper fund of the city receiving such patients, the actual cost incurred in their care and treatment, and other necessaries, and they shall also pay for their transportation. Provided, that the county commissioners of any county may contract for the care and treatment of the inmates of the county infirmary or other residents of the county suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis with an association or corporation, incorporated under the laws of Ohio for the exclusive purpose of caring for and treating persons suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis; but no such contract shall be made until the institution has been inspected and approved by the state board of health, and such approval may be withdrawn and such contracts shall be canceled if, in the judgment of the state board of health, the institution is not managed in a proper manner. Provided, however, that if such approval is withdrawn, the board of trustees of such institution may have the right of appeal to the governor and attorney general and their decision shall be final.

"Section 3144. In any county which has not provided for a county hospital for tuberculosis, or which has not joined in the erection of a district hospital for tuberculosis, the state board of health, upon proper presentation of the facts, may order any inmate of the infirmary who is suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis removed to a municipal county or district hospital for tuberculosis, but such removal shall not be made without the consent of the inmate, if a suitable place outside of the infirmary, approved by the state board of health, is provided for his or her care and treatment. The state board of health upon a proper presentation of facts, shall also have authority to order removed to a municipal, county, or district hospital for pulmonary tuberculosis, any person suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, when in the opinion of the state or a local board of health, such person is a menace to the public and cannot receive suitable care or treatment at home; provided, however, that such person shall have the right to remove from the state."

Under these sections, when there is no county tuberculosis hospital the county commissioners may contract for the care and treatment of inmates of the county infirmary or other residents of the county who are suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, with the board of trustees of a district hospital, the county commissioners of the county maintaining a county hospital for tuberculosis, with the proper officer of a municipality where such hospital has been constructed and with an association or corporation incorporated under the laws of Ohio, for the exclusive purpose of caring for and treating persons suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis.

There is nothing in these or any other sections of the General Code conferring authority upon the county commissioners to contract for the maintenance of patients at the Ohio sanitorium and I am therefore of the opinion, in direct answer to your question, that a resident of your county suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis, not an inmate of the county infirmary, cannot ccmpel the county commissioners to pay the expense of his or her maintenance at the Ohio state sanitorium, when there is no county, municipal or district hospital in the county.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT BONDS NOT CLASSED AS MUNICIPAL BONDS NOR COUNTY BONDS.

Bonds issued by a village school district are not to be classed as municipal bonds nor county bonds, and therefore, are not within section 9778, General Code. Township road improvement bonds are not proper bonds for deposit under said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—With reference to the bonds deposited with you by The People's Savings & Trust Company, of Akron, Ohio, as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation under sections 9778 and 9779 of the General Code, you ask whether the bonds included in said deposit issued by Chagrin Falls and classed as school bonds, and also Madison township road improvement bonds, are proper bonds for deposit under section 9778.

Section 9778, General Code, is as follows:

"No such corporation, either foreign or domestic, shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of a railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock."

Under this section the only bonds which can be received by you, are bonds of the United States, or of this state or any municipality or county in this state, or in any other state or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock.

As to the Chagrin Falls, Ohio, school building bonds, I take it that these bonds were issued by a school district as neither the village of Chagrin Falls or Chagrin Falls township would have authority to issue bonds for the purpose of erecting or improving a school building, and the only question which would arise would be whether a school district can be considered for the purpose of section 9778 as a municipality. To determine this it is necessary to ascertain what was meant by the legislature by the use of the word "municipality" in section 9778.

This word "municipality," as well as the term "municipal corporation" has received many and various definitions by the courts in different states and, if it is sought to ascertain its strict meaning by simply consulting the different decisions in the different states, the task will be found most confusing and entirely unsatisfactory owing to the difference in the political organization of the different states and in the constitutions and statutes.

It seems to me, therefore, that in construing this statute of Ohio as to the meaning of a word used in it we must necessarily give that word the meaning which it has in Ohio, and which, as I view it, is really the correct use of this word generally.

My opinion is that the correct definition of the word "municipality" is that it means a "municipal corporation" which is defined by Judge Dillon (Municipal Corporations, volume 1, section 31) as follows:

"A municipal corporation, in its strict and proper sense, is the body politic and corporate constituted by the incorporation of the inhabitants of a city or town for the purposes or local government thereof. * * *"

The same author says (volume 1, section 34):

"Corporations intended to assist in the conduct of local civil government are sometimes styled political, sometimes public, sometimes civil, and sometimes municipal, and certain kinds of them with very restricted powers, quasi corporations—all these by way of distinction from private corporations. All corporations intended as agencies in the administration of civil government are public, as distinguished from private corporations. Thus an incorporated school district, or county, as well as city, is a public corporation; but the school district or county, properly speaking, is not, while the city is a municipal corporation. All municipal corporations are public bodies, created for civil or political purposes; but all civil, political or public corporations are not, in the proper use of language, municipal corporations. The phrase "municipal corporations," in the contemplation of this treatise, has reference to incorporated villages, towns and cities, with power of local administration, as distinguished from other public corporations, such as counties and quasi corporations."

Aside from the citations above given, and from the general view that the term "municipality" means an incorporated city or village in this state; in my view the matter is settled by section 9778 taken in connection with the constitution of Ohio; in the list of bonds which may be accepted under section 9778 the legislature says such bonds shall be, among others, bonds "of any municipality or county" in this state or any other state; so that the legislature had in mind the fact that the word municipality did not embrace county. The distinction between counties and municipal corporations is pointed out in the case of commissioners of Hamilton county vs. Mighels, 7 O. S., p. 106 as follows:

> "As before remarked, municipal corporations proper are called into existence, either at the direct solicitation or by the free consent of the people who compass them.
> "Counties are local subdivisions of a state, created by the sovereign will, without the particular solicitation, consent, or concurrent action of the people who inhabit them. The former organization is asked for, or at least assented to by the people it embraces; the latter is superimposed by a sovereign and paramount authority."

The legislature has provided for county and township organization by article X of the constitution, and both the constitution and laws of Ohio treat of counties and townships as entirely separate from municipal corporations. Therefore, as in section 9778 the legislature has used the word "county," and omitted the word "township," we must adopt the view that township bonds are excluded.

As stated before, it further seems to me that the constitution of Ohio would be determinative of the meaning of the word "municipality," in the absence of the authority of Judge Dillon which I have cited above. Article XIII of the constitution provides for municipal corporations. Section 1 states, "municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages * * *." Section 2, "general laws shall be passed for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same, * * *."

Sections 3 to 7, inclusive, of this article, referring to municipal corporations, do not use the words "municipal corporations" or the words "cities" or "villages," but in each section the word used is "municipality" or "municipalities," and in every section of this article the word "municipality" is used to mean "municipal corporation."

It seems to me, therefore, that the only view that can be taken of the meaning of this word as used in section 9778 is that it means incorporated villages or cities in Ohio, and must have the same meaning when applied to bonds which have been issued in other states.

As above stated many definitions have been given to the word "municipality." In some states it has been held to include a school district and other subdivisions of a state or county; in other states it has been held that the word does not embrace a district of division analogous thereto, and, therefore, as the word in this state has a well understood meaning, which meaning is carried into the constitution and into the laws of the state, and which meaning coincides with what is considered to be the proper definition of the word by Judge Dillon, it seems to me that in construing a statute of the character of section 9778 there would be no possible justification for adopting any other definition of this word than that which I have given, viz.: that it means an incorporated city or village.

Therefore, the bonds to which you have referred as "Chagrin Falls, Ohio, school bonds" may not be received for deposit by you under section 9778, as they are not issued by a municipality in this state.

The Madison township road improvement bonds are not proper bonds for deposit under this section, as townships are not included within the catalogue, only the United States, state, counties and municipalities being named.

I return herewith the correspondence which you submitted to this office.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN SUSPENDING A SCHOOL.

Under the provisions of section 7730, General Code, the board of education is required to give sixty days' notice provided for therein; in order to suspend a school the procedure set forth in said section should be carried out.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. B. F. ENOS, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 18, 1914, you submitted to this department for an official opinion thereon, the following request:

> "Section 7730 of the General Code as amended in Ohio Laws 104, at pages 139 and 140 provides as follows:
> " 'The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and in such rural school districts shall provide for the conveyance of the pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. No school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days' notice has been given by the school board of such district. Such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district.'
> "Said section says, 'when the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct.' And it also says, 'no school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days notice has been given by the school board of such district. And such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district.'
> "Why should the board of education be required to give the notice as required by said section, if it is mandatory upon it to suspend a school where the average daily attendance for the preceding year has been below twelve?"

Section 7730 of the General Code, as amended 104 Ohio Laws, at page 139, thereof, contains a provision to the effect that when the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. This provision, by virtue of the use of the word "shall" is mandatory, and it is apparent that it was the intent of the legislature that schools should be suspended when the average daily attendance thereof for the preceding year falls below twelve, and that thereupon the pupils should be transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. The provision that "no school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days notice has been given by the school board of such district" is merely a part of the procedure to accomplish such suspension. Also the provision that "such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district" is part of the procedure to accomplish the suspension provided for in said section 7730, supra.

When a school is suspended because its average daily attendance falls below twelve for the preceding year, such suspension shall not go into effect or take place until after sixty days notice has been given thereof, in the manner provided in said section, to wit, by posting notice in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district. As before stated, it is mandatory upon the board of education, in such situation, to suspend such schools, and it is also mandatory to give the notice required by said section, in the manner therein provided. I know of no reason why this notice should be given, such as the notice required in said section, except that the legislature has seen fit to carry this proviso into the statute as a part of the proceeding in accomplishing the suspension when the same is required by virtue of said section 7730 of the General Code, above quoted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION TO PAROLE A PRISONER CONFINED IN THE OHIO PENITENTIARY, WHO HAS BEEN PREVIOUSLY CONVICTED OF A FELONY.

A prisoner of the Ohio penitentiary who has been previously convicted of a felony, and is serving a term in a penal institution, can be paroled by the Ohio board of administration, if such prisoner has been granted a full pardon for the crimes of which he was previously convicted, and for which he was previously sentenced.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden, Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 18, 1914, as follows:

> "Is a prisoner who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment in this state or any other state, and confined as provided for in said sentence, after having been convicted of a felony, and who was later released from such confinement by reason of an absolute pardon granted by the chief executive of this or any other state in which he was convicted and confined under said sentence, a second termer within the provisions of the parole law of this state."

Section 2169 of the General Code reads in part as follows:

> The board of managers (now the Ohio board of administration), shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner * * * having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and not previously convicted of felony or not having served a term in a penal institution * * * may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary * * *."

In 29 Cyc., page 1566, the following doctrine is stated:

> "When a full and absolute pardon is granted it exempts the individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for the crime which he has committed. The crime is forgiven and remitted, and the individual is released from all of its legal consequences. The effect of a full pardon is to make the offender a new man. It blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense."

In the case of ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S. 333), 18 L. E., 366, Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion of the court said:

"A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender; and when the pardon is full it releases the punishment and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. If granted before conviction, it prevents any of the penalties and disabilities, consequent upon convinction, from attaching; if granted after conviction, it removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights; it makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity."

In the case of Edwards vs. The Commonwealth, 78 Va., page 39, it was held:

"The governor's pardon relieves the offender not only of the punishment annexed to the offense whereof he was convicted, but of all penalties and consequences, including the additional punishment imposable, not by reason of the sentence for the second offense alone, but in consequence of that sentence and the sentence in the former case."

The court after quoting the opinion of Field, J., in the matter of ex parte Garland, supra, said at page 44:

"By the pardon in question, therefore, the plaintiff in error was not only relieved of the punishment annexed to the offense for which he had been convicted, but of all penalties and consequences, except political disabilities, growing out of his conviction and sentence. One of those consequences was the liability to which it subjected him to receive the additional punishment prescribed by the statute, in case he should be afterwards sentenced to the penitentiary in this state. And that additional punishment has been imposed in this case, not by reason of the sentence for the second offense alone, but in consequence of that sentence and the sentence in the former case. Both causes must exist together to produce the effect contemplated by the statute; in the absence of either, no case is made for the imposition of the additional punishment the statute prescribes. But as the first offense was in legal contemplation blotted out, and its consequences removed, by the pardon of the governor, it must be regarded for the purpose of this case, as though it had never been committed."

The supreme court of this state in the case of State vs. Martin, 59 O. S., page 212, held, following the above cases:

"If imprisonment for a felony is terminated by an unconditional pardon it is not to be regarded as one of the two former imprisonments for felony required by section 7388-11, Revised Statutes, to place the accused in the category of habitual criminals."

The court cited the case of Edwards vs. Commonwealth, supra, and adopted the view taken in that case in the following language:

"The question presented by the exception is whether a former conviction and imprisonment for a felony, on account of which the governor has granted an unconditional pardon, may be regarded as one of the former convictions necessary to place the accused in the category of habitual criminals as defined by the act. It may be that the criminal habit is as certainly indicated by the commission of felonies for which unconditional pardons have been granted as by those whose penalties have been suffered to the end. But we must presume that the legislature enacted this section intending that the language should be construed according to the commonly received view as to the effect of a pardon. That view with reference to legislation of this character is that 'If a second offense is made by statute more heavily punishable than the first, then if the first is pardoned, it is obliterated. The consequence of which is that a like offense afterward committed is not a second, and is punishable only as a first.' Bishop New Cr. L., section 9191. Edwards vs. Commonwealth, 78 Va., 39."

From a consideration of these cases, it is my opinion that a prisoner in the Ohio penitentiary, who has been previously convicted of a felony, or has served a term in a penal institution, can be paroled by the Ohio board of administration, under section 2169 of the General Code, if such prisoner has been granted a full pardon for the crime of which he was previously convicted, or for which he was previously sentenced.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES ORGANIZED UNDER THE LAWS OF OHIO ASSUMING THE BUSINESS OF A COMPANY ORGANIZED UNDER THE LAWS OF ANOTHER STATE—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED.

A life insurance company, organized under the laws of Ohio and authorized to do business therein, must, when it enters into the contract to assume the business of another life insurance company, organized under the laws of another state, observe the procedure provided by sections 9352 et seq., General Code, with reference to petition therefor to the superintendent of insurance, notice to its policy-holders and hearing before the commission consisting of the governor, or some one appointed to act in his place, the attorney general and the superintendent of insurance, as provided for in section 9354, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. R. M. SMALL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of June 11, 1914, in which you ask opinion of me as follows:

"Is it required of a life insurance company organized under the laws of Ohio and authorized to do business therein, to follow the procedure as provided by sections 9351, 9352, 9353, 9354, 9355 and 9356, General Code, when such company enters into a contract to reinsure the business of another life insurance company organized under the laws of another state of the United States and not admitted to Ohio?"

The section referred to in your inquiry reads as follows:

"Section 9351. No company organized under the laws of this state to do the business of life, accident or health insurance, either on stock, mutual, stipulated premium or assessment plan, shall consolidate with any other company or reinsure its risks, or any part thereof with any other company, or assume or reinsure the whole of or any portion of the risks of any other company, except as hereinafter provided. Nothing herein contained shall prevent any such company from reinsuring a fractional part of any individual risk, not exceeding four-fifths thereof, in a company duly authorized to transact business in this state, or, with the permission of the superintendent of insurance, the whole of such risk; but no company, except as hereinafter provided, shall reinsure any part of any of its risks when the aggregate amount of its risks reinsured shall equal fifty per cent. of its total insurance in force.

"Section 9352. When any such company purposes to consolidate with any other company, or enter into any contract of reinsurance, it shall present its petition to the superintendent of insurance, setting forth the terms and conditions of the proposed consolidation or reinsurance, and praying for the approval or of any modification thereof, which the commission hereinafter provided for may approve.

"Section 9353. The superintendent thereupon shall issue an order of notice, requiring notice to be given by mail to the policy-holders of such company, of the pendency of such petition, and the time and place at which it will be heard, and the publication of the order of notice and petition, in five daily newspapers to be designated by him, at least one of which shall be published in the city of Columbus, for at least two weeks before the time appointed for the hearing on the petition.

"Section 9354. The governor, or in the event of his inability to act, some competent person resident of the state to be appointed by him, the attorney general, and the superintendent of insurance, shall constitute a commission to hear and determine upon such petition. At the time and place fixed in such notice, or at such time and place as is fixed by adjournment, the commission shall proceed with the hearing, and may make such examination into the affairs and condition of the company as it may deem proper. The superintendent of insurance may summon and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers before the commission. Any policy-holder or stockholder of the above named company or companies may appear and be heard in reference to such petition.

"Section 9355. If satisfied that the interests of the policy-holders of such company or companies are properly protected, and that no reasonable objection exists thereto, the commission may approve and authorize the proposed consolidation or reinsurance, or of such modification thereof as seems to it best for the interests of the policy-holders, and make such order with reference to the distribution and disposition of the surplus assets of any such company thereafter remaining, as shall be just and equitable. Such consolidation or reinsurance shall only be approved by the consent of all the members of the commission whose duty it will be to guard the interests of the policy-holders of any such company or companies proposition to consolidate or reinsure.

"Section 9356. All expenses and costs incident to such proceedings shall be paid by the company or companies bringing such petition."

In addition to the sections above quoted, I note the provisions of section 13416 General Code, which provide as follows:

"Whoever, being an officer, director or stockholder of a company organized under the laws of this state, to do the business of life, accident or health insurance, either on the stock, mutual, stipulated premiums, assessment or fraternal plan, violating or consenting to a violation of any provision of law governing or forbidding the reinsurance of the risks, or any part thereof, or the consolidation of such company with any other company or association, or the assumption or reinsurance of the whole or any portion of the risks of another company by such company, shall be fined not less than ten thousand dollars and imprisoned in a county or city jail not less than one year."

It is a cardinal rule in the construction of statutes that the intent of the law makers is to be sought first of all in the language employed, and the question always is not what did the legislature intend to enact, but what is the meaning of that which it did enact.

Slinghuff vs. Weaver 66 O. S. 621.
Woodbury vs. Berry 18 O. S. 456.

Without restating the provisions of sections 9351 and 13416, General Code, it is clear that with respect to insurance companies of the kind therein mentioned, organized under the laws of this state, the provisions of these sections require the observance of the procedure outlined in the other sections quoted in cases where such companies reinsure or assume the risks of any other company, as well as where the risks of such Ohio insurance companies are reinsured or assumed by another company, whether the other company in either case be organized under the laws of the state of Ohio or not. In keeping with a manifest purpose to secure and protect the rights of policy-holders in Ohio insurance companies of the kind mentioned, the reason for the observance of the procedure provided for in the sections above quoted is apparent in a case where the risks of an Ohio company are assumed or reinsured by another company organized under the laws of this or another state. In cases where an Ohio insurance company desires to assume or reinsure the risks of another insurance company, whether such company be organized under the laws of this state or elsewhere, it is not easy to perceive, aside from the specific requirements of sections 9351 and 13416, why the insurance company which seeks to assume or reinsure the risk of each other company should be required to give notice of its intention to do so to its own stockholders, or otherwise observe and comply with the procedure outlined in the sections above noted. However, I am of the opinion that the express terms of sections 9351 and 13416 require an Ohio insurance company of the above mentioned kind, which desire to assume or reinsure the risks of another company to notify its own policy-holders of its intended action and get permission to do so by observance of the procedure provided for in sections 9352 to 9356 inclusive, whether the company whose risks are being assumed or reinsured is organized under the laws of this or some other state.

Answering your inquiry, therefore, I am of the opinion that the life insurance company mentioned in your communication must follow the procedure provided for by the sections mentioned by you, and above quoted, when such company enters into a contract to reinsure or assume the business of another life insurance company organized under the laws of another state, and which has not been admitted to do business in this state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE LOVELAND LIGHT AND WATER COMPANY DISAPPROVED—FORMING A CORPORATION FOR FURNISHING NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL GAS AND ELECTRICITY, HEAT AND POWER—RIGHT OF SUCH CORPORATION TO MANUFACTURE AND DEAL IN NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL ICE—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

Under the provisions of section 10212, General Code, a corporation may be formed for the purpose of furnishing natural and artificial gas and electricity, heat and power, and also supply water for public and private consumption. Such a corporation must not join with such purposes that of manufacturing and dealing in natural and artificial ice and conducting a general refrigerating and cold storage business, either as incidental to the principal purpose or otherwise.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 30th, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the purpose clause of The Loveland Light and Water Company, a corporation which is proposed to be located at the village of Loveland, in Clermont, Warren and Hamilton counties. Said purpose clause is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of manufacturing, purchasing, selling and supplying artificial and natural gas and electricity for light, heat and power purposes, and both for public and private consumption, and also for the purpose of producing, pumping, purchasing, selling and supplying water for both public and private consumption and purposes. And also for the purpose of manufacturing, buying, selling and dealing in natural and artificial ice, and of doing a general refrigerating and cold storage business, and of acquiring by purchase, lease or otherwise, and of owning, constructing and maintaining such real estate, buildings and other real and personal property as will assist in the successful operation of the business and purposes of said company as above provided, and of doing all things requisite and necessary for the prosecution and carrying out of the same."

The familiar general rule is, of course, that a corporation may be formed under the laws of Ohio for the pursuit of a single principal purpose only. State ex rel. vs. Taylor, 55 O. S., 57. However, in determining what constitutes a single purpose a somewhat liberal rule seems to have been adopted, viz.: If the end is single the means may be various. Picard vs. Hughey, 58 O. S., 577.

The rule laid down in the case last cited, of itself justifies the language of the first clause of the general purpose clause above quoted, down to the words "and also" where they first occur. That is to say, Picard vs. Hughey, supra, is distinct authority for the conclusion that in the absence of any special statute, a corporation may be formed for the purpose of supplying light, heat and power by means of natural gas, artificial gas and electricity.

Whether or not it is proper to join with the purpose already discussed, which may be regarded as a "single one" within the meaning of the well-understood rule above referred to, that of supplying water for public and private consumption and use, depends upon the proper interpretation of section 10212, General Code, which provides as follows:

"Any two or more electric lighting companies, natural or artificial gas companies, gas light or coke companies, companies for supplying water for public or private consumption; or any electric light and power company and any water company; or any heating company and any incline, movable or rolling road company; doing business in the same municipal corporation or which are incorporated and organized for the purpose of doing business in the same municipal corporation may consolidate into a single corporation in the manner and with the same effect as is provided for the consolidation of railroad companies."

It is clear, of course, that if this section authorizes the consolidation of a corporation, the powers of which are limited within the discription of the first part of the first sentence of the purpose clause under discussion, with another corporation, the powers of which are limited within the language of the last part of said sentence, then it must be held that a single corporation could be originally formed for both purposes; because it would be idle to deny the power to incorporate a single company if the same result could be obtained by the original incorporation of two companies and their subsequent consolidation.

In a liberal view of section 10212 the second phrase thereof would justify the joinder of purposes made in the first sentence of the articles of incorporation. It is clear that the company is an electric light and power company and that it is also a water company. But if a stricter view be taken, this part of section 10212 would not suffice; for although the company is to be an electric light and power company it is also to be an artificial and natural gas company; and if the right to consolidate under the second phrase of section 10212 is to be limited to those electric light companies which are purely such, then the Loveland Light and Water Company would fall outside of the pale of this part of the statute.

Looking now at the first clause of section 10212, it appears to be possible to read it in two ways, one of which will justify the first sentence of the articles of incorporation and the other of which will leave the question in the condition on which consideration of the meaning of the second clause of the section leaves it. These two interpretations are as follows:

1. Any two companies mentioned in the first clause of the section may consolidate; that is an electric lighting company may consolidate with a natural gas company and water supply company, etc., if located in the same municipality.

2. Consolidation under this part of the section can only be between or among two or more companies of the same kind therein mentioned. Thus an electric light company under this part of the section can consolidate only with an electric light company.

Viewed from any angle whatever, the whole section is very ambiguous. I find help, however, in resolving its ambiguity by tracing its legislative history.

Section 10212 was section 2485a, Revised Statutes, as last amended 97 O. L., 281, that section read as follows:

"Any two or more companies mentioned in section 2478 or any electric light and power company and any water company or any heating company and any inclined movable or rolling road company, which are doing business in the same municipal corporation or which are incorporated and organized for the purpose of doing business in the same municipal corporation, may consolidate into a single corporation in the same manner and with the same effect as provided for the consolidation of railroad companies in sections 3381, 3382, 3383, 3384, 3385, 3386, 3387, 3388, 3390, 3391, and 3392, of the Revised Statutes, and any and all acts amendatory and supplementary to said section."

Said section 2478 at that time read as follows:

"The council of any city or village in which electric light companies, natural or artificial gas companies, or gas light or coke companies, or companies for supplying water for public or private consumption, may be established, or into which their wires, mains or pipes may be conducted, are hereby empowered to regulate from time to time, the price which said electric lighting, natural or artificial gas, gas and coke companies, may charge for electric light, or for gas for lighting or fuel purposes, or for water for public or private consumption, furnished by such companies to the citizens, public grounds and buildings, streets, lanes, alleys, avenues, wharves and landing places. or for fire protection; and such electric lighting, natural or artificial gas, gas light or coke companies, or companies for furnishing water for public or private consumption, shall in no event charge more for any electric light, or natural or artificial gas, or water, furnished to such corporation or individuals, than the price specified by ordinance of such council; and such council shall also have power to regulate and fix the price which such companies shall charge for rent for their meters."

The legislative history makes the intent and meaning of that part of section 10212, particularly now under discussion, clear. The first of the two interpretations above suggested must be selected and it must be held that by virtue of the first clause of section 10212, a natural gas company, an artificial gas company, an electric light company and a company for supplying water, etc., might be consolidated, and, therefore, that a single company might be formed to conduct all these activities in the first place.

But this conclusion does not necessarily establish the validity of the first sentence of the purpose clause under consideration. The electric business of the Loveland Light and Water Company is to be the supplying of that current, not for light only, but for purposes of heat and power also. Apparently an electric lighting company is distinguished in the section from an electric light and power company, and both are alike distinguished from a "heating company."

That is to say, it appears from a cursory reading of the section that at least in the mind of the legislature, an "electric lighting company" would be such a company as might be engaged exclusively in furnishing electricity for lighting purposes, eliminating the activity of supplying the same commodity for power and heat purposes.

But the legislative history, as I view it, rebuts what is perhaps a natural, yet not not the only possible inference, which might be drawn from the language of present section 10212.

The phrase, "or any electric light and power company and any water company," gives rise to all the trouble here, for it must be acknowledged that the subsequent mention of a heating company does not effect the question of legislative intent inasmuch as such companies are coupled with inclined movable or rolling road companies, and these companies are not mentioned in the first clause of section 10212 nor in original section 2478 Revised Statutes.

I find that the troublesome clause in question was introduced in section 2485a by the amendment of 1904, above cited. As originally enacted, this section of the Revised Statutes was as follows:

"Any two or more of the companies mentioned in section 2478, which are doing business in the same municipal corporation, or which are incorporated and organized for the purpose of doing business in the same municipal corporation, may consolidate into a single corporation in the same manner and with the same effect as provided for the consolidation of railroad companies in sections 3381, 3382, 3383, 3384, 3385, 3386, 3387, 3388, 3390, 3391 and 3392 of the Revised Statutes, and any and all acts amendatory and supplementary to said sections."

Reading this section in connection with section 2478, I am clearly of the opinion that during the time when they were both in force that was an "electric lighting company" within the meaning of section 2478, which was in the business of furnishing electric light to consumers; and that it could not have been interposed by such a company, as an objection to the exercise of the regulatory power vested in the council of the municipality by section 2478, R. S., that it was also engaged in the sale of electricity for power or heat purposes. In other words, within the purview of section 2478 a corporation engaged in the business of furnishing electricity for light, heat and power purposes, was an "electric lighting company." Therefore, it was a "company mentioned in section 2478" within the meaning of original section 2485a, and when subsequently section 2485a was amended by inserting specific authority for an "electric light and power company" to consolidate with a "water company," such amendment to the extent just described was quite superfluous and added nothing whatever to the law as it had previously existed.

I am aware that an amendment may be said to amount to a legislative interpretation of the law as it finds it. However, a succeeding legislature may conceivably misinterpret the intention of an earlier session, and where a more trustworthy criterion of the meaning of the pre-existing law than the amendment itself may be found, it should be allowed to govern. And if it appears that the legislature amended the section, and in course of amending it, caused it to be re-enacted in full, in compliance with the constitutional mandate, the mere fact that the legislature supposed the amendment to be necessary in order to accomplish a given purpose, cannot be used as evidence of intention to narrow the remainder of the law to the scope indicated by the amendment. That is to say, because apparently the legislature in 1904 thought it was necessary to so amend section 2485a as to grant specific authority to an electric light and power company to consolidate with a water company, such action is not to be taken as evidence that that legislature intended that the phrase "Any two or more of the companies mentioned in section 2478," should have a meaning more restricted than the same phrase had had when originally enacted.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that section 10012 interpreted (if it requires interpretation) in the light of its legislative history, authorizes the formation of a consolidated corporation, having all the powers mentioned in the first sentence of the articles of incorporation submitted to me by you; and being of that opinion, I am also of the opinion that a single corporation may be originally formed for such purposes.

Therefore, I advise you that the first sentence of the articles of incorporation of the Loveland Light and Water Company does not offend against the law.

But I regret that I cannot advise you similarly with respect to the second sentence of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation submitted by you. This part of the purpose clause undertakes to confer upon the corporation the authority to manufacture, buy, sell and deal in natural and artificial ice and to do a general refrigerating and cold storage business. Manifestly, these powers cannot be combined with the others already discussed. Section 10212 does not authorize such combination, directly or indirectly, and the general rule above referred to forbids it.

The correspondence enclosed with your letter shows that there are on file and of record in your office articles of incorporation purporting to authorize a certain corporation, formed for the principal purposes of manufacturing and furnishing electric current for lighting, heating and power, and supplying the town of Loveland with water, "as incident thereto" to manufacture and store ice and to use and sell the same for all purposes, and to maintain and operate a refrigerating plant.

Counsel who present the articles of incorporation of the Loveland Light and Water Company call attention to the articles now of record in your office, and rely upon their issuance in the past as a precedent justifying the filing of the present articles.

Obviously there is a distinction between the old and the new articles. The words "buying," "dealing in" and "natural" would have to be eliminated from the present articles and the entire second sentence qualified by the phrase "and as incidental thereto" before the present articles would be like those already recorded in your office.

But I do not wish to mislead the parties interested in the articles of incorporation, and in order to make my position clear, I wish to state that, in my opinion, if the changes just described were made in the second sentence of the articles of incorporation of the Loveland Light and Water Company the articles would still have to be rejected. In short, I am of the opinion, without discussing the matter elaborately, that in law and in fact the activity of manufacturing and selling artificial ice and doing a general refrigerating and cold storage business is not, and under no circumstances could it be incidental to the business of operating a combined light, heat, power and water plant.

I am verbally informed by counsel, in addition to the facts set forth in the correspondence enclosed in your letter, that the present company is one which is designed to take over the property and business of a pre-existing company, that the pre-existing company owns, or did own, a combined electric light and water plant in which, as a matter of course, are installed and operated boilers for the generation of steam. Near by this plant is an ice manufacturing plant, fully equipped with the different appliances which are necessary to carry on that business. However, it seems that the exhaust steam from the light and water plant has been, and doubtless will continue to be, used in carrying on some essential process in the manufacture of ice, and for that purpose such exhaust steam has been conducted by pipes to the ice plant, and sold by the company operating the light and water plant to the company operating the ice plant.

It is anticipated that because of the relatively small population to be served, the two plants, i. e., the light and water plant and the ice plant can never be economically operated under separate management, and, therefore, it is desired that a single company be formed for the purpose of taking over all these activities, related in the way which I have designated; and it is urged, as a proposition of law, that under these circumstances the manufacture of ice is properly incidental to the operation of the light and water plant.

I am unable to bring myself to the conclusion just stated. Two principles would seem to be involved, and may be stated alternatively thus:

1. Either the fact that exhaust steam is used in the manufacture of ice of itself constitutes the manufacture of ice, an activity incidental to any activity that requires or justifies the production of exhaust steam; or,

2. Where the public to be served is so restricted in number that the two kinds of business cannot be profitably carried on except under one management, the manufacture of ice, though under other circumstances not incidental to the operation of a light and water plant, becomes so by reason of this fact alone.

Neither one of these principles is, in my mind, tenable. As to the first, it is a sufficient answer to say that it does not appear that a light and water company, as such, is capable of producing exhaust steam suitable for use in the manufacture of ice to an extent peculiar to itself and greater than that to which any other company generating steam would be capable of furnishing such exhaust steam. So that if the power to manufacture ice becomes an incidental power because of the generating of exhaust steam, then it is a power incidental to the principal power of any corporation which finds it necessary or convenient in the accomplishment of such principal purpose to generate steam. That is to say, if this principle is correct, then any corporation using steam for power purposes on any considerable scale, would have the incidental power to manufacture ice. To state such a proposition, is to refute it. It is, I take it, well known that while exhaust steam may be a necessary, and even a principal material or factor, in the manufacture of ice, the business of manufacturing ice cannot be carried on without special and peculiar equipment. Indeed, there is required in what is known as a "refrigerating plant," a manufactory quite separate and distinct from any other type of factory which might be imagined. There are required, also, if the business of selling artificial ice is to be engaged in, means of delivery, such as horses, wagons, etc., which constitute a species of equipment quite separate and distinct from anything required in such a business as the operation of a light and water plant.

Therefore, I conclude that the mere fact that exhaust steam from the boilers of the one plant has been, and will be, used in the manufacture of ice in the other plant, does not make the whole business of manufacturing ice incidental to the business conducted at the light and water plant nor in any way related to that business.

In this connection, of course, two collateral points may be mentioned, viz.: in the first place, the power to sell the exhaust steam, as such, clearly exists; but this is quite a different thing from utilizing the exhaust steam in a separate and distinct business. In the second place, the business of manufacturing ice may be properly incidental to another business, such as the meat packing business, the hotel business and any business of manufacturing perishable goods requiring refrigeration, but this merely suggests the true test which is to be applied in all cases, viz.: the relation between the end sought to be accomplished by the incidental activity, and the end sought to be promoted by the principal business of the company. In the cases which I have mentioned refrigeration is probably incidental to the principal purpose, because the refrigeration itself is necessary or convenient to promote such principal purpose; in the case under discussion refrigeration, or manufactured ice as a finished product, or either of them or in any way necessary, convenient or useful in carrying on the business of operating a light and water plant.

The second alternative principle above stated, must be rejected for the sufficient reason that the relation of one power to another power is an abstraction and is to be determined by the application of general rules. Specific cases and varying circumstances of the kind mentioned will not change such general rule. If the ice business is not incidental to the electric and water business in one place, it is not incidental in another. Again, the mere fact that the promoters of the new company may deem it impossible to furnish the inhabitants of the village of Loveland with water, gas, electricity and ice economically, save under a single corporate management would not be sufficient to justify the formation of a single corporation to conduct these various and unrelated activities; or if such considerations were allowed to control, then, in a given case, it might be contended that the coal business of the village (which is of a character similar to the ice business) should also be carried on by the lighting and water company; in short, any number of activities, otherwise unrelated, could be joined together on the plea that economy of management dictated such a joinder. Such considerations cannot be entertained under the rule of singleness of purpose, which governs the formation of corporations in Ohio. Perhaps the general rule which applies here is that it will be found stated in the text books to the effect that simply because a given activity may be deemed profitable or actually would be profitable to a given corporation, it does not follow that such activity constitutes the doing of the thing "necessary or convenient" for the accomplishment of the corporate purpose, within the rule of law applicable in Ohio, as well as elsewhere to the effect that a corporation has, as incidental, the implied power to do such things as are necessary or convenient to the accomplishment of its declared principal purpose and object.

For the reasons stated, then, I am clearly of the opinion that under no circumstances may a corporation formed for the principal purpose of supplying gas and electricity for light, heat and power purposes, together with supplying water for public and private consumption, join with such purposes in its articles of incorporation the additional purpose, whether formally characterized as incidental or not, of manufacturing or dealing in ice and doing a general refrigerating and cold storage business.

I, therefore, return to you the articles of incorporation of the Loveland Light and Water Company, with the advice that so much of the second sentence of the purpose clause thereof as relates to the purpose of manufacturing, buying, selling, etc., natural and artificial ice, and doing a general refrigerating and cold storage business, be eliminated therefrom, before they are filed and recorded by you.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WOMEN MAY WORK FOR TWO DIFFERENT EMPLOYERS SO LONG AS THEY DO NOT WORK MORE THAN FIFTY-FOUR HOURS PER WEEK.

It is not a violation of the law limiting the hours of labor for women, for two different employers to suffer or permit women to work in the respective establishments of such employers, ten hours a day, or in excess of fifty-four hours a week, even though the aggregate number of hours worked in both establishments is greater than allowed by said limitations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 24, 1914, you submitted the following which has been presented by the chief deputy of your department of inspection:

> "Some of the deputies of this division report to me that they frequently find women over eighteen years of age being employed in two different establishments and by two different employers, the number of hours worked in either of these establishments not being in excess of the ten hours per day or fifty-four per week, but the aggregate number of hours worked in both establishments is in excess of both of these limitations in many cases.
> "Would you please advise me whether or not in your judgment this kind of employment constitutes a violation of the law limiting the hours of labor for females over eighteen years of age, and if so, which of the employers is guilty of the violation?"

The statutory language which you have in mind in submitting this question is taken from section 1008 of the General Code, as amended 103 Ohio Laws 555, and reads thus:

> "* * * Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than ten hours in any one day, or more than fifty-four hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to the hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods."

The foregoing quoted language was intended to prevent continuous employment of women over eighteen years of age in designated establishments, beyond the prescribed number of hours. It seems to be aimed at the employment in a single establishment, as is manifest from the fact that it distinctly states that women over eighteen years of age shall not be employed, permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, etc. The only construction that can be placed upon such language is that those persons referred to in the statute may not work more than ten hours a day or more than fifty-four hours a week in any one of the establishments designated in the statute. Had the legislature intended to limit the time of employment absolutely, and without reference to the particular place of employment, I feel confident that a different form of expression would have been adopted.

As the sanction of this statute is penal it necessarily follows that it must be strictly construed and cannot be extended, by implication, beyond its plain letter. Therefore, it is my judgment that in order to come within the inhibition of the statute it is necessary that it be shown that the woman employe works more than ten hours a day or more than fifty-four hours a week in a particular establishment, and if the employment was in two different establishments, in neither of which such employe works in excess of the prescribed statutory time, there has been no violation of the law. There being no such violation under the circumstances set out in your letter, it follows that neither of the employers can be prosecuted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOLEDO STATE HOSPITAL—CHANGE IN PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS OF BUILDING.

In the construction of a laundry building at the Toledo State Hospital, it is found necessary on account of quick sand to make changes in the plans and specifications. Such change can be made under authority of sections 2320, et seq., General Code, to meet the new conditions, increasing the cost of the building; the same can be done with the consent of the governor, auditor and secretary of state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1914.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—A few days ago you asked my opinion as to what could be done by your board in meeting an unexpected situation which has arisen in the matter of the construction of a laundry at the Toledo State Hospital, a contract for which building has been let by your board pursuant to the state building regulations.

The original estimate as to the cost of this building upon which bids were received was $50,533.70. The contract was let at a figure slightly lower than the estimate, to wit: $50,260.00. It seems that the nature of the ground upon which the buildings at this institution have been erected, is such as to require piling in order to support the foundations of such buildings. While uniformly heretofore in putting the piling for other buildings at this institution the piles after passing through the top soil and subsoil have penetrated about eighteen inches of quicksand before reaching clay upon which the column could rest, in putting down the first pile for the laundry building it was discovered that the quicksand encountered in placing the same was of a depth of forty-seven inches instead of eighteen inches as expected. After this condition was revealed in placing the first piling, they were put down at two other divergent places, the result being the same with respect to the depth of the quicksand encountered, so that it seems that there is reason for the assumption that the same condition as to the amount of quicksand prevails under the whole of the projected building.

This condition of affairs as represented by you and the architect in charge, calls for an increased expenditure in the matter of piling to support this building, the same being occasioned both by an increase in the length of the piling to be used and also possibly in the number of the piling that will have to be placed. The present contract as I understand it, calls for 12-ft. bulb piling, as it was contemplated that piling of this character and length were amply sufficient to meet the requirements. The new conditions which have developed in this matter will probably make it necessary to use 15-ft. piling instead of the 12-ft. length, and this change in the specifications will call for an increased cost in the matter of piling of $1,500.00. The contract price is only $273.70 less than the estimate, and the question you propound with respect to this situation is whether or not the law affords any means whereby the necessary increased cost of piling for this building can be made.

By force of the provisions of section 2314 and following sections of the General Code, contracts for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building, or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, the aggregate cost of which exceeds $3,000.00, can only be let after competitive bidding on plans, specifications and estimates of the cost thereof previously made. After the contract is awarded and entered into with the successful bidder, and the contract has been approved by the attorney general, it, together with the plans, specifications, etc., is required to be filed with the auditor of state.

As pertinent to the question presented by you, sections 2320 to 2323, General Code, inclusive, provide as follows:

> "Section 2320. After they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, which increases or decreases the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, shall be made or allowed unless approved by the governor, auditor and secretary of state. When so approved, the plans of the proposed change, with descriptions thereof, specifications of work and bills of material shall be filed with the auditor of state as required with original plans.
> "Section 2321. No allowance shall be made for work performed or materials furnished under the changed plans, descriptions, specifications or bills of material unless a contract therefor is made in writing before the labor is performed or material furnished, showing distinctly the change. Such contract shall be subject to the conditions and provisions imposed upon original contracts, and approved by the attorney general.
> "Section 2322. All changes in a contract of less than one thousand dollars shall be in writing with full specifications and estimates, become part of the original contract, and be filed with the auditor of state. The aggregate of such changes in the contract, plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications shall not increase the cost of the construction more than two and one-half per cent. of the original contract price.
> "Section 2323. No contract shall be made for labor or materials at a price in excess of the entire estimate thereof. The entire contract or contracts, including estimates of expenses for architects and otherwise, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount authorized by law for such institution, building or improvement, addition thereto or alteration thereof."

As the increased cost to meet the situation presented will exceed one thousand dollars, the approval and consent of the governor, auditor and secretary of state will be necessary before a change can be made in the plans and specifications to meet the situation presented, and the work to be performed and material to be furnished under the changed plans and specifications must be covered by contract in writing, which contract shall be subject to the conditions and provisions imposed by law upon the original contract, and must be approved by the attorney general. It is likewise necessary that the whole of the contract price for the construction of this building must not be in excess of the entire estimate thereof, that is, it must be within the original estimate, and the statute made covering the matter of the increased cost.

Section 2322, General Code, provides "the aggregate of such changes in the contract, plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, shall not increase the cost of the construction more than two and one-half per cent. of the original contract price." It is clear, however, from a consideration of section 2322, General Code, as a whole, as well as of section 786 R. S., from which this section was codified, that the provisions just quoted have reference to changes in the original contract of less than $1,000.00, and that they have no application to changes increasing or decreasing the cost to exceed $1,000.00, when made with the consent of the governor, auditor and secretary of state. The only limitation on the changes so made is that the contract for the construction of the building according to the changed plans and specifications must not call for a cost price for the construction of the same exceeding the entire estimate, that is, the estimate made covering the matter of the estimated cost of the building according to the changed plans and specifications.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—PROPERTY SITUATED IN BUTLER COUNTY, LEMON TOWNSHIP, OHIO.

Abstract of title of property situated in Butler county, Lemon township, Ohio, shows the S. & M. Margolis Realty Company, of Dayton, Ohio, to have a fee simple title to said real estate; the deed to the state of Ohio is sufficient in form to convey to the state a fee simple title.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 16th, requesting my opinion as to the sufficiency of the title disclosed by the abstract and deed from the S. & M. Margolis Realty Company of Dayton, Ohio, accompanying your letter, which real estate is described as follows, to wit:

> "Situated in the county of Butler in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Lemon, and bounded and described as follows:
> "Being a tract of land in section 18, Lemon township, Butler county, Ohio, lying north of the foot of the slope of the original levee embankment on the west side of the Middletown feeder to the Miami and Erie Canal and the Middletown Hydraulic.
> "Commencing at the center of a concrete monument that bears S. 16 deg. 30' W. 99 feet from a cross on the first or lower step of the northerly buttress wall at the north end of the head gates of the Middletown feeder to the Miami and Erie Canal, which monument also bears S. 66 deg. 45' W. From a cross on the abutment wall at the south end of the head gates across the Middletown feeder; thence along the west line of the original levee embankment by the following courses and distances; N. 17 deg. 20′ E. 152.45 feet to the center of a concrete monument; thence N. 27 deg. 54′ E. 152.2 feet; thence N. 35 deg. 30′ E. 586.1 feet to the center of a concrete monument at the foot of the original embankment of the canal feeder and in the center of the old farm levee that originally formed the line between lands owned by the Middletown Hydraulic Company and the lands formerly owned by J. S. Stoutenborough; thence N. 3 deg. 53′ E. along the center line of this farm levee 435.1 feet the center of a concrete monument at the north end of the tract herein conveyed; thence S. 45 deg. 22′ W. 410 feet; thence S. 30 deg. 16′ W. 780 feet to the center of a concrete monument; thence S. 40 deg. 48′ E. 304.7 feet to the place of beginning, and containing 6.48 acres, more or less."

The abstractor's certificate is deficient in that it fails to state whether his examination disclosed any pending suits, living judgments, executions, foreign or domestic, or tax sales against the above described land or the owner thereof. No examination appears to have been made of the records of the United States court to determine the existence of liens, judgments or bankruptcy proceedings therein against the owner of said real estate, and I suggest that in lieu of such examination a certificate of the clerk of said court covering these matters, be attached to the abstract. The abstract does not disclose the existence of any liens except a mortgage on 15-100 of an acre of the land; the taxes for the last half of the year 1913, due June 20, 1914, amounting to $45.33; and the undetermined taxes for the year 1914.

Subject only to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the abstract shows the present owner, the S. & M. Margolis Company, to have a fee simple title to said real estate. The deed to the state of Ohio is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and is sufficient in form to convey to the state a fee simple title.

The abstract, deed, etc., are enclosed herewith.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF A DEPUTY CLERK TO BE APPOINTED PROBATION OFFICER IN PROBATE OFFICE.

A deputy clerk in the probate office may also be appointed a probation officer in the probate office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. E. C. PECK, Probate Judge, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 17, 1914, asking the following questions:

"First. Can the deputy clerk in the probate office be also appointed a probation officer and draw the emoluments, or fees, for both positions lawfully?

"Second. What, if any, fees are allowed to the probate judge for his fee fund, and by whom payable, in the matter of applications and investigations for mothers' pensions under the mothers' pension law, so-called, of Ohio?

"Third. What fees, if any, can be allowed to a person or committee, other than the probation officer, for making an investigation and report of the applicant, as required by law?"

Section 1584, General Code, reads:

"Each probate judge shall have the care and custody of the files, papers, books, and records belonging to the probate office. He is authorized to perform the duties of clerk of his own court. He may appoint a deputy clerk or clerks, each of whom shall take an oath of office before entering upon the duties of his appointment, and when so qualified, may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. Each probate judge may take a bond with such surety from his deputy as he deems necessary to secure the faithful performance of the duties of his appointment."

By virtue of section 2980-1, General Code, the salary of the deputy clerks is fixed by the probate judge from the amount allowed him by the county commissioners for clerk hire.

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be first, second and third assistants. Such chief probation officer and the first, second and third assistants, shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, that of the first assistant shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and of the second and third shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum, each payable monthly. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

The rule of incompatibility is stated by Judge Dillon, at page 727 of volume 1, of his work on municipal corporations, as follows:

"Incompatibility in offices exists when the nature and duties of the two offices are such as to render it improper from the considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to retain both."

From a consideration of the duties of the deputy clerk of the probate court and probation officer, I can see nothing that would make the two offices incompatible under the above rule, and it is my opinion that they may be held by one and the same person, providing, of course, that it is physically possible for one person to properly attend to the work of both offices.

Your second and third questions are answered by an opinion of this department under date of July 20, 1914, in which it was held that no fees or costs of any character whatever are to be charged or collected from any source on account of proceedings of the mothers' pension act, prior to the filing of a motion to set aside or vacate or modify a judgment or allowance, and no compensation by way of fees is to be charged or collected from any source by the probation officer, associated charities organization, humane society or any other competent person or agent directed by the court to prepare and file the written report of preliminary examination, as provided by section 6383-3. I am enclosing a copy of this opinion for your information.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES ON MONEY BELONGING TO THE WOOD, WIRE AND METAL LATHERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION

Money in bank belonging to the Wood, Wire and Metal Lathers' International Union is taxable, the union not being an institution of purely public charity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of March 13, 1914, you requested my opinion as to whether or not money in bank belonging to the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers' International Union is taxable. With your letter you submit correspondence with the general secretary-treasurer of the union, and a copy of its constitution in effect December 1, 1912.

In an opinion heretofore rendered to you I advised the commission that insofar as sections 5364, 5365 and 5365-1 of the General Code were invalid, under the constitution of 1851 they are to be regarded as now unconstitutional and of no effect, the verbal change made in article XII, section 2, of the constitution, not having the effect of validating them to the extent that they might be regarded as consistent with the amended section. In that opinion I did not attempt to pass upon the extent to which, if at all, any of these sections might be regarded as valid, under the constitution of 1851. I may say, however, that in my opinion, insofar as section 5364 provides for the exemption of moneys and other property belonging to secret benevolent organizations maintaining a lodge system, etc., it was unconstitutional and void, at least to the extent that exemption was thereby attempted to be afforded to the property of organizations which do not constitute "institutions of purely public charity" within the rule laid down in Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S., 144.

At the same time, there was in effect under the constitution of 1851, a statute authorizing the exemption of property of "institutions of public charity only" (section 5353, General Code), which statute, for obvious reasons, so long as article XII, section 2, as adopted in 1851, was in effect, could have no exempting effect beyond the limits prescribed by the constitution, viz.: "institutions of purely public charity;" for which reason it seems reasonably clear that the phrase "public charity only" (a substitute for "purely public charity" introduced in process of codification), means exactly the same thing as the constitutional phrase itself.

It so happens that section 5353 of the General Code, of all the tax exemption statutes, is the only one which has been amended since January 1, 1913, when the amended constitution became effective (see 103 O. L., 548). In its amended form, however, it still limits its force to "institutions of public charity only," the amendment being, in respects, immaterial to the present inquiry. And because this portion of the section was unchanged, I am clearly of the opinion that though passed under a constitution permitting the exemption of the property of charitable institutions, without regard to the public nature of the charity, this statute is still limited to institutions of purely public charity, within the meaning of that term as defined by the courts. In other words, though, when section 5353 was amended, the legislature might, constitutionally, have made it extend to all exclusively charitable institutions, it did not do so, but left if as it had been before, viz.: limited to institutions of purely public charity.

From what has been said it follows that the property of the organization in question, if exempt from taxation, must be brought within the scope of section 5353 of the General Code, as amended.

There is an interesting question now pending in the supreme court in the case of Benjamin F. Rose Institute vs. The Treasurer of Cuyahoga county, on rehearing, respecting the exemption, under section 5353, of moneys and credits appropriated solely to sustain an institution of purely public charity. That is, the question is as to whether such property, as distinguished from real and tangible personal property directly used in the administration of the charity, is exempt under the section; but this question, which may be regarded as an open one, is not reached in the case you submit until it has been decided that the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers' International Union is "an institution of purely public charity."

The object of the institution, as stated in the constitution, is as follows:

> "To encourage and formulate local unions of the craft, the closer amalgamation of locals under one head, to establish the eight-hour day, to effect an equitable adjustment of all differences arising from time to time between our members and their employers, to the end that trade quarrels, strikes and lockouts, may be reduced to a minimum, to more thoroughly inculcate the principles of unionism, and secure an improvement of the conditions under which we labor."

So far as this statement is concerned, the general benefits of the organization, as a whole, are mutual in character; i. e., restricted to the membership of the local unions, under the jurisdiction of the International Union.

The membership of the local unions is regulated by the constitution of the International Union, as follows:

> "The qualifications necessary to entitle an applicant to membership shall be left entirely to the will of each local; but in no case shall any person be admitted to membership in any local union of this organization as a member who has not previously worked two years at the trade of lathing. And that no one shall be discriminated against for race or color."

There are numerous other provisions respecting membership, which I need not quote. Suffice it to state that membership is not open to all lathers on the same terms, but that, apparently, members are chosen such by action of those who are already members.

The revenue provisions of the constitution authorize the collection of a certain per capita tax and initiation fees and assessments, and include the following:

> "All revenue collected shall be placed in one general fund, from which all expenses, death benefits and outlays of any nature shall be paid."

The matter of the disbursement of these funds by the following:

"On the death of a member who is in good standing, both with the International and with his local union, a funeral benefit will be paid, subject to the conditions hereinafter set forth."

Here follow certain conditions:

"On the death of a member whose record conforms to the foregoing conditions, the funeral benefit, to which the deceased brother is entitled, will be paid to the person who has assumed the obligations of the interment, subject to receipted bills for the expense, forwarded to headquarters, and if there be a wife, mother, father or sister, who has been dependent on the deceased brother, any balance over the funeral expenses will go to such parties in the order named. * * *"

The foregoing are indicative of the nature of all the material provisions which I find in the constitution and laws of the union. I am informed by the correspondence, however, that this organization is affiliated with and a member of the American Federation of Labor. The statement is made that the American Federation of Labor is engaged in public effort for better social conditions of the people of the country, in general, and the inference is that some of the funds of the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers' International Union are contributed, either voluntarily or otherwise, to the support of the American Federation of Labor.

In my opinion, the facts, as I understand them from the papers submitted to me, are not sufficient to constitute the union an "institution of purely public charity." So far as the organization itself is concerned, it is clearly and admittedly a mutual affair and the question, thus far, is certainly governed by Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, supra.

The mere fact that the union is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor does not change the aspect of the case. The American Federation of Labor may be and doubtless is an institution of purely public charity. Its property located within the state of Ohio might be exempt from taxation, but its affiliated unions, which contribute to its fund, cannot, for that reason, be held to absorb its characteristics. It would be as logical to hold that a manufacturing corporation would become an institution of purely charity by reason of membership in an associated charities organization.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that none of the property of the Wood, Wire & Metal Lathers' International Union is exempt from taxation.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

IMPROVEMENT OF ROADS OF A TOWNSHIP BY GRAVELING WITHOUT A VOTE OF THE PEOPLE—INCREASING TAX LEVY.

Inasmuch as no bonds can be issued under section 7033, et seq., General Code, to improve roads of a township by graveling without a vote of the people, tax levies for the retirement of such bonds are outside of the ten mill limitation, and an election under section 5649-5, General Code, to increase the tax levy will be necessary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. R. H. PATCHIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 7th, you request my opinion as to whether or not it is practicable for a certain township in Geauga county to proceed under sections 7033 et seq. of the General Code to improve the roads of the township, by graveling, at the expense of the general tax duplicate, when it is certain that the taxes necessary to be levied, if within the limitations of the Smith law, together with other taxes, as to which it is now certain that levies must be made, will cause the ten-mill limit of the Smith law to be exceeded.

In so far as your question involves purely legal consideration, I would answer it by saying that it does not follow that the ten-mill limitation of the Smith law is an obstacle, under the circumstances mentioned. That limitation which is provided for by section 5649-2, as amended 103 O. L., 552, is exclusive of the levies "for sinking fund and interest purposes * * * necessary to provide for any indebtedness * * * incurred by a vote of the people." Sections 7033 et seq. contain authority to issue bonds upon a vote of the people for the purpose of making the improvement. In fact, section 7037, General Code, seems to require the submission to the electors the question of issuing bonds as a condition precedent to all other actions. It reads as follows:

> "Before the improvement of any of the public ways shall be undertaken, and before bonds shall be issued to pay for such improvements, the question of improving the public ways and of issuing bonds shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the road district, at a general or special election. The trustees shall cause not less than ten days' notice to be given in the manner provided by law for other general or special elections of the purpose, time and place of holding the election and the aggregate amount of the bonds."

The question to be submitted is specified in section 7039, as follows:

> "The clerk of the township shall file a certified copy of such resolution with the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county in which the road district is located, not less than fifteen days before the time therein fixed for the election. The deputy state supervisors of elections shall cause to be prepared and furnished, at the expense of the township, ballots for the election, on which shall appear the words 'Road improvement bonds—yes,' 'Road improvement bonds—no.' "

Section 7051 providing for the tax levy, is as follows:

> "The trustees shall provide means to pay the expense and cost of such improvements, and to pay the principal and interest of such bonds, by a general tax levied upon the taxable property of the respective road districts. The levies for such tax shall be certified to the county auditor as provided by law in the case of other levies of township trustees."

So that it appears that indebtedness incurred for the purpose of graveling roads, as provided for by section 7033, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 475, would be an indebtedness provided for by a vote of the people, within the meaning of the Smith law; and, therefore, the levies authorized in section 7051, General Code, would be exempt from the one per cent. limitation.

Such levies would have to be made, however, within the fifteen-mill limitation of section 5649-5b, as amended 103 O. L., 57. I take it, however, from your reference to section 5649-5 et seq., that there is, so to speak, room between the ten-mill limit and the fifteen-mill limit within which the expenses of such a road improvement might be cared for. Therefore, I assume that the conclusion at which I have arrived, namely, that if the vote of the electors, required in the related sections, is taken, the levies provided therein are outside of the ten-mill limitation, is sufficient for your purposes.

I may add that under section 5649-3a, General Code, levies in road districts, while apparently subject to the inclusive limitations of the act, are not subject to the control of the budget commission, so that it is possible, under the law as it stands, for a road district to be created and for levies, in that district, to take precedence over levies for current expenses of the various governmental subdivisions. However, that question does not seem to be involved in your inquiry.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION TO FIX SALARIES OF ITS EMPLOYES—POWERS OF COUNCIL.

Section 19 of the civil service act, section 586-19, General Code, does not confer upon the municipal civil service commission the power to fix the salaries of its employes; these salaries are to be fixed by council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of July 28, 1914, submit the following inquiry:

> "Has the municipal civil service commission of a city the authority to fix salaries of examiners, physicians and clerks in their department, or is such authority lodged in the city council?"

Section 19 of the civil service act, section 486-19, General Code, provides among other things:

> "Such municipal civil service commission shall prescribe, amend and enforce rules not inconsistent with the provisions of this act for the classification of positions in the civil service of such city and city school district, for examinations and registrations therefor, and for appointments, promotions, transfers, layoffs, suspensions, reductions and reinstatements therein, for standardizing positions and maintaining efficiency therein. Said municipal commission shall have and exercise all other powers and perform all other duties with respect to the civil service of such city and city school district, as herein prescribed and conferred upon the state civil service commission with respect to the civil service of the state; and all authority granted to the state commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction shall be held to grant the same authority to the municipal commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction. The expense and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city."

By virtue of this section the "expense and salaries of any such municipal commission" are to be determined by council.

As to the clerks and employes of the state civil service commission, that commission is specifically given power to fix the salaries of such clerks and employes.

In section 5 of civil service act, section 486-5, General Code, it is provided in part:

"* * * The salary of the chief examiner shall be fixed by the commission, subject to the approval of the governor. * * *

"The commission may also appoint such examiners, inspectors, clerks and other assistants as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and fix their salaries. * * *"

Section 4214, General Code, provides:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

Under section 19 of the civil service act, supra, the municipal civil service commission, as to the service under its jurisdiction, is granted the same power and authority as the state civil service commission has as to the state civil service. This provision has reference to the power and authority over the positions in the classified service, and those making appointments to the classified service. It does not grant to the municipal civil service commission the power to fix the salaries of the examiners, physicians and clerks of such municipal civil service commission.

The council has the power to fix the salaries of the employes of the municipal civil service commission.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FORMATION OF A CORPORATION FOR THE PURPOSE OF EDUCATION, AMUSEMENT AND INSTRUCTION—RIGHT TO ACQUIRE AND OWN PROPERTY.

A corporation formed for social purposes, education, amusement and instruction of singing may acquire and hold real property for the purpose of erecting a club house or headquarters.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Acknowledging receipt of your letter of July 21st, with its enclosure, a communication addressed to you by Mr. I. B. Miller, of Youngstown, and submitting the general question as to whether a corporation formed for "social purposes, education, amusement and instruction in singing" may acquire and hold real property, I beg to state that in my opinion such a corporation may exercise the franchise in question.

Section 8627, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Upon filing articles of incorporation, the persons who subscribed them, their associates, successors and assigns, by the name and style provided therein shall be a body corporate, with succession, power to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with; also, unless specially limited, to acquire and hold all property, real or personal, necessary to effect the object for which it is created, and at pleasure convey it in conformity with its regulations and the laws of this state. Such corporation also may make, use, and at will alter a common seal, and do all other acts needful to accomplish the purposes of its organization."

As is apparent, the office of this section is to define statutory powers incidental to a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio. It is general in its terms, and its force is not limited to corporations for profit.

In the specific case submitted, then, the question is as to what real property is "necessary to effect the objects for which it (the particular corporation) is created."

In my opinion such real estate as may be necessary to effect the object of promoting social activities, and particularly education, amusement and instruction in singing, may be acquired, held and conveyed by this corporation.

I note from the letter of Mr. Miller that the realty which it is desired to acquire is for the purpose of erecting a club house or headquarters. Undoubtedly the corporation has power to acquire such property, there being no purpose to deal in real estate commercially or to promote any business or other purpose aside from the objects of the corporation itself.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF A SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT—UNDER THE BENSE ACT, CITY AUDITOR'S CERTIFICATE, THAT THE MONEY IS IN THE TREASURY MAY BE ISSUED AFTER THE BONDS HAVE BEEN AUTHORIZED.

If a sewage disposal plant is being constructed upon the order of the state board of health under the Bense act, the city auditor's certificate that the money necessary for the contract is in the treasury, etc., may be issued after the bonds have been authorized and before they are sold; contra, if the plant is not being constructed under the act mentioned.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. WALTER S. RUFF, City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 30th, receipt whereof has been acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the city auditor lawfully certify that the money necessary for a contract for the construction of a sewage disposal plant is in the treasury and appropriated for the purpose, as required in section 3806, General Code, if bonds for the purpose of providing the necessary funds have been duly authorized but have not been issued and sold?

This question invites consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

> "Section 3806. No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement, or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force.
> "Section 3807. All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or a board, officer or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any party from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order.
> "Section 3810. Money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes sold and in process of delivery, shall for the purpose of the certificate that the money for the specific purpose is in the treasury, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund."

Standing by themselves these provisions furnish a complete answer to your question nor is their application affected by the decision of the supreme court in Emmert vs.

Elyria, 74 O. S., 185, and Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, as both of these decisions were predicated upon the fact that the money necessary for the improvement was at the time of entering into the contract actually in the treasury. Therefore, if these statutes govern the case which you have in mind, it is clear that the certificate of the auditor cannot lawfully be made under the circumstances mentioned; and that further, without such certificate the contract is invalid.

But I note that you mention section 1259, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Each municipal council, department, or officer having jurisdiction to provide for the raising of revenues by tax levies, sale of bonds, or otherwise, shall take all steps necessary to secure the funds for any such purpose or purposes. When so secured, or the bonds thereof have been authorized by the proper municipal authority, such funds shall be considered as in the treasury and appropriated for such particular purpose, or purposes, and shall not be used for any other purpose * * *."

This section is a part of the so-called "Bense Act," relative to the securing of a proper water supply, and a proper means of purifying or disposing of sewage of a municipal corporation. The scheme embodied in the related sections may be described as follows:

Provision is made for a complaint to the state board of health relative to the source of water supply of a municipal corporation, or the method by which it is disposing of its sewage. The state board of health conducts a hearing, and, with the approval of the governor and attorney general, may issue such orders as when complied with will result in the installation of works or means sufficient to obviate the existing evil and to safeguard the public health.

In my opinion the provisions of section 1259 are applicable only to the construction of such works as are ordered by the state board of health. Your letter does not disclose whether or not the sewage disposal plant of which you speak is one, the construction of which has been so ordered.

If the proceedings are being undertaken under the Bense act, then, in my opinion, section 1259 controls and must be read in connection with section 3806. Such a construction would permit the auditor to issue a certificate as soon as the bonds have been authorized without waiting for them to be sold and in process of delivery.

On the other hand, if the proceedings are not under the Bense act, I am of the opinion that section 1259 has no application, and that section 3806 and related sections standing by themselves control.

In a word, then, I am of the opinion that if the sewage disposal plant, of which you speak, is being constructed under the Bense act, the auditor's certificate relative to the existence of funds, etc., may be issued after the bonds are authorized, but before they are sold and in process of delivery; but that if the plant is being constructed, otherwise than under the Bense act, a contrary result will follow as already indicated.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SECURING NEW SITE IN ORDER TO REPLACE SCHOOL HOUSE CONDEMNED OR DESTROYED—FIXING LEVIES.

If a board of education deems it necessary to secure a new site in order to replace a school house condemned or destroyed, the tax levies necessary for the purposes of such site are not within the exemption of section 7630-1 and 7630-2, General Code, but must be made within all the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 18, 1914.

HON. H. F. CASTLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 2nd, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "I am somewhat in doubt as to the construction to be placed upon section 7630-1 as amended in volume 103, page 527, Ohio Laws, the same being an act with relation to the replacement of a school house condemned or destroyed, as to whether this enactment confers upon a board of education the right to issue bonds for the purpose of purchasing a new site."

The section to which you direct my attention is as follows:

> "Section 7630-1. If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accomodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

It is clear that this section confers authority to issue bonds only for the purpose of rebuilding, repairing and constructing school houses. The authority to issue bonds for the purpose of acquiring a site for a school house is to be found in section 7625, General Code. Interest and sinking fund levies for the retirement of bonds issued for the purpose of securing a site for a school house must be made within the limitations of the Smith law.

Upon the approval of the electors, as provided in section 7625, then, to the extent that they involve the acquisition of a site, at least, they are subject to the fifteen mill limitation as imposed by section 5649-5b, as amended 103 O. L. 57; and this limitation cannot be exceeded, as you suggest, by a vote of the people taken under authority of sections 5649-5b and 5649-5a, General Code.

In short, then, I am of the opinion that in no way can bonds be issued for the acquisition of a school house site so as to take out of the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith law the interest and sinking fund levies necessary to retire such bonds; but that under the circumstances mentioned by you a separate issue of bonds for the construction of a new school house on a new site, when the necessity for having a new school house arises from the condemnation of the old one by the state authorities, and the other conditions of section 7631 have been satisfied, the interest and sinking fund levies to retire such bonds are outside of the fifteen mill limitation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTOMOBILE DISPLAY—DISTINCTIVE NUMBER NOT REQUIRED IN CERTAIN CASES.

The provisions of the General Code in reference to the display of a distinctive number on each automobile does not apply to vehicles in sales rooms, show rooms, etc., but those alone that are in operation on a public highway.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1914.

HON. W. A. RHULMAN, Member of the General Assembly, Hamden, Vinton County, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 23, 1914, wherein you say:

> "Referring to my conversation with you concering the automobile law, I want to call your attention to the fact that section 6301 provides: a manufacturer or dealer in motor vehicles shall make application, and the distinctive number, which must be carried and displayed by each motor vehicle while it is operated on a public highway, until it is sold or let for hire. Now, if it is necessary to describe in section 6301 that the placard must be displayed while driven upon a public highway, why is it not necessary for section 12613 to provide when the placard shall be displayed?"

In reply thereto I beg to say that I have examined the sections to which you refer, namely, sections 6301 and 12613 of the General Code, and to me they seem quite clear in reference to the point you call my attention to. Section 6301 provides, in part as follows:

> "A manufacturer or dealer in motor vehicles shall make application for registration for each make of motor vehicles * * * and the secretary of state shall assign * * * a distinctive number, which must be carried and displayed by each motor vehicle * * * while it is operated on a public highway. * * *."

Section 12613 provides, in part, as follows:

> "Whoever * * * fails to have the distinctive number and registration mark furnished by the secretary of state for such motor vehicle, displayed on the front and rear thereof * * * shall be fined * * *."

As I understand your question, you desire to know if the words underscored in quoted section 6301 above, namely: "While it is operated on a public highway" should not be likewise inserted in penal section 12613 so as to make section 12613 clear. I do not think that is necessary, as penal section 12613 refers to all that which precedes it, and moreover, in reading section 12613 wherein it says: "Whoever * * * fails to have the distinctive number * * * for such motor vehicle" the word "such" refers to such motor vehicle as is operated on a public highway, and could not be taken to mean all vehicles including those in sales rooms, show rooms, etc., but those alone that are in operation on the public highway.

I am of the opinion therefore, that section 12613 read in conjunction with sections to which it refers is perfectly clear and unambiguous without the insertion of the words incorporated in section 6301 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF COMPLAINTS HOLDING OFFICE ILLEGALLY—DE FACTO OFFICERS—DE JURE OFFICER—APPOINTMENTS INVALID WHERE ALL ARE MADE FROM A CITY OF THE COUNTY.

1. Where the three members of the board of complaints for the district of Lucas connty are residents of the city of Toledo, the board of complaints is not a legally organized body; the appointments are invalid and no member of the board is a de jure officer, that is to say in a direct proceeding brought for that purpose all of them as individuals could be ousted from the positions which they hold.

2. If the members of the board of complaints of Lucas county act as de facto officers their acts as such would be valid and binding as those of de jure officers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 24, 1914.

HON. CHARLES M. MILROY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 10th, previously acknowledged, states that all three of the members of the board of complaints for the district of Lucas county are residents of the city of Toledo, and requests my advice on the following questions growing out of this situation:

"1. Is the board of complaints as organized a lawful body?
"2. Would any action that might be taken by the board be valid?"

I interpret your letter as meaning that at the time the three members of the board were appointed they were all residents of the city; not that one of them when appointed resided elsewhere and subsequently moved into the city.

The provision of law which under the facts stated gives rise to the questions which you have in mind is section 13 of the Warnes law, so-called, 130 O. L., 786-790, therein designated as section 5591, General Code. The pertinent language is as follows:

> "Not more than two members of the district board of complaints shall be of the same political party; and no more than two members thereof shall be residents of the same township, city or village; provided, however, that if the amount of taxable property in any city within an assessment district exceeds the amount of taxable property outside of such city and within the assessment district, two members of the district board of complaints in any such assessment district may be residents of such city. Whenever any member of the district board of complaints by reason of removal from one township, city or village, or otherwise ceases to possess any of the qualifications required in this section his office shall be vacant."

The facts stated by you and interpreted in the manner already described seem to be such as to eliminate consideration of the last sentence above quoted. This is not a case of one or more members ceasing to possess the qualifications required by the section. That one may cease to have a qualification implies that he has at one time had it and lost it. Furthermore, it would be impossible to determine which one of the three members is, as an individual member disqualified, and in whose position there is a vacancy within the meaning of this sentence. All three are residents of Toledo, and were at the time of their appointment. A vacancy in one position would serve to qualify the other two members of the board; but it cannot be said that any particular position is vacant.

I am of the opinion, however, that the last sentence of the section, as I have quoted it, does serve to show the interpretation which is to be put upon the remaining provisions of the section, and I agree with you that in the light of all the related provisions it is mandatory upon the tax commission, which is the appointing authority, to have regard to the qualification of location in making the appointment. Failing to do this, its appointments would be void. The commission has failed to make its appointments so as to comply with the statute, and in my opinion none of the appointments is valid.

I take it that, in asking whether or not the board is a lawfully constituted body you mean to inquire whether the appointments are valid, and the members of the board are de jure officers. For the reasons already stated I am of the opinion that the appointments are invalid and that none of the members of the board is a de jure officer that is to say in a direct proceeding brought for the purpose all of them as individuals could be ousted from the positions which they hold.

This answer to your first question does not carry with it a negative answer to your second question. While the persons who are holding the office of members of the board of complaints for Lucas county have no right to hold their positions, the board of complaints of the district as such, has legal existence, that is to say, there is such an office or tribunal, which it is the duty of the tax commission of Ohio to fill in a legal manner, but which if not so filled may, nevertheless, be discharged with respect to its powers and duties by any persons of the requisite number holding their positions under such color of authority as to constitute them de facto officers.

I take it that there can be no serious question as to the rule that the acts of de facto officers are valid and are not subject to collateral attack. There are many decisions in this state upon the general rule, and I need not cite numerous decisions to that effect. This rule as to the validity of the acts of de facto officers applies in matters of taxation as well as elsewhere.

Smith vs. Lynch, treasurer, 29 O. S., 261.

Indeed, I am clearly of the opinion that if the members of the board of complaints for Lucas county act as de facto officers, their acts as such would be as valid and binding as those of de jure officers.

As to what is necessary in order to constitute one a de facto officer the authorities usually hold that the prime requisite is the existence of a de jure office. There can be no doubt on that score in the case submitted by you. As a matter of law, there is, or should be, a tribunal known as the district board of complaints.

The second requisite constituting a person an officer de facto is actual possession of the office. In the present case no one, other than the three appointees, is assuming to act as member of the district board of complaints. Your letter fails to disclose whether or not any acts have been done by the members of the board of a nature sufficient to constitute the assumption of the possession of their several offices. The board "has as yet conducted no business," but I assume that the members of the board may have met and organized as required by law (section 16 of the Warnes law), and perhaps have acted insofar as they could without the assistance of the county auditor, so as to assert possession of the office.

The next criterion of a de facto officer is found in the rule that his possession must be under color of title. It seems to me that there can be no question about the existence of this requisite, the tax commission's certificate of appointment is sufficient color of title.

It will thus be seen that all the prime requisites of de facto officers are possessed by the incumbents of positions of members of the board of complaints for Lucas county. The mere fact that they are ineligible to the office, or rather that one of them is ineligible to the office, does not defeat the operation of the rule.

See Constantineau on the De Facto Doctrine, chapter 12.

There is but one circumstance which might affect the case and impair the validity of the acts or attempted acts of the persons in question. The board of complaints certainly could not act without the concurrence of the auditor. He must be their secretary. (Section 16 of the Warnes law); complaints to the board must be filed with him (Section 24 of the Warnes law), and can come before the board only through his action. (Section 25 of the Warnes law.)

Your question, however, seems to put all such considerations out of the case; for if the board can only act with the concurrence of the auditor, then it would appear that you have in mind, in inquiring with respect to the validity of their acts, the supposition that the auditor, if advised that these persons might so act as to render their official determination valid and binding, would recognize them as members of the board of complaints.

Answering your second question in full, then, I am of the opinion that if the county auditor should lay the complaints which have been filed before the board of complaints, as it is now constituted, and the persons composing it in fact should act upon such complaints, their action would be valid and binding.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION MUST DISPENSE WITH OFFICE OF TREASURER OF SCHOOL MONEYS WHEN A DEPOSITORY HAS BEEN PROVIDED.

Under the provisions of section 4782, General Code, it is mandatory upon the board of education to dispense with the office of treasurer of school moneys when a depository has been provided therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, City Solicitor, Niles, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 3, 1914, you submitted to this department a request for an opinion construing section 4782 of the General Code, as amended (104 O. L., p. 159). You state in your communication:

> "The amended section is identical with the original except that one word is changed. The word 'shall' has replaced the word 'may' in the fourth line. It was apparently the intention to dispense with the office of treasurer of school moneys absolutely, or else this section has not been changed from its former meaning. However, a vote of the board is still required to accomplish this."

You then inquire as follows:

> "Is there not such an inconsistency therefore, that it is still optional with the board as to whether or not it shall dispense with the office in question?"

Section 4782 of the General Code, as amended (104 O. L., p. 159), provides as follows:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school district."

In amending said section the only change that the legislature made was to change the word "may" to the word "shall" which latter word is italicized in the above quoted section. Prior to its amendment, this section by the use of the word "may" in place of the word "shall" was merely directory and it was optional with the board of education as to whether or not it should dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district, when a depository had been provided for such school moneys of the district, as authorized by law. By virtue of the change made by the legislature in amending said section, it is apparent that it was the intention of the legislature to make it mandatory upon boards of education to dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such district, when a depository for school moneys of such district has been provided as authorized by law. In other words, the section, I take it, now means that when a depository has been provided for school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, then the board of education of such district shall dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. The clause "by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members', merely points out or directs the manner or method by which this mandatory duty of so dispensing with the treasurer of school moneys shall be carried out. That is to say, in other words, said section is mandatory in requiring the board of education to dispense with the treasurer of its school moneys when a depository has been provided for the same, as authorized by law, by the adoption of a resolution to that effect by a majority vote of the members of such board.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that there is not such inconsistency in said section as to make it still optional with the board as to whether or not it shall dispense with the office of the treasurer of the school moneys, but on the contrary, the provision of dispensing with such treasurer upon the creation of such depository, is now made mandatory.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, UNDER THE LAND REGISTRATION ACT ARE ONLY REQUIRED TO FURNISH SUPPLIES AS THEY IN DISCRETION DEEM NECESSARY FOR THE USE OF THE EXAMINER OF TITLES.

The county commissioners are under no absolute duty to furnish an examiner of titles, under the land registration act, furniture, office, clerical hire and telephone. They are to furnish at the expense of the county only such supplies as they in the exercise of sound discretion deem necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act, and only such supplies as the county commissioners deem necessary can be furnished at the present time by the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 6, 1914, you write as follows:

> "Kindly refer to Ohio Sessions Laws 103, section 8572-1, with particular reference to section 8572-91, of what is commonly called the "Torrens act." The question now arises as to the construction of section 8572-91. Under this section it is contended by the incumbent to this office that it is the duty of the county commissioners to not only furnish all books, blanks and papers, but also to furnish an office in the county court house, together with all office supplies, including telephone, office furniture and clerical hire necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act. This section is so broad that we are anxious to have your office give us a ruling as to just how far our county commissioners shall go in complying with its terms."

Section 91 of the land registration act of this state (103 O. L., 953) reads thus:

> "All books, blanks, papers and other things necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act shall be furnished by the county commissioners at the expense of the county."

This section, as you suggest, confers broad discretionary powers on the county commissioners. The question of what is necessary for carrying out the provisions of the act being a question which rests largely within the judgment of the county commissioners.

In arriving at a conclusion upon this question they should take into consideration all of the conditions surrounding the operation of the act in their county, giving especial thought to the number of applications for registration filed. There is nothing in the law which, in express terms, requires the furnishing and equipment of an office for examiners, and if this allowance is to be made at all it must be under the implied power conferred by the section just quoted. It would perhaps, in a county wherein the examiner was required to do a great amount of work, be convenient to have the office of the examiner located in the court house, and this might be said to be something necessary under such circumstances, but ordinarily I do not see the propriety of furnishing such examiner with an office, furniture and clerical hire. The fact that the law authorizes the appointment of more than one examiner seems to carry with it the implication that each examiner should do his own work rather than for him to hire an office force to do it for him. If there were only one examiner, and he had a large amount of work to do under the provisions of the act, it might also be said that a telephone would be a proper means of assisting him in the carrying out of the provisions of the act. This would be a convenience to the clerk of courts in notifying the examiner, under section 13, that the court had entered an order referring the application to him.

As I have stated above, these are matters which, to a certain extent, rest within the discretion of the commissioners, who should be very careful not to abuse that discretion, as it would be much better for them to err on the economical rather than on the extravagant side of the matter.

The contention that it is the duty of the county commissioners to furnish an office, with office supplies, etc., is certainly not sound, because the statute does not, in express terms, require this, but seems to leave the matter to the judgment of the commissioners, which judgment would be reviewable if there was a gross abuse of discretion. In view of the fact that this law is in its infancy, and as it is extremely difficult to tell to what extent advantage will be taken of it, it seems to me that the commissioners would be, at the present time, perfectly justified in declining to provide any supplies excepting books, blanks, papers and such other things as they regard as absolutely necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act. I cannot see how a telephone, office furniture, clerical hire and an office can be regarded as "absolutely necessary" at present.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—IMPROVEMENT MAY BE DIVIDED INTO TWO OR MORE SECTIONS OR DIVISIONS IN CONFORMITY TO THE VARYING WIDTH OF THE STREET—ASSESSMENTS OF THE COST OF A STREET IMPROVEMENT WHERE NO DIVISION HAS BEEN MADE MAY BE APPORTIONED AT A UNIFORM RATE FOR THE ENTIRE LENGTH OF THE STREET.

1. In the making of a street improvement the same may be divided into two or more sections or divisions in conformity to the varying width of the street or the improvement thereon, in the assessment ordinance, provided the same does not conflict with any of the preceding ordinances relating to such improvements.

2. Assessments of the cost of a street improvement, where no division into sections has or can be made, may be apportioned at a uniform rate for the entire length of the improvement. The assessment ordinance fixing the amounts chargeable to the several lots abutting on an improvement is not an ordinance of a general nature and therefore need not be published, but the requirements of section 3895, General Code, as to the notice of assessments are mandatory and must be followed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. PAUL BAINTER, City Solicitor, Dresden, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 15, 1914, in which you state and inquire:

> "Where a municipality of this state improves a street under the general laws of this state by grading, curbing and paving same, which is provided for by one resolution of necessity, one ordinance to proceed, one set of plans, specifications, estimates and profiles, which do nothing in the way of dividing the said street or improvement into different sections than to provide that a portion of the street through the middle part of the improvement shall be forty (40) feet wide as to the improvement, and that the portion of the street improved in either direction from the portion shall be improved to a width of thirty (30) feet, which provisions appear only in the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles, all of which are approved by the resolution and ordinance in the usual way, and the method of assessment provided for is the third provided in General Code, section 3812, to wit: 'By the foot frontage of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement,' and which improvement is let in one single contract on one advertisement of same, according to law, may it be divided by council into sections for assessment purposes at the time of the passage of the assessing ordinance, so that the part that as been improved to the width of forty feet shall have one uniform assessment of so much per foot assessed against it, and the part that has been improved to the width of thirty feet shall have a uniform assessment of so much per front foot assessed against it, but differing from the assessment per foot on the forty foot improvement, and being less than that?
> "Second. If so, may it also be assessed at a uniform rate for the entire distance without regard to the width of the improvement?
> "Third. Is it required to publish the assessing ordinance, and if so, what sections so provide, and by what section or sections are such publications controlled?"

In the case of Findlay vs. Frey, 51 O. S., 390, the third paragraph of the syllabus reads:

"Where a street is of different widths, it may, in a proceeding to improve it, be divided into as many sections as there are different widths; and the property on each section assessed for the cost of the same."

Minshall, J., says:

"It is also objected that the assessment on Sandusky street is not uniform. The street was improved in sections, because not of uniform width. Each section is, however, of uniform width, and the assessment thereon the same. The method adopted was a just one. Each section pays for the improvement on it. The same result could have been attained by separate proceedings. This, however, would have added to the expense, without any compensation to the property holders. No good reason is shown why it could not all be done in one, as well as in many, different proceedings."

This, I think, conclusively answers you that the street may divide into sections in the assessment ordinance, provided the same does not conflict with prior ordinances, and each section assessed for the cost of the street per foot front for the section.

In the case of Jaeger vs. Burr, 36 O. S., 164, the council by ordinance assessed the sum of $3.21 upon all lots abutting upon the improvement, except certain described lots which were credited with 2.1621 for the cost of grading and paving the sidewalks, gutters and crossings by the owners. This the court held to be in violation of the statute and the ordinance under which the improvement was made. This, I think answers your first query.

Your second question is answered, as it seems to me, by the cases of Smith vs. Cincinnati, 6 N. P., 175, which is based on the case of Cincinnati vs. Wilder, 26 O. S., 284. In the former case it is said by Jackson, J.:

"We think, a question substantially similar to the one here involved, was decided in the case of Wilder vs. the city of Cincinnati, 26 Ohio St., 284. In the Wilder case it appears that West Eighth street was improved, by grading, from McLean avenue westward to a plank road. The work in question was done in sections; i. e., one section from McLean avenue to Mill Creek bridge; the other from the bridge to the plank road. In the trial of that case the jury made special findings of fact, from which it was apparent that the cost of the improvement per foot was much greater east than west of Mill Creek bridge, and Wilder's property abutted upon that section which was west of Mill Creek bridge. It was, therefore, contended that it was inequitable to have a uniform rate of assessment for the whole street, but that different assessments should be made for the two different sections, so that the assessment would be proportioned to the cost applicable to each particular section. But the supreme court denied the contention, and held that the uniform method of assessment adopted was proper, notwithstanding the affirmative finding that there was a great difference of cost in the improvement of the two sections of the street. In so doing the court said: 'The law seeks to make assessments for improvements of this kind uniform. In this case the object was to ascertain the amount properly chargeable upon Wilder's property. This we suppose was to be done by a rule that would operate uniformly upon all abutters within the assessment district. If it was intended to charge each abutter with the actual cost of the improvement in front of his property, the legislature would have so provided in express terms.' "

In Wilder vs. Cincinnati, 26 O. S., 290, Gilmore, J., says:

"The first special finding fixes the fair and reasonable cost of this portion per front foot, by averaging the more with the less expensive portions of the work. The thirteenth finding is general, having been obtained by multiplying the number of front feet by the average cost per front foot of this portion of the improvement.

"This was right. The law seeks to make assessments for improvements of this kind uniform. In this case, the object was to ascertain the amount 'properly chargeable' upon Wilder's property. This we suppose was to be done by a rule that would operate uniformly on all abutters within the assessment district.

"If it was intended to charge each abutter with the actual cost of the improvement in front of his property, the legislature could have so provided in express terms. Taking into view the general result of the findings of the jury on this subject, we are satisfied that no injustice was done to Wilder by the verdict. His property was assessed with the average cost per front foot of the entire cost of the improvement from Mill Creek bridge to the plank road; no other rule would have been either uniform or equitable."

These cases, without comment, clearly answer your second question in the affirmative. That an assessment ordinance as such need not be published is answered by the opinion already sent you. However, section 3895, General Code, reads:

"Before adopting an assessment made as provided in this chapter, the council shall publish notice for three weeks consecutively, in a newspaper of general circulation in the corporation, that such assessment has been made, and that it is on file in the office of the clerk for the inspection and examination of persons interested therein."

It will be observed that this section does not provide for the publication of an assessment ordinance, but does provide for notice of the making of an assessment before its adoption by council, and inasmuch as you have a paper, published and of general circulation in your municipality, there need be no difficulty in complying with the provisions of this section which I hold to be mandatory.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PURCHASES OF LAND FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES—AMOUNT OF LAND THAT MAY BE PURCHASED.

Sections 3441 and 3455, General Code, must be considered and construed together and in so doing the five acre limit found in section 3455, General Code, will not be held as a limitation upon the amount which may be purchased for cemetery purposes under favor of section 3441, General Code.

The limitation of ten acres in section 3441 and five acres in section 3455 attach to the requirement of lands by appropriation proceedings only, the former as to an original acquisition and the latter to cases where it is sought to increase the area of existing cemeteries and circumstances compel the doing so by appropriation proceedings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. ELI H. SPEIDEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 11th, in which you inquire:

> "I would like to have the opinion of your office as to whether or not, under section 3455 of the General Code, the trustees of a township owning a township cemetery can purchase at private sale an additional tract of land for cemetery purposes, which contains more than five acres, or does the clause contained in said section limiting the amount that may be appropriated to five acres also limit the amount that may be purchased at private sale to a like number of acres?
> "I think that section 3441 of the General Code should be read in connection with this section."

The sections of the General Code for consideration are:

> "Section 3441. Township trustees may accept a conveyance of, or purchase, and inclose, improve, and protect such lands in one or more places within the township as they deem necessary and proper for cemetery purposes. If suitable lands can not be procured by contract on reasonable terms, they may appropriate lands therefor, not to exceed ten acres, by proceedings in accordance with the provisions of law regulating the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations.
> "Section 3455. In any township in which there is a cemetery owned, or partly owned, by such township, if in the opinion of the trustees of the township it is desirable to add to the area of such cemetery by the purchase of additional grounds, and if suitable lands can not be procured by contract on reasonable terms, they may appropriate lands therefor, not exceeding five acres, as provided for establishing a township cemetery, and subject to the same restrictions. For such purpose, they may levy a tax not to exceed one-half of one mill, on the taxable property of the township, for a period not exceeding five years, which shall be collected as other taxes, and appropriated for the purchase or appropriation of such additional cemetery grounds which shall become part of such township cemetery, and be governed in all respects as provided by law."

From a reading of these sections it is clear there is no specific limitation as to the acreage which may be purchased, other than the expression found in section 3441; "as they deem necessary and proper for cemetery purposes," yet there is a limitation in that section as to the amount which may be secured by appropriation proceedings.

There is also a limitation in section 3455, and like the former section, it attaches to land acquired by appropriation proceedings.

Your specific question is whether:

> "* * * the trustees of a township, owning a township cemetery, can purchase at private sale an additional tract of land for cemetery purposes, which contains more than five acres, or does the clause contained in said section limiting the amount that may be appropriated to five acres also limit the amount that may be purchased at private sale to a like number of acres."

While you are correct in your statement that section 3441, General Code, and section 3455, General Code, are to be construed together, I cannot conceive that any construction should be given section 3455, which would operate as a limitation upon the amount that might be purchased under section 3441, and as no appropriation proceedings may be instituted until there is a failure to agree with the owner of the land, I am of the opinion that the limitation of five acres found in section 3455, General Code, attaches only where additional grounds for cemetery purposes are being acquied by appropriation proceedings where the same is being granted as an addition to the cemetery and not as an original acquisition of a cemetery.

Thinking that this answers your question, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALE OF CUBEB CIGARETTES ILLEGAL IN CERTAIN CASES.

Under the provisions of section 12965, General Code, it is illegal to sell cubeb cigarettes to minors under eighteen years of age when such cigarettes are being sold as substitutes for cigarettes made from tobacco.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. J. B. TEMPLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of July 10, 1914, wherein you state that several parties in your county have been arrested for furnishing minors cigarettes contrary to section 12965, General Code. You state that the cigarettes furnished were of tobacco, and that now dealers are selling minors cubeb cigarettes. You ask whether dealers making such sale are amenable to the above section.

Section 12965, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Whoever sells, gives or furnishes to a person under eighteen years of age a cigarette, cigarette wrapper or substitute for either, or a cigar or tobacco, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than two days nor more than thirty days, or both, and for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than three hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than five days nor more than sixty days"

The new Standard dictionary defines a cigarette as follows:

"Cigar made of finely cut tobacco rolled usually in thin paper. 2 (Med.) A similar roll with medicinal filling; as, a cigarette or cubebs."

You state in your letter that cigarettes made of tobacco were formerly sold contrary to the above section, and that now, dealers are selling cubeb cigarettes to minors. No doubt the reason why these minors are buying cubeb cigarettes is because they cannot buy those made from tobacco, and the cubeb cigarettes are being purchased as a substitute for cigarettes made from tobacco.

There may be some question as to whether cubeb cigarettes are cigarettes within the meaning of the statute, but I do not believe that there is any doubt that the cigarettes sold under the above statement of facts are being sold as substitutes for tobacco cigarettes, and in any event, such sales are prohibited by law.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under the circumstances mentioned in your letter, the sale of cubeb cigarettes is prohibited, and that such sale should be stopped immediately.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—RIGHT OF SHERIFFS, MAYORS AND JUDGES TO CALL OUT THE NATIONAL GUARD IN CERTAIN CASES—POWER OF THE GOVERNOR IN REFERENCE TO THE NATIONAL GUARD.

1. Under the provisions of section 5316, General Code, which empowers sheriffs mayors and judges to call out the National Guard in case of tumult, riot, etc., or apprehension thereof, is a valid and constitutional enactment, but such section must be read in connection with the constitutional provision making the governor, commander-in-chief, and with those provisions of the statutes which give the governor control of the National Guard and empower him to issue orders with reference thereto.

2. The power of the enumerated officers to call out the National Guard is subject to the superior discretion and control of the governor as commander-in-chief. The question as to the existence of a reasonable apprehension of tumult, riot, etc., rests with the officers in question, subject to the superiority of the commander-in-chief. The exercise of such discretion may be reviewed by the courts when there is evidence of an arbitrary and unreasonable exercise of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 31st, you submitted the following communication:

"1. The question of use of the Ohio national guard to preserve order and in general do police duty at county fairs came up once or twice last summer, but no determination was ever made of the question.

"2. This morning the secretary of the Madison county fair called on me and requested that I arrange to have company "M," fourth Ohio infantry, stationed at Washington C. H., in Fayette county, go to London, Madison county, to serve during fair week, in the summer of 1914. I told the gentlemen that of course I would not bear the expense of such a movement, but they seemed willing to stand the expense, but just what the absolute legal status of members of the Ohio national guard acting under these circumstances would be is a question that I would like to have settled before I consent to any such arrangements.

"3. After the decision in the courts of Texas, in the case of sergeant Manley, it would seem that a member of the national guard acting as a quasi-policeman is a precarious matter, and I doubt very much whether it would be proper for this department to order troops from Fayette county to Madison county to act in this capacity when they are paid by the fair association.

"4. This has been done for several years in case of the Ohio state fair, where the troops were under orders, but the expense was paid by the Ohio state fair association. This, however, would seem to be a slight exception as the Ohio state fair is a state institution.

"5. The questions raised above are interesting, and some ruling from your department would be of great assistance to me in making up my mind as to my action as this would probably grow to extensive limits if it once starts."

The questions presented being very general in their nature, I am forced to resort to personal conversations and to a communication submitted by judge advocate-general, Hubert J. Turney, for a proper confinement of your questions to the situation directly at hand. The communication of the judge advocate-general is, in part, as follows:

"I herewith enclose communication from General Wood to yourself, upon the question of the use of the national guard at county fairs and in cases of like nature. In this matter is brought up one of the perplexing questions that has created doubt and uncertainty in the national guard for many years. You will note by the section referred to in the opinion that a large number of civil officers have the right, if the law be valid in all its provisions, to call out part or all of the national guard, by organizations whenever, in their judgment, they have reasonable apprehension of disorder. The result has been that in cases like the Wright's homecoming at Dayton, local officers sometime call upon an entire regiment to assemble and do police duty.

"Recently in Cleveland, troops have been repeatedly ordered out to guard the line of automobile races especially when the association is one where there is a large concourse of persons under the auspices of some fraternal society, if the adjutant general, as the representative of the governor, absolutely refuses to order out troops, some county official, who comes within the enumeration of the section referred to, can be found who will order them out, and there is absolutely no provision of law whereby the action of the county official who so orders out the troops, can be reviewed by any higher authority. Then, after the troops have done the duty for which they are ordered, the question of payment always comes up, and in the end a large bill of expense is thrown upon the state for services in which the state was little, if at all, interested.

"It has long been the opinion of the writer, and that opinion has been founded upon a careful examination of the similar laws in other states and otherwise gained, that all of the provisions of the statute referred to, vesting in any one other than the governor, as the constitutional commander-in-chief, such power to so order out the troops is absolutely unconstitutional, because, in contravention of the provisions of the state constitution making the governor commander-in-chief. A chief executive is no longer a commander-in-chief when part of his inherent powers are taken from him and shared by a large number of persons whose acts he is without power to control."

My understanding, from these conversations and the communication referred to is that the real question at issue is, primarily, the constitutionality of section 5316 of the General Code, permitting certain civil officers to call upon the national guard under circumstances of tumult, riot, etc. The correlative question relates to the nature of the circumstances which must exist as a condition precedent to the exercise of the authority conferred in section 5316, in the event that section is given credence as a valid and constitutional legislative enactment.

Section 5316 of the General Code is as follows:

"Where there is a tumult, riot, mob or body of men acting together with intent to commit a felony, or to do or offer violence to person or property, or by force and violence to break or resist the laws of the state, or there is reasonable apprehension thereof, the commander-in-chief, the sheriff of the county, the mayor of a municipal corporation therein, or a judge of any court of the state or United States, may issue a call to the commanding officer of any regiment, battalion, company, troop or battery, to order his command or part thereof, describing it, to be and appear, at a time and place therein specified, to act in aid of the civil authority."

Article I, section 4, article IX, section 4 and article III, section 10 of the constitution of Ohio, are as follows:

"Article I, section 4. The people have the right to bear arms for their defense and security; but standing armies, in time of peace, are dangerous to liberty, and shall not be kept up; and the military shall be in strict subordination to the civil power.

"Article IX, section 4. The governor shall commission all officers of the line and staff, ranking as such; and shall have power to call forth the militia, to execute the laws of the state, to suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

"Article III, section 10. He shall be commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States."

Your inquiry calls for a consideration of possible conflict between the above quoted section of the constitution, creating the governor the commander-in-chief of the militia, and the statute, above quoted, which empowers the enumerated civil officers to call out companies of the national guard, under the circumstances prescribed.

Sections 5212 and 5240 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 5212. The national guard may be ordered by the governor to aid the civil officers to suppress or prevent riot or insurrection, or to repel or prevent invasion and shall be called into service in all cases before the reserve militia.

"Section 5240. The Ohio national guard shall be governed by the military laws of the state, the orders of the commander-in-chief and the code of regulations. Such government shall conform, as nearly as possible, to the system of discipline and administration prescribed for the army of the United States."

It will be noted, from a perusal of the above quoted provisions of law, that the governor is made commander-in-chief of the militia; that he is given power to execute the laws of the state, to call out the militia, if necessary. Under section 5240 of the General Code, the rules governing the militia are prescribed by the military statutes of the state, the orders of the commander-in-chief, and the code of regulations.

Under article I, section 4 of the constitution, above quoted, the military is required to be subordinated to the civil power. I do not deem it necessary to enter into a review of the many conflicting decisions with respect to the relation and the respective powers of the civil authorities and the militia, when the latter is called out to aid the civil authorities. These decisions are substantially harmonious upon the conclusions that when the militia is acting in aid of the civil authority, the governor, as commander-in-chief of said militia, is acting as a civil authority. There will be no question that the constitutional provision, making the governor commander-in-chief of the militia refers, with equal force, to that official, when the militia is acting in aid of the civil authorities, as when there exists a state of actual war and a consequent military rule.

The first and second paragraphs of the syllabus in Swain vs. U. S., 28 Ct. of Cl. Rep., page 173, are as follows:

"1. The constitutional power of the President to command the army and navy and of congress 'to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces' are distinct; the President cannot by military orders evade the legislative regulations; congress can not by rules and regulations impair the authority of the President as commander-in-chief.

"2. A power to appint courts-martial devolved by statute on any officer is shared by the President, though he be not named therein. Since the earliest legislation of our government it has been understood and intended that powers granted to general officers in regard to courts-martial are thereby granted to the President."

The opinion of the court, in this connection, on pages 221 and 222, is as follows:

"It seems evident, then, to the court, that as courts-martial are expressly authorized by law, and the authority to convene them is expressly granted to military officers, this power is necessarily vested in the President by statute, though it may not be inherent in his office. A military officer can not be invested with greater authority by congress than the commander-in-chief, and a power of command devolved by statute on an officer of the army or navy is necessarily shared by the President. The power to command depends upon discipline, and discipline depends upon the power to punish; and the power to punish can only be exercised in time of peace through the medium of a military tribunal. If the President has no authority in matters pertaining to military tribunals unless it be 'expressly' granted by congress, then congress, by the simple expedient of exclusively granting the authority to appoint courts-martial and approve sentences to a few officers of the army and tacitly ignoring the President, could practically defeat the express declaration of the con- stitution and strip the office of commander-in-chief of all real powers of command.

"The court cannot ascribe any such purpose to the legislation of congress. Indeed, it seems evident to the court that if the seventy-second article was enacted with the intent that the President should exercise no authority except in the single instance where it is withheld from the commanding officers and exclusively devolved on him, it would be necessary to ascribe an absurd purpose to this legislative enactment, viz.: That the intent of the statute was that the general should be exempt from punishment. If, for illustration, in 1884, the lieutenant-general had stood in the place of the judge-advocate-general, how could he have been court-martialed? He certainly could not have appointed his own court-martial and ordered himself before it. A general commanding a military department could not have done so, because the lieutenant-general was not in his department or under his command. The President could not have appointed the court because the seventy-second article only requires, or, if it be preferred, authorizes him to do so in those cases where a 'general officer commanding the army of the United States, a separate army, or a separate department,' is 'the accuser or prosecutor of any officer under his command.' The lieutenant-general, therefore would have been exempt from punishment so long as punishment depended upon a trial by court-martial."

I am of the opinion that the reasoning of the court, in this case, has application to the question at hand. From the constitutional provision, making the President the commander-in-chief the court ascribed to the President, powers not expressly conferred, by statute, upon him, which were, however, expressly conferred upon subordinate officers. The statutes in question, therefore, conferring powers upon the governor and upon the enumerated civil officers, under the circumstances had in view, must be read as a whole.

It will not be disputed, upon a review of the law in its entirety, that the statutes make ample provision for clothing the governor, as commander-in-chief, with the supreme executive control of the militia, at all times and circumstances. With this view of the situation, I am of the opinion that section 5316 may not be construed with a view to giving the enumerated civil officers a supreme and executive control, as opposed to the governor, when they carry out the powers conferred upon them by this statute. This statute is of no more force and effect, in this connection, than is any other provision of law, conferring powers and imposing obligations upon any of the subordinate officers in the militia. These powers and duties must always be regarded as subject to the superior authority and direction of the commander-in-chief. In brief, therefore, section 5316 is a valid enactment which confers certain powers upon the enumerated officers, but when read in connection with the corresponding provisions of law, and of the constitution, must be construed as conferring these powers, subject to the power of direction and control by the commander-in-chief.

The concrete case presented by you, to wit, the calling out of troops for service during fair week, does not, as presented, show sufficient facts to warrant a decisive answer to your question. As a necessary foundation for the exercise of the authority conferred by section 5316, there must be a tumult, riot, mob or body of men acting together with intent to commit a felony, or to do or offer violence to person or property, or by force or violence to break or resist the laws of the state, or there must be reasonable apprehension of such states of circumstances. In the first instance, the question of the existence of such situations rests in the discretion of the officers in question, subject to the superior discretion, at all times, of the commander-in-chief. The exercise of such discretion is limited, only, by the rule that it must not be unreasonably or arbitrarily employed. Circumstances may exist, I assume, where the holding of a county fair might justify a reasonable apprehension of the conditions referred to. Whether or not such is the case rests with the officers in question, subject to the control of the courts, only, on clear, manifest and flagrant evidence of abuse of discretion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEES THAT SHOULD BE COLLECTED BY THE CLERK OF THE COURT FOR REGISTRATION OF TITLES TO REAL ESTATE.

The clerk of courts should collect from an applicant for registration of title to real estate, in addition to his own fees, a fee for recording and indexing the memorandum stating that the application has been filed. This fee goes to the recorder and should be delivered to him by the clerk when the memorandum is presented to him by the latter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 10, 1914, you write as follows:

> "I beg to request your opinion in reference to a matter which has arisen in this county under the act of the last legislature entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement, registration, transfer and assurance of land titles and to simplify and facilitate transactions in real estate,' found on page 914, 103 Ohio Laws.
> "The question upon which I want an opinion arises under section 7, which provides that when an application to register the title to land is filed with the clerk of the court of common pleas, the court shall forthwith cause to be filed in the office of the county recorder of said county a copy of the application for registration, which said copy shall be recorded and indexed by the county recorder. As I construed the law the recorder would be entitled to his fee for indexing and recording this application, but the question then arises, who is to pay this fee, and when?"

The pertinent language of section 7, to which you refer, reads thus:

> "Application to register the title to land or to any estate or interest therein shall be made by petition, as in the commencement of a civil action, filed in the probate or common pleas court of the county in which the land is situate. Upon filing the application, the clerk shall forthwith cause to be filed in the office of the recorder of said county and in the recorder's office of each county in which any part of the land lies a memorandum stating that application for registration has been filed, the date and place of filing and a copy of the description of the land contained in the application. Such memorandum shall be recorded and indexed by the county recorder."

Section 112, which provides for a schedule of fees, requires the payment, by the applicant to the clerk of the court, of the sum of $3.00, which is to be in full of all clerk's fees and charges in such proceedings on behalf of the applicant.

After prescribing the fees of the recorder, for the doing of the work peculiarly applicable to the act in question, the following language appears in the section just cited:

> "For filing, recording and indexing any papers or instruments other than those above provided, * * * the same fees as may be allowed by law for like services."

Section 2778 of the General Code contains the following language:

> "The fees in this section provided shall be paid upon the presentation of the respective instruments for record."

Section 2781 of the General Code, which authorizes suit on a recorder's bond, provides that if he "refuses to receive a deed or other instrument of writing presented to him for record, the legal fee for recording it being pair or tendered; * * * he shall be liable to a suit on his bond, at the instance and for the use of the party injured by such improper conduct."

Section 2778, General Code, prescribes fees for recording and indexing instruments of writing. From section 2781 it is apparent that the county recorder has the right to demand his fees in advance, and I can see nothing to conflict therewith in the land registration act. This being true, it must follow that they should be read together, and hence, before recording an instrument, such as that referred to in your question, the recorder would be entitled to his fee. The fact that section 112 makes $3.00 the total fee to be charged by the clerk does not alter this position, because the fee therein referred to has reference solely to the services of the clerk and not to those of the recorder.

A carful reading of section 7 will, I think, convince you that you have erred in your theory that the application to register title should be filed in the office of the recorder. Instead of this, it is the duty of the clerk, when the application is filed, to cause to be filed, in the office of the recorder, a memorandum stating that application for registration has been filed, the date and place of filing, and a copy of the description of the land described in the application. It is this memorandum which is to be recorded and indexed, and not the application. This was taken into consideration when forms for use under this law were prepared by this department, and you will find that form No. 2 was expressly designed for use by the clerk, under section 7. The fees of the recorder for filing this instrument have not been fixed in the land registration act, but the general provisions of section 112, above quoted, seem to cover the situation.

As the applicant does not present this memorandum to the recorder, of course the fee cannot be directly demanded of him by that official. In view of the fact that this instrument must be filed and recorded, the clerk being required to cause this to be done, it seems to me that the clerk of courts would have the right and should require this fee to be paid by the applicant, on the filing of the application. At least, this would be the simplest and most expeditious way of arranging the matter. It could, of course, be covered by a rule or order of the court, but I do not think that it is necessary so to provide for it. If the application were shown to the recorder, he could immediately tell what charge should be made for the filing of the memorandum, because it will always be in the same form with the exception of the description of the land. As this latter appears in the application, the recorder could tell the clerk what charge to make for the filing and recording of the memorandum. The clerk should then collect this amount from the applicant and deliver it to the recorder with the memorandum.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LAND REGISTRATION—GUARDIAN FILING SUIT TO SELL AN UNDIVIDED INTEREST IN REALTY SHOULD NOT ASK FOR REGISTRATION OF SUCH UNDIVIDED INTEREST.

It is neither necessary nor proper for a guardian filing a suit to sell an undivided interest in realty, to include in such suit a cause of action praying for registration of such undivided interest. It is only an estate in fee in the whole of unregistered land that may be registered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM H. LUEDERS, Judge of the Probate Court, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 10, 1914, you state that a partition was filed in your court for the purpose of selling an undivided one-seventh interest in real estate for the payment of debts, and ask whether or not it is mandatory to register title to this real estate.

Section 64 of the land registration act, 103 O. L., 914, provides:

> "In all suits to sell an estate in fee in the whole of unregistered land brought by an assignee or trustee for the benefit of creditors, commissioners of insolvents, receiver, master commissioner, administrator, executor or other person appointed by a court * * * proper allegations and parties necessary to a decree for original registration of the title to said estate shall be made in the petition, the said allegations to be included in a separate cause of action, and said title, before any order of sale * * * shall be made or entered in the case, shall be registered as provided in this act. * * *"

Section 4 of the act in question contains the following language:

> "The person or persons who, singly, or collectively, claim to own and be seized of or to have the power of appointing or disposing of the legal or equitable estate in fee in and to the whole of any parcel of land, may personally or through an attorney in fact duly authorized by an instrument signed, witnessed, acknowledged and recorded as a deed, have his or their title to said estate in said land, or the whole title to said land, registered as hereinafter provided in the county where the land is situate. * * *"

The foregoing quotations seem clearly to indicate that the theory of the land title registration law is that it is only the title in fee to the whole of a tract of land that can be registered. The reason for this is that if part of the title were to be registered and part remaining unregistered, the same piece of land would be partly under the registration system and partly without, which would lead to confusion. If a title to the whole fee is registered, then each co-tenant may have a saparate certificate of title for his undivided interest in the land, as is provided by section 24 of the act. The sections referred to indicate that it must be a fee in the whole that may be registered, and consequently a fee in an undivided portion could not be brought within the registration act in a separate application by a guardian, or in a suit by such guardian to sell the undivided portion.

Therefore, it is my opinion there can be no registration, in the first instance, of an undivided interest, and that, under the facts stated by you, it is neither mandatory nor permissible for the guardian to embody in his suit a cause of action containing all legations calling for the registering of an undivided one-seventh interest which he holds in the real estate.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REDUCTION OF FEES TO CERTAIN OWNERS OF MOTOR VEHICLES FILED FOR REGISTRATION AFTER SEPTEMBER 1, 1914.

The provisions of section 6295, General Code, whereby owners of motor vehicles applying for registration after September 1st, 1914a, re entitled to a reduction of the fees prescribed by section 6294, General Code, are not applicable to automobile dealers, manufacturers or motorcycle chauffeurs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. J. A. SHEARER, Registrar of Automobiles, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 23rd you inquired of me as follows:

"Section 6295 of the automobile law provides that every owner of a motor vehicle, making application after September 1st of any year, shall be required to pay but one-half of the annual fees provided in section 6294.

"We desire your opinion as to whether or not this applies to automobile dealers, chauffeurs, motorcycle chauffeurs, and whether or not any of the classes enumerated in the law are covered by the provisions of section 6295."

Section 6295, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 764, and as now in force, reads:

"Every owner of a motor vehicle acquired during any year, before operating or driving such motor vehicle upon the public roads or highways of this state, or permitting the same to be done, shall file a like application, but if said application be made after September first of any year, the fee for such registration shall be one-half the annual fees provided herein."

Section 6294, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 248, reads:

"Every owner of a motor vehicle which shall be operated or driven upon the public roads or highways of this state shall, before the first day of March, 1914, and thereafter annually, before the first day of January of each year, except as herein otherwise expressly provided, caused to be filed, by mail or otherwise, in the office of the secretary of state, a written application for registration for the following year, beginning the first day of January of such year, on a blank to be furnished by the secretary of state for that purpose, containing a brief description of the motor vehicle to be registered, including the name of the manufacturer, the factory number of such vehicle, if it has such number, the amount of motive power, in figures or horse power and the name, residence and address of the owner of such motor vehicle. Upon the filing of such application each such owner shall pay, or cause to be paid, to the secretary of state, a registration fee of two dollars for each motor bicycle, motorcycle or motor tricycle; three dollars for each electric motor vehicle; and five dollars for each gasoline or steam motor vehicle."

It will be noted that section 6294 provides for the application prior to January 1st of each year by the owners of motor vehicles, for the registration thereof, and contains a schedule of fees for such registration.

Section 6295 provides for the registration of motor vehicles acquired after January 1st of any year and if application for the registration of such vehicles is made after September 1st, the fee therefor is to be one-half of the annual fee for such registration.

Section 6296, General Code, provides:

"Applications of chauffeurs shall be made at such times and for such periods as are provided in the next two preceding sections for applications of owners."

The first paragraph of section 6301, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 765, provides for the application by manufacturers and dealers for registration of each make of motor vehicles manufactured or dealt in, and reads as follows:

"A manufacturer or dealer in motor vehicles shall make application for the registration, in a like manner, as hereinbefore provided, of each gasoline, steam, electric or other make of motor vehicles, so manufactured or dealt in, and pay a registration fee of twenty dollars for each make of motor vehicles named therein, to be determined by the motive power of such vehicles. Thereupon, the secretary of state shall assign to each make of motor vehicles therein described a distinctive number which must be carried and displayed by each motor vehicle of such make in like manner as provided in this chapter while it is operated on the public highway until it is sold or let for hire. Such manufacturer or dealer so registering a make of motor vehicle, may procure certified copies of such registration certificates upon the payment of a fee of three dollars for each such copy. With each of such certified copies, the secretary of state shall furnish two placards with the same numbering provided in the original registration certificate."

The application by chauffeurs for license to operate motor vehicles and the fee to be paid for such license, are governed by the second paragraph of section 6301, General Code, as amended, reads:

"A person operating a motor vehicle as a chauffeur shall file, by mail or otherwise, with the secretary of state, or his duly authorized agent upon blanks prepared under the authority of the secretary of state, an application for registration. The secretary of state shall appoint examiners and cause examinations to be held at convenient points throughout the state as often as may be necessary. Before any certificate of registration is granted, the applicant shall pass such examination as to his qualifications as the secretary of state shall require. No chauffeur's certificate of registration shall be issued to any person under sixteen years of age. Every application for a certificate of registration as a chauffeur shall be sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths, and must contain the name and address of the applicant, together with a statement that he is of sound mind and memory and physically competent to operate a motor vehicle, together with a description of the vehicle, the trade name and kind or kinds of motor vehicle he is competent to operate and whether or not such applicant has been convicted of violating a provision of this chapter or the penal statutes relating thereto, giving the date or place of such conviction and the provision of law so violated and must be accompanied with a registration fee of three ($3.00) dollars."

It is manifest from the most cursory reading of these several statutes that the reduction in the fee for registration after September 1st, prescribed by section 6295, applies solely to motor vehicles registered by the owners thereof and not to motor vehicles registered by manufacturers or dealers.

The fee to be paid by the latter is prescribed by section 6301 above quoted and neither in that section nor elsewhere in the law is there any express provision for a reduction in the fee for the registration of such vehicles if they are registered after September 1st, nor is the provision of section 6295, providing for a reduction in the registration fee, adopted or made applicable by reference to registration by dealers or manufacturers. All that has been said concerning the fee for registration by manufacturers and dealers is equally applicable to chauffeurs. The language of section 6296, whereby applications of chauffeurs for registration are required to be made at such times and for such periods as are provided in sections 6294 and 6295 for applications of owners, certainly cannot be construed as having any reference whatever to the fees to be paid by chauffeurs, because the subject of fees to be paid by the latter for registration is not mentioned in said section.

I am very clearly of the opinion that the provision of section 6295, whereby owners of motor vehicles applying for registration after September 1st are entitled to a reduction in the fees prescribed by section 6294, are not applicable to automobile dealers, manufacturers, chauffeurs or motorcycle chauffeurs.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF PERSONS TO OFFER TO DISPOSE OF STOCK OR STOCK CERTIFICATES WITHOUT LICENSE—RIGHT OF PERSONS RESIDING IN FOREIGN STATES TO DISPOSE OF STOCKS AND STOCK CERTIFICATES OR OFFER SAME FOR SALE IN OHIO.

Section 6373-1, General Code, which among other things prohibits to persons within its terms, the right to "offer to dispose of" stocks or stock certificates without the license provided for in the act of which the section is a part, and section 6373-14, General Code, prohibiting to persons within its terms the right to "attempt to dispose of" stock or stock certificates without the certification therein provided for, apply to advertisements published in this state, offering to sell such stock or stock certificates, though the person procuring the publication of the advertisement or mailing the circular or trade letter, may be a resident of a state other than Ohio, and the stock or stock certificates so offered for sale may be issued, owned and held in such other state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 31, 1914, I received a letter from the securities department of your office, advising that that department had received several complaints about The Colonial Motion Picture Corporation of New York City, which has been persistent in offering its stock for sale in Ohio through advertisements in newspapers and periodicals, and by means of circular letters addressed to residents of Ohio and forwarded through the mails. You ask my opinion with respect to the acts and conduct of this concern in view of our statutes regulating the sale of stocks, bonds and other securities and whether any means are available to prevent said corporation from offering its securities for sale in this state without the license provided for by said statutes.

Section 6373-1, General Code, the same being section 1 of an act passed February 6, 1914 (104 O. L., p. 110), amending an act to regulate the sale of stocks, bonds and other securities, provides as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall, within this state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stock, stock certificates, bonds, debentures, collateral trust certificates or other similar instruments (all hereinafter termed 'securities') evidencing title to or interest in property, issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership or association (except corporations not for profit) or by any taxing sub-division of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so to do as hereinafter provided."

Section 6373-2 in terms excepts from the meaning of the term "securities" certain instruments therein designated, and further excepting conditionally certain persons, both natural and artificial, from the meaning of the term "dealer," defines that term as follows:

> "The term 'dealer' as used in this act, shall be deemed to include any person or company except national banks, disposing or offering to dispose of any such security, through agents or otherwise, and any company engaged in the marketing or flotation of its own securities, either directly or through agents or underwriters, or any stock promotion scheme whatsoever."

Sections 6373-3 to 6373-8, inclusive, make full provision for granting licenses to such "dealers" on application therefor, whether such applicant be a resident or non-resident of the state, and for revocation of such licenses for cause.

Section 6373-11, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Every dealer, before or at the time of circulating the same, shall furnish to the 'commissioner' one copy of such prospectus, circular or other document of like nature, and of each advertisement, circulated by him in connection with the sale of any securities concerning which information is required to be filed under the provisions of sections 6373-9 and 6373-10 of the General Code."

With respect to the questions here presented, it will be observed that the act in question does not in specific terms forbid an unlicensed person or "dealer" to publish or circulate, or use any advertisement in regard to stock, bonds or other securities which such person or "dealer" may have for sale or other disposition. The inhibition in this act is to be found, if at all, in the provisions of section 6373-1, General Code providing that no dealer shall, within this state, dispose or "offer to dispose of" any stock, stock certificates, bonds, or other instruments therein designated, all of which are therein termed "securities."

With respect to the questions here made, it may be observed that ordinarily, newspaper (and magazine) advertisements and circulars are not considered offers within the law, pertaining to the formation of contracts, in the sense that an acceptance by one to whose attention such advertisement or circular might come, would constitute a contract with respect to the things presented in such advertisement whether such things be stock, bonds or other securities, or any other thing or commodity. In this view, advertisements and circulars are ordinarily considered to be but invitations to the persons to whom they are addressed or to whose attention they may come, to make offers or to open negotiations with respect to the things therein presented or advertised.

Zeltner vs. Irwin, 25 App. Div. (N. Y.) 228.
Moulton vs. Kershaw, 59 Wis., 316.
Anderson vs. Board, etc., 122 Mo. 61.

However, even considering the word "offer" as it pertains to the law governing the formation of contracts, it is likewise true that at its first promulgation, an offer need not necessarily be made to any particular or ascertained person; and an advertisement addressed to the public generally, or a circular, if it shows an intent to assume legal liability, may be accepted by one so as to complete a contract.

Elliot on Contracts, Vol. 1, sec. 32.
Bank vs. Griffin, 66 Ill. App., 577.

The question arises here, however, on the construction and application of the terms of a statute which in keeping with a well considered and declared purpose, forbids any person or dealer to "dispose of" or "offer to dispose of" certain things therein enumerated and found, without being licensed so to do. In this view, the words "offer to dispose of" should be taken in their ordinary and natural import and be given such meaning as comport with the common sense of the community and which will effectuate the manifest purpose of the act.

Allen vs. Little, 5 Ohio, 65, 71.
State vs. Peck, 25 O. S., 26, 28.

In the case of United States vs. Dodge, Deady 186, decided by the United States district court of Oregon, a liquor case where this question was involved, the court in its opinion says:

> "The liquor may be offered for sale without a special or personal solicitation of any particular person to become a purchaser. It may be done by general advertisement in the press or by exhibition of signs or symbols in the vicinity of the place of the alleged business, or by having the article of sale with intent to dispose of it to any one offering to purchase."

State vs. Dunbar, 13 Ore., 591, 594.
Willis vs. Standard Oil Co., 50 Minn., 290, 296.

The word "offer" in statutes of this kind is manifestly broader and more general, inclusive and comprehensive than the word "solicit" and I note that a circular or trade letter has been held to be a solicitation within the terms of a statute forbidding the same with reference to the sale of intoxicants in prohibited territory.

Hayner vs. State, 83 O. S., 178.
Rose Co. vs. Georgia, 4 Ga. App., 588.

The case last cited was reversed by the supreme court of that state on the interstate commerce question there involved, but the case remains unaffected with reference to the proposition above noted.

In the case of Carter vs. State, 81 Ark., 37, it was held that a newspaper advertisement was not a solicitation within the terms of a statute, making it unlawful for any person, firm, partnership or corporation engaged in the sale of liquors, to solicit orders for sale of liquors in any place where the same is prohibited by law. To my mind, however, this case is not, to say the least, conclusive on the questions here presented for the reason that the term "solicit" as above noted, is so much more restricted in its meaning than is the word "offer." The same observation may be made in the case of State vs. Wheat, 48 W. Va., 259; a case involving the mailing of circulars with reference to liquors in a territory where their sale was prohibited. Moreover, this case is opposed by the decision of the supreme court of our own state in Hayner vs. State, above cited.

With respect to the legislative intention on the questions under consideration, it will be noted that this act, in section 11 thereof (section 6373-11) contemplates that advertisements and circulars may be used by dealers in connection with the sale of "securities," and this section provides in legal and constructive effect, that even before a licensed dealer can make use of advertisements and circulars in connection with the sale of securities, he must file copies of the same with the "commissioner" who by the terms of the act is the superintendent of banks. The inference from the provisions of section 11 is quite conclusive that without the license provided for by the act, the use of advertisements or circulars in connection with the sale of securities is wholly prohibited.

Of course this act has no extra-territorial effect and is limited in its operation to acts done and transactions had within the state of Ohio. In this view I am of the opinion that the act in question is not effective to prohibit advertisements with respect to securities held by non-residents of this state, in newspapers or magazines published outside of the state, notwithstanding such publications may have circulation within the state. On the other hand, if as is here determined, this statute in forbidding persons or dealers to "offer to dispose of" stocks, bonds, or other securities without license, is effective to inhibit the use of advertisements in newspapers or magazines, offering to sell such securities, I see no reason why the inhibition of the statute does not apply to such advertisements in newspapers or magazines published in this state, although such advertisements may be those of non-residents with respect to securities outside of the state.

State vs. Bass Publishing Co., 104 Me., 288.
State vs. State Capitol Co., 24 Okla., 252.

In this connection, inasmuch as the statute is effective only as to acts and transactions within this state, it is important to note that with respect to circulars or letters, they have been held to be effective as offers or solicitations within the state where they are received, though mailed by non-residents outside of the state where they are received.

In re. Palliser, 136 U. S., 257.
United States vs. Thayer, 209 U. S., 39.
Rose vs. State, 4 Ga. App., 588.
See Hayner vs. State, 83 O. S., 178, 191.

In the consideration of the questions presented by your inquiry, I am not unmindful of the rule that statutes should be construed, if possible, so as not to conflict with constitutional provisions, nor of the fact that the inquiry here made brings to view not only a question of legislative intention, but of legislative power as well; for if the varous things enumerated in section 6373-1 and by it denominated as "securities" are to be considered articles, or commodities, or things, which as against state legislation are within the operation and protection of paragraph 3 of section 8 of article 1 of the United States constitution, a question is here presented whether this statute is effective to make any regulation with respect to the sale in this state of "securities" owned or held outside of the state, or with respect to negotiations for the sale of the same. The constitutional provision above noted is as follows:

> "The congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes."

Under this provision a state has not power to enact legislation effective as a regulation of interstate commerce, nor to restrict the power of congress with respect to any matter which may properly constitute interstate commerce.

Arnold vs. Yanders, 56 O. S., 417.
In re. Julius, 4 C. C. (n. s.) 604.
Brennan vs. Titusville, 153 U. S., 269.
Robbins vs. Shelby Co., 120 U. S., 489.

In the case of In re. Julius, supra, it was held that the negotiations in this state of sales of goods which are in another state, for the purpose of introducing them into this state, is interstate commerce, and that an ordinance of a municipality of this state under which a license fee for the privilege of selling within the municipality picture enlargements, or for canvassing orders for the same, unless the work be done within the limits of the municipality, was void insofar as affected orders taken for goods in another state to be sold under the order in the municipality.

In the case of Arnold vs. Yanders, supra, it was held that a statute requiring the payment of a license fee by one desiring to deal in convict made goods, other than the products of prisons in this state, was in conflict with the commerce clause of the federal constitution and void.

With respect to stock and stock certificates, however, I seriously doubt whether these things are to be classed as property, the interstate sale, transfer and exchange of which constitutes interstate commerce within the meaning of the particular section of the federal constitution under consideration. To illustrate a point in mind, I note that a bill of lading, for instance, upon an interstate or foreign shipment, has been held to represent the tangible property shipped and in the case of an interstate shipment, is beyond the taxing power of a state; and in the case of a foreign shipment, a tax upon a bill of lading is a tax upon exports and therefore beyond the taxing power of either the state or federal government.

Allmy vs. Calif., 24 How., 169.
Woodruff vs. Parham, 8 Wall, 123.
Fairbanks vs. United States, 181 U. S., 283.

On the other hand, it has been held that a bill of exchange, whether drawn on an interstate shipment or a foreign shipment, is an incident of such commerce and not a part of it, and that a broker dealing in foreign bills of exchange, is not engaged in commerce, but is supplying the instrumentalities of commerce, and a state tax upon money and exchange brokers, is not void as a regulation of commerce.

Nathan vs. La., 8 How., 73.

Shares of stock in a corporation are intangible ideas or things representing fractional interests in the corporate property, while certificates of stock are mere muniments of title to the shares represented by them, and "are no more actual property than a man's deed is his farm."

State vs. Davis, 85 O. S., 43, 56.
Ball vs. Towle Mfg. Co., 67 O. S., 306, 314.

Certificates of stock are not things which have any value independent of the parties to them, and it is largely on this consideration that it has been held that the issuing of insurance policies is not a transaction of commerce within the meaning of the provisions of the federal constitution under consideration.

Nutting vs. Mass., 183 U. S., 553.
New York Life Insurance Co. vs. Deerlodge County, 231 U. S., 495.

Even assuming that certificates of stock are property, the interstate commerce in which is beyond the regulatory power of the state, it is to be borne in mind that the commerce clause of the federal constitution was not intended to hamper all state legislation, the indirect or incidental result of which might effect interstate commerce.

People ex rel. vs. Reardon, 184 N. Y., 432, 454.

In this case it was held that a tax on transfers of stock within the state was not as to a transfer by a non-resident of stock issued by a foreign corporation, affected or rendered invalid by the interstate commerce clause of the federal constitution.

With respect to the application of this constitutional provision, to the act in question here, or any part thereof, it is to be observed that this act is not a revenue, or tax measure or even primarily a license measure; it does not either directly or indirectly lay any absolute prohibition on the sale in this state of securities held by non-residents. It is, as I see it, nothing more than a regulatory measure, looking to the protection of the people of this state in the sale of securities, whether the same be effected by residents of this state or by non-residents. The license requirement is but a means of effecting the regulation, which is the primary purpose of the act, and the fees required therefor are but such as have proper relation to the cost and expense of providing for and maintaining such regulation. The act in my opinion, is a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state for the protection of its people in respect to the objects sought to be attained by it; and its affect on interstate commerce in the sale or disposition in this state of securities owned or held in other states, being but incidental and remote, it does not, in my opinion, infringe on the constitutional provision above noted.

"Subject to the constitutional limitations, the legislature of a state may pass measures for the protection of the people in the exercise of the police power and is the judge of their necessity and expediency.

"Silz vs. Hesterberg, 211 U. S., 31.

"A police measure otherwise within the constitutional power of the state, will not be held unconstitutional under the commerce clause of the federal constitution, because it incidentally and remotely affects interstate commerce.

"Silz. vs. Hesterberg, supra.

"While the state may not legislate for the direct control of interstate commerce, a proper police regulation which does not conflict with the congressional legislation on the subject involved, is not necessarily unconstitutional, because it may have an indirect effect upon interstate commerce.

"Asbell vs. Kansas, 209 U. S., 251.
"Patapsco Guano Co. vs. Board, 107 U. S. 345.

"When the local police regulation has relation to the suitable protection of the people of the state, and is reasonable in its requirements, it is not invalid because it may incidentally affect interstate commerce, provided it does not conflict with legislation enacted by congress, pursuant to its constitutional authority.

"Savage vs. Jones, 225 U. S., 501, 525.
"Standard Stock Food Co. vs. Wright, 225 U. S., 540."

By force of the foregoing principles, applicable to the question, I am constrained to the opinion that the act in question is valid with respect to the point under discussion and that effect is to be given to it according to legislative intention.

In the consideration of the question here presented, it is to be borne in mind that this act does not seek to prohibit a citizen of this state from making a contract for the purchase of stock in another state, nor conformable to constitutional guarantee could it do so.

(Allgeyer vs. La., 165 U. S., 578.)

While this is true, and the legislature of this state cannot impair the freedom of a citizen of the state to elect with whom he will contract, it can prevent persons or concerns having stock to sell, from sheltering themselves under his freedom in order to solicit contracts for the sale of the same, which otherwise he would not have thought of making.

Nutting vs. Massachusetts, 183 U. S., 553.

Of course, as before noted, the act is effective only to prohibit acts done in the state contrary to its provisions; but physical presence in this state is not necessary in order that a person or corporation may be guilty of a violation of its provisions. So that, if a person or concern, non-resident of this state, should procure the publication in this state of an advertisement offering for disposal stock or the other things denominated in the statutes as securities or should mail to persons in this state circulars or trade letters offering to dispose of such securities, such person or concern would, without the license (or certification) provided for in the act, be as guilty of a violation of its provisions as though such person or concern were a resident of this state and physically present therein.

Burton vs. U. S., 202 U. S., 344, 389.
Horner vs. U. S., 143 U. S., 207.
Linsey vs. State, 38 O. S., 507, 512.
Sanner vs. State, 81 O. S., 393.
State vs. Paul, 114 N. C., 909.

This is true, even though in case of an individual non-resident so violating the provisions of the act as a felony, his constructive presence in the state in doing the acts constituting violations of the statute, would not support extradition proceedings for the purpose of bringing him into this state for punishment.

State vs. Hall, 115 N. C., 811.
Wilcox vs. Nolze, 34 O. S., 520.
In re. Mohr, 73 Ala., 503.

With reference to your inquiry, as to what means, if any, are available to prevent the corporation which is the subject of your inquiry, from offering its securities for sale in this state without license so to do, I note the penal provisions of the act (section 6373-20, General Code) which reads as follows:

"Whoever knowingly makes any false statement of fact in any statement or matter of information required by this act to be filed with the 'commissioner,' or in any advertisement, prospectus, letter, circular or other document containing an offer to dispose or solicitation to purchase, or commendatory matter concerning, such securities or real estate, with intent to aid in the disposal of the same, or whoever knowingly violates any of the provisions of sections 12, 14 or 15 of this act, or for the purpose of aiding in the disposal of any security or real estate, knowingly makes any false statement or representation concerning any license or certificate issued under the provisions hereof, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than one year or both; and whoever violates any of the other provisions of this act shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail or workhouse not more than sixty days, or both."

It will be noted from the provisions of this section, that a violation of the provisions of either sections 12, 14 or 15 of the act is made a felony, while a violation of any other of the provisions of the act is made a misdemeanor only. Section 12 (section 6373-12, General Code) has reference only to the promoting of insurance companies and the flotation of the stock of such companies; while section 15 (section 6373-15, General Code) relates to acts of dealing in this state in real estate not located in Ohio. Section 14 of the act (section 6373-14, General Code) provides as follows:

"For the purpose of organizing or promoting any company, or assisting in the flotation of the securities of any company, after organization, no issuer or underwriter of such securities and no person or company for or on behalf of such issuer or underwriter shall, within this state, dispose or attempt to dispose of any such security until such commissioner shall issue his certificate as provided in section 6373-16 of the General Code which shall not be done until, together with a filing fee of five dollars there be filed with the commissioner the application of such issuer or underwriter for the certificate provided for in section 6373-16, General Code, and, in addition to the other information hereinbefore required by paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of section 6373-9 of the General Code, the following:

"(a) A certified copy of the articles of incorporation or association of the issuer, its regulation and by-laws;

"(b) Certified copies of all minutes of stockholders and directors relative to the issue of such securities;

"(c) A sworn statement made by the president and secretary of the issuer, showing in detail the items of cash, property, services, patents, good will and any other consideration for which such securities have been or are to be issued in payment;

"(d) Like certified copies of all contracts or agreements between the issuer and any underwriter of such securities, and, if disposed of by the issuer, all contracts and agreements relative to the sale and disposition thereof; and any such contracts or agreements made subsequent thereto shall be filed immediately upon the execution thereof;

"(e) All contracts made between such underwriters and any salesman, agent or broker.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *"

Looking to the provisions of section 6373-20, General Code, it will be noted that not only do they support the conclusion reached herein—that within the contemplation of the act an "offer to dispose of" securities may be made by advertisements or circular letters, as well as otherwise, but they prescribe a penalty for false statements made knowingly therein on the part of even a licensed person or "dealer."

As to the corporation in question, I am of the opinion that in selling or offering to sell its stock in this state without the license provided for in the act, it is incurring a liability to the penalty as for a misdemeanor provided for in the section, while in selling and attempting to sell such stock without the certification provided for in section 6373-14, it is incurring the penalty of the fine provided for therein; and any individual selling or attempting to sell such stock on behalf of such corporation as the issuer thereof, is made guilty of a felony. I know of no way in which the corporation in question can be brought into this state to answer for its acts and conduct in selling or offering and attempting to sell its stock without the license and certification provided for in the act. In a measure the same situation is presented with reference to the case of an individual selling or offering and attempting to sell the stock of this corporation as the issuer thereof; for, although the physical presence of such person in this state is not necessary in order that his acts may constitute a violation of the provisions of the act, yet even in the case of a felony, the physical presence of the person doing the act constituting the offense, would be necessary for the purpose of extraditing such person from another state as one fleeing from justice, though, of course, such individual if at any time found within the state, could be arrested, tried, and, if found guilty, punished for his acts.

One of the chief sanctions to the observance of regulatory provisions of the kind embodied in this act, lies in the consideration that the power of the state is withheld from the enforcement of contracts entered into in violation of such provision. Another sanction to the observance of regulatory provisions of this kind lies in the disposition of men in general to observe the law of sovereign states with whose citizens they may deal, and in the dislike of being classed as violators of law, even though in fact there may be obstacles in the way of inflicting punishment for such violations.

As to the corporation in question, I do not understand that it has evinced any disposition to disregard the provisions of this act further than is evidenced by its contention that by reason of the interstate commerce clause of the Federal constitution. the act does not apply to transactions between it and citizens of this state. I have no reason to question the good faith of the contention made by this corporation, although as hereinbefore noted, I am clearly of the opinion that its position in this regard is wholly untenable. Assuming the good faith of the corporation, it is reasonable to suppose that upon being advised of the ruling herein made, as to the construction of and operation this act, its compliance therewith may be expected.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY APPOINT SUCH ASSISTANTS AS HE DEEMS NECESSARY FOR THE PROPER PERFORMANCE OF HIS DUTIES.

Sections 2914 and 2915, General Code, provide for the appointment by the prosecuting attorney for such assistants as he deems necessary for the proper performance of his duties, and for a fund out of which such assistants are to be compensated.

Where it is necessary for some other attorney to perform duties connected with the prosecuting attorney's office, such assistants should be provided and paid under sections 2914 and 2915; the fund provided by section 3004, General Code, cannot be used for this purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1914.

HON. HOMER E. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion County, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 5th asking construction of section 3004 of the General Code, received. As you state the question it is as follows:

> "In the county of Marion the work is not so great in the office of the prosecutor as in my judgment requires an assistant as the term assistant is understood in the Code. On the other hand, in our judgment we have always been able to conduct all special cases, with one exception, without a special assistant, but there have been days in which the prosecutor himself has been engaged in the conduct of a trial during which, of course, he could not attend to something else and during which time if the commissioners or the auditor or other county official desired a consultation or something else to be done they called some other attorney and by reason of the fact that Mr. Conley is a partner with me in the civil practice of law, he was usually called upon. Now, for the days when I was so actually employed and when Mr. Conley was actually called and performed the work aforesaid he was paid by me out of the fund provided for by section 3004. As I considered it an expense incurred by me in the performance of my official duties and it was not otherwise appointed in this county nor was there a special appointment for any special case and there was no other way provided for this contingency."

From the above statement I am of the opinion that the services mentioned are such as should be performed by an assistant to the prosecutor. The sections of the Code providing for the appointment of an assistant and his compensation are sections 2914 and 2915.

> "Section 2914. On or before the first Monday in January of each year in each county, the judge of the court of common pleas, or if there be more than one judge, the judges of such court in joint session, may fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year, for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office.
> "Section 2915. The prosecuting attorney may appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, not to exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the judge or judges of the court of common pleas. Such compensation after being so fixed shall be paid to such assistants, clerks and stenographers monthly from the general fund of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

A reading of these sections will show that it is not necessary that the assistant devote all his time to county work and that any situation which may arise can be met under these sections.

> "Section 3004. There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county."

Section 3004 provides for expenditures "not otherwise provided for." As I have just stated that the situation you mention is provided for by sections 2914 and 2915, I do not believe that the fund mentioned in section 3004 can be expended for such services.

I trust this answers your inquiry.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REFERENDUM PETITION—SUBMISSION AT GENERAL ELECTION—INITIATIVE PETITION—SUBMISSION AT GENERAL ELECTION.

Where a resolution passed by a city council is declared to be an emergency resolution and litigation in which it is sought to enjoin its enforcement because of the filing of an initiative petition for a similar resolution, and a petition for a referendum on the same has failed of its object, the referendum petition may not be submitted to the voters, but the initiative petition may be so submitted at the proper election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 24th, enclosing letter from Charles F. Ribble, prosecuting attorney, Zanesville, Ohio, a letter from the board of elections, Zanesville, Ohio, copy of resolution 1031, Zanesville council, copy of referendum petition on same and a copy of the initiative petition on the same subject. The question propounded grows out of the following state of facts:

The state board of health, about October, 1912, ordered the city council of Zanesville to provide an adequate supply of pure water for the use of the inhabitants of said city. On March 2, 1914, the council, with a view of complying with said order, it not having been done prior to said date, passed resolution 1031, of which you send me a copy. This resolution was declared an emergency measure. A petition for a referendum thereon was duly filed. A petition initiating a measure on the same subject was also filed. Proceedings to enjoin the enforcement of resolution No. 1031 were brought in the common pleas court and a temporary restraining order was asked largely, if not altogether, upon the ground that it would not be carried into effect while the referendum and iniative petitions were pending. The case was lost in the common pleas court, affirmed on error by the court of appeals, and an application for a restraining order was refused by the supreme court.

This, to my mind, answers the question of submitting the referendum petition in the negative. Section 4227, General Code, exempts emergency ordinances and measures necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health or safety of the municipal corporation, from the operation of the referendum (103 O. L., 112), and it is only fair to assume that the courts in refusing the injunction asked, based their judgment upon the fact that this resolution was an emergency measure and properly so declared. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the referendum petition may not be submitted to the voters at the coming election.

The question as to the submission of the initiated petition is entirely different, the decision of the courts in the injunction case not having the same effect upon it as upon the referendum petition. Without, therefore, going into a discussion of the resolution that may follow and adoption or rejection of this initiated resolution. I feel it is sufficient to generally answer your question by saying that the initiated petition should be submitted to the voters, while the referendum should not be so submitted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXATION AND REVALUATION OF SECTIONS 16 AND 29, WHEN SUCH SECTIONS ARE LEASED FOR MORE THAN FIFTEEN YEARS—POWER OF TAX COMMISSION TO REMIT TAXES.

1. Under section 5330, General Code, sections 16 and 29 or parts thereof when leased for more than fifteen years and subject to revaluation, are not subject to taxation in the name of the lessees.

2. The power to remit taxes erroneously assessed is now vested in the tax commission under section 80 of the act of May 10, 1910, 101 O. L., 420.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 3, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "First. Are school and ministerial lands, held under lease, subject to taxation, and if so for what purposes may they be taxed?
> "Second. If they are taxable should the county treasurer proceed in the ordinary way to enforce the tax lien or is there some special precedure provided by law for this purpose?"

This question was before our supreme court in 1884, when it was held:

> "Where the United States appropriated section number sixteen in every township * * * for the use of schools in such township, and vested the same in the legislature of the state 'in trust for the use aforesaid, and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatever,' in an action by a county treasurer against a lessee of such lands, who held a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, whose lands were taxed under section 2733, Revised Statutes, as the property of the lessee, to enforce the payment of the taxes so assessed.

"Held: That section 2733, Revised Statutes, provided for the taxation of such lands, held under such lease as the property of the lessee."

Barton vs. Bentley, 41 O. S., 410.

At that time the law, in reference to taxation of schools and ministerial lands, was as follows:

"Lands held under a lease for a term exceeding fourteen years, belonging to the state or to any religious, scientific, or benevolent society, or institution, whether incorporated or unincorporated, and school and ministerial lands, shall be considered, for all purposes of taxation, as the property of the persons so holding the same, and shall be assessed in their names."

After the passage of section 2733, it was amended on February 17, 1881, so that it read as follows:

"All lands held under lease for any term exceeding fourteen years, and not subject to revaluation, belonging to the state or any municipal corporation, or to any religious, scientific or benevolent society, or institution, whether incorporated or unincorporated, or to trustees for free education only, and school and ministerial lands, shall be considered for all purposes of taxation as the property of the person or persons holding the same, and shall be assessed in their name."

The real amendment here made was to insert after the words "fourteen years" the words "and not subject to revaluation." Subsequent to this amendment, taxes were charged against a portion of section 29 (ministerial land) in Vinton county, Ohio, and not being paid, a suit was brought to enforce the same. This suit was defended upon the ground that the amendment above mentioned changed the rule and that inasmuch as the land in question was subject to revaluation under the statutes, and the terms of the lease which was made on November 2, 1852, the same was not subject to taxation. The matter was heard before Judge Coultrap, one of the judges of the second subdivision of the seventh judicial district, and was decided by him on August 20, 1901. See 8th N. P., page 549.

The case was very fully considered by Judge Coultrap in all its aspects, including the character of title under which these lands were held in that portion of the state, and he concluded, correctly I think, as follows:

"Where ministerial section number twenty-nine in the Ohio company's purchase was held under a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, but subject to revaluation every fifteen years, and against which taxes assessed upon the fee stood charged on the duplicate in the name of the widow and heirs at law of the lessee, in an action brought by the county treasurer against said widow and heirs at law to recover judgment for the taxes so assessed and subject said lands to the payment thereof,

HELD:

"1. That said lands are not subject to taxation and said assessment was unauthorized.

"2. That section 2733, Revised Statutes, only imposes a tax on the lessee's interest in the lands described therein and it does not apply to a lease of such lands, although for a term of more than fourteen years, if by the stipulations of the lease the lands, as between the lessor and lessee, are subject to revaluation.

"3. That if section 2733 was applicable to such case, the lands being subject to revaluation every fifteen years, the lessee's interest is not regarded as of substantial value and there is nothing to tax."

Of course, the rule applicable to ministerial lands is the same as that necessarily to be applied to school lands and I am of the opinion that since the amendment of section 2733 as above quoted, and because of the fact that it is now to be found as section 5330 of the General Code, and in the same language found in amended section 2733, supra, that these lands are not subject to taxation when held under leases for more than fourteen years and subject to revaluation. This, of course, necessitates an examination to ascertain the length of the term of the lease. If for less than fourteen years, it is not subject to taxation; if for more than fourteen years, and not subject to revaluation, it is taxable; but if for more than fourteen years and subject to revaluation, the same is not taxable for the reason, as stated by Shaub, J., in 54 O. S., 272, that the lessees interest is not of substantial value. It must not be understood that this holding exempts a lessee from paying taxes upon the improvements which he places upon a lease, but this opinion must be construed as applicable only to the taxability of the fee of these lands as against persons holding leases for terms shorter than fourteen years or longer than fourteen years, and subject to revaluation. This, I believe, eliminates the necessity of answering your second question, but at the same time I desire to call your attention to section 5329, General Code, wherein it is provided that "school or ministerial lands shall not be sold for taxes until the purchase money therefor is fully paid," from which it may readily be seen that if after these lands are sold, they may be placed on a duplicate for taxation, but cannot be sold for delinquent taxes, it can hardly be conceived that authority could be found for selling any of these unsold lands at any time. I suggest that before taking any action as to the remission of taxes upon any of these lands, that the matter may be carefully investigated and it be determined, if possible, how much of the delinquent taxes is charged against the fee of the lands, and how much against the improvements placed thereon by the lessee, as I am of the opinion that the taxes upon the latter may be collected while upon the former may not.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN.
Attorney General.

ABATEMENT OF A NUISANCE BY THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—WHERE THE CITY BOARD OF HEALTH NEGLECTS OR REFUSES TO DO SO—MIAMI AND ERIE CANAL AT CINCINNATI.

A nuisance existing in the Miami and Erie canal at Cincinnati in that particular section or reach of the canal, which was transferred by the state to the city of Cincinnati, pursuant to the authority of an act of the legislature passed May 15, 1911, is a local one, subject to abatement by the health authorities of the city of Cincinnati, but in case of failure or neglect by the city board of health to abate this nuisance, the state board of health, by virtue of section 1237, General Code, has jurisdiction to abate the same at the expense of the city of Cincinnati.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 29, 1914.

DR. E. F. MCCAMPBELL, Secretary and Executive Officer, State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR DOCTOR:—I have your communication of July 28th, 1914, asking an opinion of me, in which you say:

> "Numerous complaints have been made to the state board of health with reference to unsanitary conditions in the Miami and Erie Canal at Cincinnati. The state board of health has been asked to take some action to relieve these conditions. The only way that it occurs to me that the state board of health could act in this matter would be under authority granted in section 1249 of the General Code, and there is some doubt in my mind as to the application of this and succeeding sections to the case in question. To better explain the matter, I attach hereto a copy of a letter from Mr. John W. Hill, president of the state board of health, a copy of a letter from Honorable Frederick S. Spiegel, mayor of Cincinnati, and a copy of a report on an investigation made by one of our assistant engineers. I would also call your attention to the provisions of an act passed by the general assembly, O. L., 102, page 168, transferring this part of the canal system to the city of Cincinnati."

From your communication, as well as from attached correspondence therein referred to, I am advised that the condition complained of in the Miami and Erie Canal is not only one at Cincinnati, but is in that particular section or reach of the canal which was transferred by the state to the city of Cincinnati by ninety-nine year lease, renewable forever, pursuant to the authority of an act of the legislature passed May 15, 1911 (102 O. L., 168). Likewise, from the correspondence attached to your communication, and therein referred to, I learn that the condition in this canal, complained of, which amounts to a pronounced nuisance, is due, in part, to the diminished flow of water in this reach of the canal, owing to the breaking of the dam near Middletown, which dam served the purpose of impounding the water as a feeder for the lower reaches of the canal in question. This nuisance is also caused, in part, by rubbish of different kinds which has been thrown into the canal by persons living along the same, and, in part, by the action of the Cincinnati Gas Company pumping polluted water from Mill creek into the canal in order to supply water for its condensers, which water, having been heated in the operation is returned to the canal.

Inasmuch as the dam at Middletown, above referred to, was washed out during the flood of March, 1913, no legal responsibility attaches to any one for the diminished flow of water in this canal at Cincinnati. This circumstance does not, however, excuse the other conditions which enter as elements in the nuisance complained of.

Your precise inquiry is one with reference to the authority of the state board of health to meet this condition. In the first place, I am inclined to the view that sections 1249 et seq., of the General Code, referred to by you, do not confer upon the state board of health adequate power to cope with the peculiar conditions here presented. Without quoting at length, these sections which form a part of the so-called "Bense Act" (99 O. L., 74), I note that with respect to the question at hand, they provide that the state board of health, upon proper written complaint that a municipal corporation or person is permitting sewage or other waste matter to be discharged into a stream or water course to the detriment of health and comfort, or in such manner as to pollute the source of any public water supply, may investigate the conditions complained of, and after hearing, it may order the person responsible for the discharge of such sewage or other waste matter to install works for purifying or otherwise disposing of the same.

In the condition here presented it does not appear that any sewage or other waste, as the terms are used in these sections, are being discharged into the canal, and for this, as well as other reasons that might be suggested, I am of the opinion that these sections have no application to the situation at hand.

The condition presented is one of local nuisance, as to the abatement of which the state board of health has no primary duty or jurisdiction.

Sections 4404 et seq., General Code, provide for the organization and powers of municipal boards of health, and as pertinent to the question at hand section 4420, General Code, provides that the board of health of a municipality shall abate and remove all nuisances within its jurisdiction.

In this connection it is manifest, that the fact that this particular part of the canal where this nuisance exists, is, in a sense, the property of the city of Cincinnati, does not in any wise limit or otherwise affect the jurisdiction of the board of health of that city to abate this nuisance or the conditions which cause it.

> "Duties relating to the preservation of the public health devolve primarily upon the state as the sovereign power. This power the state may delegate to public corporations, such as municipalities, townships, etc. Local health officers in the exercise of the power thus delegated are plainly engaged in a purely public service, in the performance of strictly governmental duties. They cannot, in any sense, be considered as the servants or agents of the corporation.
> "Marion Township vs. Columbus, 12 O. D. 553-557."

It is quite clear, therefore, that the duty of the board of health of the city of Cincinnati is governmental in its character, and is not affected by the interest of the municipality in the property in and upon which this nuisance exists. Though no primary duty rests upon the state board of health with reference to the abatement of this nuisance, yet for the purpose of meeting conditions such as may exist in this case, section 1237, General Code, provides, with reference to the jurisdiction and power of the state board of health as follows:

> "The state board of health shall have supervision of all matters relating to the preservation of the life and health of the people * * *. It may make and enforce orders in local matters when an emergency exists, or when the local board of health has neglected or refused to act with sufficient promptness or efficiency, or when such board has not been established as provided by law. In such case the necessary expense incurred shall be paid by the city, village or township for which the services are rendered."

There may be some question as to whether the conditions presented with reference to this nuisance constitute an emergency, as that term is used in the section above quoted, but it is clear that the neglect and refusal of the local board of health to abate this nuisance, and the conditions which have brought it about, would confer both jurisdiction and duty upon the state board of health to act in the premises in the abatement of the conditions complained of.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NECESSARY QUALIFICATIONS FOR HEAD OF LIMA STATE HOSPITAL.

No one may have general charge or be the executive head of the Lima state hospital unless he be an elector in this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 31, 1914.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR COX:—You enquired of me verbally whether a non-resident of Ohio is eligible to the position of superintendent of the Lima state hospital. In reply thereto I beg to advise that section 4 of article 15 of the constitution of Ohio provides as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed * * * to institutions for the care of women and children * * *."

This appears to be the last expression of the people of the state on the question of eligibility to office either elective or appointive. The official must be an elector of the state, and it matters not whether the position be called "superintendent" or not. Anyone who would perform the duties usually devolving upon the superintendent of an institution such as the Lima state hospital would be subject to the same constitutional inhibition found in the section quoted. The real test rests upon the duties to be performed rather than the title of the position.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that no one may have general charge or be the executive head of the Lima state hospital unless he be an elector in this state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

P. S.—Since writing the foregoing I have found the following, which confirms my conclusion as expressed above:

> "QUALIFICATIONS OF MEDICAL SUPERINTENDENT.—The place of medical superintendent of a hospital for the insane, under the act of March 27, 1876, O. L. 80, is an 'office' within the meaning of section 4, article 15, of the constitution, which ordains that 'no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.'" (State vs. Wilson, 29 O. S., 347).

Attorney General.

DATE FOR OFFICIALLY CERTIFYING TO THE CLERK OR CLERKS OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION THAT THE VILLAGE OR RURAL DISTRICTS OR UNION SCHOOL DISTRICTS WILL EMPLOY A SUPERINTENDENT IS MANDATORY—EMPLOYMENT OF JOINT SUPERINTENDENT FOR SUPERVISION PURPOSES BY TWO TOWNSHIPS.

The date fixed by section 4740, General Code, to wit: July 20, 1914, for officially certifying to the clerk or clerks of the board of education that the village or rural districts or union school districts will employ a superintendent, etc., is mandatory for the reason that on that date it is to be determined by virtue of such certificate or notice what supervisory districts the respective county districts shall contain.

Where two townships, which never at any time before July 20, 1914, employed a joint superintendent for supervision purposes, cannot after that date employ a superintendent for supervision purposes and certify the same to the county board of education, the county board of education must attach either all or any portion of said townships to one or more of the other supervision districts of the county, as determined by such board in accordance with the discretion which is vested in said board by section 4740, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 31, 1914.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLIGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 5, 1914, you submitted for opinion thereon the following request:

> "The county board of education of Pickaway county, Ohio, met and organized on July 19, 1914. After electing a county superintendent and receiving certificates from various townships stating they had formed separate supervision districts, the said board adjourned to meet July 29, 1914. From the certificates filed it appeared that two contiguous townships, viz.: Muhlenburg and Monroe, containing eighteen teachers were isolated from the rest of the county by half time supervision districts. On the 24th day of July, 1914, the two townships met in joint session and attempted to form a supervision district and employed S. M. Sark as superintendent at a salary of one thousand dollars per year, and said Sark was to give full time to supervision. Notice of said action was filed with the county board of education prior to its meeting on July 29th and prior to any attempt being made by the county board to dispose of said two township districts. Previous to this time Muhlenburg township had been employing a superintendent, but Monroe township had not been under supervision since December, 1913.
> "First.—Is date July 20 in section 4740 mandatory or directory?
> "Second.—Do the words 'already employing a superintendent' in section 4740 take the action taken by said boards out of the operation of the statute?
> "Third.—Is the power of the county board in the matter clerical or discretionary?
> "Fourth.—If the action taken by the joint board is illegal, what, if anything, can be done by the county board to make it legal?"

Section 4738 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., at page 140, provides for dividing the county school district into supervision districts, as follows:

> "The county board of education shall within thirty days after organizing divide the county school district into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than twenty nor more than sixty."

The provisions of section 4740 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., at page 141 thereof, apply to districts or the union of school districts which already employ a superintendent, as follows:

"Any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employs a superintendent and which officially certifies by the clerk or clerks of the board of education on or before July 20, 1914, that it will employ a superintendent who gives at least one-half of his time in supervision, shall upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district so long as the superintendent receives a salary of at least one thousand dollars and continues to give one-half of his time to supervision work. Such districts shall receive such portion of state aid for the payment of the salary of the district superintendent as is based on the ratio of the number of teachers employed to forty, multiplied by the fraction which represents that fraction of the regular school day which the superintendent gives to supervision. The county superintendent shall make no nomination of a district superintendent in such district until a vacancy in such superintendency occurs. After the first vacancy occurs in the superintendency of such a district all appointments shall be made on the nomination of the county superintendent in the manner provided in section 4739. A vacancy shall occur only when such superintendent resigns, dies or fails of re-election.

"Any school district or districts having less than twenty teachers, isolated from the remainder of the county school district by supervision districts provided for in this section shall be joined for supervision purposes to one or more of such supervision districts, but the superintendent or superintendents already employed in such supervision district or districts shall be in charge of the enlarged supervision district or districts until a vacancy occurs."

The two contiguous townships, viz.: Muhlenburg and Monroe, specifically mentioned in your letter of inquiry, together employ eighteen teachers. It further appears that these two townships have never at any time jointly constituted a supervision district, but that on the 24th day of July, 1914, the boards of education of the respective two townships met in joint session and attempted to form a supervision district, and attempted to employ a party as superintendent at a salary of $1,000 per year, the said superintendent to give full time to supervision work. Notice of this action on the part of the joint boards of education of the respective townships was given to the county board of education prior to its meeting on July 29th. Prior to this time Muhlenburg township had been employing a superintendent, but Monroe township had not been under supervision since December, 1913.

The date fixed by said section, to wit, July 20, 1914, for officially certifying to the clerk or clerks of the board of education, that the village or rural districts or union school districts will employ a superintendent, etc., I take it is mandatory for the reason that on that date it is to be determined by virtue of such certificate or notice, as to what supervisory districts the respective county districts shall contain. In this instance notice was not given until July 24, 1914, that the said townships would constitute a supervision district and employ a superintendent, who would give at least one half of his time to supervision work, etc.

The two townships in question were never at any time, prior to July 24, 1914, a union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employed a superintendent. They never constituted a supervision district already employing a superintendent, and therefore do not come within the provision of said section 4740, particularly the provision contained in the first part of said section. While one of the townships in question already employed a superintendent, nevertheless the two townships never therefore constituted a union of school districts for supervision pnrposes. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the two townships acting jointly as a supervision district, do not come within the provisions contained in said section 4740.

The latter part of said section provides in substance that any school, district or districts, having less than twenty teachers, isolated from the remainder of the county school district by supervision districts provided for in this section, shall be joined for supervision purposes to one or more of such supervision districts, but the superintendent or superintendents already employed in such supervision district or districts. shall be in charge of the enlarged supervision district or districts until a vacancy occurs.

It appears from your inquiry, as before stated, that one of the townships in question already employed a superintendent. In my judgment the superintendent so employed would not come within the provision contained in the latter part of said section 4740, which is above referred to, because the two townships never constituted a supervision district and such superintendent could not therefore be considered as a superintendent already employed in such supervision district. In accordance with the provision contained in the latter part of said section, the two townships involved should therefore be joined for such supervision purposes to one or more of the other supervision districts of said county district. Such disposition of the two townships in question is within the discretion of the county board of education, said board having the power to attach all or any portion of said townships to one or more of the other supervision districts, as the case might be. However, the superintendent already or heretofore employed by one of the townships, as heretofore stated, cannot be retained in charge of the enlarged supervision district so formed by the county board of education, until a vacancy occurs. There is nothing that the county board of education can do in regard to the matter, except as above pointed out, to attach the two townships in question to one or more of the supervision districts already formed in the county, as provided by the latter part of said section 4740 of the General Code, supra.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT PERSONALLY LIABLE UNDER CERTAIN CONDITIONS WHERE THEY EXPEND SLIGHTLY MORE THAN $15,000 FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A COUNTY BUILDING, EXCLUSIVE OF FIXTURES, WITHOUT SUBMITTING THE QUESTION TO A VOTE OF THE ELECTORS.

Where county commissioners have let a contract for the construction of a county building, exclusive of certain fixtures, for a sum less than $15,000, intending to make use of fixtures already installed in the old building which is to be replaced, and when, subsequently it is discovered that the cost of removing and reinstalling the fixtures will bring the total cost up to a figure slightly in excess of $15,000, the question of expending more than $15,000 to a vote of the electors is required by the strict application of the statute, section 5638, General Code. The amount of the excess being small, and approximately the same as the cost of holding an election, the commissioners would not be personally liable should they exceed the statutory limit and complete the building, they having acted in good faith.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 31, 1914.

HON. E. W. COSTELLO, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Some time ago, I gave my opinion to the general effect that county commissioners might not lawfully avoid the statutory limitation of $15,000.00 upon the amount to be expended in the construction of a county building by letting a contract for the partial construction of the building excluding therefrom such essential features as lighting, heating and plumbing; the amount of such contract being less than $15,000.00; and by subsequently and independently contracting for the installation of fixtures of the kind mentioned, the aggregate cost of all the contracts being in excess of $15,000.00.

Under date of July 30th, you wrote to me submitting additional facts and requested my opinion thereon as follows:

> "The building in question is now completed exclusive of the heating plant, and the amount of $15,000.00 has been exhausted. With respect to the heating plant the purpose is to utilize equipment which has been heretofore installed in the building which the new building is designed to replace, which equipment will be substantially sufficient to fit out the new building. The commissioners desire, without entering into a contract, to employ day labor for the removal and installation of the old equipment, and to purchase in the open market such articles of new equipment as are necessary to supplement the old. The cost of carrying out the commissioners' plans will be less than $1,000.00 (this fact being stated to me verbally by you).
> "May the work described lawfully be done by the commissioners without submitting the expenditure to a vote of the people?"

The facts as you present them are peculiar. It seems from your statement that the commissioners may have been acting in good faith in proceeding as they did to separate the installation of certain fixtures from the remainder of the contract; and that in good faith thay may have originally ascertained that the margin of $2,000.00 between the amount of the principal contract and the amount which, without a vote of the people, could be expended in the construction of a single building, would be sufficient to provide for the installation of such fixtures, particularly in view of the fact that very little new equipment was to be purchased.

Under all these circumstances the principles laid down in my former opinion apply. That is to say, there being some reason, at least, for dividing the contract arising out of the intention of the commissioners to use old equipment, it is not to be assumed that the commissioners are attempting an evasion of law, and that being the case, a hard and fast or technical application of the statute is not to be favored, and a substantial compliance therewith would be sufficient.

I cannot come to any conclusion other than that the limitation of section 5638 General Code, applies to the total cost of a building and its fixtures ready for use for its intended purpose. Technically, therefore, regardless of the good faith of the commissioners in dividing the contract for purposes of convenience, and regardless, too, of the reasonable anticipation on their part of their ability to bring the total cost of the building within the $15,000.00 limitation, the statute requires the submission of the proposition to expend a sum of money in excess of $15,000.00 to a vote of the electors should the aggregate cost of so much of the construction work as is necessary to complete the building, within the rule as stated by me, exceed $15,000.00. This must be my legal advice to you.

However, in view of the situation involved, and the peculiar facts stated, I am clearly of the opinion that should the officers of the county proceed to complete the work without the expense of submitting the question to the electors, there could be no recovery against them or against any other person on account of the money thus expended. I do not hesitate to express this view under the facts as you state them, that the expense of holding an election on this question would substantially equal, if not exceed the amount of the excess involved, so that the situation seems to justify a relaxation of the strict rules of law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RETIREMENT FROM BUSINESS OF A FOREIGN CORPORATION—WHAT CONTEMPLATED BY SUCH RETIREMENT.

The retirement from business of a foreign corporation contemplates the withdrawal of activities which would subject it to compliance with section 183 et seq., General Code, and does not affect its registration under section 178 et seq., General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 2, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 23rd, which in full is as follows:

> "Where a foreign corporation files the application and statement under sections 178 and 179 of the General Code, and a certificate under said section is issued to such corporation authorizing it to transact business in this state, and such corporation also files with the secretary of state the statement required by section 183 of the General Code, and the certificate is issued by the secretary of state to such corporation under section 184, General Code, authorizing it to do business in this state, may such corporation retire from doing business in this state under sections 183 and 184, General Code, without retiring from doing business in this state generally—that is, may the corporation retire from doing business in this state upon the certificate issued to it under sections 183 and 184, General Code, and still remain and do business under the certificate of authority issued to it under section 178?

"I am unable to find but one section authorizing a foreign corporation to retire from doing business in the state, and that is under section 11976, General Code, which authorizes a general retirement."

Your question requires an interpretation of section 11976, General Code, which provides as follows:

"When it retires from business in this state every foreign corporation is required to file with the secretary of state a certificate to that effect, signed by the president and secretary of the corporation."

In connection with this section I refer you to section 11978, which provides as follows:

"The mere retirement from business, or voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation without filing the certificate provided for in sections eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-four, eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five, and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees in accordance with the provisions of the next four preceding sections."

The last named section is out of place in the General Code, a fact which the legislature has recognized by the separate enactment of sections 5520 and 5521, General Code, a part of the franchise tax laws applicable to foreign corporations which provide as follows:

"Section 5520. The mere retirement from business, or voluntary dissolution of a domestic or foreign corporation, without filing the certificate provided for in sections eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-five and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy-six of the General Code, shall not exempt it from the requirements to make reports and pay fees or taxes in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"Section 5521. In case of dissolution or revocation of its charter on the part of a domestic corporation, or of the retirement from business in this state on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him unless the commission shall certify that all reports, required to be made to it, have been filed in pursuance of law, and that all taxes or fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid."

The legislative history of the provisions under consideration throws a flood of light upon their meaning. Prior to the enactment of the Willis law, so-called, 95 O. L., 143, there was no such thing as the retirement of a foreign corporation from business in this state. What are now sections 178 and 183, respectively, General Code, were then in force, but neither group of statutes contained any provision for what has become known as the retirement of a foreign corporation. There was no practical necessity for such a thing at that time because prior to 1902 the state imposed no continuing or annual tax upon the privilege of doing business in this state. It is obvious, then, that the retirement provisions which were enacted as a part of the Willis law have a direct relation to the purpose of that law. The effect of retirement is to absolve the corporation from liability to pay annual franchise taxes. It would seem to follow, then, that what the legislature had in mind in using the general phrase "retirement from business" was such retirement from business as would put an end to liability for franchise taxes.

In opinions to yourself and to the tax commission, copies of which are enclosed herewith, I have held that the Willis tax, so-called, upon the continuing annual value of the privilege of exercising certain corporate powers in the state, is a tax on the privilege existing under sections 183, et seq., General Code, formerly section 148c, Revised Statutes; and that it is possible for a corporation to be registered under what is now section 178, et seq., General Code, without being liable for such annual tax and without being liable to comply with section 183, General Code.

It would seem to follow that if it is possible for a corporation to be registered in the state under section 178, et seq., alone, it is equally possible for a corporation which has complied both with this group of sections and with section 183, et seq., to relinquish the privileges enjoyed under the latter, and still to retain those possessed under the former.

Whether or not this may be done depends upon what is meant by "retirement from business." As already indicated the effect of retirement is to put an end to liability for Willis taxes; the liability for Willis taxes depends upon liability for compliance with section 183, et seq., section 178, et seq., having nothing whatever to do with the question of liability for Willis taxes; therefore, it seems to me that when the legislature enacted these provisions respecting, retirement of foreign corporations from business in Ohio, as a part of the Willis law, it must have meant retirement from the enjoyment of the privileges taxed under the remaining provisions of the Willis law, that being, as already stated, the privilege initially taxed by the exaction of the compliance fee under section 183, et seq., General Code.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the phrase "retirement from business," as used in section 11976 and related sections, as applicable to foreign corporations, means retirement from the exercise of the privilege covered by section 183, et seq., General Code. So that when a foreign corporation retires from business in this state it is at least entitled, at its request, to have its registration under section 178, et seq., continued on the books of your office; in fact, I am of the opinion that even without specific request on the part of the corporation it is the duty of the secretary of state to cancel the certificates issued under section 183, et seq., General Code, without making any notation with respect to the corporation's registration under section 178, et seq., General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEFICIENCY—QUESTION OF ASSESSMENT IN ANTICIPATION OF WHICH BONDS HAVE BEEN ISSUED.

When there is a deficiency in the collection of assessments in anticipation of which bonds have been issued, it is not lawful to issue notes or bonds in anticipation of the subsequent assessments. Such assessments when subsequently collected, should be paid out of the sinking fund to supply the deficiency created by the payment of the bonds. If the sinking fund has not money enough in it to pay the bonds when due, refunding bonds should be issued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 2, 1914.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of your letter of July 18, 1914, in which you state that on a certain day mentioned, seventeen thousand three hundred ($17,- 300.00) dollars worth of special assessment bonds of the city of Chillicothe fell due; that said bonds were issued on account of seven (7) special assessment improvements for which assessments had been levied, and the collection thereof was completed; that there were aggregate deficiencies amounting to over $8,000.00 in the designated assessment funds; and that, accordingly, council by resolution, directed the mayor and auditor to borrow an amount of money equal to the deficiency, in anticipation of the collection of special assessments.

On these facts you request my opinion as to whether or not council may lawfully issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, under the circumstances stated; and if council is without authority to do so, whether deficiencies can be provided for by borrowing money in any way, or whether it is necessary for the sinking fund trustees of the city to pay the bonds falling due under authority of section 4517 of the General Code.

At the outset, I may state that in my opinion, the payment of the bonds in question devolves upon the sinking fund trustees, at all events. Section 4517 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

There are other provisions which I need not cite which have the effect of requiring all special assessments, on account of which bonds have been issued and are outstanding, to be paid to the sinking fund trustees; and also requiring that assessments, in anticipation of which bonds have been issued, shall be applied by the sinking fund trustees to the payment of those bonds and no others. The effect of these provisions, in my opinion, is to vest in the sinking fund trustees the exclusive power and authority to pay special assessment bonds when they fall due, to the extent that there may be a deficiency in the special assessment collection, the general sinking fund, then, would have to bear the burden of such deficiency until the assessments have been fully collected.

In this connection, I do not observe in your letter, a statement as to the cause of the deficiency. If there are uncollected assessments, then, in the event that the deficiency is subsequently wiped out by the collection of such assessments, the sinking fund would not, in the long run, suffer, because such assessments, when collected, should be paid to the sinking fund trustees. In a situation of this sort I would be of the opinion that the requirement of sections 3914 and 3932, General Code, relative to the special application of special assessments, on account of which bonds have been issued, would not be controlling. That is to say, when the bonds had been paid from the general sinking fund, and the proceeds of tax levies, the reimbursement of the sinking fund by the subsequent payment to it of the belated assessments, would constitute a proper application of such assessments. Thus the integrity of the sinking fund would be maintained and the primary purpose of the statutes accomplished.

But though it be the duty of the sinking fund trustees to pay the bonds when due, they need not, if such payment would seriously deplete the sinking fund and no immediate prospect of repletion of that fund from the subsequent collection of assessments exists, actually apply the sinking fund directly to such payments.

Under the conditions mentioned in section 4520 the sinking fund trustees may refund the indebtedness, and if these conditions do not exist, council, under sections 3916 et seq., General Code., may take similar action. If the action is that of the sinking fund trustees then, under the first section cited, refunding bonds must be issued; if council acts, then under section 3916 of the General Code, either notes or bonds may be issued.

However, the notes or bonds issued under section 3916 or 4520, as the case may be, would not be, in the technical sense, issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments; they would be issued to refund a general obligation of the municipality, and for their payment general taxes would be levied; to be sure subsequently paid assessments would go into the sinking fund and thus relieve the general tax levies, but there would be no special application of the subsequently paid assessments to the notes or bonds issued, as above described, such as is required by the sections already cited and by section 3915, General Code.

Said section 3915, which is directly involved in your first inquiry, provides as follows:

> "Municipal corporations may borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. Such notes shall be signed and sealed as municipal bonds are signed and sealed. They shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed six per cent. per annum, and be due and payable not later than five years from the date of issue. The notes shall not exceed in amount the estimated cost of the improvement, and shall recite upon their face the purpose for which they were issued. All assessments collected for the improvement, and all unexpended balances remaining in the fund after the cost and expenses of the improvement have been paid, shall be applied to the payment of the notes and the interest thereon until both are fully provided for. Council ordinances and proceedings relating to the issue of such notes shall not require publication."

I have discussed the relation of this section to others in paria materia in an opinion to the bureau of instruction and supervision of public offices, Columbus, Ohio; copy of which I enclose herewith. In that opinion you will observe that I hold that the purpose of section 3915 is to make it possible for the city to finance a special assessment improvement during the progress of the work without actually issuing bonds. That is, my belief is that sections 3914 and 3915 construed together, establish the conclusion that notes may be issued as preliminary to the subsequent issue of bonds and both in anticipation of the same special assessment.

Of course, in the opinion referred to, I did not consider the exact question which you have; namely, as to whether or not notes may be issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments after the bonds have been issued, and when they are due and cannot be paid from the assessments.

I am inclined to doubt the legality of such procedure. In the first place, as I have already stated, the sinking fund trustees are charged with the duty of paying special assessment bonds, and are entitled to all assessments on account of which bonds have been issued. Therefore, when bonds have been once issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, the subsequently collected assessments belong to the sinking fund and cannot be lawfully diverted into any other channel. This would hold true even if the bonds themselves have been paid, for reasons already given.

But, if an attempt were made to issue special assessment notes, under section 3915, an inconsistency would at once develop upon the subsequent collection of assessments. Sinking fund trustees are not charged with the duty of paying off notes of the municipality, as distinguished from its bonds. Therefore, the clash would be as between the sinking fund trustees, who would lay claim to the subsequently paid assessments because bonds have been issued in anticipation of them, and the city treasurer whose duty it would be to pay the notes as such.

In the second place, it is the duty of the sinking fund trustees to pay the special assessment bonds. If notes are issued under section 3915, General Code, in anticipation of the collection of assessments, the proceeds of the sale of such notes, in order to be made applicable to the payment of the bonds, would have to be turned over to the sinking fund trustees. I find no authority in law for the sinking fund trustees to receive such money. To be sure the fund might be transferred to the sinking fund by appropriate action, but this is an indirect way of accomplishing the result, and the fact that such indirection would be required to bring about the consummation of the project shows, to my mind, that it was not the intention of the legislature that such notes should be issued for that purpose.

I have already observed that you do not state how the deficiency occurred, nor do you state what is meant by the "anticipation" of special assessments under which the notes were attempted to be issued. The query, in my mind is as to whether the assessments have merely not been paid, and payment may be expected in the future on the one hand, or, on the other hand, whether there is an actual deficiency in the assessments.

In the event that the deficiency grows out of an erroneous calculation as to the amount of the assessment, or any other circumstance affecting the amount of the assessment itself, I do not think that a different conclusion would be reached. Bonds have already been issued in anticipation of the collection of a certain amount of assessments. These bonds in amount exceed the assessments actually made. To the extent of the excess, it may be said, then, that the subsequent assessments or reassessments have been anticipated, so that if the mistake had been discovered immediately and the additional assessments or reassessments had been certified, these assessments would have clearly belonged to the sinking fund when paid for the retirement of the bonds already issued. That the council has waited until the bonds are about to fall due before making the reassessments does not change the essential nature of the case. The assessments have been anticipated even though they have not yet been made, and, therefore, when paid they belong to the sinking fund to be applied to the payment of the bonds; and if the bonds fall due and must be met out of general sinking fund moneys, the sinking fund is entitled to reimbursement out of the proceeds of the subsequent assessments, upon the principles already laid down.

In passing, I do not believe that it is any more proper to make another issue of special assessment bonds, under section 3914, to take care of a situation like that which you describe, than it is to issue notes, under section 3915, for that purpose. In my judgment neither one of these sections is available, and the proper method in which to meet a situation of this sort is to pay the bonds and permit the sinking fund to be repleted by the payment of the subsequently collected assessment; or in the event that the amount in the sinking fund, at the time, is insufficient for such purpose, to issue refunding bonds or notes therefor.

I have discussed your questions together, and in a general way. Answering them specifically and in their order I beg to state that council may not lawfully issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, under section 3916, General Code, when bonds have already been issued in anticipation of the collection of the same assessments, and for the purpose of paying such said bonds, when they become due, there being a deficiency in the fund derived from the collection of such assessments.

I am of the opinion, further, that the proper way to meet a deficiency of this sort, which may be merely temporary, is to issue refunding bonds or notes. This may be done where a lower rate of interest can be obtained by the sinking fund trustees, acting under section 4520, General Code; otherwise it must be done by council, under section 3916, General Code. If the sinking fund trustess act, they must issue bonds; and if the council acts, notes may be issued. In the event notes are issued, the payment of such notes does not, of course, devolve upon the sinking fund trustees; but this is immaterial because whether the refunding medium be notes or bonds, the subsequently paid assessments are not to be directly applied to their payment, but go to reimburse the sinking fund for the advances made on account of the original bonds. In short, what is in effect done is for the general taxpayers to advance the money and then to have the tax moneys reimbursed by the subsequently paid assessments.

Answering your third question, I am of the opinion that in any event special assessment bonds, when they fall due, must be paid by the sinking fund trustees whether there is a deficiency in the funds in their possession specially applicable to such bonds or not.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLICATION OF ORDINANCES AND RESOLUTIONS OF A GENERAL NATURE IN MUNICIPALITIES—PUBLICATION IN NEWSPAPERS OF OPPOSITE POLITICS—PUBLICATION IN GERMAN NEWSPAPER—POSTING.

1. Publication of municipal ordinances and resolutions of a general nature in municipalities in which two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation and of which one side at least is printed in the municipality shall be published in two of such newspapers.

2. If there are not two such newspapers, publication must be made in any newspapers of general circulation in the municipality, one side of which at least is printed therein.

3. If there are no newspapers one side of which is printed in the municipality, publication must be made in any newspaper of general circulation.

4. If there are no newspapers which meet the requirements of either of the two preceding paragraphs, it is optional to publish in said newspaper or to post.

5. In case there are no newspapers meeting the requirements of the preceding paragraphs, then posting is obligatory.

6. Should there be published in the municipality a newspaper printed in the German language, which has a bona fide circulation within the municipality of not less than one thousand copies, publication must be made in such newspaper.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 2, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of July 15th requesting my opinion as to how publication of municipal ordinances or resolutions of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be made, received. The sections of the code applicable are the following:

> "Section 4227. Ordinances, resolutions and by-laws shall be authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer and clerk of the council. Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice. As soon as a by-law, resolution or ordinance is passed and signed, it shall be recorded by the clerk in a book to be furnished by the council for the purpose. (R. S. section 1695; 96 v. 82 section 196).
> "Section 4228. Ordinances and resolutions requiring publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in such municipality, if such there be, and shall be published in a newspaper printed in the German language if there is in such municipality such a paper having a bona fide paid circulation within such municipality of not less than one thousand copies. Proof of such circulation shall be made by the affidavit of the proprietor or editor of such paper, and shall be filed with the clerk of the council.

"Section 4229. Except as otherwise provided in this title, in all municipal corporations the statements, ordinances, resolutions, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by this title, or the ordinances of a municipality to be published, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality, and for the following times: The statement of receipts and disbursements required shall be published once; the ordinances and resolutions once a week for two consecutive weeks; proclamations of elections once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices of contracts and of sale of bonds once a week for four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published once.

"Section 4232. In municipal corporations in which no newspaper is published, it shall be sufficient publication of ordinances, resolutions, statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports, required by this title to be published, to post up copies thereof at not less than five of the most public places in the corporation, to be determined by the council, for a period of not less than fifteen days prior to the taking effect thereof. Advertising for bids for the construction of public improvements shall be published in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the corporation for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks. Notices of the sale of bonds shall be published in such manner and for such time as is provided in this title for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation, when not sold to the sinking fund. The clerk shall make a certificate of such posting and the times when and places where done, in the manner provided in the preceding section, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the copies were posted up as required.

"Section 4676. Where in this title a notice is directed to be published in a newspaper, and no such paper is published at the place mentioned, or if such newspaper is published at the place, but the publisher refuses on tender of his usual charge for a similar notice, to insert it in his newspaper, a publication in any newspaper of general circulation at such place shall be sufficient. Nothing in this section shall be construed to dispense with posters where they are provided for.

"Section 6255. For sufficient publication of a notice or advertisement, required by law to be published for a definite period, at least one side of the newspaper in which such publication is made shall be printed in the county or municipal corporation in which such notice or advertisement is required to be published."

The first question that arises is as to whether or not the word "notice" in section 4676, and the words "notices or advertisement" in section 6255 include ordinances or resolutions. I am of the opinion that ordinances and resolutions come within the terms "notice or advertisement." Particularly is this evident from a reading of section 4227 wherein it is provided:

"Ordinances of a general nature shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice."

Clearly the word "notice" in this section shows that the legislature meant it to cover ordinances.

If two or more newspapers of opposite politics are published and of general circulation in the municipality and at least one side of each newspaper is printed therein then publication must be made in two of such newspapers of opposite politics; section 4229 requiring publication and general circulation, and section 6255 requiring printing of one side therein.

If there are not two such newspapers as fulfill the requirements stated in the preceding paragraph, then publication must be made in any newspaper of general circulation in the municipality, one side of which newspaper at least is printed in said municipality; section 6255 requiring the printing and section 4676 permitting publication in the one newspaper, unless posting is resorted to; section 4232. A reading of sections 4676 and 4232 will show that publication may be made under either section.

If there are no newspapers, one side of which is printed in the municipality, then publication must be made in any newspaper of general circulation in the municipality; section 4676, unless posting is resorted to; section 4232. It is to be understood that where a publisher refuses to publish, the same situation arises as if no such newspaper were published; section 4676.

If there are newspapers which meet the requirements of the two preceding paragraphs, it is optional then to publish in such newspapers or to post; section 4232.

In case there are no newspapers meeting the requirements of the preceding paragraphs, then posting is the only method that can be used for publication.

Furthermore, should there be published in a municipality a newspaper printed in the German language which has a bona fide circulation within such municipality of not less than one thousand copies, then, in addition to the other publication required by law, publication must be made in such German newspaper; section 4228.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GINSENG CONSTITUTES A GROWING CROP WITHIN THE MEANING OF TAXING STATUTES—TO BE LISTED AS PERSONAL PROPERTY.

The plant known as ginseng, when in a state of cultivation, constitutes a growing crop within the meaning of the taxing statutes, though it takes several years to mature. Its value is not to be considered a part of the real estate, but the value of the crop, if it has any ascertainable value, is to be listed as personal property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 4, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of July 31st, requesting my opinion on the question presented by certain citizens of Muskingum county, upon the following facts as stated by them:

> "Ginseng is a plant grown from the seed for the purpose of producing salable roots which constitute the only commercial product of its cultivation. The seed is planted under a natural shade, i. e., in the woods. It takes eighteen months to germinate. Thereupon the plant is cultivated for seven or eight years until a matured crop of salable roots is produced.
> "There is considerable risk inherent in the production of the matured crop and the value of the crop is uncertain, if not entirely speculative, until the crop is harvested.

"The foregoing facts relate to cultivated ginseng and not to the same commodity growing in a state of nature.

"Is ginseng in the ground, under the circumstances described, taxable at all? If it is not taxable as such should its value enter into the value of the real estate in which it is planted, and be considered by the assessor in valuing such real estate? If it is separately taxable should it be assessed as personal property?

The following sections of the General Code are involved in the consideration of the questions submitted:

"Section 5322. The terms "real property" and "land" as so used, include not only land itself, whether laid out in town lots or otherwise, with all things contained therein, but also, unless otherwise specified, all buildings, structures, improvements, and fixtures of whatever kind thereon, and all rights and privileges belonging, or appertaining thereto.

"Section 5325. The term 'personal property' as so used, includes first, every tangible thing being the subject to ownership, whether animate or inanimate, other than money, and not forming part of a parcel of real property, as hereinbefore defined; * * *.

"Section 5328. All real or personal property in this state, belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom. Such property, moneys, credits, and investments shall be entered on the list of taxable property as prescribed in this title.

"Section 5370. Each person of full age and sound mind shall list the personal property of which he is owner, * * *.

"Section 5371. * * * personal property upon farms shall be listed in the township, city or village in which it is situated. * * *.

"Section 5376. Such statement shall truly and distinctly set forth * * *: seventh, the total value of all articles of personal property, not included in the preceding or succeeding classes; * * *.

"Section 5560. Each separate parcel of real property shall be valued at its true value in money, excluding the value of the crops growing thereon. * * * * * * * * * * * *."

Probably the first question which arises is as to whether or not, under the circumstances mentioned, cultivated ginseng constitutes a growing crop within the meaning of section 5560. This statute has, so far as I am able to ascertain, received no real authenticative interpretation. In Miller vs. Miller, 15 N. P. n. s. 33, there is a discussion of this subject. I quote from the opinion of Jones, J., as follows:

"While it is not customary to speak of plants, shrubs and flowers as 'crops,' growing or otherwise, yet on consideration there seems to be no reason why they should not be so classified. Such articles in a florist's stock are the product of what is planted in the ground, and become the subject of man's cultivation and labor and skill. They grow in and derive sustenance from the earth, whether the earth remains in its natural location, or is placed in boxes, pots or other receptacles. True, the courts have usually employed the term 'annual' products, in defining crops, but as pointed out in defendant's brief, such a limitation is too narrow, as there are at least some crops that do not mature in a single year, and in certain localities more than a single crop may possibly be produced in the same year. This court is therefore ready to adopt the argument of defendant's counsel, that a florist's stock may be classified as a 'growing crop.'

Mr. Freeman, in his work on Executions, says:

"Section 113. The decisions holding certain crops to be personal estate and therefore subject to execution, have generally embraced nothing beyond those crops, which, being sown or planted are capable of reaching perfection within one year. But we think that a crop which could not reach perfection in less than two or three years would also be personal property, if its growth can be regarded as chiefly attributable to the skill and labor of the owner. We think too, that the purpose for which the product is cultivated may be taken into consideration in determining its character as real or personal estate. Thus, fruit trees planted in an orchard to permanently enhance the value of the real estate ought to be regarded in a very different light from trees growing in a nursery for the purpose of sale, and which the owner treats as merchandise to be sold to whomsoever may apply."

Although, as I shall hereinafter point out, the decision in the case is probably obiter, I am disposed to adopt the reasoning of the court on this point because it appeals to me as eminently sound. The old distinction between fructus naturales and fructus industrales, while probably not a true test in all cases to determine whether or not a growing thing constitutes a "crop" may be, I think with propriety, applied to the present case. Whatever may be the rule with respect to ginseng growing in a state of nature, like any weed or wild flower, when it appears, as it does, from the statement of facts upon which this opinion is predicated, that the plant is germinated from the seed and is actually cultivated with a view to harvesting and selling a commercial product, it constitutes, in my judgment, a "crop," though it takes seven or eight years to mature.

But under the statutes above cited and quoted what is the consequence of holding that ginseng under cultivation constitutes a "growing crop?" Does it follow because such crops are not to be considered in valuing the land on which they are growing that they are to be exempted from taxation altogether? This question is not easy of solution in the absence of authorities. On the one hand it might be argued that the definition of "personal property," as used in section 5325, General Code, could not include growing crops for the reason that only such tangible things, being the subject of ownership, as do not form a part of a parcel of real property "as hereinbefore defined" are within the purview of the definition; and looking at section 5322, it appears that the term "real property" includes, not only the land itself, but also "all things contained therein." On this line of reasoning it would follow that the term "personal property" as defined in section 5325, and applicable throughout the field of personal property taxation is exclusive of all things contained in a parcel of real estate; so that when the assessor is directed not to value growing crops as a part of the real estate, this is equivalent to an exemption of such growing crops because they would have to be included within the definition of "real property."

Such a process of reasoning is strictly logical, but it involves certain difficulties. In the first place, there is a presumption against exemption from taxation. I need not elaborate upon a principle with which the commission is familiar. Suffice it to state that exemptions are presumed against, and that even what is known as an incidental or casual exemption will not be found by the courts if such an interpretation can be avoided.

In the second place, the strict interpretation above referred to runs counter to the constitution itself, in that it would have the effect of making section 5560 amount to an attempt to construct an unconstitutional exemption. Only such property can be effectively exempted from taxation as the legislature is authorized to exempt therefrom by express provision of article XII, section 2, which contains no reference to growing crops.

Now it is well understood that the legislature in constructing its machinery for taxation may afford what may be termed an accidental exemption to some species of property merely by failing to provide adequate machinery for the taxation of such property. As already stated, such exemption is vigorously presumed against, in theory at least, by the courts, but to my mind, the above interpretation of the related statutes would, as already indicated, make section 5660 stand as more than a mere incidental exemption, and would stamp it with the character of a deliberate attempt to violate the constitution, for under such interpretation the situation would be as follows:

By reason of the definitive sections, interpreted as above indicated, the legislature would be held to have made growing crops a part of the land for taxation purposes, the same as timber, minerals or other "things contained therein;" that being the case the direct command to the assessor not to consider the value of such crops in arriving at the value of the land, if having the effect of exempting such crops from taxation altogether, would be a direct exemption and not an accidental one. As such it would be unconstitutional. Such being the case, then, another principle comes into play, viz., the presumption of constitutionality; by virtue of which statutes of doubtful import are so interpreted as to preserve their validity under the constitution. How then, could such an interpretation be constructed as would render the related statutes constitutional? Obviously, by ignoring the strict language of section 5325, and particularly the words "hereinbefore" as used therein; for if personal property be defined as including all tangible things the subject of ownership other than such as are taxed as real estate, then the effect of the provision that the assessor shall not consider the growing crops as a part of the realty, would be simply to make them taxable as personal property and returnable as such by their respective owners. Such is, I think, the true interpretation of all the related statutes in the light of the constitution. Whatever tangible things, the subject of ownership, which are not to be taken into consideration in arriving at the value of real property, are to be separately listed as items of personal property. This was the view of the court in the nisi prius decision above cited. On this point, Jones, J., said:

> "The position taken by the defendant is:
> "1st. The property covered by this assessment is a growing crop.
> "2d. Growing crops are not subject to taxation under the laws of Ohio.
> "That is to say, that even if this class of property has not by legislation been expressly exempted from taxation, yet on the other hand, no legislation has ever been enacted making it so subject. It is further said, that while the constitution provides that laws shall be passed taxing all property, yet the provision is not self-executing, and that the legislature, whether by oversight or by design, has omitted to enact any statute that provides for the taxation of a growing crop.
> "On behalf of the plaintiff it is argued that even if a florist's stock be regarded as growing crop, it is personal property, as defined by section 5325, which includes 'every tangible thing being the subject of ownership, whether being animate or inanimate, other than money, and not forming part of a parcel of real estate,' and as such it is subject to taxation under the sweeping provisions of section 5328, General Code, which makes all personal property in the state subject to taxation, except such as is 'expressly exempted therefrom' * * *

"Much stress is laid on the provision of section 5560, General Code, that 'each separate parcel of real property shall be valued at its true value in money, excluding the value of the crops growing thereon.'

"This a plain peremptory direction to the assessing officers. Does it imply any meaning further than it carries on its face? Does it seek to classify growing crops as either real or personal property, or by any implication to exclude them as subjects for taxation? * * *.

"It seems to the court that the object of the legislature in excluding the value of growing crops from the assessment of real estate for taxation is quite obvious, and is in accord with justice and common sense. At the time that the original of section 5560, General Code, was enacted, real estate was only appraised for taxation once in ten years, and the valuation once made stood unchanged for the whole of the decennial period. Even now, the valuation stands for four years before a reappraisement is had. It is perfectly apparent that it might happen that at the date of appraisement the value of the growing crop might be large, small, or possibly there might be no crop at all, and that it would be unjust and absurd to enhance or diminish the value of the ground for the succeeding nine or three years, as the case might have been, while the condition might change from year to year. The real estate owner who happened to have a promising crop at the time of the appraisement would have to pay an increased tax for a succeeding period of years in which he might have poor crops, or even plant no crop at all, while the owner who had no crop at all at the appraisement period, would profit at the expense of the state during successive years of profitable cultivation of the same land. In adopting this part of the statute the court thinks that the legislature had no other object in view than that indicated, and in view of the provision of section 5328, General Code, which requires the exemption from taxation to be express, the court does not think that any exemption can be read into section 5560 by implication.

"But it is said that growing crops have never been taxed in this state. If they are proper subjects of taxation, the failure of the owners to return them, or of the taxing authorities to require them to be returned, however long continued, does not transfer them to the exempted list. In other words, it might be said that immunity from taxation cannot be acquired by prescription.

"But there is probably a very good reason for the fact referred to (assuming it to be the case) and one which does not reflect upon the good conscience of either the taxpayer or the assessor. Returns of personal property for taxation are made in Ohio between the second Monday in April and the third Monday in May—usually near the first part of the period, and covering the property owned at the first mentioned date. On the second Monday in April it would be impossible to say within any certainty, at least as to the great majority of crops, whether they ever would have any value; to be sure whether they had commenced to germinate. Sometimes they might not then even be sown. Many conditions might attend the advancing season that would affect the growing crop, and its value, when just that sown, can hardly be said to be anything more than speculative. If personal property had to be returned for taxation in June or July it is highly probable that growing crops would cut quite a figure in the list.

"It is said the taxing period comes at a time when florist's stocks are large, and a hardship is thereby worked upon them. This may be true, but the same might be said of any property owner who has a more than ordinarily large amount of personalty in his hands on the return day.

"It is well known that the business of raising and selling plants and flowers is often carried on upon a large scale, and often in a profitable manner. The florist, like other business men, engages in his occupation to supply a public demand for certain articles that gratify the eye and the sense of beauty, and he does so with the object of reaping a profit. No apparent reason exists why the legislature should intend to exempt his wares from taxation, or why they should be exempted, any more than the merchandise of any kind in which anyone else traffics as a means of livelihood and profit. Nor is it claimed by the defendants that such reason exists—it should be said to prevent what might seem a possible reflection upon them, that they are not here claiming that they should be a privileged class, but simply that under the existing law they are not required to pay taxes on their stock.

"This court thinks that there is sufficient authority under the provisions of section 5376, General Code, for the listing of this stock for taxation as personalty, and that considering it as a growing crop it is neither exempt from taxation, or unincluded in the legislative provision as to what shall be taxed.

"In conclusion, it may be added, in view of the constitutional mandate requiring the legislature to pass laws providing for the taxation of all property, and the comprehensive language of the statutes enacted in compliance with that enactment, that the court will be slow to presume that the legislative body either intentionally ignored the constitutional requirement as to one certain class of property, or failed in its duty by oversight or negligence. It would seem that one of these presumptions must be entertained, if it be held, either that the legislature has exempted this class of property from taxation directly, or has made no provision by which it could be taxed. And as the exemption would have to be express, and no express exemption exists, then in the absence of such express exemption the property in question cannot escape taxation."

Now, I am of the opinion, that this portion of Judge Jones' decision is a dictum for the reason that the florist's stock, concerning which the controversy in the case before him arose, cannot be regarded as "growing crops" under the facts stated in the pleadings. Indeed, the decision was affirmed upon that ground, apparently, as evidenced by the brief decision of the circuit court, which has not been reported, but a copy of which has been shown me.

Despite, however, the nature of the decision, I am disposed to follow it. Its reasoning is in accord with the views which I have already expressed, and I am of the opinion that it should be taken as the law of the state applicable to taxation of growing crops actually planted in the soil, at least until a different conclusion is reached by the courts.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that ginseng in a state of cultivation, as described in the statement of facts to me, constitutes personal property for the purpose of taxation, and as such should be listed at the true value in money thereof by its owner.

It is probably true, as stated in the letter submitted to me, that certain practical difficulties are involved in the application of this ruling. The matter of valuation is one of them. The owners of ginseng are entitled to list an unmatured crop of that plant in the ground at a value which makes due allowance for all risks inherent in its production, and for the length of time which the crop will take to mature. But the case is no more than an extreme instance of a principle that runs through the entire field of valuation for purpose of taxation, and it is felt that the taxing officials may be trusted to apply the law with judgment and discretion.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION MAY PAY NECESSARY EXPENSES OF ADVISERS APPOINTED BY IT—SUCH EXPENSES TO BE PAID FROM FUND FOR MAINTENANCE.

The industrial commission may pay the necessary expenses of advisers appointed by it under section 22 of the industrial commission act, such expenses to be paid out of subdivision "F" of its fund for maintenance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 22, 1914, you ask whether or not the expenses of any members of committees appointed as advisers under section 22 of the industrial commission act (103 O. L., 95), may lawfully be paid out of funds appropriated by the general assembly for the maintenance of that department.

That part of section 22 of said act, which is here applicable reads thus:

> "It shall also be the duty of the industrial commission, and it shall have full power, jurisdiction and authority:
> "(1) To appoint advisers, who shall, without compensation, assist the industrial commission in the execution of its duties; * * *."

The foregoing language confers full authority upon your commission to appoint these advisers, and I think that the word "compensation," as used in this section, should be defined as meaning remuneration for services performed. Therefore, you will see that the inhibition against compensation was not intended to deprive your commission of the right to pay the necessary expenses of these advisers. As you very well state, such advisers will be appointed from various parts of the state in order that the provision may be given its widest and most effective possible scope, and this will necessitate meetings at a specified point in order that proper assistance may be rendered your commission in the execution of its duties. I cannot believe that it was the intention of the general assembly to have these advisers assist the commission at a loss to themselves by reason of their being compelled to pay their own expenses while serving the state in such capacity. If such were the case it would be practically impossible to procure the service of such persons, and the foregoing quoted section would thus be rendered ineffective. The general assembly thought it proper to allow your commission to obtain advice in the execution of its duties and must have intended to repose in it the power to carry out this provision of law, and such power necessarily would carry with it the right to pay the necessary expenses of these advisers, provided, of course, an appropriation has been made therefor.

Under subdivision "F" of the appropriation to the industrial commission for maintenance (104 O. L. 86) it will be found that $80,000.00 has been set apart for contract or open order service, which includes general plant service and contingencies. This classification of appropriations has not been sub-classified in respect to this branch of your maintenance department

Briefly stated my opinion is that your commission is authorized to pay the necessary traveling expenses and the expense of attending meetings of such advisers as you appoint under the section quoted, and that such payment should be made out of subdivision "F" of the maintenance fund of your department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OPERATION OF STEAM BOILER—WHEN SUCH BOILER IS EXEMPT FROM INSPECTION UNDER SECTION 1058-7, GENERAL CODE.

When a boiler is used in the operation of a steam threshing machine, it is used for agricultural purposes, and is exempt from inspection under section 1058-7, General Code.

If such boiler is used for the operation of a saw mill, which is used in sawing timber for commercial purposes, it does not come within the foregoing exemption and is subject to inspection.

When such boilers are used for the operation of machinery for sawing wood in convenient lengths for fire wood, for those residing on farms, or where it is used for the purpose of clearing land, such use would be an agricultural purpose, and it would then be within the exemption. If the wood were to be cut solely for the purpose of marketing the same, or for the sale of timber, such use would not be agricultural, and would be without the exemption.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of August 22, 1914, in which you say:

"We desire your construction of section 1058-7 of the General Code, relative to the inspection of steam boilers.

"Said section exempts from inspection boilers used for certain purposes, among others being 'portable boilers used for agricultural purposes.' This department has construed said section as exempting boilers used in connection with the operation of steam threshing machines when so used. It so happens, however, that in many instances the owners of such boilers, after the threshing season is over, use them for other purposes such as operating sawmills for sawing lumber and also for sawing wood, and when used for the latter purpose the boiler is generally moved from farm to farm and the work of wood sawing is done for individual farmers on their premises.

"What we desire to know is:

"1. Whether a boiler which is used in the operation of a steam threshing machine is to be regarded as 'used for agricultural purposes' within the meaning of the section above quoted.

"2. If so, whether its use during portions of the year when it is not used in the operation of a threshing machine, for the operation of a sawmill brings it within the rule requiring inspection.

"3. Whether such boilers are subject to inspection when used for the operation of machinery for sawing wood as above indicated."

Section 1058-7 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 649, reads thus:

"All steam boilers and their appurtenances, except boilers of railroad locomotives subject to inspection under federal laws, portable boilers used in pumping, heating, steaming and drilling, in the open field, for water, gas and oil, and portable boilers used for agricultural purposes, and in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges, boilers on automobiles, boilers of steam fire engines brought into the state for temporary use in times of emergency for the purpose of checking conflagrations, boilers carrying pressure of less than fifteen pounds per square inch, which are equipped with safety devices approved by the board of boiler rules, and boilers under the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be thoroughly inspected, internally and externally, and under operating conditions at intervals of not more than one year, and shall not be operated at pressures in excess of the safe working pressure stated in the certificate of inspection hereinafter mentioned. And shall be equipped with such appliances to insure safety of operation as shall be prescribed by the board of boiler rules."

I shall answer your questions in the order in which you have presented them.

1. I think that a threshing machine when used for the purpose of threshing grain, may be said to be utilized for agricultural purposes, and the boiler thereof is, under such circumstances, used for agricultural purposes, and consequently is within the exception referred to in the foregoing quoted statute. That is to say, when the boiler is used with a threshing machine employed for the purpose of threshing grain such boiler may be said to be used for agricultural purposes.

In Ellis & Co. vs. Hulse, 23 Q. B. D., 24, it was held that a locomotive sometimes let by the owner for the purpose of carrying straw and manure, and sometimes used by the owner himself for hire for like purposes, was a locomotive used solely for agricultural purposes. It was argued that because the engine was let for hire it was used for other than such agricultural purposes, but this view the court refused to entertain.

In Mach vs. Baker, 55 J. P., 583, it was held that a traction engine that draws a threshing machine from one farm to another is used solely for agricultural purposes. These two decisions go much further in exempting from the operation of the law such machines than is necessary in order to answer your question.

2. When the boiler is not used in the operation of a threshing machine, but is used as a means of supplying power for the operation of a saw-mill, it seems to me that it does not then come within the foregoing exception, because it is not then used for agricultural purposes, but, on the contrary, is part of the machinery of the saw-mill. I assume that the mill which you have in mind is used for the usual purposes of a saw-mill where timber is cut into convenient sizes for commercial purposes.

In Hoddell vs. Parker, 2 K. B., 323 (1910), it was decided that a threshing engine used for the purpose of hauling wheat to a mill was not, when so used, employed in agricultural purposes. This very clearly indicates that a boiler, such as the one referred to by you, may be used for separate and distinct purposes, and may possess the attributes of each to such an extent as to enable the law to operate on it in different ways when each use is separately considered. Therefore, simply because the boiler is within the exception, under some circumstances, it does not necessarily follow that it is within the exception under all circumstances. When it is not used for a purpose exempting it from the operation of the statute, it must be held to come within the purview of the law. Consequently when the boiler is used for the operation of a saw-mill, such as the one described by me, I think that inspection thereof is required.

3. As your second question calls for a construction of the law with reference to the use of boilers in saw-mills, I take it that your third question must be intended to cover a different situation, although you state that the boiler is used for "sawing wood as above indicated." I assume that what you desire to have answered in this question is whether boilers should be inspected when they are used to operate saws for the purpose of dividing wood or timber found on the farm into convenient lengths for fire wood, and also when such boilers furnish the motive power for the operation of saws used in clearing land of timber.

If the sole purpose of the boiler is that indicated in my assumption, then it is my judgment that such boilers are not subject to inspection, as they come within the exception. I do not think it does any violence to the language of the act, and I feel confident that it is in conformity with the spirit thereof to hold that the reduction of wood found upon the farm into convenient lengths for fire-wood for those residing on the farm, is an agricultural purpose. Of course, if the wood were to be cut for the sole purpose of selling the same, then I am inclined to doubt if it can be said that the use of the boiler would then be for agricultural purposes. The same construction should apply to the clearing of land. If the object merely is to render the premises more available for farming purposes, then anything which resulted in the removal of the timber from the land would be an agricultural purpose, but if the standing timber were removed for the purpose of a sale of such timber, the work of removing it would properly be said not to be an agricultural purpose.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FIVE OR MORE WORKMEN EMPLOYED BY AN INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR ON FEDERAL BUILDING WITHIN THE PURVIEW OF THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

An independent contractor employing five or more workmen in Ohio, is, while engaged in the construction of a post office building upon land owned by the federal government in this state, within the purview of the workmen's compensation act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Majestic Building, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 22, 1914, you submit the following inquiry:

> "Is an employer of five or more workmen or operatives engaged in the construction of a United States post office upon lands owned by the United States government within the state of Ohio, an employer within the meaning of the workmen's compensation law?"

Under the provisions of section 13 of the workmen's compensation act, every person, firm and private corporation, having in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, are employers, and under section 14, correlatively, every person in the service of any such person, firm or private corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, is an employe, excepting those whose employment is but casual or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer.

In former opinions rendered to your department, I have held that this law has extra-territorial force to the extent that when the contract of employment is made in this state, it comes within the purview of this act, and if the employe is injured while in the service of his employer beyond the borders of this state, he is entitled to compensation. All questions involved in actions of this character have been fully set out in these opinions, and therefore, I regard it as unnecessary further to discuss this phase of the question.

With these considerations in view I do not believe that it is material here to discuss the question of whether or not land owned by the United States is solely subject to its jurisdiction exclusive of that of the state. See sections 13770 et seq, General Code. Many interesting branches of that question have been discussed in the various reports with reference to criminal proceedings. For instance, in Battle vs. United States, 209 U. S. 36, it was held that the crime of murder committed on government post office property was justifiable in the federal court, while in United States vs. Press Publishing Co., 219 U. S. 1, the holding was that the United States had no jurisdiction of the crime of criminal libel, jurisdiction thereof having been vested in the state court, although the libel was published on federal property.

The United States government has not legislated with reference to master and servant when that relationship exists on post office property in the state, and it has been held by the solicitor of the department of commerce and labor that a workman employed by a government contractor is not entitled to receive compensation from the federal government under the federal workmen's compensation act. See opinions solicitor department commerce and labor, page 34.

There being no congressional legislation on this subject to supersede that of the state, we are confronted with the question whether article 1, section 8, subdivision 17 of the constitution of the United States prevents the application of the workmen's compensation act of this state under the circumstances set out in your letter. The exact language of the federal constitution stating the powers of congress reads thus:

> "To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may by cession of particular states and the acceptance of congress, become the seat of government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings."

Whether the post offices which you have in mind are located on land ceded by the state or have been purchased by the consent of the general assembly, is not here of serious importance, if my view of the law is correct. It has been held by the courts that under this provision of the federal constitution the state courts had jurisdiction over actions in tort committed on federal property. As illustrative of these I call your attention to the following:

In Madden vs. Arnold, 22 App. Div. 240, plaintiff sued for damages for injuries inflicted by a dog on land purchased by the United States, over which the state legislature had ceded jurisdiction, reserving to the state concurrent jurisdiction with the federal government so far as execution of civil and criminal process was concerned. It was urged that there was no jurisdiction in the state courts under article 1, section 8, Sub. 17 of the constitution of the United States providing that congress should have power to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature for the erection of forts and other needful buildings. It was not claimed that congress had legislated with reference to actions in damage occurring at such places, hence the question was whether in the absence of such legislation the state courts were deprived of jurisdiction. The court held that they were not and calls attention to the fact that it would even have the right to entertain actions for injuries occurring in other states and that the same principle would authorize the suit in question. This case contains an exhaustive discussion of cases bearing upon this question.

"An action can be maintained in a state court for tort committed upon one of its citizens within the limits of the Brooklyn navy yard."

Armstrong vs. Foote, 11 Abb. Prac, 384 (N. Y.)
McCarthy vs. Packard Co., 105 App. Div. 436.

Note the resemblance of the New York statute to sections 13770 et seq., General Code.

If the state court has jurisdiction over actions in tort it would seem that any constitutional provision limiting or abolishing the right of such actions could also be enforced in the state court. As the workmen's compensation act is designed to provide a more proper, fair, equitable and correctly economic method of caring for those who have been injured in the course of their employment than existed at common law it would follow that it should be given full force and effect wherever the action in tort could have been brought. It lays down the public policy of this state, and such public policy should be enforced within the territorial confines of Ohio.

In Railway Co. vs. McGlinn, 114 U. S. 542, the supreme court of the United States held that it was proper to enforce an act of the legislature of Kansas which was applicable to an action in damages arising out of the killing of a cow within the limits of the Ft. Leavenworth military reservation. There the jurisdiction over the territory had been ceded to the United States. It was contended that the Kansas act became inoperative upon such cession. This the court held to be unsound, holding that the government of the state of Kansas extended over the reservation and its legislation was operative therein except so far as the use of the land as an instrumentality of the general government might have excepted it from such legislation.

The liability of the employer under the workmen's compensation act is not dependent upon the particular place where he is engaged in work, but rather upon the fact that he has in his service a designated number of employes and the law of the state governs him in this particular when he employs the men within its borders

You do not state in your question whether the employment was for this particluar piece of work alone, and I assume that it was not, but that, on the contrary, the employer was in the general contracting business in Ohio employing five or more workmen regularly in his business. As soon as he made these contracts of hire he was obligated to pay the premium, and wheresoever the employe was injured he was entitled to the benefits and bound by the obligations conferred upon him by the act in question. Even if the employer were hiring the workmen for the construction of a government building which occupied all his time and men for a long period of time, this would not alter the situation. It might be argued that the requirement under these last circumstances that the contractor should contribute to the state insurance fund would be a tax on a federal agency, and consequently would be invalid. I do not think this theory would be upheld by the courts, as it is not a tax, but rather compulsory insurance on the part of the employer, and the various restrictions which are put upon his right of defense are in the nature of penalties imposed upon him for his failure to comply with the law, and at the same time give to the employe practically those rights which he would have had, had his employer been insured as required by law. To exempt those employers who act as independent contractors in government service would be to give the law an effect which I do not think it was designed to receive.

You understand that I am writing this opinion upon the theory that the employer was an independent contractor. If he were not he would come within the purview of the federal compensation act, and consequently the state law would not be applicable.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

IN CASE OF INJURY, EMPLOYE OF NEWS COMPANY ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION OUT OF STATE INSURANCE FUND, IF HIS EMPLOYER HAS COMPLIED WITH THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

If an employe of a news company is injured in the course of his employment, he is entitled to compensation out of the state insurance fund, if his employer has complied with the workmen's compensation act, by paying into such fund the premium required of him.

The question of the liability of the railroad company, upon whose trains the news agent is working, to such employe, is immaterial. Such employe would still retain his common law right of action against the railroad company.

Compliance by the railroad company with the act in no way affects whatever common law rights the employe of the news company may have, unless he was also an employe of the railroad company.

The workmen's compensation act applies to an employe of a news company when he is working for such company, even though his duties require him to ride upon interstate trains.

Contracts by which the news company is to indemnify the railroad company against payment of damage to employes of the news company are not inhibited by section 54 of the workmen's compensation act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 19, 1914, you ask this department to answer the following questions which have been submitted to you by the Union News Co. of Cincinnati, Ohio:

> "(1) If one of our employes is injured upon the railroad by whom he is employed, does he have a cause of action against the railroad, if we comply with the workmen's compensation act?
> "(2) If the railroad has also complied with the act, is the employe's right of action for damages in any way affected by the fact?
> "(3) Does the act apply to an employe of the Union News Co. injured while working on a train, which is engaged in interstate commerce?
> "(4) Are our contracts with the railroad, by which we agreed to indemnify them against loss occasioned by injury to our employes, void under section 54 of the act, because they do not provide for payment directly to the injured employe? (You will notice, of course, that section 54 provides for cases in which the indemnity is to be given to protect the employer against injuries to his own employes and not, as in our case, to employes of another)."

(1) This question is extremely contradictory in that it refers to "one of our employes," and also speaks of the "railroad by which he is employed." I do not know whether he is hired jointly by those two companies or whether the question is erroneously stated. In view of the language contained in the fourth question, I assume that the employe is in the service of the Union News Co., and not hired by the railroad company, although in the performance of his duty to his master he rides upon the trains of the railroad. This is really a matter with which your commission and this department has no concern.

If the news company employs five or more workmen it is its duty to pay the premium required of it by law into the state insurance fund, regardless of whether or not its employes would have a right of action against the railroad upon which they are riding at the time of their injury. The news company is protected by its contribution to the state insurance fund from liability for injuries received by its employes in the course of their employment, except, of course, where they are injured through the failure of their employer to observe statutory requirements for their safety, or by reason of his wilful act. I desire to suggest, however, that the concluding paragraph of section 25 of the workmen's compensation act, 103 O. L. 72, should have some bearing upon this question. After referring to the disbursement of the state insurance fund by your commission, the following language is used:

> "And such payment or payments to such injured employes or to their dependents in case death has ensued, shall be in lieu of any and all rights of action whatsoever against the employer of such injured or killed employe."

As this act is plainly designed as a substitute for the common law liability of master to servant, I do not think it should be construed so as to include relationships other than that of employer and employe. There is nothing in the law to indicate that it was intended to include all cases of liability for negligence, but, on the contrary, the language just quoted plainly provides that payment out of the state insurance fund is to be in lieu not of all rights of action, but merely of any and all rights of action against the employer. If the general assembly had intended to bar the employe of resort to court under all circumstances, it would, in my judgment, have distinctly so stated. The only cause of action abolished being that against the employer, it would appear to follow that, if the employe had any other ground for legal proceeding, the act was not intended to repeal it. From this it would seem that compliance by the employer with the provisions of the workmen's compensation act would have no effect on any right of action which the employe would have, excepting that arising against his employer.

(2) As the workmen's compensation act only applies to employer and employe I do not see how it would be possible for the railroad company to insure in the state insurance fund the employe of some other person, firm or corporation. In defining "employe," "workman" and "operative," section 14 of the law in question construes these terms to mean "every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual, or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

Under section 22 every employer of such employes shall pay a premium for his employment or occupation, and those who comply are not liable to their employes, with certain exceptions. This indicates beyond all doubt that it is only employes who are to be insured. The rules of your board with reference to the fixing of a premium further emphasize this view.

From this it must necessarily follow that if the servant of the Union News Co. is not an employe of the railroad company, its compliance with the act in no way affects its relationship to him.

(3) It is fundamental, I think, that the state under its police power may, in the absence of congressional legislation, enact statutes for the protection of employes who are engaged in interstate commerce.

> Railroad Co. vs. Castle 224 U. S. 541.
> See also Labatt on "Master and Servant," section 2808.

As the federal employers' liability act only applies to employes of common carriers by rail, and as there has been no congressional legislation with reference to agents of news companies traveling on interstate trains, it would seem that the state law would apply to them.

Observe what has been already said in an opinion from me to your department with reference to the extra-territorial effect of the workmen's compensation act.

(4) In this question it is stated that the news company provides for indemnity to the railroad company in case the latter is compelled to respond in damages for injuries to the employes of the former. This indicates that the news agents are not in the service of the railroad company, and, of course, it is elementary that one who is not employed by a railroad company, although he fulfills duties on a train for his own employer, cannot be said to be a servant of the railroad company, except so far as those duties are actually discharged under the direction and control of such railroad company.

See Labatt on "Master and Servant," section 49.

Of course, if the news agent were performing work for the railroad company, he would properly be said to be in its service. This has been elucidated in several cases, among which may be mentioned:

Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Co. vs. McCamey, 12 C. C. 543.

Section 54 of the workmen's compensation act is clear in its terms. It inhibits contracts for the purpose of indemnifying the employer on account of injury to his employes through the negligence of the employer or his officer, agent or servant. This section is designed to prevent the employer from evading the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, and is in harmony with that part of section 22 which permits employers to carry their own insurance. As this section is solely applicable to agreements providing against exemption from liability of the employer to his employe, it must follow that it has no pertinency to contracts whereby the employer agrees to indemnify third persons for injuries received by its own employes.

Whether or not such contracts are void, as against public policy, is not asked, and I do not think it within the province of this department to answer any such question, as it is one upon which the courts have differed very widely and should be determined in actions between private persons in which the state has no direct interest. As illustrative of the manner in which these questions have arisen, and as to the diversity of the decisions, I desire to call attention to the following:

Santa Fe, etc. Co. vs. Grant Bros. 228 U. S. 177.
Baltimore & Ohio S. W. Ry. vs. Voight 176 U. S. 498.
Yeomans vs. Steam Navigation Co. 44 Calif. 71.
Pennsylvania Co. vs. Woolworth 26 O. S. 585.
Louisville etc. R. R. Co. vs. Keefer 146 Ind. 21.
Grant vs. Ill. etc. R. R. Co. 182 Ill. 332.
Bates vs. Old Colony R. R. Co. 147 Mass. 255.
Railroad vs. Curran 19 O. S. 1.
Kirkendall vs. Union Pac. Co. 200 Fed. 197.
Denver & Rio Grande R. R. Co. vs. Whan 11 L. R. A. (n. s.) 432.

An extended note to the case last cited fully discusses various authorities dealing with this question.

Very truly yours.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

Since writing the foregoing opinion the United States district court, through Judge Sater, has held that the workmen's compensation act of this state does not apply to interstate carriers by rail even as to their intrastate business. I have already submitted to your department a copy of this opinion.

ALL PAPERS IN PROCEEDINGS TO SELL REAL ESTATE UNDER THE LAND REGISTRATION LAW SHOULD BE DELIVERED TO THE COUNTY RECORDER—WHERE LAND REGISTRATION LAW APPLIES, PROBATE COURT TO HAVE CARE OF ALL PAPERS AND RECORDS BELONGING TO THAT COURT—LAND REGISTRATION LAW APPLIES ONLY TO THOSE CASES INSTITUTED ON OR SUBSEQUENT TO JULY 1, 1914.

Under section 23 of the land registration act, 103 O. L., 927, all the papers in proceedings to sell real estate should be delivered to the county recorder, regardless of the provisions of section 1584, General Code, providing that each probate judge shall have the care and custody of all papers and records belonging to the probate court. The former is a special statute and should be read as an exception to the general rule laid down in section 1584, General Code.

The land registration law applies only to those cases which have been instituted on or subsequent to July 1, 1914, and has no effect upon the cases pending on that date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. CHARLES KRICHBAUM, Probate Judge, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 26, 1914, you state that you regard section 23 of the land registration act, and section 1584 and 10774 of the General Code as being inconsistent, and ask what rule of practice should be adopted.

Section 23 of the land registration act, 103 O. L., 927, provides in part:

> "The clerk shall once in every cause make a final record thereof, and immediately thereafter deliver to the recorder all papers in the case, taking a receipt therefor, which papers the recorder shall file, index and carefully preserve."

Section 10774 requires the executor or administrator of an estate to apply to the probate court or the common pleas court for authority to sell a decedent's real estate, when the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debts of the decedent and the allowance to the widow and children. Subsequent sections clearly confer upon the probate court authority to entertain such actions.

Section 1584 provides that:

I assume that your difficulty lies in the fact that under the sections last cited, whenever an action has been instituted in the probate court, all papers pertaining to such suit shall be kept on file in the office of the probate court.

Section 64 of the land registration act requires the inclusion of a cause of action for registration in all suits calling for the judicial sale of realty, which would, of course, include an action brought under sections 10774, et seq. Under section 23 of this act it is manifest that immediately upon the making of the final record in such proceedings all papers in the case are to be delivered to the recorder who shall file, index, and carefully preserve the same. As the land registration act is the later enactment, and is furthermore a special statute, I think that instead of calling for the doctrine of implied repeal, this state of affairs justifies the application of the theory that where the same statute, or different statutes upon the same subject, contain incompatible provisions one of which is general and the other special, the latter shall be held and treated as an exception to the former.

Cincinnati vs. Conner, 55 O. S., 88.
Brower vs. Hunt, 18 O. S., 341.
State vs. McGregor, 44 O. S., 631.
Doll vs. Barr, 58 O. S., 113.
Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S., 104.
Gas Co. vs. Tiffin, 59 O. S., 420.
Mitchell vs. State, 78 O. S., 347.

The land registration act being, as before suggested, special, it should be held as an exception to the other statutes by you cited. It relates to a particular kind of original records which are to be filed in the recorder's office, and this being true, I think that it should be followed to the letter. In other words, all the papers in the case should be filed with the county recorder.

I note your suggestion that the intended purpose of both laws could be carried out by having the registration of the land title in an amended petition, so that the probate court could retain that portion of the case arising out of the one cause of action, and transmit to the recorder that part of the case dealing with the land registration act. This, however, would not be in harmony with section 64 of the land registration act which requires the application for registration to be made in the petition asking for the sale of the realty, the allegations to be included in separate causes of action. Furthermore, before any order of sale or partition can be made, it is necessary that the title be registered. The object of the law was to require the doing of these two things in the same proceeding, and to separate them in the manner suggested would not conform to this purpose.

You also state that you have a number of cases which were pending prior to July 1, 1914, and ask whether it is necessary that there be registration of title in such cases. You will observe that section 64 provides that the petition which asks for a sale of the realty shall also contain a separate cause of action embodying the necessary allegations for the registration. Prior to July 1, 1914, no petition could contain a cause of action for registration of title, as there was no law in effect authorizing it. As the statute requires the petition to contain such cause of action, it must follow that it was the legislative intent to have the law only applicable when both cases could be embodied in the same petition. As this could only take place on or after July 1, 1914, it must follow that the act does not apply to these actions which were instituted prior to the date herein mentioned. In addition to this there is a well known rule of statutory construction that changes in the law do not affect pending actions unless there is express provision to accomplish that purpose contained in the new law.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the land registration law has no effect upon those cases which were pending on July 1, 1914.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXATION OF OHIO MUNICIPAL BONDS DEPOSITED WITH THE STATE TREASURER BY FOREIGN TRUST COMPANIES AS SECURITY.

Taxable Ohio municipal bonds deposited with the treasurer of state by foreign trust companies as security for the execution of trusts in this state, are subject to taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September, 12, 1914.

HON. J. P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You submit for my opinion upon the question therein stated, correspondence between yourself and the Cleveland Trust Co. The question is as follows:

> "Are bonds of the city of Cleveland issued subsequent to January 1, 1913, and deposited with the treasurer of state by a foreign trust company as security for the execution of trusts undertaken by it in this state, subject to taxation in Ohio?"

The following sections of the General Code may be considered in this connection:

> "Section 9774. A trust company may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate, exclusive of trust property, for the purpose and in the manner provided by this chapter as to commercial banks, and subject to like restrictions and limitations.
> "Section 9775. Trust companies shall have the same powers in the acceptance and execution of trusts which are now conferred upon them by statute.
> "Section 9778. No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock."
> "Section 9779. The treasurer of state shall hold such fund or securities deposited within as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited. From time to time said treasurer shall permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, on the deposit with him of cash, or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposit as herein provided.
> "Section 9780. No such corporation, foreign or domestic, authorized to accept and execute trusts, either directly or indirectly through any officer, agent or employe thereof, shall certify to any bond, note or other obligation to evidence debt, secured by any trust, deed or mortgage upon, or accept any trust concerning property located wholly or in part in this state without complying with the provisions of this and the two preceding sections. Any trust, deed or mortgage given or taken in violation of the provisions thereof shall be null and void.

"Section 9796. No bank or banking institution incorporated under the laws of any other state, shall be permitted to receive deposits or transact banking business of any kind in this state, except to lend money.

"Section 5404. The president, secretary and principal accounting officer of every incorporated company, except banking or other corporations whose taxation is specifically provided for, for whatever purpose they may have been created, whether incorporated by a law of this state or not, shall list for taxation, verified by the oath of the person so listing, all the personal property thereof, and all real estate necessary to the daily operations of the company, moneys and credits of such company or corporation within the state, at the true value in money.

"Section 5407. A company, association, or person, not incorporated under a law of this state or of the United States, for banking purposes, who keeps an office or other place of business, and engages in the business of lending money, receiving money on deposit, buying and selling bullion, bills of exchange, notes, bonds, stock, or other evidences of indebtedness, with a view to profit, is a bank, or banker, within the meaning of this chapter.

"Section 5408. All the shares of the stockholders in an incorporated bank or banking association, located in this state, incorporated or organized under the laws of the state or of the United States, and all the shares of the stockholders in an unincorporated bank, located in this state, the capital stock of which is divided into shares held by the owners of such bank, and the capital employed, or the property representing it, in an unincorporated bank in this state, shall be listed at the true value in money, and taxed only in the city, ward or village where such bank is located.

"Section 5437. Neither insurance companies and associations, incorporated by the authority of another state or government, nor the superintendent of insurance, shall be required to make returns for taxation of the deposits of such companies or associations, made as required by law, with the superintendent of insurance, for the benefit and security of policy holders; nor be governed with respect to such deposits, by the provisions of law relating to the listing of personal property or to the making of tax returns by corporations."

It is apparent to me, from a consideration of the first group of statutes above quoted, that foreign trust companies are not permitted to engage in Ohio in any species of banking business; their activities in this state are limited to the acceptance and execution of trusts, and as a prerequisite of so acting in Ohio they are required to deposit with the treasurer of state certain securities for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed in this state by them.

This conclusion is material because the answer to your question depends upon whether foreign trust companies accepting and executing trusts in this state are to be regarded as "corporations" within the meaning of section 5404, General Code, or as "banks" within the meaning of sections 5407 et seq., General Code.

It will be observed that sections 5404-6, inclusive, General Code, do not apply to, or in any way govern the taxation of banking corporations, they being excluded from the operation of those sections by express language in section 5404 itself.

If, therefore, a foreign trust company is a banking corporation for the taxation of which special provision is made by law, then sections 5404 et seq., do not apply to or govern the taxation of any property of such corporations in Ohio.

But I am satisfied that a foreign trust company, accepting and performing trusts in Ohio under the conditions mentioned in the first group of statutes above quoted, is not, within the meaning of the taxation laws, a bank.

In the first place, such a foreign trust company is permitted by law to engage in but one of the various activities mentioned in section 5406, which defines what constitutes a bank within the meaning of the taxation laws, viz.: lending money, and this only being the assumption that in the execution of trusts in Ohio, a foreign trust company might lend money in this state through an office located in this state. Such trust companies may not receive money on deposit at an office or place of business in this state, may not buy or sell bullion, bills of exchange, notes, bonds, stock or other evidences of indebtedness with a view to profit in this state. But whether or not in the execution of a trust, any one of these things might be done in this state and through an office located in this state, it would not be done as a business, and with a view to direct profit on the part of the trust company, but merely as incidental to the execution of the trust, which is itself the main and only authorized activity of the trust company, which may be conducted in Ohio.

In the second place, even if the business of a trust company, or rather the acts which it is permitted to do in Ohio, upon depositing certain securities with the treasurer of state, should satisfy the definition of section 5407, I would still be of the opinion that a foreign trust company would not be subject to the bank taxation laws of Ohio, for it is not every "bank" as defined in section 5407 that is a "banking corporation whose taxation is specifically provided for" within the meaning of section 5404. This appears upon consideration of section 5408 which limits "the special provision" with reference to the taxation of banks to banks "located in this state." The reason for this limitation exists in the fact that these statutes are intended to apply inter alia to the taxation of national banking associations. Such associations can be taxed—or to be more accurate, their shares of stock and real estate can be taxed—only by permission of congress, they being federal agencies, subject to state taxation only by consent of the federal government. The congressional legislation, which I need not cite, provides that a state may tax the shares of stock in a national bank, and the real estate of such bank; but that the shares of stock shall be taxed at the place where the bank is located.

Ohio, conforming her legislation for the taxation of banks to the necessities of the case with respect to national banks, has provided a scheme of taxation which applies only to banks "located in this state." The word "located" in this context designates the place where the physical banking house or main office of the bank or banking association is found. A bank could not be said to "be located in this state" within the meaning of this provision by reason of doing business in this state alone; for so to hold might lead to a violation of the principles embodied in the federal legislation with respect to national banking associations.

It follows, therefore, that a foreign trust company if accepting and executing trusts in Ohio, could not be, under any circumstances, a "bank located in this state" within the meaning of the taxation laws.

Not being such, it is not a "banking * * * corporation whose taxation is specifically provided for" within the meaning of section 5404.

Not being within the exception of section 5404, such corporations, to the extent that they may have taxable property in Ohio, are governed by the provisions of that section. This is apparent, first, upon consideration of the all-inclusive language of that section wherein it describes the corporations other than the excepted ones as follows: "for whatever purpose they may have been created, whether incorporated by a law of this state or not," and in the second place, such an application of the section is indicated by consideration of the fundamental rule of statutory interpretation that an exception from the purview of a statute is strictly construed and limited to the exact scope indicated by its phraseology. Authorities might be cited on this point, but it is elementary. The principle then requires that the exception in section 5404 be narrowly interpreted so as to apply, as its words clearly purport, only to "banking * * * corporations whose taxation is specifically provided for," and so as not to extend to all "banking corporations" whether their taxation is specifically provided for or not.

Other similar principles indicate this same conclusion. Thus, the constitution of the state, and the operative general sections such as 5328, General Code, which I need not quote, lay down the rule that unless expressly exempted therefrom all property subject to the jurisdiction of the state shall be taxed. This rule, embodying as it does the fundamental policy of the state, requires that as between two interpretations of a group of related statutes, one of which would lead to the taxation of a class of persons or corporations, or property, and the other of which will lead to an implied or accidental exemption from taxation, the former interpretation must be chosen and the latter rejected.

For all these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that foreign trust companies accepting and executing trusts in this state are within the rule of sections 5404 et seq., General Code, and such taxable property as they may have in this state must be listed for taxation as therein required.

When once this conclusion is reached the ultimate question which you present is solved; for under section 5404 it has been held more than once that a foreign corporation required, in order to do certain things in Ohio, to deposit securities with a certain state officer, must list these securities for taxation in this state, either in Franklin county where the securities are actually held, or in a county in this state where the company maintains its principal agency or office.

Insurance Co. vs. Bowland 196 U. S. 611.
Sims vs. Best I. C. C. n. s. 41.
Assurance Co. vs. Halliday 110 Fed. 259.
Assurance Co. vs. Halliday 126 Fed. 257.
Assurance Co. vs. Halliday 127 Fed. 830.

These cases dispose of all questions which might arise under section 5404. In the first place they dispose of the question as to whether or not intangible property like bonds, can have a situs for taxation other than the domicile of the owner. These cases answer such a question in the affirmative.

These cases also dispose of the question as to whether or not such intangible property compulsorily brought within the state is "property within the state" within the meaning of section 5404. This question is answered in the affirmative.

The cases also dispose of the question as to whether or not section 5404 requires the listing of "investments in bonds, stock, joint stock companies or otherwise," as the language of our constitution and statutes have it, such property not being specifically mentioned in section 5404, although "moneys and credits" being property of a similar type are mentioned in the section. This question is answered in the affirmative, the supreme court of the United States relying upon the definition of "personal property" found in section 5325, General Code.

In short, I am not aware of any point which might, in the exercise of extreme ingenuity, be conceived of, which is not covered by the decisions which I have cited.

It is true that the supreme court of this state has never been called upon to pass upon this question, the decisions being those of the federal courts and a circuit court of the state. However, the legislature of the state has accepted this interpretation of the statute under discussion, and has attempted to legislate for the benefit of insurance companies upon the basis of the idea embodied in these decisions. Section 5437 above quoted, which was enacted after some of these decisions were rendered, shows the manner in which the general assembly has accepted the interpretation of section 5404 which the courts had formerly made.

Of course, bonds of the city of Cleveland issued since January 1, 1913, are subject to taxation (article XII, section 2 of the constitution, as amended); therefore, I am of the opinion that bonds of the city of Cleveland issued subsequent to January 1, 1913 and deposited with the treasurer of state by a foreign trust company as security for the execution of trusts by such foreign company in this state, are subject to taxation in Ohio; if the company maintains no managerial office in this state, but merely acts through agents under instructions given from the home office, then the securities must be listed in Franklin county; otherwise, if the company actually has a principal business office in this state and a managing officer here in charge of the Ohio business, the securities must be listed in the county in which such office is located. In either event it is the duty of the company to list the securities for taxation, but if the company fails to do so, and the existence of the securities is known to the district assessor of the proper county, he has ample power to enter them upon the tax list.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN BOARD OF EDUCATION AND COAL COMPANY, OF WHICH ONE OF THE MEMBERS OF THE BOARD IS A STOCKHOLDER, WITHOUT ADVERTISING AND BIDS, IS ILLEGAL.

A contract in excess of $50.00, which is entered into between a board of education and a coal company, of which one of the members of the board is a stockholder, without advertising and bids, is illegal and contrary to section 12911, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. THEO. H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 13, 1914, you submit for my opinion the following:

> "I beg to inquire of you, if in your opinion, the following facts constitute a violation of sections 12910-12911-12912, or any other sections of the Ohio law, relating to officers being interested in contracts: Facts are as follows: 'A' is a member of the board of education of a city school district, which district happens to include some territory in the township outside of the city limits. 'A' is a stockholder and officer in a corporation which owns and operates a coal mine, and after proper publication this corporation was awarded a contract to furnish coal to a municipal corporation, being the city which is located in the territory comprising the school district of which 'A' is a member of the board of education."

It is the opinion of this department that a city school district represents an entity entirely separate and independent from the city government, and, therefore, a member of a city board of education who is interested in a contract of sale in any way to the city would not come within the terms of a statute prohibiting an officer from being interested in a contract for the purchase of property or supplies for use of the city.

Section 12911 of the General Code, however, is as follows:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is not connected, and the amount of such contract exceeds the sum of fifty dollars, unless such contract is let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

This statute prohibits interest on the part of an officer of trust in a contract for the purchase of property or supplies for the use of a city with which he is not connected, when the contract amounts to more than fifty dollars, and when the same is not let on bids duly advertised as provided by law.

I am of the opinion in the instance presented by you, 'A' being a stockholder in the corporation selling coal to the city has such an interest as is contemplated by this provision. If the amount of the sale exceeds fifty dollars, therefore, and if the contract was not let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, the facts presented will constitute a violation of this statute. You say that the contract was awarded after proper publication, but your facts are not sufficient to disclose whether or not the contract was let on bids. If the contract was let on bids, it is, of course, evident that the terms of section 12911 are not contravened.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION CAN RECEIVE EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR PERFORMING THE DUTIES OF TREASURER OF SUCH BOARD—THE BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS A LEGAL RIGHT TO FIX THE COMPENSATION OF SUCH CLERK WHEN HE IS REQUIRED TO PERFORM THE ADDED DUTIES OF TREASURER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Section 4782, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 159, provides for creating a depository for the school moneys of the school district, in which event the board of education, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. Said section carries the provision that upon the establishment of such depository, and the dispensation of the treasury on the part of the board of education, thereupon the clerk of the board of education of such district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligation required by law of the treasurer of such school district.

Upon consideration of sections 4763 to 4784, General Code, the clerk of the board of education can receive extra compensation for performing the duties of treasurer of such board, and the board of education has the legal right to fix the compensation of such clerk, when he is required to perform the added duties of treasurer of the board of education, because of the dispensation of said treasurer under section 4782, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. B. F. ENOS, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 16, 1914, you submitted for an opinion, the following request:

"Section 4781 of the General Code of Ohio provides:

" 'The board of education of each school district shall fix the compensation of its clerk and treasurer, which shall be paid from the contingent fund of the district. If they are paid annually, the order for the payment of their salaries shall not be drawn until they present to the board of education a certificate from the county auditor stating that all reports required by law have been filed in his office. If the clerk and treasurer are paid semi-annually, quarterly, or monthly, the last payment on their salaries previous to August thirty-first, must not be made until all reports required by law have been filed with the county auditor, and his certificate presented to the board of education as required herein.'

"Section 4782 of the General Code, as amended in Ohio laws 104, at page 159 provides:

" 'When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members—shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts.'

"Now, I would like to have your written opinion as to whether the clerk is entitled to extra compensation in performing the duties of the treasurer, or is he only entitled to the same compensation that he received before these additional burdens were cast upon him.

"I would also like to have your opinion as to when section 4715 of the General Code, as amended in Ohio Laws 104, at pages 135 and 136, goes into effect."

Chapter 7 of title 13 of the General Code, which embraces sections 4763 to 4784, inclusive, of the General Code, deal with the subject-matter of treasurer and clerk, of school boards. Sections 4764 to 4773 of the General Code, inclusive, deal generally with the duties which are imposed upon the treasurer of a board of education, and sections 4774 to 4779 of the General Code, inclusive, provide for the general duties imposed upon the clerk of a board of education. But referring to the sections hereinbefore mentioned, it becomes apparent that the duties of the two officials are separate and distinct.

In the event that a depository is provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, then the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. This provision is carried in section 4782 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., at page 159, which you quote above in your inquiry. Said section carries the further provision to the effect that in such case the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties, and be subject to all the obligations required by law, of the treasurer of such school districts. This, in effect, amounts to the imposition of new duties on such clerk, which said added duties are not incident or germane to the regular duties of his office, for, as above pointed out, the duties of a clerk and a treasurer of a board of education are made separate and distinct by the statutory provisions wherein their respective duties are specifically enumerated. These sections are referred to above.

In the case of Lewis, auditor, vs. State ex rel. Harrison et al., 21 O. C. C. Rep., page 410(11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 647), the court held as follows:

"The services performed on the decennial county board of equalization, under the Hendley-Royer law, by the auditor, county surveyor and county commissioners are not so 'incident' or 'germane' to the regular duties of the offices to which they have been respectively elected, as to make the provision for compensation contained in the Hendley law, in contravention of the act of the legislature (94 O. L., 386), or of the constitution (Art. II, Sec. 20.)"

At page 414 of the opinion (21 O. C. C. Rep.), the court aptly says:

"It was said in White vs. East Saginaw (43 Michigan, 567), in a somewhat different inquiry:

" 'The imposition of new duties not "incident" or "germane" to the regular duties of his office upon an officer, does not change his office, but invests him with a new office.' "

Furthermore, section 4764 of the General Code provides that each school district treasurer shall execute a bond with sufficient sureties, in a sum not less than the amount of school funds that may come into his hands, etc., before entering upon the duties of his office, as follows:

"Section 4764. Before entering upon the duties of his office, each school district treasurer shall execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in a sum not less than the amount of school funds that may come into his hands, payable to the state, approved by the board of education, and conditioned for the faithful disbursement according to law of all funds which come into his hands, provided that when school moneys have been deposited under the provisions of section 7604-7608, inclusive, the bond shall be in such amount as the board of education may require."

When a depository is established and by virtue thereof the treasurer of the school moneys of the school board is dispensed with, then section 4783 provides that the clerk shall perform the duties of such treasurer, as follows:

"Section 4783. When the treasurer is so dispensed with, all the duties and obligations required by law of the county auditor, county treasurer or other officer or person relating to the school moneys of the district shall be complied with by dealing with the clerk of the board of education thereof. Before entering upon such duties, the clerk shall give an additional bond equal in amount and in the same manner prescribed by law for the treasurer of the school district."

The last sentence of the last quoted section provides, in substance, that such clerk, before entering upon such duties (the duties of the treasurer), shall give an additional bond equal in amount and in the same manner prescribed by law, for the treasurer of the school district. The provision for the giving of a bond by a school district treasurer is contained in section 4764 of the General Code, supra, and that section carries the provision that before entering upon the duties of his office, each school district treasurer shall execute a bond, etc.

Reading sections 4783 and 4764 together we find that the clerk, before entering upon the duties of the dispensed treasurer, which is the same as entering upon the duties of office of treasurer, shall give a bond, as required in section 4764 of the General Code, supra.

Section 4773 of the General Code provides that the treasurer of school funds, at the expiration of his term of service, shall deliver to his successor in office, all books, papers, money and other property in his hands belonging to the district, as follows:

"At the expiration of his term of service, each treasurer shall deliver to his successor in office, all books, papers, money, and other property in his hands belonging to the district, and take duplicate receipts of his successor therefor. One of these he shall deposit with the clerk of the board of education within three days thereafter."

On March 7, 1911, this department rendered to Hon. John W. Zeller, then the state commissioner of common schools, an opinion upon the following request:

"A township board of education has provided a depository for the school funds, as provided in section 7604, General Code. By resolution they dispensed with their treasurer and required the clerk of the board to perform said treasurer's duties as provided in section 4782, General Code.

QUERY: Does section 4782, General Code, conflict with section 4763, General Code, to the extent that a board of education may not dispense with their treasurer? If it does not, may the treasurer who was acting under authority of section 4763, compel said board of education to pay him for services from the time since the clerk assumed the office, as provided under section 4783?"

In that opinion it was held that the office of treasurer of the school funds was of indefinite duration, as follows:

"It is my opinion that section 4782, General Code, does not conflict with section 4763, General Code, to the extent that such board of education may not dispense with their treasurer. When the township treasurer was elected he was, or should have been, aware that his duties as treasurer of the school fund were of indefinite duration, and that his services could be dispensed with at any time by a majority vote of the board of education upon a depository for the school funds moneys being provided for."

Section 4763 of the General Code, as it existed at the time said opinion was rendered, provided, in substance, that in each city, village and township school district the treasurer of the city, village and township funds, respectively, shall be the treasurer of the school funds. Said section has since been amended at page 159 of 104 Ohio Laws, and now provides, in substance, that in each city school district the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds, and in all village and rural school districts, which do not provide legal depositories, as provided in sections 7604-7608, inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts. Practically the only change made in said section is the provision that requires the county treasurer to act as the treasurer of village and rural school districts which have not provided legal depositories in place of village and township treasurers acting as the treasurers of their respective village or township school districts. However, this change, as so made in said section 4763, General Code, does not affect, or in anywise change the opinion above referred to, as to the indefinite duration of the term of the treasurer of a township or rural school district.

In accordance with said opinion, the board of education of a district may terminate the office of treasurer of such district at any time upon the establishment of a depository for the school funds of such district, in which event, in accordance with sections 4782 and 4783, supra, the clerk of such board of education succeeds to and shall discharge all the duties imposed upon the treasurer of school districts, as required by law. When the office of treasurer is so terminated by the establishment of a depository, under section 4782, General Code, supra, then it follows upon the treasurer to deliver to his successor in office all books, papers, money, and other property in his hands belonging to the district, and take duplicate receipt of his successor therefor, in accordance with section 4773 of the General Code, supra.

It would seem to follow, therefore, in accordance with the language employed in section 4773 of the General Code, that under these circumstances, the clerk of a board of education is the successor in office to the treasurer of such board of education, when such board of education dispenses with the services of such treasurer, under the provisions contained in section 4782, General Code, supra.

In accordance with the foregoing, it seems to follow that the clerk of a board of education, when required to assume the added duties devolving upon the treasurer of a board of education because of the dispensing with such treasurer, in accordance with section 4782 of the General Code, acts in the capacity of a dual official. That is, both as treasurer of the board of education and as clerk of the board of education.

Section 4781, General Code, distinctly vests in a board of education the legal right to fix the compensation of its clerk and treasurer. Under this last statutory provision, it would seem to follow that a board of education of a school district has a right to fix the compensation of its clerk by increasing the same when such clerk assumes and performs the added duties of treasurer of such school district, under the circumstances above commented upon. Under the rule laid down in the case of State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 21 C. C. Rep., page 785, this action on the part of such board of education would not be in contravention of section 20 of article II, of the constitution of Ohio. In said case it is held, as follows:

> "The officers mentioned in section 20, article II of the constitution of Ohio, do not refer to either members of a board of school examiners or to the officers of a municipal corporation."

Therefore, answering your first question, I am of the opinion that a clerk of a board of education can receive extra compensation for performing the duties of the treasurer of such board, and that the board of education has the legal right to fix the compensation of such clerk when he is required to perform the added duties of treasurer of the board of education because of the dispensing with such treasurer, under section 4782, General Code, supra.

Regarding the second question contained in your request, I have asked for further facts and information relative thereto, and I am, therefore, withholding an official opinion thereon until a later date.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE RIGHT OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO TRANSFER FROM THE COUNTY FUND OR FROM THE PROCEEDS OF ANY OTHER COUNTY TAX LEVIES TO SUPPLY DEFICIENCIES IN COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION FUND, IN CASE THERE IS NO MONEY AVAILABLE IN THE SHEEP FUND.

The county commissioners may not lawfully transfer from the general county fund, or from the proceeds of any other county tax levies to supply deficiencies in the county board of education fund, in case there is no money available in the sheep fund, under section 5653, General Code, as amended.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. HORACE L. SMALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—At the request of Honorable Harry W. Miller, assistant prosecuting attorney, in a letter to this department under date of August 14, 1914, I beg leave to submit my opinion upon the question presented by him as follows:

"When there is no money available in the sheep fund under the provisions of section 5653 of the act of February 5, 1914, may the county commissioners transfer moneys from the general fund to the county board of education fund?"

This question invites consideration of the following sections of the General Code, as amended by the general assembly at its first extraordinary session of 1914:

"Section 5653. After paying all such sheep claims at the June session of the county commissioners, if there remain more than one thousand dollars of such fund, the excess at such June session shall be transferred and disposed as follows: In a county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, which has one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, all such excess as the county commissioners deem necessary for the uses and purposes of such society by order of the commissioners and upon the warrant of the county auditor shall be paid to the treasurer of such society, and any surplus not so transferred shall be transferred to the county board of education fund at the discretion of the county commissioners.

"Section 4744-1. The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education, to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help. The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district.

"Section 4744-2. On or before the first day of August of each year the county board of education shall certify to the county auditor the number of teachers to be employed for the ensuing year in the various rural and village school districts within the county school district, and also the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation and the compensation of the county superintendent; and such board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents.

"Section 4744-3. The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents as may be certified by the county board. Such amount shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund.' The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate, he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount, which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

All of the above sections were amended by the general assembly in the act to which you refer, 104 O. L., 133.

It is apparent from the above quoted sections that the county board of education fund is in no proper sense a county fund. Its primary source consists of contributions from the semi-annual apportionment of school funds to the various rural and village school districts constituting the county school district. The county school district is defined in section 4684, amended in the same act, as follows:

> "Each county, exclusive of the territory embraced in any city school district and the territory in any village school district exempted from the supervision of the county board of education by the provisions of sections 4688 and 4688-1, and territory detached for school purposes, and including the territory attached to it for school purposes, shall constitute a county school district. In each case where any village or rural school district is situated in more than one county such district shall become a part of the county school district in which the greatest part of the territory of such village or rural district is situated."

It seems (although I do not decide this question) that the county treasurer is the custodian of the funds of the county school district and that the county auditor is ex-officio the disbursing officer of that district; but the district as such is not the county, it being apparent by reason of provisions of section 4684 that in most cases, at least, the county school district would not be territorially co-terminus with the county, and it being equally apparent that even if the school district should happen to be identical in territory with the county, it would be a separate and distinct subdivision just as a township school district was a subdivision separate and apart from a township with which it happened to be territorially identical.

It is, of course, fundamental that taxes levied for county purposes can be expended only for county purposes (article 12, section 5 of the constitution); State ex rel. Brennan vs. Benham, 89 O. S. Therefore, it would be, in my opinion, unlawful for any county tax levy moneys to be transferred to and for the benefit of the county school district, even if some color of statutory authority might exist.

In addition, however, I am satisfied that there is no statute under which colorable authority to make such a transfer might be claimed. Sections 2296 et seq., General Code, provide a method of transfer by the county commissioners of funds "under their supervision, from one fund to another," but these sections only authorize transfers among funds both of which are under the county commissioners' supervision, (Infirmary Directors vs. Commissioners, 6 N. P. n. s., 347); whereas it appears that the county board of education fund is under the supervision of the county board of education, and not that of the county commissioners.

Section 5655, General Code, which formerly authorized the commissioners to transfer surpluses in any established fund or division of a fund, to another existing fund, can no longer be relied upon for this purpose, because it was repealed in 103 O. L., 521; but even this section, when it was in force, merely authorized transfers to "another fund for which a tax is to be or otherwise would be levied;" whereas no tax is levied directly for the purposes of the county board of education fund.

For all the above stated reasons, then, I am of the opinion that aside from the authority found in section 5653, General Code, as amended, the county commissioners have no power to transfer any tax moneys to county board of education funds.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOW THE MONEYS PAID INTO THE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION FUND ON ACCOUNT OF THE SALARIES OF COUNTY AND DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS ARE TO BE USED * * * SUCH FUNDS ARE AUTOMATICALLY APPROPRIATED FOR THE PAYMENT OF SUCH SALARIES AND CANNOT BE USED FOR ANY OTHER PURPOSE—TRANSFERS FROM THE DOG TAX FUND, UNDER SECTION 5653, GENERAL CO E.

The moneys paid into the county board of education fund on account of the salaries of county and district superintendents, under section 4744-3, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 143, are automatically appropriated to the payment of such salaries, and cannot be used for any other purpose. The expenses of the county superintendent and his allowance for clerk hire, the expenses of the members of the board of education and the expenses of the county institute, which are payable out of this fund, must be paid from moneys coming into it otherwise than under section 4744-3, viz.: examination fees, under section 7820, as amended, 104 O. L., 104, and transfers from the dog tax fund, under section 5653, General Code, as amended, there being no other source of the county board of education fund.

If the allowance to the superintendent is made in advance, such allowance would appropriate moneys in the fund other than those appropriated to salaries; so that the expense of conducting institutions and he expenses of the members of the board of education could not be paid unless there were in the fund more than enough to pay the salaries and superintendent's allowance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 18th you call my attention to sections 4734 and 4744-1, General Code, as amended at the first extraordinary session of the present general assembly, and to the sections providing specifically for the sources of what is known as the county board of education fund.

You inquire how the salaries and expenses payable from this fund can be met in the event that the surplus transferable from the dog tax fund under section 5653, General Code, as amended is insufficient to meet the expenses themselves.

Preliminary to a final answer to your question, I beg leave to refer you to the enclosed copy of an opinion to Hon. H. M. Small, prosecuting attorney of Scioto county, in which I hold that county commissioners are not authorized to transfer any county funds other than proceeds of dog tax to the board of education fund, so that if there should happen to be insufficient money in the fund for its purposes under the sections which you cite there is no way whatever to meet such a deficiency.

I observe that sections 4734 and 4744-1, General Code, provide for the payment of certain expenses out of the county board of education fund. The provision is explicit in the case of section 4734 and implicit in section 4744-1, for that section provides merely that the county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help; without describing or referring to the fund from which this allowance shall be drawn. Yet it seems reasonably clear that the intention is that the allowance shall be made out of the county board of education fund. Section 4744-1 provides then that half of the salary of the county superintendent shall be paid out of the county board of education fund. This, however, is no more explicit than the direction to pay the expenses of the members of the county board of education from the same source, found in section 4334, General Code.

In fact, each class of expenditure from the board of education fund is provided for either expressly or by necessary implication as in the case of the three hundred dollars allowance in section 4744-1.

It so happens that the primary sources of the fund other than the transfer of the dog tax are fixed with reference to certain salaries. The exact provision is that of section 4744-3 (104 O. L. 143) which is as follows:

> "Section 4744-3. The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents as may be certified by the county board. Such amount shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the "county board of education fund." The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate, he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount, which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

I have characterized this provision as a designation of certain sources of the county board of education fund by reference to certain salaries payable from that fund. It is, however, more than this. In my opinion the amounts ascertained under the rules of this section and paid into the fund are appropriated to the purposes which the statute mentions. Thus I think it is the legislative intention that the portion paid into the fund on account of salaries of county and district superintendents shall not be paid out of the fund for any other purpose; that is to say the county board of education fund does not appear to be a general commingled fund which may be drawn upon at will for any of the objects which the statute mentions; but with respect to the salaries at least it is clear that certain sources of the fund are, as section 4744-3 has it "to pay such portion of the salaries," etc. I have considered this point, because without considering it, it could not be determined whether a deficiency in the board of education fund should be shared in by those entitled to receive payment therefrom on account of salaries, and those entitled to receive payment of expenses therefrom, so that so long as the money should remain in the fund it might be drawn on indiscriminately for salaries and expenses until it become exhausted. I do not think, as I have already stated, that this was the legislative intention, and I agree with you in the conclusion, which you appear to assume, that the money coming into the fund under section 4744-3, General Code, cannot be drawn upon for the payment of expenses and clerical hire.

The legislation of 1914 creates a source of revenue for the county board of education fund which has not been mentioned, and also authorizes an expenditure from that fund to which attention has not been called. I refer to section 7820, General Code, as amended 104 O. L. 104, which provides that the fees on applications for examination by the board of county school examiners shall be paid into the board of education fund; and to section 7860, General Code, as amended 104 O. L. 156, which provides that the expenses of conducting a county teachers institute shall be paid from the county board of education fund.

The situation then seems to be as follows:

The money coming into the county board of education fund from the sources specified in section 4744-3, General Code, must be held to be appropriated for the payment of salaries, and may not be used by the county board of education for any other purpose; but there is no distinction or preference among the other expenditures from this fund, provided the revenues accruing to it from examination fees and transfer of dog tax prove insufficient to meet such other expenses. In other words, the moneys transferred from the dog tax fund (if there is a surplus in this fund and if the commissioners choose to transfer it, which they cannot be compelled to do), together with the examination fees already mentioned constitute the only general revenues so to speak accruing to the county board of education fund; these revenues and these only are available to pay the following charges against the fund:

1. Expenses of members of the county board of education.
2. The county superintendent's allowance for traveling expenses and clerk hire.
3. The expenses of conducting the county institute.

Practically it seems almost certain that these revenues will prove insufficient to provide for these expenditures, especially in those counties in which there is either no considerable surplus in the dog tax fund and those in which the county commissioners refuse to transfer such surplus to the county board of education fund. This assumption, however, may be in point of fact incorrect. Should it prove to be correct in a given county, then I would be of the opinion first that no payments on account of expenses might lawfully be made until the county board of education fund has moneys in it from one of the two sources which I have enumerated; and second that while there is money from the sources mentioned in the fund, the same may be expended indiscriminately for any or all of the other purposes enumerated, without preferring one to the other, until the fund is exhausted, after which expenditures of these three kinds cannot lawfully be made.

I should make an exception, however, in the case of the county superintendent's allowance for traveling expenses and clerical help. The authority to make this allowance, in my opinion, is equivalent to authority to appropriate the sum allowed in advance and segregate it so to speak from the remainder of the general balance in the county board of education fund. At least I am of the opinion that if the allowance of which section 4744-1 speaks is made in advance, the effect of such an allowance is to appropriate any moneys coming into the county board of education fund from sources other than those mentioned in section 4744-3, so as to make such moneys not available for the payment of expenses of members of the board of education, and the expenses of the county institute. In the event the allowance is thus made, therefore, the deficiency would fall upon either the members of the board of education with respect to their expenses, or the county institute, or both, as the case might prove to be.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPUTY CLERKS UNDER PROBATE JUDGE ARE IN THE UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE, SUCH DEPUTIES BEING DEPUTIES WITHIN THE MEANING OF SUBDIVISION 8-A OF SECTION 8 OF THE CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Deputy clerks under the probate judge are in the unclassified service, such deputies being deputies within the meaning of subdivision 8-a of section 8 of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 27, 1914, you inquire:

> "Is the office of clerk of the probate court an elective or principal executive office, and are the deputy clerks authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals, and do they hold a fiduciary relation to said principals? The question we desire to determine is whether or not the deputy clerks under the probate judge are in or out of the classified service?"

Section 16 of article IV of the constitution of Ohio, reads:

"There shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. He shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of all other courts of record held therein; but, the general assembly may provide, by law, for the election of a clerk, with a like term of office, for each or any other of the courts of record, and may authorize the judge of the probate court to perform the duties of clerk for this court, under such regulations as may be directed by law. Clerks of courts shall be removable for such cause and in such manner as shall be prescribed by law.

Section 1584, General Code, provides:

"Each probate judge shall have the care and custody of the files, papers, books, and records belonging to the probate office. He is authorized to perform the duties of clerk of his own court. He may appoint a deputy clerk or clerks, each of whom shall take an oath of office before entering upon the duties of his appointment, and when so qualified may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. Each probate judge may take a bond with such surety from his deputy as he deems necessary to secure the faithful performance of the duties of his appointment."

In the case of Warwick vs. The State, 25 Ohio State 21, Welch, J., says on page 24:

"* * * In the absence of a deputy clerk, the probate judge is his own clerk, and responsible for acts done or omitted as such clerk, on the same principles applicable to other ministerial officers. The provision of law authorizing him to appoint a deputy clerk plainly implies that he is his own clerk—that he is both court and clerk; for there can be no deputy where there is no principal. * * *."

The view which the court takes is that there are two positions; one a judicial position, the other a ministerial position. When the probate judge acts as judge of said court he acts in a judicial capacity, and when he acts as clerk he acts in a ministerial capacity.

In the case of Mellinger et al. vs. Mellinger, 73 Ohio St., Justice Crew, on pages 227 and 228, quotes from section 533, Revised Statutes, now section 1584, General Code, supra, and then says:

"A deputy clerk appointed under this section does not, by virtue of such appointment become deputy probate judge, and acts performed by him after his appointment are not therefore, within the rule, that the acts of the deputy are regarded in law as the acts of the principal."

The deputy clerk is not therefore a deputy probate judge.

By section 1584, General Code, the deputy clerk is authorized to "perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court." The deputy is not made the clerk of the court but he is authorized to perform the duties of the clerk. The clerk of the probate court is the probate judge, and as such, he occupies two positions, to-wit, judge and clerk.

The deputy clerks authorized by section 1584, General Code, are authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principal, the clerk, and hold a fiduciary relation to him. They are therefore deputies within the meaning of subdivision 8 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, which reads:

> "The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

As such deputies they are in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO PERSON IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE MAY SERVE AS A MEMBER OF AN EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF A POLITICAL PARTY.

Under virtue of section 486-23, General Code, no person in the classified service can serve as a member of an executive committee of a political party.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 24, 1914, Hon. R. W. Cahill, prosecuting attorney of Napoleon, Ohio, submits the following inquiry:

> "At a meeting of the democratic county central committee, held last Saturday, the following parties were elected as members of the county executive committee:
> "B. F. H., district assessor.
> "F. A. D., resident engineer state highway commission.
> "G. S. M., official court reporter.
> "M. V. M., superintendent of municipal water and electric light plant.
> "J. M. R., probate judge.
> "Will you please give me as soon as possible the status of these men touching their eligibility to serve on this committee?"

Part of the above positions are in the classified service, and part in the unclassified service, under the civil service act.

The district assessor and the probate judge are in the unclassified service. The superintendent of municipal water and electric light plant of a city and the official court reporter are in the classified service. The civil service act does not apply to villages.

The status of the resident engineers of the state highway department, under the civil service act, is now under consideration by this department and a separate opinion will be given.

Section 23 of the civil service act, section 486-23, General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * nor shall any officer or employe in the classified service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof be an officer in any political organization, or take part in politics, other than to vote as he pleases, and to express freely his political opinions."

This provision would prevent a person in the classified service from being a member of an executive committee of a political party.

The district assessor and probate judge may serve on the executive committee.

The official court stenographer and the superintendent of municipal water and electric light plant connot serve on such committee and at the same time hold their positions.

Until an opinion is rendered fixing the status of resident engineers of the state highway department, the person holding this position should not serve upon the executive committee.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL COURT CREATED BY CHARTER DECLARED BY COURTS TO BE WITHOUT JURISDICTION IN STATE MATTERS—FEES JUSTICE OF PEACE ENTITLED TO FOR HEARING STATE CASES—RIGHT OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE TO RECEIVE SUCH FEES FROM THE CITY.

In Middletown, Ohio, where the municipal court created by charter was declared by the courts to be without jurisdiction in state matters, the justice of the peace designated to hear state cases is entitled only to the fees prescribed by statute for such services and he cannot be compensated in any way by the city therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. W. G. PALMER, City Solicitor, Middletown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 11th, you request my opinion as follows:

> "You are possibly familiar with the litigation we have had in reference to the charter adopted and under which we are now operating. This charter pretended to create a court having jurisdiction of cases of a criminal nature under both state statutes and city ordinances. The matter in the court of appeals convinces us that the court had no proper jurisdiction in state cases and the court since that time has not been trying any such.
> "After the decision of the court of appeals, the city commissioners directed the chief of police to take all persons held for violation of statute law before some justice of the peace and this he has been doing since that time.
> "I am asked whether or not the city authorities have any right under the law to pay any compensation to such justice for handling these cases.
> "Would section 4570, General Code, permit any compensation being paid to such justice for such service?"

I understand that an established municipal court is still caring for all municipal cases; that is, cases of violation of ordinances of the municipality, but that the justice of the peace in question is complying with a request to hear all cases of violation of state law.

I beg to refer you to a former opinion rendered by this department to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of May 27, 1913. In this opinion the compensation of a justice of the peace appointed to act instead of a mayor in cities having no police judge, in section 4549 of the General Code, was considered, and the conclusion is reached that the city has no authority or right whatever to pay a justice of the peace any compensation whatever for his services in state cases, the justice being permitted to retain the fees prescribed by statute for such services.

The argument advanced therein applies to the case at hand, and I am of the opinion that the justice in question may receive for services in such state cases, no compensation outside of that prescribed by statute for such services. I am enclosing a copy of the opinion referred to.

I am pleased to agree with your own view that section 4570 has no application whatever to the case at hand for the reason that the same applies only to such justices of the peace as are appointed to act during the absence, inability or disability of the police judge of a bona fide or legally authorized police court, and for the further reason that the compensation paid such police judge by the city, must be construed as compensation for services in ordinance cases only.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF LANDOWNERS OR TENANTS TO DESTROY NOXIOUS WEEDS GROWING ON PUBLIC ROADS ABUTTING LANDS OF SUCH OWNERS OR TENANTS—PROCEEDINGS WHERE SUCH LANDOWNERS OR TENANTS FAIL TO DESTROY SUCH NOXIOUS WEEDS.

It is made the duty of a landowner or tenant under sections 7148 and 7148-1, General Code, to destroy noxious weeds growing on public roads abutting the lands owned or occupied by such landowners or tenants. If both the land owner and tenant fail to destroy such noxious weeds, the road superintendent may do so, and certify the cost thereof together with a description of the real estate to the county auditor, who shall assess the cost against the land. The assessment of the cost of destroying such weeds may not legally be made against a tenant.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, September 12, 1914.

HON. CARL F. SCHULER, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 5th you wrote to me as follows:

"I am writing you this letter in order that I may receive some enlightenment on sections 7148 and 7148-1, in this to wit:

"If the tenant fails to destroy the brush, weeds, briars, etc., along the roads abutting the lands occupied by him, can the landowner be made pay the assessment for work and labor performed by the road superintendent along said lands?

"If both the landowner and tenant fails to destroy the brush, weeds, briars, etc., along said lands, and the road superintendent destroys them, who must pay for the said work, the landowner or the tenant?"

Sections 7148 and 7148-1, General Code, as found in 103 O. L., page 549, read as follows:

"Section 7148. The superintendent of such roads shall allow a landowner or tenant to destroy such brush, briars, burrs, vines, thistles or other noxious weeds, growing or being on such roads along the lands abutting thereon, owned or occupied by such landowner or tenant. Such landowner or tenant shall do the work or cause it to be done before the first day of the month in which it is required to be done as specified in section 7146. In case such owner or tenant fails to comply with section 7146, and the foregoing provisions of this section, the superintendent of roads or turnpikes shall do the work or cause it to be done.

"Section 7148-1. When such work is done by the superintendent the township trustees shall certify to the auditor of the county the amount of the cost of the work with the expense thereto attached, and a correct description of the land upon which the work was performed, and the auditor shall place the amount upon the tax duplicate to be collected as other taxes. The county treasurer shall pay the amount when collected to the township treasurer as other funds."

Assuming these statutes to be constitutional, I see no difficulty in answering your questions as they relate solely to the method of assessing the cost of the destruction of certain brush, weeds, etc., when a landowner or a tenant fails to destroy them. Your first question seems to imply that it first becomes the duty of the tenant to destroy the brush, etc., whereas the duty makes it the duty of the landlord or tenant to destroy the same without giving one a preference over the other. If both the landowner and the tenant fail to destroy such weeds, etc., it becomes the duty of the road superintendent to destroy the same; and when the road superintendent does do so, his only recourse is to notify the township trustees and they in turn must certify the amount of the cost of the work, together with a description of the land on which the work was performed, to the auditor of the county. The auditor must place the amount so certified upon the tax duplicate and the county treasurer must collect it the same as other taxes. While this statute does not expressly provide that the cost of such work is to be assessed either against the landlord or the tenant, yet the fact that it requires a correct description of the real estate to accompany the certificate of the township trustees to the county auditor, very clearly indicates that it was the legislative intent, and I am of the opinion that the cost of destroying such weeds, etc., is to be assessed against the land. In no event would it be legal or proper to certify the cost of such work against the tenant.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO CONSTRUCT A PUBLIC COMFORT STATION AS SUCH.

The county commissioners have no authority to construct a public comfort station as such; they may only install such toilet accessories as may be incidental to the official and public use of county buildings, which they are authorized to construct.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. ROBERT C. PATTERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Montgomery County, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 12th, you requested my opinion on the following:

> "The board of commissioners of Montgomery county have been asked by the citizens of Dayton to construct a public comfort station in the basement of the old court house, and some time ago I verbally advised the county commissioners that in my opinion they had no authority to construct a public comfort station as such, but that they might make such additions to the court house in the way of toilet rooms that would be accessible to the general public. I doubt their authority in constructing such toilet rooms to make improvements beyond what would naturally be required by the public use of the court house and county offices. In other words, that their authority would be confined to an improvement such as would be needed for the officers and public having business in the court house, and not construct toilet rooms that would have the accommodation of the general public in view rather than the use as a part of the county offices.
> "The commissioners have again asked me whether they would have authority to issue bonds for the purpose of erecting a public comfort station in the basement of the old court house; and it is stated that you expressed an opinion to a member of the legislature to the effect that the commissioners had such authority, and my object in writing you this letter is to ascertain your views upon that subject.
> "It seems to me that if the commissioners have such authority it must be by virtue of General Code, section 3434, and that such toilet accessories might be construed as an improvement to the court house; but, as above stated, it seems to me that the improvement would necessarily be limited to the needs of the public using the county offices of the court house, and could not be extended to the construction of rooms calculated for use of the public at large.
> "Municipal corporations are expressly authorized to erect public toilet and comfort stations and issue bonds therefor under General Code section 3939, and it seems to me that this is a matter for the city of Dayton rather than the county of Montgomery to undertake under the present statutes."

After a careful investigation of the relative statutes, I am pleased to incorporate your own opinion and the reasons advanced by you, in answer to your request, as the official opinion of my department.

I can find no express authority in the statutes anywhere, authorizing the county commissioners to construct and fit out a public comfort station. Their authorization to construct a court house can be extended only as regard toilet accessories to such as are necessary for the incidental purposes of the court house itself, to wit: the accommodation of the officers and employes tenanted in said building and such portion of the general public as find it necessary to conduct business with such.

Since the statutes, therefore, neither expressly or impliedly authorize the construction and equipment of a public comfort station by the county commissioners, I am obliged to conclude that the public, as such, must depend upon the authority granted municipal corporations for such conveniences.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION ACT—DISPOSITION OF FINES, FEES AND COSTS AS PROVIDED BY SECTION 114 OF SAID ACT—TO WHAT FEES THE COSTS REFER TO IN ABÓVE SECTION—DISPOSITION OF FINES AS PROVIDED BY SECTION 1313, GENERAL CODE, UNDER PROSECUTIONS BROUGHT BY THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION IN ENFORCEMENT OF LAWS RELATING TO THE PRACTICE OF PHARMACY.

Construction of Sections 12672, 12672-1, 12673 and 1313, General Code, with reference to the disposition of fines, fees and costs, as provided by Section 114, agricultural commission act. Said fines, fees and costs are collected by the agricultural commission in the prosecution and enforcement of laws relating to the subject-matter of pure food; said laws were formerly enforced by the state dairy and food department. The disposition of fines, as provided by section 1313, General Code, as amended in the agricultural commission act, applies to fines collected and assessed under prosecutions brought by the agricultural commission in the enforcement of the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy.

The fines collected under and by virtue of the provisions contained in section 12673, General Code, as amended in the agricultural commission act, applies to fines and costs collected in the prosecution and enforcement of the provisions contained in section 12672, General Code, of the act restricting the selling, bartering and giving away of cocaine and other drugs, as the same provides at page 105, O. L.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. O'BRIEN O'DONNELL, Probate Judge, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 6, 1914, you submitted the following for an official opinion:

> "I desire an opinion from your department as to the disposition of fines, costs, etc., assessed and collected for violation of the dope law, so called, as passed April 17, 1913, and found in vol. 103, page 505 of the Laws of Ohio.
> "For your information I will state that the law above referred to was section 12672 of the General Code, which I was instrumental in having amended, and which act contains an express repeal of the old section 12672. At the same session of the legislature a law creating an agricultural commission was passed and will be found in vol. 103, Ohio Laws, at page 304. This law, while creating the commission, fixing its duties, powers, etc., among other matters is a sort of codification of several statutes passed at various times in the past. And in this same bill is found the old section 12672, exactly as it was prior to that session of the legislature. In the last section of the agricultural commission bill (page 341) is also an express repeal of 12672. You will notice that the dope act, so called, and found on page 505, was passed April 17, 1913, and approved May 2, 1913. You will also notice that the agricultural commission law was passed April 15, 1913, and approved May 3, 1913, or one day after the dope bill, so called, was approved.

"For your information I will say that in one of the first cases prosecuted in this court under the dope law (page 505), it was contended that the dope law, so called, was repealed by the agricultural commission act, for the reason that this law having been approved on May 3, 1913, a day after the approval of the dope law, so called, thereby repealed the dope law. After a very complete argument for and against the repeal of these statutes, I took the case under advisement, and found a case in point which held that the law last passed by the legislature, and approved first by the governor, repealed the prior section, passed at the same session, which was signed also by the governor. In that state the constitutional provision as to the enacting of laws, are very similar to Ohio. I call your attention to this case which will be found in 26 Penn., page 446, and is entitled Bank vs. Commonwealth. Consequently I held that the General Code, 12672, as found on page 505, was not repealed by section 12672, included in the agricultural commission bill, and found at page 340. If 12672, as included in the agricultural commission act, and found at page 340, is repealed by 12672, being the dope law, and found on page 505, what is the effect of section 12673 found on page 340.

"In the agricultural commission act, and found at page 328 of Ohio Laws, is a provision 'All fines, fees and costs collected under prosecution, begun or caused to be begun by the agricultural commission, shall be paid by the court to the commission.' Again at page 340, and in section 12673 of the agricultural commission act, is found further provision that 'All fines, collected under section 12672 shall be paid to the agricultural commission.' The next section being section 1313 and found on page 340, provides that 'The agricultural commission shall enforce the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy * * * fines assessed and collected under prosecution, commenced or caused to be commenced by the agricultural commission, shall be paid into the state treasury each month.' Section 123, found on page 340, provided that 'Each section of this act, and every part thereof, is hereby declared to be an independent section.'

"Now if fines and costs are assessed and collected under the dope law, so called, as found at page 505, what disposition is to be made of such fines and costs? I am frank to say that taking into consideration all the inconsistencies in these laws referred to I am at a loss to know where the fines and costs should go. Again, what fees and costs are contemplated in this act? Is it the court costs, and is it the witness fees and sheriff fees?"

The conflicting enactments in regard to the sections which you cite in your request and the many inconsistencies which appear therein, create considerable confusion when we come to apply and construe said sections, and you have accurately set forth the situation regarding the enactments of said sections and the inconsistencies appearing therein, in your request.

Regarding section 12672 of the General Code, cited in your inquiry, much confusion arises when we come to deciding which is the later enactment, because the act which was passed first was last approved, and the act which was passed second was first approved; that is to say, the so called dope act (being section 12672 of the General Code), which regulates the sale of cocaine, morphine and other drugs, was passed April 17, 1913, and approved May 2, 1913, and appears in 103 O. L., page 505. Said section 12672 of the General Code also was enacted as a part of the agricultural commission act in practically the same form and language as it appeared before the amendment of April 17, 1913.

The agricultural commission law was passed April 15, 1913, and was approved May 3, 1913. As to which act was the later enactment in this situation the courts are divided and are not harmonious. One rule of statutory construction is to the effect that a law which was last enacted by the general assembly was the one which prevails, while on the other hand many authorities are to the effect that the governor is part of the legislative machinery and therefore amendments which are last signed by the governor should prevail, especially under constitutions similar to that of Ohio.

You state in your request that the question as to which act was the later enactment was directly at issue in your court, and that you decided this issue upon the authority of the case of the Southwark Bank vs. the Commonwealth, supra, holding that section 12672 of the socalled dope law (103 O. L., 505) was not repealed by section 12672 of the agricultural commission act (103 O. L., p. 340). Inasmuch as this question has been determined by a judicial decision, I am willing for the purpose of this opinion to assume its correctness. Therefore, in answer to your question as to what is the effect of section 12673, found on page 340, it is my opinion that said section 12673 applies to 12672 of the General Code, as the same appears in the socalled dope act, page 505 of the 103 O. L. Section 12673 is as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the agricultural commission to enforce the provisions of section twelve thousand six hundred and seventy-two, and all fines collected under section twelve thousand six hundred and seventy-two shall be paid to the agricultural commission, and by it covered into the state treasury."

Prior to its last amendment said section provided that the Ohio board of pharmacy should enforce the provisions of section 12672 and that the fines collected thereunder should be paid to the secretary of the state pharmacy board.

You next inquire in regard to section 1313, as found on page 340 of the 103 O. L., which said section provides as follows:

> "The agricultural commission shall enforce the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy. If it has information that any provision of the law has been violated, it shall investigate the matter, and, upon probable cause appearing, file a complaint and prosecute the offender. Fines assessed and collected under prosecutions commenced, or caused to be commenced, by the agricultural commission shall be paid into the state treasury each month to the credit of the general revenue fund."

Said section 1313, prior to the last mentioned amendment thereof, provided that the secretary of the state board of pharmacy should enforce the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy, and that the fines assessed and collected under prosecutions, commenced or caused to be commenced by the state board of pharmacy, should be paid by the treasurer thereof, and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of the fund for the use of such board. Said section 1313 was originally enacted May 9, 1908 (99 O. L., 492), as a part of an act entitled as follows:

> "To revise and consolidate laws relating to the appointment, powers and duties of the state board of health, the state board of medical registration and examination, the Ohio board of pharmacy and the state board of embalming examiners."

Under the General Code said section 1313, prior to its amendment, was part of chapter 21, division 2 and title 3, which said chapter relates to the subject-matter of the state board of pharmacy.

You also inquire regarding the provision contained in the agricultural commission act, found at page 328 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws, which provision so referred to, reads as follows:

> "All fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions begun or caused to be begun by the agricultural commission, shall be paid by the court to the commission."

This provision is part of section 114 of the agricultural commission act, and prior to the adoption of the agricultural commission act this section appeared in the General Code as section 378 thereof. Said section 378 constitutes a part of chapter 7, division 1, title 3 of the General Code, and relates to the subject matter of the state dairy and food commissioner. Said section was originally enacted as a part of the act entitled "An act to create the office of the dairy and food commissioner" (83 O. L., page 120). Said provision has remained substantially the same throughout all subsequent amendments. Prior to the last amendment, appearing in 103 O. L., at page 328, said section provided in substance that all fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions, begun by the state dairy and food commissioner, should be paid by the court to the commissioner, etc. In the last amendment thereof said section was changed to provide that such fines, fees and costs should be collected by the agricultural commission and paid by the court to such commission, etc.

Sections 112 and 113 of the agricultural commission act, found at pages 227 and 228, 103 O. L., immediately preceding section 114, relates to the provisions formerly carried in the dairy and food commission act. Section 11 of the agricultural commission act, 103 O. L., page 306, provides as follows:

> "The agricultural commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers now exercised by the * * * state dairy and food commission, * * * the state board of pharmacy, * * *."

By way of summary, I wish to say that section 114 of the agricultural commission act, formerly section 378 of the General Code, is that portion of the agricultural commission act which relates to the department formerly known as the dairy and food department, and was originally enacted as a part of the act creating that department; section 1313 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., at page 340, relates to the enforcement of the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy, and as before stated, was originally enacted as a part of the act passed in relation to the practice of pharmacy, section 12673 of the General Code, prior to the amendment thereof in the agricultural commission act, related to the enforcement and collection of fines under section 12672 of the General Code, and formerly provided that such fines should be collected, and the provisions of said section 12672 should be enforced by the secretary of the state pharmacy board.

The Ohio agricultural commission act has combined within its provisions several state departments which formerly existed as separate and distinct departments. Section 114 appears in that portion of the agricultural commission act which relates to the enforcement of the laws formerly contained in sections governing the state dairy and food department.

It would seem to follow, therefore, that said section 114 relates to fines, fees and costs collected under prosecution to be begun or caused to be begun by the agricultural commission in the enforcement of said laws, formerly enforced by the state dairy and food commissioner. Upon like reasoning, it would seem to follow that section 1313, as amended in the agricultural commission act, has reference to and applies to the enforcement of the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy, the enforcement of which said laws was formerly placed under the jurisdiction of the secretary of the state pharmacy board. Likewise, it is my opinion that section 12673, as amended at page 340 of the 103 O. L., refers and applies only to section 12672 of the so called dope act, as amended on page 505 of the 103rd volume of Ohio Laws. Said section 12672 relates solely to the subject matter of the sales of certain drugs, and their compounds and derivities, and can hardly be said to constitute a part of the laws relating to the practice of pharmacy. As before pointed out, this section never appeared as a part of the act relating to the practice of pharmacy, but was passed and enacted as a separate and distinct section. Fines and cost which are assessed and collected under the dope law, so called, as found at page 505 of the 103 O. L. (being section 12672), are to be disposed of, therefore, in accordance with section 12673, as amended, 103 O. L., page 340.

Regarding the question of costs, about which you also inquire, it is my opinion that the same should be disposed of as in all other criminal cases, as provided under the county fee fund act, and that such costs also contemplate and include witness and sheriff fees.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PETITION FOR CHARTER ELECTION—COMPLIANCE WITH SECTION 8, ARTICLE XVIII OF THE CONSTITUTION—ACTION OF COUNCIL ON A PETITION IN COMPLYING WITH ABOVE ARTICLE OF THE CONSTITUTION—CALLING A CHARTER ELECTION WHEN PROPER PETITIONS HAVE BEEN FILED.

1. The filing of a petition asking for a submission to the electors of a city, of the question "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter," with the city auditor, is not such compliance with section 8 of article XXIII of the constitution as to compel the city council to call an election thereon.

2. Where a petition for such election is so filed with the city auditor, the council may, if it deems proper and two-thirds of its members vote therefor, call such election, but it is not mandatory upon the council to so act.

3. Where a proper petition is filed with or presented to a municipal council, a majority vote of such council is all that is required in calling a charter election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. A. A. PORTER, City Solicitor, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 17, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "On March 30, 1914, a petition addressed to the city council of the city of Zanesville, Ohio, asking for a submission of the question 'Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter,' under favor of section 8 of article 18 of the state constitution, was filed with the city auditor of Zanesville, Ohio. The parties filing the same stated that it contained the signatures of ten per cent. of the electors of said city. This petition has never been presented to or filed with the council of said city, and has never been examined by said council to determine its genuineness.

"Under the above state of facts, is council legally bound to call an election?"

Section 8 of article 18 of the constitution reads in part:

> "The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, 'Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter.' The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage; otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid."

No legislative action looking to the carrying out of the provisions of this section nor making provision as to when or where the petition may be filed, has been taken, although by the act of April 28, 1913 (103 O. L., 767), analogous conditions are cared for by providing that upon the filing of a petition signed by ten per cent. of those who voted at the last municipal election with the board of deputy state supervisor of elections, asking that the question of organizing the municipality under any one of the plans of government provided in said act be submitted to the electors of such municipality. The board shall certify the facts to council and the council shall, within thirty days, provide for submitting such question at a special election to be held not more than 90 nor less than 60 days after the filing of such petition.

To adopt this analogy, the charter petition has not been filed with the proper officials, nor can it be considered as presented to council when filed with the city auditor, who must be held to be a city officer and not merely an officer of the council.

Under this constitutional provision, it is in the power of council, without the presentation of a petition, and on its own motion may make a call for a charter election, but this requires a vote of two-thirds of the members of council.

When a petition of ten per centum of the electors is filed with, or presented to the council, its duty is mandatory to "forthwith provide by ordinance for submission to the electors of the question. "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter?", in which event a majority vote is all that is necessary to pass the ordinance.

This conclusion necessitates the holding that the council may, but is not legally bound nor compelled under the circumstances you state, to call an election, as such call is only mandatory when a proper petition is presented to council.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SERIAL BOND MAY BE ISSUED UNDER AUTHORITY OF ATICLE XII, SECTION 11 OF THE CONSTITUTION—COMPLIANCE WITH ARTICLE XII, SECTION 11 OF THE CONSTITUTION IN REFERENCE TO SERIAL BONDS.

*Under article XII, section 11 of the constitution, as amended, serial bonds may be issued, and provision for the annual levy of taxes for the retirement of the indebtedness so incurred considered as a unit, the levies being equal in amount and distribution over the entire number of years between the incurring of the indebtedness and the date of maturity of the last series, would be a sufficient compliance with the constitutional requirement that provision be made for the annual levy of an amount sufficient to provide a sinking fund, although the series might so mature as practically to preclude any accumulation of a technical fund and to require the principal to be expended in the retirement of the maturing bonds as fast as it is levied. The phrase "annual levy * * * of taxes * * * sufficient to provide * * * a sinking fund" is interpreted as requiring that the burden of taxation on account of a debt incurred at a given time shall be evenly distributed during the life of the indebtedness, considered as a unit; and not as requiring the accumulation of a "sinking fund" in the strict and technical sense.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1914.

HON. LEE WARREN JAMES, City Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of July 28th, previously acknowledged, requests my opinion as to whether or not municipalities may now issue serial instead of sinking fund bonds.

Article XII, section 11 of the constitution provides as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The exact meaning and intention of this provision cannot be ascertained by examination of the debates of the constitutional convention. I find that the original proposal respecting the retirement of bonded indebtedness of the state and its subdivisions required the issuance of serial bonds by stipulating that in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed provision be made for "the payment of not less than two per centum of the principal together with annual interest on the same each year until such indebtedness is paid." This was objected to by Messrs. Knight and Harris on the ground that it would preclude the issuance of bonds otherwise than in series; but so far as I have been able to ascertain not necessarily on the ground that long term bonds were to be preferred to serial bonds. That is, the idea of these speakers seemed to be that the borrowing authorities of the subdivisions should retain their power to choose as to which of the two methods should be in a given instance employed, which power of choice would have been taken away had the proposal as originally framed been passed and adopted. Ultimately the present form of the section was adopted by amendment to the taxation proposal (Const. Debates, volume 2, page 1880-1881); but there was no debate on the change at the time it was voted upon.

I find that the constitutions of other states contain provisions substantially equivalent to our article XII, section 11; for instance, that of Colorado is as follows:

> "No city or town shall contract any debt by loan in any form except by means of an ordinance * * * specifying the purpose to which the funds to be raised shall be applied and providing for the levy of a tax * * * sufficient to pay the annual interest and extinguishment of principal of such debt within fifteen, or not less than ten years from the creation thereof * *."

While the words "sinking fund" are not used in this provision, it is manifest that the idea of a sinking fund was necessarily implied therein; for a debt would ordinarily be extinguished by annual levies such as seem to be implied through the creation of a sinking fund.

Under this provision it was held in Denver vs. Hallett, 34 Colorado, 393, that bonds might be issued, payable in annual installments so that an apportioned amount might mature each year.

The decision cited seems to regard an issue of serial bonds as a single indebtedness for the purpose of the Colorado constitution. To this extent the case is clearly in point. It is equally as true under the Ohio constitution as it is under the Colorado constitution that the borrowing of money for a given purpose through the issuance of bonds is a single act of "legislation" as the Ohio constitution has it. Hence, it follows, I think, that the indebtedness thus created is a single "bonded indebtedness" within the meaning of the same provision.

It may be said that though the indebtedness is single, it does not have a single "date of maturity." It appears that provision for the payment of the indebtedness at "maturity" is the material requirement of amended Article XII, section 11; so that it might be urged that although the exercise of the borrowing power might be a single legislative act, and although the indebtedness might be a single indebtedness, yet in the case of the issuance of serial bonds there would be no one date of maturity.

Does the constitution then contemplate or require that bonds of a single issue shall all mature at the same time? Certainly there is no such positive provision therein, nor do I find any implication to that effect. The requirement of the constitution is that provision be made for the payment of all bonds at maturity, and this cannot be stretched to the meaning that all bonds issued at the same time for the same purpose shall mature at the same time.

From these considerations then, I conclude:

1. That the section does not require all bonds of a single issue to mature together, and that from the mere use of the words "at maturity" no prohibition against the use of serial bonds can be inferred.

2. I conclude that in this respect the Colorado constitution and the Ohio constitution are to be interpreted alike, that is, to the extent that both require antecedent provision to be made for the levy and collection of taxes sufficient to retire the bonds at maturity, both permit the issuance of serial bonds and the levy of taxes in such manner as to retire the several series as they mature, as well as the issuance of what may be termed straight sinking fund bonds.

There would be no doubt in my mind upon the question which you submit, were it not for the fact that the Ohio constitution expressly requires provision for the accumulation of a "sinking fund," while the Colorado constitution does not require more than that the debt be "extinguished." Under the Colorado constitution, bonds of a single issue falling due together could be extinguished by annual tax levies only through the accumulation of a sinking fund, but bonds falling due in series; that is to say in annual series, could be extinguished by annual tax levies without the accumulation of any technical sinking fund, so that it is at least clearer under the Colorado constitution that both options are preserved, than it is under the Ohio constitution which expressly requires that sinking fund levies be made.

Of course, strictly speaking, a sinking fund is a fund accumulated by annual or other periodical investment which by accretion will equal the principal of an indebtedness due at a future date. Given the number of years which the indebtedness has to run, and the average rate of the investment available to the managers of the fund, the amount required to be set aside and added to the principal of the fund each year can be determined by simple mathematical calculation. This calculation, of course, cannot be made in advance, because of the possibility of enforced reinvestment of a part of the fund at a greater, or less rate of interest, but from year to year when the time arrives for adding to the fund, the amount which should be added in that year can be calculated.

But in describing a sinking fund, I have left out one very material factor. I have stated that there is implicit in the term the idea of an annual or periodical setting aside and investment. What I have not stated is that there is also present the idea that any amount annually set aside to the credit of the sinking fund shall be, roughly speaking, an aliquot part of the total indebtedness, ascertained by dividing the whole of the number of years, or other periods of time between the date of issue and the date of maturity. Of course, the periodical investments will not be precisely equal, because of accretions to the fund through its investment. Therefore, another idea is brought into the meaning of the term, viz., the idea of management with a view to adjusting the amount of investment to the anticipated accretions in such manner as to make the investment installments as nearly equal as possible without producing a surplus or deficit at the end of the period. Thus in creating a sinking fund against the retirement of an issue of bonds which matures at a single date, the actual periodical investment will be less than the ascertained aliquot part of the whole indebtedness, because of the certainty of accretions to the fund produced by the investment thereof.

In a word, then, the fundamental and underlying idea of a sinking fund is the equalization of the burden of the indebtedness among the years, or other periods of time between the date of its incurring and that of its maturity. This idea of equality of burden is the ruling and determining factor. For instance, no calculation as to the amount required to be set aside in a given year can be made, except upon the basis or assumption of equality.

In short, then, that is a "sinking fund" which is accumulated by the periodical setting aside of approximately the same amount, and its investment with a view to accumulating a fund equal to the principal of the indebtedness, when the latter matures.

This is the public policy that is embodied in the constitutional amendment under discussion. It was the policy embodied in the original proposal which was changed in the manner which I have already described. Both the original and the final proposal contemplated the enforced equalization of the burden of the public debt over the period which the debt would have to run. The framers of the constitution undoubtedly had in mind the temptation of public officers in common with all human beings to provide for present needs and to let the future take care of itself. Posterity not possessing the immediate and effective privilege of political suffrage, the line of least resistance suggests to the public officer the expediency of ignoring their just rights and catering to the seemingly more pressing desires of present constituents. This tendency when allowed to operate unchecked undoubtedly constitutes one of the greatest evils to which popular governments are subject, and has in it the elements of self destruction. For if a bonded indebtedness is permitted to be incurred without any obligation to commence accumulation of a redemption fund, or otherwise to provide for its retirement; and if the evil day of making such provision is put off from time to time by officers who will have retired before the bonds become due, then when the date of maturity arrives and the public treasury contains no funds available for the payment of the debt, the officials then in office will face the alternative of refunding or repudiation, unless the tax limits permit the production of revenue in a single year sufficient in amount to discharge the indebtedness.

Any one of the three possible consequences of such a course is a great public evil. Repudiation wipes out credit, halts further public improvements, and thus, as I have stated, is destructive of the common wealth itself

Refunding casts upon future generations the obligation to pay for an improvement which has been enjoyed in the past and to which the people who have enjoyed it have not contributed, save by way of payment of interest—a tremendous injustice; while discharging the loan out of the proceeds of a single tax levy makes the tax payers of a given year pay for the improvement of which they have no greater benefit than those of preceding and possibly succeeding years.

So it is that the only sound public policy is that which decrees that the cost of an improvement for the making of which a debt must be created, shall be shared in as equally as possible by the tax paying public which will enjoy the improvement during the life of the indebtedness.

These fundamental considerations then clearly disclose the evil intended to be remedied by article XII, section 11, and indicate with accuracy that the requirement respecting provision for a sinking fund is designed to secure equality of the burdens of taxation during the life of an indebtedness; which indeed is the primary purpose of any sinking fund.

This, then, is the intent which in my opinon, must be given effect under article XII, section 11, of the constitution I am of the opinion that serial bonds may be issued as well under this section, as under the former constitution, but I am further of the opinion that in any issue of serial bonds, provision must be made and carried into effect, whereby during the life of the whole indebtedness considered as a unit, the burden of taxation will be equalized and the indebtedness ultimately retired. That being the case, if the series are so arranged as to fall due at intervals of years; such as every five years, until the last series matures, I would be of the opinion that substantially equal annual levies must be made during the life of the whole indebtedness. That is, during the period between the date of issuance and the date of maturity of the last series. This could be done, and the series could be paid as they fall due.

Such would be, in my opinion, provision for a sinking fund without the meaning of the constitution.

If the series are arranged so as to fall due annually, or semi-annually, then I would be of the opinion that substantially equal levies would have to be made. This would be the case with ordinary serial bonds and in reality no technical "sinking fund" would be accumulated at all, the bonds merely being met out of the principal sum levied each year with little, if any, opportunity for investment and accretion. Yet the principal purpose of the amendment and the controlling one, as I have interpreted it, would be achieved the ultimate retirement of the whole indebtedness through annual levies substantially equal in amount.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A CITY, THE CORPORATE LIMITS OF WHICH ARE CO-EXTENSIVE WITH THE BOUNDARIES OF A TOWNSHIP, MAY MAKE LEVIES FOR TOWNSHIP PURPOSES UNDER PROVISION OF SECTION 5649-3a, GENERAL CODE—SUCH LEVIES ARE GOVERNED BY THE TWO MILL LIMITATION—LEVIES FOR PUBLIC HEALTH—POOR RELIEF AND CORRECTIONAL PURPOSES NOT LEVIES FOR TOWNSHIP PURPOSES—STATUS OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE UNDER SECTION 1747, ET SEQ., GENERAL CODE.

As a matter of principle, it is conceivable that a city or village, the corporate limits of which are co-extensive with the boundaries of a township may make levies for purposes which would not be "corporate purposes" within the meaning of section 5649-3a, General Code, but would be more properly characterized as "township purposes" as therein stated, and that as to such levies the five mill limitation does not govern, but the same are governed by the two mill limitation.

Levies for public health purposes, poor relief purposes and correctional purposes are not levies for township purposes within the meaning of this principle, but are to be included within the five mill limitation in cities, the corporate limits of which are co-extensive with those of a township as well as in cities the corporate limits of which are not so co-extensive.

Under section 1474, General Code, et seq., the justices of the peace who are required to be elected in the township or townships within the corporate limits of the city of Cincinnati, and who are to receive a salary out of the city treasury, and are to be otherwise supported therefrom, are township offices, and their maintenance is a township function which the city of Cincinnati owes on account of the fact that its boundaries are identical with those of one or more townships. Therefore, so long as the city of Cincinnati remains liable for the support of one or more justices of the peace elected under these sections, it may levy for that purpose, outside of the five mill limitation, and within the two mill limitation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 14, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have transmitted to me a letter, addressed to you by Hon. Charles A. Groom, acting city solicitor of the city of Cincinnati, and have requested my opinion upon the question which Mr. Groom submits therein.

Mr. Groom's letter is a very able argument in favor of a principle for which he contends, and its application to facts which are set forth there in detail. I find it necessary, therefore, to abstract the question and to clothe it in my own phraseology as follows:

> "Where the boundaries of a city are co-extensive with those of a township, are all the levies made by the city authorities within such territory to be included within the five mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-3a, General Code, known as the Smith law; or are not the city levying authorities entitled to levy in addition thereto, for such purposes as may be designated township purposes, subject to the additional limitation of two mills for such purposes prescribed by said section?
> "If it is determined that under the circumstances stated, the municipal authorities have the right to levy in addition to the five mills and subject to the two-mill limitation, for such purposes as may be designated as township purposes, what of the following purposes suggested by Mr. Groom's abstract of the municipal budget may be considered as township purposes within the purview of such a principle:

"1. Purposes of the municipal board of health?

"2. The relief of the poor, including medical aid, the house of refuge, the city infirmary, the municipal lodging house, the public baths, social investigation and relief in the department of charities and corrections, etc., and the burial of paupers?

"3. The salaries and contingent expenses of justices of the peace, provided for by statutes disposing of the fees of such justices, and fixing salaries for them?

The first question which requires, merely, the establishment of a general principle, involves consideration of the following sections of the General Code.

"Section 3512. When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, except that justices of the peace and constables shall continue the exercise of their functions under municipal ordinances providing offices, regulating the disposition of their fees, their compensation, clerks and other officers and employes. Such justices and constables shall be elected at municipal elections. All property, moneys, credits, books, records and documents of such township shall be delivered to the council of such city or village. All rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation.

"Section 5649-3a. * * * The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a municipal corporation on the taxable property in the corporation, for corporation purposes, on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year five mills. The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a township, for township purposes, on the taxable property in the township on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year two mills. * * *."

Looking at section 3512, General Code, it is apparent that the effect of the territorial identity of the corporate limits and those of a township is not to abolish the township as a territorial subdivision of the state nor as an agency of civil government. It is the township offices and not the township that is abolished.

Furthermore, section 3512, General Code, provides that after the territorial merger takes place the duties of the township offices which have been abolished thereby shall be performed by the "corresponding officers" of the municipality with certain exceptions. Giving to this language its exact effect, it would seem that municipal officers, in discharging such duties as might be designated as those of the abolished township offices, would be acting, not strictly as officers of the municipality, but as officers of the township. This may be conceded as a principle. It is true that in McGill vs. State, 34 O. S., 228, it was said at page 251, per Boynton, J., who delivered the opinion, that the original form of this section (which, however, was by no means identical in phraseology with the present statute),

"preserves the corporate existence of such township for the sole purpose of electing justices of the peace and constables, evidently to meet the constitutional requirement that justices of the peace shall be elected by townships. But for all other purposes the township organization in this class of cities and villages is established."

This statement, however, was a mere passing remark, and as it is, is subject to more than one interpretation. Thus, while it is true, as Judge Boynton says, that the township organization and its separate corporate existence is terminated for all purposes excepting that of electing justices of the peace and constables, it by no means follows that any functions that might be properly termed township functions are abolished when the territorial limits of the township and the municipality become co-extensive; nor is it true that the functions pertaining to township officers necessarily terminate under these circumstances.

Thus it was held in Curtiss vs. McDougal, 26 O. S., 66, that under these circumstances chattel mortgages required by law to be filed in the office of the township clerk must be filed in the office of the clerk of the village or city, the corporate limits of which are identical with those of the township. As stated in the opinion of that case, per McIlvaine, C. J.,

> "The duties of the office were not remitted, but were transferred to the clerk of the incorporated village."

And again, speaking of another section of the then Municipal Code, purporting to preserve the corporate existence of the township under these circumstances for the purpose of electing justices of the peace and constables for such township, etc., he says:

> "It does not * * * by its terms purport to destroy the township organization in any case or to merge it into that of a city or village."

So it is apparent that the township as a subdivision of the state and certain functions pertaining to township offices as such, remain technically in existence after the boundaries of the original township become co-extensive with those of the municipality.

Turning now to section 5649-3a, it appears that the interior limitation of five mills therein referred to is imposed upon levies "by a municipal corporation on the taxable property in the corporation for corporation purposes," and that the two-mill limitation therein is imposed upon levies "by a township for township purposes." Giving full effect to all of the words used in this context, it seems clear that if in order to discharge some function, duty or obligation pertaining to a township as such, it becomes necessary to levy taxes in a territory within boundaries which confine both a municipality and a township, such tax levies cannot be said to be made "by a municipal corporation for corporate purposes." They would be made by officers of the municipality and might be said, in that view, to constitute levies made "by a municipal corporation," but they cannot be said to be made "for corporation purposes." On the other hand, such levies would be levies "for township purposes."

The only serious question is as to whether they would be levies "by a township." This question, however, is answered by the considerations already discussed. When a municipal council, in order to provide for the discharge of some township function cast upon it as the functionary corresponding to the township trustees with respect to the levying power, through the extension of the municipal boundaries until they include the township, such council represents the township and not the municipality as such, and its levies are levies "by a township."

In short, then, I am of the opinion, in answer to the first question suggested by Mr. Groom's letter, that such tax levies as must be made by the council of a municipal corporation, the boundaries of which are co-terminus with those of the township in order to discharge a township function, if there are such levies, may be made outside of the five-mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-3a and subject to the two-mill limitation thereof.

But the statement of this principle is one thing, and its application to specific facts is another. In order so to apply it, it becomes necessary, I think, to define with exactness the tax levies which may be said to be made for "township purposes" within the purview of the principle itself.

It seems to me that no great difficulty is encountered in framing such a definition, although, of course, no authorities on the question are available. I define them as follows:

Whatever purposes there may be for which a municipality, the territorial limits of which are co-extensive with those of a township, is required to levy taxes by reason of such identity of boundaries, and for which, considered as distinct purposes, the municipality would not be obliged to levy taxes, save by reason of the succession of its officers to the powers and duties of township officers, are township purposes within the meaning of the Smith law.

This definition eliminates from consideration such purposes as for which the municipality would have power to levy taxes otherwise than as the successor, so to speak, of the township, under the provisions of section 3512 of the General Code. That is to say, unless the necessity for levying taxes or the power to levy them results from the operation of this section alone, the purpose for which they are levied cannot be considered as other than a purely municipal purpose.

That this must be so, becomes, I think, apparent upon reflection. If a given purpose is one for which a municipality has power to levy or with respect to which it is obliged to provide revenue as a municipality, regardless of whether or not its limits are co-terminus with those of a township, then the consequence of designating such a purpose as a township purpose, when the territorial boundaries do happen to be co-extensive with those of a township, would be to create an invidious discrimination under the Smith law in favor of municipalities whose boundaries are co-terminus with those of a township, and against other municipalities, for the one class would be entitled under such an interpretation to levy taxes outside of the five-mill limitation for a purpose identically the same as one for which a municipality of the other class would be required or authorized to levy within that limitation.

It is this very principle of equality which has induced me to accept the principle contended for. If by reason of the operation of section 3512, General Code, there is cast upon the municipality burdens requiring the levy of taxes which it would not otherwise have, and which it does not bear in common with all other municipalities, it would seem to be the spirit of the Smith law that the necessary taxes should not be subject to the limitations common to all municipalities; but as the converse of this it follows, I think, that a burden which a municipality of the class now under discussion shares in common with other municipalities not of that class can under no circumstances be regarded as a township purpose. It appears, then, that the definition will exclude such purposes requiring the levy of taxes as are common to all municipalities and all townships as such. There are, of course, some levies of this character. Both the municipality and the township are for some purposes merely subdivisions of the state, with a view to the administration of its laws. The Smith law is not, I think, to be interpreted so as to exclude from the category of corporation purposes, such purposes as for which a "municipal corporation" is authorized or required to levy taxes as governmental subdivision. Such purposes are none the less "municipal" and "corporation" purposes because of this character.

But it is at least obvious that the kind of purposes which I am now discussing are those which are common to all municipalities alike, whether their boundaries are co-terminus with those of a township or not, and it is sufficient on this point to state again that if a purpose is common to all municipalities, it is a corporation purpose even though the same purpose may be one for which a township, as such, is authorized or required to levy taxes. This definition then disposes of two classes of levies suggested by Mr. Groom as constituting levies for township purposes, viz., levies for health purposes and levies for poor relief, for by sections 4404 to 4476, inclusive, of the General Code, the municipality is made a subdivision of the state for health purposes under the administration of a board of health appointed by the mayor. Townships are also local health agencies, and the township trustees therein are constituted by section 3391 to 3394, inclusive, General Code, township boards of health, having the same duties, powers and jurisdiction within the township outside of any municipality "as by law are imposed upon or granted to boards of health in municipalities."

I am of the opinion that all levies made by the council of a municipal corporation, the boundaries of which are co-terminus with those of the township for local health purposes, are in every sense levies "made by a municipal corporation for corporation purposes" within the meaning of section 5649-3a, General Code, and must, therefore, be included within the five-mill limit thereof.

The case with respect to poor relief is not so clear, but stands, in my judgment upon the same foundation. Section 3476, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

The remaining sections of the same chapter provide machinery for extending temporary relief outside of the county infirmary. All these provisions are alternative. Thus, section 3479, referring to legal settlement, refers to such settlement "in the township or municipal corporation therein."

Section 3480, providing for the initial complaint, requires that it be made to "the township trustees or proper municipal officers;" and in case medical services are rendered, it provides that "thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable, etc."

The "proper municipal authorities" to extend poor relief are not left to conjecture, but are provided for by the municipal code.

Section 4368, General Code, provides explicitly that the director of public safety shall by the "chief administrative authority of the charity, correction and building departments" and related statutes give to him complete managerial authority with respect to these departments and the institutions therein.

Section 4326, General Code, makes the director of public service the manager of city baths and play grounds (which are mentioned because they are referred to in Mr. Groom's letter, either under the heading of public health or poor relief, I am not certain which).

With respect to houses of refuge, also referred to by Mr. Groom, it appears by sections 4077, et seq., General Code, that these institutions cannot be regarded as in any sense pertaining to a township, being exclusively municipal in character. Similarly he refers to infirmaries which are governed by sections 4089 to 4096, General Code, and under the supervision of the director of public safety. So also with regard to hospitals, provided for by section 4021, et seq., General Code. In this connection I may state that townships have certain powers with respect to some similar institutions, but upon principles already laid down I would not regard this fact as material.

It is sufficient to state, I think, that the relief and support of the poor and the maintenance of the various institutions which I have just mentioned, constitute purely a municipal function. That a township may also be authorized or required to assume the discharge of these functions does not alter the case, for on the principles already laid down, if a given function is not exclusively a township function, and is therefore not cast upon a municipality, the corporate limits of which are co-extensive with those of a township, to the exclusion of other municipalities, it must be regarded as a "corporation purpose" and not as a "township purpose" within the meaning of the Smith law.

A very doubtful question is presented by the third class of levies referred to in Mr. Groom's communication, viz., levies for salaries and expenses in connection with justices of the peace courts. Here another principle is brought into play. It appears that while justices of the peace are elected in townships, and while section 3512, General Code, seems to be intended principally to preserve the township for the purpose of the election of justices and constables, yet a town ship as such (meaning thereby a township, the corporate limits of which are not co-extensive with those of a municipality) is not authorized generally to levy taxes for the salaries and expenses of justices of the peace and constables, except that the township trustees must furnish the justices of the peace with a civil docket (section 1724, General Code). There are special acts regulating the courts of justices of the peace in certain cities, which usually provide that the fees of justices of the peace and constables shall be paid into the city treasury, and that such justices and constables shall be allowed certain salaries in lieu of fees. (See sections 1747 to 1806, inclusive, General Code, some of which have application to Cincinnati.) Such local statutes, of course, prevail over the general provisions of section 3512, General Code, and this is the case in Cincinnati.

Section 1747, General Code, provides as follows:

> "In all townships, the boundaries of which are, or hereafter may be, wholly within the limits of the city of Cincinnati, there shall be five justices of the peace, each of whom shall receive an annual salary of twenty-five hundred dollars, seven hundred and fifty dollars each year for clerk hire and shall be provided with necessary blanks and stationery and such suitable office accommodations as the city council directs."

This section has been repealed by the enactment of an act for the creation of a municipal court in the city of Cincinnati, but my understanding is that the justices of the peace in office at the time said repeal went into effect are to serve out their unexpired terms. Statutes like this take precedence of course, over section 3512, General Code, as already remarked, so that the disposition of the fees of justices instead of being made by ordinance as prescribed in the General Code, is made by the statute itself.

Under these statutes, as distinguished from section 3512, General Code, I am of the opinion that the annual salaries payable to justices of the peace, and the other expenses chargeable to the treasury of the city of Cincinnati, under section 1747, General Code, do constitute "township purposes" within the meaning of section 5649-3a as I have interpreted it. The justices of the peace are to be elected in townships under section 1747. The city must provide the specified salaries and allowance for clerk hire as well as the office accommodations, etc., regardless of whether or not the fees collected by the justices of the peace, and paid into the treasury of the city, equal the burden thus cast upon the city. Therefore, it is immaterial in my mind that the city is to receive the benefit of the fees collected by the justices of the peace. In other words, the city of Cincinnati is directly charged by law with the burden of supporting the justices' courts. This burden must be borne through the exercise of the power of taxation. Such taxation would not be for a "corporation purpose," in my judgment, but would be for a "township purpose," although the ordinary township would not be obliged to levy any taxes for such purposes. In a word, then, there exists in the township or townships included in the city of Cincinnati a "purpose" for which taxes must be collected, which is not common to all townships, and is not common to all municipalities.

I wish to emphasize, that in concluding, that the city of Cincinnati is entitled to levy for the support of justices' courts therein outside of the five-mill limitation. I am confining myself to an interpretation of section 1747, et seq., General Code, in connection with the Smith law. I do not attempt to pass upon questions which might arise in a given case under section 3512, when a city whose boundaries are co-extensive with those of a township might, by ordinance, provide for the salaries of justices of the peace, and for the disposition of their fees, nor do I pass upon questions respecting levies for the support of municipal courts and other specially created justices' courts. Each case, I apprehend, is to be governed by its own peculiar status and circumstances, though I may hazard the general view that all municipal courts, as such, partaking, as they do, something of the nature of a mayor's court or police court, are to be regarded as departments of the city government and their support as constituting a "corporation purpose" within the meaning of section 5649-3a, General Code. But as stated, it would be perhaps better not to pass upon such questions without examining the municipal court acts themselves.

Expressing no view, then, as to any general rule under section 3512, General Code, I conclude that under section 1747, et seq., General Code, in so far as their effect may be preserved during the terms of office of justices of the peace now serving in Cincinnati, the levy of taxes which the council of the city of Cincinnati must make in order to provide for the support of such justices of the peace is to be made outside of the five-mill limitation provided for by section 5649-3a, General Code, and inside of the two-mill limitation provided for by the same section.

I may add that the general principle which I have accepted in the first part of this opinion may have a very real and substantial application in other localities, though it does not appear to have such an application in the city of Cincinnati. For example, if at the time the boundaries of a municipal corporation become co-extensive with those of a township, there were liabilities of the township, as such, which the municipality would, by virtue of section 3512, General Code, be obliged to assume, the levy of taxes by the council of the municipality for the purpose of discharging such liabilities would clearly be levies for a "township purpose" within the meaning of the Smith law.

Attorney General.

SINKING FUND COMMISSIONERS OF A CITY SCHOOL—HAVE NO CONTROL IN THE SELECTION OF A DEPOSITORY FOR SCHOOL MONEY UNDER THEIR CONTROL.

The sinking fund commissioners of a city school district have no control in the selection of a depository for money subject to their control.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 14, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 15 submitting for my opinion the following questions:

> "Is it legal for the board of sinking fund commissioners of a city board of education to deposit the funds in their charge in a bank situated outside state of Ohio?"
> "On May 27, 1913, you gave an opinion to this department to the effect that moneys belonging to a board of education under the control of a board of sinking fund commissioners should remain in the custody of the treasurer of the school district. Would the board of sinking fund commissioners have any legal right to designate any particular bank in which the treasurer of the board should deposit the funds under the control of the board of sinking fund commissioners?"

The opinion to which you refer in reality answers your present question. School district sinking fund moneys belong in the custody of the school district treasurer and where a depository is provided for the custody of moneys of the school district, the authority to designate the depository is that which the statutes pertaining to this subject themselves create, viz.: the board of education. I know of no authority whatever in the board of sinking fund commissioners of a city school district to control the selection of a depository for the moneys belonging to the sinking fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTORS DOING COUNTY WORK—FILING OF A STATEMENT MENTIONED IN SECTION 3 OF THE MECHANICS LIEN LAW WITH COUNTY COMMISSIONERS DRAWING ESTIMATES.

Contractors doing work for a county are not required before drawing estimates, to file with the county commissioners the statement mentioned in section 3 of the mechanics lien law, because that law has no application to such case; sections 8324 et seq., should govern in such case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 14, 1914.

HON. EDWARD C. TURNER, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 17, 1914, wherein you state:

"Under section 3 of the mechanics lien law, 103 O. L., 369-370, before a contractor may draw an estimate, he has to furnish various certificates, affidavits and statements, showing that all laborers, material men and subcontractors have been paid to date.

"We find that to follow the provisions of the statute, it will not only require a great deal of unnecessary clerical work on the part of the county, but even if all the work be carefully done, and the statements looked after, still there is no assurance that the county will not still be liable to material men, subcontractors or laborers of whom the county happens to have no knowledge. On the other hand, the burden to contractors in paying their subcontractors, material men and other help, before drawing any money on an estimate, will result either in fraudulent statements, or the driving out of business of many contractors, with the consequent rise in cost of work to the county.

"In order to meet this condition, and to provide for the same and that the mechanics lien law seeks to subserve, we have devised a form of bond to be given by a contractor, in lieu of the statements, certificates and affidavits required under the mechanics lien law.

"As this is a matter of state wide importance, and as the practice throughout the state ought to be uniform, I am taking the liberty of submitting herewith a copy of the form of bond that we are now using, and cordially invite any criticism or suggestion that your office may have to offer.

"Unless it be pointed out wherein the taking of such a bond would be either illegal or of doubtful propriety, we shall attempt to devise a form of original bond which shall apply both to the performance of the contract and the payment of subcontractors, material men and laborers.

"Any suggestion that you or your office may have to offer will be thankfully received."

Section 3 of the mechanics lien law of 1913, 103 O. L., page 369, provides:

"The original contractor shall, whenever any payment of money shall be become due from the owner, part owner, or lessee, or whenever he desires to draw any money from the owner, part owner, or lessee, under such contract or upon the written demand of any mortgagee, make out and give to the owner, part owner, lessee or mortgagee or his agent, a statement under oath showing the name of every subcontractor or laborer in his employ, and of every person furnishing machinery, material, or fuel, giving the amount, if any, which is due, or to become due, to them, or any of them, for work done or machinery, material or fuel furnished to him, which statement shall be accompanied by a certificate signed by every person furnishing machinery, material or fuel to him in substantially the following form:

"The undersigned certified that to date hereof, commencing on the ----------day of----------, he has furnished machinery, material, or fuel, as the case may be, to----------, for constructing (altering, erecting, improving, repairing, removing, digging or drilling, as the case may be), a certain----------, situated on or around, or in front of the following described property:---------- ---------- and there is now due or owing to the undersigned the amount shown on the statement herein, (or the undersigned has been paid in full thereof, as the case may be),----------.

"And the original contractor shall also deliver to such owner, part owner, lessee or mortgagee, similar sworn statements from each subcontractor, accompanied by like certificates from every person furnishing machinery, material or fuel to such subcontractor. The owner, part owner, or lessee, or his agent, may retain out of any money then due, or to become due to the principal contractor an amount sufficient to pay all demands that are due or to become due to such subcontractors, laborers and material men, as shown by the contractor's and subcontractors' statement, for work done, or machinery, material, or fuel furnished, and pay said money to them according to their respective rights, and all payments so made shall as between such owner, part owner, lessee, or mortgagee and such contractor, and as between such subcontractors and persons performing labor or furnishing machinery material or fuel, be considered the same as if paid to such original contractor. Until the statements provided for in this section are made and furnished in the manner and form as herein provided the contractor shall have no right of action or lien against the owner, part owner or lessee on account of such contract, and the subcontractor shall have no right of action or lien against the owner, part owner, lessee or contractor until he shall have furnished such statements, and any payments made by the owner, part owner or lessee before such statements are made, or without retaining sufficient money, if that amount be due or it is to become due, to pay the subcontractor, laborers, or material men, as shown by the statements, shall be considered illegal and made in violation of the rights of the persons intended to be benefited by this act, and the rights of such subcontractors, laborers and material men to a lien, shall not be affected thereby. If neither such owner, part owner or lessee nor his agent can be found within the county, then it shall not be necessary for the contractor or subcontractor to make out and deliver such statements, as a prerequisite to the institution of proceedings under this act or other suit or proceeding. In order that the owner, part owner, lessee, mortgagee or contractor may be protected, he or his agent may at any time during the progress of the work demand in writing of the contractor or any subcontractor any or all statements herein provided for, which shall be made by the contractor or subcontractor and given to the owner, part owner, lessee, mortgagee, contractor or his agent, and if such contractor or subcontractor fails to furnish such statements within ten days after demand is made, he shall be liable to such owner, part owner, lessee, mortgagee or contractor making such demand, each time he so refuses or neglects to comply with such demand occasioned by such neglect or refusal."

When this section is read in connection with other sections of the same act, it becomes apparent that it applies only to work carried on by private agencies and not to work done by a public agency such as a township, municipality or county. Sections 8324 et seq., General Code, which were left unaffected by the adoption of the mechanics lien law of 1913, provide a method whereby any subcontractor, material man, laborer or mechanic, who has performed labor or furnished material, fuel or machinery, or who is furnishing or is about to furnish any of these items for the construction of a public building, may obtain a lien upon the fund available for the construction thereof.

The procedure for obtaining a lien upon such fund under sections 8324 et seq., is materially different from the procedure for obtaining a lien under the new mechanics lien law. It is sufficient to say, without going into an extended discussion of the various points of difference between these two laws, that sections 8324 et seq. do not require a contractor before he can draw any money on his contract to file a list of the names of every subcontractor or laborer in his employ and of every person furnishing material, machinery or fuel, or a statement of the amount due such persons in the construction of a public building, as is required of a contractor under section 3 above quoted.

The form of the bond that you have submitted to me is predicated upon the theory that the new mechanics lien law is applicable to work done by a county and that a contractor performing such work would have to comply with the provisions of section 3 of said law. As the provisions of said section are not applicable in such case, I am of the opinion that a bond of that kind would not subserve any useful purpose.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRUST COMPANIES, WHOSE BUSINESS IN OHIO IS CONFINED MERELY TO LOANING MONEY ON REAL ESTATE, SHOULD PAY FEES PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 736, GENERAL CODE.

Trust companies, whose business in Ohio is confined merely to loaning money on real estate, would be doing business in Ohio and should, therefore, pay the fee provided for in paragraph c of section 736, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 2, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not paragraph c of section 1, house bill 267, passed April 9, 1913, would apply to foreign trust companies whose business in the state of Ohio is confined merely to the loaning of money upon real estate security."

The act to which you refer is entitled "An act to provide for certain fees to be paid for corporations, associations and persons subject to inspection and examination by the superintendent of banks; also certain fees to be paid by foreign trust companies; and for the disposition to be made of such fees," 103 O. L. 180.

This act provides:

> "Section 1. That for the purpose of maintaining the department of the superintendent of banks and the payment of expenses incident thereto, and especially the expenses of inspection and examination, the following fees shall be paid to the superintendent of banks of Ohio:
> (c) "Each foreign trust company desiring and intending to do business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of banks a fee of fifty dollars for issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state. Such fee to be paid before such certificate is issued."

The provision for fees to be paid by trust companies is very broad. There is no implication even in this provision to the effect that the fee is one to be paid by trust companies which transact the ordinary trust business in this state. On the contrary, the language of the section is explicit that each foreign trust comapny desiring and intending to do business in this state shall pay the fee, and the only logical construction to give it is that every trust company desiring and intending to transact any business in this state must pay the fee.

Your inquiry is as to trust companies whose business in Ohio is confined merely to loaning money upon real estate; this would be doing business in Ohio, and would bring such companies under the provisions of this act, and they should pay the fee.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ARCHITECTS EMPLOYED BY BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—PER CENT. TO BE ALLOWED ARCHITECTS ON CERTAIN CONTRACTS—MODEL PLAN OF BUILDING—COMPUTING OF ARCHITECTS' FEES.

A contract between architects and the board of administration calls for 3½ per cent. of the contract price of building let under plans. At that time the board did not contemplate furnishing brick; at the time the contract for building was let, the board decided to furnish brick. Architects should be entitled to their percentage on the entire contract, inclusive of brick.

The board of administration had architects make model plan of the building under contract. The board used said plans for two buildings, the contracts for which were awarded the same day at different prices. Since it cannot be determined on which of said contracts the architects' fees were to be computed, it is only just and equitable that the mean between the two sums be the basis upon which to compute said fees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of August 15, 1914, wherein you state as follows:

> "Enclosed find agreement between the Ohio board of administration and Richards, McCarty & Bulford, architects.
> "Richards, McCarty & Bulford filed in this office plans, specifications, estimates of cost and bill of material for a dormitory, designated as design 'B-1.' with the understanding that the same were to be used for dormitories which might be built at some future time; the estimate of cost of said building being $76,000.00.
> "Two contracts were entered into on the same date—June 30, 1914—one dormitory to be erected at the Institution for Feeble Minded for $57,285.00 exclusive of the brick to be furnished by the state for $6,000.00, making a total cost of the building $63,285.00; and the other at the Ohio Hospital for Epileptics for $61,915.00, also exclusive of the brick for $5,185.00, making total cost of said building $67,100.00.
> "At the time the agreement was entered into with the architects, the board of administration did not contemplate the making of brick for state buildings.
> "The question arises as to the manner in which the architects' fees should be computed, and your written opinion is respectfully requested on the following:
> "1. Should the architects' fees be computed inclusive or exclusive of the brick?
> "2. Should said fees be computed on each contract awarded; or,
>
> "3. Should said fees be computed on only one contract, and, if so, which one; or,
> "4. Can the amount of the two contracts be added together and fees allowed on half of the total amount of the contracts?"

The agreement between the Ohio board of administration and the architects in question, which you enclosed in your letter of inquiry, is dated November 22, 1913, and is in the form of a letter from the Ohio board of administration to the architects in question. In such letter of agreement it is stipulated that the work is to be done

"on a basis of 3½% of the contract price, with an understanding that if supervision is required there will be additional charge.

In order to get the exact facts relative to the understanding which the Ohio board of administration had when it entered into the contract with the architects in question, I requested said board to advise me by letter concerning the same, and under date of September 12th, I received a letter from said Ohio board of administration, as follows:

> "In reference to the bill of Richards, McCarty & Bulford, architects, for plans and specifications for dormitory buildings, design B-1, now being erected at the Institution for Feeble Minded and Hospital for Epileptics, we desire to say that the board purchased the plans outright on a basis of 3½ per cent. of the contract price, with the understanding that it would erect one or a dozen buildings from the plans as it saw fit. As a matter of fact, two buildings were contracted for at the same time at different prices from these plans, and as a basis for payment, the board took the average price.
> "At the time the board entered into this contract with the architects, it did not have a brick plant and did not contemplate the furnishing of brick for these buildings."

Your first question is as to whether or not the architects' fees should be computed inclusive or exclusive of the brick.

My understanding of the facts is this: that the Ohio board of administration desired to have plans, specifications and estimates made of a model dormitory which has been designated as design "B-1," which plans, etc., were to be used for the construction of a building wheresoever the board should determine that such a building would be proper; that at the time that the contract with the architects was entered into the Ohio board of administration did not have in contemplation that it would furnish any of the material to be used in said building, as it was authorized by law to do since, at that time, it did not have any facilities with which so to do; consequently, the condition surrounding the making of said contract was that the contract, when let, was to be for not only the labor but all of the materials which went into said building. Later, the Ohio board of administration, under authority of law, came into possession of a brick making plant, and at the time that the contract for the building was entered into it was in a position to furnish the brick for said building. Since, however, the fees of the architects are to be based upon the contract price, it must, to my mind, have been in consideration that it was to be based upon the contract price for the entire building, including the brick, since it was not contemplated at the time of entering into the contract with the architects that the board of administration would furnish any brick for said building. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the architects' fees should be computed inclusive of the brick.

Your next question is as to whether the said fees should be computed on each contract awarded or only one contract, and if so, which one?

The facts, as I understand them, are these: that after the plans for the model dormitory were submitted to the Ohio board of administration, it decided to erect two dormitories in accordance with said plans; one at the Institution for Feeble Minded, at Columbus, Ohio, and the other at the hospital for Epileptics, at Gallipolis, Ohio; that it advertised for bids on both of said institutions, and that on June 30, 1914, two contracts were awarded, one for the building at Columbus and the other at Gallipolis.

From the letter of the Ohio board of administration, copy of which is heretofore set forth, it appears that it was the intention of the board, and that it did purchase the plans outright with the understanding that it would erect one or a dozen buildings from the plans, as it saw fit; consequently, I do not believe that the fee should be computed on each contract awarded. The difficult question, however, arises as to which one of the two contracts awarded on the same day should be used in order to compute the architects' fees. One of the contracts for the building, as it appears in the letter, was awarded for $63,285.00 and the other for $67,100.00. Since, as I have before stated, I do not believe that the architects' fees should be based on both the contracts, and since it is impossible to say which contract for the building should be used as the basis upon which to compute the architects' fees, it would seem to me to be not only proper, but also legal, to add the amount of the two contracts together and to allow the fees on one-half of the total amount thereof, thus striking a mean between the two contracts. If it were attempted to allow the amount on the lower contract it could well be argued that the fees should be as well computed on the higher.

Since there is no way to determine on which of said contracts the fee should be computed, I am of the opinion, as before stated, that it is only just and proper to get a mean between the two contracts.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUDGET COMMISSION—EFFECT OF DECISION, STATE EX REL. POGUE VS. GROOM—WORK COMPLETED BY BUDGET COMMISSION PRIOR TO SEPTEMBER 15, 1914—CHANGE OF PERSONNEL OF BUDGET COMMISSION—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MEMBER OF BUDGET COMMISSION.

Where a budget commission has completed its work prior to September 15, 1914, levies fixed in accordance with its determinations are valid, notwithstanding the decision of State ex rel. Pogue vs. Groom, decided September 15, 1914, to the effect that the Kilpatrick law was unconstitutional in so far as it changed the personnel of the budget commission by providing that the third member should be the city solicitor in certain counties, and a representative of the board of education in other counties, instead of the prosecuting attorney. The acts of the budget commission, constituted in accordance with the Kilpatrick act, are at least those of de facto officers and are valid as such; but as two members of the budget commissioners constitute a quorum, that fact alone is probably sufficient to sustain such act.

Where the work of the budget commission was unfinished on September 15, 1914, or where the commission had closed its work, but had not reduced all levies, and therefore was liable to be reconvened for the purpose of fully completing its work, the prosecuting attorney must take his place on the board and is entitled to participate in its further action; and if the budget commission, as it must now be constituted, determines to reconsider any action prior to September 15, 1914, it may do so and act in such case de novo. Otherwise, however, the work done by the budget commission prior to September 15, 1914, though all the work of the commission was not completed on that date, would stand.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of September 17th requests my opinion upon the following questions which have arisen in view of the decision of the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Pogue vs. Groom, decided September 15, 1914:

(1) Where a budget commission has completed its work, certified its action to the county auditor and has adjourned prior to September 15, 1914, are the levies fixed in accordance with its determination valid, or must the budget commission, the personnel of which is fixed in accordance with the decision cited, convene and go over the same work in order to validate the tax levies.

(2) The tax commission, in the exercise of its general powers, has a standing order directed to county auditors (who are members of the budget commission) to the effect that when fixed by the budget commission the levies for a given county shall be sent to the commission for examination. If the commission finds that any of the levies so fixed in a given county exceed the limitations of the law, the attention of the local officials is called to the matter and the budget commission, if it has adjourned, is ordered to reconvene and complete its work by correcting the erroneous levy.

Where on September 15, 1914, certificates of local tax rates were in the hands of the commission for examination, as aforesaid, and the local budget commission had not certified the result of its work to the county auditor, in an official way, the figures sent to the tax commission being tentatively; and where, in such event, the commission subsequently finds the rates so tentatively determined, to be within the limitations of the law, may the prosecuting attorney insist upon his right to participate in the further action of the budget commission necessary in order to make the tentative action final, and to certifiy the result to the county auditor? In so acting may he insist upon the right to have a voice in the determination of the several rates de novo?

Under the same circumstances outlined in the second question, except that the commission finds some of the rates to be excessive, is the prosecuting attorney's subsequent action as a member of the budget commission confined to the correction of such excessive rates merely, or may he insist upon the right to participate in the determination of all the rates de novo?

The case which you mention has not, at this writing, been reported. I find, however, that the supreme court has unanimously concurred in a journal entry which states the conclusion of law reached therein. This conclusion is that section 5649-3b, as amended in 1913 and 1914, is unconstitutional because of its provisions for the personnel of the budget commission; and that the acts amending section 5649-3b, insofar as they repeal original section 5649-3b of the Smith law, controls, and the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, who, as relator, claimed under said section 5649-3b, is entitled to sit as a member of the budget commission to the exclusion of the defendant, who was the acting city solicitor of the city of Cincinnati.

This conclusion, then, involves, of necessity, the holding that at all times, both before and after the amendment of section 5649-3b, there has been, under the law, a tribunal known as the budget commission; and that its members were officers (for quo warranto would not lie except on the theory that ex officio membership on the budget commission constituted an office). That is to say, the law providing for the existence of the budget commission, as such, was at all times a valid law; but the amendment with respect to the personnel of the budget commission, providing how one of its members should be by ex officio designation selected, was invalid.

In this connection it is worth while, I think, to note that under both the original Smith law and the (in this respect) Kilpatrick act, two of the members of the budget commission were the county auditor and the mayor of the largest municipality in the county, respectively. The change made by the unconstitutional amendment related to the third member of the commission, and to his membership, only.

My information is that nowhere in the state, outside of Hamilton county, at least, have prosecuting attorneys actively asserted the right to sit as the third member of the budget commission. In other words, since the Killpatrick law was passed, or rather since it went into operative effect, which did not occur until the year 1914, (State ex rel. Shreib vs. Milroy, 88 O. S., 301), and in every county in the state excepting Hamilton county, city solicitors or presidents of representatives of boards of education, as the case may be, have been sitting as members of the budget commission, and b udget commissioners so constituted have in many instances, as your questions disclose, completed their work and placed the stamp of final approval upon levies submitted to them and revised by them, without any attempt on the part of the prosecuting attorney to sit as a member of the budget commission, or in any way to challenge the right of the city solicitor, or president or member of the board of education, so to do.
