RAILROAD POLICEMEN'S BOND—WHERE TO BE FILED—FILING FEE.

The original bond of a railroad policeman should be filed in the county in which the official headquarters of the policeman are located. By official headquarters is meant the county in which his ordinary official duties are chiefly performed. This county must be one of those in which he is directed to act. The clerk who approves the original bond may charge 25c for his services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry of October 11, 1913, in which you ask:

> "In what county or counties should the bonds of railroad policemen required by section 12819, as amended in vol. 103 O. L., page 533, be filed? If required to be filed in only one county or certified copies be filed in each of the counties in which such policemen have jurisdiction?
> "What, if any, fees may the clerk of courts charge such policemen for filing such bonds or certified copies thereof?"

Section 9150 et seq., make provisions for the appointment, qualification, powers, duties and liabilities of these policemen, section 9151 providing that:

> "Before entering upon the duties of his office, each policeman so appointed shall take and subscribe an oath of office, which shall be endorsed on his commission. A certified copy of such commission, with the oath, shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court in each county through or into which the railroad runs for which such policeman is appointed, and intended to act. Policemen so appointed and commissioned severally shall possess and exercise the powers and be subject to the liabilities of policemen of cities in the several counties in which they are authorized to act while discharging the duties for which they are appointed."

Section 12819 of the General Code, as amended, (103 O. L. 533), makes it a felony to carry concealed weapons, subject to the following proviso:

> "Provided further that it shall be lawful for deputy sheriffs and specially appointed police-officers, except as are appointed or called into service by virtue of the authority of said sections 2833, 4373, 10070, 10108 and 12857 of the General Code, to go armed if they first give bond to the State of Ohio, to be approved by the clerk of the court of common pleas, in the sum of one thousand dollars, conditioned to save the public harmless by reason of any unlawful use of such weapons carried by them; and any person injured by such improper use may have recourse on said bond."

You will note that the provision last quoted is very vague as to the filing of the bond, and but very little light is thrown upon it by section 9151 just referred to. I think, however, that the latter section gives the policeman jurisdiction in those counties for which he is appointed—that is to say, he has no jurisdiction in any county in which the railroad runs excepting in those counties for which he is appointed by the railroad. A certified copy of his commission, however, must be recorded in each county in which he is to act. From this I infer that it would be proper for his bond, or a copy thereof to be filed in these counties. Section 12819 does not, however, require more than one bond, and therefore it would seem that this bond should be coextensive with his territorial jurisdiction. This view obviates the necessity of his filing a separate bond for each county.

The question that then arises is: In which county should this original bond be filed: There is really no method of statutory construction that will enable us to answer this question, but I am of the opinion that such original bond should be filed in the county in which the official headquarters of the policeman are located. By official headquarters, as used in this sense, I mean the county in which the railroad directs him to spend most of his time—the place where it expects to find him when it calls him into special service,—the county in which his ordinary official duties are chiefly performed. This county, of course, must be one of those in which he is directed to act. This bond should be approved by the clerk of the courts of that county, and a copy of it should be filed with the certified copy of his commission in each of the other counties. This, I think, will be in harmony with the spirit of the law, as it was the manifest intention of the legislature that the citizens of each county should be able easily to ascertain who the bondsmen are, in order that action may readily be brought against them in case of injury from the unlawful use of the weapons carried by the officer.

I know that many of these policemen are stationed for very little time at any one place, but I think that the railroad company should have no difficulty in determining which of these places are the proper headquarters, of such policemen.

Section 2900 of the General Code contains the following language with reference to the fees of the clerk of courts:

* * * "the clerk shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the following section, and no more: * * * taking an undertaking, bond or recognizance, twenty-five cents."

This would seem to carry with it the right of clerk who approves the original bond to charge twenty-five cents for his services. As the copy does not need to be approved, and is merely filed by the clerk, it is my opinion that he is entitled to no fee for filing the copy, but that he is entitled to twenty-five cents for approving and filing the original.

This construction received added force from the fact that there does not seem to be any necessity for filing a separate bond for each county, and if such copy is filed, it is merely as a matter of public information.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

4. In handling the sinking fund, school fund, the form of appropriation by sections and by reference to the different funds involved, while possibly subject to some technical criticism, is in substantial compliance with the constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1913.

HON. W. O. HEFFERMAN, State Budget Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 12th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Will the balances standing to the credit of the various departments February 15, 1914, lapse by reason of the repeal of the 1914 Appropriation Bill and the passage in lieu thereof of the 1914 Budget Bill which is now being written?

"2. Where departments are given the right to use their receipts and balances for their uses and purposes, should not the receipts of such departments be placed to the credit of the activity from which they are derived and not to the credit of the general fund?

"3. What is the status of an appropriation made for the purpose of construction of buildings, etc., at the end of an appropriation period when contracts have not been let?

"4. When they have been let?

"5. Shall I divide the 1914 Budget Bill into sections, showing in the first section appropriations from the general fund and in the second section appropriations of receipts and balances, etc.?

"6. How shall I handle the sinking fund, school and universities fund?"

Your first question requires consideration of what is known as the "1913 Appropriation Bill," passed by the last session of the general assembly, in connection with what you have called the "1914 Appropriation Bill." I understand that the design is to repeal the latter but not the former. These two bills are found in 103 Ohio Laws, 611 and 627, respectively I quote from "section 1" of both of these bills, the language of the said sections being identical, excepting as to the items appropriated:

"That the following sums, for the purposes hereinafter specified, be and the same are hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund not otherwise appropriated * * *"

The constitution of Ohio, article 2, section 22, provides that,

"No appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

If there had never been any legislation under this provision, it seems to me it would be regarded as indicating that the legislature, in appropriating, must specify the period of time, not exceeding two years, during which the appropriation, i. e. the setting aside of the money in the treasury subject to withdrawal, shall exist; in other words, the language of the constitution on its face seems to imply that the legislature would not be complying with its mandate with formal perfection unless it should designate the date at which each appropriation, made by it, is to lapse.

But this, seemingly, has never been done; at least, it is not done by section 1 of the two bills involved in the present inquiry. That section designates neither the time at which the appropriation shall commence nor the time at which it shall lapse.

As a matter of practice, extending over a period of more than fifty years in this state, appropriations have been regarded as commencing at the date of the passage of the law and as lasting until the expiration of the period of two years from that date.

In other words, the succeeding legislatures have seemingly construed in the practical way article 2, section 22, as if it read "and every appropriation shall be made for a period of two years;" which, of course, is palpably not what it means. I suppose it would be more accurate to say that the legislature has interpreted the constitution as permitting it to appropriate money from the state treasury without stating the length of time during which the appropriation shall last, and without designating also the date from which the appropriation shall run; and as supplying, in the event of such an appropriation, the date of commencement, from the passage of the bill, and the date of lapse, from the constitutional limitation itself measured from the bill's passage.

Whatever criticism might have been originally lodged against this loose legislative practice, it has become too firmly established to be ignored now; in fact, it constitutes such a long-continued and consistent legislative interpretation of the constitution that, in my opinion, the constitution itself must be construed in accordance with it.

Section 1, then, of both bills, standing alone, in deference to the legislative practices to which I have referred, has the effect of appropriating the specific sums mentioned in each bill to the specified uses and purposes therein referred to, for periods beginning, as to the first bill, on May 9, 1913, and extending to May 9, 1915, and, as to the second bill, for precisely the same period, viz.: May 9, 1913, to May 9, 1915.

Before leaving section 1, however, I wish to point out that as to such items under each as are not for the current expenses of the state government and institutions, the above mentioned dates, by reason of the initiative and referendum provisions of our constitution, do not apply, the commencement and termination of the two year period in such cases being ninety-two days later than the dates above mentioned.

Also, in this connection, I beg to point out that all the appropriations for the year 1913 are not found in the law at 103 Ohio Laws 611; what is known as the 1913 Partial Appropriation Bill is found in 103 Ohio Laws 43. Its first section is exactly like that already quoted. It was approved, however, February 28, 1913, and as to those items thereof which are for defraying of the current expenses of the state departments and institutions, its appropriations are for a period of time beginning on that date and ending February 28, 1915.

We come now to the consideration of section 2 of the respective bills above referred to. Section 2 of the 1913 partial bill reads:

> "The moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall not be in any way expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 15, 1913, nor shall they be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid."

Section 2 of the 1913 general bill reads as follows:

> "That the moneys appropriated in the preceding section shall be available to pay liabilities incurred on and after February 16, 1913, but shall not in any way be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to February 16, 1913, nor shall they be used or paid out for purposes other than those for which said sums are specifically appropriated as aforesaid."

Section 2 of the 1914 appropriation bill is exactly like section 2 of the 1913 bill, except that the date mentioned is February 16, 1914.

There are no other provisions of the three bills referred to in any way reflecting upon the mater of time. Section 264, General Code, has no bearing upon any question submitted by you.

It is to be observed, as to each of these three sections designated "Section 2," that there is no posterior limitation of time therein. The legislature has carefully safeguarded the expenditure of any of the sums appropriated in the discharge of liabilities created prior to the dates named; but the legislature has not prohibited the expenditure of the sums appropriated for the payment of liabilities created after any given date. For aught that appears in the above quoted language of sections 1 and 2 of the three bills, the sums appropriated in the 1913 general bill, for example, may be expended in the discharge of liabilities incurred at any time within the two year period of the appropriation; that is, at any time up to May 9, 1915.

As I understand it, it has been the practice of the department of the auditor of state to regard the sums appropriated under provisions like these (which are the standard provisions in use for a number of years) as being available for expenditure in the discharge of liabilities incurred at any time after the date named in the typical "Section 2" until the lapse of the appropriation itself.

In this instance I am satisfied that the practice conforms to the law. If the legislature intended to impose any posterior limitation upon the expenditure of money appropriated for a given period, it would have so stated in explicit language.

In this connection, however, I desire to call attention to the title of the 1913 partial appropriation bill, which reads:

> "An act to make partial appropriations for the last three-quarters of the fiscal year ending November 15, 1913, and the first quarter of the fiscal year ending February 15, 1914."

In this respect the so-called partial bill differs from both of the so-called general bills, the title of both of which is as follows: "An act to make general appropriations."

The extent to which the title of an act may be used in the interpretation of the provisions found in the body thereof cannot be defined by any hard and fast principal of law. There is a general rule to the effect that the title is no part of the act and is not to be looked to, save for the purpose of resolving ambiguities apparent upon the face of the act itself.

In the case of the partial appropriation bill I incline to the view, however, that the title may be looked to, not for the purpose of resolving an ambiguity in section 2, but rather for the purpose of supplying a provision as to which section 2 is wholly silent, namely: the posterior limitation upon the incurring of liabilities to be met out of the appropriations made. My justification for so employing the title in this instance lies not only in the deficiency of section 2 in this particular, but also in the fact that the legislature has evidently entertained some design in choosing for the title of its general bills language different from that employed by it in the title of the partial bill.

On this ground, then, I am inclined to the view that the appropriations made by the 1913 partial bill, while, as already stated, they do not lapse until February 28, 1915, cannot be used to pay liabilities incurred after the end of the first quarter of the fiscal year ending February 15, 1914.

Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, I am of the opinion that, as a general rule, the repeal of the 1914 general bill will not have the effect of lapsing the balances of specific appropriations made in the 1913 general bill and in the 1913 partial bill, respectively, which said balances will continue to be available for expenditure until May 9, 1915, and February 28, 1915, respectively, in the payment of current liabilities incurred; in the case of the 1913 general bill, at any time during the period mentioned, and, in the case of the 1913 partial bill at any time up to February 15, 1914.

As to the partial bill, the balances, if any remaining unexpended on February 16, 1914, can be used thereafter in the payment of liabilities incurred prior to that date only.

But it would not be safe to adhere to this general rule universally. I call attention to the item "Publication of Highway Maps," in the appropriation to the commissioners of public printing, at page 615 of the general bill for 1913; the amount therein appropriated is $7,000; and there is no partial appropriation for this purpose. In the bill for the year 1914 is found the following: "Publication of highway maps, unexpended balance."

Again, I call your attention to the item found at page 616 of the general bill for 1913: "geological survey receipts, balance and $6,700." There is no similar appropriation in the partial bill; but in the general bill for the year 1914 is found the following: "geological survey, receipts, balance and $7,000."

Here are two instances in which the general assembly, in the 1914 bill, passed on the same day in which the 1913 bill was passed, has reappropriated or attempted to reappropriate the balance of an appropriation made in the 1913 bill. That is to say, the legislature first enacted that a certain sum should be appropriated generally for a certain purpose, which, by implication only, would set the sum aside for a period of two years; then, the legislature reappropriates the balances of the same appropriation for the same purpose, and for the same period, but with the limitation that no part of the balances shall be used to defray expenses incurred prior to February 16, 1914. In other words, the general assembly seemed to have had the idea that it was necessary in these instances to reappropriate the balances of the former appropriation, although both appropriations, technically having regard to the settled practice in this state, began and ended at precisely the same time.

The exact legislative intent here is almost impossible to ascertain, but, with a view to safety, I would suggest that the 1914 bill seems to have such a bearing upon the two appropriations above mentioned as that the repeal of it might be deemed sufficient to lapse the balances remaining in the two appropriations on February 16, 1913. However, such lapsing would take place at that time, or thereafter, if at all, and not at the date of the passage of the repealing bill, if passed before that time.

Yet, on the other hand, the 1914 bill, if it appropriates any balances at all, appropriates them as of the date when it became a law, and not as of February 16, 1914. In a technical view of the case, the effect of the 1914 appropriation bill upon that of 1913 might be regarded as in itself a repeal pro tanto of the corresponding items of the 1913 bill, in this particular. To illustrate: the 1913 bill appropriates as of a certain date a certain sum, for the publication of highway maps; while the 1914 bill appropriates for this purpose the "unexpended balance," without designating what unexpended balance is meant. At the time the 1914 bill became effective, the unexpended balance of the next preceding appropriation for this purpose was the entire $7,000 appropriated in the 1913 bill. If this is the true meaning of the 1914 appropriation in this instance, then the $7,000 appropriated for this purpose should not have been used at all during the year 1913, but, according to the tenor of section 2 of the 1914 bill, could only be used to pay liabilities incurred on and after February 16, 1914.

Still in the technical view of the case, this $7,000 appropriation is really the only one to which the phrase "unexpended balance" in the 1914 bill can refer; for the 1912 appropriation, found in 102 O. L. 399, contained no item to the use of the printing commission for printing highway maps.

It is obvious, therefore, that, to take a technical view of the particular appropriation to which I have called attention would be to produce an impossible result in the practical sense. I am, therefore, led to the conclusion, already expressed, that, although the 1914 bill, as a whole, took effect, as already stated, and with respect to its appropriations for current expenses, etc., on May 9, 1913, yet, with respect to these specific appropriations, it will not take effect until February 16, 1914. And still, with respect to these two appropriations only, for present purposes, the effect which it will have on that date, if unrepealed, will be to reappropriate the balances of the 1913 appropriations then remaining to the credit of the respective departments concerned. It would seem to follow, then, that the repeal of the 1914 bill might possibly be regarded as having the effect of lapsing the two particular appropriations, which, apparently, it was the intention of the general assembly should not be available for the use of the two departments concerned after the date named without such reappropriation.

My advice is, therefore, that if the 1914 appropriation bill is repealed, the effect of that repeal will be the lapse of balances of 1913 appropriations remaining to the credit of the commissioners of public printing for the publication of highway maps, and to the credit of the geological survey, in its general account, on that date, as well as all other balances, if any, of 1913 appropriations, attempted, apparently, to be reappropriated for 1914 by the bill for that year.

So that it would be advisable, in framing a substitute for the 1914 bill, to reappropriate such balances in such substitute or budget bill. I venture to recommend the reappropriation of the balances as such, rather than the corresponding increase of the specific sums allowed to the departments concerned, upon the supposition that the balances of the 1913 appropriations are not available to them, for the reason that the point which I have been discussing is involved in considerable doubt; and if the balances are not reappropriated as such, it might thereafter be contended that they did not require reappropriation and much confusion might ensue. So as to avoid all such confusion, it is in my judgment advisable to reappropriate in the budget bill the balances of former specific appropriations reappropriated by the 1914 appropriation bill, instead of merely regarding such balances as lapsed by the repeal of the 1914 appropriation bill, and allowing a corresponding increase in the amount appropriated for the use of the departments involved by the budget bill itself.

What I have said with respect to the reappropriations of balances of 1913 specific appropriations applies also, of course, to "Receipts and Balances," of which appropriations there are numerous instances in both bills. The first of these is the "receipts and balances" of the serum fund of the Ohio state board of agriculture. (See 103 O. L., 612, 629.) Construing the two bills as they stand together, in the manner in which I have already interpreted them, it appears that the general assembly did not intend its 1913 appropriation of receipts and balances to this account to run longer than to and including February 16, 1914, when its second appropriation was to become operative; therefore, the repeal of the second appropriation would lapse the entire fund on February 16, 1914. Hence, if it is desired to make another appropriation of receipts and balances on this account, it should be carried into the budget bill as such; for the repeal of the 1914 bill will lapse the balance in the serum fund on February 16, 1914.

The same is true generally of all appropriations for receipts and balances, included both in the 1913 bill and the 1914 bill; but it applies only to such appropriations when found in both bills; for example, there is an appropriation in the 1913 bill to the commissioners of public printing, another to the executive department, another to the state highway department, and perhaps still others, which consist of reappropriations of balances of 1912 appropriations; but there are no appropriations of balances on these accounts in the 1914 bill; the repeal of the 1914 bill would not lapse such appropriations of balances in the 1913 bill.

I think the foregoing comments cover in a general way the subject-matter of your first question.

Your second question cannot be answered categorically. It is true, as a general proposition, that the legislature of this state has, for a period of a number of years, been erroneously appropriating some receipts and balances from the general revenue fund. The erroneous idea which has possessed succeeding general assemblies and the department of the auditor of state during succeeding administrations has been that there have been only four funds in the state treasury, viz.: general revenue fund, sinking fund, school fund, and university fund. This idea is now and always has been incorrect; but the legislature has for so long persisted in this error, in spite of its own positive enactment to the contrary, as will be hereinafter pointed out, as to legalize in practical effect the method of appropriating which it has followed.

That is to say, anticipating a moment, although during the entire life of the state board of pharmacy, for example, the receipts of that board, when paid into the state treasury, should not have been credited to the general revenue fund, but should have been kept in a separate fund to the credit of the board, available for its uses and purposes, when appropriated from that fund, and not from the general revenue fund; yet, during all this time, the general assembly has been appropriating to this board its "receipts and balances" from the general revenue fund. (See, for example, the 1913 appropriation bill, section 1 of which appropriates all the items thereafter referred to from the "general revenue fund;" and one of the items of which, found on page 624, is the "receipts and balances" of and to the Ohio board of pharmacy.)

Numerous other instances might be mentioned and may be inferred from the subsequent discussion in this opinion. The conclusion of the whole matter is that there is here presented, in a technical sense, a species of legalized wrong, which, so long as the erroneous course was persisted in, must, for obvious reasons be regarded as lawful in every way. That is to say, I could not, in the face of the legislative history come to the conclusion that the appropriation for the Ohio board of pharmacy, for the year 1913, is void, and that there is in the state treasury, to the credit of this board, but unappropriated, and therefore not available, a large amount of money which has accumulated during the years in which the legislature has been erroneously appropriating the receipts and balances of this department from the general revenue fund. So to hold would be technically correct; but the technicality would have to give way to the substance of things.

But though, from the viewpoint of substantial right, the legal effect of the past acts of the general assembly must be sustained, it does not therefore follow that in proceeding to arrange the fiscal affairs of the state upon a new basis, and to begin for the first time the habit of scientific and businesslike appropriation and expenditure, the legislature should persist in this legal error. I think the enactment of the contemplated budget bill should be the occasion for the legislature to accommodate its appropriations to its revenue statutes. For mere consistency's sake, if for no other reason, the general assembly should, at the time it embarks upon a new policy of so great importance as that in the formulation of which you have a part, either amend its statute law, so as to eliminate therefrom all reference to special funds in the state treasury, and so as to require all receipts of all departments to be paid into the general revenue fund, either expressly or by inference, or, if it does not do this, it should make its future appropriations from the funds which its general statutes create.

As already intimated, it is not every appropriation of "receipts and balances" that is improperly made from the general revenue fund. Some departmental receipts do go into the general revenue fund. The test for determining whether or not a given kind of receipts belongs in the general revenue fund, and should be appropriated therefrom, is furnished by the statute providing for the collection of the receipts in question itself.

The following is a list of the funds which ought to be separately kept in the state treasury, other than the general revenue fund, according to the statutes, with reference to the special statute creating the fund in each case:

The bureau of inspecion and supervision fund—section 287, G. C.

The public audit expense fund—section 288, G. C.

(It is here to be remarked that ever since the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices has been operating there has been made to the bureau an annual appropriation of "receipts and balances" from the general revenue fund. The statutes cited show on their face that the bureau has at its command two funds, both separate and apart from the general revenue fund, and that there should be made for its annual support two separate appropriations from different sources; one for the purpose of the general maintenance of the bureau, and the other for the purpose of bearing the expenses of the inspection and supervision of the respective districts.)

The sinking fund—sections 386 et seq. and 7575, G. C.

Maintenance fund of the department of public service (public utilities) commission—section 606, G. C.

The banking fund—section 735, G. C.

Maintenance of office of state fire marshal fund—section 841, G. C.

(The unexpended surplus in this fund is to be paid annually to the general revenue fund. But the fund itself is in the state treasury, and, in my opinion, annual appropriations of receipts and balances from this source of revenue are necessary in order to authorize the expenditure of the state fire marshal's maintenance fund. This, apparantly, has not been the practice, as there is no appropriation for this department in either of the current appropriation bills. In the past, all the money which has been expended by the state fire marshal's office has been unlawfully expended, and in the future the state fire marshal should be given an appropriation of his receipts and balances before he can, under section 2 of article 22 of the constitution, lawfully draw upon it.)

The agricultural fund. (See section 1085, G. C.; also section 16 of the agricultural commission act, 103 Ohio Law, 308, therein designated as section 1094, G. C. An attempt has been made to change the name of this fund so as to place it in the general revenue fund. In my opinion, however, this attempt is unsuccessful; "an agricultural division of the general revenue fund" is not a part of the general revenue fund itself. More terminology cannot change the substance of things. The section in question expressly states that the state agricultural fund shall be at the disposal of the agricultural commission; it expressly separates the so-called "division" of the general revenue fund from the remainder of the fund. It may be safely said that whatever moneys are in the general revenue fund may be expended without transfer for any purpose, in the discretion of the legislature. Money which is held for the uses and purposes of a particular department is ipso facto not in the general revenue fund, terminology to the contrary notwithstanding.

(In the same connection, see section 6377, General Code, which of itself is sufficient to continue the "state agricultural fund" as such. Also see section 63 of the agricultural commission act, 103 Ohio Law, 318, which speaks of the "agricultural fund" as such. See also the commercial fertilizer analysis fund, section 78 of the agricultural commission act, 103 O. L., 321. Formerly these moneys constituted a part of the agricultural fund, but by the language of the section cited seem to be a separate fund. The agricultural commission is, seemingly, not given authority to retain these fees outside of the state treasury, but, under the general provision of section 24 of the General Code, must pay them in as received weekly. Once in the state treasury, they cannot be paid out again, save under appropriation; and the appropriation in such instance should be from the fund created by the license fees.)

State medical board fund—section 1277, G. C.

State board of pharmacy fund—section 1312 and section 1313, G. C.

Fish and game commission funds—section 1460, G. C.

State military fund—section 5265, G. C.

(This fund is peculiar, in that it is to be set aside by the auditor of state from the general revenue fund in the first instance. When once set aside, however, [and the duty to do this is a continuing one, not dependent upon the making of an appropriation] it is separated from the general revenue fund, and, as the section itself states, is to be "a continuous fund and available only for the support of the organized militia." This being the case, it is clearly no part of the general revenue fund; and appropriations for the state armory fund and the maintenance of the Ohio national guard should be made from the state military fund, and not from the general revenue fund. To hold that the state military fund is still in the general revenue fund would be to vitiate all of section 5265, General Code.)

State highway fund, derived from automobile licenses—section 6309, as amended 103 O. L. 765.

State common school fund—section 7575, G. C.

Miami University fund—section 7924.

Ohio University fund—section 7925.

Ohio normal school fund—section 7926, G. C.

Miami normal school fund—section 7927, G. C.

Ohio State University fund—section 7929, G. C.

(The auditor of state has erroneously grouped all these funds together in a single fund; but the general assembly has observed the distinction by appropriating separately from each of these funds from year to year. See 103 O .L. 18.)

Agricultural college script fund—section 7972, G. C.
Wilberforce university fund—section 7986, G. C.
Bowling Green normal school fund—103 O. L. 843.
The Kent normal school fund—103 O. L. 843.
State highway fund, produced by application of 75% of one mill tax—103 O. L. 155.
Main market road fund, produced from same source—103 O. L. 155.
State liquor license fund—103 O. L. 236.

I would not undertake to say that I have, in the foregoing enumeration, exhausted all the funds in the state treasury. The legislation enacted by the last session of the general assembly was so voluminous that it is possible that some funds other than those already referred to were created by it which have escaped my attention. I do not hesitate, however, to lay down the general principle that, wherever the legislature, in providing for the means of raising revenue of any kind, has required that the revenue produced by that means shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of a particular department, or for a particular purpose, or has required that the moneys derived from the source in quesion shall be used for a certain purpose, the revenue so produced cannot, under any circumstances, be regarded as being within the general revenue fund; for if it were regarded as in the general revenue fund, then it could be used for any purpose, and its appropriation and expenditure would not be limited to any designated purposes.

How far the general assembly has departed from this, to me, very clear principle may be illustrated by a reference to 103 Ohio Laws, 635, an item of the 1914 appropriation, wherein there is appropriated to the state highway department, as if from the general revenue fund, "the proceeds of all money collected under the one-half mill levy, as provided for by house bill 134, etc." As already pointed out, the general assembly, while ignoring many of the special funds above mentioned, has generally conceded the separation of funds produced by separate tax levies from the general revenue fund. (See 103 O. L. 18, 857). But even that deference to the principles of its own legislation was denied in the case of the attempted appropriation of the half mill levy for road purposes.

In view, then, of the confusion and lack of consistency with which the general assembly has in the past treated the funds in the state treasury, in making its appropriations, and in view of your direct questions on the point, being the second, fifth and sixth questions asked in your letter, I beg to advise and recommend that the 1914 budget bill treat the proceeds of the above named funds, and others which may be discovered in like situation, as constituting separate funds in the state treasury, and not as constituting parts of the general revenue fund; that the auditor and treasurer of state, respectively, carry separate accounts for each of the funds in question; and that the appropriations made in the state budget bill, now contemplated, be made from the proper funds in each case, and not from the general revenue fund. This can be done, as suggested in your fifth question, by dividing the budget bill into sections, each section constituting an appropriation from a single fund in the state treasury. A model for this purpose can be found in the two laws last cited, viz.: 103 Ohio Laws, 18 and 857.

Before leaving this subject, however, permit me to point out again that in every appropriation of "receipts and balances" which you may find in the 1914 appropriation bill should be made otherwise than from the general revenue fund. The receipts of many of the departments are, by express provision of law, required to be paid into the general revenue fund, and should be appropriated therefrom, if it is desired to appropriate them as such; also the statute law is silent as to the exact disposition of the receipts of some of the departments which are required to be paid generally into the state treasury; and in such cases section 270, General Code, requires that when so paid into the state treasury, such receipts shall be credited to the general revenue fund. I shall not burden this opinion with a list of receipts of these kinds, but content myself with saying that, if the statutes providing for the exaction of the revenue in question do not require, as do the statutes above cited, when paid into the state treasury, that such moneys shall constitute a separate fund, etc., the receipts become a part of the general revenue fund.

Coming now to the consideration of your third question, I assume that by "the end of an appropriation period" you mean the expiration of two years from and after the passage of the appropriation bill, beyond which, under the constitution, as above quoted, the appropriation may not live. It is my opinion that after the expiration of the two year period, the appropriation, under the circumstances mentioned in your second question, must necessarily lapse. An appropriation for a particular improvement carries with it the authority to the officer designated to make the improvement and to enter into contracts for that purpose. The relation of the appropriation to the authority to contract is discussed by Judge J. R. Swan, in the leading case of State vs. Medbery, 7 O. S. 522. His discussion is based, not only upon article II, section 22, of the constitution of 1851, but upon other sections of the constitution related to it in respect to their subject-matter, particularly section 3 of article VIII. In his opinion will be found the following language:

> "The sole power of making appropriations of the public revenue is vested in the general assembly. It is the setting apart and appropriating by law a specific amount of the revenue for the payment of liabilities which may accrue or have accrued. No claim against the state can be paid, no matter how just or how long it may have remained overdue, unless there has been a specific appropriation made by law to meet it. Article 2, section 22. * * * * *
> "The discretion of each general assembly for the period of two years in respect to the amount of expenditures, except in some special cases relating to salaries, is without limit and without control; but each must provide revenue and set apart a sufficient amount by a law operative within the same two years, to pay all expenses and claims.
> "This is the general system provided by the constitution. * * * Under it all the claims which are authorized, or which can accrue within each of the two years, and their payment, form one governmental and financial transaction; so that at the end of each of the two fiscal years the expenditures authorized and liabilities incurred have been provided for by revenue, adjusted by the executive officers, and out of the revenue previously set apart and appropriated, are paid. * * *

The facts involved in that case were substantially as follows: the general assembly passed an act attempting to authorize the board of public works to let a contract for keeping the public works in repair, for any term of years not exceeding five. In pursuance of this supposed authority, the board of public works entered into a contract with Medbery & Company to keep a certain section of the canals of the state in repair, for a period of five years, for the sum of $27,500 per annum. During the second year of the life of the contract a succeeding session of the general assembly repudiated, or attempted to repudiate the proceedings, and in its appropriation act directed the board of public works to expend the moneys appropriated to its use without regard to the contract with Medbery & Company; and gave to the latter, and those in a similar situation, a right of action against the state for such damages as they might be entitled to.

The case before the court, then, was an action for damages brought against the state itself, under the special authority above referred to. The petition set forth the contract, averring performance until the 22d day of April, 1857; readiness to perform from that time forward; breach by the state; laid the damages at $50,000—the amount of the future profits of the contract; and prayed judgment accordingly.

The attorney general, on behalf of the state, interposed a general demurrer to the petition, which was overruled by the common pleas court, whose decision was assigned for error in the supreme court. This decision was reversed and the contractors were denied recovery of any damages. (It is to be observed that they were not suing on account of work already performed; nor did the performance of the work which they had completed extend beyond the biennial period.)

The portion of the opinion which deals with the facts of the case contains, among other things, the following language:

> "While each general assembly is required to provide revenue and make appropriations for the period of two years, leaving no debt or liability behind, the general assembly existing when these contracts were made, and who, it must be maintained, had the constitutional power by law to authorize them, have undertaken, by contracts in behalf of the state, to bind the state by present obligations to pay specific amounts of money to certain citizens for services and materials to be furnished as well during the above mentioned two years, as during the period of three years thereafter. It is the three years thereafter—the liability created against the state the moment these contracts were signed, for the specific sums promised, for the repairs of those three years—the volunteering on the part of that general assembly to provide for the repair of the canals during those three years, without the power of making appropriations to meet the liability thus authorized and entered into—it is these peculiar characteristics of the contracts which render them inconsistent with the system of finance and expenditure provided by the constitution. * * *
> "The question before us is, whether a contract binding the state to pay specific sums of money at a future period, without revenue provided or appropriations made to meet it, is such a contingent liability as may be entered into under this financial system, and the provisions of the constitution relating to debts. * * *
> These contracts, by their own force, bind the state to pay to individuals, a certain amount of money, through the period of five years. The moment these contracts were executed, they created a present obligation on the part of the state to pay money at a future period. * * * We are at a loss to perceive how these contracts can be taken out of the definition of contingent debts, "(which, in a previous part of the opinion the court had held could not be created under the constitution)."

Again Judge Swan says:

> "We say further, that as to the fact that repairs beyond two years would probably be needed, and expenditure therefor required, and for an amount probably equal to that designated in these contracts, and then paid, we answer, that whether the repairs would or would not be needed, and the amount of the expenditure and their payment were questions to be determined by the successors of the general assembly who are supposed to have authorized these contracts not only determined that the expenditure should be made, and fixed the amount beyond the control of their successors, but have also, in so doing, created a present liability against the state to pay specific sums of money at such a period that they could not by appropriations provide for payment. Their authority to provide, without revenue or appropriations, for the repair of the canals beyond two years, by contracts creating a present obligation, clearly cannot be justified. * * * *"

Discussing the case from another point of view Judge Swan says, in part, that:

"These contracts run for five years. The general assembly existing when these contracts were made provided no revenue and made no appropriations to meet the gross amount.

"If these contracts are valid no subsequent general assembly could withhold a tax or revenue, or decline to make appropriations to meet their specific amount. The legislative discretion of every subsequent general assembly is tied, and their responsibility for the expenditure avoided; * * *

"The constitution provides that the sessions of the general assembly shall be held once in two years. The members are elected for two years, and the constituency every two years canvass at the ballot box the official conduct of each representative.

"Each general assembly determine the amount of revenue to be raised by taxation, and are required by the constitution to provide for raising sufficient to meet the expenditures which they authorize, and thus become officially responsible for the amount of the appropriations. And in order to make this responsibility direct and practical * * * the constitution prohibits any appropriation to be made for a period beyond two years.

"This last provision is the key-stone of the whole system; for, as the amount of the taxes depends entirely upon the amount of the appropriations, if the general assembly had no power or discretion to determine the amount of appropriations, or if the amount were fixed by law of their predecessors, so that they could not disturb it, they would evade all responsibility for the amount of the taxes, however oppressive and grievous they might be."

The broad principle running through this important decision is that a contract cannot be entered into by an officer of the state which cannot be paid out of the proceeds of appropriations already made. It follows from this, I think, that if the appropriation is itself the authority for making the contract, as in the case of most public improvements undertaken by the state, the authority to make the contract does not survive the appropriation itself; nor, on the other hand, does the mere fact that the appropriation carries with it the implied authority to make the contract preserve the life of the appropriation beyond the constitutional period and until the contract is made and satisfied.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion, in answer to your third question, that an appropriation made for the purpose of the construction of buildings, etc., lapses at the end of the period of two years after it is passed (and in this case, under the present constitution, after the expiration of ninety days from the date of the filing of the law in the office of the secretary of state, appropriation for such purposes not being among those which go into immediate effect). With the lapse of the appropriation, under these circumstances, the authority to enter into the contract likewise expires, and the policy of the entire improvement becomes a matter to be considered de novo by the succeeding session of the general assembly, which alone can determine whether the improvement shall proceed.

The answer to your fourth question is not to be found directly in the case of State vs. Medbery, supra, because, while that case involved the validity of a contract on account of which payment was sought after the expiration of two years from the time of the initial appropriation, yet the contract was one which, by its very terms, could not be completed within two years. The distinction between contracts which cannot be completed within a certain time and contracts which probably will not be completed within a like length of time, on account of practical conditions, is a well understood one and need not be commented upon. In the case you submit the contract, payable out of a specific appropriation, has been let within the life of the appropriation itself, but the work is not completed at the expiration of the two year period.

Here, care must be taken to distinguish between the effect of this state of facts upon the contract and its effect upon the life of the appropriation. I incline to the view, although an expression of opinion thereon is not required by your letter, that a contract made under such circumstances is valid when entered into, and that its binding force and effect as to subsequent transactions under its terms are not affected by the expiration of the two year period. That is to say, the contractor is entitled to proceed with the performance of the work done by him after the expiration of the two year period, and he will be entitled in law and in morals to payment of his claim for so much of the contract price as has not been paid to him. Putting it in another way, the state would be indebted to the contractor for the work performed by him under his previously let contract after the expiration of the two year period.

But this is not equivalent to saying that the appropriation itself, or so much of it as remains unexpended after the expiration of the two year period, is to continue in force. The language of the constitution is so explicit as to the life of an appropriation as to permit of no interpretation whatever; the requirement is that no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years. This cannot be construed as being subject to an exception to the effect that where contracts have been entered into, payable out of a given appropriation, the appropriation is thereby continued beyond the period of two years and until the state's liability is discharged. The word "appropriation" in its exact sense (and I am not aware of any shades of meaning which might be applied to it) signifies the setting apart of public moneys for a specified purpose, coupled with authority to expend for that purpose. The authority to draw money from the treasury for a given object is of the very essence of the appropriation. It is this authority which cannot extend beyond the period of two years, as well as the mere ministerial act of the auditor and treasurer in carrying the appropriation on their respective books for that period of time.

So, when an appropriation is made, for example, to the state board of administration, for the construction of a certain building, there is inherent in the appropriation the idea that the board has authority to draw upon the general revenue fund of the state to the amount indicated, for the purpose specified. This authority can only last for two years. In like manner, the authority of the auditor and treasurer to carry the appropriation account on their respective books terminates at the end of two years.

Looking at it in still another way, the requirement of article II, section 22, of the constitution, which I have been discussing, is coupled with a positive prohibition against money being drawn from the treasury of the state except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law. The thing prohibited is not the making of contracts, which, by their operation under proper contingencies, may ultimately require the drawing of money from the state treasury, but the actual drawing of money itself. So that, while the scope of the more stringent regulation includes the less stringent one, and while, because money cannot be drawn out of the treasury without a specific appropriation, it necessarily follows that no officer can contract, except for official salaries, without the authority of an appropriation, (State vs. Medbery, supra.) it does not therefore follow that if the officer has contracted against a specific appropriation, properly made, the constitution is thereby satisfied and the appropriation remains at all times available to pay the contract.

On the contrary, I am clearly of the opinion that there is no condition imaginable which can prolong the life of an appropriation beyond the constitutional period of two years; and that when the end of the constitutional period transpires before work under a lawful contract is completed, and the succeeding session of the general assembly makes no appropriation for the completion of the work the contractor, whatever may be his rights and remedies in the premises, cannot compel the executive officers of the state to make further payments on account of his contract and the work done under it, nor to answer to him in damages.

Accordingly, in formulating the budget bill which you have in mind, you should proceed, in my judgment, upon the assumption that unexpended balances of an appropriation invariably must lapse at the end of the constitutional period, whether contracts have been let payable therefrom or not.

Your fifth question has already been answered, in discussing your second question.

You ask how you shall "handle the sinking fund, school and universities fund," in your sixth question. I have already referred you to the appropriation bills passed by the last session of the general assembly making the general appropriations from some of these funds. These appropriations, as already remarked by me, are proper in form. They are not very specific; that is, the appropriation in 103 O. L. 859, of the estimated amount of the entire proceeds of the Ohio State University fund, for the year 1914-1915, is "to be applied to the uses and purposes of the Ohio State University according to law;" and this is the case with all the other appropriations made in the same bill. I cannot answer your sixth question without knowing what policy is to be adopted respecting the expenditures to be made from these funds. If the whole funds are to continue to be turned over in bulk, and without specification, to the institutions entitled to them, and if the common school fund is to continue to be appropriated in the general manner in which it has been appropriated in the past, the budget bill need not contain any reference to these funds or appropriations whatever, as they are sufficiently taken care of for the years 1914-1915, by the bill to which I have referred. If, however, it is desired to be more specific in the creation of appropriation accounts payable out of these funds, or if it is desired to change the period of time for which the appropriation shall be made, then these changes may be made repealing and re-enacting the bill referred to, either as a separate bill or as part of the budget bill. In any event, however, the form of appropriation by sections and by reference to the different funds involved, while possibly subject to some technical criticism, is, in may judgment, in substantial compliance with the constitution.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Deed from Mary T. Schenck and husband to state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 13, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt, under date of January 6, 1913, of abstract of title and deed from Mary T. Schenck and husband to the state of Ohio, for the following described real estate, which your board desires to acquire for use in connection with the Ohio Hospital for Epileptics at Gallipolis, to-wit:

> "Situated in the northeast quarter of section No. twenty-nine (29) township No. four (4) range No. fourteen (14) Gallia county, Ohio, being survey No. thirty (30) of said section by Edward Tupper, surveyor, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the northwest corner of lot No. four (4); surveyed lots of said section No. twenty-nine (29) in Gallipolis township, Gallia county, Ohio, thence with the east line of survey No. 14 and 15, four (4) chains to the northeast corner of lot No. 15, thence with the line of Anna B. Kating, N. 23 degrees W. 5 chains and 25 links to a point formerly marked by a span oak 20 inches in diameter, standing on the top of large rock; thence north 10 chains and 50 links to a point formerly witnessed by a black oak 20 inches in diameter S. 61 degrees, W. 23 links, thence S. 68 degrees, E. 21 chains and 37 links to a point formerly marked by a sugar tree 18 inches in diameter; thence S. 11 degrees, E. 52 links to a point formerly marked by a sugar tree 18 inches in diameter on old corner; thence S. 47 degrees, W. 9 chains and 10 links to a point formerly marked as "a chestnut oak on a point;" thence S. 9½ degrees, W. 8 chains and 80 links to the north line of lot No. 4 above mentioned, thence along the north line of survey No. 4, west 10 chains to place of beginning, containing 28.69 of land.

I have carefully examined the abstract and although there are some defects in the early history of the title, as disclosed by the abstract, I do not deem them of sufficient importance to warrant disapproval of the title. There are no liens against said real estate except the taxes due December, 1913, and June, 1914. Subject only to payment of these taxes, I am of the opinion that the present owner has a good and indefeasible title to said real estate in fee simple.

The deed is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and is sufficient in form to convey to the state of Ohio a title in fee simple, and I advise that you accept the same.

Abstract and deed are herewith enclosed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SATURDAY HALF-HOLIDAY—PRESENTMENT AND PAYMENT OF INSTRUMENTS—LAW NOT CHANGED BY AMENDMENT OF SECTION 5978, GENERAL CODE.

Section 8190 of the General Code is not in any way affected by section 5978 as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, page 566. Consequently the law concerning the presentment and payment of instruments falling due on Saturday remains the same as before section 5978 was amended.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Supt. Department of Banks and Banking, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 22, 1913, asking for an opinion on the question raised by Mr. Clarence G. Herbruck, of Canton, Ohio, in a letter to you under date of October 29, 1913, which letter is as follows:

"I am writing your department for an opinion upon the question involving section 5978 of the General Code, relating to the Saturday half-holiday, as amended by the last general assembly, and as found on page 556, volume 103, of the laws of Ohio. The point upon which I desire your opinion, which, by the way is of interest to the banks of Ohio, is on the question of protecting negotiable instruments on Saturday; and in presenting the matter it is necessary to refer to several other sections of the General Code.

"Section 8190 of the General Code provides, among other things, that negotiable instruments, falling due on Saturday, are to be presented for payment on the next succeeding business day, except that at the option of the holder, instruments payable on demand may be presented for payment before 12:00 o'clock, noon, on Saturday, then that entire day is not a holiday. So far as I am able to ascertain, there has been no judicial interpretation of this statute in our state, but I have construed the statute heretofore that, for the purpose of holding endorsers, presentation of negotiable instruments, falling due on Saturday, must be made on the next succeeding business day, except as stated in the statute, that instruments payable on demand may, at the option of the holder, be presented before Saturday noon. I do not believe that there can be any question about this interpretation in the absence of the new statute, amended last spring. This amendment in substance provides that nothing in that section (5978) or any other, or any decision of any court, shall in any manner affect the validity of or render void or voidable, any check, bill of exchange, order, promissory not, due-bill, mortgage, or any writing obligatory, made, signed, negotiated, transferred, assigned or paid by any person, persons, corporations or bank, upon said half holiday, or any other transaction had thereon. The question has arisen in my mind as to whether this amendment does not compel the presentation of negotiable paper on Saturday, and if not paid, to be protested on that day.

"The banks throughout the state have held all time paper over until the following Monday or business day for presentment, and protest, and have generally done the same with checks and other demand paper (if being optional with the holder of this kind of paper), but in view of this amendment there has been some doubt as to whether the banks are not compelled to present negotiable paper on Saturday, when that is the maturity date, and protest the same on that day, if not paid.

"Can your department give us any enlightenment upon this amended section of the Code? I call your particular attention to the last phrase of the section, which says 'or any other transaction had thereon.' To what does that phrase refer?"

Section 8190 of the General Code reads:

"Every negotiable instrument is payable at the time fixed therein without grace. When the day of maturity falls upon Sunday, or a holiday, the instrument is payable on the next succeeding business day. Instruments falling due on Saturday are to be presented for payment on the next succeeding business day, except that, at the option of the holder, instruments payable on demand may be presented for payment before twelve o'clock noon on Saturday when that entire day is not a holiday."

Section 5978 of the General Code, before it was amended read as follows:

"Every Saturday of each year shall be a one-half legal holiday for all purposes beginning at twelve o'clock noon and ending at twelve o'clock midnight."

Section 5978, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 566, reads:

"Every Saturday afternoon of each year shall be a one-half legal holiday for all purposes, beginning at twelve o'clock noon and ending at twelve o'clock midnight. Nothing however, in this section or any other, or any decision of any court, shall in any manner affect the validity of or render void or voidable any check, bill of exchange, order, promissory note, due bill, mortgage or other writing obligatory made, signed, negotiated, transferred, assigned or paid by any person, persons, corporation or bank upon said half holiday, or any other transaction had thereon."

The writer of the letter quoted above calls especial attention to these words of section 5978 as amended:

"Nothing, however, in this section or any other, or any decision of any court, shall in any manner affect the validity of or render void or voidable any check, bill of exchange, order, promissory note, due bill, mortgage or other writing obligatory made, signed, negotiated, transferred, assigned or paid by any person, persons, corporation or bank upon said half holiday, or any other transaction had thereon."

and seems inclined to think that inasmuch as under the above section the payment of negotiable paper on Saturday afternoon would be void or voidable, it is the bank's duty to present negotiable paper on Saturday, when that is the maturity date, and protest the same on that date if not paid.

With this conclusion I cannot agree. The fact that the legislature after declaring Saturday afternoon a legal half holiday, saw fit to say that in the event that certain business was transacted on such half holiday it would not be void or voidable, did not by any means have the effect of making it necessary to carry on such business on that day. To so hold would be to make and unmake the law in the same paragraph.

What the legislature did in amending section 5978 of the General Code was simply this: It allowed Saturday afternoon to remain a legal half holiday the same as was provided in the original section, and then made a further provision that should certain transactions be carried on on Saturday afternoon, they should not be void or voidable on that account. And it is, therefore, my opinion that section 8190 of the General Code is not, in any way, affected by section 5978 as amended in 103 O. L., page 566, and that the law concerning the presentment and payment of instruments falling due on Saturday remains the same as before section 5978 was amended.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—POWER TO FIX SALARIES AND APPROVE BONDS OF EMPLOYES OF VILLAGES—VILLAGE BOARDS OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS HAVE THE POWER TO EMPLOY PERSONS TO DO THE WORK OF THE VILLAGE.

1. The clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs is to be elected by the board and his salary is to be fixed by council.

2. The village clerk may not be clerk of the board of trustees of village affairs and receive compensation therefor, as these offices are incompatible.

3. The village council has the right to fix the salary of those persons employed to make repairs, read water meters, make connections and perform other work in connection with the waterworks department. The board and not the council has the right to designate who these employes shall be.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1913.

HONORABLE NELSON J. BREWER, Solicitor for Euclid Village, Cleveland, Ohio.

Under favor of December 10, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Sections 4357 to 4362 of the General Code prescribe the powers and duties of boards of trustees of public affairs in villages.
> "If a clerk is to be provided for the board, must the council of the village fix his compensation and bond? Section 4360 provides the board may elect a clerk who shall be known as the clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs. What I wish to know is, whether or not the council or the board fixes the compensation of the clerk, and whether the council may designate the person who shall act as clerk. May the village clerk also be clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs and receive compensation therefor?
> "Does the board of trustees or the council of the village provide for the compensation and bonds of employes who have charge of making repairs, reading water meters, making connections and performing other work in connection with the department; and may the council designate who the employes shall be?"

You first inquire:

> "Whether the clerk of the board of trustees may be appointed by council, and whether the council or the board must fix the compensation and bond of such clerk."

These questions seem to be controlled by sections 4360 and 4219 of the General Code. These sections are as follows:

> Section 4360: "The board of trustees of public affairs shall organize by electing one of its members president. It may elect a clerk, who shall be known as the clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs."
> Section 4219: "Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with the sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

Under section 4360 of the General Code, it is clear that the clerk is to be elected by the board of trustees of public affairs, and nowhere is council given authority to designate the person to fill this position.

Under section 4219 of the General Code, council is required to fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except otherwise provided by law, and since no other provision is made by law for the fixing of compensation and bond of the clerk of the board of trustees, I am of the opinion that the same must be fixed by council.

You next inquire:

> "Whether the village clerk may also be clerk of the board of trustees of village affairs and receive compensation therefor?"

Section 4284 of the General Code provides that the clerk of a village shall examine and audit the accounts of all offices and departments. He is furthermore obligated by this section to prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments. I am of the opinion that this provision imposes upon the clerk of a village obligations of supervision and control over a position such as that of clerk of the board of trustees of village affairs. It is without question the duty of such a clerk to keep the books and accounts of the board, and since in this connection he is subject to the supervisory control of the clerk of the village, the officers are incompatible and may not be held by one and the same individual at the same time.

You last inquire:

> "Whether the board of trustees or the council of the village provide for the compensation and bonds of employes who have charge of making repairs, reading water meters, making connections and performing other work in connection with the department, and whether the council may designate who the employes may be."

I am of the opinion that these employes, being employes in the village government, and not being otherwise provided for in this respect, are subject to the terms of section 4219, General Code, above quoted, requiring their compensation and bonds to be fixed by council.

Under section 4361 of the General Code, however, as the same appears in 103 O. L., page 561, the board of trustees of public affairs are given powers of management, conduct, and control of the matters under their jurisdiction, and are required to appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. The board is furthermore given the powers possessed by the director of public service in cities in these connections.

Since the power of appointment is conferred on the board, it is not within the power of council to designate who such employes shall be. The procedure is that patterned after the management of public works in cities by the director of public service and contemplates that the employments and positions shall be fixed by the board, that the compensation and bonds affixed to these positions shall be determined by council, and that the incumbents of these positions shall be determined by the board.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELIGIBILITY OF WOMEN TO HOLD CERTAIN OFFICES IN OHIO—WOMEN ONLY TO HAVE CONTROL OF INSTITUTIONS TAKING CARE OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN—WOMEN NOT ELIGIBLE TO APPOINTMENT AS EXAMINERS OF TRAINED NURSES.

The intention of the constitutional amendment adopted in reference to women holding certain offices in the state of Ohio was to place women upon such boards and at the heads of such departments and institutions as exercise control over the physical and moral welfare of women and children who are being cared for as wards of the state; consequently would not allow women to be appointed as members of the state board for examination and registration of trained nurses, such as was contemplated in house bill No. 105, known as "a bill to provide for the examination and registration of trained nurses in Ohio."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1913.

HONORABLE JAMES NYE, Member House of Representatives, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 7, 1913, asking whether the constitutional amendment recently adopted making women eligible to hold certain appointive offices will allow women to be appointed as members of a state board for examination and registration of trained nurses, such as was contemplated in house bill 105—Mr. Schaefer, 80th general assembly.

The constitutional amendment adopted at the November, 1913, election, to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivision thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both."

House bill 105, known as "a bill to provide for the examination and registration of trained nurses in Ohio, made provision for the appointment by the governor of the state board of examiners of nurses, consisting of five members. It would have been the the duty of the board appointed under this act to examine applicants for registration and to award certificates of registration to the successful applicants.

The question now asked is:

> "Is this such a board as "involves" the interests and care of women and children or both?"

I think not. While it is true that the question to whom shall be given the privilege of acting as a nurse does concern women and children, yet it does not concern them to any greater extent than do other questions of state and municipal government. To open the door to women under such a broad interpretation of the statute would undoubtedly mean that women must be considered eligible to hold office on every board and in every department and institution in Ohio, inasmuch as the correct management of all such boards, departments and institutions is, at all times, of vital interest to the women and children of the state. It is evident that such a holding would reach far beyond the purpose of the amendment, and should not be entertained.

The intention of the amendment was, I think, rather to place women upon such boards and at the head of such departments and institutions as exercise control over the physical and moral welfare of women and children who are being cared for as wards by the state or any political subdivision thereof. And with this view of the amendment in mind, I must conclude that women are not eligible for appointment as members of such board, as provided for in house bill 105.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRISONER—PLEADING GUILTY SAME AS CONVICTED.

The legislature using the word "convicted" in section 13708 meant it as a substitute for the words "has pleaded or been found guilty" as used in section 13706, and the court has no authority to suspend the sentence of defendant who has pleaded guilty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On November 29th you wrote me inquiring substantially as follows:

> "One Robert Bennett Geyer was indicted for arson at the October term, 1913, of the common pleas court of Muskingum county, and having entered a plea of guilty as charged in the indictment, was sentenced by Hon. Alfred A. Frazier to the Ohio Penitentiary to serve an indeterminate sentence.
> "This sentence was suspended by the court under section 13706, General Code, and description of the prisoner and employment papers, etc., have been forwarded to this institution as in all regular probation cases so that we might issue to the prisoner a certificate of probation. This, I have refused to do in this case for the reason that section 13708 provides that a person convicted of arson shall not have the benefit of probation. The prisoner's attorney, Mr. Secrest, of New Concord, Ohio, and Judge Frazier are of the opinion that inasmuch as the prisoner pleaded guilty to arson he is not 'convicted' of that crime, and is, therefore, entitled to be placed on probation.

"Kindly advise me at the earliest possible moment if my position is correct as the case is being held in abeyance pending your decision."

Section 13706 and 13708, General Code, read as follows:

Section 13706: "In prosecutions for crime, except as hereinafter provided, where the defendant has pleaded or been found guilty, and the court or magistrate has power to sentence such defendant to be confined in or committed to the penitentiary, the reformatory, a jail, workhouse, or correctional institution, and the defendant has never before been imprisoned for crime, either in this state or elsewhere, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court or magistrate that the character of the defendant and circumstances of the case are such that he is not likely again to engage in an offensive course of conduct, and that the public good does not demand or require that he shall suffer the penalty imposed by law, such court or magistrate may suspend the execution of the sentence and place the defendant on probation in the manner provided by law."

Section 13708: "No person convicted of murder, arson, burglary of an inhabited dwelling house, incest, sodomy, rape without consent, assault with intent to rape, or administering poison shall have the benefit of probation."

Your question resolves itself into this: What is the meaning of the word "convicted" as used in section 13708?

Counsel for the defendant Geyer contends that this word as here used means "found guilty by a jury," and inasmuch as his client plead guilty he has not been "convicted' within the meaning of the section, and is, therefore, not precluded from receiving a suspended sentence.

This contention is, I think, one that raises a distinction without a difference.

While it is true that penal statutes must be strictly construed, this strict construction

"is not the exact converse of literal construction, for it does not consist in giving words the narrowest meaning of which they are susceptible. * * * *· * Nor does it preclude the application of common sense to the terms made use of in the statute to avoid an absurdity which the legislature ought not to be presumed to have intended. * * * The rule * * * is not violated by allowing words to have their full meaning, or even the more extended of two meanings, where such construction better harmonizes with the context."

Sections 13706 and 13708 were originally sections 1 and 2 of an act passed May 9, 1908, entitled: "an act to provide for probation of persons convicted of felonies and misdemeanors." If the word "convicted" in this act is to be construed as meaning "found guilty by a jury," then this title is misleading, as section 1 of the act makes provision for suspension of sentences in certain cases when the defendant has "pleaded or been found guilty."

Again, section 1 allows the court to suspend sentences when the defendant has pleaded to or been found guilty of all crimes for which sentences to the penitentiary may be imposed with certain exceptions, and these exceptions are enumerated in section 2 immediately following. Is it not, then, reasonable to presume that in enumerating in section 2 the crimes excepted, the legislature viewed the defendant as standing in the same position before the court as in the preceding section, and that the word "convicted" used in the title and in section 2 of the act was merely used as synonomous with the words "has pleaded or been found guilty" as used in section 1?

I think so, and believe that the legislature was warranted in using the word "convicted" in that sense.

In State vs. Knowles 98 Mo., 429, the court held "it matters not whether the guilt of the accused has been established by plea or by verdict of guilty. When no issue of law or fact remains to be determined, and there is nothing to be done except to pass sentence, the respondent has been convicted."

The United States vs. Watkinds, 6 Fed., 152, the court, defining the word "conviction" said:

> "The term 'conviction,' as its composition (convinco, convictio) sufficiently indicates, signifies the act of convincing or overcoming one, and in criminal procedure the overthrow of the defendant by the establishment of his guilt according to some known legal mode. These modes are (1) by plea of guilty and (2) by verdict of a jury."

In Com. vs Miller, 6 Pa., Super. Ct., 35-39, we find the court using the following language:

> "With respect to some purposes and consequences the words 'convicted' and 'conviction' when used in a statute mean no more than the judicial ascertainment of guilt by verdict or plea."

Bishop in his work on statutory crimes, section 348, says: "a plea of guilty by the defendant constitutes a conviction of him."

Authority after authority could here be quoted showing that when a defendant pleads guilty he is said to be "convicted," and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the legislature in using the word "convicted" in section 13708 meant it as a substitute for the words "has pleaded or been found guilty" used in section 13706, and that the court has no authority to suspend the sentence of a defendant who has pleaded guilty to the crime of arson.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—BRANCH BANKS—BANKS NOT PERMITTED TO HAVE A BRANCH.

A bank organized under section 9703, General Code, is not permitted to have a branch under the provisions of this statute, and cannot purchase a bank having a branch and continue to operate the branch of the bank purchased.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letters of October 22, 1913, and December 6, 1913, in the last of which you specifically inquire:

> "A bank now having a branch bank is desirous of selling both institutions to another bank having no branch. The question arises—can the bank purchasing the old bank with the branch, maintain this branch? It is the intention, of course, to consolidate the main office—sold—with the bank purchasing both."

I also have a statement in which the specific transaction is stated as follows:

> "The Forest City Savings & Trust Co., Cor. W. 25th and Detroit Ave., would like, if proper arrangements can be made, to purchase the West Cleveland Banking Co., located at Detroit and 101st street, and continue it as a branch. The West Cleveland has a capital of $100,000. The Forest City propose to increase their capital by $50,000, giving the increase to the stockholders of the West Cleveland, taking over their assets and liabilities."

In your letter of October 22d, you state:

> "Now the question arises as to what will be the effect when one bank purchases another bank which has a branch. Will the new bank which took over the old bank and branch, be permitted to maintain the branch?"

It will be noticed that the statement in your letters of October 22d and December 6th is somewhat different from the statement above set forth which is copied from a letter, or copy of one, written to you on October 19, 1913, by Mr. Charles R. Dodge.

Assuming that the actual facts are as taken from Mr. Dodge's letter, which is that the Forest City Bank proposes to buy the West Cleveland Bank, and continue it as a branch, it will be observed that to buy a bank and continue it as a branch of the buying bank, is quite different from buying a bank which already has a branch and endeavoring to maintain the branch as an adjunct to the buying bank.

The facts as set forth in Mr. Dodge's letter, to my mind, clearly bring the matter within the rule laid down in my opinion to you of June 16, 1913, to which you refer in your letter of October 22, and I can see no reason why, if an existing bank, organized under favor of section 9703 of the General Code, may not establish a branch, how it can be authorized to do so by purchasing another bank and use it as a branch, or by purchasing another bank which already has a legally established branch, and using such branch of the selling bank as a branch of the buyer.

I feel that my opinion of June 16, 1913, was correct, think it covers your present inquiry and adhere to its conclusions.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPULSORY COMPENSATION ACT—FORMATION OF MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES BY EMPLOYERS—INSURANCE COMMISSIONER SHOULD SUPERVISE FORMATION OF SUCH ASSOCIATION.

The question of the right of employers to form mutual insurance companies for the purpose of furnishing compensation to injured and the dependents of killed employes, under the provisions of section 22 of the compulsory compensation act, and the manner in which such association is to be operated, should be taken up with the insurance commissioner of this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1913.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 18, 1913, you ask whether there is any authority for the organization of mutual insurance companies for the purpose of furnishing compensation to injured and the dependents of killed employes, under the provisions of section 22 of the compulsory compensation act.

The section which you cite contains a proviso permitting employers, under certain conditions, directly to pay compensation to their employes. This proviso reads as follows:

> "And provided further, that such employes who will abide by the rules of the state liability board of awards and as may be of sufficient financial ability or credit to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes or to the dependents of killed employes, and the furnishing of medical, surgical, nursing and hospital attention and services and medicines, and funeral expenses, equal to or greater than is provided for in this act, or such employers as maintain benefit funds or departments or jointly with other employers maintain mutual associations, of such said financial ability or credit, to which their employes are not required or permitted directly or indirectly to contribute, providing for the payment of such compensation and the furnishing of such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention and funeral expenses, may, upon a finding of such facts by the state liability board of awards elect to pay individually or from such benefit fund department or association such compensation, and furnish such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention and funeral expenses directly to such injured or the dependents of such killed employes."

Section 23 provides that employers who comply with the provisions of the foregoing section shall not be liable to respondants in damage at common law or by statute, except as otherwise provided in the act, for injury or death of any employe, etc.

Section 26 provides that employers failing to comply with the provisions of section 22 shall not be entitled to the benefits of the act, and shall be liable under the conditions set forth in the section last cited.

Under section 28, if any employer defaults in payment of premiums, the amount due shall be collected in the manner prescribed in said section.

In my judgment the only employers of five or more workmen exempt from direct contribution to the state insurance fund are those who arrange, under the rules of the board and the laws of Ohio, to pay compensation directly to their employes, or through the intervention of benefit funds, or mutual associations make such payments. The question is, however, whether there is any authority for the organization of mutual insurance companies under this act. Under the provisions of section 22, heretofore quoted, I hold that the words "mutual associations" mean such associations as are wholly and completely provided and sustained and kept up by one or more employers. In other words, the employers must bear the sole expense of these mutual associations. They are not permitted to contribute to some mutual association maintained, wholly or in part, by any person, firm, co-partnership or corporation other than themselves, as a separate entity and the employe must not be permitted or required to contribute to the support of such said mutual association.

The question of the right of the employers to form such associations, and the manner in which it is to be operated, should be taken up with the insurance commissioner of this state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—CORONER AND MEMBER OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Under the provisions of article II, section 4 of the constitution of Ohio, a member of the general assembly cannot hold the office of coroner and at the same time serve as a member of the general assembly. These offices are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1914.

HON. G. J. C. WINTERMUTE, State Representative, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 5th, wherein you advise that there is a vacancy in the office of coroner of Mercer county, and that the commissioners have appointed you to fill the unexpired term of the former coroner, and that so far you have declined to qualify until you were sure of the legality of holding the office of coroner while being a member of the general assembly.

Section 2823, General Code, provides for the election biennially in each county of a coroner.

Section 2824, General Code, provides for the bond and oath of office.

Section 2829, General Code provides for the filling of a vacancy by a suitable person who is likewise required to give bond and take oath of office.

Section 2866, General Code, provides for the fees of the coroner.

Section 4 of article II of the constitution provides as follows:

"No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

Since from the statutes above set forth it is clear that the office of coroner is a lucrative office under the authority of this state, and since section 4 of article II prohibits the person holding such an office from having a seat in the general assembly. I am of the opinion that you cannot hold the office of coroner and likewise serve at the same time as a member of the general assembly.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 744-6, G. C., KNOWN AS "THE KENNEDY PRIVATE BANK ACT."

Under the construction of section 744-6 G. C., when the assets of a private bank equal or exceed the liabilities, it does not necessarily follow that the bank is so solvent, as the owner, if an individual, may have creditors who will have the right to share in the assets of the bank in common with the depositors. If the bank should be a partnership, the ordinary rule of partnership will apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of September 9, 1913, asking opinion of me in which you say:

> "Referring to section 744-6 of the General Code being section 6 of house bill 46, known as the Kennedy private bank act, it says:
> "The depositors in any bank shall have first lien on the assets of such bank, in case it is wound up, to the amount of their several deposits, and for any balance remaining unpaid such depositors shall share in the general assets of the owner, or owners, alike with the general creditors."

Section 15 of the act, being section 744-13 of the General Code, reads as follows:

> "This act shall go into effect July 1, 1914.
> "By the terms of the quoted section the preceding section will not take effect until July 1, 1914, and the examinations made prior to that date, section 744-6, may not be considered. Am I correct in this construction? If I am, then this important consideration follows; that when the assets of a private bank equal or exceed the liabilities, it does not necessarily follow that the bank is so solvent, as the owner, if an individual may have creditors who will have the right to share in the assets of the bank, in common with the depositors. If the bank should be a partnership the ordinary rule of partnership will apply."

You are entirely correct in your construction of section 15 of the act in question (103 O. L., 379) as to the time when the provisions of section 6 of the act, noted by you, go into effect. Section 15 provides generally that the act shall go into effect July 1, 1914. By way of exception however, this section provides that in certain particulars therein named, the act shall have earlier operation; but there is nothing in the section which puts the foregoing provisions of section 6 into operation before July 1, 1914.

You are likewise correct in your conclusions with respect to the suggested consequences of the construction just noted as to the time when the provisions of section 6 go into effect. In the absence of statute affecting the question, the relation between a bank and a general depositor is but the ordinary relation of debtor and creditor.

> "Covert vs. Rhodes, 48 O. S., 66-71.
> "Bank vs. Brewing Co., 50 O. S., 151.
> "Railroad Co., vs. Bank, 54 O. S., 60-71.
> "A general depositor is merely a general creditor of the bank, and is not entitled to any priority of payment over other creditors, in case of an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or of bankruptcy.
> "Bank of Blackwell vs. Dean, 9 Okl. 626.
> "Schnelling vs. State, 57 Neb. 562.
> "Orms vs. Baker, 74 O. S., 337-346."

Of course, the rules just noted do not apply to deposits fradulently received by a bank after knowledge on its part of insolvency; but the ordinary depositor stands in no better situation than any other general creditor of the bank. Your inquiry is one with reference to private banks, and it follows that until the provisions of section 6 of this act go into operation, the question as to the solvency of a private bank, with respect to the interest of depositors, suggests that not only their claims, but those of other general creditors should be taken into consideration in determining such question.

If a bank is conducted by a partnership, the ordinary rules applicable to such relation apply with respect to the questions suggested by your inquiry. The partners and each of them are liable for the firm or bank debts, and, on the other hand, the individual creditors of a partner may reach his interest in the bank; but in case of insolvency where there are distributable assets both of the bank and the partners, the individual assets of a partner are to be first applied to the debts of his individual creditors, and the bank assets are first to be applied to the payment of bank debts.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—BOARDS OF DIRECTORS—CONSTITUTING A QUORUM.

The constitution of Ohio prescribes that a majority of bank directors is necessary to constitute a quorum, and in this connection it is to be observed that the majority required is a majority of the whole number, and remains the same even though there may be vacancies in the membership of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 21, 1913, you wrote me asking my opinion as follows:

> "The question has been put to me as to what constitutes a quorum of directors of a bank. I replied that I thought any board of directors could fix the number of a quorum. The reply of the bank is that within the discretion of the board, they might provide as small a number as two or three, which would constitute a quorum and they would be enabled thus to conduct the affairs of the bank in the absence of a large part of the board. Hence, I would appreciate an early reply to this question."

There is no special statutory provision prescribing the number necessary to constitute a quorum of a board of bank company directors. Section 8664, General Code, applying to corporations generally, provides:

> "A majority of the directors of a corporation for profit and such a number of the trustees as the regulations of a corporation not for profit may provide, shall form a board."

In the absence of special statute applying to bank companies with respect to the question at hand, the section of the General Code just noted controls, and fixes the number necessary to constitute a quorum of a board of bank directors, to wit: a majority of the whole number of such directors.

> "Dicason vs. Grafton Saving Bank Co., 6 G. C. (n. s.) 333."

Moreover, with reference to banking companies organized under the Thomas banking act, sections 9702 et seq., General Code, it will be noted that section 9727, General Code, provides that the corporate powers, business and property of banking companies formed under the chapter of which the section noted is a part, shall be exercised, conducted and controlled by a board of directors consisting of not less than five nor more than thirty members thereof. Section 9714, General Code, provides as follows:

> "In all other respects, such corporation shall be created, organized, governed and conducted in the manner provided by law for other corporations in so far as not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter."

In the enactment of this section the legislature, with respect to the question at hand, by necessary intendment had reference to the provisions of section 8664, General Code, as controlling.

The rule at common law likewise prescribed a majority of the board of directors as necessary to constitute a quorum, but in the absence of controlling statutes it would be competent for the corporation to prescribe in its regulations that a greater or less number than a majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum.

"Sargent vs. Webster, 13 Met. (Mass.) 497.
"Edgerly vs. Emerson, 23 N. H. 555.
"Lane vs. Brainerd 30 Conn. 565.
"Bank of Maryland vs. Ruff, 7 G. & J. (Md.) 448."

In this state however, as before noted, the question is controlled by statute which prescribes a majority of the directors as necessary to constitute a quorum, and in this connection, it is to be observed that the majority required is a majority of the whole number, and remains the same even though there may be vacancies in the membership of the board.

"Erie Ry. Co., vs. Buffalo, 180 N. Y. 192, 197."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—FINANCIAL CONDITION OF A BANK—EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS AND AGENTS TO ASCERTAIN THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF A BANK—METHOD OF CONDUCTING SUCH AN EXAMINATION.

Officers and directors of a bank cannot be required to furnish a sworn statement in writing and to their net and gross worth either by virtue of or independent of the examination contemplated and prescribed for in sections 725-728, G. C., but such officers and their agents may be examined under oath in order to find out the financial condition of the bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HONORABLE EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of July 22, 1913, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

"Can you construe the statutes so that this department has the right to require a written statement, under oath, from officers and directors of banks as to what their gross and net worth is.

"We are attempting to go into the matter of directors and officers loans, with a view of determining their security and ability to pay. This is the only method that I have at hand."

Pertinent to the inquiry made by you I note that section 724, General Code, provides:

"At least twice each year and also when requested by the board of directors or trustees thereof, the superintendent of banks, or an examiner appointed for the purpose, shall thoroughly examine the cash, bills, collaterals or securities, books of account and affairs of each bank, savings bank, safe deposit and trust company, savings and loan society or association incorporated under any law in this state. * * *"

Sections 725-728, General Code, inclusive, provide as follows:

Section 725: "For the purpose of such examination, the superintendent of banks or such examiner may administer oaths to and examine any officer, agent, clerk, customer, depositor or share holder of such corporation, company, association or society touching its affairs and business."

Section 726: "The superintendent of banks may summon in writing under his seal any such officer, agent, clerk, customer, depositor, share holder or any person resident of the state to appear before him and testify in relation thereto. Whoever, being so summoned, neglects or fails to appear at the time and place specified in the summons, or, having appeared, refuses to be sworn or refuses to answer any pertinent and legal question, shall forfeit and pay one hundred dollars to be recovered with costs by the superintendent of banks and paid into the state treasury to the credit of the banking fund."

Section 727: "If a person summoned to appear before the superintendent of banks and give testimony under the provisions of this chapter neglects or refuses to answer any pertinent or legal question that may be put to him by the superintendent touching the matter under examination, the superintendent shall apply to the probate court or court of insolvency of the county in which such inquiry is conducted to issue a subpoena to such person to appear before him."

Section 728: "Upon such application, the probate judge or judge of the court of insolvency shall issue a subpoena for the appearance of such person or persons forthwith before him to give testimony. Whoever, being so subpoenaed, fails to appear, or appearing, refuses to testify, shall be subject to like proceedings and penalties for contempt as witnesses in actions pending in the probate court or court of insolvency."

I am unable to find that the foregoing statutory provisions or any others sanction any authority on your part to require of officers and directors of banks a sworn statement in writing as to their net and gross worth, either by virtue of or independent of the examination contemplated and provided for in the sections just noted.

It is to be presumed that the statutory provisions, authorizing the examination of the officers and agents of banks or other persons relative to the affairs of such banks and the conduct of their business, were enacted in the light of general provisions directing the manner in which the testimony of witnesses may be obtained and the oath to be administered to such witnesses.

Sections 11520 and 11521, General Code, provide as follows:

Section 11520: "Before testifying the witness shall be sworn to testify the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Section 11521: The testimony of witnesses may be taken:

"1. By affidavit;
"2. By deposition;
"3. By oral examination."

It is clear that neither the use of affidavits nor depositions is contemplated in the statutory provisions relating to bank examinations. It follows, therefore, that the only examination contemplated and authorized by the provisions relating to such matters is one to be conducted orally upon an oath administered according to the provisions of section 11520.

This conclusion is strengthened by the language of sections of the Code relating to the examination of banks. These provisions clearly contemplate that the person to be examined shall appear in person before the officer conducting the examination and there testify in relation to the affairs of such bank. Furthermore, provision is made for compelling such personal attendance of the person to be examined, both by the penalty of money forfeiture and of punishment as for contempt, through the agency of a probate court or court of insolvency to which the superintendent of banks is authorized to apply in case the person whose testimony is sought neglects to appear in answer to summons, or neglects or refuses to answer any pertinent and legal question put to him.

Touching the purpose you have in mind prompting the inquiry made, you, or an examiner appointed by you, may examine on oath, any bank officer or director concerning its affairs and business, and if it appears that the funds of the bank have been loaned to any such officer or director, I see no reason why he may not be examined as to his gross and net worth.

In examining an officer or director as to the affairs of the bank, he undoubtedly could be asked concerning his knowledge as to the financial responsibility of any person to whom the bank has made a loan which was outstanding and unpaid, and no reason is apparent why the same inquiry could not be made of such officer or director when it appears that such loan has been made to him. In both cases the inquiry would be one touching the affairs and business of the bank itself.

Of course, the questions of the examiner and the answers of the officer or director could be transcribed in writing as made, and if the officer or director examined saw fit to do so, the same could be signed by him. In such case, however, the oral evidence of the officer or director would be the material fact and matter, and the written transcript of his evidence and his signature as well would be but evidence of his testimony, and the sanction as to the truth of the testimony of such officer or director would only be the oath administered before his testimony was taken, such oath to be administered by the officer conducting the examination, whether it be yourself or an examiner appointed for the purpose.

Sworn statements of officers and directors as to their gross and net worth, made in the form of affidavits, might serve your purpose in ascertaining the security of loans made to such officers or directors, but as the use of such written instruments is not contemplated in the statutory provisions giving you authority to examine into the affairs of banks, it follows that the truth of the statements made in such written instruments would not be secured by the sanction of the penalty imposed by statute for perjury.

LIQUOR LICENSE BOARD—SALOONS IN TOWNSHIP REGULATED BY POPULATION.

Where Monroe township, Perry county, under the federal census of 1910 has a population of 2625, said county may have five saloons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of November 11th you submit the following for an opinion thereon:

> "Monroe township, Perry county, under the federal census of 1910, had a population of 2625 which under the new license law entitled said township, being wet territory, to five saloons.
> "Late in the fall, 1913, the village of San Toy was erected by incorporation out of parts of Monroe township and another township. The population of the new territory was taken by the incorporators in order to ascertain in which township to bring their proceedings for corporation which developed that the San Toy territory was taking a population of 306 from the adjoining township. The incorporation of San Toy having become perfected prior to the announcement of saloon licenses on the 5th of November, the local board of Perry county, acting under instructions from this board issued one license in the village of San Toy, and one in the township of Monroe at Congo.
> "This board in giving such instructions preceeded upon the theory that in the absence of an official census of Monroe township, that the only safe course to pursue was to grant one license in San Toy and the minimum number of one license in Monroe township.
> "Will you, therefore, kindly advise this board whether our action in instructing the local board of Perry county as aforesaid was correct or whether we should have granted the remaining three licenses in Monroe township to which the township is evidently entitled, although there are no official figures of population except as above stated."

Section 44 of the liquor license law provides:

> Section 44. "In determining the maximum number of licenses which shall be granted in any municipal corporation or township of the state, the license commissioners shall be governed in determining the population of said political subdivision by any official census which shall have been taken therein within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted. If no such official census of the population has been taken, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau."

You will note from a cursory reading of section 44 that if no official census of the population of a political subdivision has been taken therein, then the next year preceding that for which the license shall be granted, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau.

As I understand from your question, there has been no official census taken in Monroe township within the year next preceding the license year, and it is evident that the provisions regarding the United States census applies. It is my understanding that the United States census bureau in making estimates base the same upon the last federal census, adding thereto the proper average rate of increase for the subdivision, and not taking into account any additions, subtractions or formation of new municipalities since the date of the last decennial census.

Your inquiry presents a peculiar situation owing to the fact that the village of San Toy is composed of parts of Monroe and the adjacent township. Notwithstanding this fact I am inclined to the view that the latest estimate of the United States census bureau fixes the official census of the population of Monroe township, as provided by section 44, supra. Of course, since under the constitution and the law each municipality of 500 or less is entitled to one saloon, the municipality of San Toy should be accorded its one saloon.

In your question you state that Monroe township under the federal census of 1910 had a population of 2625, which under the new license law would entitle said township to five saloons. You do not say that the population of Monroe township is as figured by estimation of the United States census bureau. That estimate is the one that governs in the absence of the official census spoken of in said section 44. But in any event since under the 1910 census they would have been entitled to five saloons, the township would not be entitled to any less at the present time, and since in granting the one saloon to the village of San Toy, which takes in a part of Monroe township, and which takes from the township the population of 306, according to your statement, the remainder of the township would still be entitled to at least four saloon licenses, because after taking the 306 from the population of 2625, as shown by the census of 1910, there would still remain a population of 2319 in the rest of the township.

I am inclined to the view that the estimate of the census bureau would govern you, and fix the population of Monroe township, and that you could accord the number of licenses based upon said estimate; and there is no question in my mind that inasmuch as you have given one license to the village of San Toy that four other licenses could be given to the remainder of Monroe township and still be safely within the limitation fixed by the law and the constitution.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LIQUOR LICENSE—POWER OF MAKING SALES UNDER SALOON LICENSE—SALOON LICENSE CAN ONLY COVER ONE PLACE OF BUSINESS—SALOONIST NOT PERMITTED TO SELL DRINKS IN A RESTAURANT WITH WHICH HE HAS NO CONNECTION.

1. Where the proprietor of a saloon conducts the same in a building fronting on one street and running back in the rear to a frontage on another street, and operates a bar upon both frontages, each of which has its separate entrance, and there are several rooms between both bars, under the liquor license law the same party could not operate both bars, and this would be especially true if the intervening rooms were not held and occupied by the proprietor in connection with his business or domicile.

2. Where the proprietor of a saloon adjoins a separate building operated as a restaurant by a different proprietor, there being an opening or passage way in the partition wall between the two buildings, liquor being sent or carried through the said opening to the guests of the restaurant, the proprietor of the saloon would not be entitled to make such sales under his liquor license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 28, 1913.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You submit for an opinion the following questions sent you by the Hamilton county liquor licensing board:

> "There the proprietor of a saloon conducts the same in a building fronting on one street and running back in the rear to a frontage on another street, and operates a bar upon both frontages, each of which has its separate entrance, and there being several rooms between the two bars, can both bars operate under one license?"

Section 19 of the new liquor licensing act provides among other things that:

> "License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought, and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license, * * *"

Section 21 of the act provides, among other things, that:

> "Each applicant shall state: * * *
> "(b) The premises where the business of selling intoxicating liquors is to be carried on, including the street and number where there is such street or number.
> "(c) The fact that the applicant is not in any way interested either as owner or part owner in a business, or a stockholder of a corporation engaged in the business, conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage."

Section 23 of the act provides, among other things that:

"Each licensee shall post in a conspicuous place within the enclosure or room where the liquors are sold the license certificate issued to him by the county board. * * *"

Section 36 of the act provides:

"No licensee under a saloon license shall, during the then current year, remove his place of business to a place other than that set forth in the application upon which the license was granted, without the consent of the county board."

Section 51 of the act provides:

"Any licensee who knowingly fails or neglects to keep conspicuously posted at all times within the enclosure or room wherein is conducted the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors the license certificate required under this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not exceeding twenty-five dollars."

Joyce on intoxicating liquors, section 293, says:

"One license will not authorize the person or persons licensed to conduct the business in more than one place, or generally at any other than that specified in his license or application therefor."

"Citing Commonwealth vs. Holland, 104 Ky. 323."

Of course where the statute requires that the sale shall be made on the specific premises licensed (and this is the case with our license law) a sale off such premises is illegal. The difficult question frequently is, what constitutes a sale on or off the licensed premises?

In the case of St. Louis vs. Gerardi, 90 Mo. 640, decided by the supreme court of Missouri, the syllabus reads as follows:

"The proprietor of the Planters House in St. Louis, Mo., having procured a license to keep a dram shop at 111 North Fourth street, which was the main street entrance to the hotel, kept three separate bars where liquors were sold on the ground floor of the hotel, screened off by partitions, having direct and immediate connection by door-ways, all of which were accessible to the guests without going out of the hotel, and all of which bars were located on the premises occupied for hotel purposes, and a part of the Planters House.

"Held. That keeping the three bars did not violate the ordinance of the city providing that no person to whom a license should issue should keep a dram shop at any other place than the place designated."

Morton C. J. in that case said:

"The place at which the dram shop was to be kept was the Planters House, and a bar is only a means of carrying on the business, and where it is kept at the place designated, the mere fact of the licensee erecting more than one bar at such place, so connected as they were in the present instance, would not render him liable to the penalty of the ordinance in question. We can see no reason why a dram shopkeeper, for his own convenience as well as of his customers, might not at the place where he is authorized to conduct the dram shop, erect a bar from behind which to sell beer, another to sell wine, another to sell whiskey, brandy, gin, etc. The rooms in which the bars in this instance were located were all on ground floor of the Planters House, the place at which defendant was licensed to keep a dram shop, only separated by screened partitions with doors to pass from one to the other."

In Commonwealth vs. McCormick, 150 Mass., 270, it was held that a license to sell in a "one and a half story building" imported an authority to sell anywhere in such building.

In Hochstandler vs. State, 73 Alabama, 24, where a licensee had two rooms connected by an arch way, and a bar in each room, it was held that his license, though issued for a place covered sales at both bars.

In the case of Sanders vs. Elberton, 50 Ga., 178, it was held that the question whether two rooms in a particular house in which it is proposed to sell spirituous liquors are in truth two distinct places is a question of fact, and in that case the supreme court of Georgia said:

"It is not clear to us that in this case there is not an effort to get permission to set up two liquor shops under one license. These two rooms under the admitted facts are so situated as in a very fair sense to make two different places. They open on different streets, there is no communication existing between them, and they are on different stories. We think it was no abuse of the exercise of the sound judgment of the council to conclude that each was a different place, and that the fact of one firm being the owner of both did not alter the case. * * * How far the admitted facts make these two rooms different places the council has determined as a question of fact. We see nothing in the case to justify the conclusion that this decision is an abuse of power."

Under our license law, the licenses are issued to traffic in intoxicating liquors. The applicant can have only one license, and cannot be interested in a like business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage. He is required to keep his license certificate conspicuously posted in the enclosure or room where the liquors are sold, and a failure so to do renders him guilty of a misdemeanor. In his application he is required to state the premises where the business is to be carried on, including the street and number where there is any such.

If the applicant receives a saloon license then, under the constitutional definition, he would have a license for a place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage in quantities of less than one gallon, and the constitution provides that such "places" shall be limited in number according to the population.

It is my opinion, following the doctrine in the case of Sanders vs. Elberton, supra, that the question whether or not two rooms may constitute one place or two places, is a question of fact to be determined by the proper tribunal, and, in direct answer to your question, I think it would be the province of the liquor licensing board, from all the facts presented to it, to determine whether or not in the case instanced there was one or two places. If the board determines that as a matter of fact two businesses were to be conducted, one in each part of the building fronting on either street, and that the presence of the several rooms between the two rooms so divided the building as to render the rooms at each end of the building entirely separate from each other, then a license should only be granted for one place and the description of the premises in the license should be limited to the enclosure or room in which the particular separate business would be conducted; but if they found as a matter of fact that the building was used as one room; that the business conducted was one business; by one proprietor; that access to all parts of the entire building was easy and that patrons had access to all parts of said building room, no matter which street entrance they used, the board would be justified in holding that one place of business was to be conducted and the premises would then consist of the entire building room and could be so designated in the license. Each case must be decided upon its own particular facts.

It was held in the case of Thomas vs. Arie, 122 Iowa, 538, that where a person obtained a license for a room fronting on two streets he could not divide the room by a permanent partition so as to make one room face on one street and the other room face on the other street, and then maintain a bar in each room.

So too, the supreme court of Illinois in the case of Malkan vs. City of Chicago, 217 Ill., 471, held that a license to operate a saloon in a certain building does not authorize the operation of two saloons in different rooms in it, there being no connection between the two rooms inside of the walls of the building. In fact it is generally held that a license to operate a saloon in one place will not authorize the sale of intoxicating liquors at another place also under the same license.

Of course, under our own law (and attention is called to the fact that in many states licenses may be issued to the same party for a number of saloons) one person can only have one license and can only be interested in one place where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Black on intoxicating liquors, paragraphs 127, 145 and 150, in dicussing the question comments on the fact that a liquor license is not a contract granting a licensee rights which he is entitled to enjoy wherever the place, but it is a permit only which must be strictly construed, and the one who holds it acquires only the privilege which a strict interpretation of the statutes authorizing the issuance of the license will afford.

The licensing board, granting applications where there is some question as to the extent of the premises in which the business is to be carried on, should bear in mind that it is a constitutional prohibition for a person to be interested in more than one place. The board should further bear in mind that under the provisions of section 23 and 51 of the liquor license law a licensee must keep his license certificate conspicuously posted and that this provision necessarily implies that it should be readily seen by any person coming into the place of business of the licensee. Our license law does not require that a particular description be given of the particular room in which the business is sought to be carried on. It only requires the applicant to "state the premises including the street and number where there is such." The place where the licensee is allowed to sell is determined by the description thereof as contained in the license, although the board is not authorized to grant a license that would cover two places of business. In the question asked, everything depends on whether or not there is, in fact, but one place of business conducted in said building, and it would take more facts than appear in the question to arrive at a definite conclusion as to that fact. I would say, however, that if the several rooms between the two bars constitute such a division of the building as to leave two different and wholly separated rooms that then both rooms could not operate under one license even though the business conducted would be by the same licensee. To hold otherwise would violate not only the spirit but the letter of the law. The licensee would then be maintaining two places, each independent of the other in every material sense necessary to be considered; nor do I think that it was ever intended under our license law that one could be granted a license for a building and then cut that building up into separate and independent rooms, the number of the same limited only by the capacity of the building, and conduct an independent place in each of said rooms for the sale of liquors as a beverage.

In conclusion, therefore, my advice to the board would be that unless the two bars referred to in your question were both operated as one place, as well as one business, such licensee would not be protected by his license, and this would be especially so if the intervening rooms were not held and occupied by the proprietor in connection with his business or his domicile.

You further desire my opinion upon the following question:

> "Where the proprietor of a saloon adjoins a separate building operated as a restaurant by a different proprietor, there being an opening or passage way in the partition wall between the two buildings, liquor being sent or carried through the said opening to the guests of the restaurant, would the proprietor of the saloon be entitled to make such sales under his license?"

The application of the principles set forth in the authorities referred to in the first question justifies the conclusion that where the proprietor of a saloon makes sales in a restaurant adjoining said saloon in a separate building, which said restaurant is conducted by a different proprietor, there being an open passage way in a partition wall between the two buildings and the liquor being sent or carried through said opening to the guests in a restaurant, since the sale is then made in the restaurant, it is a different place from that covered by the license, and said sale would be illegal.

The question itself presupposes that the proprietor of the saloon makes the sale in the adjoining room, and of course since this would be in an entirely different place than the one for which he has a license, as well as in a room occupied by an entirely different business there would be no protection to the proprietor of the saloon by reason of the fact that he held a license. It is a rule of law so familiar as to be trite that the permission of a license is strictly limited to the premises as stated in the license. It may be, however, that the question intends to inquire whether or not the fact that the proprietor of the saloon delivers liquor to a guest in the restaurant would constitue a sale in the restaurant? Such a question would open a wide field. Where a particular sale is made and when it is finally completed, is sometimes a question of considerable difficulty and depends upon the particular facts surrounding each case.

While the word "sale" as said by the supreme court in the case of Williams vs. Berry, 8 Howard 495, is a word of precise legal import, both at law and in equity, and means at all times a contract between parties to give and pass rights of property for money which the buyer pays or promises to pay to the seller for the thing bought and sold, still at times there is some difficulty in determinings, under the particular facts of the case when the sale is actually completed. It is elementary that no sale is completed unless there has been a delivery either actual or constructive. Title must pass. The vender must lose his dominion over the property, while the purchaser must be vested with dominion over it, yet "every case, (as stated by Benjamin on Sales, paragraph 111) must stand upon its own peculiar evidence and cannot be a controlling precedent for any other case." If the sale is an absolute one, title to the thing sold vests in the purchaser. Whether and when title to an article is to pass to a buyer is a question of intention and the circumstances surrounding the transaction may show this intention. While delivery is generally essential, yet it may be dispensed with if such be the intention of the parties.

It might be interesting in this connection to call attention to the present provisions of section 6071, General Code. This is the latest amendment of the so-called Dow-Aiken tax law, and the new license law and the tax law are so interrelated that they bear directly one upon the other. A person cannot traffic in intoxicating liquors without first obtaining a license, and then after having obtained the license, upon engaging in the traffic he comes under the provisions of the tax law on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquor. Section 6071 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "Upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquor there shall be assessed yearly, and paid into the county treasury, as hereinafter provided, by each person, corporation or co-partnership engaged therein, and for each place where such business is carried on by or for such person, corporation or co-partnership, the sum of one thousand dollars."

It is the license that limits the business to the particular place under the amended law. The tax is upon the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors. Formerly this tax was upon as many places as there were businesses conducted by the same party. Now a person is limited to one license and consequently can have only the one place of business. While not in point, but still affording some light on the question asked reference is made to a case recently decided in the superior court of Cincinnati (February 8, 1913,) by Judge Oppenheimer.

In that case the plaintiff was the proprietor of a restaurant situated upon the second floor of a building located at 509 George street in the city of Cincinnati. Upon the first floor of the building was a saloon owned and operated by Messrs. Dancer & Henderson. Entrance to the restaurant was obtained directly from the street through a hall-way which led past the side entrance to the saloon and a "dumb waiter" run from the restaurant to the saloon below. The plaintiff was Loy Sing, and was the proprietor of what is popularly known as a "Chop Suey" restaurant, furnishing to his patrons various Chinese dishes and green tea or beer. The testimony indicated that no beer was kept upon the premises, but that whenever an order for beer was given to one of the waiters in the restaurant, the order was communicated to the bartender in the saloon below through the "dumb waiter" or by a messenger,—usually the waiter who took the order—and the beer was sent or brought to the restaurant and served to the patron. Sometimes orders were taken for beer without eatables and filled in the same manner. The patron was charged the same price for the beer as plaintiff paid the saloonist therefor, and that amount was paid there when the beer was served or when the patron was ready to depart. Judge Oppenheimer (Ohio Law Rep. April 7, 1913, page 30) says, after quoting the facts as above:

> "The sole question in the case is whether these facts justify the inference that plaintiff is engaged in 'trafficking in intoxicating liquor' within the meaning of the General Code, section 6071. Plaintiff contends that his acts are merely acts of hospitality for the purpose, as he puts it, of 'accommodating customers'; and that in performing such acts he is acting only as agent of the customers in procuring the beer from the saloonist, or as the agent of the saloonist in serving the same. In other words he contends that the sale is, in each case, a sale by the saloonists themselves, made directly to the customer through himself as agent.
> "If this restaurant were conducted by Dancer & Henderson in connection with their saloon, plaintiff's position would perhaps be tenable. Unfortunately for his position, however, he has absolutely no interest in the saloon nor have the saloonists any interest in the restaurant. * *"

In this case the court held that the sale was made by the keeper of the restaurant, and that the injunction sought against the treasurer of Hamilton county for the collection of the Aiken tax should be dissolved. Now it is true that in this case the beer was delivered usually by the waiter who took the order in the restaurant, but, as indicated by Judge Oppenheimer, the restaurant not being conducted by the saloonists, and some elements of the sale taking place in the restaurant it constituted the place of sale.

Certainly, under the admitted facts of this case, to authorize such sale, the parties not only would have been liable to the Dow-Aiken tax but had the license law been in effect they would have been making sales without a license.

The license amendment to the constitution limits the number of places designated as "saloons," and the letter and spirit of this amendment is against permitting more places where intoxicating liquors are sold in small quantities, than is therein allowed. Anything that would tend to increase the number of such places must necessarily be frowned upon, and while I can conceive of cases where there might be a delivery of intoxicating liquors outside of the premises covered by the license owing to circumstances and facts that make it clear beyond question that the sale was completed and was entirely referable to the premises covered by the license, still, in the question submitted by you, I have no hesitancy in saying that the proprietor of the saloon in question would not be entitled under his license to make sales in an adjoining restaurant operated by a different proprietor.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXPERT WITNESSES—FEES—SECTION 2494, G. C., MUST BE COMPLIED WITH.

An expert witness may not be paid fees from the county treasury unless section 2494 of the General Code is complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1913.

HONORABLE CHARLES E. BALLARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of November 14th, inquiring as to the right to pay expert witness fees out of the county treasury, is received.

The situation as you state is:

> "The defendant in a pending action asked the court to appoint a neutral expert to examine the viscera of a deceased person, and ascertain whether death was caused by a poison known as cyanide. The court, over the objection of the prosecuting attorney, made the appointment naming one professor M., who accepted, acted and filed his report stating that he did not 'find any cyanide or trace thereof.' On the witness stand, however, he testified that owing to the condition of the viscera at the time of its delivery to him, the chance of discovering cyanide, was remote, if not impossible. This, you state, was misleading, and you further state that the state was entitled to all the information and research of Prof. M., and that he should have included in his report the facts developed in his testimony."

Whether Prof. M. should have gone into a statement of the condition of the viscera in his report, or the means by which the presence or absence of cyanide is determined, or should have done more than merely report upon the question submitted, which he did, is neither here nor there. He said that he found no cyanide nor trace thereof, and to my mind, under his commission he was not called upon to state or discuss what might or might not have prevented its discovery. But this has nothing to do with a solution of the question presented.

Section 2494, General Code, reads:

> "Upon the certificate of the prosecuting attorney or his assistant that the services of an expert or the testimony of expert witnesses in the examination or trial of a person accused of the commission of crime, or before the grand jury, were or will be necessary to the proper administration of justice, the county commissioners may allow and pay such expert such compensation as they deem just and proper and the court approves."

Prior to this enactment, an expert witness was only entitled to ordinary witness fees.

> "State ex rel. vs. Darby, 17 Bull. 62.
> "Pengelly vs. Comm'rs. 8 O. N. P. 386."

Therefore, section 2494, General Code, must be followed before an allowance of a claim for expert witness fees may be paid from the county treasury.

It is not for this department to consider the motive of the court in making the appointment; that of the prosecutor in resisting said appointment, or in refusing to make the certificate under section 2494. All that is before me is the naked legal question of the right to pay an expert witness, fees from the county treasury without section 2494 being complied with, and I hold that it may not be done.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT REPRESENTS STATE IN CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS—STATE NOT LIABLE FOR DAMAGES IN ACCIDENT.

The state is not liable for damages that may be sustained by reason of the construction of a road. The state highway commission represents the state in highway matters, under the state aid law, and would not be the proper party defendant in a damage suit for damages caused by the construction of a road.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1913.

HONORABLE G. A. STARN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your leter of October 22, 1913, wherein you inquire:

> "(1) In the improvement of public highways under the state aid law, where a change of grade of such highway has been made, thereby making cuts at some places and fills at other places, along the premises of a land owner, does such land owner have a right of action for damages for injury to his premises, and especially where it is claimed by such land owner that his right of ingress and egress to and from such highway to his premises has been interfered with? Such an action has been brought by a land owner against the commissioners of Wayne county, and I presume he is relying upon the case of Smith et al., vs Commissioners. reported in 50 O. S., page 628.

"(2) Under this law the state highway commissioner has the construction of such improvements under his direction and authority, and the engineer preparing the plans and specifications is employed by the state highway commissioner. Under these circumstances, should not the state highway commissioner be made a party defendant?"

During the incumbency of this administration, I do not recall a similar question having been presented, and our office files do not disclose any opinion rendered on this subject.

This department has adopted a rule not to render opinions upon matters that are pending in the courts, and for this reason, we decline to answer your first question.

Your second question is answered by the last sentence of section 1203 of the General Code of Ohio, which provides:

"The state highway commissioner may reject any or all bids. Before entering into a contract, he shall require a bond with sufficient sureties conditioned that if the proposal is accepted the contractor will perform the work upon the terms proposed, within the time prescribed, in accordance with the plans and specifications, and will indemnify the county against any damages that may be claimed during the construction of the improvement. An approved surety company may be accepted as surety on such bond. In no case shall the state be liable for damages sustained by reason of the construction of an improvement under this chapter."

This section was amended in 1913, 103 Ohio Laws, 449, but its provisions in this respect were not changed.

Inasmuch as the state is not liable for damages that may be sustained by reason of the construction of a road, I am of the opinion that the state highway commission who represents the state in highway matters, under the state aid law, would not be a proper party defendant.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD NOT LIABLE FOR STREET ASSESSMENTS.

The state armory board is an agency of the state, and a payment by it would be a payment by the state, consequently the state armory board is not liable for the payment of a street assessment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1913.

HONORABLE BYRON BARGER, Secretary State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 5th, wherein you state:

> "I herewith have the honor to transmit a letter from the city clerk of Bucyrus asking the armory board to pay sidewalk assessment of $132.15. As this seems to be a tax, I am taking the liberty of requesting your opinion as to whether or not the board should pay same. The armory and the land both belong to the state of Ohio."

Property of the state of Ohio is exempted from taxation by section 5351, General Code, which provides:

> "Real or personal property belonging exclusively to the state or United States shall be exempt from taxation."

A special assessment is sought to be collected rather than a tax in the strict sense of the word. A special assessment has been distinguished from a tax by our supreme court in the case of Lima vs. Cemetery Association, 42 O. S., 128. This case involved the collection from a private cemetery association of a special assessment for a street improvement, and court held that the cemetery association could not, by relying on the general statute exempting its property from taxation, escape the payment of the special assessment. That case, however, is not decisive of the question presented here. It is a fundamental principle of statutory construction that a state is not bound by the terms of a general statute unless the statute so expressly provides.

> "State ex rel. vs. Board of Public Works, 36 O. S., 409.
> "State ex rel. vs. Cappeller, 39 O. S., 207, 213."

Our statutes do not expressly provide that the state shall be liable to the payment of special assessments levied by municipal corporations for public improvements.

As your board is an agency of the state, and as payment by it would be payment by the state, I am of the opinion that, as a matter of law, your board is not liable for the payment of this assessment.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WARRANTS OF AUDITOR OF STATE—LAW DOES NOT AUTHORIZE ISSUANCE OF DUPLICATE WARRANTS—TREASURER CASHES SUCH WARRANTS AT HIS OWN RISK.

The Auditor of State has no authority to issue duplicate warrants on the treasurer of state for the payment of money, without any action on the part of the general assembly—the treasurer of state accepts and cashes such warrants at his own risk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1914.

HON. JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 11, 1913, you submitted for my opinion the following questions:

> "Should the auditor of state issue a duplicate warrant on the treasurer of state for payment of money without any action on part of the general assembly of Ohio authorizing same?
> "May the treasurer of state accept and pay such warrant? Should the treasurer of state redeem such a duplicate warrant and then through an over-sight redeem the original, where would the responsibility lie for such double payment?"

Section 242, General Code provides that no money shall be drawn from the state treasury except on the warrant of the auditor of state and the auditor is required to keep an accurate account of such warrants.

Section 243, General Code, requires that the auditor shall examine each claim presented for payment from the state treasury and to issue his warrant on the treasurer of state.

Section 245, General Code, requires that the warrants on the auditor of state shall be printed and bound, with stubs or margins, and the stubs or margins are required to be preserved by the auditor of state.

Section 301, General Code, provides that no money shall be paid out of the state treasury except on the warrant of the auditor of state.

Section 304, General Code, provides how warrants shall be paid.

There is, however, nothing in the statutes providing for the issuance of duplicate warrants, even on evidence satisfactorily submitted to the auditor of state that the original thereof has either been lost or destroyed, nor is there any provision in the statutes for the giving of bonds to secure the auditor or treasurer should a duplicate warrant be issued. There being no such authority given to the auditor for the issuing of a duplicate warrant he would be without authority so to do unless there was some action on the part of the general assembly to authorize the same. Should the treasurer of state accept and pay a duplicate warrant knowing the same to be such, or such duplicate warrant expressing on its face that it is a duplicate, the treasurer of state would do so at his own risk. Furthermore, should the treasurer of state redeem a duplicate warrant and then through oversight redeem the original he would be liable to make good the amount of the duplication, and would then be required to reimburse the state for that amount, looking to whatever security might be behind the issuance of the duplicate warrant. Such security, however, could only be for his personal benefit, the state requiring him to make good the amount so paid out.

Under date of December 12, 1913, you submitted a further inquiry along the same line relative to state insurance fund, your specific question being whether or not the industrial commission is authorized by law to issue a duplicate warrant on the treasurer of state against said fund.

Section 1465-56, General Code, (103 O. L., 76) provides that the treasurer of state shall be the custodian of the state insurance fund and that all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon voucher authorized by the state liability board of awards.

As you are aware the industrial commission superseded the state liability board of awards, (103 O. L., 97, section 12).

There is no authority that I have been able to find authorizing the industrial commission to issue duplicate warrants on the treasurer of state against the "state insurance fund," and, consequently, for the reasons given relative to the right of the state auditor to issue duplicate warrants, I am of the opinion that the industrial commission is likewise without authority so to do.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SERVICE OF WRITS—CONSTABLE MAY NOT SERVE WRITS UPON HIMSELF—SHERIFF MAY NOT SERVE WRITS UPON HIMSELF—SHERIFF MAY SERVE WRITS ON A DEPUTY SHERIFF—CORONER MAY SERVE WRITS ON A SHERIFF.

1. A constable may not serve writs upon himself and collect regular fees for said service, the same to be charged as costs in the case.

2. A sheriff may not charge a regular fee for serving a subpoena on himself. He may serve on his deputy same as any other person. The coroner may serve subpoenas on the sheriff under section 11504, G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of December 17, you ask the following questions:

> "First: May a constable serve writs upon himself and collect regular fees for said service, the same to be charged as costs in the case?
> "Second: May a sheriff charge and collect fees for serving a subpoena upon himself or deputy sheriff for attendance as grand jury witnesses or as witnesses in a criminal or civil case in the common pleas court?"

A constable can not serve writs upon himself, and consequently no fees can be collected by him for such alleged services. A writ, such as a subpoena, coming into his hand with his name as a witness therein, is sufficient notice to him; and the party serving him can, in the trial, call him as a witness. He is supposed to attend the trial in which he is acting as constable, and is allowed therefor by section 3347, General Code, $1.00. A party can subpoena the constable, or a special constable can do so.

For the same reason a sheriff can not charge fees for alleged service of subpoenas on himself in any case, or before the grand jury. The sheriff can serve a subpoena on his deputy in any case, or as grand jury witness, the same as upon any other witness, and charge up the usual fees therefor. The coroner can serve subpoenas on the sheriff, under section 11504. There is no necessity for the sheriff to be subpoenaed before the grand jury. It is his duty to appear whenever he is called as a witness.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ANNUAL SESSION OF NATIONAL CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY—EXPENSES OF DELEGATES FROM STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES MAY BE LEGALLY PAID.

The annual session of the national children's home society is a meeting of the character contemplated by section 1352, G. C., as amended. An executive officer of the state board of charities may lawfully receive his expenses for attending such meeting under the provisions of sections 1357 and 1352, G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHERER, Secretary Board of State Charities, 1010 Hartman Building, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 10, 1914, in which you inquire:

"Under the provisions of section 1352 of the General Code, as amended April 28, 1913, members of the executive force of this board are entitled to attend state and national conferences for the discussion of questions pertinent to their duties and the actual traveling expenses so incurred to be paid as any other expenses of the board.

"On January 21-22, there will be held at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, a meeting known as the annual session of the National Children's Home Society. This is a gathering of workers from the various state children's home societies, whose primary work is selecting and placing dependent children in foster homes.

"Under the provisions of the juvenile code, recently enacted, this board has established a children's welfare department and appointed Mr. C. V. Williams as director. One of the functions of his position will be in behalf of the board to place children in family homes and supervise the work done by other placing agencies. As he has been invited to make an address at this meeting at Milwaukee and the board believes that his presence at this meeting will be of value to the new department, it has instructed him to accept the invitation.

"There is some doubt as to whether this meeting can be construed as coming within the express terms of the section referred to above. As the board does not desire to go beyond the intention of the act, your opinion is requested as to the legality of the state paying the expenses of Mr. Williams while in attendance at this meeting."

Section 1352, General Code, as amended April 28, 1913, 103 O. L., 864, reads:

"The board of state charities shall investigate by correspondence and inspection the system, condition and management of the public and private benevolent and correctional institutions of the state and county, and municipal jails, work-houses, infirmaries and children's homes, and all maternity hospitals or homes, lying-in-hospitals, or places where women are received and cared for during parturition, as well as all institutions whether incorporated, private, or otherwise which receive and care for children. Officers in charge of such institutions or responsible for the administration of public funds used for the relief and maintenance of the poor shall furnish the board of its secretary such information as it requires. The board may prescribe such forms of report and registration as it deems necessary. For the purpose of such investigation and to carry out the provisions of this chapter, it shall employ such visitors as may be necessary, who shall, in addition to other duties, investigate the care, and disposition of children made by institutions for receiving children, and by all institutions including within their objects the placing of children in private homes, and, when they deem it desirable they shall visit such children in such homes, and report the result of such inspection to the board. The members of the board and such of its executive force as it shall designate may attend state and national conferences for the discussion of questions, pertinent to their duties. The actual traveling expenses so incurred by the members and such of its executive force as it shall designate shall be paid as provided by section 1351 of the General Code."

Section 1357, General Code, reads:

"The necessary expenses of all the persons invited to such conferences shall be paid from any fund available for their respective boards and institutions provided they shall first procure a certificate from the secretary of the board of state charities that they were invited to and were in attendance at the sessions of such conferences."

While, without express authority state officials are not called upon or justified in going out of the state in performance of their duties, as a general rule, yet I feel that the language of 1352, supra, very clearly evinces an intention to pay the expenses of members of your board or such of its executive force as it may designate to go outside the state to attend state and national conferences, for the discussion of questions pertinent to their duties.

I think it clear from your statement, that the annual session of the National Children's Home Society is a meeting of the character contemplated by section 1352, G. C., as amended: that Mr. Williams is one of your executive officers and that his expenses in attending said meeting may be lawfully paid under the provisions of section 1357 and 1352, above quoted.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE WORKMAN'S AID ASSOCIATION OF TOLEDO SHOULD BE FILED BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

The articles of incorporation of the Workman's Aid Association of Toledo, Ohio, the purpose of which is to provide and maintain a fund to be used to aid and assist needy workmen, to provide and maintain a meeting place, reading rooms for their use and enjoyment, to own and maintain suitable real estate for this purpose and to do all things necessary and incident thereto, may be filed and the usual fee of $2.00 may be charged.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 2d, submitting for my examination and action, on the assumption apparently that the same is required by law, the proposed articles of incorporation of the Workman's Aid Association of Toledo, Ohio. The statement in the letter is that these articles are accompanied by the sum of two dollars, which is tendered as a filing fee. The corporation is one not for profit, and its purpose is as follows:

> "To provide and maintain a fund to be used to aid and assist needy workmen, to, provide and maintain a meeting place, reading rooms and play rooms for their use and enjoyment, to own and maintain suitable real estate for this purpose and to do all things necessary and incident thereto."

This purpose seems to be wholly charitable; comprises no insurance scheme whatever; is not mutual in any particular, and the articles of incorporation as they stand may be accepted by you and filed, the fee of two dollars being the usual one.

I might add that my conclusion is based upon the exact language of the purpose clause. Under this clause it would be unlawful for the corporation to conduct any kind of a mutual enterprise, limiting its benefits and liabilities to the members of the association.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUDGET COMMISSION—DISPOSITION OF FUNDS OF THE STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—APPROPRIATIONS.

The proper course for the state embalming board to follow in reference to its receipts is to keep its revenue in its own possession as it has in the past, accounting for its official acts in its annual reports to the governor as provided in series 1348, G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHAW, Chairman State Board of Embalming Examiners, 668 N. High, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion as to whether or not the state budget commissioners may require the state board of embalming examiners to furnish estimates for appropriations, and, generally, as to the authority and duty of the budget commissioner in the premises so far as the state board of embalming examiners is concerned.

Out of courtesy to Mr. Heffernan, State Budget Commissioner, I shall send a copy of this opinion to him.

The act of the general assembly, providing for the budget system for state officers, departments and institutions, is found in 103, O. L., 658. This act does not create any such position as "state budget commissioner," but it does authorize, by section 5 thereof, (designated section 270-5, General Code), the governor to "appoint competent, disinterested persons to examine, without notice, the affairs of any department, institution, public works, commission or office of the state for the purpose of ascertaining facts, and to make findings and recommendations relative to increasing the efficiency and curtailing the expense therein."

The appointees of the governor under the same section may exercise notarial powers to secure the attendance and testimony of witnesses. The earlier provisions of the same act provide in part as follows: (Sec. 2704-1).

> "On or before the fifteenth day of November, biennially, in the even numbered years, the several departments, institutions, commissions and officers of the state shall report on blanks furnished for such purpose, an estimate in itemized form to the governor, stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the biennial period beginning with the first day of July thereafter."

Section 2 provides in part as follows:

> "On or before the fifteenth day of November, biennially in the even numbered years the auditor of state shall furnish the governor the following statements:
> "1. A statement showing the balance standing to the credit of the several appropriations for each department, etc.
> "2. A statement showing monthly revenues and expenditures from each appropriation account * * *.
> "3. A statement showing the annual revenues and expenditures of each appropriation account for each year of the last four fiscal years * * *."
> "4. A statement showing the monthly average of such expenditures from each of the several appropriations accounts for the fiscal year, and also the total monthly average from all of them for the last four fiscal years."

Section 3 provides as follows:

"The departments, institutions, commissioners and officers of the state upon request shall forthwith furnish to the governor any information desired in relation to the affairs of their respective departments, institutions or officers."

Section 4 provides as follows:

"At the beginning of each regular session of the general assembly the governor shall submit to the general assembly, together with the estimate of such departments, institutions, commissions and officers of the state, his budget of current expenses of the state for the biennial period beginning on the first day of July next thereafter."

I think it is reasonably apparent from all the foregoing that in the first instance the budgetary scheme embodied in the act is related to the regular session of the general assembly in the odd numbered years, and that, except as to section 5, first above quoted, no duty devolves upon any department or institution, and no power vests in the governor with respect to making up the budgets, at any time than for and preceding the regular session. Accordingly, when you ask whether or not the budget commissioner has the right to determine and report on the expenditures for the coming year of the state board of embalming examiners, I might say that strictly speaking, the governor and his appointees have no authority, under the budget act, to make any investigations or recommendations except for the purpose of biennial appropriations in the even numbered years.

Of course, the governor, as the chief executive officer of the state has the constitutional right to recommend policies to the general assembly at the time of convening the legislature in extraordinary session. I need not cite the constitutional provision upon which this statement is based, as it is familiar.

In my opinion the provisions of section 3 and 5 of the budget commission act, may be used by the governor at any time in furtherance of his constitutional power as well as in furtherance of the budget scheme. That is to say, the governor may, in the alternate year, and with a view to calling to the attention of the general assembly such matters as should engage their attention at an extraordinary session, call upon the departments, institutions, commissions and officers of the state for any information desired by him in relation to the affairs of their respective departments; and appoint competent disinterested persons to examine their affairs.

In addition to this, I should incline to the view that by virtue of his mere position, the governor of the state might require information of any of the appointive state officers and boards at his pleasure. This, however, is a conclusion that rests upon inference. In either event the authority to require statements and reports from your board would be that of the governor and not that of any officer known as "budget commissioner," because there is no such officer independent of the governor. As a practical matter, of course, you may well assume that the requests made of you by the budget commissioner are those of the governor and may govern themselves accordingly.

As to the question of whether or not the state board of embalming examiners is a "state board" I, of course, have no doubt whatever that either your board is an agency of the state, and a branch of its executive department, or it has no powers whatever. I would, therefore, conclude that as a general proposition the governor may at any time require of the state board of embalming examiners such information relative to its finances as he may deem proper. But I take it that your question is deeper than that already discussed and goes to whether or not the governor may make use of the information which you may furnish him, through his budget commissioner in the manner suggested by the act to establish a budget system.

Of course, strictly speaking, no proceedings can be had under this act at this time. This matter has already been treated of. But coming to the question as to whether or not the governor might make practical use of the information derived by him from your answers to his questions under his constitutional power, I would have to answer such a question by saying that it would depend upon the extent to which the governor desired to go in recommending remedial legislation. As the law now is, of course, the state board of embalming examiners is independent of the state treasury and requires no appropriation to maintain it. It is provided by section 1339, General Code, that all the expenses of the board shall be paid from the fees received under the provisions of the chapter. Related statutes do not require any of the revenues of the board to be paid into the state treasury. In my opinion, the practice of the board in the past, which has been to keep its revenues in its own possession, accounting for its official acts in its annual reports to the governor, as provided in section 1348, General Code, is the proper one under the statutes as they stand.

If the board were requested to make a statement of its needs for appropriation from the general revenue fund, or any other fund in the state treasury, it could well answer that it had no need of any such appropriation under existing laws. Unless the statutes relating to the state board of embalming examiners were amended the governor certainly cannot make any practical use of any information as to the needs of the board for the ensuing fiscal year, because the revenues of the board and their expenditure are, under the said statutes, beyond the fiscal control of the general assembly.

But should the governor desire to recommend to the general assembly the amendment of the laws relating to the state board of embalming examiners so as to require its revenues to be paid into the state treasury, and thus to subject its expenditures to the biennially exercised control of the legislature through appropriations, and should the general assembly legislate in accordance with such a recommendation, the situation would be entirely changed, and any information acquired by the governor might be put to practical use under amended statutes of the kind suggested.

Under all the circumstances I can only advise that at the present time, under existing laws, any information which the governor might acquire through his budget commissioner cannot be used by him, either under the budge act of 1913 or under his general constitutional power to recommend legislation in such a way as to call for any action by the general assembly in the making of an appropriation for the use of the state board of embalming examiners; but that if the law should be amended so as to require the payment of the board's revenues into the state treasury, then such information might be used by the governor in recommending to the general assembly, under his constitutional powers, the making of an appropriation from the state treasury for the use of the board during the ensuing year.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEES OF ASSISTANT CONSTABLES ARE TO BE PAID IN EACH SEPARATE CASE AT RATE OF $1.50 PER DAY IN CRIMINAL CASES.

A justice of the peace in criminal cases may tax, in favor of a constable, a fee of $1.50 for each assistant constable in each case, notwithstanding the fact that such assistants participate in the making of more than one arrest in a day.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 13th, you inquired of me as follows:

> "May a justice of the peace in criminal cases, tax in favor of a constable, a fee of $1.50 per day for each assistant constable, notwithstanding that several arrests were made or participated in by the assistants on the same day."

Section 3336, General Code, authorizes the employment of assistance by a constable, as follows:

> "In discharging their duties, constables may call to their aid the power of the county, or such assistance as may be necessary."

Section 3347, General Code, inter alia, allows to a constable for "assistants in criminal causes, one dollar and fifty cents per day, each."

This fee must be taxed in favor of the constable, rather than the assistants, because the statute does not recognize the right of the latter to have any fee taxed in their favor. The employment of assistants, under the statute, is by virtue of an arrangement with the constable and they must look to the constable for their compensation. It rests in the discretion of the constable to determine the number of assistants, and there is no doubt of the authority of a justice of the peace to tax in favor of a constable, a fee of one dollar and fifty cents per day for each assistant, when assistants are employed in but one case, in any one day.

Your question is as to the right of a constable to such fee, when there is more than one case in any one day, in which assistants are employed. Doubtless you had in mind the well established principle of law that a public officer cannot recover a per diem compensation from two or more different sources for services performed by him in one day.

This refers to per diem compensation from two or more public sources and not to a case where such per diem is taxed in favor of a public officer against a private individual, and paid by the latter. I have not succeeded in finding any authority defining the rights of the public officers in this respect, but there is a line of decisions in 35 Cyc., page 1562, to the effect that a witness, who, in obedience to a subpoena, attends at the same time in several cases, is entitled to per diem in each case.

It seems to me that the situation of a constable, in respect to the fee for assistants, is no different from that of a witness, who is subpoenaed in more than one case in a day, especially when such several fees are not to be paid from the public treasury, but are taxed against and paid by a private individual.

It would be wholly impracticable to attempt to apportion the per diem of assistants of a constable among all the different parties or according to the time occupied in the disposition of different cases, during any day in which there would be more than one case.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that a justice of the peace may legally tax in favor of a constable, the sum of one dollar and fifty cents for each assistant constable in each case, notwithstanding the fact that such assistants participate in the making of more than one arrest in one day.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUSINESS PAPER AND COMMERCIAL PAPER ARE SYNONYMOUS WITH BANKABLE PAPER—NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

The terms "commercial paper" and "business paper" are used interchangeably with and synonymous with bankable paper and all are used as applying to negotiable paper ordinarily used for the purpose of daily transactions in a bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter in which you ask for an opinion as to what "business" or "commercial" paper is, and in answer thereto I desire to say:

> "The principal distinguishing feature of commercial paper is its negotiability. This means not only that the instrument may be assigned and that the assignee may sue upon it in his own name, but also that he takes it free from equities that may exist between prior parties, and that out of the acceptance and transfer of the paper (often by mere signature of delivery) shall arise the well-established relations and liabilities that are created by the law merchant.
> "7 Cyc. 521."

Black, in his law dictionary, furnishes the following definition:

> "The term, 'commercial paper,' means bills of exchange, promissory notes, bank checks and other negotiable instruments for the payment of money which by their form and on their face purport to be such instruments as are, by the law merchant, recognized as falling under the designation of 'commercial paper.'"

This is substantially no definition at all and is not nearly so clear as the definition from Cyc.

The legal lexicographers do not undertake to make a definition of "business paper," and I am constrained to the view that the terms "business paper" and "commercial paper" have been and are being used interchangeably with, and as a synonym of "bankable paper," and all are used as applying to negotiable paper, whether in draft, note, check or other shape that is ordinarily used for the purposes of the daily transactions in a bank, and are of such character that when going into the hands of an innocent holder for value, pass free from any equities existing between any prior holders thereto.

It occurs to me that the making of your request arises from the fact that the terms in question have been used interchangeably, and, possibly at times, mistakenly.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SPEED ORDINANCE IN A MUNICIPALITY—POWER OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS TO REGULATE SPEED OF MOTOR VEHICLES—POWER OF STATE TO REGULATE SUCH MATTERS.

Municipal corporations are without any authority whatever under the statutes to regulate the speed of motor vehicles or motor cycles within their boundaries. An ordinance or regulation seeking to accomplish such purpose is void, and prosecution cannot be maintained under it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 10th, in which you inquire:

> "Has the council of a municipality the authority under section 3632, G. C., to regulate by ordinance the fast driving or propelling of vehicles through the public highways of the municipality, provided said ordinance in fixing such rates of speed does not violate the provisions of law as found in section 12604, G. C.?"

Section 3632, General Code, is a general statute authorizing municipal corporations:

> "To regulate the use of carts, drays, wagons, hackney coaches, omnibuses, automobiles, and every description of carriages kept for hire or livery stable purposes; to license and regulate the use of the streets by persons who use vehicles, or solicit or transact business thereon; to prevent and punish fast driving or riding of animals, or fast driving or propelling of vehicles through the public highways; to regulate the transportation of articles through such highways and to prevent injury to such highways from overloaded vehicles, and to regulate the speed of interurban, traction and street railway cars within the corporation."

The powers granted by the foregoing statute are very broad and there is no doubt that the council of a municipal corporation has the right to regulate by ordinance the speed of ordinary vehicles on the streets of the municipality.

Your question, however, seems to be directed to the power of a municipality to pass and enforce ordinances regulating the speed of motor vehicles, and to that subject I shall confine this opinion.

Section 12604 and 12608, General Code, are incorporated in the penal statutes relating to motor vehicles. They are as follows:

> Section 12604: "Whoever operates a motor cycle or motor vehicle at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the business and closely built-up portions of a municipality or more than fifteen miles an hour in other portions thereof or more than twenty miles an hour outside of a municipality, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars, and, for a second offense shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars."

Section 12608: "The rates of speed mentioned in section twelve thousand six hundred and four, shall not be diminished or prohibited by an ordinance rule or regulation of a municipality, board or other public authority, but municipalities, by ordinance, may define what are the business and closely built-up portions thereof."

These are special statutes designated to cover the classes of vehicles mentioned in section 12604, to-wit: motor cycles and motor vehicles, and to the extent that they are inconsistent with the general statutes on the subject of regulation of speed of vehicles on the streets of a municipality, the latter must yield.

It will be observed that municipalities are expressly prohibited by section 12608 from passing any ordinance or regulation to diminish or prohibit the rates of speed of motor cycles and motor vehicles, prescribed by section 12604. The regulation of rates of speed of such vehicles is a power reserved to the state and as this power has not been granted to municipal corporations, it cannot be exercised by them. The most that can be done by municipal ordinance in reference to these classes of vehicles, is to define the business and closely built-up portions of the municipality.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that municipal corporations are without any authority whatever under the statutes, to regulate the speed of motor vehicles or motor cycles within their boundaries. An ordinance or regulation seeking to accomplish such purpose, is void, and prosecutions cannot be maintained under it.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WITNESS FEES—FEES OF EXPERT WITNESSES—STATE NOT TO REIMBURSE THE COUNTY FOR PAYMENT OF SUCH FEES.

Where in the trial of a felony case the commissioners employ certain expert witnesses who were paid upon their allowance, and such witnesses were not paid the regular per diem and the mileage allowed to them as witnesses in the common pleas court, in the absence of a specific showing in the cost bill, no witness fees or mileage can be paid out of the state treasury, and in no event can a payment be made to reimburse the county for payments made under favor of section 2494, G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1913.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter in which you inquire:

"In the trial of a felony case, the commissioners employed certain expert witnesses who were paid upon their allowance. Such witnesses were not paid the regular per diem and mileage allowable to them as witnesses in the common pleas court. It does not appear from the information at hand whether or not they appeared in obedience to subpoenas. Is the state liable to the county for the regular witness fees and mileage allowable under section 3014?"

I assume from your statement that the question propounded grows out of the consideration of a cost bill in a felony case where the defendant was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary, but that the cost bill presented is silent upon the question whether the expert witnesses were or were not subpoenaed; but it does appear affirmatively that they were no paid mileage and perdiem under section 3014.

I might restate your question as follows: Is the state liable to the county for the regular witness fees and mileage of expert witnesses, who are paid fees under section 2494, G. C., formerly 1302-1 R. S., where it is not shown that they attended under subpoena and it does not appear that they were paid by the county except under favor of 2494, G. C.

It will be seen that the attorney general of Ohio, in 77 O. S., 337, concedes that the ordinary fees and mileage of an expert witness when attending under subpoena may be "properly taxed" in the bill of costs. This I do not understand to be involved in your question, and there is therefore no occasion for its consideration.

Answering your question specifically, I desire to say that while the codification of the statutes has taken place since the decision in State vs. Auditor, 77 O. S., 333, the sections of the Revised Statutes therein considered will be found in the General Code without any substantial change. It is there held that the fees of expert witnesses under 1302-1 R. S. (2494, General Code,) are not payable out of the state treasury; that rule governs today and where, as I understand this situation, such fees have been paid, that fact does not authorize the conclusion that a part of this sum was witness fees and mileage under section 3014. In other words, in the absence of a specific showing, in the cost bill, no witness fee or mileage can be paid out of the state treasury and in no event can such payment be made to re-imburse a county for payments made under favor of section 2494, G. C.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROVAL OF PLANS BY THE STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—NOT TO ACTUALLY SUPERVISE THE WORK—CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 1183, GENERAL CODE.

Under the provisions of section 1183, General Code, as amended, the state highway commission has authority and is required to approve the design, construction, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts without being given supervision over the work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 11, 1913.

HON. FORREST G. LONG, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 24th, in which you call my attention to section 1183 of the General Code of Ohio, as amended April 18, 1913, (103 O. L., p. 450), and in reference to which you inquire:

> "Does your construction of this act require that the state highway commissioner shall approve the design, construction, maintenance and repair of all bridges and culverts: Whether built by the county commissioners, township trustees, or municipalities: Or is his approval limited to such bridges as are built by state money, or when he is requested to take charge by the authority building the bridge?
> "In other words, must the approval of the state highway commissioner be given to the design, construction, maintenance and repair of all bridges and culverts constructed by public authority, whether the same is built by state money or not."

Amended section 1183, in so far as its provisions are pertinent to your inquiry, reads as follows:

"The state highway commissioner shall have general supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all highways, bridges and culverts which are constructed, improved, maintained or repaired with or by the aid of state money. He shall aid county commissioners in establishing, creating and preparing suitable systems of drainage of highways, and advise with them as to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways, and he shall approve the design, construction, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts. He shall cause plans, specifications and estimates to be prepared for the construction, maintenance or repair of bridges and culverts, when so requested by the authorities having charge thereof; * * *."

Section 1191, as amended (103 O. L., p. 452), provides:

"The state highway commissioner shall cause plans, specifications and estimates to be made for the construction or improvement of all bridges and culverts upon the section of highway to be improved. A certified copy of such plans, specifications and estimates shall be transmitted to the county commissioners as provided for in section 1193 (section 20). The cost of such construction shall be apportioned equally between the state and county in which the improvement is made, except as provided in section 1210-1. The state highway commissioner shall so far as is possible standardize the plans and specifications for bridge construction, and furnish such plans and specifications with estimates of cost of construction to the county commissioners or township trustees upon application for use upon other than inter-county highways."

These two provisions of statute are in pari materia and should be construed together. Section 1191 and the first sentence of section 1183 make it clear that the state highway commissioner is vested with exclusive control of the construction, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts upon state aid roads. These provisions of themselves furnish sufficient authority for the state highway commissioner to assume jurisdiction over the construction, etc., of bridges and culverts on such roads. They are clear and unambiguous, and certainly nothing else was needed to establish with certainty the will of the legislature with respect to the powers of the state highway commissioner over bridges and culverts on state aid roads.

Excluding the first sentence of the portion of section 1183 above quoted, the remainder would have been useless, if it were intended to apply to state aid roads only. I can arrive at no other conclusion, therefore, than that it was intended to apply, and does apply to bridges and culverts on roads constructed by public authorities other than the state highway commissioner. You will observe that the statute imposes no duty upon local authorities to submit the design of bridges and culverts to the state highway commissioner for his approval; no consequences are prescribed for their failure to do so, nor is such a submission and approval made a condition precedent to the making of a contract. The submission to the state highway commissioner of the design, etc., of any such bridge or culvert for his approval, is in my judgment entirely optional with the local authorities having the same in charge, and cannot be enforced by the state highway commissioner or any other authority.

The state highway commissioner is required to approve the design of such bridges and culverts only when such design is sent to him by the local authorities for that purpose.

When the plans for such bridge or culvert are presented to the state highway commissioner, his duty is done when he approves or disapproves the design, construction, maintenance or repair thereof, and certifies his action to the proper officers. This does not mean that the highway commissioner is required, personally or by deputy, to supervise the actual work of construction. He is merely to approve the method of construction, the character of materials therefor, etc., provided by the plans and specifications. That this is the correct and reasonable interpretation of his duty in this respect is apparent from a comparison of the language of the first sentence of section 1183, by which the state highway commissioner is given

> "general supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all highways, bridges, and culverts which are constructed, improved, maintained or repaired with or by the aid of state money," with the latter part which merely requires him to approve the design, construction, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts, without giving him supervision over the work.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PAYMENT OF MONEYS INTO STATE TREASURY BY STATE DEPARTMENTS- STATE UNIVERSITIES NOT AFFECTED BY PROVISIONS OF SECTION 24, G. C.

Ohio University, Miami University, Ohio State University and the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University are not affected by the provisions of section 24, General Code, which provides that state officers, departments, boards and commissions shall pay to the treasurer of state on or before Monday of each week all moneys received by them during the preceding week.

HONORABLE JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of August 26, 1913, asking my opinion as to whether the four Ohio universities are required to comply with the provisions of section 24, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "On or before Monday of each week, every state officer, department, board, or commission shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks, and drafts received for the state, during the preceding week, from fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals, or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed verified statement of such receipts.

The universities affected by the question here made are Ohio University, Miami University, Ohio State University and the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University. The section of the General Code above noted is section 1 of an act passed April 25, 1904, entitled: "An act to provide a depository for state funds." The subsequent sections of the original act (97 O. L., 535) created a board of deposit consisting of the treasurer of state, auditor of state and attorney general. The act makes detailed provisions governing the powers and duties of such board of deposit, and authorizes the selection by such board of banks and trust companies to act as depositories of state funds.

It is obvious that the only moneys, checks or drafts required to be paid to the treasurer of state, in the manner and at the times prescribed by this section, are such as are received by a "state officer, department, board or commission." As to the institutions affected by your inquiry, it may be seriously questioned whether they, or any of them, come within the designation of "state officer, department, board or commission" as those terms are used in this section.

However, as I view the proper construction of said section 24 in its entirety, I do not find that a determination of this particular question is necessary for a solution of the inquiry presented by you and the same is not here determined. It is clear that the only funds required to be paid to the treasurer of state, in the manner and at the times prescribed by this section are those "received for the state." The act of which section 24 is a part is one pertaining to state funds and it is such only as are affected by the provisions of the section.

It is not the intent and purpose of the section to require any funds to be paid into the state treasury except such as, independent of this section, are received for the state, and as such, payable to the state treasurer; and this section, operating on such funds only, expends its whole force in directing the manner and time in which the same shall be paid in. This conclusion, obvious from the language of the section itself and which is effective to exclude the funds of these universities from the operation of the section follows as well, so far as the question of the application of this section to these institutions is concerned from the application of established rules of statutory construction.

At the time of the enactment of section 24, each of these institutions was established and, in a large measure, controlled by special statutes. These special statutes provided that these several institutions should be under the conduct and supervision of boards of trustees, who were empowered and charged with the duty of appropriating, expending and using the income of their respective institutions for the purpose of advancing and promoting the end and purpose of these institutions in the manner contemplated by the laws establishing and controlling them. Save as otherwise expressly provided, these special statutory provisions contemplated that these universities, through their boards of trustees or fiscal officers should retain all moneys collected as income of these respective institutions, and apply and expend the same for their use. Treasurers of these several institutions were provided for and these officers, though in no sense state officers, were, by the provisions of these acts, required to execute bonds in amounts and securities to the approval of the respective boards of these institutions. These special provisions, applying to these several institutions, likewise provided for complete and accurate reports of all receipts and expenditures to be made by the board of trustees to the governor. In brief, at the time of the enactment of section 24, General Code, complete fiscal systems for each of these institutions had been authorized, provided for and contemplated by special statutory provisions. This situation makes applicable the well established rule of statutory construction that a subsequent statute, treating a subject in general terms and not expressly contradicting the provisions of prior acts, shall not be considered as intended to affect more particular and positive provisions of such prior acts, unless it be absolutely necessary to do so in order to give its words any meaning.

(Fosdick vs. Perrysburg, 14 O. S., 472.)

> "It is but a particular application of the general presumption against an intention to alter the law beyond the immediate scope of the statute, to say that a general act is to be construed as not repealing a particular one. * * * It is usually presumed to have only general cases in view, and not particular cases which have been already otherwise provided for by the special act, or what is the same thing, by a local custom. Having already given its attention to the particular subject, and provided for it, the legislature is reasonably presumed not to intend to alter that special provision by a subsequent general enactment, unless that intention is manifested in explicit language, or there be something which shows that the intention of the legislature had been turned to that special act, and that the general one was intended to embrace the special cases within the previous one; or something in the nature of the general one making it unlikely that an exception was intended as regards the special act. The general statute is read as silently excluding from its operation the cases which have been provided for by the special one. * * * *
> "The fact that the general act contains a clause repealing acts inconsistent with it does not diminish the force of this rule of construction."

(Endlich on the Interpretation of Statutes, section 223, 51 Wash., 555).

> "Particular and positive provisions of a prior act are not affected by a subsequent statute treating a subject in general terms and not expressly contradicting the provisions of the prior act, unless such intention is clear."

(Commissioners vs. Board of Public Works, 39 O. S., 628-632.)
State ex rel. vs. MacGregor, 44 O. S., 628-631.

Inasmuch as full force and effect can be given to the provisions of said section 24 by confining its operation to funds which, independent of its provisions, are received for the state and as such made payable to the state treasurer, it follows, by application of the rule of construction just noted, that the funds of these institutions in question are not within the operation of this section, nor affected by its provisions.

Subsequent legislation indicates that it has not been the view of the legislature that these institutions were governed by the provisions of section 24, General Code. For instance, at the time of the enactment of this section it was provided, by special statutory provision applying to Ohio University, that money received by the treasurer of this institution on payments made by persons receiving deeds for university lands on surrender of leases held by them, should be deposited by the treasurer of the university in the state treasury on or before the first day of January next after the receipt of such money. (80 O. L., 193, Sec. 5; R. S., sections 4105-5).

In 1910 these provisions, which were carried into the General Code as section 7936, were amended. (101 O. L., 208). The legislature, however, in amending this section, did not, in anywise change the provisions of the prior law requiring the university treasurer to deposit this money on or before the first day of January next after the receipt of same, but re-enacted these provisions as they were. Again the act of April 2, 1906, declaring the policy of the state with reference to Ohio University, Miami University and Ohio State University, and providing for a tax rate for the support of these several institutions, provided as follows:

> "The expenditure of all moneys under the provisions of this act or for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this act raised or secured from any source whatsoever shall be subject to the inspection of the state bureau of public accounting, the cost of same to be paid by the university or college inspected at the cost as now provided by law."
> (98 O. L., 312, Sec. 9, Sec. 7931, G. C.)

The provisions of this section were enacted after those of section 24, General Code, and they lend color to the view that it was the legislative intention that these institutions, save, of course, as otherwise specially provided, were to retain and expend all moneys raised or secured from any source, and as to such expenditure be subject to the inspection of the state bureau of public accounting.

A question quite identical to that here presented was made in the case of state ex rel. vs. Clauson, (51 Wash., 548). In that case, the statute involved, provided as follows:

> "That it shall be the duty of each state officer or other person (other than county treasurers) who is authorized by law to collect or receive moneys belonging to the state, or to any department or institution thereof, to transmit to the treasurer of state each day, all moneys collected by him on the preceding day, together with a statement of the source from which each item of said money was derived, and to transmit to the state auditor a duplicate of said statement."

The question there arose with respect to the state college of Washington, an institution which was supported by income derived in part from the general and state governments; in part from students for rent, and in part from the sale of its agricultural products. After the passage of the act above noted, the treasurer and state governments, a certain sum of money which was deposited by him with the state treasurer under the belief that he was required to do so by the provisions of the act. Subsequently, a demand was made by the board of regents on the state auditor to issue warrants against the funds deposited by the treasurer of the board with the state treasurer, to pay for certain improvements and running expenses of the college. The demand was refused by the auditor on the ground that the money deposited by the treasurer of the board of regents was, under the act, properly payable to the treasurer of state. The court, in determining the question, held that the obvious purpose of the act was to daily place in the hands of the state treasurer the finances of the state, but held further, that inasmuch as special statutory provision had been made establishing and controlling the college with reference to its finances, that it was not the intention of the legislature, by the general language of the act there in question, to include the funds of the college within its operation. In other words, the court there held that the college funds were not part of the state finances to which only the act thereunder consideration was intended to apply.

Upon considerations above noted, I am of the opinion that these institutions in question, to-wit Ohio University, Miami University, Ohio State University and the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce Universty are not affected by the provisions of section 24, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE DECISION OF JUDGE DAY OF THE FEDERAL DISTRICT COURT OF THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF OHIO, IN CONSTRUING SECTION 21-2 OF THE WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 17, 1913, in which you call my attention to the decision of Judge Day of the federal district court of the northern district of Ohio, in construing section 21-2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act of this state.

You ask for an analysis of Judge Day's opinion, together with a statement of my view of sections 23, 26 and 29 of such said act. The act in question is to be found in 102 O. L., 524, section 21-1 of which provides that:

> "All employers who employ five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment who shall not pay into the state insurance fund the premiums provided by this act, shall be liable to their employes for damages suffered by reason of personal injuries sustained in the course of employment caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of the employer, or any of the employer's officers, agents or employes, and also to the personal representatives of such employes where death results from such injuries and in such action the defendant shall not avail himself or itself of the following common law defenses.
> "The defense of the fellow-servant rule, the defense of the assumption of risk, or the defense of contributory negligence."

Section 21-2 reads as follows:

> "But where a personal injury is suffered by an employe, or when death results to an employe from personal injuries while in the employ of an employer in the course of employment, and such employer has paid into the state insurance fund the premium provided for in this act, and in case such injury has arisen from the wilful act of such employer or any of such employer's officers or agents, or from the failure of such employer, or any of such employer's officers or agents, to comply with any municipal ordinance or lawful order of any duly authorized officer, or any statute for the protection of the life or safety of employes, then in such event, nothing in this act contained shall affect the civil liability of such employer, but such injured employe, or his legal representative in case death results from the injury, may, at his option, either claim compensation under this act or institute proceedings in the courts for his damage on account of such injury, and such employer shall not be liable for any injury to an employe, or to his legal representative in case death results, except as provided in this act.
> "Every employe, or legal representative in case death results, who makes application for an award from the state liability board of awards, waives his right to exercise his option to institute proceedings in any court. Every employe or his legal representative in case death results, who exercises his option to institute proceedings in court as provided in section 21-2, waives his right to any award; except as provided in section 36 of this act."

In view of the extreme amount of work imposed upon this department, I have been unable to answer this inquiry as soon as I should have liked, and because of the importance of this question, I shall herein express my views of the opinion of Judge Day, and the proper construction to be placed upon this section of the act, and shall defer discussing the other provisions referred to in your letter, until a later date.

In the case before Judge Day, it appears that one John J. McWeeny brought an action to recover damages against The Standard Boiler and Plate Company upon two grounds: (1) That the foreman was guilty of a wilful act, producing injuries for which recovery was sought, and (2), The failure of the company to comply with laws engaged for the protection and safety of the employes. It is only necessary here to discuss the first ground.

The facts show that the plaintiff was engaged in erecting a sheet iron tank, and while in the course of his employment was directed by his foreman to go to the top of a scaffold, which had been built around a tank, and used for pulling a line, to which was attached a heavy sheet iron plate, suspended from the derrick. When complying with this order, which is designated as a wilful act, the derrick fell, and the plaintiff was injured.

There was no question that the defendant had paid the premiums required by each act in question, and had complied with its terms regarding the posting of notices. The court charged the jury that it must be proved that the act of the foreman was a wilful act, and in defining the meaning of the expression "wilful act" he said:

> "To constitute a wilful act in this case, you must find that the action of Fisher (the foreman) was such an action as to evince an utter disregard of consequences, so as to inflict the injuries complained of. In other words, that negligent action was such recklessness reaching in degree to utter disregard of consequences which might probably follow. If the action of Fisher in ordering McWeeny to work on this scaffold and in connection with this derrick was done under such circumstances as to evince an utter disregard for the safety of McWeeny and the other employes working there in connection with him, then that action was a wilful act, but if the action of Fisher was merely the want of ordinary care on his part, then it would not be a wilful act on his part, and McWeeny could not recover.
> "Now, negligence is the want of ordinary care, and the want of ordinary care which constitutes mere negligence is not the negligence comprehended by this act, but it must be a wilful act and a wilful act must be such an act as utterly disregards the safety of others, or such recklessness as would utterly disregard the probable consequences which might result in injury to some other person."

In discussing this phase of the question, the court also says that the action of the foreman in ordering McWeeny to work upon the structure must have been either intentional or given under such circumstances as to evince an utter and reckless disregard for the safety of McWeeny and the other employes about the derrick, in order that there might be recovery.

The foregoing quotation and statement substantially state the position of the court in order to enable us to present the analysis for which you ask, and hence I have not dealt more fully with the charge.

It is clear, I think, that Judge Day has taken the position that the phase "wilful act" as used in this act really means wilful injury, and in this, I think that he is correct.

It might be argued that the word wilful was purely tautological, as the word act carries with it the implication of some positive action on the part of the employer or his servants, proceeding from volition, and that wilful adds nohing to this; if something positive is done by one, it necessarily follows that it must have proceeded from the will, and, therefore, was wilful. This is not the sense in which the word wilful is used in this act. It must be read in connection with the language preceding it to the effect that in case the injury has resulted from a wilful act, etc., in other words, wilful must be read in connection with the resultant injury, or to use the definition to be found in Black's law dictionary:

> "Wilful act may be defined as follows: Intending the result which actually came to pass; designed; intentional; proceeding from the conscious motion of the will."

Furthermore, the section quoted must be read in connection with section 21-1, which is in pari materia, and consequently must be construed in connection with the section which renders employers who fail to contribute to the said fund liable for injury sustained by the wrongful act, neglect or default of the employer.

Now, if the word act as used in the section which we are discussing merely meant something positive, rather than something negative, it would be unnecessary to have inserted it in the section dealing with employers who do not contribute, because they would be liable even though they did contribute, and hence, other language should have been employed in section 21-1.

We cannot assume that the legislature intended the word wilful to be meaningless as used in section 21-2; not only is this true, but section 20-1 adds additional force to this reasoning. This section provides that the employer paying the premiums shall not be liable to respond in damages at common law, or by suit, save as otherwise provided in the act, for injury or death of his employes. This shows that it was the clear and manifest intent of the legislators to preclude resort to courts by employers of those who contribute to the fund, except in extraordinary cases; if they were allowed to go into the court merely because their injuries were occasioned by an act of the employer or his servants, it would be to give the law a construction that the legislature never intended. It would be an absurdity to say that the employe could not recover if he was injured by neglect, and could recover if he was hurt by reason of an act of his master, or a fellow-servant.

The only distinction between act and neglect is, as we have said before, that one is positive and the other negative; the one is not necessarily any more serious or more violative of duty than the other. If Judge Day had taken the theory we here deny of this act, he would have told the jury that the plaintiff could recover if the employe was injured because of any positive action on the part of the fellow-servant. He limited this by requiring that the act be intentional, or done in reckless disregard of the rights of an employe.

The serious question, therefore, is whether the court in the foregoing decision correctly defined the term wilful, when used in the sense in which we have here construed it.

In addition to the foregoing definition of wilful act given in Black's dictionary, I wish to call attention to the following definition of the word "wilful:"

> "Resulting from the exercise of one's will; voluntary; intentional; distinguished in law from accidental or involuntary and generally implying evil intent and malice."

"Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary.

"Due to one's own will; spontaneous; voluntary; deliberate; intentionally."

Century Dictionary.

This makes clear the fact that in order that an act may be wilful, it must be intentionally done, and it is antithetical to that which is accidental or involuntary. It carries with it the idea of deliberation and intent. As used in the workmen's compensation law, it means that the act in question must have been done with the purpose or intent of causing injury. To state the proposition with reference to the concrete facts, one may say that to constitute a wilful injury there must be designed purpose and intent to do wrong and inflict the injury.

Recklessness and heedlessness as well as negligence carry with them the necessary inference of unconsciousness. In those cases the party does not think of the act or consequences. If he does think of the consequences, his conduct is intentional, while if he does not think of it, he is negligent, or heedless or reckless.

Recklessness cannot devolve into intention to hurt, otherwise, it would follow that a thought may be absent from the mind yet present. He who is guilty of rashness thinks of the given consequences, but by reason of an error of judgment arising from insufficient advertence he concludes that the given consequence will not follow the act in the given instance. All this is opposed to intention.

It is true that it is often difficult to determine whether one intends or whether he is merely heedless, or reckless, but the acts to which we must resort as evidence of the state of his mind are for the consideration of the jury, and it is for them to decide whether or not from such evidence, the acts are wilful. It will not do for the court to say that a heedless disregard of consequences renders an act wilful. To use the language of Mr. Austin in his lectures on jurisprudence: "It is therefore clear to me that intention is always separate from negligence, heedlessness or rashness by a precise line of demarcation. The state of the party's mind is always determined, although it may be difficult, judging from his conduct, to ascertain the state of his mind."

It is failure on the part of Judge Day fully to appreciate this that has lead him into what we regard as fundamental error in this case, and a study of the case arising under what is known as the "last clear chance" doctrine will readily develop the reasons guiding him in his construction of the law. It will be remembered that this doctrine is based upon the hypothesis that when one has, by his contributory negligence, placed himself in a perilous situation, the defense of contributory negligence cannot be taken advantage of, if the defendant after having ascertained that situation of peril in time to have averted the injury, in reckless disregard of the rights of such person, injures him.

It is in these cases that charges such as those used by Judge Day obtain, and many of the decisions contain exactly the language used by him, with certain modifications and limitations that he refrained from stating and which he should have done, as we shall hereafter show; but we must continually keep in mind the facts upon which those decisions are based, and the legal principles governing them.

In cases of that kind not only does wilful injury preclude the defense of contributory negligence but wantonness is also effective to deprive the defendant of such defense. Hence, it follows that wantonness and wilfulness accomplish exactly the same result, and therefore, the courts were not required to make any distinction between them. In the present question, however, the word wantonness is not used and we must confine ourselves strictly to wilfulness.

That these two terms are not interchangeable is clearly apparent from an examination of the cases and a careful study of the underlying principles of the law of negligence.

We have already defined wilful injury so that it is only left for us to determine what the word "wantonness" comprehends. The courts define it as reckless indifference or disregard of the usual or probable consequences of doing an act. Purpose and intent to injure are no ingredients of it. Yet, the very explanation of wilfulness as given by Judge Day carries with it not only the meaning of the word wilful, but also the meaning of the word wanton. In fact, his language in expressing the meaning of the former word contains many elements of the definition given by courts to the word wanton, and is only erroneous in describing the latter word in that it does not sufficiently set out the necessity of consideration by the actor of the consequences of his act, as we shall hereafter show.

> "Railway vs. Bowers, 20, So. 345.
> "L. & N. Ry. Co. vs. Calvert, 54, So. 184.
> "A wilful act means an act which shows that the person intended to do what was done; wanton act means an act done in total disregard of the rights of others.
> "Gosa vs. So. Ry., 45, S. E., 810."

Possibly the clearest and best distinction to be found is that stated in Hazel vs. Railroad, 173 Fed., 431, in the following language:

> "There are two ways in which wilful and wanton injury may be made to appear; first by an intentional act done with the purpose and design of doing the wrong or inflicting the injury ensuing. The doing of such an act the law denominates wilful—that is done knowingly and purposely with the direct object of injuring another, and, second, by a reckless indifference or disregard of the natural consequences of doing an act or omitting to do an act, which is by some authorities denominated wanton negligence."

Judge Hull in Griffin vs. Railway Company, 21 G. C., 547, on page 551 of his opinion very clearly defines wilful act thus:

> "A wilful act, a wilful tort, is one done intentionally where one injures another with the wilful intent to do him unlawful injury. It is somewhat used as a definition of a legal malice, and the use of this adjective 'wilful' and the adverb 'wilfully' in this petition was intended to designate this injury on the part of the defendant to the plaintiffs as an intentional injury.
> "Wilful imports a much more positive affirmative mental condition prompting the act than wanton. Many judges hold, and with much reason, that 'wilful negligence' is a contradiction, an anomaly. It has been generally held that wilful injury is not charged by an allegation that the act was committed recklessly, wantonly, purposely, wrongfully, or unlawfully. * * * When it is sought to hold a master liable for the act of the servant, it is sometimes material to inquire whether the act complained of emanated from the wilful or malicious state of mind of the servant.
> "Telegraph Company vs. Catlett, 171 Fed., 71."

That there must be evidence tending to show maliciousness of the offender—that is intention to do injury—is made clear in:

> "Hoberg vs. Collins and Company, 78 Atl., 166.
> "See especially Sharkey vs. Skelton, 76 Atl., 950.
> "Note Shearman and Redfield on Negligence, 6th Ed., sections 6, 19."

Now, even if it be conceded, which is probably correct, that the jury might, under certain conditions, infer conscious intent to occasion the injury complained of from the recklessness and disregard of consequences on the part of the master, that would be solely a matter for the jurors to decide as a question of fact. In other words, it is an inference of fact rather than presumption of law, and yet the court treated it as the latter. The distinction between an inference and a presumption is well made in:

"See also Leighton vs. Morrill, 159 Mass., 271, 278.

"When the intention of a party is to be ascertained from disputed or ambiguous circumstances, the necessary inferences to be drawn are for the determination of the jury.

"Continental Lumber Co. vs. Mimshaw & Co., 109 N. W. 760; 118 N. W. 1057."

Judge Day in the charge used the words "negligent action" in connection with that part of the charge to which we object, which is practically saying to the jury that they can infer wilfulness from negligence. Furthermore, the recklessness and disregard of consequences might not have been such as to have lead the jury to believe that the foreman in the case under consideration had any intention of occasioning injury, and therefore, the instruction was improper; in addition to all this, the charge is technically incorrect in not carrying the definition of wilfulness to its logical conclusion, even if wantonness and wilfulness might be treated as synonymous. Observe also that the words wilful negligence are not used in the statute, "wilful act" is the expression employed.

In order that these two subjects may be correctly embodied in the instruction, it must appear that the injury was intentional, and that the act producing it was wilful, or of such character that the injury must reasonably have been anticipated as a natural and probable consequence of the act. It is not sufficient that there merely be an utter disregard of consequences, but the resultant injury must have been reasonably anticipated as the natural and probable result of the act.

The jury should have been told this in no unmistakable terms, and the charge would have been bad in this particular, even if the word wilful be not given the restricted meaning, which we contend should be here given it. It would not have been a correct statement to the jury, even under the "last clear chance" doctrine. This is elucidated in:

"C. C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. vs. Starks, 92 N. E. 54."

With these considerations in mind, you will readily see that it is our judgment that the court should have defined a wilful act that would have justified recovery, in the case before Judge Day, as an intentional act done with the purpose and design of inflicting the ensuing injury. He should there have stopped instead of making any reference to reckless disregard of the consequences of the act; and further, you will also take it as my opinion that the word wilful act as used in said section must be construed as carrying with it an intention on the part of the employer, or any of his officers, or agents, to produce the result which actually came to pass, viz., the injury to the employe, and it must have been designed and intentional. Such construction seems to me to be in harmony with the scope and object of the law, which was to prevent the employe from recovery, unless something more than mere negligence or wantonness existed.

Trusting that the foregoing fully answers your inquiry in this regard, I am,

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

EXPENSE OF A COMMON PLEAS JUDGE—MAXIMUM AMOUNT ALLOWABLE—DEFINITION OF YEAR AS USED IN SECTION 2253, G. C.

1. The maximum amount payable under the law upon an expense voucher of a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas whose term began on Jan. 1st, 1913, and ended on Jan. 1, 1914, is $300.00 and would be $300.00, providing the expense of the judge equalled that sum.

2. The year mentioned in section 2253, G. C., has reference solely to the year of the term of office and not to the calendar year, fiscal year, or year beginning when the law went into effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 29, 1913, you call our attention to section 253, General Code, prior to amendment 103, Ohio Laws, 419, and likewise the same section as amended in 103, Ohio Laws, at page 419, and you then ask:

> "1. What is the maximum amount payable under the law upon an expense voucher of judge of the court of common pleas whose term began on Jan. 1st, 1913, ending Jan. 1st, 1914.
> "2. Does the year mentioned in the above section of law refer to the calendar year, fiscal year, year of the term of office, or year beginning when law went into effect?"

In answering your two inquiries above set out I shall answer the second of such inquiries first.

Section 2251, General Code, provides what shall be the annual salary of the judges of the court of common pleas, and Section 2252, General Code, provides an additional salary to be paid quarterly from the treasury of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor.

The salary provided in section 2251, General Code, is to be paid by the state and under section 2260, General Code, the same is to paid by the state and under section 2260, General Code, the same is to be paid monthly.

Section 2253, General Code, both prior to amendment in 103, Ohio Laws, 419, states that the expenses to be received by the judge in any one year shall be in addition to the annual salary, and since the annual salary can only refer to the year of service of a judge, I am of the opinion that the year mentioned in section 2253, General Code, refers solely to the year of the term of office and not to the calendar year, fiscal year, or year beginning when the law went into effect.

Second:—Section 2253, General Code, prior to amendment provided that in addition to the annual salary each judge of the court of common pleas "shall receive his actual and necessary expenses not exceeding one hundred and fifty dollars in any one year."

Said section 2253, General Code, was amended in amended senate bill No. 36, (103, O. L., 419), passed on April 29, 1913, and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 8, 1913; such bill was not declared to be an emergency measure. The sole amendment to said section 2253, General Code, was to increase the allowance for actual and necessary expenses of judges of the court of common pleas to not to exceed three hundred dollars in any one year.

It would appear that the expenses which were to be allowed to the judges of the court of common pleas was limited up to the time of the going into effect of amended senate bill No. 36 to not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars. The legislature then by the amendment referred to extended the allowance by the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars. This would make the maximum total allowance at the end of the official year three hundred dollars, and I feel that it was the intention of the legislature that such total allowance should be granted to the judge at the end of the year which he was then serving, and that it is not necessary for him or you to apportion the expenses between the allowance as it stood prior to amendment and subsequent thereto. In other words, I do not believe that the duty is placed upon you to do other than to consider what the expense of a certain year was at the end of such year. While it is true that had the statute been repealed instead of amended it might well have been considered that the judges would be entitled up to the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars for the amount incurred by them up to the time of the repeal, or should such section have been amended by reducing the amount instead of increasing the same, that the same conclusion would have been reached to wit: that the judges should have been entitled to the maximum allowance of one hundred and fifty dollars, yet I believe it was the intention of the legislature to increase the amount to three hundred dollars irrespective of the time during the year in which the expenses were incurred.

I, therefore, hold that the maximum amount payable under the law for a year beginning January 1, 1913, and ending January 1, 1914, would be three hundred dollars, and that you would be authorized to allow such maximum if the expenses equal that sum.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATIONERY—SUPERVISOR OF PUBLIC PRINTING—NOT TO FURNISH STATIONERY TO LIQUOR LICENSE BOARDS—OTHER PROVISION MADE IN THE STATUTES FOR THESE DEPARTMENTS.

The state and county liquor licensing boards are authorized to provide themselves with supplies, stationery, etc., by statute, consequently there is no authority for the state supervisor of public printing to furnish this material to said departments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1913.

HON. FRANK HARPER, Supervisor of Public Printing, Columbus Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 12, 1913, in which you inquire:

> "Requisition has been made on this department by the state liquor licensing board for the printing of pamphlets of the license law, letter heads and envelopes for the state board, and letter heads and envelopes for each of the county boards.
> "Will you please give me an opinion as to whether this department is to furnish the printed matter for the state and county licensing boards?

> "Section 5 of license act, 103, O. L., 218. The state liquor licensing board shall provide itself with an office at the seat of government. Said board shall employ the necessary clerks, examiners, inspectors, stenographers and other assistants as it deems necessary, and fix their compensation, subject to the approval of the governor; and shall also provide itself with the necessary furniture, books, stationery and other things that may be necessary for the proper conducting of the office; and may incur such other expenses as it deems expedient, subject to the approval of the governor.

"The commissioners, the secretary, clerks, examiners, inspectors, stenographers, and other assistants, that may be employed shall be entitled to receive their actual and necessary expenses while traveling on the business of the board. Such expenses shall be itemized and sworn to by the person who incurred the same, allowed by the commission and paid as other expenses are paid.

"The board may remove any of its employes for any violation of law or the rules of the board, or for any neglect of duty or for other good and sufficient cause.

"Section 13, of license act, 103, O. L., 220. Each county board shall provide itself with an office at the county seat. Each board may employ such clerk and employes as it deems necessary for the transaction of business and fix their compensation, and may provide itself with books, stationery and other paraphernalia, and may incur such other expenses for its operation as may be necessary for its business. All expenses, including compensation of clerks and employes, shall be subject to the approval of the state board and the county board shall certify to the state board on the first day of each month, a statement of all expenses of such county board for the month preceding, and upon approval thereof the state board shall cause same, together with the compensation of the commissioners and secretary, to be paid in the same manner as its own expenses are paid. The members of the county board, its secretary and employes shall be entitled to receive their actual and necessary expenses while traveling on the business of the board. Such expenses shall be itemized and sworn to and paid as other expenses of the board.

"In certifying the statement of expenses herein provided for the county board shall also certify all receipts of whatsoever kind received during the preceding month.

"Section 46 of license act, 103 O. L., 236. All fees and other moneys received by the state board shall be paid to and accounted for by the secretary, and by him paid into the state treasury daily, to the credit of a special fund for the use of said board to be known as the 'state liquor license fund.' A detailed verified statement of such receipts shall be filed with the auditor of state at the time of making such deposit.

"All expenses of the state board, including salaries, and all expenses, including salaries, certified by the various county boards to the state board, and approved by the state board, shall be paid by the treasurer of a state on warrant of the auditor of state. Before the auditor of state shall issue his warrant a voucher, signed by at least two members of the state board, with a detailed statement attached thereto, shall be filed with the auditor of state.

"At any time it is deemed advisable, by the unanimous vote of the state liquor licensing board and subject to the approval of the governor, said board may certify to the auditor of state and the treasurer of state whatever sum said state board may fix as aforesaid, as being necessary for the use of the board, and upon receipt of such certificate said sum as in said certificate indicated shall be transferred from said state liquor license fund to the general fund of the state.

"The state liquor licensing board shall make a quarterly report to the governor of all its financial transactions, and at least once a year, or oftener if ordered by the governor, the books, accounts and financial transactions of said board shall be thoroughly and critically inspected and examined by the department of the auditor of state, which department is hereby authorized so to do."

From a consideration of these sections it is made clear that the state and county licensing boards are authorized to provide themselves with supplies, stationery, etc., and this I believe to be in full harmony with section 2 of article XV. of the constitution as amended in 1912, and therefore, there is no authority to require you to do the things mentioned in your letter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PAY WITNESS FEES—POLICE OFFICER NOT ENTITLED TO WITNESS FEES—CITY CLERK UNDER CIVIL SERVICE—SECRETARY AND ASSISTANT TO DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE SUBJECT TO NON-COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

1. The municipal civil service commission has no authority to pay fees to witnesses in the matters heard before the commission arising in the department of safety.

2. Where under an ordinance of the city of Mansfield the council elects its clerk, the municipal civil service commission has the right to place the clerk of council under civil service—the civil service commission is not authorized to place the secretary and assistant of the director of public service in the classified service.

3. A person legally appointed during the interim between the time the civil service law became effective and January 1, 1914, and holding such position on January 1, 1914, is considered an incumbent and would be subject to a non-competitive examination.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1913.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 13, 1913, you inquire:

"Members of municipal civil service commissions in the state have submitted to us the following list of questions on which they request we obtain the ruling of your department.

"First:—Has the municipal civil service commission any authority to pay witness fees to witnesses in matters heard before the commission arising in the department of safety, either under the statute prior to the going into effect of the present statute, and also under the present statute?

"If this question is answered in the affirmative, will an employe in the fire division of the department of safety be entitled to witness fees upon being called as a witness, and at the same time be entitled to his pay as fireman?

"At the trial held before the civil service commission, arising in the safety department, at the request of the commission, a police officer was assigned for duty at the trial by the chief of police. It happened to be the day off for the officer assigned. This officer now presents a bill for services at said trial.

"Has the commission any authority to pay this bill?

"Second:—Under an ordinance of the city of Mansfield, the council elects its clerk. Under section 19 or 486-19 has the municipal civil service commission the right to place the clerk of council with the consent of the mayor under civil service? Would the same ruling apply to the secretary of the director of service as well as the assistant to the director of service?

"Third:—Where an employe of a municipality has been appointed since the civil service law passed April 28, 1913, went into effect, is the appointee an incumbent under the provisions of paragraph 10, section 486-10, of this act? Or is he a temporary appointee and subject to a competitive examination under the provisions of paragraph 14, section 486-14?"

The payment of witness fees is statutory and this is especially true where such fees are to be paid from public funds.

The civil service law as applied to cities, before the recent repeal and amendment, will be considered first.

Section 4505, General Code, provides in part:

"The commission, in all hearings or appeals before it, shall have the same powers to administer oaths and to secure the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers as are conferred in this chapter upon the mayor."

This provision refers to the manner of securing attendance of witnesses and the power to administer oaths. It does not provide for payment of witness fees, or refer to any other provision for that purpose. This provision refers to sections 4489, et seq., General Code, which authorize the mayor to investigate the enforcement of the civil service.

Section 4489, General Code, provided in part:

"In the course of such investigation, the mayor or such appointee may administer oaths and secure by subpoena both the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers relevant to such investigation. Such subpoena shall be served by any officer authorized to serve civil process.

Section 4492, General Code, provided the procedure when a witness refused to obey a subpoena.

Section 4493, General Code, provided for payment of fees to such witnesses as follows:

"The fees for witnesses for such attendance and travel shall be the same fees as witnesses receive before the court of common pleas, which fees and the fees of the officer serving such witnesses shall be paid from the appropriation for the expenses of such department.

This section specifically applies to attendance at the mayor's investigation. It does not cover hearings before the civil service commission.

The provision of section 4505, General Code, above quoted, is not broad enough to include the payment of fees to witnesses.

I find no provision under the former civil service law which authorized the civil service commission to pay fees to witnesses for attendance at hearings before it.

Therefore, under the former law the municipal civil service commission had no authority to pay witness fees in hearings before it.

As to the new civil service law:

Section 7 of the civil service act, section 486-7, General Code, provides in part:

> "Fourth:—Have power to subpoena and require the attendance in this state of witnesses and the production thereby of books and papers pertinent to the investigations and inquiries hereby authorized, and to examine them and such public records as it shall require in relation to any matter which it has authority to investigate. Fees shall be allowed to witnesses, and on their certificate, duly audited, shall be paid by the state treasurer, for attendance and traveling, as provided in section 3012 of the General Code for witnesses in courts of record."

"The commission" herein referred to is the state civil service commission as is plainly shown by section 6, which provides in part:

The commission shall maintain suitable offices in the city of Columbus.

This provision can only apply to the state civil service commission and "the commission" referred to in section 7 is the same commission as referred to in section 6.

Section 19 of the civil service act, section 486-19, General Code, provides in part:

> "Said municipal commission shall have and exercise all other powers and perform all other duties with respect to the civil service of such city and city school district, as herein prescribed and conferred upon the state civil service commission with respect to the civil service of the state; and all authority granted to the state commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction shall be held to grant the same authority to the municipal commission with respect to the service under its jurisdiction. The expenses and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city.

This provision refers to the power and authority of the municipal civil service commission. It does not refer to the payment of fees to witnesses.

I find no provision in the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 698, et seq., the civil service law, which authorizes a municipal civil service commission to pay fees to witnesses for attendance at hearings before it. Such commission cannot therefore pay such fees.

You ask as to the payment of a police officer in attendance at a hearing before a municipal civil service commission.

The police officer was directed to attend by the chief of police, but at the request of the civil service commission. The duties performed were evidntly in the line of his official duties. It is to be presumed that his salary would cover these services.

It appears that the police officer served on his day off. The civil service commission had nothing to do with this. I find no authority granted to the municipal service commission to appoint or to have appointed an officer or constable for attendance at hearings before it.

The civil service commission would not therefore have any authority to pay the officer who served at such hearing.

Section 4486, General Code, provided:

> "The commission shall make such other rules and regulations as are not inconsistent with this chapter for the promotion and the betterment of the service. The council shall provide for the salaries, if any, of the commission, for such clerical force, examiners, necessary expenses and accommodations as may be necessary for the wrok of the commission."

This section will not include a police officer attending the hearings before the commission.

Your second inquiry calls for a construction of a part of section 19 of the civil service act, section 486-19, General Code.

Said part reads:

> "The placing of additional officers in the classified list in any such city in addition to those specified in section 8 hereof, when approved by the chief executive authority of such city, shall not be deemed inconsistent with the provisions of this act."

Section 8 referred to, places certain described positions in the unclassified service and all others, "for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations," are placed in the classified service.

The foregoing portion of section 19 applies to "officers." Employes and positions are not mentioned. Throughout the civil service act a distinction is maintained between officers and employes.

Where a provision is to include both employes and officers both of these terms, or some similar terms are used which will include both officers and employes. Or the language used is broad enough to include both.

For example in section 1 of the civil service act it is provided:

> "The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust * * *"

Again in the same section:

> "6. The term 'employe' or 'subordinate' signifies any person holding a position subject to appointment, removal, promotion, or reduction by an appointing officer."

In section 8, branch (a):

> "The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions * * *"

Also in branch (b):

> "The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the counties, cities and city school district thereof, * * *

"1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments * * *"

In section 9:

"* * * the commission shall put into effect rules for the classification of offices, positions and employments in the classified service, * * *."

The part of section 19 under consideration provides that shall not be inconsistent with the provisions of the civil service act.

"The placing of additional officers in the classified list"

The word "officers" does not include employes. The fact that in other parts of the act the legislature has used words which clearly include officers and employes and in this section has used only the word "officers" is significant. It clearly shows that this provision does not apply to employes.

You specifically ask in reference to the clerk of council and the secretary and assistant of the director of public service.

The clerk of council has been heretofore held to be in the classified service. The secretary and assistant of the director of public service are employes, and they do not, therefore come within the provisions of section 19, under consideration.

The civil service commission is not authorized by section 19 of the civil service act to place the secretary and assistant of the director of public service in the classified service.

Your third inquiry is as to whether appointments made after the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 698, became effective and prior to January 1, 1914, are to be considered as incumbents:

Section 2 of the civil service act provides:

"Method of appointment. On and after January 1, 1914, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of this state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof shall be made only according to merit and fitness to be ascertained as far as practicable by examination which, as far as practicable, shall be competitive; and on and after January 1, 1914, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service under the government of this state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

Section 10 of said act, section 486-10, General Code, provides in part:

"The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service. Reasonable notice of all such non-competitive examinations shall conform in character to those of the competitive service."

By virtue of section 2 appointments are to be made in the civil service in accordance with the provisions of said act on and after January 1, 1914.

The word "incumbents" in section 10 refers to persons legally appointed and holding the office or position on January 1, 1914.

The new law does not cover the manner of appointment until January 1, 1914.

Section 14 of the civil service act applies to "temporary and exceptional appointments." By virtue of the provisions of section 2, supra, this applies to appointments made on and after January 1, 1914, and not to those made prior thereto.

Therefore, a person legally appointed, during the interim between the time the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 698, became effective after January 1, 1914, and holding the position on January 1, 1914, would be considered an incumbent under section 10 of said act and would not be a temporary appointee under the provisions of section 14, thereof.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF MILITARY AUTHORITIES TO PURCHASE CASKETS—CONTRACT—STATE TO PAY FOR SUCH CASKETS AS WERE USED.

Where an undertaker ordered a carload of caskets for the city of Dayton during the flood in that city and a captain of the national guard stationed in the city is said to have agreed to take these caskets on the credit of the state, the state should pay a reasonable price for such caskets as were actually used by it, and the military authorities should not attempt to pay for such caskets as were not used.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1913.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of December 5th, you submitted the following for my consideration:

> "1. I am submitting papers in the case of the Richmond Casket Company against the state of Ohio, and would request your legal opinion as to the liability of the state in the premises. This claim was before the military board in Dayton and they could not reach an adjustment with the Richmond Casket Company.
> "2. A brief statement of the case is given below and the further facts can be had by reference to the correspondence and affidavits:
> "On the evening of March 26th, or 27th, Frank Riessinger, an undertaker, living on West Third street, Dayton, Ohio, in a section of the town which was out of the water, wired the Richmond Casket Company for a car load of caskets for immediate shipment to him. The Richmond Casket Company in their letter stated that Riessinger was not a desirable risk for a car load of caskets and that they consulted with the commercial club in Richmond as to what they should do and the secretary of the commercial club advised them that in all probability there was great need for caskets.

"According to the statement of the Richmond Casket Company they started to work about midnight and made and shipped a car load of caskets to their own order, not caring to ship an open order to Riessinger: That on the afternoon of Friday, March 28, the president of the company came over to Dayton and in company with Mr. Riessinger endeavored to locate me, the military commander of the Dayton military district and get authority from me to take these caskets in on the account of the state of Ohio; that they failed to locate me, which is perfectly probable, as I was a very busy man on that Friday; that on Saturday morning, March 29th, Frank Riessinger got in touch with Captain J. E. Gimperling, quartermaster, Ohio national guard, and here the story begins to vary and the alleged liability of the state of Ohio is said to begin.

"3. As a preliminary statement, I will say that the Pennsylvania freight office, in the city of Dayton, had been under eleven feet of water and on Saturday was not opened for business. The railroad bridge connecting the west and east sides of the town was down and there was practically no communication between the county west of the Miami river and the east side. The Pennsylvania tracks from Richmond to Dayton were in fair condition and the car was on a siding in west Dayton. For what happened that morning I refer you to the affidavits of the representative of the Richmond Casket Company, a Mr. Hirchcock, of Richmond, who claims to have been in Dayton, and Captain Gimperling himself. Gimperling, you will notice claims to have had no knowledge of the facts as stated above and that he had no intention of assuming this responsibility for the state of Ohio, but the company claim that he was acting for the state of Ohio and that his telephone or telegram, directing delivery to Frank Riessinger was an assumption by the state of Ohio of the bill for the entire car load of caskets.

"4. This department has been ready and willing at all times during this controversy to pay for the caskets used but has refused to assume the liability for the car and has only been willing to pay for the caskets used on a basis of quantum meruit. As the legal representative of the Richmond Casket Company is pressing for settlement, I am submitting all papers to you for your opinion. At any time I will be very glad to call at your office and give you any further information or go over the papers with you."

I have carefully examined all of the correspondence submitted by you in connection with your communication, and I am unable to find anything therein which discloses the slightest evidence tending to show that there was anything in the nature of an order by Captain Gimperling, or any other representative of the national guard, for the entire car load of these caskets.

In his affidavit Captain Gimperling states that it was represented to him that an order from the military was necessary in order to release the car load of caskets, and there is ample evidence to sustain a ready appreciation of the fact that conditions at the time were such, particularly as regarded the railroads, that it was necessary that property remain untouched by any parties without permission from the military authorities. The military authorities were in control at the time and such was the state of affairs that it was impossible for any other authority to determine rights to property. The car load of caskets was sent to Dayton, Ohio, solely by virtue of the order of Mr. Frank Riessinger, and Captain Gimperling, nor any other authority of the military organization, was in anywise responsible for the constructing of these caskets, or the sending of same to Dayton. The same were constructed and sent solely upon the request and authorization of Mr. Riessinger. It is true the car load was billed to order of the Casket Company and might be held, in law, not to have been delivered to Mr. Riessinger. One thing is perfectly clear, however, and that is that up to this time, the military authorities could, under no consideration, be charged with any liability in respect to this consignment.

The evidence as to further steps made, as you state in your letter, is somewhat obscure. A representative of the Casket Company, Mr. T. C. Harrington by name, states in his affidavit that one whom he supposed to be the quartermaster general of Ohio was informed over the telephone by Mr. Ward of the casket company, that a shipment of caskets had been made by the Richmond Casket Company to its order, and that invoice and bill of lading had been fastened in a small box and nailed to the door of the car containing the caskets. Captain Gimperling denies that he had such telephone communication or that he was so informed, and states that he merely sent a telegram authorizing the casket company to release the caskets in behalf of Mr. Riessinger.

In their letter of May 13 to Captain Gimperling, the casket company expressly admitted that the car load of caskets was released by them for delivery to Mr. Riessinger, but added that the goods were being delivered to Mr. Riessinger as the property of the state of Ohio.

To my mind the evidence submitted is by no means sufficient to burden the state with a moral obligation of paying for the caskets used, and which they have offered to pay for. There has been no evidence submitted, of any order on the part of the military authorities for the caskets. All evidence submitted shows that the negotiations were clearly in behalf of Mr. Riessinger.

I would not be willing to say, however, that the facts submitted would preclude the possibility of there having existed an order on the part of the military authorities for such amount of caskets as they wished to use, since the telgram sent by Mr. Gimperling is the only communication admitted or in any way definitely pointed to between the military authorities and the casket company, which might be looked upon as an order or an offer to purchase.

In brief, up to the time of the alleged interference of Captain Gimperling, there was absolutely no incident which could in any way connect the military authorities with any contract liability, and when Captain Gimperling did interfere, if it may be proven that he interfered to the extent of procuring caskets in behalf of the state, he certainly did so, only to the extent of confiscating such of the caskets as the state might desire to use. The caskets, up to this time, belonged either to the Richmond Casket Company or to Mr. Riessinger, and the state ordered or confiscated (if it is to be fairly charged with any responsibility at all) only such number of these caskets as they desired for use, and there would be no logical or reasonable grounds of any character, for charging the state with liability for a consignment of a whole car load of caskets, solely in accordance with and by authorization of the order of Mr. Riessinger.

I, therefore, conclude that it would clearly be an unwarranted assumption of authority for the military authorities to attempt to pay for the balance of these caskets, and furthermore recommend that payment by the state, for the caskets actually used, is a thoroughly fair and reasonable settlement for you to make.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY COUNCIL—PASSAGE OF SALARY ORDINANCE—VOTE NECESSARY FOR PASSAGE OF SUCH ORDINANCE—PRESIDENT OF COUNCIL.

Where in a city the council consists of three members elected at large, four members elected from wards and the president of council, an ordinance fixing salaries is read on three different days as provided by law, and on motion to adopt the vote stood three for and three against, one member being absent, and thereupon the president voted in favor of the ordinance and declared the same carried, such ordinance was not legally enacted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 17, 1914.

HON. ELMER E. BODEN, City Solicitor, Barberton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 18th, as follows:

"The facts:—B is a city. The council thereof consists of three members elected at large, four members elected from wards, and the president of council. An ordinance fixing salaries was 'fully and distinctly read on three different days,' as provided by law. On motion to adopt, the vote stood three for and three against, one member being absent. The president of council thereupon voted for the adoption of the ordinance and declared same carried. Thus the vote stood four for and three against the ordinance.

"The question:—Is not this ordinance legally passed?"

Section 4206 of the General Code provides how the council shall be composed.

Section 4272, relating to the president of council provides:

"The president of council shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next, after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation, and shall preside at all regular and special meetings of the council, but shall have no vote therein except in case of a tie."

Section 4224, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"* * * No ordinance shall be passed by council without the concurrence of a majority of all members elected thereto."

The council of the city referred to in the above request consists of seven members, and the ordinance in question was passed by the concurrence of three of these members, and the president of council who voted because of a tie vote cast by the six regularly elected members who were present at the meeting. The question is now asked—was the ordinance legally passed?

In volume 28 Cyc., p. 337, I find the following:

"It has been held that where the mayor is only entitled to vote in case of a tie, and a majority of all the 'members-elect' of the council is required to pass a measure, the mayor cannot vote when the members are equally divided so as to give such majority, and is not to be counted in determining whether the measure has been passed."

In support of this proposition the case of State vs. Gray, 23 Neb., 365, is cited, and in the 1913 supplement of Cyc., the case of Morrian vs. Railroad is cited on the same proposition.

In both of these cases the presiding officer of council is held not to be a member of council within the provision laid down by the statute that "no ordinance shall be passed without the concurrence of a majority of the members elected thereto."

It is said in Dillon on "municipal corporations," volume 2, page 836, note to section 513, that:

> "The language of the decisions which declares that a mayor who is only a presiding officer with a casting vote in case of a tie is not a member of the council, must not be taken in its absolute and literal sense. He is a member for the purpose of presiding with a vote in the contingency specified. It is anomalous that he should take any part in the proceedings of the council and not be regarded as a member. Carrollton vs. Clark, 21 Ill., App. 74. When the statute confers upon the mayor the right to preside and to give a casting vote in case of a tie, he is so far a member of the council that the aldermen or councilmen cannot deprive him of these rights. State vs. Yates, 19 Mont. 239; Mc Court vs. Beam, 42 Oreg., 41."

If the president of council is not a member of council to the extent that he may not vote on an ordinance when there is a tie, then, of course, the ordinance referred to in your question was not legally passed since three is not a majority of seven. If the president of council is a member of council to the extent and for the purpose of voting on an ordinance in case of a tie, then at such time when such vote is being taken the council of the city referred to in your question consists of eight members instead of seven, and four votes is not a majority of eight, so that it matters not which line of decisions we follow, the result in the case before us is the same, and I am of the opinion that the ordinance referred to in your letter was not legally passed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SPEAK EASIES—LIQUOR TRAFFIC—ORDINANCE—PROSECUTIONS MUST BE MADE UNDER THE STATE LAW.

A municipal corporation has no authority to pass an ordinance prohibiting speak easies, as this is a matter that has been taken care of by statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

HON. W. E. WARREN, Village Solicitor, Leetonia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of September 29th you submit the following question for an opinion thereon:

> "Has any municipal corporation the authority to pass an ordinance prohibiting speak easies, or must these prosecutions be under the statute, exclusively?"

Section 3661 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "To regulate ale, beer, porter houses and shops, and the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. But nothing in this chapter shall be construed to amend, repeal or in any way affect the provisions of law relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday or local option as to sale of liquors in municipalities."

This statute at one time conferred power to regulate, restrain and prohibit places where intoxicating liquors were sold at retail, and in that form, as decided in Burckholter vs. McConnellsville, 20 O. S., 308, a municipal corporation was authorized to enact an ordinance prohibiting places where intoxicating liquors were sold at retail; but the statute has been amended, and there is no delegation of power to restrict such places in the present statute.

In the case of Berning vs. Norwood, 1 O. L. B., 25 (affirmed without report, Norwood vs. Berning, 72, O. S., 593) Judge Hollister held that in "regulating" the liquor traffic as it was authorized to do, under section 5 of the Municipal Code, and also under the provisions of the Beal law, (section 5 of the Municipal Code being carried into the General Code as said section 3661) council was not empowered to "prohibit" the traffic, which can only be done by a vote of the people.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the prosecutions spoken of must be brought under the statute.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWERS UNDER CHARTER—CHARTER MUST BE FULLY COMPLIED WITH—COMMERCIAL BANK—TRUST COMPANY—INCORPORATORS.

Where incorporators take out a charter, including the power to transact several different things within the scope of the law, they are bound by all the provisions of the charter. Consequently, where a banking institution possesses the powers of a trust company, safe deposit company, commercial bank and savings bank, but claims that it does not act as a commercial bank, but as a combination of the others, such institution if it has the powers of a commercial bank under the terms of its charter, it is a commerical bank and cannot rid itself of that condition by confining its operations to other powers granted in the charter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1913.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter in which you inquire:

> "A certain institution under the supervision of this department possesses the power of a trust company, safe deposit company, commercial bank and savings bank. Although this institution has a very large line of checking accounts, payable on demand, it claims to not be exercising the power of a commercial bank and sets forth the following claim.
> "We wish to call your attention to the fact that we do not operate as a commercial bank, and we do not loan on personal security nor do we discount, buy, sell or assign promissory notes or other evidences of debt. We have always considered our company as a combination of savings, trust and safe deposit company, and as such we are entitled to set up as a reserve 3% of our demand deposits in bonds enumerated in section 9764.
> "Upon reference to the various reports rendered by this bank I find that the above statement as to the bank's loans and investments is correct, and therefore would resquest your opinion as to whether or not they may enjoy the privilege of carrying certain bonds as a part of their reserve on account of demand deposits."

You state that the institution in question possesses the powers of a trust company, safe deposit company, commercial bank and savings bank, but that it claims that it does not act as a commercial bank, but as a combination of the others, which claim you find to be sustained by the reports rendered your department. The question for determination is whether the charter of bank controls in ascertaining its character, or whether the same is to be determined from the character of business carried on by the bank and the manner in which the same is conducted.

It has been said:

> "The privilege granted to the Metropolitan Transit Company was defined and limited by the act (laws of 1872) and it was bound to exercise the privilege, if at all, according to the terms in which it was conferred. It could not take part and reject the rest.
> "Matter of Metropolitan Transit Co., 111 N. Y., 601, cited in 1 Cook on corporations, p. 10.

"Conditional or partial acceptance. It follows from this that a charter must be accepted unconditionally and entirely as it is offered. It cannot be accepted on conditions not expressed in nor implied by the law, nor can it be accepted in part only, for if this were permitted, a corporation might reject the obligations imposed and accept the benefits conferred.

"1 Clark & Marshall on private corporations, 121.

"There can be no conditional or partial acceptance of a charter. The grant, when accepted, is upon the footing of a contract, which, being an entire thing must be accepted or rejected altogether. 4 Syl.

"Baldwin vs. Hills boro, etc., R. R., 10 Western L. M., 337."

While this is only a common pleas decision, it is in full harmony with all others to be found on the subject; conforms to the reasonable interpretation of the condition presented and the institution in question is to be governed by the terms of its charter, the acceptance of which must have been as an entirety and cannot be changed or modified by any subsequent action of the bank, its stockholders or directors.

I am therefore of the opinion that incorporators, who take out a charter, including the power to transact several different things within the scope of the law, are bound by all the provisions of the charter and the same may not be confined to a portion of the powers granted by a neglect, failure or refusal to exercise all the powers included in the grant.

If the institution in question has the powers of a commercial bank under the terms of its charter, it is a commercial bank and cannot rid itself of that condition by confining its operations to other powers granted in the charter.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—SALE OF SHARES OF STOCK TO PAY BALANCE DUE ON SAME—POWER OF DIRECTORS OF BANK TO MAKE SUCH SALE—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED.

Where a stockholder has subscribed for ten shares of stock, but has only paid in the sixty per cent, and his whereabouts are unknown, this stock can be sold and the balance due on the stock be paid. In making the sale the directors should be very careful to comply strictly with the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superinetndent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 7, 1914, in which you inquire:

"We have a stockholder who has subscribed for ten shares, but has only paid in the sixty per cent, and we are unable to locate him to collect the balance for $200.00. Can this stock be sold, and can we compel him to pay if he should refuse?"

This question, as I understand, is one that has been submitted to you and is not as clear as it might be when it is noticed that a payment of 60 per cent on ten shares leaves a balance of $400, and not $200.

Section 9717, G. C., reads:

"When a stockholder or his assigns fails to pay an installment on his stock, as required by the preceding section to be paid, or for thirty days thereafter, the directors for such company may sell his stock at public sale for not less than the amount due thereon, including costs incurred, to the person who will pay the highest price therefor, having first given the delinquent stockholder twenty days' notice of such sale personally or if no personal notification can be given, then by mail at his last known address as appears from the corporate record, and having advertised the sale for a like period in a paper of general circulation within the county in which the corporation is located. If no bidder can be found who will pay for such stock the amount due thereon, with costs incurred, such stock shall be sold as the directors order, within six months for not less than the amount then due thereon with all costs of sale."

This section to my mind answers your question to the effect that the directors of a bank may, under the circumstances stated, sell stock to satisfy an unpaid balance of the subscription price thereof. In the doing of this the directors should be careful to comply with the provisions of this section, for the reason that where there are two remedies given for righting the same wrong, the election to follow one precludes the enforcement of the other at a later date.

Wilson vs. Wilson, 30 O. S., 365; 48 O. S., 357.

The reason for this is, that the bank has the option to collect at law upon the contract of subscription or under section 9717, by sale of the stock, and that it may follow either but not both remedies.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD—INSTALLATION OF HEATING SYSTEM—PAYMENT FOR SAME—POWERS OF ARMORY BOARD.

The state armory board may, under section 5255, G. C., legally install a new heating system in the Pomeroy armory even though the cost thereof exceeds $600.00. Payment should be made from the state armory fund and not from any fund appropriated for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1914.

HON. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 24th, which is as follows:

"I herewith have the honor to transmit minutes of the armory board relative to installing new heating system at Pomeroy armory. This armory is owned by the state and the present heating system is inadequate. It will require probably $1,800.00 to put in a new system and this amount is far in excess of the usual maintenance allowance for state armories. But section 5255 of the General Code requires the board to provide for the maintenance of armories and it has found that this armory requires a new heating plant.

"Heretofore the board has not spent over an average of six hundred dollars a year on any state armory because that is the maximum allowance for organizations occupying leased armories. But a case like the Pomeroy armory one is likely to arise whenever the usefulness of the building is impaired by its condition and section 5255 does not impose any restriction in requiring the board to provide for the maintenance of armories."

The resolution to which you refer reads:

"Pomeroy armory:—Whereas the report of the inspection of Architect Best and the reports of the local board of control show that the present heating system in the Pomeroy armory is inadequate, it is unanimously,

"Resolved:—That Architect Best secure bids for the installation of a complete and adequate steam heating system at the Pomeroy armory and that the secretary request the attorney general for an opinion as to the board's authority to incur the necessary expense."

Section 5255, General Code, provides:

"The board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safe keeping of arms, clothing, equipments, and other military property issued to the several organizations of organized militia, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for armory purposes when, in its judgment, it is for the best interests of the state so to do. The board shall provide for the management, care and maintenance of armories and may adopt and prescribe such rules and regulations for the management, government and guidance of the organizations occupying them as may be necessary and desirable."

Section 5261, General Code, provides in part:

"* * * nor shall a building be leased or rented for the use of a company or single organization in excess of six hundred dollars per year for each organization provided for."

From a consideration of section 5255, it is clear that the state armory board is charged with the duty of maintenance of armories. The word "maintenance" is defined by lexicographers as "maintaining, supporting, upholding, keeping up."

Section 5261 limits the amount that may be expended for the rent of an armory to $600.00 per annum. There is no limitation in the statutes upon the amount that the board may expend for maintenance. The limitation for this purpose mentioned in your letter, derives its force from a regulation of the armory board and not from any statute of the state.

Inasmuch as it is necessary to have an adequate heating system in order to properly maintain an armory and carry on the work for which it was intended, I am of the opinion that your board may, under section 5255, legally install a new heating system in the Pomeroy armory, even though the cost thereof exceeds $600.00. Payment therefor should be made from the state armory fund and not from any fund appropriated for the maintenance of the Ohio national guard.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE — TRUSTEE OF THE KENT NORMAL SCHOOL AND MEMBER OF STATE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION.

One man may not lawfully hold the position of trustee of the Kent normal school and member of the state board of administration at the same time. These offices are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1914.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR COX:—In answer to your verbal request that I advise you by opinion as to whether or not under the laws of Ohio the same person may hold the position of trustee of the Kent Normal School and member of the state board of administration, I do not deem it necessary to dwell at length upon the question. Agreeably to section 4 of the act of May 19, 1910, found in Vol. 101, Ohio Laws, page 320, it is provided:

> "Each board of trustees (of the normal schools) shall organize immediately after its appointment by the election from its members of a president, a secretary and a treasurer * * *."

It is further provided in the same act that:

> "The board of trustees * * * shall select and appoint * * * instructors * * * and provide a suitable course of study * * * fix rates of tuition * * *" and do numerous other things not necessary here to enumerate, but which would require considerable time from the members acting as a board.

It is provided in section 1836, General Code of Ohio, among other things in referring to the state board of administration, that:

> "* * * Each member, officer and employe shall devote his entire time and attention to the duties of his position, and failure so to do shall be ground for removal."

You can, therefore, readily see that so far as the act in relation to the normal schools is concerned no disqualification presents itself, but section 1836 of the General Code, in reference to the board of administration, presents the disqualifications of a member who would give any of his time or attention to the duties of another office.

My conclusion is, therefore, that one man may not lawfully hold the two positions at the same time.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPOINTMENT OF CEMETERY TRUSTEES—LENGTH OF TIME SUCH TRUSTEES SHOULD SERVE—DUTIES OF THE MAYOR MAKING THESE APPOINTMENTS.

Where a board of cemetery trustees continues to act under an appointment made prior to the adoption of the General Code, a member so acting has a right to act until their successors are appointed and certified. Since the time has expired for a three year appointment to be made the mayor should appoint three trustees for six, four and two years respectively, from Jan. 1, 1914, when the municipal officers are qualified and placed in their offices. After the date of Jan. 1, 1914, the mayor shall appoint one trustee for a period of six years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 13, 1914.

HON. N. H. MCCLURE, Village Solicitor, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 6, 1913, you say:

> "Some doubt exists as to the legality of our cemetery board as at present organized, appointments having been made of one member annually for a term of three years, until January of this year, when the change in the law having come to the attention of the council and mayor, no appointment was made and the board as previously constituted continues to act under the appointments made in conformity to the law as it existed prior to the adoption of the Code.
> "The question arises as to when the appointment should be made, under the statute, for the respective terms of six, four and two years, whether after the first municipal election succeeding the adoption of the Code, or should an entire new board have been then appointed for the term of three years, and then after the expiration of that time, and at the first municipal election on succeeding such expiration, when the Mayor took office, should the appointment be then made for the respective terms of six, four and two years."

The solution of this question involves a construction of the statute on the appointment of such cemetery trustees both before and after the adoption of the General Code.

Section 1536-479a (section 2518) Bates revised statutes, provided for the appointment, by the mayor of a village, of three cemetery trustees for three years. The act further provided that the term of office of the board first appointed, after the passage of the act, shall extend until the first municipal election has been held thereafter and the officers chosen at said election duly qualified and placed in office; and thereafter the mayor shall appoint a board for three, two and one years, respectively. The statute still further provided:

> "And thereafter, each year after the annual municipal election has been held and the newly elected officers have been duly qualified and placed in office the mayor shall at the first meeting night of the council within his village, appoint one member on the board of cemetery trustees whose term of office shall be for three years, or until his successor in office shall have been regularly appointed and qualified."

In case of vacancy, the mayor had power to fill the same by appointment for the unexpected term.

This section became a law May 3, 1904, and continued without change until the adoption of the General Code, February 15, 1910. In the General Code, the section above referred to, 1536-479a, was repealed, and the present section, 4175, General Code, was enacted.

Section 4175, General Code, effective February 15, 1910, provided for the appointment of cemetery trustees, consisting of three members for a term of three years; and that the term of office of the board first appointed, shall extend until the first municipal election thereafter and the officers chosen at such election are duly qualified and placed in office. This section further says that thereafter the mayor shall appoint a board of three trustees as follows:

> "One for a term of six years, one for a term of four years and one for a term of two years."

Biennially thereafter, after the newly elected officers have been placed in office, the appointments are to be one trustee for six years, or until his successor has been appointed and qualified. The last above statute is now the law, and has been since the repeal of the old statute, February 15, 1910. When the present law was enacted, it changed the terms of office of all such cemetery trustees, and required the appointment of three members for three years, in February, 1910, the term of said members to extend until the first municipal election thereafter, and the officers chosen thereat duly placed in office, which would be in January, 1914.

This required the mayor, in February, 1910, to appoint three trustees whose terms would expire January, 1914, but he did not appoint at that time, and has not appointed since, leaving the trustees to act and continue under their old appointments; and are still holding by virtue of the law which allows them to serve until their successors are regularly appointed and qualified.

The present trustees have been in lawful exercise of the office of cemetery trustees because they were originally lawfully appointed, and no one having been appointed in their stead, they had a legal right to same "until their successors in office were regularly appointed and qualified." The time has expired for a three year appointment to be made; and all that remains for the mayor to do, is to appoint three trustees for six, four and two years, respectively, from Jan. 1, 1914, when the municipal officers of your village were duly qualified and placed in office.

Each two years after the last above date, January 1, 1914, the mayor shall appoint one trustee for six years.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY DEPOSITARIES—AUTHORITY OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO DESIGNATE COUNTY DEPOSITARIES—BIDS FOR COUNTY FUNDS—ADDITIONAL ADVERTISEMENT—COUNTY TREASURER HAS AUTHORITY WITH REFERENCE TO DEPOSITARIES FOR COUNTY FUNDS.

1. Where certain banks are designated as depositaries under the provisions of section 2715-2745, G. C., by the county commissioners for the purpose of depositing county funds, and the awarding of the active funds to be deposited were under bid, the county commissioners have authority to and should immediately readvertise for bids on that portion of the funds not bid for in the first instance, and should continue to advertise these funds until they have all been awarded.

2. The county treasurer may use his own judgment in placing these funds so long as he chooses a bank that has been designated by the county commissioners as a depositary of the county funds. It is a matter entirely within his discretion and one about which the county commissioners have no authority to speak.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1913.

HON. CHARLES M. MILROY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 13, 1913, as follows:

"On the 14th day of October, 1913, pursuant to the provisions of sections 2715-2745 of the General Code, the board of county commissioners of Lucas county, Ohio, designated certain banks and trust companies as depositaries for the money of Lucas county, Ohio, all as is more fully set forth in letter of said board of county commissioners to the county teasurer of said county, under date of November 26, 1913, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

"The probable aggregate amount of funds of the county so to be deposited, as determined by resolution of said board of county commissioners, was in the sum of $2,600,000, of which amount the sum of $615,000 was to be considered as inactive and the balance as active deposits. The inactive funds were several times overbid, but the active funds were underbid by $800,000. Instead of rejecting all bids and readvertising, awards were made to the highest bidders to the full extent of inactive funds, to-wit, $615,000, and to all bidders for total active funds bid for, to wit, $1,185,000, thus leaving $800,000 active funds unprovided for.

"On November 3, 1913, awards were made covering active funds theretofore unprovided for, all as is more fully set forth in said board of county commissioners' letter of November 26, 1913. All proceedings relative to first letting being a matter of public record, bidders for said $800,000 of active funds at the second letting were in a position to knowingly offer, as some of them did, a higher rate of interest than obtained at said first letting.

"From notice to bidders under which both awards were made, copies of which are herewith enclosed, it will be observed that the only difference is that in the first notice bids were asked for inactive and active deposits, and in the second notice for active deposits only.

"The county treasurer, pursuant to instructions contained in said board of county commissioners' letter of November 26, 1913, is now placing active funds in depositaries which have bid the highest rate of interest therefor, regardless of the date when awards were made. To this action on the part of our county treasurer certain active depositaries designated under said award of October 14, 1913, are protesting on the ground that such action is unfair under the circumstances under which the awards were made. Our county treasurer has asked a ruling from this office as to what course should be pursued by him under the circumstances named.

"It appears that it was the understanding of the members of the board of county commissioners that deposits would be made in the order in which awards were made, in order that bidders at the letting had October 14, 1913, might be fully protected. I must confess that under the circumstances the action complained of on the part of our county treasurer would seem to be somewhat unfair to depositaries designated under said award of October 14, 1913, in that bidders at letting had November 3, 1913, were in full possession of all the facts relative to the first letting, knew the exact rates of interest offered thereat, and hence were in a position to offer a slight increase in rate of interest, and thereby secure to themselves an advantage in the matter of obtaining deposits of active funds, if deposits were to be made in accordance with the rate of interest offered.

"The situation presented is somewhat unfortunate and one concerning which we should be pleased to have your immediate advice. Kindly give us your opinion at your earliest possible convenience as to whether or not preference should be given to active depositaries designated under said award of October 14, 1913, or those designated under award of November 3, 1913, regardless of rates of interest offered."

Sections 2715, 2716 and 2721 of the General Code read as follows:

Section 2715: "The commissioners in each county shall designate in the manner hereinafter provided a bank or banks or trust companies, situated in the county and duly incorporated under the laws of this state, or organized under the laws of the United States, as inactive depositaries, and one or more of such banks or trust companies located in the county seat as active depositaries of the money of the county. In a county where such bank or trust company does not exist or fails to bid as provided herein, or to comply with the conditions of this chapter relating to county depositaries, the commissioners shall designate a private bank or banks, located in the county as such inactive depositaries, and if in such county no such private bank exists or fails to bid as provided herein, or to comply with the conditions of this chapter relating to county depositaries, then the commissioners shall designate any other bank or banks incorporated under the laws of this state, organized under the laws of the United States, as such inactive depositaries. If there be no such bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the state, or organized under the laws of the United States, located at the county seat, then the commissioners shall designate a private bank, if there be one located therein, as such active depositary. No bank or trust company shall receive a larger deposit than one million dollars."

Section 2716: "When the commissioners of a county provide such depositary or depositaries, they shall publish for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in the county a notice which shall invite sealed proposals from all banks or trust companies within the provisions of the next two preceding sections, which proposals shall stipulate the rate of interest, not less than two per cent per annum on the average daily balance on inactive deposits, and not less than one per cent per annum on average daily balance on active deposits, that will be paid for the use of the money of the county, as herein provided. Each proposal shall contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted."

Section 2721: "If no proposals are received offering the rate of interest hereinafter prescribed, the commissioners shall at once again advertise in the same manner until acceptable proposals are received. Each subsequent advertisement shall also state whether any proposal was received under the preceding advertisement, and, if any, the bank or banks or trust companies and the rate of interest offered."

The awards made on November 3, 1913, in this case were made in conformity with the above sections, and no question of any irregularity is raised. The active funds, however, were underbid by $800,000, and the commissioners immediately readvertised for bids on the $800,000 active funds not bid for in the previous bidding. That it was legal and proper for the commissioners to do this, I feel satisfied. It is their duty under section 2715 to designate the active and inactive depositaries, and section 2721 provides that if no proposals are received offering the prescribed rate of interest, the commissioners shall again advertise for bids in the same manner. In view of this it is certainly reasonable to conclude that in case only part of the funds are bid for in response to the first advertisement, the commissioners have authority to and should immediately readvertise for bids on that portion of the funds not bid for in the first instance. The duty is imposed upon them by statute to procure bids for active and inactive funds through the medium of advertising, and if the first advertisement does not secure sufficient bids to cover the entire amount of money to be deposited, then additional advertisements must be printed until all of the active and inactive funds have been awarded.

This is what was done in the case before us, and no complaint can arise with reference to the commissioners' action.

The next question is: What is the treasurer's duty in placing these active funds? Must he be controlled by the date of the letting, or the amount of interest offered?

Section 2736, General Code, as amended in 103, O. L., p. 562, defining the duty of the treasurer, reads:

"Upon the receipt by the county treasurer of a written notice from the commissioners that a depositary, or depositaries, having been selected in pursuance of law, and naming the bank or banks or trust companies so selected, such treasurer shall deposit in such bank or banks or trust companies as directed by the commissioners, and designated as inactive depositaries to the credit of the county all money in his possession, except such amount as is necessary to meet current demands, which shall be deposited by such treasurer in the active depositary or depositaries. Thereafter, before noon of each business day, he shall deposit therein the balance, if any, remaining in his hands after having paid out of the receipts of the preceding business day, in cash, warrants presented to him for payment during such day, except as herein before provided. Such money shall be payable only on the check of the treasurer."

No mention is made in this section, or in any other, of any rule to be followed by the treasurer in placing the funds. The county commissioners have authority to designate the active and inactive depositaries, and the county treasurer must deposit the money in the banks designated by the commissioners, but in placing these funds he may prefer one or the other of such depositaries as he sees fit. It is a matter entirely within his descretion, and one concerning which the county commissioners have no authority to speak.

See State vs. Whipple, 60 Neb., p. 650, holding:

"When a county board has acted upon propositions of different banks applying to be made depositaries of county funds, and approved or rejected the bonds for that purpose, its powers and authority in the premises ceases, and it is without power or authority to control the action of the county treasurer, and direct in which of the depositaries, or in what amount, the depositing of county funds shall be had; and when an attempt is made to designate one bank as a preferred depositary, such action is a nullity and without force or effect."

Having concluded, then that the action of the commissioners in readvertising for bids on the $800,000 of active funds was legal, and that the order in which the treasurer shall place the funds in the different depositaries designated by the commissioners is discretionary with himself, I must refrain from indulging in any further discussion of the matter. The treasurer is familiar with his duty to the taxpayers of the county and with all the facts in this case, and will undoubtedly act in such manner as will best serve the interests of all concerned.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS—CHARGE FOR SERVICES RENDERED—EMPLOYMENT AGENCY—FORMER OPINION REVERSED.

Under sections 886 and 893, G. C., a charitable organization operating in a small way an employment agency, is not required to have a license even though they do make a charge for services rendered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 26, 1914.

To the Industrial Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a communication from Honorable Philip Roettinger, of Cincinnati, Ohio, wherein he says:

"We are counsel for a charitable organization in this city which has heretofore been engaged in operating, in a small way, an employment agency, charging the employer, but not the employe, for the services mentioned.

"Now the commissioner of labor has notified them that they must have a license, and in looking at section 886 and section 893, it seems to me that a charitable organization is not required to have a license, even though they do make a charge for the servces rendered. I take the liberty to ask you for your construction of the two sections noted, and shall, as usual, thank you both in advance and afterwards, for any information given."

This department gave an opinion to Hon. Fred Lange, on March 15th, 1912, wherein we held that charitable organizations maintaining an employment department and charging a fee either by way of registration fee or by way of a commission upon the salary of the party assisted is a private employment agency within the meaning of the statute and is obligated to secure a license.

This department, upon receipt of Mr. Roettinger's letter, took the matter up for more definite and further consideration than when the subject was before us formerly. Upon reconsideration all of counsel and myself concurred in the proposition that we were in error in the former opinion.

Section 893 is as follows:

"Except an employment agency of a charitable organization, a person, firm or corporation furnishing or agreeing to furnish employment or help, or displaying a sign or bulletin, or offering to furnish employment or help through the medium of a circular, card or pamphlet, shall be deemed a private employment agency, and subject to the laws governing such agencies."

From the plain language of this section a charitable organization which runs an employment agency as an adjunct to or part of the purpose for which it is organized does not become subject to the provisions of the law in regard to private employment agencies.

Sometimes it is most easy to fall into error in things that are really the plainest and such seems to have been my experience in reference to this question. I concur in the views expressed by Mr. Roettinger that under section 886 and section 893, a charitable organization is not required to have a license even though they do make a charge for services rendered. The conclusion in my former opinion is hereby reversed, and I request that you advise the proper head of the department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Abstract of title from Helen W. Wooster to state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 26, 1914.

HON. J. D. MCDONEL, Member Board of Trustees, Bowling Green Normal School, Fostoria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title and deed from Helen W. Wooster to the state of Ohio, for the following described real estate, which your board desires to acquire for use in connection with the Bowling Green Normal School, to wit:

> "That part of out lot number ninety-seven (97) in the city of Bowling Green, Wood county, Ohio bounded and described as follows, viz.:
> "Beginning one hundred and twenty (120) feet east of the intersection of the west line of said out lot No. 97 with the north curb stone of the Wooster street improvement (which point is the intersection of the east line of that part of said lot heretofore deeded by Helen W. Wooster to Benjamin L. Loomis, with the north curb of the Wooster street improvement); thence north along the east line of that part of said out lot No. 97 owned by said Benjamin L. Loomis, a distance of about two hundred and seventeen and one-half (217½) feet to the point where said east line intersects the south line of that part of said out lot No. 97 heretofore deeded by Helen W. Wooster to the city of Bowling Green, Wood county, Ohio, and now owned by the state of Ohio; thence east along the south line of that part of said out lot No. 97 now owned by the state of Ohio to a point where said line intersects the west line of that part of said out lot No. 97, heretofore deeded by Helen W. Wooster to John W. Zeller; thence south on the west line of that part of said out lot No. 97, owned by said John W. Zeller to the north curb stone of the Wooster street improvement; thence west on said north curb stone of the Wooster street improvement to the place of beginning."

I have carefully examined the abstract, and am of the opinion that the present owner has a good and indefeasible estate in and to the above premises, in fee simple. There are no liens or encumbrances of any kind against the same disclosed by the abstract.

The deed is in legal form, is signed, acknowledged and witnessed in accordance with statute, and is sufficient to convey to the state of Ohio a fee simple title.

I, therefore, advise that you accept the same.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUVENILE CODE—EMPLOYMENT OF MINORS—SCHOOLING CERTIFICATES—TELEPHONE OPERATOR.

In the employment of minors where a boy over fifteen years old, or a girl over sixteen years old attends school, then after school has some employment, the child should not be interfered with in performing such work after school hours, nor should the employer under such circumstances be prosecuted. Under these circumstances such children need no schooling certificates before performing their work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 19, 1913.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman the Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge communication addressed to you by Mr. Kearns and by you referred to me, in which he asks:

> "1. Whether under section 12993, minors are permitted to be employed in telephone or telegraph offices; and
> 2. Whether girls between 16 and 18 years of age, who are regularly attending high school, may be employed as telephone operators after school hours, with or without schooling certificates.

Section 12993 reads thus:

> "No male child under fifteen years nor female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permittted or suffered to work in, about or in connection with any (1) mill, (2) factory, (3) workshop, (4) mercantile or mechanical establishments, (5) tenement-house, manufactory or workshop, (6) store, (7) office, (8) office building, (9) restaurant, (10) boarding-house, (11) bakery, (12) barber shop, (13) hotel, (14) apartment house, (15) bootblack stand or establishment, (16) public stable, (17) garage, (18) laundry, (19) place of amusement, (20) club, (21) or as driver, (22) or in any brick or lumber yard, (23) or in the construction or repair of buildings, (24) or in the distribution, transmission or sale of merchandise, (25) nor any boy under fifteen or female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages.
> "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to employ, permit or suffer to work any child under fifteen years of age in any business whatever during any of the hours when the public schools of the district in which the child resides are in session."

It must be remembered that this section appears in a revision of the laws relating to the employment of minors and female persons, and consequently resort may be had to the prior state of the law in construing the statute just quoted.

Section 12993, as originally enacted, read in part as follows:

> "Whoever, having charge of management of a factory, workshop, business office, telephone or telegraph office * * * employe or permits a child under the age of fourteen years to work in or in connection with such establishment, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars."

A comparison of these two sections will show that the adjective "business" and the phrase "telephone or telegraph" are omitted as modifications of the word office in the act last pased. From this, one may reasonably infer that the legislature contemplated that the word "office" standing by itself, would include all words of offices, and, having in mind the previous state of the law, it no doubt intended this word to cover a telephone or telegraph office. While "office" in its strict and technical sense might not perhaps include a telephone exchange, yet the law makers evidently had in mind that would, or they would not in the original statute have used the expression "telephone office" as the words "business office" would have included what is done in the business department of telephone exchanges as distinguished from the work done in the exchange proper, and hence the expression "telephone office" would be surplusage, unless it was to include the work done in the exchange, which had not been comprehended within the term "business office." Furthermore, Webster defines an office as "a place where a particular kind of business or service for others is transacted." Can it be said that a telephone exchange is not a place where a particular kind of service is rendered for others or transacted? I think not.

I am aware that resort cannot be had to a prior law in construing a revision of it, when there has been a manifest intent on the part of the legislature to change the statute by altering its language, but I do not think that this rule here obtains, as I do not believe that the legislature intended to make any change in the meaning of the word "office," but, realizing that the word "office" might appropriately apply to a telephone exchange, as it had been made to apply by a former legislature, it felt that the word "office" standing by itself, was a broader term and would without the insertion of any adjective, cover all kinds of offices including business and telegraph offices and telephone exchanges, the word "office" having been treated by the former legislature as an appropriate description of a telephone exchange.

A proper rule of statutory construction to adopt in this case is, that where words, which do not materially affect the sense, have been omitted from revising statutes on the theory that the same general idea will be expressed in briefer phases, no design of altering the law, in this regard, can be rightly based upon such modifications of the language. There must be a clear intent on the part of the legislature to change the construction of a statute, when revising it, or the court would not be warranted in holding that such change has been made. See Black on interpretation of laws, section 137; Conger vs. Barker, 11, O. S., 1.

In Posey vs. Pressley, 60 Ala., 243, it is said:

> "The manifest purpose to express in general words the substance of former statutes, must be borne in mind; and from the omission of special words found in former statutes, embraced by the general words, an intention to change the former statute will not be implied."

With these principles in mind, I am of the opinion that no male child under 15 years or female child under 16 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in, about or in connection with a telephone exchange or telegraph office, and that it is unlawful for any child under 15 to be employed in any business during school hours.

Very cogent reasons may also be advanced for holding that a telephone exchange is a mechanical establishment.

Second.

Section 12994, 103, O. L., 907, reads thus:

"No boy under sixteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age shall be employed or permitted to work on or in connection with the establishments mentioned in section 12993 of the General Code, or in the distribution or transmission of merchandise or messages unless such employer first procures from the proper authority the age and schooling certificate provided by law."

This statute clearly and explicitly states that no boy under 16 years of age and no girl under 18 years of age shall be employed to work in connection with the establishments mentioned in section 12993, without a schooling certificate, and, as I have just held that a telephone exchange is an establishment mentioned in section 12993, it necessarily follows that ordinarily no boy under 16 or girl under 18 may be employed therein without an age and schooling certificate provided by law. It must not be forgotten, however, that it is not the purpose of this statute to prevent a child from working, but it is the aim and purpose of the law to require the child to attend school until he or she possesses the statutory educaional requirements. As your question states that the children are in the high school, they must necessarily have the educational requirements, and besides they only desire to work after school hours. Taking these facts into consideration, it would seem to me that the object of the law should be borne in mind and if its object has been accomplished, you should adopt a liberal rule in applying its strict letter. In other words, in case of a male child, if the applicant is over 15 years of age and when a female child, if the applicant is over 16 years of age, and attends school, then he or she should not be interfered with in his or her work after school hours, nor should the employer under such circumstances be prosecuted.

It might be urged that under this rule a child might work longer hours than proper because what he does in school might be regarded as work. The objection to this theory is that the legislature, in the statutes we are just discussing, has not made any effort to remedy this evil, as the child would be eligible for a schooling certificate, and, after obtaining it, he could then go to work after school hours, so that this objection would obtain, if compliance with the strict letter of the statute were demanded. It would be an absurdity to say that after a child had complied with the law in regard to attending school, he must have a school certificate to work after those hours.

In conclusion, I want to add that I am fully aware, in answering the first question, of the rule that a penal statute must be strictly construed and must not be extended to persons not within its descriptive term; but I have treated this situation as one of those wherein we should rely upon the modification of that rule which is to the effect that penal provisions are to be fairly construed according to the express legislative intent and mere nicety is not to be resorted to, to exonerate those within the terms of the law, or to defeat the purpose of the statute.

While you have not asked the question, I beg to call your attention to section 12996 regulating the hours of employment of minors. Those referred to in your communication cannot legally be employed for a longer period, or before or after the hours therein specified.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE AT SCHOOL—POWERS OF TRUANT OFFICER—AGES BETWEEN WHICH CHILDREN MUST ATTEND SCHOOL.

It is the duty of all truant officers to use legal procedure if that is necessary to force and compel school attendance on the part of all boys and girls who come within the provisions of sections 7770 and 7771, G. C., as amended in 103, O. L., 903, regardless of the grade of school that they should attend or would attend if they properly attended school.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1914.

HON. MARSHALL G. FENTON, City Solicitor, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 24, 1913, you submitted to this department the following request for an opinion:

> "Does not the law of this state make it the duty of the truant officer to compel, through processes of law if necessary, the attendance at school on the part of all boys under 15 years of age and girls under 16 years of age who have passed through the eighth grade of the public schools unless said boys or girls excused by the superintendent of schools on account of physical or mental disability or unless in the opinion of the superintendent that the child is being instructed at home by person qualified? In other words, does or does not the truancy law apply to students who are eligible to go to high school as well as it applies to students who are below the high school?"

Section 7762 of the General Code, requires that children shall receive instruction in the branches of reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, geography and arithmetic, as follows:

> "All parents, guardians and other persons who have care of children, shall instruct them, or cause them to be instructed in reading, spelling, writing, English grammar, geography and arithmetic."

Section 7763 of the General Code, as amended, 103, O. L., at page 898, requires that every parent, guardian or other person having charge of any child between the ages of 8 and 15 years, if a male, and between the ages of 8 and 16 years, if a female, must send such children to a public, private or parochial school during the full time that such schools are in session, unless excused from such attendance, as follows:

> "Every parent, guardian or other person having charge of any child between the ages of eight and fifteen years of age if a male, and sixteen years of age, if a female, must send such child to a public, private or parochial school, for the full time that the school attended is in session, which shall in no case be for less than twenty-eight weeks. Such attendance must begin within the first week of the school term, unless the child is excused therefrom by the superintendent of the public schools, in city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special and township districts not having a superintendent or by the principal of the private or parochial school, upon satisfactory showing, either that the bodily or mental condition of the child does not permit of its attendance at school, or that the child is being instructed at home by a person qualified, in the opinion of such superintendent or clerk, as the case may be, to teach the branches named in the next preceding section."

Section 7764, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., at page 899, provides for an appeal to the juvenile court in case such superintendent, principal, or clerk refuses to excuse a child from school attendance, as follows:

"In case such superintendent, principal or clerk refuses to excuse a child from attendance at school, an appeal may be taken from such decision to the judge of the juvenile court of the county, upon the giving of a bond within ten days thereafter, to the approval of such judge, to pay the costs of the appeal. His decision in the matter shall be final. All children between the ages of fifteen and sixteen years, not engaged in some regular employment, shall attend school for the full term the schools of the district in which they reside are in session during the school year, unless excused for the reasons above named."

Section 7767 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., at page 902, contains the following provision:

"All minors over the age of fifteen and under the age of sixteen years, who have not passed a satisfactory sixth grade test in the studies enumerated in section seventy-seven hundred and sixty-two, shall attend school as provided in section seventy-seven hundred and sixty-three, and all the provisions thereof shall apply to such minors."

By said provision it is apparent that unless boys are excused by the superintendent of the public schools in city or other districts having such superintendent or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special or township districts not having a superintendent, or by the principal of a private or parochial school, upon satisfactory showing, either that the bodily or mental condition of such boys does not permit of their attendance at school, or, that they are being instructed at home by a person qualified in the opinion of such superintendent or clerk, as the case may be, to teach the branches mentioned in section 7762, supra, then such boys must attend school until they are 16 years of age, as said provision of said section 7767, supra, specifically provides that all minors over the age of 15 and under the age of 16 years, who have not passed a satisfactory 6th grade test in the studies enumerated in section 7762, shall attend school as provided in section 7763, supra, and all the provisions thereof shall apply to such minors.

By virtue of said specific provision, it seems to follow that the age limitation fixed by said section 7763, supra, is extended from 15 to 16 years as regards boys, unless they have passed a satisfactory 6th grade test or have been excused from attending school, in accordance with the provision contained in the latter part of section 7763 of the General Code, supra. Furthermore, it is also apparent that the said provision of said section 7767 of the General Code, supra, in no wise affects the age limitation of girls, for the reason that under the specific provision contained in section 7763 of the General Code, supra, girls are required to attend school between the ages of 8 and 16, unless they are excused from such attendance by the said provision contained in the latter part of said section 7763, supra. Said section 7767 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., at page 902, further provides that the board of education of any school district may establish part time day schools for the instruction of youth who are over the age of 15 years, and who are engaged in regular employment, and closes with the specific provision that if such youth are not employed, and are between the ages of 15 and 16 years of age, then they are required to attend school the full time that the schools are in session, as follows:

> "In case the board of education of any school district establishes part time day schools for the instruction of youth over fifteen years of age who are engaged in regular employment, such board of education is authorized to require all youth who have not satisfactorily completed the eighth grade of the elementary schools, to continue their schooling until they are sixteen years of age; provided, however, that such youth if they have been granted age and schooling certificates and are regularly employed, shall be required to attend school not to exceed eight hours a week, between the hours of 8 a. m. and 5 p. m. during the school term. All youth between fifteen and sixteen years of age, who are not employed, shall be required to attend school the full time."

Section 7768 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., at page 902, provides that every child between the ages of 8 and 15 years, if a male, and every male child between the ages of 15 and 16 years not engaged in some regular employment, and every child between the ages of 8 and 16 years, if a female, who is an habitual truant from school, or who absents itself habitually from school, etc., shall be deemed a delinquent child and subject to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, as follows:

> "Every child between the ages of eight and fifteen years, if a male, or between the ages of eight and sixteen years, if a female, and every male child between the ages of fifteen and sixteen years not engaged in some regular employment, who is an habitual truant from school, or who absents itself habitually from school, or who, while in attendance at any public, private or parochial school, is incorrigible, vicious or immoral in conduct, or who habitually wanders about the streets and public places during school hours having no business or lawful occupation, or violates any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed a delinquent child, and shall be subject to the provisions of law relating to delinquent children."

From the foregoing, it is apparent that the age limitation of 15 years for boys, as provided in section 7763 of the General Code, supra, is raised from 15 to 16 years not only by the first paragraph of section 7767 of the General Code, as hereinbefore mentioned, but such age limitation is also raised from 15 to 16 years by virtue of the last sentence contained in said section 7767 of the General Code, supra, which says:

> "All youth between fifteen and sixteen years of age, who are not employed, shall be required to attend school for the full time."

This same intent is manifest on the part of the legislature, by virtue of the language employed in section 7768 of the General Code, supra, as follows:

> "Every youth between the ages of eight and fifteen years, if a male, or between the ages of eight and sixteen years, if a female, and every male child between the ages of fifteen and sixteen years not engaged in some regular employment," who absents themselves habitually from school shall be deemed delinquent children, although it appears by the foregoing provisions that if such male children between 15 and 16 years of age, are engaged in some regular employment then they need not or are not required to attend school.

By reason of the foregoing, it follows, that boys are required to attend school between the ages of 8 and 16 years, unless excused therefrom, as provided by section 7763 of the General Code, supra, or unless they are released from attending the regular school sessions between 15 and 16 years of age by virtue of having been granted age and schooling certificates and by virtue of being engaged in some regular employment, in which case such youth are only required to attend school part of the time, as provided by section 7767, supra, and are not to be regarded in such case as delinquent youth, as provided by section 7768 of the General Code, supra; and likewise, girls are specifically required to attend school between the ages of 8 and 16 years, unless they are excused therefrom by virtue of the provisions contained in section 7763 of the General Code, supra. Such attendance, I take it, on the part of such boys and girls, is required both on the part of those minors who are eligible to or who attend a high school, as well as on the part of those who are in or should attend the elementary grades below the high school grade; in short, attendance is required regardless of the particular grade they are in or that they should attend.

Section 7770 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., at page 903, specifies the powers of the truant officer, and contains a specific provision that he may take into custody any youth between the ages of 8 and 15 years or between 15 and 16 years of age when not regularly employed or not attending school, and shall conduct such youth to the school he has been attending or should attend, as follows:

> "The truant officer and assistants shall be vested with police powers, and the authority to serve warrants, and have authority to enter workshops, factories, stores and all other places where children are employed, and do whatever may be necessary, in the way of investigation or otherwise, to enforce this act. He also may take into custody any youth between eight and fifteen years of age, or between fifteen and sixteen years of age when not regularly employed who is not attending school, and shall conduct such youth to the school he has been attending, or which he rightfully should attend."

Section 7771 of the General Code, specifies the duties of truant officers, as follows:

> "The truant officer shall institute proceedings against any officer, parent, guardian, person, partnership, or corporation violating any provisions of this chapter, and otherwise discharge the duties described therein, and perform such other services as the superintendent of schools or the board of education may deem necessary to preserve the morals and secure the good conduct of school children, and to enforce the provisions of this chapter. The truant officer shall keep on file the name, address and record of all children between the ages of fifteen and sixteen to whom age and schooling certificates have been granted who desire employment, and manufacturers, employers or other persons requiring help of legal age shall have access to such files. The truant officer shall co-operate with the department of workshops and factories in enforcing the conditions and requirements of the child labor laws of Ohio, furnishing upon request such data as he has collected in his reports of children from eight to sixteen years of age and also concerning employers, to the department of workshops and factories and to the state commissioner of schools. He must keep a record of his transactions for the inspection and information of the superintendent of schools and the board of education; and make daily reports to the superintendent during the school term in districts having them, and to the clerk of the board of education in districts not having superintendents as often as required by him. Suitable blanks for the use of the truant officer shall be provided by the clerk of the board of education."

By virtue of sections 7770 and 7771 of the General Code, supra, as amended in 103 O. L., page 903, it is my opinion that it is the duty of all truant officers through legal procedure, if that is necessary, to enforce and compel school attendance on the part of all boys and girls, who come within the foregoing provisions and who are within the aforesaid mentioned age limitations, regardless of the grade of the school that they should attend or would attend if they properly attended school.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CEMETERY TRUSTEE—MEMBER OF THE VILLAGE COUNCIL—ABOLITION OF OFFICE OF MEMBER OF CEMETERY TRUSTEES.

Where a councilman-elect of a village was elected a member of the board of cemetery trustees ten years ago and never gave up his office, and was elected as a member of the village council, he is not precluded from serving as councilman of the village and has not forfeited his office by reason of acting as such cemetery trustee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1914.

HON. M. W. BRADSHAW, Legal Counsel for the Village of New Straitsville, Shawnee Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 6th, wherein you state:

"As solicitor of the village of New Straistville, Ohio, I am writing you for an opinion as to the right of one of the newly elected members to serve as councilman.

"The facts as to this newly elected councilman are as follows:

"About ten years ago this councilman-elect was elected a member of the board of cemetery trustees and has ever since and still is serving as a member of the cemetery board. He has never been re-elected or appointed since his election about ten years ago, but has actually held this position and yet is serving as a member of the board of cemetery trustees.

"The cemetery of which he is a member is a joint township and corporation cemetery.

"What the council wishes to know is, whether or not, his being a member of the board of cemetery trustees precludes him from serving as a member of the village council of New Straitsville, Ohio, or in other words, do the above facts as stated constitute holding another office in violation of section 4218, General Code?"

The qualifications for membership in a village council are set forth in section 4218, General Code, as follows:

> "Each member of council shall have resided in the village one year next preceding his election, and shall be an elector thereof. No member of the council shall hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, or be interested in any contract with the village. Any member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required or removes from the village shall forfeit his office."

It is first necessary to determine whether the position of trustee of a joint municipal and township cemetery was at the time of the election of the councilman in question and of his induction into office, a public office or employment, the holding of which by a member of council would be prohibited by section 4218.

The management and control of joint cemeteries were, by sections 4184, 4185 and 4189, General Code, placed in the hands of a board of three trustees elected for a term of two years by the electors residing within the limits of the territory comprising the joint cemetery district.

The legislature, however, at its session of 1913, (103 O. L., 272) passed an act repealing sections 4184 and 4185, and amending section 4189, so as to provide:

> "The cemetery so owned in common, shall be under the control and management of the trustees of the township or townships and the council of the municipal corporation or corporations and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation."

The effect of this act was to abolish boards of trustees of joint cemeteries and to transfer the powers theretofore exercised by such boards to the trustees of the township and council of the municipal corporation having the joint ownership of a cemetery.

This act was passed April 18th, duly approved by the governor, May 2nd, filed in the office of the secretary of state, May 3rd, and became effective ninety days after the last mentioned date.

The man in question, at the time of his election to the village council and his induction into that office, was not holding a public office or employment within the meaning of section 4218.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that he is not precluded from serving as councilman of the village, and has not forfeited his office as such by reason of having been acting as such cemetery trustee.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RAILROAD POLICEMEN—DUTIES—MAY COLLECT REWARD OFFERED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Railroad policemen may be legally paid a reward offered by the county commissioners for the capture and conviction of a person accused of a felony where the capture and conviction of such person is the result of their efforts, and the crime with which the person is charged does not concern the railroad company with which he is employed, or was not committed on its premises.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 1, 1913, asking:

> "May railroad policemen legally be paid a reward offered by the county commissioners for the capture and conviction of a person accused of a felony where the capture and conviction of such person is the result of their efforts?"

On December 4, 1913, I asked your department for more information in regard to this case and was referred to the Hon. W. C. Brown, prosecuting attorney of Jefferson county. I communicated with Mr. Brown, and he has advised me in part as follows:

> "Permit me to say the policemen in question were Mr. Albert Hinchcliffe and F. M. Butcher, Mr. Hinchcliffe residing in Steubenville, Ohio, and receiving his appointment under favor of the Ohio laws, and Mr. Butcher residing in the city of Pittsburgh and receiving his appointment under Pennsylvania laws; both officers being policemen paid by the Pennsylvania Company.
> "The case in question was of Guiseppe Ficco who was convicted of cutting to wound in Jefferson county, Ohio. The young man who was cut was Harold Cavos, an American, of exemplary habits; the accused, Guiseppe Ficco, being an Italian. The crime was committed on Washington street, in the city of Steubenville, Ohio; the arrest was made in the city of New York whither the accused had fled, and where he remained a fugitive for some two or three months. The matter seemed of grave concern, Cavos hovering between life and death for several weeks. Several times Dr. T. W. Walker told me he was in a serious condition, and one or two times I was planning upon taking his dying declaration. The commissioners offered the reward upon my recommendation. Both Hinchcliffe and Butcher went to New York where the arrest was made. For about two months they were working on the case. It was I that suggested to them to busy themselves in the capture. The crime not occurring upon railroad property their duties as policemen for the railroad did not require them, as I take it, to make any special exertions in the apprehension of this criminal other than that of a good citizen. The apprehension of the accused was solely through the efforts of these policemen. They told me, and I believe what they say, that they got leave of absence from the company to take this trip to New York. They also say that the time they were off is charged against them."

Section 2489 of the General Code, reads:

"When they deem it expedient, the county commissioners may offer such rewards as in their judgment the nature of the case requires, for the detection or apprehension of any person charged with or convicted of felony, and on the conviction of such person, pay it from the county treasury, together with all necessary expenses, not otherwise provided for by law, incurred in making such detection or apprehension. When they deem it expedient, on the collection of a recognizance given and forfeited by such person, the commissioners may pay the reward so offered, or any part thereof, together with all other necessary expenses so incurred and not otherwise provided for by law."

From this it is very clear that the county commissioners of Jefferson county had authority to offer a reward for the detection or apprehension of the said Guiseppe Ficco, and the only question for us to determine is whether or not the railroad policemen named may accept the same.

Sections 9150 and 9151 of the General Code, are as follows:

"Section 9150. Upon the application of a company, owning or using a railroad, street railroad, suburban or interurban railroad in this state, the governor may appoint and commission such persons as the company designates or as many thereof as he may deem proper, to act as policemen for and on the premises of such railroad or elsewhere, when directly in the discharge of their duties for such railroad. Policemen so appointed shall be citizens of this state and men of good character. They shall hold office for three years, unless for good cause shown, their commission is revoked by the governor, or by the railroad company, as provided by law. Not more than one such policeman shall be appointed for each five miles of a street, suburban or interurban railroad.

"Section 9151. Before entering upon the duties of his office, each policeman so appointed shall take and subscribe an oath of office, which shall be endorsed on his commission. A certified copy of such commission, with the oath, shall be recorded in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court in each county through or into which the railroad runs for which such policeman is appointed, and intended to act. Policemen so appointed and commissioned severally shall possess and exercise the powers, and be subject to the liabilities of policemen of cities in the several counties in which they are authorized to act while discharging the duties for which they are appointed."

Inasmuch as section 9150 provides that railroad policemen are authorized "to act for and on the premises of such railroad or elsewhere, when directly in discharge of their duties for such railroad," and section 9151 makes provision that "policemen so appointed and commissioned severally shall possess and exercise the powers, and be subject to the liabilities of policemen of cities in the several counties in which they are authorized to act, while discharging the duties for which they are appointed," it is my opinion that a railroad policeman appointed in this state is only a police officer while discharging his duty to the railroad company, and that when he arrests or assists in the arrest of a person charged with a crime which does not concern the railroad company, or was not committed on their premises, he is acting in the capacity of a private citizen and is entitled to receive any such reward offered for such service.

The statute of Pennsylvania governing the appointment of police officers is similar to our own statute, and it has been held in that state:

> "a railroad policeman is entitled to a reward offered (or his proportionate share of same, if others assisted) for the detection and conviction of a criminal, if he did more than merely to make the arrest under a warrant * * * within the scope of his official duties."
> Pyle vs. Sweigart, 18 Lauc. L. Review, p. 81, 1899.

For these reasons it is my conclusion that the railroad policemen referred to in your request are entitled to the reward offered by the commissioners of Jefferson county, Ohio.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE HIGHWAY LAW—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE STATE HIGHWAY LAW—CASE OF LINK VS. KARB.

The question as to the constitutionality of the state highway department law was before the supreme court in the case of Link vs. Karb. The decision of the court in that case constitutes the constitutionality of the law res adjudicata.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1914.

HON. JAMES R. MARKER, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have had under consideration for some time your letter of October 31, 1913, enclosing a letter from Hon. Charles F. Ribble, prosecuting attorney of Muskingum County, together with copy of opinion from Messrs Storey, Thorndike, Plamer and Dodge, of Boston, Mass. Your letter requested my views on the conclusions expressed by these gentlemen respecting the constitutionality of the state highway department law and certain proceedings thereunder.

One of the propositions advanced by the gentlemen named is that, by reason of article XII, section 11, of the present constitution of this state, the state highway law, which, in providing for the issuance of bonds, contains no machinery for the annual levy and collection of an amount sufficient to pay interest on the bonds and to set aside a sufficient amount for sinking fund purposes to retire them at maturity, is therefore unconstitutional in this respect.

I had hoped by this time to be able to advise you with some authority on this point. There is at present a case pending in the supreme court of this state, entitled Link vs. Karb, which arose in this county and which was admittedly instituted for the purpose of testing this question. The case has been advanced for early hearing by the supreme court, but has not yet been submitted.

So long as this case is pending it would be, of course, quite improper for me to attempt to express an opinion upon the question which is involved therein. I must, therefore, decline to do so at the present time.

Having received assurance from a member of your department that my opinion upon the remaining question was desired and would be acceptable without the expression of any view respecting the question just mentioned, I address myself accordingly to such remaining question, which may be stated as follows:

"Does the fact that the law provides for the improvement of roads outside the limits of a municipality exclusively, and yet authorizes the levy of a tax upon an entire county, including municipalities therein, render the law fundamentally unconstitutional, as violative of section 2, article I of our constitution, which provides that 'all political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit * * *.'"

It is true that an intimation of this kind is found in the opinion in Hixon vs. Burson, 54 O. S. 470-485; but, as Judge Burket, who delivered the opinion, remarks, "this point was not presented by counsel in their briefs (and) it is left undecided."

On the other hand, in Lima vs. McBride, 34 O. S. 338, is found an equally direct intimation to a contrary effect. The language of Judge Okey's opinion on this point is:

"The people of the whole county are supposed to have an interest in the public highways. The particular condition of things which called for the imposition of the tax is unknown to us, but we are bound to assume it justified a levy on all the taxable property of the county; and we are not warranted in saying that it would be a violation of the constitution to tax the citizens of Lima, in common with the people throughout the county, for the repair of roads on which the prosperity of the corporation may largely depend; * * *. (Citing Burroughs on Taxation, 61; Cooley on Taxation, 104.)"

The question raised by the gentleman whose opinion is submitted to me by you has not been directly passed upon by the supreme court of this state. Lima vs. McBride, it must be admitted, is no greater authority in one direction than Hixson vs. Burson is in the other. At least, however, we are at liberty, under these circumstances, to form an opinion as to what the Ohio supreme court would hold in a proper case, by choosing that view of the question which seems to be founded upon the better reasoning and authority. The reasoning of Judge Okey is much more satisfactory to me than the mere conclusion of Judge Burket; and the authorities cited by Judge Okey certainly support the principle upon which they are cited. Therefore, I would be of the opinion that the supreme court of this state would, in a proper case, sustain the highway department law as against any such objection.

But there is another aspect of the case which is entitled to some consideration at least. You are, of course, aware of the recent and as yet unreported decision in the case of State ex rel. Donahey vs. Edmundson, wherein the supreme court sustained the constitutionality of what is familiarly known as the Hite half-mile road levy law of 1913. The principal attack upon this law, as set forth in the pleadings, was that, because a part of the revenue to be raised by means of the levy provided for therein was to go into the state highway fund and be administered as provided in the state highway law, the validity of the Hite law depended upon the validity of the state highway law; and that, for a variety of alleged reasons, the state highway law was unconstitutional so that the Hite law itself was unconstitutional.

While the exact ground of objection to the state highway law, asserted by the gentleman whose opinion has been submitted to me, was not raised in that case, some of the other points which were raised therein were essentially of the same nature. The court held the Hite law constitutional, and in so doing, necessarily held the state highway department law to be constitutional; for it was admitted that the constitutionality of the Hite law did depend upon the constitutionality of the state highway department law.

The nature of the objection to the state highway department law now under consideration is fundamental; so that the law could not be held invalid in the particular now complained of without destroying its validity in toto.

It occurs to me, therefore, that the question as to the constitutionality of the state highway department law was before the supreme court in the case cited; and that the decision of the supreme court in that case constitutes the constitutionality of that law res adjudicata. I do not believe, at this time, that the supreme court of this state would seriously consider, in the face of the decision just mentioned, any claim to the effect that the state highway department law is unconstitutional throughout the field of its operation.

It is only proper, however, for me to point out that the decision in the case last cited did not have the effect of sustaining every single provision of the state highway department law against objections which might invalidate them as separate provisions without destroying the validity of the entire act. So that the point raised against the constitutionality of the bond issue provisions of the act, under section 11 of article XII of the constitution, could still be urged, notwithstanding the decision in State ex rel. vs. Edmundson.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE TO REPLACE A BRIDGE THAT HAS BEEN CONDEMNED—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—BOND ISSUE.

Where a bridge over the Miami river in Butler county was destroyed by the flood and a temporary bridge constructed and the temporary bridge becomes dangerous to public travel, this bridge may be condemned for public travel by the commissioners and a new bridge built in its place and the same be paid for according to the provisions of sections 5643 and 5644, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1914.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Butler County, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You advised me verbally that a bridge over the Miami river in Butler county was destroyed by the flood, that a temporary bridge was constructed, that the bridge was an important one, that the bridge is maintained by the county, and that it has become dangerous to public travel. You wish to know if this bridge should be condemned for public travel by the commissioners and the building of a new bridge is by them deemed necessary for accommodation to the public, whether the commissioners may without first submitting the question to the voters of the county levy a tax for the purpose in an amount not to exceed in any one year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of said county.

Section 5643 of the General Code provides:

"If an important bridge, belonging to or maintained by any county, becomes dangerous to public travel, by decay or otherwise and is condemned for public travel by the commissioners of such county, and the repairs thereof, or the building of a new bridge in place thereof, is deemed, by them, necessary for the public accommodation, the commissioners, without first submitting the question to the voters of the county, may levy a tax for either of such purposes in an amount not to exceed in any one year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of said county."

Section 5644 of the General Code provides as follows:

"If the county commissioners deem it necessary or advisable, they may anticipate the collection of such special tax by borrowing a sum not exceeding the amount so levied, at a rate of interest not exceeding six per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually and may issue notes or bonds therefor, payable when said tax is collected, or the commissioners, without such submission of the question, may proceed under the authority conferred by law to borrow such sums of money as is necessary for either of the purposes before mentioned, and issue bonds therefor. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds, they shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

It is the opinion of this department that under the facts stated you have a right to proceed under said sections for the purpose of building a new bridge in place of the one condemned. Aside from the fact that you are condemning a bridge constructed for temporary purposes, it is the opinion of this department that the meaning of section 5643 of the General Code is broad enough to confer the authority for building a bridge upon the commissioners when a bridge is washed away by a flood or destroyed in any manner.

To say that a bridge that becomes dangerous to public travel either by decay or through other reasons may be rebuilt and one may not be rebuilt that has been completely destroyed is to give substance to shadow.

If by a flood the bridge is made dangerous, unquestionably you could proceed under section 5643; and if it be destroyed by a flood you certainly have a right to do the same thing as if it were made dangerous by a flood. In a modified sense the bridge is still there; that is, the approaches are there, the road is still there, mayhap, the abutments are there. Without going into detail, as both you and I are in a hurry, it is my conclusion that under the facts presented by you, you have a right to proceed under said sections, and I would therefore advise that you have the commissioners pass the necessary condemnation resolutions.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—SNYDER ACT—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—CONSTRUCTION OF A PERMANENT BRIDGE TO REPLACE A TEMPORARY STRUCTURE—BOND ISSUE.

By reason of the joint effect of section 8 of the Snyder law and sections 5643 and 5644 of the General Code, the county commissioners of Butler county may lawfully condemn a temporary bridge erected after the March flood and construct in its place a permanent bridge across the Miami river in the city of Hamilton. Bonds that are issued for this purpose must be issued under the Snyder law and the taxes levied for the retirement of such bonds must be levied under the provisions of the same act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1914.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 17th, in which you set forth at length the following statement of facts:

"It appears that the town of Hamilton was laid out under the government of the northwest territory and that as early as the year 1794, a few lots were laid out but that the plat of Hamilton was not recorded until the 28th day of April, 1802, which plat is now on record and shows that the said town of Hamilton was on the east side of the Great Miami river, and what is now High street was at that time designated as High street upon said plat which extended east somewhere near what is now designated as 7th street.

"It appears as if Rossville was laid out in 1804 and that the plat of Rossville, which was on the west side of the Great Miami river opposite the town above known as Hamilton, was recorded on the 14th day of March, 1804, and what is now Main street was at that time designated as Morris street on said plat, extending to what is now "D" street in the city of Hamilton.

"It appears as if the town of Hamilton was incorporated by an act of the legislature passed in January, 1810, which corporation became forfeited and that in the year 1827, the town was again incorporated under the names of 'the towns of Hamilton and Rossville.'

"It appears that on March 7, 1835, the legislature passed a law amending the act of incorporation and by said act the name of the corporation was changed to that of the town of Hamilton.

It appears that in December of the year 1808, a certain road was laid out, starting in the eastern part of said county on the Warren county line and leading across the Great Miami river to the Indiana state line, but at this time the county surveyor cannot say definitely that the said road crosses the said river at the intersection of High and Main street with said river.

"It would appear that in the year 1816, a company was incorporated by the legislature of the state of Ohio to construct a bridge across the Great Miami river at Hamilton, which was completed and opened to traffic in December of 1819, was a toll bridge and the first bridge constructed over the Great Miami river at what is known as the intersection of High and Main streets with the Great Miami river, said bridge taking the place of ferries which were discontinued in the year 1819.

The above mentioned bridge was swept away in the flood of September, 1866, which was rebuilt under an act passed on the 28th day of January, 1867, 64 O. L., 267-268, giving the county commissioners of Butler county the right to construct a bridge across said river which bridge was replaced by the bridge which was swept away by the flood of March and April, 1913, by the county commissioners under an act passed May 21, 1894, (91 O. L., 813; see also 89 O. L. 526), which act authorized the county commissioners of Butler county to build a bridge across the Great Miami river at the intersection of High and Main streets with said river.

"It woud appear by the case of the State ex rel. vs. Davis, et al., 55 O. S., page 15, that an act of the legislature authorizing the county commissioners of Butler county to build the within mentioned bridge over the Great Miami river at High and Main streets in this city would be unconstitutional, as said case was decided June 23, 1896 after the former similar act had been passed granting the county commissioners the right to build the former bridge at said place, which was swept away by the flood of March and April, 1913."

You call my attention to the emergency act passed by the last general assembly, 103 O. L. 141, and especially to the language of section 1 thereof, wherein it is provided that certain enumerated public authorities shall have the right temporarily to repair or replace public property, or public ways, which such officers are authorized to "repair, reconstruct or construct under any general law of this state."

You then assume that the power of public authorities to make permanent replacements and reconstructions is similarly limited. That is that no permanent replacement or reconstruction can be made except by the public authorities authorized by general law originally to construct the public improvement in question.

In this assumption, I think you are in error. Section 1 of the so-called "Snyder emergency law" relates exclusively to the making of temporary repairs, reconstructions and replacements of property damaged by the 1913 flood. No authority is found in this section to make any permanent repairs or replacements, nor can any limitation upon the power to make permanent repairs and replacements be inferred from this section.

The reason for the phraseology of this section will appear from a further consideration of its language. As the section itself has it, the enumerated public authorities are "hereby empowered" to do certain things. The section is enacted, then, upon the theory that it is a great power which possibly would not be possessed by the authorities in question without the enactment of the statute. This is indeed its language, for it authorizes the officers enumerated in it, with the approval of the common pleas court to enter into contracts without any limitation whatever for the making of temporary repairs and replacements.

The act will be searched in vain for any similar provision respecting the making of permanent repairs, replacements and reconstructions.

Sections 3 to 7 of the act authorize the issuance of special bonds in the making of special tax levies for the purpose of providing funds necessary to make permanent repairs, reconstructions and replacements, but it does not confer upon any specific or designated board or officer any power to make such permanent repairs, replacements and reconstructions.

Section 8 sheds a great deal of light upon the question which I am now discussing. It provides in part as follows:

"Proceedings under the general laws of this state for the permanent repair, reconstruction or replacement of public property and public ways, destroyed or injured in the manner described in section 1 of this act, shall not be subject to "certain provisions of such general laws."

It will be seen that this section, which directly refers to proceedings to make the improvements to which the act applies, does not confer upon any specific officer the power to make any specific improvement but remits all officers to the general law for their authority to proceed in the premises, merely relieving them from certain limitations upon the exercise of those powers.

Therefore, I am constrained to disagree with the assumption which you have apparently made, that because of the language of section 1 of the emergency law, the county commissioners of Butler county who constructed the bridge which was washed away by the 1913 flood under a special act of the general assembly, are precluded from undertaking the permanent replacement of that bridge.

The question which you ultimately submit is as to whether or not an amendment of the so-called "Snyder emergency law" is necessary in order to authorize the county commissioners of Butler county to replace permanently the bridge destroyed by the 1913 flood as described by you.

I have already pointed out that the Snyder law itself confers no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a particular improvement upon any distinct officer, but refers to the general laws of the state for the authority of any such officer to make any specific improvement.

At the out-set it may be stated that if the authority of the county commissioners of Butler county to replace or reconstruct the bridge in quesion was by a special act, then the Snyder law would have to be amended in order to cover the case. I have, however, examined the act in 91 O. L. 813, under which the bridge destroyed in 1913 was constructed, and find therein no authority on the part of the commissioners of Butler county to provide for the reconstruction or replacement of the bridge. Therefore, I conclude that the destroyed bridge was not one the replacement or reconstruction of which was covered by a special law, and if there is any authority to provide for its reconstruction it must be found in some general law of the state.

I believe such authority is to be found in the provisions of sections 5643 and 5644, General Code which provide as follows:

> "Section 5643. If an important bridge belonging to or maintained by any county, becomes dangerous to public travel, by decay or otherwise and is condemned for public travel by the commissioners of such county, and the repairs thereof, or the building of a new bridge in place thereof, is deemed, by them, necessary for the public accommodation, the commissioners, without first submitting the question to the voters of the county, may levy a tax for either of such purposes in an amount not to exceed in any year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of said county.
> "Section 5644. If the county commissioners deem it necessary or advisable * * * the commissioners, without such submission of the question, may proceed under the authority conferred by law to borrow such sums of money as is necessary for either of the purposes before mentioned, and issue bonds therefor. * * *"

At first blush it might seem as if section 5643 does not cover the case of a bridge which is entirely destroyed by flood. I would be inclined to look with disfavor upon such an interpretation of the statute, however, because of the ridiculous consequences thereof, and if the necessities of the case should require, would lean strongly toward the view that the county commissioners might act under this section and the succeeding section in order to replace a bridge destroyed by flood. But in the present instance the necessities of the case do not require any interpretation of the statute along the lines just discussed.

You inform me verbally, in addition to the facts stated in your letter that on the assumption that they were authorized to do so, the county commissioners immediately after the 1913 flood acted under section 1 of the Snyder act, and constructed a temporary wooden bridge across the Miami river at the point described by you, paying therefor out of the funds of the county with the exception of a contribution made thereto by a street railroad company in consideration of the privilege of laying its tracks on such temporary structure and operating its cars thereon. This bridge, as I am informed, is now being maintained by the county and is certainly dangerous to public travel, not by reason of decay, although undoubtedly from the very nature of the structure, it is susceptible of decay of the inimical consequences of high water in the river which may be reasonably anticipated at an early date, in the event of which the bridge would certainly be swept from its foundation or rendered impassable.

Now the temporary bridge certainly "belongs to the county" just as its predcessor, the permanent bridge, "belonged to the county," and both bridges have been "maintained by the county." It makes no difference in my judgment that the constitutionality of the special act under which the bridge was originally constructed may be doubted, or that the authority of the commissioners under section 1 of the Snyder act to make the temporary replacement in question might be regarded as doubtful. The original bridge was actually built by the county's money and the temporary bridge was actually constructed by the same means, no question being raised in either case as to the propriety of the proceeding. Both bridges were none the less the "property of the county" by reason of the supposed infirmity in the proceedings by which they were constructed.

Now there is actually at the point described in your letter "an important bridge belonging to the county," to wit, a temporary bridge constructed by the county commissioners. This bridge is "dangerous to public travel" by reason of the character of its construction and the perils to which it will inevitably be subjected. Therefore, in my judgment the county commissioners have ample authority under section 5643 to condemn that bridge and to build a new bridge in place thereof. They also have authority under section 5644 to issue bonds for this purpose under any law authorizing them to issue bonds.

In my judgment the Snyder law is the law which authorizes the issuance of the bonds and the levy of the tax necessary to accomplish the desired result; for the building of the permanent structure, while it constitutes a replacement of the temporary structure now existing within the contemplation of section 5643, also constitutes a "permanent replacement" of the original bridge destroyed in the floods of 1913 within the contemplation of section 8 of the Snyder law.

The Snyder law on its face contemplates that in a case like the one which you present two steps shall be taken by the proper authorities: first, the temporary replacement of the public property for the immediate public convenience, and second, the permanent replacement thereof for the adequate protection of the future public interests. On the face of the law, then, the construction of a permanent structure in place of the temporary one would be clearly and plainly a "proceeding * * * for the permanent * * * reconstruction or replacement of public property * * * destroyed or injured" by the floods of 1913 as referred to in section 8 of that law.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that by reason of the joint effect of section 8 of the Snyder law and sections 5643 and 5644 of the General Code the county commissioners of Butler county may lawfully condemn the existing county structure which is of a temporary nature and construct in place thereof a permanent bridge across the Miami river in the city of Hamilton at the point described by you, and that the bonds which it may be necessary to issue for this purpose must be issued under the Snyder law, and the taxes levied for the retirement of such bonds must be levied under the provisions of the same act and are relieved from the limitations of the general law as therein referred to.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE BOARD OF LIBRARY COMMISSIONERS TO APPOINT EMPLOYES IN THE OHIO STATE LIBRARY.

Under the provisions of section 789, G. C., the state board of library commissioners cannot appoint employes of the Ohio state library without the consent of the state librarian.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1914.

HON. J. H. NEWMAN, Secretary and State Librarian, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of January 26, 1914 (M110), wherein you make the following inquiry:

> "Can the board of library commissioners appoint the employes of the Ohio state library without the consent of the state librarian?"

In answer thereto I beg to advise that section 789 of the General Code of Ohio provides as follows:

> "The state board of library commissioners shall have the management of the state library. It shall appoint and remove the librarian with the consent of the governor, and with the consent of the librarian shall appoint the assistants who shall serve during the pleasure of the board. The board shall make such rules for the government of the library and the use of the books and other property therein as it deems necessary."

You will observe that by the express provisions of the statute, to wit: "It (the board) with the consent of the librarian shall appoint the assistants" it appears that the board of library commissioners cannot appoint the employes of the Ohio state library without the consent of the state librarian. Your department should have certificates of appointment which would disclose that the action of the commissioners in making the appointments was expressly consented to by the librarian.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SALES OF LIQUOR BY A DRUG CLERK—PROPRIETOR OF A DRUG STORE—PENALTY FOR ILLEGAL SALE OF LIQUOR.

Where a drug clerk was convicted for a violation of section 13195, G. C., the proprietor of the drug store and his clerks may continue the sale of liquor legally. The provisions of section 13239 apply to the persons employed in the store and not to the business itself.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1914.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of December 29th, you ask for an opinion upon the following question:

> "A drug clerk was convicted for a violation of section 13195, or rather pleaded guilty. The real facts were that he was not the 'keeper of the place' as provided in section 13195, but nevertheless he entered a plea of guilty to such a charge, without legal advice. Besides the real 'keeper of the place' there is still another clerk in this particular drug store. Section 13239 prevents a druggist or pharmacist from selling any liquor for two years.
> "Can the proprietor and the other clerk continue the sale, or does section 13239 apply more to the store than to the individual?"

Section 13239, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever being a druggist or pharmacist convicted of selling intoxicating liquor as a beverage contrary to a local option law, sells intoxicating liquor for any purpose, personally or by agent, within two years thereafter in the local option territory in which he has violated such law, or any place in this state where the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, shall be fined not less than two hundred and fifty dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, and, for each subsequent offense shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars."

Under this section before a person is liable to the penalties therein contained, he must be a druggist or pharmacist who has already been convicted of selling intoxicating liquors as a beverage contrary to the local option law, and if after such conviction he sells intoxicating liquors for any purpose personally or by agent within two years in the local option territory in which he has violated the law, or any place in this state where the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, upon conviction of this latter sale he shall be fined as provided in the section quoted.

As I understand your question, there is a record of conviction for a violation of section 13195, for keeping a place where intoxicating liquors are sold in violation of law, against the drug clerk. An additional penalty in section 13239 is fixed upon the person violating its provisions. It does not in any way attach to the place or store in which the illegal sale was made. I can see no reason why the proprietor of the drug store, or any clerk therein who has not been convicted of selling intoxicating liquor as a beverage contrary to the local option law, and who would make such sales of intoxicating liquors as would be within the law, would be in any way penalized by reason of the infraction of the liquor law by some other person than themselves, even though a clerk in the same store.

It is my view, then, that notwithstanding the fact that a clerk has suffered conviction for violation of section 13195, General Code, the proprietor or any other clerk may continue to make such sales as they would be authorized to make under the law.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LOST FEES—SHERIFF'S BILL FOR LOST FEES—WHAT IT SHALL INCLUDE—WHAT IT SHALL NOT INCLUDE.

A sheriff is entitled to include in his bill for lost fees only fees for services rendered in cases where the state failed to convict, and in misdemeanor cases where the defendant proved insolvent. He may not include in such bill fees for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses and fees in cases of lunacy, epilepsy and other cases mentioned in section 2846, as amended.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1914.

HON. M. F. MERRIMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter of January 1st, wherein you state:

> "Section 2846, G. C., provides for the payment of not to exceed $300 in lost fees to the sheriffs in addition to salary. This section was amended and section 2998, G. C., repealed in 1911, 102 O. L. 287.
> "Formerly sheriffs were allowed in addition to fees in cases where the state failed to convict and in misdemeanor cases where a conviction was had and the defendant proved insolvent, fees for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses, fees in lunacy cases and other fees for the collection of which no particular provision was made by law.
> "The question now arises in this county as to whether or not the sheriff is entitled to include in his bill for lost fees, fees for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses, and fees in cases of lunacy, epilepsy, feeble minded and the other cases mentioned in section 2846 as amended, the entire amount of his lost fee bill, of course, not to exceed $300 in any case, or whether or not under section 2846 and section 2996, the sheriff's lost fee bill is strictly limited to criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict, and in misdemeanor cases wherein the convicted defendant proves insolvent. You will understand that the sheriff has drawn fees in cases of lunacy, epilepsy and the other cases mentioned in section 2846, and paid them back into the county treasury. Now can he include those fees in his lost cost bill?"

Section 2846, prior to its amendment read as follows:

> "In each county the court of common pleas shall make an allowance of not more than three hundred dollars in each year for the sheriff for services in criminal cases, where the state fails to convict, or the defendants prove insolvent, and for other services not particularly provided for. Such allowance shall be paid from the county treasury."

This statute as amended in 102 O. L. 287 now reads as follows:

"Upon the certificate of the clerk and the allowance of the county commissioners the sheriff shall receive from the county treasury in addition to his salary his legal fees for services in criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict and in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent, but not more than three hundred dollars shall be allowed for the services rendered in any one year of his term. The fees of the sheriff in cases of lunacy, epilepsy, feeble minded, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, school for blind, school for deaf, and for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses, and summoning jurors, except in appropriation cases, shall be paid out of the county treasury upon certificate of the proper officer of the court in which the services were rendered."

When said section was amended section 2998 of the General Code was repealed. This statute formerly provided:

"Nothing in this chapter shall affect the power of the court of common pleas in each county to make an allowance of not to exceed three hundred dollars each year to the sheriff for services in criminal cases where the state fails to convict or the defendant proves insolvent and for other services not particularly provided for by law."

It was the intention of the legislature at this time, therefore, as it appears from the statutes quoted, that the allowance to the sheriff was for his private reimbursement, and included within the maximum amount of three hundred dollars all fees to which the sheriff was entitled for services in criminal cases where the state failed to convict, or the defendant proved insolvent, and also all other services, the collection of the fees for which was not particularly provided for by law.

In section 2846, General Code, as amended, the provision relating to all other services not particularly provided for by law was stricken out. That part of the statute which has been added, relating to the fees of the sheriff in cases of lunacy, epilepsy, etc., was clearly intended to specifically provide for payment from the county treasury of fees not particularly provided for at this time.

Section 2977 of the General Code provides that:

"All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

The fund which accrues from the payment of such receipts into the county treasury is known as the "fee fund." This statute includes all receipts in the nature of fees received by the sheriff, in the absence of a clear exception with reference to any particular fee.

I am of the opinion that section 2846, in allowing the sheriff in addition to his salary, legal fees for services in criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict, and in misdemeanors, upon conviction, where the defendant proves insolvent, not more than three hundred dollars per year, clearly intends to except such fees from the general provisions of section 2977, General Code, as regards payment into the "fee fund." This was clearly the intention with respect to these particular fees prior to the amendment, and the change in the statute is not indicative of any change of intention in this regard upon the part of the legislature.

As regards the other fees, however, now specified in section 2846, General Code, the collection of which was not particularly provided for prior to this amendment, I can see nothing in the wording of this statute which would except these enumerated fees from the general provision requiring payment into the fee fund. The statute does no more than specify a certain fee for specific services, and requires their payment out of the county treasury. There is nothing in this language to indicate that such fees were intended to reimburse the sheriff's private pocket.

Answering your question directly, therefore, I am of the opinion that the sheriff is entitled to indicate in his bill for lost fees only fees for services rendered in cases where the state failed to convict, and in misdemeanor cases where the defendant provided insolvent. He may not include in such bill fees for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses and fees in cases of lunacy, epilepsy, feeble minded and other cases mentioned in section 2846, as amended.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUOR LICENSE LAW—INTOXICATING LIQUOR—CONVICTION OF LICENSEE DOES NOT FOLLOW A LICENSE INTO HANDS OF THE TRANSFEREE.

Where a licensee files an application to transfer his license under section 35 of the liquor license law, the said licensee having been once convicted of violating the liquor license law, the fact of the conviction of the original licensee does not follow the license into the hands of the transferee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of December 23, 1913, you inclose a letter from the Hamilton county liquor licensing board submitting the following question:

> "A licensee files an application to transfer his license under section 35, the said licensee having been once convicted of violating the liquor license law. Section 35 provides: 'and the person to whom the said license is to be transferred shall hold the license for the remainder of the said license year, and shall have all the privileges and obligations of the original licensee under the license.'"

Under our license law a license to sell intoxicating liquor is granted to the recipient of it because of his personal fitness. The licensing board determines this fitness, and grants him the permit to engage in the business of selling intoxicating liquor.

Bouvier defines "obligation" in its generic and most exclusive sense as synonymous with duty. In a more technical sense it is a tie which binds one to pay or do something agreeable to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made.

Webster defines "obligation" to be the binding power of a vow, promise or contract of law, civil, political or moral independent of promise; that which constitutes legal or moral duty and which renders a person liable to coercion or punishment by neglecting it.

"Privilege" is defined to be a "peculiar benefit, favor or advantage of right or immunity not enjoyed by all or that may be enjoyed only under special conditions; a special right or power conferred or possessed by one or more individuals in derogation of general right."

Section 58 of the licensing act provides, among other things, as follows:

> "If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked and no license shall thereafter be granted to him."

This penalty is also personal. It is the licensee who, upon being convicted more than once for a violation of certain laws who loses his license. The second conviction works a revocation of the license of the person who has been twice convicted, and furthermore he is not eligible to have granted to him any other license.

The provision of section 35 imposing upon a transferee "all the privileges and obligations of the original licensee under the license" merely means that he is given with the license transferred to him all rights and duties possessed by the original licensee by virtue of having been granted a license. No penalties attach to the license; the provision for revocation of license on conviction of the second offense does not attach to the original license. As stated above, this penalty is purely personal. It is a punishment to the offender against the law, and when after one conviction a person transfers his license, the license goes to the transferee free of any penalty, and no different than if it was originally granted to the transferee by the board.

I am therefore of the opinion that the conviction of an original licensee does not follow the license into the hands of the transferee.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—FIRE CHIEF AND VILLAGE CLERK.

Unless it is impossible for a man to perform the duties of both positions there is no statute which prohibits a man from acting as village clerk and at the same time hold the position of fire chief.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1914.

HON. C. H. STOLL, Village Solicitor, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter of January 5th, wherein you ask whether a village clerk may hold the position of fire chief. I am unable to find any statutory prohibition against the holding of both of these positions by one individual.

Under section 4279, General Code, the clerk is elected for a term of two years by the electors of the village, and under section 4389, General Code, the chief of the fire department is appointed by the mayor. I am unable to find anything in the statutes which makes either of these positions a check upon the other, nor are there any duties annexed to either which would render it contrary to public policy for a single individual to perform while acting as an incumbent of both positions.

If it is a fact, therefore, that it is not physically impossible for one individual to perform the duties annexed to both of these positions, I am of the opinion that a person elected as clerk of the village is eligible to be appointed and may serve as chief of the village fire department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND—STATE DOES NOT REQUIRE BOND FROM SECRETARY OF OF AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION—COMMISSION MAY REQUIRE BOND FROM SECRETARY—WHERE SUCH BOND IS TO BE FILED.

The law does not require that the secretary of the agricultural commission shall give bond to the state of Ohio. The treasurer of state is without authority to keep such a bond on file. It is the duty of the treasurer of state to return such bond to the secretary of the agricultural commission. The agricultural commission may require a bond from their secretary if they so desire, and the bond should be deposited with the commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

HON. J. P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of December 11, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

> "On October 17, 1913, Mr. B. F. Gayman, filed with this department a surety bond in the sum of $10,000.00 as security for faithful performance of duty, etc., as secretary of the agricultural commission of Ohio.
> It is now claimed that such a bond was not required by law to be given to the state proper, and he desires to withdraw this bond from the files in order to secure rebate on the premium paid for same.
> "Will you be kind enough to advise me as to whether or not such bond is required, and whether one now on file should be cancelled and returned to him?"

I can find nothing in the statutes which either compels or authorizes a secretary of the agricultural commission to give a bond to the state or to have the same deposited with the treasurer of state.

I am informed that it is the practice of the commission to require a bond from their secretary given to themselves and deposited by them, but that the bond in question was required of their secretary under a misconception existing in the mind of the commission at the time of their power to require a bond payable to the state.

I am further informed that since providing the first bond, for which there is no authority, Mr. Gayman has given bond intended as a substitute to the board itself, which has been deposited with it.

I am of the opinion that the second bond is perfectly legal and proper.

As regards the bond given the state, however, which was deposited with yourself, I am of the opinion since the same is not authorized by law, that it is void, and that you are without right or power to keep the same on deposit. It is, therefore, your duty to return this bond to the secretary of the agricultural commission, and it is the undoubted right of that official to have the same cancelled by the bonding company.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—NON-TAXABLE BONDS—MATURITY—LISTING BONDS FOR TAXATION.

Where a man holds four one thousand dollar non-taxable bonds and these bonds are due and payable on April 1, 1913, but were not presented for payment until April 16th, this date being after the second Monday of April when money becomes subject to listing for taxation, such bonds do not lose their character, as such, by reason of their being overdue, and being non-taxable before maturity continue to be so thereafter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1913

The Tax Commision of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 12th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "A man held four one thousand dollar non-taxable bonds. These were due and payable on April 1, 1913. On April 16, 1913, he presented them for payment, and the same were paid. These bonds were due on April 1, and the party did not present them for payment until after the second Monday of April, evidently so that he would not have the money to list. Should the $4,000 be listed for taxation?"

The constitutional and statutory provisions respecting the exemption of bonds from taxation make no attempt to define the term "bonds" in such way as to throw any light upon your question. Obviously, the overdue bond is none the less a "bond," unless some good reason should appear for holding that its character is changed because of the fact that it was not paid when due. No such reason occurs to me. To be sure, it has, or may have lost its interest-bearing characteristics. It is no longer negotiable in the sense that it can be acquired by a bona fide holder. It is little better than a general credit.

However, this difference in my opinion was immaterial. The thing which constitutes a security, a "bond" for purpose of taxation, is not its negotiability; for an ordinary promissory note, or a bill of exchange is a negotiable instrument, yet is taxed as a "credit" if the payer be an ordinary individual or partnership, section 5323, General Code, defines the term "investment in bonds" as follows:

> "The term 'investment in bonds' as so used, includes all moneys in bonds, certificates of indebtedness, or other evidences of indebtedness of whatever kind, whether issued by incorporated or unincorporated companies, towns, cities, villages, townships, counties, states, or other incorporations, or by the United States, held by persons residing in this state, whether for themselves or others."

This statutory definition, is, of course, not conclusive as to the present question. However, it suggests the distinguishing characteristic of such securities, which is, that they be issued by a public or private corporation.

If the non-taxable bond mentioned in your letter is a bond of the United States or of the state of Ohio, then the fact that it is overdue is immaterial, for the reason that the listing of such bonds is governed by section 5376, General Code, wherein the word "bonds" is used in the sense defined in section 5323, supra; and for the further reason that as to securities of the United States the non-taxable nature of such securities would not depend upon their negotiable character in any event, the state being without authority to tax any obligation of the federal government.

If the non-taxable bond mentioned in your letter is one made so by the provisions of article XII, section 2 of the constitution, as they existed between January 1, 1906, and January 1, 1913, a different question might, perhaps, arise, yet on consideration, I am of the opinion that where "bonds" is repeatedly used in this section, it is to be interpreted in the light of section 5323, supra, at least to the extent of eliminating from consideration the negotiable attribute of the instrument as affecting its character, so long as it was originally issued as a bond.

I do not mean to go so far as to hold that an ordinary municipal certificate of indebtedness, or a county warrant stamped "not paid for want of funds," or a note of the board of county commissioners, or the board of education, would be a "bond" within the meaning of article XII, section 2 of the constitution, although clearly these evidences of indebtedness would come within the definition of section 5323, General Code. None of these questions is before me. My conclusion on the question submitted by you, however, is that an evidence of indebtedness originally issued as a "bond" does not lose its character as such by reason of its being overdue, and being non-taxable before its maturity, continues to be so thereafter.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUROR FEES IN JUSTICE CASES—DEPOSIT OF JUROR FEES—GARNISHEE CASES—SECURITY FOR COSTS.

For a verdict and before rendering judgment, each juror in a justice of the peace court shall receive seventy-five cents for each day's service as such juror, the same to be paid by the successful party, and such fee shall be charged up in the cost bill against the unsuccessful party, the same to be collected according to the procedure provided for the collection of such costs. A justice of the peace may not require a deposit of the fees of jurors before a verdict is returned, except as provided in section 10325, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On October 23, 1913, your department submitted to this department a request for an opinion, as follows:

> "Under the amended law, 103 O. L., 567, not to exceed $2.00 may be legally taxed as fees for justice of the peace and constable in attachment and garnishee cases. If the defendant demands jury, may justice of the peace require security for additional fees of justice of the peace and constable, made necessary by reason of a demand for jury, and may the plaintiff be required to deposit the fees of jurors before verdict is returned?"

In reply thereto, I desire to say that sections 10253 to 10289 of the General Code, inclusive, provide for attachment and garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace.

Section 10271 thereof, as amended April 11, 1913, (103 O. L., 567) provides as follows:

> "The personal earnings now exempted by law, in addition to the ten per cent for necessaries, shall be further liable to the plaintiff for the actual costs of any proceedings brought to recover a judgment for such necessaries, in any sum not to exceed two dollars and the necessary garnishee fee. Such garnishee may pay to such debtor an amount equal to ninety per cent of such personal earnings, less the sum of two dollars and the necessary garnishee of fee not to exceed fifty cents, if the same is demanded by the garnishee, for actual costs as herein provided, due at the time of the service of process or which may become due thereafter and before trial and be released from any further liability to such creditor, or to the court or any officers thereof, in such proceeding, or in any other proceeding, brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action. Both the debtor and the creditor shall likewise be released from any further liability to the court or any officers thereof in such proceeding or in any other proceeding brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action."

There is no provision in said section, nor in any of the others of said sections 10253-89 inclusive of the General Code, concerning the matter of attachment and garnishment proceedings before a justice of the peace, which provides that if the defendant demands a jury, the justice of the peace may require security for additional fees of such justice and constable. Neither is there any provision therein contained that the plaintiff may be required to deposit the fees of jurors before a verdict is returned. In fact, I am unable to find any statute which enables the justice of the peace to require security or additional security in civil actions before a justice of the peace, except in cases where the party bringing the action is a non-resident of the township wherein the action is brought, as provided by section 10483 of the General Code, and in that case said section 10483 of the General Code provides that security can be required before issuing process or prior to trial, as follows:

> "When a person is not a resident of the township in which he seeks to or does, begin an action before a justice of the peace, previous to issuing process, or prior to the trial, the justice may require such person to give security for the costs of suit. This may be done by depositing such a sum of money as the justice deems sufficient to pay the costs, or by giving bond with surety approved by him to the adverse party, for the payment of such costs which accrue in the action."

Furthermore, I am unable to find any statutory authority whereby a party can be required to deposit the fees of jurors before the verdict is returned, except in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in such cases section 10325 of the General Code provides that the party demanding a jury must first deposit with the justice a sum of money sufficient to pay the jury fees, as follows:

> "In actions of forcible entry and detainer, the party demanding a jury must first deposit with the justice a sum of money sufficient to pay the jury fee."

On the other hand, section 19271 of the General Code, above quoted, as amended April 11, 1913, provides specifically that in attachment and garnishment proceedings, the garnishee may pay to the debtor an amount equal to ninety per cent. of such personal earnings, less the sum of two dollars and the necessary garnishee of fees not to exceed fifty cents, if the same is demanded by the garnishee, for actual costs herein provided, due at the time of the service of process, which may become due thereafter and before trial. And such garnishee is thereby released from any further liability to such creditor or to the court or any officer thereof, in such proceeding. Said section further specifically provides that both the debtor and creditor shall likewise be released from any further liability to the court or any officer thereof in such proceeding or in any other proceeding brought for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the balance of the costs due in said original action.

It is to be noted that said section, in the first part thereof, specifically limits the amount of costs in such ancillary actions of attachment and garnishment, to the sum of $2.00 and the necessary garnishee fee, which latter fee is in no case to exceed 50 cents. This answers the first part of your inquiry.

However, section 10357 of the General Code, provides for jury fees and how the same shall be paid, where a jury has been demanded in a civil action before a justice of the peace, as follows:

> "Upon the verdict being delivered to the justice and before judgment rendered thereon, each juror shall be entitled to receive seventy-five cents per day for each day's service as such juror, at the hands of the successful party, which shall be taxed in the costs against his adversary. When the jury is not able to agree upon a verdict, the same compensation shall be paid them by the party calling the jury, and it must be taxed in the cost bill against the losing party, except as otherwise provided."

In answer to the second part of your inquiry, it is to be noted that said section contains no provision to the effect that the justice of the peace may require security for the additional fees of the justice of the peace and constable, if a jury is demanded by the defendant or by either party for that matter, and does not require the plaintiff to deposit the fees of jurors before a verdict is returned, but on the other hand, merely provides that—upon the verdict being delivered to the justice and before judgment rendered thereon, each juror shall be entitled to receive seventy-five cents per day for each day's service as such juror, at the hands of the successful party, which shall be taxed in bill of cost against the losing party.

It seems clear, therefore, that after a verdict and before rendering judgment, each juror shall receive 75 cents for each day's service as such juror, the same to be paid by the successful party and which said jury fees shall be charged up in the cost bill against the unsuccessful or losing party, the same to be collected in accordance with the procedure provided for the collection of such costs, if the collection thereof can be enforced against such losing or unsuccessful party.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Village of Oak Harbor to State of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1914.

COLONEL BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 12th containing abstract of title to certain real estate which is to be used as an armory site, and described as follows:

"Lot 44 and the west 27 feet of lot 43, also all the land lying between said property and the Portage river, except 17 feet off of the east side thereof, and in block 130 Wardlow division of the village of Oak Harbor, Ohio."

I have carefully examined said abstract, and it is my opinion that the present owner, the village of Oak Harbor, has a good and indefeasible title to said real estate without lien or encumbrance of any kind.

Before the state of Ohio can acquire a fee simple title to said premises, it will be necessary for the village of Oak Harbor to execute a warranty deed therefor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

Where a member of council accepts an appointment as medical examiner for the state industrial commission, such person by the acceptance of employment from the industrial commission, which is a public employment in the meaning of section 4207, General Code, forfeited his office as councilman, and council should proceed to fill the vacancy, in the manner provided by section 4236, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1914.

HON. H. M. LILLEY, City Solicitor, Piqua, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 10th, in which you state that:

> "Dr. J. B. Barker was elected member of council of this city at the last election and is now duly qualified and acting. Since qualifying as such councilman he has been appointed as medical examiner for this locality by the state industrial commission" and inquire whether under the above circumstances he may continue to act as a member of the council of the city of Piqua.

The qualifications for membership in a city council are prescribed by section 4207, General Code, which reads, in part, as follows:

> "* * * Each member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and shall not be interested in any contract with the city. A member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required, or removes from his ward, if elected from a ward, or from the city, if elected from the city at large, shall forthwith forfeit his office."

The general rule of law is that the appointment or election to another office of a person already holding an incompatible office is void. This rule was followed by our supreme court in State ex rel. vs. Kearns, 47 O. S., 566, and in State ex rel. vs. Craig, 69 O. S., 236, 244.

Examination of the statutes upon which these cases were decided disclose a difference between said statutes and section 4207, in that the former contained no declaration of the forfeiture of his office by a councilman who accepted another incompatible office.

In section 4207, the above mentioned rule is changed; because the holding of any other public office or employment is made to work a forfeiture of the office of councilman instead of forfeiture of the subsequent office or employment.

This provision was construed by the circuit court in State ex. rel. vs. Gard, 8 O. C. C., N. S., 599 (affirmed by the supreme court without report). The first paragraph of the syllabus reads:

> "The inhibition against the holding of other public office or employment, found in section 120 of the Municipal Code (Revised Statutes, section 1536-613), relating to the qualifications of councilmen, is not limited to other office or employment by the municipality, but extends to all public office and employment."

On page 607 of the opinion the court says:

> "We are of the opinion that the inhibition against persons holding public office or employment is not limited to office in or employment by the municipality, but extends to all public office and employment. This is evidenced by the exception of notaries public and members of the militia."

Inasmuch, therefore, as section 4207 clearly prohibits the holding by a member of council of any other public office or employment except that of notary public or a member of the state militia, I am of the opinion that Dr. Barker has, by the acceptance of employment from the industrial commission of Ohio, which is a public employment within the meaning of section 4207, forfeited his office as councilman, and that council should proceed to fill the vacancy in the manner provided by section 4236, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION TO DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION—BEGINNING OF THE YEAR—REGISTRATION CITY—ELECTION PRECINCT—COMPENSATION OF THE CLERK OF THE DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION.

1. The year referred to in section 4822, General Code, is the year which begins when the regular terms of the officers and clerks of the deputy state supervisors of election begin. The amount to be paid is determined by the number of precincts at the November election, preceding the first of May, or the first Monday in August, as the case may be, and this amount is to be paid for the year beginning on May first, or the first Monday of August.

2. The additional compensation to be paid by virtue of section 4942, General Code, is to be paid by the city in which registrations are held, and no part of this additional compensation is to be paid by the county; the county is not required to pay any deficit that might occur.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 12, 1913, you submit a letter from Mr. H. H. Haines, clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of election of Hamilton, Ohio, and ask for an opinion upon the two questions submitted by him.

The facts and questions are stated in the letter as follows:

> "First proposition:—At the election held in November in the year 1912, there were 82 precincts, and the deputy state supervisors of elections claim that by the provisions of section 4822 of the General Code they are entitled to compensation for the 82 precincts for all of the year 1913, whereas, the auditor thinks that said supervisors are entitled to compensation for the 82 precincts for the months of September, October, November and December of the year 1912, because his fiscal year begins on the first day of September. In accordance with this view of the auditor, he has up to the first of September of this year allowed the said supervisors compensation for 78 precincts, being the number that existed in November, 1911. Therefore the said supervisors claim that the auditor should reimburse them for the first eight months of the year 1912 for the 82 precincts.

"Second proposition:—In the city of Middetown, which is a registration city, there are sixteen precincts, but under the provisions of section 4942 of the General Code, the minimum compensation for each supervisor shall not be less than $100.00; but in accordance with the opinion of the attorney general apportioning such compensation amongst the various political subdivisions,- the supervisors will have received from the city of Middletown for the year 1913, $83.48, making a loss to the supervisors therefore of $16.52. However, under the said opinion $6.52 of his loss is to be borne by the city of Hamilton, thus making a net loss to each supervisor for the year 1913 of $10.00. The supervisors maintain that the county should bear this net loss, while the auditor is of a different opinion.

"The compensation of the clerk of said supervisors also suffers a loss proportionally."

In the first proposition the contention of the auditor is that the year for which the compensation is paid begins on Sepember first, and the contention of the board of deputy supervisors is that the year is the calendar year beginning January first.

The compensation is fixed by section 4822, General Code, which provides:

"Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

The compensation to be paid by virtue of this section is paid quarterly and is considered as a yearly salary. The statute does not prescribe when the year shall begin or terminate. There is nothing in the statute to show that the year contemplated by section 4822, General Code, shall begin and end with the fiscal year of the county auditor. Nor does the statute indicate that the year is the calendar year.

Section 4804, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 815, provides in part:

"On or before the first Monday in August, 1913, the state supervisor of elections shall appoint for each such county two members of the board of deputy state supervisors of election, who shall serve until the first day of May, 1916, and whose successors shall then be appointed and serve for a term of two years from and after such date."

Said section 4804 prior to said amendment provided in part:

"On or before the first Monday in August of each year the state supervisor of elections shall appoint for each such county two members of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, who shall each serve for a term of two years from such first Monday in August."

This section fixes the terms of office of the deputy state supervisors of elections.

Section 4789, General Code, provides in part:

"On or before the first day of May, biennially, the state supervisor and inspector of elections shall appoint for each county two members of the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, who shall each serve for a term of four years from such first day of May."

This section fixes the term of office of the deputy state supervisors and inspecors of elections, and the time when such terms shall begin and terminate.

The year contemplated by section 4822, General Code, supra, in fixing the compensation of such members is the year of their terms, which begin on the first Monday in August if appointed by virtue of section 4804, General Code, and on the first day of May if appointed by virtue of section 4789, General Code. In this connection it is not necessary to now consider the amended section 4804, General Code, which will change the time of appointment and the beginning of the terms.

The year therefore referred to in section 4822, General Code, is the year which begins when the regular terms of such officers and the clerk begin. The amount to be paid is determined by the number of precincts at the November election preceding said May first or said first Monday of August, as the case may be, and this amount is to be paid for the years beginning on said May first or said first Monday of August.

I take it from the second proposition that Butler county has two registration cities. If this is not true I cannot see how the city of Hamilton could make up any of the so-called deficit caused in the city of Middletown.

Section 4942, General Code, prescribes a minimum salary to be paid the deputy supervisors and the clerk. The question asked would seem to indicate that it has been contended that each registration city in a county must pay this minimum amount.

Said section 4942, General Code, provides:

"In addition to the compensation provided in section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, each deputy state supervisor of elections in counties containing cities in which registration is required shall receive for his services the sum of five dollars for each election precinct in such city, and the clerk in such counties, in addition to his compensation so provided, shall receive for his services the sum of six dollars for each election precinct in such cities. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such city at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each such deputy state supervisor under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year, and the compensation paid to the clerk under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. The additional compensation provided by this section shall be paid monthly from the city treasury on warrants drawn by the city auditor upon vouchers signed by the chief deputy and clerk of the board.

The additional compensation to be paid by virtue of this section is to be paid by the city in which registrations are held and no part of this additional compensation is to be paid by the county. The county is not required to pay any deficit that might occur.

The minimum amount of one hundred dollars to be paid each deputy supervisor is the minimum amount to be paid "under this section." It is the minimum amount for all the registration cities in the county. It does not mean that each registration city shall pay said minimum amounts.

I take it from the statements of the letter that Middletown and Hamilton are both registration cities. Therefore if the combined precincts of these two cities are sufficient in number to pay each deputy supervisor or the clerk the minimum amount prescribed by section 4942, General Code, there is no deficiency in said compensation. If the combined number of precincts is not sufficient to allow the minimum salary, then said registration cities shall make up the difference in proportion to the number of precincts in such cities. The number of precincts is the basis of compensation and the deficiency should also be paid in accordance to the number of precincts.

The compensation of the clerk is governed by the same principles which govern the compensation of the deputy supervisors.

In the letter enclosed reference is made to an opinion of the attorney general in reference to the apportionment of the compensation. This department has not rendered any opinion as to the rule of apportion of the compensation allowed by section 4942, General Code. This department has rendered an opinion as to the rule of apportionment between a county and a registration city where the maximum salary is paid. It has rendered no opinion as to the apportionment between two registration cities.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MANDAMUS PROCEEDINGS—DUTY OF THE CITY SOLICITOR TO DEFEND THE MAYOR IN SUCH PROCEEDING—POWERS OF THE MAYOR TO DISMISS CITY OFFICIALS—CITY CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Where a mayor of a city dismisses the chief of police, and the chief of police filed a petition in mandamus against the mayor in the common pleas court to compel the mayor to reinstate him. The suit in mandamus is a proceeding to determine the right to the position as between two claimants. The city solicitor may or may not defend the mayor in his official capacity. There is no obligation upon him to represent the mayor in such cases, especially where the solicitor is of the opinion that the mayor has not acted according to law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 26, 1914.

HON. C. A. LEIST, City Solicitor, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 17, 1914, you inquire:

"On the 8th day of January, 1914, the mayor of the city of Circleville, Ohio, discharged the chief of police of Circleville, Ohio, and served said chief with a copy thereof, together with his reasons therefor. The chief did not file an explanation therein, but within five days appeared before the board and filed an affidavit of prejudice against two members of the commission, setting forth that one member of the board said that he would not vote to reinstate the chief no matter what the evidence showed. The member did not deny this statement, but said he could sit and render an impartial decision. The board afterward and without a hearing and an examination into the facts, dismissed the proceedings before them saying there was nothing before them to hear because the chief did not file an explanation, and by such proceedings they refused to further act. The chief then filed a petition in mandamus against the mayor in the common pleas court, to compel the mayor to reinstate him. These proceedings were had under and by virtue of sections 17 and 19 of the civil service law passed in 1913, volume 103, pages 707 and 709.

"In the court of common pleas the mayor is made defendant, and not the city of Circleville, Ohio.

"The question upon which I am asking for an opinion, is whether it is my duty as solicitor to defend the mayor in the suit filed in the common pleas court."

You call attention to sections 4308 and 4305, General Code, and you also give the provisions of sections 28 and 29 of the ordinance of Circleville. The provisions of these sections are taken almost verbatim from the provisions of sections 4308 and 4309, General Code. The duties of the solicitor will be considered in reference to his statutory duties.

Section 4305, General Code, provides:

"The solicitor shall prepare all contracts, bonds and other instruments in writing in which the city is concerned, and shall serve the several directors and officers mentioned in this title as legal counsel and attorney."

Section 4308, General Code, provides:

"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

You state that council has not passed any ordinance or resolution directing you to defend in the mandamus proceeding.

Section 4309, General Code, provides:

"When an officer of the corporation entertains doubts concerning the law in any matter before him in his official capacity, and desires the opinion of the solicitor, he shall clearly state to the solicitor, in writing, the question upon which the opinion is desired, and thereupon it shall be the duty of the solicitor, within a reasonable time, to reply orally or in writing to such inquiry. The right here conferred upon officers shall extend to the council, and to each board provided for in this title."

The city solicitor is the legal adviser of the city and of its officers in all things which concern the city. He is not the legal adviser of such officers in their individual capacity.

Where, in the discharge of their official duties two officers or boards are in controversy, the city solicitor has the right to choose which one he shall represent. This is left to his discretion. The city solicitor is the legal adviser of the mayor and also of the chief of police as to their official duties, and should represent them in suits involving their official duties and wherein the city has an interest.

In the case which you present the interest of the city is to secure an efficient person to perform the duties of the chief of police. The city is not concerned with the personality of the chief, provided he is capable of and does perform the duties, and is a proper person for the position.

The mandamus proceeding now in question is virtually a contest to determine who is entitled to the office. The city is not a party to the suit or controversy. The outcome of the suit will not affect the rights of the city. In any event it will have a chief of police. Either the new or old. The city has a general interest, however, that is, to see that the person who is legally entitled to the position shall occupy it.

In discussing the rigth of a municipality to employ legal counsel, Dillon on municipal corporations, says at section 307:

> "Where a municipal corporation has no interest in the event of a suit, or in the question involved in the case, and the judgment therein can in no way affect the corporate rights or corporate property, it cannot assume the defense of the suit, or appropriate its money to pay the judgment therein."

This principle should apply in determining the duties of the city solicitor. While a city is not directly concerned as to who shall hold a particular office, or position, yet it is interested in a measure in having the rightful person occupy the position. Therefore, where an effort is made to require a mayor or other appointing authority to make an appointment or re-instatement which is clearly unauthorized, the city solicitor may defend the mayor in such suit, even though the city is not a party. Under certain circumstances it may be his duty to do so.

There is no obligation upon the city solicitor to uphold the mayor if the city solicitor is honestly satisfied that the mayor is in the wrong.

The suit for mandamus in question is a proceeding to determine the right to a position, as between two claimants. The city solicitor may defend the mayor in his official capacity, or he may decline to do so. There is no obligation upon him to represent the mayor in such case, especially where the solicitor is of opinion that the mayor has not acted according to law.

Very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ISSUING WARRANTS TO ASSIGNEE OF A CLAIM—DUTY OF THE STATE AUDITOR IN MATTERS OF THIS KIND—DUTIES OF THE STATE TREASURER—HOW THE CERTIFICATION OF SUCH CLAIM SHOULD BE MADE.

Where an appropriation is made by the legislature for the United Electric Company and the County Electric Company is the assignee of this claim, if the state auditor is fully convinced that the County Electric Company is the assignee of the claim in question, he would be authorized to recognize the receipt of the United Electric Company by the County Electric Company, assignee of the claim, duly attested by the proper officers of the County Electric Company, and issue a warrant for the payment of the money from the state treasury. The state treasury should likewise be fully satisfied that the County Electric Company is the proper assignee of the claim to be paid by such warrant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 17, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A few days ago you handed this department a voucher drawn by your department to the United Electric Company of Canton, Ohio, for a refund of corporation tax paid in error for the years 1902 to 1904 inclusive, amounting to the sum of eighty-four dollars and eighty ($84.80) cents, said voucher is payable from the unauthorized deficiency appropriation passed April 28, 1913, and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 10, 1913.

The appropriation made in said bill is found on page 549 of the 103 Ohio Laws in the words and figures following:

> "United Electric Company, Canton, O., refund of corporation tax paid in error for the years 1902 and 1904 inclusive in the following respective amounts, viz.: $28.20, $28.20 and $28.40_____$74.80"

From an affidavit which you submitted with the voucher it appears that on or about the 26th day of June, 1911, The County Electric Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Ohio, acquired all of the corporate property and assets of the United Electric Company, including all physical property and accounts receivable and chosen in action and credits of every kind, and that The County Electric Company is the owner of the claim for taxes paid by The United Electric Company to the state of Ohio for the years 1902, 1903 and 1904 amounting to $84.80. In other words, it appears that prior to the passage of the unauthorized deficiency bill, 103 O. L., 594. The County Electric Company had as to all credits become the assignee of the United Electric Company. You inquire whether under such circumstances you would be authorized in issuing a voucher to The County Electric Company. The claim for a refund of corporation taxes so paid in error is, as I view it, a legal claim against the state of Ohio but, of course, not enforceable against the state because of the established rule of law that the state cannot be sued without its consent. The mere fact that the state cannot be sued without its consent would not change the legal status of the claim for the refund of taxes erroneously paid.

Section 243, General Code, provides that the auditor of state shall examine each claim presented for payment to the state treasury, and, if he finds it legally due and that there is money in the treasury duly appropriated to pay it, he shall issue to the person entitled to receive the money thereon a warrant on the treasurer of state for the amount found due, and take a receipt on the face of the claim for the warrant so issued, and file and preserve the claim in his office.

The quesion as to who the person is who is entitled to receive the money as used in such statute is not definite and clear in an instance such as the one presented. It appears from the affidavit that the actual person entitled to receive the money in this case would be The County Electric Company, whereas the person entitled to receive the money as it appears from the appropriation is The United Electric Company. The intention of the Legislature, however, appears to be clear in this regard; that it intended to pay out the money erroneously paid for corporation tax to the party who was entitled to the same at the time the payment should be made from the state treasury. From the affidavit that we have before us it would appear that the County Electric Company claims to be that party. However, the appropriation was made to the United Electric Company and I think that the voucher should be made to the United Electric Company, as has been done in the voucher which you presented to us. I believe, however, that if you can fully satisfy yourself that the County Electric Company is the assignee of the claim in question you would be authorized to recognize a receipt of the "United Electric Company by the County Electric Company, assignee of the claim," duly attested by the proper officers of the County Electric Company, and issue a warrant for the payment of the money from the state treasury. A warrant, however, should be drawn in the name of the United Electric Company in accordance with the appropriation. In other words, you would be fully justified, if you are satisfied of the correctness of the assignment, to accept the receipt of the United Electric Company given by its assignee.

The matter, however, should likewise be taken up with the treasurer of state for the reason that he will be called upon to pay the warrant when issued, and will be responsible to the state should he pay the money out to an improper party. The warrant having been made in the name of the party appearing in the appropriation bill, and he likewise must be fully satisfied that the County Electric Company is the proper assignee of the claim to be paid by such warrant.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STEPS NECESSARY TO ESTABLISH EASTERN STANDARD TIME IN THE CITY OF CLEVELAND—IN THE STATE OF OHIO—POWER OF THE LEGISLATURE IN THIS RESPECT—POWER OF THE LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

In reference to adopting eastern standard time in the city of Cleveland, the city is empowered to establish eastern standard time only to the extent of matters over which the city is given jurisdiction, and so long as there is no conflict with the proper state authorities; this can be done through the legislative department of the city government. In order to establish eastern standard time in the state, action by the legislature will be required.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1913.

HON. HERMAN FELLINGER, Member House of Representatives, 57 Alpason Road, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 16, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

"I beg to renew my request for a ruling from your office as to the steps required to be taken in providing for eastern time in the state of Ohio. I would also ask for a ruling as to what would be necessary to establish eastern time in the city of Cleveland alone.

"There is considerable agitation for this change especially in Cleveland and no doubt it will be the standard time used here. Our chamber of commerce and other leading organizations have taken the matter up and report very favorable progress."

Section 5979 of the General Code, is as follows:

"The standard of time throughout this state shall be that of the ninetieth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, and shall be known as 'central standard time.' Courts, banks, public offices, and legal or official proceedings shall be regulated thereby; and when, by a law, rule, order or process of any authority, created by or pursuant to law, an act must be performed at or within a prescribed time, it shall be so performed according to such standard time."

As regards state offices and functions the time prescribed by this statute undoubtedly should be observed since it stands as the spoken direction of the authority from whence they derive their existence and powers. I am of the opinion that the chief import of this statute lies in its presentation of a rule of statutory construction or a legislative effort to present a norm for the maintenance of a definite order in the execution of all statutory directions in which the time of performance is an element. Whenever time of performance, therefore, is involved in the carrying out of a state law, the time prescribed by this statute must be adhered to. Notwithstanding the recent home rule amendment to the constitution, I am of the opinion that the matters of general law or judicial process are still absolutely and exclusively under the supervision and control of the state government, and that rules of construction provided for by legislative enactment will govern in all such matters. Under this principle, therefore, all contracts and other undertakings will be construed by the courts, in the absence of evidence of intention to the contrary, to have read into them the presumed intention to be governed by the time prescribed by the above statute.

Further than this, I am of the opinion that this statute is not to be given any sway. It cannot operate as a mandatory requirement upon individuals in their daily private activities, except insofar as time is an essential element for compliance with acts properly within the jurisdiction of the state legislature, for the statute is clearly merely directory in its force in any further connection. There is no sanction attending the provision, and no consequences are prescribed for non-compliance, nor is there anything to show the legislative intent that its rule is to be regarded as an absolute and exclusive obligation in the conduct of all matters and things. In brief, section 5979 of the General Code is not intended to operate as an exercise of the police power regulating the time by which all individuals in all their activities are to be governed. Since, therefore, this statute is not a police regulation, it cannot be construed as prohibiting municipal corporations from prescribing a different time for the conduct of all matters properly within their powers of supervision and regulation. The same is, of course, true with reference to matters within the domain of the federal government.

I am of the opinion that all matters properly within the jurisdiction of either of these departments may be required to be performed by such jurisdiction in accordance with their own time, since it would very apparently be an inconsistent and unthinkable delegation of any legislative or supervisory power which denied the right to prescribe a rule of operation for the things required by such power. It is self evident that whatever is within the domain of municipal supervision and regulation is within the power of the same authority to prescribe the mode and method of compliance as regards time or any other direction incidental to such prescription.

The conflict which might arise by virtue of different times being prescribed for conformance with different governmental functions in the carrying out of the respective state and city functions presents questions of policy and convenience with respect to which it is not within my province to treat.

You request me, however, to point out steps required to be taken in providing for eastern time in the state of Ohio. This is primarily a question for the legislature, and should be taken up with that body. Whilst the legislature might very readily change the statute above quoted so as to provide eastern instead of central standard time in this state, I have very grave doubts as to whether or not such a provision could be made of any greater force in the requirement of eastern time than is the present statute in the requirement of central standard time.

In brief, I doubt the power of the legislature, under the guise of a police regulation, to so interfere with individual liberties as to specify the time to be adopted in the conduct of all private activities, except insofar as time becomes an essential element in the performance of all acts properly required by the state within the domain of its legislative authority.

As regards your second question asking for a ruling as to what would be necessary to establish eastern time in the city of Cleveland alone, I am of the opinion that the city is empowered to establish a time different from that prescribed by the state only to the extent of matters over which the city is given jurisdiction in accordance with what I have stated above, i. e. where there is no conflict with proper state authority. This can be done, of course, only through the legislative department of the city government.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOUSE DRAINS—HOUSE SEWERS—PLUMBERS—SEWER MEN—LINE OF DEMARCATION BETWEEN THE WORK OF PLUMBERS AND SEWER MEN.

The line of demarcation between the plumber's work and the sewer man's work is three feet without the borders of a structure, there the plumber ceases to have jurisdiction and the sewer mans jurisdiction begins. This proposition is according to the provisions of the statute and according to the rules of authorities on plumbing and sewerage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 9, 1914.

HON. CORNELL SCHREIBER, City Solicitor, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On October 3, 1913, you asked this department for a construction of sections 12600-176, et seq., General Code, relative to the demarcation line between the work of the plumber and sewer contractor in the installation of the house drain and house sewer.

Similar inquiries have been made by W. C. Greeniger, state inspector of plumbing. John H. O'Leary, attorney for the Master Plumbers' Association of Toledo, D. D. Lewis, chief deputy plumbing inspector of Columbus, and others. (Copies of this opinion will be sent to all the above parties and others directly interested.)

The hearing of the matter was continued from time to time for several weeks, in order to hear experts and other evidence, together with arguments on the subject. Many persons were heard and documents submitted. I have given the matter my best consideration, and have reached the following conclusion thereon:

There is a line of demarcation between the two classes of work, when applied to house drains and house sewer. These two classes of work are defined, established and distinguished, by the statutes, building ordinances and codes in cities, state board of health and standard works on plumbing and sewerage. The evidence submitted, embraced a consideration of all these elements and their practical application to plumbing and sewerage work.

A controversy has arisen in some parts of the state, owing to the fact that the sewer contractors claim the right to install that part of the house drain from the house sewer to the top of the basement floor. The Master Plumbers' Association are insisting that the installation of the entire house drain is their work. There arises the question as to who should make the tests, required by law, of the house drain, if a part thereof is laid by the plumber and the remainder by the sewer contractor?

Let us get clearly fixed in our minds just what constitutes "house drain" and "house sewer," and what tests thereof are to be made, and by whom.

Section 12600-176, General Code, provides:

> "All house drains shall be of extra heavy cast iron pipe, with well leaded and calked joints, or of earthenware pipe jointed with mortar composed of one part best Portland cement and one part clean, sharp sand."

Section 12600-178, General Code, provides:

> "The drain containing the house sewer, beginning three (3) to five (5) feet outside the building wall, shall consist of iron pipe or of earthenware pipe not less than the size of the slant or opening in the main sewer.
> "They shall not be laid closer than three feet to any exterior wall, cellar, basement, well or cistern, or less than two (2) feet deep. * * *."

On September 14, 1911, the state board of health defined the house drain to be:

> "That part of the horizontal piping of a house drainage system which receives the discharge of all soil, waste and other drainage pipes inside the walls of any building and conveys the same to the house sewer three feet outside the foundation wall of such building."

The state board of health also defined the house sewer to be:

> "That part of the horizontal pipe beginning three feet from the foundation walls to its connection with the main sewer or cesspool."

The different definitions are found in the report of the state board of health and in a small note book issued by the state board of health, at page sixty-five.

The ordinance adopted by the city of Toledo on plumbing and drainage, sections 133 and 144, also defines "house sewer" and "house drain" as follows:

> "The term house sewer is applied to that part of the drain or sewer extending from a point three feet outside of the outer wall of the building, vault or area to its connection with a public or private sewer."

"House drain" therein is defined as follows:

> "The term house drain is applied to that part of a main horizontal drain and its branches inside the walls of the building, vault or area, and extending to and connecting with the house sewer."

It would appear from all of the above, that the house sewer ends three feet from the foundation walls, and the house drain begins at that point and goes through the entire house.

It seems to me that it is evident from the plumbing and draining ordinance of said city (section 122) that it was intended that the plumber should do drainage work. That section provides as follows:

> "Once in each year every master plumber installing any plumbing or drainage work in any building in the city of Toledo, shall register his name and address in the office of department of building inspector of the city, etc."

By section 12600-235, General Code, the plumber is required to give all house drains the water, smoke or air test. Said section reads as follows:

> "The house drain shall be tested with the water, smoke or air test. All alteration, repairs or extensions which shall include more than ten (10) feet, shall be inspected and tested."

Section 12600-233, General Code, provides:

> All piping of a drainage or plumbing system shall be given two (2) tests by the plumber in charge; first, the roughing in with water, smoke or air test; second and final, with smoke in the presence of the proper authorities."

Section 12600-234, General Code, provides:

> "The material and labor for the tests shall be furnished by the plumber.
> "The tests shall be made in the following order; 1st, the house drain; 2nd, the soil and waste vents and all vertical piping; 3rd, the final on the whole system. The first and second tests may be combined, but the second shall not be made until after the first."

On July 23, 1913, the state board of health of Ohio, at a meeting held, rendered the following interpretation:

> "'Plumbers work' shall include all piping in a building upon which tests are required to a point three (3) feet outside the foundaton walls and shall include the house drain, soil and waste stacks, conductors and roof leaders."

The above definitions and statutory provisions are universally agreed to by authorities throughout the United States as fixing the demarcation line between plumbers' and sewer contractors' work.

The sewer contractor's license permits him to install sewers, and as a sewer begins three feet outside of the wall of a building (and in some instances from three to five feet), his work must necessarily end at that point, and a plumber's license is required to continue the work from that point on and within the building.

From the expert evidence before me, and the authorities as found in the works on sewerage and plumbing, I think the following rule can be laid down:

That a sewer contractor's or sewer tapper's license should not permit them to do a plumbers' work, and that the demarcation line between the work of a plumber and that of a sewer contractor is at a point three feet outside of the foundation walls of a building, known in practice as the the connection between the house drain and the house sewer.

The position taken by some that the sewer contractor may do part of the plumbing work beyond the three feet limit outside the walls seems to be based upon the kind of material which the statute says may be used. I do not think this position is well taken. It is wholly immaterial what sort of material is used. The work from a three foot point without is necessarily done by the plumber and not by the sewer tapper or sewer contractor. The latter's license, in my opinion, alone, does not permit him to do plumbing work within the building and within the three foot limit. Moreover, as has been stated above, the plumber is made responsible for the tests of the house drain. He furnishes the material therefor and makes the tests, and whether he uses earthen pipe or any other material, the same tests are required to be made by him of this particular work, and it cannot, in my opinion, be said that he is required to make tests of work performed by the sewer contractor and be responsible therefor. I think this line of demarcation between the plumber and the sewer contractor, is firmly established as that of being three (and in some instances from three to five feet) feet outside of the wall where the one begins and the other ends.

If the building code of Toledo, or any other city, contains provisions which directly conflict with the General Code on the subject of drainage, plumbing, etc., such provisions are void and must yield to the General Code. This is true both as to construction and tests above referred to.

Licenses are required to be issued to sewer contractors and plumbers in the construction of a drainage system. The sewer contractor and tapper of sewers receives his license for the particular kind of work he is required to do, and it does not authorize him to do plumbing inside of the house or at a point on or beyond which the work of plumbing commences. If he desires to do plumbing he must have a license for that purpose. If he desires to do both he must have a license for both purposes. A plumber's license, as I take it, from the statutes and building codes, authorizes him to do the work of plumbing, commencing at a point from three to five feet on the outside of the wall and completing it on the inside. With a plumber's license he cannot tap the sewer, nor construct that part of it leading up to the three foot point; to do that he would be required to have a sewer worker's license.

There is evidently a great difference in the character and responsibility of a plumber's work and a sewer contractor's work. In some instances, for instance in Columbus, a person desiring to work at the trade of plumbing, either as a master or general plumber, must first make application to the board of examiners of plumbers and undergo a written and practical examination as to his qualifications and ability to do plumbing work; but any one desiring to do sewer work in said city, has only to pay a fee of about five dollars and file an indemnity bond for five hundred dollars and he may procure such sewer tapper's license, and he is not required to take any examination as to his qualification to do the work. If sewer tappers were permitted to go beyond the line of demarcation and do plumbers' work, there might be, and would be a great many incompetent persons engaged in doing plumbers' work, which requires a high degree of skill in order to insure safety as a result of their work. An inspection of the licenses granted to plumbers and sewer tappers will disclose a great difference in the two. A higher degree of test is required of the plumber, and a greater knowledge of construction and detail than that of a sewer tapper or sewer worker.

From the very nature of the work, and from the statutes and the ordinance and building codes of the cities of Ohio which have been submitted to me, I am of the opinion that the line of demarcation between the plumber's work and the sewer tapper's work is an absolutely fixed point at from three to five feet outside of the walls of the building or structure; that the plumber has absolute jurisdiction up to that point, and the sewer tapper from thereon to the sewer. Health, safety and all the elements of successful and useful plumbing sewerage depend upon the work being done by these two classes of artisans in their respective spheres. Neither should trespass upon the domain of the other. The plumber, above all, is responsible for the sanitary and safe condition of the whole plumbing system from the three foot point in and through the house extending through all its ramifications. He must make the tests above enumerated by the statute, and when the same is turned over, he is responsible for all defects that may occur. The state board of health has jurisdiction in all instances where plumbing is constructed, if the city building code does not govern the same, and even then, the state board may step in and supervise the plumbing and see that it is safe and sanitary. All building codes which are in conflict with the state law, as I have stated, are void, and insofar as they seek, in any instance, to confer rights, privileges and duties, they cannot be enforced.

In conclusion, I will state that the line of demarcation between plumbing work and sewer men's work is three feet without the walls of the structure; there the plumber ceases to have jurisdiction and the sewer man begins. This is a practical proposition, and the result and conclusion I have reached is plain from the statutes above quoted, rules of construction, consultation with authorities on plumbing and sewerage and oral evidence heard by me from experts on the subject.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LONGVIEW HOSPITAL — APPROPRIATION — MAINTENANCE FUND — APPROPRIATION FOR ORDINARY REPAIRS AND IMPROVEMENTS — BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION.

Where an appropriation of twenty thousand dollars is set aside for ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital, if the entire twenty thousand dollars was originally set aside from the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements, then it must be returned to that fund, because it was not in the first place lawfully set aside therefrom, but if it was set aside from the appropriation for maintenance, then it should be by no means placed in the appropriation for ordinary repairs. All the needs of Longview hospital are to be met out of the appropriation for maintenance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 29th, which I quote substantially in full as follows:

"I am directed to call your attention to section 1867 of the Code, which provides that, (referring to Longview hospital). 'Out of the moneys appropriated for the maintenance of state institutions, the board shall provide a proper allowance for said hospital.'

"I also wish to cite a paragraph from an opinion contained in the annual report of the attorney general of 1911-12, volume 2, page 945, which reads as follows: 'section 33 of the said act provides specifically in what division, or class, of appropriations the said Longview hospital shall participate 'maintenance and no other.'

"In apparent violation of the above section and opinion, the board of administration has set aside certain funds from the gross appropriation made by the general assembly for ordinary repairs and improvements to Longview hospital for the year beginning February 15, 1913, and ending February 15, 1914, as follows:

"Balance in fund O. R. & I.	$180 74
"From the partial appropriation	3,000 00
"From the general appropriation for maintenance	16,819 26

"Owing to the fact that certain funds were drawn from the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements to make good a specific appropriation made for a laundry and industrial building at the girls' industrial home, the funds for ordinary repairs and improvements have been depleted to such an extent that the board has been compelled to stop work on several needed improvements, notably at the school for the blind, the girls' industrial home and the Dayton state hospital.

"Your opinion is requested as to whether or not the $20,000.00 referred to above ought not to be transferred back to the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements, and an amount sufficient for the needs of Longview hospital for O. R. & I. be set aside from the gross appropriation for maintenance."

I find that I have in previous opinions, particularly that of April 15, 1913, addressed to the Ohio board of administration, held that the board of administration has the power to provide for the making of certain repairs and improvements at Longview hospital, therefore, though your question seems to invite it, I shall not reconsider that opinion inasmuch as the board of administration has acted in accordance with it, though, as you say, seemingly in violation of an earlier opinion to which you refer.

Under the opinion to which I refer I must conclude that it is proper for the board to apply maintenance moneys to ordinary repairs and improvements purposes, so far as this institution, i. e., Longview hospital, is concerned. This, however, would not hold good as to any other institution under the care of the board.

Your question also refers to the situation respecting the girls' industrial home. As the situation of which you speak was created with my verbal assent I do not desire to comment upon the legality of the acts done.

It appears that by reason of all the things which have been done the funds for ordinary repairs and improvements have been depleted, and the question is as to whether or not maintenance moneys set aside for ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital can be "transferred" to the general ordinary repairs and improvement fund.

It is sufficient as to this question to say that there is no authority anywhere to "transfer" moneys from the general appropriation for maintenance to the general appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements or from either one of these to one for specific purposes.

The general assembly provides the appropriations in question, and no authority other than the general assembly itself can make a "transfer" such as that of which you speak. The board of administration possesses the power to create for its own internal purposes subdivisions of each of these appropriations, apportioning the moneys appropriated generally for maintenance, for example, among various institutions under its care according to their needs. This apportionment may be changed from time to time as the board sees fit, but such changes can take place only within a given appropriation made by the general assembly and in accordance with the laws of such appropriation.

The only seeming exception to this rule is in the case of Longview hospital, in which case, by reason of the peculiar language of section 33, as I have heretofore construed it, the appropriation for "maintenance" may be used to make ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital. Even here the situation is not essentially different, because, though maintenance moneys can be used for ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital, ordinary repairs and improvement moneys, i. e., any part of the general appropriation for that purpose, may not be used for Longview hospital at all.

This seems to be your own impression of the state of the law in the light of my former opinions. This principle, however, cannot be brought to the support of an unqualified affirmative answer to your question, for you ask whether or not the entire $20,000 set aside for the making of ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital should not be "transferred back to the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements," and whether or not in its stead "an amount sufficient for the needs of Longview hospital for ordinary repairs and improvements be set aside from the gross appropriation for maintenance."

Your question naturally falls into two parts; the second part may be answered in the affirmative. That is to say, as I have already stated, all the needs of Longview hospital are to be met out of the appropriation for maintenance.

The first part of your question, however, seems to pre-suppose that the entire $20,000 for ordinary repairs and improvements at Longview hospital has been set aside from the general appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements; whereas the detailed statement made by you shows that the bulk of this amount, $16,819.26, was set aside from the general appropriation for maintenance. This may be a clerical error in the drafting of your letter, but if this statement is correct, then the $16,819.26 could, in no event, be transferred to the general appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements, because it did not come from that source in the first instance. The reasons for this conclusion have already been stated.

I must answer the first part of your question, then, by saying that if the entire $20,000 was originally set aside from the appropriation for ordinary repairs and improvements, then it must, as a matter of course, be returned to that fund—not technically "transferred" thereto—because it was not in the first place lawfully set aside therefrom but if, as seems to follow from your detailed statement, the sum of $16,819.26, or any other part of the entire $20,000 was set aside from the gross appropriation for maintenance, then it can by no means whatever be placed to the credit of the gross appropriation for ordinary repairs.

I trust I have made myself clear.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POOR RELIEF—POWER OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO RAISE FUNDS—ISSUING OF NOTES—BOND ISSUE—TAXES AND TAXATION—EMERGENCY.

The county commissioners should be able to secure money for their immediate needs for the relief of the poor by issuing notes themselves, conditioned upon the subsequent issue of bonds. Persons lending money on notes of this kind should first see that the county is able to float its bonds when issued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1914.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Verbally you inquire whether or not, under section 2434, General Code, the county commissioners may, for the relief of the poor, borrow money on the notes of the county, provided these notes are subsequently funded by the issuance of bonds.

As I understand it, the commissioners contemplate issuing bonds but there is an emergency necessitating the prompt raising of the necessary funds. It is therefore desired to have a local bank advance the money necessary on account of the note, and as soon as the bonds are issued take up the outstanding note and fund the indebtedness.

Section 2434 provides in part as follows:

> "* * * For the relief or support of the poor, the commissioners may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary, at a rate of interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum, and issue the bonds of the county to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

Were it not for the language, "to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof," section 2434 might be so interpreted as to afford to the commissioners a choice as to whether they should issue notes or bonds; Commissioners vs. State, 78 O. S. 287; (although so to hold would necessitate reading the word "and" as "or").

But when force is given to the phrase, "to secure the payment of the principal and interest thereof," it at once appears that the commissioners must at all events issue bonds in order to properly execute the power conferred upon them by this section.

In my opinion, however, if the commissioners should seek to borrow money on their note, or that of the county, agreeing in writing, and as a part of the act of borrowing, to issue bonds to secure or take up the note, a lender of money would be justified in advancing the funds sought to be raised.

Section 2294, General Code, of course, requires the sale of bonds issued by the county commissioners to be advertised for three weeks, and to be made to the highest bidder. It seems to me that, with respect to the purpose now under consideration, i. e., the relief or support of the poor, the two sections cited should be so construed together as to permit the procedure above outlined to be so followed. Such an interpretation does no violence to section 2434, which expressly mentions the borrowing of the money and the issuing of the bonds as two separate acts, and merely requires that the bonds be issued to secure the money which may have been already borrowed.

In other words, this interpretation of the section makes it mean that the execution and delivery of the note may lawfully precede the issuance of the bonds; but that the bonds must be issed in any event; so that the subsequent issue of the bonds is a condition of or limitation upon the power of the commissioners to issue the note.

Therefore, as already suggested, commissioners should be able, in my judgment, to secure money for their immediate needs by issuing notes themselves, conditioned upon the subsequent issue of bonds. Of course, the lender upon such an instrument of indebtedness would do well to look into the ability of the county to float its bonds when issued.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—"BLUE SKY" LAW—INSURANCE COMPANIES—COMMISSIONS—CAPITAL STOCK.

The superintendent of insurance as the commissioner for the purposes of the "blue sky" law, may issue his certificate upon the payment of the proper fees to the incorporators of an insurance company other than life, who have entered into a contract with one or more persons to pay them commissions for the sale of its stock. Such commissions together with other organization expenses, coming within the fifteen per cent. prescribed by section 12 of the "blue sky" law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1914.

HON. EDMOND H. MOORE, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 22nd, in which you state that you have been informed that the secretary of state has invited the opinion of this department upon the question as to whether or not a certificate of subscription of ten per cent. of the authorized capital stock of an insurance company, other than life, is required or permitted to be filed with the secretary of state. Your letter requests that, in the event that my holding in answer to the secretary's question is that such a certificate may not be filed, I advise you upon the following questions:

> "1. May the incorporators of an insurance company, other than life, enter into a valid contract to pay commisions for the sale of stock of such company prior to the time when all of the original capital stock of such company has been sold and the organization referred to in section 9515, General Code, completed?
> "2. In view of the provisions of sections 12, 14, 16 and 19 of the "blue sky" law, is the superintendent of insurance in a proper case authorized to issue his certificate provided for in such section 16 to such embryo insurance ccmpany, where it apepars that a contract to pay commissions for the sale of its stock are outstanding or contemplated, and where such commissions, together with other organization expenses, come within the limit of fifteen per cent.?

I enclose herewith copy of an opinion rendered to the secretary of state, in answer to his question, to which you refer. You will observe that I have held therein that a certificate of subscription of ten per cent. of the authorized capital stock, such as that referred to in section 8633, General Code, may not be filed in the process of the organization of an insurance company, other than life, subject to the provisions of sections 9512 et seq., General Code.

It therefore devolves upon me to answer your questions. Considering the first of them, I quote section 9513, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The persons named in the articles of incorporation, or a majority of them, shall be commissioners to open books for the subscription of stock in the company, at such times and places as they deem proper, and shall keep them open until the full amount specified in the articles is subscribed."

The powers of those who are designated by the statute as "commissioners" to open books for the subscription of stock of an insurance company, other than life, are identical, so far as the statute itself is concerned, with those of the incorporators of an ordinary corporation for profit before ten per cent. of the authorized capital stock of such a corporation has been subscribed. On this point section 8630, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The persons named in the articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit, or a majority of them, shall order books to be opened for subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation at such time or times and place or places as they deem expedient."

It is of course apparent that even in the case of an ordinary corporation for profit there must be a time when the "corporation" consists of its incorporators, that time being the interval between the issuance of the certificate of incorporation and the time when one-tenth of its authorized capital stock is subscribed. In this respect an insurance company, other than life, differs from an ordinary corporation only in that the interval during which the condition above referred to exists is prolonged until the entire capital stock of the corporation is subscribed.

Both the statutes last above cited refer to the "opening of books" and constitute the incorporators commissioners for that purpose. The assumption of the legislature seems to have been that, upon notice being given that books are open, the investing public would at once, without further solicitation, visit the place mentioned in the notice, at the time therein mentioned, and subscribe for stock in the new enterprise. But in the practical sense, if there ever was a time when capital was as anxious as this to find investment, that time has certainly passed by. With the exception of such corporations as amount to little more than incorporated partnerships and individuals solicitation is necessary, in order to secure subscriptions to the capital stock of an embryo corporation.

Obviously, whatever solicitation is found to be necessary prior to the time when complete organization may take place falls properly within the province of the "commissioners of subscription."

Practically this has always been so; and in the usual course of the organization of a company the function known as "promotion" has found its necessary place.

So the authorities have come to recognize, out of the very necessities of the case, the right of what are known as the "promoters" of a corporation to make contracts and incur liabilities, primarily their own but subject to ratification by the corporation when fully organized, and when so ratified, either especially or by mere acceptance of benefits, ultimately binding upon the corporation itself. See generally,

Thompson on Corporations, Vol. 1, Chapter 4.
Commercial Company vs. Miller, 1 C. C. n. s. 569.
Bank vs. Fence Post Company, 3 C. C. n. s. 372.
Third Ward Association vs. Latze, 11 Bull. 285.

Building Association vs. Zahner, 10 Am. L. Record, 181, 6 Bull. 389.

However, I am of the opinion that the incorporators of an insurance company other than life have definite corporate powers greater than those of mere promoters. Section 8627 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Upon filing articles of incorporation, the persons who subscribed them, their associates, successors, and assigns, by the name and style provided therein, shall be a body corporate, with succession, power to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with: also, unless specially limited, to acquire and hold all property, real or personal, necessary to effect the object for which it is created, and at pleasure convey it in conformity with its regulations and the laws of this state. Such corporation also may make, use, and at will alter a common seal, and do all other acts needful to accomplish the purposes of its organization."

That this section applies to insurance companies, other than life, is disclosed by the legislative history abstracted in the opinion to the secretary of state, copy of which is enclosed herewith. That is to say, it is one of the provisions not at present found in the insurance code, and which is a necessary provision in the sense that without it the exact status of the incorporators as to power to open books etc., is not provided for; and when reference is had to the legislative history mentioned it appears that the original insurance code provided that the incorporators should have the same powers and be subject to the same duties and liabilities as provided with respect to incorporators of a general corporation. The conclusion necessarily follows, I think, that a corporation, as such, comes into existence as soon as the articles of incorporation are filed and is composed of the incorporators. The corporation at this stage of the proceeding has the general power to contract and be contracted with, etc., but only for the specific purposes for which a corporation may exist at this stage of its organization. That is to say, it may not do business in the technical sense, nor pursue the objects of its specific incorporation; but with respect to the doing of its constituent acts and all those necessary to complete its organization, it enjoys the corporate franchise and the powers flowing therefrom.

I am therefore of the opinion that the incorporators of an insurance company, other than life, after the filing of the articles of incorporation, but before the complete organization of the corporation as a business company, do possess all the powers that the corporation has with respect to securing subscriptions for its capital stock. That being the case, I am of the opinion that a contract of the kind mentioned in your first question is a valid one and binds not only the "commissioners" in their personal capacity, but also the corporation itself when organized.

Your second question requires consideration of some of the provisions of the "blue sky" law. Section 12 is prohibitory in character; it provides in part as follows:

> "No person or company shall, for the purpose of organizing or promoting any insurance company * * * dispose or offer to dispose, within this state, of any such stock, unless the contract of subscription * * * shall be in writing, and contain a provision substantially in the following language:

"'No sum shall be used for commission, promotion and organization expenses on account of any share of stock in this company in excess of ---- per cent. of the amount actually paid upon separate subscriptions * * * and the remainder of such payments shall be invested as authorized by the law governing such company and held by the organizers * * * and the directors and officers of such company after organization, as bailees for the subscriber, to be used only in the conduct of the business of such company after having been licensed and authorized therefor by proper authority.'

"The amount of such * * * expenses shall in no case exceed fifteen per cent. of the amount actually paid upon the subscription.

"Funds and securities held by such organizers, trustees, directors or officers, as bailees, shall be deposited with a bank or trust company of this state or invested as provided by (certain) sections of the General Code until such company has been licensed as aforesaid."

Section 14, also mentioned by you, refers to and operates upon the "dealer." This term is defined in section 2 of the act as follows:

"The term 'dealer,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to include any person or company * * * disposing, or offering to dispose, of any such security, through agents or otherwise, and any company engaged in the marketing or flotation of its own securities either directly or through agents or underwriters or any stock promotion scheme whatsoever; except (here follow certain exceptions of no interest in this connection)."

The same section also defines the term "company" as follows:

"any corporation, co-partnership or association, incorporated or unincorporated, and whenever and wherever organized."

Coming now to section 14, its operative provisions are as follows:

"No dealer, for the purpose of organizing or promoting any company * * * shall, within this state for or on behalf of the issuer or any underwriter thereof, dispose or attempt to dispose of any such security unless such dealer be licensed as provided herein and until, together with the filing fee of five dollars, there be filed with the 'commissioner' the application of such issuer for the certificate provided for in section sixteen of this act, and, in addition to the other information hereinbefore required (here follow certain items of information, some of which could only emanate from a company already organized. However, these items of information so required cannot, in my judgment, be held to alter the meaning of the provision already quoted from section 14, which clearly includes within the purview of that section dealers engaged in promoting a company before its organization, as well as dealers existing in the floatation of its securities after organization)."

Before going further it is necessary to define the phrase "dispose of securities," as used in section 14. This is also defined in section 2, as follows:

"'dispose of' shall be construed to mean * * * obtain subscription for."

Therefore, it is apparent that section 14 applies, although in reality there is no "security" in existence during the technical "promotion" of a company. In other words, while the statute uses the phrase "dispose of securities," this phrase is intended to include obtaining subscriptions for securities to be thereafter issued.

The word "securities" is defined by section 1 of the law so as clearly to include stocks.

You next refer to section 16. This section authorizes the issuance of a certificate to the applicant who applies under section 14. It contains certain provisions which are somewhat inconsistent with some of those of section 14, in that it empowers the "commissioner" to make an examination of the "issuer of securities," and authorizes him to issue his certificate only in the event that "he shall find that the law has been complied with, and is satisfied that said company is solvent, that its business is properly and legitimately conducted, and that its proposed disposal of its securities or other property is not on unfair terms." No such investigation of the "issuer" could be had while the "issuer" is not yet in existence as such; clearly, no investigation of solvency or method of conducting business could be made as to a corporation still in the embryonic stage; yet section 14 clearly authorizes an application on behalf of a dealer engaged in organizing or promoting a company, as well as on the part of one engaged in assisting in the floatation of the securities of an organized company. Therefore, I am of the opinion that not all of the conditions in section 16 apply universally, but that where the certificate is sought by a promoter or by a dealer operating in behalf of promoters, the "commissioner," if he finds that the law has been complied with, and is satisfied that the business venture is a sound one, and that the proposed disposal of securities is not on unfair terms, may issue a certificate upon the payment of a fee without satisfying himself of the solvency of any company as a going concern, or the proper and legitimate conduct of its business. To hold otherwise would deprive the first provision of section 14, and many of the other provisions of the act, including some of the definitions in section 2, of all meaning whatsoever, and would limit the issuance of certificates to those engaged in assisting in the floatation of the stock of an organized company.

Section 19, to which you also refer, provides that:

> "If the issuer of such securities be a company incorporated, organized or formed to make any insurance named in subdivisions 1 and 2, division 3, title IX of the General Code (evidently the legislature contemplated title IX of part second) the 'commissioner' for all the purposes named in sections 14 and 16 of this act shall be the superintendent of insurance of this state * * *."

This section operates, in my judgment, upon a situation such as that concerning which you inquire, because, although the "issuer" in the case of the promotion of a company is not yet in existence, yet, the corporation to be formed in the future is for all the purposes of the act the "issuer." For the promoters, while they are securing subscriptions, have no authority whatever as a matter of course to issue any security; that must be done by the corporation when organized.

I am therefore of the opinion that when the securities to be sold are those of a corporation yet to be organized, which when organized will be "a company * * * organized * * * to make any insurance named, etc., as provided in section 19, the "commissioner," for the purposes of section 14 and 16, supra, is the superintendent of insurance.

Considering all the sections above quoted and referred to, together, I am of the opinion that the superintendent of insurance, as the "commissioner" for the purposes of the "blue sky" law, may issue his certificate upon the payment of the proper fee to the incorporators of an insurance company, other than life, who have entered into a contract with one or more persons to pay them commissions for the sale of its stock; such commissions, together with other organization expenses, coming within the fifteen per cent. prescribed by section 12 of the act.

Inasmuch as the incorporators constitute the company during its embryonic stage, the certificate may be issued to or with respect to the company as such, using the corporate name.

Only in the way which I have outlined could the "blue sky" law operate upon or apply to the securing of subscriptions to the capital stock of an insurance company, other than life; and as the intention to make its provisions applicable to the securing of such subscriptions is very clear, I have reached the conclusion that whatever inconsistencies and verbal difficulties may be encountered in the language of the "blue sky" law must be subordinated to that controlling intention.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONVEYANCE OF PUPILS IN A SPECIAL DISTRICT—BOARD OF EDUCATION—TRUANT OFFICER—COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE AT SCHOOL—SPECIAL DISTRICT.

A board of education of a special school district, through its truant officer, can compel pupils of a special school district who reside more than one and one-half miles from the school in such special district to attend school of such district, without providing conveyance therefor, provided that such pupils are within the age limitation fixed by section 7763 of the General Code, and provided they are not excused from attending school in the manner provided by said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1914.

HON. JAMES A. TOBIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 8, 1913, you submitted to this department a request for an opinion, as follows:

> "The New Salem special school district was formed from the village and outlying territory, including part of subdistrict No. 8, after which the school in said subdistrict was abandoned. Under section 7763, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 898, can the board of education (the truant officer) of such special district, compel pupils residing more than one and one-half miles from the school in such special district, to attend that school, without providing conveyance therefor?"

In answer to your inquiry, I desire first of all to consider and comment upon all sections of the school code which bear upon the matter of providing for conveyance of pupils of the respective school districts of the state.

Section 7730 of the General Code, provides for the suspension of schools in subdistricts of township districts and for the conveyance of pupils of such districts, as follows:

> "The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all subdistricts in the township district. Upon such suspension the board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such subdistrict or subdistricts to a public school in the township district, or to a public school in another district, the cost thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Or, the board may abolish all the subdistricts providing conveyance is furnished to one or more central schools, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district. * * *"

Section 7731 of the General Code, provides for the centralization of township schools, and further provides that when transportation of pupils is provided for, conveyance must pass within at least one-half mile of the respective residences of all pupils, as follows:

"No township schools shall be centralized under the next preceding section by the board of education of the township until after sixty days' notice has been given by the board, such notices to be posted in a conspicuous place in each subdistrict of the township. When transportation of pupils is provided for, the conveyance must pass within at least the distance of one-half of a mile from the respective residences of all pupils, except when such residences are situated more than one-half of a mile from the public road. But transportation for pupils living less than one and one-half miles, by the most direct public highway, from the school house shall be optional with the board of education."

Section 7748 of the General Code, provides that in certain instances, the board of education must pay the tuition of all successful applicants who have complied with the provisions of said section and who reside more than four miles from the high school provided by the board, by the most direct route of public travel, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or, that such board, in lieu of paying such tuition, may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from such school, as follows:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupils for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state, before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

Section 7733 of the General Code, provides that a board of education of any village school district may at its option provide for the conveyance of the pupils of the district or any adjoining district, to the school or schools of the district, the expense of conveyance to be paid from the school funds of the district wherein such pupils reside, as follows:

"At its option, the board of education in any village school district may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of the district or any adjoining district, to the school or schools of the district, the expense of conveyance to be paid from the school funds of the district in which such pupils reside. But such boards as so provide transportation, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the school house or houses."

Section 7732 of the General Code, provides that boards of education of special school districts may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of such district to the school or schools of the district or to a school of any adjoining district, as follows:

"Boards of education of special school districts may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of such districts to the school or schools of the districts or to a school of any adjoining district, the expense of such conveyance to be paid from the school fund of the special school districts. But boards of education of such districts as provide transportation for the pupils thereof, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the school house; and such boards of education shall not discriminate between different portions of said districts or between pupils of similar ages or residing at similar distances from the school house."

If the legislature had intended to make the conveyance of pupils in special school districts mandatory, it would have specifically provided that such conveyance "must" be provided, as in the case of section 7730 of the General Code, supra. Or, the legislature would have mandatorily required that one of two things "must" be done by the board of education, such as either paying the tuition of pupils residing in its district, who live over a certain distance from the school provided and who attend a nearer school than the one provided in their own district, or provide for the payment of the transportation of such pupils to its own school in lieu of paying such tuition, as in the case of the provisions contained in section 7748 of the General Code, supra.

Instead of making the conveyance of pupils mandatory upon the boards of education of special districts, the legislature has seen fit to make it only directory, and seems to special districts, the legislature has seen fit to make it only directory, and seems to have left the matter of such conveyance somewhat within the discretion of the boards of education of special school districts by merely providing that such boards "may" provide for conveyance of the pupils of such districts. In other words, the legislative intent seems to be that the conveyance of pupils in special school districts is optional with the boards of education of such district, the same as it is optional with the boards of education of village districts, as provided by section 7733 of the General Code, supra.

Section 7763 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 898, mandatorily requires that every parent, guardian or other person having charge of any child between certain specified ages, "must" send such child to a public, private or parochial school, for a certain specified time, as follows:

> "Every parent, guardian or other person having charge of any child between the ages of eight and fifteen years of age if a male, and sixteen years of age, if a female, must send such child to a public, private or parochial school, for the full time that the school attended is in session, which shall in no case be for less than twenty-eight weeks. Such attendance must begin within the first week of the school term, unless the child is excused therefrom by the superintendent of the public schools, in city or other districts having such superintendent, or by the clerk of the board of education in village, special and township districts not having a superintendent or by the principal of the private or parochial school, upon satisfactory showing, either that the bodily or mental condition of the child does not permit of its attendance at school, or that the child is being instructed at home by a person qualified, in the opinion of such superintendent or clerk, as the case may be, to teach the branches named in the next preceding section."

The conveyance of pupils residing in special school districts being optional with the board of education of special school districts, as provided by section 7732 of the General Code, supra, and the attendance of pupils between certain ages being mandatorily required by the provisions of section 7763, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 898, supra; it is therefore my opinion, in direct answer to your inquiry, that a board of education of such special school district, through its truant officer, can compel the pupils of such school district, who reside more than one and one-half miles from the school in such special district, to attend the schools of such district without providing conveyance therefor, provided that such pupils are within the age limitation fixed by said section 7763, and provided that they are not excused from attending school in the manner provided by said section; and provided further that such pupils are not attending a school in their own district wherein they reside, or a school in an adjoining district which is nearer than the school to which they are assigned in their own district wherein they reside, as provided by section 7735, G. C., as follows:

> "When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils without an agreement to that effect. But a board of education shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education of the district where the pupils reside. Nothing herein shall require the consent of the board of education of the district where the pupils reside, to such attendance."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE—PAROLE PRISONERS—FORMER IMPRISONMENT IN A PENAL INSTITUTION—INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW.

Where a prisoner has served an indeterminate sentence under the new indeterminate sentence law, and such prisoner has served a previous term in a penal institution, the board of administration cannot parole such prisoner, although the board may, by virtue of section 2160 grant to any such prisoner an absolute release at any time between the expiration of the minimum and maximum terms provided for by law for the crime for which such prisoner was convicted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 15, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 20, 1913, asking as follows:

"Can the Ohio board of administration parole a prisoner serving an indeterminate sentence under the new indeterminate sentence law, when such prisoner has served a previous term in a penal institution?"

The indeterminate sentence law (103 O. L., 229) reads:

AN ACT

"To provide for indeterminate penitentiary sentences and to repeal section 2166 of the General Code.

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:

"Section 1. That section 2166 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

"Section 2166: Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio penitentiary for felonies, except treason, and murder in the first degree, shall make them general and not fixed or limited in their duration. All terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter, but no such terms shall exceed the maximum, nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for the felony of which the prisoner was convicted. If a prisoner is sentenced for two or more separate felonies, his term of imprisonment may equal, but shall not exceed, the aggregate of the maximum terms of all the felonies for which he was sentenced, and, for the purposes of this chapter, he shall be held to be serving one continuous term of imprisonment. If through oversight or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary, should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter, and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section.

"Section 2. That original section 2166 of the General Code is hereby repealed."

This section is substituted for section 2166, chapter 2, division 4 of the General Code entitled "penal institutions."

Inasmuch as this law provides that "all terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter" we must look to the other provisions of the chapter to find in what manner the board may act.

Section 2160 of the chapter provides:

> "The board of managers shall provide for the conditional or absolute release of prisoners under a general sentence of imprisonment, and their arrest and return to custody within the penitentiary. A prisoner shall not be released, conditionally or absolutely, unless, in the judgment of the managers, there are reasonable grounds to believe that his release is not incompatible with the welfare of society. A petition or application for the release of a prisoner shall not be entertained by the board. A prisoner under general sentence to the penitentiary shall not be released therefrom until he has served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted; and he shall not be kept in the penitentiary beyond the maximum term provided by law for such offense."

Section 2169 provides:

> "The board of managers shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree, having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted and not previously convicted of felony or not having served a term in a penal institution, or a prisoner under sentence for murder in the first or second degree having served such sentence twenty-five full years, may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary. Full power to enforce such rules and regulations is hereby conferred upon the board, but the concurrence of every member shall be necessary for the parole of a prisoner."

If the words "conditional release" used in section 2160 do not mean "parole," the question you ask would be easily answered in the affirmative. But a careful reading of the statutes has convinced me that these words mean one and the same thing, and even without such investigation it would be hard to imagine a conditional release that would not be a parole, or a parole that would not be a conditional release. So in the discussion of this question I shall consider the two words as synonymous.

Sections 2160 and 2169 were originally sections 5 and 8 respectively of "an act relating to the imprisonment of convicts in the Ohio penitentiary and the employment, government and release of such convicts by the board of managers." These sections are found on pages 74 and 75 of volume 81, Ohio Laws, and read:

> Section 5. "Every sentence to the institution of a person hereafter convicted of a felony, except for murder in the second degree who has not previously been convicted of a felony and served a term in a penal institution, shall be, if the court having said case thinks it right and proper to do so, a general sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary. The term of such imprisonment of any person so convicted and sentenced, may be terminated by the board of managers as authorized by this act, but such imprisonment shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for the crime for which the prisoner was convicted and sentenced; and no prisoner shall be released until after he shall have served at least the minimum term provided by law for the crime for which the prisoner was convicted.

Section 8. "The said board of managers shall have power to establish rules and regulations under which prisoners sentenced to imprisonment under section 5 of this act, may be allowed to go upon parole outside of the buildings and enclosures, but to remain, while on parole, in the legal custody and under the control of the board, and subject at any time to be taken back within the enclosure of said institution; and full power to enforce such rules and regulations, and to retake and reimprison any convict so upon parole, is hereby conferred upon said board, whose written order, certified by its secretary, shall be a sufficient warrant for all officers named therein, to authorize such officer to return to actual custody any conditionally released or paroled prisoner; and it is hereby made the duty of all officers to execute said order the same as ordinary criminal process."

"That said board of managers shall have power to establish rules and regulations under which any prisoner who is now, or hereafter may be, imprisoned under a sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree, who may have served the minimum term provided by law for the crime for which he was convicted, and who has not previously been convicted of a felony, and served a term in a penal institution, may be allowed to go upon parole outside of the buildings and enclosures, but to remain, while on parole, in the legal custody and under the control of the board, and subject at any time to be taken back within the enclosure of said institution."

It will be noted that section 5 of the act withheld from the court the power to impose an indeterminate sentence in cases where the prisoner had been "previously convicted of a felony and served a term in a penal institution," and that section 8, as amended in 82 O. L., p. 236, made such prisoner ineligible for parole. For this reason, at that time, the question you now ask could not have arisen, since a prisoner previously convicted could not have been given an indeterminate sentence under section 5, nor paroled under section 8 as amended.

Section 5 of the act referred to appears in the Revised Statutes in practically the same form as when originally enacted, and section 8 appears in the revised statutes in the same form as amended in 82 O. L., p. 236, above quoted.

These sections were carried into the General Code by the codifying commission as sections 2160 and 2169, but the codifying commission omitted entirely that part of section 5 which conferred on the courts the power to impose general sentences. The part omitted by the codifying commission read:

"Every sentence to the penitentiary of a person hereafter convicted of a felony, except murder in the second degree, who has not previously been convicted of a felony and served a term in a penal institution, may be, if the court having said case thinks it right and proper, a general sentence of imprisonment in the penitentiary."

So that in the General Code we find section 2160 providing for the parole and absolute release of prisoners serving general or indeterminate sentences, but nowhere in the code do we find any authority for the court to impose such sentences, nor any mention of any class of prisoners being precluded from receiving such sentences.

But in 103 Ohio Laws, page 29, the legislature again conferred on the courts the power to impose such sentences, and made it compulsory for the court to so sentence all prisoners regardless of the fact that they may have been previously convicted, and said "all terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration, as authorized by this chapter."

This they did with sections 2160 and 2169 before them, section 2160 providing that all prisoners who should be given indeterminate sentences could be paroled or absolutely released by the board, and section 2169 providing that no prisoner could be paroled who had previously been convicted of a felony or had served a term in a penal institution. The question now is—did the legislature, when they declared in 103 O. L., in the face of these two provisions that all sentences to the penitentiary, except for treason and murder in the first degree, must thereafter be indeterminate, mean to allow all prisoners so sentenced to receive paroles by virtue of section 2160, or only those prisoners so sentenced not previously convicted of a felony in accordance with section 2169?

Under section 2160 the board can absolutely release such second term prisoner sentenced to an indeterminate sentence any time between the expiration of the minimum and maximum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and in the absence of any further action on the part of the legislature, it might be held that in enacting the indeterminate sentence law (103 O. L., 29) it was the legislative intent to make all prisoners sentenced under that law eligible to parole under section 2160, regardless of the fact that some may previously have been convicted of a felony. Such holding it would seem would arrive at the real intention of the legislature and harmonize with the spirit of the indeterminate sentence law, for surely if the board has power to absolutely release a prisoner so sentenced, it should have the power to conditionally release, in order to determine after a trial whether the prisoner has reformed to such an extent as to warrant his absolute release.

But on April 14, 1913, about a month and a half after the indeterminate sentence law was passed, the legislature repealed section 2169 of the General Code and re-enacted it in a different form, making provision for the paroling of prisoners sentenced for murder in the second degree, and granting to the Ohio board of administration the power to designate geographical limits to which a paroled prisoner may be confined. This action on the part of the legislature settles the question beyond a doubt and compels the conclusion that the legislature intended, in enacting the indeterminate sentence law, to withhold the parole privilege from a prisoner sentenced under that law when such prisoner had previously been convicted of a felony and served a term in a penal institution, for when they repealed section 2169 and re-enacted it in a different form, surely if they intended that all prisoners were to be paroled they would have taken advantage of such an opportunity to remove the clause withholding the privilege of parole from prisoners previously convicted. The fact that they did not do this is, in my mind, confirmatory of their intention in enacting the indeterminate sentence law, to withhold such parole privilege from prisoners previously convicted, and it is, therefore, my opinion that the Ohio board of administration cannot parole any prisoner sentenced under the indeterminable sentence law passed February 13, 1913, when such prisoner has previously been convicted of a felony, or has served a term in a penal institution, although the board may, by virtue of section 2160 grant to any such prisoner an absolute release at any time between the expiration of the minimum and maximum terms provided by law for the crime for which such prisoner was convicted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW—MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM SENTENCE—POWERS OF PAROLE BOARD—CONCURRENCE SENTENCES.

Under the indeterminate sentence law, it was the intention of the legislature to treat prisoners serving concurrent sentences as serving one term. The only way this can be done is to add the minimum and maximum terms for the different felonies and treat the prisoner as serving one term for the different felonies of which he was convicted, with such combined minimums and maximums as the limiting one which the board may act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1913.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden, Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 20th, 1913, inquiring substantially as follows:

> "Under the indeterminate sentence law how are we to enter a prisoner on our records, and what is his maximum and minimum time in so far as the parole board is concerned in each of the following cases:
> "A prisoner is sentenced to serve two terms for two different crimes, for which the maximum and minimum penalties provided by statute differ, the sentence providing one term is to begin at the expiration of the other; for example, John Smith is sentenced to an indeterminate sentence for burglary from one to fifteen years, and an indeterminate sentence for perjury from three to ten years, the term in one case to begin at the expiration of the other.
> "2. A prisoner is sentenced for two terms for two different crimes, for which the maximum and minimum penalties provided by statute differ, but nothing is said in the commitment paper in regard to one sentence beginning at the expiration of the other; for example, William Jones is sentenced to an indeterminate sentence from one to fifteen years for burglary, and an indeterminate sentence from three to ten years for perjury, nothing being said in the sentence in regard to when the terms shall commence."

This department has heretofore held that where the court sentenced a prisoner to two or more terms, one to begin at the expiration of the other, the terms ran consecutively, but that in the absence of such provision in the sentence the two terms ran concurrently.

The new indeterminate sentence law (103 O. L., p. 29) reads:

> "Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio penitentiary for felonies, except treason, and murder in the first degree, shall make them general and not fixed or limited in their duration. All terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter, but no such terms shall exceed the maximum, nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for the felony of which the prisoner was convicted. If a prisoner is sentenced, for two or more separate felonies, his term of imprisonment may equal, but shall not exceed, the aggregate of the maximum terms of all the felonies for which he was sentenced and, for the purposes of this chapter, he shall be held to be serving one continuous term of imprisonment. If, through oversight or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter, and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section."

Particular attention is called to that part of the above section which reads as follows:

"If a prisoner is sentenced for two or more separate felonies, his term of imprisonment may equal, but shall not exceed, the aggregate of the maximum terms of all the felonies for which he was sentenced, and for the purposes of serving one continuous term of imprisonment."

In the use of these words the legislature has, I think, taken away from the courts of this state the power to impose concurrent sentences to the Ohio penitentiary, and in every instance when a prisoner is sentenced to the penitentiary for two or more felonies, the Ohio board of administration may, if they see fit, cause him to serve the aggregate of the maximum terms for all the felonies of which he was convicted.

This is clear from a careful reading of the statute, and is in harmony with the spirit of the indeterminate sentence law the object of which is to vest in the prison authorities the power to determine when a prisoner can safely be released.

While the statute clearly states that when a prisoner is sentenced for two or more felonies his term of imprisonment may equal the aggregate of the maximum terms, no mention is made of when the prisoner becomes eligible for release, and you ask to be advised as to the earliest date upon which the board may order his discharge.

Inasmuch as the legislature has made provisions for combining the maximum terms in such cases, and has said that the prisoner "shall be held to be serving one continuous term of imprisonment," I think it was clearly the intention to treat all such terms so imposed as one term, and the only way in which this can be done is to add the minimum and maximum terms for the different felonies and treat the prisoner as serving one term for the different felonies of which he was convicted, with such combined minimums and maximums as the limits within which the board may act.

Applying this rule in the specific cases referred to by you, it is my opinion that John Smith must serve not less than four years and not more than twenty-five years, and Wm. Jones the same, there being no such thing as concurrent sentences under the new indeterminate sentence law in the state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—PRIVATE BANKS—STOCKS—POWER OF A PRIVATE BANK TO HOLD STOCK IN A STATE BANK.

A private bank has the right to hold stock in a state bank. There is no doubt but what the state legislature could pass laws to prohibit private banks from purchasing shares of stock in state banks and other corporations, but so far no legislation has been enacted along this line. There is nothing to prevent a private bank from so dealing in the stocks of other banks and corporations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of October 10, 1913, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "Has a private bank the right to hold stock in a state bank? The state bank laws prohibit a state bank from holding stock in another state bank."

Section 8683, General Code, applying to corporations generally, provides:

> "A private corporation also may purchase, or otherwise acquire, and hold shares of stock in other kindred but not competing private corporations, domestic or foreign."

As to banks, however, section 9761, General Code, forbids any commercial bank, savings bank, safe deposit company or trust company to be the purchaser or holder of shares of its own stock, unless the same be purchased or taken as security to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith, while section 9765, General Code, in directing the manner in which the funds of a savings bank may be invested, provides:

> "No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter."

Section 9684, General Code, provides:

> "* * * No banking company shall be the holder or purchaser of any portion of its capital stock, or the capital stock of any other incorporated company, unless such purchase be necessary to prevent loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith, on security which, at the time, was deemed adequate to insure its payment, independent of any lien on such stock. * * *"

This section just noted is a part of the free banking act, (49 O. L., 41, sec. 12); and it has been held, though not with respect to this question, that the provisions of this free banking act apply only to banks organized thereunder.

> "State vs. Gibbs, 7 N. P. n. s., 345, 351.
> "Coppock vs. Kuhn, 3 C. C., 599, 602."

Whatever may be the correct construction as to the application of section 9684, it is certain that the term "banking company," as therein used, cannot be construed to cover private banks, whether conducted by an individual or a partnership.

"State ex rel. vs. Kilgour, 8 N. P., n. s., 617."

The precise question here is whether or not a private bank has the right to own and hold stock in a state bank. In the consideration of this question it is to be borne in mind that, excepting the right to issue bills to circulate as money, the business of banking is not a franchise eminating from the state, but a common law privilege belonging to all citizens generally.

"Bank of California vs. San Francisco, 142 Cal., 276.
"State vs. Richcreek, 167 Ind., 217.
"Coppock vs. Kuhn, supra."

Of course, the agency of a corporation, in the conduct of banking business, is a franchise and such corporation has only such powers as are expressly or impliedly given it in the necessary and proper conduct of its business. And as to banking business conducted by private persons, either as individuals or partnerships, it is recognized that the business is one so vitally affecting the welfare of the people, that the state, in the exercise of the police power, may make reasonable and proper regulations as to the conduct of the business; (State vs. Richcreek, supra.) and with respect to the question at hand, the legislature would undoubtedly have power to place limitations on the manner in which the funds of private banks as such might be invested, and prohibit the purchase therewith of shares of stock in state banks or other corporations. The fact remains, however, that no such regulation has been attempted, and there is nothing to prevent the owners of private banks investing bank funds in such shares. The depositors in a private bank undoubtedly have some interest as to how the funds so deposited are invested by the bank, but as a matter of law, such depositors occupy towards the bank only the position of general creditors. As general creditors they have not, of course, any lien or charge on the funds in the bank, nor any such interest therein as would affect the right of the bank to invest the same if it saw fit.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNION CEMETERY—TRUSTEES AND COUNCIL ACTING AS A JOINT BOARD— VILLAGE CEMETERY—CEMETERY TRUSTEES.

Without additional legislation, the trustees of townships and council of municipalities, acting as a joint board in the control of union cemeteries, have the same power and duties for managing and controlling such cemeteries that a city or village has in controlling its own, and all difficulties arising because of the abolition of the office of cemetery trustee may be cared for under the provisions of section 4189, General Code, as amended, with the aid of section 4193, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry as to the status of union cemeteries, since the passage of the act of April 18, 1913, 103 O. L., 272. I also have a letter from E. E. Jackson, village solicitor of Rockford, Ohio, one from W. P. Meeker, of Greenfield, Ohio, and one from A. J. Layne, city solicitor of Ironton, Ohio, upon the same subject, and all of which go to the effect of the above mentioned act which amends section 4189 and repeals sections 4184 and 4185 of the General Code.

The effect of this enactment and repeal is to abolish boards of trustees of union cemeteries and place the control and management of such cemeteries in the hands of the trustees of townships and council or councils of municipal corporations.

Said section 4189 as amended, reads:

> "The cemetery so owned in common, shall be under the control and management of the trustees of the township or townships and the council of the municipal corporation or corporations and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation."

Attention is first called to that part of the language therein:

> "and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation."

"Corporation" in this connection must be construed as meaning a municipal corporation and to include both cities and villages. The evident intention of this act was to abolish joint boards of cemetery trustees and at the same time, by reference, grant to the township trustees and councils of municipalities in charge of union cemeteries, all the powers and duties possessed by either cities or villages, in regard to the same subject. Such being the case, and the language appearing to be apt and clear, the question arises as to the manner in which this grant may be carried out.

Section 4193, General Code, reads:

> "The trustees of such township or townships, or the council or councils of such municipal corporation or corporations may at any time call a joint meeting of the council or councils and the trustees of the township or townships, on a reasonable notice given by either, for the purpose of making joint rules and regulations for the government of the cemetery, or changing them, and making such orders as may be found necessary for the application of moneys arising from the sale of lots, taxes, or otherwise."

Section 4201, General Code, reads:

"The clerk of the corporation shall record in a book provided for that purpose, a plat of all grounds for cemetery purposes laid out into avenues, walks, paths, and lots, and he shall execute to the purchasers of lots such conveyances as may be necessary to carry into effect the contracts of sale. The conveyance shall, at the person receiving it, be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose, by the clerk of the corporation."

This last section was first enacted on May 7, 1869, when our municipal laws were first codified and was found therein as section 391 (66 O. L., 214); was applicable to municipal corporations, whether cities or villages, and was at that time a perfectly clear provision, but the change of other laws since then, the providing for clerks in villages and clerks of council and auditors in cities, and various changes of grades of cities and officers therein, makes the application of this section of considerable difficulty at this time. When originally enacted, as above stated, it was applicable to all classes of municipalities and clearly so, and the fact that it has not been amended nor changed in language, affords greater aid in its construction than is the position in which it was placed by the codifying commission. I therefore conclude that it is to be construed in the light of its original language, independent of its position in the code.

Again referring to section 4193, General Code, attention is called to the following language thereof:

"for the purpose of making joint rules and regulations for the government of the cemetery, or changing them, and making such orders as may be found necessary for the application of moneys arising from the sale of lots, taxes, or otherwise."

Under favor of this section and in virtue of the power granted in section 4189, as amended, all joint boards may create a superintendent, manager, board of trustees, or such other officer or officers as it deems best and proper for the government of the cemetery and the application of all moneys belonging to such cemetery, and including the selection of a treasurer, provision for his bond, and the loaning, investment, reinvestment of moneys belonging thereto.

At this point I deem it proper to suggest because of having learned that some joint boards have selected some of their own members to act as superintendents, trustees, managers and the like, that the doing so is very bad policy, to say the least of it, and in no instance should any member of this joint board be appointed or selected as one of the persons to manage or control the cemetery, sell lots, receive, disburse, handle funds, or to do anything for which he should report to or be held accountable by such joint body.

It has been suggested that members of a village or city council may not act as members of this joint body on account of the provisions of sections 4207 and 4218, General Code, wherein it is provided that members of council shall not hold any other public office or employment except that of notary public or member of the state militia and then when a member of council ceases to possess any of the prescribed qualifications, he shall forfeit his office.

The answer to this is that under the provisions of section 4189, added duties are prescribed for councilmen as such, in the case of joint or union cemeteries, the same and not different from duties of councilmen with regard to city or village cemeteries. Or, to state it differently, council of cities or villages having union cemeteries, are permitted and required to act in conjunction with township trustees in managing and controlling them, and there is neither an added duty, office or employment as to council, but rather permission is granted for the township trustees to act with them, and they with the trustees, in managing and controlling union cemeteries, or, such explanation is not conclusive or satisfactory, the act of April 18, 1913, (103 O. L., 272) as the later enactment, is special and must therefore be read as an exception to or modification of the general section prescribing the qualifications of councilmen and the objection is answered.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that without additional legislation, the trustees of townships and council of municipalities, acting as a joint board in control of union cemeteries, have the same powers and duties in managing and controlling such cemeteries that a city or village has when controlling its own and that any and all difficulty arising or supposing to arise because of the abolition of the office of cemetery trustees, may be readily cared for under the provision of section 4189, as amended, with the aid of section 4193, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OFFERING A REWARD—TERMS OF SUCH OFFER—TO WHOM AWARD MAY BE PAID.

Where a felonious assault is made upon a man rendering him unconscious, and the county commissioners offer a reward for the capture of the man making the assault, and the injured man after regaining consciousness gives information which leads to the capture of the person being sought, the county commissioners, if they find that the person furnishing the information acted in good faith and has complied with the terms of the offer made, may give him the award.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1914.

HON. THEO. H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 2d, in regard to the claim of Fred Weinert, of $100.00, being the amount of a reward offered for information leading to the arrest of a person who, on May 10, 1913, made a felonious assault on the claimant.

The facts are—that the assault was a very brutal one, Mr. Weinert was rendered unconscious and so continued for several days, and as I understand it, until after the commissioners offered the reward; upon his revival he furnished the information, the person he charged was arrested, indicted and plead guilty, and is now under sentence to the penitentiary for the offense.

That Weinert furnished the information for which the reward was offered is not questioned, but I am not advised as to whether at the time of furnishing the information, he had any knowledge of the reward having been offered. Consequently, the matter will be considered upon the assumption that at the time of giving the information, Weinert had no knowledge of the reward having been offered.

"According to the weight of authority, the person rendering the service must have knowledge of the offer in order to be entitled to the reward. 34 Cyc., 751."

A careful examination of all available authorities will sustain the above stated proposition, provided number is considered as determining weight as against a consideration of the character of the courts, their opinions and reasoning.

The statute under which this reward was offered, reads:

"When they deem it expedient, the county commissioners may offer such rewards as in their judgment the nature of the case requires, for the detection or apprehension of any person charged with or convicted of felony, and on the conviction of such person, pay it from the county treasury, together with all other necessary expenses, not otherwises provided for by law, incurred in making such detection or apprehension. When they deem it expedient, on the collection of a recognizance given and forfeited by such person, the commissioners may pay the reward so offered, or any part thereof, together with all other necessary expenses so incurred and not otherwise provided for by law."

This, and the section following, in relation to the detection and apprehension of horse thieves, are so worded as to be susceptible of the construction that the reward may only be offered for the detection or apprehension of some known person. Inasmuch as they use the language "any person charged with a felony," this might involve knowledge of the identity of the criminal before an offer could be made and would not authorize the doing of that which is the primary object in both sections, that which is most frequently called into action and but for which there would be no call to use the word "detection."

The Century dictionary defines "detection" as follows:

"The act of detecting, finding out, or bringing to light; a discerning; the state or fact of being detected or found out; as, the detection of faults, crimes, or criminals."

The fact is, this section has, in practice, always been construed as though it read with the words "to be charged" included after the word "charged" and before the words "with" or "convicted of a felony." In order to avoid the question as to whether matters of this kind rest in contract and accepance must be with knowledge of the offer, the case of Williams vs. Carwardine, 4 Barn. & Adolph, 621, has been given various constructions, and in a note found in 9th L. R. A., N. S., 1057, it is said:

"Following the supposed doctrine of Williams vs. Carwardine, a few cases have held that one may earn the reward although he performed the service without knowledge of the offer.

"Drummon vs. U. S., Ct. Cl., 356.
"Eagle vs. Smith, 4th Houst. Del., 293.
"Dawkins vs. Sappington, 26 Ind., 199.
"Everman vs. Hyman, 26 Ind., App., 165.
"28—N. E., 1022.
"84 Am. St. Rep., 284."

The trouble with this statement lies in the fact that what is stated as the supposed doctrine of Williams vs. Carwardine is the true doctrine of that case when it is more than casually considered.

The informant in that case had knowledge of the offer beyond cavil; the prevalent idea then, and now for that matter, was that the giving of the information, in order to justify recovery, must be with knowledge of the offer and with a view of getting it. The defense in the Carwardine case assumed knowledge on the part of the claimant, but insisted that the giving of the information was not done in acceptance of the offer as made, nor in compliance with its terms and conditions, but was based on another and very different motive. The jury found especially, under the direction of the court, that the giving of the information which was voluntary, was not induced by the offer of the reward, but by other motives. The pleading set forth a reliance on the promise of reward. The plea was a general issue.

The claim was made that as the plaintiff was not induced by the offer of the reward to give the information, the law would not imply a promise; and as he jury found that the plaintiff was not induced by the offer of the reward but by other motives to give the information, counsel for the defense insisted that there was no right of recovery. That the defense ignored the matter of knowledge and acceptance and went beyond it and to the effect that a claimant must not only have the knowledge but in order to recover he must have been controlled by the motive arising from its acceptance, cannot be questioned. Curwood for the defense moved for a new trial, in disposing of which it was said:

> "Denman C. J.—The plaintiff, by having given information which led to the conviction of the murderer of Walter Carwardine, has brought herself within the terms of the advertisement, and therefore is entitled to recover.
> "Littledale J.—The advertisements amounts to a general promise, to give a sum of money to any person who shall give information which might lead to the discovery of the offender. The plaintiff gave that information.
> "Parke J.—There was a contract with any person who performed the condition mentioned in the advertisement.
> "Patteson J.—I am of the same opinion. We cannot go into the plaintiff's motives."

That the finding of the jury and the language of the justices refusing the motion, eliminated all questions of knowledge, acceptance with knowledge, and of contract other than as the latter might exist upon the performance of the conditions of the offer, independent of knowledge, seems too clear for argument.

Of course, where as in an Indiana case, (not the one in 26) the offer is statutory, performance of the act entitles the performer to the reward, fee, compensation or whatever it may be termed. The distinction made by White J. in U. S. vs. Mathews & Gunn, 173 U. S., 381, between offers made by public authorities and private individuals, affords no aid on the subject. If the mater must rest in contract and the contract can only exist by the doing of the act, with knowledge of the offer, the rule is as applicable to a public as to a private offer. To my mind, the true rule is correctly stated by Parke J., when he says:

> "There was a contract with any person who performed the condition mentioned in the advertisement."

In Kentucky it has been held:

"The person performing such service is entitled to the reward offered, even if at the time of the performance he was not aware that it had been offered.

"(26 Ind., 199.)

"Auditor vs. Ballard, 9 Bush Ky., 572."

In this case the arrest was made as a matter of fact prior to the offering of the reward, and in course of the opinion Peters J., very aptly says:

"If the offer was made in good faith, why should the state inquire whether the appellee knew that it had been made? Could the benefit to the state be diminished by a discovery of the fact that the appellee, instead of acting from mercenary motives, had been actuated solely by a desire to prevent the escape of a fugitive and bring a felon to trial? And it is not well that all may know that whatever in the community has it in his power to prevent the final escape of a fugitive from justice, and does prevent it, not only performs a virtuous service, but will be entitled himself to such reward as may be offered therefor? Dawkins vs. Sappington, 26 Ind., 199."

The case in 26 Ind., 199, is left to rest upon that of Williams vs. Carwardine, 4 Barn. & Adolph, 621, and the language of Peters J., as above written, is copied from 26 Ind., 201.

I feel that the doctrine of the Indiana and Kentucky cases, based as they are upon Williams vs. Carwardine, are founded upon better reasoning and are entitled to more consideration than the authorities which go to the effect that a claimant to a reward is only entitled to receive it when he acts with knowledge of its existence and with a view to getting it.

This, of course, is based upon the assumption that Mr. Weinert gave the information in ignorance of the offer of the reward, and leaves undecided the real question as you put it, and concerning which you state.

"While it may be argued that it was his duty to reveal this information, it would seem that his duty to reveal this information was no greater than if the information had been in the possession of some other private person who had been a witness to the commission of the crime.

"In the latter event, we think there would be no question that the person giving the information would be entitled to receive the reward."

I think a full consideration of all the authorities bearing upon the question, will force the conclusion that although the right to receive a reward may be based upon contract, that knowledge of the offer nor action with intention of securing the reward are neither of them necessarily conditions precedent to a recovery, but that the contract as stated by Parks J., in Williams vs. Carwardine, 4th Barn. & Adolph, 621, (24 Eng. C. L., 126, 457), was with any person who performed the condition mentioned in the advertisement. In fact, in a state where the majority rule is followed, and in a case where knowledge of the offer is conceded, it is said:

"The compliance by any one with the terms of a general offer or reward for the apprehension of a felon, if authoritively made, makes the offer a binding contract between the person and the county.

"Cummings vs. Clinton Co., 181 Mo., 162."

This, however, leaves the question you present undecided, which so far as I have been able to ascertain, is absolutely novel and probably never has arisen before, but as the offer was general and must be assumed to have been made in good faith, and as there does not seem to have been any condition attached to the offer, excluding Mr. Weinert from making the claim, I am of the opinion that the commissioners, if they find that while acting in good faith he has complied with the terms of the offer, may make the allowance to him.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MISTAKE OF CLERK OF COURT IN CERTIFYING A PRISONER—EFFECT OF SUCH MISTAKE—OHIO STATE REFORMATORY—OHIO PENITENTIARY—PAROLE PRISONER.

Where the clerk of courts in copying a judgment of the court erroneously made it read as a sentence to the penitentiary instead of the reformatory, and certified such erroneous copy to the warden of the Ohio penitentiary, the warden has no jurisdiction in the case and the clerk through his error could confer none. The clerk's action in this case is of no effect, and it still remains his duty to certify the judgment of the court to the superintendent of the Ohio State Reformatory. When this has been done, it will be the duty of the superintendent of the reformatory to issue a parole to the prisoner, providing he complies with their requirements; if he has fled after his release, he should be treated as a prisoner escaped from the county jail.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penientiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 29, 1913, inquiring as follows:

> "On October 10, 1913, we received certificate of sentence in the case of one George Kristoff, who was convicted of larceny at the September term of court of Erie county, Ohio. The certificate of sentence provides that the said George Kristoff, having plead guilty, it is therefore the sentence of the court that he be imprisoned in the penitentiary of this state, etc.
> "The journal entry, however which accompanied this certificate of sentence provides that the defendant be committed to the Ohio State Reformatory at Mansfield, and the sentence suspended and the defendant placed on probation.
> "The difference between the place of confinement designated in these two documents was overlooked at the time the case was received, and the defendant was certified to probation supposedly as an inmate under sentence to this institution.
> "Since he has been certified, he has been declared a violator, and advertised as such.
> "However, since he has been declared as a violator, the discrepancy in these documents has been discovered.
> "Query: If he is captured have we authority to accept him as a probation violator; if not, have the authorities at the reformatory, or shall the matter be handled by the court officials of the county from which he was committed, and the commitment and certification to probation on file at this institution be disregarded, and considered void?"

Sections 13706, 13709 and 13710, General Code, provide:

Section 13706: "In prosecutions for crime, except as hereinafter provided, where the defendant has pleaded or been found guilty, and the court or magistrate has power to sentence such defendant to be confined in or committed to the penitentiary, the reformatory, a jail, workhouse, or correctional institution, and the defendant has never before been imprisoned for crime, either in this state or elsewhere, and it appears to the satisfaction of the court or magistrate that the character of the defendant and circumstances of the case are such that he is not likely again to engage in an offensive course of conduct, and that the public good does not demand or require that he shall suffer the penalty imposed by law, such court or magistrate may suspend the execution of the sentence and place the defendant on probation in the manner provided by law."

Section 13709: "When it is the judgment of the court that the defendant be placed upon probation and under the supervision of the penitentiary of the reformatory, the clerk of such court shall forthwith make a full copy of the judgment of the court, with the order for the suspension of the execution of sentence thereunder and the reasons therefor, and certify them to the warden of the penitentiary or to the superintendent of the reformatory, to which the court would have committed the defendant but for the suspension of sentence."

Section 13710: "Upon entry in the records of the court of the order for the probation provided for in the next preceding section, the defendant shall be released from custody of the court as soon as the requirements and conditions required by the board of managers have been properly and fully met."

It is clear from the above sections that in the case before us the clerk of courts should have made a full copy of the judgment of the court, with the order for the suspension of the execution of sentence thereunder, to the superintendent of the Ohio State Reformatory, and the prisoner should not have been released from the county jail until he had complied with all the requirements and conditions imposed by the Ohio board of administration with reference to suspended reformatory sentences.

The clerk, however, in copying the judgment of the court erroneously made it read as a sentence to the penitentiary instead of the reformatory, and certified such erroneous copy to you, the warden of the Ohio penitentiary. You, as such penitentiary warden, had no jurisdiction in the case, and the clerk, through his error, could confer none. What the clerk did in the case is of no effect, and it still remains his duty to certify the judgment of the court to the superintendent of the Ohio State Reformatory. When his has been done, it will be the duty of the superintendent of the reformatory and the Ohio board of administration to issue to the prisoner a certificate of probation (which certificate authorizes the release of probation prisoners from jail), provided he complies with their requirements; but if the prisoner has been released and has fled from the county in which he was sentenced, and does not comply with the requirements which the board has made essential to the issuing of a certificate of probation, then the prisoner will not come within their jurisdiction, and he should be treated as a prisoner who has escaped from the couny jail between the time of his sentence and his delivery into the hands of the proper prison authorities.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE SENATOR — SALARY — RESIGNATION — APPOINTMENT TO STATE OFFICE—LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

If a state senator has drawn his salary for the current year, and the session has been concluded, and he resigns from the senate and is appointed to another state position, he may retain the salary that he has drawn as senator and receive his salary from the time of his induction into his new office, this office being that of lieutenant governor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 10, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of October 22, 1913, as follows:

> "If a state senator has drawn his salary for the current year, and the session has been concluded, and later on he resigns from the senate and is appointed to another state position, is he entitled to the salary for the other state position for the full time that he holds it, or is he only entitled to the difference between his salary as state senator and the salary of the new office to which he was appointed?"

Section 50 of the General Code, reads as follows:

> "Each member of the general assembly shall receive as compensation a salary of one thousand dollars a year, which shall be paid in monthly installments of not exceeding two hundred dollars during the year, but in any year in which a session of the general assembly is held the balance of the salary for such year shall be paid at the end of the session. Each member shall receive two cents per mile each way for mileage once a week during the session from and to his place of residence, by the most direct route of public travel to and from the seat of government, to be paid at the end of each regular or special session. If a member is absent without leave, or is not excused on his return, there shall be deducted from his compensation the sum of ten dollars for each day's absence."

As you state in the closing part of your letter, that your inquiry grows out of the resignation of Senator Greenlund and his appointment as lieutenant governor, my answer will be directed at that particular situation.

Under section 50, General Code, as above copied, Senator Greenlund was entitled to draw, and as I understand your letter did draw his full salary for the year 1913, at the close of the late session of the legislature. His doing so was perfectly legal, and in compliance with the law, and entirely dissimilar to a case presented some time ago when it was claimed that a like salary was drawn at a time when a resignation was intended, and where it was not expected on the part of the recipient of the salary that he would hold himself in readiness for the balance of the year to perform the duties of the office, if any should be presented.

This situation is more nearly analogous to that of Judge Lawrence when he made claim to his salary as supreme court reporter.

"Where the duties of an office are specified and limited in their character and not continuous during the year, an annual salary is prescribed by law as the compensation will be payable and apportioned with reference to the duties performed and not to the lapse of time.

"William Lawrence, ex parte, 1 O. S., 431."

The only material difference between the case of Lawrence and that of Greenlund is that section 50 of the General Code carries with it, that which the court construed as attaching to a similar situation when the law was silent as to time of payment of salary.

The senator having drawn his salary at the time it was made payable, under section 50 of the General Code, is entitled of right, to retain it, and under no conceivable circumstances could he be compelled to refund any portion of it unless there was a called session and he should fail to attend and subject himself to the forfeiture, or reduction of compensation provided in the latter part of said section 50, General Code.

There is no question of incompatibility of offices arising here because Senator Greenlund doffs his senatorship before he dons the lieutenant-governship.

I have been convinced that there is necessity for legislation with respect to the salaries of members of the general assembly. I have been more than doubtful of the constitutionality of the present act in that respect. The present statute was passed over the veto of Governor Harmon on May 31, 1911. Without having before me what Governor Harmon said, my personal recollection is that one of his reasons for vetoing the statute was that he believed it unconstitutional. The great objection to the present statute is that it seeks to pay the members for the second year of their term at the end of the session held in the first year.

I have in mind an instance wherein one member of the general assembly received his salary at the end of the session held in the first year for the whole second year and then resigned. Under a demand from this department the member was required to return the second year's salary. But I am unable to see any well-founded objection to a member of the general assembly receiving his salary for one year at the end of the session held in that year, as he really renders all the service to be rendered.

I would not care to suggest the invalidity of the statute beyond the fact that certainly a member should not draw the second year's salary in the first year, and at least not before the end of the second year session. The salaries are fixed at the amounts they now are doubtless upon the theory of compensation for services rendered in each year for the session held in each year—the regular session as regularly held, and the extraordinary session when one is so held.

I am unable to see any objection in your case, either legal or moral, to Lieutenant Governor Greenlund's receiving his salary from the time of his induction into that office.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLIC HIGHWAYS CROSSING RAILWAYS—CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR OF SUCH BRIDGES OVER RAILWAY—MAINTENANCE OF SUCH BRIDGES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—BRIDGES TO BE MAINTAINED BY RAILWAY.

Where a railroad crosses a public highway below grade, which necessitates the building of wagon bridges across the railroad track, and no agreement was made between the county commissioners and the railroad company as to the construction and repair of these bridges, it is the primary duty as between the county commissioners and the railroad company for the railroad company to construct and keep the bridges in repair. It the company fails to do this, the county commissioners should repair or reconstruct the bridges and bring action against the railroad company for the costs thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1914.

MR. T. J. KREMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of August 1, 1913, in which you say:

> "A great many years ago a certain railroad crossed some of our public highways below grade, which necessitated the building of wagon bridges across the railroad track. It is my understanding that the county commissioners built the bridges and perhaps have kept the same in repair from that time up until the present time but our present board of commissioners do not feel that it is their duty to do so and are demanding that the railroad company maintain said bridges, which they refuse to do. So far as I know, the various records in the commissioners' office do not show any contract or arrangement between the board of county commissioners and said railroad company."

On the above stated facts you ask my opinion as follows:

> "First: Can a railroad company be compelled to build and maintain the overhead bridges?
> "Second: If so, what would be the proper procedure to compel them so to do?"

In 1893 an act was passed making provision for the elimination of grade crossings. (90 O: L., 359. Sec. 8863 et seq., G. C.)

Section 5 of this act is now section 8869, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "After the work is completed, the crossing and its approaches are to be kept in repair as follows: When the public way crosses the railroad by an overhead bridge, the frame work of the bridge and its abutments shall be maintained and kept in repair by the railroad company, and the surface of the bridge and its approaches, by the municipality or county in which they are situated. When the public way passes under the railroad, the bridge and its abutments shall be maintained and kept in repair by the railroad company, and the public way and its approaches, by the municipality or county in which they are situated."

It is clear that the act, of which this section is a part, applies to existing grade crossings and as to overhead bridges. Section 8869 has reference only to such as may be constructed for the purpose of separating the grades of a highway and of a railroad, as provided for in the act.

"Grinnell vs. County Commissioners, 6 N. P., n. s., 180, 182)."

This section has, therefore, no relevancy to the question here presented, and is here noted for the reason that same is mentioned in correspondence attached to your inquiry.

Sections 8773 and 8914, General Code, provide as follows:

> Sec. 8773: "When it is necessary in the construction of its road to cross a road or a stream of water, a company may divert it from its location or bed, but without unnecessary delay it shall place such road or stream in such condition as not to impair its former usefulness."

> Sec. 8914: "Before operating such road, such company or person shall maintain at every point where a public road, street, lane or highway used by the public, crosses such railroad, safe and sufficient crossings, and on each side of such crossings cattleguards sufficient to prevent domestic animals from going upon such railroad; and such company or person shall be liable for all damages sustained in person or property by reason of the want or insufficiency of such fence, crossing or cattle-guard, or neglect or carelessness in the construction thereof, or in keeping them in repair."

These sections, first enacted respectively in 1852 and 1874, are but declaratory of the common law with respect to their application to the question at hand.

In the case of Railroad Company vs. Defiance, (52 O. S., at page 314,) the court, referring to section 3284, Revised Statutes, now section 8773, General Code, says:

> "This provision, it seems, is substantially the common law rule on the subject, which, it is held, imposes the duty upon a railroad company constructing its road across a public highway, to restore, or reunite the highway at its own expense, by reasonably safe and convenient means of passage, although the charter, or statute authorizing the construction of the railroad contains no express provision to that effect; and the duty so imposed, it is held, has reference to future contingencies, and requires the company, from time to time, to put the highway in such condition as changed circumstances may render necessary.
> "Where a new way or road is made across another already in existence and use, the crossing must not only be made with as little injury as possible to the old road, but whatever structures are necessary for such crossing must be erected and maintained at the expense of the party under whose authority and direction they are made.
> "(Eyler vs. County Commissioners, 49 Maryland, 258).
> "Where a railroad crosses a public road already in use, the railroad company and its successors must, if not relieved by statute, not only restore the public road but erect and maintain perpetually all structures and keep up all repairs made necessary by such crossing, for the safety and convenience of public travel.
> "(Dyer County vs. Railroad, 87 Tenn., 712).

"A railroad company that constructs its track over a highway must restore such highway to its former condition of usefulness and safety and so maintain it; and if this cannot be done by a grade crossing, the company must do it by constructing its tracks over or under such highway, or by constructing the highway over or under its tracks.

"(Wabash Railroad Company vs. Railroad Commission of Indiana, 176 Ind., 428)."

All of the foregoing cases were decided with reference to bridges carrying highways over railroads which had intersected such highways at such grades or levels as to make necessary the construction of the bridges for the purpose of restoring the highways to their former state of usefulness.

Of other decisions to the same point, as to the common law duty and liability of railroad companies to construct and maintain such bridges, I note the following:

"Pennsylvania Railroad Co. vs. Irwin, 85 Pa., St., 336.
"Chesapeake Railroad Co. vs. Jennings, 98 Va., 70.
"State vs. St. Paul, etc. Railroad Co., 35 Minn., 131."

Speaking with reference to section 12 of the act of 1852, which is now section 8773, General Code, the court, in the case of Railroad vs. Commissioners, (31 O. S., p. 347) says:

"There is little doubt that the legislature did not intend to require a railroad company in crossing a public highway to restore the same to its actual former condition. This would be practically impossible. Substantial restoration is all that was contemplated or intended. Some inconveniences to public travel are necessarily incident to all public railroad crossings, and such as are inseparably connected therewith, must be submitted to by the public.

"But it was never intended to invest the company, without the burden of compensation, with the right to narrow the width of the highway or materially to interfere with its facilities for public travel. * * * The company was prohibited from impairing its usefulness. This word implies capabilities for use, and appertains to the future as well as to the present. The fact that the public travel over the road may, for the time being, be limited, does not lessen the duty to restore. Roads and highways are established to subserve the future needs of the public as well as the present."

In the case of Toledo vs. The L. S. & M. S. Ry Company, (17 C. C., p. 265), the court, considering the application of section 3284, R. S., (Sec. 8773 G. C.), to the case there at hand, held:

"It is not necessary that a street should be placed in prime condition for public travel in order to lay upon a railroad company passing over it the obligation to maintain a bridge over it."

It further held that this duty came to the railroad company when it constructed its road across the highway.

In Railway vs. Troy, (68 O. S., 510-514), the court held that section 3324 R. S., (Sec. 8914, G. C.), relates only to cases where the construction of the highway precedes that of the railroad and does not impose any duty on the railroad company to construct a bridge over a street projected and laid out across its tracks.

In the case of McNulta, Recvr. vs. Ralston, (5 C. C., 330), the court, considering the application of section 3324, R. S., (Sec. 8914, G. C.), to the facts there presented, held:

> "Where a railroad crosses streets within the limits of a municipal corporation, the railroad company is bound to construct and maintain safe and sufficient crossings, and the approaches thereto.
> "When the street and railroad track are not upon the same level, and the street crosses the railroad track by means of a bridge, the railroad company is bound to construct the bridge, and the approaches thereto."

Many other states have similar statutes and under them it has been uniformly held that where a railroad intersects a highway in such manner as to make necessary the construction of a bridge in order to restore the highway, it is the duty of the company to construct and maintain the same.

> "County Commissioners vs. Duluth, etc. Ry. Co., (67 Minn., 214.)
> "Bush vs. Del. etc. Railway Co., (166 N. Y., 210, 218.)
> "Erskine vs. Railway Co., (105 Maine, 113.)"

At the time, therefore, that the railroad here in question was projected across the highway of your county at such grade or level as to make necessary the construction of bridges over the railroad in order to restore the highways to public use, it was the duty of the railroad company to construct such bridges, and inasmuch as the duty and liability of the railroad company with reference to such bridges is continuing, it is their duty to maintain the same and keep them in repair, unless, on the facts stated, or in some other manner, they have been absolved from such duty and liability.

> "Eyler vs. County Commissioners, supra.
> "People vs. New York Central Ry. Co., (74 N. Y., 302.)
> "Toledo vs. L. S. & M. S. Ry. Co., supra.
> "Toledo, etc. Ry. Co. vs. Mammet, (13 C. C., 591, 595)."

You do not advise whether or not the public roads, in and upon which these bridges are constructed, are such as the board of county commissioners are required, by law, to have in its charge, and to keep in repair, but from the fact that the commissioners constructed these bridges in the first place, and have kept them in repair, I infer that the public roads in question are such as the commissioners have in charge and are required to keep in repair. Now, though a duty rests upon the railroad company with respect to the construction and maintenance of these bridges, they, and each of them are a part of the highway and as such have been and now are under the control of the county commissioners.

> "State ex rel. vs. Davis, (55 O. S., 15-22).
> "R. R. Company vs. Defiance, (52 O. S., 262-300-309)."

Moreover, as these bridges are a part of the highways, in and upon which they are constructed, the commissioners, as to the people, are likewise under duty to keep them in repair in case the railroad company refuses or neglects to do so. (Sec. 2408, General Code).

The case of Eyler vs. County Commissioners, supra, was one for damages by reason of injury sustained on account of a defective bridge. The bridge was one constructed by a canal company which had intersected a public county road in constructing a canal. The court held that the duty of maintaining and keeping the bridge in repair developed upon the canal company, but that inasmuch as to the county commissioners a statute provided "they shall have charge of and control over the county roads and bridges," the obligation of the county commissioners to the public was unqualifying, and the fact that the canal company was bound to repair, did not absolve the county commissioners from their duty to the public, nor was their liability affected by the fact that the action could have been brought against the canal company.

Many other cases to the same point might be cited, of which I note the following:

"Zanesville vs. Fannan, (53 O. S., 605, 617, 618).
"Toledo, etc., Railroad Co. vs. Sweeney, (8 C. C., 298, 304).
"State vs. Gorham, (37 Maine, 451).
"Batty vs. Duxbury, (24 Vermont, 155).
"Lowell vs. Lock Proprietors, (104 Mass., 18, 23).
"Sides vs. Portsmouth, (59 N. H., 24).
"Newlin Township vs. Davis, (77 Pa. St., 317).
"Welcome vs. Leeds, (51 Maine, 313)."

Though as to the public, the duty of the county commissioners to keep these bridges here in question in repair is absolute, yet, unless the railroad company, on the facts stated, has been absolved from its duty to maintain and repair these bridges, the county commissioners can collect the cost of the repairs made by them, from the railroad company. This follows from the reason that, as between the commissioners and the railroad company, the primary duty with respect to the repair of these bridges, is upon the railroad company. On this point, the court, in the case of Eyler vs. County Commissioners, supra, held:

> "That while the county commissioners were liable to the appellant in this action, the canal company was not discharged from its obligation to maintain and repair this bridge; nor were the commissioners left without remedy against the company, but had their remedy against it for whatever damages might be recovered against them in this action; and if they expended money in necessary repairs, they could recover it back from the company in an action on the case.
> "Newlin Township vs. Davis, supra.
> "Pennsylvania Ry. Co. vs. Irwin, (85 Pa. St., 336).
> "Chicago vs. Robbins, (2 Black, 418) (4 Wall. 657).
> "Chesapeake, etc. Railroad Co. vs. Dyer Co., (87 Tenn., 712).
> "Welcome vs. Leeds, (51 Maine, 313, 317).
> "Rocheser vs. Campbell, (123 N. Y., 405).
> "Morris vs. Woodburn, (57 O. S., 330, 335)."

Likewise, if the duty of the railroad company to maintain and repair these bridges still obtains, the county commissioners can compel the railroad company to make necessary repairs thereon by mandatory injunction.

> "Toledo vs. L. S. & M. S. Railroad Company, (17 C. C., 265).
> "Jamestown vs. Chicago, etc., Railway Company, (69 Wisconsin, 648)."

The sole remaining question is whether, on the facts stated, the railroad company has been absolved from its duty to maintain these bridges and keep same in repair. Your letter advises that the commissioners constructed these bridges in the first place, and have since kept the same in repair, and it does not appear that the railroad company has done anything in the way of maintenance or repair as to these structures.

More or less pertinent to this precise question, I note the following from Elliott in his work on roads and streets at section 33:

> "A bridge may, however, be free and open to the public, yet the person by whom it was constructed be charged with maintaining it in safe and convenient condition for travel. This is often so in cases where the facts show that the bridge was erected for private benefit, and not for public use. In such a case there is no presumption that the public has accepted the bridge and relieved the person by whom it was built from responsibility. Thus, where a private corporation digs a race way or canal across a highway and builds a bridge over it, there is no presumption of acceptance by the public, and the builder is charged with the duty of keeping it in a safe condition. In such case the benefit is to the builder, for the public, but for his act, could have traveled on the solid road. Where, however, the bridge is of public utility, and is used by the public, and is not made necessary by the act of the person who built it, acceptance by the public will be presumed, and the builder will not be responsible for keeping it in safe and fit condition for travel. Bridges originally built by an individual for his own benefit, but which in time become of public benefit or utility, and are generally used by the public, may be deemed public bridges. This would probably not be so if the builder, by his own act in interfering with a safe and convenient road, had created the necessity for the bridge, for, having created the necessity for it, he must, upon principle, be held bound to supply that necessity."

With respect to the situation here presented, it does not appear why the county commissioners constructed these bridges in the first instance, or why they have repaired them from time to time. Inasmuch, however, on the assumption here made with reference to the character of the public roads in and upon which these bridges were built, it was and has been the duty of the county commissioners to the public to keep these roads open and in a safe condition for travel, their action in constructing the bridges and repairing same is to be referred, I think, rather to this duty than to any desire or intention on their part to relieve the railroad company from its primary duty to construct the bridges and to keep them in repair. In this view I do not see that the county commissioners could have done otherwise than to construct these bridges and keep them in repair in case the railroad company neglected to do so.

Pertinent to this point, the court, in the case of Newlin Township vs. Davis, supra, speaking with respect to the duty of a township to keep in repair a bridge which had been made necessary by the construction of a railroad, says:

> "Suppose some private individual, owner of the land over which a road passes, cuts a race across that road, as he may of right do, he must bridge it at his own expense; but in the event of his neglect of this duty may the supervisors permit such an obstruction to remain, on the ground that the duty to bridge or fill it up, was with him who created it, and therefore they and their township have no responsibility with respect to it? Or take the same case, and suppose he does build the necessary bridge, he is bound to keep it in repair. But if the bridge dilapidates, and he does not repair it, may the supervisor refuse so to do, and thus risk the life, limbs and property of the citizen? Conceding the doctrine as contended for by the plaintiff in error, that there is no liability upon townships in the cases above mentioned, and the result must be, that the party injured may be wholly without redress; for he who created the obstruction, from which the damage arose, may be insolvent, dead, or out of the state."

As throwing some light on this, I note the case of Township of Burdell vs. Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway Co., (157 Mich., 255), the syllabus of which is as follows:

"No duty rests on a railroad company to maintain in repair a highway bridge across its right of way because from the time the track was built under the bridge, which already existed, and which it became necessary to raise, the company voluntarily maintained it."

In this case a bridge had been constructed by the township over and across a ravine. Sometime afterward the railway company constructed a spur track down the ravine and under the bridge; the bridge being too low to admit the safe passage of trains, the railway company elevated the bridge a foot or more, and during the time that it used the spur track, the railway company kept the bridge in repair. Afterward it discontinued the use of this spur track and after doing this, it refused longer to repair the bridge. The action was one by the township to compel the railroad company to do so. The court says:

"There is no obligation in this case resting upon contract. The township evidently acquiesced in the elevation of the bridge. The respondent properly fixed it and its approaches, made it safe, and left it in good condition. Manifestly no obligation would have rested upon the respondent if its cars could have been run under the bridge with safety. There is no evidence that the public are inconvenienced by the change, or that it will cost the township any more to rebuild or repair the bridge at its present height than as it formerly existed. The mere elevation of this track (whether a foot or more does not appear) cannot be held to transfer from the township to the railroad the legal duty to forever thereafter rebuild and repair the bridge."

In the case just cited, the primary duty with respect to the repair of the bridge there in question was on the township, and the court held that the township was not relieved of such duty by the fact that the railroad company voluntarily maintained the bridge during the course of years.

In the case presented by your inquiry, the primary duty with respect to the construction and maintenance of the bridges was as between the county commissioners and the railroad company upon such company; and though the question is one of some difficulty, I am inclined to the view that the railroad company has not been relieved of its primary duty with respect to the repair of these structures. It is to be borne in mind, however, that as to the public, the county commissioners are likewise liable for these repairs, and if the condition of the bridges is such as to call for repairs, the commissioners should either take proper steps to compel the railroad company to make these repairs, or do it themselves, and bring action against the company for the cost thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS — POWER TO EXPEND MONEY — CONSTRUCTION OF A CHILDREN'S HOME — SUBMISSION OF QUESTION OF EXPENDITURE TO VOTE OF THE ELECTORS.

Where county commissioners contract for the construction of a new children's home at a cost of thirteen thousand ($13,000.00) dollars, without submitting the question for making the improvement to a vote of the people of the county, and such contract does not include heating and lighting of such building, the county commissioners may not, without submitting the question, install these necessities under a separate contract, if the amount of such contract added to that already expended exceeds the sum of fifteen thousand ($15,000.00) dollars.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1914.

HON. E. W. COSTELLO, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 22, 1913, in which you request my opinion upon the following facts:

> "The county commissioners without submitting the question as to the policy of making the improvement to a vote of the people of the county, let a contract for the construction of a new children's home at a cost of $13,000.00, which contract does not include the heating, lighting and plumbing of the building.
> "May the commissioners now, without submitting the question, install these necessities under a separate contract or contracts, if the amount of such contract or contracts added to that already expended or contracted for exceeds $15,000.00?"

This question has not been determined so far as I am able to ascertain under the provisions of section 5638 and succeeding sections of the General Code. The first of these sections provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings * * * the expenses of which will exceed $15,000.00, except in case of casualty, as hereinafter provided; * * * without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

The remaining provisions of this group of statutes throw no light whatever upon the question now under consideration.

A fair analogy, however, is afforded, it seems to me, by decisions under statutes like section 4328, General Code, a part of the Municipal Code, which provides that no contract involving the expenditure of more than $500.00 shall be entered into by the director of public service without competitive bidding.

The decisions, which I need not cite, are to the general effect that an improvement which is in point of fact a single one may not, for the purpose of avoiding a limitation of this sort, be split up into parts, and contracts separately let for each part. Of course, officers in their discretion may make several different improvements which, when superimposed one upon the other, may make a single improvement, as the improvement of a street in sections. So also the county commissioners may construct what would ultimately be a single children's home or court house, by building different sections of the building at a time. If done in good faith, such action might be taken as to avoid submission of any question to a popular vote.

But in the case submitted by you, the situation is different in that the edifice which had been or will be erected by the expenditure of $13,000.00, is an incomplete one which cannot be used for the purpose contemplated without the expenditure necessary to provide the omitted details of construction. A building without artificial light, heating and plumbing would be uninhabitable, and not usable for the purpose of a children's home.

Of course, under section 5638, General Code, it is held that county commissioners may not by calling a given improvement one thing make it another, the question being in each case as to the real substance of the transaction. (State ex rel. vs. Commissioners 5 Nisi Prius 260.)

Of course the lighting, heating and plumbing fixtures when installed will become a part of the building, but this point is not conclusive in my mind one way or the other. An installation, addition or improvement might when in place become a fixture, and yet the building might be complete without it. In such a case I would be of the opinion that if the building can be made complete and fit for use without the installation or fixture in question, the subsequent addition of such an installation or fixture at a cost such as, together with the original cost of the building, should exceed the sum of $15,000.00, would not be violative of the statute, though made without a vote of the people. Where the building cannot be used for the intended purpose without something that is left out of the principal contract, and separate contract are let for the addition of that necessary thing the "expenses of the building" within the meaning of section 5638, General Code, in my opinion, include both the main contract and such additional contracts.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that in the case mentioned by you the commissioners must submit the policy of the expenditure to a vote of the people before they may lawfully enter into contracts and appropriate money for the installation of the heating, lighting and plumbing fixtures in an amount sufficient to produce, with the amount of the principal contract, an aggregate amount in excess of $15,000.00.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—DEPUTY AUDITOR—CHIEF CLERK IN THE OFFICE OF A DISTRICT ASSESSOR.

A deputy auditor who has been regularly appointed, and who is acting as such may also be appointed as chief clerk deputy in the office of a district assessor, provided the positions are such that the performance of the duties of the one would not conflict or be a hindrance to, or compel neglect of the offices of the other positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1914.

HON. ELI H. SPEIDEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your favor of December 24th, wherein you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Can a deputy auditor, who has been regularly appointed and who is acting as such, also be appointed as chief clerk, deputy or an employe in the office of the district assessor?"

I will take up first the position of deputy assessor, as there are many special provisions of the statutes referring to that employment which have no application in the case of chief clerk or other employes in the office of the district assessor. The position of deputy auditor is provided for by section 2563, General Code, as follows:

> "The county auditor may appoint one or more deputies to aid him in the performance of his duties. The auditor and his sureties shall be liable for the acts and conduct of such deputy or deputies. When a county auditor appoints a deputy, he shall make a record thereof in his office and file a certificate thereof with the county treasurer, who shall record and preserve it. When a county auditor removes a deputy, he shall record such removal in his office and file a certificate thereof with the county treasurer, who shall record and preserve it."

The positions of deputy assessor and other employments in the office of a district asessor or board of district assessors are provided by section 5581, General Code, as the same now appears in 103 Ohio Laws, 787. The duties of the deputy assessor are fixed by section 5582, General Code, appearing on page 787 of 103 Ohio Laws, which provides that the occupant of such position shall have the powers and duties of the district assessor, with certain exceptions therein set out.

Section 5617, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 796, is as follows:

> "A district assessor, deputy assessor, member of a district board of complaints or any assistant, clerk or other employe of a district assessor or district board of complaints shall not, during his term of office or period of service or employment, as fixed by law or prescribed by the tax commission of Ohio, hold any office of profit, except offices in the state militia and the office of notary public."

The prohibition of this statute extends to all the positions enumerated in your inquiry but since its terms are limited to offices of profit it can have no bearing upon the question, for the reason that the position of deputy auditor cannot be considered an office under the authorities in this state.

> "9 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, p. 369.
> "Vol. 11 Encyc. Digest of Ohio Reports, p. 214.
> "1911 Supp. Encyc. Digest of Ohio Reports, p. 343.
> "Opinion of Attorney General of Ohio to bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, June 6, 1913."

Section 5619, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 797, provides:

> "District assessors, members of district boards of complaints, their deputies, assistants, experts, clerks and other employes shall, during their terms of office, or periods of service or employment, devote their entire time to their respective duties, provided, however, that district assessors or district boards of complaint may, with the approval of the tax commission of Ohio, employ assistants, experts, clerks or other employes with the understanding that they shall devote a part only of their entire time to their respective employments."

Under this statute, before your question may be given consideration, it is clearly necessary that it must be established that the approval of the tax commission has been obtained for the employment of a person in any of the positions enumerated by you, to perform services during part of the time only. Your questions are, therefore, to be considered under the assumption that such approval has been obtained.

The deputy auditor, by virtue of the very designation of that office, and by confirmance of section 9 of the General Code, may perform all and singular the duties of his principal. Provisions in the statute, therefore, conferring duties upon the county auditor are applicable in the consideration of the nature of the position of deputy county auditor.

There being no prohibition of statute expressly made against the holding of the position of deputy assessor, authorized to perform the duties of that position part of the time only, and that of deputy auditor, the common law rule of compatibility of offices must apply. Under the common law offices are considered incompatible when one constitutes a check or supervision over the other; or when there exists a physical impossibility of conducting the duties of both; or when the rules of public policy prohibit the holding of both offices by one and the same individual at the same time.

Under section 5594, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 791, a county auditor is required to act as secretary of the board of complaints of his district, and must be present at each meeting of the board; whilst, under section 5592 General Code, the assessing officer is empowered to appear before the board at any of its hearings to defend his assessments. By these two statutes, I am of the opinion that a clear conflict of duties may be presented, where the deputy auditor is required by his chief to act as secretary of the board of complaints, inasmuch as the board may have under consideration an assessment made by the same person as deputy assessor.

Under section 5615, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 795, the county auditor is required to approve the bond given by a deputy assessor. I am of the opinion that such a duty is of a supervisory nature such as would prevent the person exercising it from holding both of these positions.

There are many other duties prescribed by the Warnes law, for performance by the auditor and the assessor, which might suggest an inference of incompatibility; but I am of the opinion that the reasons above set out are sufficient to sustain the conclusion that the positions are incompatible.

As regards a chief clerk or other employe in the office of the district assessor, who has been appointed with the intention of performing duties for part of the time only, with the approval of the tax commission, I have been unable to uncover any duties which would make the holding of either of these positions by deputy auditor illegal.

It is understood, however, that I so hold with reference to these positions upon the understanding that the deputy auditor, by the terms of his employment, is not required to give all his time to the duties of that position, and that the duties of that position are not as would operate as a hindrance to or compel neglect of the offices of the other positions.

You will understand that I am not passing upon the civil service feature of your question. Where any of these positions are within the civil service, it is, of course, understood that appointment may be made only in accordance with the provisions of the civil service law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUOR LICENSE LAW—SALOON KEEPER—SALOON LICENSE—FAILURE TO PAY SALOON LICENSE—LEVY—PENALTY.

Where a person makes legal application to an assessor prior to the 26th day of May, 1913, as a person doing business and intending to continue doing business as a saloon keeper; he continues after May 26, 1913, but fails to pay the five hundred dollars on or before June 20th. In such a case when the treasurer levies and proceeds to make the money upon such levy, he is not authorized to collect the twenty per cent. penalty under the present statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1914.

HON. GEORGE B. KLEIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 4th, you quote a letter from the auditor of state to your county treasurer, dated July 17, 1913, in which the auditor stated:

> "A person makes a legal application through the assessor prior to the 26th day of May, 1913, as a person doing business and intending to continue doing business as a saloon keeper. He does continue in business after May 26, 1913, but fails to pay the $500 due on or before June 20th. Thereupon the treasurer levies and proceeds to make the money.
> "The question is, how much money should be collected?
> "As he made his formal application and was entered upon the original duplicate there are no penalties except the 4% for expenses of collection under section 6077. * * * I am of the opinion, looking at all the cognate sections, the amount to be collected is the amount which is a lien, * * * $1,000, plus 4%."

You state that in the case referred to your county treasurer collected 20% penalty, and that the applicant now files this bill for a refunder of the penalty over and above the 4%.

I would respectfully call your attention to the case of Susan vs. Haserodt, 58 bulletin, page 183 (September 22, 1913). This case, decided by the Lorain county court, April 26, 1911, was afterwards affirmed, without report, by the supreme court, Haserodt vs. Susan, 88 O. S. ———. The syllabus reads as follows:

> "The 20 per cent. penalty, prescribed by General Code 6082, formerly section 5 of the act 100 O. L. 89, to be added to the assessment imposed by a county auditor as a tax on the liquor traffic, cannot be imposed against one engaged in such traffic without having first paid the assessment. Notwithstanding the original act authorized such imposition no rule of construction requires a court to read such intention into such statute as codified and adopted by the legislature."

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover back a penalty paid on a liquor traffic tax. Plaintiff started in the liquor traffic on October 8, 1910, without first having paid the assessment as provided by law; on October 21st the county treasurer entered on the duplicate against him a liquor assessment in the sum of $620.88, this being the tax to the end of the assessment year in May, 1911, together with a 20% penalty of $124.18, and 4% collection fee on both amounts, making in all $774.86. In the collection of this amount the treasurer seized and distrained plaintiff's goods and chattels and threatened to sell the same as upon execution. The next day, October 22, 1910, the plaintiff filed an affidavit of discontinuance of the liquor traffic, which entitled him to a rebate of $420.88 for the unexpired portion of the assessment year and in order to save his goods from sale, under protest paid the sum of $353.98 which included said 20% penalty, amounting to $124.18, for which amount plaintiff brought his action.

In the case of Susan vs. Haserodt, supra, Judge Winch says:

"That before the enactment of the General Code in February, 1910, the plaintiff would have been liable for the penalty in question there seems no question; the point is conceded.

"The statutes then existing are found in Bates R. S. (6 ed.) sections 4364-9 to 4364-13 inclusive, originally enacted May 14, 1886, 83 O. L. 157. That law had several sections, the first providing for a tax on the liquor business; the second that the tax shall be a lien and fixing the time for its payment; the third providing for the refunding of part of the tax, if the business is discontinued; the fourth, collection of tax in case of non-payment and the fifth providing for assessors' returns and certain penalties. The concluding sentence of this section reads as follows:

"'And if any assessment aforesaid shall not be paid when due, there shall be added a penalty thereto of 20 per centum, which shall be collected therewith.'

"Manifestly the word 'aforesaid' referred to any assessment provided for in the fifth or any preceding section of the act and it was so held in the case of Simpson vs. Serviss, 2 Cir. Dec. 246 (R. 433).

"The code commission chopped up theses sections into smaller parts and we now find said section 5 of the original act in General Code 6081 and 6082. General Code 6081 provides that each assessor shall return to the county auditor a statement as to each place within his jurisdiction where the liquor business is conducted, showing the name of the person, corporation or co-partnership engaged therein, signed and verified before the assessor by such person, etc.

"General Code 6082 reads:

"'If such person, corporation or co-partnership, on demand refuses or fails to furnish the requisite information for the statement, or to sign or verify it, such fact shall be returned by the assessor, and thereupon the assessment on said business shall be fifteen hundred dollars. If such assessment is not paid when due, there shall be added a penalty thereto of twenty per cent. which shall be collected therewith.' * * *

"Whether the legislature intentionally or unintentionally changed the law as to penalties in cases like the one here before us when it enacted the General Code, is immaterial. * * *.

"Construing this statute, not strictly, in a sense, but literally, according to the ordinary meaning of the words used, the plaintiff was not liable to a penalty on his assessment.

"We do not feel required to read into this statute some other meaning than its language intends. If the legislature has made a mistake in enacting it, and did not intend the consequence necessarily following from the change in wording of the law on this subject, it can easily remedy its mistake and correct the law. Until it does so, we hold that the 20 per cent. penalty cannot be assessed in a case of this kind."

The judgment of the court below was reversed, and judgment was rendered for plaintiff in error in the amount claimed.

In view of this right recent case upon the exact question I have no hesitation in holding that under the present statute in such cases, the treasurer is not authorized to collect the 20% penalty.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPPORT OF INMATES OF INSANE ASYLUMS—HUSBAND OBLIGED TO SUPPORT HIS WIFE, IF HE IS able.

Where a woman is confined in a state hospital for the insane, and her husband is possessed of sufficient income to pay for her support, as long as he is able to support her, he must do so, regardless of the fact that she holds in her own name an estate sufficient to meet such expense.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 22, 1914, as follows:

"In the administration of the law set forth in section 1815 to 1815-12 we have come upon a question of doubt. A patient whom we will designate as Mrs. Doe has an estate in her own name that is sufficient to pay her support while an inmate in a state hospital for the insane. Her husband is also possessed of sufficient income to pay for her support. He insists that the guardian of his wife's estate shall be held liable; the guardian insists that the husband shall be held liable. Which one in your judgment is first liable under the law?"

Section 1815-1, General Code, reads:

"When any person is committed to a state hospital for the insane, to the Longview hospital, to the Ohio hospital for epileptics, or the institution for feeble minded, the judge making such commitment shall at the same time certify to the superintendent of such institution, and the superintendent shall thereupon enter upon his records the name and address of the guardian, if any appointed, and of the relative or relatives liable for such person's support under section 1815-9."

Section 1815-9, General Code, reads:

"It is the intent of this act that a husband may be held liable for the support of a wife while an inmate of any of said institutions, a wife for a husband, a father or mother for a son or daughter, and a son or daughter, or both, for a father or mother."

Section 7997, General Code, reads:

"The husband must support himself, his wife, and his minor children out of his property or by his labor. If he is unable to do so, the wife must assist him so far as she is able."

These sections make it clear that the husband is held liable for the support of his wife while she is an inmate of a state hospital.

Your letter states that the husband is possessed of a sufficient income to pay for her support as long as this is the case he must do so regardless of the fact that she holds in her own name an estate sufficient to meet such expense.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY DETECTIVE—SECRET SERVICE OFFICER—AMOUNT THAT COUNTY MAY PAY FOR DETECTIVE SERVICE—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Under the provisions of section 3004, General Code, a prosecuting attorney may not pay out of the funds therein provided, for the service of a county detective, a greater sum than is allowed him under the law, although the work amounts to more than the sum allowed under the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1914.

HON. CARL SCHULER, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 1st, you request my opinion as follows:

"Can a prosecuting attorney, under section 3004, General Code, pay out of the fund therein provided for the services of a county detective, whose work amounts to more than can be allowed him under the law, if these services are in the furtherance of justice?"

The portion of section 3004 which is material to your inquiry is as follows:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for."

The act providing for the appointment of a secret service officer appears on page 501 of 103 Ohio Laws, and is as follows:

AN ACT

"To amend section 2915-1 of the General Code, relative to the appointment of secret service officer by prosecuting attorney.

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:

"Section 1. That section 2915 of the General Code be supplemented by the enactment of section 2915-1 to read as follows:

"Section 2915-1. The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge, by the judges of such court in such county in joint session, and shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month for the time actually occupied in such service nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney for a year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

The terms of section 3004, above quoted, are general in their application, and apply to all expenses incurred by the prosecuting attorney in the performance of his official duties, and in the furtherance of justice. The provision regarding the secret service officer, however, is a special one, and I am of the opinion that this statute must be construed as an exception to the expense provisions set out in section 3004. The legislature has seen fit to place specific restrictions upon the amount which may be expended for a secret service officer's services, by a county, and has furthermore provided restrictions upon the manner of this expenditure, viz.: approval by the judge of the court of common pleas.

In view of the well established rule of statutory construction, that special provisions must be construed as exceptions to a general provision, I am of the opinion that any attempt on the part of a prosecuting attorney to pay a secret service officer an amount in excess of that provided by section 2915-1, General Code, would amount to an indirect violation and disregard of the restrictions and safeguards provided in said section. I am of the opinion, therefore, that this latter section controls, and that the prosecuting attorney is without power to pay a secret service officer any funds whatever under authorization of section 3004, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEFECTIVE MACHINERY — INJURY — MUNICIPAL CORPORATION POWERS OF A CITY TO COMPENSATE FOR INJURIES RECEIVED.

Where a claim is presented to the city auditor asking payment to a physician for his services for attendance upon an employe of the service department injured in the operation of defective machinery. In the absence of authority from council, the city auditor should not honor the voucher for payment to such physician for his attendance upon such employe of the service department, so injured.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of October 13, 1913, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "A claim is presented to the city auditor asking payment to a physician for his services in attendance upon an employe of the service department injured in the operation of defective machinery. Said claim was approved by the director of service upon the understanding that if the same was paid by the city, the employe would not press a claim for damages. Can the city auditor legally make payment of said claim?"

The nature of the claim comprehended in your inquiry is not disclosed by your letter. The facts presented are not sufficient to permit a statement as to whether or not the injury to the employe was such as would present a basis for a legal claim against the city. If neglect could be shown on the part of the city and the city had been acting in a proprietary capacity there could be no dispute as to the city's liability. If, on the other hand, the city had been acting in a governmental capacity it could not be charged in any way with liability. The facts may be such that it is not clear whether the city was acting in either capacity, thereby presenting a claim subject to a bona fide dispute as to the right of the parties before a court of law.

Under the power to sue and be sued, conferred upon a municipal corporation by section 3615, General Code, a city is impliedly given the power to compromise a suit. If the legality of the claim is doubtful, therefore, suit might be entered against the city and judgment confessed for the amount which council see fit to allow. If there exists no doubt as to the legality of the claim there can be no question as to the power of council to pay the same under its general legislative power to compromise claims against the city.

I am aware of no other method by which a settlement could be satisfactorily accomplished in this matter. The statutes nowhere provide for the payment of physicians' fees in behalf of employes by the department of public service, and I am unable to see how it might be concluded that the director of public service would have such power by implication. I am, therefore, of the opinion that in the absence of authorization by council, through the methods above described, the city auditor should not honor a voucher for payment to a physician for his services in attendance upon an employe of the service department injured in the operation of a defective machine.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE INSTITUTIONS FOR FEEBLE MINDED—INMATES—COUNTY TO PAY FOR INMATES CONFINED IN STATE INSTITUTIONS.

Where it is provided by statute that all persons over the age of fifteen years, who are now, or may hereafter become inmates of a custodial department of the Ohio institutions for the feeble minded, a sum of money may be charged to the county from which said inmate is received. The fact that the superintendent and the trustees of the Ohio institutions for feeble minded fail to exercise their right of collecting this sum of money from the counties having inmates in such institutions for a period of twelve years does not prevent them from exercising their right at any time to make such collection, based on the number of inmates and the per capita.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1913.

HON. JOE T. DOAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On October 1, 1913, you wrote me as follows:

> "April 22, 1898, the legislature of Ohio passed an act to provide custodial care for the feeble minded (93 O. L. 209); section 3 of said act provides 'that all persons over the age of fifteen years who are now, or may hereafter become inmates of the custodial department of this institution, from any county in the state, may be charged by the trustees and superintendent of said institution against said county, a sum not exceeding,' etc.
> "The period of twelve years elapsed without the exercise of the discretion provided for by the above section.
> "On June 22, 1910, a letter was received by county auditor Fisher from E. J. Emerick, superintendent Ohio institution for feeble-minded youth, stating 'as the trustees have decided to enforce this law' (meaning the one above quoted) 'we thought it best to inform you that you may make arrangements for the same.' Nine days later, or on July 1, 1910, said auditor received from said superintendent a bill for $2,064.19, the total charge for keeping certain persons therein named, from January 1, 1910, to July 1, 1910.
> "I am of the opinion, that after said board had permitted twelve years to elapse without taking such a step, our county had a right to expect that that same plan would be continued until the county auditor should be notified in advance of any such charges being made and far enough in advance to give the county authorities time to make a proper levy to meet the demand."

You claim this bill should not be paid, for the reasons assigned, and ask my opinion on the matter. During the period of time covered by the account presented to your county, of which you complain, section 3, 93 O. L., 209, was substantially section 1898, G. C., and read as follows:

> "For each person over the age of fifteen years in the custodial department from any county in the state, the trustees and superintendent may charge against such county a sum not exceeding the annual per capita cost to the county of supporting inmates in its county infirmary, as shown by the annual report of the board of state charities. The treasurer of the county shall pay the annual draft of the financial officer of the institution for the aggregate amount chargeable against such county, for the preceding year, for such inmates."

This continued to be the law on that subject until the repeal of section 1898 aforesaid, which is found in volume 103, O. L., p. 913; and it follows that the question of the payment of this account is controlled by the law as it stood, up to its repeal August 12, 1913. In my opinion, there is no ambiguity in the language of section 1898, as to the charges for maintaining custodial inmates of said institution. By inspecting the annual report of the board of state charities, the exact amount of per capita cost to each county for supporting inmates of county infirmaries, can be ascertained. Such cost having been so ascertained, the authorities of this state institution had a right to charge against your county the full amount of said per capita for each inmate therefrom, and collect it. Your county was as much bound to take notice of this statute as the officers in control of said institution. You cannot complain if the claim was not promptly presented; and mere delay in so presenting, does not excuse the ultimate payment of the claim. The fact that a claim covering only a portion of the time is presented, does not justify your county rejecting it, if, in fact, the bill is correct for the particular period in question.

On August 31, 1910, the attorney general of Ohio rendered an opinion to the superintendent of said institution for feeble-minded youth, construing said section 1898, in which he held that the amounts based on the above facts are chargeable and collectible from the county. (Attorney General's Annual Report, 1910-11, p. 678.)

On December 9, 1910, the said attorney general again construed section 1898 for the prosecuting attorney of Lucas county, Ohio, in which he emphatically reiterated the above decision and doctrine. (Attorney General's Annual Report for 1910-11, p. 844.) Moreover, the officers of your county had the opportunity of knowing at all times the exact number of inmates from said county in said institution, and should have provided for their support under section 1898.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that your county should pay the amount of the bill rendered, provided of course it is correct as based on the number of inmates and the per capita.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIVATE BANK—INSPECTION FEE—STATIONERY—INSPECTION—STATE BANKING DEPARTMENT—PRIVATE BANK ACT.

Where a private bank known as the G. C. Munn and Company, of Portage, Ohio, which carries the word "bank" on its stationery, such bank is subject to inspection and the payment of the inspection fee for examination to the state banking department, as provided for in the private bank act, 103 O. L., 379.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 24, 1913, you wrote asking my opinion, and in your letter you say:

"The question has arisen whether a private bank, known as the G. C. Munn and Company, of Portage, Ohio, which carries the word 'bank' on its stationery, is subject to inspection and the payment of the inspection fee for examinations. They rendered this office a statement of their business as of Sept. 4th, in accordance with our request. I am enclosing copy of their attorney's letter."

By reference to the letter mentioned in your communication I note that up to the time the private bank act (103 O. L., 379) went into effect this bank in question was conducted under the name of "The Munn Bank." At this time the bank had on hand a large amount of bank stationery with its name printed thereon, which it has since utilized—as stated in the attorney's letter—by having the new name of the bank and the word "successors" printed over the former name of the bank as follows: "G. C. Munn & Co., Successors to Munn Bank."

The question is whether the use of the word "bank" in this manner and in this connection brings this bank within the regulatory provisions of the act above noted.

Section 1 of this act provides as follows:

> "That no corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association, shall use the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking' or 'trust' or 'trust company,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation, as provided in this act. The superintendent of banks shall execute all laws in relation to corporations organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking,' or 'trust' or 'trust company,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state."

I take it that the intent of this section is that no private bank or corporation not organized under the laws of this state shall use the word 'bank' or other particular words therein mentioned, as a component part of the designation or name under which business may be conducted, unless such private bank or corporation shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as provided for in the act, and also, though the language of the section is not altogether happy to this end, that if such private bank or corporation does use the word "bank," or other particular words mentioned in the section, as a designation or name under which its business is conducted, it thereby becomes subject to the provisions of the act.

With respect to the particular question at hand, I note that the statute does not specify the particular manner of use of the word "bank" by a private bank, which shall be effective to bring it within the provisions of the act, and as to this I am inclined to the view that any substantial use of the word, whether on its stationery or otherwise, is sufficient for the purpose. However, it must appear that the word "bank" is used as a component part of the designation or name under which the business of a private bank is conducted, before such bank is made subject to the provisions of the act.

The solution to the question here made depends on the consideration whether or not, within the contemplation of this act, the whole expression, "G. C. Munn & Co., Successors to Munn Bank," may properly be considered the designation or name under which the business of the bank is being conducted as indicated by the stationery of the bank now in use. In the consideration of this question it is pertinent to observe that, excepting the right to issue bills to circulate as money, the right of natural persons to carry on the business of banking is in no sense a franchise emanating from the state, but is a common law right.

State vs. Richcreek (167 Ind., 217).
Bank of Augusta vs. Earle (13 Pet., 519, 596).
Curtis vs. Leavitt, (15 N. Y., 9).

Though as to individuals the business of banking is one resting upon common law right, yet it is a business so vitally affecting the welfare of the people that it is subject to proper regulation by the state in the exercise of the police power.

State vs. Richcreek, supra.
Blake vs. Hood (53 Kan. 499).
State ex rel. vs. Woodmansee (1 N. D., 246).

Yet statutes, though enacted in the exercise of the police power, and though founded in wise public policy, which are effective to abridge the freedom of individuals in the conduct of their business, ought always to receive such construction as will carry out the purpose and intention of the legislature in their enactment, with the least possible interferences with the rights of such persons.

Carberry vs. People (39 Ill. Ap. 506).
Nance vs. Southern Railway Co. (149 N. C., 366).
Young vs. Madison county (137 Iowa, 515).

Keeping these considerations in mind with reference to the question at hand, it is pertinent to inquire as to the purpose and scope of the statute before noted, in view of the language therein used. It is apparent that this statute does not seek to subject all private banking business to regulation, but only such as by the use of the word "bank" or other particular words designated in the statute as a part of the designation or name under which the business is conducted, indicates or advertises the fact that the business done under that name is that of banking.

As to private bankers it was competent for the legislature to discriminate between persons carrying on the business of banking in such way as to indicate and advertise the nature of their business, and those who do not. The designation rests upon satisfactory reasons proceeding from the fact that the former will, in all likelihood, attract and command a greater volume of business than the latter, which consideration in turn presents a greater need for regulation.

The intent of the statute is, of course, to be drawn primarily from its language, and the question always is as to the meaning of that which is enacted rather than as to what the legislature intended to enact, and the spirit and purpose of an act is to be extracted from the words of the act itself and not from conjecture aliunde.

yet when the spirit and purpose of an act is so ascertained, that which comes within such spirit and purpose is as much within the act itself as that within its letter.

Latshaw vs. State (156 Ind. 194, 204).
Cummins vs. Pence (Ind. 91 N. E., 529).
Hasson vs. City of Chester (W. Va. 67 S. E., 731, 733).

As before noted, it is apparent from the language of this statute that its purpose is to subject all private banks to the provisions of the act that by the use of the word "bank," or other particular words therein mentioned as a part of the name under which business is done, indicate and thus advertise that banking is their business; and with respect to the particular bank herein question it is clear that the present use of the word "bank" as effectually indicates and advertises the fact that banking is the business carried on as if the name "Munn Bank" alone were used. In other words, the present use of the word "bank," in the manner and connection before noted, within the spirit of the statute, at least brings this bank within the provisions of the act. The statute should be so construed as to make effective its purpose insofar as that purpose is manifest from the language of the statute itself, and should not, without cogent reason, be so construed as to make possible an easy evasion of that purpose.

On the considerations above noted, I am of the opinion that the bank in question is subject to inspection and examination, as provided for in this act.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—TRUST FUNDS—ASSETS AND LIABILITIES—TAXES AND TAXATION—TAX—FEE BILL.

In computing the tax on banks under the fee bill, trust funds deposited in such banks should be taken into conisderation, as such funds in the bank's possession constitute resources within the meaning of section 9786, General Code, upon which the fee therein provided for is figured and determined.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 8, 1913, you wrote asking my opinion as follows:

> "In computing the tax on banks under the fee bill, one of our state banks has raised the question whether it should be computed on the trust funds, claiming that it is a matter distinct and apart from the bank business. It is made a part of the statement, however, the banks being compelled to report it in their assets and liabilities."

The expression, "trust funds," as applying to the business of banking institutions, has a wide range of meaning and may apply to deposits of many kinds, and speaking generally, it may apply to funds affected by a trust relation, either on the part of a depositor or the bank itself. I take it, however, from the form of your inquiry considered in connection with the correspondence accompanying it, as well as from statements made by representatives of your office to this department that your question has particular reference to funds deposited in, or otherwise accruing to the trust department of banks organized to include the business of a trust company under the statutes providing for the same. The question here presented is one arising under section 1 (103 O. L., 180), which provides:

> "That for the purpose of maintaining the department of the superintendent of banks and the payment of expenses incident thereto, and especially the expenses of inspection and examination, the following fees shall be paid to the superintendent of banks of Ohio:

"(a) Each company, firm, corporation, person, association and co-partnership which under the laws of Ohio is subject to inspection and examination by the superintendent of banks, shall pay to the superintendent of banks on or before the fifteenth day of November in each year the sum of thirty dollars, and in addition thereto one seventy-fifth of one per cent. of the total aggregate resources of such company, firm, corporation, person, association or co-partnership in excess of one hundred thousand dollars as shown by the report of the condition of each such company, firm, corporation, person, association or co-partnership made last before October fifteenth of such year; provided, however, that in no event is such total fee to exceed the sum of twelve hundred and fifty dollars in any one year. * * *"

Sections 711 and 724, General Code, provide as follows:

"The superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to banking companies, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit companies and trust companies and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. Nothing in this chapter contained shall apply to building and loan associations.

"Sec. 724. At least twice each year, and also when requested by the board of directors or trustees thereof, the superintendent of banks or an examiner appointed for that purpose shall thoroughly examine the cash, bills, collaterals or securities, books of account and affairs of each bank, savings bank, safe deposit and trust company, savings and loan society or association incorporated under any law in this state. Such examination shall be made in the presence of the members of the executive committee or a majority thereof. He shall also ascertain if any such corporation, company, society or association is conducting its business in the manner prescribed by law and at the place designated in its articles of incorporation."

Sections 725-728 inclusive, General Code, provide means for effectuating the examination provided for in section 724, of the banking companies therein named, while section 729, General Code, provides as follows:

"The officers of any such corporation, company, society or association shall submit its books, papers and concerns to the inspection and examination of the superintendent of banks or any duly appointed examiner, and on refusal so to do or to be examined on oath touching the affairs of such company, corporation, society or association, the superintendent may institute proceedings in the common pleas court of the county in which the business is transacted for the appointment of a receiver therefor to wind up its business."

From the foregoing statutory provisions it appears that all banking concerns, subject to inspection and examination by the superintendent of banks, are likewise subject to the payment of the fees prescribed, and that trust companies are included in the list of concerns which are subject to such inspection and examination. By authority of statute one banking company may include in its activities banking business of different kinds, e. g., that of a commercial bank and that of a trust company. In such case, of course, the right and duty of the superintendent of banks as to the inspection and examination goes to the whole business of the company and to each and all of its departments.

The specific question here made arises out of those provisions of section 1, (103 O. L., 180) which require the payment of a fee based upon a percentage of the total aggregate resources of the company, firm, corporataion, person, association or co-partnership subject to inspection or examination in excess of $100,000.00. Full and detailed provision is made by statute with reference to trust companies looking to the security of funds deposited with trust companies on trust committed to them and providing the manner of their investment. Such companies are authorized to accept and execute trusts committed to them by any person or persons, corporations, or by order or decree of the court.

Section 9777, General Code, provides that the capital of such corporations, with all its property and effects, shall be absolutely liable in case of default, while section 9778, General Code, makes a further requirement that before any such trust company, either domestic or foreign, shall accept trusts which may be invested in or committed to such company, shall have a paid in capital of at least one hundred thousand dollars and if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, make a deposit with the treasurer of state in the sum of fifty thousand dollars. If its capital exceeds two hundred thousand dollars, the amount of such deposit with the state treasurer shall be one hundred thousand dollars. It is provided that the full amount of such deposit may be in cash, or may be in bonds of the United States or of this state, or of any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past has paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock.

By section 9779, General Code, it is provided that the treasurer of state shall hold such funds or securities deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but it is further provided that so long as such trust company continues solvent the state treasurer shall permit such company to collect interest on its securities so deposited.

Section 9781, General Code, provides in detail as to the manner in which money or property received on deposit or in trust by such companies shall be invested when the manner of investment is not provided for in the trust itself.

Section 9786, General Code, provides as follows:

> "All moneys or property held in trust shall constitute a deposit in the trust department, and the accounts and investments thereof shall be kept separate. Such investment or loans shall be especially appropriated to the security and payment of all such deposits, and not be subject to any other liabilities of the corporation. For the purpose of securing the observance of these requirements, it shall have a trust deparment in which all business pertaining to such trust property shall be kept distinct from its general business."

It can be easily conceived that funds may be deposited with a trust company or with any other kind of a banking institution for that matter, under such circumstances and for such purposes as that the title and ownership of the funds so deposited will not pass to the banking institution receiving it. It is apparent, however, from the statutory provisions before noted, looking to the security of funds deposited in trust companies or otherwise accruing to it by reason of trusts accepted by such companies, and from the provisions authorizing and directing the manner of the investment of such funds, it is contemplated by the statutes that trust funds committed to a trust company in the ordinary course of its business shall pass to and become the property of such company. As to such funds deposited in or otherwise accruing to a trust company, it is clear that such funds in its possession constitute resources within the meaning of this section upon which the fee therein provided for is to be figured and determined. On the other hand, funds that are deposited with such companies under such circumstances and for such purposes that the title to such funds does not pass, do not constitute resources of such company; but any funds that such companies are authorized to invest, either by the terms of the trust or by the provisions of section 9781, General Code, are clearly the general property of the trust company, and are resources, within the meaning of section 1 of the fee bill.

The question presented is not different in the case of a company organized for the purpose and conducting a general banking business as well as that of a trust company. In such case funds deposited in the trust department of such bank in the ordinary course of business, constitute resources of such company in the trust department thereof.

In conclusion I note that the question here presented is limited to trust funds on hand, and that no question is made with reference to trust investments, and it is to be understood that the foregoing opinion is given only with reference to the actual question presented.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD — FIXTURES AND SUPPLIES— COUNTY LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD—

The state liquor licensing board has authority to purchase furniture, books, stationery and other supplies that may be necessary for carrying on the business of the county liquor licensing board, and furnish the same to such boards.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This morning you orally submitted to me the following question:

> "Has the state liquor licensing board authority to purchase furniture, books, stationery and other supplies that may be necessary for the carrying on of the business of the county liquor licensing boards, and furnish the same to such boards?"

Section 4 of the act to provide for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors, 103 O. L., 217, provides that the state liquor licensing board

> "shall adopt rules and regulations for its own government and of the county boards."

Section 5 of the same act requires this board to provide itself with the necessary furniture, books, stationery and other things that may be necessary for the proper conducting of the office; while section 13 authorizes each county board to provide itself with books, stationery and other paraphernalia, and to incur other such expenses for its operation as may be necessary to carry on its business. The following salient language appears in this section:

"All expenses, including compensation of clerks and employes shall be subject to the approval of the state board, and the county board shall certify to the state board, on the first day of each month, a statement of all expenses of such county board for the month preceding, and upon approval thereof the state board shall cause the same, together with the compensation of the commissioners and secretary, to be paid in the same manner as its own expenses are paid."

Section 46 provides for the manner in which expenses shall be paid.

It will be noted that under section 13 while each county board is authorized to incur expenses for books, stationery and other paraphernalia, nevertheless, such expenditures are subject to the approval of the state board. This can mean nothing but that the county boards cannot incur expenses unless the state board approve the same. If there be no such approval, then the action of the county boards in incurring expenses is a nullity, as it is ultra vires and without authority of law. This being true, it necessarily follows that an essential requisite to the payment of such expenses is action on the part of the state board. This action is not one of purely ministerial nature, but on the contrary, involves exercise of discretion and judgment, and the determination of the state board upon this question is final.

The language of section 5 authorizing the state board to provide itself with the necessary furniture, etc., I do not regard as important in this inquiry, as that, no doubt, has reference to such supplies as may be necessary for the state board itself. It is important, however, to bear in mind the fact that section 4, to which I have hereinbefore referred, authorizes the state board to adopt rules and regulations for the government of county boards. I think, under the circumstances, it would be perfectly proper for the state board to adopt a rule or regulation that no county board should incur any expenditure for certain supplies, and that no bill for any such supplies purchased by a county board would be approved by the state board. When this order shall have been issued, it will be a distinct disapproval of any expenditure, within the inhibition, that may be incurred by the county board. This will practically deprive the county board of its right to make such purchases. When this is done the state board can furnish to county boards those supplies which they are not authorized to buy. The authority for such purchase by the state board may be found in the concluding clause of section 5, which authorizes it to "incur such other expenses as it deems expedient, subject to the approval of the governor."

The effect of this holding will be to authorize the state board to purchase, at wholesale, for the county boards such supplies as may be necessary for the proper operation of the business of such county boards, thereby resulting in a very great saving to the state, by reason of the fact that supplies in greater quantities can be purchased much more economically than could be done if the county boards were allowed to buy their own supplies. Not only is this true, but it will result in there being a uniformity of equipment, stationery and books throughout the state, which will undoubtedly make for more efficient and systematic administration of the law from a clerical standpoint.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMORIAL BUILDING—BOND ISSUE—DEPOSITORY INTEREST—GENERAL COUNTY FUNDS.

The depository interest upon the proceeds of a bond issued for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building is to be paid into the general county funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1914.

HON. CHARLES E. BALLARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion has been requested upon the following question:

"What disposition shall be made of the depository interest upon the proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building?"

The following sections of the General Code have been considered in this connection:

"Section 3059. When the commissioners of a county by resolution passed by a majority vote certify to the governor that in their opinion it is desirable to erect, furnish and maintain a memorial building to commemorate the services of the soldiers, sailors, marines and pioneers of the county and to expend for such purpose an amount to be named by them not to exceed two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in any one instance, the governor shall appoint a board of trustees composed of five citizens of such county, not more than three of whom shall belong to the same political party, to be known as the 'Memorial Association of ---------- county, Ohio.' * * *

"Section 3061. Immediately upon the appointment and organization of such board of trustees, they shall certify to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county, the fact of their appointment and organization, and direct the submission to popular vote at the next regular county election of the question of the issue of bonds in the amount so named in the original resolution, and of the erection and maintenance of the memorial building contemplated. * * * If a majority of the votes cast upon the question is in favor of the issuance of such bonds and the construction and maintenance of such memorial building, the board of trustees shall proceed as hereinafter authorized.

"Section 3062. The board of trustees shall request the commissioners of the county to issue, and the commissioners shall thereupon issue, the bonds of the county in such denominations, for such period and bearing such rate of interest as the board of trustees prescribes not to exceed the total sum determined upon in the original resolution of the commissioners. The bonds shall be sold for not less than par with accrued interest to the highest bidder after advertisement for a period of thirty days, in two or more newspapers published or of general circulation in the county.

"Section 3063. The funds arising from the sale of the bonds shall be placed in the county treasury to the credit of a fund to be known as 'the memorial building fund.' Such fund shall be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary. The commissioners of the county shall annually levy an amount of taxes in addition to all other levies authorized by law, that will pay the interest on such bonds and create a sinking fund sufficient to redeem them at maturity. If upon the completion of the memorial building an unexpended balance of the fund remains in the county treasury, it shall be placed and kept to the credit of such sinking fund.

"Section 3063-1. The money in the county treasury to the credit of 'the memorial building fund' may, upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary, or the money in the county treasury raised for the purpose of erecting a monument in memory of those who died or were killed during the war of eighteen hundred and sixty-one, under the provisions of section twenty-four hundred and fifty-three of the General Code may, upon the order of the county commissioners, be paid over to the state armory board and shall be expended by such state armory board in connection with money from 'the state armory fund' for the purpose of erecting an armory within the county, as is provided in sections five thousand two hundred and fifty-three to five thousand two hundred and seventy-one inclusive of the General Code.

"Section 3068. Upon the completion of the memorial building the trustees shall turn it over to the county commissioners, who shall provide for the maintenance, equipment, decoration and furnishing thereof, not to exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars in the same manner as they are authorized to care for and maintain other property of the county. The board of commissioners of the county, in addition to all other levies authorized by law, shall levy an annual tax in the year 1910, and annually thereafter to care for such building, and to make such improvements thereof as are necessary to carry out the purposes for which it was constructed. They may permit the occupancy and use of the memorial building, or any part thereof upon such terms as they deem proper.

"Section 2737. All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month or at any time such account is closed, such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, and the depositary shall notify the auditor and treasurer, each separately, in writing of the amount thereof before noon of the next business day. All such interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided funds shall be apportioned by the county auditor to the state, cities, city school district and county taxing or assessing districts in the proportion that the amounts collected for the respective political divisions or districts bear to the entire amount collected by the county treasurer for such undivided tax funds and deposited as herein provided, due allowance being made for sums transferred in advance of settlements. All interest apportioned as the county's share together with all interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county shall be credited to the general fund of the county by the county treasurer. The county auditor shall inform the treasurer in writing of the amount apportioned by him to each fund, district or account."

As stated, I have considered all these sections and the arguments which have been predicated upon some of them in support of one or another answer to the main question, which is logically susceptible to three possible answers, viz.:

1. The depositary interest arising from the proceeds of the bond sales is to be credited to the fund itself, that is the building fund.

2. The interest is to be credited to the "sinking fund" of which section 3063, General Code, speaks.

3. The interest shall be credited to the general fund of the county.

But, though I have given what I think is due consideration to all these sections, and all possible arguments that might be predicated upon any one of them, I have resolved the question in my own mind upon the proper interpretation of section 2737, General Code, and particularly of the phrase "funds belonging specifically to the county" as therein used.

In my judgment the proceeds of a sale of bonds for the construction of a county memorial building constitute a fund belonging specifically to the county within the intendment of section 2737, General Code.

In the first place there is very little doubt in my mind that the proceeds of such a fund do actually belong to the county in the proprietary sense, both legal and beneficial. Legally, the proceeds belong to the county because they are borrowed by the the county and the faith and credit of the county and its tax duplicate, under the levying power of the county commissioners, are pledged to its re-payment.

I think that the proceeds of such a bond sale also belong to the county in the beneficial sense, in that the building when constructed becomes a county building. This is true even in case the money is turned over to the state armory board for in the section which I have not quoted it is provided that the portion of the building jointly constructed, which is to be constructed by the use of the county's money, must be used for county purposes.

Of course, it may be stated here that if the sections which relate to the state armory board be otherwise construed, in all likelihood they must be held unconstitutional under the decision of the supreme court in the case of Hubbard vs. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S., 436.

The mere fact that the trustees for the erection of the armory, rather than the county commissioners themselves, have the immediate control of the disbursement of the fund is evidently immaterial insofar as the question now under consideration is concerned. The trustees, appointed by the governor, are to serve merely until the building is completed. They constitute what may be called, with accuracy, a "building commission" and not a permanent governmental agency. The service which they perform is performed for and on behalf of the county and not performed on behalf of the state or any other political subdivision; for the fruits of their labor is a building which is to belong to the county, and the funds over which they are given control are procured by the exercise of the county's borrowing power, and are to be repaid by the exercise of the power of taxation for and with respect to the county, so that unless the purpose of all this is a county purpose the related statutes would be clearly unconstitutional as authorizing taxation within a certain district for a purpose not pertaining to that district.

Of course there are many funds of the county which are not under the direct control of the county commissioners. Even the general county fund is subject to draft, under many statutes, upon the order of officers other than the county commissioners. The same is true, in a peculiar sense, of the judicial fund. Therefore, it must follow that the test as to whether or not a given fund in the county treasury is a county fund, in the exact sense of the word, cannot be made dependent upon whether or not it is controlled by the county commissioners. In short, it seems to me that the trustees for the erection of the memorial building bear the same relation to the proceeds of the bond issue as the infirmary directors formerly sustained toward the poor fund, for example:

I am, accordingly, strongly inclined to the opinion that in every sense of the word the memorial building fund is a "fund belonging specifically to the county." But I am quite convinced that, whether or not the fund might be said to be within the purview of the phrase quoted in every sense in which that phrase might be read, it is clearly within its contemplation as used in section 2737, General Code. This section purports to dispose of interest on all moneys deposited in the county depositary. It provides that that realized on the undivided tax fund shall be apportioned to all of the districts whose levies resulted in that fund, including, of course, the county, and then provides that the interest apportioned as the county's share, i. e., of the undivided tax fund, together with all interest on "funds belonging specifically to the county" shall be paid into the general county fund.

Used in this connection, I think the phrase quoted means and embraces all other funds in the county treasury except the undivided tax fund. As a general rule, of course, subject possibly to some exceptions, the county treasurer is the custodian of county funds only, save and excepting such moneys as he may hold as undivided taxes belonging to other taxing districts. I think the act clearly contemplates the deposit of all moneys in the county treasury, and that that provision thereof which relates to the disposition of interest is as extensive as the provision which relates to the deposit itself. That is to say, when the latter provision of the section has disposed of the "interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided tax funds" and the "interest apportioned as the county's share," (of such undivided tax levies) and the "interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county," it has disposed of all interest arising by reason of compliance with the requirement of the preceding section (section 2736) to the effect that "such treasurer shall deposit * * * all money in his possession * * *." The intention to make the disposition of interest co-extensive, of necessity, with the requirement to deposit, is reasonably clear to me. The proposition of law at which I have arrived may be succinctly stated as follows:

The phrase "funds belonging specifically to the county," as used in section 2737, means "all money in his (the county treasurer's) possession" (section 2736) excepting the undivided taxes.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the interest on the proceeds of the bond issue for the memorial building are to be paid into the general county fund.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the point that as a general principle all accretions to a trust fund belong to the fund. This principle is, of course, well established, but it does not control the disposition of interest derived from the use of public moneys as against other specific disposition thereof by statute, nor is it clear to me that the building fund, for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building, is a trust fund in any higher sense than the proceeds of any tax levy or of any issue of bonds.

I find it unnecessary, too, to determine in my own mind whether or not the money derived from the sale of such bonds is "county money" in every sense. I have already discussed this question, and need only say, in addition thereto, that under section 3061, General Code, these moneys are required to be placed in the county treasury to the credit of a fund therein. Being borrowed for a county purpose, being secured by the county duplicate, and being required to be placed in the county treasury, such moneys are clearly county moneys, and are even more clearly moneys in the "possession" of the county treasurer required to be deposited in the county depositary under section 2736, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX LAW—METHOD OF LEVYING INHERITANCE TAX—COLLECTING THE SAME—FEES—COUNTY TREASURER—COUNTY AUDITOR—AUDITOR OF STATE—INTEREST—PROBATE JUDGE.

1. In computing the collateral inheritance tax the interest of each separate inheritor subject to the tax constitutes a separate taxable thing, and the exemption of five hundred dollars should be deducted from each of the separate interests, and not from the aggregate value of all interests subject to taxation.

2. Section 5331, General Code, will prevail over section 5340, General Code, consequently, fifty per cent. of the inheritance tax is to be paid to the village.

3. The cost and expense of collection of the inheritance tax continues to be borne as provided in section 5346, General Code, although the state now receives but fifty per cent. of the total revenue under the inheritance tax law, and although the county no longer receives anything whatever out of the proceeds of such tax.

4. The probate judge may lawfully charge as fees and collect from the county treasury as provided in section 5346, General Code, the sum of ten cents per hundred words for making the copy required to be made by section 5340, General Code, but he is not entitled to any fee whatever for making the act of delivery required by the section.

5. The county auditor is not entitled to a fee of four per cent. for his services under the act; his fees are to be computed on the basis provided by section 2624, General Code.

6. No interest is chargeable under the provisions of sections 5331 and 5335, General Code, until the expiration of one year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge reecipt of your letter of February 5th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions in connection with the amendment of the collateral inheritance tax law, found in 103 Ohio Laws 436:

"Sections 5331 and 5333, as amended, provide that the state shall receive 50% of the tax collected, and the city, village or township shall receive 50%. Section 5346 provides that the state shall bear 75% of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of such taxes, and said amount to be deducted from the amount of taxes paid into the state treasury.

Question. Did the legislature intend, under the new apportionment, that the state should bear 75% of the cost of collecting the said taxes?

"Section 5346 provides that the fees of officers having duties to perform under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be paid by the county from the county expense fund thereof, and shall be the same as allowed by law for similar services.

"Question. Does this mean that the probate judge shall receive a fee for delivering an inventory of an estate to the county auditor, as provided in section 5340, or is the probate judge presumed to have received his fees as provided in the 'Canfield act' for probate judges in the filing of inventories of estates of deceased persons?

"Question. What are the county auditors' fees under this act? We suppose it to be 4%.

"Question. Is an executor or administrator compelled to pay interest from the day of death of decedent, and to the time of paying the collateral inheritance tax, if said tax is paid within the year? If so, what rate of interest must he pay?"

In connecton with your questions I have chosen to answer the questions submitted by Hon. Ray C. Carpentar, legal counsel of the village of Athens, as follows:

"'A.' dies leaving real estate situated in an Ohio village to his five brothers, share and share alike; appraised at ten thousand dollars.

"Question. Under section 5331 of the General Code, 103 O. L. 463, would the sum of five hundred dollars only be deducted and the balance of nine thousand five hundred dollars be taxed at five per cent.; or would the sum of five hundred dollars be deducted for each of the brothers and the balance of seventy-five hundred dollars be taxed?

"Question. Will section 5331 prevail over section 5340 and fifty per cent. of the tax be paid to the village?"

The manner in which the questions asked by yourself and Mr. Carpenter arise is best illustrated by the quotations of certain sections of the General Code as they are now in force:

"Section 5331. (As amended, 103 O. L., 463) All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of this state or not, and whether tangible or intangible, which pass by will or by the interstate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendent or adopted child, shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of five hundred dollars. Fifty per cent. of such tax shall be for the use of the state; and fifty per cent. of such tax shall go to the city, village or township in which said tax orignates. * * * Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent and shall at once become a lien upon the property, and be and remain a lien until paid.

"Section 5335. Taxes imposed by this subdivision of this chapter shall be paid into the treasury of the county in which the court having jurisdiction of the estate or accounts is situated by the executors, administrators, trustees, or other persons charged with the payment thereof. If such taxes are not paid within one year after the death of the decedent, interest at the rate of eight per cent. shall be thereafter charged and collected thereon, and if not paid at the expiration of eighteen months after such death, the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein said taxes remain unpaid, shall institute the necessary proceedings to collect the taxes in the court of common pleas of the county, after first being notified in writing by the probate judge of the county, of the nonpayment thereof. The probate judge shall give such notice in writing. If the taxes are paid before the expiration of one year after the death of the decedent, a discount of one per cent. per month for each full month that payment has been made prior to the expiration of the year, shall be allowed on the amount of such taxes.

"Section 5340. Within ten days after the filing of the inventory of every such estate, any part of which may be subject to a tax under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, the judge of the probate court, in which such inventory is filed, shall make and deliver to the county auditor of such county a copy of the inventory; or, if it can be conveniently separated, a copy of such part of the estate, with the appraisal thereof. The auditor shall certify the value of the estate, subject to taxation hereunder and the amount of taxes due therefrom, to the county treasurer, who shall collect such taxes, and thereupon place twenty-five per cent. thereof to the credit of the county expense fund, and pay seventy-five per cent. thereof into the state treasury, to the credit of the general revenue fund, at the time of making his semi-annual settlement.

"Section 5346. The fees of officers having duties to perform under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be paid by the county from the county expense fund thereof, and shall be the same as allowed by law for similar services. In ascertaining the amounts due the state, seventy-five per cent. of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of such taxes shall be charged to the state and deducted from the amount of taxes to be paid into the state treasury."

Answering Mr. Carpenter's questions first, for convenience, I beg to state that it is clearly established that the collateral inheritance tax rests upon the privilege of inheriting as a subject of taxation and not upon the privilege of transmitting property by will, intestacy or gift.

Hence, the interest of each separate inheritor subject to the tax constitutes a separate taxable thing, and the exemptions of five hundred dollars should be deducted from the value of each of the separate interests and not merely from the aggregate value of all the interests subject to taxation.

Answering Mr. Carpenter's second question, I am clearly of the opinion that section 5331, General Code, as amended, must necessarily prevail over section 5340, inadvertently left unamended by the general assembly. The two statutes are in pari materia and are irreconcilably inconsistent in their provisions: therefore, the one last passed must control, and the section which the general assembly failed to amend expressly must be regarded as amended by implication—as if it read to the effect that the county treasurer upon collecting the taxes due shall thereupon place fifty per cent. thereof to the credit of the city, village or township in which the tax originates, and fifty per cent. thereof to the state to the credit of its general revenue fund, and shall so settle at the time of making his next semi-annual settlement.

Accordingly, Mr. Carpenter's second question must be answered in the affirmative.

Answering your first question, I beg to state that the principle last above referred to will not apply to the interpretation of section 5346. There is nothing necessarily inconsistent between amended section 5331 and section 5346. Although, as you seem to intimate, it seems unreasonable to presume that the legislature would have intended that the state should continue to pay seventy-five per cent. of the collection cost and other expenses when receiving but fifty per cent. of the taxes, and that the county should continue to pay twenty-five per cent. of the collection cost and expenses when it was deprived of any participation in the proceeds of the tax whatever, yet it does not appear that the legislature entertained any intention whatever as to the apportionment of expenses. It did legislate and express its intention as to the apportionment of the taxes, but the inference that it thereby intended that the apportionment of expenses should be the same is too remote to be indulged.

I am accordingly of the opinion that section 5346, General Code, was not affected in any way by the amendment to section 5331, and that the cost and expenses of collection of the inheritance tax continue to be apportioned as provided in the former section, although the state now receives but fifty per cent. of the total revenues under the inheritance tax law, and although the county no longer receives anything whatever out of the proceeds of such tax.

In answering your second question, I venture to presume that by the "Canfield act" you mean the act in 102 Ohio Laws 277.

In my opinion the fee paid to the probate judge out of the estate for the filing of the inventory and appraisement of the estate, as provided in section 1601, General Code, does not in any way enter into the costs and expenses of the collection of the inheritance tax. When the probate judge delivers a copy of the inventory and appraisement, or so much thereof as may be conveniently separated, to the county auditor, as provided in section 5340, he performs an act under the inheritance tax law and not one which has any place in the administration of the estate as such. That is to say, the act which the probate judge is required to perform under the inheritance tax law is a duty separate and distinct from his duty to receive and file petitions, inventories, appraisements, etc., in ordinary administration proceedings. This being the case, none of the fees provided for in the schedule found in section 1601, General Code, as amended (which I need not quote) applies to this act.

Section 1602, General Code, also a part of the so-called Canfield act, differs from section 1601, in that it provides a schedue of fees for services similar in their nature to the service required under section 5340 such as holding inquests of lunacy, acting as judge of juvenile court, appointing examiners of the county treasury, and making reports of judicial statistics to the secretary of state. In general, this section provides a schedule of fees for services required to be rendered to the public or to be paid for out of the public treasury. But this section specifies no fee for the service required in section 5340.

Section 1603, General Code, also a part of the Canfield law, provides as follows:

> "For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services."

On the authority of decisions like Millard vs. Commissioners, 13 C. C. R. 518; Millard vs. Conradi, 5. C. C. R. n. s. 145; and Swartz vs. Commissioners, 35 Bull. 275, as well as upon reason, it must be held that unless there can be found in the schedule of fees provided for the clerk of the court of common pleas a fee for a service similar to the furnishing of a copy of all or a part of the inventory to the county auditor, as required in section 5340, General Code, the probate judge is entitled to no fee whatsoever for performing the services required by said section.

I find in section 2901, prescribing the fees of clerk of the common pleas court, the following:

> "for making copies of pleadings, process, record or files, including certificate and seal, ten cents per hundred words."

Section 5340 requires the probate judge to "make and deliver to the county auditor * * * a copy," etc. Section 5346 clearly implies that the probate judge shall be paid whatever fees might lawfully be taxed by him for this service. In my judgment the probate judge may lawfully charge and collect from the county treasury, as provided in section 5346, the sum of ten cents per hundred words for making the copy required to be made by section 5340, but is not entitled to any fees whatever for performing the act of delivery required by the section.

Answering your third question, I beg to state that in my judgment the county auditor is not entitled to a fee of four per cent. for his services under the act. The sections which are to be considered are these:

> "Section 2624. (As amended, 102 O. L. 277) On all moneys collected by the county treasurer on any tax duplicates of the county, other than the liquor and cigarette duplicates, the county auditor on settlement semi-annually with the county treasurer and auditor of state, shall be allowed as compensation for his services the following percentages:
> "On the first one hundred thousand dollars one and one-half per cent.; on the next two million dollars five-tenths of one per cent.; on the next two million dollars four-tenths of one per cent.; and on all further sums, one-tenth of one per cent. Such compensation shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor and deducted from the shares or portions of the revenues payable to the state as well as to the county, townships, corporations and school districts.
> "Section 2625. In addition to the compensation specified in the preceding section, each county auditor shall receive the compensation provided by law for his services as member of the boards for listing railroads, under the school laws, as county sealers, and in filing statements of taxable property; and four per cent. of the amount of tax collected and paid into the county treasury, on property omitted and placed by him on the tax duplicate."

While it is true that the auditor, by the discharge of his duties under section 5340, General Code, is responsible for placing a charge for the collection of the collateral inheritance tax upon the treasurer's duplicate, if the term may be applied, yet, this is not an instance of "property omitted and placed by him on the tax duplicate," for the reason that the charge which the treasurer has for collection does not represent "property" at all, and for the further reason that the auditor, in certifying the collection charge to the treasurer under section 5340, is not placing on the duplicate anything which has been omitted therefrom, as the term is used in the fee section.

In my judgment, section 2624, General Code, applies. While section 5340 contains no express provision to that effect, it seems that the certificate which the treasurer holds for the collection of the inheritance tax may be regarded as "a duplicate of the county" within the meaning of section 2624. This follows, I think, from the peculiar language of section 2624, which clearly indicates that the word "duplicate," as therein used, is not confined in its scope to the duplicate of real and personal property.

I am therefore of the opinion that the county auditor's fees under the inheritance tax law are to be computed on the basis provided by section 2624, General Code.

Answering your fourth question I refer to sections 5331 and 5335 of the General Code, as they stand. The first of these sections provides that the taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the testator or decedent; while section 5335 provides in part as follows:

> "If such taxes are not paid within one year after the death of the decedent, interest at the rate of eight per cent. shall be thereafter charged and collected thereon * * *. If the taxes are paid before the expiration of one year after the death of the decedent a discount of one per cent. per month for each full month that payment has been made prior to the expiration of the year shall be allowed on the amount of such taxes."

In my opinion no interest is chargeable under these sections until the expiration of one year. The first of the two sentences above quoted from section 5335, standing by itself, is not sufficient perhaps to establish this conclusion, because this sentence read in connection with that quoted from section 5331 might still leave opportunity for the inference that interest at the legal rate of six per cent. would be chargeable until the expiration of the year.

In my judgment, however, the last sentence of section 5335 is sufficient to indicate the true legislative intent. It appears therefrom that if the amount of the taxes is paid within the year a rebate or discount shall be allowed on the amount of the taxes. If the general assembly had intended that interest should be charged, it seems to me that this provision for a discount would have been differently phrased.

There must be taken into account here, I think, the obvious fact that although the taxes are technically due at the death of the decedent, yet they can under no circumstances be actually paid until a considerable time thereafter. I do not believe the general assembly could have intended that legal interest, the theory of which rests in penalty, should be imposed for the failure to make a payment which could not be made at the time when it is provided that it shall be technically "due." This is the very purpose of the provision of section 5335 relative to the period of one year after the death of the decedent. The general assembly has deemed that period as a reasonable one under all the circumstances within which to give the administrator or executor of the estate time to have the taxes assessed, collected and paid into the treasury. It is not consistent with these considerations to suppose that the legislature intended that interest should be chargeable during this period.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—DEED FROM JAMES J. BAILEY, ADMINISTRATOR, ESTATE OF C. D. BAILEY, DECEASED, TO THE STATE OF OHIO—DEED SUFFICIENT TO CONVEY TO THE STATE A TITLE IN FEE SIMPLE.

Abstract of title and deed from James J. Bailey, administrator of the estate of C. D. Bailey, deceased, to the state of Ohio for property situated in Gallipolis township, Gallia county, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1914.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 28th, in which you enclose abstract of title to, and deed from James J. Bailey, administrator of the estate of C. D. Bailey, deceased, to the state of Ohio, for part of lots Nos. 519, 520, 1107, 1141, 1148 and 1156 in sections No. 23 and No. 24, township No. 3, range No. 14, Gallipolis township, Gallia county, Ohio; which real estate your board desires to purchase for the Gallipolis state hospital.

A careful examination of the abstract discloses that it is little more than a copy of the indices to certain deeds in the office of the county recorder of Gallia county.

It is impossible to pass upon the legality of this title with the meagre information at hand. I suggest that an abstract be made in the usual form on the regular blanks provided for that purpose.

The description in the several instruments abstracted are so incomplete that it is impossible to ascertain whether the deed to the state of Ohio covers the portion of said lots owned by Mr. Bailey. A complete description of the real estate conveyed by said instrument should be incorporated in the abstract and a plat of the lands owned by Mr. Bailey should be furnished so as to enable me to determine the correctness of the description in the deed to the state of Ohio.

The deed to the state of Ohio is in proper form, duly signed, acknowledged and attested and is sufficient to convey to the state a title in fee simple.

I have, therefore, approved the same and will retain it in my possession until a proper abstract is furnished.

The abstract is herewith enclosed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—JANE M. CASE HOSPITAL—TAXES AND TAXATION—BEQUEST—AGED LADIES' HOME.

Unless the Jane M. Case hospital at Delaware, Ohio, is conducted in such a manner as to deprive it of its public charitable nature, a devise or bequest to or for its use is exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1914.

HON. E. R. WILLIAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 10th you request my opinion as to the exemption from the collateral inheritance tax of bequests and devises to or for the use of two certain institutions in the city of Delaware, the facts with respect to which are stated in your letter as follows:

> "The Jane M. Case Hospital, at Delaware, Ohio, is a corporation under the laws of this state, not for profit; the object of this organization is for the treatment of patients and the training of nurses. This hospital is open to the public, and all patients who are able are required to pay the necessary expenses at this hospital; the expenses of the indigent patients of the county are paid by the county commissioners.
> "The aged ladies' home is an institution at Delaware, Ohio, organized for the purpose of providing a home for aged ladies. To be admitted to this institution the inmates must give all their property to the institution, and the amount of their property must be at least $200. The institution is not open to all aged ladies upon these terms—that is, the board of managers determine who may be admitted.
> "No one derives any profit from either of the above institutions. Both institutions are assisted to a large extent by donations from the people."

In connection with the aged ladies' home, I am in receipt of a letter from Mrs. Eva G. Slack, in which the following statement is made:

> "The home is supported by the efforts of a board of thirty-four ladies, and the income from admission fees. No assistance is received from the county except board, $2.00 per week, for each of the ladies placed there by the infirmary directors. Admission fees are: for ladies from fifty to seventy, $600; above seventy $400. This entitles them to all care and support during life and burial at death. The board may remit the admission fee in cases of persons wholly destitute of means. This has been done in several cases."

You will observe that this statement does not precisely agree with yours, in that Mrs. Slack represents that the institution in which she is interested does admit on occasion persons wholly destitute of means without the payment of the admission fee. Furthermore, her statement does not agree with yours with respect to the exact terms or admission of those having some property. I will assume as to this fact that the conventional fee is as stated by Mrs. Slack, i. e. ladies from fifty to seventy $600, and ladies above seventy $400; provided that if the means of an applicant are less than the amount of the fee exacted, the applicant's entire means shall be paid to the institution as a condition of admission, and in no case, except by special dispensation of the board of trustees, shall admission be given to one whose means are less than $200.

I find it impossible to reconcile the two statements, however, insofar as your statement to the effect that the institution is not open to all aged ladies upon the same terms is concerned; as this fact may be material, my opinion, with respect to this institution will necessarily not be positive.

The statute involved is section 5332, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "The provisions of the next preceding section (imposing the collateral inheritance tax) shall not apply to property, or interests in property * * * embraced in a bequest, devise, transfer or conveyance to or for the use of * * * an institution in this state for purposes only of public charity * * *."

I observe that, as to both of the institutions concerning which you inquire, it is a fact that they are not conducted for profit and are not self-sustaining in a commercial sense, being under the constant necessity of soliciting support by voluntary donation from charitably disposed persons.

I observe also that it is a fact common to both the institutions that, with the exception of the instances named in Mrs. Slack's letter respecting the aged ladies' home, there is a charge on the part of the institution covering a part at least of the expenses of administering its benefits to a given individual. Thus, as respects the hospital, patients who are able to pay for treatment therein are required to pay such sums as may cover the expenses necessary for their treatment; while the county pays for the treatment of those who are unable to pay for themselves. So also with respect to the aged ladies' home; those who are able pay the admission fee, which, I take it, constitutes the entire reimbursement of the institution for the expenses of furnishing an abiding place for those seeking its benefits. That is to say, if an old lady has paid her admission fee of $600, for example, she is entitled to remain at the institution, free of further charge, during the remainder of her life, and possibly to receive the benefits of a decent burial at her death. Nevertheless, there is at least a conventional fee charged.

I observe also, as to both of the institutions, with the possible qualification suggested by the statement which you make relative to the aged ladies' home, and which has already been commented upon, that they are open to the public upon equal terms. This is true universally as to the hospital and true as to all aged ladies (subject to the qualification already noted with respect to the aged ladies' home.

There can be no doubt, under the decisions, that a charitably conducted hospital or old ladies' home is a "charitable institution." Citation of authorities upon this point is unnecessary. It is absolutely settled, by the overwhelming weight of authority, that the mere fact that there is a charge for the services or benefis of the institution does not deprive it of its charitable nature, nor of its public character.

Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 O. S. 229-241, and

are Ohio decisions supporting this rule. But other jurisdictions afford even clearer applications of it:

Fordham vs. Thompson, 144 Ill. App. 342.
Sisters of Third Order vs. Board of Review, 231 Ill. 317.
Board of Review vs. Chicago Policlinic, 233 Ill. 268.
Hennepin County vs. Brotherhood of Church, 27 Minn. 46.
Philadelphia vs. Pennsylvania Hospital, 254 Pa. 9.
Donohugh's Appeal, 86 Pa. 312.
People ex rel. vs. Purdy, 52 Hunn. 386, 126 N. Y. 679.
St. Joseph's Hospital vs. Ashland County, 96 Wis. 636.
Brewer vs. American Missionary Association, 124 Ga. 490.
Franklin Square House vs. Boston, 188 Mass. 409.
McDonald vs. Mass. General Hospital, 120 Mass. 432.

As particularly touching the case of the aged ladies' home, I cite:

Engleside Ass'n vs. Nation, 109 Pac. 984 (Kansas); 29 L. R. A. n. s. 190.
Gooch vs. Ass'n for the relief of aged indigent females, 109 Mass. 559.

The doctrine of all these cases is to the effect that if the institution is not operated with a view to profit, but for the purpose of relieving human need or suffering, and therefore serving a communal or public need, it is a charitable one and a public one, notwithstanding the receipt of admission fees or the exaction from those who are able to pay of sums reasonably equivalent to the expense of rendering its benefits to them.

In the case of the hospital mentioned by you, payment by the county for and on behalf of the indigent persons treated therein does affect the nature of the institution on the contrary, so long as no profit is derived and the institution continues to be operated by the use of the donations of charitably inclined persons, the contribution by the county serves rather to emphasize than to destroy the public nature of the institution. In fact, while the courts of this state have, I believe, held that by reason of the inhibition of article VIII, section 6, of the constitution of this state, a county or other subdivision of the state may not make donations to private corporations, and therefore may not support public hospitals, orphanages and the like, except upon the contractual basis suggested by your letter, yet, in states where no such constitutional impediments exist, it has been held, as the above decisions will disclose to you, that a county or a city has the right to make a donation to an institution of public charity to assist it in carrying on its work; so that, so far from an institution being deprived of its publicly charitable nature by reason of such a donation, the existence of such attributes of the institution is a condition precedent to partial support from the public treasury.

The foregoing authorities and the principles deduced from them establish the following conclusions:

1. If an institution aims at the relief of some public distress or need and is not operated with a view to profit, it is an institution of purely public charity, or, as our inheritance tax law has it, an institution for purpose only of public charity, especially where it is obliged to rely upon private donations.

2. The fact that support from the public treasury is afforded to such an institution, whether upon a contractual basis or not, does not change its character.

3. The fact that an admission fee, as in the case of the aged ladies' home mentioned by you, or a charge on account of services rendered, as in the case of the hospital exacted from those who are able to pay, or even exacted from all alike, is received by the institution does not alter its character.

The foregoing conclusions dispose of the case of the hospital which you describe and clearly establish the conclusion that a bequest or devise to and for its use is exempt from any collateral inheritance tax.

These conclusions would also dispose of the question respecting the aged ladies' home, but for your remark to the effect that "the institution is not open to all aged ladies upon these terms; that is, the board of managers determine who may be admitted."

There is here involved another principle applicable to such questions, which may be stated as follows:

An institution which is charitable in its nature is not a public one, and its charity is not public, if limited to a class the members of which are determined by some fact which does not concern the public at large:

Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572.
Commonwealth vs. Thomas, 119 Ky. 208.
Burd Orphan Asylum vs. School District, 19 Pa. 21.
Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S. 144.

As a further extension of this principle it has been often held that an institution is not a public one which is not open to all of the designated class upon the same terms.

But I take it that this principle must not be too logically applied; there are natural limitations upon the capacity of any institution to perform its public functions. It may be regarded as an ever-present condition that the applicants for a place in the aged ladies' home, for example, are almost certain at a given time to exceed in number the capacity of the institution. Should the board of trustees or managing authorities of such an institution reserve the privilege of selecting those deemed most worthy by them from a group of applicants, when a selection is necessary, this would not, in my judgment, deprive the institution of its public character, nor the charity which it extends of its public nature. In other words, the exercise of a proper supervision on the part of the managing authorities over the character and desirability of those who may apply, provided no invidious discriminations are indulged and no improper or artificial line of demarcation is drawn, as suggested in the cases cited, would not affect the public character of the institution or its charity. It is not required that the doors of the institution shall automatically open to all who seek admission thereto, without being subject to the scrutiny of thoses who administer the charity. On this point Gooch vs. Association, supra, is particularly helpful. The defendant in that case was almost exactly like the institution concerning which you inquire. The plaintiff was expelled from it, although she had paid the required admission fee. She sought to recover damages, alleging tort and breach of contract. The court denied her relief on the ground that the institution was a publicly charitable one, and that it had the right to prescribe by its by-laws reasonable rules and regulations to be enforced by its administrative authorities; so that when the plaintiff entered the home she entered it subject to the discipline thereof.

I know of no principle which would affirm the right to prescribe and enforce disciplinary rules as to inmates when received, yet would deny the right to enforce a similar discipline as a condition of admission.

Nor does the fact that the remission of admission fees may be made at the discretion of the board enter into the question, in my judgment. The whole situation may be summed up with the statement that the publicly charitable nature of an institution is not affected by the exercise of discretion on the part of its managerial officers with respect to the admission of persons into the enjoyment of its benefits, nor by the enforcement of such proper discipline as may be required in order to maintain it. So long as this discretion is not exercised in such a manner as actually to amount to a discrimination such as is forbidden by the principle exemplified in Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, and other similar cases, supra, its reservation is immaterial.

With the qualification, then, that unless it should appear that the discretion reserved by the board of managers of the aged ladies' home at Delaware is exercised in such a manner as to deprive that institution of its publicly charitable nature, as already pointed out, I am of the opinion that it is such an institution, and that a devise or bequest to or for its use is exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY—SALARIES—THE MANNER IN WHICH SALARIES ARE TO BE PAID—WHEN SALARIES ARE TO BE PAID—MILEAGE.

The members of the 80th general assembly should be paid at a rate not to exceed two hundred dollars per month during the present extraordinary session, and the residue of their salary for the year 1914, at the end of such session to the members and only the members who are in attendance at this session.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of February 16, 1914, in which you inquire as to whether you are to consider the opinion rendered Mr. Fullington on February 26, 1911, as still in full force, or should you pay the 1914 salary of $1,000 to the members of the legislature when the special session over.

Section 50 of the General Code reads:

"Every member of the general assembly shall receive as compensation a salary of one thousand dollars a year during his term of office.

Such salary for such term shall be paid in the following manner: two hundred dollars in monthly installments during the first session of such term and the balance of such salary for such term at the end of such session.

"Each member shall receive two cents per mile each way for mileage once a week during the session from and to his place of residence, by the most direct route of public travel to and from the seat of government, to be paid at the end of each regular or special session. If a member is absent without leave, or is not excused on his return, there shall be deducted from his compensation the sum of ten dollars for each day's absence."

Section 50 of the General Code was passed in May, 1911, was vetoed by Governor Harmon and passed over his veto by both houses. The governor in vetoing this bill said:

"It is said the bill follows precedents. I find that from the time biennial sessions were resumed in 1894, the law provided for monthly installments until 1904, when a law like the bill now before me was passed (97 Vol. 316). But this was repealed at the following session in 1906 and payment for the full year only authorized at the close of the session (98 Vol. 8). Though this act was in turn repealed and only monthly payments permitted (Id. 287), the provision of the earlier act for payment for the remainder of the session year got somehow into G. C., section 50.

"Beginning with 1908 there have been annual sessions. So there is the single precedent of 1904, and that promptly repudiated, standing alone against the action of all the other biennial sessions since 1894."

In his statement regarding the times and manner of payment and the condition of law, Governor Harmon was entirely correct. He also called attention to the fact that in his opinion, the act violated section 31 of article II of the constitution, which forbids any change in the compensation of members during their term of office. It will be observed that this act was a radical change from the act theretofore existing and changed the language from "the balance of the salaries for such year may be paid at the end of the session," so that the section read as above copied. The opinion to which you call attention followed the course laid down by Governor Harmon, which, as stated, I believed and still believe to be correct. But however that may be, and notwithstanding the fact that payments have been made to the 76th and 77th general assembly, in the manner prescribed by this act, yet they were unauthorized at that time and this act was an evident attempt to make payments in the manner followed in 1904 and 1906. However this may be, payments at other times were not made in advance as was done in 1904 and 1906, and as authorized by section 50, as amended in 1911. The opinion rendered in 1911 had reference to the payment to the 79th general assembly for the year 1912, in which there was no legislative session and the condition then is clearly distinguished from what we have now and I think that without in any way modifying or changing that opinion, but following the ruling that was adopted for that session, for the year 1911, rather than the year 1912, it is entirely legitimate to construe section 50 of the Code to permit the payment of the legislators at the rate of not to exceed $200.00 per month while the legislature was in session and the balance for that year at the close of the session, which would be in accordance with section 40 of the Revised Statutes, and in accordance with the payments made to the 78th general assembly and the 79th for its first year. In other words, and stating the rule more concretely, I now hold that where the legislature is in session, they are entitled to compensation at the rate of $200.00 per month during the session and the balance for that particular year at the end of the session, and that rule to be applicable to each year, provided there is a session in each year.

I therefore advise the payment to this general assembly at the rate or not to exceed $200.00 per month during the present session and the residue of this year's salary at the end of such session to the members and only the members who are in attendance upon this session.

Whatever may be said about payments in advance, and without questioning the power of the legislature to fix salaries in such amount and to make them payable at such time as they deem proper, I regard it as a very unwise policy to make payments in advance of service and especially is that true when applied to the 79th general assembly which at its first session undertook to provide for being paid for a second year regardless of the fact of service during that second year, being ready for such service or any other contingency which might arise bteween the end of the session in the first year and the expiration of the term of office of the members of that general assembly.

I believe this places the matter in shape to be understood and hope it may prove satisfactory to everybody.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TUITION—PARENT OR PUPIL RESIDING OUTSIDE OF A SCHOOL DISTRICT AND OWNING PROPERTY WITHIN THE DISTRICT WHERE SUCH PUPIL ATTENDS SCHOOL—RIGHT OF A SCHOOL DISTRICT TO CREDIT SUCH TUITION ACCOUNT WITH THE AMOUNT OF TAXES ASSESSED ON SCHOOL.

If a parent of a non-resident pupil owns stock in an ordinary corporation which is taxed in the district no part of the same paid by such corporation under the levy for school purposes may be credited upon the tuition chargeable against such parent in that district; otherwise as to bank stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1913.

HON. KENT P. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 10th, enclosing copy of an opinion written by you to clerk of the board of education of the village of Alger, Hardin county, and requesting my view as to the conclusion reached by you.

The question submitted for your opinion by the clerk is as follows:

> "We have some pupils coming into our school here from out of our district whose fathers own property in the district in the form of bank stock, stock in the company store, etc. Should we credit their tuition account with amount of school taxes assessed on this stock?"

Your conclusion on the two questions submitted is that neither the tax payable by a corporation under the provisions of 5404 et seq., General Code, nor the tax assessed upon the shares of stock of a bank under sections 5407 et seq., General Code, constitute taxes on property owned by an individual within the intendment of section 7683, the proportion of which levied for school purposes may be under said section credited on the tuition of a non-resident pupil.

I do not entirely agree with you in your conclusion. I am of the opinion that you are correct with respect to the tax assessed against an ordinary corporation. Sections 5404 and 5405, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 5406. The president, secretary and principal accounting officer of every incorporated company, except banking or other corporations whose taxation is specifically provided for, for whatever purpose they may have been created, whether incorporated by a law of this state or not, shall list for taxation, verified by the oath of the person so listing, all the personal property thereof, and all real estate necessary to the daily operations of the company, moneys and credits of such company or corporation within the state, at the true value in money.
> "Section 5405. Return shall be made to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property is situated, together with a statement of the amount thereof which is situated in each township, village, city, or taxing district therein. Upon receiving such returns, the auditor shall ascertain and determine the value of the property of such companies, and deduct from the aggregate sum so found of each, the value as assessed for taxation of any real estate included in the return. The value of the property of each of such companies, after so deducting the value of all the real estate included in the return, shall be apportioned by the auditor to such cities, villages, townships or taxing districts, pro rata, in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property included in the return, in each of such cities, villages, townships, or taxing districts. The auditor shall place such apportioned valuation on the tax duplicate and taxes shall be levied and collected thereon at the same rate and in the same manner that taxes are levied and collected on other personal property in such township, village, city or taxing district."

It is clear, as you state, that this tax is assessed upon the property of the corporation as such. (Bradley vs. Bauder 36 O. S., 28.) This section was enacted in compliance with the constitution mandate embodied in article 13 section 4, which seems to require the taxation of corporate property as property of the corporation, although as pointed out in Lee vs. Sturgis 46 O. S. 153, the taxation of all the property of a corporation is equivalent to the taxation of all the interest of every stockholder in the corporation represented by the actual value of their several shares. In deference to this principle the legislation embodied in sections 5372 and 192, General Code, was enacted, the effect of which is to accept the taxation on all or a certain prescribed portion of the property of a corporation by the state by way of an assessment against the corporation itself in lieu of the taxation of the respective shares of the stockholders. In other words, although the property of a corporation might be regarded either as the separate property of the shareholders or as that of the corporation itself for taxation purposes, the latter alternative in most cases is the one adopted.

I assume, of course, that in the particular case involved in the inquiry of the clerk, the corporation is a domestic one, or, if organized under the laws of another state, the prescribed proportion of its property is taxable in Ohio.

I am, therefore, of the opinion (in which I concur with you that if a parent of a non-resident pupil owns stock in a mercantile or other ordinary corporation which is taxed in the district, no part of the sum paid by such corporation under the levy for school purposes may be credited upon the tuition chargeable against such parent by that district.

There is a further practical reason which may be brought to the support of this conclusion. The stockholders of an ordinary corporation are unknown to the records of the taxing authorities. The assessment being against the corporation, the respective shares of its capital stock owned by individuals do not appear on the tax duplicate or elsewhere in the office of the county auditor. Therefore, even if the theoretical conclusion above referred to could not be sustained as such, there would be no way in which to compute or ascertain the proportion of a corporation's tax which could be credited to the account of any individual stockholder.

The case of a bank is, however, essentially different. Although article XII, section 3 of the constitution seems to require the taxation of all property of banks and bankers as such, yet in the case of incorporated banks this has not been done, and for a very sufficient reason which will be hereinafter pointed out. Section 5408 is the first of the related sections which may be considered in this connection. It provides as follows:

> "All the shares of the stockholders in an incorporated bank or banking association, located in this state * * * shall be listed at the true value in money and taxed only in the city, ward, or village where such bank is located."

Section 5409, provides:

> "The real estate of a bank or banking association shall be taxed in the place where it is located, in like manner as the real estate of persons is taxed."

Section 5411 provides as follows:

> "The cashier of each incorporated bank * * * shall return to the auditor of the county in which such bank is located * * * a report exhibiting in detail * * * the resources and liabilities of such bank * * * with a full statement of the names and residences of the stockholders therein, the number of shares held by each, and the par value of each share. * * *"

Section 5412 provides in part as follows:

> "Upon receiving such report the county auditor shall fix the total value of the shares of such banks * * * according to their total value in money and deduct from the aggregate sum so found, of each, the value of the real estate included in the statement of resources as it stands on the duplicate. * * *"

Other sections then provide for an equalization of the value of bank shares as so determined by the taxing commission of Ohio. Sections 5672 and 5673, General Code, provide for the collection of such taxes.

> "Section 5672. Taxes assessed on shares of stock, or the value thereof, of a bank or banking association, shall be a lien on such shares from the first Monday of May in each year until they are paid. It shall be the duty of every bank or banking association to collect the taxes due upon its shares of stock from the several owners of such shares, and to pay the same to the treasurer of the county, in which such bank or banking association is located, as other taxes are paid and any bank or banking association failing to pay said taxes as herein provided, shall be liable by way of penalty for the gross amount of the taxes due from all the owners of the shares of stock, and for an additional amount of one hundred dollars for every day of delay in the payment of said taxes.

"Section 5673. Such bank or banking association paying to the treasurer of the county in which it is located, the taxes assessed upon its shares, in the hands of its shareholders respectively, as provided in the next preceding section, may deduct the amount thereof from dividends that are due or thereafter become due on such shares, and shall have a lien upon the shares of stock and on all funds in its possession belonging to such shareholders, or which may at any time come into its possession, for reimbursement of the taxes so paid on account of the several shareholders, with legal interest; and such lien may be enforced in any appropriate manner."

It seems very clear to me that the assessment is not against the property of the bank as such save with respect to the real estate. With this exception the assessment is upon the shares themselves which are the property not of the bank but of the various stockholders. True the bank must pay the taxes, reimbursing itself in the manner pointed out by the last two sections cited, but there is a vital distinction between the duty to pay taxes and the ultimate liability for them. Under section 7683, General Code, it is not required that a parent actually pay the taxes which may be credited on the tuition of his child; it is sufficient that the parent own the property in the school district.

The shares of stock in a bank are all assessed at the place in which the bank is located. The reason for this I shall also presently state. In view of this fact, I am of the opinion that when a bank is located in a school district its shares are "property in a school district" within the meaning of section 7683, General Code.

Now the reason why the seeming mandate of article XII, section 3 of the constitution has not been carried out literally arises out of the situation respecting national banking associations, which are corporations organized under an act of congress of the United States. Under the familiar doctrine of McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4th Wheaton 316, these institutions being creatures of the federal government are not subject to taxation by the state, as of right. It is the universally accepted doctrine that national banks may only be taxed by the states by permission of congress. This permission has been given by section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which provides in part as follows:

"Nothing herein shall prevent all the shares in any (national banking) association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the state within which the association is located; but the legislature of each state may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the state, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by non-residents of any state shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located, and not elsewhere. * * *"

Under this act of congress it has been repeatedly held that a state may not impose a tax assessment against a national bank as such, but whatever its laws provide in the way of machinery for the collection of the assessment the ultimate liability for the tax must rest upon the shares of stock. See bank tax cases 3 Wallace 573; Radley vs. People; 4 Wallace 459, Bank vs. Commonwealth; 9 Wallace 353, Sumpter County vs. National Bank, 62 Alabama 464; Hirshire vs. Bank 35 Iowa 273; Bank vs. Fancher 48 New York, 524; Bank vs. Baker 65 New Jersey Laws 113; Bank vs. Chehallis County 116 U. S. 440; Whitbeck vs. Mercantile National Bank 127 U. S. 193; Bank vs. Chapman, 173 U. S. 205.

Indeed it has been directly held in the case of Miller vs. Bank 46, O. S. 424 that the listing of the shares of a national bank must be made in the name of the shareholders and not in the name of the bank under the statutes of Ohio now under discussion; and that no action would lie under the statutes as they then stood against the bank itself to recover taxes assessed on account of its resources and the value of its shares of stock.

Now our taxing statutes make no distinction between the method of taxing national banks and that of taxing state incorporated banks. This is because of the limitation in section 5133, Revised Statutes of the United States, to the effect that "taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of said state."

This limitation has been very jealously guarded by the federal courts and state statutes have been, from time to time, very carefully scrutinized for evidence of any discrimination in taxation in favor of state banks and against national banks. It is doubtless because of the fear of this legislation, if otherwise enacted, being held to violate this limitation that our statutes have made no disinction between the method of taxing national banks and that of taxing other incorporated banks.

In short, then, the legislative authority of this state has found the legislation of congress a more positive limitation upon its taxing power than the provisions of its own constitution (which, however, is not directly violated by the legislation above discussed).

The taxation of all banks, then, being governed by the same rule as laid down by the federal statute for the taxation of national banks, it follows that the assessment on this behalf must be against the shares, and not against the bank; that the property assessed must be (aside from the real estate) that of the shareholders and not that of the bank; and that the assessment must be at the place where the bank is located.

Our statutes, as I have already pointed out, not only bear a construction compatible with the federal legislation, but really do not bear any other construction. The taxable thing under these statutes is the share of stock, and not the property of the bank (except as to the real estate). The share as such is clearly the property of the individual stockholder. No authority is necessary upon this obvious point. Therefore, under section 7683, General Code, such a share when assessable in a school district in which a bank is located is "property owned in a school district" by the shareholder.

Nor is there in a case of bank stock any such practical difficulty as might exist where a conclusion different from that already reached with respect to the shares of ordinary corporations adopted. The report of the bank required to be filed with the auditor discloses the names of all stockholders and the number of shares held by each. The aggregate value of the bank stock as a whole after deducting the assessed value of the real estate being then ascertained, it is a mere matter of mathematical computation, which may be arrived at from facts appearing on record in the auditor's office to ascertain what proportion of a tax paid in the first instance by a bank on all of its shares is attributable to the shares owned by any shareholder. This computation being made one additional computation only is necessary to ascertain what proportion of the result is attributable to the school levy. The final quotient of the computation, then, is the amount which may and should be credited on the tuition paid by a non-resident parent who is a shareholder of a bank located in a school district.

The exact language of section 7683, General Code, which has not yet been quoted, is, in part, as follows:

> "When a youth * * * or his parent owns property in a school district in which he does not reside, and he attends the schools of such district, the amount of school tax paid on such property shall be credited on his tuition."

It is only necessary for me to add to what has already been said that, in my judgment, the phrase "property in a school district," as used in this statute, is equivalent in meaning to the phrase "property taxed in a school district."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INSTITUTIONS—INSPECTION—CARING OF CHILDREN—POWERS OF STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES.

Private institutions for the caring of children are subject to investigation by the state board of charities under section 1352 of the General Code as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 865, and these institutions must be governed by all the laws applicable to such institutions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 22, 1914, as follows:

> "Section 1352-1 of the General Code as passed April 28, 1913, sets forth a scheme of inspection and investigation of institutions and agencies caring for children. There are a number of private institutions in this state, some of which have been incorporated under the general incorporation laws of the state and a few of the older ones were established by special acts of incorporation passed by the general assembly.
> "The question has been raised as to whether a private institution incorporated under the laws as in force in 1879, known as section 2181, etc., has the right to continue under the laws in force at that time or whether the amendments made from time to time since then must control such institution. These amendments have effected methods of commitment and receiving of children. Further, are such institutions required to conform to the general regulatory provisions of section 1352-1 and other sections of the act commonly gnown as the juvenile code?"

Section 1352, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 865 reads in part:

> "The board of state charities shall investigate by correspondence and inspection the system, condition and management of the public and private benevolent and correctional institutions of the state and county, * * * as well as all institutions whether incorporated, private or otherwise which receive and care for children."

It is clear that the wording of the above section includes all institutions which receive and care for children, and the only question you raise in whether the legislature could bring within this section such institutions of this nature as were incorporated under laws existing in 1879.

Section 2, article I of the constitution of 1851 provides that > "no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted, that may not be altered, revoked, or appealed by the general assembly."

and in connection with this section is to be construed section 2, article XIII, which declares that

> "corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws, may, from time to time, be altered or repealed."

State vs. Hamilton, 47 O. S., 74.
Shields vs. State, 26 O. S., 86 affirmed 95 U. S., 519.

These sections make it clear, I think, that all institutions for children, incorporated under the laws of 1879, are subject to all amendments made to these laws since that date, and to all new laws since passed concerning institutions caring for the juveniles of the state.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the private institutions to which you refer are subject to investigation by your board under section 1352 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 865, and that these institutions must be governed by all other laws applicable to such institutions.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACTOR—CITY ENGINEER—WORK DONE IN EXCESS OF CONTRACT PRICE—SUPPLEMENTARY CONTRACT—POWERS OF CITY COUNCIL IN SUCH A MATTER.

Where a contractor, acting upon instructions from the city engineer, performs work for the city amounting to several thousand dollars more than the original price contracted for, and no supplementary contract was entered into by the director of public service, the city council may pass an ordinance or resolution authorizing a compromise of the claim in question, and the city auditor would be authorized to draw a warrant on the treasurer in accordance with the provisions of such ordinance or resolution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 10, 1913, you inquire:

> "A contractor, acting upon the instructions from the city engineer, performs work for the city amounting to several thousand dollars more than the original contract price. No supplementary contract in writing was entered into by the director of public service. The director would not allow the demand for 'extras' claimed by the contractor, and thereupon he entered suit against the city.

"Under a succeeding administration the council have agreed to compromise the claim by allowing the firm a reduced amount, and instructs the city auditor to draw his warrant upon the special fund created by bond issue.

"What are the powers of council in such matters, and may the city auditor legally draw his warrant in accordance with said conditions of proposed compromise?"

The "extras" were not performed according to the provisions of the statutes and there is no legal obligation upon the city to pay for the same or any part thereof.

Section 4331, General Code, provides:

"When it becomes necessary in the opinion of the director of public service, in the prosecution of any work or improvement under contract, to make alterations or modifications in such contract, such alterations or modifications shall only be made upon the order of such director, but such order shall be of no effect until the price to be paid for the work and material, or both, under the altered or modified contract, has been agreed upon in writing and signed by the contractor and the director on behalf of the corporation, and approved by the board of control, as provided by law."

Section 4332, General Code, provides:

"No contractor shall be allowed to recover anything for work or material, caused by any alteration or modification, unless the contract is made in such manner, nor shall he be allowed, or recover for such work and material, or either, more than the agreed price. The general provisions of law relating to the requiring of bids and the awarding of contracts for public buildings, and improvements, so far as they apply, shall remain in full force and effect."

These sections provide how alterations and modifications in contracts may be made, and they have not been complied with. The contractor, therefore, has no enforceable claim against the city.

The city, however, has received the benefit of the work, and there is at least a moral obligation to pay for the same.

The right of council to recognize and pay a moral obligation has been recognized by the courts of this state.

In State ex rel. vs. Brown, 4 Cir. Dec. 345, it is held:

"Where equity and justice require the payment of a claim against a municipal corporation, though it may not be collectible at law, an ordinance of such city or village legally passed, directing and authorizing its payment, is legal and valid."

The nature of the claim involved in this case is not given.

This case is followed in State ex rel. vs. Wall, 15 Ohio Dec., 349, wherein it is held:

"A municipal corporation may recognize and pay claims against it of a moral and equitable nature, whether required by law to do so or not.

"Where a claim against a municipal corporation is just and equitable, and in good conscience ought to be paid, an ordinance duly passed by council in which it recognized the claim as valid, appropriated the necessary funds for its payment, and authorized and directed the proper officer to pay the same is valid; and mandamus will lie to compel such officer to draw his warrant upon the city treasury therefor, notwithstanding the claim, in the absence of such ordinance, could not have been collected either at law or in equity."

This case arose upon a contract for public printing, where the printing company continued to publish advertisements for the city after the expiration of its contract.

On page 352, Judge E. P. Evans, quotes from State ex rel. vs. Brown, supra, and then says:

"This holding is reasonable and just, and is sustained by numerous adjudications. The allowance of such claims belongs to the power of taxation, which is embraced in the legislative power of the state, which the legislature may delegate to municipal corporations.

"'The legislature,' says Judge Cooley, 'may recognize moral or equitable obligations, such as a just man would be likely to recognize in his own affairs, whether by law required to do so or not. And what the legislature may do for the state, the municipalities, under proper legislation may do for themselves.' Cooley, taxation (2 ed.) 128. The legislature has no constitutional power to authorize the payment of a void claim, and, of course, a municipality can have no such power; but the legislature may authorize the payment of claims just in themselves, and for which an equivalent has been received, but which from some cause, cannot be enforced at law.

"And this doctrine has been repeatedly sanctioned by the supreme court of this state. Board of Education vs. McLandsborough, 36 Ohio St., 227; Warder vs. Commissioners, 38 Ohio St., 639, 643; Board of Education vs. State, 51 Ohio St., 531 and 541."

In case of Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 Ohio St., 185, Summers, J., says on page 194:

"But, because a municipality is not legally liable to pay for a public improvement, it does not follow that it is not under a moral obligation to do so or that a court because it will not enforce payment will enjoin it. The contract for paving this street in not ultra vires. If invalid it is so merely because the contract was made before the bonds to provide the money to pay for it were sold. Now that the work has been done in accordance with the contract and the bonds have been sold and the money to pay for it is in the treasury, it is right that it should be paid for and a court of equity ought not, unless its failure to do so would defeat the purpose of the law, prevent the municipality from doing what equity and fair dealing would exact from an individual."

A moral obligation was recognized in Board of Education vs. McLandsborough, 36 Ohio St., 227, where it is held:

"Where public money in custody of a public officer of this state, and with the disbursement of which money he is charged by law, is stolen or otherwise lost without his fault, and the legislature pass an act exonerating such officer and his sureties from the payment of such money, and direct that a tax be levied in the territory upon which the loss must fall to meet the deficit, such act is not forbidden by the constitution, state or federal."

In Warden vs. Commissioners, 38 Ohio St., 639, White, J., says at page 643:

> "There was no legal obligation, prior to the passage of the act in question, to refund the assessments; but the justice of doing so arose from the inauguration and enforcement of the new policy. The power of taxation is not limited to the payment of legal claims; but extends to those founded only in justice and moral obligation."

These cases recognize the principle that the state or a municipal corporation has the same right to do justice and equity that an individual has.

In this state it is held that moral obligation is a sufficient consideration for a contract by an individual.

In the case at bar the city has received the benefit of the labor, and it is but just and equitable that the person who performed the work should be paid therefor.

The contract in question was not ultra vires. The city was authorized to contract for the extras, but the method provided by law was not complied with. For this reason there is no legal obligation upon the city to pay for the extras. There is, however, a moral obligation.

By virtue of section 4240, General Code, council has general control of the finances of the city. This section reads:

> "The council shall have the management and control of the finances and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

By virtue of this section council would have a right to compromise claims against the city. And under the authorities above cited, council has the right to recognize a moral obligation, and to authorize its payment.

If there is neither a legal or moral obligation upon the part of the city, council cannot order its payment.

In the present question, as the city retains the result of the work, there is a moral obligation which council can recognize.

Council may, therefore, pass an ordinance or resolution, authorizing a compromise of the claim in question, and the city auditor would be authorized to draw a warrant on the treasurer in accordance with the provisions of said ordinance or resolution.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—FEES—TAX ASSESSOR—DISTRICT ASSESSORS—WOMEN NOT ELIGIBLE TO OFFICE—ELECTOR.

Women are not eligible to appointment for deputy assessors as provided in the tax law passed April 18, 1913, even though they meet all other qualifications laid down by the law in the rules of the civil service commission, for the reason that a deputy assessor is an officer within the meaning of section 4 of article XV of the constitution of Ohio, and no person can be appointed to such a position unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 27, 1914, you inquire:

> "We desire your ruling as to whether or not women are eligible to appointment for deputy assessors as provided in the tax law passed April 18, 1913, when they meet all other qualifications laid down by the law and the rules of this commission."

The question to be determined is whether or not the position of deputy assessor is an office as contemplated in section 4 of article XV of the constitution, which provides:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

In order to determine this question we must ascertain the duties of deputy assessors.

The tax law is set forth at pages 786, et seq., of 103 Ohio Laws. Section 1 thereof, section 5579, General Code, provides in part:

> "In addition to all other powers and duties vested in or imposed upon it by law, the tax commission of Ohio shall direct and supervise the assessment for taxation of all real and personal property in the state. * * * Such district assessor shall, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, be the assessors of real and personal property for taxation, within and for their respective districts, except as may be otherwise provided by law. * * *"

By virtue of this section it is made the duty of the state tax commission to direct and supervise the assessment for taxation of all property in the state. The district assessor acts under the direction and supervision of the state tax commission.

Section 3 of said act, section 5881, General Code, provides for the appointment of deputy assessors, as follows:

> "Each district assessor shall appoint such number of deputy assessors, assistants, experts, clerks and employes as may, from time to time, be prescribed for his district by the tax commission of Ohio. Such deputy assessor, assistants, experts, clerks and employes shall hold their respective offices and employements for such times as may be prescribed by the tax commission."

In section 2 of said act it is provided that each district assessor

"shall be an elector of the district for which he is appointed."

No such qualification is made for the deputy assessors.
Section 4 of said act, section 5582, General Code, provides:

"The district assessor shall, annually, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, list and value for taxation all real and personal property subject to taxation in the county constituting his assessment district, except as otherwise provided by law. The deputy assessor shall have and perform, under the direction of the district assessor, and in such territory as may be assigned to him by the district assessor, all powers and duties of the district assessor, except those provided by sections 7, 8, 12, 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 31, 32, 47, 49, 53, 58, 63, 64 and 65 of this act, and sections 2574, 2588, 5394, 5387, 5397, 5398, 5399, 5400, 5401, 5405, 5411, 5412, 5556, 5557, 5558, 5559, 5573, 5574 and 5578 of the General Code as herein amended. Wherever in the General Code, excepting in said sections, the words 'assessor,' 'district assessor,''township assessor,' 'ward assessor,' 'precinct assessor,' 'assessor of real estate' or 'assessor of real property' are used, the same shall be deemed to mean the district assessor or the deputy assessor, as the case may be, and the offices held by such officers shall be deemed to be and are hereby abolished. The district assessor or his deputy shall, unless otherwise provided by law, perform, or cause to be performed, all the duties, exercise all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities and penalties devolved, conferred or imposed by law upon such officers."

The deputy assessors are subject to the direction and supervision of the district assessor.

Secion 36 of said act, section 5615, General Code, provides in part:

"District assessors, deputy assessors and members of district boards of complaints shall give bond, payable to the state, for the faithful performance of their respective duties."

Section 39 of said act, section 5618, General Code, provides in part:

"* * * Each deputy assessor, shall before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath, faithfully and impartially to assess all real and personal property, in the territory assigned to him by the district assessor and otherwise faithfully to perform the duties imposed upon him impartially to exercise the powers vested in him by law."

Section 42 of said act, section 5621, General Code, provides:

"Each district assessor, deputy assessor, assistant assessor, expert or clerk of a district assessor and member of secretary of a district board of complaints shall have power to administer oaths and to certify to official acts in any matter, relating in any way to his official duties."

These sections prescribe the duties and powers of the deputy assessors. They are required to take and subscribe an oath to faithfully and impartially assess all real and personal property in the territory assigned to them. They may administer oaths and may certify to their official acts. They are required to give bond to the state for the faithful performance of their duties.

These are characteristics of an officer.

One of the chief characteristics of an "office" is that the incumbent exercises a part of the soverign power of the state. The assessing of property for taxation is a part of the soverign power of the state. In fact the right of taxation is one of the essential and indispensable powers of government. Without that power government would become inefficient.

While the deputy assessors are under the direction and supervision of the district assessor, yet they perform many duties in their own right. They have the power to fix the valuation of property, both real and personal, for taxation. They can make returns where the owner fails or refuses to do so. This is an exercise of a part of the soverign power of the state, and it makes them "officers" within the meaning of the constitution.

That they are officers, and that it was the intention that they should be classed as officers, is shown by the act itself.

In section 3 of this act it is provided:

> "Such deputy assessor, assistants, experts, clerks, and employes shall hold their respective offices and employments."

The word "offices" as used here clearly refers to the deputy assessor.

Also in section 39:

> "Each deputy assessor, shall before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, take and subscribe an oath, * * *."

An example of "officer" who performs some of his duties under the direction and supervision of a superior, is that of a policeman. A policeman is held to be an "officer." In all cities he is subject to the direction and supervision of the chief of police and under the director of public safety. But in many of his duties he exercises a part of the soverign power of the state in his own right. This makes him an officer.

The position of a policeman is not different from that of a deputy assessor. Both are subject to the direction and supervision of their superior officers. Both exercise a part of the soverign power of the state.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a deputy assessor is an officer within the meaning of section 4 of article XV of the constitution of Ohio, and that no person can be appointed to such position "unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

Therefore, women are not eligible to hold the position of deputy assessors of property.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—INSURANCE—CERTIFICATE—CORPORATION—LIFE INSURANCE.

A corporation organized under the provisions of section 9510, et seq., General Code, is not required to comply with the provisions of section 8633, General Code, which requires the filing with the secretary of state, a certificate of subscription. The incorporators of such a corporation are without power to compel the secretary of state to receive and file such certificate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 23d, in which you request my opinion as to whether or not a corporation organized under the provisions of sections 9510 et seq., General Code, is required to comply with the provisions of section 8633 of the General Code, and further as to what may be the duty of the secretary of state in the event that a corporation, organized as aforesaid, renders to him a certificate of subscription as required by the section last named.

Section 9510, General Code, designates certain specific purposes for which a corporation may be formed, such purposes being, generally speaking, different kinds of insurance business other than life.

Section 8633, General Code, requires all corporations, organized under the general incorporation act of the state, that before proceeding to organize finally the incorporators file with the secretary of state a certificate that 10% of the capital stock has been subscribed.

In order to appreciate the full effect of the two sections referred to in your inquiry, and to disclose the exact question embodied therein, other provisions of the General Code related to them must be noticed.

Section 9510 is the first of a group of sections constituting chapter 1, of subdivision 2, division 3, title 9, part 2d, General Code, relating to insurance upon property and against certain contingencies. As already stated, the section merely defines the purpose for which a company may be organized or admitted under this chapter, and within itself does not prescribe any of the necessary steps in the process of organization. For example, it does not specify the public authority which shall issue the certificate of incorporation; it does not specify the number of individuals who may associate themselves in articles of incorporation, nor the form of any application or other paper to be filed for that purpose.

Section 9511, immediately following the section just discussed, supplies none of the deficiencies already described, and like section 9510 itself relates only to the purpose of the class of corporations to which it applies.

Sections 9512 to 9517, General Code, however, do relate to the machinery of organization. I quote them generally as follows:

> Sec. 9512. "The articles of incorporation of a company formed for the purpose of insurance, other than life insurance, must be forwarded to the secretary of state, who shall submit them to the attorney general for examination. If found by him to be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, and not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state, and of the United States, he shall certify and deliver them back to the secretary. He may reject any name or title of a company applied for when he deems it similar to one already appropriated, or likely to mislead the public."

Sec. 9513. "Upon the approval of the articles by the attorney general and secretary of state, the latter shall cause them to be recorded, and copied in the manner provided for life insurance companies, and a copy thereof to be deposited with the superintendent of insurance. He shall withhold from the company the certificate of authority if its name is so similar to that of any other company as to mislead the public."

Sec. 9514. "The persons named in the articles of incorporation, or a majority of them, shall be commissioners to open books for the subscription of stock in the company, at such times and places as they deem proper, and shall keep them open until the full amount specified in the articles is subscribed."

Sec. 9515. "Within one month after the subscription books are filled, and the articles of incorporation filed with the secretary of state, a majority of subscribers to the stock shall hold a meeting for the election of not less than five nor more than twenty-one directors, who must be stockholders or members. At any time thereafter the number may be increased or diminished between the same limits, at the will of stockholders representing a majority of the stock or a majority of the members. Each member of a mutual company shall be entitled to one vote, and each stockholder in other companies, to one vote for each share of stock he holds. If they so provide in their by-laws, mutual companies may elect directors for the term of three years, the term of office of one-third of the number elected to expire each year, and those who receive the highest number of votes at the first election to serve for the longest term."

Sec. 9516. "From their own number the directors shall choose by ballot, a president, and also fill vacancies that arise in the board, or in the presidency thereof."

Sec. 9517. "When convened at the office of the company the board of directors, or a majority of them, may appoint a secretary and other officers or agents necessary for transacting its business, and pay such salaries and take such securities as they judge reasonable. They may ordain and establish by-laws and regulations, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state and of the United States, as to them appear necessary for regulating and conducting the business of the company. New by-laws or regulations shall not take effect until approved by the superintendent of insurance and a copy is filed in his office. The directors shall keep full and correct records of their transactions, which, at all times, shall be open to the inspection of the members or stockholders."

Sections 9518 to 9520 inclusive prescribe the securities in which the capital of insurance companies other than life may be invested.

Section 9522 and succeeding sections provide with respect to different classes of companies other than life for the issuance to them by the superintendent of insurance of a license authorizing them to commence business and issue policies. I think it may be safely assumed of this group of sections that they prescribe conditions precedent not to the doing of any and all business but merely to the doing of insurance business by the acceptance of premiums and the incurring of risks on policies. However, section 9524, General Code, may well be considered in this connection, it provides as follows:

"Except as hereinafter provided, no joint stock insurance company shall be organized under this chapter, or permitted to do business in this state with a less capital than one hundred thousand dollars, which must be paid up before the company can transact business. But on the payment of twenty-five per cent. of its capital stock, a live stock company may do business."

The remaining provisions of the chapter are, generally speaking, regulatory in their nature, and need not be considered in this connection.

Turning now to the group of statutes in which section 8633, General Code, is found, we find that the machinery for the organization of a corporation under the general corporation act of the state, is as follows:

Sec. 8625. "Any number of persons, not less than five, a majority of whom are citizens of this state, desiring to become incorporated shall subscribe and acknowledge articles of incorporation, which must contain:

"1. The name of the corporation, which, unless it is not for profit, shall begin with the word "the" and end with the word "company," except as otherwise provided by law.

"2. The place where it is to be located, or its principal business transacted.

"3. The purpose for which it is formed.

"4. The amount of its capital stock, if it is to have capital stock, and the number of shares into which it is divided. * * *"

Sec. 8626. "Articles of incorporation shall be acknowledged before an officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, the form of which shall be prescribed by the secretary of state. * * * Articles of incorporation shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state, who shall record them and shall also record certificates relating to that corporation thereafter filed in his office."

Sec. 8627. "Upon filing articles of incorporation, the persons who subscribed them, their associates, successors, and assigns, by the name and style provided therein, shall be a body corporate, with succession, power to sue and be sued, contract and be contracted with; also, unless specially limited, to acquire and hold all property, real or personal, necessary to effect the object for which it is created, and at pleasure convey it in conformity with its regulations and the laws of this state. Such corporation also may make, use and at will alter a common seal, and do all other acts needful to accomplish the purposes of its organization."

Sec. 8630. "The persons named in the articles of incorporation of a corporation for profit, or a majority of them, shall order books to be opened for subscriptions to the capital stock of the corporation at such time or times and place or places as they deem expedient."

Sec. 8632. "At the time of making a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, ten per cent. on each share subscribed for shall be payable. * * *"

Sec. 8633. "When ten per cent. of the capital stock is subscribed, the subscribers to the articles of incorporation, or a majority of them at once shall so certify in writing to the secretary of state."

Sec. 8635. "As soon as such certificate is made, the signers thereto, shall give notice to the stockholders, as provided in section eighty-six hundred and thirty-one, to meet at such time and place as the notice designates, for the purpose of choosing not less than five nor more than thirty directors, to continue in office until the time fixed for the annual election, and until their successors are elected and qualified. But if all subscribers to stock are present in person or by proxy, such notice may be waived by them in writing."

Sec. 8737. "This chapter does not apply when special provision is made in subsequent chapters of this title, but the special provision shall govern, unless it clearly appears that the provision is cumulative."

"This chapter," as used in the section last quoted, means and refers to the general corporation act of the state, being chapter 1, division 1, title 9, part 2d, General Code, in which section 8633 and other related sections last above quoted are found.

The chapter in which sections 9510 et seq., are found is one of the "subsequent chapters" referred to in section 8737.

For the purpose of this opinion it will be assumed that section 8737 may be paraphrased so as to read substantially as follows:

"This chapter shall apply unless special provision is made in subsequent chapters of this title. The special provision shall not govern unless it clearly appears that the provision is not cumulative."

I do not think this is what the section means at all, and am of the opinion that the paraphrase does considerable violence to the true meaning thereof, but for reasons which will become apparent I have chosen this rather extreme rendition of the section in order to narrow the question as much as possible.

Under such a supposed interpretation of the section it is obvious that the ultimate question involved in your inquiry would be as to whether or not there is in chapter 1, of subdivision 2, division 3 of the title, a "special provision" respecting the subject matter concerning which section 8623, General Code, makes provision. This question may be approached from two angles: First, the statutes may be examined to see whether there is on their present face a plain and unmistakable meaning which furnishes a direct answer to your question; and second, in the event that the examination of the statutes as they stand fails to disclose such a plain and unmistakable meaning, then the function of interpretation must be brought into play and extrinsic facts adduced in an effort to remove the doubt and supply the meaning.

In this instance the most appropriate extrinsic aid to the interpretation of the statutes in question will be found in their legislative history. Looking at the two groups of sections from the point of view and in the light of the assumed interpretation of section 8737, General Code, it at once appears that the group which begins with section 9510 is certainly not a complete scheme for the organization of the class of companies to which it applies. As already pointed out this group of statutes is entirely silent as to many of the necessary steps to be taken and under the interpretation of section 8737 adopted for the purpose of convenience herein, recourse must be had to the provisions of sections 8625 et seq., of the general incorporation act of the state in order to supply these proceedings. So we find the number of incorporators who may organize an insurance company other than life to be fixed, not by the chapter relating to such companies but by the general incorporation act. Similarly as to the form of the articles of incorporation, the manner and place in which they shall be filed; the legal effect in general of the issuance of a certificate of incorporation which is defined by section 8627, General Code.

From the point, however, at which sections 9512 et seq., begin, viz., the filing of articles of incorporation, it and the remaining sections do provide, at least, a workable scheme for the further organization of the companies to which they relate.

Indeed, section 9512 of itself, by inference, requires one of the things which I have already assumed must be supplied by the general laws, viz., the officer with whom the articles of incorporation of an insurance company, other than life, must be filed; for the first sentence of section 9512 provides that:

> "The articles of incorporation of a company formed for the purpose of insurance other than life, must be forwarded to the secretary of state. * * *"

The succeeding provisions of this, and the next following sections, provide for a different procedure on the part of the secretary of state from that which is authorized and required to be followed as to articles of incorporation filed under the general incorporation act; that is, he must, before filing the articles first submit them to the attorney general for examination; then when they are approved by that officer he is to receive them for filing and to record them, making a certified copy thereof to be deposited with the superintendent of insurance.

Upon close analysis, therefore, it seems reasonably clear that of the necessary steps in the preliminary organization of an insurance company other than life, the only ones not supplied by sections 9512 et seq., are the number of persons who shall execute the articles of incorporation, and the form in which they shall be executed, together with perhaps the legal effect of the issuance to the incorporators of the articles of incorporation, other than that specifically provided by section 9514, General Code.

Section 9514 is clearly an exclusive provision for the opening of books for subscription to the capital stock of insurance companies other than life. I believe it is not necessary for me to discuss my reasons for concluding that sections 8630 and 8631 at least do not apply to the organization of such companies. Whether or not section 8632, requiring the payment of 10% on each share subscribed for as a condition for a valid subscription, applies to such companies, is not necessary herein to decide, although I incline to the view that the section does not apply to insurance companies of this character.

Coming now to section 8633 of the general incorporation act, it is to be noted that so far as the mere requirement of certificate of subscription is concerned, there would be nothing inconsistent with the scheme of things provided for in section 9512 to exact this same requirement of insurance companies other than life. That is to say, if section 8633 stood alone it could be fitted into sections 9512 et seq., without doing violence to them.

On the other hand, however, it could be urged with a great show of reason that sections 9512 et seq., are complete without any such provision as is found in section 8623, although they are not complete without some of the other provisions in the general incorporation act. The choice between these two view points as tending to supply the answer to your question would largely depend, I apprehend, upon the proper interpretation of section 8737, General Code. If the paraphrase of that section, which I have assumed, be regarded as expressing its true meaning, then the first viewpoint above suggested should be taken, and section 8633 might be read into sections 9512 et seq., because this can apparently be done without doing violence to these sections.

If, however, an opposite interpretation (and one which I believe to be the proper one) be given to section 8737, General Code, then section 8633 is not to be read into statutes providing for the organization of insurance companies other than life because it is not necessary to do so in order to make adequate "provision" therefor.

For my own satisfaction, then, I would be willing to reject the interpretation which I have already given for purposes of convenience to section 8737, General Code, and decide your question upon the basis of that rejection alone. But I think the conclusion as which I shall ultimately arrive will be rendered much more clear and satisfactory if, for the sake of the argument, the assumed interpretation of section 8737 be adhered to for the time being. That is to say, let it be supposed that section 8633 in its proper relation may be read into sections 9512 et seq., if it appears that the former provision is not inconsistent with any of the latter provisions.

Now, section 8633, General Code, standing by itself is an uninforceable and directory provision. It would be a vain thing for the general assembly to require that at a certain stage of the proceedings of organizing a corporation, a certain certificate be filed unless the consequence of failure to file that certificate were prescribed by statute or furnished by necessary implication.

In this instance there is a statute which amounts substantially to a prescription of the consequences of failure to comply with section 8633, General Code; and which, while not couched in negative and prohibitory language, nevertheless embodies the sanction by which the mandate of section 8633 is to be enforced. I refer to section 8635, General Code, which provides in effect that the first stockholders' meeting for the election of directors of a general corporation may be held substantially "as soon as such certificate (of subscription referred to in section 8633) is made." By necessary implication, of course, this section is equivalent to a prohibition upon the holding of the initial stockholders' meeting and the election of the first board of directors until the certificate of subscription is filed. This is the sole purpose of the section. More broadly considered, the scheme of things with relation to an ordinary private corporation under our laws is that such a corporation is permitted to organize fully as soon as 10% of its capital stock is subscribed and installments of 10% on each subscription are paid in, and by necessary implication is prohibited from organizng fully until this state of affairs exists.

Having regard, then, to the true meaning of section 8633 in its proper relation it at once appears that the question of fitting it into the scheme of things embodied in section 9512, General Code, takes on a different aspect.

Section 9514, General Code, constitutes a majority of the subscribers to the articles of incorporation commissioners to open books of subscription, and directs such commissioners to "keep them open until the full amount specified in the articles is subscribed."

This in itself is inconsistent with the fundamental idea which calls into existence as to a general corporation, the requirement of section 8633. Under the general incorporation act, it is a possible thing, indeed, a thing directly favored by the law, that an ordinary corporation's subscribed capital stock shall be much smaller than its authorized capital stock. This, however, is not possible as to a domestic insurance company other than life. The intention of the statutes is clearly expressed in the provision just quoted, and one to which attention will be called, being that the entire authorized capital stock shall be subscribed before certain things may be done.

Coming now to section 9515 it is to be observed that the first provision of that section is that "within one month after the subscription books are filled, * * * a majority of the subscribers to the stock shall hold a meeting for the election of * * * directors."

It appears from this language that by necessary inference the first stockholders' meeting for the election of directors may not be held until the subscription books are filled. What purpose, in this scheme of things, could that filing, of a certificate of subscription of 10% of the capital stock subserve?

The consequences of such a subscription are not defined in the law relating to insurance companies other than life. On the other hand the condition precedent to the organization of such companies is quite a different thing from that with respect to corporations generally. Without prolonging the discussion here I am clearly of the opinion that section 8633, considered with respect to its true meaning as reflected in other statutes which must be read in connection with it, is inconsistent with the provisions of sections 9514 and 9515, General Code.

That being the case, I reach the conclusion that the plain meaning of the statutes which I have considered, as disclosed by the express language used, leads to the conclusion that corporations organized under sections 9510 et seq., General Code, are not required to file the certificate of subscription referred to in section 8633, General Code. Although my conclusions are based upon the express language used in the sections, yet I have had to rely upon certain implications—clear enough, to be sure, but nevertheless implications—in order to arrive at the conclusion expressed. Possibly this fact might justify the observation that after all the statutes are not perfectly clear on their face and are, therefore, subject to what is known as "interpretation."

I have already stated that in this instance the most appropriate extrinsic means for the interpretation of the related sections is furnished by the legislative history of them. This is because section 8737 which, as already pointed out, has at least some bearing upon the question, is a codification provision. It bears evidence of this on its face in that it refers to "chapters" and "titles," but on investigation it will be found that the section in its entirety was originally a creature of the codifying commission of 1880, and was inserted in the statutes because of certain verbal changes in and omissions from the corporation acts of the state as they existed prior to 1880, made by that commission and adopted by the legislature with a view to eliminating repetition and permitting conciseness of expression. The codification in this respect is well illustrated by consideration of the other laws now being considered.

The insurance code of the state in force when the revision of 1880 was made, was that passed April 27, 1872, 69 O. L., 140, and is entitled, "an act to regulate insurance companies doing an insurance business as in the state of Ohio." Sections 1 and 2 of that act related directly to the formation of insurance companies other than life and were as follows:

> "Sec. 1. That hereafter when any number of persons as required by the first section of the act entitled 'an act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio,' passed May 1, 1892, and the acts amendatory thereto, shall associate to form an insurance company for any other purpose than life insurance, they shall, under their hands and seals, make a certificate specifying the name assumed by such company and by which it shall be known, the object for which said company shall be formed, the amount of its capital stock, and the place where the principal office of said company shall be located; which certificate shall be acknowledged, certified and forwarded to the secretary of state, who shall submit the same to the attorney general for examination, and if found by him to be in accordance with the provisions of this act, and not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state and of the United States, he shall certify the same and deliver it back to the said secretary, who shall have the right to reject any name or title of any company applied for, when he shall deem the name similar to one already appropriated, or likely to mislead the public."

"Sec. 2. Upon the approval of said certificate by the attorney general and the secretary of state, the said secretary of state shall cause it to be recorded and copied in the same manner as is provided in the second section of said act, and a copy thereof deposited with the superintendent of insurance. And said persons, when incorporated, and having in all respects complied with the provisions of this act, are hereby authorized to carry on the business of insurance, as named in such certificate of incorporation, and by the name and style provided therein, shall be deemed a body corporate, with succession; they and their associates, successors and assigns, shall have the same general corporate powers, and be subject to all the obligations and restrictions of said act, and of the acts amendatory and supplementary thereto, except as herein provided."

By examining these sections it will at once appear that there are no such deficiencies therein with respect to the procedure of organizing corporations to which they related as are apparent in sections 9510 et seq., at the present time. True, there is repeated reference to the provisions of the general law where the intention is to regulate some matter by those provisions; thus, the number of persons who shall be required to associate themselves in order to form an insurance company other than life is that number "required by the first section of the act entitled, etc."

So the matter of recordation of the articles when approved by the attorney general is to be that "provided in the second section of said act." Again, the incorporators when they have complied with the provisions of "this act" are to have certain corporate powers, and in general, all the corporate powers and all the obligations and restrictions of "said act * * * except as herein provided."

But provision by adoption and reference is none the less an express provision and the scheme of the original insurance law was a complete one respecting the organization of insurance companies other than life, notwithstanding the fact that in certain instances the procedure of organization was required to be the same as that prescribed by the laws for the incorporation of companies generally.

The sections of the insurance law of 1872 immediately succeeding the ones above quoted are substantially similar to sections 9514 et seq., of the present General Code. In this connection it is interesting to note that what is at present section 9524, General Code, is found in the original insurance act as section 3 thereof. In so far as there may be any doubt as to the meaning of section 9524 in its present form that doubt may be resolved by examination of original section 3, from which it appears that the limitation of present section 9524 operates upon the company in the course of its preliminary organization and is not a mere condition precedent to the doing of an insurance business as such. That is to say, the requirement that the company have $100,000.00 of paid up capital stock is not a condition precedent merely to the doing of an insurance business, but appears also to be a condition precedent to the complete organization of the company as a corporation. This view of section 9524 strengthens the interpretation already given to sections 9514 and 9515 and indicates that no complete organization of an insurance company other than life can be made until its capital stock is fully subscribed for. I do not find it necessary to go to the length of holding that the capital must be fully paid up before complete organization, as this provision was not in the original law, and it may be was intended as a condition precedent to the doing of an insurance business rather than as a condition precedent to the complete organization of the company.

Having regard then to the legislative history of the insurance code in so far as it applies to the organization of companies other than life, I am of the opinion that this set of laws was originally enacted as a complete scheme of organization in itself so that none of the preliminary steps required in the organization of corporations generally were intended to be required in the organization of such insurance companies, except where expressly referred to and adopted in the said insurance laws.

A further examination of the legislative history of the related statutes shows that with the exception of section 9425 already referred to, the sections commented upon have not been amended in any material respect since they were originally enacted. Hence, it follows that the present form of the statute and the several changes made therein as compared with the original insurance act and the general corporation act respectively resulted from processes of codification and revision. This being the case, the well established rule that verbal changes so made are presumed to have been made without any intention of changing the substantive law, comes into play and the original insurance code may be appropriately used to remove ambiguities which may be admitted to exist in the present statutes on that subject. So used, the original insurance code points to the conclusion that there is no place in the scheme for the organization of insurance companies other than life provided for by the present sections of the General Code, for the filing of a certificate of subscription of ten per cent. of the authorized capital stock thereof.

My conclusion and its reasons, then, may be summarized as follows:

For the reason, first, that section 8737, General Code, properly interpreted, means, in my opinion, that the provisions of the general law shall not apply in the organization of companies specially provided for by succeeding chapters of the title unless those provisions are necessary to supply some actual deficiency in the latter sections; second, that, regardless of the manner in which section 8737, General Code, is interpreted, the statutes on their face show that section 8633 interpreted according to its meaning as reflected in other related statutes not only need not be read into the laws providing for the organization of insurance companies other than life for the purpose of supplying any deficiency therein but, being inconsistent with certain of the provisions of those laws cannot in any event be regarded as a part of the scheme for the organization of such companies; and, third, that if the meaning of the statutes considered on their face be regarded as doubtful, and the legislative history, the most appropriate extrinsic evidence in aid of interpretation which is available, be looked to for the purpose of resolving such doubts, an examination of the original insurance code clearly shows that the scheme for the organization of insurance companies other than life was intended to be a complete one in which the filing of a certificate of subscription of 10% of the authorized capital stock had no place; for all these reasons, I am of the opinion that corporations organized under sections 9510 et seq., of the General Code are not required to file with you the certificate of subscription referred to in section 8633.

I am also of the opinion that it is not the duty of the secretary of state to file such a certificate if presented by such a company. The reasons for this conclusion, it seems to me have already been sufficiently disclosed. However, it may be appropriate to state that because the incorporators cannot acquire any rights by reason of the filing of such a certificate, therefore, they would be without power to compel the secretary of state to receive and file them; because they cannot compel the secretary of state to do so he could lawfully refuse to do so; and being in this respect a ministerial officer without any discretionary power whatever, so far as the filing of such certificates is concerned, he is without authority to file any certificate which he may not be compelled to file.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY ORDINANCE — MAYOR'S VETO — PASS ORDINANCE OVER MAYOR'S VETO—VOTE NECESSARY TO PASS ORDINANCE OVER MAYOR'S VETO.

Where a city council passed an ordinance consisting of numerous sections and fixing the salaries of various city officials, and the same was sent to the mayor for his approval, and the mayor refused to sign the ordinance because he disapproved of parts of it, and returned the ordinance to council, unsigned, with a statement showing his objections thereto, in order to legally pass such an ordinance, it is necessary for two-thirds of all the members elected to council to concur in approving it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 17, 1913, as follows:

> "The council of the city of Delaware on December 1, 1913, passed a general ordinance consisting of seventeen sections fixing the salaries of the incoming city officials, the salary of each officer being fixed in a separate section. The mayor, under date of December 11, 1913, returned his communication to council vetoing several sections of said ordinance and approving certain other sections. The council, upon receipt of said veto message, (in part), did not have sufficient votes to pass the same over the mayor's veto and instructed their clerk to advertise the whole of the ordinance, declaring in a resolution that the mayor's veto was void for the reason that it was an attempt on his part to approve a portion thereof and disapprove other portions.
> "Has the mayor of a city the authority to veto a portion of an ordinance fixing salaries, and what is the effect of such an attempt on his part upon the attempted legislation?
> "If a vetoed portion of such an ordinance is not passed over his veto by two thirds vote, will it, by reason of the mayor not disapproving of the whole of the ordinance, become effective?"

After receiving your communication I wrote to the clerk of council of the city of Delaware for further information concerning the action of the mayor and have recently received from him a copy of the ordinance and of the mayor's communication to council. These papers disclose that the mayor did not sign the ordinance but returned it to council within the prescribed time with a communication announcing that sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 and 16 were vetoed and setting forth his reasons for such action.

The communication concluded with the following paragraph:

"The restoring of former wages to our firemen and policemen, I desire to commend you. The reduction which was made in those departments was strictly illegal.

"Very respectfully,
"(Signed) BERT V. LOAS, Mayor."

The question now is what did the mayor do, and what was the effect of his action?

Section 4234, General Code, reads:

"Every ordinance or resolution of council shall, before it goes into effect, be presented to the mayor for approval. The mayor, if he approves it, shall sign and return it forthwith to council. If he does not approve it, he shall within ten days after its passage or adoption return it with his objections to council, or if council is not in session, to the next regular meeting thereof, which objections council shall cause to be entered upon its journal. The mayor may approve or disapprove the whole or any item of an ordinance appropriating money. If he does not return such ordinance or resolution within the time limited in this section, it shall take effect in the same manner as if he had signed it, unless council by adjournment prevents its return. When the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part thereof, and returns it to the council with his objections, council may, after ten days, reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideration is approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, it shall then take effect as if signed by the mayor. The provisions of this section shall apply only in cities."

If the mayor approves an ordinance he must sign it. This, in this case, he did not do. Therefore, he did not approve it. If he does not approve it he shall, within ten days after its passage return it with his objections to council. This is what I think he did. He returned the ordinance unsigned with his objections to certain sections, and while it is true he used the word "veto" in connection with those objections, the use of that word did not change the character of the communication nor make it anything but a statement of his objections to the ordinance. It is also true that those objections only refer to certain sections of the ordinance, but that does not affect the character of the communication either because the mayor may disapprove of an ordinance as a whole for the reason that certain parts of it are objectionable to him. Again it might be argued that in the light of the concluding paragraph of his communication, above quoted, he approved part of the ordinance. This contention, I think, can hardly be maintained for the reason that the mayor's signature to the ordinance is the statutory evidence of his approval of it, and in this case it was not given. It appears to me, therefore, that the words in the concluding paragraph, above referred to, were of no effect.

For those reasons, I am of the opinion that in the case submitted the mayor returned the ordinance to council unsigned with a statement of his objections thereto. and that to legally pass such ordinance after being so returned by him, it was necessary for two-thirds of all the members elected to the council to concur in approving it. This was not done, and it is, therefore, my opinion that the ordinance was not legally passed.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—ONE MILE LIMIT—APPLICATION OF AMENDED SECTION 6929, G. C., TO RESIDENTS OF MUNICIPALITIES.

Under the provisions of section 6929, G. C., as amended on page 198, volume 103, O. L., the county commissioners in making a count to determine whether a petition is signed by a majority of the real estate owners need not take into consideration residents of a municipality within the one mile limit, unless they own land within said limit, but outside of the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1914.

HON. A. A. SLAYBAUGH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 14th, which reads, in part, as follows:

> "The commissioners of Putnam county, Ohio, have asked me for an opinion construing section 6926, as amended on page 198, volume 103 Ohio Laws, in reference to the meaning of 'resident owners of real estate' contemplated by said act. * * *
> "I am also requested to construe section 6929 on page 199 of 103 Ohio Laws, or so much thereof as follows, 'It shall not be necessary in determining such majority of petitioners to count land owners residing within the municipality.' Should this section apply to owners of real estate, situated within one mile of the public road to be improved, who do not live upon their land, but live in the municipality more than a mile from either side of such road? Or does it only contemplate that real estate owners in a municipality need not be counted providing such municipality is within the limits of one mile of either side of such road?"

Said section 6926 provides:

> "When a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of either side of a public road, present a petition to the board of county commissioners asking for the grading and improving of such road, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of the road described in such petition. If, in their opinion, the public utility requires such road to be graded and improved, they shall determine whether the improvement shall be partly or wholly constructed of stone, gravel, brick or other materials, and what part or parts of such road improvement shall be of stone, gravel, brick or other materials, and enter their decision on their journal."

In the case of Goff et al. vs. Gates, 87 O. S., 142, the court held that sections 6926 to 6956 were repealed by implication by the act of May 10, 1910 (sections 6956-1 to 6956-16, General Code), but the general assembly at its session of 1913 (103 O. L., 198) re-enacted sections 6926-6956 in the same form as they existed prior to the rendition of the above named decision.

Section 6926 was originally a part of section 1 of what is popularly known as the Garret act, passed May 4, 1900 (94 O. L., 96).

The supreme court in the case of Alexander et al. Commissioners of Darke county vs. Baker, 74 O. S., construed the words "resident owners of real estate," as used in said section 1 as follows:

"The words 'resident owners' as used in section one of the act of the general assembly passed April 4, 1900 (94 O. L., 96), entitled, 'An act to provide for the improvement of public roads,' mean, and were intended to designate and include, all owners of real estate who are residents of the county and own lands lying within one mile of the road to be improved, and all must be considered and counted in determining whether a majority of the resident owners of real estate have signed the petition asking for the improvement.

"A petition presented to the county commissioners under favor of this section, asking for the improvement of a public road, which is not signed by a majority of such resident land owners, does not confer upon the commissioners jurisdiction; and where said commissioners assume to act on such petition and are threatening to proceed with and make said improvement, they may be restrained therefrom by injunction."

Said section 1 was amended in 1908 (99 O. L., 489), but the provision we are now considering was not changed.

In view, therefore, of the construction given to this statute by the supreme court in the case in 74 O. S., I am of the opinion that a petition presented to county commissioners under section 6926 must contain the signatures of a majority of the residents of the county who own land within one mile from either side of the road to be improved.

The provision of section 6929, quoted in your letter, means that county commissioners in making the count to determine whether a petition is signed by a majority of the resident owners of real estate, need not take into consideration residents of a municipality within the one mile limit, unless they own land within said limit but outside of the municipality.

It would be impracticable, and in a great many cases impossible, to secure the improvement of a road under these statutes if it were necessary to procure the signatures to a petition of a majority of the real estate owners in a municipality, and that is what the framers of the statute evidently sought to avoid.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIRCUIT COURT—COURT OF APPEALS—ALLOWANCE FOR EXPENSES TO THE JUDGES OF THE COURT OF APPEALS—TRAVELING EXPENSES.

The general assembly in the enactment of section 2253 intended to add to the office of court of appeals certain compensation for actual and necessary expenses of each judge thereof, and when the judge took this position, he accepted it with this understanding. It was not attached to the office of circuit judge, but was a part of the court of appeals judicial system.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1914.

HON. H. L. FERNEDING, Chief Justice, Court of Appeals, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 19, 1914, you say that on April 28, 1913, a bill was enacted by the general assembly authorizing an allowance of actual expenses of judges of the court of appeals, not exceeding $300.00 per annum, incurred while holding court outside of the counties of their residence. While such expenses as a matter of fact greatly exceed this amount, you state that the judge of the court of appeals do not desire to receive even this allowance if there is any question about its legality, and, therefore, you request an opinion from my department as to whether or not the law in question applies to judges of the courts of appeals in office at the time of the passage of the act.

The statute to which you have reference is section 2253, which provides:

> "In addition to the annual salary and expenses provided in sections 1529, 2251 and 2252, each judge of the court of common pleas and of the court of appeals, shall receive his actual and necessary expenses, not exceeding $300.00 in any one year, incurred while holding court in a county in which he does not reside, to be paid from the state treasury upon the warrant of the auditor of state, issued to the judge and upon presentation of a sworn itemized statement of such expenses."

The constitution provides that the general assembly shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all offices, "but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished." (See article II, section 20.)

A similar provision with reference to judges of the supreme court and of the court of common pleas is to be found in section 14 of article IV.

In the case of State ex rel. Raine, 49 O. S. 580, it was held that a statute, the effect of which is to increase the salary attached to a public office contravenes section 20 of article II of the constitution insofar as it may effect the salary of an incumbent of an office during the term he was serving when the statute was enacted. The act there in question allowed each county commissioner the sum of $1,000.00 per annum for expenses incurred in the proper discharge of his duties. Prior to the enactment of that statute the commissioners were each entitled to $2,000.00 per annum for expenses incurred in the proper discharge of his duties. Prior to The court took the position, in this case, that a forbidden object could not be accomplished by simply using a form of words that did not name such forbidden object in express terms; and therefore if the effect of the statute was to increase the salary of those commissioners who were serving current terms of office, it was unconstitutional to that extent. This decision would seem, at first glance, to require the holding that those judges who were in office at the time of the passage of the act about which you ask, would not be entitled to receive the $300.00 for actual expenses incurred by them. It will be noted, however, that in the present instance the judge is only allowed his actual and necessary expenses, the amount mentioned being the maximum allowance, while in the case just referred to the county commissioners allowed the sum of $1,000.00 for his expenses. The amount allowed was not confined to his actual expenses but was a fixed sum, and its effect was clearly to increase the salary of the county commissioners who were in office. For this reason I am rather inclined to the belief that the allowance of actual and necessary expenses, as is provided in section 2253 of the General Code, in no way affects the salary of any officer during his existing term, and consequently all judges of the courts of appeals are entitled to this allowance.

The question is, as I have said before, not free from doubt, but the decisions of other states construing similar constitutional provisions seem to have followed the view which I here advocate.

While it is true that the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Harmon, 87 O. S., 364, held that for certain purposes the identity of the circuit court was preserved, nevertheless it must be borne in mind that this latter court was merged into and its work continued by the court of appeals. Additional jurisdiction was vested in the latter court, and as a matter of practice such courts are operating differently throughout the state. They are given and are exercising more ample and broader powers than were executed by the circuit courts. This result was accomplished by the people through constitutional amendment, and in so doing there was no attempt made to restrict the action of the general assembly in fixing the compensation of such judges. It is true that certain judges of the circuit court were continued as judges of the courts of appeals, but, it is my opinion that the two capacities in which they served are so distinct as to justify the general assembly in allowing compensation for expenses incurred by those judges of the court of appeals who had been elected as circuit judges and were invested with the robes of the new office by action of the people through constitutional amendment. It appears that the general assembly in the enactment of section 2253 intended to add to the office of court of appeals certain compensation for actual and necessary expenses of each judge thereof, and when the judge took this position he accepted it with this understanding. It was not attached to the office of circuit judge, but was a part of the court of appeals judicial system.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKING CORPORATION—STOCK—RESTRICTIVE REGULATIONS IN STOCK—VALIDITY OF SUCH REGULATIONS.

Under the provisions of section 9724, General Code, banking corporations have authority to provide in their regulations and by-laws how and in what manner the stock of such corporations shall be transferred and if such regulations are carried into a certificate of stock, according to law, such regulations are valid and enforcible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 18, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of February 4, 1914, in which you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "I am giving herewith copy of what will go on the back of each stock certificate in a state bank, viz.:
> "In order that the stock of the company may be held by such persons as in the opinion of the board of directors are most likely to promote confidence in the stability of the bank, no stockholder shall sell or otherwise dispose of the whole or any part of his stock, unless he shall, at least thirty days prior thereto, have offered in writing to the board of directors, to sell the same to such person or persons as the said board of directors may designate, upon the same terms and for the same price as he shall have been offered bona fide by his prospective purchaser, and such offer to said board of directors shall not have been accepted within that period.
> "I beg to ask for an early opinion as to whether this is proper and regular to permit, being made a part of the stock certificate."

In the case of Nicholson vs. Brewing Company, (82 O. S., 94, 110), the court says:

> "Effective regulations of the transfer of stock in a corporation must be prescribed in statutes or in by-laws of a corporation, which are not inconsistent with the statutes."

In general corporation law the word "by-laws" has the same meaning as that ascribed to the word "regulations" in the statutory law of this state with respect to corporations, and it would seem that the court, in the case just cited, used the word "by-laws" in this sense.

Applying to corporations generally, sections 8701 and 8702, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Sec. 8701. Every corporation may adopt a code of regulations for its government, consistent with the constitution and laws of the state.
> "Sec. 8702. The trustees or directors of a corporation may adopt a code of by-laws for their government, consistent with the regulations of the corporation, and the constitution and laws of the state, and change it at pleasure."

As to banks, section 9708, General Code, in the enumeration of their general powers, provides that "they shall have power to adopt regulations for the government of the corporation, not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state."

Section 9709, General Code, provides that the regulations of such bank corporation may be adopted or changed by the assent thereto of two-thirds of the stockholders, in number and amount or by a majority of the stockholders, in number and amount, at a meeting held for that purpose, notice of which has been given as therein provided."

Sections 9714 and 9724, General Code, provide as follows:

> "Section 9714. In all other respects, such corporation shall be created, organized, governed and conducted in the manner provided by law for other corporations in so far as not inconsistent with the provisions of this statute.
> "Section 9724. The shares of stock of such corporation shall be deemed personal property and shall be transferred on its books in such manner as the regulations and by-laws of the corporation direct."

On a general consideration of the question here presented, it may be noted that many cases hold that a by-law, imposing restrictive regulations on the transfer of stock, is invalid, unless such power is given by statute.

> "Victor G. Bloede Co. vs. Bloede, (84 Maryland, 129).
> "Ireland vs. Globe Milling Co., (21 R I., 9).
> "Trust and Savings Co. vs. Home Lumber Co., (118 Missouri, 447).
> "Bank vs. Bank, (20 N. Y., 501).
> "Miller vs. Farmers, etc. Co., (78 Neb. 441)."

Other cases have taken the view that the terms of such a by-law, when incorporated in the stock certificate, are enforcible as a contract between the corporation and the subscriber for the stock represented by the certificate, irrespective of the question as to the validity of such by-law.

"New England Trust Company vs. Abbott, (162 Mass., 148).
"Barrett vs. King, (181 Mass., 476).
"Blue Mountain, etc. Asso. vs. Barrome, (71 N. H., 19)."

In this state, the courts have not decided as to the validity of a by-law of this kind in the absence of authorizing statute, but the reason of the court in the case of Stafford vs. Produce Exchange Bank, (61 O. S., 160, 169), and views expressed in the case of Nicholson vs. Brewing Company, supra, seem strongly inclined to the position that the terms of such by-law, when carried into the certificate of stock, are valid and enforcible as a contract, as against the holder of such certificate, independent of statutory authority.

Applicable to corporations generally, section 8673-15, General Code, provides as follows:

> "There shall be no lien in favor of a corporation upon the shares represented by a certificate issued by such corporation and there shall be no restriction upon the transfer of shares so represented by virtue of any by-law of such corporation, or otherwise, unless the right of the corporation to such lien or the restriction is stated upon the certificate."

With respect to banks, section 9724, General Code, above noted, confers ample authority on such corporations to provide in their regulations and by-laws how and in what manner the stock of such corporations shall be transferred, and if such regulations are carried into the certificate of stock, in the manner indicated in your communication, I am of the opinion that such restrictive regulations are valid and enforcible.

"Tomb vs. Felch, (40 W. L. B., 186).
"Stafford vs. Produce Exchange Bank, supra."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RICHMOND CASKET COMPANY—DAYTON FLOOD—CONTRACT.

In the matter of the Richmond Casket Company furnishing caskets during the Dayton flood, the proper settlement for the adjutant general's department to make would be payment of a fair and reasonable price for the caskets used; as a matter of legal and moral obligation, no other caskets should be paid for.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1914.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand the following as your favor of this date:

> "I enclose herewith a letter received from the legal representative of the Richmond Casket Company, in which they submit a proposition of settlement. As this matter has been turned over to your department, I feel that I cannot make any settlement without your consent. I would request a prompt answer from you as all papers are now in your hands."

The letter which you enclosed is as follows:

"My dear General:—In reclaim Richmond Casket Co. vs. State of Ohio:

"Replying to your favor of January 22d, in which you enclose opinion rendered by Attorney General Hogan, I have conferred with my clients, and they of course are entitled to their opinion. Personally, I do not care to express mine.

"In order to bring this vexatious matter to a settlement, I submit the following adjustment which is strictly, as my clients inform me, according to the proposition as made by the state military board heretofore, viz.: that the state pay to the Richmond Casket Company $850.00 for the caskets used, and deliver F. O. B. cars Dayton, Ohio, the eighty-five unused cases, the Richmond Casket Company to pay the delivery to Richmond, Indiana.

"This, the President of the Richmond Casket Company writes, is the proposition to the best of his recollection, as made heretofore.

"This proposition, however, carries the proviso that in case the state fails to deliver the eighty-five cases as agreed in the original proposition, such cases not delivered are to be paid for on the pro rata basis of $850.00 for the cases that have been used.

" In considering this offer from clients, it seems to us eminently fair, and I trust that it will strike you the same way and that we may finally get this matter to a settlement."

Under date of January 21st, I rendered you an opinion upon the situation contemplated by the above correspondence, which opinion I concluded as follows:

"I, therefore, conclude that it would be clearly an unwarranted assumption of authority for the military authorities to attempt to pay for the balance of these caskets, and furthermore recommend that payment by the state, for the caskets actually use, is a thoroughly fair and reasonable settlement for you to make."

From my understanding of the facts, the state at the present time has no control whatever over the balance of the shipment of caskets referred to; I am informed that they are at the present time in the hands of Mr. Riessinger of Dayton.

I can, therefore, only advise you, as I did in my former opinion, that the proper settlement for you to make would be payment of a fair and reasonable price for the caskets used, as a matter of legal and moral obligation. I am not able to see how you are to be charged with any responsibility whatever for what remains of these caskets. My reasons for this conclusion are set forth in my opinion above referred to. In that opinion I overlooked the return of the papers herein referred to. You will find the same enclosed herewith.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY PRIVATE ROADS—MAINTENANCE OF A ROAD LEADING TO A SCHOOL HOUSE—RIGHT OF BOARD OF EDUCATION TO CONSTRUCT BRIDGE ON SUCH ROAD—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

Where a township district school house is located upon a private road, other lawful means for securing a necessary and convenient approach to the school house being absent, it is proper for the board of education to provide for the construction of a bridge on this road, under the provisions of section 7620, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1914.

HON. BEN. A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Answering the second question embodied in your letter of January 30th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, (the first question having been withdrawn) I beg to state that in my opinion the county commissioners may not, under section 2421, General Code, construct a bridge on a private road. I understand that your question is limited to the query as to whether or not this may be done, or whether or not the commissioners may assist in the construction of such a bridge. You mention also the fact that a township district school house is located upon this private road, but I cannot find that this fact is material, to the main question.

Section 2421, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use, except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

It seems to me that the conclusion which I have already stated necessarily follows from the language of this section.

In this connection I may cite section 7557, General Code, which is of similar import and is as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall cause to be constructed and kept in repair, as provided by law, all necessary bridges in villages and cities not having the right to demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund levied upon property within such corporations, on all state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, transferred and abandoned turnpikes and plankroads which are of general and public utility, running into or through such village or city."

I find the following sections of the General Code which seem to be suggestive in this connection:

> "Section 3296. When the trustees of a township have determined to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing or repairing a viaduct over any street, stream, railway tracks or other place where an overhead roadway or footway is deemed necessary, as provided by law, or when such trustees have so determined to purchase or condemn, or when the township has purchased or condemned land for the purpose of constructing or repairing a viaduct, the township trustees may construct or repair such viaduct and purchase or condemn the necessary land therefor, and the money arising from the sale of the bonds so issued shall be expended, as provided in the next section.

"Section 3297. All funds arising from the sale of bonds for the construction or repair of viaducts or for the purchase or condemnation of land for such purpose, shall be paid into the treasury of the township, and paid out and expended upon the vouchers of the board, officer or officers in the township thereof having charge of the repair of public roads or streets. Contracts for such improvements shall be made in the same manner as other contracts are required by law to be made. Vouchers to pay such contracts or for any portion of the cost of the improvements shall be drawn by such board, officer or officers upon the clerk of the township, who shall keep an accurate account of moneys so expended, and the funds created by the sale of bonds for viaduct purposes shall be known as the 'viaduct fund.'

"Section 3298. When the voters of a township determine to issue bonds for the construction or repair of viaducts, or for the purchase or condemnation of the land necessary therefor, as authorized by law, the authority to make the improvements is hereby conferred and the money arising from the sale of the bonds shall be expended in the same manner as provided in the preceding section."

These sections, however, do not seem to meet the difficulty which exists, and evidently were designed to provide against an entirely different sort of emergency. It is to be noted, however, that they do seemingly authorize township trustees to construct a viaduct, regardless of whether the viaduct is on a public road or not.

In this connection see also section 7163, which is as follows:

"The township trustees may construct on either side of a public road in the township a public footwalk or sidewalk, and also public foot bridges over streams of water crossing such road, when it appears, by petition of twelve freeholders of the township, presented to the trustees, that such walk or bridge is necessary. The trustees, if the request is deemed reasonable, may order the road superintendent of the district in which the improvement is desired, to construct such walk or bridge of such material and at such expense as they prescribe, which shall not in any manner obstruct the public highway, or a private entrance; or they may construct by contract with the lowest responsible bidder. Such improvements shall be paid for out of the township road funds."

It is to be observed that this section limits the general authority of the township trustees to the construction of foot bridges crossing a public road.

So far as the county commissioners and township trustees are concerned, with the possible exception of the sections pertaining to the construction of a viaduct, it seems that the rule is that bridges on state, county and improved roads are to be constructed by the county commissioners, and foot bridges on unimproved roads by the township trustees.

It seems to me that adequate provision for the situation which you mention may be made under section 7620, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as play grounds for children, or rent suitable school rooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It also shall provide fuel for schools, build and keep in good repair fences inclosing such school houses, when deemed desirable plant shade and ornamental trees on the school grounds, and make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

The power herein conferred upon a board of education is a very broad one and specifically includes that to "furnish * * * rights of way" to school houses and to "make all necessary provisions for the schools under its control." This authority is further supplemented by that to "make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

A former attorney general, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, in an opinion to the prosecuting attorney of Washington county, rendered April 18, 1907, annual report for that year, page 249, held that this authority was broad enough to enable the board of education to construct foot bridges over creeks and other streams for the convenience of public schools.

I would not be of the opinion that this authority is limited to the construction of foot bridges; if the authority to bridge a stream exists at all, I should think that it would extend to the erection of a structure of sufficient width and strength to permit the hauling of coal and other similar supplies to the school houses.

The board of education is responsible for the location of the school house on a private road, the policy of which might be subject to criticism; therefore, it seems to me that if the board of education has authority, under the section last cited, to construct a bridge it would be most appropriate for it to do so.

I am of the opinion that my predecessor was correct in his holding, and that, other lawful means for securing the necessary convenient approach to the school house in question being absent, it is proper for the board of education to provide the necessary bridge, under section 7620, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT—POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS—APPLICATION OF THIS LAW NOT REGULATED BY THE NUMBER OF EMPLOYES IN POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS.

Political subdivisions employing less than five persons are subject to the provisions of the employers' liability act. This act is applicable to every person in the service of a political subdivision of the state enumerated in the sections of this act, whether they employ more or less than five persons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 12, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 11, 1914, you ask whether political subdivisions employing less than five persons are subject to the provisions of the employers' liability act, 103 Ohio Laws 72.

Section 13 of the act in question provides that the employers subject to the provisions of this act shall be the state and each county, city township, incorporated village and school district therein and also every person, firm and private corporation, including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written.

Section 14, defining the words "employe," "workman" and "operative," as used in the act, construes these terms to mean: every person in the service of the state, or any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein, including regular members of lawfully constituted police and fire departments of cities and villages, under any appointment or contract of hire, express, implied, oral or written, except any official of the state or of any county, city township, incorporated village or school district therein. Nothing in the act, however, shall apply to policemen or firemen in cities where pension funds are established and maintained by municipal authority for the benefit of such policemen or firemen.

Subdivision 2 of the section last referred to has reference to every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business.

From the foregoing it seems to me clear that the act in question is applicable to every person in the service of any of the political subdivisions of the state enumerated in the foregoing sections, whether such political subdivisions employ more than five persons or less than five persons. The very fact that the act is made applicable to private employers employing five or more workmen would indicate that if the general assembly had desired to exclude those political subdivisions employing less than five workmen it would have so provided by distinct and clear language, as it did with reference to the private employers.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS — CONTRACTS — COUNTY BUILDINGS — BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES.

1. Section 2333, General Code, governs and must be followed by the commissioners proceeding to construct county buildings at a cost exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars.

2. Under the provisions of section 1353, General Code, the state board of charities shall approve the plans and specifications for all new infirmaries, whether the infirmary is constructed under the general laws or under the building commission section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1914.

HON. CHARLES F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 21, 1913, in which you state that the electors of Lorain county have affirmatively voted under section 5638, General Code, upon the proposition of expending 35,000 for a county infirmary building; and submit for my opinion the following questions:

> "1. Whether section 2333 governs and must be followed by the commissioners in this case.
> "2. If section 2333 does not apply, may they proceed under section 2343 and the following sections and construct this building themselves?
>
> "3. Who, if any one, is associated with them in the letting of contracts, approval of plans, etc.?
> "4. To whom, if any one, shall plans, drawings, etc., be submitted in view of the fact that the board of infirmary directors has been abolished? I refer now to the requirements of section 2349."

I hand you herewith copy of an opinion addressed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, relative to the first question submitted by you. My holding therein is that section 2333 of the General Code governs and must be followed by the commissioners when proceeding to construct a county building at a cost exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars.

I have carefully examined the briefs in MacKenzie vs. State, 76 O. S. 369, cited by you, and find in the opinion certain statements by Davis, J., to the general effect that the building commission provisions of the county building code constitute an optional method of procedure, and virtually that the commissioners have a choice as to whether they will proceed under these sections or under the general provisions of the county building code.

The case, however, was not decided upon this ground exactly; the question presented being just the reverse of that raised by you; that is to say, the question in the MacKenzie case was as to whether a building commission is bound by the provisions of the general building code, or whether, when a building commission has been appointed, it is governed solely by the provisions especially applicable to it and its proceedings. The court chose the latter alternative and held that the general provisions did not apply to or govern the building commission. In order to reach this conclusion it is not necessary to hold that county commissioners might choose which of the two methods of procedure they would follow in a given case; nor is there any holding to that effect in the syllabus of the case, which is as follows:

"The act entitled 'An act to provide for a commission for building court houses,' passed April 18, 1906 (98 O. L. 53), is constitutional, and Revised Statutes, sections 794 to 799, inclusive, do not apply to proceedings thereunder."

In view of the fact just mentioned I do not feel like receding entirely from the position taken in the former opinion, copy of which is enclosed herewith. I would be of the opinion that it is at least the safer method to follow, to regard the building commission act as exclusive when the cost of the building exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars; leaving the general statutes to apply when the cost of the building is between $15,000 and $25,000.

In this connection it will be observed that the MacKenzie case does not present an instance where the money was in the treasury and no issue of bonds was necessary; so that that fact, which is present in the case which you state, would not be a material one on account of anything in the MacKenzie case.

In the same connection I beg leave to point out that the amendments to sections 5638, et seq., General Code, found in 103 Ohio Laws, 447, and occurring subsequently to the decision in MacKenzie vs. State, may have some bearing upon the question as pointed out in the former opinion.

I repeat therefore that, while I acknowledge that the statements of Judge Davis in the opinion in the MacKenzie case are inconsistent with my former opinion, yet, because these statements were, strictly speaking, obiter dicta, I still am inclined to the view that it would be at least the safer policy to follow the building commission act in constructing a county building the cost of which exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars.

This conclusion, in one view of the case, would make it unnecessary to consider your other three questions; but if your commissioners should decide to assume any risk that might ensue from choosing to disregard the building commission section, then, they would desire answers to the other three questions. Of course, if it is decided that it is not necessary to follow sections 2333, et seq., General Code, in the construction of a county building the cost of which exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars, it would necessarily follow that they must proceed under any other statutes that might be deemed applicable to the construction of a county infirmary at such a cost. Such sections are, of course, sections 2343, et seq., or, to be more accurate, sections 2343, 2349, 2352, 2355, 2356 and all the remaining provisions of the related statutes down to and including section 2366, General Code. By examining these sections you will find an answer to your third question, in the event it is decided to assume the risk of ignoring the building commission section.

It appears that under section 2343 the commissioners are required to employ an architect or civil engineer for the preparation of plans, and that under section 2356 they are required to submit the contract when let to the prosecuting attorney for his approval. Aside from these requirements there is none in the related statutes which would compel the county commissioners to associate themselves with any other persons or officers in the letting of contracts or the approval of plans. Of course, the board of infirmary directors having been abolished and all their powers having been conferred by the act found in 102 O. L., 433, upon county commissioners, it would necessarily follow that the reference to infirmary directors, in section 2349, General Code, may be regarded as a mere nullity, and the commissioners may act under that section without associating any other person with them.

However, I call your attention to section 1353, General Code, which requires all plans for all new infirmaries to be submitted to the board of state charities for approval. This section must be complied with whether the infirmary is constructed under general laws (assuming their application) or under the building commission sections.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CORPORATION REDUCING ITS CAPITAL STOCK—THE NUMBER OF SHARES OF CAPITAL STOCK MAY NOT BE REDUCED.

A corporation in reducing its capital stock may not reduce the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 21, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 6th, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "May a corporation, in reducing its capital stock, decrease the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided?"

In connection with this question I have considered the following sections of the General Code:

> "Section 8698. After its original capital stock is fully subscribed for, and an installment of ten per cent. on each share of stock has been paid thereon, a corporation for profit, or a corporation not for profit, having a capital stock, may increase its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is divided, prior to organization, by the unanimous written consent of all original subscribers. After organization the increase may be made by a vote of the holders of a majority of its stock, at a meeting called by a majority of its directors, at least thirty days' notice of the time, place and object of which has been given by publication in some newspaper of general circulation, and by letter addressed to each stockholder whose place of residence is known. Or, the stock may be increased at a meeting of the stockholders at which all were present in person, or by proxy, and waive in writing such notice by publication and letter; and also agree in writing to such increase, naming the amount thereof to which they agree. A certificate of such action shall be filed with the secretary of state.
> "Section 8700. With the written consent of the persons in whose names a majority of the shares of the capital stock thereof stands on its books, the board of directors of such a corporation may reduce the amount of its capital stock and the nominal value of all the shares thereof, and issue certificates therefor. The rights of creditors shall not be affected thereby; and a certificate of such action shall be filed with the secretary of state."

These two sections, which are certainly in pari materia, and at least once have been the subject of amendment in a single legislative act (83 Ohio Laws, 134—the last time section 8700 was amended, save in process of codification), mention three attributes of the "capital stock" of a corporation, which may be changed, namely:

1. The "capital stock," by which is meant wherever used in the General Code, save where the context requires a different meaning, the "total authorized capital stock."
2. The number of shares into which the "capital stock" is divided.
3. The par or "nominal" value of the several shares.

The mathematical relation among these three factors is such that, obviously, any one of them cannot be changed without changing at least one of the others; but a change in one does not necessitate a change in both of the others.

Thus, if a corporation has an authorized capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, divided into one thousand shares of one hundred dollars each, the factor 100,000 cannot be changed without changing either the factor 1,000 or the factor 100; both may be changed in order to balance the equation, but both need not be changed. So that, if 100,000 should become 400,000, 1,000 might become 4,000 without change in 100, or 100 might become 400 without a change in 1,000, or 1,000 might become 2,000 and 100, 200.

In an opinion to you under date of April 14, 1911, I analyzed the two sections above quoted. In that opinion I made the general statement that any particular change in capital stock which might be conceived of, but which might not be found to be authorized by the sections in question, could not be made lawfully. My language was:

> "Whatever may be the policy of these statutes in these respects, and whether or not they are founded upon considerations of public policy, I do not think it can be held that the omission was by accident."

I adhere to this general principle, which it seems to me is founded upon elementary considerations. The statutes now under discussion constitute grants of corporate power; where doubtful they are subject to a rule of strict construction—that rule is stated by the maxim "Expressio unius est exclusio alterius," which is well said to be peculiarly applicable to the interpretation of statutes embodying grants of power. That is to say, a power or a franchise granted in a statute will not be enlarged substantively by implication. If the power be granted, implied power may flow from the grant; but if one power be granted and another similar power be not mentioned, the second is withheld and cannot be enjoyed, regardless of whether its enjoyment would violate any supposed public policy or not.

Now, in the statutes under consideration, the general assembly has been just explicit enought to indicate what, under the operation of this rule, was intended to be granted and what withheld. If section 8698 had granted the power merely to "increase" capital stock, and annexed conditions thereto; and if section 8700 had merely granted the power to reduce capital stock, and annexed conditions, then, I would be of the opinion that such a grant of power would carry with it the necessarily implied power to choose which of the two other factors, necessarily influenced by an increase or reduction in the total authorized capital stock, would be affected in a given instance. That is to say, if there were no reference in these statutes to increasing or reducing the par value of shares or the number of shares, then, I would think that the power to increase the total authorized capital stock would carry with it the power to determine whether there should be in a given instance a corresponding increase of the par value or of the number, or both. So also as to the power to reduce, if it had been stated as broadly as has been imagined.

But these two sections are not phrased in the manner just described. Instead, the one gives power to increase "its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is divided;" and the other gives power to reduce "the amount of its capital stock and the nominal value of all the shares thereof."

It will be seen, therefore, that the legislative mind fastened itself upon what may be termed the subsidiary factor with reference to capital stock and changes therein. By legislating in this form the general assembly has, in my opinion, absolutely negatived any idea of creating, by inference from the power to increase or reduce the total aggregate capital stock, any power, other than specified in the section, to change one of the other two factors referred to.

To hold otherwise would be to render nugatory several words in the related statutes. For example, to hold that the mere power to "reduce the amount of its capital stock" carries with it the power to reduce such other factors as may become subject to reduction by reason of a reduction in the total authorized capital stock would be to hold that the legislature used vain and unnecessary language, when it inserted "and the nominal value of all the shares thereof" in the section.

So, in the earlier opinion, I held that a corporation in increasing its total authorized capital stock may not increase the par value of its shares, but is limited to increasing the number of shares into which its capital may be divided. The question not being before me, I expressly withheld opinion, "as to whether or not a corporation, in reducing its capital stock, may decrease the number of shares into which it is divided," which is the precise question now under discussion.

Although opinion upon the question now submitted was not expressed in the former letter referred to, the reasons therein adduced, and repeated and amplified in this opinion, lead irresistibly to the conclusion that a corporation, in reducing its total authorized capital stock, may not reduce the number of shares into which it is divided.

This is because—to repeat— section 8700 specifically authorizes a reduction in the nominal value of the shares, thus indicating that the legislative mind was directed toward what might be called the subsidiary change necessary whenever a reduction is made in the total authorized capital stock; but fails to express anything relative to a change in the other factor, viz.: the number of shares. Therefore, under the maxim above referred to, the expression of one grant of power is the exclusion of the other.

In the case of section 8700, there is an additional reason, not of itself of much weight, but which, when taken in connection with the context, and particularly in connection with section 8698, may be cited for its cumulative effect. I have already pointed out that a change in the total authorized capital stock necessitates a change in one of the subsidiary factors. On the other hand, however, a change in a subsidiary factor does not of itself necessitate a change in the total authorized capital stock. Thus, if the total authorized capital stock is one hundred thousand dollars, divided into one thousand shares of one hundred dollars each, it would be mathematically possible to change the number of shares from one thousand to one hundred and the par value of the shares from one hundred to one thousand dollars, without changing the total authorized capital.

So that if the power were independently conferred to change one of the subsidiary factors entering into the capital stock of a corporation, that power while it would necessarily involve either a change in the total authorized capital stock or in the other subsidiary factor, would not necessitate a change in the former.

So, when section 8698 provides disjunctively that a corporation for profit may "increase its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is divided," it would seem that the power has been given to increase the number of shares without a corresponding increase in the total authorized capital stock. Such a change would, of course, necessitate a decrease or reduction of the nominal value of the shares.

Section 8700, whether by accident or design, uses the word "and" in place of "or," in the corresponding provision of section 8698. To my mind this difference between the related sections cannot be regarded as accidental, and, in view of it, section 8700 must be held to evince a legislative intent so to couple the reduction of the total authorized capital stock with that of the par value of the shares, as to indicate that the former cannot be done in any event without the latter being accomplished also. In other words, it seems to me that by the mere use of the word "and," as contradistinguished from the corresponding use of the word "or" in section 8698, the general assembly has shown that it intended to safeguard the meaning of section 8700, and to make it clear that no reduction of capital stock could be made without a corresponding reduction in the nominal value of the shares; and, conversely, that no reduction in the total authorized capital stock could be made with a corresponding reduction in the number of shares.

All these propositions seem to me to be self-evident. I have gone into the question so carefully because I understand that the practice for years in your department has been to the contrary. Contemporaneous executive interpretation of doubtful statutes is entitled to great weight and due weight has been given to this fact, but such practical construction is by no means controlling; (see Lee vs. Sturges, 46 O. S. 153), and where the statutes seem as plain on their face as these seem to me to be, I do not think that even so long continued a practice as that which apparently has obtained under this statute can be brought to the support of a manifestly erroneous interpretation of it.

Indeed, it would seem that the question had simply never been raised; and if an erroneous course of conduct for a large number of years, under a given statute, were followed, without the question as to the proper course of conduct being directly made, it is apparent that many such errors would never be corrected; it is in fact believed that the decisions of the courts afford numerous instances of the overthrowing of long established executive practices.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that a corporation, in reducing its capital stock, may not decrease the number of shares into which the same is divided.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT—MEMBER OF COUNCIL—RIGHT OF MEMBERS OF COUNCIL TO BE INTERESTED IN CONTRACTS WITH THE CITY—PECUNIARY AND FINANCIAL NATURE OF SUCH CONTRACTS.

It is only an interest of a pecuniary or financial nature which makes it illegal under the provisions of sections 3808 and 12910, General Code, for a member of council to be interested in a contract with a firm in which he has an interest.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have at hand your letter of January 17th, wherein you ask:

"Must the interest be of a pecuniary or financiel nature in order to make it illegal under sections 3808 and 12910, General Code, for an official to be interested in a contract with a firm with which he has an interest?"

Sections 3808 and 12910, General Code, are as follows:

"Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money or other things he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom.

"Section 12910. Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

The term "pecuniary" is defined in Funk & Wagnall's dictionary as follows:

"Consisting of money; relating to money; monetary; * * *."

The term "financial" in the same work is defined:

"Of or pertaining to finance; monetary."

The terms are also stated to be synonymous in this work.

Section 3808 expressly forbids an interest in the "expenditure of money" and section 12910 prohibits an interest in a contract for the purchase of property, etc. It seems quite definite from the use of this language in both statutes that the interest pointed to is essentially a pecuniary interest. The prohibition of an interest in the expenditure of money and of an interest in a contract for the purchase of property, etc., clearly points to a monetary or financial relation; and I am of the opinion that under these statutes the interest prohibited is intended to be a financial or pecuniary one.

I am able to find but one decision which touches upon the question. In the case of Doll vs. State, 45 O. S. 445, wherein the construction of what is now section 12910, General Code, was the matter primarily under consideration, the second paragraph of the syllabus is as follows:

> "To become interested in the contract is not necessary that he make profits on the same. But it is sufficient, if while acting as such officer, he sell the property to the city for its use, or is personally interested in the proceeds of the contract of sale and receives the same or part thereof, or has some pecuniary interest or share in the contract."

On page 451 the court said:

> "The following portion of the charge of the court was excepted to: 'What is it to become directly or indirectly interested in a contract in the sense contemplated by the statute upon which this indictment is found? To be interested in a contract is to have and to hold some pecuniary interest in it to have and to hold a share, portion or part of it or in it. * * *'"

On page 452 the court said:

> "We have carefully examined the whole record and fail to find error justifying the reversal of the judgment."

While the court in this case did not have the question before it as it is presented in the question before us, I am of the opinion that the language is sufficient to sustain the conclusion that it is only a pecuniary or financial interest which is contemplated by both of these statutes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES—RIGHT TO PRESCRIBE AND REQUIRE THE INSTALLATION OF A SYSTEM OF ACCOUNTING TO BE USED IN CITIES HAVING A CHARTER FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

In municipal corporations still governed by the general provisions of the municipal laws, the provisions of the sections relating to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices still apply in their entirety. It is not true in every respect in cities where charters have been adopted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 19th, 1913, requesting my opinion on the following question arising under section 13 of article XVIII of the constitution of Ohio:

"Has the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices the authority to prescribe and require the installation of the system of accounting to be used in city offices in the event that no charter has been adopted by a city under the home rule amendment to the constitution?"

Section 13 of article XVIII of the constitution of Ohio provides as follows:

"Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities."

In my opinion this section of itself does not confer authority upon the general assembly to prescribe systems of accounting for any municipal corporation and to require their installation. But as to cities not exercising the home rule privilege of adopting a charter, it is clear that the general assembly possesses general legislative power. So much was held in state vs. Lynch, 88 O. S. ——.

In that case it was decided, paraphrasing the language of the syllabus, that so long as a municipal corporation failed to avail itself of the privilege of adopting a charter of its own, or adopting additional laws passed by the general assembly for such a purpose under the authority of section 1, of article XVIII, it continued to be subject to the control of such general laws of the state as might be applicable to it.

There are, of course, general laws applicable to such municipalities as to which the power of the general assembly extends, which authorizes the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices to prescribe and require the installation of systems of accounting. (Sections 274 and 277, General Code).

The only remaining question is as to whether or not section 13 of article XVIII is a limitation on the legislative power generally, or is a special grant of power vested in the legislature for a particular purpose.

In my opinion the provisions of section 13 of article XVIII do not constitute limitations upon the general legislative power. The principle here is analogous to that underlying the interpretation of article XII, section 2 of the constitution which provides that "laws shall be passed, taxing by uniform rule all * * * property at the true value thereof in money."

It was early contended that this section, being a special grant of power, was to be interpreted strictly, so as to constitute a limitation on the general legislative power conferred by the first section of the same article. In the practical sense this contention resolves itself into the proposition that the only subject of taxation which could be reached by the legislative power of the state was property of the kinds mentioned in article XII, section 2.

In a long line of decisions the supreme court of this state has repeatedly refused to lend its sanction to this contention, holding that the purpose of the section is merely to insure that when property is taxed it shall be taxed by uniform rule and at its true value in money so that section is not to be regarded as withholding from the general assembly, by inference or otherwise, the power to tax subjects other than property. A similar rule is to be applied, in my judgment, to section 13 of article XVIII. The reason for this section is found in the earlier provisions of the same article which have the effect of withdrawing cities and villages under certain circumstances from the general legislative power of the general assembly. That is to say, when a municipality adopts a charter, the charter becomes the law of the municipality within the proper field of its operation, and, pro tanto, the legislative power with respect to that field is withdrawn from the general assembly notwithstanding the provisions of article II, section 1, and imposed in the municipality and in its properly created legislative agencies.

The effect of the 13th section of article XVIII, then, is to constitute an exception to this general rule, and to retain in the hands of the general assembly the power to pass certain laws affecting the government of municipalities, whether they have adopted charters or not. This being the purpose of section 13 of article XVIII, it is, in my opinion, not to be regarded as a qualification of the general legislative power possessed by the general assembly of the state over and with respect to the government and affairs of municipal corporations whose inhabitants do not choose the effective means of depriving the general assembly of such general legislative power by adopting a charter.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that as to a municipal corporation still governed by the general provisions of the municipal laws, the provisions of the sections relating to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices still apply in their entirety notwithstanding the limited grant of power contained in section 13 of article XVIII of the constitution.

I am also of the opinion that as to any municipalities of the state which may have adopted the additional laws framed by the general assembly for their government, these same statutes continue to apply. The status of such a municipality is not exactly like that of a municipality which has taken no steps whatever to alter its former condition, but it is to be noted that the method of securing a form of government different from that prescribed by the General Code, of which I am now speaking, is referred to in section 2 of article XVIII as the affirmation of "additional laws * * * passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same." It would seem, therefore, that such additional laws would supersede the general laws operative throughout the state only to the extent that they might be inconsistent with the latter.

I find nothing in the "additional laws" passed by the last session of the general assembly, 103 O. L. 767, in any way inconsistent with the provisions of the laws relating to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that as to cities of this class, the powers of the bureau continue unimpaired. Of course as to those municipalities which have adopted charters, only such laws relating to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices as provide for the "examination of the vouchers, books and accounts" thereof are applicable, and the bureau is without authority to prescribe the methods of bookkeeping and require their installation. However, the general assembly of the state is not without some authority of this kind under section 13 of article XVIII, even with respect to municipalities which have adopted charters, in that the power is also reserved to "require reports * * * in such form as may be provided by law."

Inasmuch as you do not inquire as to the extent of the bureau's power under existing laws, and constitutional provisions, with respect to charter governed cities, I express no opinion upon this question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—CONTRACT—RIGHT TO HIRE AN ENGINEER—PAY ROLL—REFERENDUM ON PAY ROLL.

Where a pay ordinance includes among other bills one for an engineer hired by council to look after certain contracts and a referendum is filed on the pay ordinance, city council has the right to settle the bill with the engineer without waiting for the result of the attempted referendum; it is their duty to pay this engineer on the contract as soon as the amount due him is ascertained and the funds are available.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1914.

HON. NEWTON O. MOTT, Village Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communications of January 15 and 20, 1914, in which you state and inquire:

> "On the 8th day of December, 1913, the council of the village of Geneva passed a pay ordinance, which contained the regular monthly pay roll, and in addition the following bills which a number of people of the village thought were unfair. One of these bills was that of Mr. Cummings an engineer hired by the council to look after certain contracts.
> "On the 15th day of December, 1913, a referendum on the above pay ordinance was filed with the clerk of the village, but all the bills had been paid except the disputed claims, one of which was Mr. Cummings.
> "The new council have arranged a satisfactory settlement with Mr. Cummings, and desire to pay him. How can this be done, if at all, before the referendum is voted on."

You also state that the claim of Cummings & Downer is for services as engineers of various improvements, making plans, specifications, supervision and inspection, for which they were to be paid a commission or percentage out of the improvement funds; that the pay ordinance mentioned included various bills "for services performed" under contracts made under an employing ordinance previously passed by he council.

In making an improvement, the council must first pass a resolution declaring the necessity thereof. (Section 3814, G. C.)

The following section, 3815, G. C., provides what such resolution shall contain and section 3816 reads:

> "At the time of the passage of such resolution, council shall have on file in the office of the director of public service in cities, and the clerk in villages, plans, specifications, estimates and profiles of the proposed improvement, showing the proposed grade of the street and improvement after completion, with reference to the property abutting thereon, which plans, specifications, estimates and profiles shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested."

It follows from this that where it is necessary to have plans and specifications, the council have full authority to prepare them, and this authorizes the enactment of the employment ordinance you mention. An employment ordinance having been passed, and a contract having been entered into with C. & D. in compliance with its provisions, council has no more right to withhold payment in proper amount for services actually earned under such contract, than an individual would have; and I can see no reason why these men should not be paid what is due them under their contract.

You state:

> "It requires an ordinance to employ them and a separate ordinance to pay them, therefore either ordinance would be subject to referendum, and does not come within sec. 4227-3, which reads, etc. * * *"

I do not concur with that part of your statement that it requires a separate ordinance to pay them, but am of the opinion that while an ordinance was necessary to make the employment, and that it does not come within one of several, necessary to complete an improvement, and was subject to a referendum, yet I do not think an ordinance to pay was necessary, and think that payment might be made by a motion to allow the claim under the contract; but whether this is correct is of no moment, because the ordinance to employ having been permitted to become effective without a referendum, there is no authority to submit the pay ordinance, if one was needed, to a vote, as I cannot conceive that it is the intention of the initiative and referendum to submit the question of making payments under a valid contract, to a vote. To do this would authorize a referendum upon an employment ordinance, and after a vote of adoption and the making of a contract under it, another referendum and vote upon the question of compliance with the contract. I do not think the pay ordinance subject to referendum, although it comes within the liberal meaning of the language used in the act; and inasmuch as I do not think an ordinance necessary, there is no call for consideration of the emergency suggestion concerning the application of which great doubt would exist in the event of the opposite view being adopted.

Answering your question specifically, I desire to state that it is not only the right of council to settle with Cummings & Downer without awaiting for the result upon the attempted referendum, but it is their duty to pay them what they have earned under their contract as soon as the proper amount may be ascertained, provided funds are available.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY ENGINEER—CONSULTING ENGINEER—CITY ENGINEER MAY BE COMPENSATED FOR ASSISTING A CONSULTING ENGINEER.

Where a city engineer performs engineering work for a city and the city contemplates engaging some consulting engineer to make surveys, plats, drawings, recommendations, and supervise the construction of a water works plant, the engineer doing the work for the city may be employed by the consulting engineer and paid for doing part of the work, collecting data, etc., while acting as engineer for the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1914.

HON. JOHN SHERMAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—We have your letter of January 28th, which reads as follows:

> "Kindly give me an opinion on the following:
> "Our city engineer, Karl M. Cosgrove, receives from the city a salary of $1,000.00 per year for doing the general engineering work of the city, street paving, sewer, sidewalks and general engineering. In fact, all the general city work is referred to him by council and the director of service. The city contemplates engaging some consulting engineer to make surveys, plats, drawings, recommendations and supervise the construction of a water works purification plant.

"Can Mr. Cosgrove be employed by the consulting engineer and be paid by him for doing a part of the work in collecting data, etc., while acting as city engineer of this city, this employment in no way interfering with Mr. Cosgrove's present duties to the city."

If the city engineer can attend to the duties of his office in a manner satisfactory to the director of service and still have some time to devote to a private employment, such as collecting data for the consulting engineer referred to, I can see no reason why he should not be allowed to do so.

I am therefore of the opinion that your city engineer may be employed by such consulting engineer, if such an arrangement is satisfactory to your director of public service.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GREENLUND LIQUOR LICENSING ACT—STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD—VACANCY ON THE COUNTY BOARD—SUCH VACANCY TO BE FILLED BY APPOINTMENT—CIVIL SERVICE.

Under the provisions of section 7 of the Greenlund Liquor Licensing Act, the state liquor licensing board may proceed to fill a vacancy occurring in the Richland county liquor licensing board, through the death of one of its members, which death has occurred since January 1, 1914. The vacancy is to be filled without regard to the civil service law of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have yours of February 28th, wherein you state:

"Will you kindly advise the state liquor licensing board whether it is its duty to proceed to fill the vacancy occurring in the Richland county liquor licensing board through the death of one of its members, which death has occurred since January 1, 1914, in accordance with the provisions of section 7 of the Greenlund act and without regard to the civil service law of the state of Ohio?"

Section 7 of the Greenlund liquor licensing act provides that in each county there shall be a board consisting of two commissioners representing the state "not more than one of whom shall belong to the same political party," and authorizes the filling of any vacancy occurring through resignation, removal, death or disability.

Section 16 of said act makes it the duty of the county liquor licensing boards, and authorizes them to grant, issue, renew and transfer liquor licenses as provided by law; also to suspend or revoke subject to the conditions and in the manner provided by law, all licenses granted or renewed in their county, and to perform such other duties as the law requires.

These county license commissioners are endowed with certain powers and are authorized to perform duties requiring at times an arbitrary judgment, under the law no other authority can pass upon the constitutional qualifications necessary to be possessed by an applicant before he is entitled to a liquor license.

This liquor license act was filed in the office of the secretary of state May 8, 1913, and no referendum petition having been filed it went into force by the provisions of section 62 of the act on and after August 1, 1913, except the penal sections which went in force on and after the fourth Monday in November, 1913.

The civil service law was passed May 5, 1913, filed in the office of the secretary of state on May 10, 1913, and went into effect ninety days thereafter.

Section 1 of the civil service law provides that the term "civil service" includes all officers and positions of trust or employment in the service of the state, etc.

Section 2 of said act provides that on and after January 1, 1914, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of the state shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable by examination, which as far as practicable shall be competitive.

Section 8 of the civil service law provides for and defines the unclassified service and the classified service. Sub-section 8 of this section reads as follows:

> "The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

Section 10 of said act provides for the examination of all applicants for positions and places in the competitive classified service, and amongst other things that no questions in any examination shall relate to political or religious opinions or affiliations.

Section 13 provides that the head of the department, etc., in which a position in a competitive classified service shall be filled shall notify the commission of the fact and the commission shall certify the names of three candidates standing highest on the eligible list to which the position belongs.

Without going into a detailed discussion of the civil service act and its various provisions, but keeping in mind the particular duties that devolve upon the members of a liquor licensing board, the fact that not more than one of the members of the board can be of the same political party, and further since the civil service law expressly provides that no questions may be asked relating to one's political affiliations, I am of the opinion that in making the appointment to fill the vacancy occurring in the Richland county liquor licensing board, through the death of one of its members, such appointment should be made in accordance with the provisions of the licensing act, and that in this appointment the provisions of the civil service law have no application.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COURT STENOGRAPHER—APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL OR ASSISTANT STENOGRAPHERS TO THE OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHER —PAYMENT OF SALARIES TO SUCH ADDITIONAL STENOGRAPHERS.

Section 1547, General Code, as it appears is in full force and effect, consequently the appointment of additional or assistant stenographers to the official stenographer may be made and such assistant stenographers may be paid out of the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of January 28th, wherein you inquire:

> "In view of the comment made by the compilers of Page & Adams' Annotated General Code of Ohio, under section 1547, have we any law authorizing the appointment of additional or assistant stenographers to the official stenographer, and if such are appointed may they legally be paid out of the county treasury?"

Section 1547 as it appears in Page & Adams' edition of the General Code of Ohio, was enacted in 1911 by house bill No. 459, (102 O. L., 353). The full text of the bill is:

> "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:
>
> "Section 1. That section 1547 of the General Code as amended April 7, 1910, be amended to read as follows:
> "Section 2. In any county where the court fails to comply with the provisions of the preceding section, in the trial of criminal cases upon demand by an indigent defendant, the court shall appoint a stenographer for such case, who shall be paid for his services out of the general fund of the county such sum as the court shall approve.
> "Section 1547. When the services of one or more additional stenographers are necessary in a county, the court may appoint assistant stenographers, in no case to exceed ten, who shall take a like oath, serve for such time as their services may be required by the court, not exceeding three years under one appointment, and may be paid at the same rate and in the same manner as the official stenographer. Such stenographers when so appointed shall be ex-officio stenographers of the insolvency and superior courts, if any, in such county, and of the circuit courts in such county.
> "Section 3. That said amended section 1547 of the General Code, passed April 7, 1910, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

Governor Harmon approved sections 1 and 3 and vetoed section 2 of the bill, and in a message to the general assembly he stated his reasons for such veto as follows:

"June 13, 1911.

"To the General Assembly:

"The purpose of house bill No. 459, 'to amend section 1547 of the General Code, relating to the appointment of additional stenographers, as amended April 7, 1910, and filed in the office of the secretary of state April 22, 1910, (O. L. Vol. 101, p. 110),' was to make stenographers appointed by the common please courts official stenographers of the circuit courts in the respective counties also, there being now no provision for such stenographers in the circuit courts, and section one (1) of the bill amends section 1547 of the General Code accordingly.

"But another purpose was to permit the appointment of stenographers on demand of indigent defendants in criminal cases when no official stenographers have been appointed.

"By a mistake in both engrossment and enrollment the latter provision is inserted, as section two (2) of the bill, between the first two lines of section one (1) which declare the amendment of section 1547 and the remainder of section one (1) which gives the section as amended.

"The only course open to correct this error is to strike the misplaced section two (2) from the bill entirely by filing it with the secretary of state unapproved, with the above objections, which I herewith do.

"Judson Harmon, Governor."

In my judgment the governor's veto operated to strike out of the bill only that portion embraced within section two proper, that is the lines between section 1 and section 1547 as amended.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that section 1547, as it appears in the General Code is in full force and effect.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAYOR OF THE VILLAGE—LIQUOR LICENSE LAW—FINES—JUDGMENT—FEES.

When the mayor of a village has collected fines to the amount of two thousand dollars on account of violations of the liquor laws, he is not entitled to four per cent. upon these collections, as a collection of a fine could not become a collection of a judgment as is contemplated by section 4534, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1914.

HON. J. OSCAR NAYLOR, Solicitor for the Village of Smithfield, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 30, 1914, as follows:

"I enclose you herewith a transcript published by The Ruggles-Gale Co. of your city and under the head of mayor's fees, to wit, the last item 'collections made upon judgment, 4 per cent.' I respectfully ask for an opinion on this item.

"I have been acting as solicitor for the village of Smithfield when they are in need of legal services in the prosecution of violation of liquor local option laws and within the last year the mayor of said village has collected fines in the amount of $2,000.00 or more from the violators of this law and he has submitted the proposition as to whether or not he is entitled to his 4 per cent. upon these collections and in support of the same refers me to sections 4534, 4548. 1746 and 3347 of the General Code, also volume 102, page 476 of the laws of Ohio."

Section 4534 of the General Code reads, in part:

"The fees of the mayor in all cases, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services."

Section 1746 of the General Code reads, in part:

"Except as otherwise provided, justices of the peace, for the services named, when rendered, may receive the following fees; * * * collections made upon judgments if not paid within ten days after rendition thereof, or within ten days after the stay of execution, if such stay is taken, the same fees as are allowed constables for money paid on execution."

Section 3347 of the General Code, reads in part:

"For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: * * * on all money made on execution, four per cent."

While it is true that the collection of a fine by the mayor might be termed a collection upon a "judgment," yet I believe a reading of the statute makes it clear that it is not a collection upon such a judgment as is contemplated by section 4534.

Bouvier's Law Dictionary says that "the term 'judgment' is more usually applied to civil, and 'sentence' to criminal proceedings." and I think it will be conceded that men using these words generally so apply them.

Section 13229 of the General Code places a penalty on the sale of intoxicating liquor thirty days after an election prohibiting the same in a township, and section 13231 provides that:

"All fines collected under section 13229 shall be paid into the treasury of the county and be accredited to the poor fund thereof."

There is no reference here to any portion of the fines being allowed the mayor as compensation for collecting them. On the contrary, I think this section shows quite the opposite intention.

Section 4270 of the General Code reads:

"All fines and forfeitures collected by the mayor, or which in any manner comes into his hands, and all moneys received by him in his official capacity, other than his fees of office, shall be by him paid into the treasury of the corporation weekly. At the first regular meeting of the council in each and every month, he shall submit a full statement of all such moneys received, from whom and for what purpose received, and when paid over. All fines, penalties, and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasurer monthly."

Neither is there any provision in this section reserving to the mayor a percentage of the fines collected.

Section 13429 of the General Code reads:

> "Fines collected by a justice of the peace shall be paid into the general fund of the county where the offense was committed within thirty days after collection unless otherwise provided by law."

Section 13430 of the General Code reads:

> "If a justice fails to so pay such fines, the treasurer of the county shall bring suit, in the name of the state, for the recovery thereof and interest thereon, and the court in rendering judgment therefor shall add a penalty of ten per cent. on the amount found to be due such general fund."

Inasmuch as section 4534 of the General Code makes the mayor's fees the same as the fees of the justice of the peace for similar services, section 13429 and 13430, above quoted, also tend to strengthen the theory that the mayor is not entitled to any percentage on the collection of fines.

In the light of the sections of the General Code herein quoted, and the meaning of the word "judgment" as generally used, I am of the opinion that the mayor is not entitled to any percentage on fines collected upon sentences imposed for violations of the local option laws.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISHONORED CHECK—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED BY STATE AUDITOR, STATE TREASURER, IN HANDLING DISHONORED CHECKS—STATE DEPARTMENT.

Where a check is returned to the treasurer of state, dishonored, the treasurer of state should deduct the amount of the check from his cash account, and should also notify the auditor of state, and send him a statement fully describing the dishonored check and exhibit the same to him in order that his records may be made to correspond with the treasurer's books, and likewise the same should be done with the officer, department, board or commission which received the dishonored check and presented it to the auditor and treasurer of state, in order that the books of all parties may be made to correspond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1914.

HON. J. P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In regard to your inquiry (verbal) as to your right to deduct the amount of an unpaid check from your cash account, permit me to say:

The presumption, when a check is received either by an officer or individual, is that it is a conditional payment of the debt or claim in the absence of an express agreement of its being taken in full satisfaction of the same. Such is the rule laid down in Cyc. and the burden falls upon the party making the claim to show that it was given and received as absolute and not merely as conditional payment. Willer vs. Washington Co., 7 C. C., (N. S.) 303.

The giving of a check upon a bank carries with it, in all cases, the implied representation that there are funds in the bank upon which it is drawn sufficient to meet it. Consequently, where a check is offered in payment, it is received as such, provided the check is paid, and this condition attaches to all entries, receipts and action concerning the same. If the check is paid, the payment is absolute; if not, the matter stands as if nothing had been done and the receipt had been given and entries made by mistake. If the sum of five thousand dollars should be paid in cash and entered either as three or six in the cash account, no one would question for a moment the right of the recipient to correct his books by increasing the entry in the one event, and his duty to decrease it in the other, and such is the result when a check is returned dishonored— it is the right of the recipient, whether he be an officer or individual, to so change his books as to correct the error created, by crediting to his cash account that which afterwards proved to be of no value. The paper, in this case the dishonored check, should be retained by the state treasurer as evidence of the fact of its non-payment, and of his right to reduce his cash balance to the extent of the amount the same was increased by its entry for that which it was given, but which proved to be a mistake on the part of the treasurer, and a fraud, or worse, on the part of the maker of the check.

McIlvaine, J. has said:

> "It is not controverted that where a debtor makes and delivers a check to his creditor in payment of an account, upon a bank where the debtor has neither funds nor credit, it is not a payment of the account, although the creditor receives it as such. In such case there is no satisfaction of the indebtedness; such check is valueless. By its delivery it is impliedly represented that there are funds in the hands of the drawee subject to its payment. Relying on this representation, it is accepted as payment. Its falsity relieves the creditor from his agreement, no matter whether the act of the debtor is fradulent or bona fide. The agreement is without consideration and void. The account remains an existing and continuing cause of action."

Flieg vs. Sleet, 43 O. S., 53, citing Weddington vs. Fabric Co., 100 Mass., 422.

To the same effect see Banking Co. vs. Banking Co., 20 O. C. C., 391, and other cases here and elsewhere.

This, I think, clears the matter insofar as the books in your office are concerned; there yet remains the question of keeping the books of the auditor of state in harmony with yours, and the manner in which, under the statutes, it is to be done.

Section 24 of the General Code, reads:

> "On or before Monday of each week, every state officer, department, board or commission shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, during the preceding week, from fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals, or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed verified statement of such receipts."

This calls for a detailed statement and authorizes the paying in of checks and drafts, as well as money, and the like. The officer, department, board or commission complying with this act should make his detailed statement in duplicate, or, which would be much better, in triplicate; file one with the auditor of state, procure said officer to certify one copy; take and file it with his checks, drafts, money, etc., with the treasurer of state and retain the third for his own files.

When a check or draft is returned dishonored, the treasurer of state should follow the course above indicated as to his own office, and send a statement fully describing the dishonored check to the auditor of state, exhibit the same to him to the end that his records may be made to correspond with the treasurer's books, and the difficulties arising from the return of the check be cared for. The officer, department, board or commission which received the dishonored check and presented it to the auditor and treasurer of state, should also be notified of the facts so that there may be no discrepancy or difference in any of the records of the state in reference to any such returned or dishonored check, draft or paper, given in payment of a claim in favor of the state, which later proved worthless.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—SECRET SERVICE OFFICER—SALARY—COUNTY DETECTIVE.

There can be no objections to a prosecuting attorney employing a county detective, under section 3004, General Code. The salary to be paid to such detective should not exceed that provided for in section 2915-1, General Code. This procedure would be especially commendable where a prosecuting attorney is aiming as economy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1914.

HON. C. F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 19, 1913, as follows:

"I desire to know whether, under section 3004, General Code, in your opinion, I can employ a detective to investigate criminal matters, such employment to extend over a number of months in the year, but pay him for particular matters investigated.

"I make this request because I do not care to appoint a secret service officer under the recent act of the legislature, on account of the expense entailed, the legislature having fixed the minimum salary of $125.00. I feel that if I can secure this work under section 3004 it will be a material saving to the county."

Section 3004, General Code, provides:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county. * * *"

Section 2915-1 as amended in 103 O. L., 501, provides:

> "The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge, by the judges of such court in such county in joint session, and shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month for the time actually occupied in such service, nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney for a year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upan the warrant of the county auditor."

Attention is called to the following language in section 3004 of the Code:

> "* * * to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him (the prosecuting attorney) in the performance of his official duties, and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for."

The question presents itself as to the meaning of "not otherwise provided for." Does it mean not otherwise provided for in law, or not otherwise provided for in fact? Suppose the prosecuting attorney had not proceeded agreeably to section 2915-1 and had not appointed a secret service officer under that section. May it then be said that we have an application of "not otherwise provided for" in section 3004? I should be inclined ordinarily to hold that the expression—"not otherwise provided for" was a legal expression and did not relate to a fact, but I am loath to come to a conclusion that would unnecessarily put the greater expense upon the county; and, too, I can conceive of a situation in which the prosecuting attorney might have his regular detective employed under section 2915-1 occupied and a situation would arise wherein it would be advisable in the furtherance of justice to employ a detective under section 3004 for special purposes.

On the whole, I am not able to see any objection to the action of a prosecuting attorney who is prompted by considerations of economy to proceed under section 3004. Certain it is that the chief guiding official in transactions under either section is the prosecuting attorney. Certain it is, also, that either section gives him the right to employ a detective. It is apparent that under either section the total amount to be expended must not exceed one-half of the official salary, and it is fair to assume that the salary to be paid under any circumstance should not exceed that provided in 2915-1, and a prosecutor is to be commended if he can secure the services of a secret service agent at a lower price than the minimum provided in section 2915 and for just such time as is necessary. I can hardly conceive of anyone raising an objection so long as the prosecuting attorney pursues the course herein indicated.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—SUPERINTENDENT—VISITING AGENT—OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—MATRON.

The positions of superintendent of a children's home and visiting agent of a children's home are entirely inconsistent, and such superintendent may not serve in the capacity of visiting agent for the home over which he is superintendent. The matron of a county children's home may act as such visiting agent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, 1010 Hartman Building, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 10th, in which you request a construction of section 3099, General Code, as amended in 1913 (103 O. L., p. 892), as to the whether the superintendent or matron of a county children's home may act as visiting agent for the home with which such superintendent or matron is connected.

Section 3099, as amended, reads:

> "Unless a children's home places its wards through the agency of the board of state charities, the trustees shall appoint a competent person as visiting agent, who shall seek homes for the children in private families, where they will be properly cared for, trained and educated. When practicable, the agent shall visit each child so placed not less than once in each year, and report from time to time to the trustees its condition, any brutal or ill treatment of it, or failure to provide suitable food, clothing or school facilities therefor in such family. The agent shall perform his or her duties under the direction of the trustees and superintendent of the children's home for which he or she is appointed, and may be assigned other duties not inconsistent with his or her regular employment as the trustees prescribe. His or her appointment shall be for one year, or until his or her successor is appointed, and he shall receive such reasonable compensation for his or her services as the trustees provide."

It will be observed that unless such home places its wards through the board of state charities, the board of trustees thereof is empowered by the foregoing section to appoint and fix the compensation of a competent person as visiting agent, whose duty it is to seek suitable homes for such children in private families and, if practicable, to visit each child so placed at least once each year. Such visiting agent is required to report to the trustees of the home the condition of such child as to food, clothing and school facilities furnished by the family with which it has been placed. It is further provided that the visiting agent shall act under the direction of the trustees and superintendent of the children's home for which he or she is appointed.

The superintendent of a county children's home, who may be appointed by the trustees under section 3084, is, by virtue of the provisions of section 3085, as amended in 103 O. L., 889, to "have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein, subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees may prescribe." The trustees may, upon the recommendation of the superintendent, appoint a matron, who shall perform her duties under the direction of the superintendent, or, the trustees may, under section 3086, dispense with the superintendent and authorize the matron to assume complete charge of the home.

Incompatibility of offices is of two kinds, viz.: statutory and common law. The former exists when a statute expressly prohibits the holding by one person of two or more offices at the same time. The statutes do not prohibit a superintendent or matron of a children's home from acting in the capacity of visiting agent.

The rule of common law incompatibility, is stated by the circuit court in State ex rel. vs. Gilbert, 12 C. C. (n. s.) as follows:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The right of a superintendent or matron of a county children's home to act as visiting agent for such home, must be determined in the light of the foregoing principle of common law incompatibility, since no statutory incompatibility exists.

If the superintendent of a children's home were also visiting agent of such home, he would be in the position of having to pass in one capacity, upon his own acts in another capacity. As a visiting agent is subject to the direction and control of the trustees and superintendent of the home and has no independent powers, such agent is merely an employe and not an officer in the sense in which the latter word has been defined by our courts. Notwithstanding that one person occupying the place of superintendent and visiting agent would not be holding two offices, yet, it is within the spirit and policy of the law to prevent one person from holding two or more inconsistent public employments at the same time.

The positions of superintendent and visiting agent of the county children's home. are entirely inconsistent, and I am clearly of the opinion that such superintendent may not serve in the capacity of visiting agent for the home over which he is superintendent.

A matron of the county children's home would not, in my opinion, be prevented from acting as such visiting agent.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BLIND RELIEF—SURPLUS MONEYS—COUNTY FUNDS—TAXES AND TAXATION—LEVY.

The limitations as to surplus money as used in section 1 of house bill No. 44 in reference to relief of the needy blind are that whenever the balance of the 1913 levy, that is that made in 1912 remaining in the fund at the end of the fiscal year ending March 1, 1914, is greater than the balance anticipated at the time of making up the budget, and therefore taken into consideration by the budget commission, such an excess does constitute surplus moneys within the meaning of house bill No. 44.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 17th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

"What are the limitations as to 'surplus moneys' as used in section 1 of house bill No. 44 providing for the relief of the needy blind by county commissioners under said law passed by the recent special session of the general assembly.

"The question is, may county commissioners, at the time of making their March, 1914, appropriations from the balances in the various county funds, economize as to discretionary items within said appropriations, thus creating a surplus in a particular fund or funds in excess of the amount appropriated therefrom, so as to provide a surplus in said fund that may be transferred by action of said board to the needy blind fund, the same to become available by appropriation for the relief of said needy blind of the county?"

I have not house bill 44 before me, but as I recall, there is nothing in the context to indicate any peculiar or special meaning to the phrase "surplus moneys," as therein used. The act simply authorizes the transfer, by the county commissioners, of such moneys from any of the funds of the county to the blind relief fund, in the event that, through failure to levy or otherwise, there is an insufficient amount in such fund to pay outstanding blind relief orders or those hereafter issued.

I may answer first your specific question, as to whether or not, by economizing at the time of making the first semi-annual appropriation for the fiscal year beginning in March, 1914, the commissioners may treat the difference between the aggregate of all appropriations from a given fund and the amount in the fund after appropriations are made as a "surplus."

My answer to this question is, generally speaking, in the negative. More precisely, I do not believe that the mere fact that the appropriations made at the beginning of the fiscal year fail to exhaust the fund is sufficient to create such a "surplus" as is contemplated by the act in question. It will be borne in mind that the revenues levied in a given year are intended to provide for the expenses for which they are levied for the entire fiscal year. These revenues come into the treasury in two installments, viz.: the proceeds of the December collection and the proceeds of the June collection of taxes, respectively. Theses two installments are not necessarily equal in amount: while the taxpayers have the option of paying their taxes in equal installments, yet, they may, if they so desire, pay the entire tax in December. On the other hand, there is always a considerable amount of delinquencies that is, tax charges on which nothing was paid in December, but which may be paid, with penalties, in June.

So, it is apparent, that it cannot reasonably be assumed, at the beginning of a fiscal year, and after the returns from the first half of the tax collection have come into the treasury, that the second half of the tax collections will be equal to the first half.

So, also, it cannot be assumed that moneys in a given fund, unappropriated at the beginning of the year, will not nevertheless be needed before the fiscal year is over for the purposes of the fund. Appropriations are not necessarily equal for the two halves of the year; it may be that the exigencies of certain governmental activities require a larger amount to be appropriated for the second half of the year than need be appropriated for the first half of the year. Nor is it necessarily true that the exact needs of a fund for the whole year are known at the beginning of the year. In short, it cannot be assumed at the beginning of the fiscal year, and after appropriations for the first half of that year have been made, that any unappropriated balance in a fund will not be needed for the purposes of that fund at any time during that year.

This fact suggests a definition of the phrase "surplus moneys." In my opinion the phrase means "moneys of which it can be determined with reasonable certainty that they will not be needed for the purpose for which they were levied."

Now, the purpose for which a county levy is made is reasonable expenses of the fund during the fiscal year. This year is to be treated as an entirety, as is apparent from consideration of section 5649-3d, et seq., General Code. Therefore, the mere difference between appropriations and balances in a fund could, under no circumstances, in my opinion, amount to a surplus within the meaning of the act in question, sooner at least than the time of making the appropriation for the second half of the fiscal year.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that in March, 1914, the difference between the aggregate of all appropriations in a given fund and the balance of the fund may not be a "surplus." However, I am of the opinion that after the September appropriations from such fund have been made, the difference between the aggregate of such appropriations and the balance then remaining in the fund might possibly be so treated.

I anticipate, however, that you desire, particularly, advice as to what may at the present time, that is, the first of March, be treated as "surplus moneys."

There occurs to me a state of facts under which an unappropriated balance in a fund might constitute such a surplus. Under the machinery of the Smith law, as contained in the sections last above cited, the county commissioners, and a budget commission, in fixing the levy for a given fund, in June of one year, are required to take into account the anticipated balance which will remain to the credit of the fund at the end of the current year, if any. Thus, the levying authorities first consider what are to be the needs of the bridge fund, for example, for the fiscal year commencing some seven or eight months after their determination is made. Having determined that the needs of the fund amount to a given sum, they then examine the budget prepared and submitted, with a view to ascertaining whether or not there will be, at the end of the current year, any balance in that fund. If such a balance is anticipated the amount of that balance is deducted from the anticipated needs of the fund, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount required to be levied; for example, if the needs of the bridge fund should be fixed at twenty thousand dollars, and there were an anticipated balance at the end of the current year of two thousand dollars, the amount levied would be eighteen thousand dollars; the intention being that the two thousand dollar balance with the eighteen thousand dollar levy would produce the requirement of the fund.

Now, should it transpire that at the end of the current year, and the beginning of the fiscal year for which the levy was made, the balance remaining in the fund for which levy was made is greater than that anticipated, then, I should think that such an excess might be treated as a surplus. Take the case imagined as an example: if the actual balance found in the fund at the end of the fiscal year in which the levy was made, and the beginning of the fiscal year for which the levy was made, should prove to be three thousand dollars instead of two thousand dollars, then, the one thousand dollars would, in my opinion, be "surplus moneys."

It is true, of course, that it does not appear, strictly speaking, that this one thousand dollars will not be needed, during the fiscal year then beginning, for the purposes of the fund. Yet, the spirit of the "Smith law," if not its letter, is such that the expenditures of the county for this purpose are limited to the amount contemplated by the budget. The exact phraseology of the "Smith law" in this particular is found in section 5649-3d, as follows:

> "No appropriation shall be made * * * for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Technically, this limitation upon the appropriation does not apply to balances, but it will readily be seen that the spirit of the law is such as to limit the total expenditures for the year to the sum contemplated by the budget commissioners. And I have no hesitancy in holding that, even though the gross appropriations for the year from a given fund be not strictly limited by this section to the amount contemplated by the budget commission, including the balances anticipated by them, yet, when the balances are greater than anticipated, the excess may safely be regarded as "surplus moneys," within the meaning of an act like the one now under consideration.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that whenever the balance of the 1913 levy, i. e., that made in 1912, remaining in the fund at the end of the fiscal year ending March 1, 1914, is greater than the balance anticipated at the time of making up the budget, and therefore taken into consideration by the budget commission, such an excess does constitute "surplus moneys" within the meaning of house bill No. 44.

Other instances of "surplus moneys" might readily be imagined, such as balances remaining to the credit of a sinking fund on account of a particular issue of bonds, beyond the amount necessary to retire the bonds and other casual surpluses in special funds of that sort; but, as your question is generally phrased, I should prefer to indicate in this general way the possibility of the existence of such surpluses, rather than to attempt to enumerate all the conceivable circumstances which might give rise to such a condition.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—GAS LINE—STATE LANDS.

The board of administration is without authority to grant permission to a corporation to lay a gas line through property belonging to the state and under the control of such board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1914.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 3, 1914, you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "I am directed by the board of administration to respectfully request your opinion as to whether or not the board of administration has authority to grant permission to a corporation to lay a gas line through land belonging to the state and under control of said board."

The powers of the state, in respect to its property rights and the disposition thereof, are vested primarily in the legislature of the state, and the question, whether or not the board of administration may grant to the corporation in mind permission to lay down its gas line in and through the property of the state under control of said board, depends upon the consideration whether or not authority to make such grant has been conferred on said board for with respect to the property of the state, under its charge and control, the board possesses no powers except such as are expressly conferred by law, or necessarily implied.

State ex rel vs. Railway Company, (37 O. S., 157, 174).
State vs. Torinius, (26 Minn., 1).

Section 1839, General Code, provides as follows:

"The board on its organization shall succeed to and be vested with the title and all rights of the present boards of trustees, boards of managers, and commissions of and for said several institutions in and to land, money or other property, real and personal, held for the benefit of their respective institutions, or for other public use, without further process of law, but in trust for the state of Ohio. Said several boards of trustees, boards of managers, and commissions now charged with duties respecting the institutions above named shall on and after August 15, 1911, have no further legal existence and the board is hereby authorized and directed to assume and continue, as successor thereof, the construction, control and management of said institutions, subject to the provisions of this act."

This section preserves to the board of administration all such rights, title and interest in the property of the several institutions committed to its control, formerly possessed by the respective board of trustees, boards of managers and commissions in their control of these institutions. The nature of this interest possessed by the respective boards of trustees, etc., of these institutions, with respect to the property committed to their control, is not easily defined, but it is certain such interest was such only as was strictly germane to the execution of the primary purpose of said institutions, and was in no sense a proprietary interest in such property. It is obvious that the interest of the board of administration in such property is not greater than that formerly possessed by the respective boards of trustees, etc., controlling said institutions.

The right sought by the corporation to lay a gas line, in and through the property of the state, is one constituting, in all essential respects, an easement in gross in said lands, and is such a right as can be enforced by a corporation organized for transporting natural gas against an individual land owner, only by appropriation. (Section 10128, G. C.)

The right sought by the corporation is, in legal contemplation, a substantial one, and can be granted only by the legislature or by some officer or board in whom the legislature has vested authority to make such grant. A diligent examination of the statutes fails to disclose any provision authorizing the board of administration or any other board or officer, to make a grant of this kind, and it necessarily follows that such authority on the part of the board is denied.

I note that section 23, General Code, provides as follows:

"A street, alley or road shall not be laid out or established through or over the lands belonging to a public institution of the state without the special permission of the general assembly."

This section is without particular significance with respect to the question at hand. Its effect is to declare the policy of the state, that streets, alleys and roads shall not be established through or over lands belonging to the public institutions of the state without special permission of the legislature.

It would be competent, perhaps, for the legislature to vest in the board authority to grant permission to gas companies to lay down their pipe lines through property under the control of such board. With respect to the question at hand, however, the legislature has not done so, and your inquiry must, therefore, be answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BLIND RELIEF—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—OLD BLIND RELIEF LAW —NEW BLIND RELIEF LAW—BLIND RELIEF COMMISSION.

The abolition of the blind relief commission by the act found in 103 O. L., 60, does not in any substantial manner affect the outstanding blind relief orders; such orders should be honored by the county auditor without approval by the county commissioner. Funds left during the period of time when the old law was in force may be expended in honoring orders issued by the old blind relief commission as well as those issued by the county commissioner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1914.

HON. IRVING CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio..

DEAR SIR:—As I understand your letter of February 23rd, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you question whether, after the act in 103 O. L. 60, became effective, a blind relief order issued by the old blind relief commission could be honored. That is to say, you raise the question, as I understand you, as to whether or not the amendment in question had the effect of either requiring an order originally issued by the blind relief commission to be reapproved by the county commissioners in order to entitle its holder to the quarterly installments, or of requiring each applicant to make an entirely new application to the county commissioners in order to secure further relief. Perhaps there is also involved in your query the specific question as to whether or not the funds levied for the relief of the blind by the scheme embodied in the statutes prior to the amendment could be disbursed under the scheme embodied in the amended statutes?

The act in question is in form of an amendment to sections 2967, 2967-1 and 2968, General Code, and a repeal of sections 2963 and 2964. This act was filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state March 10, 1913, and became a law on or about June 9, 1913. The current fiscal year, i. e., the year for the administration of moneys raised by taxation would not end until March 1, 1914; so that this law became effective, so to speak, about the middle of the year for which money had been previously levied to be disbursed by the old blind relief commission.

Your questions involve the effect of this law upon the administration of the existing funds for the relief of the blind. The original sections relating to the relief of the blind may be abstracted as follows:

Section 2962, General Code, provided for the creation of a "blind commission" to be appointed by the probate court.

Section 2963, General Code, provided for the organization and compensation of members of the blind relief commission.

Section 2964 provided for the annual meeting of the blind relief commission which was to be on the 4th day of November and at which meeting the commission was to "examine carefully the list of applications properly filed."

Section 2965, General Code, provided the qualifications for the blind relief.

Section 2966 related to the same subject.

Section 2967 provided the machinery for relief which was initiated by the claimant filing a statement of facts with the blind relief commission. The commission was required to be satisfied from the evidence of two witnesses, one of whom should be a physician, as to the qualifications of the applicant. Upon so becoming satisfied the commission was to issue "an order therefor in such sum as it finds needed, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per annum, to be paid quarterly from the fund herein provided on the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 2967-1, General Code, provided for the making of surgical operations in lieu of relief, at the suggestion of the blind commission, and with the consent of the applicant.

Section 2968, General Code, provided that at the annual meeting the blind commission should make an examination as to the qualifications of those on the blind list, and might remove persons therefrom or modify the amounts of their respective allowances.

Section 2969, General Code, provided for the levy of a tax by the county commissioners.

Section 2970, General Code, provided a penalty for perjury in making false applications.

Now the act found in 103 O. L., 60, as already observed, amends and repeals a part only of the sections above abstracted. The effect of the repeal of sections 2962, 2963 and 2964, General Code, is quite evidently to abolish the county blind commissions, which intent is made perfectly manifest by consideration of the title of the act which in part is "an act to abolish county blind commissions." The effect of the amendment of sections 2967, 2967-1 and 2968 is merely to substitute the board of county commissioners for the blind commission. Comparison of the amended sections with the original sections in this respect will show this to be the fact, and the legislative purpose inferable therefrom is rendered certain by further consideration of the title which reads, "and to extend the duties and powers of the county commissioners."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that on or about June 9, 1913, the county commissioners succeeded to the duties of the blind relief commission and were thereafter to exercise these duties and the resultant powers in precisely the same manner as they would have been exercised by the blind relief commission.

One of the cases recently decided by the supreme court was an action in mandamus brought by the holder of a blind relief order, issued by the old blind relief commission, to compel the auditor of Franklin county to issue warrants for quarterly payments under said order for the periods of time beginning prior to and ending subsequently to the date when the amendatory act became effective, the last quarterly payment claimed being that for October, 1913. The order of the court was that the peremptory writ issue as prayed for. I think it must be conceded that this order is an adjudication of all the questions which you have in mind for it was not pleaded that the county commissioners of Franklin county had in any way acted upon or with respect to the order of relator.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the mere change in the machinery of the administration of blind relief, consisting of the substitution of county commissioners for the old blind relief commission had no affect whatever upon the substantive privileges of holders of blind relief orders issued by the old commission. These orders were, as they always had been, subject to modification or revocation, the modifying or revoking power being now lodged in the county commissioners instead of the blind relief commission and aside from this fact they were as effective to secure relief as they would have been had no change in the law been made.

The scheme of relief was essentially the same, no new power being created and no power being diminished, but existing powers being merely transferred from one tribunal to another.

While the court's decision is of itself sufficient to dispose of this question, I might cite in this connection section 26 of the General Code, without quoting it, upon the proposition that under its provisions a blind relief order outstanding at the time of the amendment, though a mere privilege, and hence not a vested right, cannot be affected by amendments of this nature for the law providing for blind relief of this particular kind still remained in effect, the repeal and enactment of certain sections thereof being formal merely.

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that the abolition of the blind relief commission by the act found in 103 O. L., 60, does not in any substantial manner affect the status of outstanding blind relief orders; that such orders should be honored by the county auditor without approval by the county commissioners; that no application de novo to the county commissioners is required as a condition precedent to the securing of further relief, and that the funds levied for blind relief purposes during a period of time when the old law was in force may be expended in honoring orders issued by the old blind relief commission, as well as those issued by the county commissioners since the date when they assumed control of the administration of such relief.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—LISTING PROPERTY FOR TAXATION—LIVE STOCK—TAX PENALTY.

Where cattle have been contracted for and are to be weighed and delivered at a certain date, and the cattle were in the possession of the original party on the day preceding the second Monday of April, the party having possession of the cattle on that date will be obliged to pay the taxes on them. The fact that he, though acting in good faith, neglected to pay the taxes will not relieve him from the penalty thereon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1914.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLIGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am very sorry that I was unable to answer your letter of December 29th and your subsequent letter of January 14th, before the last day for the payment of taxes without penalty. The condition of the work of the department was such, however, that I could not well do this. You request my opinion upon the following facts disclosed by your letters and by the communication of Geo. W. Lindsay, Esq., enclosed in your second letter:

> "In January, 1913, K., the owner of ten certain head of cattle made and entered into a contract with D., a buyer of cattle, the terms of which were substantially as follows:
> "D. selected from the cattle belonging to K., the particular cattle which he desired to purchase and agreed with K., to purchase the same. K. was to place the cattle in a fattening pen on his farm and they were to be held there until D's. first shipping date preceding April 15, 1913, then they were to be weighed and delivered to D. for shipment, and D. was to pay seven cents per pound for them.
> "At the time contemplated by the agreement in January for the delivery of the cattle shipment was impossible owing to the destruction wrought by the floods of 1913. D. then went to K. and offered him the option of retaining the cattle and feeding them for a few weeks longer or accepting 50.00 in cash as a release from the contract of sale. K. elected to retain the cattle and to be governed by the contract. Accordingly the cattle were in the possession of K. on the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1913, and at a subsequent date, to wit, about April 20th, when the assessor of personal property visited K. On the latter occasion K. offered to list the cattle as bailee or agent of D., but the assessor refused to accept such a return. K. then offered to list the estimated amount which he would receive from D., under the contract at delivery as 'credits' subject, however, to the deduction of debts which would have wiped out such 'credits' inasmuch as K., at the time owed A., a third party, on a note secured by mortgage given for the purchase of certain real estate. The assessor refused to accept such a return, and K. refusing to list the cattle as his own, the same were listed by the assessor himself, and taxes now stand charged on the duplicate of Pickaway county against K. on account of said cattle. K. refuses to pay the tax and seeks relief against what he considers to be an invalid assessment. The auditor, treasurer and commissioners ask to be advised as to their duty in the premises."

In my opinion the cattle were on the listing day and on the day when K. was asked to list them the property of K., and not the property of D. K. held possession of them as owner and not as agent or bailee. K. did not have on account of the transaction between him and D. a "credit" for the purpose of taxation; and whether or not the assessor technically exceeded his authority in assuming to list the cattle over K's. protest he should be held for the tax assessed against him.

The history of the law of sales appears to be somewhat evolutionary. Its rules have developed, as occasion has arisen, to meet new conditions presented by the ingenuity of men in dealing with each other. The crucial question always presented when parties bargain concerning the transfer of title to a thing which is to be delivered from the vender to the vendee at a future date, is when the title passes, the admitted consequence of a postponement in the passing of title being that the destruction of the property or any other liability on account of it, accruing or arising while the vender retains possession falls upon him and not upon the vendee. Conversely under such circumstances should the vender deal with the property as his own and dispose of it to another the vendee's remedy would be for breach of executory contract and not for the recovery of the specific articles which constitute the subject-matter thereof. Out of the multitude of the possible variations in the course of dealing among men, the best and most recent authorities have evolved a rule which will be found stated in Benjamin on sales, page 270 as follows:

"(1) Where by the agreement the vender is to do anything to the goods for the purpose of putting them into that state in which the purchaser is to be bound to accept them, or, as it is sometimes worded, into deliverable state, the performance of these things shall, in the absence of circumstances indicating a contrary intention, be taken to be a condition precedent to the vesting of the property. 2. Where anything remains to be done to the goods for the purpose of ascertaining the price, as by weighing, measuring, or testing the goods, where the price is to depend on the quantity or quality of the goods, the performance of these things also shall be a condition precedent to the transfer of the property, although the individual goods be ascertained and they are in a state in which they ought to be accepted. 3. Where the buyer is by the terms bound to do anything as a condition, either precedent or concurrent, on which the passing of the property depends, the property will not pass until the condition be fulfilled even though the goods may have been actually delivered into the possession of the buyer."

This rule is quoted with approval by Judge Spear in delivering the opinion in Bonham vs. Hamilton, 66 O. S. 89. In my opinion the second application of the above quoted rule fits the case presented by you. The price of the goods could not be ascertained until the cattle were weighed. The title did not pass until that process had been completed. As soon as the weighing had taken place, however, and the price was ascertained the title did pass although the price might not have been paid. Had the weighing taken place before the listing day then K's. position would have been exactly correct, and he would have been obliged to list the cattle as the property of D., and also to list the unpaid purchase price ascertained by the process of weighing as his "credits;" but prior to the weighing of the cattle the title to them could not pass under the rule as laid down by the authorities, and until the title passed the cattle, as such, were as fully and completely the property of K., as if he had never contracted with D. for their future delivery. He could have sold them to a third party and D's. only remedy would have been for a breach of the contract.

A case somewhat more nearly in point than the one cited is that of Gills vs. George, 8 O. C. C. n. s. 393, cited by you. The facts in that case are not quite identical with, but nevertheless are essentially similar to those in the case presented by you. The subject-matter of the contract was the same, i. e., cattle to be fattened and weighed at a future time. The court held that the title did not pass until the weighing took place, so that when some of the cattle were destroyed prior to that time the loss fell upon the vender in whose possession they were at the time. As stated by Wildman, J., at page 397:

> "* * * two things were left to be done. One was the delivery of the stock and the other was the payment of the price, which, before its payment, was to be ascertained by the weight of the cattle. It is not said in so many words that the cattle were to be weighed, but manifestly there was no other manner by which the price of the cattle could be ascertained."

Thereupon the court applied the rule as laid down in Bengamin on sales and reached the conclusion already stated.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the cattle were properly taxable against K. This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the question as to whether or not the assessor had the authority to determine the ownership and to refuses to accept K's. list as agent or bailee. It is sufficient to note that even if the assessment should be set aside on this ground, the county auditor, under the powers vested in him by statute, might place the property on the duplicate against K. as omitted property; so that any irregularity in the assessment would become quite immaterial. In fact it has become a well settled rule that mere irregularities and technical defects in the proceedings resulting in an assessment of property for taxation will not be relieved against where the substantial rights of the taxpayer are not affected thereby.

In this case the only real damage which K. will have suffered by reason of the premises is the possibility of a penalty being charged against him because of his failure to list or because of his failure to pay the tax before the last day of payment. These damages, however, he has suffered through his own erroneous interpretation of the law, and I do not believe there is authority to relieve him from their payment, even though his action throughout has been, as you state, in good faith.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EIGHT HOUR DAY ON PUBLIC WORKS—LIABILITY INSURANCE—EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS NOT INCLUDED.

The law calling for an eight hour day on public works does not apply to educational institutions such as Miami University. Such an institution is not a public work in the sense intended by the statute. Such institutions are not included within the terms of the employers' liability act and have no power to contribute to the state insurance fund and cannot be compelled to do so.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1914.

HON. R. M. HUGHES, Acting President, Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter asking my opinion on the following:

> "I have been interested to learn whether or not the law calling for an eight hour day on public works and the employers' liability act apply to Miami University at Oxford, Ohio, and when these laws should become operative.
> "We employ engineers, janitors and laborers in addition to those who have charge of the domestic work in the boarding department.
> "Any advice from your office relative to the applicability of these laws to Miami University and the other educational institutions of the state and as to the steps we should take toward observing them would be greatly appreciated."

The act of April 28, 1913 (103 O. L., 854), provides:

> "Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract or otherwise; and it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation or association whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such workmen to require or permit any of them to labor more than eight hours in any calendar day or more than forty-eight hours in any week, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen."

The Miami University was organized in the early part of the last century, nearly or quite a hundred years ago. It commenced to receive students about 1825 and never received any appropriation from the state until about 1885 as stated in Howe's History. This brings us to the language of the constitution "workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state or any political subdivision thereof" and the last sentence of the act in question. "This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen." Under ordinary rules of construction this last sentence would be for consideration, but inasmuch as the act of April 28, 1913, is a very apparent effort to pass a law in compliance with section 37 of article II of the constitution as amended September 3, 1912, which amendment was intended to supply a want made apparent by the decision of the supreme court in The case of the City of Cleveland vs. The Construction Company, 67 O. S., 197, it becomes more necessary to construe the language of the constitution than that of the statute. In the 67 O. S., case the controversy was as to the constitutionality of the act of April 6, 1900, (94 O. L., 357) which was entitled:

> "An act to provide for limiting the hours of daily service of laborers, workmen and mechanics employed upon public works' or for work done for the state of Ohio, or any political subdivision thereof, providing for the insertion of certain stipulations in contracts of public works; imposing penalties for violations of the provisions of this act, and providing for the enforcement thereof."

In this act it will be observed that it was attempted to include laborers, workmen and mechanics employed upon public works or for work done for the state. In the amendment to the constitution the language is "workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state," while in the statute will be found that which is absent from both. "This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen." The only reason for calling attention to this provision grows out of the fact that looking at the statute alone it might be thought it was the legislative intention to include all persons working for or in the employ of the state except policemen or firemen, and that this sentence was added because in its absence policemen and firemen might be construed as included within the meaning of the previous part of the section. However this may be, we will consider the matter from its presentation in the act of April 6, 1900. This shows us that the original idea was to control the hours of labor not only upon public works but upon work done for the state or any political subdivision thereof. The constitutional convention adopts the first and leaves the last, and it is not unfair to assume from this that the object of the amendment was to overcome the effect of the decision in the 67 O. S. case, and that the convention further considered the act of 1900 and concluded to only use such portion thereof as related to public work in the amendment, and in doing so determined to leave out the matter of "work done for the state," which as is readily seen is a much broader statement and might include many men engaged in public work carried on by the state.

I am, therefore, led to conclude that it was not the intention of the framers of this amendment to make it as broad as the act of 1900, and, therefore, whatever of strength might be added by the last sentence of this statute, in construing the statute as if it stood alone, it is of no avail to vary or change the plain import of the language used in the amendment, and we are relegated to a determination of what is included in the language "workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state."

If this language could find neither lodgment nor application without applying it to universities, lighting companies and public utilities owned or operated by the state or some political subdivision, no question of the application or construction might arise; but such is not the case, as at one time the term "public works" had a definite and well understood meaning applied as a matter of fact almost exclusively to canals.

As the state and various political subdivisions thereof are engaged nearly and probably all of the time in erecting public buildings, bridges and roads, and the state is aiding the divisions in many respects in construction and maintaining roads and highways and maintaining and operating the same such language finds plain and easy application, and it is only necessary to give it its plain and every day meaning and apply it to workmen engaged on public work as distinguished from workmen for the public, and thereby confining it to constructive work, betterment, building and improvement carried on and aided by the state. This brings us to a consideration of the question whether:

(1) The Miami University is a public work carried on or aided by the state, and

(2) If it is, what classes of its employes are within the eight hour rule?

To my mind an educational institution, regardless of its public character, is not within the meaning of this language. It is not a public work in the sense of this amendment and it is immaterial whether it is or is not carried on or aided by the state.

As nearly in point as any case I have been able to find is that of Blank vs. Kearny, 44 New York appellate division 592, wherein the question was made as to whether the phrase "any public work or improvement" as used in the laws of the state of New York, included matters like public lighting. In the course of the opinion in this case will be found:

> "Separate lighting contracts are required to be made in each borough, 'or in such subdivisions of the city as may appear to the board of public improvements and the municipal assembly to be for the best interests of the city.' The contracts must be for the term of one year and be awarded to the lowest bidder.
> "These seem to be the principal statutory provisions bearing upon the plaintiff's cause of action, unless it is affected by the following clauses of section 413 of the character:
> "Except as herein otherwise provided, any public work or improvement within the cognizance or control of any one or more of the departments of the commissioners who constitute the board of public improvements, that may be subject of a contract, must first be duly authorized and approved by a resolution of the board of public improvements and an ordinance or resolution of the municipal assembly. * * * When a public work or improvement shall have been duly authorized as aforesaid, then but not until then, it shall be lawful for the proper department to proceed in the execution thereof in accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of this act.
> "If the phrase 'any public work or improvement' in this section was intended to comprehend service rendered and supplies furnished in carrying on the ordinary functions of a municipality whenever carried on through the agency of a contract, then the learned judge at special term was right in continuing the injunction. In our judgment, however, section 413 of the Greater New York charter relates rather to public works in the nature of betterments and does not refer at all to such a matter as public lighting, which must constantly be provided for from day to day and month to month in the administration of the affairs of the city."
> Blank vs. Kearny, 44 N. Y., App. 595.

* * * * *

The question of the application of the employers' liability act rests solely upon a construction of the same.

Section 13, (103 O. L. 77,) reads as follows:

> "The following shall constitute employers subject to the provisions of this act:
> "1. The state and each county, city, township, incorporated village and school district therein.

"2. Every person, firm, and private corporation including any public service corporation that has in service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written."

Section 14 on the same page defines "employe" "workman" and "operatives," and reads as follows:

"The term 'employe,' 'workman' and 'operative' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean:

"1. Every person in the service of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein, including regular members of lawfully constituted police and fire departments of cities and villages, under any appointment or contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except any official of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein. Provided that nothing in this act shall apply to policemen or firemen where policemen's and firemen's pension funds are now or hereafter may be established and maintained by municipal authority under existing laws.

"2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual, or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

The following sections of the act provide means whereby the state and political subdivisions thereof named in this act may obtain funds for contribution to the state insurance fund; how they are to be paid and the like.

Inasmuch as the legislature has provided that certain taxing districts of the state and certain political subdivisions thereof shall participate in this state insurance and has provided the means whereby the premium therefore may be met, and has neither named colleges, institutions of learning, or by other designation included institutions like the Miami University, I am of the opnion that they are not included within the terms of the employers' liability act, have no power to contribute to the state insurance fund, and cannot be compelled to do so.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY ENGINEER—ASSISTANT TO THE CITY ENGINEER—SALARIES—RESOLUTION—PER DIEM—PUBLIC POLICY—COMPENSATION.

1st. Where a city council passes a resolution directing that all bills of an assistant engineer, which remain unpaid, shall be paid, and the engineer would be entitled to the compensation stated in the bills before council when said resolution was passed. He would be entitled to pay according to the terms of the resolution.

2nd. The city engineer would not be entitled to draw compensation from the city at one price for the assistant and pay a less amount to the assistant; the city engineer would not be entitled to any part of the assistant engineer's compensation. It would be against public policy to permit a city engineer to draw a per diem from the county and an hourly compensation from the city for services rendered on the same day.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 16, 1913.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of April 7, 1913, is received in which you inquire:

"We submit herewith certain legislation and facts concerning payments made for services of a city engineer, rendered to the city of Tiffin, Ohio, and would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions, growing out of said employment:

"First. In view of the above, was said assistant engineer entitled to compensation at the rate of 60 cents per hour prior to resolution of August 15, 1910?

"Second. Could the city engineer legally draw the compensation of the assistant engineer employed by him and pay said assistant engineer less than the amount drawn?

"Third. Could said engineer legally draw a per diem from the county and an hourly compensation from the city for services rendered on the same day?"

The facts are submitted as follows:

"On April 1, 1906, the board of public service of Tiffin, Ohio, entered into a contract with a civil engineer to act as city engineer at the following compensation: 60 cents per hour for services while engaged in engineering work for said city and 20 cents per hour for assistants necessary in such work. The last clause of said contract reads as follows: 'Section 3. This contract shall take effect on April 1, 1906, and be in force and effect for one year from that date.'

"The above contract was entered into pursuant to an ordinance of the city council creating the office of city engineer, prescribing his duties and directing the board of public service to make a contract at the rate of compensation said board decided upon.

"There was no further legislation on the part of the city council in respect to the office of city engineer until August 15, 1910, on which date the following resolution was passed: 'Fixing the compensation of the city engineer as follows: 60 cents per hour for engineer for time actually spent in the services of the city of Tiffin and 60 cents per hour for assistant engineer, doing the same work as done by the city engineer, etc.'

"The director of public service on June 1, 1910, without any authority than that in effect April 1, 1906, entered into a contract with a civil engineer to act as city engineer for an indefinite period, at the following compensation: 'For the time spent in the service of said first party (city of Tiffin, Ohio), either by said second party (the city engineer) or by some competent person employed by him as assistant, performing the same work which said second party would perform, 60 cents per hour.'

"On August 21, 1911, council passed a resolution declaring it the sense of the council that the compensation fixed theretofore (resolution of August 15, 1910) for the city engineer be as follows: '60 cents per hour for his own services and 60 cents per hour for assistants doing the same work as the city enginer, the compensation of assistants to be paid by the city engineer.'

"The said engineer served the city as city engineer during the years 1909-10-11 and rendered itemized bills for engineer and assistant engineer at 60 cents per hour for engineer and 60 cents per hour for assistant engineer.

"Payment of said bills was refused by the city auditor on the ground that the original contract (April 1, 1906) applied until June 1, 1910, and that the engineer could not draw the compensation of assistant engineer, etc.

"The city council on June 5, 1911, passed a resolution directing the city auditor to pay all engineering bills, he had previously refused to pay, upon proper approval of the director of public service.

"On August 21, 1911, the city auditor in accordance with the resolution of council (June 5, 1911) paid all bills rendered by the engineer during 1909-10-11, said bills being properly approved by the director of public service.

"Until the first Monday in September, 1909, the same individual employed by the city of Tiffin, Ohio, as city engineer served the county of Seneca as surveyor at a per diem compensation of $5.00 and from March 1, 1909, to the first Monday in September, 1909, it was found that said engineer received compensation from the county for the same days for which he was paid an hourly compensation by the city of Tiffin. As an illustration said engineer drew $125.00 for 25 days' service rendered Seneca county during the month of May, 1909, and $66.00 for 110 hours' service rendered the city of Tiffin during the same month; the details of bills paid by the city show that ten hours was the greatest number of hours for which compensation was claimed in any one day. The number of working days in May, 1909, was 26. The said engineer drew compensation from the county for 25 days and at 10 hours per day, 11 days from the city of Tiffin."

Your first inquiry requires a consideration of the statutes as they existed prior to, and also after, the passage of the Payne law.

Section 145 Municipal Code (section 1536-681 Rev. Stat.) as set forth in 96 Ohio Laws, page 68, provided:

"The directors of public service may employ such superintendents, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers, and other persons, as may be necessary for the execution of the powers and duties of this department, and may establish such subdepartments for the administration of affairs under said directors as may be deemed proper. The compensa- tion and bonds of all persons appointed or employed by the department of public service shall be fixed by said directors, and no person shall be removed except for cause satisfactory to said directors, or a majority of them."

Section 227, Municipal Code (section 1536-1005, Rev. Stat.) as set forth in 96 Ohio Laws, page 95, provided:

"Except in the department of public service, council shall by ordinance or resolution, except as otherwise provided in this act, determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in any department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in any department of the city government, if any be required, and said bonds shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe with surety subject to the approval of the mayor of said city."

By virtue of these sections the directors of public service were authorized to fix the compensation of employes in the department of public service. These sections continued in force until August 1, 1909, when the amendment by act of 99 Ohio Laws, 562, known as the Payne law, became effective.

Section 145, Municipal Code, was therein amended to read as follows:

"The director of public service may establish such subdepartments as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons as may be necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

Section 227, Municipal Code, was also amended to read:

"Council shall by ordinance or resolution, except as otherwise provided in this act, determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in any department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in any department of the city government, if any be required, and said bonds shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe with surety subject to the approval of the mayor of said city."

Section 145, Municipal Code, is now known as section 4327, General Code, and section 227, Municipal Code as section 4214, General Code. In carrying these sections into the General Code the language was slightly changed but the provisions thereof are substantially the same.

Since the amendatory act of 99 Ohio Laws 562 became effective on August 1, 1909, council has the right to fix the compensation of the employes in question. It appears that council did not fix any compensation for city engineer or assistant engineer until August 15, 1910.

From January 1, 1909, to August 1, 1909, it was the duty of the board of public service to fix the compensation, and after August 1, 1909, council was authorized to fix the compensation.

It appears that the auditor refused to make payment of the claims of the engineer, and that on June 5, 1911, council passed a resolution authorizing the auditor to pay said claims when approved by the director of public service, and the same was thereafter paid.

Your first question is as to the right of the assistant engineer to receive sixty cents per hour prior to the passage of the resolution of August 15, 1910.

The time in question runs from January 1, 1909, to August 15, 1910. It is seen above that for a part of this time the board of public service had the right to fix the compensation and for the other part council had such right.

First as to the time during which council had such right.

Council did not fix the compensation until August 15, 1910, and no compensation was fixed for the period from August 1, 1909, to August 15, 1910.

The work had been performed by the assistant engineer and the city had received the benefit thereof. There was no legal obligation upon the city to pay said assistant as council had not fixed the compensation to be paid.

Council did on June 5, 1911, pass a resolution authorizing the auditor to pay for the services of the assistant engineer. From the facts given it does not appear that council formally fixed a compensation to be paid the assistant engineer. Council did authorize, by resolution, the auditor to pay the bills upon the approval of the director of public service.

Council could not delegate its power to fix compensation to the director of public service. But the bills apparently were before council, or were at least known to the members thereof, when the resolution was passed and if council knew the compensation stated therein, the resolution authorizing payment thereof would in effect be a fixing of the compensation.

The question arises could council authorize the payment of a moral obligation of this nature.

In case of Emmert vs. City of Elyria, 74 Ohio St., 185, Summers, J., says at page 194:

> "But, because a municipality is not legally liable to pay for a public improvement, it does not follow that it is not under a moral obligation to do so or that a court because it will not enforce payment will enjoin it. The contract for paving this street is not ultra vires. If invalid it is so merely because the contract was made before the bonds to provide the money to pay for it were sold. Now that the work has been done in accordance with the contract and the bonds have been sold and the money to pay for it is in the treasury, it is right that it should be paid for and a court of equity ought not, unless its failure to do so would defeat the purpose of the law, prevent the municipality from doing what equity and fair dealing would exact from an individual."

Equity and fair dealing would require an individual to pay the assistant engineer for the services performed by him.

Council in passing the resolution of June 5, 1911, recognized the moral obligation of the city and authorized payment. While the fixing of the compensation after employment is not regular and should not be encouraged, the purpose of the law in this case was not defeated as council itself fixed the compensation.

The amount of compensation stated in the bills before council at the time the resolution of June 5, 1911, was passed would be the amount to which such assistant engineer would be entitled to receive for services rendered from August 1, 1909, to August 15, 1910.

Council had no right to fix the compensation for the period from January 1, 1909, to August 1, 1910. The compensation for this period was to have been fixed by the board of public service. The board employed the assistant engineer and the presumption would be that it also fixed the compensation to be paid.

The acts of the board of public service as to the contract of April 1, 1906, are not given. The contract itself is limited to one year. This does not show that the compensation fixed was limited to one year or to that particular contract. If the compensation was fixed by the board of public service in April, 1906, that compensation would continue until changed by the board, or its power to fix compensation was taken away.

Council could not by resolution passed June 5, 1911, authorize payment of a compensation for that period greater than that fixed by the board of public service.

If an assistant engineer was employed under the original contract of April 1, 1906, at twenty cents per hour and continued to work from year to year he would be presumed to be working for the same compensation unless other provision had been made. The presumption is that the board of public service fixed the compensation of the assistant engineer and that amount would continue as the compensation to be paid until changed.

Payment had not been made for these services and council could in June, 1911, if they acted in good faith and did not abuse their power of discretion, pass a resolution authorizing the auditor to pay for such services at the rate fixed by the board of public service. This would be a recognition of a moral obligation as in the case where council had a right to fix the compensation in the first instance.

In answer to your first question:

The assistant engineer would be entitled to receive, under the resolution of June 5, 1911, the compensation as fixed by the board of public service for services prior to August 1, 1909, and he would be entitled to the compensation stated in the bills before council when said resolution was passed, for services performed from August 1, 1909, to the time when the resolution of August 15, 1910, became effective.

In answer to your first question:

The city engineer would not be authorized to draw compensation for the city at one price for an assistant and pay a less amount to the assistant. The city engineer is not entitled to any part of the compensation to be paid to the assistant.

Your third inquiry involves the right of an engineer to draw pay from the county and city for services on the same day.

No employe can draw pay from two public corporations for the same services unless the work is a joint obligation of two corporations and each is to pay a part thereof. An employe may work a full day for the county and on the same day, but at different hours, perform services for a city. In such case he would be entitled to pay from the county for the time spent in its work and from the city for the time employed in its behalf.

It would be against public policy to permit an engineer who is employed by the day, or hour, to draw pay from the county and city for the same time. In order to draw pay from both the work should be separate and distinct and the work for the city should be performed at a time when he was not under duty to work for the county, or vice versa.

If the engineer, by working overtime, did actually get in the time for which he charged, he is entitled to pay therefor. If he did not get in that time then the bills would be excessive and he would not be entitled to the excessive amount.

This inquiry resolves itself into a question of fact as to whether or not the engineer actually performed the services for which he received pay.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—HOSPITALS, COUNTRY CLUBS, ETC., COME WITHIN THE PURVIEW OF THIS ACT.

Corporations not for profit such as hospitals, country clubs, etc., regularly employing more than five workmen come within the workmen's compensation act and are to be considered employers within the meaning of the compulsory compensation law of 1913.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry of December 17, 1913, wherein you request my opinion as to whether corporations not for profit, such as hospitals, country clubs, etc., having in their employ more than five employes, are to be considered employers within the meaning of paragraph 2, section 13 of the compulsory compensation act of 1913.

Paragraph 2 of section 13 of the act in question reads thus, in defining who shall constitute employers:

> "Every person, firm and private corporation, including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, expressed or implied, orally or written."

Paragraph 2 of section 14, defining employe, workman and operative, uses the following language:

> "Every person, in the service of any firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, orally or written including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

The second paragraph of section 14 includes within its purview, as employes, every person, firm and private corporation having in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly either in the same business, or in or about the same establishment. It will be noted that the disjunctive "or" is used in this connection rather than the conjunctive "and;" hence, it must follow that if five or more workmen are regularly employed in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, the employer comes within the provision of section 13. It may be very plausibly argued that the word "business' carries with it the implication of an enterprise conducted for the purpose of profit, but this does not seem to me to be an entirely accurate characterization of the word.

Lindley, L. J., in Rose vs. Miller, 27 Ch. D., 88, says: "The word means almost anything which is an occupation as distinguished from a pleasure—anything which is an occupation or duty which requires attention as a business." If this definition be accepted, it would seem that the conducting of an enterprise for profit is not essential in order to render the conduct of such enterprise a business. In other words, a business may be something in which no financial gain is made or intended to be made. Even if this word should be given a narrower meaning than I think should be given it, nevertheless, there would be no escape from the alternative expression "in or about the same establishment." An establishment has been defined to be the body of persons composing a business organization, household, or any public or private institution, together with the building or buildings they occupy. (Funk & Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary.) An institution whether public or private (Century Dictionary).

Now it would seem to me that a club, as well as a hospital would come within the foregoing definition of establishment, and being an establishment, if five or more workmen are employed therein, such institution is within the scope of section 13 of the act in question.

The next question is whether or not paragraph 2 of section 14 must be so read as to limit the scope of the second paragraph of section 13. The paragraph to which we are now referring excludes from its operation, in defining employe, workman and operative, any person whose employment is but casual, or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer.

Now the word "trade" is usually considered in connection with the barter of goods for money or for other goods, "business," we have already discussed, and the word "profession" does not apply to a hospital or country club. I think, however, that the word "occupation" is broad enough to cover the carrying on of a club or hospital, and I am really inclined to the belief that the word "business" also covers the same situation. This fact, considered with the fact that the remaining language of the two sections quoted, seems clearly to indicate that employers of five or more workmen who are regularly employed in or about the same establishment, should be included within the scope of the workmen's compensation act, inclines me to the belief that it was not the legislative intent to exclude from the operation of this law hospitals and clubs employing five or more workmen.

Directly answering your question, I desire to say that, in my judgment, corporations not for profit regularly employing more than five workmen in connection with such said hospital or club, are to be considered employers within the meaning of the compulsory compensation act of 1913.

Very truly yours
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY BOARD OF AWARDS—LIABILITY INSURANCE—ON WHOM LIABILITY INSURANCE SHOULD BE PAID—LABORERS EMPLOYED IN FOREIGN STATES.

In the collection of premiums from employers in the state insurance fund no portion should be paid where the employers pay to employes employed or hired in a foreign state, but that part of the pay roll which constitutes payment made to employers of Ohio employes who are hired in Ohio and sent out of the state in the course of their employment should be included.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 17, 1913, you wrote us as follows:

> "It has been the practice of our commission and its predecessors, the state liability board of awards, in the collection of premiums from employers for the state insurance fund, to include in the pay roll of such employers such employes as may have been employed in the state of Ohio and sent out of the state into some foreign state or country to perform services contemplated by the contract or employment. We have not, however, included any portion of the pay roll of such employers paid to employes employed or hired in such foreign state or country.
> "It has also been our practice to pay compensation to employes of Ohio employers who are employed in Ohio and sent out of the state and injured in the course of their employment.
> "A number of employers have questioned the correctness of our construction of the law in this respect, and as the question arises so frequently now that compulsory compensation act is about to become effective, I should appreciate an opinion from your department on the question."

Accompanying your communication is a letter from an employer in which he suggests that if an accident occurs out of the state of Ohio the employe could bring an action if he so desired, and the employer, who had insured in the Ohio fund, would have no protection.

I have embodied this last suggestion in this communication for the reason that my opinion will deal with that phase of the case.

Preliminary to a discussion of the questions involved, I should like to call your attention to the decision of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in re Liability Company, 102 N. E., 693, wherein the facts show that the injured person made a contract with his employer in Massachusetts and took advantage of the compensation act of that state. In the course of his employment the employe was injured in New York, where he incidentally worked. The insurance company had been paid by the employer for insuring his employes in the course of their employment whether within or without the state. The last italicized language was treated by the court as being immaterial because the insurance policy did not add anything to the language of the statute, but merely provided for the performance of the requirements and payment of compensation designated in the act. If the law covered injuries received outside of the state the insurer contracted therefor, otherwise not. While conceding for the purpose of the judgment in that case it was within the power of the legislature to give extra territorial force to the act, the court held that this had not been done, hence the employe had no claim against the insurer.

The cardinal point developed in this case, it will be seen, was the fact that by its terms the law applied only to injuries received within the state. There can be no question that statutes ordinarily fix the rights of parties within the state, and to give them wider operation, apt and unequivocal language must be used, which was not true of the Massachusetts act.

The English decisions support the Massachusetts rule to the effect that unless it is clearly otherwise provided the English workmen's compensation act has no effect beyond the territorial limits of the United Kingdom.

Tomalin vs. Pearson, 2 K. B., 61.
Hicks vs. Maxton, 124 L. T. J., 135.

and also a decision announced in 1912, and reported in volume 2, K. B. reports for that year.

Mr. Bradbury on page 44 of his "Workmen's compensation law" says:

> "Naturally, the compensation laws, like other state statutes, have no extra territorial effect. That is, should the employer and employe both reside in New Jersey, for example, and the employe should be sent into the state of Pennsylvania on the employer's business, and there injured, (there being no compensation law in Pennsylvania), such employe could not recover compensation in New Jersey. The same rule has been established in Great Britian."

From the foregoing it is apparent that we must examine the Ohio act in order to ascertain whether it was the legislative intendment that this act should be given force beyond the state of Ohio. While there are some expressions in the law that might indicate that no such desire was entertained by the general assembly, the law in some respects bearing an analogy to the Massachusetts act, nevertheless a careful inspection of the law will, I think, clearly evince legislative intent to have the act apply to those employes who are employed within the state of Ohio and as an incident to their employment are sent beyond the borders of this state and are there injured.

The second paragraph of section 13, defining what employers shall be subject to the provisions of the act, expressly states that every person, firm and private corporation, including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business are constituted employers.

In the second paragraph of section 14, employe, workman and operative are defined as every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, etc.

Section 22 provides that, except as otherwise provided, every employer mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 13 shall pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium fixed by the state board of awards.

Section 23 exempts employers complying with the provisions of the last named section from liability to respond in damages for injury or death of any employe, "wherever occurring," during the period covered by such premiums so paid into the state insurance fund, or during the time in which the employer is permitted to pay compensation direct to his injured or the dependents of his killed employe.

Section 24, authorizing any employer of less than five workmen to insure in the state fund, expressly states that when he is so insured he shall not be liable in damages, save as provided in the act, for injuries or death of any such employes, "wherever occurring," during the period covered by such premiums.

Section 25, providing for the disbursement of the state insurance fund, requires payment to employes of employers who are insured in said fund, and who have been injured in the course of their employment "wheresoever such injuries have occurred."

Section 27 authorizes any employe, whose employer has failed to comply with the provisions of section 22, and who is injured in the course of his employment, "wheresoever such injury has occurred," and which was not purposely self-inflicted, or his dependents in case of death, in lieu of civil action, to file his application with the said board of awards for compensation.

The language which has been emphasized and italicized in the foregoing, makes manifest the fact that it was the object and scope of this act to include within its purview those employes who are hired in this state and who are injured in the course of their employment outside of Ohio.

With these considerations in mind, and taking the view that I do of the law, the next question will be what force and effect will be given by the courts of other states to this act, in case the employe brings an action against his employer who has contributed to the state insurance fund of this state.

That the act in question is a constitutional and valid enactment is unquestionable in view of the decision of the supreme court in this state in the case of State ex rel. vs. Creamer, 85 O. S., 349. Therefore, it must be assumed that it is in accord with the constitution and the recent amendment thereto, as well as with sound public policy, for the state to provide that an employe may be deprived of his right in action in tort by an enactment as the one herein under discussion. The same theory has been maintained in other states where the constitutionality of similar acts has been under discussion. Under the law of this state, as it now stands, whenever an employer hires a workman or operative, the Ohio law must be read into that contract, the employer saying in substance to the employe: "I shall employ you to perform these services for me at the compensation we have agreed upon, and when you accept such employment, you do so subject to being deprived of certain rights of action against me in case you are injured in the course of your employment, provided I contribute to the state insurance fund the premium required of me by the state board of awards.

The employe, in turn, says in effect to the employer by entering the service: "I accept such employment according to these conditions and I waive any right of action I have against you insofar as the Ohio law deprives me of such rights of action, and I agree to accept compensation out of the state insurance fund, whenever such law requires me so to do."

It is thus apparent that the relationship of employer and employe in this particular is contractual. I wish to emphasize this for the reason that it obviates a discussion of the doctrine of comity, or what may be called international courtesy, with reference to the application and enforcement of wrongful death and personal injury statutes, as such doctrine is enunciated in those decisions arising where an employe has been injured in one state and brings an action in another. I have reference to such cases arising under conflict of such statutes which often exists when the statute of the place of injury is invoked in the courts where the action is instituted.

It is a fundamental principle that, as a general rule, the lex loci governs in actions of contracts, subject to the doctrine that neither by comity nor by the will of the contracting parties, can the public policy of a country be set at naught. In other words, the law of the country where the contract is made will obtain unless the contract is made in one country to be wholly performed in another, or unless the intention of the contracting parties is clearly otherwise, except where such contract is contrary to the public policy of the state wherein it is sought to be enforced. An analogous principle is that announced with reference to insurance to the effect that the law defining the insurer's engagements is that of the place where the company issuing the policy has its seat and where the loss is to be paid. The insurer is liable on the policy when it is good by the law of the state where the insurance has its seat, even though it be bad by the law of the state wherein the insured is situated. (Wharton on the conflict of laws, 3rd edition, section 465.)

It has even been held that a court will not deny the effect of a stipulation to subject to contract to a law of a designated state, so far as it confers rights, or imposes obligations, that are not opposed to the distinctive policy of the foreign. ib. p. 1022.

Mr. Wharton on pages 1062 and 1063 of the foregoing work states that the courts have adopted the rule that the nature, application and interpretation of a contract made in one state or country for the transportation of persons or property from a point in that state or country to a point in another was covered by the laws of the state or country in which the contract is made, and the transportation commences. He also says on page 1077 that it is established by the weight of authority that the validity of a stipulation limiting the amount of the carrier's liability is to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is made and the transportation commences, without reference to the law of destination or that of the place where the loss or injury occurs. This rule is also applicable to the contract of a telegraph company made in one state for the transmission of a telegram to a point in another state. Such contracts are governed by the law of the state in which the contract is made rather than by the law of the state in which it is received. ib. 1082.

In discussing the governing law of torts, Mr. Wharton very succinctly and admirably express the true rule in the following language:

> "So, undoubtedly, any defense based upon the express terms of the contract is governed by the lex loci contractus even though the action be ex delicto."

With these principles in mind it would seem to be clear that when the contract of employment is made in this state and in the course of his employment the employe is sent beyond the borders of Ohio, and while without the state, attending to his employer's business, the employe is injured, he is entitled to receive compensation out of the state insurance fund, and in case he sues his employer, he will be bound by the terms of his employment, and will be deprived of his defenses if he would have been deprived of them had the injury occurred in this state. That is to say, wheresoever he may be injured he must be governed by the Ohio law. I think it may safely be assumed that the other states and territories of the United States will, by virtue of the principles of comity, uphold the Ohio law, unless, of course, it be in direct conflict with the public policy of the state where the action is brought. The rules laid down in Massachusetts and in England do not deny this doctrine, but merely hold that the laws there under consideration did not apply to injuries that occurred without the borders of the country enacting the law relied upon. Taking the view that I do of the Ohio law, viz.: that it does cover injuries received without the state, this, of course, renders those decisions inapplicable to the matter under discussion.

An interesting decision upon this question arose in New York. One Anton V. Schweitzer sought to recover damages from his employer, Hamburg American Line, for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of a defective windlass furnished by the master for his use. Defendant denied the averments of the petition, alleged contributory negligence and set up, in substance, that in the month of August, 1906, plaintiff was employed by defendant as a member of the crew on defendant's steamship, Pretoria, which sailed, under the German flag, from Hamburg, Germany, to New York, and was a German ship; that both plaintiff and defendant were German subjects at the time of the making of the contract of employment, which provided for a voyage to New York and return, and was entered into according to the laws of Germany. During such voyage plaintiff sustained the injuries he complained of. It was also alleged that at the time the contract was made and while plaintiff was on the vessel and when he sustained the injury,

> "it was and now is the law of the empire of Germany that persons who are employed on board of a German seagoing vessel sailing under the German flag, as members of the crew, or in any capacity whatever, and who, while on board such vessel in pursuance of such employment, or in consequence thereof, sustain personal injuries by reason of any cause whatsoever, shall have no right to claim, receive, sue for or recover any compensation from the owner of such vessel, or from any person connected with or responsible for the management or operation of such vessel, for the injuries so sustained, or for the damage arising therefrom, unless it shall have been determined by the judgment of a court of competent criminal jurisdiction that the injuries were wilfully or intentionally caused by the person against whom such claim is made or suit brought; that plaintiff's injuries were not wilfully or intentionally caused by the defendant or by any person for whose acts or omissions the defendant is responsible, and it has not been determined by any court or authority that the injuries were caused wilfully or intentionally * * *; that it is and was the law of the empire of Germany that a person who is employed on board a German seagoing vessel * * * and who sustains personal injuries through the carelessness * * * or any neglect of duty owed by the owner * * * or person responsible for the management or operation of the vessel, shall have the right to claim * * * compensation * * * exclusively from the society organized and existing under and in pursuance of the sea accident insurance law of the empire of Germany."

To this answer the defendant, under the New York practice, moved for an order directing plaintiff to serve a reply. The lower court denied this and defendant appealed to the appellate division of the supreme court. The court there decided that if the facts stated are only capable of denial a reply was unnecessary as they were deemed to be controverted, but when new matter set forth in a plea in bar is such as will constitute a complete defense it will simplify matters if a reply is required. Hence the question in this case was whether the facts, stated in the answer might, if true, constitute a defense.

What a foreign law is, is a question of fact and therefore the answer contained a statement of issuable facts. The court says, with reference to the legal question here involved:

> "The relation between the parties was contractual, and the answer alleges that the performance of the contract was to commence at Hamburg, but that said contract was not to be completed until the return of the vessel to that port. There is authority for holding, under such circumstances, that the lex loci contractus will control."

The holding of the court was that plaintiff be required to reply to part of the answer.

Schweitzer vs. Hamburg, etc., 149 App. Div. 900.

The case was subsequently tried and a verdict rendered for plaintiff. A motion to set aside verdict and for new trial was filed and sustained.

Schweitzer vs. Hamburg Co., 138 N. Y. Supp., 944.

In this decision Judge Kapper took the view that the foregoing decision seemed to hold in effect that the German law, if proved, constituted a complete defense, and it had been established more completely than the statement of it in answer quoted in the decision by the appellate division. It must be noted, however, that under the German law the insurance fund is created by mutual contributions of employer and employe and that it is only under the terms of the law that the employe is taken into the service. "If it is ever," says the court, "to be held in a master and servant negligence action that the lex loci contractus which is foreign to the forum is to prevail, notwithstanding the action is ex delicto, and is brought in the forum where the cause of action arose, this seems to me to be that case."

It was also held that the German law was not contrary to the public policy and laws of New York, and, therefore, it was a bar to the maintenance of the action.

In Pensahene vs. Anddore Co. 138 N. Y., Supp. 947, the court had before it a demurrer to a complaint based upon the elective compensation of New Jersey. Decedent was a resident of New York and was employed by defendant in New Jersey. While in such employ he was injured and as a result of such injuries, died. The New Jersey act is set out in the complaint, which averred that the sum of $2,400 was due by reason of the implied contract entered into in New Jersey at the time of decedent's employment in New Jersey. The court held that: (a) the lex loci contractus controlled the rights of the parties and the action being transitory it existed in every place where the proper parties for its enforcement could be found; (b) the law of New Jersey was not contrary to the public policy of New York. From this it, of course, followed that the demurrer was overruled.

Albanese vs. Stewart, 138 N. Y., Supp. 942, decided at about the same time, held that the New Jersey act governed an injury received in New Jersey. This decision is quoted in Pendar vs. Machine Co. 87, Atl. 1, 3 (R. I.).

The case of Pensahone vs. Auditore Co., supra, was carried to the appellate division where the decision of the lower court was reversed and leave granted plaintiff to file an amended complaint. The decision of four of the five justices before whom the case was heard was based upon the theory that the New Jersey law only applied where the contract of hiring was made in New Jersey, and the complaint failed to show this. These justices refused to concur with justice Woodward who wrote a separate opinion, as they held that his statement was obiter insofar as it went further than a mere discussion of the complaint.

The opinion of Justice Woodward is to the effect that the inference was that the contract was made in New York, and therefore, the New Jersey law could not be read into it; and that the New Jersey act was contrary to the public policy of New York.

Categorically answering your question, I desire to say that, in my judgment, your practice has unquestionably been correct in not including any portion of the payroll of employers paid to employes employed or hired in a foreign state or country, and in including that part of the payroll which constitutes payments made to employes of Ohio employers who are hired in Ohio, and sent out of the state in the course of their employment. You have been correct in paying the latter class of employes compensation when they are injured in the course of their employment, even though such injury occurs beyond the boundaries of the state of Ohio.

I am also of the opinion that when the injury occurs without the state the employer, who contributes to the state insurance fund of Ohio, may rely upon the Ohio act to the same extent as he could if the action were brought in Ohio and the employe there injured, provided, of course, that the contract of employment was made in this state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY INSURANCE—INTERSTATE AND INTRASTATE COMMERCE —EMPLOYERS ENGAGED IN TRANSPORTING CARGOES ON THE GREAT LAKES ARE WITHIN THE PURVIEW OF THE OHIO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Ohio employers hiring five or more employes regularly in the business of transporting intrastate or interstate commerce by water are within the purview of the Ohio workmen's compensation act and are liable to contribute to the insurance funds, and such employer will have in the admiralty courts the same defense as any other Ohio employer contributing to the state insurance fund who is sued in the state court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 28, 1913, you enclose a copy of a letter from Messrs. Goulder, Day, White & Garry, and state that this letter and your answer suggests a legal question upon which your commission desires my opinion.

The facts, as gleaned from these letters, are that a great number of vessel companies operating upon the Great Lakes and tributary waters are Ohio corporations, whose employes consist, to a large extent, of men employed on their boats which are engaged in interstate commerce and are divided into several classes, among which may be mentioned the bulk freighter class, which takes cargoes of coal, ore, grain, lumber, etc., for transportation between ports upon the Great Lakes, and which vessels are operated a large part of the time in waters outside of the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio and sometimes in Canadian waters; passenger lines plying between different states; package freighters, acting as common carriers between points in different states.

The question arising upon this state of facts is whether those companies come within the purview of the workmen's compensation act of this state, and whether the corporations contributing to such fund will be protected in case of accidents happening to members of the crews while the boats are in waters outside of the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio.

In a recent opinion to your commission I have fully discussed the question of the enforcement of the workmen's compensation act of this state, by the courts of other states, when accidents occur in such other states to an employe who has been hired by an Ohio employer in this state, and whose work requires him at times to go beyond the borders of Ohio. The conclusion at which I there arrived was that the workmen's compensation act of this state was intended to cover such injuries as occurred outside of Ohio, when the contract of employment took place in this state and the employe was injured in the due course of his employer's business. In view of the full expression of my position upon this matter, I shall not here further discuss that phase of the question.

The preliminary question having been disposed of in the opinion to which I have just referred, the next question for discussion is whether the workmen's compensation act of this state applies to the class of carriers referred to in the foregoing statement of facts.

Employers, as defined in section 13 of the act in question, (103 O. L., 77), comprise every person, firm and private corporation, including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written. As defined in section 14, the terms "employe," "workman" and "operative," as used in the act, are to be construed to mean every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, not, however, including any person whose employment is but casual or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer. These sections both literally and in spirit clearly indicate that such employers as those hereinbefore spoken of, are within the purview of the workmen's compensation act of this state, unless there is some federal inhibition which precludes the possibility of such construction.

Section 2 of article III of the constitution of the United States provided that:

> "The judicial power shall extend * * * to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" while the federal judicial code provides that the district courts shall have jurisdiction

> "of all civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common law remedy where the common law is competent to give it."

The following provision of the judiciary act has also been carried into the said code:

> "The jurisdiction vested in the courts of the United States in cases and proceedings hereinafter mentioned, shall be exclusive of the courts of the several states * * *; of all civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it."

It has also been contended that the Ohio act would be an interference with interstate commerce if construed to apply to interstate carriers by water, and consequently would be invalid in violation of that provision of the federal constitution vesting in congress the power

> "To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states and with Indian tribes."

It is fundamental that the state has, through its power of police regulation, the right indirectly to affect interstate commerce in certain particulars, in the absence of legislation by congress upon the same subject. The regulation of the relationship of master and servant is one of the instances wherein the state may legislate until such time as congress has enacted a law regarding the same subject-matter. Congress has not yet legislated upon the liability of an interstate water carrier to his employe while both are engaging in interstate commerce, and consequently it is not a valid objection to state legislation of this character to assert that it indirectly affects interstate commerce. This matter has been decided in a discussion of the Washington act to be found in Stoll vs. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 205 Federal, 169.

Recurring to the question arising by virtue of the jurisdiction of admiralty and maritime cases being vested exclusively in the federal courts, we think it may be safely assumed that the common law remedy is saved to suitors where the common law is competent to afford such remedy. The right to proceed at common law is the continuance in plaintiff of the right to proceed in personam, and therfore, when an action is brought directly against the ship owner for damages the action may be brought either in admiralty or at common law, the jurisdiction being concurrent. Of course, if the suit is brought in the state court, the state statute would unquestionably obtain, but it is contended that if the action was brought in admiralty, the enforcement of the act in that court would result in the curtailment of admiralty jurisdiction by abolishing a cause of action of which admiralty court had jurisdiction. This situation would arise when the employer had contributed to the state insurance fund and the employe was not injured by the wilful act of his employer or failure of the latter to comply with statutes enacted for the benefit of the employe.

Preliminary to a discussion of this question, it is necessary that we ascertain the position of the federal courts upon the question of the effect given state statutes in admiralty courts, as well as what state statute is applicable and where a conflict may arise between the statutes of different states.

In the case of Steamship Co. vs. Gilmore, 207 U. S., 398, the facts arose out of a collision of two vessels belonging to a Delaware corporation. The accident occurred on high seas. The Delaware statutes authorized the personal representatives of a decedent to maintain an action and recover damages for wrongful death of such decedent. The court held that the Delaware statute applied, although the proceedings were brought in admiralty. Had it not been for such statute no action could have been maintained because, according to maritime law, the cause of action abates with the death of the decedent. In other words, there is no survivorship. This case is also authority for the holding that a statute of the character of that of Delaware is not repugnant to the commerce or admiralty clauses of the federal constitution where congress has not legislated on the subject. The substance of the holding in the foregoing case is that where the law of a state to which a vessel belongs gives a right of action for wrongful death, the right of action given by the law of the domicile or flag will be enforced in an admiralty court of the United States. See also Deslione vs. Campagnic Generale Transat lantique, 210 U. S., 95.

In Monongahela, etc., vs. Shinnerer, 196 federal, 375, it was held that a state statute might be enforced in admiralty by proceedings in personam. In So. Pacific Co. vs. Da Costa, 190 federal, 689, an alien was killed by the bursting of a steam valve, while employed as coal passer on a steamship. The defendant was a corporation resident of Kentucky. It was held that the law of that state governed although the accident happened on high seas. "A statute of a state may be applied to a suit in admiralty to recover for a death on the high seas arising purely from tort, when the vessel belonged to the state in question." Fisher vs. Transportation Co., 162 federal 974.

A leading case is that of McDonald vs. Malloy, 77 N. Y., 546, wherein an action was brought to recover damages for wrongful death arising out of the destruction, by fire, of a steamer at high seas. The owners of the boat were residents of New York and the vessel was there registered. It was held that: (a) A state to which a vessel belongs may be regarded as the sovereignty whose laws will follow her until she comes within the jurisdiction of some other government; (b) Civil rights of action for matters occurring at sea on board a vessel belonging to one of the states must depend upon the laws of that state unless they arose out of some matter over which jurisdiction had been vested in and recognized by the United States government.

In Cavanaugh vs. Navigation Co., 13 N. Y. Supp., 540, a passenger was killed in a collision on high seas. The defendant was a British corporation owning and navigating the colliding vessels. The English wrongful death statutes were hold to govern, and the limitation there fixed, obtained.

A leading and interesting case is that of Thompson Towing & Wrecking Co. vs. McGregor et al. 207 Fed., 209. There a proceeding in admiralty was brought by the Towing Co. for limitation of liability respecting a boiler explosion which resulted in the death of the decedent of one party to the action, and the injury of another party interested in the case. The appellee brought civil suit in the county courts of Michigan and appellant then proceeded in the federal court for limitation of liability. Among the objections urged against one of the claimants, was that the accident occurred in Canadian waters, and hence the right of action of the decedent was governed by the law of that country under which suit was barred. The court held that the accident had happended in Canadian waters and the right of action as established by the Michigan statute was in force. This was held to be true because the boat which was blown up was registered and owned in Michigan and was there domiciled. Hence it was to be treated as part of Michigan territory. Until congress has acted, the state might, as respects its interests, enact proper statutes concerning matter within the federal power. This decision also maintains the doctrine that such construction does not require the giving of extra territorial effect to statutes, because the vessel under such circumstances is constructively a part of the territory of the nation to which the owner belongs. In Murray vs. Pacific Coast S. S. Co., 207 Fed., 688, the very question here involved was before the district court of the western district of Washington, southern division, but was not decided. An action had been brought against the Steamship Co. for damages for an injury received by plaintiff while in the employ of defendant. In his complaint the plaintiff alleged that the defendant had not contributed to the Washington workmen's compensation act. Defendant answered alleging that the act was unconstitutional. A demurrer to this answer was sustained. The court held that the suit was one to enforce a common law remedy and was not a proceeding against any res, and was therefore not within the exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty. As the plaintiff charged that the defendant was in default under the workmen's compensation act, such act was inapplicable, and therefore defendant's contention that the law was unconstitutional would not be determined, since it was no bar to plaintiff's right to enforce his common law suit in either event.

The foregoing cases undoubtedly established the proposition that if a vessel is owned in Ohio, she constructively constitutes a part of the territory of that state, and in the absence of congressional legislation, the Ohio law, at least insofar as it pertains to the actions for wrongful death, is applicable, even though the accident occasioning death should have happened on the high seas or within the territorial jurisdiction of another country. It is urged, however, that the Ohio workmen s compensation act abolishes a cause of action of which the admiralty court has jurisdiction, in case the employer contributes to the state insurance fund, and in so doing it divests the admiralty court of certain jurisdiction, thereby rendering the act inapplicable or invalid insofar as cases in admiralty are concerned.

Section 23 of the act in question (103 O. L., 81) provides that employers who comply with the provisions of the act shall not be liable in damages at common law or by statute for injury or death to any employe during the period by the premium paid into the state insurance fund. I cannot bring myself to the belief that the foregoing provision of the Ohio law, in any way, limits or is intended to limit the jurisdiction of admiralty courts. The state law grants to the employe a certain right to participate in the state insurance fund, and requires the employer to pay the premium upon which the employe's right is based. The employer, in turn, is granted the privilege of exemption from liability at common law or by suit. These rights do not affect the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts, but, on the contrary, may be enforced in the proper federal tribunal. The jurisdiction of the tribunal exists and may be invoked to give effect to the statutory rights. The case is tried in the admiralty court just as it would be in the state courts. The federal court has complete and full jurisdiction to administer the law of the state between persons who come within its jurisdiction. If an action that would have been barred under maritime law, continues to exist and will be enforced in admiralty courts because the state statute provides for the suvival of such causes of action, then it would seem that state statutes applicable to injuries occurring to a servant by reason of the negligence of his master, on high seas and navigable waters, should and will be enforced in admiralty proceedings. In other words, the statute must be applied in admiralty just as if the suit had been brought in the state courts; and any elements of the cause of action or of the defense, which are open to the parties under the state statutes, may be relied upon in admiralty. The following cases throw some light upon this question:

Ex parte McNiel, 13 Wallace, 236.
Bigelow vs. Nickerson, 70 Fed. 113, 30 L. R. A., 336, 340.
Quintette vs. Bisso, 136 Fed. 825, 5 L. R. A., N. S., 303, 314.
City of Norwalk, 55 Fed., 98.

For the foregoing reasons it is my opinion that Ohio employers, hiring five or more employes regularly, in the business of transporting intrastate or interstate commerce by water, are within the purview of the Ohio workmen's compensation act, and are required to contribute to the state insurance fund. When they have contributed, and an employe is injured, the employer will have, in the admiralty courts, the same defense as would have any other Ohio employer contributing to the state insurance fund, who has been sued in the state court.

It has been suggested that if the accident should happen in the territory of jurisdiction of some other state or country, the courts of such other state or country would not enforce the provisions of the Ohio law. In my judgment, by virtue of the doctrine of comity, the Ohio law will be held by the courts of other states to govern actions brought under the circumstances suggested.

I have fully developed my views concerning this phase of the question in the other opinion, to which I referred at the outset of this communication, and I do not think it is necessary for me here to reiterate the views there expressed. Several of the decisions there cited, and especially that of Schweitzer vs. Hamburg, etc., Co., 138 N. Y. Supp., 944, is very pertinent to the matter in hand.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CAPITAL STOCK—INCREASE OF CAPITAL STOCK—PREFERRED STOCK—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

A full subscription of the common stock already issued is not a condition precedent to the increase of capital stock of a corporation by issuance and disposition of preferred stock as provided in section 8699, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—With your assent and at the request of Messrs. Johnson & Jones, attorneys at law of Ironton, Ohio, I have reconsidered my opinion to you under date of April 18, 1911. In that opinion I held that sections 8698 and 8699, General Code, must be read in connection with each other, and that the condition precedent to the exercise of the general power provided for by the first of these sections must be understood as applicable to the second of them; so that a corporation may not increase its capital stock by issuing and disposing of preferred stock unless the capital stock as already authorized is fully subscribed and an installment of 10% paid on each share thereof.

The opinion as originally expressed states propositions to which I still adhere but the conclusion which I reached therein is no longer satisfactory to me because of other circumstances to which my attention has been called. Therefore, I have carefully reconsidered the entire question, and upon such reconsideration have come to a conclusion opposite to that already stated.

My present opinion is, then, that the full subscription of the capital stock already authorized is not a condition precedent to the increase of capital stock of a corporation by issuance and disposition of preferred stock as provided in section 8699, General Code.

In the first place, I no longer hold the view that the joint rendition of the two sections leads to the conclusion expressed in the former opinion. That is to say, while I am still satisfied that the two statutes must be read together, relating as they do to the same subject-matter, i. e., increase of capital stock, yet the effect of thus reading them together is not that described in the first opinion.

When the two statutes are placed side by side as they happen to be in the present General Code, and considered with respect to their joint effect one upon the other, it appears that while both relate to the increase of capital stock, and while by a liberal interpretation both might be said to relate to such an increase in the same sense, i. e., as an increase in the amount of the authorized capital stock, yet section 8698 is general in its terms, applying to all increases in authorized capital stock, while section 8699 is particular in its terms and relates only to a certain kind of increase in capital stock, i. e., increase by issuance of preferred stock only. This being the case occasion is afforded for the application of the somewhat familiar rule that in the absence of a clear expression of a contrary intent, a statute covering an exceptional or special case is to be regarded as an exception to the rule of another statute prescribing the proceedings to be followed generally. This is especially true where both statutes are complete in themselves.

Now section 8699 is complete in itself despite its reference to the filing of the certificate as provided for in the preceding section. This reference to the preceding section clearly relates to the certificate only and cannot be construed as an adoption of all the conditions precedent referred to in section 8698 so as to make them apply as well to the action to which section 8699 applies. For if section 8699 is, by reason of the reference therein, to section 8698 to be regarded as qualified by what is found in section 8698, then it seems to me it must necessarily follow that all the conditions of section 8698 must be attached to the performance of the act described in section 8699. That is to say, if any of the conditions precedent, referred to in section 8698 are to govern in cases provided for in section 8699, then all of them must govern including the meeting of stockholders, which is as much of a condition precedent to the general increase of capital stock authorized by section 8698 as is a subscription of the stock already authorized. Clearly, it cannot be held that such a meeting is necessary in order to do what is contemplated by section 8699. Therefore, is must be held, I think, that section 8699 is complete in itself when read in connection with section 8698, and that the only conditions of the lawful increase of capital stock by issuance and disposition of preferred stock are those found in that section.

This course of reasoning really eliminates certain collateral considerations which, however, point in the same direction. Thus it is pointed out that original section 8698 could have referred only to common stock when it spoke of "capital stock," because prior to the enactment of what is now section 8667, General Code, in its present form (as section 3235a R. S.) the original authorized capital stock of a corporation could consist of common stock only; so that the only way in which the first part of section 8698 could have been used at that time was for the purpose of increasing the common stock; and the meaning of the whole section would be governed by the necessary application of its first provision. From this it would follow that section 8699 when it was Revised Statutes section 3263, and prior to the enactment of section 3235a, R. S., did not provide for an increase of capital stock such as was contemplated by what was then section 3262, R. S., which is now section 8698, General Code, but for a special kind of increase of capital stock entirely separate and apart therefrom.

In fact the only complication encountered when all the related statutes are examined is that now, by reason of section 8667, General Code, the original authorized capital stock of a corporation may consist of both common and preferred stock. However, the consideration which I have given to the leglislative history of the two sections confirms the view that section 8699 is a provision for a special case, whereas section 8698 is a provision general in its nature, so that the rule of interpretation above referred to applies.

I have given full consideration to the objection that the conclusion at which I have now arrived will make it possible for a corporation to increase its common stock without the necessity of a full subscription of its existing common stock and in an indirect way. That is, if the corporation may increase its capital stock by issuing and disposing of preferred stock without having its existing common stock fully subscribed for, it may, when authority to have preferred stock is obtained, by amendment, change such preferred stock again into common stock; the result of which action would be, of course, that the common stock would stand as increased without the original common stock having been subscribed for in full as required by section 8698, General Code.

Even if this objection were well taken I should not deem it material as reflecting upon the meaning of the statutes as I find them. I do not, however, think that the objection is well taken, being of the opinion, although I do not desire to express a final view upon the matter, that authority to issue and dispose of preferred stock cannot be converted into authority to have common stock by amendment. The only thing which may be accomplished by amendment other than those specifically referred to in section 8719, General Code, is to "add to them (the articles of incorporation) anything omitted from it which lawfully might have been provided for originally in such articles."

It will not be contended, of course, that it would be proper originally to provide in the articles anything with respect to that kind of preferred stock, if I may so put it, authority to have which might subsequently be acquired by complying with section 8699, General Code. That is to say, section 8699, General Code, authorizes an issue of preferred stock not provided for in the original articles of incorporation. Therefore anything with respect to a change in the matter of the stock issued under authority of section 8699 is manifestly not a thing which might have been provided for in the original articles of incorporation. Therefore, when special authority to have increased preferred stock is acquired under section 8699, General Code, that authority can never be converted into authority to have common stock. In fact I am of the opinion that no subsequent action of any kind can be predicated upon the special authority, the exercise of which is provided for in section 8699, General Code.

Other questions have been considered and the legislative history of the related statutes has been carefully examined; but I do not deem it necessary to burden this opinion with a lengthy statement of all the considerations which I have weighed in reaching my conclusion.

I am of the opinion, principally for the reasons stated, that the subscription for all the shares of stock authorized at the time such action is taken is not a condition precedent to the exercise of the right to increase the capital stock by the issuance and disposition of preferred stock specially provided for in section 8699, General Code.

I hand you herewith the certificate of increase of capital stock of the Marting Iron & Steel Company. The conclusions already expressed warrant me in advising you to receive and file this certificate upon the payment of the proper fee therefor.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MAYOR—VILLAGE COUNCIL—MAYOR MAY VOTE IN CASE OF A TIE.

Section 4255, General Code, makes the mayor of a village a member of council to the extent that he has the right to vote in case of a tie, consequently, when the council consists of an even number of members, and these are evenly divided, the mayor may cast a deciding vote; an ordinance so voted on is legally passed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1914.

HON. NELSON J. BREWER, Village Solicitor, Euclid, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 11, 1914, as follows:

FACTS:

"E. is a village. The council thereof consists of six members, all elected at large. An ordinance is 'fully and distinctly read on three different days,' as provided by law. On motion to adopt, the vote stood three for and three against. The mayor thereupon voted for the adoption of the ordinance and declared the same carried.

QUESTION:

"Is the ordinance legally passed?"

Section 4255 of the General Code, provides:

"The mayor shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January, next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. He shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation, and shall have the powers hereinafter conferred, perform the duties hereinafter imposed, and such other powers and duties as are provided by law. He shall be the president of the council, and shall preside at all regular and special meetings thereof, but shall have no vote except in case of a tie."

Section 4224 of the General Code, provides in part as follows:

"No ordinance shall be passed by council without the concurrence of a majority of all members elected thereto."

In volume 28 of Cyc., at page 337, I find the following:

"It has been held that where the mayor is only entitled to vote in case of a tie, and a majority of all the 'members elect' of the council is required to pass a measure, the mayor cannot vote, when the members are equally divided, so as to give such majority, and is not to be counted in determining whether the measure has been passed."

In support of this proposition, the case of State vs. Gray, 23 Neb., 265, is cited and in the 1913 supplement of Cyc., the case of Merriam vs. Railroad is cited on the same proposition.

In both of these cases the presiding officer of council is held not to be a member of council within the provision laid down by the statute, that "No ordinance shall be passed by council without the concurrence of a majority of all the members elected thereto."

It is said in Dillon on municipal corporation, vol. 2, page 836 (note to section 513):

"The language of the decisions which declares that a mayor who is only a presiding officer with a casting vote in case of a tie is not a member of the council, must not be taken in its absolute and literal sense. He is a member for the purpose of presiding with a vote in the contingency specified. It is anomalous that he should take any part in the proceedings of the council and not be regarded as a member. Carrollton vs. Clark, 21 Ill. App. 74. When the statute confers upon the mayor the right to preside and to give a casting vote in case of a tie, he is so far a member of the council that the aldermen or councilmen cannot deprive him of these rights. State vs. Yates, 19 Mont., 239; McCourt vs. Beam, 42 Oreg. 41."

To my mind, the doctrine laid down by Judge Dillon in his work on municipal corporations, above quoted, is the correct one and I am of the opinion that section 4255 of the General Code, in giving the mayor the right to vote in the case of a tie, makes him a member of council to that extent and for that purpose and that therefore, when the council is composed of an even number of members and these are evenly divided, the mayor may cast the deciding vote.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the ordinance you refer to was legally passed.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ENGINEER — REFEREE — PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY — CONTINGENT FUND.

When the state board of health employs an engineer as a referee on public water supply matter, such engineer may be paid for his services from the contingent fund of said department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1914.

DR. E. F. MCCAMPBELL, Secretary, State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your two letters of late date, and in reply to your inquiry as to what funds may be used to pay referee engineer in the Greenville matter, desire to say section 1257, General Code, reads:

> "If an order of the state board of health, when approved by the governor and attorney general, and made in pursuance of the provisions of this chapter relating to public water supply, is not acceptable to any city, village, corporation or owner shall have the right to appeal, as follows: The necessity and reasonableness of such order may be submitted to two reputable and experienced sanitary engineers, one to be chosen by such city, village, corporation or owner, and the other by the board, who shall not be a regular employe. Such examiners shall act as referees. If the engineers so chosen are unable to agree, they shall choose a third engineer of like standing, and the vote of the majority shall be final."

Section 1258, General Code, reads:

> "Such referee engineers may affirm, modify, or reject the order of the state board of health submitted to them, and their decision, as reported in writing to the governor and attorney general, which shall be rendered within a reasonable time, shall be accepted by the state board of health, and shall be enforced by the board in the manner provided for in this chapter. The fees and expenses of the referee engineers shall be equally divided between the city, village, corporation or owner requesting such reference and the state board of health."

These two sections when construed together provide for a reference of the reasonableness of any order of your board to arbitration of a board of engineers, one to be selected by the municipality, one by your board, and in the event of their failure to agree, a third to be selected by the two; the fees and expenses of the same to be equally divided.

The question of your power to enter upon the reference and make the expense is not at issue, it only being desired to know from what fund, if any, the same may be paid in the absence of a specific appropriation for the purpose.

You state that you have an appropriation for "contingencies under the general head of contract and open order service."

That this reference is a contingency which is liable to arise cannot be doubted, that it may or may not present itself is clear but when it does it cannot be avoided nor evaded by your board under the sections above quoted. It is your duty upon demand, therefore by a municipality, or of any one not satisfied with an order of your board, and being advised of the selection of a referee engineer to meet the demand by a like appointment, and an arrangement by which the arbitration might be had at the earliest period of time and the expense so incurred is unavoidable and must be met.

I am of the opinion that you have full authority to pay the same from your contingent fund, and therefore advise you to that effect.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CENSUS—CENSUS BUREAU ESTIMATE—NUMBER OF SALOON LICENSES GRANTED IN A TOWNSHIP.

Township officials have no authority to take a census to determine the number of saloons that may be permitted. The liquor license board shall be governed by the last estimate of the United States census bureau in order to determine the number of saloon licenses to be granted in a township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 27th, we received from Hon. Charles M. Milroy, prosecuting attorney of Lucas county, Ohio, the following inquiry:

> "Inquiry has been made at this office relative to authority of the board of trustees of Washington township, this county, in the matter of having a census taken of the population of said township for the purpose of determining the maximum number of licenses that may be granted for trafficking in intoxicating liquors.
> "It appears that the population of said township at the last federal census, taken in 1910, was 5,297. Upon this basis, ten licenses have been granted. It is contended that the present population is considerably in excess of the number shown by the last federal census, and hence that the maximum number of licenses which may be granted in Washington township is in excess of the number already granted."

We are addressing the opinion to you and sending a copy of the same to Mr. Milroy.

Section 44 of the Greenlund license act provides as follows:

> "In determining the maximum number of licenses which shall be granted in any municipal corporation or township of the state, the license commissioners shall be governed in determining the population of said political subdivision by any official census which shall have been taken therein within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted. If no such official census of the population has been taken, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau. * * *"

As far as I am able to discover, there is no provision for the taking of an official census by the authorities of a township. Hence, it is my opinion that in such political subdivisions there cannot be an official census taken by the township authorities. As the section provides that if no such official census of the population has been taken the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau, in order to determine the number of saloon licenses to be granted in the township, it would be necessary for some person having the authority to secure from the United States census bureau the proper estimates.

The last United States census, 1910, gives the population of Washington township, Lucas county, Ohio, as 4,789. The state liquor licensing board obtained from the United States census bureau the estimates made by that bureau for Washington township for the month of November, 1913. The estimate of the United States bureau, based on the 1910 census, fixed the population of said township, in November, 1913, at 5,297. It was upon this basis that ten licenses were apportioned to Washington township.

As section 44 provides that the commissioners shall be governed, in determining the population of political subdivisions, by the official census which has been taken therein within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted, I take it that when the basis is to be fixed by the estimates of the United States census bureau, made for the years intervening between the decennials, these estimates will also be for a time immediately preceding the year for which the licenses are to be granted; hence, there can be no other estimate obtained for the purpose of determining the number of licenses for said township until immediately preceding the next license year.

You are correct in your view that there is a distinction drawn between the official census and estimates of the United States census bureau. The official census is taken for the decennial period; the estimates are based upon the population as shown by the census, with such addition as the estimated increase will make. But, as stated above, since the state board, in fixing the number of licenses at ten, based that upon the estimate that they had received from the United States census bureau for that township, in November, 1913, this number cannot be increased unless the estimate obtained immediately preceding the next license year would justify a greater number for the next succeeding year.

Trusting that this fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNION CEMETERY—LAND TITLE—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

The city cemetery at Greenville, Ohio, is a union cemetery, and therefore, not under the control of the director of public service of that city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1914.

HON. H. F. DERSHEM, City Solicitor, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of late date in which you inquire, after stating facts as to title:

> "I desire your opinion as to whether or not, under the state of facts above given, this is a union cemetery to be managed and controlled under the sections above set out, or a city cemetery to be controlled exclusively by the director of public service, under such rules and regulations as the council may prescribe."

The cemetery in question was acquired in four parcels:

1. In 1853, by a conveyance to the Greenville cemetery association, its successors, etc. This association conveyed the same in August 1877 to the incorporated village of Greenville for its use and that of Greenville township in common.

2. August 18, 1877, 2.09 acres conveyed to the incorporated village of Greenville without any stipulation as to user.

3. December 28, 1882, ____ acres adjoining above to the village of Greenville, without any stipulation as to user.

4. 4.27 acres conveyed to the city of Greenville for the use of its inhabitants and the inhabitants of Greenville township, Darke county in common for cemetery purposes.

Tracts 1 and 4, assuming that the city of Greenville is successor to the village of the same name, are held for the common use of the city and township; the other tracts were apparently conveyed to the village of Greenville as additions to the cemetery, the title to which was held by it in common for the use of itself and Greenville township.

Section 4160, General Code, reads:

> "The title to, and right of possession of, public graveyards, and burial grounds, located within a city, and set apart and dedicated as public graveyards or burial grounds, and grounds used as such by the public but not dedicated, except those owned or under the care of a religious or benevolent society, or an incorporated company or association, are hereby vested in the corporation where such graveyard or burial ground is located."

Section 4174, General Code, reads:

> "The title to, and right of possession of public graveyards and burial grounds, located within a village and set apart and dedicated as public graveyards or burial grounds, grounds used as such by the public, but not dedicated, except those owned or under the care of a religious or benevolent society, or an incorporated company or association, are hereby vested in the corporation where such graveyard or burial ground is located."

Section 4183, General Code, reads:

> "The councils of two or more municipal corporations, or of such corporation or corporations, and the trustees of a township, when conveniently located for that purpose, may unite in the establishment and management of a cemetery, by the purchase or appropriation of land therefor, not exceeding in extent one hundred acres, to be paid for as hereinafter provided."

You further state that for some years past this cemetery has been managed and controlled under the laws in regard to union cemeteries.

If this is held to be a city cemetery it is under the control of the director of public service of the city.

Insofar as your information goes, the only action of the city, other than what may be assumed from the fact that it has succeeded to all the rights, title and the like formerly held by the village of Greenville, is found in the fact that the deed for the fourth tract, 4.27 acres, was to the city for the common use of its inhabitants and those of the township of Greenville, and its participation in controlling the same as a union cemetery.

The above deed being in full harmony with the conveyance of the first tract and not in conflict with the title to the second and third, must be given full consideration in fixing the status of the cemetery, and when considered in the light of the action of the city as above stated, to my mind makes it a union cemetery, and therefore, not under the control of the director of public service of the city of Greenville.

Many inquiries have been made concerning the effect of the act of April 18, 1913, 103 O. L. 272, wherein sections 4184 and 4185 of the General Code are repealed, and said matter has been considered by this department, and a copy of my opinion on that subject to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices has been sent Mr. Meeker.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMMON PLEAS COURT—JURISDICTION—RIGHT TO ENTERTAIN APPLICATIONS FOR CLERK HIRE.

If the county commissioners have refused to make an allowance, the court of common pleas has jurisdiction to entertain application made by county officers for clerk hire and make such allowance to said several officers as the necessities of their respective offices in the judgment of the court might require.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1914.

HON. LEVI B. MOORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of January 16, 1914, asking opinion of me, from which it appears that in November, 1913, several of the county officers of Pike county made application to the board of county commissioners pursuant to the provisions of section 2980, General Code, for allowance to said respective officers for clerk hire, etc., during the year 1914, and that all of the applications were rejected on the ground taken by the county commissioners that no one of the officers involved required the attention of any person other than the officers elected thereto.

You further say that some of said county officers are now contemplating the making of applications to the common pleas court, or a judge thereof, for allowances for such purposes under favor of the provisions of section 2980-1, General Code.

The questions presented are:

> "First. Whether under the facts above stated the common pleas court, or judge thereof, has jurisdiction to entertain the contemplated applications and grant the allowances asked for.
> "Second. Whether in the event of such jurisdiction the authority of the court to make the allowances is dependent on a showing that the business of the several offices has increased over that done by the offices at the time the applications, before noted, were made to the board of county commissioners."

The statutory provisions pertinent to a consideration of the question here presented are those contained in sections 2980, 2980-1 and 2981, General Code, which read as follows:

"Section 2980. On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal.

"Section 2980-1. The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers requires additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if, upon hearing the same, said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required, and therupon the board of county commissioners, shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

"When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which such an aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same, shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by the incumbent and the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year.

"Section 2981. Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Sometime ago the question was presented to this department whether, as to a particular office, under section 2980-1, the authority of the common pleas court to make an additional allowance for clerk hire, etc., therein provided for, was limited to the condition that the county commissioners had made an allowance for such office up to the maximum amount which the county commissioners might allow for such office, under said section of the General Code. After careful consideration of that question I arrived at the conclusion that the authority of the court to act was not limited to the condition that the county commissioners had made the maximum allowance, and with respect to the question there presented it was my view that the words "additional allowance," as used in section 2980-1, are referable to the allowance actually made and fixed in any case by the commissioners, rather than to the maximum prescribed, and that the additional allowance therein provided for is additional to that made by them, whether it be equal to or less than the maximum.

With respect to the question here presented, however, it appears that no allowances were made by the commissioners, but that the applications of the several officers therefor were wholly rejected, and the question is whether the authority of the common pleas court or judge to entertain the contemplated applications and grant allowances thereon, is limited to the condition that the county commissioners have first made an allowance.

Section 2980-1 provides, in part, as follows:

> "If at any time any one of such officers requires additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if upon hearing the same, said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required."

In ordinary signification the phrase "additional allowance" presupposes an allowance already made, and the term "additional" embraces the idea of joining or uniting one thing to another so as thereby to form an aggregate.

With respect to the question at hand, however, in an obvious and practical sense it may be said that any allowance made by the common pleas court will be in addition to what the officers received on their applications to the board of county commissioners; for on those applications the officers got nothing. Though the legislative intent in the enactment of Section 2980-1 is to be extracted in the first instance from the language of the section itself, yet I do not think that such intent and purpose can be safely arrived at by a mere play on the meaning and significance of particular words. Section 2980-1 was enacted for the purpose of affording a remedy for a number of defects which were more or less manifest in the practical operation of the law with reference to allowances for clerk hire, before the enactment of section 2980-1. In the first place, there was no check on the amount that the county commissioners might fix as an allowance for clerk hire for any office, other than the requirement that such amount should be reasonable and proper, which obviously was a matter wholly within the sound judgment and discretion of the county commissioners; again, under the law as it then stood it was legally possible for an incumbent of an office to exhaust the aggregate amount fixed as clerk hire for the year, and thus leave his successor in office during the year without money for clerk hire during the remainder of the calendar year for which the aggregate amount was fixed; finally, and more pertinent to the question at hand, there was no provision in the law, as it then stood, for the contingency that the business of such office might necessarily require an amount in excess of that allowed by the commissioners, whether such allowance was nothing or more.

With respect to applications by county officers to the board of county commissions for allowances for clerk hire, the court in the case of Theobald vs. State, 10 O. C. C., N. S., 175, 180 (decided in 1907) says:

> "The legislature has conferred upon the board of county commissioners in each county the power to judicially determine these questions. The selection of the tribunal must be left to its wisdom. If under the law, an officer should make application to the board for assistants in the prescribed way, and be refused, then should he be physically unable himself to perform all the duties of the office because of their magnitude, the default would not be his, but that of the board. It must act with legal, not arbitrary, discretion, in the bestowal or refusal of the fund. The public has a right to expect and demand reasonable and proper regard, both by the officer and the board, for the amount of labor necessary to be performed in its office."

In a case reported as "In re clerk hire in county offices, 7 N. P., N. S., page 8, it was held:

> "The right of appeal from the action of the board of county commissioners in rejecting a claim against the county is limited to matters in which the commissioners are vested with a judicial function, and does not include those matters in which the commissioners act with discretionary power or in an administrative or governmental capacity.
> "No appeal lies from action by county commissioners in fixing the allowance for clerk hire for county offices."

In other words, as the law stood before the enactment of section 2980-1, when the county commissioners once acted on an application for clerk hire, their action, at least in the absence of a showing of fraud, gross abuse of discretion or arbitrary action, was in all respects final, whether the allowance made by them on such application was nothing or a fixed sum of money.

Looking at the provisions of section 2980-1, last above quoted, we must assume that the legislature in the enactment of these provisions had in view a purpose to afford a remedy for the condition of affairs theretofore existing. These provisions do not attempt to give to the officer whose application has been acted upon by the county commissioners a right of appeal to the common pleas court from the action of the county commissioners, nor do they give to the court any right to review the action of the county commissioners. On the contrary, though the jurisdiction of the court or a judge thereof is unquestionably dependent upon the fact that an application for clerk hire shall first have been made to the county commissioners, yet the application itself, as made to the common pleas court or judge thereof, and the hearing on such application, are wholly independent of the proceedings before said county commissioners.

Upon these considerations, I am of the opinion that when an application for clerk hire, etc., has been made to the county commissioners pursuant to the provisions of section 2980, General Code, and the commissioners have acted thereon, that the officer making such application may apply to the common pleas court for an allowance in addition to that made by the county commissioners, whether the amount which they granted was nothing or some fixed substantial some of money. In such case the hearing on the application filed with the common pleas court, or a judge thereof, will properly proceed on a consideration of the necessities of the office at the time the application before the court or judge was filed, and that the court or judge thereof in considering the question whether the necessities of the office require an allowance for clerk hire, etc., in addition to that made by the county commissioners, will not properly review the action of the county commissioners to determine whether they were right or wrong in the action taken by them on the facts presented on the application to them for an allowance in the first instance.

With respect to the inquiries presented by you, I am of the opinion that the common pleas court, or a judge thereof, would have jurisdiction to entertain applications made by county officers for clerk hire and make such allowance to said several officers as the necessities of their respective offices might, in the judgment of said court or judge thereof, require, and that the granting of such allowance would not be dependent upon a showing that the business of the several offices had increased since an action by the county commissioners on the application made to them. The finding of the county commissioners on the facts presented to them was independent and final. The inquiry and finding by the court of common pleas or judge would likewise be independent on the facts existing and conditions presented at the time of the filing of the applications before said court or judge.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL—RIGHT OF COUNCIL TO FURNISH WATER TO SUCH SCHOOL FREE.

Under the provisions of section 3963, General Code, the city council is without power in any way to furnish water for parochial schools without making a charge therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1914.

HON. GEO. C. VON BESELER, City Solicitor, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of February 17, 1914, you submit the following question:

"Section 3963 of the General Code is as follows:

"No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, the cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of of public school buildings; but, in any case, where the said school building, or buildings, are situated within a village or cities, and the boundaries of the school district include territory not within the boundaries of the village or cities in which said building, or buildings, are located, then the directors of such school district shall pay the village or cities for the water furnished for said building or buildings."

"QUERY. Is a school building owned and maintained by the Catholic church a public school building within the meaning of section 3963, so that the council of the city may furnish water to such parochial school building without making any charge therefor?"

Whether or not a parochial school building may be exempted from the payment of water rents by force of the statute above quoted, depends upon the comprehension of the term "public school buildings," as the same is employed in the above statute.

In the case of Myers vs. Akins, 8 O. C. C., 228, an Ursuline convent was held to be a public college within the meaning of section 2732 R. S., exempting all public institutions from taxation. In the case of Little vs. Seminary 72 O. S., 417, the United Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Xenia, Ohio, which institution was devoted to the training of young men for the Gospel, free and open to all on the same conditions, was held to be an institution of purely public charity within the comprehension of section 2732, R. S., exempting such institutions from taxation.

On page 427 of that case the court said:

"It is settled in Gerke et al. vs. Purcell, 25 O. S., 229, and in cases following it, that an institution such as the petition alleges the seminary to be, is an institution of purely public charity within the meaning of this section of the constitution. (Article XII, section 2.)"

The case of Gerke vs. Purcell, above referred to, is interesting in its interpretation of the term "public school houses" as used in connection with the constitution of Ohio, article XII, section 2, and of the same term as employed in section 5349 of the General Code.

The constitutional provision, as it was construed in that case, is as follows:

"Article XII, section 2 * * * burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public workship, institutions of purely public charity, public property used exclusively for any public purpose * * * may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation."

In interpreting this provision on page 242, the court says:

"The other classes of property that may be exempted from taxation are described as 'public school houses,' and 'public property used exclusively for any public purpose.'

"It appears to us that the word 'public' as applied to school houses, is used in the same sense in which it is used in the second instance, as applied to property; and that the school houses intended are such as belong to the public, such as are designed for the schools established and conducted under the authority of the public. In the classification, public school houses, from the nature of their use, are named as a distinct species of public property that may be exempted; and we see nothing inconsistent or unreasonable in such specific designation, arising from the fact that the subsequent provision authorizes the exemption of public property generally where it is used exclusively for some public purpose.

"If all school houses in which schools are kept, that are open to such of the public as choose to patronize them, were to be regarded as public school houses, such property might be exempted, although owned by private parties and used by them solely with the view to profit in prosecuting their business."

In considering the term "public school house" as employed in section 5349 of the General Code (then S. & S. 761) the court says:

> "The property exempted by the first subdivision of the section is described as follows:
>
> "All public school houses and houses used exclusively for public worship, the books and furniture therein, and the ground attached to such building necessary for the proper occupancy, use and enjoyment of the same, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit; all public colleges, public academies, all buildings connected with the same, and all lands connected with public institutions of learning, not used with the view to profit. * * *
> "A consideration of this provision of the statute shows that the word 'public,' as here applied to school houses, colleges and institutions of learning, is not used in the sense of ownership, but as descriptive of the uses to which the property is devoted. The schools and instruction which the property is used to support, must be for the benefit of the public. The word 'public' as applied to 'school houses,' is obviously used in the same sense as when applied to colleges, academies, and other institutions of learning. The statute must be construed in the light of the state of things upon which it was intended to operate. * * *
> "Besides, the condition prescribing that the property, in order to be exempt, must not be used with a view to profit, does not seem appropriate if intended to apply only to institutions established by the public. Such institutions are never established and carried on by the public with a view to profit. But the condition has marked significance when applied to private property, which is often used for the purposes of education, like property in ordinary business, as a means of profit. But when private property is appropriated to the support of education for the benefit of the public without any view to profit, it constitutes a charity which is purely public. When the charity is public, the exclusion of all idea of private gain or profit is equivalent, in effect, to the force of 'purely' as applied to public charity in the constitution."

The case held that a parochial school was a "public school house," as the term was used in the statute, but not as such term was used in the constitution.

It is clear from the above quoted language of the court that in distinguishing between the term "public school house" as applied in the constitution, and as applied in this statute, the court laid particular stress upon the fact that the statute qualifies the term "public school house" with the clause "not used with a view to profit." The use of such clause in the mind of the court prevented the application of the term to school houses owned by the public and restricted its application to such school houses as were used for charitable purposes by private individuals or organizations.

In this case the court justified the exemption from taxation of such privately owned school houses under the constitution, not by authorization of the term "school house," as employed in the article of the constitution above quoted, but by authorization of the term "institutions of purely public charity."

In the case of Myers vs. Akins, above quoted, an Ursuline convent was permitted to be exempted from taxation as a public college solely under the authorization of the constitution referring to institutions of public charity. I am of the opinion that the language of the court in the case of Gerke vs. Purcell, in construing the term "public school house," as employed in the constitution, has a direct application to section 3963, General Code, quoted by you. In this statute the term "public school building" is not in any way restricted to public school buildings "not used with a view to profit." If the term "public schools," as used in this statute, therefore, is construed to apply to public schools other than those owned by the public, it is clear that public schools not operated for a profit would be exempted as well as those operated as a charity. Such a construction was manifestly not intended.

I therefore conclude that under section 3963, General Code, a director of public service in cities is not expressly prohibited from making a charge of supplying water to a parochial school building.

This conclusion is furthermore supported by the language of the statute, which provides that where said school buildings are situated within a district which is partly within and partly without the city or village, they shall be obliged to pay for water furnished. Inasmuch as the term "school district" is a term having a peculiar application in the statutes dealing with schools owned by the state or its subdivisions, it is quite clear that the legislature intended reference to such schools alone.

Inasmuch as the effect of this statute is solely to prohibit the director of public service from making a charge upon the class of institutions therein included, the question remains whether or not council is permitted of its own volition, through its general legislative power, to exempt a parochial school building from payment for water furnished the same. This question brings into view section 6, article VIII of the constitution, which provides as follows:

> "No law shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation or association whatever, or to raise money for, or loan its credit to, or in aid of any such company, corporation or association."

The common pleas court in the case of Crossland vs. Zanesville, unreported, affirmed in 56 O. S. 735, said in its opinion:

> "It is for the public interest that the municipality retains control and management of the sick and disabled poor. One of the chief purposes of the local government is to preserve the health and safety of its inhabitants.
>
> "If the municipality may escape its obligations and duties to the sick and disabled by farming out the same to the charitable associations or corporations, the public interests may suffer in that respect."

Elliott, in his work on "municipal corporations," in speaking of alms-houses and hospitals, page 61:

> "The power of taxation cannot be employed to support such institutions when they are under the control of private persons who are not accountable to the government."

Under this rule, I am of the opinion that council is not permitted to burden taxpayers with the upkeep of a waterworks system and confer upon a private organization the privilege of receiving the benefit of the same without charge. It is well settled that municipal corporations have only such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred by statute. Being unable to find anywhere in the statutes any provision authorizing a municipal corporation to extend the privilege of free water to such an organization, I am of the opinion that council is without power, under the law as it stands, to exempt a parochial school building from payment of water rents.

There exists ample authority for the holding that where council is empowered or required to maintain charitable institutions, it may, within the limitations of the authorizations of law, contract with private organizations for the conduct of such charitable enterprises. There can be no doubt, under the holdings, that a parochial school is to be deemed a building of public charity; but, since under the plan provided by the statutes the duty of providing education in no way devolves upon municipal corporations, but rests, on the conntrary, with independent subdivisions of the government, to wit: boards of education, it is clear that council has no power whatever to contract for the education of its citizens. It would seem clear, therefore, that council is also without power to make the furnishing of free water a consideration for a contract with parochial school authorities, for whatever benefits such organization may afford the general public through the operation of parochial schools.

My opinion, therefore, is that a council of a city is without power in any way to furnish water for a parochial school without making a charge therefor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—APPLICATION TO BE MADE UNDER 5333, GENERAL CODE.

Where a property by will is bequeathed in trust to B. with full power to sell, transfer, manage, invest, reinvest, or dispose of any part thereof, B. to pay the income of the estate to the mother of A. during her life, and after her death to distribute the residue among certain collateral relatives, the provisions of section 5333, General Code, are to be applied to the estate as a subject of the collateral inheritance tax at its present value.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 20th, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "By the will of A. the residuum of his personal estate, after paying specific legacies, is bequeathed to B. in trust, with full power in B. to sell, transfer, manage, invest and reinvest or dispose of the same or any part thereof, B. to pay the income of the estate to the mother of A. during her life, and after her death to distribute the residuum among certain collateral relatives, all of whom are subject to the collateral inheritance tax."

You inquire whether the estates of the collateral relatives are taxable now or whether, on the principles laid down in my recent opinion to you, in the matter of the estate of Theresa Braunstein, these estates do not become taxable until the death of decedent's mother.

The principles referred to are, that where estates of inheritance do not vest at the death of the testator, and where the amount or share of a given inheritor cannot be then ascertained, the tax cannot be then assessed but must be assessed and collected, if at all, at such subsequent time as it may vest, or the amount of it may become certain.

This general principle results from the very necessities of the case. It is not found in the collateral inheritance tax law as a statutory enactment; hence, in my judgment, it is to be applied only when no other course is possible.

Section 5333 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L. 463, provides as follows:

> "When a person bequeaths * * * property * * * for the use of father, mother * * * etc., during life * * * and the remainder to a collateral heir * * * the value of the prior estate shall be appraised within sixty days after the death of the testator, in the manner hereinafter provided, and deducted, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, from the appraised value of such property."

The reference in this section to "the manner hereinafter provided" is to section 5343 of the General Code, which provides in part that:

> "In case of an annuity or life estate the value thereof shall be determined by the so-called actuaries' combined experience tables and five per cent. compound interest."

It is true, of course, that, technically, there is no such thing as a "life estate" or "remainder" in personal property; also, that a direction to trustees to distribute a trust estate among certain persons upon the happening of a certain event does not make the distributive shares "remainders" in a technical sense. However, technicalities must be ignored in the interpretation of amended section 5333, General Code. The section uses the word "bequeaths," clearly evincing an intent to make its provisions applicable to personal property inheritances. It uses the words "for the use of," clearly evincing an intention to make it apply to trust estates. Therefore, in my opinion, a bequest to a trustee for the use of a certain person during the life of the latter, and on his death for distribution among certain other designated parties, creates a "remainder" and a "prior estate" within the meaning of section 5333, and a "life estate" within the meaning of section 5343, General Code.

This leaves but one question in the case submitted by you, viz.: as to whether or not the trustee's powers of disposition are such as to make it impossible to apply section 5333, General Code.

In my opinion this question may be answered in the negative. I see no distinction between the trustee's powers, as described by the language quoted by you, and the powers of any trustee who is given the management of a fund for the benefit of another, with discretion as to investment and reinvestment. The presumption is that, despite the investments, sales and reinvestments of the fund, i. e., despite the conversion of one form of personal property into other forms of personal property in the management of the trust, the value of the corpus of the estate will remain the same. This may be a very violent presumption, but it is no more violent than the presumption which is evidently contemplated by section 5333, in its narrowest interpretation that specific real or personal property will be of the same value at the end of a given life as it is at the date of the testator's death, or sixty days thereafter. Suppose, for example, there was no power of sale and reinvestment, and that the bequest, instead of being a residuary one, consisted of certain specified corporate stocks of the present market value of one hundred dollars a share: is there not the possibility that these shares may deteriorate in value until they are worth but fifty dollars each, before the death of the party for whose benefit they are held? And yet, does not section 5333 require, at the very least, that, where specific property is bequeathed for the use of a direct heir during his life, and the remainder to collateral heirs at his death, without any power of sale or reinvestment, the tax shall be assessed immediately? In other words, the section presumes that the value of the property will not be changed during the existence of the prior estate in it; and this presumption is not rebutted.

Now, the will in question creates a trust for the benefit of the mother, who is to have merely the income therefrom. The power of sale, management and reinvestment is to be exercised, in accordance with the clear intention of the testator, with the purpose of preserving the corpus of the estate or enhancing its value, if possible. If the trustee discharges his duty with reasonable prudence he will maintain the value of the estate as a whole. It is my belief, then, that section 5333, General Code, shows a legislative intention to make the presumption above referred to applicable to a state of facts of this sort; that is to say, the indisputable presumption is that the trustee will discharge his trust and will maintain the corpus of the estate unimpaired.

For the reasons stated, I am of the opinion that the case is a different one from those discussed in the other opinion, which you have, and that the provisions of section 5333 are to be applied to the estate, as a subject of the collateral inheritance tax, at its present value.

I deem it proper, however, to state that I have assumed that the question in your mind has arisen because of the powers of sale, management and reinvestment possessed by the trustee; and not because of the quality of the estates possessed or to be possessed by the ultimate takers, who are subject to the tax. That is to say, I do not intend to pass upon the question as to whether or not the interests of those ultimate takers are vested, assuming that to be the case. Should it appear, under the exact language of the will, which you do not quote, that the case is otherwise, then, the rule formulated in the other opinion would apply.

Without citing the decisions, it may be sufficient to state that if the takers of the subsequent estates, as vested interests, can be now ascertained, so that at the death of the mother the distributive shares will be disposed of to them, or their personal representatives, the principles of this opinion will apply; but if the intention of the testator, as disclosed by the language of the will, is that the distribution at the death of the mother shall be among the survivors of those named as the ultimate takers, then, the interests of the latter cannot vest until that event takes place, and the principles of the other opinions are brought into play.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MANDAMUS—LICENSE—CHATTEL LOAN BUSINESS.

Mandamus will lie to compel the secretary of state to issue a license granting permission to engage in the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property, where the person seeking a license has done all things that the statutes make it his duty to do.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of March 2nd, wherein you state:

"I am enclosing you herewith the original applications and bonds of M. Blumberg & W. R. Teel, and M. Blumberg, for license to engage in the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property.

"I am also enclosing herewith a communication from J. Guy O'Donnell, prosecuting attorney of Miami county, Ohio, protesting against the issuing of any such license to M. Blumberg, for the reasons stated in said protest.

"Kindly advise what course I should pursue in the matter."

Sections 6346-1 and 6346-2 of the General Code of Ohio provide as follows:

"Section 6346-1. No person, firm or corporation except banks and building and loan associations shall engage or continue in the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever or of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings without first having obtained a license so to do from the secretary of state.

"Each application shall be accompanied by a bond to the state of Ohio in the penal sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000.00) to the approval of the secretary of state. If any person shall be aggrieved by the misconduct of any such licensed person, firm or corporation or by his, their or its violation of any law relating to such business, and shall recover a judgment therefor, such person may, after return unsatisfied either in whole or in part of any execution issued upon such judgment, maintain an action in his own name upon such bond herein required in any court having jurisdiction of the amount claimed. The secretary of state shall furnish to any one applying therefor a certified copy of such bond filed with him, upon the payment of a fee of one dollar ($1.00) and such certified copy shall be prima facie evidence in any court that such bond was duly executed and delivered by the parties whose names appear thereon. Said bond shall be renewed and refiled at the time of making application for license, but said bond until renewed and refiled as aforesaid shall be and remain in full force and effect.

"Section 6346-2. Application for license to conduct such business must be made in writing to the secretary of state and shall contain the full names and addresses of applicants, if natural person, and in case of firms or incorporated companies, the full names and addresses of the officers and directors thereof and under what law or laws incorporated. the kind of business which is to be conducted, whether chattel mortgage or salary loan; the place where such business is to be conducted and such other information as the secretary of state may require. The fee to be charged for said license shall be ten dollars ($10.00) per annum and such amount must accompany the application. Each license granted shall date from the first of the month in which it is issued and shall be granted for the period of one year, subject to revocation, as provided in this act, and such license shall be kept conspicuously displayed in the place of business of the licensee."

Sections 6346-3, 6346-4 and 6346-5 provide for certain things to be done by the licensee, and for the manner of the conduct of his business, with limitation on the amount of interest that may be charged as also the amount that may be charged for investigation, examination, collection and other purposes.

Section 6346-6 provides a penalty for violating the foregoing provisions, and that upon a second conviction it shall become the duty of the secretary of state to revoke a license issued to a person so convicted.

I have examined the various protests filed against the issuing of license to M. Blumberg, and, without passing upon either their sufficiency or their merits, but looking only to what may be the duty of the secretary of state under the present chattel loan law, I am of the opinion that the issuing of such a license by the secretary of state is purely a ministerial act, and that he is without power to judicially determine the fitness or nonfitness of the applicant.

You will recall the decision of the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Brower vs. Graves, and the action of the court upon the answer filed in that case. In view of the court's attitude in that matter, and the well known principles of law with regard to officers whose duties are merely ministerial, I am of the opinion that mandamus would lie against you in the event that you refused to issue a license to a person who has done all things that the statute makes it his duty to do; and that in the case presented you have no option but to issue the license.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION—YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION—TEACHERS' AGENCY—EMPLOYMENT AGENCY—CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The young men's christian association, and the young women's christian association are charitable institutions within the meaning of the law, and therefore, exempt from the payment of a license fee under section 893, General Code. The same rule will apply to teachers' agencies and also ministerial associations, providing they are engaged in work of a charitable nature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

(Attention Mr. Hammond.)

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of February 13th, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Does a young men's christian association or a young women's association come within the meaning of the law respecting employment agency licenses?

"2. Are teachers' agencies subject to the law?

"3. Is a ministerial association a charitable association?"

Under date of January 16, 1914, I rendered you an opinion wherein I held that under sections 886 and 893, General Code, charitable organizations were not required to have a license for the operation of an employment agency wherein a charge for the service was made. These sections are as follows:

> "Section 886. No person, firm or corporation shall open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, or in which a fee is charged an applicant for employment or an applicant for help, without obtaining a license from the commission of labor statistics, and paying to him a fee according to the population of the municipality as shown by the last federal census, viz.:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | "In cities of 50,000, and upward | $100 00 |
> | "In cities of 16,000 to 50,000 | 75 00 |
> | "In cities of less than 16,000 | 50 00 |
> | "In villages | 25 00 |
>
> "The commissioners may refuse to issue or renew a license to an applicant if, in his judgment, such applicant has violated the law relating to private employment agencies, or is not of good moral character.
> "Section 893. Except an employment agency of a charitable organization, a person, firm or corporation furnishing or agreeing to furnish employment or help, or displaying a sign or bulletin, or offering to furnish employment or help through the medium of a circular, card or pamphlet, shall be deemed a private employment agency, and subject to the laws governing such agencies."

The answer to each of your questions hinges upon the definition of a charitable organization. The word "charity" may be used in many senses and is employed in different connections and with different applications in many fields of the law. Thus the technical legal term "charity" is used with reference to a gift or a trust to be applied "consistently with existing rules of law for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons either by bringing hearts under the influence of education or religion, by relieving their bodies from disease, suffering or constraint, by assisting them to establish themselves for life or by erecting or maintaining public buildings or works or by otherwise lessening the burdens of government."

> Words and Phrases page 1074.
> 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, p. 894.

In this connection the word "charity embraces of necessity a substantial element of publicity; that is, a gift or trust to come within the rules of law applicable to such technical term "charity" must tend in a way to benefit the public and to relieve the government of some of its burdens.

Thus it is well settled that a bequest for the benefit of defined persons is not a charity but a trust only, and as such is subject to the rules controlling ordinary trusts.

> 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 896.

So the word "charity" as employed in this sense can have no application to beneficial or charitable associations organized for the benefit solely of their own membership.

Swift vs. Eastern Beneficial Society 73 Pa. St. 362.
59 Maine 326.
Vol. 3 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 1044.
Vol. 5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 894, et seq.
Words and Phrases, Title "Charity," p. 1077.

"Charity" in its broadest sense, however, is defined as follows:

> " 'Charity' in its widest sense, denotes all the good affections which men ought to bear towards one another, and in that sense embraces what is generally understood by benevolence, philanthropy, and good will. In its more restricted sense it means merely relief or alms to the poor."

Words & Phrases Vol. 2, p. 1074.
5 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 894 and cases cited.

There is nothing in the statutes quoted above which serve of themselves to indicate the precise sense in which the term "charitable" is employed.

A review of the decisions dealing with exemption from taxation as the same pertains to charitable organizations however, sheds some light in this connection. The language of the constitution, article XII, section 2, the construction of which is involved in the cases of this state, exempts institutions of purely public charity. In the statute involved in your questions, however, it is a charitable organization which is exempted from the payment of a license fee. It is well settled that a license is in no sense a tax, and, therefore, the constitutional provision has no bearing upon this statute. It is very material, however, to note in considering the views of the courts with reference to the constitutional provision, that great stress is laid upon the necessity that the charity be essentially public in its nature. In the present statute reference is not made to the public nor is the term "charitable," as employed in section 893 of the General Code in any way limited by the term "public" or any similar adjective.

The following cases in Ohio under the constitutional provision referred to require the charity to be essentially public in order to allow the organization to take advantage of the exemption clause:

Library Assn. vs. Pelton, 36 O. S. 253.
Humphrey vs. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 O. S. 201.
Davis, Auditor vs. Camp Meeting Assn. 57 O. S. 257.
Little vs. Seminary, 32 O. S. 417.
Myers vs. Aiken, 8 C. C. 232.
Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 O. S. 242.
Watterson vs. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150.

The case of Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, 23 O. S. 145 is of especial importance in this connection. It was therein held that a charitable or beneficial association which extends relief only to sick and needy members and to the widows and orphans of its deceased members, is not an institution of purely public charity.

In other states, however, constitutional provisions exist which exempt "charitable institutions." The language employed being substantially the same as that of the statute in question, there being no qualifying adjective expressly restricting the charity to one of a public or general nature. Cases construing such provisions quite generally hold that charitable organizations which are not essentially public in their nature or such as are confined to the benefit of a limited and specified number or even to the bent of their own members, come within the constitutional exemption from taxation. These decisions would seem to support a similar holding with reference to section 893 of the General Code. The following are examples of such holdings:

Fitterer vs. Crawford 157 Mo. 51.
Philadelphia vs. Masonic Home, 160 Pa. 572-577.
Hibernian Society vs. Kelley, 28 Oregon 173.
City of Petersburg vs. Petersburg Benevolent Assn., 78 Va. 431.
Union Pacific Ry. Co. vs. Artist, 60 Fed. 365.

Without quoting from these decisions at length in considering the difference in language between the constitution, as applied to exemption from taxation and the language of our statute and according due credence to the general rule running through the above quoted decisions, I am of the opinion that under the statutes under consideration an organization need not necessarily afford its advantages to the public or even to an indefinite and unascertained portion of the public to come within the exemption therein provided for.

The answer to each of your questions, therefore, depends on whether the organizations involved are charitable in their nature, regardless of whether or not the charity comprehended by the organization is a public charity or otherwise.

I am of the opinion that the term "charitable," therefore, must not be given its broadest comprehension. The following cases support the statement that, "the test which determines whether the enterprise is charitable or not is its purpose. If its purpose is to make profit it is not a charitable enterprise."

Long vs. Rosedale Cemetery, 84 Fed. Rep. 135.
Union Pac. Ry Co. vs. Artist 60 Fed. 365, 3rd syllabus, page 368.

An organization is certainly not a charitable organization if it is run for profit. In view of the above authorities, therefore, I may say that an organization is entitled to the xemption provided by section 893 of the General Code when the same is operated not for profit, and has for its purpose a charitable one, to wit, benevolence, philanthropy, good will, alms giving or some kindred good.

Under the rule established by the Ohio cases above cited, I am of the opinion that there can be no question but that a Young Men's Christian Association or a Young Women's Christian Association are " charitable organizations" and that they come within the meaning of the exemption provided by this statute. Indeed, in the case of Y. W. C. A. vs. Spencer, 9 C. C. n. s., 351, the court expressly recognized the Young Women's Christian Association as an institution of "purely public charity."

In the case of People ex rel. Brooklyn Y. M. C. A. vs. Willis, 52 N. Y. Supp. 739, the court said:

> "There can be no question that the Young Men's Christian Association is an association incorporated for charitable work as charity is understood and defined in the law. Not only is its work charitable but it is benevolent, and undoubtedly in the highest degree commendable and beneficial."

I have in mind the case of the Trustees of the Y. M. C. A. vs. City of Patterson, N. J. 61 N. J. L. 421, wherein the court held that the buildings of the Young Men's Christian Association were not used for exclusively charitable purposes, which the court considered to have application only to such charitable purposes as were deemed eleemosynary, to wit, purposes connected with the distribution of charity, id est, of aid to the needy. Also the case of Chapman vs. Holyoke Y. M. C. A., 165 Mass. 280, wherein the court held that a Young Men's Christian Association was not a public charitable corporation whose purposes were not only charitable but also social, and whose benefits were confined to its members, and therefore, not entitled to exemption as a public charitable corporation.

I am of the opinion, however, that neither one of these cases can be reconciled to the Ohio rule. They are subject to distinction on several grounds. In the New Jersey case the court was required to restrict the exemption to buildings used exclusively for charitable purposes, and there is no such limitation in the statute upon which your questions hinge. The Massachusetts case involved exemption from liability for tort rather than exemption from a tax or license. At any rate, whatever force may be given to these decisions, it is clear that under the authorities, especially in Ohio, which authorities must be allowed to control, as laid down in the cases of Library Association vs. Pelton, Morning Star Lodge vs. Hayslip, Gerke vs. Purcell and the other decisions above referred to, an association such as the Young Men's Christian Association or the Young Women's Christian Association, whose benefits are open to all members of the public, subject to the same conditions, and which is operated without a view to profit, must be considered a charitable institution, and, therefore, exempt from the payment of a license under section 893 of the General Code.

In regard to your inquiries with reference to teachers' agencies and ministerial associations, I can only say that the information at hand by no means permits of the exercise of any judgment as to the real nature of these organizations. My advice as to the same, therefore, must be restricted to a reiteration of the rules above set out. In brief, if these organizations are of themselves primarily of a charitable nature, and if they are operated without a view to profit they may undoubtedly conduct an employment agency without having to procure a license so to do. If, however, these organizations are primarily engaged in some other activity, having in view in one way or another a pecuniary gain, and the employment agency even though such agency itself be not a paying proposition or even though it is not operated with the intention of deriving a gain therefrom, nevertheless if such agency is a mere incident to the primary object of an organization operating for gain, I am of the opinion that it would be necessary to procure a license. The question, therefore, is one of fact upon which I am unable to venture definite advice without further information.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FREE TURNPIKE ROAD COMMISSIONERS—CUSTODY OF FUNDS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—COUNTY AUDITOR—ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Funds arising from the sale of bonds from the construction of a free turnpike under section 7232, et seq., General Code, should be deposited with the treasurer of the county and paid out by him upon the warrant of the county auditor. The road commissioners have no right to the custody of such funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1914.

HON. WM. C. BROWN, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 20th you submitted for an opinion, the following:

> "Would you kindly give an opinion as to the right of free turnpike road commissioners to the custody of funds arising from the sale of bonds, sold for the purpose of creating a fund to construct a free turnpike road? That is, should such funds by law be deposited in the county treasury and the payments made by approval of the county commissioners upon warrant of the county auditor on the treasurer, or have the road commissioners the right to such custody of the funds that they may deposit the same in a bank and receive interest on daily balances therefrom, accruing to the benefit of the district taxed for such road improvement."

The identical question presented by your inquiry was decided in the case of State ex rel. Sapp, et als. vs. John L. Means, Auditor, Common Pleas Court of Jefferson county. Judge Worley in the opinion says:

> "Now we come to the question in case bonds are sold and funds are raised by the sale thereof, how should such funds be paid out? An immediate answer to that question is that the funds so raised should be paid out exactly the same way as the statute provided they must be paid out where the funds are raised solely by taxation, which is by the treasurer on the warrant of the auditor, he being first directed in writing to so do by the road commissioners.
>
> "And, as reasons for the answer which I give I say first that the statute is entirely silent on the subject so far as any direct and express provision is concerned. But by analogy it should follow the same rule as is prescribed for money raised by taxes. Why should it not be so? And if it should be paid out by the treasurer on the warrant of the auditor, then as a matter of course it must be first placed in the county treasury.
> "A second reason is that there is no statutory authority whatever for the road commissioners receiving the money on the sale of the bonds and depositing the same where they please and paying it out as they see fit. Such a method of handling the public funds is unusual and I may say unreasonable, and to so handle public funds cannot be presumed by a mere failure to give express direction as to how the same may be handled, deposited and paid out.
> "As a third reason I say that nowhere in the statutes is there any warrant for the handling of public moneys according to the method that is claimed on behalf of the road commissioners in this case. And that being true, this is a very good reason in my judgment, why such authority as is now claimed on behalf of the road commissioners, the relators in this case, cannot arise by implication. It is wholly contrary to the policy of the law with respect to the handling of public funds. As a fourth reason I call attention to the fact that as originally enacted, section 7283, which provides for the sale of the bonds, and section 7284, which provides for their payment, was one and the same section enacted at the same time and so related to each other that the provisions of section 7284 must necessarily be read with reference to the provisions of 7283, and when so read, I think warrant the conclusion which I have reached, that the funds raised by the sale of the bonds must be paid out in exactly the same manner as are funds raised by taxation either by the general tax or the extra tax. And, as a fifth reason for the answer which I have given, I call attention to the provisions of the section 7308, which among other provisions contains this language:

" 'Whenever any free turnpike road constructed in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, shall have been fully paid for, and the bonds and coupons, if bonds have been issued thereon, shall have been redeemed, and the pike commissioners of such road shall have ceased to exist, and any money remaining in the treasury of the county in which such road was or shall be constructed, and which was derived from taxation or the sale of bonds to construct such road, shall, upon the order of the county commissioners be paid over, upon the warrant of the county auditor in such amounts and at such intervals as they deem proper, to the pike superintendents as the case may be, to be by such superintendent or superintendents used, under the provisions of chapter eight, title four, part two, in making repairs of such road for the construction of which such remaining money was raised. And this provision shall apply in all cases where there is now a balance remaining in the county treasury, as well as to all such cases as may arise in the future.'

"It will be noticed that this provision refers to the money arising from the sale of bonds being in the county treasury. But it is claimed upon the part of these relators that it does not necessarily go into the county treasury, but that they may place it where they see fit to place it.

"But I say that the language of this statute clearly indicates that the proper place for it is in the county treasury and that if any of it remains after the improvement has been paid for, then it may be paid out by the county treasurer as the section provides.

"Now as a sixth reason for answering the question as I have, that this money arising from the sale of bonds should be paid into the county treasury, I call attention to sections 2294 and 2295 of the General Code.

"Section 2294 refers to the sale of bonds by county commissioners, by boards of education and by commissioners of free turnpikes, just such commissioners as are the relators in this action.

"Section 2295 provides as follows: 'None of such bonds shall be sold for less than the face thereof, with any interest that may have accrued thereon, and the privilege shall be reserved of rejection of any or all bids.

"If bids are rejected the bonds shall again be advertised.

"All money from both principal and premiums on the sale of such bonds, shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold.

"Notice the provision which says that the money arising from the sale of such bonds, which includes the kind of bonds attempted to be sold in this case, shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold.

"Now what does that mean? How could they be credited to this fund, if they are placed in some private bank? Who has charge of the fund on account of which these bonds are sold? Who is the custodian of that fund? Who keeps the account? Who does the crediting?

"It is wholly foreign to our ideas to keep public funds and the account thereof by anybody except the treasurer of the political division in question, which in this case is the county treasury. No political division has any connection with it other than the county; the township does not have any connection with it. There is no provision in the statute that these road commissioners shall have a treasury or a treasurer or shall be the custodian of funds except for the incidental purposes of paying the same out. So that it seems to me that the only reasonable construction that can be placed upon sections 2294 and 2295 is, that in case of the sale of bonds such as were attempted to be sold in this case, that the county treasurer shall have the custody of the proceeds of such sale, and that he shall keep a record of the funds pertaining to the improvement, and that he shall credit the proceeds of the sale of the bonds to such funds. He does that by virtue of his office, and by virtue of the general powers conferred upon him by law, but no other body or officer is in any way authorized to keep a record of such fund.

"So for all of these reasons I am constrained to believe that the money arising from the sale of bonds as in this case, must necessarily, under the law, be paid into the county treasury.

"In reaching this conclusion, and with reference to the provisions of the law in section 7284, as to the method of paying out the funds arising from the extra taxes, I have not overlooked the provisions of section 7260, which among other things contains the following statement, to wit.

" 'So much of the taxes mentioned in section 7257, levied and collected on taxable property within the bounds of a road located under the provisions of this chapter, which is not discharged in labor, and which is paid into the county treasury, shall be paid by the treasurer, upon the warrant of the county auditor, to the road commissioners of such road to be expended by them in constructing it, and to the payment of the principal and interest of bonds, if any have been issued therefor, this section shall apply to such taxes as have been levied theretofore and have not been paid to township trustees.'

"Now it is true that that section does provide that these general taxes referred to therein shall be paid by the treasurer upon the warrant of the county auditor to the road commissioners of such road to be expended by them in the construction of it. But I take it that that section even though the language of it is different from section 7284, nevertheless means precisely the same thing, which is that the funds therein referred to, shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor by the treasurer at the direction of the road commissioners. From these authorities and the construction which I have placed upon these various sections of the statute, I am fully convinced that this money arising from the sale of bonds should be paid into the county treasury, and for that reason that the contract which the road commissioners entered into, requiring them to deposit the money elsewhere is illegal and void."

The reasoning of Judge Worley seems to me to be sound, and the holding in this case, in my judgment, is correct.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the funds arising from the sale of bonds for the construction of free turnpikes, under sections 7232, et seq., should be deposited with the treasurer of the county and paid out by him upon the warrant of the county auditor. The road commissioners have no right to the custody of such funds.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE PHRASE "IN WHICH SAID TAX ORIGINATES."

The meaning of the phrase "in which said tax originates," as used in section 5332 as amended in 103 O. L., 463, is that the situs of the property passing by descent, devise, or deed or gift for general property taxation purposes in this state determines the place of the origination of the tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1914.

HON. ARTHUR VAN EPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 26th, requesting my opinion as to the meaning of the phrase "in which said tax originates," as used in section 5332, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws, 463.

The language in question is simply a paraphrase of article XII, section 9, of the constitution, as recently amended. In fact, it was, evidently, in deference to the requirement of this provision that this particular change was made in section 5331, which in this respect reads as follows:

> "Fifty per cent. of such tax shall be for the use of the state; and fifty per cent. of such tax shall go to the city, village or township in which said tax originates."

However, I have found no clue in the debates of the constitutional convention of 1912 adequately disclosing the meaning of the phrase in question, as it is employed in the constitution.

I find no similar provision in any of the inheritance tax statutes of other states.

Accordingly, I have been obliged to arrive at the conclusion which I shall hereafter express by process of elimination.

The following meanings might be, conceivably, applied to the language in question:

1. The place where the testator died; inasmuch as it is his death which creates the estate of inheritance.
2. The place where the executor resides; because, as you state in your letter, he is obliged to pay the tax and it is to come out of funds in his hands.
3. The place where the will is probated; inasmuch as it is this act which gives final effect to the disposition made by the testator of his estate.
4. The domicile of the testator at his death.
5. The situs of the property passing, by will or otherwise, considered for purposes of property taxation.

I can think of no other possible meanings which might be given to the language in question.

The first of these meanings must be rejected, when section 5331, in its entirety, is considered. One of the essential provisions of the section is that all property and interests therein, subject to the jurisdiction of this state, which passes by one of the three modes mentioned to persons other than those in the direct line of ascent or descent of the testator or decedent, shall be subject to the tax. The effect of this is that, if real estate located in Ohio passes by descent, devise or deed of gift, to a person whose interest therein is taxable, the tax is to be charged and collected, and fifty per cent. of it must go to some taxing district in this state. So, if the owner of the property should die in another state, the use of the first meaning would lead to impossible consequences.

For similar reasons, the second above suggested meaning must be rejected, as it is possible that the executor of the estate might be a non-resident of this state.

The third possible meaning must be rejected for two reasons: 1st, because it is not necessary that the property pass by will, it being sufficient that it passes by descent or deed of gift; and, second, because such a meaning would give the taxes to the county seat in all cases, whereas the plain purport of the statute is to the contrary.

The fourth suggested meaning must be discarded, for reasons similar to those advanced by me in discussing the first and second meanings, respectively. That is to say, the decedent might have been domiciled in another state at the time of his decease; in which event the adoption of the meaning now under discussion would afford no rule for the distribution of the tax assessed, on account of the devolution of real property located in Ohio.

By process of elimination, then, I have arrived at the choice of the fifth suggested meaning, and I am of the opinion that the situs of the specific property passing, by descent, devise or deed of gift, for general property taxation purposes in this state, determines the place of the origination of the tax for the purposes of section 5331, General Code.

That situs, in my judgment, is to be determined with respect to the situation of the property as it existed at the death of the decedent; that is just prior to his death. In this sense effect is given to the principle that the testator's death creates the inheritance and gives rise to the liability for the tax; thus, in a way, "originating" the latter. So, if the property passing by inheritance be real estate, the taxing district in which the tax originates, as to that portion of the estate, is that district in which the real estate is located; if the property so passing be tangible personal property, the district in which the tax originates is that district in which it would have been listed for general property taxation by the testator, at the time of his death, under the statutes providing for the place of listing tangible personal property; if the property so passing consists of moneys, credits or investments, then (with certain possible exceptions, it not being my purpose to go into complete detail in this opinion) the tax originates in the district in which the decedent was domiciled at his death.

By adopting the rule which I have laid down, a place for the origination of the tax will be furnished as to all property "subject to the jurisdiction of the state" within the intendment of section 5331; whereas, the adoption of any other rule creates the possibility, at least, of failing to assign a "district of origination" to some inheritances of property subject to such jurisdiction.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SAVINGS AND LOAN—FOREIGN SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY—THE RIGHT TO ADVERTISE IN OHIO.

Where a foreign savings and loan company advertises in a newspaper in Ohio the payment of six per cent. on savings and paid up stock, the soliciting of business by such company in such manner does not come within the meaning of the phrase "doing business" as employed in section 678, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1914.

HON. JAMES A. DEVINE, Inspector Building & Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 16, 1914, you wrote asking an opinion of me, and in your communication you say:

> "The enclosed letter from Charles O. Britton, Esq., counsellor at law, Indianapolis, Ind., on behalf of the Union National Savings & Loan Association of that city, is referred to you with request that you advise us what, in your opinion, constitutes 'doing business' under sections 678, et seq., of the General Code of Ohio.
> "This question was raised through having referred to this department an advertisement in a Dayton, Ohio, newspaper wherein this association advertised the payment of '6% on savings and paidup stock,' whereupon we called their attention to the requirements of the Ohio Laws covering the transaction of business in this state by such foreign associations. The enclosed letter resulted therefrom."

Section 678, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Foreign building and loan associations doing business in this state shall conduct such business in accordance with the laws governing domestic associations. No foreign building and loan association shall do business in Ohio until it procures from the inspector of building and loan associations a certificate of authority to do business in this state after complying with the following provisions:
>
> "1. It shall deposit with the inspector one hundred thousand dollars, in cash or bonds of the United States or this state, or of a county or municipal corporation therein, satisfactory to the inspector.
> "2. It shall file with the inspector a certified copy of its charter, constitution and by-laws, and other rules and regulations showing its manner of conducting business together with a statement such as is required annually from all associations.
> "3. It shall also file with the inspector a written instrument, duly executed, agreeing that a summons may issue against it from any county in this state direct to the sheriff of the county in which the office of inspector is situated, commanding him to serve it by certified copy personally upon the inspector or by leaving a copy thereof at his office. The inspector shall mail a copy of any papers served on him to the home office of such association."

Statutes of similar import to the above, applying to foreign corporations of different kinds, have been enacted in practically all of the several states and the provisions of these statutes in respect to what constitutes "doing business" within the meaning of these terms have been construed in many decisions of the courts. In these decisions, however, the courts for the most part have refrained from formulating any general rules for determining when a foreign corporation is "doing business" within the meaning of such statutes, but have contented themselves in determining whether, under the facts in particular cases, such corporations are within the statute. As might be expected, the question has arisen most frequently with reference to mercantile and commercial corporations. The decisions construing statutes of this kind, with respect to the class of corporations just noted, have been influenced in a large measure, by the fact that the commerce clause of the federal constitution limits to a considerable extent, the power of the states to enact measures restricting the business of foreign corporations of this kind.

Insofar as any general rule can be gathered from the decisions, the phrase "doing business" within any particular state as applied to foreign mercantile and commercial corporations, implies corporate continuity of conduct in respect to such business; such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital; the maintenance of an office for the transaction of business and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on business.

Penn Colliers Co. vs. McKeever, 183 N. Y., 98.
Simmons-Burk Clothing Company vs. Linton, 90 Ark., 76.
Kilgore vs. Smith, 122 Pa., 48.
Caesar vs. Capell, 83 Fed. Rep., 403-422.
Cooper Mfg. Co. vs. Ferguson, 113 U. S., 727.
Toledo Commercial Co. vs. Glenn Mfg. Co., 55 O. S., 217, 222, 223;

With reference to such foreign corporations as insurance companies, investment companies and building and loan companies, I am not prepared to hold that the reason and purpose of statutes of this kind as applied to such corporations, require such evidence of intended business continuity in order to bring them within the meaning of the phrase in question. As to such companies, business done or transacted within the state through any agency, is "doing business" in such state.

Rose vs. Kimberly, 89 Wis., 545.
Swing vs. Munson, 191 Pa. St., 582.
Farrier vs. New England Mort. Security Co., 88 Ala., 275.
Hacheny vs. Leary, 12 Ore., 40.
Dundee vs. Mortgage Trust and Investment Co., 95 Ala., 318.
State vs. Bristol Savings Bank, 108 Ala., 3.
State ex rel. vs. Co-operative Homestead Co., 47 Wash., 239.
Maine Guarantee Co. vs. Cox, 146 Ind., 107.
Casualty Co. vs. Banking Co., 12 C. C. (n. s.) 200.
State vs. Insurance Co., 24 C. C., 387.

Doing business within the meaning of statutes of this kind means transacting some act of business of the character for which the foreign corporation was organized and it has therefore been held, as often as the question has arisen, that the act of the foreign corporation in selling and placing its corporate stock, does not offend statutes of this kind.

Payson vs. Withers, 5 (U. S.), 269.
Bartlett vs. Choteau Ins. Co., 18 Kans. 369.
Bank vs. Leeper, 121 Mo. App., 688.
Union Trust Co. vs. Sickles, 125 App. Div. (N. Y.), 105.

I take it, however, that the matters advertised by the company referred to in your communication, had no reference to the corporate stock of such company, but that the matter so advertised was something pertaining to the ordinary and usual business of the company. The act of the company, however, in advertising the payment by such company of "6% on savings and paid up stock" was not doing business in the sense that any business was thereby transacted, but at most this advertisement was but a solicitation of business and as to this it has been held as often as the question has been presented, that mere solicitation of business is not "doing business" within the meaning of statutes of this kind. It is true that the decisions in many of the cases touching this point, have been influenced by the commerce clause of the federal constitution, but in other cases where this constitutional provision did not apply and was not taken into consideration, the decisions have been to the same point. Thus in the case of Board vs. The Union & Am. Publishing Co., it was held that soliciting subscriptions for a newspaper published in another state, by a corporation, was not "doing business" within the state of Alabama, within the meaning of the constitution of that state, prohibiting foreign corporations from doing any business in the state without having at least one known place of business and an authorized agent or agents therein.

In the case of American Contractor Publishing Co. vs. Bagge, 91 N. Y. Supp., 73 it was held that where a foreign corporation was engaged in publishing a magazine in Illinois and employed an agent in New York who merely solicited orders for advertisement, which orders were required to be forwarded to Illinois for acceptance and if accepted, the advertisement appeared in the magazine, such transaction did not constitute doing business in New York within the meaning of the statutes of that state, requiring foreign corporations doing business in New York, to obtain a certificate from the secretary of state and pay a license tax. While a state has no power to prevent its citizens from making contracts in another state, it has the undoubted right to prohibit to an unauthorized foreign corporation, the right to solicit business within its jurisdiction, when such business is not protected by the commerce clause of the federal constitution. Nutting vs. Mass., 183 U. S., 553.

With respect to foreign building and loan companies, the statute has not prohibited them from soliciting business in the manner disclosed and called in question. By your communication, and on the considerations hereinbefore noted, I am of the opinion that the act of the company in question, in soliciting business in the manner indicated, does not come within the meaning of the phrase "doing business" as employed in section 678, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE—ATTORNEY'S FEE—TRANSCRIPT.

The city of St. Marys is without authority to pay the sum of two hundred and sixty dollars for the service of attorneys to whom was submitted a transcript of proceedings in connection with the issue and sale of bonds; this fee was included as a part of the bid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1914.

HON. L. C. BRODBECK, City Solicitor, St. Marys, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 4, 1914, as follows:

"On December 7, 1913, Spitzer-Rorick & Company of Toledo presented a bid to J. F. Boos, city auditor of St. Marys, Ohio, for a series of bonds that were to be issued within a short time thereafter.

"On the 17th day of December, 1913, the council of the city of St. Marys, Ohio, by resolution, awarded the bonds in question to Spitzer-Rorick & Company.

"You will notice in the fourth paragraph of the bid, that Spitzer-Rorick & Company included as a part of their proposition that the sum of $260.00 be allowed them as attorney fees.

"The question bothering me at this time is as to whether or not such an allowance would be legal, that is, whether or not the city of St. Marys could pay the sum of $260.00 to Spitzer-Rorick & Company for the services rendered by the attorneys to whom they submitted the transcript of the proceedings."

Section 3924 of the General Code reads:

"Sales of bonds, other than to the trustees of the sinking fund of the city or to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district as herein authorized, by any municipal corporation, shall be to the highest and best bidder, after thirty days' notice in at least two newspapers of general circulation in the county where such municipal corporation is situated setting forth the nature, amount, rate of interest and length of time the bonds have to run, with time and place of sale. Additional notice may be published outside of such county by order of the council, but when such bonds have been once so advertised and offered for public sale, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value, under the direction of the mayor and the officers and agents of the corporation by whom such bonds have been, or shall be, prepared, advertised and offered at public sale."

Nowhere in the statute is the municipality given any authority to reimburse the bidders for fees paid to attorneys by them in passing upon the validity of the bonds, and this department has frequently held that this may not be done. Accordingly, it is my opinion that the city of St. Marys is without authority to pay the sum of two hundred and sixty dollars to Spitzer-Rorick & Company for the services rendered by the attorneys to whom they submitted transcript of the proceedings in connection with the issue and sale of the bonds.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF HEALTH—REFUSE—PUT-IN-BAY.

The board of health of the village of Put-in-Bay, or the board of health of the township in which this village is located, as the case may be, has the right, within their respective jurisdictions, to abate a nuisance caused by the throwing of refuse from boats into the bay.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 4, 1914.

The State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of February 2, 1914, asking an opinion of me, in which you say:

> "For several years we have had complaints from the health authorities of Put-in-Bay in regard to the practice of excursion boats throwing refuse such as papers, remains from lunches, sweepings, etc, into Put-in-Bay while the boats are at the docks. The local board of health is anxious to take some action to prevent this practice, if within its jurisdiction, and I should be glad if you will inform me if the local board of health or the state board of health has the authority to issue an order to companies or persons operating these boats to provide other means for disposing of their wastes.
> "You will realize the necessity of some action if you have taken occasion to observe the manner in which the beach at Put-in-Bay is littered with rubbish of all descriptions."

I take it that the local board of health referred to in your communication is the board of health of the village of Put-in-Bay.

Section 4404, General Code, provides that the council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members, to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council, but shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum, and that the mayor shall be president of such board by virtue of his office. It is further provided in said section, that in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health, who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. It is provided that such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be aproved by the state board of health.

Section 4413, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded, and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record thereof shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances."

By section 4420, General Code, it is provided that the local board of health shall abate and remove all nuisances within its jurisdiction. Section 4414 and 4415, General Code, provides as follows:

"Section 4414. Whoever violates any provision of this chapter, or any order or regulation of the board of health made in pursuance thereof, or obstructs or interferes with the execution of such order, or wilfully or illegally omits to obey such order, shall be fined not to exceed one hundred dollars or imprisoned for not to exceed ninety days, or both, but no person shall be imprisoned under this section for the first offense, and the prosecution shall always be as and for a first offense, unless the affidavit upon which the prosecution is instituted, contains the allegation that the offense is a second or repeated offense.

"Section 4415. If such violation, obstruction, interference or omission be by a corporation, it shall forfeit and pay to the proper municipality a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars, to be collected in a civil action brought in the name of the municipality. Any officer of such corporation having authority over the matter, and permitting such violation, shall be subject to fine or imprisonment, or both, as heretofore provided. The judgment herein authorized being in the nature of a penalty or exemplary damage, no proof of actual damages shall be required, but the court or jury, finding other facts to justify recovery, shall determine the amount by reference to all the facts, culpatory, exculpatory, or extenuating, adduced upon the trial."

The question presented is one as to the power of the local board of health of the village of Put-in-Bay to meet the situation indicated in your communication.

In the case of Edson vs. Crangle, 62 O. S., 49, it was held that the boundary line between the United States and Canada through Lake Erie is the northern boundary of this state, and its jurisdiction extends to that line. The village of Put-in-Bay is a municipal corporation and it may be a matter of some question whether its authority or that of any of its agencies would extend to the abatement of existing nuisances in the waters of Put-in-Bay and Lake Erie, outside the corporate limits of the municipality.

Savors vs State of Ohio, 8 N. P. (n. s.), 228.
State vs. Savors, 15 C. C. (n. s.), 65.

There is no question, however, as to the power of the local board of health to abate nuisances on the beach, which is within the corporate limits, nor as to its power by proper order to prohibit actions beyond the corporate limits, the natural and obvious effect of which is to create a nuisance on the beach within its jurisdiction.

"It is the place where the nuisance is caused and not the place where the act is done causing the nuisance, that determines the venue. McClain criminal law, section 1177."

Strawboard Company vs. State, 70 O. S., 140-147.

From the tenor of your communication, I take it that the beach affected by the nuisance in question is a part of the village, but if it should appear that any part of the beach affected by the nuisance is outside the limits of the municipality and in the township, you will note that section 3391, General Code, provides that in each township the trustees thereof shall constitute a board of health which shall be for the township outside the limits of any municipality.

Sections 3392 and 3394 of the General Code, provide:

"Section 3392. The township board of health may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement, or suppression of all nuisances. All orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, recorded and certified as are ordinances of villages, (and the) record thereof shall be given in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances, but the advertisements of such orders and regulations shall be by posting them in five conspicuous places within the township.

"Section 3394. Township boards of health shall have the same duties, powers and jurisdiction, within the township and outside of any municipality as by law are imposed upon or granted to boards of health in municipalities, and any violation of any order or regulation of such township board made pursuant to such authority, or obstruction or interference with the execution thereof, or wilful or illegal to obey such orders or regulation, shall be punished, and the prosecution thereof instituted and conducted in the same manner, and the fines and penalties and the disposition thereof, and the punishment shall be the same as is provided by law for the prosecution and punishment of the violation of any like order or regulation of boards of health in municipalities."

It follows that by force of the statutory provisions above noted, that the local board of health of the village of Put-in-Bay, or the board of health of the township, as the case may be, has ample power and jurisdiction to provide for the abatement of the nuisance in question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY ENGINEER—RIGHT TO ACT AS CONSULTING ENGINEER.

The city engineer of a city may be employed as consulting engineer in the installation of a water system and receive additional compensation for such work, providing he has sufficient time to properly discharge the duties of both positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1914.

HON. E. W. NEWKIRK, City Solicitor, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 23, 1914, as follows:

"The city of Wooster will soon take the necessary steps to enlarge and extend its water system so as to procure more and pure water. The city has been advised by the state board of health to employ a consulting engineer to supervise the testing of the new source of water supply, and I presume to supervise the installation of the new or extended waterworks system.

"Our regular city engineer claims that he is able to do this work and wants to be employed to do it. He is by ordinance paid a certain salary during the winter months, and a considerably larger salary during the summer months. The question is, has the service director, or, if he has not, has the council by ordinance a right to employ the present city engineer to do the above additional work and agree to pay him a salary or fee in addition to his regular salary for said work."

Section 1240 provides in part:

"No city, village, public institution, corporation or person shall provide or install for public use, a water supply or sewerage system, or purification works for a water supply or a sewage, of a municipal corporation or public institution, or make a change in the water supply, waterworks intake, water purification works of a municipal corporation or public institution, until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the state board of health."

From this section it is clear that your city must submit its plans for the installation of the proposed new water system, to the state board of health for approval, but this does not give the board any voice in the selection of an engineer to direct the work. That is a matter for the consideration of your city authorities.

It will not be claimed by any one, I am sure, that it is the official duty of the city engineer to act as a consulting engineer in connection with the installation of a new water system. Such work is neither incident or germane to his duty as city engineer. The question then is, can the city engineer be employed to act as consulting engineer on such work and be paid additional compensation. Judge Dillon, in his work on municipal corporations, says on page 740, in a note to section 426:

"Payments of additional compensation to a city surveyor held valid for preparing plans and specifications for a general system of sewage disposal not contemplated when his salary was fixed and the work was outside his official duties."

Collock vs. Dodge, 105 Wis., 187.

The statutes in that case were very similar to our own. The charter of Madison provided for the election by the council of a city surveyor, who was required to be a practical surveyor or engineer and the council was authorized to prescribe his duties and fix the fee and compensation for his services. It also empowered the council to impose additional duties upon officers whose duties were therein prescribed, and to fix the compensation of all officers elected by it, which should not be increased or diminished during the time such officer remained in office. The charter nowhere prescribed the duties of the surveyor except that he should act upon the board of sewage assessors. The council although it had prescribed from time to time the duties of the surveyor as to street improvements, had never taken such action in regard to building sewers except to recognize that such services were not official duties. The council having adopted a general system of sewage disposal, employed "D.," who had theretofore been elected city surveyor, and his salary as such fixed before the beginning of his term of office, to prepare plans and specifications therefor and agreed to pay him for such plans and specifications, etc., compensation in addition to his salary as city surveyor. In an action by a taxpayer to restrain the payment of such additional compensation and to recover back what had already been paid, it was held that the legislature had delegated to the council the power to prescribe the duties of the city surveyor and to fix the fee and compensation for any services performed by him; that the council had determined that the services in question were not official services; and that under the charter provisions this was not such an unwarranted exercise of power as to call for the intervention of the courts. It was said by the court in that case:

> "We concede the rule, in all its amplitude, that a person, accepting a public office, with a fixed salary, is bound to perform the duties of the office for the salary and that no very nice distinctions should be indulged as to what are and what are not official duties. But the rule, nevertheless, has its limit. It does not follow that public officer is bound to perform all manner of public services without compensation because his office has a salary attached to it, nor is he, in consequence of holding an office, rendered legally incompetent to discharge duties which are extra-official outside his official duties as prescribed."

State ex rel. Seattle vs. Carson, 6 Wash., 250.
U. S. vs. Brindle, 110 U. S., 688.
See Eagle River vs. Oneida Co., 86 Wis., 266.

In our own state it was held in Lewis, Auditor, vs. State ex rel., 11 O. C. D., p. 647:

> "The services performed on the decennial board of equalization, under the Hendley-Royer law, by the auditor, county surveyor and county commissioners, are without the scope of their official duties as such and are not so 'incident' or 'germane' to the regular duties of the office to which they have been respectively elected, as to make the provision for compensation contained in the Hendley law in contravention of the act of the legislature, 94 O. L., 396, or the constitution, article II, section 20."

In White vs. East Saginaw, 43 Michigan, 567, it was said:

> "The imposition of new duties not 'incident' or 'germane' to the regular duties of his office upon an officer, does not change his office, but invests him with a new office."

There is nothing in the statutory laws of the state preventing the same person from holding the position of city engineer and being employed as consulting engineer in connection with the installation of a new waterworks system for the city, neither does the common law rule of incompatibility forbid one person holding the two positions; nor is such person precluded from receiving the salaries or compensations attached to both employments.

Since it is a well established principle of law, that where one person may legally hold two different positions and does hold them, he may receive the salary of both, for these reasons and from a consideration of the authorities quoted, it is my opinion that your city engineer may be employed as consulting engineer in the installation of a new water system and receive additional compensation for such work, assuming of course, that he has sufficient time to properly discharge the duties of both positions.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEES—INHERITANCE TAX—COLLECTION OF TAXES.

The fees allowed the county treasurer under the inheritance tax law are fixed by section 2685, General Code. The fees of the auditor, treasurer and probate judge are a part of the costs of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses referred to in section 5346, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1914.

Bureau in Inspection & Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 19th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "What are the fees of the county treasurer under the inheritance tax law, upon moneys collected by him in connection therewith?
> "Are the fees of the auditor, treasurer and probate judge to be considered as a part of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of such taxes, as referred to in section 5346, G. C., to be deducted from the amount of such taxes as directed by said section?"

Section 2685, General Code, provides as follows:

> "On settlement semi-annually with the county auditor, the county treasurer shall be allowed as fees on all moneys collected by him on any tax duplicate other than the liquor and cigarette duplicates, the following percentages: On the first one hundred thousand dollars, one and one-half per cent.; on the next two million dollars, five-tenths of one per cent.; on the next two million dollars, four-tenths of one per cent.; and on all further sums, one-tenth of one per cent. Such compensation shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor and deducted from the shares or portion of the revenue payable to the state as well as to the county, township, corporations and school district; and all moneys collected on liquor and cigarette duplicate, one per cent., on all moneys collected otherwise than on the said duplicates, except moneys received from the state treasurer or his predecessors in office, or his legal representatives or the sureties of such predecessors, and except moneys received from the proceeds of the bonds of the county or of any municipal corporation, five-tenths of one per cent. on the amount so received, to be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor out of the general fund of the county."

The form given above is that found in 102 O. L., 277, when the section was last amended.

In my recent opinion to the auditor of state, a copy of which you have, I held that the collateral inheritance tax is a "tax collected on a duplicate" within the meaning of sections like the above; therefore, I am of the opinion that the first sentence of the section applies to and governs the fees of the treasurer about which you inquire.

However, the second sentence relating to the apportionment of the compensation does not control because of the conflicting provisions of section 5346, General Code, discussed in the former opinion.

Answering your second question, I am of the opinion that the fees of the auditor, treasurer and probate judge are clearly to be considered a part of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses referred to in section 5346, and are to be deducted from the amount of the taxes as directed in said section.

I must confess that the conclusion which I have reached respecting the fees of officers under the collateral inheritance tax are far from satisfactory to myself. There should be at an early date some legislation which will clear up the entire subject.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—HUMANE SOCIETY AGENT—PROBATION OFFICER.

A humane society agent may also be appointed to act as probation officer of the juvenile court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 21, 1914, as follows:

> "In the administration of the new juvenile code, we are urging all of the juvenile courts to appoint a regular probation officer at such salary as the work involved may warrant.
> "In consultation with certain judges, the question has arisen whether there is any legal restriction against the appointment, as probation officer of the juvenile courts, of a person now serving as a regularly appointed agent of the humane society. Most of these societies are more or less supported from the public funds and it is not clear at all to us whether such real employment would be incompatible."

Section 10070 of the General Code, authorizing the appointment of humane society agents, reads:

> "Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

Section 1662 of the General Code, as amended 103 O. L., p. 874, providing for the appointment of probation officers for the juvenile court, reads in part:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge."

Section 1663 of the General Code, reads:

"When a complaint is made or filed against a minor, the probation officer shall inquire into and make examination and investigation into the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged delinquency, neglect, or dependency, the parentage and surrounding of such minor, his exact age, habits, school record, and every fact that will tend to throw light upon his life and character. He shall be present in court to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, furnish to the judge such information and assistance as he may require, and take charge of any child before and after the trial as the judge may direct. He shall serve the warrants and other process of the court within or without the county, and in that respect is hereby clothed with the powers and authority of sheriffs. He may make arrests without warrant upon reasonable information or upon view of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, detain the person so arrested pending the issuance of a warrant, and perform such other duties incident to their offices, as the judge directs."

The statutory law of the state does not prohibit one person from holding both of these positions nor does the common law rule of incompatibility show them to be incompatible. Neither is there anything to prevent one person from drawing the salaries of both positions. Since it is a familiar principle of law that where an officer by law may and does hold two offices, he may receive the salaries of both.

I am therefore of the opinion that a humane society agent may also be appointed and act as probation officer of the juvenile court.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNION CEMETERY—VILLAGE CEMETERY—CEMETERY FUNDS—DEPOSITORY.

Where a union cemetery has been controlled jointly by a village council and a township, the withdrawal of the township leaves the cemetery for control as a village cemetery, and the funds for this cemetery are to be controlled under the laws in relation thereto; these funds might be deposited at interest under the provisions of section 4295, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

HON. P. R. TAYLOR, Solicitor Port Jefferson, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 6, 1914, in which you inquire:

"There is a union cemetery used jointly by the village of Port Jefferson and Salem township. Our understanding is that a considerable time ago the trustees of Salem township withheld from the management and control of this cemetery, under the provisions of section 4196, G. C.

"In view of this, and of the repeal of sections 4184 and 4185, G. C., by the act of the legislature, 103 O. L., 272, who is now custodian of the cemetery fund? It appears to me that in all probability the village treasurer might be such custodian, though nothing is said in the statute about it.

"I further would ask your opinion as to whether this cemetery fund, which now amounts to $5,000.00, is to be considered a fund of the municipality and as such capable of being let by contract to a depository, so as to cause the fund to earn some interest."

Section 4196, General Code, reads:

"A municipal corporation or township united with another municipal corporation or township, or both, in the establishment or control of a union cemetery, may by a resolution of the council of the corporation or of the trustees of the township and with the consent of the council of the remaining corporation and trustees of the remaining township or townships, withdraw from the management and control of such cemetery, and relinquish the interest of such corporation or township therein, and thereupon the cemetery shall be under the management and control of the remaining corporation and township, or corporations and townships."

If, as I understand your letter, Salem township withdrew from the management and control of this cemetery under this section, then it would seem to me that the cemetery fund, as it existed when the withdrawal was completed would follow the cemetery and under the management and control of the remaining corporation, i. e., the village of Port Jefferson.

The only reason to my mind for the statute requiring the assent of those remaining to the withdrawal of those going out, is to be found in the character of the management and the condition of the cemetery fund and the withdrawal and relinquishment mentioned in section 4196, cannot be construed as limited to the cemetery itself and leave the funds for future disposition, joint control or subsequent bickering.

The repeal of sections 4184 and 4185, G. C., has been construed by this office as not calling for additional legislation, and as still leaving the control of union cemeteries in the township treasury and the council of villages under the provision of section 4193, G. C. A copy of this opinion will be furnished you on request, but inasmuch as it applies to continuing control of union cemeteries and your inquiry goes to control after a withdrawal under section 4196, I do not think the same of sufficient importance to enclose a copy at this time.

The withdrawal of Salem township leaves the cemetery for control as a village cemetery and the funds (cemetery) about which you inquire are to be controlled under the laws in relation thereto; and it would seem to me that this cemetery fund might be deposited at interest under the provisions of section 4295, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES—CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAYS.

1st. County commissioners may permit a voluntary agricultural society to use township road building machinery.

2nd. The county commissioners have no authority to contract for the repair of roads without advertisment and competitive bidding with the association mentioned. A contract may be made with this association provided it is the lowest competitive bidder answering the advertisement.

3rd. Before the roads of a county can be improved or repaired, under the terms of house bill No. 444, at least ten per cent. of the total cost must be contributed by private parties, and a commission appointed, as provided in section 1. Contracts under this act must be made by this commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1914.

HON. H. R. LOOMIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 1, 1913, you inquired of me as follows:

> "There has been organized in the county of Portage a voluntary association consisting of about two thousand members, the purpose of which is to improve the agricultural conditions of the county and the public highways. The county commissioners have levied a tax for the improvement of the public roads during the year 1914. The commissioners and this association are desirous of entering into an arrangement whereby the association will do the actual construction work of improving the highways, the county commissioners to pay the actual costs of the work.
> "In trying to find a way to carry out this purpose several questions have arisen which the commissioners have requested me to submit to you for determination:
>
> "First. Have the county commissioners authority to buy road building machinery and permit the association to use such machinery in repair of the highways within the limits of the county, such work being done at actual cost and there being no profit to the association? (See sections 7432 of the General Code and 7481 of the General Code.)
>
> "Second. Can the county commissioners without advertising for competitive bids, contract with this association to repair and maintain the county highways when such repair consists of cutting down hills, filling depressions on the roadways, of opening existing ditches, constructing necessary drainage and repairing surfaces with gravel, slate or slag, even though the amount expended on a certain mile of road may exceed $1,000.00 (See section 7419, et seq.)
>
> "Third. Can the county commissioners contract with said association for the purposes mentioned in question two, where the association does not pay ten per cent. of the cost of improvement?
> "Fourth. Before the county commissioners can contract with this association for the improvement of the highways, is it necessary that a commission be appointed as provided by house bill No. 444, page 732, volume 103 of Ohio Laws, provided the association prefers not to have a commission appointed by the court of common pleas, but to contract directly with the county commissioners?"

Sections 7432, 7480 and 7481 of the General Code relate to the purchase and use by county commissioners of road machinery. They are as follows:

> "Section 7432. The county commissioners may procure, by purchase or otherwise, the necessary tools and machinery for the purpose of making the repairs heretofore provided for.
> "Section 7480. The county commissioners, if they deem it to the public interest to do so, may purchase machinery or tools adapted for use in the construction or repair of roads, employ the necessary labor to operate them and pay therefor out of funds on hand applicable to the construction or repair of roads in the county. Payment therefor shall be made from the county treasury upon a warrant issued by the county auditor upon the order of the county commissioners.
> "Section 7481. Such machinery and tools shall be available for use in the construction, improvement or repair of such county or township roads within the county as the county commissioners shall from time to time order and direct."

Section 7432 is incorporated in the chapter relating to road repairs, and sections 7480 and 7481 are incorporated in the miscellaneous chapter of the road statutes.

It will be observed that the county commissioners by virtue of section 7432 may purchase tools and machinery for use in making road repairs. Section 7480 gives them authority to purchase machinery or tools for the construction or repair of roads and pay for same out of any funds in the county treasury applicable to the construction or repair of roads, and directs how such payment shall be made. Section 7481 authorizes county commissioners to direct the use of such machinery and tools, and specifically states that the same shall be available for the construction or repair of such county or township roads as the commissioners may direct.

There is no doubt of the power of the county commissioners under these statutes to purchase such road machinery and pay the cost thereof, as well as the cost of the labor necessary to operate the same, out of the county treasury. As the use of such machinery is limited only to such township and county roads as the commissioners may direct, and since there is no provision in the statutes limiting the use thereof to any particular officer or person, so long as the same is used on county or township roads, I see no reason why the commissioners cannot allow the association provided for by section 12 of house bill No. 444 to use such machinery.

Your second question relates to the power of county commissioners to contract for the repair of roads without advertisement and competitive bidding, and involves consideration of the statutes embodied in the chapter on road repairs—sections 7407-7458. The other sections of the chapter either have no connection with the subject or provide for repairs in special cases.

Section 7422 makes it the duty of county commissioners to > "cause all necessary repairs to be made for the proper maintenance of all improved roads in the county * * *."

Section 7427 requires the commissioners to > "fix a day on which they will let to the lowest and best bidder the job of furnishing and delivering such materials, so estimated, in such amounts and at such places as is decided upon by them."

Section 7428 provides for the making of a contract with the successful bidder for the furnishing and delivery of material and section 7430 allows county commissioners to employ labor by the day for making such repairs, or they may, by virtue of section 7431,

> "divide the work into convenient sections and let to the lowest and best bidder or bidders, the job of making the repairs for one year, according to specifications to be submitted to the bidders. In such event the notices, contracts and bonds to be given, entered into, and furnished, shall be in accordance with the provisions of sections seventy-four hundred and twenty-seven, seventy-four hundred and twenty-eight and seventy-four hundred and twenty-nine."

When proceeding under sections 7422, et seq., it is mandatory upon the county commissioners to award contracts for furnishing and delivering material upon advertisement and competitive bidding. They have the discretionary power to employ labor by the day or they may advertise for bids for the furnishing thereof and award the contract to the lowest bidder. The association would not stand in any different relation toward the county commissioners in this respect than a private individual.

I am of the opinion that the commissioners may contract with the association for furnishing and delivering material, and doing the work of repair for a period of one year, providing bids have been advertised for and the association is the lowest bidder, but they cannot contract with the association to repair and maintain roads without advertising for competitive bids.

Sections 7443, 7445, 7446, 7447 and 7451 provide:

> "Section 7443. All macadamized or graveled free roads, whether constructed under the general or local laws by taxation or assessment or both, or converted by purchase or otherwise from a toll road into a free road under any law, and all turnpike roads, or parts thereof, unfinished or abandoned by a turnpike company, and appropriated or accepted by the commissioners of the county, shall be kept in repair as provided hereafter in this chapter.
> "Section 7445. In each county, the county commissioners are constituted a board of turnpike directors, in which the management and control of all such roads therein shall be exclusively vested.
> "Section 7446. The directors, at their first meeting, shall divide the county into three districts, as nearly equal in number of miles of turnpike, and conveniently located, as is practicable, and each director shall have the personal supervision of one of such districts, subject to all rules and regulations that may from time to time be agreed upon by the board. The directors shall hold a meeting as the board at least once in three months, at their office at the county seat, and be governed in all transactions by the rules governing county commissioners.
> "Section 7447. The directors may appoint suitable persons to superintend the work of repairs on the several roads, who shall give bond and security to the satisfaction of the directors for the faithful performance of their duties, and take and subscribe an oath, which shall be endorsed on the back of the bond, and filed in the auditor's office of the county.
> "Section 7451. The directors may contract for labor and material, either at public sale or private contract, as will best subserve the interests of the different roads, and shall certify to the county auditor, on or before the first Monday in June each year, the amount of money necessary for the purpose of keeping such roads, including the bridges and culverts thereon, in good repair."

I am of the opinion that the turnpike directors, under these sections, cannot contract direct with the association for the repair and maintenance of roads. The commissioners may appoint superintendents and may contract for labor and material without competitive bidding, but must do the work of repair themselves through their agents, the superintendents to be appointed under section 7447.

Your third and fourth questions involve the construction of house bill No. 444 (103 O. L., 732).

Sections 1 and 12 of said act, provide:

"Section 1. When the county commissioners of any county have determined to improve one or more highways within such county and any person, persons, firm, partnership, corporation or association of persons desire to contribute a fund for the purpose of assisting in the improvement of such highway, such fund to be not less than ten per centum of the total cost of such improvement, the said person, persons, firm, partnership, corporation or association may apply to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county, who may appoint four suitable and competent freeholders of the county who shall, in connection with the county commissioners, constitute a commission for the purpose of the improvement of such road and serve until its completion.

"Section 12. Whenever, in any county in the state, there shall be a bona fide, voluntary association, either incorporated, or unincorporated, not for profit, of not less than one thousand citizens of any county, one of the purposes of which organization is the improvement, maintenance and repair of the public highways of said county, the commission as provided for in section one of this act, having the right to expend money in grading, draining, curbing and improving county and state highways by the use of gravel, macadam, stone, brick, slag or other material, or expending money for improving, maintaining and repairing said highways, from the public funds under their charge and control, applicable for the construction, maintenance or repair of public highways, may, without the necessity of petition being presented by property owners or of advertising for competitive bids, make contracts with said association, or its proper representatives, to do such work of grading, draining, repairing and improving county or state highways within said county, by the use of gravel, macadam, brick, slag or other material and for the betterment generally of the highways of said county and make payments thereof out of any road or bridge funds under the control of said respective boards of officials, in the treasury, or levied for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and improving the public highways in said county."

The intervening sections of the act deal with the compensation of the commission provided for by section 1, their bond, oath of office, payment of expenses, employment of engineers, etc., and as they are not pertinent to the questions raised, I refrain from quoting them.

Before the roads of a county can be improved or repaired under the terms of house bill No. 444, at least ten per cent. of the total cost thereof must be contributed by private parties and a commission appointed as provided in section 1. Contracts under this act must be made by the commission and not by the county commissioners in any event.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

"BLUE SKY" LAW—WHAT CONSTITUTES SECURITIES UNDER THIS LAW.

A corporation organized under the laws of Ohio and engaged in the business of furnishing supplies to its members, consisting of drugs and automobile accessories, where membership certificates are sold at twenty-five dollars each, the purchasers of these certificates have no voice in the management of the supply company and do not participate in the profits of the company. No certificates of stock are issued in this company, and in fact a member is not a stockholder in the company. These membership certificates sold in this way and on the above stated terms do not constitute securities within the meaning of the Ohio "blue sky" law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Department of Banks and Banking, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 3, 1914, I received a communication from the securities department of your office asking my opinion on a question stated therein, as follows:

"A corporation organized under the laws of Ohio is engaged in the business of furnishing 'supplies' to its members—these supplies consisting of drugs and automobile accessories. The object is to secure a large membership and buy these supplies in wholesale quantity, selling to the members at a wholesale price, plus the actual overhead charges of the supply company. Memberships are sold for twenty-five dollars each and the holders of membership certificates have no voice in the management of the supply company, and by the express terms of the membership contract, have no right to participate in the profits of the company, and no future claim for the return of the twenty-five dollars paid for the membership certificate. The theory of the supply company being that the twenty-five dollars received for membership certificates has been expended in the campaign for membership at the time it is received from the members.

"Each holder of a membership certificate deposits a certain amount of cash with the supply company for the purpose of guarantee payment of his account. The member is then at liberty to buy of the company an amount not exceeding the amount of his cash deposit. That cash deposit is returned to the holder of the membership certificate at any time he sees fit to withdraw from the supply company, of course, deducting therefrom any unpaid amount due from him to the supply company at the time of such withdrawal. The cash deposits are placed in the hands of the treasurer, who is under bonds, and they never at any time pass into or become a part of the assets of the company, but remain always the property of the member.

"The twenty-five dollars originally paid for the membership, as above stated, becomes the property of the supply company. No certificate of stock is issued and in fact, the member is not a stockholder in the supply company.

"Are the membership certificates, sold in this way and on these terms, 'securities' within the meaning of the so-called 'Ohio blue sky law?'"

Section 1, 103 O. L., 743 (Section 6373-1, G. C.), provides as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this act, no dealer shall, from and after the first day of August, A. D., 1913, within this state, dispose or offer to dispose of any stocks, bonds, mortgages or other instruments evidencing title to or interest in property or other securities of any kind or character (all hereinafter termed 'securities'), issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership or association (except corporations not for profit, organized under the laws of this state) or by any taxing subdivision of any other state, territory, province or foreign government, without first being licensed so as to do as hereinafter provided."

Section 2 of this act specifically exempts from the meaning of the term "securities" certain instruments therein designated, and further excepting conditionally certain persons, both natural and artificial, from the meaning of the term "dealer," defines that term as follows:

> "The term 'dealer,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to include any person or company, except national banks, disposing, or offering to dispose of any security, through agents, or otherwise, and any company engaged in the marketing or flotation of its own securities either directly or through agents or underwriters, or any stock promotion scheme whatsoever."

It is further provided by this section of the act that the term "dispose of" shall be construed to mean "sell, barter, pledge or assign for a valuable consideration or obtain subscriptions for."

I take it that the corporation in question is one organized for profit, otherwise under the provisions of section 1 of the act, the question presented could not arise. As a corporation for profit it must have a capital stock (section 8667, G. C.), and the only persons who in any proper sense can be said to be "members" of this corporation are its stockholders. The transaction between the company and its patrons, designated in your communication as "members," is that the company for a consideration of $25.00 sells to such persons the privilege of buying from it supplies at wholesale price plus an amount sufficient in the aggregate to meet the overhead expenses of the company; and as this privilege does not appear to be assignable it is to be considered personal and exclusive to the persons paying the consideration to the company.

I do not have before me one of the "certificates" issued by the company, but in its essence I apprehend that it but imports a receipt for the money paid and states or evidences the agreement between the company and the person to whom it is issued defining his privilege to purchase supplies from the company at the rates above specified. The question is whether these certificates so issued are "securities" within the meaning of this act. This act does not define the term "securities" either in general terms or by a statement of the specific instruments or things included within its meaning. Within the purview of the question presented the descriptive language of section 1 is as follows:

> "* * * any stock, bonds, mortgages, or other instruments evidencing title to or interest in property or other securities of any kind or character, (all hereinafter termed 'securities'), issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership, or association (except corporations not for profit), organized under the laws of this state)."

The certificates mentioned in your communication are not stocks, bonds or mortgages, nor are they in any sense instruments evidencing title to or interest in property; and if they are within the purview of this act at all, they must fall within the meaning of the words "or other securities of any kind or character."

The Century dictionary defines a "security" as "an evidence of debt or property, as a bond or certificate of stock." A similar definition of the term was noted in the case of Mace vs. Buchanan, 52 S. W., Rep. (Tenn. 507), and the court in this case, by way of suggestion rather than as an attempt at accurate definition, says that this term is generally understood to refer to live and negotiable commercial obligations, or state, county, government or municipal bonds.

Considering the current and accepted definitions of the term in the light of the provisions of section 1 of the act, it can be safely said that the word "security" means some instrument or thing importing or evidencing a debt or importing or evidencing some interest in or title to property.

In no view can the certificates issued by this corporation as described by you fall within the signification of the term "securities" above noted.

Again, I apprehend that insofar as the term "securities" may be ascribed to instruments executed and issued by corporations, it has, generally, reference to instruments executed and issued in the exercise of its corporate functions rather than to instruments evidencing contractual obligations made or executed in the transaction of its ordinary business.

Aside from the consideration last noted, however, I am of the opinion that the certificates issued by this corporation in the manner described in your communication, do not come within the purview of this act.

In conclusion, I note that a number of the sections of the act under consideration were amended at the recent special session of the legislature, said sections as amended to become effective as law within the time prescribed by the constitution. Within the purview of the question presented by you, the descriptive language of section 1 of the act as amended (section 6373-1, G. C.) is > "* * * any stock, stock certificates, bonds, debentures, collateral trust certificates or other similar instruments (all hereinafter termed 'securities') evidencing title to or interest in property issued or executed by any private or quasi-public corporation, co-partnership, or association (except corporations not for profit)."

Without particular discussion it may be noted as apparent that the certificates issued by this corporation do not come within the signification or meaning of any of the particular instruments included within the descriptive language of the section as amended, above quoted. On the considerations above noted, the question presented by you is answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TERM OF OFFICE—INCREASE IN SALARY—VILLAGE TREASURER.

If a village passed an ordinance December 29, 1913, increasing the salary of the village treasurer, such ordinance would apply to the salary of the incoming treasurer, who would take his office on January 1, 1914, and would permit him to draw the increased salary during his term of office, after the ordinance goes into effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1914.

HON. AUGUSTUS W. MITHOFF, City Solicitor of Basil, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter in which you inquire:

> "If the village council should pass an ordinance on December 29, 1913, increasing the salary of the village treasurer, would such ordinance apply to the salary of the incoming treasurer, who takes his office on January 1, 1914, so as to permit him to draw the increased salary during the term of his office."

This question was presented to my predecessor, Mr. Denman, in 1911, and in an opinion to Van A. Snider, city solicitor, Lancaster, Ohio, it was said:

> "Section 126 M. C., provides as to salaries fixed by council that they,
> "'Shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he (the municipal officer) may have been elected or appointed.'
> "Under the provisions of this section it is clear that if the ordinance in question became effective on January 6, 1910, its changes will not be effective as to those officers who took office on January 3rd. This question, in turn, depends upon whether the ordinance is one of a general and permanent nature requiring publication as prescribed in section 1695, R. S."

Later the same question was presented again and in an opinion to Hon. H. M. Houston, city solicitor, Urbana, Ohio it was stated:

> "Therefore, an ordinance fixing salaries which either increases or diminishes such salaries passed by council prior to the officer or employe, whose salary is so fixed, entering upon his term, while it remains inoperative sixty days, yet insofar as the officer is concerned, is, as I view it, a valid ordinance fixing his salary as determined by such ordinance at the expiration of said sixty days. Such officer or employe would, therefore, be entitled to the salary under the old ordinance until the new ordinance would go into operation at which time he would be entitled to the salary as fixed by the new ordinance. In other words, it would seem to me that the ordinance having been passed prior to the officer or employe entering upon his duties and merely the operation of the same being postponed, it could not be considered that such change, due to the new ordinance going into operation after the officer or employe entered upon his duty, increases or diminishes his salary as the case may be, within the meaning of section 4213 of the General Code.
> "Therefore, it would seem to me that an ordinance passed before December 31st, midnight, not having received the action above indicated, could not be considered as a valid ordinance. If before that time such ordinance has received the above indicated action it would be considered as an ordinance passed by the outgoing council, but such ordinance would, under the provisions of the initiative and referendum act, not become effective until sixty days after the passage thereof. If an ordinance increasing or diminishing the salary of a mayor who takes office January 1, 1912, does receive such action prior to December 31st, midnight, I am of the opinion that the mayor would be entitled to the salary fixed by the ordinance which the new ordinance supersedes up to the time such new ordinance becomes effective under the initiative and referendum act, and thereafter would be entitled to the salary under the new ordinance."

Outside of Ohio, where no case directly in point can be found, the only case I have been able to find holds:

"Although the ordinance did not, because of the necessity of publishing it, take effect until after the term began, it nevertheless fixed the salary for that term and having been passed before the term, the plaintiff took his office with the right to the benefit of its provisions, provided it should become a law. To give the ordinance such effect is not in contravention of but in accordance with the terms of the legislature. Stuhr vs. Hoboken, 47 N. J. L., 149."

The syllabus (2) of the above case reads:

"Where, after an ordinance is passed, fixing a salary for the ensuing term, an officer is elected, the ordinance will fix the salary for that term, although it did not, because of the necessity of publishing it, take effect until after the term began."

The opinion of my predecessor seems to have been overlooked when the Houston opinion was written, as it was not mentioned, but be that as it may, I adhere to the Houston opinion and now advise you that it furnishes the correct rule of law in the premises.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUVENILE COURT—THE APPOINTMENT OF A JUVENILE COURT CONSTABLE—VALIDITY OF SUCH APPOINTMENT.

The appointment of John Weinig as special court constable in the juvenile court, Hamilton county, Ohio, as evidenced by the records of the entries filed and entered in the court of common pleas of Hamilton, county, Ohio, was in all respects valid, and all questions with reference to the particular services to be rendered by the appointee should be determined by the court itself.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 19, 1914, I received a communication from your office, advising that a question had been officially presented to your office with respect to the validity of the appointment of Mr. John Weinig, an attorney of your city, to act as special court constable in the juvenile court of Hamilton county. It appears that on February 9, 1914, Hon. Krank M. Gorman, one of the judges of the court of common pleas of that county, was designated by the judges of the court of common pleas, superior court of Cincinnati, and the insolvency and probate courts of Hamilton county, to act and preside as the judge of the juvenile court for a term of one year.

The appointment of Mr. Weinig, as special court constable, and the designation of his duties are evidenced by two separate entries filed and entered in the juvenile court and the court of common pleas of said county, respectively, as follows:

"JUVENILE COURT OF HAMILTON COUNTY, OHIO

"No.

"In the matter of the appointment of John W. Weinig, special court constable. } ENTRY.

"In the opinion of the court the business of the juvenile court of Hamilton county requires the appointment of a special court constable. It is therefore ordered by the court that John W. Weinig be and he hereby is appointed as a court constable to attend to the assignment of all cases in the juvenile court of Hamilton county; to aid and assist in the administration of justice therein, and to preserve order therein; to prepare all legal documents necessary to be used in said court, including subpoenas, warrants, citations, etc., to collect evidence for the prosecution of cases in said court, and to prosecute under the directions of the court, any and all persons who aid, abet, induce, cause, encourage, or contribute toward the delinquency of a minor under the age of eighteen years, and all persons who contribute to the dependency of said minors; and to perform all such other duties and services as the court may direct.

"The compensation of said John W. Weinig is hereby fixed at twelve hundred ($1,200.00) dollars per annum, payable in monthly installments as provided by law, upon the order of the juvenile court.

"John W. Weinig, having been appointed court constable, appeared in open court this day, accepted said appointment, was duly sworn according to law and assumed his duties as said appointee."

"COMMON PLEAS COURT OF HAMILTON COUNTY, OHIO.

"No.

"In the matter of the appointment of John W. Weinig, special court constable. } ENTRY.

"In the opinion of the court, the business of the court of common pleas and of the juvenile court of Hamilton county requires the appointment of a special court constable. It is therefore ordered by the court that John W. Weinig be and he hereby is appointed as a court constable to attend to the assignment of all cases in the juvenile court of Hamilton county; to aid and assist in the administration of justice therein and to preserve order therein; to prepare all legal documents necessary to be used in said court, including subpoenas, warrants, citations, etc.; to collect evidence for the prosecution of cases in said court and to prosecute under the directions of the court, any and all persons who aid, abet, induce, cause, encourage or contribute toward the delinquency of a minor under the age of eighteen years, and all persons who contribute to the dependency of said minors; and to perform all such other duties and services as the court may direct.

"The compensation of said John W. Weinig is hereby fixed at twelve hundred ($1,200.00) dollars per annum, payable in monthly installments as provided by law, upon the order of the juvenile court.

"John W. Weinig having been appointed court constable, appeared in open court this day, accepted said appointment, was duly sworn according to law and assumed his duties as said appointee."

Sections 1 and 10 of article 4 of the state constitution, provide as follows:

"Section 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

"Section 10. All judges, other than those provided for in this constitution shall be elected, by the electors of the judicial district for which they may be created, but not for a longer term of office than five years."

Section 15 of article 4 of the constitution provides:

"Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, to increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and to establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein."

Section 1639, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 417, 418, sections 1692 and 1693, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 417, 418, provide as follows:

"Section 1639. Courts of common pleas, probate courts, and insolvency courts and superior courts, where established, shall have and exercise, concurrently, the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter. The judge of such courts in each county, at such times as they determine, shall designate one of their number to transact the business arising under such jurisdiction. When the term of the judge so designated expires, or his office terminates, another designation shall be made in like manner. The words 'juvenile court' when used in the statutes of Ohio shall be understood as meaning the court in which the judge so designated may be sitting while exercising such jurisdiction, and the words 'judge of the juvenile court' or 'juvenile judge' as meaning such judge while exercising such jurisdiction.

"Section 1692. When, in the opinion of the court, the business thereof so requires, each court of common pleas, court of appeals, superior court, insolvency court, in each county of the state, and, in counties having at the last or any future federal census more than seventy thousand inhabitants, the probate court may appoint one or more constables to preserve order, attend the assignment of cases in counties where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time, and discharge such other duties as the court requires. When so directed by the court, each constable shall have the same powers as sheriffs to call and impanel jurors, except in capital cases. .

"Section 1693. Each constable shall receive the compensation fixed by the judge or judges of the court making the appointment. In counties where four or more judges regularly hold court, such compensation shall not exceed twelve hundred and fifty dollars each year, in counties where more than one judge and not more than three judges hold court at the same time, not to exceed one thousand dollars per year, and in counties where only one judge holds court, two and one-half dollars each day, and shall be paid monthly from the county treasury on the order of the court. Such court constable or constables may, when placed by the court in charge of the assignment of cases, be allowed further compensation not to exceed one thousand five hundred dollars, as the court by its order entered on the journal, determines."

As I see it, the primary question here presented is whether the juvenile court so called, is in a broad and complete sense a court separate and distinct from the several courts mentioned in section 1639, General Code, the judges of which designate the judge of the juvenile court; for if the juvenile court in legal contemplation is a separate and distinct court, I am unable to see any statutory authority for the appointment made. There are no statutory provisions authorizing the appointment of court constables as such, in juvenile courts so called, and section 1692 authorizes the courts therein named to appoint constables for their own respective courts only.

In the case of Mendelson vs. Miller, 11 N. P. (n. s.), 586, 588, the court (Philip, J.) says:

"We are dealing with a court. And what is a court? Without attempting to be severely accurate, I will say that a court is a governmental body or tribunal, clothed, with a judicial function. To constitute a court, there must be a judge, or judges, and he or they must have a defined and delegated jurisdiction. But before we can have judges and jurisdiction, these must be provided for by the constitution or by law.

"For the legislature to enact that there shall be a court; for it to fix the number of judges, to define the jurisdiction, and to prescribe the precedure, etc., is to establish a court."

In the case of Ex-parte Bank, 1 O. S., 432, 434, the court, speaking with reference to sections 1 and 10 of article 4 of the state constitution, as they then stood, says:

> "Thus all the judicial power of the state is vested in the courts designated in the constitution, and in such courts as may be organized under the first section. But it is perfectly clear that, upon the creation of any additional court by the legislature, the judicial officer must be elected, as such, by the electors of the district for which such court is created; and it is not within the competency of the legislature to clothe with judicial power any officer or person, not elected as a judge."

Measured by the principles above stated, it is apparent that the juvenile court, so called, of Hamilton county, is not in any complete or proper sense, a separate and distinct court, either as to organization or jurisdiction, but is only a forum for the transaction of certain distributed business, concurrent jurisdiction of which is vested in the courts first specifically named in section 1639. In recognition of this status of the juvenile court, in the case of Travis vs. State, 12 C. C. (n. s.) 374, it is said:

> "The judges of courts having like original jurisdiction, may arrange for a proper distribution of the business coming before said courts. * * * * * * * * * * * *
> The act in question (juvenile court act) authorizes the judges of the several courts of equal jurisdiction, to designate one who shall hear and dispose of the business in which each is given equal original authority. Jurisdiction consists of the power to hear and determine. The source of this power resides in the legislature. In this act it is conferred upon the several courts named by that authority, and the mere selection by the several judges of one to dispose of the business, is not conferring jurisdiction. For, without such designation, either of the courts named could entertain jurisdiction of the matter specified in the act; whilst if the authority was conferred upon the judges, neither of said courts should exercise the power to hear and determine unless authorized by the judges before hand. The court first acquiring jurisdiction would hold it until the action was finally disposed of."

It seems clear that the fact that a particular judge of the common pleas court is designated to sit in a juvenile court, does not in any way change the quality of that particular judge. He is still a common pleas judge and in transacting the business of the juvenile court, he is exercising the jurisdiction of the common pleas court. In the exercising of his judicial functions, he remains the common pleas court of the county as much so as any other of the judges of said court.

By force of the express provision of section 1692, General Code, the common pleas court as such, had power to appoint Mr. Weinig as special court constable, if, in the opinion of the court, its business required such appointment, and the fact, if such it be, that the appointment was made by one judge of that court rather than by the whole body of judges thereof, is immaterial, at least in the absence of a rule of court, requiring such appointments to be made by all of the judges of the court jointly.

Moreover, the entry in the common pleas court recites that the appointment of Mr. Weinig is made by order of the court; this imports verity and is conclusive in this respect with reference to the question presented.

My conclusion, therefore, with respect to this phase of the question presented, is that the attempted appointment evidenced by the entry filed and entered on the records of the juvenile court, was without authority and is therefore invalid, but, that the appointment of Mr. Weinig evidenced by the entry filed in the common pleas court was authorized by statutory provision and is therefore valid, as far as his status as special court constable is concerned, with full right to enjoy the emoluments of the position. On considerations before noted, it seems clear to me that the fact that the duties to be performed by Mr. Weinig are to be performed with reference to the business of the juvenile court, in no wise effects the question as to the validity of his appointment as special court constable in the common pleas court.

It may be a question whether, under the provisions of section 1692, G. C., Mr. Weinig, as such special court constable, can be required to act as prosecutor in cases before the juvenile court. The statute provides that such court constable may be bound to preserve order, attend the assignment of cases in counties where more than two common pleas judges regularly hold court at the same time, and discharge such other duties as the court requires. Under a familiar rule of construction, it is possible that the general language of the section just noted should be restrained in its meaning and limited to duties of a like kind with those enumerated. However, this is a question between the court and its appointee and in no wise affects the question as to the validity of the appointment of Mr. Weinig as court constable. Under his appointment as court constable, he is unquestionably authorized to perform some of the duties delegated to him in the entry of his appointment in the common pleas court and the fact, if so it be, that he cannot be required and is not authorized to perform other of the duties therein delegated, does not obviously affect the validity of his appointment with the right and duty upon him to perform such services as are not quesetioned. If the right of the appointee to prosecute any particular case before the juvenile court is questioned, such right can be challenged by the party aggrieved and his competency to act can then be determined by the court.

Section 1664, General Code, provides as follows:

> "On the request of the judge exercising such jurisdiction, the prosecuting attorney of the county shall prosecute all persons charged with violating any of the provisions of this chapter."

This section does not confer upon the prosecuting attorney of the county any absolute duty with its correlative right, with reference to the prosecution of persons before the juvenile court, his duty and right in any case is conditional on the request of the judge that he should so act.

Section 1662 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., p. 874, provides that the judge transacting the business of the juvenile court may appoint one or more persons to serve as probation officers and the number of the persons who may be so appointed is only limited by the provision that the entire compensation of all probation officers in a county shall not exceed the sum of $40.00 for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding census.

Section 1663, General Code, provides generally with reference to the duties of such probation officers, and with reference to the question here presented it may be noted that many of the services contemplated in the appointment of Mr. Weinig, as special court constable, could have been secured by his appointment as probation officer. However, the only question here presented is with respect to the validity of the appointment of Mr. Weinig as court constable, and finding as I do that there was power in the common pleas court to make such appointment, it obviously does not affect the question that the same services might, in many respects, have been secured by his appointment as probation officer.

I am of the opinion that his appointment as such special court constable was in all respects valid and that all questions with reference to the particular services to be rendered by the appointee should be determined by the court itself.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSPORTATION OF HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS—LAWS REGULATING SUCH TRANSPORTATION.

When a pupil resides five miles from any high school and has a high school in its district not closer than five miles, and no high school in any district nearer than five miles, free transportation to such high school may be furnished by the board of education when the nearest high school is its own high school. The board of education cannot under any circumstances furnish transportation to such pupil to any high school except its own.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1914.

HON. R. W. CAHILL, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 28, 1913, you submitted for an opinion the following request:

> "When a pupil lives five miles from any high school and has a high school in its district not closer than five miles, and no high school in any other school district nearer than five miles, would the pupil be entitled to transportation to the nearest high school under favor of section 7748, General Code of Ohio?"

In reply to your inquiry, section 7748 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school, or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a township or special district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate."

Said section contains the provision that a board of education maintaining a high school must pay the tuition of all successful applicants who have complied with the further provisions thereof, and who reside more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel from the high school provided by such board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school. Or, in lieu of paying such tuition, such board of education so maintaining a high school, may pay for the transportation of pupils living more than four miles from the said high school maintained by the said board of education, to said high school. In accordance with the phraseology employed in said section, it is apparent when a pupil lives more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by such board, and attends a nearer high school, that such board of education must do one of the two things prescribed by said section, that is to say, such board must either pay the tuition of such pupil, if such pupil attends a nearer high school than the one provided by said board, or, in lieu of paying such tuition, such board of education is required to furnish transportation for such pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, by the most direct route of public travel, which is maintained by the said board of education. It seems to be the legislative intent that the provision for furnishing transportation shall be limited to furnishing transportation to the said high school maintained by the said board of education in its own district, and said provision is not so broad that such board is required to furnish transportation to such pupil or to entitle such pupil to transportation to a high school other than its own high school. As before stated, such board of education is limited to furnishing transportation to such pupils to its own high school in lieu of paying the tuition of such pupils to a nearer high school than the one provided by such board.

Construing said section in accordance with the terms therein contained, it follows that such board can only pay the tuition of such pupils living more than four miles from the high school maintained by said board, measured by the most direct route of public travel, when such pupils attend a nearer high school, but cannot furnish transportation to such nearer high school. Such board can only furnish transportation to such pupils to its own high school.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that such pupil is not entitled to transportation to the nearest high school, under favor of said section, unless in line with the foregoing, such nearest high school happens to be its own high school, for the reason that such board cannot, under any circumstances, furnish transportation for said pupils to any high school except its own.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SELECTION OF A CITY HOSPITAL SITE—BOND ISSUE.

Where a city has voted bonds to procure the necessary real estate and build a hospital thereon, the city council makes its selection of the hospital site, and determines as to the erection, repair or rebuilding of such hospital.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1914.

HON. C. E. RUBLE, City Solicitor, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letters of January 7, and February 21, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "1st. A candidate is elected to a city office. The council passes an ordinance and it is signed by the mayor, a day or two before his term commences increasing his salary $200.00 per year. Can he benefit by it?
> "2nd. Our city has voted bonds to procure the necessary real estate and build a hospital thereon. Who selects the site for the hospital?"

In answer to your first question I hand you herewith copy of an opinion covering the question sent to Hon. A. W. Mithoff, village solicitor of Bazil, Ohio.

Answering your second question attention is called to section 4022, General Code, which reads:

> "Such council may agree with a corporation or association organized in the municipality for charitable purposes, for the erection and management of a hospital for the sick and disabled, and a permanent interest therein to such extent and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between them. The council shall provide for the payment of the amount agreed upon for such interest, either in one payment or installments or so much each year as the parties may stipulate."

Section 4023, General Code, reads:

> "When the council of a municipality enters upon and takes possession of grounds purchased, appropriated, or otherwise obtained for hospital purposes, and, by resolution or ordinance, determines to erect thereon or rebuild a hospital, the erection and repair thereof, or any addition thereto, shall be vested in a board of five commissioners, called the 'board of hospital commissioners.'"

These sections seemingly answer your question to the effect that the council makes the selection of the site and determines as to the erection, repair or rebuilding of a hospital.

It will be seen by reference to section 4029, General Code, that the plans, specifications and drawings are to be prepared by the "board of hospital commissioners," and while the contract is to be made "in the name of the corporation" (section 4030) it would appear (inferentially at least) that the contract should be made by the board. (Section 4031, G. C.)

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—OFFICIAL HOLDING OVER—NON-COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION—HEALTH OFFICER.

Where a health officer was appointed for a term ending December 31, 1913, and the first meeting of the board of health was held January 7, 1914, the old officer holds over until his successor is appointed and qualified, unless he is otherwise removed by the board of health. This would make him an incumbent of January 1, 1914, and section 10 of the civil service act would then apply, and he would be required to take a non-competitive examination in order to hold his position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 6, 1914, this department received the following inquiry from Hon. H. B. Emersch, city solicitor of Bellefontaine, Ohio:

> "The health officer was appointed for term ending December 31, 1913. First meeting of the board of health will be held January 7, 1914. Does old officer hold over and is the present officer subject only to non-competitive examination?"

In an opinion given to Hon. T. F. Thompson, city solicitor of Zanesville, Ohio, under date of September 22, 1913, this department has held that the health officer of a city was in the unclassified service under the old municipal civil service law, and that under the new civil service act, 103 Ohio Laws, 698, et seq., such officer would be in the classified service. A copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed.

Therefore, in accordance with opinions heretofore given, the incumbent of this position on January 1, 1914, would be subject to a non-competitive examination as a condition of his continuance in office.

Section 10 of the civil service act applies, which reads in part:

> "The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service. * * *"

This provision applies to the health officer of a city.

It appears from the above inquiry that the health officer was appointed for a definite term which expired by limitation thereof on December 31, 1913. It appears, however, that no successor had been appointed up to January 6, 1914, the date of the above inquiry. I presume that the health office continued to perform the duties of the position after December 31, 1913, and on and after January 1, 1914.

By virtue of section 2 of the civil service act, January 1, 1914, is the date on and after which appointments and removal, etc., shall be made according to the new law.

Had the health officer the right to hold upon the failure of the board of health to appoint a successor?

The rule is stated at page 427 of volume 28 of Cyc.:

"Even in the absence of some constitutional or statutory provision that officers shall hold over until their successors are elected, or appointed and qualified, municipal officers hold over until election or appointment, and qualification, unless there is some constitutional or statutory restriction express or implied to the contrary, as is sometimes the case."

Section 8 of the General Code, provides:

"A person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws."

This section specifically refers to offices. But the rule as stated in 28th Cyc., supra, will apply with equal reason to officers and employes.

The health officer in question had a right to hold until his successor was appointed, or unless he was otherwise removed by the board of health. This made him an incumbent on January 1, 1914, and section 10 of the civil service act would then apply.

He is required to take a non-competitive examination as a condition of his continuance in office.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—HEADS OF PRINCIPAL DEPARTMENTS—DEPUTIES—ASSISTANT SECRETARY.

1st. "Heads of principal departments," as used in the civil service means the head of each, whether one person or a board, is responsible directly to the chief executive officer.

2nd. The phrase "all heads of principal departments" as well as the words "boards and commissions" is limited and modified by the words "appointed by the governor."

3rd. The word "deputy" has a distinct meaning in law as follows: One who is authorized to act generally for and in place of his principal by law and not merely by his principal, and second that he must hold a fiduciary relation to his principal.

4th. Subsection 8 of main section 8 and also subsection 7 of main section 7 are separate and distinct, and the same elective or principal executive officer could appoint both deputies and also have two secretaries or assistants or clerks, provided the department was of such size as to admit both.

5th. Laborers are in the classified service and the nature and detail of examinations for such laborers are left in a great measure to the civil service commission.

The director of public service and the director of public safety are held to come within the meaning of subdivision 7 of branch A of section 8.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1913.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 13, 1913, you submit the following inquiries:

"First. Who are to be construed as 'heads of principal departments' as designated in subdivision 2 of main section 8 of the civil service act?

"We desire your opinion to cover not only the question as to who are 'heads of principal departments' as applied to state positions but as also applied to the administration of the law by municipal civil service commissions.

"Second. Are the words 'all heads of principal departments,' found in subdivision 2 of main section 8, modified by the words following the words 'appointed by the governor?' i. e. does it mean that the unclassified heads of departments are only those 'appointed by the governor or by and with his consent' or are the words 'all heads of principal departments' to be construed independently of the balance of subsection 2?

"Does the qualification as to being appointed by the mayor or other similar chief appointing authority have the same qualifications as the power of appointment by the governor, and do these words modify that part of subsection 2 reading, 'all heads of principal departments?'

"Third. What persons may be classified as 'deputies' under the provisions of subsection 8 of main section 8, and how far may 'elective or principal executive officers' go in designating their employes as 'deputies?'

"Fourth. If an 'elective or principal executive officer' appoints deputies under the provisions of subsection 8 of main section 8 can the same 'elective or principal executive officer' still appoint 'two secretaries or assistants or clerks' under the provisions of subsection 7 of main section 8?

"Do the provisions of subsection 7 of main section 8 apply only to those 'elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions' who are not authorized by law to appoint deputies?

"Can 'elective or principal executive officers' appoint deputies and also two secretaries, etc., and thus employ more persons in the unclassified service than a board or commission could employ?

"Fifth Is common labor under civil service, and if so, what latitude has the commission in creating an eligible list for common laborers?

"Must there be a competitive examination as far as practicable, or would common labor be in the non-competitive class?

"Sixth. Are city clerks and their assistants under civil service?

"Seventh. Are the assistant city solicitors under civil service?"

You also attach a letter in which you give your views upon these several questions, and cite a number of authorities which have been found to be of considerable value in answering the inquiries. This department is always ready to receive the views of the executive officers who are familiar with the practical working of the law.

In this opinion, two further inquiries, submitted by Hon. David G. Jenkins, city solicitor of Youngstown, Ohio, under date of November 8, 1913, will be considered.

He inquires as follows:

"First. Is the director of public service such an 'elective and principal executive' officer so as to be entitled to two secretaries or clerks in the unclassified service?

"Second. Is the solicitor such an officer?"

All of the foregoing inquiries call for an interpretation of section 8 of the civil service law, 103 Ohio Laws, 698, said section to be known as section 486-8, General Code. This section provides:

> "Service. Unclassified. The civil service of the state of Ohio and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof shall be divided into the unclassified service and the classified service.
> "(a) The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions which shall not be included in the classified service, except as otherwise provided in section 19 hereof:
> "1. All officers elected by popular vote.
>
> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or school district.
> "3. All officers elected by either or both branches of the general assembly.
>
> "4. All election officers.
>
> "5. All commissioned, non-commissioned officers and enlisted men in the military service of the state.
>
> "6. All presidents, superintendents, directors, teachers and instructors in the public schools, colleges and universities; the library staff of any library in the state supported wholly or in part at public expense.
>
> "7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.
> "8. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals.
>
> "9. Bailiffs of courts of record.
>
> "10. Employes and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.
>
> "(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class.
> "1. The competitive class shall include all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. Appointments shall be made to, or employment shall be given in, all positions in the competitive class that are not filled by promotion, reinstatement, transfer or reduction, as provided in sections 15, 16 and 17 of this act and the rules of the commission, by appointment from those certified to the appointing officer in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of this act."

In considering your first question you have given the provisions of the laws of various states and they will be quoted, as they may be of aid hereafter in construing the civil service law of Ohio.

You state:

> "I have not found any other state using the same language which Ohio uses in designating the unclassified service as it relates to heads of departments. For the purpose of comparing subsection 2 of main section 8 with the laws of other states I will quote in short from other states.

"The New Jersey act corresponding to this section reads:

"'all heads of departments of the state government and members of commissions and boards thereof and all appointments of the mayor.'

"The New York statute reads:

"'the head or heads of any department of the government.'

"The Wisconsin law reads:

"'all officers elected by the people, all officers and employes appointed by the governor, whether subject to confirmation or not.'

"The law of the state of Illinois relating to the civil service of cities reads:

"'heads of any principal department.'"

In your first inquiry you desire to know who are to be considered as heads of principal departments?"

The part of section 8 to be considered is subdivision 2 of branch (a), which reads:

> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district."

Your second inquiry also involves a construction of the same subdivision.

All employes and officers of the state, county, city and city school districts might be said to be in one big department, which is designated in the civil service law by the term "civil service."

This term is defined in section 1 of said act as follows:

> "The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers, in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

For convenience and efficiency the civil service is divided into departments. Some are principal departments; others are subdepartments.

Subdivision 2 under consideration contemplates that the chief executive officer of the state, who is the governor; the chief executive officer of the city, who is the mayor; and the chief appointing authority of the city school district, shall be considered as the head of the civil service in and for their respective political division or subdivision.

The department of civil service is divided into departments which may be designated as "principal departments?" These principal departments are again subdivided into "subdepartments," and some officer or board is usually placed at the head of such subdepartment.

In the civil service of the state as well as that of the city, the term "principal department" applies to those departments whose heads are subordinate only to the chief executive officer of the state or city, or to the public directly.

A department whose head is subordinate to or responsible directly to the head of another department, other than the chief executive, would be considered as a subdepartment and not as a principal department.

Let us take a concrete example, the one referred to by you: The board of administration. The members of this board are appointed by the governor and the board is subordinate to no other officer. The board of administration has charge of many institutions. These institutions are departments in the civil service of the state. The heads of these departments are accountable to the board of administration and through this board to the governor. Of course all officers and employes in the civil service are responsible to the general public.

The board of administration would be at the head of a "principal department" and the superintendents of the various institutions would be at the head of subdepartments and not of principal departments.

The same is true in the cities. Under the Municipal Code the mayor is the chief appointing authority and may be considered as being at the head of the civil service. Under the mayor there are at least two "principal departments," designated as the departments of public service and of public safety. The department of public service has various subdepartments, as for example, the department of waterworks, the department of engineering.

The departments of public service and of public safety would be principal departments, and the various departments under the director of public service or of public safety would be subdepartments and not principal departments.

The examples given are not exhaustive. There are other principal departments than those mentioned.

Therefore, a "principal department" under subdivision 2 of branch (a) of section 8 of the civil service law, is one of the main divisions of the civil service, the head of which, whether one person or a board, is responsible directly to the chief executive officer, or as the statute designates it "chief appointing authority."

In your second inquiry you ask if the words "all heads of principal departments" are modified by the words "appointed by the governor," or whether the words "all heads of principal departments" are to stand independently.

In order to hold that the words "all heads of principal departments" shall stand independent of what follows, it would be necessary to insert other words to make such intention clear. To have such construction this subdivision would read:

> "All heads of principal departments and all boards and commissions appointed by the governor."

The ambiguity in this subdivision, if any, is caused by the use of the words "boards and commissions" and the comma after the word departments. A head of a principal department may be an individual, it may be a board, it may be a commission. The words "boards and commissions," do not, in my opinion add anything to the phrase "all heads of principal departments." Neither does the use of these words have the effect of making the phrase "all heads of principal departments" independent of what follows, to wit, the words, "appointed by the governor."

I am of opinion therefore, that the phrase "all heads of principal departments" as well as the words "boards and commissions" is limited and modified by the words following, to wit: "appointed by the governor or by and with his consent."

The same phrase and words are also limited by the words "by the mayor or * * * other chief appointing authority."

This subdivision should be construed to read:

> "All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent, and all heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the mayor or * * * other similar chief appointing authority."

Your third inquiry is:

"What persons may be classified as "deputies" under the provisions of subsection 8 of main section 8, and how far may 'elective or principal executive officers' go in designating their employes as 'deputies?'"

Subdivision 8 of branch (a) of section 8, provides:

"The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

This subdivision makes two qualifications for a deputy:

First, he must be authorized by law to act generally for and in place of his principal.

Second, he must hold a fiduciary relation to his principal.

You have called attention to a number of authorities defining a "deputy."

In volume 5, page 623, Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law. 1st Ed., a deputy is defined:

"A deputy is one who by appointment exercises an office in another's right, having no interest therein, but doing all things in his principal's name, and for whose misconduct the principal is answerable. He must be one whose acts are of equal force with those of the officer himself, must act in pursuance of law, performing official functions, and is required to take oath of office before acting."

A "deputy" is similarly defined at page 1043, volume 13 of Cyc. and in volume 9, page 368, Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 2nd Ed.

In case of in re Ostrander, 12 Misc. (N. Y.), 476, the law under consideration provided:

"But the provisions of this act shall not be construed to apply to the position of private secretary or deputy of any official or department, or to any other person holding a strictly confidential position."

Herrick, J., says on page 477:

"Now, while I am inclined to think that this provision of the statute, so far as it refers to deputies, refers to officers as such created by statute, who are by law clothed with the power and authority of the principal officer in his absence or inability to act, and that it does not refer to an employe who may have been for convenience, but improperly, named deputy, who is not clothed with any official power or authority, and has no right under the statute to act for in the place of the principal officer; and while, therefore, the naming of the position in controversy here as that of deputy does not necessarily bring it within the positions excluded from the operation of the laws in relation to soldiers, still this reasoning does not effect that portion of the statute relating to confidential positions."

In People vs. Barker, 14 Misc. (N. Y.), 360, it is held:

"A deputy tax commissioner in the department of taxes and assessments in New York City does not hold a confidential relation to the commissioners of taxes and assessments, and is not a 'deputy' within the meaning of section 1 of chapter 119 laws of 1888, as amended by chapter 577, laws of 1892 (the Veteran law) and hence, cannot be removed except for cause, after hearing had."

In this case the provisions of the act were similar to those under consideration in 12 Misc. 476, supra. The statute in this case prescribed the title "deputy tax commissioners," and it was contended that this was decisive.

Beekman, J., says as to this, on page 362:

"The court is not tied down to a literal interpretation, but has a right to inquire into the reason for the enactment and to consider the purpose which the legislature sought to accomplish, and when this is revealed the living principle of the law is discovered and an unerring guide is found for its correct application."

Also on page 363:

"We are, therefore, at liberty to consider whether a deputy tax commissioner, although a deputy so styled, is still a deputy within the meaning of the Veteran law, and, therefore, excepted from the benefits of the act under which the relator claims reinstatement. A deputy is defined by Webster to be 'one appointed as the substitute of another, and empowered to act for him in his name or on his behalf.' He also states: 'Deputy is used in composition with the names of various executive officers to denote an assistant empowered to act in their name, as deputy collector, deputy marshal, deputy sheriff.'"

Also on page 364, Beekman, J., further says:

"The function of a deputy, possessing the power, as he does under certain circumstances, to act as if he were himself the actual incumbent of his principal's office, implies a correlative duty and right on the part of the principal to exercise an unfettered personal selection in the appointment of such a subordinate, and also a corresponding freedom in exercising the power of removal whenever his confidence in the integrity, capacity, trustworthiness or adaptability of his subordinate is in the least shaken. He should not be called upon to specify the grounds of his dissatisfaction, still less to make proof of charges when his objection, though substantial, may rest, as is frequently the case, upon moral evidence only, or upon well grounded suspicion equally destructive of that confidence which is of the very essence of the relation."

The position of deputy coroner was under consideration in case of State ex rel. vs. Houck, 21 Cir. Dec., 15, and Marvin, J., says on pages 15 and 16:

"The word 'deputy' is defined in Anderson's Law Dict. as 'one who acts officially for another;' 'the substitute of an officer, usually a ministerial officer.'

"The definition in Bouvier's Law Dict. is 'one authorized by an officer to execute an office or right which the officer possesses, for and in place of the latter.'

"The fact that the statute uses the word 'deputy' is not necessarily controlling, but, as already said, the things which a deputy coroner may do, under the statute, being only to be done as a substitute for the coroner, that is to say, there being only the things which it would be the coroner's duty to do, if he were present, clearly make him a deputy only, and that being so, he seems clearly to be included in the general provisions of law relating to deputies."

In case of Warwick vs. State, 25 Ohio St., 21, Welch, J., says on page 25:

"At common law the officers and his deputy filled but a single office. Anderson's Lessees vs. Brown, 9 Ohio, 151. The acts of the deputy are in law the acts of the principal, and he is responsible for them. The deputy is appointed by the principal, can be removed by no one else, and is removable at his pleasure."

It is seen in the foregoing authorities that a deputy is one who acts for and in place of his principal. The authorities further hold that the use of the word "deputy" by statute and applying it to the position, is not controlling. Much less would it be controlling where an executive officer designates his subordinates as deputies.

The purpose and intent of the legislature as expressed in subdivision 8, supra, is the controlling feature. The legislature was not content with designating the positions or employes as "deputies," it went farther, it limited deputies to such as are "authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

This is the controlling feature, and a deputy, in order to be placed in the unclassified service must have these qualifications:

First, he must be "authorized * * * to act generally for and in place of his principal" by law and not merely by the principal, and second, he must hold a fiduciary relation to his principal.

In your fourth inquiry you ask several questions in reference to subdivisions 7 and 8 of branch (a) of section 8.

For comparison and convenience these subdivisions will again be quoted.

"7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.

"8. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

Your first question in connection with these two subdivisions is whether an officer who has deputies in the unclassified service under subdivision 8, may also have two secretaries or assistants or clerks in the unclassified service under subdivision 7. You ask two other questions, the answers to which depend upon the answer to your first question under your fourth inquiry.

Subdivision 7 applies to "each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions," coming within its terms, and subdivision 8 applies to "elective and principal executive officers." Subdivision 8 does not apply to boards and commissions.

In each of the subdivisions there is a specific provision that the officers coming within their terms must be authorized "by law" to appoint deputies or assistants or secretaries or clerks, before such deputies or clerks or assistants or secretaries can come within the unclassified service.

There is nothing in the language of these subdivisions to indicate that if an officer has deputies in the unclassified service under subdivision 8, that he cannot also have two clerks or assistants or secretaries in the unclassified service under subdivision 7.

In order to hold that these two subdivisions cannot apply to the same officer it would be necessary to add to the language of one or the other of these subdivisions an exception. Either subdivision 7 should contain a clause similar to the following: "each of the elective and principal executive officers" "except those coming within the terms of subdivision 7," or subdivision 8 should contain some similar provision. No such provision is found in either subdivision and the language used does not permit such construction.

We must look for the intent of the legislature in the language which it has used. There is no ambiguity in subdivisions 7 and 8 as to the question now under consideration, and there is no authority for adding to either of them an exception from their terms.

Therefore an elective or principal executive officer may come within the provisions of both subdivisions 7 and 8 and may have appointees in the unclassified service under both subdivisions.

Subdivision 7 may apply to officers authorized to appoint deputies under subdivision 8.

As subdivision 8 does not apply to boards and commissions, an executive officer may be authorized to appoint more persons in the unclassified service than a board or commission.

In your fifth inquiry you ask if common labor is under civil service. I will again quote the definition of "civil service" in section 1 of the civil service law:

> "1. The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

This section specifically includes "laborers" in the civil service.

Laborers are not placed in the unclassified service by section 8, and they must, therefore, be in the classified service.

You ask what latitude has the commission in creating an eligible list for common labor; and also, must there be a competitive examination as far as practicable?

Section 10 of the civil service law, section 486-10, General Code, provides in part:

> "All applicants for positions and places in the competitive classified service shall be subject to examination which shall be public, competitive and free for all, with specified limitations, determined by the commission as to citizenship, residence, age, sex, experience, health, habits and moral character. Such examinations shall be practical in character and shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the position for which appointment is sought, and shall, when appropriate, include tests of physical qualifications, health and manual skill."

The nature and details of the examination are left in a great measure to the civil service commission. The general scope of such examination is given. It "shall be practical in character and shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the position, for which appointment is sought, and shall, when appropriate, include tests of physical qualifications, health and manual skill." This is the guide to the commission. The last part of this clause seems particularly applicable to common laborers.

Section 12 of the civil service law, section 486-12, General Code, provides:

> "From the returns of the examinations the commission shall prepare an eligible list of the persons whose general average standing upon examinations for such grade or class is not less than the minimum fixed by the rules of the commission, and who are otherwise eligible; and such persons shall take rank upon the eligible list as candidates in the order of their relative excellence as determined by examination without reference to priority of time of examination. In the event of more than one applicant receiving the same mark at an examination, priority in time of application shall determine the order in which their names shall be placed on the eligible list. The term of eligibility for each list shall be fixed by the commission at not less than one nor more than four years."

A competitive examination, as far as practicable, should be made of applicants for positions as common laborers. Those who pass the general average prescribed by the commission shall be placed upon the eligible list. This applies to common laborers as well as to applicants for other positions.

It will be observed that section 12 provides two methods of determining the priority of applicants on the eligible list. In one method relative excellence determines the priority and where this is equal, priority of time determines the rank. Where the tests are few and applicants are many, as is likely to be the case with common laborers, the last method of determining rank will probably predominate.

In your sixth inquiry you ask in reference to city clerks and the assistants. This is being considered in another opinion which is now under consideration and which will be addressed to you.

Your seventh inquiry as to city solicitor will be considered in connection with the inquiry of the city solicitor of Youngstown, who also asks in reference to the director of public service.

On November 22, 1913, Hon. Clyde S. Porter, city solicitor of Tiffin, Ohio, asks in reference to the director of public service and the director of public safety. You also submit a further inquiry as to assistant prosecuting attorneys.

The director of public service and director of public safety are not authorized to appoint deputies and they would come under the provisions of subdivision 7 of branch (a) of section 8, which will again be quoted:

> "7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk."

It will be necessary to construe the phrase "each of the elective and principal executive officers."

The director of public service is an "executive" officer. He is at the head of one of the principal departments of the city under the Municipal Code. But he is not an "elective" officer. The same is true of the director of public safety.

The part of section 8 under consideration specifically excepts civil service commissions from its operation. The civil service commission is not an "elective" commission. This exception would tend to show that this part of the section was intended to apply to appointive "executive officers, boards or commissions," as well as those which are elected. Otherwise the exception of the civil service commission would be mere surplusage.

This provision should therefore be construed to read, "each of the elective executive officers, boards or commissions, and each of the principal executive officers, boards or commissions.

The director of public service and director of public safety would therefore come within the terms of this part of section 8. If they are authorized by law to appoint a secretary, or assistant, or clerk, two of such secretaries, or assistants, or clerks would be in the unclassified service.

The positions of assistant prosecuting attorney and assistant city solicitor will be considered in separate opinions.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INFIRMARY—CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION—REMOVAL FROM OFFICE.

Where the superintendent of an infirmary is holding his position by virtue of a contract or appointment, he will be required to take a non-competitive examination as provided in section 10 of the civil service act, as a condition of his continuance in office. If he fails to pass an examination, this would constitute cause for his removal even though his original appointment was made for a definite term of two years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 23, 1913, the Hon. William C. Hudson, prosecuting attorney of Vinton county, Ohio, submitted the following inquiry to this department:

> "On the 6th day of January, 1913, the then board of commissioners of Vinton county, foreseeing that the political complexion of the board would be changed when the new members elected the previous election would go into office, made a contract with the then superintendent of the infirmary to continue as superintendent there for the period of two years (i. e., to January 6, 1915). This action of the old commissioners is not satisfactory to the present board of commissioners.
> "Under the above facts, may the present board of commissioners remove this superintendent except for cause, or is he entitled to hold his position under the provisions of section 2523 until January 6, 1915? (2) If they have not power to remove the superintendent may he be required under section 10 of the civil service law (103 Ohio Laws, 703) to take a civil service examination to determine his fitness, in order to hold his position during the remainder of the two years?"

In an opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of January 7, 1913, this department has held that a superintendent of an infirmary may be appointed for a definite term extending beyond the term of the appointing power, if such appointment is made for a reasonable time and in good faith. A copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed.

Your letter suggests that the contract in question may not have been made in good faith. This must be determined from the facts of each particular case.

In any event the contract is not void but may be voidable. A further question would then arise as to whether the present commissioners have exercised due diligence in declaring the contract at an end, or whether by their failure to act in time, they have ratified the contract.

These questions cannot be determined from the facts submitted.

Section 2523, General Code, to which you refer provides:

> "The county commissioners shall appoint a superintendent, who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. He shall not be removed by them except for good and sufficient cause. The commissioners shall not appoint one of their own number superintendent, nor shall any commissioner be eligible to any other office in the infirmary or receive any compensation as physician or otherwise, directly or indirectly wherein the appointing power is vested in such board."

By virtue of this section the superintendent of the infirmary cannot be removed except for cause.

The superintendent of the infirmary does not come within any of the ten classes of positions placed in the unclassified service by section 8 of the civil service act. He is not an elective officer and he is not the head of a principal department. He is, therefore, in the classified service and comes within the terms of section 10, of the civil service act.

Said section 10, reads in part:

> "The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service."

If, therefore, the present superintendent is holding his position by virtue of a binding contract or appointment, he will be required to take a non-competitive examination, as provided in section 10, supra, as a condition of his continuance in office. If he fails to pass the required examination that would constitute cause for his removal, even though his original appointment was made for a definite term of two years.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REMOVAL OF MEMBERS OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH UNDER CIVIL SERVICE—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED.

Where the mayor of a city desires to remove members of the board of health, this may be done under the provisions of section 4263, General Code, providing they are guilty of any of the things enumerated therein and the mayor files charges and proceeds as provided in sections 4263 and 4264, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

HON. C. E. VAN DEUSEN, City Solicitor, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 24, 1914, you inquire:

> "I am in receipt of a letter from the mayor of our city, in reference to the removal of the board of health. The communication reads as follows:
>
> "'We have a condition in the board of health whereby, in my opinion, I deem it wise to form a new board. I, therefore, have requested the resignations of the members. Up until this time I have received the resignations of three members, the other two, from paper reports, refuse to resign.
> "'Our board for some time past, has been considered of little consequence owing to their inability to work together harmoniously. I would like to have an opinion from you as to what means would be necessary for me to pursue to enable me to remove the two members who refuse to resign.'"

The members of the board of health are appointed by virtue of section 4404, General Code, which provides in part:

> "The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. * * *"

Their terms of office are fixed by section 4406, General Code, which reads:

> "The term of office of the members of the board shall be five years from the date of appointment, and until their successors are appointed and qualified, except that those first appointed shall be classified as follows: One to serve for five years, one for four years, one for three years, one for two years, and one for one year, and thereafter one shall be appointed each year"

Section 4250, General Code, gives the mayor authority to appoint or remove certain officers. Said section reads:

> "The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

This section does not apply to the members of the board of health. Section 4263, General Code, provides:

> "The mayor shall have general supervision over each department and the officers provided for in this title. When the mayor has reason to believe that the head of a department or such officer has been guilty in the performance of his official duty of bribery, misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, misconduct in office, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality or habitual drunkenness, he shall immediately file with the council, except when the removal of such head of department or officer is otherwise provided for, written charges against such person, setting forth in detail a statement of such alleged guilt, and, at the same time, or as soon thereafter as possible, serve or cause to be served a true copy of such charges with the person against whom the charges are made. Such service may be in person or by leaving a copy of the charges at the office of such person, and due return thereof made to council, as is provided for the return of the service of summons in a civil action."

This section authorizes the mayor to file charges against delinquent officers. It specifies various grounds for charges, and the manner in which the mayor should proceed. The charges are to be filed with council, and a copy given to the offending officer.

By virtue of section 4264, General Code, the council is to hear the charges and may remove the officer against whom charges have been filed. Said section reads:

> "When so filed with council, such charges shall be for hearing at the next regular meeting thereof, unless council extends the time for such hearing, which shall be done only on the application of the accused. The accused may appear in person and by counsel, examine all witnesses, and answer all charges against him. The judgment or action of the council shall be final, but to remove such officer the votes of two-thirds of all members elected to the council shall be required."

These sections apply to the members of the board of health. If they have been guilty of any of the things and matters enumerated in section 4263, General Code, the mayor may, by filing charges as provided in these sections, secure the removals which he deems necessary.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—CHIEFS OF POLICE AND FIRE CHIEFS NOT REQUIRED TO TAKE CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION—CONTINUANCE IN OFFICE.

Persons legally occupying the position of chief of police and chief of fire department of a city on January 1, 1914, are not required to take an examination, either competitive or non-competitive, as a condition of their continuance in office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 24 ,1914.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Hon. Harry D. Smith, city solicitor of Xenia, Ohio has submitted, under date of January 6, 1914, the following for opinion:

> "Has your department passed on the question as to whether or not it is necessary for chiefs of police and fire departments, serving under the old law and at the time the new civil service law went into effect, to take the civil service examination in order to continue in such positions?
> "If required to take such examinations are the same competitive or non-competitive?"

This question has not been determined by this department.

Under the old municipal service law the chief of police occupied a peculiar situation. He could be appointed outside the eligible list, but after his appointment and qualification he was protected by special provisions of the civil service law as to his removal. The same was true as to the chief of the fire department.

Section 4381, General Code, of the old law, provided:

> "The mayor shall have the exclusive right to suspend the chief of the police department or the chief of the fire department for incompetence, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality, habitual drunkenness, failure to obey orders given him by the proper authority or for any other reasonable and just cause. If either the chief of police or chief of the fire department is so suspended the mayor forthwith shall certify such fact, together with the cause of such suspension, to the civil service commission, who within five days from the date of receipt of such notice shall proceed to hear such charges and render judgment thereon, which shall be final."

This section was specifically repealed by section 32 of the new civil service act, but the provisions thereof were re-enacted verbatim and are contained in the last paragraph of section 19 of said act.

Section 31 of the civil service act, section 486-31, General Code, provides in part:

> "All officers and employes in the classified service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, when this act takes effect, be deemed appointees under the provisions of this act."

This section continues in the service, without examination, all officers and employes "in the classified service" "holding their positions under existing civil service laws."

Section 4484, General Code, of the old law, provided:

> "Nothing herein shall prevent the dismissal or discharge of any appointee by the removing board or officer, except that the chiefs and members of the police and fire departments and of the sanitary police shall be dismissed only as provided by law and the appeal therefrom shall be made to the civil service commission under such rules as the commission may adopt."

Sections 4381 and 4484, General Code, must be considered as part of "existing civil service laws" as contemplated by section 31, supra.

The chief of police and chief of fire department may not have been appointed in accordance with civil service laws, buf once appointed and qualified, they continued to hold their positions under the civil service law.

Section 10 of the civil service act, requiring non-competitive examinations, specifically exempts incumbents "holding their positions under existing civil service laws."

Said section 10, provides in part:

> "The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service."

The chief of police and the chief of the fire department held their positions under the old municipal civil service law when once appointed and qualified. But section 31 refers to officers and employes in the "classified service" and section 10, exempts those in the competitive "classified service."

Section 4479, General Code, of the old law, placed the chief of police and the chief of the fire department in the unclassified service, when it provided:

> "The unclassified service shall include * * * persons who, as members of a board or otherwise, have charge of any principal department of the government of any city, * * * the chief of the police department, the chief of the fire department, * * *."

This provision was inserted in the statutes by what is known as the Paine Law, 99 Ohio Laws 562. This act amended and repealed some twenty sections of the Municipal Code.

In section 149 of the Municipal Code, 96 Ohio Laws 70, it was provided among other things:

> "The chief of police shall be appointed from the classified list of such department."

This section was not repealed or amended by the Paine law.

In adopting the General Code in 1910, section 149, Municipal Code, became sections 4374 and 4375, General Code, but the above quoted provision was omitted.

In State vs. Wyman, 71 Ohio St., 1-11, in construing section 149 of the Municipal Code, it was held that the chief of police must be appointed from the classified list of the civil service commission. The omission of the above provision in the General Code gave authority to appoint the chief of police without the classified list.

A similar provision was contained in section 150 of the Municipal Code, as to the chief of the fire department, and was likewise omitted in adopting the General Code.

The result of this legislation was that by section 4479, General Code, the chief of police and the chief of the fire department were placed in the "unclassified service."

The two positions in question are protected from removal by the re-enactment, by the new civil service act, of section 4381, General Code.

The requirement as to examinations must be determined by the provisions of section 10 of the civil service act. The part to be considered is the following:

> "The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, * * * be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service."

The words "in the competitive classified service" as used herein, refer to the classified service under the new law and not to the classified service under the old law.

The chief of police and the chief of the fire department are in the "competitive classified service" under the new law. And as they are "holding their positions under existing civil service laws," they are exempted from taking a non-competitive examination. No reference is made in section 10 to the classified service under the old law.

I am therefore of the opinion that the persons legally occupying the positions of chief of police and chief of the fire department of a city on January 1, 1914, are not required to take an examination, either competitive or non-competitive, as a condition of their continuance in office.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—DEPUTY CITY AUDITOR AND SECRETARY TO THE MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Under the present civil service law a deputy city auditor cannot also hold the position of secretary of the municipal civil service commission. These offices are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Hon. G. B. Findley, city solicitor of Elyria, Ohio, has submitted the following inquiry under date of December 30, 1913:

> "Under the present civil service law, is there any objection to the secretary of the municipal board of civil service acting, also, as deputy city auditor?"

This raises a question of the compatibility of the two positions.

The rule of incompatibility is stated by Dustin, J., in the case of State vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S., 274, wherein he says on page 275:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The question as to the physical possibility to perform the duties of both offices must be determined by the facts and circumstances of each case. No doubt in many cities it would be physically possible for the same person to perform the duties of both positions. In other cities this would not be possible.

The other test is whether the one position is subordinate to, or is in any way a check upon the other.

The two positions now in question are not subordinate one to the other.

In an opinion given to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of September 12, 1912, this department passed upon the right of the city auditor to hold certain other positions. The disability of a city auditor to hold certain positions would pass to his deputy, who has the right to act for and in place of his principal, as to his official duties.

In that opinion in passing upon the right of the city auditor to hold the position of clerk of the board of control, or clerk of the director of public service or safety, the rule was stated:

> "Unless the duties of the office of clerk of the board of control, or clerk of the safety or service department, require such officer to receive, pay out or to account for funds of the city, or to certify an indebtedness for payment to the city auditor, such positions are not incompatible with the position of city auditor, and the same person may fill said positions and that of city auditor at the same time and receive the compensation fixed for each office."

This rule will apply to the positions now in question.

The duties of the secretary of the municipal civil service commission are not prescribed by statute.

In section 19 of the civil service act, section 486-19 General Code, it is provided among other things:

> "* * *. The expense and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city."

The council fixes the compensation of the civil service commission and of its employes.

The municipal civil service commission does not handle the funds of the city. It may be required to certify as to their expenses to the city auditor for payment.

This duty of the civil service commission would not prevent the secretary from also holding the position of deputy city auditor.

Attention has been called to the provisions of section 21 of the civil service act. This section to be known as section 486-21, General Code, provides:

> "Pay rolls. After the expiration of twelve months from taking effect of this act, it shall be unlawful for the auditor of state, or for any fiscal officer of any county, city or city school district thereof, to draw, sign or issue, or authorize the drawing, signing or issuing of any warrant on the treasurer or other disbursing officer of the state, or of any county, city or city school district thereof, to pay any salary or compensation to any officer, clerk, employe, or other person in the classified service unless an estimate, payroll or account for such salary or compensation containing the name of each person to be paid, shall bear the certificate of the state civil service commission, or in case of the service of a city the certificate of the municipal service commission of such city, that the persons named in such estimate, payroll or account have been appointed, promoted, reduced, suspended or laid off or are being employed in pursuance of this act, and the rules adopted thereunder.
> "Any sum paid contrary to the provisions of this section may be recovered from any officer or officers making such appointment in contravention of the provisions of law and of the rules made in pursuance of law; or from any officer signing or countersigning or authorizing the signing or countersigning of any warrant for the payment of the same, or from the sureties on his official bond in an action in the courts of the state, maintained by a citizen resident therein. All moneys recovered in any action brought under the provisions of this section must, when collected, be paid into the treasury of the state or appropriate civil division thereof, except that the plaintiff in any action shall be entitled to recover his own taxable costs of such action."

By virtue of this section the city auditor is prohibited from drawing his warrant for the salary or compensation of persons in the classified service, unless the municipal civil service commission certifies that the appointment, or promotion of such persons have been made in pursuance of the civil service act. This duty concerns the members of the civil service commission and also of the city auditor, and of his deputy.

While these duties may not be required of the secretary of the municipal service commission, yet he has charge of the general detail work of the commission. He is subordinate to the commission. If the deputy city auditor was also secretary of the municipal service commission, we would have the situation of a subordinate employe in one capacity a check upon his superior officer in another capacity.

It would be in keeping with public policy if the auditor's office and the civil service commission are kept separate and distinct. I am therefore of the opinion that the deputy city auditor cannot also hold the position of secretary to the municipal civil service commission.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NEWSPAPER—CITY PRINTING—EX-MAYOR OF CITY MAY BE OWNER OF NEWSPAPER DOING SUCH PRINTING.

The fact that the term of an ex-mayor of a city, who is half-owner of a county newspaper of general circulation, expires on January 1, 1914, will not prevent such newspaper from receiving compensation for printing of any kind done by it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM B. JAMES, City Solicitor, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 15, 1914, as follows:

"The ex-mayor of our city, whose term expired January 1, 1914, is the one-half owner of the Wood County Democratic, the only Democratic newspaper of general circulation in the city and in which our ordinances requiring publication in two newspapers of opposite politics can be published.

"Would the ex-mayor be bound by section 12912, G. C., considering that he is only a partial owner of the paper and that printing is paid for at legal rate, also considering the fact that all ordinances of a general matter, etc., should be published in two papers of opposite politics? Can the Democratic paper legally draw compensation from the city for such publication, or any other printing it may do for the city officers or employes? Would there be any distinction as regards legislation or improvement initiated during the ex-mayor's term of office or any legislation or improvement started since his term expired?"

Section 12912, General Code, reads:

"Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of of the council thereof, or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or service for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or twonship during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work, or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

Interpreting this section, the circuit court in the case of Findley vs. Parker, 9 Ohio C. D., p. 710, held:

> "An officer of a municipal corporation who has retired from the office to which he has been elected or appointed, may not be interested, either directly or indirectly in any work or service for said corporation until the expiration of one year after his retirement from office, as provided for in section 6976, R. S."
> (Now section 12912, General Code).

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Wichgar, 18 O. C. D., p. 743, the circuit court placed upon this section the same interpretation and held:

> "A member of the municipal board of health is an officer of the municipality and as such ineligible to the office of district physician during his term and for one year thereafter, and he cannot therefore recover for services rendered in such capacity."

It will be noticed from a reading of section 12912, that to give it the construction placed upon it by the circuit court in the above cases, it is necessary to make the phrase during "the term for which he was elected or appointed" or "for one year hereafter" modify "Whoever, being an officer * * * is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation." Such construction is, I think, incorrect. Section 12912 was originally section 92 of the Municipal Code of 1869, 66 O. L., 164, and read as follows:

> "Sec. 92. No member of the council or any officer of the corporation shall be interested, directly or indirectly, in the profits of any contract, job, work or services, (other than official services to be performed for the corporation) nor shall any member or officer act as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in any work undertaken or prescribed by the corporation during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter."

This section was carried into the Revised Statutes by the codification of 1880 in practically the same form in which I find it now as section 12912 of the General Code. It is a familiar principle of statutory construction that a re-enactment of a statute for the purpose of codification and revision is presumed not to change its meaning and we therefore refer to section 92 of the Municipal Code of 1869, above quoted, to assist us in arriving at the meaning of section 12912.

Quoting from the opinions of the Attorney General of Ohio, 1910-11, page 1033:

> "It will be noted with respect to the original act that the subject 'no member of the council or any officer of the corporation' is repeated; in fact the entire structure of the original section indicates clearly that the portion thereof which follows the parenthesis is absolutely separate and distinct from that which precedes and that it would have been proper gramatically to have placed a period at the division point. This conclusion eliminates one of the possible meanings suggested and indicates clearly that the phrase 'during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter' does not modify the verb 'is interested'."

My interpretation of section 12912 is in harmony with the view above expressed and I am, therefore of the opinion that the newspaper mentioned can legally receive compensation for city printing of any kind done by it, notwithstanding the fact that the ex-mayor whose term expired January 1, 1914, is the half owner of said newspaper.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF A SEWERAGE DISPOSAL PLANT ORDERED BY THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—PROPER PARTY IN THE CITY TO ENTER INTO A CONTRACT OF THIS KIND.

1st. Under the provisions of the General Code, the Director of Public Service is the proper party to enter into a contract for the construction of a sewerage disposal plant, ordered by the State Board of Health.

2nd. Since the enactment of the Municipal Code of 1902, what is now section 4468, but which existed prior to the enactment of the Code, should by reason of section 4211 be considered as amended insofar as to simply provide for the authorization of council for the entering into contracts.

3rd. Whether or not section 4468 is to be considered as so amended by reason of the subsequent passage of what is not section 4211, section 4468 requires the recommendation of the Board of Health in a municipality, whereas the construction of a sewerage disposal plant under consideration is on order of the State Board of Health, consequently sections 4468 and 4469 should not be considered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1914.

HON. WALTER S. RUFF, City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As heretofore acknowledged, I have your favor of Jan. 27, 1914, enclosing opinion submitted by you to the council of your city with respect to the power and authority of the city council to let and enter into a contract for a proposed sewage disposal plant, and requesting my opinion with respect to this question.

You do not advise as to how the matter of the proposed construction of this plant has come up, but from other sources I learn that for some years the city of Canton has been considering the necessity of constructing a sewage disposal plant, but that nothing definite to this end was done until about the middle of last year when the trustees of Canton township filed, with the state board of health, a statement in writing, such as is provided for in section 1249 of the General Code; that subsequently, in accordance with the authority conferred on the state board of health by sections 1250 et seq., General Code, that body ordered the city of Canton to build a sewage disposal plant, which the city now proposes to construct. As I view the question here presented, however, I do not deem the facts above stated, leading up to the proposed construction of this plant, to be of vital importance.

Prior to the year 1902, when Municipal Code was enacted, the only authority conferred upon municipalities in this state, with reference to the construction of sewage disposal plants, was that given by section 2143, R. S., now sections 4468 and 4469, General Code, which read as follows:

"Sec. 4468. Upon the recommendation of the board of health of a municipality, or, of the powers of such board have been vested in any other officer or board, upon the recommendation of such officer or board, the council may cause plans and estimates to be prepared and acquire by condemnation or otherwise such land or lands within or without the corporate limits as are necessary to provide for the proper disposal in a sanitary manner of the sewage, garbage and waste matters, and either or any of them, of the municipality.

"Sec. 4469. Upon obtaining the approval of the state board of health, the council may contract for, erect and maintain a sanitary plant or plants on the lands so acquired with all necessary buildings, machinery, appliances and appurtenances for the treatment, purification and disposal in a sanitary and economic manner of the sewage or garbage, nightsoil, dead animals, offal, spoiled meats and fish or other putrid substances or any liquid or solid wastes or any substance injurious to the health of the municipality."

In the enactment of the Municipal Code and later in 1904, general power was granted to municipalities, with reference to the construction and maintenance of such plants, by provisions which have been carried into the General Code as sections 3647 and 3649, which are as follows:

"Sec. 3647. To open, construct and keep in repair sewage disposal works, sewers, drains and ditches, and to establish, repair and regulate water-closets and privies.

"Sec. 3649. To provide for the collection and disposition of sewage, garbage, ashes, animal and vegetable refuse, dead animals and animal offal and to establish, maintain and regulate plants for the disposal thereof."

Likewise, by the Municipal Code, municipalities were given power to appropriate, enter upon and hold real estate for sewage disposal plants. (Sec. 3677, G. C., Sub. 10; Sec. 3678, G. C.)

In 1904, the provisions of what are now sections 1249, et seq., General Code, were enacted, giving the state board of health authority, on proper complaint, to direct municipalities to install works or other means for purifying or disposing of sewage and other waste matter.

In the enactment of the Municipal Code of 1902, the legislature, as a general plan or scheme in the organization of cities, divided and classified their powers as legislative, executive and judicial. Nothing with respect to the last named division of the powers of cities is here pertinent. The legislative power of cities was vested in a council to be elected as therein provided; (sec. 4206, General Code), and further, as to the powers of the city council, section 4211, General Code, which was enacted as section 123 of the Municipal Code, provides as follows:

"The powers of council shall be legislative only and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board of officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

As to the executive powers of cities, section 4246, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in a mayor, president of council, auditor, treasurer, solicitor, director of public service, director of public safety, and such other officers and departments as are provided by this title."

Section 4323, General Code, provides that in each city there shall be a department of public service which shall be administered by a director of public service.

Section 4402, General Code, makes provision for a board of control consisting of the mayor, director of public service, and director of public safety, and section 4403 provides that no contract in the department of public service or the department of public safety, in excess of five hundred ($500.00) dollars, shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract.

With respect to the powers of the director of public service, as the administrative officer of the department of public service in the government of cities, which are pertinent to the question presented on your submission, sections 4324, 4325, 4326 and 4328 make provision as follows:

> "Sec. 4324. The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts.
> "Sec. 4325. The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title.
> "Sec. 4326. The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories sewage disposal plants and farms and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city.
> "Sec. 4328. The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for no less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

Prior to the enactment of the Municipal Code it is clear that the only powers in municipalities, with reference to the preparation of plans for and contracts for sewage disposal plants, were those conferred on municipal councils by section 2143, R. S. (Sec. 4468 and 4469, General Code), under the limitations therein prescribed.

The next question is whether, independent of sections 4468 and 4469, General Code, by the provisions of the Municipal Code and subsequent enactments, authority and power have been given to any officer, board, or other city authority, with reference to the preparation of plans for and contracts for the construction of such plants, and if so, to whom? In the consideration of this question it is to be borne in mind that general power is now given to municipalities with reference to the construction and maintenance of sewage disposal plants.

Looking to the provisions of section 4211, General Code, other than those in terms prescribing limitations on the administrative power of council, I note that they provide that "all contracts, requiring the authority of council for their execution, shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board of officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given, and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

By the provisions of section 4326, General Code, as well as section 4324, it is plain that the matter of sewage disposal plants is a matter under the charge of the director of public service. Contracts with reference to such plants, therefore, relate to a matter within the charge of the director of public service; and on the authority of section 4211, if such contract is one requiring the authority of council for its execution, it is to be entered into and conducted to performance by such officer.

The significance of the provisions of section 4211, just noted, with respect to the question at hand, does not lie so much in themselves as in their consonance with the manifest general purpose of the legislature to vest matters of this kind in and under the charge and supervision of the director of public service as an arm of the executive or administrative department of city government, and to require that administrative duties with reference to these matters be performed by him. By section 4325 he is required to supervise the construction of public works, other than those having reference to the department of public safety, or except as otherwise provided; and by section 4326 he is required to make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates; by section 4328 he is authorized to make contracts within the supervision of these departments, such contracts, of course, if they involve an expenditure of more than $500.00, being subject to the authorization of council and the approval of the board of control.

All of these provisions are to the point that if authority to prepare plans for and enter into contracts for the construction of sewage disposal plants is vested anywhere by the Municipal Code and subsequent municipal enactments, it is vested in the director of public service, and I am of the opinion that the director of public service has power and authority to prepare plans, etc., for the construction of sewage disposal plants and to let and enter into contracts for the same.

It is true that no express authority is given to such director with respect to plans and contracts for the construction of sewage disposal plants by name and in so many words, but he is given contractual powers which, within the manifest purpose and intent of our code of municipal laws, include such contracts. Moreover, if such power of contract is not given to him, it is not given to any officer, body or authority for the purpose of carrying into execution the general power given to cities with reference to the construction of such plants, by sections 3647 and 3649, G. C.

I do not understand that any pretense is made that any power in this respect has been vested in the city council by any statutory provisions enacted subsequently to sections 4468 and 4469, General Code.

Section 4331, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When it becomes necessary in the opinion of the director of public service, in the prosecution of any work or improvement under contract, to make alterations or modifications in such contract, such alterations or modifications shall only be made upon the order of such director, but such order shall be of no effect until the price to be paid for the work and material, or both, under the altered or modified contract, has been agreed upon in writing and signed by the contractor and the director on behalf of the corporation, and approved by the board of control, as provided by law."

The provisions of this section are consistent with the idea that power to let and enter into contract for any work contemplated by this section is vested in the director of public service, and are inconsistent with the idea that such power is vested in any other officer, board or authority, for, as has been pointed out by one of the circuit courts of this state, it would be a very curious state of affairs if it is to be considered that the legislature intended that council should have the right and power to let and enter into the contract and yet permit the director of public service, at any time after council had made the conract, to alter the same to suit himself. Not only is no power given to the council of cities in this respect by the scheme of city government provided for by the statutory provisions we have been considering, but it would seem that by the provisions of section 4211, General Code, (Sec. 123, M. C.) such power is expressly denied.

The supreme court, in the case of City vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., page 76, in speaking of this section, says:

> "Prior to the adoption of the Municipal Code of 1902, the city council was an administrative as well as a legislative body, and one of the reforms contemplated by the adoption of the new code was to make its powers legislative only."
> (City of Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, 76.)

The conclusion here reached, with respect to the power of the director of public service of cities under the statutes we have been considering to prepare plans for the construction of sewage disposal plants and to enter into contracts for the same, is not without direct authority. It is apparent from the provisions of section 4326, that as to the power and authority of the director of public service, he stands in the same relation to sewage and sewage disposal plants as he does to water and water works.

In the case of Yaryan vs. Toledo, 28 C. C., 259, (8 C. C. N. S., 1), a question arose as to whether the department of public service had power to prepare plans for the construction of a water purification plant and to make a contract for the same, or whether such power was vested in council—section 127 of the Municipal Code then providing—"All powers conferred by this act upon municipal corporations shall be exercised by council, unless otherwise provided herein."

At the time the question in the case just cited arose, the department of public service was vested in directors elected by the people, but their powers were no greater than those now vested in the director of public service who now administers such department; nor, as far as concerns the question at hand, were they in anywise different. No more express power was there given to the department of public service with respect to the preparation of plans for and contracts for the construction of water purification plants than was there and is now given to such departments with respect to the construction of sewage disposal plants. The court, however, on a consideration of the statutory provisions before noted, herein, held that power with respect to the preparation of plans for the construction of water purification plants and with reference to contracts for such construction, was vested in the department of public service, and that such power had been properly exercised by the directors of said department. The decision of the circuit court in this case, was affirmed by the supreme court, but without report. (76 O. S., 584).

It may be here noted that section 127 of the Municipal Code above referred to and considered in the circuit court case before cited, was repealed in the adoption of the General Code.

It is obvious that the power of director of public service of cities to enter into contracts for the construction of sewage disposal plants under the general powers granted to municipalities with reference to such plants, is in no wise affected by the provisions of section 1249 et seq., General Code, giving the state board of health, under certain circumstances, power to direct municipalities to install works or means for purifying or otherwise disposing of sewage or other wastes.

These sections with reference to the powers of the state board of health are consistent with the idea that power to establish sewage disposal plants was already vested in municipalities by sections 3647 and 3649, General Code.

The purpose of sections 1249 et seq. is simply to empower the state board of health to direct and compel, by the sanction of penalties, the installation of such plants or other means of disposing of sewage detrimental to the public health.

Having come to the conclusion that the director of public service of cities is vested with the power of letting and entering into contracts for the construction of sewage disposal plants, under the general powers granted to municipalities with reference to the establishment of such plants, and it not appearing that the proposed plant at Canton is to be constructed or established otherwise than under the general power granted to municipalities in this behalf, it may not be a matter of particular importance to inquire as to what has become of sections 4468 and 4469, General Code. If, by force of the provisions of these sections, council, under any circumstances, is vested with power with reference to the preparation of plans for the construction of sewage disposal plants, and with power to enter into contracts for the same, it is clear that such powers of council can only be exercised according to the limitations of those sections, and be dependent on the recommendation of the local board of health and the approval of the board of health of the state. Surely, however, this would not be an exercise of the power conferred upon municipalities with respect to such plants, by the provisions of sections 3547 and 3649, General Code. The power granted by these sections, with respect to the construction and establishment of sewage disposal plants, is general and unqualified, depending on the recommendation or will of no officer, board or authority other than those charged with the duty of executing the power granted to the municipality.

In this connection, I am not unmindful that in 1908 the legislature enacted the provisions of section 1240, General Code, as follows:

> "No city, village, public institution, corporation or person shall provide or install for public use, a water supply or sewerage system, or purification works for a water supply or sewage, of a municipal corporation or public institution * * * until the plans therefor have been submitted to and approved by the state board of health."

The provisions of this section are consistent with the existence of general power in municipalities, with respect to the construction of sewage disposal plants, to be executed by the director of public service in pursuance of the general power given him with respect to matters in his department and the provisions of the section just noted are, in a measure, inconsistent with the view that the sole power with reference to the execution of contracts for such plants, is vested in the city council, for if the sole power with respect to the execution of such contracts be in the city council, there was clearly on occasion for the provisions of section 1240, General Code, just noted, for the reason that by the terms of section 4469, the approval of the state board of health is made a condition precedent to the right of council to contract for the erection of such plants.

Section 1260, General Code, likewise enacted in 1908, provides:

"If a council, department or officer of a municipality, * * * fails or refuses for a period of thirty days, after notice given him or them by the state board of health of its findings and the approval thereof by the governor and attorney general, to perform any act or acts required of him or them by this chapter * * * the members of such council or department, or such officer or officers, * * * shall be personally liable for such default, and shall forfeit and pay to the state board of health five hundred dollars to be deposited with the state treasurer to the credit of the board."

Reading the provisions of this section in connection with those of sections 1249 et seq., it is clear that the provisions of section 1260 are a recognition of general power in municipalities with respect to the construction of sewage disposal plants, and of the fact that in cities, officers and departments other than council may be charged with the execution of such power.

The Municipal Code, in making provision for boards of health, (section 189), provided that they should have all the powers and perform all the duties not inconsistent with that act, which were conferred and required in section 2143, Revised Statutes, and other sections relating to the board of health under previous legislation, and it was provided that for all purposes, such sections should remain in full force and effect. Were it not that said section 2143, Revised Statutes, which has been carried into the General Code as sections 4468 and 4469, was specifically retained by said section 189 of the Municipal Code, there would be much reason for contending, upon established principles of construction, that the provisions of sections 4468 and 4469, insofar as they conferred power upon city councils with respect to the execution of contracts for sewage disposal plants, were repealed by implication.

Goff vs. Gates, (87 O. S., 142, 149).
Commissioners vs. Frega, (26 O. S., 488, 491).
Lorain Road Co. vs. Cotton, (12 O. S., 263, 272).
Attorney General vs. Commissioners, (117 Mich., 477).
Moore vs. Vance, (1 Ohio, 1, 10).
Roche vs. Mayor, (40 N. J. L., 257).

In face of the fact that the provisions of sections 4468 and 4469 were specifically retained by section 189 of the Municipal Code, it cannot, perhaps, be argued that there was any legislative repeal of these sections with respect to the powers of council as to sewage disposal plants, by the comprehensive scheme of legislation, which has granted general powers to municipalities with respect to these plants, and has charged officers other than council, with the administrative duties of executing such power. Nevertheless, I am of the opinion that insofar as sections 4468 and 4469 are applicable to the subject matter of sewage disposal plants, they are to be confined, in their operation, to the cases therein provided for, and are not to be looked to as prescribing the procedure in carrying out the general powers granted to cities, with respect to the construction of such plants.

Moreover, it occurs to me that although section 189 of the Municipal Code Act provides that section 2143, R. S., (4468-4469, G. C.), shall remain in full force and effect for all purposes, yet, that this can only mean that this section is to remain in force and have such operation and effect as it can have, consistent with the express provisions of other sections of the act, and consistent with the intent and purpose disclosed by the act as a whole. The Municipal Code Act is an entirety and conformable to cardinal rules of construction, the intent and purpose of the act in any particular respect is to be determined upon a consideration of the same as a whole; and particular sections are to be given such operation only as is consistent with the intent and purpose so disclosed. It seems to me that the intent, purpose and spirit of this act so considered as a whole indicate that the administrative duties pertaining to contracts for sewage disposal plants are vested in the department of public service.

Aside from the foregoing considerations, I am of the opinion that the suggestion that sections 4468 and 4469, General Code, furnish the only authority with reference to the award and execution of a contract for the sewage disposal plant in question, is not well made. As I gather from the facts presented to me, the construction of the proposed sewage disposal plant at Canton has been ordered by the state board of health after proceedings had under the authority of sections 1249 et seq., General Code.

By the provisions of section 4468, the authority of council to initiate and carry on proceedings for the construction of a sewage disposal plant, is limited to the condition that such action by council has been first recommended by the board of health of the municipality, or by some other officer or board in whom the powers of such local board of healh have been vested. It would present a curious and impossible state of affairs that a city, through its officers, should be subject to the order of the state board of health with respect to the construction of a sewage disposal plant, under the sanction of penalties for disobedience of said order, and yet the officers of the city be limited in their power to construct the plant by the condition that the local board of health shall first recommend such construction. This situation but illustrates the point hereinbefore made that sections 4468 and 4469, General Code, have no necessary application to the question at hand.

Upon the facts presented, with reference to the proposed construction of the sewage disposal plant in question, I am of the opinion that power, with reference to the preparation of plans for such plant and for awarding and entering in to the contract for the construction of such plant, is vested in the director of public service of the city of Canton. Inasmuch, however, as this contract will carry an expenditure of more than five hundred ($500.00) dollars, it will have to be authorized by council and approved by the board of control.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX — EXECUTOR — PAYMENT — REAL ESTATE—HOW VALUATION SHOULD BE MADE.

1st. An executor of an estate is not justified in computing a collateral inheritance tax for himself, but must, unless he proceeds under sections 5343 and 5344, General Code, pay the amount which is certified against his estate for collection by the county treasurer.

2nd. Where the real estate has not been appraised in the regular inventory, the probate judge under section 5343 should make the valuation for the collateral inheritance tax appraisement, subject to the right of the prosecuting attorney, as representing the state, or the executor or any person interested in the succession to apply for an appraisement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1914.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 26th, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions, arising under the collateral inheritance tax law, sections 5331, et seq., General Code, as amended in part in 103 Ohio Laws, 463:

> "1. Is an executor justified in taking the value of the personal property fixed by the appraisers as a basis for the payment of the inheritance tax?
> "2. Where the real estate has not been appraised in the regular inventory, should the executor have the real estate appraised also, or is he justified in paying the inheritance tax on a fair and reasonable valuation of it?"

I may be permitted, at the outset, to point out what seems to me to be a fundamentally erroneous assumption, upon which your questions are asked, viz.: that the executor is to determine for himself the amount of the taxes that he will pay; subject, of course, to liability if he makes an erroneous determination.

I call your attention to the provisions of sections 5340, 5343 and 5344 of the General Code. These sections were not amended by the act found in 103 Ohio Laws, 463; although, as you will observe, section 5340 is in part inconsistent with amended section 5331, and consequently is by implication amended to the extent of such inconsistency. These sections, as you will note, require the value of the taxable estate to be officially ascertained and certified to the county treasurer for collection. The executor should pay the amount certified to the treasurer for collection, unless he is dissatisfied therewith; in which event he may apply to the probate court on behalf of the persons interested in the succession, or on his own behalf, under section 5343, and section 5344 of the General Code.

Strictly speaking, these sections, then, require me to answer to your first question that the executor is not justified in computing the tax for himself, but must, unless he proceeds under sections 5343 and 5344, General Code, pay the amount which is certified against his estate for collection by the county treasurer.

Your second question would be answered in the negative so far as the executor is concerned. In the case of real estate, the probate judge, under section 5343, should make the valuation, subject to the right of the prosecuting attorney, as representing the state, or the executor or any person interested in the succession, to apply for an appraisement.

With respect to your first question, however, I may say I have held in other opinions that costs of administration and debts of the decedent, where chargeable against a given inheritance, and which diminish the value of the part of the estate against which they are chargeable, as compared with the value shown in the inventory, should be deducted; so that the executor, in the administration of his trust, is justified in objecting in such proper cases to the appraisement, and, in a proceeding for that purpose, securing the reduction of the taxable value of the inheritance so as to account for such factors.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY—RIGHT TO REVOKE CERTIFICATE OF PHARMACIST.

The state board of pharmacy has no power under section 1307, General Code, to suspend or revoke a certificate of a pharmacist on the ground that he was once confined in a state institution for lunacy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary, State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of March 6th, you inquire as follows:

> "The attention of this board has been called to one Fred P. Schroeder, who is a registered pharmacist under the laws of this state, and who in March, 1912, was sent to a state institution on a lunacy charge, and discharged from such institution as cured in November, 1912.
> "This man occasionally does relief work as a registered pharmacist, and while so engaged is in charge of such drug store or pharmacy. The complaint is that he is an unsafe man to practice the profession of pharmacy.
> "The question is, therefore, has this board, according to 103 Ohio Laws, p. 487, section 1307 of the General Code, any grounds for the suspension or revocation of a certificate in such case?"

Section 1307 of the General Code, as the same appears in 103 Ohio Laws, 487, is as follows:

> "Each certificate and each renewal certificate issued by the state board of pharmacy shall entitle the person to whom it is granted to practice the profession of a pharmacist or assistant pharmacist for three years. The board may refuse to grant a certificate to a person guilty of felony or gross immorality, or addicted to the liquor or drug habit to such a degree as to render him unfit to practice pharmacy, and, after notice and hearing, may suspend or revoke a certificate for like cause or for fraud in procuring it. Within thirty days an appeal may be taken from the action of the state board refusing to grant or suspending or revoking a certificate, to the governor and attorney general, and the decision of these officials, affirming or overruling its action, shall be final. No certificate shall be suspended for a longer period than two years. If during such suspension the existing certificate shall have expired the board may, at the end of such suspension, renew such certificate upon payment to the treasurer thereof the fee prescribed in section 1311 of the General Code for renewal of a certificate."

Under this statute the board is empowered to revoke or suspend a certificate only for the causes enumerated therein for which they may refuse to grant a certificate; and for the additional cause of fraud in procuring a certificate. The board has only such powers in this respect as are expressly or impliedly conferred by the statute. The fact that the pharmacist in question was confined for a period of time in an insane asylum of this state does not supply grounds for suspension or revocation of his certificate, as the same are set out in the statute.

The board, therefore, has no power, under section 1307 of the General Code, to suspend or revoke the certificate of the pharmacist in question, on the ground that he was once confined in a state institution for lunacy.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FINNISH WORKING PEOPLE'S SOCIETY—BUILDING EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

The Finnish Working People's Society of Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio, is an institution of pure public charity, and the building owned and occupied by this institution is exempt from taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 13th, you request my opinion as to whether or not the building of The Finnish Working People's Society, of Ashtabula Harbor, is taxable. It appears that the purposes of the society are educational and charitable. Its disbursements, as shown by the letter of counsel, consist largely of relief of the poor, not only those of the Finnish race of the community and the mother country, but also the poor of the working classes generally. In addition to such expenditure of its funds the society secures speakers for the instruction primarily of its members, but also of the general public, it being at least implied, in the letter referred to, that the public is invited to the meetings of the society. Again, the society offers to those who attend its meetings simple instruction in music, gymnastics, etc.

The building in question is used by the society as a general assembly hall and for its general purposes.

I assume, of course, that there is no idea of profit on the part of the society or its members.

Under authorities cited in other opinions the society clearly constitutes "an institution of purely public charity" or "an institution of public charity only," as the phrase is used in the statutes; and I am of the opinion that the building in question is exempt from taxation.

The other questions submitted in your letter of March 13th, are separately considered.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMPLOYMENT OF SECRET SERVICE OFFICER BY PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL SECRET SERVICE OFFICER.

A prosecuting attorney who is employing a secret service officer regularly under section 2915, General Code, may employ another secret service officer when necessary under the provisions of section 3004, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1914.

HON. F. L. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 20, 1914, as follows:

> " I have Mr. W. B. Mathews regularly appointed as secret service officer under section 2951-1, General Code, but occasions frequently arise in which it is necessary for him to have some one to aid him in the discovery of evidence in order to properly make out a case, and I wondered whether it would be legal to pay for these extra services under section 3004, General Code. I have no doubt but what this is perfectly legal and I understand that a number of prosecutors are doing this way, but I thought it best to have your opinion."

Section 2915-1, General Code, makes provision for the appointment of any one secret service officer. You state you have taken advantage of this provision and have appointed Mathews to serve in this capacity. You now desire to appoint another man to assist Mr. Mathews.

Aside from section 3004, General Code, I am aware of no statute authorizing the appointment of such additional secret service officer, but it seems clear to me that such appointment can be made under this section, as being an expense "in furtherance of justice" and "not otherwise provided for."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that you can appoint an additional secret service officer and pay for such extra service under section 3004 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—SUPERINTENDENT OF WATERWORKS AND SUPERINTENDENT OF LIGHT AND POWER PLANT—THE RULE OF INCOMPATIBILITY.

Where the same man is serving as superintendent of the waterworks and also as superintendent of the municipal light and power plant and two men are required to discharge the duties of these positions, the director of public service has the right to determine which position the present incumbent shall retain, and an appointment shall be made to fill the other position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 24, 1914, Hon. Amos C. Ruff, city solicitor of Canal Dover, inquires:

> "Under the new civil service law can the same man at the same time serve as superintendent of waterworks and also as superintendent of the light and power plant?
> "At the present time we have one man holding both positions. Efficiency absolutely demands that there should be a competent superintendent or foreman for each utility. May the present incumbent choose which superintendency he will retain, or is that a matter for the director of service to decide?"

I assume from the above statement that two separate positions exist, one known as superintendent of waterworks and the other as superintendent of the light and power plant.

The new civil service act does not change the rule of law as to the right of one person to hold two positions at the same time.

The civil service act concerns the method of appointing and removing officers. The rule of incompatibility of offices concerns the duties of officers.

The rule of incompatibility of offices is stated by Dustin, J., in case of State vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S., 274, when he says on page 275:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The duties of the two positions now in question are not prescribed by statute. They are not subordinate one to the other and from the usual duties pertaining to such positions they cannot well be a check one upon the other. This will have to be determined by the duties of each position.

If one man can physically perform the duties of both positions, they are not incompatible and may be held by the same person.

It now appears that the efficiency of the public service requires that these two positions be filled by two persons. The civil service act will not prevent this.

The present superintendent is in fact the incumbent of both positions and by the strict letter of section 10 of the civil service act he would be entitled to hold both positions, subject to a non-competitive examination.

If the positions are to be separated, the incumbent has a right to hold one of the positions if he passes the non-competitive examination. He cannot be deprived of both positions without cause.

If the same person cannot efficiently discharge the duties of both positions, this would make them incompatible. This would be cause for removing the employe from one of the positions which he holds.

The officer who has the right to appoint or remove the employe in question, would be entitled to determine from which position he should be removed.

Section 4250, General Code, provides:

> "The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

If a department of waterworks and a department of light and power have been created in your city, the superintendent of these departments would be heads of subdepartments, and the mayor would have the right to appoint or remove them. In such case the mayor would have a right to determine which position the present incumbent should retain.

Section 4247, General Code, provides:

> "Subject to the limitations prescribed in this subdivision such executive officers shall have exclusive right to appoint all officers, clerks and employes in their respective departments or offices, and likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, shall have sole power to remove or suspend any of such officers, clerks or employes."

One of the executive officers herein referred to is the director of public service as shown by section 4246, General Code. Therefore, if there is no department of waterworks or department of light and power, the director of public service can appoint and remove the superintendents of such waterworks and light and power plants. You refer to them both as superintendents and as foremen in your letter. In such case the director of public service can determine which position the present incumbent shall retain.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ELECTION EXPENSES—EXPENSES TO BE CHARGED BACK AGAINST POLITICAL DIVISION—EXPENSES TO BE PAID BY THE COUNTY.

1st. The cost of supplies and the compensation of clerks and judges of election should be charged against the political division in which primaries are held and no other.

2nd. Compensation to members and clerks of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections for holding primaries and also for receiving nomination petitions is not an actual expense of the primary and cannot therefore be charged back to the political subdivision as an expense of a primary election under section 4991, General Code. This compensation is paid by the county. The precinct is the unit by which the amount of compensation to be paid in the county is determined.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of January 22, 1914, is received, in which you inquire:

> "How are the expenses of primary elections to be charged back under the provisions of section 4991, General Code, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws, 510?
>
> "Shall the cost of supplies, including the compensations of the members and clerks of the boards of deputy state supervisors, as based by section 4990, General Code, upon all of the precincts of a county, as well as the compensation of the judges and clerks of elections, be borne by the subdivision or subdivisions only in which such primaries were held? It might happen that a primary was held in only one township, one village, or one city in a county; if so, would that one township, one village, or that one city be compelled to bear the entire expense?
> "Is the fact that nomination petitions were filed in most, if not all of the subdivisions where no primaries were held sufficient service on the part of the election boards in receiving them, to justify a distribution of the expenses and compensations to all of the subdivisions of a county, as provided by section 5053, General Code, and your ruling of July 12, 1912, that expenses of primary elections held in odd numbered years be charged back?"

Section 4990, General Code, provides:

> "For their services in conducting primary elections, members of boards of deputy state supervisors shall each receive for his services the sum of two dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his county, and judges and clerks of election shall receive the same compensation as is provided by law for such officers at general elections."

Section 4991, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 510, provides in part:

> "All expenses of primary elections, including cost of supplies for election precincts and compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors, and judges and clerks of election, shall be paid in the manner provided by law for the payment of similar expenses for general elections except that the expenses of primary elections in political divisions less than a county shall be a charge against the township, city, village or political division in which said election was held, and the amount so paid by the county shall be retained by the county auditor, from funds due such township, city, village or political division, at the time of making the semi-annual distribution of taxes. The amount of such expenses shall be ascertained and apportioned by the deputy state supervisors to the several political divisions and certified to the county auditor."

This section authorizes the county to charge the expense of a primary election to the political division "in which said election was held." Three classes of expenses are specifically mentioned. The costs of supplies; the compensation of the judges and clerks of election; and the compensation of the members and clerks of boards of deputy state supervisors. These classes of expenses will be considered separately.

Your inquiry arises from the fact that in many political divisions no primaries are held in the odd-numbered years. Where there are primaries in every precinct of a county the division of the expense is a matter of calculation.

The supplies in question would be for precincts in which primary elections are held. There would be no supplies for precincts in which no primary election was held.

The same is true as to the compensation of the judges and clerks of elections. If there is no primary in a precinct, there is no expense for clerks and judges for such precinct. The same is true as to other general expenses pertaining to a primary election.

Therefore, the cost of supplies and compensation of judges and clerks of election should be charged against the political division in which primaries are held and to no others.

The court of common pleas of Mahoning county, Ohio, has held that under section 4990, General Code, the members and clerks of the board of deputy supervisors of elections are entitled to the compensation therein specified for each precinct in the county whether a primary election has been held in each precinct or not. This decision has been affirmed by the court of appeals.

Prior to the amendment of section 4991, General Code, the compensation of the members and clerks of these boards for conducting primaries was paid by the county and was not charged back, except in counties containing registration cities, wherein the compensation was prorated. This was the holding in the opinion of this department to you under date of February 27, 1912.

In the Mahoning county case, State of Ohio ex rel., vs. Hogg, Auditor, Robinson, J., said:

"If it were true they had nothing to do with the nomination by petition there might be a strong argument that the constitutional provision had deprived them of compensation in those precincts in which no election was had, but they still have very similar and important duties, and the fair application of the statute would seem to be to follow its general construction. It would not be a shifting compensation, for next year these thirty precincts may vote to have a primary election, but it is intended that they shall be compensated for all of the precincts in the county, for the reason that they have some work, at least, to do, notwithstanding the constitutional provision as to such of the precincts."

The court bases its conclusion, among other things, upon the fact that the members and clerks of the various election boards must receive nomination petitions of candidates for offices in those political divisions in which no primaries are held. There is no reference in this opinion to the provisions of section 4991, General Code, as amended.

The court does not pass upon the question as to whether or not the filing of nomination petitions is sufficient reason for charging back such compensation under section 4991, General Code, supra, or that any of such compensation can be charged back.

Section 4991, General Code, as amended, requires that the "expenses of primary elections in political divisions less than a county shall be a charge against the township, city, village or political division in which said election was held."

The word "expenses" in the part above quoted applies to the actual expenses of a primary election.

In view of the court's decision in the Mahoning county case, can it be said that the compensation of the members and clerks of the board of deputy supervisors is an actual expense of a primary election? The court in effect holds that the compensation to be paid these persons is determined by the number of precincts in the county, whether primaries are held therein or not. This compensation by virtue of section 4822, General Code, read in connection with section 4991, General Code, is paid quarterly from the general fund of the county. The compensation is divided over the entire year. The precinct is the unit by which the amount of compensation to be paid in the county is determined.

This compensation is for holding primaries and also for receiving nomination petitions, as decided by the case cited. It is not an actual expense of the primaries and cannot, therefore, be charged back to the political divisions as an expense of a primary election under section 4991, General Code. This compensation is paid by the county.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE—RIGHT TO HOLD ANOTHER OFFICE IN ADDITION TO THAT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSIONER.

A member of a municipal civil service commission cannot hold an office or position in the city or city school district that has the power of appointment, promotion, lay off or suspension of an officer or employe, nor can he hold a position in the classified service in such city or city school district. So far as his holding state and county offices is concerned, each office must be examined to determine whether it comes within the rule as to incompatibility of offices.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 7, 1914, you inquire:

"Section 3 of the civil service act in the last sentence provides:

"No commissioner shall hold any other office of profit under the government of the United States, the state of Ohio, or any political subdivision thereof.

"We learn from correspondence with municipal civil service commissions over the state that many cities pay no salaries whatever, and some of them very small compensation. In many cases, civil service commissioners drawing either no salary or a very small salary are holding other public positions carrying larger remuneration. We have a number of inquiries from these municipal commissions desiring to know whether or not their members can hold any other position of profit, whether drawing salaries or not as municipal commissioners."

Section 3 of the civil service act, section 486-3, General Code, provides:

"Commissioners. Within ten days after this act goes into effect the governor shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, three persons of recognized character and ability to serve, one for two years, one for four years, and one for six years, as civil service commissioners, who shall constitue the state civil service commission of Ohio. Upon the expiration of the term of office of each commissioner so appointed, his successor shall be appointed by the governor to serve for a period of six years from the date of his appointment, and until a successor is appointed and has qualified. A vacancy in the office of commissioner shall be filled by the governor for the remainder of the unexpired term.

"The governor may remove any member of the state civil service commission of Ohio at any time for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office, having first given to such commissioner a copy of the charges against him and an opportunity to be publicly heard in person or by counsel in his own defense, and any such act of removal by the governor shall be final.

"A statement of the findings of the governor, the reasons for his action and the answer, if any, of the commissioner, shall be filed by the governor with the secretary of state and shall be open to public inspection. At the time of any appointment, not more than two commissioners shall be adherents of the same political party. No commissioner shall hold any other office of profit under the government of the United States, the state of Ohio, or any political division thereof."

The provisions of this section, standing alone, apply to the members of the state civil service commission.

Section 19 of said act, section 486-19, General Code, provides in part:

"Municipal civil service. The mayor or other chief appointing authority of each city in the state shall appoint three persons, one for a term of two years, one for four years, and one for six years, who shall constitute the municipal civil service commission of such city and of the city school district in which such city is located; provided, however, that members of existing municipal civil service commissions shall continue in office for the terms for which they have been appointed and that their successors, the first appointees of the mayor or other chief appointing authority of such city, shall be appointed to serve respectively for four years, five years and six years and until their successors are appointed and have qualified. Each alternate year thereafter the mayor or other chief appointing authority shall appoint one person as successor of the member whose term expires to serve six years and until his successor is appointed and has qualified. A vacancy shall be filled by the mayor or other chief appointing authority of a city for the unexpired term. At the time of any appointment not more than two commissioners shall be adherents of the same political party. * * *

"If the appointing authority of any such city fails to appoint a civil service commission or commissioner as provided by law within sixty days after he has the power to so appoint, or after a vacancy exists, the state civil service commission shall make the appointment, and such appointee shall hold office until the expiration of the term of the appointing authority of such city and until the successor of such appointee is appointed and qualified. If any such municipal commission fails to prepare and submit such rules and regulations in pursuance of the provisions of this act within six months after this act goes into effect, the state civil service commission shall forthwith make such rules. The provisions of this act shall in all other respects, except as provided in this section, be in force and full effect in such cities."

This section provides for the appointment of the members of the municipal civil service commission. There is no specific provision in this section that the members of such commission cannot hold any other position of profit in the service of the public. This section fixes the qualifications of municipal civil service commissioners.

The last sentence above quoted and italicized does not apply to the qualifications of a commissioner as stated in section 3 of the act. It applies to the provisions of the act pertaining to the appointment, promotion, examination, etc., of officers and employes, and of applicants.

The inhibition of section 3 does not, therefore, apply to the members of the municipal civil service commission.

The doctrine of incompatibility of office would apply to these commissioners.

The rule is stated by Dustin, J., at page 275 of State ex rel. vs. Gebert 274, where he says:

"Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The members of the municipal civil service commission examine applicants and certify names for appointment to all appointing officers in the city and city school district thereof. They are, therefore, a check upon these officers as to their power of appointment. Also they could not very well examine themselves for positions in the classified service.

Section 21 of the civil service act provides in part:

"After the expiration of twelve months from the taking effect of this act, it shall be unlawful for the auditor of state, or for any fiscal officer of any county, city or city school district thereof, to draw, sign or issue, or authorize the drawing, signing or issuing of any warrant on the treasurer or other disbursing officer of the state, or of any county, city or city school district thereof, to pay any salary or compensation to any officer, clerk, employe, or other person in the classified service until an estimate, payroll or account for such salary or compensation containing the name of each person to be paid, shall bear the certificate of the state civil service commission, or in case of the service of a city the certificate of the municipal service commission of such city, that the persons named in such estimate, payroll or account have been appointed, promoted, reduced, suspended or laid off or are being employed in pursuance of this act, and the rules adopted thereunder."

By virtue of this section the certificate of the civil service commission is necessary before employes in the classified service can secure their pay.

Also section 22 of the civil service act gives the municipal civil service commission the power of investigating the conduct of other officers.

Said section 22 reads:

"Whenever a civil service commission shall have reason to believe that any officer, board, commission, head of department or person having the power of employment, lay off, suspension or removal, has abused such power by making an appointment, lay off, suspension, or removal in violation of the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the commission to make an investigation, and if it shall find that any such violation of the provisions or the intent and spirit of this act has occurred, it shall make a report thereof to the governor, or in the case of a municipal officer or employe to the mayor or other chief appointing authority, who shall have the power to remove forthwith such guilty officer, board, commission, head of department, or person; an opportunity first having been given to such officer or employe of being publicly heard in person or by counsel, in his own defense."

A civil service commission could hardly impartially conduct an investigation of one of its own members, as to his conduct when holding some other position.

Therefore, a member of a municipal civil service commission cannot hold an office or position in the city or city school district thereof, that has a power of appointment, promotion, lay off, or suspension of an officer or employe, nor can he hold a position in the classified service, in such city or city school district.

As to county and state offices the duties of the particular positions must be examined to determine whether they come within the rule laid down by Judge Dustin, as to incompatibility of offices.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF PHARMACY—RIGHT TO RECOGNIZE CERTIFICATE OF PHARMACIST FROM FOREIGN STATE.

The state board of pharmacy is authorized to recognize a certificate of a pharmacist registered in New York City only, provided that said board is satisfied that the standard of qualifications and requirements as to competency for such certificate as he holds is equal to that required of holders of such certificate in this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1914.

HON. M. N. FORD, Secretary State Board of Pharmacy, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 6th, wherein you state:

"This board has an applicant who asks registration as an assistant pharmacist in this state upon his registration as a pharmacist by examination before the New York board of pharmacy.

"The applicant's New York registration is good in New York City only. Such being the case, can this board, according to section 1305 of the General Code, issue said applicant such certificate of registration?"

Sections 1305 and 1306 of the General Code are as follows:

"Sec. 1305. The state board of pharmacy shall register a person as assistant pharmacist without examination and issue him a certificate of such registration if he is legally registered by examination as a pharmacist, and holds a certificate of such registration under the laws of another state. The board may register a person as a pharmacist without examination and issue him a certificate of such registration if he is legally registered as a pharmacist and holds a certificate of such registration under the laws of another state, upon the following conditions: Each applicant for such registration shall not be less than twenty-one years of age and be registered after examination in the state from which he holds a certificate.

"Sec. 1306. The standard of qualifications and requirement as to competency in another state shall at least be as thorough as that established by the board of pharmacy of this state. The board shall not recognize certificates of registration granted by another state unless recognition is given to residents of this state holding certificates from its board of pharmacy."

In answering your question I assume that the state of New York recognizes residents of this state holding certificates from its board of pharmacy.

Under these sections of the General Code, your board is required to register a person as assistant pharmacist if he holds a certificate of registration as a pharmacist after examination under the laws of another state; provided, that the standard of qualification and the requirement as to competency in such other state is as thorough as that established by the board of this state.

I am satisfied that if the applicant in question is registered as a pharmacist, even though his registration be recognized in New York City alone, he holds a certificate of registration under the laws of another state within the language of section 1305.

The question as to the standard of qualification and requirement as to competency, which the applicant was required to meet as a condition to the receipt of the certificate he holds, is one which the facts stated in your letter will not permit me to answer. This question is primarily one for the board itself.

Answering your question in short I may say that under these statutes your board is authorized to recognize the certificate of this applicant, provided you are satisfied that the standard of qualification and requirement as to competency, for such certificate as he holds, is equal to that required of holders of such certificates in this state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—VILLAGE MARSHAL—VILLAGE HEALTH OFFICER.

One person may at the same time hold the office of village marshal and village health officer and draw the salary attached to both offices from the city treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1914.

HON. J. O. BECKET, Member Ohio State Senate, Commercial Point, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 20th, wherein you inquire:

> "May the offices of marshal of the village of Commercial Point and health officer of said village (there being no village board of health) be held by the same person."

Section 4384, General Code, provides for the election of a marshal in villages for a term of two years and until his successor is elected and qualified. By virtue of section 4385 he is constituted the chief peace officer of the village and the executive head of the police department, under the mayor. His duties, as defined by the succeeding sections, are to suppress riots, disturbances and breaches of the peace, to arrest disorderly persons in the corporation, and to pursue and arrest fugitives from justice, etc.

It is made mandatory by section 4404, General Code, upon the council of each municipality in the state, to establish a board of health, except that in villages the council may dispense with a board of health and appoint a health officer, with the approval of the state board of health, who shall act instead of a board of health and have the same powers and duties as are conferred by statute upon local boards of health. I understand the latter plan was followed at Commercial Point.

The duties of a health officer in such case, are to make all necessary and proper regulations for the public health, to prevent and restrict disease and to take steps to prevent, abate and suppress nuisances.

Incompatibility of offices is of two kinds, viz., statutory and common law. The former exists when a statute expressly prohibits the holding by one person of two or more offices at the same time. The statutes do not expressly prohibit a village marshal from acting as health officer of the village.

The rule of common law incompatibility is stated by the circuit court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Gebert, 12 C. C., (n. s.), as follows:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The functions of a marshal and health officer are entirely separate and independent. There is nothing in the duties pertaining to either of these two offices that would make one subordinate to or a check upon the other. Neither statutory nor common law incompatibility exists and I am therefore of the opinion that one person may hold both offices at the same time and draw compensation for both from the municipal treasury.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ALTERNATING CURRENT—REGULATION AND USE IN MINES.

Mines where alternating current has been installed and in use before the passage and operation of section 948 of the General Code are not required to discontinue the use of this current by the provisions of this section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1914.

MR. J. C. DAVIES, Chief Deputy, Department of Inspection, The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 16, 1914, you submit the following inquiry:

> "We request an opinion from your department as to whether or not alternating current which had been already installed and in use in the underground workings of a mine at the time of the passage and approval of section 948 of the General Code can legally be continued."

Paragraph 3 of section 948, which has reference to alternating current, reads thus:

> "At each mine equipped with electric power after the passage and approval of this act, no alternating current shall be used underground to operate any machinery other than that necessary to convert the alternating current to direct current, and no wires carrying alternating current shall be used underground except same be carried in an entry or passageway where persons and animals are not permitted to travel."

The plain language of the statute in question seems to indicate the inhibition against electric current is applicable only to those mines which are equipped with electric power after the passage and approval of the act in question. If the act were intended so to be read as to prohibit the use of alternating current after the passage and approval of the act in question, this would have been accomplished by the omission of the words: "after the passage and approval of this act," and we cannot assume that the legislature inserted these words without having intended that something should be accomplished by such insertion. The result thus accomplished is, as we have before indicated, to permit the mine equipped with electric power prior to the passage of the act in question, to use alternating current underground to operate machinery, etc.

I desire, however, to call your attention to the concluding paragraph of section 948, which reads thus:

> "At each mine equipped with electric power prior to the passage and approval of this act, where the pressure or potential is in excess of 325 votls, direct current, or where alternating current is used and the conditions surrounding the use of same are such, in the opinion of the chief inspector of mines, that the provisions of the preceding section do not provide the required protection from shock to persons employed therein, such additional safe-guards shall be employed as may be required by the chief inspector of mines, and the district inspector of mines jointly."

The next preceding section, viz.: Section 947, regulates the use of electricity and the control of current, as well as the manner of placing of wires in mines. Should the safe-guards therein provided be insufficient because alternating current is used in the mine, your board can legally provide such additional safeguards as may be necessary for the protection from shock to persons employed in such mine.

The paragraph last quoted gives added force to the contention that the prohibition against alternating current applies only to mines equipped with electricity after the passage of the act, because this paragraph refers to the use of alternating current in a mine equipped prior to the passage of the act. It does not limit the use of such alternating current in the manner in which it is limited in the third paragraph, which is also quoted in this opinion.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—WRONG DISTRIBUTION OF TAXABLE PROPERTY—NO REMEDY IN SUCH CASES.

Where the taxable property of a railroad company located in a certain village and township has been erroneously distributed as between two taxing districts on account of a mistake as to the relative mileage of the main track of the railroad located in them respectively, and as a continuance of this error the village has been the loser and the township the gainer in taxes, the county auditor is without authority to place on the current or future duplicate of the village as omitted taxes that portion of the valuation which should have been contributed to the village during the past years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1914.

MESSRS. BLACHEY & KEARNS, Legal Counsel for the Village of Ohio City, Van Wert, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I regret very much that my convenience, which you were kind enough to consult, did not permit me to answer your letter of October 22, 1913, at an earlier date. This department has, during the past few months been burdened with so many matters of immediate urgency, that through sheer physical inability, to do otherwise, I have been obliged to fall somewhat behind in the attention which I have given to matters presented in the regular way.

Your letter requests my opinion upon the power of the county auditor, under the following set of facts:

> "For ten or fifteen years last past the taxable property of the Chicago & Erie Railroad Company, located in the village of Ohio City and in Liberty township, Van Wert county, has been erroneously distributed as between these two taxing districts, on account of a mistake as to the relative mileage of the main track of the railroad located in them respectively. As a consequence of this error the village has been the loser and the township has been the gainer.
> "Can the county auditor place on a current or future duplicate of the village, as omitted taxes, that portion of the valuation which ought to have been attributed to the village during the past years; and if so, for how many years past may he take such action?"

The taxable property of a railroad, which is apportioned along the line of the road on a mileage basis, is not, strictly speaking, either "real property" or "personal property" within the meaning of the general taxing statutes. So if the question is as to the power of the county auditor to act under sections 5398 to 5401, inclusive, it must be answered that such power does not exist. (Railway Company vs. Hynicka, 4 N. P. n. s., 345.) In other words, the addition cannot be placed on the duplicate on the theory that the village's portion of the assessment as it should have been made is "omitted personal taxes." The case last above cited is also authority (and more directly so) for the proposition that the county auditor may not proceed under section 5574, General Code, which pertains to the assessment of real estate and provides that whenever a county auditor discovers that lands, town lots, improvements, structures or fixtures therein, subject to taxation, have escaped taxation by reason of an error of the auditor, he shall place the property upon the duplicate and levy against it the rates for the preceding years as far back as the last appraisement and equalization of real estate, or the last date of ownership. The reason for this is that the property has not "escaped taxation" at all; it has been taxed, but the proper rates have not been levied against it. The same reason underlies the holding that it is not omitted property; for the property is on the tax list and has been taxed, but only at improper rates, and in the wrong districts.

Section 2593 affords a remedy which is more nearly applicable than either of the two already considered, in that it authorizes the auditor, when given "lots or lands" have not been charged with particular levies, to charge against such property such omitted taxes, as far back as the last appraisal of real estate or the last change of ownership. However, by parity of reasoning upon the decision in Railroad vs. Hynica, supra, this remedy would have to be rejected. That is to say, railroad property is not "lots or lands." It is to be observed that ordinary personal property which has actually been on the tax duplicate, but against which rates have not been extended for given levies in past years, cannot be reached under section 2593. A fortiori, then, railroad property which is of a peculiar character cannot be so reached.

I now refer to sections 2588, et seq., General Code, which authorize the county auditor to "correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes * * * the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment." These sections might, under one construction, give to the county auditor the power to current or living duplicate. In fact, it appears from your statement of facts that the auditor actually did this with respect to the current duplicate in the case mentioned by you. But those provisions of these sections which authorize the duplicate to be corrected can have no reference to preceding years. It is axiomatic that the auditor must be authorized to certify to the treasurer some evidence of the claims for taxes before the treasurer can collect them. This he must do either by placing taxes for previous years on an existing duplicate, which is not authorized by the language found in the section now under consideration; or by making a special certificate of collection, which is authorized by other sections to which I need not refer, but not by the one under consideration.

The inference that the general provisions of sections 2588, et seq., General Code, do not authorize additions for previous years is made irresistible by the provisions of section 2589, authorizing a refunder of "erroneous taxes or assessments * * * charged and collected in previous years." If the railroad had paid too much taxes, these sections would, in my opinion, afford it relief; indeed, to be perfectly technical, it may be that as to the township levies, made in the years in question, upon the excessive mileage, the railroad may actually be entitled to a refunder for certain years. I enclose herewith copy of an opinion given to Hon. W. V. Wright, prosecuting atttorney of Tuscarawas county, bearing upon this question.

The very fact that the statute speaks of refunders of excessive taxes paid in previous years, and makes no provision for collecton of additional taxes where the erroneous charge resulted in the payment of less than should have been paid, makes it clear that these sections cannot apply.

I have already referred generally to sections 5398, et seq., General Code, and have stated my conclusion with respect to them; which is that the county auditor, thereunder, may not add to the duplicate any taxes on account of the errors of which you speak. This conclusion is made certain by the express language of section 5400, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The power and duty of the county auditor under the provisions of the next preceding section, shall extend to all cases where property, taxable within his county, has for many reasons not been assessed and taxed according to its true value in money, as provided by law, except that where provision is made by law for the appraisement and assessment of property by a board composed of officers of more than one county, and such property or part thereof has escaped taxation, the duties provided in such section shall be performed by such board. The board, at any subsequent meeting, may appraise and assess such omitted property for the year or years so omitted, and certify its assessment to the proper officer or officers to be placed upon the tax lists of the proper county or counties for the collection of omitted taxes thereon in a like manner as current assessments are certified by said board, and such officer or officers shall give a certificate therefor to the county treasurer, as in other cases."

This section makes it clear that the county auditor has no power under the group of sections of which it is a part, when the property in question is such as for which "provision is made by law for the appraisement and assessment (thereof) by a board composesd of officers of more than one county."

Railroad property, of course, is property such as is described by the phrase above quoted, and it is therefore clear that the county auditor's powers and duties under section 5399, which alone authorizes corrections for previous years, do not extend to railroad property.

My conclusions thus far reached are sufficient to support the general opinion that the county auditor has no power in the premises; although, as explained in the opinion a copy of which is enclosed herewith, the auditor would have had power to make a refunder upon the order of the commissioners if the railroad had paid too much taxes instead of too little taxes.

While your question is limited to the powers of the county auditor, I have deemed it proper to inquire whether or not such authority is reposed in any other officer or board. Section 5400 suggests inquiry into the powers of the "board composed of officers of more than one county," of which it speaks. Under previous laws railway property was valued by a board consisting of the auditors of the counties through which the line of the road passed. When the act creating the tax commission was passed all such boards were abolished; and although their powers and duties were not exactly conferred upon the tax commission, it was held, in an unreported case entitled The Steubenville & Wheeling Traction Company vs. Blinn, Treasurer, that the effect of that act was to impose in the commission the right to complete any work relating to the valuation of railways formerly devolving upon the taxing authorities provided for by the pre-existing law. One of the sections of the tax commission act provided also that the act itself should not affect pending causes of action. (101 O. L. 399, section 123.)

The section just cited is not as broad as is section 26 of the General Code, which preserves, as against the effect of the repealing act, not only pending causes of action and pending actions, proceedings and prosecutions, but also, when the appeal relates to the remedy, pending causes of proceedings. Section 26, General Code, however, by its own terms, does not apply when provision is otherwise in the repealing act. This provision of the section is interpreted in the case of Friend vs. Levy, 76 O. S. 26, to mean that, where any provision respecting the effect of a repealing act upon pending matters is made by that act, such a provision ipso facto withdraws the repealing act from the effect of section 26, General Code.

Now, if there ever was any right in the "board composed of officers of more than one county," under section 5400, to make the addition which you have in mind, there would be grave doubt as to whether or not such power would be preserved and vested in the tax commission, so that it could act at the present time with respect to years prior to 1911; for, although section 5400 has not been "repealed," and though the tax commission has in all probability all the powers of the old board, yet, the peculiar phraseology of section 123 of the first tax commission law might, as already stated, lead to the conclusion that the commission could not exercise its powers as to matters and things which should have come before the old board during its existence.

However, I do not find it necessary to pass upon this question, because I do not think that, even if the tax commission has the authority at the present to exercise the power of the old county board, those powers themselves extend to the additions contemplated by your question. It is only when property or part thereof "has escaped taxation" that the board could act under section 5400. The property must be omitted from the duplicate in order to give occasion to the exercise of the power; and, as already stated, that is not the case here, the error being a matter of the extension of rates and not one of the assessment. Technically, perhaps, the error is one of assessment, in that it occurs not in the extension of the rates themselves, but rather in the apportionment of the valuation. But here we are relegated again to sections 5398 and 5399, General Code, for it is "the power and duty of the county auditor under the provisions of the next preceding section" which are to be exercised by the "board composed of officers of more than one county." So that, for an interpretation of the phrase "where * * * such property or part thereof has escaped taxation," we must turn to those sections, in order to find the circumstances constituting an "escape." Those circumstances, as disclosed by the two preceding sections, are as follows:

1. The making of a false return or statement.
2. Evasion of making a return or statement.
3. The failure to make a return or statement.
4. The return or statement of only a portion of the taxpayer's taxable property.
5. The return of taxable property or part thereof at a false valuation.

None of these circumstances exist in the facts submitted by you. It is true that in all probability the county auditor acted, as you state, upon information furnished him by the railroad company. However, an error in such information, whether required in the form of a statement under oath or not, would not amount to a "false return," "evasion" or any of the other things referred to in the two sections; although it might be otherwise if the required report or statement was false in a matter affecting value. Railway Company vs. Hynicka.

It would therefore seem that section 5400 could not be employed by the tax commission of Ohio, as the successor of the old board of county auditors, for the purpose of making such corrections as might be necessary in order to adjust the matter of which you speak.

While on this subject, however, I beg to refer to section 5403-1, General Code, which prohibits any county auditor, assessor or other officer from placing upon the tax list or duplicate, for taxation as of the year 1910, or as of any year preceding said year, any personal property which should have been assessed for taxation as of such year; or from changing in any manner the valuation for the year 1910, or any preceding year, of personal property returned for taxation prior to the determination.

This section clearly prohibits any addition whatsoever respecting the listing or valuation of personal property as of the year 1910 or preceding years. Therefore, it is clear that in any event the tax commission could not act in the place of the old board of county auditors; that board having been abolished in 1910, and the right to place omitted property on the duplicate having been taken away, as to the year 1910 or preceding years.

In fact, the section just cited furnishes in a way a complete answer to your question insofar as the year 1910 and preceding years are concerned, viz.: no board or officer has any authority to add anything to the duplicate as omitted personal property, for the year 1910 or any preceding year.

Therefore, if any additions are to be made for the year 1910, or any preceding year, it is very clear that they must be made either upon the theory that railroad property is not "personal property," within the meaning of section 5403-1, or that the proposesd corrections do not constitute an "assessment" or "valuation" of such property "for taxation for the year 1910 or any preceding year."

For all the various reasons which I have discussed, then, I am of the opinion that we must look to the tax commission act in order to find a possible method of procedure in the case you submit.

I find the following provisions of that act which may be pertinent:

Section 5461, being section 72 of the revised tax commission act, 102 O. L. 240 (there being no corresponding provision in the original act, in 101 O. L. 399):

> "When a public utility or corporation fails to make any report or furnish any statement, which it is required to make or furnish, to the commission, or makes a return or statement of a portion only of the gross receipts or gross earnings, which it is required by law to make or return, and fails to make return or statement of the remainder, or fails to report a part or all of its taxable property, or report the same, or part thereof, according to its true value in money, the commission shall ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the gross receipts or gross earnings, or omitted portion of the same, or taxable property, or omitted part of the same, or such as was not reported according to its true value in money, that should have been reported or returned by such public utility or corporation, and certify such gross receipts or gross earnings, or the value of such property, so ascertained, as required in this act, with respect to its gross receipts, gross earnings and property of public utilities and corporations. * * * The power and duty of the commission, above provided for, shall extend to preceding years in such manner as that the commission shall, for such year or years preceding the year in which the inquiries are made, and omissions ascertained, certify such omitted amounts, so ascertained, as required in this act, with respect to such companies, in which event such omitted amounts shall be taxed at the rate of taxation belonging to the year or years in which the failure or omission occurred, in the case of property, and in all other cases the amount of the tax or fee upon such omitted amounts shall be calculated upon the amount so ascertained by the commission, at the rate provided by law, for such year or years; provided, however, that the power and duty of the commission with respect to property shall extend only to the five years next preceding the year in which such inquiries and corrections are made, and not in any event prior to the year 1911, except where no property of a company has been returned or assessed in any such year or years.

"Section 5617-1. The commission shall require county auditors to place upon the tax duplicate any property which may be found, for any reason, to have escaped assessment and taxation.

"Section 5617-4. * * * It may correct an error in an assessment of property for taxation or in the duplicate of taxes in a county, but its power under this section shall not extend to taxes levied under the provisions of subdivisions two of chapter fifteen of title two, part second, of the General Code.

"Section 5617-6. The commission may receive complaints and examine into all cases where it is alleged that property subject to taxation has not been assessed or has been fraudulently or for any reason improperly or unfairly assessed, or the law, in any manner, evaded or violated."

In my opinion the section first above cited affords a remedy exclusive of the general remedies provided for by the other group of sections. A railroad is a "public utility" (sections 5415 and 5416, General Code) and has been since the year 1910, within the purview of our statutes. Section 5461, then, is an express provision for the placing of omitted public utility property on the duplicate; and under the familiar rules of statutory interpretation, this express provision is to be regarded as an implied exception to the general power of the commission. Under section 5617-1, to require county auditors to place any omitted property on the duplicate. Therefore, if the theory of the present changes be that of adding omitted property, I am satisfied, in view of the limitation of section 5403-1, that the only action which can be taken is the action of the tax commission under section 5461; and this action, in turn, is limited to the years beginning with the year 1911. Since that year, of course, the railroad companies have been reporting to the tax commission, and the apportionments among taxing districts have been made by the tax commission (and not by the county auditor, for such years, as you seem to assume). See sections 5430, et seq., General Code.

Therefore, if there has been an error on the part of any officer, the error has been that of the tax commission and not that of the county auditor; unless the county auditor has failed to follow the apportionment as made by the commission, which does not appear to be the case.

I am not sure, however, that the question which you submit can be worked out upon the theory of the addition of omitted property. The railroad company, in making an erroneous statement of mileage, was certainly not guilty of "failing to make any report or furnishing any statement;" it was not guilty of "failing to report a part or all of its taxable property;" it was not guilty of "reporting the same or part thereof otherwise than according to its true value in money." Therefore, it does not seem to me that the tax commission, under section 72 of the act, can adjust for previous years an apportionment of railroad property, based upon an erroneous statement of the company respecting its mileage, into adjacent taxing districts.

Turning again to the other group of sections above quoted, I beg to point out that section 5617-4 contains a provision which seems to fit the case exactly, viz.: that authorizing the tax commission to "correct an error * * * in the duplicate of taxes in a county." However, this provision, like the somewhat similar provision of section 2588, already commented upon, cannot apply to corrections for previous years, because no machinery for making a charge for the previous years, and levying the rates of previous years against the addition, is afforded by the section. In this respect it differs from section 5461, supra, which does contain such machinery. Therefore, in my judgment, although the tax commission could order the auditor to correct a living duplicate, in the particular mentioned in your letter, just as the auditor on his own initiative could have made the correction under section 2588, neither the commission nor the auditor can make the correction for a preceding year.

Nor in my judgment is this conclusion impaired by the general powers of the commission under section 5617-6 and other similar sections. The same defect exists in all of them for the purposes at hand, viz.: that they do not provide adequate machinery for placing in the hands of the county treasurer a certificate or duplicate of taxes for preceding years, computed at the rates for those years.

I have examined the act found in 103 Ohio Laws, 786, known as the "Warnes law," and I am satisfied that there is no provision therein which in any way bears upon the question. That law relates solely to the assessment and valuation of ordinary real and personal property, and has no relation to the assessment and valuation of railroad or other public utility property.

I do not think I have overlooked any of the pertinent provisions of the General Code. Upon such examination as I have made, I have come to the conclusion that no remedy whatever exists for the correction of the errors which have occurred.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOXWELL-PATTERSON LAW—PUPIL MUST COMPLY WITH THIS LAW IN ORDER TO RECEIVE FREE TUITION IN HIGH SCHOOL—WHAT HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATE TO ATTEND.

1st. A township board of education is not liable for the tuition of a student who passes a Boxwell examination and receives her grades but did not take part in the county commencement as required by law, and received no diploma.

2nd. A township board of education maintaining a third grade high school is not legally liable for the payment of the tuition of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate, holding a diploma as such for period of two years at a first grade high school, and who is not a graduate from a third grade high school maintained by the township school district wherein such pupil resides.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1914.

HON. DAVID A. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 15, 1913, you submitted two requests for an opinion, which may be stated as follows:

> "1. Would a township board of education be liable for the tuition of a student passing the Boxwell examination and receiving her grades, of which I enclose you a copy in the case where such student did not comply with the law in this; that she did not take part in the county commencement and never received her diploma?
> "2. Would a township board of education, maintaining a third grade high school, be liable for the tuition of a Boxwell graduate holding a diploma but never graduating from the township high school; which said student, after passing the Boxwell examination and receiving his certificate, entered a first grade high school, paying his own tuition for the first two years and only asks that the township pay such tuition for the two years as provided by the law, given a student who is a graduate of the township third grade high school?"

Respecting your first question, section 7740 of the General Code provides in substance that two examinations shall be held only, one on the third Saturday of April and one on the third Saturday of May, to be given by the county school examiners to pupils of township and special districts, as follows:

> "Each board of county school examiners shall hold examinations of pupils of township and special districts, and of village districts in the subjects of orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, English grammer and composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil government and physiology. Two such examinations must be held annually, on the third Saturday of April, and one on the third Saturday of May, at such place or places as such board designates."

Section 7741 of the General Code provides in substance that the questions for such examination shall be uniform throughout the state and shall be prepared under the direction of the state commissioner of common schools.

Section 7742 provides in substance for the holding of a township commencement not later than the month of June, at some convenient place in the township.

Section 7743 specifies who shall take part in such commencement as follows:

> "At such commencement each successful applicant residing in the township school district or any special or joint subdistrict whose school house is located within the civil township of which the township district forms a part, shall be required to deliver an oration or declamation, or read an essay. Thereupon such board of education must issue a certificate to each successful applicant, stating that such applicant took part in the commencement."

Section 7744 of the General Code provides for the holding of a county commencement, as follows:

> "The board of county school examiners shall provide for the holding of a county commencement not later than August fifteenth, at such place as it determines. At this commencement an annual address must be delivered, at the conclusion of which a diploma shall be presented to each successful applicant who has complied with the provisions hereof. Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

Section 7747 provides that the tuition of pupils holding such diplomas shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, as follows:

> "The tuition of pupils holding diplomas and residing in township or special districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month; but a board of education maintaining a high school shall not charge more tuition than it charges for other non-resident pupils."

Calling attention to the provisions of section 7744 and 7747 of the General Code, supra, it is to be noted that said section 7744, supra, specifically provides that the diploma which is granted to such applicant who has successfully passed the examination provided by section 7740 of the General Code, shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state. However, before such diploma can be granted to an applicant, who has successfully passed such examination, such applicant is compelled to comply with the provisions of 7743, supra, and also with the provisions of section 7744, supra; and section 7747 further provides that the board of education of the school district in which such successful applicant has legal school residence cannot legally pay the tuition of such applicant unless such applicant is the holder of a diploma as provided for by section 7744. Therefore, coming to answer your first question directly, it is my opinion that a township board of education is not legally liable for the tuition of a student passing the Boxwell examination and receiving her grades, unless she has further complied with the provisions of sections 7743 and 7744 and thereby acquired a diploma which entitles such student to have his or her tuition paid by the board of education of the township or special district in which she has legal school residence.

Answering you second question, section 7748 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when a levy of twelve mills permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. * * *"

In answering your second question it is necessary to construe sections 7747 and 7748, supra, together. Analyzing said section 7747, it is found that the provisions thereof apply only to pupils holding diplomas who reside in township or special districts in which no high school is maintained, and that the tuition of such pupils shall be paid by the board of education of such school district in which they have legal school residence. As hereinbefore pointed out in this opinion, said diplomas entitle such pupils to enter any high school in the state, and section 7748, supra, places a limitation on this right by providing that if a board of education maintains a third grade high school as defined by law, then such board of education shall pay the tuition of the graduates from such school residing in the district, at a first grade high school for two years or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year, and further provides that if a board maintains a second grade high school, then such board shall pay the tuition of such graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year. By reason of the foregoing provisions, it seems to follow that only a board of education of a township or special school district not maintaining a high school, has the authority to pay the tuition of Boxwell-Patterson graduates, who attend some high school in a school district other than the one in which they have legal school residence. If in the event such township or special school district maintains a high school, then such township or special school district comes within the provision of section 7748 of the General Code, supra, and the board of education of such district is limited to paying the tuition of its graduates from such school residing in such district, at any first grade high school for two years or at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year, if the high school it maintains is a third grade high school, as in the case which you state in your request.

Apparently, it seems to be the manifest intention of the legislature that all the pupils of the state should receive their school education as far as possible, in the respective school district wherein they have legal school residence, probably so as to minimize, as far as possible, the paying of tuition on the part of the respective boards of education of the state, and it apparently seems to be the further intention of the legislature to require each board of education to educate the pupils having legal school residence, within its respective district to the full extent of the course of study maintained and not to throw the burden of educating such pupils on to boards of education of districts other than those wherein such pupils have legal school residence, until they have completed the full course provided and maintained by the board of education of their respective school districts. Therefore, in direct answer to your second question, I am of the opinion that a township board of education maintaining a third grade high school is not legally liable for the payment of the tuition of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate holding a diploma as such for a period of two years at a first grade high school, and who is not a graduate from the third grade high school maintained by the township school district wherein such pupil resides. To have made the board of education liable for such pupil's tuition, it was necessary for such pupil to complete the two-year course of such pupil's own high school and to have become a graduate of such high school, whereupon the board of education of such pupil's school district would have been liable for such pupil's tuition in attending a first grade high school for two years, or at a first grade high school for one year and a second grade high school for one year.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REGULATION OF DISCIPLINE IN COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES—SUCH MATTERS MAY BE REGULATED BY FACULTY—POWER MAY BE DELEGATED TO PRESIDENT.

The faculty of a college or university may regulate matters of discipline, and other matters not so regulated by the board of trustees, as they deem best. The faculty acting as a whole may enforce such regulations, or it may by proper action transfer the power of enforcing such regulation to the president, and may also designate an assistant to the president of the college in the enforcing of such rules, to act in conjunction with the president or in his place when he is absent from the college or university.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1914.

HON. S. P. AXLINE, Ada, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 8, 1914, you requested an opinion as follows:

> "Would it be inconsistent with the duties of your office to give your construction of section 9925 of the General Code of Ohio? In matters of discipline and other matters not regulated by the board of trustees, can the president act alone and can any member of the faculty less than the whole be chosen by him or by the faculty to act with him, or in his absence, on matters pertaining to the general government and discipline in and about the college?"

Relying thereto I desire to say that in the case of Koblits vs. Western Reserve University, 81 C. C. R., p. 144, the court in the 5th syllabus thereof holds as follows:

> "The faculty of a university, under the custom of the land, which has been uniform for so long a time that it has become law, are justified in disciplining students in the institution, and the student who enters such institution agrees to conform to that rule of law and to be tried for his misdemeanors by the rule that has been applied by such institutions for so long a time that it has become a rule of law."

At page 155 of the opinion the court says:

> "It has been the custom of all school authorities for so long a time that it has become a rule of law, to commit the discipline of the school very largely, if not wholly, to the teachers—and this custom having become law, being recognized as the usual mode of proceeding both by the school authorities and by the state, we have no hesitation in saying that if the plaintiff had a contract such as he says he has, that then he submitted himself in that contract, to be disciplined by the professors of the school."

The reason for this rule is very clearly stated by the court at page 156 of the opinion, as follows:

> "The trustees of such institutions live in remote parts of the country; they are generally men of business affairs who cannot be summoned at any moment to the seat of learning, and who have not the experience in teaching that the professors have—who do not know what is required to keep proper discipline in such institutions as well as the professors do, and are not as well adapted to carry out the purposes and designs of the institution in regard to governmental affairs as are the professors themselves. Such regulations would lead to long delays and would leave a rebellious student in the institution to corrupt others, without any speedy remedy—and is altogether impracticable in a large number of cases. The trustees of such institutions are not accustomed to meet more than once or twice a year at the seat of learning; then, being men of pressing business of their own, they are not capable of remaining there to go through a long and tedious trial, an examination of witnesses and a full hearing.
> "So by common censent and common usage, such matters have been left largely, if not entirely, to the faculty, and their action in such matters is binding upon the institution they represent—and this is not unusual at all."

In this connection the legislature has enacted section 9925 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The president and professors shall constitute the faculty of any incorporated literary college or university, may enforce the rules and regulations enacted by its trustees for the government and discipline of the students, and suspend and expel offenders, as they deem necessary."

Said section 9925 specifically provides that the faculty of any incorporated literary college or university shall consist of the president and professors, and provides secondly that they may enforce the rules and regulations enacted by its trustees for the government and discipline of the pupils to the extent that they may even suspend or expel offenders, if, in their judgment, the same is necessary. It is to be noted that said section places no limitation upon such faculty as to the manner or method whereby they may enforce such rules and regulations for the government and discipline of the students, there being no limitation in that regard. It follows that such faculty may enforce such rules and regulations in such manner as they may deem best. The faculty acting as a whole may enforce such regulations or it may by proper action transfer the power of enforcement of such regulations to the president, and may also designate an assistant to the president of the college in the enforcement of such rules, to act in conjunction with such president as well as to act in his place or stead, when absent for any cause from the college or university.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CITY WATERWORKS PLANT—BOND ISSUE—BONDS—PROCEDURE.

In the enlargement and extension of a city waterworks plant involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars, requiring the approval of council and advertising for bonds as provided in section 4328, General Code, it is necessary that a certificate be filed and that the money to meet the obligation of the contract for construction is in the treasury, and not otherwise appropriated.

In making such certificate section 3810, General Code, is controlling, and before the bonds can be included in the certificate, they must not only be authorized as required by law, but they must be sold and in process of delivery.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 7, 1914.

HON. AMOS C. RUFF, City Solicitor, Canal Dover, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 14, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "Can a city make a legal contract for the extension and enlargement of its waterworks prior to the selling of its bonds for such enlargement?"

Section 3806, General Code, reads:

> "No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

Assuming that all the legislation has been passed necessarily preceding a sale of the bonds, and accepting the language of Summers, J., "that sections 45 and 45a do not apply to improvements for which the city has authorized bonds to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost and expense," (Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., 198), the conclusion would be easy, but the syllabus of that case reads:

> "do not apply to contracts for street improvements when bonds have been authorized by the municipality to be issued to pay the entire estimated cost of the improvement."

And section 3810 reads:

> "Money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds or notes sold and in process of delivery, shall for the purpose of the certificate that money for the specific purpose is in the treasury, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund."

It cannot be overlooked that the words—"or notes sold and in process of delivery" are found in the law but omitted in the syllabus and opinion.

Section 45a, mentioned by Summers, J., is now section 3810, G. C., and the language of the syllabus and of Judge Summers, both omit the meat of 45a, which is that the bonds must not only be authorized but sold and in process of delivery. Considering sections 3806 and 3810, G. C., together, and giving due weight to the language copied from Emmert vs. Elyria, the conclusion appears inevitable that section 3806 calls for a certificate, 3810 authorizes money arising from proceeds of bonds sold and in process of delivery be considered in the treasury for the purpose of certification, but do not justify our resting upon the language used in Emmert vs. Elyria.

Section 2702(as was held in Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S., 288,

> "applied to so much of the cost of a street improvement as was to be paid by the city out of a levy and that it did not apply to so much as was to be paid by special assessment, for the reason that the payment that was to be made by the city was included in the general levy which was subject to limitation."

Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., 197.

The language used in Comstock vs. Nelsonville had led many to the belief that the Burns law (so called) applied where payment was to be made from taxes levied and collected, and not where other means of payment were provided by law. This conclusion seems to be justified by the language of Burket, J., 61 O. S., but it cannot be harmonized with all the language there used nor with the decisions in Village vs. Dieckmeier, 79 O. S. 323, nor Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S., 194, where it cites with approval 58 O. S., 558, 60 O. S., 406, 61 O. S., 288 and 65 O. S., 219.

However, another vein presents itself. Section 2 of article XII of the constitution, as amended reads:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Section 3961 reads:

> "Subject to the provisions of this title, the director of public service may make contracts for the building of machinery, waterworks building, reservoirs and the enlargement and repair thereof, the manufacture and laying down of pipe, the furnishing and supplying with connections all necessary fire hydrants for fire department purposes, keeping them in repair, and for all other purposes necessary to the full and efficient management and construction of waterworks."

Title XII as used in section 3961 includes municipal corporations and sections 3497 to 4678, General Code.

The construction of waterworks therefore is within the provisions of 3906 and 3910, General Code, and independent of the constitutional amendment above quoted, there must be a certificate filed as required by section 3806, subject to the provisions of 3810, General Code, and notwithstanding Emmert vs. Elyria, in which the full text of section 3810, then 45a, seems to have been overlooked or disregarded.

Does the amendment operate as a repeal of the Burns law? That the amendment was intended to meet some of the matters calling for an enactment of the Burns law, for instance, the providing of funds to meet the obligations of a contract about to be made, cannot be doubted, but that it is so inconsistent therewith that both may not stand and have operaton at the same time, will hardly be claimed.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that in the event the enlargement and extension of your waterworks involving more than $500.00, and thus requiring the approval of council and advertising for bids (section 4328, G. C.), it is necessary that a certificate be filed; that the money to meet the obligation of the contract for construction is in the treasury, and not otherwise appropriated; that in making such certificate section 3810 is controlling and that before bonds can be included in the certificate, they must not only be "authorized as required by law" but "sold and in process of delivery." Of course, this appears to be out of harmony with Emmert vs. Elyria, but when compelled to choose between the language used in a court decision and that found in a legislative enactment, I feel implied to adopt the latter.

In regard to the question submitted by you under date of February 7th, opinion will follow later.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—LAND OWNER—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—ROADS AND HIGHWAYS.

In determining whether a petition for a road improvement, under sections 6926 to 6956, General Code, as these sections existed before they were declared to be repealed by implication, by the supereme court in the case of Goff et al. vs. Gates, 87 O. S., 142, was signed by the required majority of land owners, the county commissioners could not take into account resident owners of land within one mile of the termini of the improvement, nor assess such owners for the cost of such improvement, nor any part thereof. In construing the provisions of these statutes relating to the construction of roads "along the county line between two or more counties," effect should be given to the dictum of the supreme court in the above mentioned case rather than the holding of the circuit court in the same case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 1, 1914.

HON. E. R. WILLIAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 16th, which is in part as follows:

> "The supreme court of this state in the case of Goff et al. vs. Commissioners, and Commissioners vs. Granger, 87 Ohio State Report, page 142, held that the act of the general assembly, passed May 10, 1910, entitled: 'An act to provide for the laying out, construction, repair, or improvement of any public road or any part thereof, and for the straightening, widening, or altering, and draining of the same by the county commissioners, 'sections

6956-1 to 6956-15, General Code, completely revises the whole subject-matter covered by sections 6926 to 6956, General Code, inclusive, and is evidently intended as a substitute for these sections, and, therefore, repeals the same by implication.'

"The last general assembly passed an act, senate bill No. 149, Ohio Laws, vol. 103, page 132, entitled: 'An act to validate all petitions filed or granted and all proceedings had or contemplated under such petitions, all contracts made or to be made, bonds issued or to be issued, taxes and assessments levied or to be levied under the provisions of sections 6926 to 6956, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio.'

"* * * All roads improved in this county under the provisions of sections 6926 to 6956, all resident owners owning lands lying and being within one mile on either side, end or terminus of said improvement have been counted, taxed and assessed.

"We desire your opinion whether or not senate bill No. 149, found in Ohio Laws, vol. 103, page 132, is constitutional, and if so, whether or not the county commissioners may count resident landowners owning lands lying and being within one mile from the termini of the improvement. * * * Section 6930, General Code, as re-enacted Ohio Laws, vol. 103, page 199, provides in part as follows:

"'When the road proposed to be improved is along the county line between two or more counties, a copy of the petition certified to by the commissioners of the county in which the original is on file, shall be filed with the commissioners of each of the several counties along the line of the proposed road.'

"The circuit court in the case of Gates et al. vs. Granger (the substance of which is found in the 87 O. S., page 152), held that the statute when it speaks of a road improvement along the county line, does not necessarily mean that it shall lie upon the county line.

"Judge Donahue, commenting upon this decision of the circuit court, on page 153 of the opinion, says:

"'It is contended upon the part of the defendant in error, and the circuit court so found, that under the provisions of either section 6930, or section 6956-3, General Code, when an improvement is within this limit of one mile from another county line, the petition must be filed with the commissioners of each of the several counties. That is to say, where it is proposed to assess land lying within a mile of the improvement the whole burden shall not fall upon those residing in the county in which the improvement is to be made, but shall be borne by all the land lying within the mile limit, even though part of the land should be in an adjacent county. With the equity of this claim we have no quarrel. But there is a serious doubt as to that being the true construction of this legislation.'

"Should the commissioners follow the opinion of the circuit court, or the serious doubts of the supreme court?

"I wish to say that section 6930 as re-enacted is identical with the old section."

You have advised that in view of the rule of this department against passing upon the constitutionality of acts of the general assembly, an answer to your first question is not desired.

Your second question calls for a construction of section 6926, General Code, as it existed prior to the decisions of the case of Goff vs. Gates et al., 87 O. S., particularly with reference to whether the county commissioners had the right to count resident owners of land within one mile of the termini of a road improvement.

Said section provided:

"When a majority of the resident owners of real estate situated within one mile of a public road, presents a petition to the board of county commissioners asking for the grading and improving of such road, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of the road described in such petition. If, in their opinion, the public utility requires such road to be graded and improved, they shall determine whether the improvement shall be partly or wholly constructed of stone, gravel or brick, any or all, and what part or parts of such road improvement shall be of stone, gravel or brick, and enter their decision on their journal."

This statute was under consideration in the case of Kasson vs. Commissioners (15 C. C. n. s., 460), and it was there held:

"Under the one mile road assessment act the taxing district is confined to one mile of the improvement within a line drawn at right angles with the termini thereof."

A similar construction was given to a similar statute by our supreme court in the case of Lear vs. Halstead, 41 O. S., 566.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the county commissioners had no right, under said section 6926, to count owners of land lying within one mile of the termini of the improvement, nor to assess such owners therefor.

In answer to your third question I advise that the county commissioners follow the doubts of the supreme court rather than the opinion of the circuit court. While the statement quoted from the opinion by Judge Donahue is merely obiter, yet I believe it states the correct meaning of these statutes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMBER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY ELIGIBLE TO APPOINTMENT TO OFFICE OF COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS.

The position of county superintendent of schools is not an office, and consequently a member of the general assembly which created this position of county superintendent of schools would be eligible to appointment as county superintendent of schools during the term for which he was elected or within one year thereafter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 9, 1914.

HON. GEORGE M. HOAGLIN, Member of House of Representatives, Payne, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of April 6, 1914, is received, in which you inquire:

"My question was, whether or not a man who was a member of the general assembly when the school legislation was enacted would be eligible to the position of county school superintendent?

"Should I decide to become an applicant for the position in this county, I would resign as member of the general assembly, before entering upon the duties of the new position."

The position of county superintendent of schools was created at the recent special session of the general assembly.

Article II, section 19 of the constitution of Ohio, provides.

> "No senator or representative shall, during the term for which he shall have been elected, or for one year thereafter, be appointed to any civil office under this state, which shall be created or the emoluments of which shall have been increased, during the term for which he shall have been elected."

The inhibition contained in this section is against the appointment to a civil office.

A civil office is defined at page 157 of volume 7 of cyc.:

> "Civil office. A grant and possession of the soverign power, and the exercise of such power within the limts prescribed by the law which creates the office constitutes the discharge of the duties of the office."

A civil office is one the occupant of which exercises a part of the sovereignty of the state.

The duties of the county superintendent of schools were prescribed at the recent special session of the legislature, and the statutes hereinafter quoted are as they were amended at this special session.

Section 4744, General Code, provides:

> "The county board of education at a regular meeting held not later than July 20th, shall appoint a county superintendent for a term not longer than three years commencing on the first day of August. Such county superintendent shall have the educational qualifications mentioned in section 4744-4. He shall be in all respects the executive officer of the county board of education, and shall attend all meetings with the privilege of discussion but not of voting."

Section 4744-1, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education, to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help. The half paid by the county school district shall be prorated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

Section 4744-4, General Code, referred to, prescribes certain educational qualifications.

By virtue of these sections the county superintendent is appointed by the county board of education and is to be the executive officer of such board. In such capacity the county superintendent acts for the board and would be an employe of the board, and not an officer exercising a part of the sovereignty of the state in his own right.

Other duties are prescribed for the county superintendent.

Section 4739, General Code, provides:

"Each supervision district shall be under the direction of a district superintendent. Such district superintendent shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district, except that where such supervision district contains three or less rural or village school districts the boards of educations of such school districts in joint session shall elect such superintendent. The district superintendent shall be employed upon the nomination of the county superintendent but the board electing such district superintendent may by majority vote elect a district superintendent not so nominated."

Section 7706-3, General Code, provides:

"The county superintendent shall hold monthly meetings with the district superintendents and advise with them on matters of school efficiency. He shall visit and inspect the schools under his supervision as often as possible and with the advice of the district superintendent shall outline a schedule of school visitation for the teachers of the county school district."

Section 7706-4, General Code, provides:

"The county superintendent shall have direct supervision over the training of teachers in any training courses which may be given in any county school district and shall personally teach not less than one hundred nor more than two hundred periods in any one year. It shall be his duty to see that all reports required by law are made out and sent to the county auditor and superintendent of public instruction and make such other reports as the superintendent of public instruction may require. Any county superintendent or district superintendent who becomes connected with or becomes an agent of or financially interested in any book publishing or book selling company or educational journal or magazine, shall become ineligible to hold such office and shall be forthwith removed by the board having control over such county superintendent or district superintendent."

Do these duties make the county superintendent an officer?

In a case not reported in full the supreme court of Ohio says in State ex rel. vs. Vickers, 58 Ohio St., 730:

"Judgment for defendant on the ground that a superintendent of schools is not an officer."

No facts are given in this report.

In Ward vs. Board of Education 11 Cir. Dec., 671, it is held:

"A superintendent of public schools as designated in section 3982, Rev. Stat., relating to election of superintendents, etc., is an employe of the board of education and not an officer within the purview of the constitution prohibiting any change in the salary of an officer during his existing term."

In State ex rel. vs. Jennings, 57 Ohio St., 415, it is held:

"To constitute a public office, against the incumbent of which quo warranto will lie, it is essential that certain independent public duties, a part of the sovereignty of the state, should be appointed to it by law, to be exercised by the incumbent, in virtue of his election or appointment to the office, thus created and defined, and not as a mere employe, subject to the direction and control of someone else."

The duties of the county superintendent in supervising the schools of the county school district, are not different in character from those of the superintendent of schools under the old law. He may cover a larger territory.

The county superintendent of schools does not exercise any part of the sovereignty of the state. He is an employe of the county board of education, engaged in supervising the schools and instructing the teachers. He may nominate district superintendents, but he cannot elect them. Even nomination by him is not required when a majority of the board of education selects some other person.

The position of county superintendent of schools is not an office.

Therefore, the inhibition of section 19 of article two of the constitution of Ohio does not apply to the position of county superintendent of schools.

A member of the general assembly which created this position would be eligible to appointment as county superintendent of schools during the term for which he was elected or within one year thereafter.

I do not here pass upon the right to hold both positions at the same time.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS—DISQUALIFICATION OF MEMBERS OF SUCH BOARD—ENCUMBRANCE ON STOCK.

The fact that members of the board of directors of a bank have not as stockholders the amounts called for on their respective subscriptions, does not create or constitute an encumbrance on stock held by them, nor disqualify them from acting as directors of such bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 22, 1913, you wrote me asking for opinion, saying:

"A certain savings bank company was incorporated in 1901 with an authorized capital of $100,000.00

"At the time of the first examination of this bank in 1909, 50% of the authorized capital was paid in.

"Sometime during the year 1912, the directors of this bank called for payment of the unpaid portion.

"At this time only a small amount remains unpaid, a few of the stockholders having failed to respond to the call for payment.

"What action should this bank take to force payment?

"It seems that two directors of the bank are among those who have not paid in full; one of these directors is holding 7 shares upon which 50% is paid.

"Are these two directors qualified under the requirement of section 9731 that such director shall hold free and unincumbered at least five shares of stock?"

Applicable to the first question made by you on the facts above stated, section 3797, Revised Statutes, in force at the time the savings bank company in question was organized, but since repealed, among other things provided that no such savings bank company should commence business until at least one-half of each subscription to the capital stock of such company had been fully paid up. There was not at that time any special statutory provision as to how or when the amount unpaid on a bank stock subscription should be paid, nor any special provision directing how the payment of any such balance should be enforced. A rule of law, then, as now, applicable to corporations generally is that any balance remaining unpaid on a subscription to the capital stock of a corporation, in the absence of special agreement as to the time of payment, becomes due and payable on call of the board of directors of the corporation, and in the amount thereof called for. This rule is likewise declared by statute (3243 R. S.; 8632,G.C.). Section 3253, Revised Statutes, still in force as sections 8674, 8675 and 8676, General Code, provides as follows:

"If an installment of stock remains unpaid for sixty days, after the time it is required to be paid, whether such stock is held by an assignee, transferee, or the original subscriber, the same may be collected by action, or the directors may sell the stock so unpaid at public auction, for the installment then due thereon, first giving thrity days' public notice of the time and place of sale, in some newspaper in general circulation in the county where the delinquent stockholder resided at the time of making the subscription, or of becoming such assignee or transferee, or of his actual residence at the time of the sale; or, if such stockholder resides out of the state, such publication shall be made in the county where the principal office of the company is located; if any residue of money remain after paying the amount due on stock, the same shall on demand, be paid to the owner; and if the whole of the installment be not paid by the sale, the remainder shall be recoverable by an action against the subscriber, assignee or transferee."

The subscription to the stock of this bank was a contract between the subscriber and the bank company, measured in its obligation by the terms of the agreement and the law applicable thereto just noted. It follows, that unless there was some special agreement between the delinquent stockholders and the bank as to the payment of the balance on their respective stock subscriptions, the same became due on the call made by the directors of the bank, and notice of such action to the stockholders affected by the call. By force of the statute, if such delinquent stockholders do not make payment of the amount called for on their respective subscriptions within sixty days after the time when, by the terms of the call, the same was to be paid, the bank may proceed by several actions against the delinquent stockholders to collect the amount due from them, respectively, on the call; or the directors of the bank may proceed to sell stock of the delinquent stockholders, or of any of them, by proceedings in strict conformity to the provisions of the statute above noted.

Section 9716, General Code, the same being section 2 of the Thomas banking act of 1908, provides that the entire capital stock of bank companies shall be subscribed and at least fifty per cent. of each share paid in before they may be authorized to commence business. This section further provides that the remainder of the capital stock of such companies shall be paid in monthly installments of at least ten per cent. each on the whole of the capital, payable at the end of each succeeding month from the time it is authorized by the superintendent of banks to commence business. Section 9717, General Code, provides:

> "When a stockholder or his assigns fails to pay an installment on his stock, as required by the preceding section to be paid, or for thirty days thereafter, the directors of such company may sell his stock at public sale for not less than the amount due thereon, including costs incurred, to the person who will pay the highest price therefor."

This statute further makes provision for publication of notice of the sale of stock authorized therein, and for sale of same by directors in case no bidder for same can be found. As I see it, however, sections 9716 and 9717, General Code, have no application to the situation of fact presented by your inquiry. The relation arising on subscription to the stock of this bank was primarily one of contract between the subscriber and the bank, and insofar as the obligation of this contract was measured by law, it is the law in force at the time of the contract which applies. This consideration, and the further fact that section 9716 is in its nature prospective only in its operation, excludes this section from application to the situation of fact presented by your inquiry.

N. Ky. & O. R. R. Co. vs. Van Horn, (57 N. Y., 473, 477).

Section 9717, General Code, is remedial in its nature, but by its terms is confined in its operation to stock subscription installments becoming due and payable under the provisions of section 9716. It follows that the remedy of the bank against its delinquent stockholders is that first stated herein.

With respect to your second question, section 9731, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Every director must be the owner and holder of at least five shares of stock in his own name and right, unpledged and unincumbered in any way, and at least three-fourths of the directors must be residents of this state."

I am inclined to the opinion that the mere fact that these directors in question, have not, as stockholders, paid the amounts called for on their respective subscriptions, does not create nor constitute an incumbrance on the stock held by them respectively, nor disqualify them from acting as directors of the bank.

An incumbrance on a thing carries with it the idea of an outstanding lien, charge or interest in the thing itself, to the diminution of the value of the thing in the hands of the person in whose name it is held. The relation existing between the bank, as a corporation, and a delinquent stockholder is, after call has been made for the unpaid balance of his stock subscription, simply that of creditor and debtor, with the right in the corporation to proceed by action at law against the stockholder to collect the amount called for. The fact that an additional remedy is given by statute to the corporation to collect the debt by sale of the stock does not alter the legal relations between the parties, nor cast any lien or charge on the stock before sale.

In the case of Dearborn vs. Washington Savings Bank (18 Wash., 8), it was held:

> "Gen. Stat., sec. 1507 (Bal. Code, sec. 4262), providing for the forfeiture and sale of corporate stock for default in payment of assessments, does not give a corporation a lien on its capital stock for debts due from its stockholders."

In this case the court in its opinion, speaking of the claim therein made that the corporation had a lien upon stock issued to a stockholder, says:

> "If there was such a lien upon the stock in question, it must have been created by some express legislative enactment, for it is well settled, at common law, that corporations have no lien upon their capital stock for the debts of their stockholders. 1 Morawetz, Private Corporations (2nd ed.), section 122; Boone, Corporations, sec. 124.
> "And there is no statute in this state providing for such liens. It is true that provision is made by our statute for forfeiture and sale of stock for default in payment of assessments under certain circumstances, but, in our judgment, it does not follow from the fact that stock may be sold for such purposes that the corporation has a lien thereon for unpaid assessments."

Again, aside from the question whether the statutory provision authorizing the bank corporation to sell the stock of a delinquent stockholder creates a lien upon such stock in favor of the corporation, I am inclined to the view that the provisions of section 9731, requiring every director to be the owner and holder thereof of at least five shares of stock in his own name and right, unpledged and unincumbered in any way, is limited in its meaning as to incumbrances to such as are outstanding in third persons, and that the purpose of the statute was not to disqualify directors by reason of the fact that their stock might be incumbered by a lien existing in favor of the corporation itself. In this view, the general words of the statute should be limited in their meaning, to the objects to which it is apparent the legislature intended to apply them.

Board of Education vs. Board of Education (46 O. S., 595-599).

Of course, if the bank should sell the stock of a delinquent stockholder in the manner provided by statute, and thus deprive him of the same, he would thereby become disqualified to act as director, since possession of stock is essential to his qualification as a director.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE—COMPENSATION TO SECRETARY—TEACHER ATTENDING SUCH INSTITUTE MAY ACT AS SECRETARY.

A teacher attending a county institute may receive compensation for acting as secretary, as provided for by section 7866 of the General Code and for making the report as required by section 7865. Such teacher is also entitled to the compensation provided for in section 7870 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 10, 1914.

HON. T. J. ROSS, Williamson Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 26, 1913, you submitted a request for an opinion as follows:

> "Whether or not a teacher attending the county institute and receiving compensation as secretary and for making the report provided for in sections 7865 and 7866, G. C., is also entitled to compensation under section 7870, G. C., the county institute having been held during vacation."

Chapter 8 of title 5 of the General Code of Ohio provides for teachers' institutes and sections 7859 to 7870, inclusive, of the General Code, provide for the holding of county teachers' institutes. Section 7859 of the General Code provides in substance for the organization of county teachers' institutes. Section 7860 of the General Code, provides for the election of an executive committee, fixing their terms of office, and also provides for the election of a president and secretary of the institute, who shall be ex-officio members of such executive committee and act as chairman and secretary thereof.

Sections 7861 and 7862 provide respectively, when such election shall be held and for the filling of any vacancy in such offices, caused by death, resignation, removal from the county, or other causes.

Section 7870 of the General Code, provides for the payment of teachers while attending county institutes, as follows:

> "The board of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendents presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the president and secretary of such institute. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance, as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four nor more than six days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

In construing said section 7870, General Code, supra, as said section provided prior to its last amendment, the supreme court of Ohio in the case of Beverstock, a taxpayer vs. Board of Education, et al., 75 O. S., p. 144, held as follows:

"Where a board of education has employed teachers for the public schools of the district for the school year next ensuing thereafter, and such teachers, during vacation and after their employment, attend the county institute, during the week it is held in the same county, said board is authorized by the provisions of section 4091, Revised Statutes, to pay them for the institute week as an addition to their first month's salary as fixed by the terms of their employment, and at the same rate, on presentation of the certificates prescribed by said section."

The only change made in the last quoted section by the last amendment was to the effect that if the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, then such teachers or superintendents shall be paid $2.00 per day for actual daily attendance, as certified by the president and secretary of such institute, for not less than four nor more than six days of actual attendance, instead of paying them for the institute week as an addition to their first month's salary, as fixed by the terms of their employment, and at the same rate.

At this point it is to be noted that said section 7870 specifically and mandatorily requires that the boards of education of all school districts are required to pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts, their regular salary for the week they attend the institute, upon their presenting certificates of full, regular and daily attendance, signed as required by law. Or, if the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, then said section specifically and mandatorily requires that the board of education shall pay such teachers and superintedents $2.00 per day for actual daily attendance, as certified in accordance with the provisions of said section, such payment not to be less than four nor more than six days of actual attendance.

By reason of the provisions of said section, the funds for the payment of teachers and superintendents who attend such county institutes are expended by the respective boards of education of the state to the respective teachers under their employment, or who come into their employment within three months after the holding of such institutes, and all of such payments are made out of the funds of such respective boards of education of the state.

The creation of the funds for the maintenance of county institutes is provided by sections 2457 and 7820 of the General Code. Section 2457 of the General Code provides for the application of funds which result from bequests which are made for educational purposes, as follows:

"The commissioners of a county may receive bequests, donations, and gifts of real and personal property and money to promote and advance the cause of education in such county. All property and money so received by the commissioners or which has been bequeathed and bestowed upon such commissioners and remains undisposed of, at their discretion, may be paid to any incorporated institution of learning in the county, or a part thereof may be used each year to defray the expense of the teachers' institute, upon such terms and conditions as the commissioners in their discretion prescribe, having reference to the terms of the trust and safety of the fund and its proper application."

Section 7820, General Code, provides that all fees from applicants for county teachers' certificates, shall be applied to the support of the county teachers' institutes, as follows:

"The clerk of the board of county school examiners must promptly collect all fees from applicants at each examination and pay them into the county treasury quarterly. He shall file with the county auditor a written statement of the amount, and the number of applicants, male and female, examined during the quarter. All money thus received, must be set apart by the auditor for the support of county teachers' institutes, to be applied as provided for in chapter eight of this title."

Section 7863, General Code, governing county teachers' institutes, specifies the duty of the respective executive committees of such county institutes, as follows:

"Such executive committee shall manage the affairs of the institute. The committee must enter into a bond, payable to the state, with sufficient surety, to be approved by the county auditor, in double the amount of the institute fund in the county treasury, for the benefit of the institute fund of the county, and conditioned that the committee shall account faithfully for the money which comes into its possession, and make the report to the commissioner of common schools required in section seventy-eight hundred and sixty-five."

Section 7865 specifies the duties of the secretary of such executive committee, as follows:

"Within five days after the adjournment of the institute, its secretary shall report to the state commissioner of common schools the number of teachers in attendance, the names of instructors and lecturers attending, the amount of money received and disbursed by the committee and such other information relating to the institute as the commissioner requires."

Section 7866, General Code, provides for his compensation for the performance of such duties, as follows:

"The secretary may be allowed compensation not to exceed ten dollars for making such report and for his services as secretary, to be paid out of the institute fund of the county. No other compensation shall be allowed any officer or member of the executive committee. On failure to make such report, the secretary shall forfeit and pay to the state the sum of fifty dollars."

The funds from which such secretary is paid is not under or within the control of the board of education, but, as specifically provided by the foregoing quoted sections of the General Code, such funds are entirely under the control of the executive committee of the county teachers' institute, to be paid out in accordance with the provisions contained in said chapter 8, title 5, of the General Code.

The duties of the secretary of the teachers' institute, and for which he may be paid the sum of $10.00, are in addition to those specified in section 7870, which merely require him to attend such institute as a member and by virtue of his being a teacher in the schools of the county at the time the institute is held, or, by reason of his becoming so employed as such teacher within three months after the holding of such institute. Section 7866 clearly provides that such secretary may be allowed $10.00 for his services as secretary and for making a report to the state superintendent of public instruction, who is the successor of the state school commissioner, such compensation to be paid out of the institute fund of the county. Inasmuch as the duties of said secretary are in addition to those of a mere member of a county institute, and furthermore, inasmuch as the compensation of such secretary is paid out of the fund of the county institute, and not out of the funds of the respective boards of education, by which he is or may be employed as a teacher, I am of the opinion, answering your question directly, that as such secretary he is entitled to the compensation provided for by section 7866 for making the report as required by section 7865, and is also entitled to the compensation provided for in section 7870 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Property situated in the city of Defiance, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 7, 1914.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary, Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 23rd, wherein you state:

> "I herewith transmit deed and abstract for Defiance armory site described as follows:
> "'Situate in the city of Defiance, county of Defiance, and state of Ohio, and known as lot number two (2) and twenty (20) feet off of the northerly side of lot number three (3), all in block number nine (9) in Bouton and others addition to the city of Defiance, Ohio. The whole of said property hereby conveyed being eighty-six (86) feet fronting in Clinton street in said city.'
> "An opinion is requested as to title acquired by state under said deed and as shown by said abstract."

I have carefully examined the abstract and, it is my opinion that the city of Defiance, as disclosesd thereby, has a good and indefeasible estate in fee simple in and to said real estate, free and clear from liens and incumbrances of any kind whatsoever.

There are, however, some objectionable features in the legislation of the council of the city of Defiance, authorizing the donation of this land to the state of Ohio, and in the deed conveying the same to the state, to which I wish to direct your attention.

Ordinance No. 277 of the city of Defiance, passed December 19, 1911, authorizes the proper officials of said city to make and execute a deed to the state of Ohio for lot No. 2 in block No. 9 in Bouton and others addition to the city of Defiance. Section 2 of the ordinance contains a condition that if an armory building is not erected on said lot within three years from the passage of the ordinance, the property shall revert to the city of Defiance. Another ordinance, passed by the council of said city on February 10, 1914, provides for the donation to the state of Ohio, for armory purposes, of 20 feet off of the northerly side of lot No. 3 in addition to lot No. 2, and authorizes the proper officials of said city to make and execute to the state of Ohio a deed therefor. This ordinance contains a condition that if an armory is not erected within two years from the passage of the ordinance, the property shall revert to the city of Defiance. Second ordinance does not repeal the first one and it is very doubtful whether the condition of the first ordinance requiring the construction of an armory on lot No. 2 within two years from the date of the passage of the ordinance (Dec. 19, 1911) is extinguished by the second ordinance. The second ordinance seems only to supplement the first by authorizing the donation of an additional piece of land, without changing the conditions of the first ordinance. Another objection to both ordinances is that they authorize the "proper officials" of the city of Defiance to execute the deeds. As the statutes do not make it the duty of any particular officer to sign conveyances on behalf of the city, the officers whom council desires to execute the deed on behalf of the city should be expressly named in the ordinance.

To avoid confusion and doubt, and to secure a good title for the state, I recommend that new legislation be enacted, both of these ordinances be repealed and another deed executed pursuant to the new legislation. I advise that you accept nothing less than an unqualified fee simple title.

The present deed is so conditioned that were the erection of an armory to be commenced and not completed within two years from February 10, 1914, the property would revert to the state. The armory board should not restrict itself in this manner.

For the foregoing reasons, I advise you not to accept said deed. The abstract and deed are herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIQUOR LICENSE COMMISSION—SALOONS—NUMBER OF LIQUOR LICENSES THAT MAY BE GRANTED IN A MUNICIPALITY.

If the liquor licensing board finds that the census of the village filed with them is an official census under the statute, that is, under the terms of section 44 of the licensing act, such official census governs in the determination of the maximum number of licenses that shall be granted in that municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 10, 1914.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of January 24th, wherein you state:

> "The village of Sharonville, Hamilton county, Ohio, by the latest federal census had a population of 750. On November 18, 1913, the village council by its ordinance, No. 20, authorized the taking of a census which resulted in the population of the village being determined at 1,022, the report of the enumeration having been accepted and authenticated by the village council, which filed its certified copy of the legislation and listed names with the Hamilton county liquor licensing board, requesting it under the provisions of section 44 of the license act to be governed in determining the population of Sharonville by their census so taken as an official census. To this objection has been made by certain citizens of Sharonville, who claim that the population of 1,022, as found by the enumerators over their oath, was grossly inaccurate in that it is largely in excess of the true population.

"We desire, therefore, on behalf of the Hamilton county liquor licensing board, to ask your opinion in writing whether or not said board shall be governed by the census regularly returned by the village authorities of Sharonville, or whether said board has a right to go behind such official returns and enter into an inquiry as to the correctness of said official census."

Section 44 of the Greenlund liquor license act provides:

"In determining the maximum number of licenses which shall be granted in any municipal corporation or township of the state, the license commissioners shall be governed in determining the population of said political subdivision by any official census which shall have been taken therein within the year next preceding that for which licenses shall be granted. * * *"

Webster says a census is "an official registration of the number of the people."

The Century dictionary defines census as "an official enumeration of the inhabitants of a state or country with the details of sex, age, etc."

The Standard dictionary defines census "an official numbering of the people of a country or district."

"Official" is defined by Funk & Wagnall's Standard dictionary "derived from the proper office or officer or from the proper authority, as an official report."

The word "govern" is defined "to rule over according to the forms or usages of law, controlled by authority; to control physically or morally, direct influence."

The Standard dictionary defines "govern" "to exercise a directing power over, control or guide; to rule or regulate by right of authority."

Under section 44 supra, the license commissioners shall be guided and controlled by any official census which shall have been taken within the next preceding license year. A board such as the licensing board has only such powers and jurisdiction as are expressly conferred upon it by law, or which are necessarily implied from the powers granted. They have jurisdiction to determine whether the census presented is in reality an official census.

A municipality is authorized by statute (section 3625, General Code) to take and authenticate a census, and it is necessary that in the taking of such census they comply with all statutory requirements. When it appears that all the statutory requirements necessary to the taking of an official census have been complied with, the license board is authorized to accept such census, and this official census governs and controls them in the determination of the maximum number of licenses which will be granted in that subdivision for the tax year.

I cannot bring myself to believe that the board possesses any jurisdiction to go behind the certificate of the municipality of the official census and enter into an inquiry as to whether the enumeration was correct or not. You state that certain citizens of Sharonville claim that the population of 1,022 was grossly inaccurate and largely in excess of the true population. To my mind it was the duty of persons concerned to directly attack the making of the census in the event that they believed it was fraudulent and incorrect in its making. I am not unmindful of the fact that fraud vitiates anything into which it enters, and that if the enumeration complained of was fraudulent there should be a forum in which to right the wrong; but I find no authority, either express or implied, for the license commissioners, in what must be a collateral matter, to engage in an inquiry concerning the making of the enumeration. The work of the enumerators is part of the machinery of the taking of the census, and yet the enumeration rolls are mere data from which the official census is determined.

After the authentication of the enumeration by the proper authorities, and the promulgation of the census, and the filing of such official census with the license board, I do not think there is any power in the said board to enter upon an investigation of any charges of fraud in the making of the enumeration. When the licensing board sees that the statutory requirements necessary are present and finds that the list authenticated is the official census, it is my opinion that their powers in the matter are exhausted.

Under the license law, in the event there is no official census taken in the preceding year, the board shall be governed by the latest estimates of the United States census bureau. I do not think it will be contended that if the board had received the latest estimate of the United States census bureau and announced that the maximum amount of licenses to be granted would be the number allowed by the population as shown by the estimate of the United States bureau, and some person would come in with an offer to prove that the United States census enumerator who made up the census rolls in the first instance had padded same, and would ask the board to institute an inquiry as to whether or not said enumeration was fraudulent, that such person would have any standing before the board. If there was fraud in the taking of the census complained of, there certainly should be a forum in which that might be shown, but it is utterly beyond the jurisdiction of this board to enter into an inquiry of an official census after it has been authoritatively authenticated by the political subdivision authorized by statute to take the census.

In the case of State ex rel. Wirt vs. Cass County Court, 119 S. W. Reporter, 1010, a writ of mandamus against the county court of Cass county was sought requiring it to issue to relator a license to keep a dramshop in Harrisonville, which the court had refused to grant. It was conceded by the pleadings that the relator was a proper party to receive a license, and that every requirement had been met as a prerequisite to a license, and that a license should be issued to him unless the county court was prevented from so doing by an election held in Cass county just prior to relator's application, which resulted in the adoption of what is commonly known as the "local option law" against the sale of intoxicating liquors at any place within the limits of the county. The validity of that election was the matter for decision. The point made against the election related solely to the fact that the city of Pleasant Hill, in Cass county, was included in the order of election. The local option statute of Missouri required that all cities of 2,500 or more inhabitants in any county shall vote separately, and that they shall not be included in a vote by the remainder of the county. Relator claimed that the city was of more than 2,500 inhabitants when the election was ordered and held. It appeared that a proper petition, on its face, had been presented to the county court, asking for the election, that the petition was properly signed and stated therein that there was no town in the county of 2,500 or more inhabitants. The day the petition was presented the court ordered an election in the entire county, and recited in the order that there was no town or city in the county with 2,500 or more inhabitants. On the next day after said order the city council of Pleasant Hill ordered a census to be taken of the inhabitants within its limits. The census was taken and showed the city to contain 2,569 inhabitants, and a copy of the census was filed with the county clerk. Afterwards certain citizens filed a motion in the county court asking it to set aside this order for election and calling the court's attention to the census taken of Pleasant Hill. This motion was overruled and subsequently an election was held in the entire county on the day set by the order of the county court, which resulted in the sale of intoxicating liquors. The court held the election was void for having included Pleasant Hill, whose census showed that it had more than 2,500 inhabitants, and on page 1012 uses the following language:

"Notwithstanding the return of respondents shows the proceedings of the county court and of the city of Pleasant Hill as herein indicated, yet it is insisted that they are not concluded by the census, or the legal results which ordinarily follow it, for the reasons that they allege in the return that the census in point of fact was fraudulently taken—that is, it was padded with names of persons not inhabitants—and that in reality there were not 2,500 inhabitants of the city. The answer made by relator to this position is that the proceeding for taking the census, and the taking thereof, were had in and before a duly constituted body or tribunal especially empowered by law to do so, and that as such, the result is not subject to collateral attack. * * * Indeed it is a fundamental rule of law that the acts of a body intrusted by law with the performance of certain specified proceedings, which on their face are regularly taken, are not subject to attack except in a direct proceeding for that purpose. This rule applies as rigidly to special and inferior bodies as it does to superior courts. In most instances presumptions upholding proceedings in superior courts will not aid omissions in proceedings of those of inferior grade; but where the record of the latter, on its face, is regular, it is not subject to collateral attack. In such instance the matter of power and dignity of the body does not enter into the question (citing a number of authorities). Therefore, respondent's allegation of fraud in the census was the assertion of matter which could not be made an issue in the present case. It was foreign matter, good enough in a case where such charge could be investigated, but which should not find place here where those concerned in such issue are not parties."

I do not see that complainant's position would be any better than that of one who contested such a mandamus proceeding as is found in the Missouri case, and while I am firm in the conviction that if fraud had been perpetrated this fact should be allowed to be shown before the proper tribunal, as I have said before, I am just as firmly convinced that the local liquor licensing board is not the proper forum for the trial of such an issue.

It has been suggested that the granting of a license, when as a fact there is not sufficient population to justify the number granted, would result in the issuance of a certificate which would be void under the constitution. If this be so, it could be shown in a proper case and then the fraud would not prevail.

In view of all the foregoing, it is my opinion that if the licensing board finds that the census of the village of Sharonville filed with them is an official census under the statute, then under the terms of section 44 of the licensing act, such official census governs in the determination of the maximum number of licenses that shall be granted in that municipality.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—PLUMBING REGULATION—KINDS OF PIPE THAT MAY BE USED.

In view of section 12600-176, General Code, section 39, under the rules and regulations of the state board of health, restricting a house drain to be of cast iron pipe only, is not a valid regulation. Such drains may be constructed either of cast iron pipe or of earthenware pipe.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1914.

HON. E. G. LLOYD, Member of Ohio State Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 26, 1914, this department received a communication from you, wherein appeared the following:

> "In the rules and regulations of the Ohio state board of health, relative to plumbing and drainage recently promulgated under authority of the board, but I believe entirely prepared by the state plumbing inspector, a copy of which I am enclosing you, I find that on page 26, sec. 39, 'kind of pipe,' that cast iron pipe only is permitted to be used. This is a discrimination against the use of earthenware pipe, as provided in sec. 12600-176."

You request an official opinion as to the legal authority of the state board of health to make such discrimination.

In reply thereto I desire to say that section 39 of the rules and regulations of the Ohio state board of health, governing the construction, installation and inspection of plumbing and drainage, provides as follows:

> "Section 39. Kind of pipe. All house drains shall be of extra heavy cast iron pipe, with well leaded and calked joints."

Section 12600-281, of the General Code, and which is a part of the state Building Code, adopted by the 79th general assembly March 31, 1911 (102 O. L., 586), provides in part that it shall not only be the duty of the health department of municipalities, having building or health departments, but also the duty of the state board of health, to enforce all provisions contained in said code, relative to sanitary plumbing, as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the state board of health or building inspector or commissioner, or health departments of municipalities having building or health departments to enforce all the provisions in this act contained, in relation and pertaining to sanitary plumbing. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any other officer or department from the obligation of enforcing all existing laws in reference to this act."

Part 4 of the said state Building Code referred to above, relates entirely to the subject of sanitation. Said part 4 is subdivided into 19 separate titles. Title 6 thereof relates only to house sewage and drains.

Section 12600-176 which you cite in your request, appears in the General Code under title 6 of part 4, of the Ohio Building Code, which as before stated relates solely to the subject of sanitation. Said section 12600-176, General Code, provides as follows:

"All house drains shall be of extra heavy cast iron pipe, with well leaded and calked joints, or of earthenware pipe jointed with mortar composed of one part best Portland cement and one part clean, sharp sand."

From the last section it would seem that it was the legislative intent that two kinds of pipe be used for the construction of house drainage, to wit, either extra heavy iron pipe with well leaded and calked joints or earthenware pipe, jointed with mortar, composed of one part best Portland cement and one part clean, sharp sand. Section 39 of the rules and regulations of the Ohio state board of health, supra, apparently places a limitation upon this statutory provision by providing that only extra heavy cast iron pipe with well leaded and calked joints can be used. Inasmuch as the legislature has provided that two kinds of pipe can be used, as hereinbefore stated, it would seem that this limitation on the part of the state board of health is in contravention of the clear statutory provision contained in said section 12600-176, General Code, supra.

It is, therefore, my opinion that the state board of health is without authority to require that all house drains shall be constructed of extra heavy cast iron pipe with well leaded and calked joints, when the legislature has provided that such house drains may be constructed with either such heavy cast iron pipe or with earthenware pipe jointed with mortar composed of one part best Portland cement and one part clean sharp sand. In other words, such house drains, as I view it, may be constructed of either of the materials specified in said section 12600-176, General Code, supra.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Proceedings brought by the state to quiet title to lot No. 9k, Bowling Green, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1914.

HON. D. C. BROWN, Secretary Board of Trustees, Bowling Green Normal School, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have made a careful examination of the proceedings brought by the state of Ohio to quiet title to out-lot No. 91 in the city of Bowling Green, the same being a part of the real estate acquired for the erection of a state normal school. I am of the opinion that as a result of said proceedings, the state of Ohio now has a good and indefeasible estate in fee simple in and to said lot No. 91.

The abstract has been placed in the custody of the auditor of state, as required by law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE—ORDINANCE—PROVISIONS THAT SHOULD BE CONTAINED IN SUCH ORDINANCE.

Where a city issues bonds to pay its portion of a street assessment, having been authorized to do so by an ordinance which does not contain the provisions such as required by article XII, section 2 of the constitution, and the bonds have not been issued, the entire legislation relating to such bond issue should be repassed with the necessary provisions incorporated therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1914.

HON. HARRY W. KOONS, City Solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 9th, you request my opinion as to whether, when bonds to pay the city's portion of a street assessment have been authorized by an ordinance, which does not contain a provision such as required by article XII, section 2 of the constitution, as interpreted in the case of Link vs. Karb, 88 O. S., _____, but the bonds have not yet been issued, the defect may be cured by a subsequent ordinance passed and becoming effective prior to the issuance of bonds.

In the opinion of the court in the case cited (Donahue, J.), appears the following:

> "* * * We have reached the conclusion that, in obedience to this amendment to the constitution the taxing officials of any political subdivision of the state must provide in the resolution or ordinance authorizing such issue, or in a resolution or ordinance in relation to the same subject-matter, passed prior to the issuing of such bonds, for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon, and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

However, the same opinion in the very next sentence contains the following language:

> " * * * It does mean that, at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, the taxing authorities proposing to issue such bonds shall provide, etc."

The syllabus of the case contains the following language:

> "Section 11, of article XII of the constitution of Ohio requires the taxing authorities of any political subdivision of the state proposing to issue bonds to provide at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, for levying and collecting annually by taxation, etc."

Again, in another branch of the syllabus the following language appears:

> "This provision of the constitution does not require that at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, there shall then be levied any specified amount or any specific rate, but it does require that provision shall then be made for an annual levy, etc."

I am informed that the common pleas court of Hamilton county has held that where the original ordinance authorizing the issue of bonds fails to contain the requisite provision, it is not possible for the defect to be remedied by subsequent legislation prior to the actual issuance of the bonds. This would seem to be in accord with the syllabus of the above case, and with certain portions of the opinion, though inconsistent with other language used in the opinion.

The constitution itself does not speak of the time of the authorization of the issuance of bonds in so many words. It requires that:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."
> (Art. XII, section 11 Ohio Constitution.)

I confess I do not feel like expressing an unequivocal opinion upon the question which you submit. I am clear, however, that it is at least safer, under the circumstances mentioned, by you, to repass the entire legislation relating to the issuance of bonds with the necessary provision incorporated therein.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—CUMULATIVE VOTING.

Cumulative voting by stockholders in a state bank is not permissible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 12, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not cumulative voting by the stockholders of the state banks is permissible, as defined in section 3245, R. S."

Section 3245, R. S., is now section 8636 of the General Code and is as follows:

> "At the time and place appointed, directors shall be chosen by ballot, by the stockholders who attend either in person or by lawful proxies. At such and all other elections of directors, each stockholder shall have the right to vote in person or by proxy the number of shares owned by him for as many persons as there are directors to be elected, or to cumulate his shares and give on candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares of stock equals, or to distribute them on the same principal among as many candidates as he thinks fit. Such directors shall not be elected in any other manner, a majority of the number of shares shall be necessary for a choice, but no person shall vote on a share on which an installment is due and unpaid."

This section is one of the provisions of chapter 1, division 1, title 9, part second of the General Code governing the organization and powers of private corporations.

Section 8737 is contained in the same chapter of the General Code and is as follows:

> "This chapter does not apply when special provision is made in subsequent chapters of this title, but the special provisions shall govern, unless it clearly appears that the provision is cumulative."

Chapter 2 of division 5, title 9 part second of the General Code, provides for the organization and power of banks, and practically all the sections of this chapter were contained in what is known as the "Thomas act," passed in 1908. I quote the following sections of this chapter:

> "Section 9712. At the time and place appointed, directors shall be chosen in the manner provided for other corporations.
> "Section 9714. In all other respects, such corporation shall be created, organized, governed and conducted in the manner provided by law for other corporations insofar as not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter.
> "Section 9730. In elections of directors, and in deciding questions at meetings of stockholders, each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by him. Any stockholder also may vote by proxy duly authorized in writing."

The three last sections which I have quoted, as I have stated above, were all part of the "Thomas act" passed in 1908, and were, therefore, passed subsequent to section 8636, which in its present form was passed April 23, 1898, O. L., 230.

It is needless, however, to have reference to the rule that as between a general statute and a special statute covering part of the subject-matter embraced within the general statute, if the special statute was passed subsequenly to the general statute, the special provision will control for the reason that this rule is carried into the statutes themselves, and as to all corporation laws, the special provision under section 8737, above quoted, governs unless it appears that such special provision is clearly cumulative to the provision contained in the general statute.

There would be no difficulty whatever as to your question were it not for section 9730, for the election of directors of banking corporations under sections 9712 and 9714, above quoted (were it not for section 9730), would clearly be governed by section 8636 of the General Code.

This section provides for the election of directors by the stockholders who attend the meeting provided for by section 8635; it provides that the stockholders may attend either in person or by proxy; it further provides that each stockholder, at this as well as all other elections of directors, shall have the right to vote in person or by proxy the number of shares owned by him for as many persons as there are directors to be elected; and then the section provides for cumulative voting.

Section 9730 is a special provision upon this same subject-matter—that is the election of directors, and it simply provides that in the election of directors, and in deciding questions at meetings of stockholders each stockholder shall be entitled to have one vote for each share of stock held by him. It also provides that each stockholder may vote by proxy, duly authorized in writing, but is entirely silent upon the subject of cumulative voting. We must presume that section 9730 was passed for a definite purpose; that purpose seems to be to define the voting power of stockholders as well as the power to vote by proxy, and this voting power is limited to one vote for each share of stock held by each stockholder. If it were intended to allow cumulative voting then this section is entirely unnecessary, for as I have before pointed out, were it not for section 9730, then under sections 9712 and 9714 the matter would clearly be controlled by section 8636, and the right for cumulative voting would be given; but as this section speaks upon the subject of the voting power of stockholders and is silent as to cumulative voting, it seems to me that the only construction which can be given it, is that this power is denied.

This construction, I think, is strengthened by the rule that in the absence of specific statutory authority cumulative voting is not authorized. State ex rel. vs. Stockley, 45 O. S., 304.

My attention has been called to an opinion of my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, rendered on November 18, 1908, to Hon. B. B. Seymour, superintendent of banks, in which the conclusion is expressed that as no special provision is incorporated in the Thomas act with reference to cumulative voting, then that the general provision now embodied in section 8636 would apply, and such practice would be permissible in the election of directors of banks.

For the reasons stated above, viz., that in my view of section 9730 it is a provision covering the voting power of stockholders in banking corporations, and limiting such power to one vote for each share of stock, without authorizing cumulative voting, I am unable to agree with the above opinion, and am forced to the conclusion that cumulative voting by stockholders of state banks is not permissible.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BANKS AND BANKING—PRIVATE BANK CHANGING TO A NATIONAL BANK.

When a private bank becomes a national bank, in taking out a national charter, it is not necessary for the state banking department to have any guarantee of statement whereby it knows that the depositors of the old bank are paid in full by liquidation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 5, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion as follows:

> "When a private bank becomes a national bank through taking out a national charter, is it necessary for this department to have any guarantee or statement whereby it knows that the depositors of the old bank are paid in full by liquidation?"

As to a state bank, that is a bank incorporated under any special or general law of the state, provision is made for the organization of such bank into a national bank by conversion; that is, by the execution by the directors of the bank or a majority thereof, to the comptroller of currency, of a certificate to the effect that the owners of two-thirds of the stock have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to change and convert the bank into a national association. (U. S., Revised Statutes, 5154.)

In the conversion of a state bank, there is not a dissolution of the state corporation, but merely a change of title and governmental supervision; the bank is liable for all obligations and may enforce all contracts made with it while a state corporation. (Metropolitan National Bank vs. Claggett, 141 U. S., 520.)

Although, as just noted, a state bank may become a national bank by conversion in the manner just noted, it may, if preferred, be placed in voluntary liquidation in conformity to said law, and a national bank organized, in conformity to the general provisions with respect to the organization of such banks, which when chartered may acquire the purchasable assets of the former bank. In the latter case a specific contract is necessary for the purchasing of assets and assumption of liabilities to depositors and other creditors of the state bank. In such case bills receivable and other assets should be listed and properly endorsed over to the new bank; the banking house, if purchased, should be deeded to the new bank and the deed recorded; all general and individual accounts should be closed or transferred and new accounts opened; and old pass books called in and new books issued. The capital of the newly organized bank must be paid by the share holders in cash and not in the assets of the closed and liquidated state bank. No provision is made in the law for the organization of a private bank into a national bank by conversion and it follows that the only way in which the individuals composing such private bank can become a national bank, is by the process of liquidation, whereby the affairs of the private bank are closed up and a national bank charter received and taken by such persons in conformity with the provisions with reference to the organization of national banks. In such case a specific contract is necessary for the purchase of the assets of the private bank and the assumption of its liabilities to depositors and other creditors. In such case I know of no provision requiring the private bank to give to your department any statement showing that the depositors of the old bank are paid in full by the liquidation, nor is there any provision requiring the newly organized national bank to make any statement of this kind. The relation of debtor and creditor exists between the persons composing a private bank and its depositors, and this relation exists until their claims are fully paid, unless, of course, they consent to the transfer of their accounts to the new bank in pursuance of agreement between such banks. Nothing in the views here expressed is inconsistent with the right of your department to examine private banks according to the authority given in the private banking act of April 19, 1913 (103 O. L., 379), and it would undoubtedly be the right of your department to know before a private bank is liquidated for the purpose of becoming a national bank, that such private bank was in condition to meet all of the claims of its depositors, and if not, to cause liquidation of the same to be made under the supervision of your department as described by statute.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE CASE—EXPENSES OF POLICE DEPARTMENT INCURRED IN STATE CASES—TO BE PAID BY COUNTY—FEES TO BE RECEIVED BY CHIEF OF POLICE—SERVING OF WARRANT BY PATROLMAN—FEES FOR SAME.

1. Expenses incurred in the prosecution of an offense against the state law are in Ohio intended to be charged upon the county and not upon the city, consequently, no portion of the expense of a police department incurred in the prosecution of a party charged with the commission of a felony who has fled a county is charged to the city.

2. In a state case the chief of police is entitled to receive only such fees as are paid for services by him personally performed, and the same rule applies to any other municipal officer performing services in a state case.

3. When a patrolman is sent to a neighboring city to return a person charged with the commission of a felony or a misdemeanor, a warrant must be issued not to the chief of police, but to the patrolman himself, in which case the patrolman is entitled to receive and retain the fee allowed for such service under section 4581, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 4, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 3, 1913, you request my opinion as follows:

"1. What portion of the expense of a police department incurred in the pursuit of a party charged with the commission of a felony who has fled the county, is chargeable to the city?

"2. What, if any, fees may be taxed in the name of the chief of police upon the warrant of arrest issued by the police court in a felony case to be paid by the state if convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary?

"3. If a patrolman is detailed by the chief of police to go to a neighboring city to return a person charged with the commission of a felony or misdemeanor, what, if any, fees for such service in the name of the chief of police may be taxed in the case and recovered from the state or the defendant, as the case may be?"

Answering your first question, the conduct of the police department in reality belongs to the state. The duties pertaining thereto are state functions and administered in behalf of the state and when such duties are in whole, or in part, authorized to be performed by the officers of the municipal corporation they are so performed by such officers as agents of the state executing governmental functions. 1 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 103 and section 390; City of Cleveland vs. Paine, 72 O. S., 347; State ex rel. vs. Stobey, 194 Mo. page 19 (6th syl.); Everill vs. Swan, 17 Utah, 114 (2 par. syl.); Hopewell vs. State, 22 Ind. Appellate Court Reports 489.

And on in various prosecutions the methods of compensating officers for the performance of such duties and for the reimbursement of expenses incurred by them in the performance of the same are varied, according as the legislature has seen fit to impose the burden upon either the state or the municipality, or by dividing the obligation of making recompense between both the state and the municipality. In some states the police officials of the municipality receive a stated salary and the fees earned in both state and city cases are required to be paid into the city treasury. This method has been upheld in Labour vs. Polk county, 70 Iowa, 568. On page 570 of this case the court says:

> "The statute authorizing the city council to fix the salary for the police judge expressly provides that it was not intended to abolish fees then allowed by law, but to require the same to be paid into the treasury. It is the policy of the state to provide for the expense of enforcing its criminal laws. To some extent it does so by making provision for the payment of fees to justices and police judges aiding in the enforcement of such laws. If the cities provide for salaries for the payment of its officers for duties performed in the enforcement of criminal laws of the state, it is competent for the legislature to make provision for the reimbursement of the cities. This is just what the statute provides."

To the same effect the city of Des Moines vs. Polk county, 107 Iowa, 527.

In other states it has been held that a fixed salary paid by a city to a city marshal was a proper charge upon the city, and that such officers would be considered fully reimbursed thereby for their services in both city and state criminal cases, the county being relieved from the payment of any expenses or fees incurred in the performance of all such duties by city officials so compensated.

Under section 536 of the General Code the marshal of a city is not entitled to recover from the county in which the city is located for services rendered in the administration of the criminal law. (Syl. Christ vs. Polk county, 48 Iowa, 502.)

On page 304, the court said:

> "In support of the plaintiff's view, it may be said that the services were rendered in the administration of the criminal laws of the state, the expenses of which administration are certainly for the most part made by law chargeable upon the counties. But no one will deny that it is competent for the legislature to impose such expenses in part upon cities. We think it virtually so provided in providing the duty of city marshals. And, to our mind, the provision is not unreasonable. The citizens of a city are a part of the general public, and as such they have a general interest in the suppression of crime. * * *."

Also see Guanella vs. Pottawattamie county, 84 Iowa, page 36.

"The salaried recorder and policeman of a city, invested by law with the jurisdiction and power of justice and constable respectively, are not entitled to receive in addition to their salary the fees fixed by law for justices and constables for similar services." Johnson vs. State, 94 Tenn., page 499 (2 par. syl.). "The marshal of a city incorporated under the general law is not entitled to any fees in city or other cases * * *" (2 par. syl.) City of Brazil vs. McBride, 69 Ind., 245.

In other jurisdictions methods of dividing expenses and fees incurred in such criminal and police prosecutions have been upheld. Thus in the case of Norwich vs. Hyde, 7 Conn., 529, example is afforded of a method of making the town in which conviction was had liable for the costs of prosecutions before justices of the peace, and making the county liable for such cost when the prosecution was conducted in a county or superior court, and in the case of People vs. Board of Auditors, 53 N. Y. supplement, page 740, example is afforded of a method of making the fees of officers in criminal cases tried before a magistrate in the town where the offense was committed a charge upon that town. In Kentucky and in Michigan the plan is followed of making the county liable for fees incurred in the prosecution of state offenses no matter where tried and without regard to the official character of the officer executing the process, and making the fees incurred in the prosecution of violation of ordinances and municipal police measures a charge upon the municipality. In these statutes even though city officers are paid a stipulated salary by the city, they are permitted to receive and retain for their own use fees from the county for services in state criminal prosecutions, and they receive reimbursement for expenses incurred under a like method of separated liability as to county and city. Thus the syllabus in the case of Burke on Petition, 101 Ky., 175, is as follows:

> "1. The provision of section 3064, of the Kentucky statutes, which is a part of the charter of cities of the second class, that 'all officers, deputies and employes of the city * * * shall be paid a fixed salary and not otherwise, and all fees and commissions authorized by law shall revert to and be for the use and benefit of the city' has reference alone to fees, costs and commissions arising out of their performance of duties to the city, and does not authorize the city to convert to its use the fees allowed by the state to such officers for the arrest of felons under the provisions of section 354, of the Kentucky statutes."

And in the case of White vs. Board of Supervisors, 105 Michigan, 608, the third and fifth paragraph of the syllabus are as follows:

> "3. A provision of a city charter which makes it the duty of policemen to serve and execute all process directed or delivered to them for service, and for that purpose given to them all powers of constables and which further provides that they may serve and execute, within the limits of the city, any other process which by law a constable may serve, is within the power of the legislature to enact.
> "5. The fact that the policeman has received his full pay from the city for such services, without reporting on oath to the council the amount of all moneys and fees received by him for services as policeman, as required by the city charter, is no defense to a valid claim against the county for such services, the compensation for which is prescribed by law."

I am of the opinion that the plan intended to operate within the state of Ohio as regards the liability for such costs and expenses is one substantially similar to that endorsed in the states of Kentucky and Michigan, as above exemplified. Throughout the statutes the intention is manifest to keep separate and apart all matters relating to the prosecution of city ordinances and police measures as opposed to prosecutions of state criminal cases. Thus in police and mayor's court prosecutions of state offenses must be brought in the name of the state, and those of municipal ordinances in the name of the city, and the officials of these courts must keep separate and render separate account of fees and costs taxed and received in these cases. This distinction is everywhere clearly marked with respect to the payment of such fees and costs; thus in section 4534, General Code, it is provided that the fees of mayor in all cases excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services, and the fees of the chief of police and his deputies in all cases (with the same exception) shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases. And in police court, under section 4581, General Code, fees in cases for violation of ordinances are fixed by council, while fees for services in state cases are the same as those allowed in the probate court or before justices of the peace.

Sections 3016, 13436 and 13439 of the General Code points definitely and clearly to liability on the part of the county to municipal officers for fees and expenses incurred by them in the prosecution of state offenses. The case of City of Portsmouth vs. Milstead and Baucus, 8 O. C. C. Reports, N. S. page 114, maintains its ground on this theory as to the division of responsibility as between city and county in this connection. The syllabus of this case is as follows:

> "1. The provisions of section 1536-633, R. S. (4213 General Code), requiring 'that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury' has reference to municipal fees solely, or such fees as may be fixed by municipal authority. Said section does not authorize cities to interfere with the fees of mayors or chiefs of police in state criminal cases; whether such authority can be delegated to municipalities, Quaere?"

I am, therefore, of the opinion that expenses incurred in the prosecution of an offense against a state law are in Ohio intended to be charged upon the county and not upon the city. My answer to your first question, therefore, is to the effect that no portion of the expense of a police department incurred in the pursuit of a party charged with the commission of a felony, who has fled the county, is chargeable to the city.

Answering your second question, fees in the police court are fixed by section 4581, General Code. This statute is as follows:

> "Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

This is the only statute which I am able to find which would in any way authorize the payment of any fees to the chief of police for services in the police court, and I am of the opinion that the fees allowed to whatever officer is authorized to perform police services in the probate court or before justices of the peace, are authorized by section 4581 to be paid to the officer authorized to perform these services in the police court. The fees of a chief of police, therefore, or any other municipal officer who executes process or performs service in the prosecution of state offenses in a police court, are the same as those allowed in the probate court or before justices of the peace in like cases. Fees in the probate court for such services are fixed by section 11204 of the General Code. This section is as follows:

> "The fees of witnesses, jurors, sheriffs, coroners and constables, for all services rendered in the probate court, or by order of the probate judge, shall be the same as is provided by law, for like services in the court of common pleas."

Under this statute, therefore, the fees of any police officer serving in the police court are the same as those allowed for like services in the court of common pleas, and inasmuch as the sheriff is the only officer for whom such fees are fixed in the common pleas court, we must conclude that a municipal police officer for services in police court is entitled to the same fees as are permitted to sheriffs for services in the common pleas court in similar cases.

Fees authorized to be paid before justices of the peace are those fixed for constables by section 3347, General Code.

A municipal police officer, therefore, is authorized by section 4581, General Code, to receive the same fees that are allowed to sheriffs and constables in similar cases. This is specifically provided by section 5434 of the General Code for service in a mayor's court, and in construing this section in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of August 30, 1911, I held that under this authorization a chief of police for all services which he is called upon to perform, and which if performed a constable fee is provided by the sections relating to constables, that fee should control, but that where a chief of police is called upon to perform a service for which no fee is provided in the case of constables, and for the same service a fee is provided in the case of a sheriff, the latter measure should control. I believe that the sections are substantially in pari materia, and that the same construction should be accorded section 4581, General Code.

A chief of police, therefore, for services in the police court is to be allowed the fees for sheriffs and constables in similar cases. This holding is in accordance with the mind of the court in the same case of Delaware vs. Matthews, 15 C. C. n. s. wherein, on page 40, the court said:

> "The chiefs of police in cities having a police court are to receive like fees as constables and sheriffs in the probate court and before justices of the peace."

Your question asks, however, what fees may be paid by the state in the name of the chief of police upon conviction and sentence to the penitentiary of a felon. Section 3016 of the General Code is the only section which authorizes payment of fees upon conviction of a felon prior to issuance of execution. This section is as follows:

> "In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, marshal, chief of police, constable and witness, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgment of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

The question in issue, therefore, is whether or not a chief of police under this section is authorized to be paid fees from the county treasury upon conviction of a felony for services which are performed by patrolmen or other officers of the municipality, as I think it is clear there will be no dispute that this section does authorize the chief of police to receive fees in this manner for services which he himself performed.

The chief of police or municipal police officers are authorized to act in the execution of process or to perform any services in criminal cases only in municipal courts. I do not pass upon any of the provisions of special municipal or police courts, but refer only to the general provisions applying to mayors' courts and police courts. The sections authorizing service in these courts are as follows:

> "Section 4535. In felonies, and other criminal proceedings not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations of ordinances of the corporation, shall be co-extensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases.

"Section 13500. The warrant shall be directed to the sheriff or to any constable of the county, or when it is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, to the marshal or other police officer thereof, and, by a copy of the affidavit inserted therein or amended and referred to, shall show or recite the substance of the accusation and command such officer forthwith to take the accused and bring him before the magistrate or court issuing such warrant, or other magistrate of the county having cognizance of the case, to be dealt with according to law."

Section 4534 authorizes the chief of police to execute and return all writs of process to him directed by the mayor's court, and he is also authorized by this section to perform these services by deputy, and this statute further fixes the fees of both the chief of police and of his deputy.

In the case of Delaware vs. Matthews, 13 O. C. C., N. S., p. 114, this statute as it formerly existed was construed as not authorizing any fees whatever to chiefs of police. Since this decision, the provision therein authorizing fees to the chief of police and his deputy was incorporated. Now since this provision, as it now stands, only authorizes fees to the chief of police or to his deputy, I am of the opinion that only the chief of police or such deputy is authorized to receive any fees under this section, and if a warrant is issued or services performed by any other municipal court officer he would not be entitled to fees therefor under the ruling of Delaware vs. Matthews. The statutes do not recognize any such position as deputy chief of police. Whether or not council could create such a position I believe is a close question, but I am of the opinion that under this statute the chief of police is authorized to specially deputize any police officer in his department to perform services in the mayor's court. When an officer is so deputized, or if there exists a legally constituted deputy chief of police, either of these officers would be entitled to fees under this section. In no sense does this statute authorize the chief of police to receive fees earned by a deputy or to have them taxed in his name. The fees authorized by this statute are taxed in the name of the deputy and not in the name of the chief of police for services performed by such deputy. I base this conclusion upon the language of the statute which provides that the fees of a chief of police or of his deputy shall be the same as those allowed to sheriffs or constables in similar cases.

Answering your question as to mayors' courts, therefore, as regards section 3016 of the General Code, the chief of police is authorized to be paid by this statute for services in mayors' courts only, such fees as are allowed for compensation for services performed by himself.

Section 13500, General Code, above quoted, must be pointed to as the section authorizing a municipal court officer to perform services in a police court. I am of the opinion that the words "or other officer," as used therein, extends to all members of a city police force, and can by no means be restricted so as to apply to the chief of police alone. This language, therefore, authorizes the warrant to be issued to any member of a city police force. There can be no doubt that the words "police officer" is a generic term and includes all patrolmen and other inferiors of the police department as well as the chief executive thereof. There is nothing in these sections either, therefore, which authorizes an inferior police officer in a city to act in the name of the chief of police, and I am of the opinion that when a warrant is issued to such an officer he acts in his own name, and whatever fees are authorized to be taxed for the services are taxed also in the name of such officer executing the process or performing the service.

I can find no authority in the statutes, therefore, pertaining to mayors' or police courts (where alone a chief of police is authorized to perform services) which would permit any fees to be taxed in the name of the chief of police, except where that official himself performs the service or executes the process. Since the chief of police alone is mentioned in section 3016, General Code, and no mention is made of other police officers of a municipality, section 3016, General Code, cannot be construed as authorizing any fees whatever for police services to be paid from the county treasury on conviction of a felony where a municipal officer other than the chief of police performs the service or executes the process.

There is seemingly an inconsistency in authorizing fees to be paid chiefs of police under such circumstances, and not extending the same benefit to inferior officers of the municipality who perform the same services. The language of section 3016, General Code, however, will not permit of any other holding, and when we consider the effect of the case of Portsmouth vs. Milstead, above quoted, wherein it was held that chiefs of police were entitled to retain in their own name fees earned by them in state cases, a decision to the effect that the chief of police is not entitled to fees earned by his subordinates appears to be supported in logic.

The only other instance in which fees may be paid by the state, is provided by section 13727, General Code, authorizing payment of fees, when a writ of execution against a convict fails to produce an amount of money sufficient for the payment of costs of conviction. This statute, of course, extends to all fees which are authorized to be taxed in behalf of any police officer, and when any fees are paid in accordance therewith, the answer to your question is that the chief of police would be entitled to receive only such fees as are to be paid for services by him personally performed, and the same rule applies to any other municipal officer performing services in a state case.

Answering your third question; the answer to this question is afforded by the answer to your second question, as regards the mayor's court under section 3534, General Code. A patrolman might be specially deputized by the chief of police to act in the manner contemplated by your question, but in that case, the fees for such service would be taxed in the name of the special deputy, and not in the name of the chief of police. In the case of such deputation by the chief of police for services in the mayor's court, however, I am of the opinion that the warrant must be issued not to the chief of police but to the deputy himself, as that statute only authorizes the chief of police to attend on the sittings of such court by deputy for the purpose of executing process thereof and to preserve order therein, and I am unable to see how this language would justify the chief of police in deputizing a patrolman to serve a warrant which had been issued to the chief of police in his own name.

As regards service in the police court, which as aforesaid is authorized by section 13500, General Code, I am of the opinion that this statute contemplates that the warrant be issued to the officer who is to serve the same, and if the same is issued to the chief of police he must himself perform the service, and when so doing would be entitled to have taxed in his name the fees for such services. When, however, it is desired to have a patrolman execute such warrant, the warrant must be issued directly to that official, in which case, the patrolman would be entitled to receive and retain the fees allowed for such service under section 4581, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE—STREET IMPROVEMENT—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—COUNCIL.

Where at a general election the city is authorized to issue bonds to defray the city's portion of the expense of the elimination of the grades of streets where they intersect railroads of the city, the director of public service is authorized to organize this work by the appointment of a suitable representative and assistant, subject to the supervision of council as to fixing salary and compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 20, 1914.

HON. GEORGE J. CAREW, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 2, 1914, you inquire:

> "At the general election held on November 4, 1913, the city of Youngstown authorized the sale of $800,000 worth of bonds to defray the city's portion of the expense of the elimination of the grades of a large number of streets where they intersect the various railroads of the city, and a number of questions have arisen as to the authority of council and other city officials growing out of this matter. None of these bonds have been issued.
>
> "First. Has the director of public service authority to organize this work by the appointment of a suitable representative and assistants, independent of any action of council authorizing him to do so?
> "Second. If he has such authority, does such authority include power to fix salaries of such representative and such assistants or to fix the salaries of any of them?
>
> "Third. In case an ordinance is passed by council authorizing the service director, generally to organize the work of eliminating the grade crossings and to appoint necessary assistants, does such ordinance carry with it the power to fix salaries?"

Answering your first question, section 4327 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The director of public service may establish such subdepartment as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

It has always been the holding of this department that the director of public service, under this statute, is permitted to determine finally the necessary representatives and assistants for any work properly within the department, and there is no requirement of any statute making it necessary for council to authorize him to appoint such representatives and assistants for any particular work.

Under section 4327, General Code, the director of public service is given primary control over his department, and it is within his province to determine the personnel of that department.

Section 4214 of the General Code, is as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

It is well settled that this section gives the exclusive right to council to fix salaries of representatives, assistants and all regular employes in the department of public service. Under this section council is given the power of supervising, to a certain extent, the number of positions in other departments.

While I have held that it is mandatory upon council to fix some salary or some compensation for officers, assistants or employes, sanctioned for the department by the director, nevertheless, determination of the amount of such compensation is solely within the province of council, and council may fix the same in accordance with its own judgment of the duties which the person compensated is obliged to perform.

The work at the present stage of the proceedings is not yet definitely fixed and determined. Bonds have been authorized to provide funds for the same, but the bonds have not yet been sold. No contract has been authorized by council and the duties at the time, which may reasonably be deemed to rest upon the department of the director of public service with respect to the contemplated improvements can, at the most, be of a mere preliminary or preparatory nature. Just what employes are necessary for this work is a matter entirely within the discretion of the director of public service, subject, of course, to supervision of council through its power aforesaid—of fixing salary and compensation.

The foregoing would seem to render unnecessary any answer to your second and third question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE AND DEED.

Abstract of title and deed to armory site, Marietta, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

COL. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary, State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 2nd, enclosing a deed from the city of Marietta to the state of Ohio, for certain premises upon which it is proposed to erect an armory, together with abstract of title therefor.

I have carefully examined said deed and it is my opinion that the same conveys to the state of Ohio a sufficient title to warrant your board in erecting an armory thereon, pursuant to the provisions of house bill No. 35, passed February 4, 1914, approved February 17, 1914, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 20, 1914.

The abstract should be extended so as to include the ordinance of the city of Marietta, donating this land to the state of Ohio, also the order of the county commissioners of Washington county, authorizing the making, execution and delivery of said deed.

The abstract and deed are herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VOLUNTEER FIREMEN NOT PROHIBITED FROM MAKING CERTAIN CONTRACTS.

A volunteer firemen is not within the provision of section 12910 and section 12911, General Code, prohibiting firemen from being interested in contracts on the ground that said statutes do not contemplate such a casual employment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, City Solicitor, Niles, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of March 7th, you inquire as follows:

> "Please advise if in your opinion members of a volunteer fire department receiving pay from the city for each fire which they attend, would fall under the sections of the General Code, 12910, 12911 or any other section of the Code so that they would be prohibited from being interested in contracts made with the city or from doing any kind of work requiring pay from the city.
>
> "If in your opinion they are prohibited from having an interest in such a contract, would the fact that they were serving on said fire department without pay, make may difference?"

Sections 12910 and 12911 of the General Code, are as follows:

> "(12910) Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the uses of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years.
> "(12911) Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is not connected, and the amount of such contract exceeds the sum of fifty dollars, unless such contract is let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

To come within the prohibition of these statutes, a volunteer fireman must hold an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or, he must be an agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, as these latter terms are intended by these statutes. In an opinion addressed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of October 1, 1913, I have held that the words "agent," "servant" or "employe" as used in these statutes refer solely to persons serving in such positions in a public capacity.

In State ex rel. vs. Jennings, 57 O. S., 415, it was held that a fireman employed by the council to perform the usual duties of a fireman, was not a public officer. A fortiori, a volunteer firemen, whose duties are transient and indefinite, even though he exercises them in a somewhat more independent capacity, may not be deemed the holder of an office of trust or profit.

We are therefore called upon to decide whether a volunteer firemen is an agent, servant, or employe within the contemplation of these statutes. Since a volunteer fireman cannot be said to act in any way as a deputy or in a representative capacity, it is clear that he may not be deemed an agent within the meaning of these statutes.

In Louisville, etc., Railway Co. vs. Wilson, 138, U. S., p. 501, at page 505, Justice Brewer says:

> "The terms 'officer' and 'employes' both alike refer to those in regular or continual service. Within the ordinary expectation of the terms, one who is engaged to render services in a particular transaction is either an officer or employe. They imply continuity of service and exclude those employed for a special and single transaction."

This language is quoted in the cases of Clark vs. Benninger, 42 Atlanta, 928, and Lein vs. Fisher, 30 Atlanta, 609. Under these holdings the conclusion is surely justified that a volunteer fireman is not such an employe as is contemplated by this statute.

The word "servant" has various applications, the term being given a broad and restricted significance in the decisions, in accordance with the connection in which it is used. It is readily manifest that all statutes must be construed within the bounds of reason and any attempt to discern a legislative intent must be governed by this evident restriction. The statute is manifestly aimed at such individuals connected with city government as have a definite and substantial identification with an officer holding a position of trust or profit, or of a board of officers in like capacity. It will not be denied that these statutes must be given some limitation and it cannot be asserted that the word "servant" used therein must be given its broadest interpretation. Thus the term will surely not be construed to include a messenger, temporarily required for a minor and transient purpose; nor an expressman in the same manner; nor a plumber required for a few hours to make repairs for a minor construction for such officer; nor an electrician needed for a similar purpose—and clearly the term would not include an independent contractor working for such officer or board of officers. Indeed, the term servant, as it is most frequently comprehended, implies permanency, continuity of service and a more or less continual subjection to the will of the superior. This in Hand vs. Kale, 12 S. W., 923, it is said:

> "Indeed, it may in most cases be said to be synonymous with employe."

In Campfield vs. Long, et al., 25 Fed., 128, on page 131, Justice Dwyer says:

> "A servant is one who is engaged not merely in doing work or service for another, but who is in his service, usually upon or about the premises or property of his employer, and subject to his direction and control therein, and who is generally liable to be dismissed."

Haygood vs. State, 59 Ala., 51.

It is not necessary for the purpose of answering your question to determine the intended distinction between employe and servant as used in this statute, but it is necessary to define and it indeed seems manifest, that a volunteer fireman is not such a servant or employe as is contemplated by the language of these statutes, for the reason that the duties of such a position are of such transient, temporary, undefined and independent a nature as not to bring the individuals performing them within the comprehension of the statute.

Under this holding it is of course immaterial whether the volunteer fireman in question does or does not receive pay for the services he performs.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORRECT WORDING OF ORDINANCE OR RESOLUTION UNDER ARTICLE XII, SECTION 11 OF THE CONSTITUTION OF OHIO.

The following is the correct wording of an ordinance or resolution under article XII, section 11 of the constitution on an issuing of bonds:

"There shall be levied and collected, by taxation, annually, during the period for which said bonds are to run, an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds as herein provided for, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. BEN H. DEWEY, Village Solicitor, Clyde, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request me to advise you as to the correct wording of an ordinance or resolution providing for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay interest on bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity in conformity to the specific requirements of article XII, section 11 of the constitution as interpreted in Link vs. Karb, 89 O. S., 326.

The proper interpretation of the constitutional provision in question was not necessarily involved in the case cited, but the court, in its opinion, and in the syllabus, undertook to determine it. The branches of the syllabus dealing with this subject are as follows:

"2. Section 11 of article XII of the constitution of Ohio requires the taxing authority of any political subdivision of the state proposing to issue bonds to provide at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds proposed to be issued and to provide for their final redemption at maturity. This provision made at the time the issue of bonds is authorized is mandatory on all subsequent taxing officials of that political subdivision during the term of the bonds.

"3. This provision of the constitution does not require that at the time the issue of bonds is authorized there shall then be levied any specified amount or any specific rate, but it does require that provision shall then be made for an annual levy during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds proposed to be issued and to provide for their final redemption at maturity, which levy must be made annually in pursuance of the provisions of the original ordinance or resolution requiring the same. The amount necessary to be levied for the purposes specified is to be determined by the taxing officials at the time the levy is made."

In the opinion, per Donahue J., appears the following:

"This, of course, does not require the immediate levying of a tax certain, either in amount or rate, for the provision of this amendment is that this tax shall be levied annually and collected annually, but it does mean that, at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, the taxing authorities proposing to issue such bonds shall provide that a levy shall be made each year thereafter during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and retire the bonds, and such provision so made at the time the bonds are authorized, shall be binding and obligatory upon these taxing officers of that political subdivision and their successors in office until the purpose of such levy shall have been fully accomplished by the retirement of the bonds so issued. Such a provision fills the full purposes of this amendment to the constitution and is not subject to the objection that it is impossible at the time of issue to determine either the amount that must be raised for that purpose or the rate that must be levied for raising such an amount. The amount may be determined from year to year, and levied annually, for that is the command of the amendment itself; but having declared at the time of the issue of such bonds that a levy shall be made in an amount sufficient, there then remains for the taxing officials the mere matter of calculation as to the amount. The levy must be made at all events in pursuance to the original provisions therefor, and subsequent taxing authorities must make such annual levy, regardless of what exigencies may arise in the future."

In my judgment this decision, insofar as it is an adjudication of the question with which it deals, has the effect of reducing the constitutional requirement to the exaction of a mere form of words substantially equivalent to the language of the constitution itseslf. It not being required that the borrowing authorities shall specify either the rate or the amount which shall be annually levied for its purpose, it would be, in my judgment, sufficient for the section of the borrowing ordinance to provide merely that,

"There shall be levied and collected, by taxation, annually, during the period for which said bonds are to run, an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds as herein provided for, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—VILLAGE TREASURER AND MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION—OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—TREASURER OF THE SCHOOL BOARD AND MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

A village treasurer is by law treasurer of the board of education and cannot at the same time be a member of the board of education.

Under a decision of the supreme court, by refusing to qualify as treasurer of the village board of education, such person can still retain his position as village treasurer, consequently, if such village treasurer fails to qualify as treasurer of the board of education, he can at the same time be village treasurer and a member of the board of education. There is no incompatibility between the office of village treasurer and that of member of the board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. HARLEY M. WHITCRAFT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 10, 1914, you submitted for an opinion, the following request:

> "Murray City of Hocking county, Ohio, is an incorporated village under the laws of the state of Ohio. Murray City school district comprehends all the territory within the corporate limits of Murray City village, with certain other territory attached for school purposes. No part of Murray City village is detached for school purposes.
>
> "On Nov. 5, 1913, Adam Anderson, an elector of Murray City village, was elected village treasurer of Murray City village. At the same election he was elected as member of the board of education of Murray City village school district.
> "(Question No. 1.) Can Mr. Anderson serve in the capacity of village treasurer of Murray City village and at the same time be a member of the board of education of Murray City village school district?
> "(Question No. 2.) Should Mr. Anderson fail to qualify as treasurer of the school funds of Murray City village school district, can he then serve as treasurer of the village and at the same time be a member of the board of education of said Murray City village school district."

In reply to your first question, I desire to say that under date of January 29, 1912, in an opinion which this department rendered to Hon. Hugh R. Gilmore, prosecuting attorney of Preble county, Ohio, it was held that the office of member of the board of education and the office of treasurer of the board of education are incompatible and cannot be held by the same person at the same time. This opinion was rendered in answer to the question as to whether or not the treasurer of the school board could also be a member of such board. This department having passed upon this question in the opinion above referred to, I am therefore, without comment, enclosing herewith a copy of said opinion.

Coming now to your second question, I desire to say that this department in an opinion which was rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of July 31, 1911, held that a person elected to the office of city, village or township treasurer, may refuse to qualify as the treasurer of the city, village or township school funds respectively. In commenting upon this particular question, I quote as follows from said opinion:

"In connection with these several questions, I have examined the case of State ex rel. Stolzenbacher vs. Feltz, Auditor, No. 9372, decided by the supreme court of this state in 1905, but not reported. I have read the record and briefs of opposing counsel therein and find that the facts in that case were as follows:

"A city treasurer upon the taking effect of the school code of 1904, in which the language above quoted from section 4763, General Code, first appeared, filed with the board of education of the city school district a bond, but made such filing conditional upon his salary as custodian of the school moneys being fixed at a certain sum. The board refused to accept the bond so filed, and having declared that the city treasurer had failed to qualify as treasurer of the school funds, and that a vacancy in such office therefore existed, proceeded to elect another treasurer of the school funds. To this treasurer so elected, the county auditor refused to pay over funds due from the county to the school district, and the action which originated in the supreme court was in mandamus to compel such delivery.

"The judgment of the court was that a pre-emptory writ issued commanding the county auditor to pay over to the treasurer elected by the school the funds due the district from the county. Upon analysis of the decision in this case the following I think will appear clear:

"1. If the board of education had no authority to elect a treasurer of its own in any case then the court would not have decided the case as it did.

"2. If the effect of the failure of the city treasurer to qualify was to disqualify him from holding the office of city treasurer as well as from acting as treasurer of the school fund, then there would have been a vacancy in the office of city treasurer which should have been filled in the manner prescribed in the Municipal Code, and the person thus appointed would have been the local custodian of the school funds, so that if the court had taken this view of the law, it could not well have decided the case as it did.

"I think, therefore, that the only propositions of law consistent with the court's decree in the case above cited are as follows: And they are those put forth by counsel for the relator.

"1. The offices of city, village and township treasurer on the one hand and treasurer of the city, village and township school funds on the other hand are separate and distinct.

"2. Each successive treasurer of the city, village or township, as the case may be, must in the first instance qualify as treasurer of the school funds of the appropriate district. If, however, he fails to do so, then the board of education has the right, and it is its duty to secure another treasurer.

"3. The failure of the treasurer of the city, village or township, as the case may be, to qualify as treasurer of the school funds of the appropriate district does not create a vacancy in the first office.

"I am further of the opinion that there is no essential difference between the provisions of section 4747 as amended in 1910, and which relates to the clerk, and the above created provisions of section 4763 relating to the treasurer of the school funds. The same principles of law apply to both cases.

"Answering now the particular questions which you submit, I beg to state in answer to your first question that in my opinion the treasurer of a city, village or township may by failing to qualify as treasurer of the school funds refuse to serve as such treasurer.

"In answer to your second question I beg to state that in my opinion if a township clerk fails to qualify as clerk of the township board of education, such failure does not in any respect affect his status as township clerk.

"Answering your third question I beg to state that if a township treasurer resigns as treasurer of the school funds, the board of education has the right, if it chooses, to accept his resignation, and in such case may elect a successor to him as treasurer of the school fund."

In accordance with the foregoing holdings, it is apparent that a village treasurer may refuse to qualify as treasurer of the village school district funds and continue to retain his office as treasurer of the village.

The remaining question then involved in your inquiry, is as follows, to wit:

"If the village treasurer of the village of Murray City refuses to qualify as treasurer of the school funds of the school district of Murray City village, can he then serve as treasurer of the village and at the same time be a member of the board of education of said Murray City village school district."

In order to determine this question, it is necessary to determine whether or not the two offices in this situation are incompatible. In this regard I cite the following:

Throop on public offices, section 33, says:

"In order to render two offices incompatible there must be some such relation between them as that of master and servant. That one must have 'controlment' of the other, or that one must be charged with the duty of auditing or supervising the accounts of the other, or that one must be chosen by or have the power of removal of the other."

Mecham on public offices and officers, section 522, says:

"The force of the word, in its application to this matter is, that from the nature and relation to each other, of the two places, they ought not to be held by the same person, from the contrariety and antagonism which would result in the attempt by one person to faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of one, toward the incumbent of the other."

Dillon on municipal corporations, section 166 (note) says:

"Incompatibility in office exists where the nature and duty of the two offices are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to retain both."

Anderson's dictionary of law says:

"Offices are said to be incompatible and inconsistent when their being subordinate and interfering with each other induces a presumption that they cannot be both executed with impartiality and honesty."

As measured by the above rules defining incompatibility, it is my opinion that the office of treasurer of the village of Murray City, when such treasurer fails to qualify as the treasurer of the school funds of the Murray City village school district, is not incompatible with the office of a member of the board of education of such school district.

Section 4764 of the General Code provides that each school district treasurer shall execute a bond before entering upon his duties of his office, as follows:

> "Before entering upon the duties of his office, each school district treasurer shall execute a bond, with sufficient sureties, in a sum not less than the amount of school funds that may come into his hands, payable to the state, approved by the board of education, and conditioned for the faithful disbursement according to law of all funds which come into his hands, provided that when school moneys have been deposited under the provisions of sections 7604-7608, inclusive, the bond shall be in such amount as the board of education may require."

Section 4765 provides that such treasurer may be required to give additional sureties or to execute a new bond to the approval of the board of education, as follows:

> "Thereafter such treasurer may be required to give additional sureties on his accepted bond, or to execute a new bond with sufficient sureties to the approval of the board of education when such board deems it necessary. If he fails for ten days after service of notice in writing of such requisition, to give such bond or additional sureties, as so required, the office shall be declared vacant and filled as in other cases."

If, however, such village treasurer refuses to qualify as treasurer of such school funds, then the provisions of said sections do not apply. A bond of the village treasurer, as such, is given in accordance with section 4294 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Upon giving bond as required by council, the treasurer may, by and with the consent of his bondsmen, deposit all funds and public moneys of which he has charge in such bank or banks, situated within the county, which may seem best for the protection of such funds, and such deposit shall be subject at all times to the warrants and orders of the treasurer required by law to be drawn. All profits arising from such deposit or deposits shall inure to the benefit of the funds. Such deposit shall in no wise release the treasurer from liability for any loss which may occur thereby."

It is apparent that such village treasurer, as a member of such board of education, would not have to pass upon his own bond given as such treasurer, inasmuch as he fails to qualify as treasurer of the village district school funds. Furthermore, as treasurer of the village only, he would therefore have no control or supervision over the school funds of said school district.

Therefore, answering your last question directly, I am of the opinion that if Mr. Anderson should fail to qualify as treasurer of the school funds of the Murray City village school district, he can then serve as treasurer of the village and at the same time be a member of the board of education of said Murray City village school district.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COMPENSATION—EFFECT OF ABOLITION OF TWO DAYS' LABOR ON THE HIGHWAYS.

A man who has performed two days' labor on the public highway after the constitutional amendment went into effect, and before the statute repealing sections 3375 to 3384, General Code, went into effect, is not entitled to compensation for the two days' labor from the township treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. JAS. A. TOBIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 20th, you state:

> "In an opinion rendered by you January 10, 1913, you held that by virtue of the adoption of proposal No. 32 of the constitutional amendments, sections Nos. 3375 to 3384 of the General Code were repealed (by implication).
>
> "The legislature passed an act repealing said sections Nos. 3375 et seq., which applied to the two days' labor upon the public highway. This act was filed with the secretary of state May 10, 1913, and not being an emergency act, did not become effective until August 8, 1913.
> "Upon this state of the law I desire your opinion as to whether or not the men who performed their two days' labor on the public highways between January 1, 1913, and August 8, 1913, are entitled to compensation therefor from the township treasury? I have held that they are not, but don't feel very certain of being correct."

The effect of the adoption of proposal No. 32, as held in my former opinion to which you refer, was to render inoperative sections 3375 to 3384, General Code, which provided for two days' labor on the highways, or, in lieu thereof, payment of the sum of $3.00. This constitutional amendment was self-executing and therefore needed no legislation to carry it into effect. Township trustees and other officers have been without any authority whatever to require the performance of labor on the highways since January 1, 1913, when proposal No. 32 went into effect. This is true notwithstanding the act of the legislature repealing the statute providing for such labor, did not go into effect until August 1, 1913. The purpose of this act was to get sections 3375 et seq., off the books; it did not operate to keep these sections in force until 90 days after the act was filed in the office of the secretary of state, as would have been the case had not the constitution been amended so as to render them invalid.

As there is no provision of law therefor, I am of the opinion that those who performed such labor on the highways after January 1, 1913, are not entitled to compensation from the township treasury.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMBER OF COUNCIL—REMOVAL FROM WARD—FORFEITURE OF OFFICE.

Where a councilman changes his residence from the ward in which he has been elected to an adjoining ward, he forfeits his office under the provision of section 4207, General Code, and his subsequent return to his former ward would not reinstate him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. EDWARD A. BINYON, Solicitor of the City of East Cleveland, Society for Savings Bldg, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 13th, wherein you request an opinion upon the following:

> "At the last November election, Albert T. Wagner was elected councilman from the fourth ward of the city of East Cleveland. On or about the first day of April, he made a verbal lease with one Alfred Wonderlich for one year for a dwelling situated in the third ward of East Cleveland and at about the same time removed his family together with all his furniture and personal effects to the residence in the third ward. He made written application to the East Ohio Gas Company and the gas was turned on and charged to him. He has been living there with his family ever since and sleeps there also. A number of friends have called upon him and have found him there with his family. The property he formerly occupied in the third ward has been rented to another tenant. He maintains no home or residence at the present time in the fourth ward. However, upon learning that some of his constitutents in the fourth ward are raising the question of his removal from the fourth ward as forming the foundation for the forfeiture of his office as councilman, he thereupon leased in writing a partly finished dwelling house in the fourth ward but has not and will not be able to take possession of it for about a month to come. In the meantime a petition has been filed with the council of the city of East Cleveland calling the council's attention to Mr. Wagner's removal and asking the council to fill the vacancy."

The qualifications of a city councilman are set forth in section 4207 of the General Code, as follows:

> "Councilmen-at-large shall have resided in their respective cities, and councilmen from wards shall have resided in their respective wards, for at least one year next preceding their election. Each member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, and shall not be interested in any contract with the city. A member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required, or removes from his ward, if elected from a ward, or from the city, if elected from the city at large, shall forthwith forfeit his office."

It will be noted that the removal of a ward councilman from the ward from which he was elected, works a forfeiture of his office forthwith.

Upon the facts detailed in your letter, I am clearly of the opinion that Mr. Wagner forfeited his office as councilman when he removed from the fourth ward, from which he was elected, to the third ward. His subsequent lease of property in the fourth ward did not operate to restore him to the office he had forfeited. A vacancy exists which should be filled in the manner prescribed by section 4236 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—ORDINANCE—FRANCHISE—CONTRACT—LEGAL CONTRACT.

1st. Where a village council granted to a certain electric light company a franchise in the village streets for municipal lighting purposes and the ordinance was silent as to the duration of the franchise rights of the company, and did not fix any rates for private or commercial lighting, but did fix the rates for municipal lighting for a period of ten years, the said ordinance was accepted and acted upon by the company. At three different times the village council without mentioning the franchise rights of the company, fixed rates for both municipal and private lighting for stated periods of five years each. The lighting company by the ordinance granting a franchise did not get a perpetual franchise in the streets, but its franchise rights were co-extensive with its contract rights and obligations under the several ordinances fixing rates accepted by the company, and the question whether the company now has valid franchise rights in the village depends upon whether they have valid contractual relations with the village under the ordinance fixing the rates for public and private lighting.

2nd. Section 4221, General Code, has no application to contracts of this kind, the last ordinance under which the company was operated granted that the same should go into effect at a date which was subsequent to the expiration of the terms of members of council, as passed by ordinance.

3rd. The village council paying for a time the price stipulated for municipal lighting, under an invalid and illegal contract, is not estopped to question the validity of such contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. CLYDE MERCHANT, Village Solicitor, Orrville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of November 13, 1913, in which you ask my opinion on certain questions therein stated as follows:

> "(1) Under an ordinance granting the right to a company to use the streets of a village for the purpose of conveying electricity for light and power purposes, in which ordinance no time is specified as to the duration of such right, can the village council refuse to establish rates for private lighting, refuse to contract for street lighting with said company and compel the said company to remove its poles and vacate the street under the law as laid down in the case of the East Ohio Gas Company vs. Akron, 81 O. S., 33.
> "(2) Is it mandatory upon a village council to comply with the provisions of General Code, section 4221 in making expenditures for street lighting purposes?

"(3) Is a contract entered into by a village council with a light company valid and legal, which contract does not go into effect until six months after the expiration of the terms of the members of council that made the contract?

"(4) Will a village council, by paying the price for street lights stipulated in an invalid and illegal contract between the village and the light company, ratify and affirm and thereby make legal and valid such lighting contract?"

With the formal questions above stated upon which my opinion is asked, you submit a brief and copies of ordinances passed from time to time by the village council making provision for municipal lighting, from which it appears that the electric light plant in Orrville was constructed in 1892, after the passage of an ordinance the same year purporting to grant to the owners of the plant a franchise in the use of the streets and other public places of the village for the erection of poles, wires and other appliances for the transmission of electricity for lighting purposes; that in this ordinance lamp rates were fixed for public lighting, and the same has been done in subsequent ordinances, which, unlike the first ordinance, also fix rates for private lighting. It also appears that the ownership of the plant has changed from time to time, and that at no time has the village made any contracts with the owners of the plant for electricity for either public or private use, other than the contracts or obligations to be inferred from the passage of said ordinances and the acceptance thereof by the company.

At the time the first ordinance above noted was passed, the following pertinent statutory provisions were in force:

"Section 3471-3 R. S. (9195, G. C.). A company organized for the purpose of supplying electricity for power purposes, and for lighting the streets and public and private buildings of a city, village or town, may manufacture, sell and furnish the electric light and power required therein for such and other purposes, and such companies may construct lines for conducting electricity for power and light purposes through the streets, alleys, lanes, lands, squares and public places of such city, village or town, by the erection of the necessary fixtures, including posts, piers and abutment necessary for the wires, with the consent of the municipal authorities of the city, village or town, and under such reasonable regulations as they may prescribe."

Section 2491, R. S. (3994, G. C.):

"A municipal corporation may contract with such company for supplying with electric light, natural or artificial gas for the purpose of lighting (or heating) the streets, squares and other public places and buildings in the corporation limits; but this section shall be subject to the restrictions in the last clause of section thirty-five hundred and fifty-one."

The last clause of section 3551, R. S., referred to in section 2491 provided that no such company shall go into operation in any city or village where such a corporation has been already formed, until the question of authorizing such operation has been submitted to the qualified voters. This statutory provision has since been dropped from our statute laws.

Section 8753 Giauque (83 O. L., 143, Section 2):

"The municipal authorities of any city, village or town, in which any electric light company is organized, may contract with any such company for lighting the streets, squares, alleys, lands, lanes and public places in such village, city or town."

Section 2478, R. S. (3982, G. C.):

"The council of any city or village in which electric lighting companies * * * may be established, or into which their wires * * * may be conducted, are hereby empowered to regulate, from time to time, the price which said electric lighting * * * companies may charge for electric light furnished by such companies to the citizens, public grounds and buildings, streets, lanes, alleys, avenues, wharves and landing places; and such electric lighting, * * * companies shall in no event charge more for any electric light * * * than the price specified by ordinance of such council."

In 1902, the legislature enacted what is now section 3809, G. C., which provides:

"The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation * * * for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury shall not apply to such contract."

In 1904 (97 O. L., 263), section 2479, R. S. (3983, G. C.), was amended so as to apply for the first time to electric light companies as follows:

"If council fixes the price at which it shall require a company to furnish electricity * * * to the citizens or public buildings or for the purpose of lighting the streets, alleys, avenues, wharves, landing places, public grounds or other places or for other purposes, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the company or person so to furnish such electricity * * * assents thereto, by written acceptance, filed in the office of the auditor or clerk of the corporation, the council shall not require such company to furnish electricity * * * at a less price during the period of time agreed on, not exceeding ten years."

I take it that the first question submitted has reference solely to the ordinance of 1892, purporting to grant a franchise in the use of the village streets for electric light and power purposes, and to the proceedings under the same; as the subsequent ordinances all fix rates for both public and private lighting for fixed periods of time.

It does not, on the facts presented, affirmatively appear that this ordinance was accepted in writing as contemplated by its provisions. But no formal written acceptance of the provisions of a franchise ordinance is necessary, if the facts show an actual practical acceptance by the company, and the use of the franchise will be considered such acceptance; while the acquiescence by the municipality in the use of such franchise is a waiver of a provision in the ordinance requiring a written acceptance.

U. S. Telephone Co. vs. Hopkins, 160 Cal., 106.
Superior vs. Douglas Co. Tel. Co., 122 N. W., 106.
Postal Tel Co. vs. Newport, 25 Ky. Law Rep., 635.

One of the syllabi in the case of Lima Gas Company vs. Lima, 4 C. C., 22, seems opposed to the authorities just noted. But the syllabus in question is hardly supported by the text of the opinion of the court, nor at all by the statue upon which the opinion of the court and the syllabus as well are based.

The statute referred to, to wit: section 1693, R. S., since repealed, expended its force in prescribing the manner in which contracts were to be executed on behalf of the municipality; it made no direction as to the manner in which such contracts should be executed or accepted by the other contracting party.

Your question assumes that the village in granting the franchise refused to contract for public lighting. As to this, I am not advised with respect to municipal lighting, any contract is contemplated as necessary other than an ordinance fixing rates therefor, and its acceptance by the company, whether such rates be fixed in an ordinance granting a franchise in the first instance, or in an ordinance regulating the rates of an established company under the legislative powers granted by section 3982, General Code (2478, R. S.).

East Ohio Gas Co. vs. Akron, 81 O. S., 33.
State ex rel. vs. Ironton Gas Co., 37 O. S., 45, 48.
Van Wert vs. Van Wert Pub. Service Co. (21 O. D., 526).

The circumstances that no provision was made in the ordinance in question as to rates for private lighting is not of vital importance on any question here presented; for in the absence of accepted ordinance rates, if the company furnished electricity for private lighting at all, it would have to do so at reasonable rates.

Ry. Co. vs. Bowling Green, (57 O. S., 336, 345).

It appears that no specific period of time was mentioned in the ordinance of 1892 as to the duration of the franchise rights of the company, and, as I see it, the practical query is whether under this ordinance the company, in erecting and constructing its polls and wires in the streets, obtained any rights therein other than those of a mere licensee which might be revoked at will by the municipality.

In the case of the City of Wellston vs. Morgan (59 O. S., 147), is was held:

> "Where a statute gives power to a municipal corporation to contract for the lighting of its streets and other public grounds for a period not exceeding ten years, the conclusive implication is that such corporation is forbidden to contract for a longer period. And where such corporation undertakes, by the passage of an ordinance, to contract with an electric light company for an exclusive privilege to such company for the use of its streets, and stipulating for the lighting of the street, et cetera, for ninety-nine years, at a given price per month, such ordinance is ultra vires and void, and the contractual stipulations contained therein are equally void, and neither party can enforce them."

Under the facts of the case just cited, the court, in its opinion, held "that the action of the city in permitting the company to place its polls, etc., in the streets, gave to the company the position of a licensee as to the occupancy of the streets, but that its rights would not be based upon contract, but would result from the conduct of the city in giving consent to the erection of the same."

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Ironton Gas Co., supra, the statute fixed the contract term at ten years. The contract between the city and the company was for a period of twenty years. The agreement was performed for a period of ten years without question, and it was held that after this period the company had no right under the agreement which could prevent the city fixing the price at which gas should thereafter be furnished.

In Cincinnati Gas Light and Coke Company vs. Avondale (43 O. S., 257), where the contract term for lighting was fixed by statute at ten years, it was held "that a contract which was to continue indefinitely at the option of the company was ultra vires."

In the case of Boise Water Company vs. Boise City (230 U. S., 84), the court held:

> "When there is a limitation in the law of the state of the duration for which easements in streets can be granted by municipalities, an easement granted for an indefinite period continues for the period specified. There is a distinction between a definite grant for a period longer than the laws of the state permit and an indefinite grant; while the former may be altogether void as an effort to obtain that which is illegal, the latter is simply limited in duration to the period established by law."

With respect to the ordinance in question, however, it does not appear that at the time of its passage there was any statute which limited the term for which the village might contract for electric lighting. Aside from the provisions of section 2491-1, R, S., applying only to cities of the fourth grade of the second class, I know of no statutory provision in force in 1892 limiting the term of municipal electric lighting contracts. This being the situation, the village could have contracted for any length of time, free from fraudulent purpose upon the part of the council in protecting the rights of the people (4 C. C., 22, 26). However, the ordinance is silent as to the term of duration of the franchise.

Meeting this situation, the authorities are in conflict. Some hold that the franchise granted is perpetual (111 N. Y., 1; 151 Fed. Rep., 854). Other authorities limit the time of the franchise to the corporate life of the grantee when that is limited by law (124 Mich., 43; 179 Fed. Rep., 455). Again it is held that the grantee takes the franchise granted for a reasonable period of time, the same to be determined by a consideration of the investment of the company and the other facts and circumstances of the case. (Barre vs. Perry, 82 Vt., 301).

In the case of East Ohio Gas Company vs. Akron (81 O. S., 33), the ordinance like that here presented was silent as to the duration of the franchise, but expressed a contract between the parties regulating the rates to be charged for a period of ten years. The court held that the city had the power to regulate rates for gas after the lapse of the period contracted for, but that the city could not compel the company to accept such rates if it chose to voluntarily forfeit its right to exercise its franchise privileges and withdraw from the municipality. On this point the court in its opinion (p. 53) says:

> "It comes to this, that in the absence of limitations as to time, the termination of the franchise is indefinite and, to preserve mutuality in the contract, the franchise can continue only so long as both parties are consenting thereto. Or, to state it concretely, the contract being silent as to the duration of the franchise and the ten-year agreement as to the price of gas having expired, the city may, under its power of regulation, impose new conditions as to price and the gas company may accept or reject these. If the refusal to comply is final, the company necessarily incurs the penalty of forfeiture of its franchise to serve the people of the city; but on the other hand, there being no provision to that effect in the original contract, the city cannot directly or indirectly deprive the gas company of its property without due process of law, when the latter withdraws from the further exercise of its franchise."

With respect to the question presented by your inquiry, it cannot be held that under the ordinance in question, the company took a perpetual franchise. (81 O. S., 52.) Neither am I prepared to hold that the company, after establishing its plant and erecting its polls and wires on the faith of this ordinance fixing rates for municipal lighting for a period of ten years, possessed only the rights of a licensee. It had rights which it took by grant under the ordinance; such rights being absolute for the period of time during which it was obligated to furnish municipal lighting at the rates fixed in the ordinance. After this, its franchise rights were indefinite as to duration, depending upon mutual agreement of the parties; but while it exercised the franchise granted, it did so as a matter of right. (Barre vs. Perry, supra.)

As far as I am able to see, however, from the facts submitted, the consideration arising from the circumstance that this ordinance of 1892 was silent as to the duration of the company's franchise is immaterial as far as the present situation is concerned, only in case it is determined that there are no valid contractual rights existing between the parties under the ordinance last passed and accepted. When this ordinance of 1892 was passed, the sole authority of the village to stipulate as to rates for electric lighting was by contract, but as soon as the company established its plant and commenced furnishing electricity for public or private lighting, or both, it became a public utility subject to the legislative power of the council of the village to regulate rates granted to it by section 2478, R. S., (3982 G. C.); and the village could, after the lapse of the contract period, regulate rates for electricity thereafter furnished for lighting purposes as its council saw fit, aside from constitutional limitations and aside from fraud or bad faith. These rates so fixed, the company at its option, could either accept or reject. If these rates were rejected by the company, that act would terminate its franchise rights in the streets. In this connection, I note that the company was permitted to exercise its franchise rights under the ordinance of 1892 until 1902, when the council of the village passed an ordinance fixing rates for public and private or commercial lighting for a period of five years from July 15, 1902. This ordinance was duly accepted in writing, and the rights of the parties became thereby fixed for the period named in the ordinance. Thereafter, in 1906, an ordinance was passed fixing rates for five years from July 15, 1907, as to both public and private lighting under which, I infer, the company was permitted to exercise its franchise and furnish electricity at the rates specified until July 15, 1912. Since this time, I take it, that the company has been exercising its franchise and operating under the ordinance of March, 1910, fixing rates for public and private service for a period of five years from July 15, 1912. Though the original ordinance of 1892 was silent as to the duration of the company's franchise, and the subsequent ordinance have not referred in terms to the matter of the company's franchise at all, yet the company all this time has been permitted to exercise this franchise under accepted ordinances fixing rates for limited periods of time. These accepted ordinances whether they constituted a contract, or rested only on the mutual obligation imposed by statute, carried with them a right in the company to exercise its franchise for the purpose of discharging the obligation imposed. This brings the whole question down to the question of the validity of the last ordinance with respect to which the remaining questions submitted by you are pertinent.

It cannot be said that the company now has any franchise rights by way of express grant. If the relation sought to be established between the city and the company by the ordinance of March, 1910, and the written acceptance of its terms, is in all respects effective, valid and enforcible, such relation would carry with it a franchise right for the company to use the village streets, etc., for the purpose of carrying out its obligation with respect to municipal and private lighting. If, on the other hand, the company has no valid and enforcible rights under this ordinance, it has no franchise rights in the city streets, and the village may terminate its relation with the company.

Wellston vs. Morgan, 59 O. S., 147.
Akron Gas Co. vs. Akron, 81 O. S., 33.

Pertinent to this consideration the second formal question made in your inquiry is with reference to the application of section 4221, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "All contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk. When any expenditure other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such contracts shall be in writing and made with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the village. The bids shall be opened at twelve o'clock noon on the last day for filing them, by the clerk of the village and publicly read by him."

An examination of the provisions of this section and those of sections 4222 and 4223, General Code, read in connection with the provisions of sections 3809 and 3994, General Code, convinces me that section 4221 has no application to the contracts for municipal lighting authorized by the two sections last named.

Sections 4222 and 4223 by appropriate reference were enacted with section 4221 (96 O. L., 83, section 198).

An examination of the provisions of previous sections shows that they were intended to apply to contracts altogether different from those for municipal lighting extending over a period of years. Again, section 3809 provides that a council of a village may make a contract for lighting with any person, firm or company; while section 3994 authorizes a municipal corporation to make a contract for municipal lighting with any company. The general provisions of section 4221 that contracts shall be made with the lowest and best bidder is hardly compatible with the provisions of sections 3809 and 3994, authorizing contracts for municipal lighting with any person, firm or company.

Sections 3809 and 3994 being special statutes on a particular subject and being incompatible in their provisions with the provisions of section 4221, they are to be read as excepted from the operation of section 4221.

Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O S., 104, 114.
State ex rel. vs. McGregor, 44 O. S., 628, 631.

Decisions holding the Burns law (section 2702, R. S., 3806, G. C.) to apply to contracts of this kind have been cited as applying by analogy to the question here presented. Without admitting the analogy, I am constrained to the opinion that the better reason is with the decisions holding the Burns law had no application to such contracts.

Definance City vs. Council, 23 C. C., 96, 99.
Defiance Water Co. vs. Defiance, 12 O. F. D., 299, 300.

Clark vs. Columbus, 23 W. L. B., 289.
Lima Gas Co. vs. Lima, 4. C. C., 22, 28.

Moreover, as I see it, section 4221 is without necessary application to the situation of facts here presented for the reason that it is not apparent that the present rates were fixed in the exercise by the village of its power to contract, but rather that such rates were fixed by council in pursuance of its legislative power under section 3982, General Code, to regulate rates, the acceptance of which bound the company to observe the rates so fixed. (3983, G. C.)

In villages the council has both contractual and legislative powers, and it is certain that however section 4221 may be otherwise construed, it is to be construed only as a limitation on the contractual powers of the council. By section 4221, General Code, it is provided that all contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and the clerk. As I understand it, under the usual and accepted procedure under this section, council by resolution determines the terms of the contract, which is formally reduced to writing, and signed by the mayor and clerk on behalf of the village, and by the other contracting parties. The procedure manifested in the enactment of this ordinance and its written acceptance bears little or no analogy to the usual and accepted procedure as to contracts under section 4221. Though the terms of this ordinance with respect to its provisions as to municipal lighting are stated to some extent in contractual terms, yet the whole bears strong indication of legislative action by council and statutory acceptance as provided for under sections 3982 and 3983, General Code.

With reference to the provisions of the ordinance as to private or commercial lighting, it is clearly legislative in character, and on the whole, such seems to be the character of the ordinance with respect to municipal lighting as well.

The third question made in your inquiry is with respect to the application of section 4241, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The council shall not enter into any contract which is not to go into full operation during the term for which all the members of such council are elected."

In the case of Logan Natural Gas & Fuel Company vs. City of Chillicothe, 65 O. S., 186, it was held:

> "When an ordinance regulating the price of gas under Revised Statutes, sections 2478 and 2479, provides that it shall be in force and take effect from and after its passage and legal promulgation, and also provides that the gas company shall be entitled to charge at a certain rate for ten years from a date later than the date of the passage and legal promulgation of the ordinance, such provision when accepted in writing by the gas company, is valid and binding for the period of ten years from the date so named. Such ordinance is not restricted by section 1691."

This decision seems to foreclose the question submitted by you. It is suggested that since this decision, the statute in question has been given a different relative position in the General Code from that occupied by it in the Revised Statutes. I do not see that the relative position of this particular statue in the two revisions is substantially different; and if it were, such circumstances would not in conformity to established rules of construction be persuasive of legislative intention to change the force and effect of the statute as construed by this decision * * * but, section 4241, like section 4221 is to be construed in any event only as a limitation on contractual power, and if I am right in the conclusion to which I have been constrained, that the ordinance in question is to be construed as an exercise of the legislative power of council to fix the rates of a company already established in the village, it is apparent that the provisions of section 4241 pass out of view in the consideration of the ultimate question whether the company now sustains valid and enforcible relations to the village with respect to municipal or private lighting, carrying with it franchise rights in the use of the city streets.

In other words, with reference to the suggested application of section 4241 to the situation here presented in the enactment and acceptance of this ordinance of March, 1910, it may be stated, pariphrasing the language of the court (65 O. S., 207), it is apparent that in regard to contracts with electric light companies, or rather ordinances regulating the price of electricity, it is otherwise provided as to such contracts or ordinances in section 2479, Revised Statutes (section 3983, G. C.).

With respect to the question here presented, I do not want to be understood as commending or approving this ordinance of 1910 in respect to its provisions as to the time when it should go into effect, but I am constrained to uphold the ordinance and the written acceptance thereof as establishing valid and enforcible legal relations between the village and the company, only by force of the decision of the supreme court before noted.

With respect to the last question submitted by you, it is to be observed that the doctrine of estoppel at best has very limited operation against municipal corporations in this state and none at all with respect to acts that are ultra vires or in opposition to or in conflict with statutes regulating such acts.

Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S., 575.
Wellston vs. Morgan, 59 O. S., 147.
Wellston vs. Morgan, 65 O. S., 219.

The two cases last cited are full authority to the point that payment by a municipality under an illegal and invalid contract does not constitute a ratification of such contract, or estop it from voiding the same.

I note that in your brief you suggest the possible invalidity of the ordinance of 1892, before mentioned, under the provisions of section 4226, General Code (R. S., 1694) which provides that no ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. This ordinance in granting a franchise and making a contract for street lighting does not, I think, offend the statute. The village cannot effectually procure lighting by a contract without granting to the company a franchise for the use of the streets and other public ways for its poles, wires and other appliances. The ordinance in question does not come within either the letter of the statute or the reasons for the same as noted in the case of Heffner vs. Toledo, 75 O. S., 413, 424, 425.

In conclusion I am constrained to the opinion on the foregoing considerations that valid and enforcible relations do exist between the company and the village by reason of the enactment of this ordinance of March, 1910, and its acceptance by the company, and that the company has franchise rights which must be taken into account in any subsequent procedure by the village.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY DITCHES—INTER-COUNTY DITCHES—ASSESSMENTS—PROCEDURE.

1st. In the improvement of ditches in a county the compensation to be assessed against the property holders benefited in the upper county in behalf of the lower county may be agreed upon by the commissioners. In the absence of such agreement the commissioners of the lower county may compel the commissioners of the upper county to assess and pay so much through proceedings in the probate court.

2nd. In reference to investigation of property holders who are assessed due process of law is satisfied if the property holder has an opportunity by a hearing in court, to object to the assessment, and this opportunity is satisfied by the right to present valid objections, such as excess of benefits, etc.

In an injunction proceeding, or in a suit to collect the taxes, however, the property holder must somewhere along the line of the proceeding have sufficient notice to enable him to be apprised of the fact that the assessment is made, and to enable him to set in motion the machinery of his objections.

This assessment must be made on the property holders in the upper county in the same proportion that they were assessed when the ditch was first located, these assessments placed upon the duplicate and collected as other taxes.

Under the provision of sections 6499 and 6500, General Code, the property holder is given an opporunity to object to assessments by injunction proceedings.

3rd. Under the provisions of the General Code the names of such property holders in the upper county must appear on the petition for ditch improvements of the lower county, and all such property holders must be notified by the county auditor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. CHARLES S. HALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney,Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your favor of February 7th, wherein you state:

> "I would like to have an opinion as to proper procedure under an act of the general assembly, found in 103 O. L., 836; and to know whether, in a case where an improvement of a stream is located entirely in Shelby county, and where Miami county, being an upper county, would be benefited by its being furnished a better outlet, and under said act an agreement would be reached between the joint boards of commissioners of Shelby and Miami counties, it would be necessary for the property owners, against whose land the amount agreed upon between the joint boards to be paid by the upper county is to be assessed, to be notified prior to the granting of said improvement. Or, would it be a compliance with the statute if the agreement between the two counties were made after the granting of the improvement, but before the sale of the improvement, without any notice to the people who would be benefited in the upper county until after the amount was agreed upon by the two boards?
> "We have a case of that kind pending in our county and the prosecuting attorney of Miami county and myself are unable to agree upon the proper step to be taken; and as this improvement will be held up until this phase of the matter is settled I would greatly appreciate an answer as soon as convenient to you."

The statutes material to the questions presented are designated in the General Code as sections 6540 to 6558. Several of the sections comprised therein have been amended, and these sections appear on pages 838 et seq., 103 Ohio Laws. The amendments therein, so far as they affect the law in question, seem to be made with the purpose of bringing within the application of these statutes not only watercourses, but also natural watercourses or living streams. The amendments, therefore, do not affect your inquiries.

Section 6540, General Code, provides a means whereby, when an improvement is contemplated, either in an upper or a lower county, which, by reason of work done or made necessary in the lower county, provides benefits for the upper county, by reason of supplying a more ample outlet for the waters of the upper county or otherwise, the commissioners of the upper county may be required to pay the commissioners of the lower county the amount required to be expended for the lower county for the benefit of the upper county.

In brief, section 6540 and the following sections of the law under consideration provide a method whereby an upper county may be compelled to pay for benefits accruing by reason of work done in a lower county, when the county commissioners fail to agree to construct a joint county ditch, in accordance with the statutory provisions having application to such work.

This law appeared in 86 Ohio Laws, 123, and was passed as a supplement to the then existing joint county ditch laws, no doubt for the reason that the existing laws provided no means whereby the ditches in contemplation of the new law could be constructed in the absence of harmonious action on the part of the commissioners of each county, since the then existing law required agreement on the part of both counties with respect to the policy of constructing the ditch, as to the route of its construction and as to practically all matters except the question of the amount of expense which was to be borne by each county.

Under section 6540, when the county commissioners come to an agreement, and the upper county pays to the lower county, in accordance with such agreement, the commissioners of the upper county shall apportion such sum to the lands of the county for whose benefit such ditch was or is constructed. Or, under section 6550, when the county commissioners have failed to agree and the court, through the appointment of freeholders, has fixed the compensation which is to be paid by the upper county, the commissioners of such upper county are required to apportion and assess the amount provided, together with the entire expense of the proceedings, to the land in said county, in a like ratio as the expense of constructing said ditch or ditches, for the improving of the channels of said river, creek or run, or part thereof, in the upper county was apportioned and assessed; and cause the sum so apportioned to the respective tracts of land in the upper county to be placed upon the special duplicate thereof against such lands for collection.

There is nothing in the statutes in question expressly requiring the commissioners of the upper county to give any notice whatsoever to the land owners who are required to bear the burden of the expense assessed against the upper county.

Sections 6556, 6557 and 6558 of the General Code are as follows:

> Section 6556. Proceedings for the construction, cleaning, repairing or enlarging, either of said ditches, or the improving of the channel of any river, creek or run or part thereof, in either the upper or lower counties, whether or not the improvement was originally made as a joint improvement by the joint board of commissioners of two or more counties, or whether or not the improvement to be made or constructed might be a joint improvement, may be commenced and conducted in the manner provided in this chapter and the laws relating to single county ditches.
> "Section 6557. In addition to the procedure provided by law for the construction enlarging, cleaning out or repairing of a ditch; or the improving of the channel of a river, creek or run or any part thereof, which furnishes or may furnish drainage in more than one county, proceeding shall be commenced and conducted in the manner provided by law for the construction of joint county ditches or the improvement of a channel of a river, creek or run or any part thereof, which is located in more than one county, when a majority of each board of commissioners of such county so agree.

"Section 6558. When the county commissioners do not agree or determine to proceed under the laws for the construction of joint county ditches and the improvement of channels, rivers, creeks, or runs or parts thereof located in more than one county, and the board of commissioners of the lower county unanimously agree that such improvement is necessary or will be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, and the line described is the best route, the proceedings in reference thereto shall be conducted as provided in this chapter and the laws for single county ditches. The proceedings shall be conducted by the commissioners of the lower county."

In sections 6556 and 6558 the words "in this chapter" read "in this act" when the statutes were first enacted in 86 Ohio laws. They refer to sections 6540 et seq., General Code. The language in section 6557, providing for procedure as provided by law for the construction of joint ditches, when a majority of each board of county commissioners agree, referred to the law existing with reference to the construction of joint ditches when sections 6540 et seq., were passed in 86 O. L. The words "in this chapter," as they now appear, therefore, clearly have reference to those provisions in this chapter which had their origin in 86 O. L., and which now appear as sections 6540 et seq.

Since your letter does not state that the county commissioners of each county have agreed to proceed in the manner provided for the construction of joint county ditches, it is surely correct to assume that the procedure contemplated is in accordance with sections 6540 et seq. The action therefore is under section 6556, General Code, above quoted.

This section incorporates the provisions pertaining to the construction of single county ditches, and the question arises whether or not such incorporation requires notice to be served upon those charged with the assessment in the upper county. The necessity of providing notice for the validity of assessment statutes is of interest. The constitutional provisions bearing upon this question are as follows:

"Article 1, Section 19. Private property shall ever be held inviolate but subservient to the public welfare. When taken in time of war, or other public exigency, imperatively requiring its immediate seizure or for the purpose of making or repairing roads, which shall be open to the public, without charge, a compensation shall be made to the owner, in money, and in all other cases, where private property shall be taken for public use, a compensation therefor shall first be made in money, or first secured by a deposit of money, and such compensation shall be assessed by a jury, without deduction for benefits to any property of the owner.

"Article 1, section 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

"Article 5. (Amendments to the United States constitution) * * * nor be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor shall property be taken for public use without just compensation."

It is well settled that private property may not be taken without notice and an opportunity for hearing, by force of section 19 of the bill of rights.

> "Due course of law means that such course of law shall be enacted as will require that he whose property is about to be taken, shall have notice of the time and place of hearing, what is sought to be appropriated, and an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf. Any law which seeks to deprive him of his property without such proceedings is in direct opposition to the letter and spirit of the constitution. McArthur vs. Kelly, 5 Ohio, 140; Foote vs. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio 408; Lamb & McKee vs. Lane, 4 O. S., 167; Watson vs. Trustees of Pleasant Township, 21 O. S., 667."
> Harrison vs. Sabina, 1 O. C. C., 49-52.

Under the statutes in question, however, a taking of property is in no wise contemplated, as is the case in the actual construction or widening or otherwise improving of a ditch in a county. The difference between a taking of property, such as requires as a condition precedent the deposit of compensation under article I, section 19, of the constitution, and as assessment for the purpose of improvement without a taking of property is well settled. The latter is in the nature of a local tax, and summary procedure for the collection thereof is justified by the decisions. The question which arises, therefore, with reference to the necessity of notice in the levying of such assessments is one which involves a construction of the constitutional provisions requiring due process of law. Upon this principle the following is of interest:

> "The objections urged to the validity of the assessment on federal grounds are substantially these: that the law under which the assessment was made and levied conflicts with the clause of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution declaring that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law; and impairs the obligation of the contract between California and the United States, that the proceeds of the swamp and overflowed lands ceded by the Arkansas act should be expended in reclaiming them.
> "That clause of the fourteenth amendment is found, in almost identical language, in the several state constitutions, and is intended as additional security against the arbitrary deprivation of life and liberty and the arbitrary spoliation of property. Neither can be taken without due process of law. What constitutes that process it may be difficult to define with precision so as to cover all cases. It is, no doubt, wiser, as stated by Mr. Justice Miller in Davidson vs. New Orleans, to arrive at its meaning 'by the gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded.' 96 U. S. 97, 104. It is sufficient to observe here, that by 'due process' is meant one which, following the forms, of law, is appropriate to the case, and just to the parties to be affected. It must be pursued in the ordinary mode prescribed by the law; it must be adopted to the end to be attained; and wherever it is necessary for the protection of the parties, it must give them an opportunity to be heard respecting the justice of the judgment sought. The clause in question means, therefore, that there can be no proceeding against life, liberty or property which may result in the deprivation of either, without the observance of those general rules established in our system of jurisprudence for the security of private rights. Hurtado vs. California, 110 U. S. 516, 536.
> "The appellant contends this fundamental principle was violated in the assessment of his property, inasmuch as it was made without notice to him, or without his being afforded any opportunity to be heard respecting it, the law authorizing it contains no provision for such notice or hearing. His contention is that notice and opportunity to be heard are essential to render any proceeding due process of law which may lead to the deprivation of life, liberty, or property. Undoubtedly where life and liberty are involved, due process requires that there be a regular course of judicial proceedings, which imply that the party to be affected shall have notice and an opportunity to be heard; so, also, where title or possession of property is involved. But where the taking of property is in the enforcement of a tax, the proceeding is necessarily less formal, and whether notice to him is at all necessary may depend upon the character of the tax, and the manner in which its amount is determinable. The necessity of revenue for the support of the government does not admit of the delay attendant upon proceedings in a court of justice, and they are not required for the enforcement of taxes or assessments. As stated by Mr. Justice Bradley, in his concurring opinion in Davidson vs. New Orleans; 'In judging what is "due process of law" respect must be had to the cause and object of the taking, whether under the taxing power, the power of eminent domain, or the power of assessment for local improvements, or some of these; and if found to be suitable or admissible in the special case, it will be adjudged to be "due process of law," but if found to be arbitrary, oppressive and unjust, it may be declared to be not "due process of law." The power of taxation possessed by the state may be exercised upon any subject within its jurisdiction, and to any extent not prohibited by the constitution of the United States.' As said by this court: 'It may touch property in every shape, in its natural condition, in its manufactured form, and in its various transmutations. And the amount of the taxation may be determined by the value of the property, or its uses, or its capacity, or its productiveness. It may touch business in the almost infinite forms in which it is conducted, in professions, in commerce, in manufactures, and in transportation. Unless restrained by provisions of the federal constitution, the power of the state, as to the mode, form and extent of taxation, is unlimited, where the subjects to which it applies are within her jurisdiction.' State tax on foreign held bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 319.

"Of the different kinds of taxes which the state may impose, there is a vast number of which, from their nature, no notice can be given to the taxpayer, nor would notice be of any possible advantage to him, such as poll taxes, license taxes (not dependent upon the extent of his business), and generally, specific taxes on things or persons, or occupations. In such cases the legislature, in authorizing the tax, fixes its amount, and that is the end of the matter. If the tax be not paid, the property of the delinquent may be sold, and he be thus deprived of his property. Yet there can be no question, that the proceeding is due process of law, as there is no inquiry into the weight of evidence, or other element of a judicial nature, and nothing could be changed by hearing the taxpayer. No right of his is, therefore, invaded. Thus, if the tax on animals be a fixed sum per head, or on articles a fixed sum per year or bushel, or gallon, there is nothing the owner can do which can affect the amount to be collected from him. So, if a person wishes a license to do business of a particular kind, or at a particular place, such as keeping a hotel or a restaurant, or selling liquors, or cigars, or clothes, he has only to pay the amount required by the law and go into the business. There is no need in such cases for notice or hearing.

So. also, if taxes are imposed in the shape of licenses for privileges, such as those on foreign corporations for doing business in the state, or domestic corporations for franchises, if the parties desire the privilege, they have only to pay the amount required. In such cases there is no necessity for notice or hearing. The amount of the tax would not be changed by it.

"But where a tax is levied on property not specifically, but according to its value, to be ascertained by assessors appointed for that purpose upon such evidence as they may obtain, a different principle comes in. The officers in estimating the value act judicially; and in most of the states provision is made for the correction of errors committed by them, through boards of revision or equalization, sitting at designated periods provided by law to hear complaints respecting the justice of the assessments. The law in prescribing the time when such complaints will be heard, gives all the notice required, and the proceeding by which the valuation is determined, though it may be followed, if the tax be not paid, by a sale of the delinquent's property, is due process of law.

"In some states, instead of a board of revision or equalization, the assessment may be revised by proceedings in the courts and be there corrected if erroneous, or set aside if invalid; or objections to the validity or amout of the assessment may be taken when the attempt is made to enforce it. In such cases all the opportunity is given to the taxpayer to be heard respecting the assessment which can be deemed essential to render the proceedings due process of law. In Davidson vs. New Orleans this court decided this precise point. In that case an assessment levied on certain real property in New Orleans for draining the swamps of that city was resisted on the ground that the proceeding deprived the owners of their property without due process of law, but the court refused to interfere, for the reason that the owners of the property had notice of the assessment and an opportunity to contest it in the courts. After stating that much misapprehension prevailed as to the meaning of the terms 'due process of law,' and that it would be difficult to give a definition that would be at once perspicuous and satisfactory the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said that it would lay down the following proposition as applicable to the case, 'That whenever by the laws of a state, or by state authority, a tax, assessment, servitude, or other burden is imposed upon property for the public use, whether it be for the whole state or of some more limited portion of the community, and those laws provide for a mode of confirming or contesting the charge thus imposed in the ordinary courts of justice, with such notice to the person, or such proceeding in regard to the property as is appropriate to the nature of the case, the judgment in such proceedings cannot be said to deprive the owner of his propery, without due process of law, however, obnoxious it may be to other objections.' (96 U. S. 97.)"

Hagar vs. Reclamation District, 111 U. S. 701-707.

The fifth paragraph of the syllabus in this case is as follows:

"A law authorizing the imposition of a tax or assessment upon property according to its value does not infringe that provision of the fourteenth amendment to the constitution, which declares that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, if the owner has an opportunity to question the validity or the amount of it, either before that amount is determined, or in subsequent proceedings for its collection."

And so it has been well settled that where the legislature sees fit to authorize assessment according to the lineal foot or upon the general duplicate, instead of upon the particular property, or partly upon one and party upon the other, or upon both, notice is not necessary; though it is clearly certain that the right of the property holder to be heard in some manner upon his right not to be assessed in excess of benefits must be safeguarded.

The second paragraph of the syllabus in the case of Gillette vs. City of Denver, 21 Federal Reporter, 822, is as follows:

"2. Sewer Assessments—Notice—When assessment is determined by a mere mathematical computation notice is unnecessary—Due process of law.

"Act of the legislature, Colorado, of February 19, 1879, amending the charter of the city of Denver, provides for the construction of sewers and the levy of assessments therefor according to area and regardless of improvements, on the petition of a majority of the property holders resident in any sewer district, or upon the recommendation of the board of health. The act also provides that, during the progress of the work, all persons interested shall have an opportunity to object to the materials used, the manner in which the work is done, or any supposed violation of the contract. Held, that the levy of the assessment being a mere mathematical computation, and as to all prior proceedings full notice is provided for, it is unnecessary that the act should provide an opportunity for lot owners to be heard on the assessments after they are levied, and that making such assessments a fixed charge against the lots, without notice or an opportunity to be heard, is not depriving the lot owners of their property without 'due process of law.'"

The following decisions are in accord, holding that where the making of an assessment is a mere matter of mathematical calculation notice is not necessary:

Armory vs. City of Keokuk, 72 Iowa, 701.
Cleveland vs. Freeble, 13 R. I., 50.
Mayor of Baltimore vs. Johns-Hopkins Hospital 56 Md., 701.
Bumont vs. Wilkesbarre 142 Pa. St., 198-216.
Adams vs. Fisher, 63 Texas, 651-658.

In Ohio these principles are summed up in the following cases:
In Adler vs. Whitbeck, 44 O. S., 539-570, the court says:

"The result of the decisions of the supreme federal tribunal in giving a construction to this amendment, so far as it affects the revenue laws of a state, is summed up by the learned author from whom we have before quoted, in his work on taxation, at page 51. By these decisions such laws may be in harmony with that amendment, though they do not provide for giving a party an opportunity to be present when the tax is assessed against him, and to be there heard, if they give him the right to be heard afterward in a suit to enjoin the collection in which both the validity of the tax, and the amount of it, may be contested; and it is immaterial to this question that the party to the suit is required, as in other injunction cases, to give security when instituting the suit."

In Caldwell vs. Carthage, 49 O. S. 349, the court per Dickman, J., says:

"The inquiry is suggested, what is the remedy by which, in Ohio, the property owner may test the illegality of an assessment? By section 5848 of the Revised Statutes, 'courts of common pleas and superior courts shall have jurisdiction to enjoin the illegal levy of taxes and assessments.' An opportunity is here afforded to establish the invalidity of the tax or assessment; and with such privilege, if judgment is rendered against the property owner in the suit, it cannot be properly said that his rights of property have been determined without due process of law or judicial investigation. Tone vs. Columbus, 39 O. S., 301, 302; Stephan vs. Daniels, 27 O. S., 536; Stesse vs. Oviatt, 24 O. S., 253. Between the passage of the condemnation and assessment ordinances and an advertisement of a tax sale, ample time elapses, and ample notice of the proceedings to appropriate and assess is provided for to enable the owner to go into court, and contest the assessment by application for injunction.

"If special assessments are not paid by the time stipulated in the ordinance providing for the same, they may be recovered by suit, or the lien therefor may be enforced in the name of the corporation against the property owners. Revised Statutes, sections 2285, 2286, 2294. And in a suit to recover the assessment or to enforce the lien therefor, the owner of the property assessed may set up in defense the illegality of the assessment. In Murdock vs. Cincinnati, 25 W. L. B. 26, U. S. Circuit, S. D. O., it was said by Jackson, J., 'It appears that the city of Cincinnati is now proceeding by civil suit in the state courts, against complainant, to collect the assessment in question. To that suit complainant may interpose any and all defenses going either to the validity or regularity of such assessments. Such suit gives him a full opportunity to be heard, and affords him the privilege of presenting every objection that can possibly be made, either under the constitution of the United States, or under the constitution and laws of Ohio, to the validity of the assessment. It cannot be questioned that the judgment which may be rendered against complainant in said suit, will constitute 'due process of law.' If the owner of assessed property may have the benefit of the law of the land or due process of law, in a suit against him by the corporation making the assessment, he may also have the benefit in a suit by himself against the corporation, wherein the same questions can be determined."

The second paragraph of the syllabus in this case is as follows:

"Where land is appropriated for a street improvement, an assessment by the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement, to pay the cost thereof, without the passage, notice and publication of such preliminary resolution, as thus provided, will not thereby be a taking of property without due process of law, in violation of section 1 of the 14th amendment of the constitution of the United States."

To the same effect, see: Finnell vs. Kates, 19 O. S., 405; and Cuff vs. Board of Commissioners of Seneca County, 19 O. S., 181-183.

In the case of Railroad Co. vs. Keith, 67 O. S., 279, however, the third paragraph of the syllabus is as follows:

"It is necessary to the validity of an assessment on real estate, other than general taxes, that somewhere along the line of the proceedings, notice be given to the owner, and an opportunity afforded him to be heard in opposition or defense."

In this case the railroad company, by the statute, after failure to build a ditch within ten days after receipt of notice, could be compelled, by the probate judge of the county, to either build the ditch or to pay the cost of building the same, without any right to be heard during the proceedings. In short, the judgment of a court for the expenses incurred in building the ditch could be entered up against a railroad without any right whatever to be heard on the part of the defendant.

The situation in this case is to be distinguished from the statutes in question, which provide for collection of taxes through tax authorities, and in no wise allows an uncontested judgment of court to be entered against the property holders. The authorities above set out will establish that notice may be dispensed with when the making of assessments is a matter of mere mathematical calculation, provided opportunity is given the property holder to be heard and to defend in a suit for collection of the taxes, or by injunction against encroachments which are clearly contrary to due process of law. The proviso is clearly laid down everywhere, that the right to defend against an assessment in excess of benefits or otherwise in violation of state constitutional provisions, or other provisions of the law of the land entitling the property holder to protection. Such a right to be heard necessarily involves sufficient notice to enable the property holder to set in motion the machinery for his defense.

Under the statutes in question, in view of section 6550, the county commissioners of the upper county, in the making of an assessment, have merely to make a mathematical calculation; that is, they must apportion the amount assessed against the upper county to the land in the upper county in the same manner that the expense of constructing the ditch or ditches was apportioned. These statutes furthermore, under section 6499 and section 6500 of the General Code, provide a means to the property holder of defending against undue process of law. These statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 6499. The collection of taxes or assessments levied or ordered to be levied, to pay for the location or construction of a ditch, shall not be perpetually enjoined, nor declared void, in consequence of an error committed by the surveyor or engineer, the county auditor, or the county commissioners, in the location or establishment thereof; nor by reason of an error or informality appearing on the record of the proceedings to locate or establish it; nor by reason of an error committed by the surveyor or engineer, the county auditor, or county commissioners, in respect to the letting of uncompleted work, or the levy of a tax or assessment for the labor and expense of construction of an uncompleted portion, section, or allotment of such ditch.

"Sec. 6500. The court, in which a proceeding is brought to recover a tax or assessment paid, or to declare void the proceedings to locate or establish a ditch, or to enjoin a tax or assessment levied or ordered to be levied to pay for the labor and expense therefor, if there is manifest error in the proceedings, shall allow the plaintiff in the action to show that he has been injured thereby, and, on application of either party, may appoint such person or persons to examine or survey the premises, or both. The court shall allow parol testimony that said improvement is necessary and will be conducive to the public health, convenience, or welfare, and that any acts required by law for an improvement have been substantially complied with, notwithstanding the record required to be kept by any board or officer; and, without finding error, the court may correct a gross injustice in the apportionment made by the commissioners. On final hearing, the court shall make such order in the premises as is just and equitable, and may order that such tax or assessment remain on the duplicate for collection, or order it to be levied, or perpetually enjoin it, or part thereof, or, if it has been paid under protest, order the whole, or such part thereof, as is just and equitable, to be refunded. The cost of such proceeding shall be apportioned among the parties, or paid out of the county treasury, as justice requires."

The one question presented, therefore, is whether or not these statutes in any way afford sufficient notice to the property holder to enable him to take advantage of the matters provided for by sections 6499 and 6500. In these statutes there is no provision for collection of the assessments, otherwise than by placing upon the duplicate and collecting the same as other taxes are collected. There is no provision for notice to the property holder and opportunity to pay, as in the provisions relating to improvements in a municipality; nor is there any provision for suit against the property holder, wherein defenses may be set up.

That the assessments are to be placed upon the duplicate, to be collected as other taxes, is made clear from a review of the following sections of the General Code:

"Sec. 6465. The county commissioners shall direct the auditor to issue an order on the county treasurer to each of the several claimants to whom compensation or damages was allowed for the amount due, and enter on the ditch duplicate the amounts assessed against the several benefited land owners, for the payment of such compensation and damages, payable in the ratio and manner as other assessments, and to be collected as other taxes.

"Sec. 6478. If the jury finds that the improvement is necessary, and will be conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, and is practicable, the county commissioners shall apportion the compensation and damages as provided by law in cases where no appeal is taken. They shall also assess and apportion the costs as directed by the probate court, and order the auditor to place them on the duplicate to be collected as other taxes. In addition thereto, they may sue upon the bond given for the payment of costs, and execution may be sued out of the probate court for the collection of costs taxed against any person, as provided in the next preceding section. Costs taxed against the commissioners shall be paid out of the general county ditch funds.

"Section 6490. When the county commissioners make an assessment they shall cause an entry to be made, directing the auditor to make and furnish to the treasurer of the county a special duplicate with the assessment arranged thereon, as required by their order. The auditor shall retain a copy thereof in his office, and all assessments shall be collected and accounted for by the treasurer as taxes. When an assessment remains unpaid for one year after it is placed upon the special duplicate, unless otherwise ordered by the commissioners, it shall be placed on the general duplicate for collection, together with a penalty of not less than six per cent. annually, as county ditch taxes, and the amount of delinquent tax thus placed on the general duplicate shall be charged respectively to the several ditches on account of which such assessment has been made as a transfer from the county ditch fund.

"Sec. 6512. The commissioners of a county wherein a ditch improvement is ordered, whether the construction of a new ditch or the deepening, widening, straightening, or alteration of an old ditch, shall provide a suitable book in which to keep the ditch accounts of the county. The auditor shall open therein an account with each improvement, in the name by which it is known, and charge all assessments and credit all payments made in the case. The money collected on each improvement shall constitute a special fund; and the provisions of this section shall apply in cases of ditches located by the commissioners of more than one county in joint session."

Keeping in view this situation, the opinion of Justice Jackson, in Scott vs. Toledo, 6 O. F. D., 192, has a very definite bearing. The second paragraph of the syllabus is as follows:

"The fact that two modes for the collecton of an assessment, made without notice or opportunity to be heard, provide for proceedings in court in which defense may be made is not sufficient to make an assessment valid as imposed by due process of law, if the statute allows a third mode of collection by placing the amount upon the tax list and collecting it in the same manner as state and county taxes."

The following excerpts are taken from the opinion, pages 206-209:

"Nor is it any longer an open question that the provision of the federal constitution prohibiting the states from depriving any person of his property 'without due process of law' applies to taxation by the state or its subordinate agencies, and that, in respect to all such taxation based on values and apportionment, and involving judicial or quasi judicial ascertainment and determination as to the amount to be imposed upon the citizen or made a charge upon his property, 'due process of law demands and requires that, at some stage in the proceeding before the tax charge or assessment is fixed and made final and collected, he shall have notice, or an opportunity to be heard in reference thereto. This subject has been so ably and exhaustively discussed and considered in numerous recent decisions of the federal and state courts that little or nothing remains to be added; nor is it deemed necessary to extend this opinion by quoting at length from those authorities which establish the general proposition that it is essential to the validity of state taxation other than that of a personal character, such as licenses for privileges, or the exercise of franchises, that the taxpayer shall, at some stage in the proceeding, have notice or an opportunity to be heard; that if such notice is not given, or opportunity afforded to be heard, either in levying or collecting the tax, the proceeding will be wanting in that 'due process of law' necessary to give it validity under the federal constitution. The legislature may prescribe the kind of notice and the mode in which it shall be given, 'but it cannot dispense with all notice.' The owner must in some form, in some tribunal or before some official authorized to correct errors or mistakes, have an opportunity afforded him to be heard in respect to the proceeding under which his property is to be taken or burden, before the tax or assessment becomes final and effectual, in order to constitute such procedure 'due process of law.' If the tax or assessment can, under the state law, be enforced or collected only by legal proceedings, in which any and all defenses, going either to the validity or amount of such tax or assessment, may be made, that will afford the opportunity to be heard, and in such cases the proceeding cannot be said to deprive the owner of his property 'without due process of law,' however objectionable or unjust it may be otherwise. In the application of these principles there is no distinction between taxation upon values for general purposes and special assessments based upon benefits. The authorities supporting these proposition are the following: Kennard vs. Louisiana, 92 U. S., 482; McMillen vs. Anderson, 95 U. S., 40-42; Davidson vs. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 104, 105; Hagar vs. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S. 707-711, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep., 663; Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, 115 U. S. 335 336, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep., 57; Williams vs. County of Albany, 122 U. S., 164, 165, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep., 1244; Spencer vs. Mercant, 125 U. S., 354, 355, 358, 361, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep., 921; Stuart vs. Palmer, 74 N. Y., 183; Railroad Tax Cases, 13 Fed. Rep., 751-753, 762-766; County of Santa Clara vs. Railroad Co., 18 Fed. Rep., 410-412, 416-424; Cooley, Taxation, 266; Welty, Assessment, sections 250 253, and cases cited. In the cases of Hagar vs. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S., 701, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, and County of Santa Clara vs. Railroad Co., 18 Fed. Rep. 409, the distinction between a tax or assessment which calls for no inquiry, nor for anything in the nature of judicial examination before levy and collection, and a tax or assessment imposed upon property according to its value or special benefits resulting thereto, to be ascertained by assessors or other officials upon inquiry or evidence, is pointed out and considered with reference to the necessity for notice or opportunity for hearing. In the former class of cases it is suggested that, as notice would be of no service to the individual, and no hearing could change the result, as in taxes for licenses and the exercise of franchises, such notice or an opportunity to be heard may be dispensed with; but that in the latter class of taxes and assessments, based upon values or benefits which involve inquiry, notice or an opportunity for hearing is essential, to render the proceeding valid. Counsel for defendant claims the benefit of this distinction in the present case, and insists that, as notice would have been of no service to complainants, and no hearing could have changed the results, they were therefore not entitled to such notice or hearing. But this position ignores the fact that the assessment in question falls within the latter class of cases, in which inquiry as to benefits is involved; section 2283 directing in express terms that, 'so far as practicable under the provisions of this title, regard must be had, in making special assessments, to the probable benefits to the property assessed.' This requirement of the statute, that regard should be had 'to the probable benefits to the property assessed' in making these special assessments necessarily involved inquiry or consideration of benefits, which rested upon facts or evidence, and called for the exercise of a quasi judicial determination, like taxation based upon values to be ascertained by assessors.

"It admits, therefore, of little or no question, that the assessment under consideration was of that character which entitled complainants to notice, or an opportunity to be heard in respect thereto, in order to give it validity, or make the proceeding conform to due process of law. * * * An assessment so made is wanting in 'due process of law' if its collection can be enforced otherwise than by suit or legal proceedings in which all defenses to its validity or amount could be raised. * * * or, thirdly, the common council may certify any unpaid assessment to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount so certified is to be placed upon the tax list, with ten per cent. penalty, and to be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes (section 2295), which are collected either by suit, by forfeiture and sale of the land, or by distraint of sufficient goods and chattels belonging to the person charged with such taxes or assessments. In the first two methods of collection to which the common council could or might resort, the notice provided for or required would constitute 'due process of law' under the authorities above cited; but if, instead of resorting to these methods of collection, the corporation selected, as it might, the third remedy for the enforcement of the assessment, then the owners would be deprived of any opportunity to be heard in regard to the assessment, either as to its validity or amount, and this would violate the requirements of 'due process of law.' In this respect the present case is distinguishable from that of Hagar vs. Reclamation Dist., 111 U. S., 711, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663, and other like cases, relied upon by counsel for defendant, in which the assessment complained of was enforceable only by legal proceedings in which any defense either to the validity or amount could be pleaded. The common council of Toledo having made the assessment in question without notice to, or an opportunity for hearing by, complainants, and having the right to enforce its collection by distraining and selling their property, without resorting to any suit which would give them an opportunity to interpose any defense either to the validity or amount of said assessment, its action in the premises, even if authorized by the statutes of Ohio, is wanting in that 'due process of law' required by the federal constitution before depriving the citizen of his property."

It is clear, therefore, that for the validity of the statutes in question, it is absolutely essential, under the authorities, that such notice be given the property holder as will entitle him to be advised of the assessment against him prior to the sale of his propery for the payment of the tax. If such notice cannot be found in these statutes they must be deemed invalid.

In Cuff vs. State, 52 O. S., 361, the per curiam opinion is as follows:

"The act entitled an act, supplementary to chapter one, title six of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, 86 Ohio Laws, 123, and the amendments of sections one, two, three and ten, 90 Ohio Laws, 81, providing for the payment by the upper county to the lower county of the cost of outlet ditches, are in every respect valid enactments; and upon failure on the part of the probate judge of the upper county, on notice from the probate judge of the lower county, to appoint freeholders, as provided in said act, such probate judge of such upper county may be compelled by mandamus to make such appointment."

In view of these decisions, we must conclude that these statutes do provide notice somewhere enabling the property holder to defend against matters threatening his rights guaranteed under due process of law. A liberal construction is therefore justified having for its effect the provision of such notice.

Under section 6556 of the General Code, above quoted, and under which statute your board proceeded, the laws relating to single county ditches are incorporated into the statutes providing compensation by the upper county to the lower county.

The provisions for notice in single county ditch proceedings are as follows:

"Section 6447. A petition shall be filed with the county auditor setting forth the necessity and benefits of the improvement and describing the beginning, route and termini thereof. It shall also contain the names of the persons and corporations, public or private, who, in the opinion of the petitioner or petitioners, are in any way affected or benefited thereby.

* * * If the name of a person or corporation, either public or private, in any way affected by the proposed improvement, is omitted from the petition, the county commissioners, upon discovering that such omission has been made, shall supply such name, and cause notice to be served as herein provided.

"Section 6448. The county auditor shall thereupon give notice to the commissioners of the filing of such petition, together with a copy thereof. He shall fix a day for the hearing thereon not more than thirty days from the date of such notice. The auditor shall prepare and deliver to the petitioners, or any one of them, a written notice directed to the lot or land owners and to the corporations, either public or private, affected by the improvement, setting forth the substance, pendency and prayer of the petition.

"Section 6449. The county auditor shall also prepare copies of the notice, for which he shall receive six cents per one hundred words, but not more than twenty-five cents for any one notice. One copy of the notice shall be served upon each lot or land owner or left at his usual place of residence and upon an officer or agent of each public or private corporation having its place of business in the county, at least fifteen days before the day set for hearing. The person who serves such copies shall make return on the notice, under oath, of time and manner of service, and file it with the auditor on or before such day, and shall receive two dollars for each day actually employed in said service.

"Section 6450. The county auditor, at the same time shall give a like notice to each lot or land owner who is a non-resident of the county, by publication in a newspaper printed and of general circulation in the county, at least two weeks before the day set for hearing. Such notice shall be verified by affidavit of the printer, or other person, knowing the fact, and filed with the auditor on or before such day, and no further notice of the petition or the proceedings had thereupon shall thereafter be required."

I am of the opinion that, under these provisions, when the improvement is first inaugurated, the same being necessarily done by petition, the auditor with whom the petitions are filed must notify all persons and corporations, public or private, who will be affected by the improvement, including those of the upper county, to be charged with assessment, whose names must appear on the petition, in accordance with the terms of section 6447; the same being placed thereon either by the petitioner or by the county commissioners, upon their omission. Such notice being given, all parties notified, by the terms of section 6468, General Code, are entitled to make the same objections to the proceedings which are permitted to residents of the county in which the improvement is inaugurated and constructed.

Answering your specific questions, therefore, I am of the opinion that it is necessary for the property owners in the upper county, against whose land the amount apportioned to the upper county is to be assessed, to be notified prior to the granting of said improvement.

This conclusion, I think, answers both of your questions.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROADS—POWERS OF DRAGGING SUPERINTENDENT.

Under the provisions of section 7060-2, General Code, in reference to the powers of a dragging superintendent the statute must be construed to apply to all graveled or unimproved roads within a township and not to township roads exclusively.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. THEO H. TANGEMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 19th, wherein you state:

> "I would be pleased to have your opinion as to section 7060-2, as found in 103 Ohio Laws, page 402, on the question of what roads are included in this section."

Section 7060-2, provides in part as follows:

> "The dragging superintendent shall divide the graveled or the unimproved public roads of the township into road dragging districts, which must include all mail routes and main traveled roads within the township which are graveled or unimproved."

The foregoing is part of an act "to provide for dragging the public roads of the state." While the roads meant to be included within its terms are not as accurately described as they might have been, yet it seems to me, from the context, that the intention was to include all graveled or unimproved public roads and not merely township roads. That this is the true meaning of this statute is evidenced not only by the broad general purposes expressed in the title to which attention has been heretofor called, but also by reason of the inclusion of mail routes and main traveled roads within the township in the class of roads to be dragged. If township roads alone were meant, the purpose of the statute would be defeated because in a great many counties the public roads have been laid out as county roads instead of as township roads.

I am of the opinion that this statute must be construed to apply to all graveled or unimproved roads within a township and not to township roads exclusively.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—DISTRICT ASSESSOR—VILLAGE HEALTH OFFICER.

When the health officer of a village accepts the office of district tax assessor, he forfeits the office of health officer, and in forfeiting the office of health officer he also forfeits the right to any further compensation in connection with that office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. HARRY W. VORDENBERG, Solicitor of the Village of Newtown, Union Central Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 24, 1914, as follows:

"Hon. T. B. Mulloy, mayor of Newtown, and the council of said village, called my attention to the fact that Charles R. Campbell, M. D., is holding the offices of health officer in Newtown, and also district assessor, at the same time.

"There is a question and some doubt in their minds as to which office he holds illegally, he having been first appointed and qualified as the health officer of said village under a law which does not prohibit the holding of another office; and afterwards appointed as a district assessor under the Warnes law, which prohibits the incumbent from holding an office of profit.

"The question arises especially upon the point whether they can legally pay the salary of the health officer, and thus avoid any criticism from the state auditing and accounting department.

"In order to feel assured that they are acting within their legal rights, they have asked that I, on their behalf, present the matter to you for your opinion and direction as to what course they shall follow in the premises."

Section 4404 of the General Code, reads in part:

"* * * But in villages, council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health, who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon the board of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

Section 5617 of the General Code, as amended 103 O. L., page 796, reads:

"A district assessor, deputy assessor, member of a district board of complaints or any assistant, clerk or other employe of a district assessor or district board of complaints, shall not, during his term of office or period of service or employment, as fixed by law or prescribed by the tax commission of Ohio, hold any office of profit, except offices in the state militia and the office of notary public."

Is a health officer, appointed by virtue of section 4404, holding an office of profit within the meaning of section 5617?

In the case of State vs. Cregg, 69 O. S., 236, it was held that:

"A health officer is not an employe, as that word is used in section 187 of the Municipal Code."

Section 189 of the Municipal Code provided:

"All employes now serving in the health department shall continue to hold their said positions and shall not be removed from office or reduced in rank or pay, except for cause, etc."

In this case the court said:

"In the case of a health officer, by virtue of the powers conferred upon him by the statute, he is an independent, executive officer, with large discretion as to the methods to be pursued by him regarding the public health, and especially in those cities or villages where there is no board of health, he is not subject to the control or discretion of any one else."

This department has held on page 851 of volume 1, Attorney General's Report, 1911-12, that:

"A health officer appointed under the provisions of section 4404, General Code, is distinguished from a mere employment, for he has independent duties which are part of the sovereignty of the state, acting as a board of health might, had council appointed a board of health."

Concluding then, that the health officer of the village is an officer and not an employe, it follows that he holds an office of profit, since he is paid a salary by the municipality. What, then, was the effect of his appointment to the office of district tax assessor?

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Kearns, 47 O. S., 566, it was held:

"The appointment by a city council of a member thereof to an office which the statute makes a member of council ineligible to fill, and his acceptance thereof, does not work an abandonment of his office as councilman. The appointment to the second office is absolutely void."

This case is clearly distinguishable from the case under consideration for the reason that the councilman in the Kearns case was ineligible to appointment to the other office. This distinction is emphasized by Mechem in his work on public offices and officers, section 428, as follows:

"As has been seen in the earlier part of the work, it is frequently declared that persons holding one office shall be ineligible to election to another, either generally or of a certain kind. These provisions being held to incompacitate an incumbent of the first office to election to the second, it follows that any attempt of election to a second is void, and that if, by color of it, he attempts to hold the second office, he will be removed from it. It is thus the second office which is vacated instead of the first."

It is said by Dillon in his work on municipal corporations, page 725, section 417:

"An office may be impliedly resigned or vacated by the incumbent being elected to and accepting an incompatible office. The rule, says, Parke, J., in a leading English case on this subject, that where two offices are incompatible, they cannot be held together, is founded on the plainest principles of public policy, and has obtained from very early times. The principle applies not only where the second office is the superior and more important one, but also where it is not. The rule has been generally stated in broad and unqualified terms, that the acceptance of the incompatible office, by whomsoever, the appointment or election might be made, absolutely determines the original office, leaving no shadow of title in the possessor, whose successor may be at once elected or appointed, neither quo warranto nor a motion being necessary."

In a note to this section, the author adds:

"The rule that the acceptance of the second vacates the first of two offices that are incompatible, is not only the rule of the common law, but is held to apply to incompatibility growing out of the constitutional and statutory provisions prohibiting the holding of two offices in specific cases."

Section 418 of the same work reads:

"The doctrine just stated is undoubtedly true where the acceptance of the second office is made by, or with the privity of that authority which has the power to accept the surrender of the first, or to amove from it; but 'such acceptance does not operate as an absolute avoidance in cases where a person cannot divest himself of an office by his own mere act, but requires the concurrence of another authority to his resignation or amotion, unless that authority is privy and consenting to the second appointment.'"

The doctrine laid down by Judge Dillon and the exceptions to the rule are both supported by Throup on Public Officers and Meechem on Public Offices and Officers.

In the light of these authorities, it is clear that when the health officer in question was appointed district tax assessor, he forfeited the office of health officer, providing it was in his power to divest himself of the office of health officer by his own mere act. In other words, in order that the doctrine, that the acceptance of the second incompatible office vacates the first, applies, it is essential that no acceptance of the health officer's resignation was necessary.

At common law, acceptance is necessary to a consummation of the resignation, but in many of our states it is held that the resignation of an officer takes effect at once without acceptance by any one and that the holding of office is not compulsory. This is said to be the modern doctrine on this subject.

Gibson vs. Lece, 11 Barb., 191.
Leech vs. State, 78 Ind., 570.

In our own state, in the case of Reiter vs. State, 51 O. S., p. 74, it was held:

"By the rules of the common law, a resignation of an office does not take effect, so as to create a vacancy, until such resignation is accepted by the proper authority; but the common law in this regard is not in force in this state, to its full extent, and here resignation without acceptance creates a vacancy to the extent at least, of giving jurisdiction to appoint or elect a successor, unless otherwise provided by statute."

These authorities are sufficient, I think, to support the view that the health officer of a village can divest himself of his office by his resignation, regardless of its acceptance, and this conclusion brings him within the rule that the acceptance of a second incompatible office vacates the first.

It is, therefore, my opinion that when your village health officer accepted the office of district tax assessor, he forfeited the office of health officer and it of course follows that in forfeiting the office of health officer he forfeits the right to any further compensation in connection with that office.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHERS' PENSIONS—WHO ENTITLED TO SUCH PENSIONS.

1st. If a teacher is forced to retire by virtue of the provisions contained in section 7880, General Code, and comes within the provision of said section as to the length of time such teacher has taught, then such teacher can teach in other public schools of the state than the one from which such teacher has retired, or in the public institutions of the state, and continue to draw her pension. The same rule applies when a teacher voluntarily retires.

2nd. If a teacher requests to be retired under section 7880, General Code, and after drawing one month's pension, she may marry and still continue to draw her pension the remainder of her natural life.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. GEO. M. HOAGLIN, Member of House of Representatives, Payne, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 30, 1914, you submitted a request for an opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. If a teacher is forced to retire by either section 7880 or 7882, may she teach in the public schools, or in the public institutions, and draw her pension?
> "2. If a teacher requests to be retired by section 7880 or 7882, may she teach in public schools, or in public institutions and draw her pension?
> "3. If a teacher requests to be retired under section 7880, and after drawing one month's pension, may she marry and still draw her pension?
> "4. Since so many different opinions have been given as to the interpretation of section 7883, should not some definite legislation be made?

Your request calls for the interpretation of sections 7880, 7882 and 7883 of the General Code, which said sections constitute a part of chapter 9 of title 5 of the General Code of Ohio, and relate to the subject of teachers' pensions. The general assembly on April 27, 1896, passed an act entitled, "An act to create a school teacher's pension fund." Section 1 thereof provides as follows:

> "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio that in order to create a fund to be known as the school teachers' pension fund, one per cent. of the salaries paid to all teachers of city districts of the third grade of the first class, shall be deducted by the proper officers and paid into the city treasury to the credit of said fund, to be used exclusively for pensions for teachers as hereinafter provided. All moneys received from donations, legacies, gifts, bequests or from any other source, shall also be paid into said fund; but no tax shall be levied or any public moneys be appropriated for said fund, except as herein provided."

The court in the case of State ex rel. Ward vs. Hubbard, et al., 22 O. C. C., 253, besides holding that said enactment violated the constitutional provision that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state, further held that said act also violated section 2, article 12 of the constitution of Ohio providing for uniform taxation of property and also the bill of rights in the taking of private property from one citizen for the benefit of another, without his consent and against his will, as disclosed in the fourth syllabus thereof, which reads as follows:

"Such act in providing that one per cent. of the salaries paid to teachers shall be deducted therefrom and applied to create a school teachers' pension fund, also violates section 2, article XII, constitution of Ohio, providing for a uniform taxation of property, and also the bill of rights in the taking of the private property from one citizen for the benefit of another without his consent, and against his will."

In construing the act of April 10, 1900 (94 O. L., 539), to create a pension fund to provide for the pension of teachers in city districts of the second grade of the first class, the court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Kurtz, Treasurer, 21 O. C. C., 261, says:

"The act of April 10, 1900 (94 O. L., 539), to create a pension fund to provide for the pensioning of teachers in city districts of the second grade of the first class, and by which it is made the duty of the treasurer of the board of education in cities of the second grade of the first class to reserve at each payment of teachers' salaries a certain per cent. thereof for the purpose of creating a fund to be used in pensioning teachers who shall have pursued their professional employment a certain length of time, is an act of general nature which cannot have a uniform operation throughout the state, and is unconstitutional as in violation of section 26, article 2 of the constitution of Ohio."

The court in the case of Venable vs. Shafer, et al., 7 O. C. C. (n. s.) Rep. p. 337, in commenting upon and citing with approval the case of State ex rel. Ward vs. Hubbard, supra, at page 339 of the opinion says:

"We are further of the opinion that the act of April 16, 1900, was unconstitutional and void, as being in contravention of section 2, article XII of the bill of rights."

The court in support of its opinion in this regard, cites the fourth syllabus in the case of State ex rel. Ward vs. Hubbard, which is hereinbefore quoted. The court in the case of Venable vs. Shafer, supra, in its opinion at page 340 continuing says:

"It appears that this defect in the act of 1900 was removed by a provision in section 3897c, of the act of 1902, which reads:

"'All teachers hereafter appointed in said public schools, or high schools, if any, in said school district, shall be notified within thirty days after their appointment by the clerk of such board of education of the election of said board of trustees of said school teachers' pension fund, and they shall be required to notify said board of education within six months thereafter whether they consent or decline to accept the provisions of this act.'"

Section 7877 of the General Code, formerly 3897c of Bates Revised Statutes, as amended, 102 O. L., p. 445, contains substantially the same provisions as those contained in the act of 1902 (95 O. L., 610), as quoted in the case of Venable vs. Schafer, et al., supra.

In view of the opinion of the court in the case of Venable vs. Schafer, et al., supra, it therefore follows that the provision for the creation of school teachers' pension fund, as the same now exists, is not in contravention of section 2, article XII of the constitution of Ohio, providing for uniform taxation of property and is not in contravention of the bill of rights in the taking of private property from one citizen for the benefit of another, without his consent and against his will.

Section 7880 of the General Code, which is embraced in the chapter of the General Code providing for the establishment of teachers' pensions, provides as follows:

> "Such board of education of such school district and a union, or other separate board, if any, having the control and management of the high schools of such district, may each by a majority vote of all the members composing the board on account of physical or mental disability retire any teacher under such booard who has taught for a period aggregating twenty years. One-half of such period of service must have been rendered by such beneficiary in the public schools or high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which they are located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere."

Section 7882 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Any teacher may retire and become a beneficiary under this chapter who has taught for a period aggregating thirty years. But one-half of such term of service must have been rendered in the public schools or in the high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which the district is located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere."

Section 7883 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "Each teacher so retired or retiring shall be entitled during the remainder of his or her natural life to receive as pension, annually, twelve dollars and fifty cents for each year of service as teacher, except that in no event shall the pension paid to a teacher exceed four hundrd and fifty dollars in any one year. Such pensions shall be paid monthly during the school year."

It is to be noted that section 7880 of the General Code, supra, provides that the board of education of a school district, on account of physical or mental disability of a teacher under such board, may retire such teacher without such teacher's consent. In this section nothing is said in regard to such teacher becoming a beneficiary under said act. However, this omission is cured by section 7883, G. C., supra, as will be hereinafter pointed out. Under the provisions of section 7882, such teacher may voluntarily retire and become a beneficiary under this chapter, providing that such teacher has taught for a period aggregating thirty years, one-half of such term of service having been rendered in the public schools or in the high school of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which the district is located, and the remaining half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere.

If such teacher is forced or compelled to retire under the provision of section 7880, supra, then to be a beneficiary under said act providing for teachers' pension funds, such teacher must have taught for a period aggregating twenty years, one-half of such period having been rendered by such beneficiary in the public schools or high schools of such school district or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which they are located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere.

It is to be noted that section 7883, supra, contains the specific provision that each teacher so retired or retiring shall be entitled during the remainder of his or her natural life, to receive as pension annually, the amount provided therein. The terms "retired" or "retiring," as contained in said section 7883, refer to the methods of retirement conditioned in said sections 7880 and 7882, so that it seems to follow that if a teacher is retired in accordance with section 7880, or voluntarily retires in accordance with section 7882, supra, then such teacher is legally entitled to the pension provided by said section 7883 for and during the remainder of his or her natural life, provided, of course, that such teacher or teachers have taught the specified time enumerated in said section 7880 and said section 7882 above quoted. If such teachers have taught for the required length of time and are retired either by action of the board under section 7880, or voluntarily retire under section 7882, there is no statutory provision to prevent such teachers from teaching in the public schools or in public institutions other than those from which they are so compelled to retire or from which they voluntarily retire from teaching, and at the same time deprive them of the benefits of this act. This follows by reason of the provision of section 7883 as heretofore pointed out, that each teacher so compelled to retire or so voluntarily retiring, shall be entitled during the remainder of her natural life to receive such pension and there is no statutory limitation preventing or prohibiting her from teaching in other schools of the state, other than that from which she has so retired.

Coming now to answer your respective questions specifically, I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that if a teacher is forced to retire by virtue of the provisions contained in section 7880, supra, and also comes within the provisions of said section as to the length of time such teacher has taught, then such teacher can teach in other public schools of the state than the one from which such teacher has retired, or in the public institutions of the state and continue to draw her pension.

Likewise, in answer to your second question, it is my opinion that if a teacher requests to voluntarily retire from teaching in accordance with the provisions contained in section 7882, and provided further that such teacher comes within the requirement as to the length of time taught in such school from which such teacher so voluntarily retires, then such teacher may teach in other public schools of the state than the one from which such teacher so voluntarily retires, or in public institutions of the state, and continue to draw her pension.

Likewise, in answer to your third question, I am of the opinion that if a teacher is forced to retire under the provisions of section 7880, supra, or if such teacher voluntarily retires from teaching under the provisions of section 7882, supra, and has taught for the period of time specified in said respective sections, then such teacher, even after drawing one month's pension may marry and still continue to draw such pension upon the same reasoning as hereinbefore stated, to wit, if such teacher is so compelled to retire or so voluntarily retires, then such teacher is entitled to such pension during the remainder of his or her natural life, as provided by section 7883 of the General Code, supra, provided such teacher has taught the specified time as enumerated in said sections 7880 and 7882, G. C., supra.

Answering your fourth question, it is my opinion that the provisions of said sections are ambiguous and that they could be greatly clarified by the enactment of more definite legislation in relation thereto.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE BOARD OF HEALTH—HEALTH OFFICER—RIGHT OF HEALTH OFFICER TO CARRY PROVISIONS TO QUARANTINED PERSONS.

Where a village has no board of health, but has a health officer, employment by the board of health of a man to carry provisions to quarantined persons in order to avoid the necessity of other people going to the quarantined place, is a measure strictly for the protection of the public, under section 4436 of the General Code, and one chargeable to the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Solicitor of the Village of West Alexandria, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 4, 1914, as follows:

"We have no board of health in the village, but have a board of health officer. Several families in the town contracted scarlet fever and one family the small pox. Our board of health officer hired a man to carry provisions, etc., to the scarlet fever people and another man to carry provisions to the small pox family. The parties hired made out their bills and the health officer put his O. K. on said bills. It was presented to council for payment. The bill was held up. The code provides, among other things, that the expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the persons so quarantined, when able to make such payment, etc.

"Is the bill of the party who carried the food, etc., to the sick people such as would come under the clause 'other measures strictly for the protection of the public.' * * * In the opinion of council both bills are excessive. Council has directed me to write you in reference to those matters and will hold up the bills until they hear from your office.

"Hoping that we have stated the facts clearly enough for you to give us an opinion thereon, we remain."

Section 4436 of the General Code reads:

"When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel and all other necessaries of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined."

You state in your letter that your board of health officer hired a man to carry provisions to the scarlet fever people and another to carry provisions to the small pox family. I presume that the board of health selected these men to carry the provisions in order that there would be no necessity for other people to go to these houses, thereby lessening the possibility of the disease spreading. This action on the part of the board seems to me clearly a "measure for the protection of the public" and in my opinion, one properly chargeable to the municipality.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CANAL FUNDS—CREDITING BACK OF FUNDS—SHARP-DOLLISON LEASE.

The superintendent of public works is entitled to credit back to the canal fund the sum of $5,000, being the first payment on the Sharp-Dollison lease, but there being no appropriation out of such funds, the money cannot be used and requires a specific appropriation to draw money from the treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 3, 1914, you inquire:

"Under date of November 6, 1913, we addressed a communication to you asking for an opinion as to whether or not the canal land department was entitled to a repayment for certain funds expended in making surveys of the abandoned Hocking Canal. Your opinion was rendered December 17, 1913, and your decision was as follows:

"'I am of the opinion that the auditor of state would be authorized to credit said sum of $5,000.00 back to the funds from which such payments have been made.'

"The funds expended cover a period commencing in July, 1912, and extending down to the present time. The original opinion was requested in anticipation of the execution of a certain proposed lease to Messrs. Sharp and Dollison for a portion of the abandoned Hocking Canal.

"It was expected that the lease would be executed prior to February 15, and that advance rental would be appropriated as an unexpended balance. Unfortunately for the department, the lease was not executed as was expected. We believe, however, that the act may be considered as an asset and that the department is as much entitled to have the amounts credited back as though the payments had been made prior to February 15, 1914. Our budget was made up and appropriations asked with the expectation that this amount would be reappropriated.

"Cannot these expenses be repaid the same as if the funds had been returned before February 15th?

"In case you find that this money should be returned to the funds from which it was taken we would be pleased to have you determine how far back we can go. In other words, can we go back to July, 1912, or only for the year 1913?

"For statement of facts see your opinion of December 17, 1913."

The opinion of December 17, 1913, was rendered by virtue of the provisions of section 5 of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 491, which reads:

> "All accounts of expenses, incident to surveying, platting and monumenting said abandoned canal lands, together with the necessary expenses of advertising, selling or leasing the same, shall be verified and approved by the chief engineer and the board of public works, and paid out of the canal funds, or other funds provided for the survey of canal lands, and the auditor of state is hereby directed to credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made, a like amount in any sum not to exceed five thousand dollars ($5,000.00) from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands."

This act was passed May 31, 1911. This section does not limit the time when such refund may be made. It is to be refunded from the receipts derived from the sales and leases of said lands.

Section 2 of the general appropriation bill for 1914, house bill No. 47 of the recent session of the general assembly, provides:

> "All unexpended balances remaining in the funds appropriated in the act entitled 'an act to make partial appropriations for the last three-quarters of the fiscal year ending November 15, 1913, and the first quarter of the fiscal year ending February 15, 1914' (103 O. L., 43), except as herein otherwise expressly provided, are hereby reappropriated for the various purposes for which such appropriations were made in such act."

It will be observed that by section 5 of the act of 102 Ohio Laws 491, the auditor of state is authorized to "credit back to the fund or funds from which such payments are made" a like amount not to exceed five thousand dollars.

This is a credit back to the fund. It is not an appropriation of the money.

The appropriation bill for 1914 appropriates certain sums and balances. The balances referred to are of moneys previously appropriated.

Section 433, General Code, prior to its amendment in 103 Ohio Laws 122, contained this provision:

> "Moneys received from water rents, tolls, fines, leases, sales of canal lands and other sources shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the canal fund."

This provision was amended in 103 Ohio Laws 122, to read:

> "Moneys received from water rents, land rents, tolls, fines, leases, pipe permits, boat licenses, sale of canal lands and from all other sources shall be paid monthly into the state treasury to the credit of the general fund of the state."

The canal fund has not been abolished. But in order to use the money in this fund it must be appropriated by the legislature.

By virtue of section 5 of act of 102 Ohio Laws 491, the fund is to be credited for such expenditures. In order to draw money from the fund an appropriation is necessary. No appropriation has been made of this sum.

As held in the opinion of December 17, 1913, the "auditor of state would be authorized to credit said sum of five thousand dollars back to the funds from which such payments have been made."

This is not an appropriation of the sum credited back and it is not available as an appropriation for your department.

The act of 102 Ohio Laws 491, does not limit the time as to when the expenditures may be made. In determining the amount expended you may go back to the beginning of the expenditures.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REMOVAL OF HUMANE SOCIETY AGENT FROM OFFICE—PROCEDURE NECESSARY.

In order to discharge a humane agent united action of the humane society and of the probate judge is necessary. The humane agent being in the employ of the humane society, a corporation, is not within the civil service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Hon. Thomas H. Moore, prosecuting attorney of Ashland, Ohio, has submitted, under date of January 31, 1914, the following inquiry:

> "The probate judge and the board of county commissioners of Ashland county, are desirous of removing the present county humane officer, and want to know what steps are necessary. There is some doubt as to whether this office is included in the civil service law.
> "I find that his appointment has been regular in all respects, and in accordance with section 10071 was duly approved by the probate judge at that time."

Humane societies are organized and are governed by the provisions of sections 10062 to 10084 inclusive, of the General Code.

Section 10062, General Code, provides for the state society as follows:

> "The Ohio state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, shall remain a body corporate, under the name of 'the Ohio humane society,' with the powers, privileges, immunities, and duties heretofore possessed by such society, hereinafter specified as to county societies, and may appoint any person, in a county where there is no such active society, to represent the state society, and to receive and account for all funds coming to that society, from fines or otherwise."

The method of organizing county humane societies is prescribed in sections 10067 and 10068, General Code.

Section 10067, General Code, provides:

> "Societies for the prevention of acts of cruelty to animals may be organized in any county, by the association of not less than seven persons. The members thereof, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall elect not less than three of their members directors, who shall continue in office until their successors are duly chosen."

Section 10068, General Code, provides:

"The secretary or clerk of the meeting must make a true record of the proceedings thereat, and certify and forward it to the secretary of state, who shall record it. This record shall contain the name by which such association is to be known, and from and after its filing, the directors and associates, and their successors, will be invested with the powers, privileges, and immunities incident to incorporated companies. A copy of such record, duly certified by the secretary of state, shall be taken in all courts and places in this state, as evidence that such society is a duly organized and incorporated body."

Section 10069, General Code, authorizes such society to make rules, regulations and by-laws, as follows:

"Such societies may elect such officers, and make such rules, regulations, and by-laws, as are deemed expedient by their members for their own government, and the proper management of their affairs."

It will be observed that by these sections the humane society is a corporation organized by volunteers. It is engaged in a public work but it is nevertheless a private corporation, in the sense that it is controlled by private individuals. Such a society is "invested with the powers, privileges and immunities incident to incorporated companies." They may select their own officers and make rules, regulations and by-laws.

These societies have all the incidents of a private corporation.

Sections 10070, 10071 and 10072, General Code, provide for the appointment of an agent of such society; prescribe his duties and the manner in which the county or municipality may compensate such agent.

Section 10070, General Code, provides:

"Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made, for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

Section 10071, General Code, provides:

"All appointments by such societies under the next preceding section shall have the approval of the mayor of the city or village for which they are made. If the society exists outside of a city or village, appointments shall be approved by the probate judge of the county for which they were made. The mayor or probate judge shall keep a record of such appointments."

Section 10072, General Code, provides:

"Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the mayor of the city or village, the council thereof shall pay monthly to such agent or agents from the general revenue fund of the city or village, such salary as the council deems just and reasonable. Upon the approval of the appointment of such an agent by the probate judge of the county, the county commissioners shall pay monthly to such agent or agents, from the general revenue fund of the county, such salary as they deem just and reasonable. The commissioners, and the council of such city or village may agree upon the amount each is to pay such agent or agents monthly. The amount of salary to be paid monthly by the council of the village to such agent shall not be less than five dollars, by the council of the city not less than twenty dollars, and by the commissioners of the county not less than twenty-five dollars. But not more than one agent in each county shall receive remuneration from the county commissioners under this section."

By virtue of section 10070, General Code, the society appoints such agents. Such appointments must have the approval in accordance with the provisions of section 10071, General Code, of the mayor of the city or village for which made, or of the probate judge if the society exists outside of a municipality.

In an opinion given to Hon. George D. Klein, prosecuting attorney of Coshocton county, Ohio, this department has held that in order to remove the agent of a humane society the concurrence of the humane society and of the officer having the power of approving the appointment of such agent is necessary. This conclusion is adhered to in the case submitted.

Therefore, the concurrence of the humane society and of the probate judge would be necessary to remove the agent in question.

Section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, reads in part:

"1. The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof.

"2. The 'state service' shall include all such offices in the service of the state or the counties thereof, except the cities and city school districts.

The humane agent is in the employe of the humane society, a corporation. He is engaged in a public duty and for performing this duty, the county or municipality is authorized to pay him a compensation. He is not, in my opinion, in the service of the state, the county, or of the city, within the meaning of section one of the civil service act. Humane agents, therefore, are not subject to civil service regulations.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYES OF THE ARCHAEOLOGICAL AND HISTORICAL SOCIETY NOT UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

Officers and employes of the archaeological and historical society are not subject to the provisions of the civil service law. They are not in the service of the state within the meaning of section 1 of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 17, 1914, Hon. E. O. Randall, secretary of the Ohio state archaeological and historical society; inquires as follows:

> "Will you kindly have your department render the archaeological and historical society an opinion, whether the officials and employes of said society are subject to the provisions of the state civil service law?"

The Ohio state archaeological and historical society was incorporated under the general corporation laws of Ohio and articles of incorporation filed with the secretary of state on March 12, 1885, as shown by volume 32, page 193, of records of incorporation.

On April 16, 1891, the general assembly of Ohio, passed a joint resolution reading as follows:

> "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the governor is hereby authorized and directed to appoint as member of the board of trustees of the Ohio archaeological and historical society, six (6) persons to serve without compensation as follows: two for the term of one year, two for the term of two years, and two for the term of three years from the 9th day of February, 1891, and annually thereafter to appoint two persons on said board for the term of three years, but said appointments shall not bind the state to make annual appropriations for said society."

This resolution is found in 88 Ohio Laws 932.

By section 1, article III of the constitution of this society, it has fifteen trustees, nine elected by the society and six appointed by the governor of Ohio.

The legislature has from time to time made appropriations for the use of this society. It has recently made an appropriation to erect a building for said society and the same has been erected upon the campus of the Ohio state university. In fact its employes are paid from funds appropriated by the state.

Section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, reads in part:

> "1. The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof.
> "2. The 'state service' shall include all such offices in the service of the state or the counties thereof, except the cities and city school districts."

While it is true that the compensation of these employes is paid from appropriations made by the state, they are in fact in the employ of a private corporation, organized under the general laws of Ohio. These persons are not in the service of the state within the meaning of section one of the civil service act. The laws of Ohio do not provide a method of appointing these employes or of fixing their compensation.

The officers and employes of the Ohio state archaeological and historical society do not therefore come within the provisions of the civil service act.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS MAY BE EMPLOYED AT EXPERIMENT STATION DURING VACATION.

Professors of the Ohio State University may be employed during the two months' vacation for research work of the experiment station, there being no incompatibility in their work at the university and the work at the experiment station.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 16, 1914, your secretary, Hon. Benjamin F. Gayman, submitted the following to this department:

> "It has been the custom of the experiment station to employ during two months of summer vacation certain professors of Ohio State University for research work, payment for such work being made by the station, in addition to the pay received by such professors for ten months' work by Ohio State University.
> "The commission will thank you for a prompt opinion concerning the propriety of paying said professors for such services rendered to the experiment station during the summer vacation."

This question involves the right of these professors to hold two positions under the state and to receive compensation for each position. The same person may hold two offices or employments under the state, provided the two positions are not incompatible.

The rule of incompatibility of office is stated by Dustin, J., in case of State ex rel. vs. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S., 274, wherein he says on page 275:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

It appears from your letter that these professors are employed at the Ohio State University, but ten months of the year. For the other two months they are under no obligation to give their time to service of the state university.

Whether it is physically possible for the same person to perform the duties of the two proposed employments is a question of fact to be determined from the circumstances of each particular case. But from your statement it appears that the two services are performed at different times of the year, and it would be physically possible for the professors to perform the services of both positions.

The other grounds of incompatibility must be determined from the duties of the two positions.

Section 1172, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 324, authorizes the appointment of employes for the experiment station, as follows:

> "The director shall have control of the affairs of the station, and be responsible to the agricultural commission for the management of all its departments. With the approval of the agricultural commission he shall appoint chiefs of departments, assistants and other employes necessary for the proper management of the station and shall assign them to their respective duties. He may suspend an officer or employe of the station for cause, which suspension with the reason therefor he shall immediately report to the agricultural commission for its final action."

Section 1170, General Code, 103 Ohio Laws, 323, states the purpose of the experimental station, as follows:

> "The agricultural commission shall maintain a state agricultural experiment station for the prosecution of practical and scientific research in agriculture and forestry and the development of the agricultural resources of the state. It shall be known as the 'Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.'"

The duties of the employes of the experiment station are not prescribed by statute but they would be employed to carry out the purpose of the station as expressed in section 1170, General Code.

Section 7949, General Code, provides for the employment of the professors at the Ohio State University and reads:

> "The board of trustees shall elect, and fix the compensation of and remove, the president and such number of professors, teachers and other employes as may be deemed necessary; but no trustee, or his relation by blood or marriage, shall be eligible to a professorship or position in the university, the compensation for which is payable out of the state treasury or a university fund. The board shall fix and regulate the course of instruction and prescribe the extent and character of experiments to be made at the university."

The duties of the respective positions are not prescribed by statute, but from the usual duties pertaining to these positions they are not in any way a check upon the other, and they are not subordinate one to the other.

Therefore, if one person can physically perform the duties of the two positions, he may be employed in both capacities, and draw the compensation fixed for each position.

I am informed that these appointments are to be made subject to the rules and regulations of the civil service commission. I do not therefore pass upon the civil service feature of the appointments.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—PERSONS IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE MAY NOT BECOME CANDIDATES FOR OFFICE.

Persons in the classified service cannot be candidates for nomination at the coming primaries and cannot be candidates for election without resigning their respective positions in the classified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 11, 1914, you inquire:

> "Many inquiries are coming to the state civil service commission, asking whether or not persons in the classified service can be candidates for nomination at the coming primaries or can be candidates for election without resigning their respective positions in the classified service."

Section 23 of the civil service act, section 486-23, General Code, to which you call my attention reads:

> "Political assessments. No officer or employe in the classified service of the state, the counties and cities and city school districts thereof, shall directly or indirectly, orally or by letter, solicit or receive, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting or receiving any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political party or for any candidate for public office; nor shall any person solicit directly or indirectly, orally or by letter, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting any such assessment, contribution or payment from any officer or employe in the classified service of the state, the counties or the cities or city school districts thereof; nor shall any officer or employe in the classified service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof be an officer in any political organization or take part in politics other than to vote as he pleases and to express freely his political opinions."

This section provides that no officer or employe in the classified service shall "take part in the politics other than to vote as he pleases, and to express freely his political opinions."

This provision prescribes the extent to which an officer or employe may take part in politics. He may vote as he pleases. He may express freely his political opinions. He is not given the right to become a candidate at a primary or at an election for officers.

The word "politics" is defined at page 909 of volume 31 of Cyc. as follows:

> "Politics. In its true original meaning, a term which comprehends everything that concerns the government of the country."

Primaries and elections are necessary in order to secure officers to carry on the government, and a person who is a candidate at a primary or at an election would be taking part in politics within the meaning of section 23 of the civil service act.

In the common acceptance of the meaning of the term "politics" it means activity in government and activity in selecting candidates for office and the election of officers.

Therefore, a person in the classified service under the civil service law cannot be a candidate for office either at a primary or at an election and at the same time retain his position. If he becomes such a candidate it would be cause for removal from the position he holds as he accepts such position upon condition that he will not take part in politics.

If the person in the classified service desires to be a candidate for office or nomination, he should resign his position in the classified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT—MINE OWNER—EMPLOYES—MINERS RIDING (TRIPS).

A contract made between mine owners and their employes under section 961, General Code, should be signed by the employes individually and not by their representatives or agents. A separate agreement would not have to be made for each trip, provided the contract or agreement specifically provided for the trip upon which the employes were to be carried in the empty cars.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Department of Inspector, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 10, 1914, you inquire as follows:

> "Will you please be kind enough to give me written opinion as to whether contract made between mine owners and their employes under section 961 of the General Code is to be signed by the employes individually, rather than by their representatives or agents."

That part of section 961 of the General Code which bears upon this question reads as follows:

> "No person or persons except those in charge of trips, superintendents, mine-foremen, electricians, machinists and blacksmiths, when required by their duty, shall ride on haulage trips, except where by mutual agreement in writing, between the owner, lessee or agent, and the employes, a special trip of empty cars is run for the purpose of taking employes into and out of the mine, or empty cars are attached to loaded trips, which shall not be run at a speed exceeding eight miles per hour. No person except a trip-rider shall ride on loaded car or cars, and he shall ride only the front or rear end of the trip."

The express purpose of this statute is to preclude employes generally from riding on loaded car or cars, and the evident design of the law was to make special provision for the carrying of employes into and out of the mines, in empty cars. I think that under this section an agreement could be entered into providing for this special trip, and that a separate agreement would not have to be made for each trip, provided that the contract or agreement specifically provided for the trip upon which the employes were to be carried in the empty cars. That is to say that if the contract stipulated that a certain trip or trips would be made each day for this purpose, at designated times, then the agreement could be so drafted as to permit the employes to ride on the empty cars at the time therein specified, but this fact should be made clear in the contract, which should stipulate that the cars upon which the miners should ride were to be empty and were to be provided for the express purpose of taking the employes into and out of the mines.

The main object of your inquiry, however, as I understand it, is with reference to the manner in which the contract should be signed. Upon this point I am of the opinion that the owner, lessee or agent of the mine would have the right to sign on behalf of the mine owner, but that the employes' representatives or agents could not sign for such employes unless they had express authority from each employe who was to ride upon the cars so to do. Any other course would result in representatives who had not been authorized to represent the miners in this matter, signing an agreement which had not been sanctioned by the employes. As a consequence, the employes who had no knowledge of the agreement would see their coworkers getting upon the cars, and they would do likewise. In case injury then resulted, those who had not authorized the use of the cars for this purpose would have just cause for criticism not only of the mine owner, but of their representatives who had, without authority, signed the agreement.

In order that the spirit of the act may be subserved, and for the protection of both operator and miner, this statute should be so construed as only to authorize the carrying of miners in cars, when the agreement was signed by the owner, his lessee or agent, and the employes desiring to ride upon the cars. Of course, if the miners would, in writing, authorize some person to sign for them, this would be the same as giving power of attorney to their agent so to act, and those who had given him such authority would be bound thereby.

In order to obviate any question of this character, I would suggest that your department rule that the miners be required individually to sign the agreement. You will observe that the statute authorizes an agent to represent the mine owner, but that it does not authorize the employes to have a representative to act for them under this statute. This would seem to make clear the fact that the statute contemplated individual action by the employes.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL WITHOUT RIGHT TO PROVIDE PENSIONS FOR VOLUNTEER FIREMEN.

The power of a city council to provide pensions for ex-volunteer firemen must rest upon the authority of a valid act of the general assembly, authorizing the payment of such benefits, and as there is now no such legislation in this state, the power of municipalities and the council thereof in this respect must be denied.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. W. F. COLTER AND JAMES NYE, Members, House of Representatives, Toledo, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of March 6, 1914, in which you ask my opinion on questions stated by you as follows:

"1. Under existing laws, has a city council the right and the power to provide a pension fund for ex-volunteer firemen such as contemplated in senate bill No. 4, Senator Hillencamp, eightieth general assembly, regular session?

"2. Under existing laws, has a city council the right and the power to provide any kind of a pension for volunteer firemen, who have in the past served the city without compensation?"

Section 4383, General Code, provides as follows:

"Council may provide by general ordinance for the relief out of the police or fire funds, of members of either department temporarily or permanently disabled in the discharge of their duty. Nothing herein shall impair, restrict or repeal any provision of law authorizing the levy of taxes in municipalities to provide for firemen's, police and sanitary police pension funds, and to create and perpetuate boards of trustees for the administration of such funds."

Sections 4600-4615, inclusive, General Code, authorize and provide for the maintenance and administration of a firemen's pension fund in municipal corporations having a fire department supported in whole or in part at public expense. The sections just noted are a part of a chapter in the General Code which is an embodiment of an act of the legislature passed April 23, 1904 (97 O. L., 241), amendatory of an act entitled "an act authorizing the levy of taxes in municipalities to provide for firemen's, police and sanitary police pension relief funds, and to create and perpetuate boards of trustees for the administration of such funds," passed April 23, 1902 (95 O. L., 223).

Prior to the passage of the general acts just noted, authority with reference to the creation, maintenance and administration of firemen's pension funds had been conferred upon a number of the larger cities of the state by acts applying only to said several cities. The last of said special acts applying to the city of Toledo were two passed respectively on February 9th, and April 7, 1893 (90 O. L., 31, 155).

Section 4600, General Code, provides as follows:

"If any municipal corporation, having a fire department supported in whole or in part at public expense, the council by ordinance may declare the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of a firemen's pension fund. Thereupon a board of trustees, who shall be known as 'trustees of the firemen's pension fund' shall be created which shall consist of the director of public safety, and in villages of the fire chief, and five other persons, members of such department. But upon petition of a majority of the members of the fire department, such director or fire chief may designate a less number than five to be elected trustees."

Sections 4601, et seq., provide for the election by the members of the fire department of the board of trustees who shall have charge of the fund, and to administer the same.

Section 4605 provides that the council in municipalities, availing themselves of the provisions with reference to the maintenance of firemen's pension funds, shall have authority to levy a tax on all the real and personal property in such municipalities for the maintenance of such funds.

Section 4610 provides that the treasurer of a municipality shall be the custodian of the firemen's pension fund, and that he shall pay it out upon the proper orders of the trustees of such fund.

Section 4612, General Code, provides:

> "Such trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualifications of those to whom any portion of it shall be paid and the amount thereof, but no rules or regulations shall be in force until approved by the director of public safety or the fire chief of the municipality, as the case may be."

The declared purpose and intent of Senator Hillencamp's senate bill No. 4 (eightieth general assembly, regular session, 1913), was to extend the benefits of the firemen's pension fund authorized and provided for by sections 4600, et seq., to living members of former volunteer fire departments of municipal corporations. This bill was defeated in the senate, and the question here presented is whether under existing laws the city council has the right and power to extend the benefits of firemen's pension funds to ex-volunteer firemen, or otherwise to provide any kind of a pension for volunteer firemen who have in the past served the municipality without compensation.

After careful investigation and consideration of the questions presented by you, I am constrained to the opinion that in the present state of legislation, the council of municipalities have no power to extend to ex-volunteer firemen the benefit of firemen's pension funds in municipalities where such funds are not maintained, nor power to provide in any manner pensions for such ex-volunteer firemen. Authority with reference to the creation and administration of such funds, as well as the levy of taxes for the maintenance thereof, is distinctly a legislative power, and with respect to this it is an established principle that the legislative power of the state is vested in the general assembly, and a municipal corporation has only such legislative power as is expressly granted or clearly implied.

Ohio Electric Ry. vs. Ottawa, 85 O. S., 229, 237.
Bloom vs. Xenia, 32 O. S., 461.
Ravenna vs Penna. Co., 45 O. S., 118.
Townsend vs. Circleville, 78 O. S., 133.

It follows that the power of a city council to provide pensions for ex-volunteer firemen must rest upon the authority of a valid act of the general assembly authorizing the payment of such benefits, and as there is now no such legislation in this state, the power of municipalities and the council thereof in this behalf must be denied.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WARNES TAX LAW—DISTRICT ASSESSORS—BOARD OF COMPLAINT—TRAVELING EXPENSES—CONTINGENT EXPENSES—AUTOMOBILE HIRE.

1. Such expenses of district assessors, deputy assessors, members of district boards of complaints, deputies, assistants, which are allowed as other claims against the county can become a charge against the county.

2. Under section 35 of the Warnes tax law, the words "contingent expenses" must be given a narrow meaning, except that they would include postage, express charges and actual and necessary traveling expenses as therein stated, and further that such additional expenses mentioned in such section are intended to be included within contingent expenses.

Automobile hire cannot be considered as additional expenses, but might under certain circumstances be considered as contingent expenses, but can only be allowed to district assessors and boards of complaint, but not to their deputies. Traveling expenses outside of the state cannot be allowed under any circumstances.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 25, 1914, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "(1) What expenses of district assessors and deputy assessors, members of district boards of complaints, deputies, assistants, experts, clerks and employes are a proper charge against the taxing district?
> "(2) Does 'contingent expenses' include such expenses as automobile hire, car fare and the like for these various officers while in the exercise of their duties within their respective jurisdictions?
> "(3) Can these respective officers, when ordered by the tax commission or with the approval of the tax commission, traveling outside of their territory and outside of the state of Ohio, receive their actual and necessary expenses therefor?"

These questions, and each of them require consideration of section 35 of the "Warnes" law, so-called, 103 O. L., 786-795, therein designated as section 5614, General Code. The section in part provides as follows:

> "* * * The contingent expenses of the district assessor and district board of complaints, including postage and express charges, their actual and necessary traveling expenses and those of their deputies, assistants, experts, clerks or employes on official business outside of the district when required by orders issued by the tax commission of Ohio shall be allowed and paid as claims against the county; provided, however, that such salaries and compensation and such expenses when allowed shall constitute a charge against the county, regardless of the amount of money in the county treasury appropriated for such purposes and notwithstanding any failure of the county commissioners to levy or appropriate funds therefor."

Your first question is generally phrased, and will be generally answered. In the first place, it is only those expenses of district assessors and deputy assessors, etc., which are allowed as other claims against the county, i. e., upon the approval of the county commissioners, which can become a charge against the county.

In the second place, it is inaccurate to speak of any such expenses being a claim "against the taxing district," as the section plainly provides such expenses are a claim against the county, and not against the subordinate taxing districts, such as the townships, municipalities, school districts, etc.

In the third place, the nature of the expenses for which the officers mentioned may be reimbursed under favor of the statute, is generally indicated by the use of the word "contingent." The term "contingent expenses" has a well understood, technical meaning, viz.: those expenses, miscellaneous in character, which the legislative body presumes will be incurred in the natural course of official business, but the exact character of which cannot be so definitely ascertained in advance as to permit specific enumeration of them.

People vs. Yonkers, 39 Barb., 236, 272.
Dunwoody vs. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl., 269, 280.

Ordinarily, therefore, the phrase would not include such classes of expenses as might reasonably be foreseen and provided for by express mention. On the other hand, it would include all miscellaneous expenses which would naturally and necessarily be incurred by the public officer in the ordinary discharge of his duties.

That the general assembly supposed that the phrase "contingent expenses" would not necessarily include all expenditures is reasonably apparent from consideration of that part of the above quoted sentence which begins with the word "including." By specifically enacting that postage and express charges and certain traveling expenses shall be included within the purview of "contingent expenses" of which the sentence speaks, the general assembly has made it plain, I think, that such charges and expenses would not, without the provision, have been contemplated within the meaning of the phrase, being expenses the incurring of which is a certainty and which are, therefore, not of the miscellaneous and unascertainable character ordinarily contemplated by the term "contingent expenses."

As an instance of one kind of expense which cannot be deemed "contingent" I refer to the provision of section 41 of the "Warnes" law, which requires the district assessor to furnish for his own office and apparently for the district board of complaints, (although the section is very ambiguous) "all maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, furniture, and other equipment" necessary for the proper discharge of their duties. It so happens that this section apparently provides another method of reimbursing the assessor for an expenditure on this behalf; but if it did not I would be of the opinion that the district assessor would have to furnish these articles at his own expense without reimbursement, as clearly the duty to do so being specifically provided for, an expenditure on this behalf could not be regarded as "contingent" within the meaning of section 35.

In response to so general a question as your first one, I cannot more specifically indicate the nature of the class of expenditures which can be regarded as "contingent" within the meaning of section 35 of the "Warnes" law, than I may have already done by the previous discussion. Contingent expenses are such casual and miscellaneous expenditures which may naturally be incurred in the discharge of the duties of the office for which no special provision is made; save that in the case of the contingent expenses mentioned in section 35 the term is to include postage and express charges and the traveling expenses of which the section speaks.

There is still another general proposition which must be mentioned in connection with your first question, viz.: save with respect to the traveling expenses which the sentence mentions, no expenses of deputy assessors, assistants, experts, clerks and employes of the district assessor and district board of complaints are chargeable to the county. It is the contingent expenses of the district assessor and the district board of complaints which are to be paid out of the county treasury on allowance. These contingent expenses are to include certain traveling expenses of "their deputies, assistants, experts, clerks or employes." Manifestly expenses of the deputies, assistants, experts, clerks and other employes, other than the traveling expenses, are not payable in the manner provided by section 35. As no other section of the Warnes law affords reimbursement to deputy assessors, assistants, experts, clerks and other employes of the district assessor and board of complaints, it follows there is no provision in the law for payment of such expenses other than those mentioned in section 35, out of the county treasury or the treasury of any taxing district.

There is what appeared to be an academic question as to whether or not that part of the sentence in question which begins with the words "their actual and necessary traveling expenses," follows the word "including" or constitutes a separate subject or subjects co-ordinate with the words "contingent expenses." The sentence is susceptible of two possible grammatical constructions here, but I am unable to conceive of any practical difference between the two constructions, and am content, therefore, with the assumption which I have already made, viz.: that the traveling expenses mentioned in the section are intended to be included within "contingent expenses" by the force of the word "including."

The general observations above made answer your first question as specifically as the nature of the case permits.

Your second question involves consideration of the entire first part of the sentence above quoted from section 35. The first question encountered is whether or not there is any distinction between the traveling expenses of the district assessor and the district board of complaints on the one hand, and those of their deputies, assistants, experts or employes on the other hand. The doubt as to this feature of the case arises from the possibility of reading the clause in two ways from the grammatical point of view, thus:

> "(1) including * * * their (i. e. those of the district assessor and district board of complaints) actual and necessary traveling expenses, and those (i. e. such of those of their deputies, assessors, experts or employes (as may be incurred by such deputies, etc.) on official business outside of the district when required by the orders issued by the tax commission of Ohio.
> "(2) including * * * the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the district assessor, the district board of complaints, their deputies, assistants, experts, clerks or employes, when incurred on official business outside of the district when required, etc."

The difference in meaning between the two possible grammatical constructions here is such as under one of them the district assessor and the members of the district board of complaints would be entitled to their traveling expenses wherever incurred while possibly their deputy assessors, etc., would be entitled to traveling expenses only when incurred outside of their respective districts (by which is meant, of course, the assessment district, i. e. the county); whereas by taking the other construction both the district assessor and the members of the district board of complaints on the one hand, and their deputies, assistants, etc., on the other hand, are in the same category, and the same question respecting the place where the traveling expenses are incurred would arise as to both of them.

As between these two possible interpretations I choose the second, viz.: that one which makes the phrase "on official business outside of the district, etc.," modify both the noun "expense," and the pronoun "those." This I do because I think it was necessary to have some special provision such as this for the payment of expenses outside of the assessment district when required by order of the tax commission. Unless the language above referred to can be regarded as modifying "their actual and necessary traveling expenses," there would be no authority to pay the traveling expenses of the district assessor or the members of the district board of complaints on official business outside of the district; whereas there would be authority to pay expenses so incurred by the deputies, assistants, etc.

I do not think the general assembly intended to authorize the reimbursement of expenses (if any) incurred by deputies, etc., and not to authorize the reimbursement of district assessors and members of boards of complaint for expenses so incurred, as I think the general assembly must have supposed that it would be much more likely that the tax commission would authorize the district assessor to go outside of his district on official business, than it would be to authorize some deputy of his to do so at the expense of the county.

Insofar then as your second question relates to traveling expenses, I am of the opinion that while in the exercise of their duties within their respective jurisdictions, as you put it, i. e. within the assessment district for which they are appointed, none of the officers mentioned in your question may be reimbursed for such expenses incurred by them. This conclusion follows principles already laid down. Having decided that "contingent expense" includes no traveling expenses except those specifically brought within its purview by what follows the word "including;" and having decided also that the phrase "on official business, etc.," modifies their actual and necessary traveling expenses," as well as "those," it necessarily follows that the only traveling expenses, reimbursement on account of which out of the public treasury is to be afforded any of the officers mentioned in your question, are those specifically mentioned in the sentence as I have interpreted it.

Jones vs. Commissioners, 57 O. S., 189.
Richardson vs. State, 66 O. S., 108.

But it is by no means clear that what you designate as "automobile hire" constitutes "traveling expenses," although it seems reasonably certain that what you designate as "car fare" may constitute traveling expenses. Before your question can be fully answered, it must be determined whether automobile hire does constitute traveling expenses.

There is also another question here as to whether, if automobile hire be not regarded as "traveling expenses" it is within the category of "contingent expenses," as generally defined by my answer to your first question.

If automobile hire constitutes "traveling expenses," then upon the principles already laid down, it cannot be allowed to district assessors, boards of complaints, their deputies, etc., when incurred within the assessment district, i. e. the county. If it is not a traveling expense, then may it be regarded as a contingent expense?

Strong reason appears for holding that automobile hire is not "traveling expense," within the meaning of the phrase as used in the section. In the very nature of things the district assessors and their deputies are required to "travel" in the performance of their duties. Real estate, for example, must be valued "on actual view" (section 5554, G. C.) and personal property lists must be delivered to the taxpayers at their respective places of residence or business. (Section 5368. G. C.) In other words, the assessment of property, which the Warnes law contemplates, cannot be made without going from place to place within the assessment district. This, in my judgment, does not constitute "traveling" any more than the work performed by county commissioners in viewing the line of a proposed road or ditch improvement would constitute such traveling.

Therefore, the question, as it seems to me, is whether or not automobile hire constitutes a "contingent expense" within the meaning of the term as used in the section without reference to the scope of the phrase as determined by the inclusion therein of certain "traveling expenses."

If it is such a contingent expense, then the fact that it is incurred in the county would not prevent its lawful allowance.

In my opinion automobile hire might, under certain circumstances, constitute "contingent expense." I would not undertake to define the exact circumstances under which a lawful charge of this kind might be made. I am satisfied that in the ordinary discharge of the duties of their respective offices, the district assessor and the district board of complaints would not have any right to incur expenses of this character, but circumstances might conceivably arise in which the hire of an automobile or any vehicle might be necessary in order to enable the assessor or the board of complaints to discharge their respective duties; for example, both of these respective public authorities must complete their work within specified periods of time. Should the work devolving upon them, or either of them, at any time be so great in volume as to necessitate the employment of a vehicle in order to permit it to be completed within the prescribed period, a "contingency" would, in my judgment, arise, justifying the incurring of an expense of this character. The determination of the existence of the contingency rests primarily in the discretion of the district assessor or board of complaints, and is subject to the revisionary power of the county commissioners.

I must repeat in this connection that the expense must be that either of the district assessor or the district board of complaints; their respective deputies, assistants, experts, clerks and employes may not be reimbursed for expenses of this character. This does not mean, of course, that an assistant or deputy may not use an automobile or other conveyance procured by the district assessor or the district board of complaints when directed by his superior and when the conveyance is furnished to him by his superior.

I have said in passing that car fare might be regarded as traveling expense. This, however, is subject to qualification. I would not say that under special circumstances an expenditure of this character might not be regarded as a contingent expense rather than as traveling expense.

While I have tried to lay down some general rules in answer to your second question, I am convinced that hard and fast rules cannot with safety be adopted. Matters of this sort call for the application of a considerable degree of judgment and discretion, and the official conscience of the officer constitutes a more effective safeguard than the provision of the law itself.

I understand your third question to relate to the payment of expenses incurred by the officers mentioned when traveling outside of the state of Ohio under orders of the tax commission, or with the approval of the tax commission.

In the first place, I may say in answer thereto, that before such traveling expenses can become a charge upon the county treasury by the approval of the county commissioners, the traveling in question must be ordered by the tax commission. It is not sufficient, in my judgment, that the commission approve a journey which has been undertaken without its order. The order must require that official business be transacted outside of the district; so that the officer has no authority to go outside of his district until the commission orders him to do so.

In my judgment your third question must be answered generally in the negative. It is only when traveling on official business, as ordered by the tax commission that the expenses of the district assessor, district board of complaints or any of their deputies, assistants, etc., incurred outside of the district can be allowed and paid from the county treasury. Such official business must be business which the commission has authority to order to be transacted; and it must be official. The commission has no authority by any express provision of statute to order a district assessor or district board of complaints or any of their inferiors to go outside of the state of Ohio for any purpose whatever.

The authority of the commission in the premises is found in the following sections of the Warnes law.

> "Section 54. The tax commission of Ohio shall, from time to time, prescribe such general and uniform rules and regulations and issue such orders and instructions, not inconsistent with any provision of law, as it may deem necessary respecting the manner of the exercise of the powers and the discharge of the duties of any and all officers, relating to the assessment of real and personal property and the levy and collection of taxes.
> "Section 57. The tax commission of Ohio may require district assessors, deputy assessors and members of district boards of complaints to meet and confer with other district assessors, deputy assessors, members of district boards of complaints, or with the commission on any matter relating to the assessment and valuation of property for taxation, at such times and places as may be prescribed from time to time by the commission."

In my judgment the commission's authority under these sections cannot be enlarged by implication so as to permit it to authorize or direct one of the officers, concerning which you inquire, to travel outside of the state of Ohio. Once the state boundary is crossed, such an officer will be shorn of his official power; he would cease to be a district assessor or a member of the district board of complaints, as the case might be.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that your third question must be answered in the negative, first, because the respective officers to which it relates may not be reimbursed for traveling expenses outside of their respective districts save when their business is such as is prescribed by an order of the tax commission; and second, because the tax commission has no authority to order any of its officers to go outside of the state of Ohio for any purpose whatsoever.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EQUIPMENT—AUTOMOBILE NOT INCLUDED IN EQUIPMENT FOR DISTRICT ASSESSOR.

An automobile for district assessors is not included within the term "equipment necessary for the proper discharge of their duties" as used in section 41-103 O. L., 797; the words so used apply solely to office equipment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. CHARLES M. MILROY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of March 11, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

> "The district assessors of this county have requested our board of county commissioners to provide for them as a part of the 'equipment necessary for the proper discharge of their duties,' an automobile, the same to be furnished and maintained by said board of county commissioners under the provisions of section 41 of house bill No. 571 entitled, 'an act to divide the state into assessment districts * * *, as found in 103 Ohio Laws, at page 797.'
> "It is contended by the district assessors that the amount and nature of their work under said act make such an expenditure for such purpose absolutely proper and necessary.
>
> "In view of the large amount of road, bridge, and ditch construction in this county, the use of an automobile is imperative. The expenses of our county surveyor's office for automobile hire in connection with such work are such as to justify, from the standpoint of economy, the purchase and maintenance of an automobile for the use of said office.
>
> "Awaiting your earliest advice as to the authority of the county commissioners in the purchase and maintenance of automobiles for the purpose herein stated, etc."

Section 41 of house bill No. 571, appearing in 103 O. L. at page 797, as you state, is as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall furnish for the district assessor and the district board of complaints for their county, and their deputies assistants, experts, clerks and employes suitable office rooms at the county seat and the district assessors shall furnish for his own office for the district board of complaints all maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, furniture and other equipment necessary for the proper discharge of their duties and for the preservation and safe keeping of their books, records and files. Provided, however, that the maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, and other supplies and equipment used by the district assessor, shall so far as is practicable, be used also by the district board of complaints. In case any board of county commissioners fails or refuses to furnish such rooms, maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, furniture and other equipment, the tax commission of Ohio, upon complaint of the district assessor or district board of complaints, may authorize the district assessor or the district board of complaints, as the case may be, to procure such, rooms, furniture, maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies and other equipment, as may be deemed necessary by the commission, and the amount so authorized to be expended for such purpose shall constitute a charge against the county, regardless of the money in the county treasury appropriated for such purposes and notwithstanding any failure of the county commissioners to levy or appropriate funds therefor."

The expenses authorized by this section are clearly confined under the application of rule of eiusdem generis to those expenses necessary for the conduct and equipment of the offices necessary to be maintained by the district assessor and the district board of complaints. The only possible words appearing in this section which might be entertained as an authorization of incurring the expense of purchasing an automobile, are the words "other equipment necessary for the proper discharge of their duties," and I have no hesitancy in concluding that this term cannot extend the authorization to the application of any further subjects of expense than such things as are similar to maps, plats, stationery, blank forms, books, supplies, stationery, and maintenance of office rooms.

Under date of August 4, 1913, I rendered an opinion to Hon. A. H. Henderson, prosecuting attorney, Youngstown, Ohio, in which I held that the county commissioners have no authority to purchase an automobile for the use of the county surveyor under the terms of section 2786 of the General Code, which allows the county surveyor and each assistant and deputy his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties.

I feel that the argument of that opinion has application to your question, and I am enclosing a copy of the same.

I, therefore, conclude that the county commissioners are not authorized by statutes to purchase an automobile either for the district assessors or for the county surveyor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—DOMESTIC SERVANTS.

The compulsory feature of the workmen's compensation law does not apply to employers of household or domestic servants in and about a private residence not a hotel or boarding house.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 7, 1914, your commission submits the following inquiry:

"Do the compulsory features of the compensation law apply to employers of household or domestic servants?"

Preliminary to a discussion of the question I desire to say that I am taking it for granted that you have reference to the application of the act to those employed in private households, rather than to those performing domestic service in hotels and other similar establishments; and, therefore, what is here said will have no reference to those employing domestics in a regular business such as hotel keeping, or by those whose business is that of keeping boarding houses.

The salient sections of the workmen's compensation act (103 O. L., 72), follows:

"Section 13. The following shall constitute employers subject to the provisions of this act. * * *

"2. Every person, firm and private corporation including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written.

"Section 14. The term 'employe,' 'workman' and 'operative,' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean; * * * every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, * * * but not including any person whose employment is but casual, or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

Section 21 provides that every employe mentioned in the foregoing quoted subdivision of section 14, who is injured and the dependents of such as are killed in the course of employment, shall be entitled to receive, either directly from the employer or from the state insurance fund such compensation as is provided in the act in question.

Section 22 provides that every employer mentioned in the foregoing quotation shall pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium fixed by the board of awards for the employment or occupation of such employer.

Under section 23 those employers who comply with the provisions of the section last referred to shall not be liable to respond in damages for injury or death of any employe, save as subsequently provided in the act.

Section 25 requires the board of awards to disburse the state insurance fund to such employes as have paid the premiums, provided such employes have been injured in the course of their employment.

If the quoted language from section 13 stood alone, it might very well be said that every person employing five or more domestics or household servants in his private household would be compelled to contribute to the state insurance fund. The word "workman" is broad enough to include servants of this character, and while the word "business" as used in this section would not, under the definitions hereafter given, have reference to the maintenance of a private household, nevertheless, the word "establishment" as used in that section may very well be said to include a private household. The dictionary definitions of the word justify this construction, and its use in this sense has been sanctioned by good usage.

Section 14, however, in defining "workman" expressly excludes those whose employment is but casual, or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer. Thus it is clear that not only must the workman be employed in the same establishment or business, but he must also be one who is not casually hired, as well as one who is employed in the manner specified in subdivision 2 of section 14.

"Trade" has been defined as a business learned or carried on for procuring subsistence or profit; the buying or selling for gain or as means of livelihood; mercantile traffic; commerce.

Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary.

Business pursued; occupation; the craft or business which a person has learned and which he carries on as a means of livelihood or for profit; occupation; the exchange of commodities for other commodities or for money; the business of buying and selling; dealing by way of sale or exchange; commerce.

Century Dictionary.

Business may be said to be a pursuit or occupation that employs or requires knowledge, time and thought; trade; profession; calling.

Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary.

That which busies or occupies one's time, attention and labor as his chief concern; that which one does for a livelihood; occupation; employment; mercantile pursuits collectively; the occupation of conducting trade or monetary transaction of any kind.

Century Dictionary
See also 6 Cyc. 259, 260.

Jessel M. R. has defined business as meaning "anything which occupies the time, attention and labor of a man for the purposes of profit," and this, I think, is the sense in which it is here used.

See also Ruegg's Employers' Liability and Workmen's Compensation, p. 279.

There can be no doubt that the meaning of the word " profession" carries with it the essential qualification that it must be an occupation that involves peculiar educational qualifications and has reference to mental rather than to manual labor. It involves special attainments or discipline.

Occupation is often treated as being synonymous with business or employment, and has been defined as "whatever one follows as a means of making a livelihood."

Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary.

"The principal business of one's life, vocation, calling, trade; the business which a man follows to procure a living or obtain wealth."

29 Cyc. 1344.

Assume that the employment of domestics is not casual, it surely cannot be contended that one who performs ordinary domestic or household work for a private family is working in the usual course of the employer's trade as the maintenance of a private household has no connection with the profit or commerce; nor is it conducted as a business or profession, as those words have been defined. It cannot successfully be assumed that it is an occupation.

Hence, it is my opinion that the compulsory features of the workmen's compensation act do not apply to domestic servants employed by private families, as they are expressly excluded by the italicized clause of subdivision 2 of section 14. This is a definitive section and must be read with and as modifying the broader language of section 13.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY COUNCIL — MUNICIPAL CIVIL SERVICE — SALARY — EXPENSES.

1st. The council of a municipality has the right to fix the salary of members of the municipal civil service commission after they have been appointed, providing no salary has yet been fixed.

2nd. Where the salary has been fixed by council either under the old municipal law, or under the new act, since the new act did not change the members of the commission, when the commission had been appointed under the old law, any ordinance fixing the salary which would become effective while a member was still in office under the term provided by law would not affect the salary of such member.

3rd. It is the duty of council to fix the salaries and appropriate a sufficient amount for expenses for the municipal civil service commission and the court cannot control the discretion of council as to the amount of salary or as to what is reasonably sufficient for expenses.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of March 20, 1914, is received, in which you call my attention to certain provisions of section 19 of the civil service act and ask a ruling upon the following questions:

> "First. Is it within the legal right of a city council to fix the salary of the municipal commissioners appointed under the provisions of section 19, i. e. after such commissioners have been appointed?
> "Second. Is the provisions of section 19 mandatory which states, 'the expenses and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city?
> "Third. In case the city council failed because of lack of information as to the needs of the commission or by neglect, or otherwise, to appropriate funds in January for the work of this commission, is there any statute prohibiting said council from appropriating funds at a later date to enable the commission to secure supplies, hold examinations, and otherwise put into effect the provisions of the civil service law?
> "Fourth. In case the council is permitted by law to make appropriation for the civil service commission must such appropriation be taken out of any unused balances of former appropriations, or may it be taken from other sources?"

The Hon. Jonathan Taylor, city solicitor of Akron, Ohio, under date of March 24, 1914, submits further inquiries upon the same subject. He states and inquires:

> "Mr. Be. and Mr. Ba. were members of the old civil service commission, and of course continued in office automatically. Mr. S. was the new appointee. In the regular semi-annual appropriating ordinance in January, an appropriation was made for salaries for members of the commission at $50.00 a half year, this appropriation being made in pursuance of an ordinance passed March, 1913, by which the salaries of the commissioners were fixed at $100.00 per year. The $50.00, as you will see was for the six months. In the same appropriating ordinance, in January of this year there were certain other sums, for printing and sundry other expenses which the council considered proper to be made for the commission. In view of these facts. I beg to ask you the following:

"First. Is it lawful for the council to pass an ordinance making the salaries of the commission $600.00 per year, bearing in mind the provision of the statute which forbids the increase of salary of any official during the term for which he was appointed.

"Second. Is it lawful for council, between January and July, the regular appropriating periods, to appropriate funds from the unexpended balances of the general fund, to provide (a) for the added salary, (b) money for printing, stationery, etc., for the commission."

Your first inquiry is as to the right of council to fix the salaries of the members of the municipal civil service commission after they have been appointed.

Section 19 of the civil service act, section 486-19, General Code, provides in part:

"The mayor or other chief appointing authority of each city in the state shall appoint three persons, one for a term of two years, one for four years, and one for six years, who shall constitute the municipal civil service commission of such city and of the city school district in which such city is located; provided, however, that members of existing municipal civil service commission shall continue in office for the terms for which they have been appointed and that their successors, the first appointees of the mayor or other chief appointing authority of such city, shall be appointed to serve respectively for four years, five years and six years and until their successors are appointed and have qualified. Each alternate year thereafter the mayor or other chief appointing authority shall appoint one person as successor of the member whose term expires to serve six years and until his successor is appointed and has qualified. A vacancy shall be filled by the mayor or other chief appointing authority of a city for the unexpired term. * * * The expense and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city.

"If the appointing authority of any such city fails to appoint a civil service commission or commissioner as provided by law within sixty days after he has the power to so appoint, or after a vacancy exists, the state civil service commission shall make the appointment, and such appointee shall hold office until the expiration of the term of the appointing authority of such city and until the successor of such appointee is appointed and qualified."

This section authorizes council to fix the salaries of the commissioners.

Your first inquiry involves at least two state of facts.

a. Where no salary has at any time been fixed by council.

b. Where a salary has been fixed by council either under the old municipal law, or under the new act.

Under the old law council also had the right to fix the salaries.

Section 4486, General Code provided in part:

"The council shall provide for the salaries, if any, of the commission, for such clerical force, examiners, necessary expenses and accommodations as may be necessary for the work of the commission."

Section 4213, General Code, provides:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

Both under the new law and under the old law the members of the civil service commission have a definite term of office. By virtue of the new act the members appointed under the old law are continued in office until the expiration of their respective terms.

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Carlisle, 16 Ohio Dec. 263, Judge Evans considers the constitutional inhibition as to increasing or diminishing salaries.

On page 266 of the opinion he says:

> "State vs. McDowell, 19 Neb. 442 (27 N. W. Rep. 433), was a case in which at the time of relator's election no salary or compensation had been fixed for the services of that officer. During his incumbency his salary was fixed at $300 per annum.
> "The court held that the act was valid—'That as there was no salary fixed, the act providing for such after his election was not an act either increasing or decreasing the salary.'
>
> "The same ruling was held in Purcell vs. Parks, 82 Ill., 346. See Mechem, Public Officers 858.
> "The reason for the above holding is, that if there is no salary definitely fixed, or if no salary whatever has heretofore been provided, then there is no salary to increase or diminish by an act providing for a salary during an incumbency.
>
> "As our constitution provided, 'No change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term.'
> "If there is no salary at all, or none definitely fixed then legislation providing a salary during his term could not affect any change, for there is none existing to effect."

This properly states the rule where no salary has been fixed. In such case council may after the appointment and qualification of a civil service commissioner fix his salary. Such salary, however, will only become operative from the time when the ordinance fixing the same becomes effective.

It is contended that where a salary was fixed under the old law and the members of the commission appointed under that law continue to serve out their terms under the new civil service act, that council may change such salary and that it will apply to the time served under the new act.

This contention is based upon the conclusion that the new law created a new commission and that council could therefore fix a new salary under the provisions of the new act

The new law did not change the members of the commission where a commission had been appointed under the old law. It did not change the nature of their duties, nor did it change the method of fixing salaries. It specifically retains the officers in their positions for their full terms. It is not a new term. True, the duties of the commission are greatly increased under the new civil service act. Yet, under the old law the legislature could have extended the classified service and thus increased the duties of the commissioners. If this had been done no contention could have been successfully made that council could then increase the salaries during the terms.

The situation, in effect, is not different by the enactment of a new general civil service act. The ordinance of council fixing the salaries under the old law would still apply to the commissioners under the new law, until legally changed.

Section 4213, General Code, therefore, prohibits council from increasing or diminishing the salary of a member of a municipal civil service commission during the term for which he was appointed. This rule applies where a salary was fixed under the old municipal civil service law and the member of the commission continues to serve out his term under the new act.

In the specific case submitted by Mr. Taylor, an ordinance increasing the salary from $100.00 to $600.00 per year would not apply during the term of the incumbents at the time such change was made.

In your second inquiry you ask:

> "Is the provision of section 19 mandatory which states, 'the expenses and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city?"

In State ex rel. vs. Massillon, 14 Cir. Dec. 249, it is held:

> "The council of a city can be compelled, by mandamus proceedings, to issue its order or make an appropriation for the payment of services of such officer (health officer), in the absence of the certificate from the proper officer, that there were funds on hand for the payment of his services at the time the liability was incurred or increased. Section 2702 Rev. Stat. does not apply to such officer.
> "Sections 2115 and 2140, Rev. Stat., the former, providing that boards of health may appoint health officers, etc., and the latter, for payment of expenses of board of health, are mandatory in character; and the establishment of a board of health is a police regulation of the state."

This case involved the board of health and its officers. There are reasons why the provisions of statute pertaining to the health of a community should be mandatory, which will not apply to the civil service act.

The case of State ex rel. vs. Bish, 12 Nisi Prius N. S., 369, involved the right to increase the salaries of firemen and policemen, who were in the classified service.

On page 384, Spriggs, J., says:

> "Thus, 3617 creates the offices of policemen and firemen, and delegates to the city council not the power to create or abolish those offices, but to organize and maintain them. While, on the other hand, section 3616 makes it obligatory upon city councils to so organize and maintain such departments as created by section 3617.
> "It is true that section 3616 says, 'and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of these powers,' but we believe that this language, although permissive in form is peremptory in fact in its relation to section 3617. That is, where power is given to public officers by act of the legislature whenever the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language used, though permissive in form is in fact peremptory and permits no discretion. Supervisors vs. United States, 4 Wall. 435-445-446-447; Mason vs. Fearson, 9 Howard, 249-259; Mayor vs. Furze, 3 Hill, 612; Turnpike Co. vs. Miller, 5 John's Chancery 100.

"Certainly, the establishing and maintaining of a police and fire department involved a great public interest, and we do not believe that under section 3617 the city council would have any right to abolish the police or fire department entirely; * * *."

At section 2192 of McQuillin on Municipal corporations, it is said:

"Mandamus does not lie to compel an appropriation unless there is a clear legal duty. So if the amount of the appropriation rests in the discretion of the council and the appropriation is a quasi-judicial act, the discretion cannot be controlled by this writ. However, some statutes providing that cities 'may' appropriate money and provide for the payment of the debts of the city have been held mandatory so that the duty could be compelled by mandamus."

And at section 516 of the same treatise it is said:

"Where a public office is created, and the compensation to be paid for services rendered by the incumbent thereof is to be fixed by a public body, upon failure of such body to act therein, it may be compelled to do so by mandamus. But in such case the court will not fix the compensation."

Two cases are cited in support of this latter principle.

In Cook vs. City of Springfield, 184 Mass. 247, it is held:

"A city, appointing a license commissioner under St. 1894, c. 428, does not employ him, and incurs no obligation to pay a reasonable compensation for his services. Its only obligation in regard to his compensation is imposed by section 6 of that statute, which requires each city to pay its license commissioners such salaries as the city council shall establish."

On page 247, Loring, J., says:

"By section 6 of that act it is provided that 'each city shall pay its board of license commissioners such salaries as the city council subject to the approval of the mayor may from time to time establish,' and it is conceded that under that act the license commissioners were to be paid and were not to serve gratuitously."

On page 249 he further says:

"If that compensation is not fixed the law would issue its writ of mandamus requiring the city council to perform its duty and fix it. Attorney General vs. Lawrence, 111 Mass. 90; Attorney General vs. Boston, 123 Mass. 460."

The provisions of section 19 of the civil service act now under consideration are mandatory and not permissive in form.

Council is given the power to fix the salaries by the words "the expense and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council." It is made the duty of council to fix a salary. The amount of the salary is within the discretion of council. A reasonable compensation for the services need not be paid.

Council is required to make an appropriation of money. The words used are:

"and a sufficient amount of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in any such city."

What shall constitute a sufficient amount is left to the discretion of council. When council has acted the expenditures must be kept within such appropriation.

The provisions of section 19 of the civil service act requiring council to fix salaries of the commissioners, and to appropriate sufficient money for the expenses of the commission are mandatory. That is, council may be required to act. The courts cannot control the discretion of council as to the amount of the salary, or as to what is reasonably sufficient for such expenses.

Your third and fourth inquiries, and the second by Mr. Taylor, concern the time when council can make an appropriation.

These questions have been answered in an opinion given to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of November 24, 1913. A copy of this opinion is herewith enclosed.

In that opinion the following principles are established:

That council is not required to make all semi-annual appropriations in one ordinance.

That where council has appropriated a definite sum for a specific purpose, it cannot at a subsequent date, appropriate an additional sum for that purpose, for that period.

That where council has made a detailed appropriation and has failed to make an appropriation for one or more of the objects for which the corporation may lawfully provide, council may at a subsequent date make an appropriation for such object, provided the object is within the purview of the purpose of the fund from which the money is to be set aside.

In the second question submitted by Mr. Taylor, council has made a specific appropriation for salaries and expenses of the commission for the six months ending June 30, 1914. Council cannot now increase this appropriation for that period.

Where council has not made an appropriation for these objects it may subsequently make an appropriation if a fund is available for that purpose.

Several conditions are to be considered in determining the fund from which the appropriation may be made. These are considered in the opinion above referred to and the conclusion to the second inquiry therein submitted gives the general principals applicable. Reference is made to this opinion for answer to your fourth inquiry.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET—PAVING—REPAVING—ASSESSMENT.

Where a certain street was paved the width of forty feet, and repaved the width of forty-six feet, after the repaving of this street, three feet on the sides thereof were to be considered as merely a repaving of the entire street, and consequently section 3822, General Code, would apply and property cannot be assessed for more than one-half.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. WALTER S. RUFF, City Solicitor, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 30, 1914, you ask opinion of me on questions stated by you as follows:

> "A street in this city was paved about twenty years ago, and the abutting property was assessed for the payment of same. At that time the roadway was paved to a width of forty feet, and in preparing the legislation for repaving the same, during the coming summer, the council has instructed me to prepare legislation to pave the roadway forth-six feet in width, increasing it three feet on each side.
> "Does section 3822, G. C., apply to the assessment for the forty feet only, or to the entire forty-six feet?
> "It is customary in this way in paving a new street to charge 98 per cent. to abutting property owners.
> " Can we under section 3822, G. C., assess the abutting property 98 per cent. of the cost of the additional three feet on each side?"

Section 3822, General Code, referred to in your communication, provides as follows:

> "When a special assessment for the improvement of a street or other public place has been levied and paid, the property so assessed shall not again be assessed for more than one-half the cost and expense of repaving or repairing such street or other public place unless the grade thereof is changed."

The liability of the owners of abutting property to pay for street improvements is created by statute founded on, and measured by the benefits received from such improvements. When, however, the power to make local improvements at the expense of the owners of abutting property has been vested in a municipality, such power, in absence of other provisions, is a continuing one and is not exhausted by being once exercised.

Wells vs. Wood 114 Cal., 255.
C. & N. P. Ry. Co. vs. Chicago 172 Ill., 66.
Lux Stone Co. vs. Donaldson, 162 Ind., 481.
Addams vs. Beloit, 105 Wis. 363.

Usually the determination of the municipal authorities as to the necessity for a subsequent improvement of a street at the expense of abutting property is final, though sometimes such determination has been held subject to review in cases presenting circumstances of manifest unreasonableness or oppression.

Lamb vs. Chicago, 219 Ill., 229.
Hammett vs. Philadelphia, 65 Pa. St., 146.
Kokomo vs. Mahan, 100 Ind, 242.
Field vs. Barber Asphalt Co., 117 Fed, Rep. 925.

The liability of abutting lot owners to pay for street improvements to the extent of benefits received being created by statute, it is, of course, competent for the lawmaking power of the state to limit that liability, either as has been done in some of the states by exempting them from all obligation as to the cost of subsequent improvements of the street, or as has been done in this state by exempting them from a part of such cost.

Page vs. Columbus, 15 C. C. n. s. 40, 45.
Gray vs. Toledo, 80 O. S., 445, 447.

The street referred to in your inquiry was originally improved to a width of 40 feet; and the subsequent improvement contemplated improves the street to a width of 46 feet, and the question is whether the extra six feet is within the provisions of section 3822, or whether the whole cost and expense of the construction of the six feet (less 2 per cent.) can be assessed against the abutting property. The determination of this question does not, I apprehend, proceed on different considerations than it would if section 3822 provided that the abutting property should be wholly exempt from assessment for the cost and expense of repaving.

In the case of Dickinson vs. City of Detroit, 111 Mich., 480, the controlling statutory provision was a section of the city's charter, providing as follows:

> "The cost and expense of such improvement, except so much thereof as shall be for the work within the lines of intersection of cross-streets, and alleys, for the cross walks at such intersections, and for repaving streets, avenues, and highways, shall be assessed ratably, according to their extent of front on the lots, parts of lots, or parcels of real estate directly fronting on and within the local assessment district. * * * The cost of all repaving of streets, avenues, and highways of the city shall be paid out of the repaving fund."

Under this charter provision it was held that:

> "An improvement of a city street 200 ft. wide, of which 40 feet in width in the center was originally paved, consisting of a driveway of asphalt 25 feet wide on each side of a strip 100 feet wide left in the middle of the street for park purposes, constitutes a repavement, where there is nothing to show that the original pavement was inadequate, within a provision in the charter requiring the cost of all 'repaving' to be paid out of the repaving fund, instead of by the abutting lot owners."

In the case of Wreford vs. City of Detroit, 132 Mich., 348, it appeared that a certain street in the city of Detroit was in 1876 graded and paved with a roadway 40 feet wide, the entire cost of which was assessed upon the abutting property. The street was wide and a grass plot was left between the sidewalks and the 40 ft. roadway, in which were set rows of trees which stood there for forty years. In 1899 steps were taken to widen this roadway by about fifteen feet on each side and to repave this street the entire width of the old roadway and extensions—about 70 ft. Contracts were let and the entire cost of the pavement outside of the old 40 ft. roadway was assessed to the abutting owners. The action was one to set aside this assessment. The syllabus in the case is as follows:

"Where under a city charter providing that the cost of paving, but not the repaving, shall be assessed upon the abutting property owners, a street which has been paved, is paved again, including a portion of the street between the original pavement and the sidewalk, no part of the pavement can be assessed upon the owners of the adjoining property."

The court in its opinion says:

The only question we need to discuss is can the abutting property owner, having once been assessed for grading and paving the street, be again assessed for paving extensions thereof * * *. The principle upon which abutting owners are charged with the expense of paving the street in the first instance is that their property is benefited by the pavement. After the improvement has once been made, its care belongs to the entire public; and it must be kept in repair and in condition, or widened or improved by the public, and not at the expense of the owners.

"It is difficult to imagine what benefit accrues to abutting owners where the grass plots in front of their property is removed and the travel upon the street with its dust and noise brought nearer to their dwellings. Such improvements are clearly not for the benefit of private owners, but for the benefit of the public. We are of the opinion that when the authorities of the city laid out this street and paved a roadway therein suitable at the time for the use of the public, their power to assess such improvements upon abutting owners was exhausted."

In the case of In re Garvey, 77 N. Y., 523, where it appeared that the charter of the city of New York provided that no street which had been once paved, and the expense thereof paid by assessment upon the adjoining owners, should thereafter be paved at their expense or an assessment imposed therefor, unless petitioned for by a majority of such owners, is was held that:

"Where the city has once determined the character and extent of the flagging of a sidewalk, and has assessed and collected the expense of the owners, it has no further jurisdiction over the flagging of that sidewalk until a petition is presented as so prescribed. Where, therefore, a sidewalk 12 ft wide was, in pursuance of an ordinance, graded and flagged, the flagging being a strip 4 ft. wide in the center of the sidewalk, a new ordinance covering said sidewalk, directing that curb and gutter stones be set and reset, the sidewalk be flagged and reflagged, where not already done, which was not so petitioned for, was illegal; and that an assessment upon the owners to pay the expenses of the improvement was void."

The court in its opinion in this case says:

"A sidewalk furnished with a stoneway four feet in width may properly be said to be flagged, although the whole surface is not covered. It was one mode of improvement and furnished a convenient and sufficient way for travel. The statute referred to permits the owner to judge of the necessity or expediency of a new or better or different improvement, and unless it applies to a case like the present, the city may pave one-third of the walk at one time, one third at another, and afterwards the rest. This would be contrary to the plain reading and obvious purpose of the statute. The city having once determined the character and extent of the pavement and laid it, can have no further jurisdiction over the flagging or pavement of that sidewalk until a petition has been presented therefor, by a majority of the owners of the property on the line of the proposed improvement."

In the case of In re Smith, 99 N. Y., 424, on consideration of the same charter provision before noted in the Garvey case, it was held:

"Where a sidewalk in the city of New York has once been paved, upon a plan and of a width at the time deemed suitable, any additional pavement, although it be simply to give additional width, leaving the original undisturbed, is a repavement, requiring as a condition precedent a petition of a majority of the property owners along the line of the improvement, and if made without such petition, an assessment therefor is invalid."

In the case of In re Brady 85 N. Y., 268, it was held:

"To constitute a prior pavement within the meaning of the provisions of the acts of 1870, 1872 and 1874 (chap. 383, laws of 1870; chap. 580, laws of 1872; chap. 313, laws of 1874); in relation to local improvements in the city of New York, where the assessment in question is for paving the traveled part or carriage way of the street, there must have been a substantial pavement of that portion of the street; although a street has been curbed, guttered, and a narrow strip on each side laid with cobble stones for the purpose of binding and protecting the gutter stones, and although the sidewalks have been flagged and crosswalks laid, this is not a prior pavement."

In the case of Alcorn vs. City of Philadelphia 112 Pa. St., 494, it was held that where the municipality in paving a street at the cost of the owners of the property fronting thereon, adopted a plan leaving eight feet in the center of the street unpaved for trees and shrubbery, and where after a number of years the plan was changed and the said eight feet in the center of the street was paved, the paving of said eight feet was an original improvement and the owners of the property fronting on said street were liable for the cost thereof.

Now in the case of Baldwin vs. Springfield, 20 Ohio Dec., 265 (10 N. P. n. s. 65) it was held:

"'Macadamizing' a street, formerly made by graveling, pursuant to municipal direction, constitutes a 'repaving' within the meaning of section 53 Municipal Code of 1902 (Gen. Code. 3822), for which not more than one-half the cost may be assessed against the abutter.

"The limitation of section 53, Municipal Code of 1902 (G. C., 3822), as to 'repaving' assessments does not apply to assessments for curbing and guttering if the former improvement did not include and the property was not assessed therefor either as part of a street or sidewalk improvement."

This case was affirmed by the circuit court, but I am not advised whether the second proposition above noted was involved in the decision of the case in the circuit court or not. The court in its opinion in the case of Baldwin vs. Springfield, supra, says:

"To constitute an original paving of a street there must have been a substantial paving of the part of the street improved."

Brady in re, 85 N. Y., 268.

"A street including sidewalks and gutters, and paving includes flagging; the work therefore of setting curb and gutter stones and flagging the sidewalks of a street, which has once been done, is included in the phrase 'repaving a street.'"

Burmeister in re, 76 N. Y., 174.

"It is not claimed that the property owners in question have previously constructed or been assessed for any curbing and guttering of this street or a sidewalk improvement. The only expense to which they have been subjected relates to the grading and graveling of the portion of the highway in question."

Further on in its opinion the court in this case says:

"As the plaintiffs have never constructed or been previously assessed for curbing and guttering, either as a part of a street improvement, or as a part of a sidewalk improvement, I do not think the cost of the curbing and guttering in question would come within the repaving limitation."

In this state of the authorities the precise question submitted by you is not one easy of solution. Looking to the facts of the case, in the light of the terms of the statute itself, it seems clear that the paving of the street in question to a width of 40 feet was an improvement of the street within the meaning of the section, as much so as if it had been paved to a width of 46 feet. The question as to the width of the improvement was a matter in the discretion of the city authorities, the improvement being one substantial in its nature, it was an "improvement" within the terms of this section. The assessment for this former improvement having been paid, the question here presented, applying the facts stated in your inquiry to the terms of the statute itself is, not so much whether the particular 6 feet of the proposed improvement constitutes a repaving, but rather whether the proposed paving of the street to a width of 46 feet constitutes a repaving of the street.

Looking to the language of the section, and applying the spirit of the decisions which more nearly meet the situation of fact here presented, I am constrained to the opinion that the proposed action of the city to improve this street to a width of 46 feet, will, in view of the former improvement of the street, constitute a repaving of the street within the meaning of this section, and that the abutting property cannot be assessed for more than one-half the cost and expense thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMERGENCY COMMISSION—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—REPAIR OF DAMAGES CAUSED BY FLOOD.

After the expiration of the terms of the members of an emergency commission appointed under the act found in 103 O. L., 206, the county commissioners may undertake further repairs or replacements on account of damages wrought by the floods of 1913, and for the purpose of so doing said commissioners may avail themselves of the provisions of the act found in 103 O. L., 141.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. ROBERT C. PATTERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 20, 1914, in which you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "After the expiration of the terms of members of an emergency commission appointed under the act found in 103 O. L., 206, may county commissioners undertake further repairs or replacements on account of damages wrought by the floods of 1913; and especially may the commissioners exercise the power vested in them in the premises by the act found in 103 O. L., 141?"

The first act referred to by you provides for the establishment of a state flood relief commission, and for the establishment of emergency commissions in counties and municipalities, the function of which, as indicated by the title of the act, is to assist in restoring the public works and property damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913.

The act provides for the appointment of a county flood relief commission upon petition of a certain number of electors of a county, and contains the following language with respect to such commissions.

> "Members of such emergency commission shall serve for a period in no event to exceed one year from the date of the appointment of the first member of such commission, and without compensation; provided that whenever such commission files a report with the probate judge of the county, that its work has been completed or that there is no further need for the existence of such commission the terms of the members of such commissioners shall terminate. Any commissioner may be removed by the probate judge with the approval of the Ohio flood relief commission, and all vacancies shall be filled by the probate judge with the approval of the Ohio flood relief commission.
> "The emergency commission of any county shall exercise in conjunction with the county commissioners such powers and duties as are conferred upon the county commissioners insofar as they extend to the repairing, rebuilding and restoring of public works destroyed or damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913, and the emergency commission shall exercise and perform such duties jointly with such county commissioners."

There are certain other provisions of the act which I need not quote, but which shed some light upon the question which you submit. I refer to the provisions authorizing an election for the discontinuance of a county emergency commission provided for by sections 14 to 16, inclusive, of the act. It appears that under these sections the county emergency commission may be discontinued at any time within the year of its existence under section 9 of the act, this discontinuance evidently not to be predicated necessarily upon the completion of the work, for section 9 provides that upon such completion and the filing of a report thereof, the emergency commission shall automatically go out of existence.

It seems, therefore, that the effect of the several provisions, to which I have called attention, considered together, is such that the emergency commission is to expire by limitation in one year, and may be put out of existence any time by a special election. Both these contingencies, which would serve to terminate the existence of the commission, have no relation to the completion of the work, nor do I find any evidence on the face of the act or otherwise of an intention to require all replacement and repair work to be completed within one year.

On the other hand, the other act to which you refer, 103 O. L., 141, insofar as it relates to permanent replacement and repairs, merely authorizes money to be raised by certain special means for the purposes to which the act relates, that is, replacements and repairs necessitated by damages wrought by the 1913 flood. It is clear that there is no limitation of time upon the making of the repairs and replacements to which the act refers, and I am of the opinion that so long as such repairs or replacements are occasioned by the damages referred to, they may be made at any time, and the funds necessary therefor may be raised at any time under the provisions of that act.

I am of the opinion, then, upon consideration of both the acts, that upon the dissolution by lapse of time of the emergency commission, the power to make the necessary repairs and replacement is not thereby destroyed, but vests in the county commissioners and may be exercised by them; and that for the purpose of so doing the commissioners may avail themselves of the provisions of the act found in 103 O. L., 141.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—COMPENSATION TO MAYOR—MARSHAL—FEES AND CASES.

The council of a village in fixing the compensation of the mayor and marshal may not provide that the salary fixed shall be in lieu of any fees and costs allowed by law for services rendered by such officials in civil, state and ordinance cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of February 11, 1914, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "May the council of a village, in fixing the compensation of the mayor and marshal, provide a salary that shall be in lieu of all fees and costs allowed by law or ordinance for official service rendered by said officials?
> "May the council require that said officers' fees in civil cases and in cases of violation of ordinances be paid into the village treasury and compensate officials by a stated salary?"

The answer to your questions hinges upon the construction of the following statutes:

First. With reference to the mayor:

"Section 4257. The mayor shall receive the costs as provided by ordinance, but in no case greater than the fees for similar services before justices of the peace, and in addition thereto he shall receive such salary, payable quarterly, from the corporation treasury, as may be provided by ordinance, but the amount shall not be increased or diminished during his term of office.

"Section 4550. He shall keep a docket, and shall be entitled to receive the same fees allowed justices of the peace for similar services. He shall keep an office at a convenient place in the corporation, to be provided by the council, and shall be furnished by the council with the corporate seal of the corporation, in the center of which shall be the words, 'Mayor of the city of _____,' 'Mayor of the village of _____,' as the case may be."

Second. With reference to the marshal:

"Section 4387. In the discharge of his proper duties, he shall have like powers, be subject to like responsibilities and shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, for services actually performed by himself or his deputies and such additional compensation as the council prescribes. In no case shall he receive any fees or compensation for services rendered by any watchman or any other officer, nor shall he receive for guarding, safe keeping or conducting into the mayor's or police court any person arrested by himself or deputies or by any other officer a greater compensation than twenty cents."

Third. With reference to both mayor and marshal:

"Section 4556. The costs of the mayor and other officers, in all cases, shall be fixed by ordinance, but in no case greater than the fees for similar services before justices of the peace. In case of conviction the fees of officers, jurors, and witnesses shall be taxed against the parties convicted, and in case of acquittal of the violation of an ordinance, the costs, except the fees of the mayor and marshal, shall be taxed against the corporation.

"Section 4219. Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

Section 452 of Throup's "Public Officers" is as follows:

"Gross sum in lieu of statutory fees. To this branch of the subject belongs a class of cases, where an officer has been required, by contract or by municipal ordinance, to accept a gross sum, in lieu of the fees allowed to him by law. An English case, where such a bargain between a munic> ipal corporation and its officer, was decreed in equity to be unlawful, as being against public policy, on the ground that the law would not allow any bargain to be made, respecting an appointment to a public office, and also because the officer 'is considered to require them' (his fees) 'to enable him to uphold the dignity and perform the duties of his office,' was fully cited in a former chapter. And it was held in Louisiana that the sheriff of a parish cannot be compelled, without his consent, to accept a gross sum, in lieu of his statutory fees. So a contract to that effect was adjudged to be void in Iowa. But in Texas it has been held that such a contract is lawful."

An examination of the authorities cited by this author, however, discloses that in these cases the contract was looked upon as contrary to public policy for reasons that might well be distinguished from the case at hand.

The facts involved in these cases either pointed to a situation in the nature of bribery wherein the officer promised to serve for a reduced compensation for the consideration of being elected or appointed, or where the contract was made by a public officer, such as a justice of the peace or sheriff, with a private individual for the reduction or relinquishment of his fees in behalf of such particular individual alone.

The following cases, however, have a more direct bearing upon the question presented. In People ex rel. vs. Board of Police, 45 N. Y., 38, an appointing board was held to have no power to reduce salaries below that fixed by statute. In People ex rel. vs Ryan, 91 N. Y., 265, it was held that where a policeman's salary was fixed by law and power vested in the board of police to make rules and regulations for the government and discipline of its subordinates, such board would not be permitted to make reductions in the compensation of police officers for temporary absence on account of sickness or disability; and in Kohn vs. State of New York, 93 N. Y., 291, it was held that when the compensation of a state employe is fixed by statute it cannot be reduced by the state officer under whom he is employed.

When the above quoted sections of the General Code are examined it appears that each of these officers are provided for substantially in like manner, that is, there is express provision for fees for services in state and civil cases, and a like provision for an additional compensation by council. There is, furthermore, with reference to each of these officials, a provision for the receipt by them of such fees as are fixed by council for services in ordinance cases.

By section 4219, above quoted, council is empowered to fix the compensation of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. This statute must be read in connection with the other statutes above quoted, and when so read, the words "except as otherwise provided by law," are given a very definite meaning.

Under the decisions above referred to, holding that an appointing board or officer is without power to increase or reduce the compensation fixed by statute, I am of the opinion that council is without power to deprive these officers of the fees definitely fixed by these statutes for services in state or civil cases. (Sections 4550 and 4387 of the General Code.)

I am of the opinion that section 4550, providing the same fees for the mayor as are permitted a justice of the peace in similar cases, and section 4387, providing the same fees for a marshal as are permitted sheriffs and constables in similar cases, must control as regards services performed by these officers in civil and state cases. These are matters over which the legislature has control, and these are the only fees which justices of the peace, sheriffs and constables are at any time entitled to receive. It is clear that in these provisions the legislature has the interests of the state at large in view and is providing a compensation for such services performed by such officers as are required by state laws. A city council, therefore, in view of sections 4387 and 4550, General Code, may not require fees received by the mayor or by a marshal, for services in state criminal cases or in civil cases, to be paid into the village treasury.

As regards services performed by these officials in the police or mayor's courts, however, in the prosecution of violations of village ordinances, we are presented with a somewhat different situation. The provisions of the statutes providing for the fixing by council of fees for these services are as follows:

Section 4257 (above quoted).

Section 4556, applying to both mayor and marshal:

> "The costs of the mayor and other officers, in all cases, shall be fixed by ordinance, but in no case greater than the fees for similar services before justices of the peace. * * *"

It is true that under the ruling of City of Bellefontaine vs. Haviland, 3 N. P. n. s., 99, these officials are not entitled to receive any fees in ordinance cases when council fails to fix such fees by ordinance. Whilst, therefore, the fees for such services may not be said to be fixed by law in the sense that the fees for services in state and civil cases are fixed, for the reason that under the control council has over the same they may not be fixed at all or they may be fixed at such a minimum amount as to be inconsiderable, nevertheless, the manner of paying these fees is definitely fixed by statute, and the statutes controlling the same manifest a clear legislative intent in this respect. Thus in respect to the mayor, under section 4257, the provision is clear that the mayor shall receive the fees fixed by ordinance, and in addition thereto shall receive a salary; and so with respect to the marshal, in section 4387, it is provided that he shall receive the fees designated and such additional compensation as the council prescribes.

Since the legislature has spoken in the matter, therefore, and since its intended plan is clear, to wit: that the official shall receive the amount fixed by ordinance in such cases, and since we cannot find any language in the statutes which would extend to council any authorization enabling them to over-ride the legislative direction in this respect, we must conclude that it was intended that the fee so fixed by council was a fee intended for the officer in question, and by no means intended as a fee for the municipal corporation itself. The powers of a municipal corporation are restricted to those expressly granted or necessarily implied, and under this rule we can find nothing in the statutes authorizing council to replenish the municipal revenues through the method of having fees payable to officials paid into the municipal treasury.

This construction is borne out by the language of section 4270, General Code, which further exemplifies the nature of the plan intended to be followed in these matters by the legislature. This statute requires all fees and forfeitures collected by the mayor, other than his fees of office, to be paid into the treasury of the corporation, thereby clearly manifesting the recognition by the legislative mind of the intention of these statutes to enable the mayor to retain as his own fees fixed in such cases in villages.

Making specific answer to your inquiries, therefore, I conclude that a council of a village in fixing the compensation of a mayor and marshal may not provide that the salary fixed shall be in lieu of any fees and costs allowed by law or ordinance for services rendered by such officials in civil, state and ordinance cases.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE AID—TUITION FUND—DEFICIENCY.

1. The funds appropriated in house bill 104 O. L., 196, are not available to pay application for state aid intended to make up deficiency in the tuition fund shown on September 1, 1913, for the year preceding, unless such deficiency existing on said date might lawfully be carried over into the current year then beginning so as to produce a deficiency for that year.

2. The funds so appropriated are available to pay state aid on application for advances on estimated deficiencies for the year ending August 31, 1914, providing the application was made within the time specified in section 7596, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 21st, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Are the funds appropriated in house bill No. 31, passed at the last session of the legislature, available to pay applications for state aid intended to make up deficiencies shown on September 1, 1913, for the year preceding?

"2. Are said funds available to pay state aid on application for advances on estimated deficiencies for year ending August 31, 1914, provided the applications were made within the time specified in section 7596, G. C.?

"3. If applications for state aid for estimated deficiencies are filed after January 1, 1914, for the year ending August 31, 1914, can money be advanced by the auditor of state to meet such deficiencies out of this appropriation?"

You enclose a copy of house bill No. 31, which is in full as follows:

A BILL.

"Relative to appropriating money for the assistance of weak school districts.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:

"Section 1. That there be and is hereby appropriated from any moneys raised or coming into the state treasury for the support of the common schools and not otherwise appropriated, to assist in the maintenance of weak school districts, the balance of former appropriations and the sum of eighty-five thousand dollars which shall be distributed by the auditor of state in accordance with the provisions of the act passed April 2, 1906, as amended April 18, 1913."

I am clearly of the opinion that the money appropriated by the above quoted act can be distributed by the auditor of state only in accordance with the act referred to as amended, April 18, 1913.

Reference here is to section 7596, as amended 103 O. L., 267. This amended section is as follows:

"Whenever any board of education finds that it will have such a deficit for the current school year, such board shall on the first day of October, or any time prior to the first day of January of said year, make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of such deficit in the tuition fund."

Your first question discloses on its face that applications for state aid, to which it relates, under section 7596, are made under the former provisions of the same section. I have heretofore advised you that the appropriation found in 103 O. L., 261, is available for extension of state aid, both upon the applications made under the old law, and upon applications made under the new law. The appropriation of 1914, however, differs in an essential respect from that referred to, and the difference is such as to lead to the opposite answer.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the funds appropriated in house bill No. 31, are not available to pay applications for state aid intended to make up deficiencies shown on September 1, 1913, for the year preceding, unless such deficiencies existing on said date might lawfully be carried over into the current year then beginning so as to produce a deficiency for that year, such as that to which your second question relates. (A question not decided here.)

As already partially indicated the funds described in your letter are clearly available to pay state aid upon application for deficiencies for the year ending August 31, 1914, providing the applications were made within the time specified in section 7596, General Code. Such an application would be in strict accordance with the provisions of amended section 7596. Accordingly, your second question is to be answered in the affirmative.

Your third question involves consideration of the question as to whether or not a valid "application" for state aid may be made after the first of January of a current school year for the relief of the deficiency anticipated for that year.

As a general rule provisions as to time are regarded as directory merely. This is true when the law requires that a thing shall be done at all events, and stipulates a time within which it is to be done; the paramount intention being that the thing shall be done. Such intention must prevail over the subordinate intention that it shall be done within a given time.

In my judgment that rule governs the interpretation of section 7596. That section imposes upon the board of education a "duty" rather than a privilege. Its provision is that the board upon finding a deficit,

"shall * * * make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor."

I am aware that in the past the action of the board has been regarded as the exercise of a privilege and the auditor's statement to the auditor of state has been termed an "application." Notwithstanding the customary way of viewing such action, however, I believe the statute is mandatory with respect to the action of the board in securing state aid. That being the case, under the rule above stated, the requirement as to time is directory merely.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that your third question is to be answered in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — EMPLOYER — EMPLOYE — WHO WITHIN COMPENSATION ACT.

Under the workmen's compensation act an employer who has a number of places maintained at widely separated places in the state, but all under the same management and in the same line of business, though each separately operated, in some of which five or more employes are employed, and in others fewer than five, is within the workmen's compensation act as a person employing five or more workmen in the same business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 12, 1914, you make the following request for opinion:

> "We desire your opinion as to the application of the workmen's compensation act to an employer and his employes, where a number of places of employment are maintained at widely separated places within the state, all of which are under the same management but each of which is operated independently of all of the others, in some of which five or more employes are employed and in others of which fewer than five employes are employed.
> "There are a number of such employers in the state which maintain retail stores in the various cities of the state. All of these stores are under the same central management but each is conducted as a separate and distinct enterprise. Some of them employ more than five employes and others fewer than five.
>
> "The question is whether the employes of all of the branches of such a concern should be considered together in determining whether the compensation law applied to the employer or whether each such branch should be considered separately, and the status of the employer determined as to each one in accordance with the number of persons employed by it."

The workmen's compensation act (103 O. L., 72), provides that:

> "Every person, firm and private corporation, including any public service corporation, that has in its service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written."

shall constitute employers subject to the provisions of the act.

The terms "employe," "workman" and "operative," as used in the act, are construed to mean:

> "Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation, employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, under any contract of hire * * * (see section 14)."

From the foregoing quotations it is clear that it was the manifest intention of the general assembly to render the act applicable to employers having in their service five or more workmen or operatives in the same business, or in the same establishment. It is not essential that the employes be in the same establishment provided they are regularly working in the same business. In other words, the use of "or" is disjunctive, and therefore there are two contingencies stated in the quoted sections, viz.: those wherein the employes are in the same business, and those wherein they are in or about the same establishment.

Applying these principles to the concrete facts, I am of the opinion that if, as a matter of fact, the employer provide a number of places of employment, all of which are under his management and are used for the same purpose, the act applies to them in the aggregate and if a total of five or more workmen or operatives are employed in the combined establishments, then the business comes within the purview of the act. This question will have to be decided as a matter of fact, the ultimate conclusion being dependent upon the character of the branch stores. If they are but subsidiary, or rather agencies, it follows that they are essential parts of the business, provided they are all under the management and control of a single head and are all engaged in the same business. In this event, there is only one business, it being conducted in different places. I assume that when you say each is conducted as a separate and distinct enterprise you mean that the earnings of each branch store are kept separate from the earnings of the other branches. This would have no effect upon the business being an entity and the branches being but component parts thereof.

Hence, in conclusion, I desire to say that if there is but one concern, the employes of all of its branches should be considered together in order to determine whether the workmen's compensation act applies to the owner of such concern, and the status of the employer should be determined by the aggregate number of employes, and not as to each branch in accordance with the number of persons employed by it as a separate business.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PAYMENT INTO THE STATE INSURANCE FUND—HOW PAYMENT SHOULD BE MADE.

In paying into the state insurance fund, the premium is not paid until the same has reached the state insurance fund, which is under the custody of the treasurer of state; the industrial commission has no control whatever over the custody of this fund.

When the industrial commission fixes the amount of a premium, it should transmit to the employer a statement thereof with instructions to pay the treasurer of state, and at the same time transmit to the treasurer of state a duplicate. The treasurer of state, when payment is made should issue to the employer a receipt and at the same time transmit to the industrial commission a duplicate thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. J. P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 25, 1914, you made the following requests for my opinion:

> "Under the provisions of the workmen's compensation act the treasurer of state is custodian of the state insurance fund.
> "Under the present conditions there is no uniformity or any definite understanding as to how the payment of premiums paid by individuals or corporations into this fund shall be made to the treasurer of state.
> "In order that the treasurer of state and the industrial commission may come to a definite and thorough understanding as to how this money shall be paid into the fund I would be pleased to have you interpret the law, giving me your opinion and interpretation as to the manner in which these payments should be made."

The following provisions of the act found in 103 O. L., 72, entitled, "An act to further define the powers, duties and jurisdiction of the state liability board of awards, etc.," may be quoted as the only statutory provisions pertinent to your inquiry.

Subsection 1 of section 7 is as follows:

> "It (the liability board of awards, now the industrial commission) shall keep an accurate account of the money paid in premiums by each of the several classes of occupations or industries, and the disbursements on account of injuries and death of employes thereof, and it shall also keep an account of the money received from each individual employer and the amount disbursed from the state insurance fund on account of injuries and death of the employes of such employer.
> "Section 8. * * * and should such actual premium, when ascertained as aforesaid exceed in amount the premium so paid by such employer at the beginning of such six months' period, such employer shall immediately upon being advised of the true amount of such premium due, forthwith pay to the treasurer of state an amount equal to the difference between the amount actually found to be due and the amount paid by him at the beginning of said six months' period.
> "Section 9. The treasurer of state shall be custodian of the state insurance fund and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers authorized by the state liability board of awards and signed by any two members of the board; or, such vouchers may bear the fac-similie signatures of the board members printed thereon, and the signature of the chief of the auditing department.

"Section 10. The treasurer of state is hereby authorized to deposit any portion of the state insurance fund not needed for immediate use, in the same manner and subject to all the provisions of the law with respect to the deposit of state funds by such treasurer; and all interest earned by such portion of the state insurance fund as may be deposited by the state treasurer in pursuance of authority herein given, shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of such fund.

"Section 12. The treasurer of state shall give a separate and additional bond in such amount as may be fixed by the governor, and with sureties to his approval, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as custodian of the state insurance fund.

"Section 17. In the month of January in the years 1914 and 1915, the auditor of state shall draw his warrant on the treasurer of state, in favor of said treasurer as custodian of the state insurance fund, and for deposit to the credit of said fund, for a sum equal to one percentum of the amount of money expended by the state during the last preceding fiscal year, for the service of persons described in subdivision one of section fourteen hereof, which said sums are hereby appropriated and made available for such payments; and thereafter in the month of January of each year, such sums of money shall in like manner be paid into the state insurance fund as may be provided by law; and it shall be the duty of the state liability board of awards to communicate to the general assembly on the first day of each regular session thereof, an estimate of the aggregate amount of money necessary to be contributed by the state during the two years next ensuing as its proper portion of the state insurance fund.

"Section 19. In January of each year following the filing with him of the list mentioned in the last preceding section hereof, beginning with January, 1914, the auditor of each county shall issue his warrant in favor of the treasurer of state of Ohio on the county treasurer of his county, for the aggregate amount due from such county and from the taxing districts therein, to the state insurance fund, and the county treasurer shall pay the amount called for by such warrant from the county treasury, and the county auditor shall charge the amount so paid to the county itself and the several taxing districts therein as shown by such lists; and the treasurer of state shall immediately upon receiving such money, convert the same into the state insurance fund.

"Section 22. Except as hereinafter provided, every employer mentioned in subdivision two of section thirteen hereof shall, in the month of January, 1914, and semi-annually thereafter, pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the state liability board of awards for the employment or occupation of such employer the amount of which premium to be so paid by each such employer to be determined by the classifications, rules and rates made and published by the board; and such employer shall semi-annually thereafter pay such further sum of money into the state insurance fund as may be ascertained to be due from him by applying the rules of the board, and a receipt or certificate certifying that such payment has been made shall immediately be mailed to such employer by the state liability board of awards, which receipt or certificate attested by the seal of the board shall be prima facie evidence of the payment of such premiums.

"Section 28. If any employer shall default in any payment required to be made by him to the state insurance fund, the amount due from him shall be collected by civil action against him in the name of the state as plaintiff; and it shall be the duty of the state liability board of awards on the first Monday in February, 1914, and on the first Monday of each month thereafter, to certify to the attorney general of the state the names and residences of all employers known to the board to be in default for such payments for a longer period than five days, and the amount due from each such employer, and it shall then be the duty of the attorney general forthwith to bring, or cause to be brought against each such employer a civil action in the proper court for the collection of such amount so due, and the same when collected, shall be paid into the state insurance fund, and such employer's compliance with the provisions of this act requiring payments to be made to the state insurance fund shall date from the time of the payment of said money so collected as aforesaid to the treasurer of state for credit to the state insurance fund."

In many other sections of the act the words "pay into the state insurance fund" are used in one form or another. The difficulty, as I understand it, arises from an apparent conflict between section 22, above quoted, and the other provisions of the act, as to whether the payments shall be made in the first instance direct to the treasurer of state, or shall be made to the industrial commission, and by it transmitted to the treasurer of state. There can be no question whatever but that the payment must be made to the treasurer of state. The entire custody of the state insurance fund is vested in him and the industrial commission has no control whatever over the custody of this fund or any part of it and no premium due from an employer is paid or can be considered as paid until the amount due has actually been covered into the state insurance fund. This, of course, can only occur when such amount is actually paid to the treasurer of state.

As I interpret section 22 the implication of that section is not that the payment of premiums should be made to the industrial commission and by it transmitted to the treasurer of state; for it will be observed that said section provides, "* * * every employer * * * shall * * * pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium * * * and a receipt or certificate certifying that such payment has been made shall immediately be mailed to such employer by the state liability board of awards * * *." This receipt of certificate must certify that such premium has been paid into the state insurance fund, and the industrial commission would not be authorized to issue a receipt or certificate for a premium paid to it until it had caused such premium to be paid into the state insurance fund, that is to the treasurer of state as custodian of such fund; and the proper authority to certify that a certain payment has been covered into a certain fund is the custodian of the fund.

It seems to me that every employer making a payment of premium under the compensation act is entitled to a receipt from the treasurer of state as custodian of such funds. As to the method by which payments shall be transmitted to the treasurer of state I can do nothing more than to offer a suggestion.

This matter should be arranged by yourself and the industrial commission and a method adopted which will protect every one interested, which will provide that payments reach the state insurance fund at the earliest possible moment, and that the receipt to which the person making the payment is entitled shall be issued as soon as the payment is made.

While this is a special fund not controlled by the general laws, still it may be helpful to consider sections 248 and 303 of the General Code. These sections are as follows:

"Section 248. No payment into the state treasury shall discharge a liability to the state unless it is made on the certificate and draft of the auditor of state, and the certificate, together with the draft of the auditor in favor of the treasurer of state, delivered to the treasurer by the person paying, at the time of making payment. The treasurer of state shall number, file, and carefully preserve the certificate and draft, and on receiving payment, give such person duplicate receipts for the money so paid, specifying therein the liability on account of which payment is made, according to the certificate. One of the receipts shall be delivered to the auditor of state, and the liability of the person shall not cease until the delivery of such receipt.

"Section 303. If the law requires it, the treasurer of state shall give triplicate receipts, in other cases, duplicate receipts, to each person who pays money into the state treasury. One receipt shall be deposited with the auditor of state by the person paying the money into the treasury, and no such payment shall discharge a liability to the state until the receipt is deposited with the auditor of state."

Simply as a suggestion, and without any intention whatever of seeming to dictate to either the treasurer of state or the industrial commission as to the method which should be followed, I would suggest that when the industrial commission fixes the amount of premium to be paid by a given employer, that it transmit to such employer a statement of the amount he is to pay, with clear instructions to pay the designated amount directly to the treasurer of state and not to send the same to the industrial commission; and at the same time it transmit to the treasurer of state a duplicate of such statement, or advise him by a communication of some character so that he will know the amount of premium such employer is to pay and the date of the notification to such employer; and that the treasurer of state, when such payment is made by the employer, in compliance with such notice, issue to the employer a receipt for such payment, and at the same time transmit to the industrial commission a duplicate of such receipt, or a statement clearly indicating the amount of such payment, the employer from whom the amount was received, and the date upon which it was received. This receipt, I think, would be considered as the receipt or certificate provided for by the state liability board of awards; as the treasurer of state may be considered as treasurer of this board for the purpose of the custody of the state insurance fund.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ERECTION OF A NEW SCHOOL BUILDING—BOND ISSUE—TAXES AND TAXATION—EMERGENCY.

Where the inspector of workshops and factories prohibits the use of a schoolhouse until certain repairs are made, but the board of education decides to erect a new school building instead, and the electors vote for a $25,000 bond issue for the construction thereof, but cannot levy sufficient taxes to pay bonds and maintain school, there would be an emergency within the meaning of section 5649-4, General Code, and the necessary taxes for the retirement of bonds required for the purpose might be levied outside of all limitations of law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

HON. H. R. LOOMIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 17th, submitting for my opinion the following inquiry:

> "Several months ago this school district by the vote of the electors sold $25,000 of bonds to construct a new school house. This action was taken because of an order made by the state bureau of inspection. The order is as follows:
> "Order 252. Provide new floors for all study and class rooms; provide 16 square feet of floor space per pupil in primary grade and 18 square feet in grammer grade, 20 square feet per pupil in high school, and provide air space in accordance with the school code; place suitable supports under the floor of the vestibule and clean and repair boys closet; this order to be complied with within sixty days.
> "They find that they cannot levy a sufficient tax to pay these bonds and maintain their schools under the present limitations, and desire to know if by virtue of section 5649-4 and section 7630-1 they are authorized to exceed this levy."

Sections 7630-1 and 5649-4, General Code, were amended in 103 O. L., 527. They are in full as follows:

> "Section 7630-1. If a schoolhouse is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any schoolhouse for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such schoolhouse or to construct a new schoolhouse for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such boards of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law.

"Section 5649-4. For the emergencies mentioned in sections forty-four hundred and fifty, forty-four hundred and fifty-one, fifty-six hundred and twenty-nine, seventy-four hundred and nineteen and 7630-1 of the General Code, the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor irrespective of any of the limitations of this act."

You do not quote enough of the order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories (or the bureau of inspection within the department of the state industrial commission, which in my opinion amounts to the same thing) to indicate whether or not it amounts to a prohibition of the use of the schoolhouse for its intended purpose unless the repairs to which the order relates are made as therein required. It is true, of course, that as to school house, sections 1031 et seq., General Code, apply. Among those provisions are the following:

"Section 1032. Upon inspection of such structure, the district inspector of workshops and factories shall file with the chief inspector a written report of the condition thereof. If it is found that necessary precautions for the prevention of fire or other disaster have not been taken or that means for the safe and speedy egress of persons assembled therein have not been provided, such report shall specify what appliances, additions or alterations are necessary therefor. Thereupon the chief inspector shall notify in writing the owner or persons having control of such structure of the necessary appliances, additions or alterations to be added to or made in such structure.

"Section 1033. If such structure is located in a municipality, a copy of such notice shall be mailed to the mayor thereof, otherwise such notice shall be mailed to the prosecuting attorney of such county. Thereupon the mayor with the aid of the police or the prosecuting attorney with the aid of the sheriff, as the case may be, shall prevent the use of such structure for public assemblage until the appliances, additions or alterations required by such notice have been added to or made in such structure.

"Section 1037. Whoever, being a person, firm or corporation or member of a board, and being the owner or in control of any building mentioned in section ten hundred and thirty-one of this chapter, uses or permits the use of such building in violation of any order prohibiting its use issued as provided by law, or fails to comply with an order so issued relating to the change, improvement or repair of such building shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars, and each day that such use or failure continues shall constitute a separate offense."

Upon consideration of these sections I am of the opinion that the mere service of an order, such as that which you quote, upon the board of education amounts to a prohibition of the use of the building for its intended purpose, unless the things commanded thereby are done.

The order does not require the construction of a new schoolhouse. However, section 7630-1, in my opinion, affords its benefits to the board of education in case the board in the exercise of a sound discretion determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of a district, the construction of a new schoolhouse is to be preferred to the rebuilding or repairing of a schoolhouse the use of which is thus prohibited. In other words, if the chief inspector of workshops and factories, by the service of an order such as that set forth in your letter, prohibits the use of a building unless certain repairs are made, and the board of education is of the opinion that it would be better to build a new school building than merely to repair the old building; and if the vote of the electors, as provided in section 7630-1 is taken; and if all of such proceedings would be futile to accomplish the intended purpose because of the limitations placed upon the taxing power of the board of education, then, and in that event there would be an emergency within the meaning of section 5649-4, and the necessary taxes for the retirement of bonds required for the purpose might be levied outside of all limitations of the law.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under the circumstances mentioned by you, a levy, may be made outside of all limitations of the law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 9716, GENERAL CODE.

Section 9716, General Code, applies to banks and corporations prior to the enactment of the Thomas banking act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of March 2, 1914, asking opinion of me in which you say:

> "Section 9716, G. C., provides that an incorporated bank before commencing business is required to have its capital stock fully subscribed and at least 50 per cent. paid thereon. Section 5495 et seq., requires each domestic corporaton for profit organized under the laws of this state to file an annual report with this commission during the month of May and pay a fee upon its capital stock subscribed or issued and outstanding. An investigation of the annual reports filed under this section by some of the incorporated banks discloses a number of companies that fail to show the capital fully subscribed. The commission, therefore, desires to submit for your consideration, and respectfully requests your opinion upon the following questions:
> "First. Does section 9716 above referred to apply to incorporated banks incorporated prior to the enactment of said statute?
> "Second. If said statute does apply to said banks, on what date are such banks required to show full compliance with said section.
> "Third. If said section does apply to said corporations, is it not the duty of the tax commission to certify such corporations to the auditor and treasurer of state for the levy and collection of the corporation fee upon the amount erroneously omitted from the annual report for the various years?"

The determination of the questions presented by you depends upon the construction of certain sections of the Thomas banking act, which act has, in part, been carried into the General Code as sections 9702 to 9797, inclusive.

Section 9702 et seq., General Code, provides for the incorporation and organization of banks in a manner, which though exclusive to banks, is quite similar to the method provided by statute for the organization of corporations generally.

Section 9711, General Code, provides that as soon as the capital stock of such corporation is fully subscribed, and 10 per cent. thereof paid in, the subscribers of the articles of incorporation, or a majority thereof shall certify such fact in writing to the secretary of state, and thereupon give notice to the stockholders to meet for the purpose of choosing the directors of the bank.

Section 9716, G. C., provides:

> "The entire capital stock of such corporation shall be subscribed and at least fifty per cent. of each share paid in before it may be authorized to commence business. The remainder of its capital stock shall be paid in monthly installments of at least ten per cent. each on the whole amount of the capital, payable at the end of each succeeding month from the time it is authorized by the superintendent of banks to commence business. The payment of each installment shall be certified under oath to the superintendent of banks by the president, secretary, treasurer or cashier of such corporation."

The provisions of this section requiring the capital stock of banks within its provisions to be fully subscribed is a condition precedent to the right and qualification of such banks to transact business, and looking to the terms of this section alone, the nature of the requirement as well as ordinary rules of construction leads to the view that the provisions of the section are wholly prospective and apply only to banks incorporated under the act of which the section is a part. The section is not to be considered as prescribing a qualification with respect to the right of previously organized banks to do business, nor as effecting a disqualification of such previously organized banks which have not caused all of their stock to be subscribed. On the contrary, the terms of section 9739, G. C., forbid the application of section 9716 to previously organized banks with respect to their right and qualification to do business.

Section 9739 provides:

> "Banks * * * heretofore incorporated under any law of this state, may continue business and the exercise of powers they now have without prejudice to any rights acquired under the acts under which they were incorporated; and there shall be saved to such associations and corporations all the rights, privileges and powers heretofore conferred upon them."

Pertinent to the consideration of the questions at hand, I note certain of the provisions of sections 9741, 9742 and 9743, General Code. Section 9741, General Code, provides:

> "Banks * * * heretofore incorporated in this state which have paid in the amount of capital stock required by this chapter to enable them to commence business, if they so elect, may avail themselves of the privileges and powers herein conferred, by signifying such election and declaration under their seal, attested by the signature of the president and secretary, to the secretary of state and the superintendent of banks, which such secretary shall record, and his certificate be evidence thereof. When such election and declaration is so recorded, it shall confer all the privileges and powers conferred by this chapter, and from that time such association or corporation shall be governed by its provisions."

Section 9742 provides that the election and declaration provided for in section 9741 shall be made only when authorized by a vote of at least two-thirds of the capital stock at a meeting of the stockholders, notice of which meeting has been given as therein provided, and further provides as follows:

> "But after April 1, 1910, every such corporation or association in all respects must conform its business and transactions to the provisions of this chapter."

Section 9793, G. C., provides:

> "Every banking company * * * except building and loan associations, empowered to receive, and receiving money on deposit, now existing and chartered or incorporated, or which hereafter become incorporated shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter, except that no such corporation or association having a less capital stock than the minimum amount provided in section 9704, shall be required to increase its capital stock in order to conform to the provisions of such section."

Speaking with reference to the proper construction of sections 9739, 9742 and 9793, General Code, with respect to banks organized before the enactment of the Thomas act, the court (Bigger, J.) in the case of American Trust & Savings Bank Co. vs. Baxter, Franklin Common Pleas No. 63172, says:

> "The legislature had in mind the distinction between the rights conferred by the charters of these institutions to conduct a banking business, and the right of the state to regulate the exercise of that right. It is only by observing this distinction that we can harmonize these apparently conflicting provisions, which, in my opinion, are not conflicting when rightly interpreted. It is impossible without reserving this as a fundamental distinction to harmonize the provisions of section 35 (9739, G. C.) with the language of section 91 (9793, G. C.), that, 'every such banking institution whether now existing or chartered or incorporated, or which may hereafter become incorporated, shall be subject to the provisions of this act.'"

Keeping in mind the distinction above referred to, it will be noted that section 9716 goes to the right of the banking companies within its provisions to transact business at all by force of its own terms, and those of section 9739 can apply only to banking companies organized under the act of which its provisions are a part.

Sections 9742 and 9793 make provisions looking at the regulation of the business of banking companies whether they have been organized and authorized to transact business under the provisions of the Thomas act or under the provisions of prior legislation.

My conclusion, therefore, is that section 9716 does not apply to banks incorporated and organized prior to the enactment of this section. This conclusion with respect to the first question presented by you, answers your second and third questions for the reason that they are dependent upon the application of section 9716 to previously organized banks, and as before noted, my conclusion is that the section does not so apply.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CANAL LAND DEPARTMENT—RENEWING LEASES ALONG THE CANAL IN THE CITY OF CINCINNATI.

The superintendent of public works would have the right to extend or renew leases for the use of surplus water, which are expiring along that part of the canal located in Cincinnati, which is under lease to that city, until at least a conduit will be built to take care of the water which would otherwise flow through the canal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 10, 1913, you call my attention to the provisions of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 168, wherein authority was granted to lease to the city of Cincinnati a certain part of the canal in said city.

You then state:

> "The department of public works is placed in the position of supplying water which is being used by parties who have no longer a contract for the same. It would be a hardship to the said concerns to cut off their supply of water and it would appear to be unnecessary to do so, since enough water is being carried down the canal to supply them.
> "It seems to me that it is clear that the city of Cincinnati has no rights or interests in the disposal of the water, since one of the conditions of the lease is that the city shall build suitable works for the conveying of the water for the purposes of its use and to enable the state fully to carry out and discharge its obligations. The city of Cincinnati thus far has done nothing toward carrying out these conditions. It has furnished no bond as security that the conditions stated in the act will be performed. The state has maintained the banks of that section of the canal and repaired them at various times and has kept up a patrol upon them through the city the same as it always has done, and still maintains said patrol at considerable expense.
>
> "The auditor of the state of Ohio requires contracts as the basis for collections for water rentals. As stated above, several contracts have expired but the parties still want to use the water.
> "Has this department the right to make provisional contracts which will run for so long a time as the city of Cincinnati does not fulfill the conditions of its contracts with the state of Ohio?
> "These contracts would be provisional in this sense, that at any time the city of Cincinnati fully complies with all the terms of the act that the said contracts shall cease."

You state that enough water is being carried down the canal to supply water to the water users who had leases at the time the act in question was passed, but whose leases have now expired.

Section 1 of the act of 102 Ohio Laws 168, provides:

> "Permission shall be given to the city of Cincinnati, in the manner hereinafter provided, to enter upon, improve and occupy forever, as a public street or boulevard, and for sewerage, conduit and if desired for subway purposes, all of that part of the Miami and Erie canal which extends from a point three hundred feet north of Mitchell avenue to the east side of Broadway in said city, including the width thereof, as owned or held by the state, but such permission shall be granted subject to all outstanding rights or claims, if any, with which it may conflict, and upon the further terms and conditions of this act."

Section 2 thereof reads:

"Such permission shall be granted upon the further condition that said city, in the uses aforesaid of all or any portion herein mentioned of such canal, shall construct or cause to be constructed suitable and sufficient works for a convenient outlet for the discharge of the water of said canal, at a point three hundred feet north of Mitchell avenue, so as not to obstruct the flow of water through the remaining part of such canal, nor destroy nor injure the present supply of water for mechanical or commercial purposes. Such outlet shall be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications to be drawn or approved by the state engineer, and the city of Cincinnati shall give bond in such sum as shall be prescribed by the state board of public works, to be approved by the attorney general for the faithful performance of the work.

"And such permission shall be granted upon the further condition that said city shall adopt and construct appropriate works for the purposes of supplying water to the lessee users of said water along that portion of the canal to be abandoned, in order to and for the purpose of enabling the state fully to carry out and discharge the obligations now resting upon it by virtue of certain contracts now subsisting and in force between it and said lessee water users, during the remainder of the terms of said contracts, in the same quantity and under the same conditions and at the same rate of rental provided for in said contracts, and provided further that during the period of construction of a street or subway or of appropriate works for the purposes of supplying water to the lessee users of said water, as herein provided said city of Cincinnati shall cause no cessation or diminution of the supply of water to the said lessee water users to which they are entitled under their respective contracts or leases with the state of Ohio except insofar as such cessation or diminution of such supply of water may be absolutely necessary."

By virtue of section 5 of the act, the lease is to be entered into for a term of ninety-nine years, renewable forever. The city of Cincinnati has accepted under this act and a lease was executed August 29, 1912.

The provisions of sections one and two of the act are contained in the terms of the lease.

The city of Cincinnati has not as yet constructed the works provided for in section two of the act and the state of Ohio is still conveying its water through the original canal. It must continue to do this until the works for the discharge of the water as provided in the first paragraph of section two are constructed.

In no part of this act is the ciy of Cincinnati granted the use of the water, or the right to lease water. Section one of the act states the purpose of the grant and the extent of the interest to be conveyed, in these words:

"as a public street or boulevard, and for sewerage, conduit and if desired for subway purposes."

Nothing is said herein about the use or lease of the waters of the canal.

In the first paragraph of section two of the act, the city is required to construct suitable works for the discharge of the water of said canal,

> "so as not to obstruct the flow of water through the remaining part of such canal, nor destroy nor injure the present supply of water for mechanical or commercial purposes."

This provision shows that it was intended that the use of the water for mechanical or commercial purposes was not to be injured or destroyed. It was to be preserved. This part of section two refers to the remaining part of the canal, that is, the part which is not leased.

In the second paragraph of section two, the city is required to build a conduit for the purpose of supplying water to the users thereof along that portion of the canal that is leased, in order to permit the state to fully carry out its obligations under existing leases for water.

This conduit is to be constructed so that the state may carry out these contracts. No obligation is placed upon the city to fulfill these contracts. The state furnishes the water and has reserved the right of an easement over the canal land for the purpose of carrying the water. The contracts to be carried out are those subsisting and in force at the time the act became effective.

This limitation as to contracts then subsisting, was to prevent the state from increasing the water leases between the time of the passage of the act and the acceptance by the city, so as to require a greater conduit than would be necessary to supply the water contracted for at the time the act became effecive. In other words, this is a limitation upon the size of the conduit. It is not a limitation upon the state as to its right to use the water in such manner as it sees fit, provided the burden of the city is not increased in its duty to furnish a conduit.

Some of the leases along this part of the canal are for definite terms, others for ninety-nine years, renewable forever. In order to fulfill these long term leases a certain amount of water must be supplied. These long term leases are usually for water power. The water is not actually consumed but is returned to the canal. It can be and is used by different concerns along the route of the canal, without increasing the supply, and without increasing, to any extent, the burden upon the city of Cincinnati as to the construction of a conduit.

There is nothing in this act to show that the state was to be denied the right to lease the water passing through this part of the canal or through the conduit, if such leases do not in any way increase the obligations of the city. The city does not furnish any water. It is required to provide a conduit for carrying the water. The state has in effect reserved an easement in this part of the canal for this purpose. The use of the canal land by the state for this purpose does not and need not interfere with the rights and privileges granted to the city of Cincinnati by section one of the act, to wit, "to enter upon, improve and occupy" said land, "as a public street or boulevard, and for sewerage, conduit, and if desired for subway purposes."

These uses may be enjoyed and the state may also have a means of carrying its water. In fact the city is required, by the terms of the act, to provide a means of carrying this water.

If it were to be held that the state could not renew leases which have expired, this situation would present itself.

The state would be required to furnish water to a certain number of water users, growing fewer in number from time to time as other leases expired, who have long term and perpetual leases, with a constantly decreasing revenue, and without benefit to any one, not even to the city.

This same water could be used along the route for many commercial and mechanical purposes. Yet, by such a holding, no one can use or lease the water and this valuable use must go as an entire loss.

It is to be presumed that the legislature knew of these long time leases, which it has required the state to carry out and fulfill. It is not to be presumed that the legislature intended such a waste of water and such a loss of revenue.

The state must continue to furnish a certain amount of water in order to carry out its contracts. To deny it the right to relet this water at the expiration of a lease, would be to require the state to furnish water to these long term water users at an actual loss.

Such an intent is not to be presumed. It should be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. I find nothing in the act which requires or calls for such a restriction.

The purpose of section two in referring to existing contracts is to determine the size of the conduit to be constructed by the city. It is not a limitation upon the use of the water by the state or its lessees.

As a matter of fact the city of Cincinnati has not yet constructed a conduit or an outlet for the waters of the canal.

To permit the state to renew the leases upon the terms you suggest, that is, that such renewals shall terminate upon the construction of the conduit by the city, and appropriate works for the discharge of the water, would not in any way interfere with the rights of the city under its lease or increase its obligations.

Section 431, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio, 122, authorizes the superintendent of public works to lease surplus water. This section provides in part:

> "The superintendent of public works may lease surplus water power on any of the public works, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him."

I am of opinion, therefore, that the superintendent of public works may renew leases for the use of surplus water along the part of the canal leased to the city of Cincinnati, subject to termination when the city constructs the works provided for in section two of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 168. Such leases should be entered into for definite terms, subject to termination as above stated.

The right of the state to renew leases or to continue renewed leases as above granted, after the construction of such works is not herein passed upon.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONTRACTS LIMITED BY 1913 APPROPRIATION CANNOT BE CONTINUED UNDER 1914 APPROPRIATION.

Where the superintendent of public works entered into a contract for the building of a proposed wall specifying that the amount of work covered in this contract is limited by the 1913 appropriation, work cannot be done under this old contract to be paid out of the 1914 appropriation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of February 21, 1914, is received in which you inquire:

> "An appropriation has been made by the recent legislature for the continuation of the work of building the revetment walls at Lake St. Marys, also at Indian Lake.
> "The question has been raised whether it will be necessary to re-advertise the new work and relet it. I would be greatly obliged to you if you would give me an opinion upon that question."

Upon inquiry at your office I am informed that the original contracts for each of these improvements were let on competitive bids after advertisement. In each of the published notices to contractors, the length of the proposed wall was given, with the following restrictions:

> "Length of proposed wall _____ feet, but the amount of work covered in this contract is limited by the 1913 appropriation."

The length of the wall at St. Marys, Lake was stated as 8,000 feet and that at Indian Lake at 7,200 feet.

The bids were received by virtue of this notice and contracts awarded on said bids. The contracts provided that the work was to be "the same as described in the advertisement and specifications."

The contracts were in effect limited to the amount of the 1913 appropriation. This fund has evidently been exhausted and that terminates the original contract.

A new appropriation has been secured for the year 1914. This does not extend the term of the old contract. New contracts will be required and these will be subject to the provisions of section 428, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 121.

This section provides for competitive bidding and has heretofore been construed by this department in opinions to you.

The old contracts do not cover the appropriations for 1914, and they cannot be extended beyond the appropriation of 1913.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision Public Offices, Department, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 15, 1913, requesting my opinion upon seven questions as follows:

"1. May sinking fund trustees invest their reserve funds in certificates of indebtedness issued under authority of section 3913, G. C., or should such indebtedness be taken care of by the city auditor and city treasurer?

"2. May said trustees invest their reserve funds in certificates of indebtedness authorized under section 3915, G. C., or should such indebtedness be taken care of by the city auditor and city treasurer?

"3. If certificates of indebtedness are sold in anticipation of the collection of special assessments and the same are not redeemed at maturity through failure of the holders thereof to present same for payment, may the sinking fund trustees legally continue to pay interest on such obligations?

"4. If such last mentioned obligations are presented to the sinking fund trustees and endorsed by their secretary 'not paid for want of funds' or some like endorsement, will interest continue to run until notice be given by the trustees? Must such endorsement be made on the obligation or is it sufficient for the holder to show by proof that such demand was made by calling upon the secretary or a member of the board of trustees?

"5. If such trustees or their secretary have sufficient funds on hand to redeem such obligations at maturity and do not do so, would they be liable for the needless expenditure for interest on such obligations and would such liability extend to their bonds? If such obligations bear 5 per cent. interest and the holder of a large portion thereof is the depositary bank selected by said trustees (which pays 2½ per cent. interest on said deposits) would there be any liability on the part of the holder of said obligations, or the trustees and their bondsmen, for the needless expenditure for interest paid after maturity?

"6. Is it the duty of the sinking fund trustees to apply to council for a refund issue in the event that they have not sufficient funds to cancel debt at maturity? If trustees assume the duty of caring for certificates of indebtedness issued under the authority of section 3915, would they be liable for the misapplication of said funds?

"7. In the event that special assessments are enjoined, may the general sinking fund be temporarily drawn upon to meet maturing special assessment bonds?"

The sections of the General Code involved in your several inquiries are as follows:

"Sec. 3913. In anticipation of the general revenue fund in any fiscal year, such corporations may borrow money and issue certificates of indebtedness therefor, signed as municipal bonds are signed, but no loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances. The sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity. These certificates shall not run for a longer period than six months, nor bear a greater rate of interest than six per cent., shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest.

"Sec. 3915. Municipal corporations may borrow money and issue notes in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. Such notes shall be signed and sealed as municipal bonds are signed and sealed. They shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed six per cent. per annum and be due and payable not later than five years from the date of issue. The notes shall not exceed in amount the estimated cost of the improvement, and shall recite upon their face the purpose for which they were issued. All assessments collected for the improvement, and all unexpended balances remaining in the fund after the cost and expenses of the improvement have been paid, shall be applied to the payment of the notes and the interest thereon until both are fully provided for.

"Sec. 4506. Municipal corporations having outstanding bonds or funded debts shall, through their councils, and in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, levy and collect annually a tax upon the real and personal property in the corporation sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts and for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases, and the taxes so raised shall be used for no other purpose whatever.

"Sec. 4512. Upon demand of the board, the city auditor or village clerk shall report to it balances belonging to the city or village, to the credit of the sinking fund, interest accounts, or for any bonds issued for or by the corporation, and for officers or persons having them shall immediately pay them over to the trustees of the sinking fund, who shall deposit them in such place or places as the majority of such board shall elect.

"Sec. 4514. The trustees of the sinking fund shall invest all moneys received by them in bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any municipal corporation, school, township or county bonds, in such state, and hold in reserve only such sums as may be needed for effecting the terms of this title. All interest received by them shall be reinvested in like manner.

"Sec. 4517. The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession.

"Sec. 3922. When a municipal corporation issues its bonds, it shall first offer them at par and accrued interest to the trustees of the sinking fund, in their official capacity, or, in case there are no such trustees, to the officer or officers of such corporation having charge of its debts, in their official capacity. * * *

Sec. 3932. Premiums and accrued interest received by the corporation from a sale of its bonds shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be by them applied on the bonded debt and interest account of the corporation, but the premiums and accrued interest upon bonds issued for special assessments shall be applied by the trustees of the sinking fund to the payment of the principal and interest of those bonds and no others.

"Sec. 3804. When any unexpended balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which are still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the bonds.

"Sec. 3919. Bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness issued by a municipal corporation shall be signed by the mayor and by the auditor, or the clerk thereof, and be sealed with the seal of the corporation. When issued for street improvements, they shall have the name of the street or portion thereof so improved, and for which they were issued, legibly written or printed upon them."

I have considered all of these sections in connection with your several questions and I am clearly of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that trustees of the sinking fund could not invest their reserve funds in certificates of indebtedness issued under authority of section 3913, General Code; their investment must be in bonds. Hence, evidence of indebtedness under section 3913, General Code, are neither bonds nor evidence of a funded indebtedness. They are short time notes and the sinking fund trustees have no right whatever to invest their funds in them. Such indebtedness should be taken care of by the city auditor and the city treasurer in the manner provided by the above italicized portion of section 3913, General Code.

Answering your second question I am of the opinion that the trustees of the sinking fund could not lawfully invest their reserve funds in certificates of indebtedness authorized by section 3915, General Code.

This question is somewhat closer than your first question in that notes issued under section 3915 do represent, in a way, a funded indebtedness Nevertheless, they are not bonds and section 3915, General Code, on its face, provides the proper method of taking care of such notes. The provision is that the assessments and unexpended balances remaining in the improvement fund shall be applied to the payment of the notes and the interest thereon. If it were intended that the sinking fund trustees should have charge of this matter a provision like those found in some of the other sections above cited would have been necessary to accomplish such a result. That is, it would have been provided that the balance remaining in the improvement fund should be paid over to the sinking fund trustees as is provided in section 3804 and section 3932, General Code, with respect to bonds, and it would have been provided that the assessments should be paid to the sinking fund trustees as is provided in section 3512 with respect to bonds.

Section 4506, General Code, therefore, although it speaks of "bonds and funded debts" does not have the force of vesting in the sinking fund trustees the management of all the debts of the corporation; when notes are issued under sections 3913 and 3915, General Code, such notes must be provided for and paid as these sections direct and not through the agency of the sinking fund trustees.

Nor may the sinking fund trustees invest their funds in such notes as they would invest in bonds of the United States or of another municipal corporation as provided in section 4314. As already pointed out, this section limits the trustees' power of investment to bonds only.

In a way, my answers to your first two questions obviate the necessity of my answering your third question. The payment of interest on certificates of indebtedness sold in anticipation of the collection of special assessments is not a function in the sinking fund trustees. However, I assume in asking your third, fourth and fifth questions that you have in mind, a case wherein sinking fund trustees have actually undertaken to provide for the retirement of special assessment notes, possibly under the supposed authority of an ordinance directing them to do so.

In connection with this question I assume that the notes to which you refer bear on their face a statement to the effect that they are payable at the office of the sinking fund trustees. Even if no such statement did appear on the face of the notes, it would be clear that in order to be entitled to payment of them at maturity their holders would have to present them at the proper municipal office for payment, as the municipal authorities would have no means of knowing who might be the holders of the notes at their maturity.

It is clear, then, that presentation for payment at maturity is a condition precedent to the foundation of a valid claim against the municipality on the part of the holder of such an obligation, and I am further of the opinion that such presentation is necessary in order to lay the foundation for a valid claim of interest after the date of maturity. Under the section, as above quoted, the notes of a municipality are required to stipulate the rate of interest payable thereon, and it is the settled law of this state that where there is a general stipulation respecting the rate of interest, the rate stipulated controls that chargeable after maturity as well as that payable before maturity. Hydraulic Co. vs. Chatfield, 38 O. S., 577.

However, the fact that the contract fixes the rate after maturity as well as prior to maturity does not, in my judgment, change the character of the interest payable after maturity. In its essential nature the right to receive such interest is conditioned upon default in the payment of the principal when due; therefore, if the holders of the securities in question fail to present them for payment when due the municipality is not liable for any further interest thereon, and any city officer paying out public funds in his hands by way of such interest is guilty of a misapplication of such funds; he has made a gift of the public money to one who has no claim whatsoever against the corporation.

Answering your fourth question, I am of the opinion that if the obligations are presented to the sinking fund trustees and indorsed by their secretary as you state, and if the place of presentment fixed in the notes is the office of the sinking fund trustees, or if by some other course of conduct the municipal government as a whole has estopped itself from claiming that presentation to the sinking fund trustees is not a proper presentation, then interest would be properly chargeable after maturity and when earned might be lawfully paid. All these conditions, however, should be present in order to support the answer which I have given. That is to say, unless by recital on the face of the notes or otherwise the municipal corporation has notified the holder of the obligation to present it for payment at the office of the sinking fund trustees, such presentation and indorsement would not constitute a proper presentation for payment.

Further answering your fourth question, I beg to state that in my opinion the indorsement of refusal to pay is not essential in order to constitute a foundation for the right to receive further interest; such an indorsement not being provided for by statute, as in the case of county warrants, is evidential merely, and other proof would be receivable to show presentation and non-payment.

I am further of the opinion in answer to your fourth question that under the circumstances as I have stated them, the liability for interest after maturity would continue until actual notice had been given to the holder of the obligation by the sinking fund trustees that the obligation would be paid when presented. The mere publication of notice in some newspaper of general circulation in the municipality would be insufficient, there being no statute on the subject.

Answering the first part of your fifth question I am of the opinion that if the trustees of the sinking fund had sufficient funds on hand to redeem such obligations at maturity and did not do so, but under the circumstances detailed in my answer to your fourth question, so acted as to make the municipality liable for further interest, they are themselves liable to the municipality on this account. You will note that I am still assuming that the notes have, by ordinance or by recitals on their face, been made payable at the office of the sinking fund trustees. Clearly without such an ordinance or without such recital the action of the sinking fund trustees would have no effect whatever, as I have already stated. It is, therefore, a condition of my present answer that the sinking fund trustees actually have authority in the premises to provide for the payment of the notes—an authority which they do not possess under the statutes themselves as interpreted in my answer to your second question. In the event that the trustees had no authority to refuse payment and so to bind the municipality, then the officer paying interest after the maturity of the obligation on account of the erroneous presentation to the sinking fund trustees and their erroneous refusal to pay, would be the person liable; for he could not shield himself behind his void act of the sinking fund trustees nor could the holder of the security found a valid claim for interest upon such a nugatory act. The officer paying interest under these circumstances would be liable for misapplication of public funds on the theory already stated in answer to your third question.

Further, with respect to the liability of the trustees as inquired about in the first part of your fifth question, I may say that it is founded upon their failure to exercise due care in the management of the public affairs entrusted to them. It differs from the liability on account of the misapplication of public funds which has already been discussed in this opinion upon another assumption of fact, in that the exercise of due care and reasonable judgment on the part of the trustees would constitute a complete defense to an action brought to charge them therewith; so that the mere fact that their action which resulted in an imposition of a needless liability upon the municipality may have been erroneous, is not sufficient to make them liable. See Attorney General's Opinions, 1910-1911, page 431. Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th Ed. Vol. 1, Section 433.

Coming now to that portion of the first part of your fifth question which relates to the liability of the official bonds of the trustees, I am clearly of the opinion that under no circumstances and in no event would the sureties on the official bonds of these officers be liable on account of anything concerning which you inquire. As stated in the answer to your second question the statutes do not authorize nor require the trustees of the sinking fund to have anything to do with the payment of notes issued by a municipal corporation either in anticipation of the returns from a semi-annual installment of taxes or in anticipation of the collection of special assessments. It is well established in Ohio, as well as elsewhere, that whatever may be the right of the municipal council, by fixing a place of payment and by other provisions in an ordinance to fasten upon the sinking fund trustees the extra-statutory duty of providing for the payment of obligations of this kind, a duty so created is not one for the breach of which the official bond of the officer is liable. The distinction is pointed out in State vs. Griffith, 74 O. S., 80. In that case a board of education, by a rule, had attempted to confer authority upon its clerk to receive and become the custodian of funds arising from tuition fees paid by pupils non-resident of the district—a duty naturally devolving upon the treasurer of the district, just as in the question asked by you, the duty to provide for the payment of the obligations of the municipality under the statute naturally devolves upon the auditor and treasurer of the municipality instead of upon the sinking fund trustees. The clerk in the case cited defaulted and action was brought on his bond. The syllabus holds as follows:

> "A public officer is personally, and may even be criminally, liable for malfeasance in office; but the sureties on his official bond are answerable only within the letter of their contract for the unfaithful performance of his official duties and not for dereliction outside of the limits of his official duties. State vs. Carter, 67 O. S., 422, distinguished."

In State vs. Carter, it had been held that a clerk of a municipal corporation receiving payment of sewer assessments under an ordinance providing for the assessment, was criminally liable in a prosecution for embezzlement upon a default by him whether the council had the right to authorize or require to handle the money or not, and from the language in the case of State vs. Griffith it is at least inferable that individual civil liability might have arisen under the facts of that case, but it is such individual liability which the court in the syllabus distinguishes from liability on the official bond. On this point Davis, J., at page 94 in State vs. Griffith says:

> "But it is insisted that the receipt of these moneys by the clerk was colore officii, if not virtute officii and that for acts * * * colore officii sureties are held responsible in this state. While there has been confusion of terms in some cases, and possibly a confusion of classification in some instances; yet this conclusion results from the cases in this state and elsewhere, that there are three classes of cases, against sureties on official bonds; one class in which the officer acts, virtute officii, within his official authority but unfaithful or improperly exercises his official duties, and another class in which the officer while acting colore officii, with pretense of official authority, is guilty of trespass upon persons or property. Of this class illustrations are found in Story vs. Jennings, 4 Ohio St., 418, and Drolesbaugh vs. Hill, 64 Ohio St., 257. In both of the classes already named the sureties are generally held to be liable. The third class is of those cases in which the officer has been guilty of misconduct which is wholly outside of the line of his official duty as defined by law. In this class of cases the sureties have generally, and we believe upon the soundest of reasoning, been held not to be liable. We refer this case to the third class and cite as an illustration the following cases: State vs. Medary, 17 Ohio, 554; Wilson vs. State, 67 Kan., 44; People vs. Pennock, 60 N. Y., 421; State vs. Bonner, 72 Mo., 387; Orton vs. City of Lincoln, 156 Ill., 499; State vs. Moores, 56 Neb., 82; County of San Luis Obispo vs. Farnum, 108 Cal., 562."

I am, therefore, of the opinion, that in any event there will be no liability on the official bond of the trustees of the sinking fund under the circumstances mentioned by you.

Another point must be taken into consideration in answering the first part of your fifth question. As already observed, the sinking fund trustees are not by law charged with the duty of providing for the payment of special assessment notes. This is but another way of saying that the trustees of the general sinking fund levies are not available for the payment of such notes. Primarily, the revenues properly appropriated for this purpose are the special assessments themselves, as the section relating to their issuance, above quoted, provides. Should there be any shrinkage in the revenues from this source then the difference is a general unfunded obligation of the municipality like any other claim against it; and such an obligation or claim cannot be paid out of the general moneys of the sinking fund in the hands of the trustees except after judgment against the municipality.

So that the question as to whether or not the sinking fund trustees have "sufficient funds on hand," as stated by you, is not to be determined by ascertaining whether or not at the time of the presentation of the obligations the sinking fund trustees had general sinking fund moneys in their possession sufficient to pay them, but it must be ascertained whether or not there were assessment moneys in the possession of the trustees sufficient for that purpose.

My complete answer, then, to the first part of your fifth question may be stated as follows:

If the trustees of the sinking fund fail to redeem special assessment notes presented to it for redemption at maturity, such failure imposes no liability upon them unless by reason of the ordinance issuing the notes, or recitals on the face of the notes, the latter were properly presented to the sinking fund trustees, so that the act of the trustees became the act of the municipality, binding upon them; but in the event that these conditions are satisfied, then if the sinking fund trustees have in possession sufficient funds arising from the assessment, and negligently, carelessly, willfully and without extenuating circumstances, fail to pay the obligations as they are presented to them, the result of their failure will be not only to make the municipality, as such, liable for further interest (which would be the case even though the non-action of the trustees was in good faith), but also to render the trustees personally liable for the damage suffered by the municipality, as such; but there would be no liability on their official bonds.

Answering the second part of your fifth question, I am of the opinion that the fact that the holder of the obligation is a bank which has the funds belonging to the sinking fund trustees on deposit at 2½ per cent. interest might become material as affecting the question of measure of damages; but it cannot affect the pure question of liability. Otherwise, the second part of this question is to be answered in the same manner as the first part has been answered.

I have assumed that the first part of your sixth question relates to the general duties of the sinking fund trustees, and has no special reference to the matters elsewhere inquired about, viz., those concerning the handling of special assessment notes by the sinking fund trustees. That is to say, I assume that the debt concerning which the question arises is one properly payable through the sinking fund trustees.

If the sinking fund trustees have not sufficient funds on hand to pay a given obligation at maturity, they may extend the indebtedness by refunding it under authority of section 4520, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of refunding, renewing or extending the bonded debt at a lower rate of interest, or for buying the fee simple of real estate held by the corporation under special leases wherein is secured to the corporation the option to buy the fee simple at a fixed price, and where the money to buy can be procured at a less rate of interest on the price than is represented by the stipulated rents, the trustees of the sinking fund may issue the coupon or registered bonds of the corporation for such period not exceeding fifty years, in such denominations, payable at such places and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. as they may determine. The aggregate amount of such refunding, renewing or extending bonds so issued shall not exceed that of the bonds so refunded, renewed or extended."

Section 4522, General Code, relates to the same subject-matter and is as follows:

> "Bonds issued by the trustees of the sinking fund shall be signed by the mayor and president of such board of trustees. When the mayor of a village is also the president of such board of trustees, he shall sign as such mayor and president of the board. They shall be attested by the auditor or clerk of the corporation and the secretary of the board of trustees of the sinking fund and have affixed the seal of the corporation issuing them. They shall be sold as provided by law for the sale of bonds by a municipal corporation. The trustees of the sinking fund, on demand of the owner or holder of any coupon bond, may issue in place thereof a registered bond of the same denomination, bearing the same rate of interest and payable both interest and principal at the same time, and provide the method of effecting such exchange."

From these two sections you will observe that sinking fund trustees desiring to refund indebtedness need not "apply to council for a refund issue" as you state, but may, at least to some extent, themselves make the issue without authority of council. It is true that section 4520 seems to require as a condition of the exercise of this power that the renewal or extension be "at a lower rate of interest," so that possibly if the trustees are unable to secure a lower rate of interest it would be necessary for them to call the matter to the attention of the council for action under sections 3916 et seq., General Code. This question has not, so far as I have been able to ascertain, been considered by the courts. At any rate, whether the power of the trustees under section 4520 is sufficient, or whether in a given case council have to act, it seems to me that the question of refunding lies within the discretion of the proper board or legislative body; so that if the sinking fund trustees or the council were of the opinion that the best interests of the municipality would justify failure to pay the debt when due, and a continuance of the payment of interest at the stipulated rate until sufficient funds could be raised, otherwise than by a refunding issue for such purpose, I do not believe that any liability could attach on account of such policy. Therefore, it cannot be said to be a "duty" resting upon the sinking fund trustees to act in any particular with respect to such a question. Circumstances might arise under which it would constitute better business judgment to default for a short time in the payment of the principal of the bonds of the city and to pay interest until the principal sum could be raised. Such might be the case, for example, when the original bonds were issued at a very low rate of interest—also than could be commanded on bonds issued at the time of their maturity. Of course if the funds for payment were on hand at maturity, it would be the positive duty of the trustees to pay the bonds. But if the funds did not happen to be on hand, and if the bondholders offered no positive objection, the course of action which I have suggested might be taken to the advantage of the municipality.

The second half of your sixth question has already been considered in part. In my opinion if the sinking fund trustees assume the duty of caring for certificates of indebtedness issued under authority of section 3915, General Code, although such duty is not imposed upon them by law, and although no ordinance of the municipality might so require, the trustees would be personally liable if, the other officers of the city consenting thereto (which would be a necessary condition in point of fact, it would seem) the trustees acquire possession of the funds colore officii, and then misapply them i. e., pay them out in violation of the law governing their payment. Such trustees would be personally liable for such misapplication, both civilly and criminally, but there would be no liability on their respective official bonds.

Answering your seventh question, I am clearly of the opinion that the general sinking fund may be drawn upon to meet maturing special assessment bonds. The bonds are the general obligations of the municipality despite their issuance in anticipation of a special assessment. Nor would the fact that they might have been paid before the assessment is collected affect either their validity or the validity of the subsequent levied assessment. Chamberlain vs. Cleveland 54 O. S., 551. Nor, under the sinking fund statutes, is there any distinction between the "general sinking fund" and the "proceeds of an assessment." On the other hand, the "sinking fund" consists of all sources of revenue available for the payment of bonds, as well as special assessments, and surplus waterworks revenues, as the proceeds of tax levies. (Section 4512, General Code.) The sinking fund is a single thing, and obligations payable from it may be so paid without respect to the time of the collection of the particular revenue intended to be applied wholly or partly to the payment of such obligation.

This question is answered with reference to the sinking fund statutes as they appear in the General Code, and not with reference to anything in article XII, section 11 of the new constitution. It may be stated, however, that in the recently decided case of Link vs. Karb, 89 O. S., the view was expressed that the sinking fund statutes applicable to municipal corporations comply in all respects, save one, with the mandate of the new constitution; the one respect referred to being the fact that they do not require the municipal borrowing authority to incorporate in the borrowing resolution a form of words equivalent to the language of the constitution.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—CONSTRUCTION WORK—FORCE ACCOUNT—LABOR—COUNCIL.

Where the director of public service is required to procure labor for the performance of work in addition to that which is already provided in the department, which additional labor added to the cost of material and other costs incident to the work, will make the expenditure more than $500, authorization of council must be obtained before the work can be advertised under section 4328, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. G. W. ADAMS, City Solicitor, Wellsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter of January 13th, wherein you state:

> "The city of Wellsville has authorized the issuance of bonds for the construction of a sanitary sewer. The estimated cost of the material to complete the work is less than $500. Is it possible under the code to construct the work and complete the same under 'force account;' i. e., can the city complete the work without advertising and letting the contract to the lowest and best bidder? The total amount of the bond issue is $1,200, and it is believed that the city can do this work considerably cheaper than if it is let to bidders."

The answer to your question involves a construction of section 4328 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisements for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

The answer involves primarily an interpretation of the words "or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars," and also of the words "expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein exceeding five hundred dollars."

I am of the opinion that the very manifest intent of this provision is to restrict the director of public service in incurring expenses on his own initiative to sums of less than five hundred dollars. When this view of the statute is taken there is just as much reason for restricting expenditures for labor as for restricting expenditures for any other purpose, and I am of the opinion that the rule of the statute is extended to expenditures for labor as well as for materials or any other expenses involved in the performance of any work.

The term "work" as employed in the first clause referred to in the above statute and the term "expenditure" as used in the second clause referred to, have substantially the same effect. In either case the "work" or "expenditure" refers to a purpose which is substantially separate and distinct in its nature.

In the case of L. & C. R. R. Co. vs. Wilson, 138 U. S., 505, the court said:

> "The terms 'officers' and 'employes' both, alike, refer to those in regular and continual service. Within the ordinary acceptation of the terms, one who is engaged to render service in a particular transaction is neither an officer or an employe. They imply continuity of service, and exclude those employed for a special and single transaction. Citing 30 Atl., 928."

Keeping in view this rule as expressed by Justice Brewer above the words "provide labor" refer to such service as the director requires in the accomplishment of a special and single purpose not involving more than five hundred dollars in toto, including labor; and the words "compensation of persons employed therein" as used in the above statute refer to persons regularly and continually employed in the department.

Under section 4328 of the General Code, therefore, after council has fixed the compensation of persons regularly employed in the department under section 4214 of the General Code, the director of public service is permitted the free and unrestricted use of such employes for whatever purposes are appropriate to the nature of their position, and the services so made use of by the director of public service are not to be taken into consideration or accorded any value whatever for the purpose of computing whether or not a specific purpose involves an expense of more or less than five hundred dollars. The director of public service may, therefore, on any work, make use of the regular employes in his department and it is only when the expense over and above that required for the compensation of regular employes exceeds five hundred dollars that an authorization of council is required, or that a contract must be entered into upon the advertisement for bids under section 4328, General Code. The director of public service may hire labor or provide for services in addition to those regularly provided for in the department only when the expenditure involved in any particular work is less than five hundred dollars, taking into consideration all elements of such expenditure which must be met outside of the regular expenditures in the way of labor, material or otherwise which the director of public service has continually within the department.

The answer to your question is, therefore, that if the director of public service is required to procure labor for the performance of the work contemplated in addition to that which is regularly provided within the department, which additional labor when added to the cost of materials and other costs incidental to the work will make the expenditure more than five hundred dollars, it is necessary to have the authorization of council and to advertise the work as provided in section 4328, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—WHEN PARTS OF STREET MAY BE LEFT OUT IN FRONT OF LOTS, THE ASSESSMENT ON WHICH WOULD EXCEED 33⅓ PER CENT. OF THE ACTUAL VALUE THEREOF.

The city council may not proceed with a street improvement and leave out part of the street in front of lots, the assessment on which would exceed 33⅓ per cent. of the actual value thereof, if the leaving out of the street in front of such lots would destroy the contiguity of the improvement and substantially change the improvement from what was desired by the petitioners, but if it would not do so, the improvement in front of such lots may be left out.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. C. E. VAN DUESEN, City Solicitor, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letters of February 3rd and 18th, and as I understand your question, it is:

> "Certain people petitioned your council for a street improvement on the foot front assessment plan; the council after passing the resolution of necessity and an ordinance to proceed, discovers that the assessments where made will exceed 33⅓ per cent. of the actual value of certain of the lots to be assessed, and it is desired to know whether the council may proceed with the improvement, leaving out that part of the street in front of the lots which, as you put it, cannot 'stand the assessment.'"

You have not informed me whether the plan of assessment is to divide the entire cost of the improvement by the number of feet improved and having thus determined the cost per foot front, charge abutting property accordingly, or, whether the benefits of the improvement to each lot or piece of property have been determined and the cost of the improvement apportioned to the several lots in proportion that the special benefit to each lot or parcel bears to the whole, special benefits conferred by the improvement.

The first is the method usually followed, while the second would seem to find support in Chamberlain vs. Cleveland, 34 O. S., 557. If the first method has been adopted, I would feel that the case you cite, Minor vs. Board, 20 O. C. C., 4, would be in point, controlling and preclude the making of the improvement, except in strict conformity to the petition, but as stated in that opinion, no authorities were offered, which leaves it as a case standing upon first impression.

In the above case the petition was to improve Second street from the south side of Court to north side of Black street. The resolution covered "from Court to Black street" and the ordinance "from north side of Court to north side of Black street."

Assuming which is doubtless true that the street to be improved ran north and south, the petition asked for both crossings, the resolution for neither and the ordinance for the crossing of Black street only. Under these circumstances, the divergence from the petition was—in the resolution, both crossings were omitted, in the ordinance only one was left out, and in either event it could not affect the amount of the assessments, as the city was chargeable with cost of crossings.

This leaves the conclusion in 20 O. C. C., 4 unsupported by authority and outside the facts and issues presented.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it is not controlling nor even authority to be followed and that the council has power to make an improvement on petition of lot owners so long as the improvement substantially conforms to the petition as filed.

This may and doubtless does resolve the matter into a matter of fact rather than law and makes its solution dependent upon the frontage and location of the lots that cannot be assessed to their share of the cost of the improvement. If such lots were of no extensive frontage and at one of the termini of the improvement, the improvement might proceed leaving them out, upon the theory that the improvement as made was substantially the same as described in the petition, while if they were in the body of the improvement, and not at the end, the leaving the street in front of them would necessarily destroy the contiguity of the improvement, and substantially change the improvement from what was desired by the petitioners. In other words, and regardless of the frontage of the non-assessable lots, the leaving out of the improvement that part of the street in their front would be a substantial deviation from the petition which should not be done, and the doing of which would doubtless furnish grounds for restraining the improvement.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CORPORATION — CHARTER — REINSTATEMENT OF CORPORATION WHEN CHARTER HAS BEEN CANCELLED.

When a corporation whose charter has been cancelled, applies within two years mentioned in section 5511, General Code, to the tax commission for the issuance of a certificate looking towards its reinstatement, as provided in said section, the commission may require, as a condition precedent to the issuance of such certificate, the compliance by the corporation with all the requirements for failure to comply with the corporation's charter, and the payment of all fees and penalties, for failure to pay which, action was taken.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 26th, submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

> "When a corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled by the secretary of state, as provided in section 5509, General Code, seeks, within two years after such cancellation, the certificate of the tax commission, that it has complied with all the requirements of law and paid all taxes, fees and penalties due from it, with a view to securing a cancellation of the entry of cancellation upon the payment to the secretary of state of the penalty of $100 provided for in section 5511, General Code, must the certificate of the tax commission embrace the excise taxes or franchise fees or penalties for the year or years within the two years' grace provided for in that section?"

I understand that your question relates particularly to a corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled on account of its delinquencies as a domestic corporation for profit. I mention this fact because I shall limit this opinion to the case of a corporation whose corporate franchise have been cancelled on account of delinquencies under the so-called Willis law sections of the act; so that the opinion does not necessarily relate to a corporation delinquent as a "public utility" whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled on that account.

The sections of the General Code whose consideration is involved in your inquiry are as follows:

> "Section 5509. If a corporation wherever organized, required by the provisions of this act, to file any report or returns or to pay any tax or fee, either as a public utility or as a corporation, organized under the laws of this state, for profit or as a foreign corporation for profit doing business in this state and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, or as a sleeping car, freight line or equipment company, fails or neglects to make any such report or return or to pay any such tax or fee for ninety days after the time prescribed in this act for making such report or return or for paying such tax or fee, the commission shall certify such fact to the secretary of state. The secretary of state shall thereupon cancel the articles of incorporation of any such corporation which is organized under the laws of this state, by appropriate entry upon the margin of the record thereof, or cancel the certificate of authority of any such foreign corporation to do business in this state by proper entry. Thereupon all the powers, privileges and franchises conferred upon such corporations, by such articles of incorporation or by such certificate of authority, shall cease and determine. The secretary of state shall immediately notify such domestic or foreign corporation of the action taken by him.
> "Section 5510. Any person or persons who shall exercise, or attempt to exercise, any powers, privileges or franchises, under the articles of incorporation or certificate of authority, after the same are cancelled, as provided in section one hundred and twenty (G. C. section 5509) of this act, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars.
> "Section 5511. Any corporation whose articles of incorporation or certificate of authority to do business in this state has been cancelled by the secretary of state, as provided in section one hundred and twenty (G. C. section 5509) of this act, upon the filing, within two years after such cancellation, with the secretary of state, of a certificate from the commission that it has complied with all the requirements of this act and paid all taxes, fees or penalties due from it, and upon the payment to the secretary of state of an additional penalty of one hundred dollars, shall be entitled again to an exercise of its rights, privileges and franchises in this state, and the secretary of state shall cancel the entry made by him under the provisions of section one hundred and twenty (G. C. section 5509) of this act, and shall issue his certificate entitling such corporation to exercise its rights, privileges and franchises."

In an opinion to the secretary of state under date of May 31, 1914, I held that notwithstanding the italicized portion of section 5509, General Code, a domestic corporation whose articles of incorporation have been cancelled, as therein provided, constitutes an existing corporation within the meaning of section 8628, General Code, which prohibits the secretary of state from filing or recording the articles of incorporation of a company whose name is similar to that of such corporation. That is, I held that such a corporation continued to "exist" for this purpose during the two-year period provided for in section 5511, General Code.

The conclusions of that opinion, however, are to be strictly limited to the question then before me. It does not follow that because a corporation may "exist" for one purpose it may be said to be in existence for all purposes. The corporation is at least moribund during the two years in which the cancellation remains subject to recall. Though it may retain during this time the exclusive right to its name, there are few, if any, other attributes of a corporation which it possesses. Not only does section 5509 provide that all the powers, privileges and franchises conferred upon such corporations by such articles of incorporation or by such certificate of authority shall cease and determine, but section 5510 provides for certain penalties which may be assessed upon individuals attempting to exercise "any powers, privileges or franchises, under the articles of incorporation or certificate of authority, after the same are cancelled."

Presumably, a corporation whose articles have been cancelled, has the right to appoint trustees to distribute its assets, but not otherwise, and proceed to wind up its affairs; but it is clear to me that no other constituent acts can be committed lawfully by any person on behalf of the corporation; dividends cannot be declared; officers cannot be elected; stock cannot be issued nor any of the internal affairs of the corporation, as such, carried on after the cancellation.

So that the effect of such action is not only to cut off the right of the corporation to do business, i. e. to deal with third parties, but also to prevent its managing officers from performing its constituent acts, i. e., those relating to its internal concerns, except insofar as might be necessary to distribute its assets. On the other hand, no automatic winding up of the corporation is provided by the related statutes. It would be necessary, at least, for the attorney general to proceed in quo warranto against such a corporation in order to bring about such a result, and in order to prevent the corporate officers from retaining possession of the capital and assets of the corporation after cancellation. They might deal with such assets otherwise than in the corporate name and might not, indeed, take any action with respect to them at all; yet at the end of the two-year period should the corporation be revived as provided in section 5511 it would doubtless resume control of such capital and assets and use them in the further transaction of its business.

I have thus briefly discussed the status of a corporation after the cancellation of its articles of incorporation and before the two years of grace have expired so that the situation may be clearly in mind in discussing the main question.

It is clear that after the first cancellation a corporation is not liable for further taxes and certainly for no penalties. It cannot at the time be anticipated that the proprietors of the corporation will desire to renew its life. Perhaps in the great majority of cases there will be no attempt made to proceed under section 5511, General Code. It would not be contended, I think, that as to corporations not attempting to act under that section there is any liability for franchise taxes during the first two years after the cancellation takes place. There would be no liability to make annual reports under sections 5495 and 5499, General Gode, as no person would be authorized, because of the language of section 5510, to represent the corporation, and as, indeed, for practically all purposes the corporation itself is, by reason of section 5509, at an end.

In short, I am satisfied that throughout the two years mentioned in section 5511, General Code, a corporation to which its provisions relate would not be liable for any annual fees or penalties, and that no question as to its liability for such fees or penalties could arise unless it should apply to the commission as therein provided.

This brings me to the question as to whether or not a corporation applying to the commission for a certificate as provided in section 5511 is in a situation different from a corporation which does not apply for such a certificate. That is, it being conceded that a corporation whose articles have been cancelled under section 5509 ceases to be liable for annual reports and fees thereon, unless application is made for reinstatement under section 5511, does such liability arise in retrospect, so to speak, if such application is made?

On the one hand it would seem quite reasonable and proper in one view of the case to exact fees for the two years in question from a corporation desiring a renewal of its certificate of authority to do business or its articles of incorporation, as the case may be. That is to say, it would not be unreasonable to interpret section 5511 to produce this result if the statute will bear such interpretation.

However, section 5511 does not, in my judgment admit of the interpretation which I have just suggested. It requires merely that the commission's certificate state that the company has complied with all the requirements of this act and paid all taxes, fees or penalties due from it. There is no "requirement of this act" to the end that a corporation, after the action described in section 5509 is taken, shall make any annual reports. Therefore, there could be no taxes, fees or penalties due from a corporation not under any obligation to make reports, for I think it will be readily agreed that only those corporations which are liable for annual reports are liable for fees or could become subject to penalties.

If section 5511 explicitly provided that the corporation should make reports for the two years in question and pay fees thereon together with or without penalties, a different conclusion would follow. But the section merely requires a certificate to the effect that the requirements have been satisfied—by which is meant the requirements of other sections of the act, and that the taxes, fees and penalties due have been paid—by which is meant such taxes, fees or penalties as would become due from the corporation by reason of the other provisions of the act.

Of course, any corporation applying for the commission's certificate under section 5511 would have to pay some back taxes; for, except in case of mistake, the corporation would not have been certified for cancellation in the first instance if it had not been delinquent either for reports or fees and penalty. The commission's certificate would naturally relate to the payment of the charges, for nonpayment of which the corporation's charter was first cancelled, or the doing of the things for the failure to do which such action was taken. But without more explicit language than appears in section 5511 I do not believe that it would be held that the commission might lawfully withhold its certificate mentioned in that section until the corporation had made reports for the two years after its charter had been cancelled and had paid the taxes or fees with or without penalty thereon.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that when a corporation, whose charter has been cancelled, applies within the two years mentioned in section 5511 to the tax commission for the issuance of a certificate looking toward its reinstatement as provided in said section, the commission may require, as a condition precedent to the issuance of such certificate, the compliance by the corporation with all the requirements for failure to comply with which the corporation's charter was cancelled, the payment of all the fees and penalties for failure to pay which, such action was taken; but that the commission may not lawfully withhold its certificate until reports are made and fees are paid for the year or years following the original cancellation of the certificate and preceding the expiration of the two-year period mentioned in section 5511, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF COUNCIL—PARTY TO BE SELECTED.

The members of council should select a person from the list submitted by the civil service commission to be clerk of council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 20, 1914, Hon. G. W. Adams, city solicitor of Wellsville, Ohio, inquires:

> "As the clerk of council is under civil service which would select from the three highest on the eligible list: The president of council or the council?"

Secion 4210, General Code, provides:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

By virtue of this section the members of council select the clerk of council. The civil service law does not change the appointing authority.

Therefore, the members of council should select from the names submitted by the civil service commission, one of them to be clerk of council.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MOVING PICTURE CENSORS NOT IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE—CIVIL SERVICE.

Members of the board of censors of moving picture films are appointed with the consent of the governor. This board, therefore, comes within the terms of subdivision 2 of section 8 of the civil service act and the members thereof are in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 28, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 18, 1914, the industrial commission of Ohio submit the following inquiry:

> "Kindly advise us whether in your opinion the members of the board of censors of moving picture films are members of the classified service, or unclassified service, under the civil service act."

As this question concerns the civil service law, the opinion is addressed to the state civil service commission.

The censors of moving picture films are appointed by virtue of the act of 103 Ohio Laws 399, and their duties prescribed therein.

Section 1 of this act, to be known as section 871-46, General Code, provides:

> "There is created under the authority and supervision of the industrial commission of Ohio a board of censors of motion picture films. Upon the taking effect of this act, the industrial commission shall appoint with the approval of the governor, three persons, one for one year, one for two years and one for three years, who shall constitute such board. Upon the expiration of the term of each member so appointed a successor shall be appointed in like manner for a term of three years."

Section 2 of the act, section 871-47, General Code, provides in part:

> "The members of the board shall be considered as employes of the industrial commission and shall be paid as other employes of such commission are paid. The industrial commission shall appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board."

Section 3 of the act, section 871-48, General Code, provides:

> "It shall be the duty of the board of censors to examine and censor, as herein provided, all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the state of Ohio. Such films shall be submitted to the board before they shall be delivered to the exhibitor for exhibition. The board shall charge a fee of one dollar ($1.00) for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed one thousand (1,000) lineal feet; for any reel of film exceeding one thousand (1,000) lineal feet, the sum of two dollars ($2.00) shall be charged. All moneys so received shall be paid each week into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund."

Section 4 of the act, section 871-49, General Code, provides:

> "Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board. They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words 'Approved by the Ohio board of censors' and the number of the film."

Section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places ten classes of positions in the unclassified service.

Subdivision two of this section provides:

> "2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district."

There are two possible constructions of this subdivision. It may be construed to read "all heads of principal departments, and all principal boards and commissions," or it may mean "all heads of principal departments, and all boards and commissions" appointed by the governor or by and with his consent.

It has been held by this office that a principal department of the state is one responsible directly to the governor or the people. If the word "principal" is construed to modify "boards and commissions" it must have the same meaning, and then it would be hardly possible to have principal boards and commissions appointed by and with the approval of the governor. I know of none so appointed. This construction would practically nullify the phrase "or by and with his consent."

It is my opinion that the phrase "all heads of principal departments" is complete in itself, and that the words "boards and commissions" are not modified by the word "principal" or the words "heads of principal."

This subdivision should be construed to read "all heads of principal departments, and all boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent."

By virtue of section 1 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws 399, the board of censors of moving picture films is appointed with the consent of the governor. This board, therefore, comes within the terms of subdivision 2 of section 8 of the civil service act and the members thereof are in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISTRICT BOARD OF COMPLAINTS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The members of the district board of control, under the Warnes law, is a board and is appointed with the consent of the governor, consequently, the members of this board are in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 19, 1914, you inquire:

> "Numerous persons are inquiring of this department as to whether or not the members of the district boards of complaints under the Warnes law, are in or out of the classified service."

The board of complaints is appointed by virtue of section 13 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws 786, section 5591, General Code, which provides in part:

> "In each assessment district of the state there shall be appointed annually by the tax commission of Ohio with the consent of the governor three competent persons who shall constitute a 'district board of complaints' for such district. * * *"

Subdivision 2 of section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places the following class of positions in the unclassified service:

"2. All heads of principal departments, boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent or by the mayor, or if there be no mayor such other similar chief appointing authority of any city or city school district."

This subdivision should be construed to read "all heads of principal departments, and all boards and commissions appointed by the governor or by and with his consent."

The "district board of complaints" is a board and it is appointed with the consent of the governor.

I am of opinion therefore that the members of the district board of complaints are in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF "HERETOFORE AND HEREAFTER" AS USED IN SECTION 5649-2, GENERAL CODE.

The meaning of the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" occurring in section 5649-2, General Code, originally enacted on May 31, 1911, and approved on June 2, 1911, but subsequently amended April 16, 1913, by an act which was approved by the governor May 6, 1913, filed in the office of the secretary of state on May 9, 1913, and which is the case of State ex rel. Schreiver vs. Milroy, 88 O. S., 301, is that the original meaning of these words as established at the first enactment of the section was not changed when it was amended, and that the day to which the amended section refers is still June 2, 1909.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 27, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM H. VODREY, Prosecuting Attorney, East Liverpool, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 26th, you submit for my opinion some nine questions, all of them of considerable importance, accompanying your statement of them with a full statement of your views thereon.

The first of these questions is of a character somewhat different from the others, and is of immediate and universal importance throughout the state. The same question has already been raised elsewhere and will undoubtedly be raised in every county in the state. Therefore, I have ventured to separate its consideration from that of the eight other questions submitted in your letter and shall confine myself in this communication to this single question which may be stated as follows:

"What is the meaning of the words 'heretofore' and 'hereafter' occurring in section 5649-2 of the General Code, originally enacted on May 31, 1911, and approved on June 2, 1911, but subsequently amended on April 16, 1913, by an act which was approved by the governor on May 6, 1913, filed in the office of the secretary of state on May 9, 1913, and which in the case of State ex rel. Schreiver vs. Milroy, 88 O. S., 301, was held to be subject to the referendum and therefore postponed as to its effectiveness until the constitutional period of 90 days had elapsed?"

You state that your view is that the original meaning of these words, as established at the first enactment of the section, was not changed when it was amended, and that the date to which the amended section refers is still June 2, 1911.

The conclusion which I have reached agrees with yours.

The question, however, is by no means a simple one. Prefatory to any discussion of it I shall state fully the facts upon which it arises.

Section 5649-2, General Code, is a part of the Smith One per cent. law, so-called, which as originally enacted provided, generally speaking, two classes of limitations upon tax rates, with machinery for rendering both of them effective. The first class of limitations which I mention is that consisting of the number of mills which may be levied by specific levying authorities, such as those of the county, those of the township, those of the school district, those of the city, etc. These limitations which still exist are found in section 5649-3a of the General Code. The second general class of limitations referred to above consist of those applicable to the aggregate of all levies made upon the taxable property of a given territory. Originally there were three limitations of this kind which may be described as that of ten mills, that of the amount of the taxes levied in the territory in the year 1910, and that of fifteen mills.

As the Smith one per cent. law was originally constructed the 1910 limitation and the 10 mill limitation were both provided for in section 5649-2 and 5649-3, General Code. These sections in full were as follows:

"Section 5649-2. Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for the year 1911, and any year thereafter, including taxes levied under authority of section 5649-1 of the General Code, and levies for state, county, township, municipal, school and all other purposes, shall not in anyone year exceed in the aggregate the total amount of taxes that were levied upon the taxable property therein of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, for all purposes in the year, 1910, provided, however, that the maximum rate of taxes that may be levied for all purposes, upon the taxable property therein, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people.

"Section 5649-3. The maximum rate of taxation in any taxing district for any purpose, as now fixed, shall be and is hereby changed so that such maximum rate, as levied on the total valuation of all taxable property in the district for the year 1911, and any year thereafter would produce no greater amount of taxes, than the present maximum rate for such purpose, if levied on the total valuation for all the taxable property therein for the year 1910, would produce. Any minimum rate required by law to be levied for any purpose, is hereby reduced in like proportion that the maximum rate is herein reduced.

"If in any year the taxing authorities of any taxing district shall desire to raise a less amount of taxes for a particular purpose than was levied for such purpose in the year 1910, the amount of taxes that may be levied for another or other purposes may be correspondingly increased; the intent and purpose of this act being to provide the total amount of taxes which may be levied in the year 1911, or in any year thereafter, for all purposes, shall not exceed in the aggregate, the total amount of taxes levied in the year 1910, plus six per cent. thereof for the year 1912, nine per cent, for the year 1913, and twelve per cent. thereof for any years thereafter, or, such less amount as may be produced by the levy of a maximum rate of ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property therein, of any county, township, city, village, school district or taxing district, for that year, whether such taxes be levied for the same or other purposes, except to the amount of such levies as may be made for interest and sinking fund purposes as provided in section 5649-2 of the General Code, as herein enacted, for emergencies as provided in section 5649-4 of the General Code and such additional levies as may be authorized by a vote of the people as provided in section 5649-5 of the General Code."

The general assembly in 1913 repealed section 5649-3 and amended section 5649-2 by striking out the matter first above italicized, leaving the second italicized phrase exactly as it had been, so that the amended section reads as follows (103 O. L., 552):

"Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

The primary effect of the amendments as indicated by the quotations already made, is the elimination of the so-called 1910 limitation, and unquestionably this was the controlling, if not the only purpose of the legislature.

The other facts necessary to be considered—those relating to the dates when the two enactments were passed and became effective respectively—have already been stated.

The first question which is encountered is whether or not there is room for the exercise of the function known as "statutory construction," it being fundamental that where the terms of a statute are unmistakably plain on its face, the exercise of this function is inadmissible. Slingluff vs. Weaver, 66 O. S., 621.

It seems to me that in this connection it may be stated that as a general rule all relative words call for "interpretation." I do not know that there has ever been a decision to this effect, but in the very nature of things the proposition seems to me to be true. A relative word is always plain enough in absolute meaning, the difficulty being in the ascertainment of its connotation; that must be discovered by looking at some other word, if it is to be found in the context or at some extrinsic fact if the relative word points to some such fact. As soon as one commences a search for the antecedent of the pronoun or for the thing denoted by any relative word he has, I think, commenced the process known as "intepretation" or "construction."

However this may be with respect to relative words, the antecedent of which is to be found on the face of the written law, it seems to me that it must certainly be true as to words, the connotation of which must be found in facts outside of the written law. Thus the words "heretofore" and "hereafter," the paraphrased meaning of which is plain enough, viz., "before this date" and "after this date," respectively donate a time which must be fixed by something other than the terms of the statute itself. It cannot be said that there is any universally true rule for determining what time is intended to be referred to in a given instance by a word of this sort. For example, in the case of an original act (no question of an amendment being involved) it would never be perfectly plain and clear, I think, in the sense contemplated by the supreme court in, laying down the principle involved in Slingluff vs. Weaver, supra, whether the legislature meant the date of the passage of the act in which the terms were used, that of its approval by the governor, or that of its effectiveness as determined by the initiative and referendum provisions of the constitution. That is to say, it would not be conclusively presumed that any one of those three dates must have been intended, so that the application of the rules of statutory interpretation would be forbidden.

Smith vs. Foster, 55 Ind. 592, 593.
Commonwealth vs. Horner, 48 N. J. L. 441.
Perrine vs. Farr, 22 N. J. L.358.

But there is an additional reason why I think inquiry into the intention of the general assembly in this case is not foreclosed by the application of the principles involved in Slingluff vs. Weaver, supra. The act found in 103 O. L., 552, purports on its face to be "An act to amend section 5649-2 of the General Code." Authorities will hereinafter be cited to the general effect that so much of an amended law as consists of a repetition of the original law is to be regarded as having been the law all the time; that is, in repealing and re-enacting a statute or a section for the purpose of an amendment, the general assembly is presumd not to have intended to destroy the old law and to enact a new and distinct measure save insofar as the changes made by the amendment may be concerned. The amended law, then, on its face, advises its reader that, in part at least, it is a continuation of a law previously in existence; so that one must turn to the original law and compare it with the amended law in order to find out how much of the original has been continued, and in what respects the original has been changed. In short, then, the mere fact that a section purports to be an amended section is itself sufficient to bring to notice the section as it was before the amendment, and to compel for various purposes, the joint reading of the two sections, the original and the amended section. This constitutes "interpretation." Of course, I do not mean to say that the doctrine of Slingluff vs. Weaver is never applicable to an amended statute. Indeed, that case was decided under an amended statute. An examination of the opinion of the court in that case will show that reference was made to the prior form of the statute, which, in the particular which gave rise to the question, was the same as it was when the statute was amended, both being equally plain on their face. The point I make is, that where relative words are involved, and it is apparent on the face of the statute that an amendment has ben made, which may or may not affect the meaning of the connotation of the relative words, the fact that the statute is an amended one, of itself, opens the way for consideration of changes that have been made by the amendment and this constitutes "interpretation." Again, the amendment takes the form of a re-enactment of the original section "to read as follows." The form of the amendment suggests at once its compliance with article II, section 16 of the constitution, and brings into play any principles which may be held applicable to amendatory statutes, the form of which is dictated by that section of the organic law.

For both of these reasons, then, I am clearly of the opinion that section 5649-2, as amended, has no such clear and unmistakable meaning in its face as precludes the consideration of extrinsic circumstances, with a view to determining what its proper interpretation may be. The first extrinsic fact which comes to my notice is the fact that the last clause of section 5649-2 is the same, both in the original and in the amended section. The second extrinsic fact which I observe is that the change made in the language of the section by the amendment, i. e., the elimination of certain language therein providing for the 1910 limitation could in no way, as a mere verbal change, affect the meaning of the clause in which the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" are found. In this respect the question differs from the case of the interpretation of a word like "herein," which, whether found in an amended section or in another section of the amended law not itself specifically amended, would necessarily suffer a change of connotation if any part of the provisions constituting its antecedent should be changed by amendment.

McKibben vs. Lester, 9 O. S., 627.
Jobe vs. Harland, 13 O. S., 485.
State vs. Vause, 84 O. S., 207.
State ex rel. vs. Cincinnati, 52 O. S., 419.

Of course, the question involved here is by no means to be confused with the type of questions involved in cases like those cited for the reason which I have just pointed out. The two extrinsic facts to which I have called attention, construed together, lead directly to the conclusion at which I have arrived, viz., that the connotation of the two words in question is the date of the approval of the original Smith one per cent. law, viz., June 2, 1911. They invoke the following well settled principles:

"The constitutional provision requiring amendments to be made by setting out the whole section as amended was not intended to make any different rule as to the effect of such amendments. So far as the section is changed it must receive a new operation, but so far as it is not changed it would be dangerous to hold that the mere nominal re-enactment should have the effect of disturbing the whole body of statutes in pari materia which had been passed since the first enactment. There must be something in the nature of the new legislation to show such an intent with reasonable clearness before an implied repeal can be recognized, 'by observing the constitutional form of amending a section of a statute,' says the court in one case, 'the legislature does not express an intention then to enact the whole section as amended, but only an intention then to enact the change which is indicated. Any other rule of construction would surely introduce unexpected results and work great inconvenience.'

"The amendment operates to repeal all of the section amended not embraced in the amended form. The portions of the amended sections which are merely copied without change are not to be considered as repealed and again enacted, but to have been the law all along; and the new parts or the changed portions are not to be taken to have been the law at any time prior to the passage of the amended act.

Lewis Sutherland Stat. Con. Section 237.

"Where there is an express repeal of an existing statute, and a re-enactment of it at the same time, or a repeal and a re-enactmnt of a portion of it, the re-enactment neutralizes the repeal so far as the old law is continued in force. It operates without interruption where the re-enactment takes effect at the same time."

Lewis Sutherland Stat. Con. Section 238.

"Ordinarily the mere re-enactment of a statute does not change its meaning or construction."

Lewis Sutherland Stat. Con. Vol. 2, page 783.

Thus Black on Interpretation of laws, pages 356-357 gives the following:

"When an amendment to a statute is adopted, there are not two separate enactments, the old and the new, but by their union there is produced one law, namely, the statute as amended. From this it follows that the legislative intention, in making the amendment, is to be learned from a consideration of the original act and the amendment as one act. * * * And it will be presumed that a word used in a certain sense in the original act is used in the same sense where it occurs in the amendatory act."

Again at page 357:

"An amendment to a statute by a subsequent act operates precisely as if the subject-matter of the amendment had been incorporated in the prior act at the time of its adoption, so far as regards any action had after the amendment is made. (Citing the case of McKibben vs. Lester, 9 O. S., 627.) For it must be remembered that an amendment becomes a part of the original act, whether it be a change of word, figure, line or entire section, or a re-casting of the whole language."

These principles are of themselves sufficient to dispose of the question; and it will be observed, in passing, that they are quite consistent with the Ohio decisions following McKibben vs. Lester, supra, which have already been mentioned, the distinction between those cases, and cases like the one presented by your question having already been pointed out. However, the text writers and the decisions supply principles more explicit than those already quoted.

"The word 'hereafter' used in the statute as amended must be construed distributively. As to cases within the statute as originally enacted, it means subsequent to the passage of the original act; as to cases brought within the statute by the amendment, it means subsequent to the time of the amendment. Lewis Sutherland Stat. Con. Vol. 1, page 444."

"Thus the words 'now' or 'now existing' in a re-enacted statute refer to the time of the original enactment. Lewis Sutherland Stat. Con. Vol. 2 page 783."

The following cases are more or less directly in point in support of the points above referred to:

Ely vs. Holton, 15 N. Y., 595.
Matter of Pengnet, 67 N. Y., 444.
Gilkey vs. Cook, 60 Wis., 133.
Parsons vs. Circuit Judge, 37 Mich., 287-290.
Barrows vs. Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co., 75 Fed., 794.
Fisher vs. Simon, 95 Texas, 234.

It is true that in all these cases there was some particular reason for the holding reached in addition to the mere fact that the language of the amended statute was the same as that of the statute prior to its amendment. It would, therefore, perhaps be unsafe to impute universality to the rule as I have stated it. Indeed, I do not think there is any such thing as any universal rule of statutory interpretation. These cases, however, do establish the conclusion that words like "heretofore" and "hereafter" are not conclusively presumed to refer to the date of the passage of the amending act; in fact, they go further, in my judgment, and establish the conclusion that if there is a presumption it does not relate to the date of the amending act.

While, therefore, I think that the above cited decisions and other authorities would justify the statement that as a general rule where words like "heretofore" and "hereafter" appear in an amended statute, under the circumstances in which they appear in amended section 5649-2, they will be interpreted as denoting the date of the passage of the act in which they first appeared, yet I am content to rest at this stage of the case upon the proposition that at least it is settled that under such circumstances these words may refer to the date of the passage of the original act in which they were first used.

My final conclusion, then, is based upon what must be, I think, at all times a determining factor in the application of so-called "rules of construction," viz., consideration of the evil to be remedied and the exercise of what appears to me to be common sense in reading the mind of the legislature.

We are, of course, certain that one of the evils, at any rate, which the general assembly was trying to remedy in the enactment of the so-called Kilpatrick law, was the operation of the 1910 limitation. One legislative purpose was to eliminate this provision, and desiring to do this by the amendment of section 5649-2, the general assembly found itself confronted with the necessity of complying with article II, section 16 of the constitution. It desired for the purpose of eliminating the 1910 limitation to strike certain language from the section. For this purpose it must needs go through the form of repealing the section and re-enacting it without the objectionable language in it. All this the legislature would have done if its purpose had been simply to eliminate the 1910 limitation.

It being clear, then, that the legislature would have done no more than it has done if its purpose had been simply to eliminate the 1910 limitation, it seems to me that in the light of the authorities above cited, and upon reason and common sense it must be conclusively presumed that it did not intend its action to have any more far-reaching result than the one which it certainly did have. It is true that the legislature might have removed the doubt as to the interpretation of the last clause of the section by inserting specific dates; but to hold that by failing to do so it evinced the intention of changing the connotation of the relative words in question would be tantamount to presuming that the general assembly conned over the entire section when is was re-enacted and deliberately left certain language unchanged with the idea of effecting a change in the law thereby. Such a presumption is too artificial to be indulged in; it finds place in my mind with the supposition first discussed, viz., that under all circumstances the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" denote the date of the passage of the act in which they are found whether that be an amendatory act or not. Both "presumptions" are violently artificial and if applied strictly would, I apprehend, many times defeat the obvious legislative intention. At least this much is apparent from the cases which I have cited, when one reflects that if the clause in which the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" are found had happened to be in one section of the Smith law, and the objectionable language which the legislature desired to eliminate had constituted a section bv itself, there would, to a moral certainty have been no "re-enactment" of anything. The legislature undoubtedly being content, under such circumstances, with merely repealing the imagined section, the absurdity of supposing that anything more than this was intended by the action that was actually taken becomes apparent.

Being satisfied, therefore, that in order to accomplish what was evidently one of the purposes of the legislature, viz., the elimination of the 1910 limitation, the legislature would not have acted otherwise than it has acted, I am of the opinion that the intention to be ascribed to the general assembly is not to be extended beyond the accomplishment of that purpose. That being the case, I am of the further opinion that the question is one substantially like those presented in the cases which I have cited, and that whatever principles may be adduced from those cases are to be applied to its solution. So that whether upon the ground that these decisions justify the general statement that words of this class in an unchanged context in an amended statute continue to denote the date of the passage of the original statute, or upon the ground that under such circumstances such words may denote the date of the original statute and will be held to do so where sufficient reason appears, I am of the opinion that the words "heretofore" and "hereafter" as found in amended section 5649-2 of the General Code denote June 2, 1911.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT — INSURANCE CONTRACT UNDER OHIO LAWS — "BUSINESS OF INSURANCE"

A contract by a real estate agent guaranteeing to keep property listed with him rented, and guaranteeing that tenants secured for such property will pay rent as agreed is not an insurance contract under the statutes of Ohio, and does not constitute the business relations established upon such a contract the "business of insurance."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. R. M. SMALL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of February 27, 1914, enclosing communication to you from McMahon & McMahon, attorneys at law, Dayton, Ohio, inquiring whether a certain proposed contract of a real estate agent in that city, guaranteeing to keep property listed with him rented, and guaranteeing that tenants secured for such property will pay rent as agreed, is an insurance contract, and whether business relations established upon such contract constitute business of insurance. A draft of the proposed contract accompanied the communication above referred to, and is as follows:

> "The undersigned, in consideration that A. B. puts his real estate in their hands exclusively as agents for renting the same for a period of _____ years, beginning _____ and ending _____ the following real estate:

DESCRIPTION.

hereby agree that in consideration of such agency they will lease the same at the figures named by said A. B., promptly collect and pay over the rents, paying all bills incurred in the care and repair of the same. The said owner agrees to keep the property in good repair, having in mind the rent it brings in.

"The owner agrees to pay the following commission or compensation: (fix gross sum or a per cent.)

"In considertion of all of the above the said _____ guarantee that they will keep the said premises rented during the whole of said period, and that the tenants they secure will pay the rent as agreed, excepting always losses caused directly or indirectly by fire, invasion, insurrection, civil war, mob, military or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority, or by floods or other acts of Providence."

Preliminary to a consideration of the question presented, it may be observed that in this state the right to transact the business of insurance is a franchise and not a matter of common right.

In the case of Robbins vs. Hennessey, 86 O. S., 181, 197, the court says:

"The statutes of the state now require compliance with certain conditions designed for the security and protection of the public, and therefore, the right to transact this business is no longer a private right, but a franchise.

"This question was so fully considered in the case of State ex rel. vs. Ackerman, 51 O. S., 163, that it would be a waste of time and space to review the subject further. In that case this court held that the right to carry on the business of insurance was a privilege or franchise, and no longer a matter of natural right."

Again, if the proposed contract above set out is an insurance contract, and if the business contemplated thereunder, is insurance, it follows that such business cannot lawfully be transacted without permission to do so granted by the superintendent of insurance. Pertinent to this point, sections 665 and 670, General Code, provide as follows:

"Sec. 665. No company, corporation or association, whether organized in this state, or elsewhere, shall engage either directly or indirectly in this state in the business of insurance, or enter into any contracts substantially amounting to insurance, or in any manner aid therein, or engage in the business of guaranteeing against liability, loss or damage, unless it is expressly authorized by the laws of this state, and the laws regulating it and applicable thereto, have been complied with.

"Sec. 670. The provisions herein relating to the superintendent of insurance shall apply to all persons, companies and associations, whether incorporated or not, engaged in the business of insurance."

The statutes of this state do not define insurance, but definitions of this subject, which have been accepted by the supreme court (68 O. S., 30) are as follows:

"A contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject by specified perils.

"An insurance in relation to property is a contract whereby the insurer becomes bound, for a definite consideration, to indemnify the insured against loss or damage to a certain property named in the policy, by reason of certain perils to which it may be exposed."

It may be safely said, I think, that definitions of insurance, such as the foregoing, are descriptive only, and are not, in a strict sense, definitions which contain every element without which the thing cannot exist, and which exclude everything not necessary to its existence.

In the case of Tyler vs. New Amsterdam Fire Insurance Company, 4 Robertson (N. Y.), 151, a case often cited, but which goes more particularly to the elements necessary to the validity of such contracts rather than to their nature, it was held:

"There are at least five ingredients necessary, in a contract of insurance, viz.: the subject-matter; the risks insured against; the amount insured; the duration of the risk, and the premium of insurance; and a contract deficient in any of these is incomplete."

If the proposed contract is an insurance contract, and the business contemplated thereunder is insurance, it is evident that the same falls within that branch of the subject known as "guaranty insurance," which, in turn, includes insurance of a number of specified kinds including what is known as "credit insurance."

"In legal acceptation guaranty insurance is an agreement whereby one party (called the 'insurer') for a valuable consideration (termed the 'premium') agrees to indemnify another (called the 'insured') in a stipulated amount against loss or damage arising through dishonesty, fraud, unfaithful performance of duty or breach of contract on the part of a third person (hereinafter denominated as the 'risk') sustaining a contractual relationship to the party thus indemnified. (Frost Guaranty Insurance, page 11.)"

Further on this subject, the same author says:

"Again, treating a guaranty as a form of a suretyship, it should be noted that the words 'guaranty' and 'insurance' have to a great extent the same meaning and effect, and many contracts may, with equal propriety, be called contracts of insurance or contracts of guaranty. There is no hard and fast line to be drawn between contracts of insurance and contracts of guaranty. But speaking generally, the former have several features in their character and in the way they are effected which distinguish them from ordinary contracts of guaranty. (Frost Guaranty Insurance, page 16.)"

I do not doubt that rents can be made the subject of insurance by appropriate contract to that end, and when made it would be a species of credit insurance.

Claflin vs. Credit System Company, (165 Mass., 504).
Shakman vs. Credit System Company, (92 Wis., 366).

Though, as noted, rents, as well as other credits, may be the subject of insurance contracts, there are, however, contracts, which, not involving the element of indemnity, or being incidental to other transactions, are held not to be insurance contracts. Thus, a contract in which no loss or casualty or peril was named, for which indemnity was promised, has been held not to be an insurance contract.

State vs. Towle, (80 Maine, 287).

Where a contract of employment obligated the employer to pay for the work of an employee, even if the goods should be destroyed by fire, and on account of this obligation the employe permitted the employer to deduct one per cent. for an agreed compensation, it was held that as the employer ran no risk, being obliged to pay for the labor absolutely and unconditionally, the contract lacked one of the essential elements of an insurance contract.

Stern vs. Rosenthal (71 Misc. N. Y., 422).

More pertinent to the question here presented, it was held, in the case of Cole vs. Haven (Iowa) 7 N. W., 483, that a guarantee by a seller of lightning rods that the rods would protect the building, and that if they should fail to do so, he would pay the purchaser a specified amount, was not an insurance contract. In the case just cited, the contract was as follows:

> "We hereby guarantee that the said rods will protect said buildings or building from all damages by lightning for the term of five years, commencing at noon (12 o'clock) of above date; and said Cole Bro. & Hart hereby agree to make good unto the said J. C. Haven, his, her, or their heirs, assigns, or administrators, all such immediate loss or damage as may occur by lightning communicated directly to said building, and not by or through any intermediate or contiguous building, to an amount not to exceed $500. The said loss or damage by lightning is to be estimated by the cash value of the property at the time the same shall occur, and to be paid within 90 days after notice and clear proof thereof is made to Cole Bro. & Hart, by the above J. C. Haven, that said damages were caused by lightning, and that said rods were in good repair at the time of the accident."

With respect to this contract, the court, in its opinion, says:

> "Whether what is claimed to be a policy of insurance is such in fact, was somewhat considered, but not determined, in Cook vs. Wierman, 51 Iowa, 561. We think the contract is one of guaranty, and not insurance. If one is employed to watch a building, he may agree, in consideration of such employment, that he will pay therefor if it burns down through his negligence. In fact, the agreement to pay might be absolute and unconditional. This would not be a contract of insurance, but a guaranty. So one may sell goods, and agree that the purchaser will receive certain named benefits or advantages. Such a contract would be a guaranty or warranty, and not a contract of insurance."

Looking to the contract here presented, it occurs to me that the contract partakes of the nature of a strict guaranty rather than that of insurance. The primary purpose of the real estate agent responsible for this contract is to procure persons having property to rent, to list the same with him for attention, and as an inducement and consideration for such persons so to list this property with him, he guarantees that the property so listed will be kept rented, and the rent therefor paid.

It is not clear that the idea of indemnity enters into this contract at all, but if it does, it is simply incidental to a contract whereby the agent is to look after the property, for a commission. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the proposed contract is not an insurance contract, nor does the business contemplated thereunder constitute insurance.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INSURANCE—REINSURANCE OF UNMATURED POLICIES—DISCONTINUANCE OF BUSINESS BY INSURANCE COMPANY—POLICY HOLDER.

Where a certain life insurance company reinsured all its unmatured policies in another company, if the reinsurance is consummated in conformity to statute and the policy holder had actual notice of the contemplated discontinuance of the first company, and the substitution of the second, and made no objections, but paid subsequent premiums to the second company, the presumption would arise that he had consented and released the first company, and if the rider, which was placed on each policy of the retiring company by the taking over said policy, is broad enough to cover the above conditions, he would be estopped from asserting a claim against the first company.

The superintendent of insurance would be justified in considering such debt and liability of the first company to such policy holder paid and extinguished under section 655, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. ROBERT M. SMALL, Acting Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under favor of December 19, 1913, former superintendent of insurance, Mr. E. H. Moore, made the following request for my opinion:

> "As you will recall, the Great Northern Life Insurance Company, of Toledo, Ohio, some time ago reinsured all its unmatured policy obligations with The Cleveland Life Insurance Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. The agreement was approved by the commission, of which you were a member.
> "Subsequent to the approval of this agreement, the Great Northern gave its notice, pursuant to section 655, G. C., that it had discontinued business within this state and requesting a delivery of its securities.
>
> "In accordance with the terms of that statute, publication was duly made and no objection has been filed with this department to such withdrawal.
>
> "The deposit referred to is one of $100,000 of approved securities, deposited by The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, under the terms of section 9346, G. C.
> "Upon the approval of such reinsurance agreement, The Cleveland Life Insurance Company placed upon all of the policies of The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, so reinsured, its rider, assuming all the obligations of The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, upon such policies.

"I, therefore, respectfully request your opinion upon the following:

"Under the foregoing state of facts, may the superintendent of insurance lawfully permit the withdrawal of such deposit?"

Section 655, General Code, provides as follows:

> "When a life insurance company doing business in this state decides to discontinue its business, the superintendent of insurance upon application of such company or association shall give notice, at its expense, of such intention at least once a week for six weeks in a paper published and of general circulation in the county in which such company or its genera' agency is located. After such publication the superintendent shall deliver to such company or association its securities held by him, if he is satisfied on an exhibition of its books and papers, and on an examination made by himself or by some competent disinterested person or persons appointed by him, and upon the oath of the president, or principal officer, and the secretary or actuary of such company, that all debts and liabilities due or to become due upon any contract or agreement made with any citizen or resident of the United States are paid and extinguished; but the superintendent from time to time may deliver to such company or association or its assigns any portion of such securities on being satisfied that an equal proportion of the debts and liabilities due or to become due upon any such contract or agreement have been satisfied, if the amount of securities retained by him is not less than twice the amount of the remaining liabilities."

Under section 655, General Code, the superintendent of insurance, after compliance with the conditions therein prescribed, may permit the withdrawal of $100,000.00 worth of approved securities deposited with him by The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, if he is satisfied that all debts and liabilities due or to become due upon any contract or claim made with any citizen or resident of the United States are paid and extinguished.

This provision confers a discretion on the superintendent of insurance which is final and conclusive within the province of its exercise, in the absence of clear and manifest evidence of fraud, unreasonableness, arbitrariness, or some other undoubted abuse of the power. The discretion, however, can by no means be stated to extend to other than questions of fact. It will certainly not be asserted that, in the exercise of such discretion, the superintendent would be justified in ignoring a definite rule of law as to what is or what is not an obligation or a liability, or a definite rule of law upon the question of whether or not a certain state of facts constitute a release of what was a liability or obligation.

The question presented for consideration, therefore, is whether or not, under the steps taken by your department and the companies in question, the so-called reinsurance of The Great Northern Life Insurance Company by the Cleveland Life Insurance Company, relieved, as a matter of law, the former company from all liabilities and from all obligations upon the policies so reinsured. It is well settled that a strict contract of reinsurance proper does not relieve the reinsured company from liability upon the policies reinsured even though the reinsuring company contracts by such reinsurance to pay all claims to the original insured holder of the policy. When the contract of reinsurance contains a promise to pay to the original insured, the latter has a right of action, both against the reinsuring company and the reinsured. These principles are briefly summed up in Vance on Insurance, page 61, as follows:

"Reinsurance is a contract whereby the reinsurer agrees to assume the whole, or a part, of a risk undertaken by the original insurer. In its nature it is not different from a contract of original insurance, but it possesses some peculiarities. The contract is personal between the insurer and the reinsurer, and the original insured is no party to it.

"(a) The contract of reinsurance is an original undertaking, and not within the statute of frauds.

"(b) The liability of the reinsurer under the contract is measured by the liability of the orginal insurer, not by his ability to pay.

"(c) The original insured acquires no rights under the contract of reinsurance when the promise of the reinsurer is to pay the insurer, nor has he any lien upon money paid by the reinsurer.

"(d) But when the reinsurer's promise is to pay losses incurred to the policy holders, the original insured then takes a right of suit under the contract thus made for his benefit, even though he is not a party to it.

"(e) Any settlement made by the insurer, without the consent of the reinsurer, which imposes additional burdens upon the reinsurer, will release the latter from his liability."

On page 62 the same author, however, calls attention to the fact that the term "reinsurance" is sometimes improperly implied, and as an example of the somewhat misdirected employment of the term, the author makes the following statement:

"It is well to call to the reader's attention the distinction which exists between a contract of reinsurance and other somewhat similar contracts that frequently pass under the same name. When a person who has already insured his property secures a second insurance upon the same property, the second contract is frequently called 'reinsurance,' but this is merely a case of double insurance, and not at all 'reinsurance' in the technical sense of the word. Another instance of the untechnical use of the word occurs when two insurance companies are consolidated, or when one buys out another, assuming all of its policies and obligations, in order that that other may discontinue its business. In such cases the consolidated company, or the purchasing company, is said to 'reinsure' the risks of the company that ceases to exist; but this is a case of substitution, in which the so-called 'reinsurers' engage to take the place of the original insurer, and themselves directly to make good losses to the holders of the original policies. It must be borne in mind that such cases of consolidation, or of successive insurance, are not technically cases of reinsurance, and what is said of the rules of law determining the peculiar rights of the parties to the contract of reinsurance does not apply to the cases mentioned. It is also to be noted that the contract of reinsurance does not amount to a novation, even when the contract provides for a payment by the reinsurer directly to the original insured, in case of the happening of the event insured against. This is so although the original insured may accept the obligation assumed by the reinsurer, and bring suit against him to enforce the payment undertaken under the contract."

The author cites no decisions supporting the statements so made with reference to the discontinuance of business by one company and the taking over of its obligations by another, and I have been unable to uncover any authorities directly in point, outside of the statement by Vance above quoted.

On page 68, the statement of the same author, which seems to be very much in point, is as follows:

"A third kind of relation between the original insured and the reinsurer may arise in those cases in which the circumstances attending the making of the contract of reinsurance amount to a novation of the original contract, and hence operate to discharge that contract and the original insurer from all obligation thereunder. Such a result can arise, however, only when the insured agrees with the insurer and reinsurer that he will accept the obligation of the reinsurer in consideration of the discharge of that of the insurer. Such an agreement is ordinarily carried into effect by a surrender of the original policy, and the issue of another policy under the same terms and conditions by the so-called 'reinsurer.' As is shown above, however, such a transacton is not one of technical reinsurance, for here the so-called 'reinsurer' is but substituted for the original insurer, and hence becomes the immediate insurer of the subject of the original policy, instead of being the insurer of the original insurer's risk by reason of such policy, as would be the case if the transacton were one of proper reinsurance. In such cases of novation the original insurer is, of course, wholly discharged from any obligation that may have existed under the former policy, and the insured in turn secures the same rights against the so-called 'reinsurer' as if the policy had been originally issued by him."

In brief, the authorities disclose that the rules applying to contracts of insurance and reinsurance are the same as the rules applying to ordinary contracts, and under such rules it is clear that the original insured is not precluded from any claim or right of action upon an obligation against a former debtor in the absence of an express or an implied consent on his part to the substitution of another debtor. In short, a complete novation must be accomplished in order to establish the extinction or relinquishment of liability on the part of the first debtor.

The question involved herein, therefore, is whether or not the policy holder may be said to have consented to the substitution of The Cleveland Life Insurance Company, for The Great Northern Life Insurance Company as the obligor upon its policies. The contract of reinsurance referred to in your letter was the result of proceedings taken by The Great Northern Life Insurance Company to discontinue business and to turn over its assets and its obligations to The Cleveland Life Insurance Company through the steps provided by section 9352 and following, of the General Code. The procedure of these statutes is one provided for and one that therefore may contemplate a final discontinuance of business. These statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 9352. When any such company proposes to consolidate with any other company, or enter into any contract of reinsurance, it shall present its petition to the superintendent of insurance, setting forth the terms and conditions of the proposed consolidation or reinsurance, and praying for the approval or of any modification thereof, which the commission hereinafter provided for may approve.

"Sec. 9353. The superintendent thereupon shall issue an order of notice, requiring notice to be given by mail to the policyholders of such company, of the pendency of such petition, and the time and place at which it will be heard, and the publication of the order of notice and petition, in five daily newspapers to be designated by him, at least one of which shall be published in the city of Columbus, for at least two weeks before the time appointed for the hearing on the petition.

"Sec. 9354. The governor or in the event of his inability to act, some competent person resident of the state to be appointed by him, the attorney general, and the superintendent of insurance, shall constitute a commission to hear and determine upon such petition. At the time and place fixed in such notice, or at such time and place as is fixed by adjournment, the commission shall proceed with the hearing, and may make such examination into the affairs and condition of the company as it may deem proper. The superintendent of insurance may summon and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers before the commission. Any policyholder or stockholder of the above named company or companies may appear and be heard in reference to such petition.

"Sec. 9355. If satisfied that the interests of the policyholders of such company or companies are properly protected, and that no reasonable objection exists thereto, the commission may approve and authorize the proposed consolidation or reinsurance, or of such modification thereof as seems to it best for the interests of the policyholders, and make such order with reference to the distribution and disposition of the surplus assets of any such company thereafter remaining, as shall be just and equitable. Such consolidation or reinsurance shall only be approved by the consent of all the members of the commission, whose duty it will be to guard the interests of the policy holders of any such company or companies proposing to consolidate or reinsure."

Under section 9353, above quoted, each policy holder should receive a personal notice of the fact that the matter of the discontinuance of the business of the first company, and the assumption of its obligations by the second, is under consideration, and he is given an opportunity to present any objections he may have thereto. The settlement of the question depends upon whether or not a policyholder expressly or impliedly consents to the substitution of the second company for the first company as obligor upon his policy. Whether or not he so consents is a question to be decided from the attending facts and circumstances.

I am of opinion that if the reinsurance is consummated in strict conformity to the statutes, and all statutory notices are given, and the policyholder has actual notice of the contemplated discontinuance of the business of the first company, and the substitution of the second company (so far as the policyholder is concerned) for the first company, and if, after receiving such notice the policyholder makes no objection but pays his subsequent premiums to the second company, then a presumption would arise that he had consented to the substitution of the second company for the first company and agreed to release the first company from liability and to look only to the second company for whatever claim he might have.

You state in your request "upon the approval of such reinsurance agreement, The Cleveland Life Insurance Company placed upon all of the policies of The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, so reinsured, its rider, assuming all the obligations of The Great Northern Life Insurance Company, upon such policies."

If this rider is broad enough to cover all of the details mentioned in the last preceding paragraph, and the policyholder, after the attachment of such rider to his policy, pays his premium to the second company, then I think he would be estopped from asserting a claim that he had not consented to the reinsurance and the substitution of the second company as insurer upon his policy in place of the first company, and the superintendent of insurance would be justified in considering that the debt and liability due from the first company to the policyholder was extinguished.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Abstract of title to site of the proposed armory at Defiance, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary, Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 16th wherein you enclose abstract of title to the site of the proposed armory at Defiance, together with a deed from the city to the state of Ohio therefor, and request my opinion as to the character of title that the state will acquire thereunder.

It appears that the two ordinances to which objecion was made in my opinion of April 8, have been duly repealed as therein suggested. A new ordinance donating said land to the state and authorizing the mayor and clerk of council to sign a deed on behalf of the city, without any restrictions or conditions, was passed by the city council on April 13th, approved by the mayor, and filed in his office on the same date. Pursuant to the provisions of this ordinance, the officers authorized therein, executed and delivered on behalf of the city, a deed to the state of Ohio for said real estate, which deed is dated April 14th. No emergency clause was attached to the ordinance.

Under section 4227-2, General Code, as amended in 1913 (103 O. L., p. 211), "no ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until 30 days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of such municipal corporation, except as hereinafter provided."

This statute is very general and, in my judgment, is applicable to the aforesaid ordinance of the city of Defiance. The mayor and clerk of council derived their authority to execute the deed on behalf of the city, from the ordinance and as the ordinance will not go into effect until 30 days after it was filed with the mayor, unless there is a referendum petition filed in the meantime, in which event the going into effect of the ordinance would be postponed until it is approved by the electors of the city, I am of the opinion that said deed was prematurely executed and that the state of Ohio cannot acquire a good title thereunder.

I advise that you return same to the city of Defiance and instruct the officers named in the ordinance to execute a new deed when the ordinance goes into effect. The penciled notations on the present deed should be incorporated in the new one in order to make it a deed in fee simple, as required by section 3631 of the General Code.

Abstract and deed are herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE DEPOSITORY LAW—INSURANCE FUND OF COMPENSATION ACT OF THE STATE LIABILITY BOARD OF AWARDS—AMOUNT THAT MAY BE DEPOSITED IN A PRIVATE BANK AS AN INACTIVE DEPOSIT.

Section 12 of the state depository law applies to the insurance fund of the state liability board of awards, since the law requires that the insurance fund shall be deposited in the same manner and subject to all the provisions of law with respect to the deposit of state funds.

No bank shall have on deposit in the aggregate more than its paid-in capital stock, and in no event more than $300,000 as an inactive deposit whether the same be made up of state funds or insurance funds or both.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. JOHN P. BRENNAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 3, 1914, you write asking an opinion of me as follows:

> "Section 12 of the state depository law provides as follows:
>
> "'No bank or trust company shall have on deposit at any one time more than its paid-in capital stock and in no event more than three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000.00) as an inactive deposit.'
> "The state treasurer is custodian of the state insurance fund; the moneys to the credit of this fund have been kept and treated as a separate and distinct fund. Will you advise me as to whether or not this fund should be treated as a separate fund with reference to making deposits as provided for in the above section?"

Sections 9 and 10 of the act of February 26, 1913, to further define the powers, duties and jurisdiction of the state liability board of awards, with reference to the collections, maintenance and disbursements of the state insurance fund, for the benefit of injured and the dependents of killed employes, and requiring contribution thereto by employes (103 O. L., 72), provides as follows:

> "Section 9. The treasurer of state shall be the custodian of the state insurance fund and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers authorized by the state liability board of awards and signed by any two members of the board; or such vouchers may bear the fac-simile signatures of the board members printed thereon, and the signature of the chief of the auditing department.
> "Section 10. The treasurer of state is hereby authorized to deposit any portion of the state insurance fund not needed for immediate use in the same manner and subject to all the provisions of the law with respect to the deposit of state funds by such treasurer; and all interest earned by such portion of the state insurance fund as may be deposited by the state treasurer in pursuance of authority herein given, shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of such fund."

It is quite clear that awards made by the board under the act of which these sections are a part, are to be paid specially out of the said insurance fund therein provided for. It follows that you have been quite correct in keeping moneys to the credit of the state insurance fund as a separate and distinct fund; and in case of a deposit by you of such moneys under the state depository law (section 321, et seq., G. C.) such moneys should be deposited as a separate and distinct fund. The deposit of such moneys, however, is subject to the provisions of section 12 of the state depository act (Section 330-1, G. C.) noted by you, which provides as follows:

> "No bank or trust company shall have on deposit at any one time more than its paid-in capital stock and in no event more than three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000.00) as an inactive deposit."

That is, no bank or trust company is authorized to receive such moneys, in the event that the same, either alone or in addition to other state monyes on deposit with such bank or trust company, exceeds in amount the limitations of this section.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EIGHT HOUR LAW—DISTINCTION BETWEEN WORKMEN ENGAGED IN PUBLIC WORK AND WORKMEN WORKING FOR THE PUBLIC.

The words "public work carried on or aided by the state, etc.," refer solely to construction work, making a distinction between workmen engaged in public work and workmen working for the public.

Section 3 of house bill 100, 103 O. L., page 854, has the effect of postponing the application of section 2 until July 15, 1915, section 2 being the section imposing penalty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. C. E. VAN DUESEN, City Solicitor, Lorain, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of February 11, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "I am asking you at this time for an interpretation of house bill No. 100 (103 Laws of Ohio, p. 854), providing for an eight-hour day on public work in the state or any political subdivision thereof, or by contract or subcontract on behalf of the state, or any political subdivison thereof, and penalties for violation of same, as pertaining to engineers, firemen, and other employes of the waterworks department of this city.
> "There seems to be some difference of opinion as to whether this act went into effect August 8, 1913, or whether it will be in force or applicable on July 1, 1915."

Your inquiry involves a consideration of the act you mention and also of the constitutional amendment on the same subject, which reads:

> "Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise."

The act of April 28, 1913, 103 O. L., 854, reads:

"Section 1. Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract or otherwise; and it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation or association, whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such workmen to require or permit any of them to labor more than eight hours in any calendar day or more than forty-eight hours in any week, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen.

"Section 2. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be fined not to exceed five hundred dollars or be imprisoned not more than six months or both.

"Section 3. This act shall be in force and applicable to all contracts let on and after July 1, 1915."

Section 1 of this act merely carries the provisions of the constitution into the statutes. Section 2 provides a penalty for violation of the law and section 3 provides when it shall be applicable. That section 3 was only intended to mean "all contracts for public work let on or after July 15, 1915," cannot be questioned for the reason that to not so limit it and to leave "all contracts" to apply to those of a private or public character as well as for public works, would make it extend beyond the authorization of the constitution.

This brings us to a consideration of the meaning of "any public work," as used in the constitutional amendment and the act in question.

For a great many years the term "public work" or "public works" as used in this state has had a well defined and at the same time a limited meaning as applying to the canals of the state and such other state property as was in the charge and under the control of the board of public works, but the language "carried on or aided by the state" clearly evinces an intention on the part of the constitutional convention to extend the meaning of the words "public work" beyond the above meaning and to include public roads and highways, the improvement of which was "aided by the state." I cannot bring myself to adopt the limited construction above set forth, and conclude that public work "carried on or aided by the state" or any political subdivision must necessarily include all public buildings constructed by the state or any county, city or township therein, all improved roads, pikes, inter-county highways, main or other market roads whether constructed with or without state aid, and all matters of a constructive character, or in repair of the same class of buildings, roads or the like.

To my mind there is a broad distinction between "workmen engaged on public work" and "workmen working for the public," and that this distinction must be kept in view all of the time.

The state house and buildings occupied by the various state departments are full of workmen "working for the public," yet very few, if any of them, are engaged on a public work carried on by the state, as I construe the term.

In Blank vs. Kearney, 44 N. Y., App. Div., 492, in a case where the language "any public work or improvement" was under consideration, it was said by the court:

"Separate lighting contracts are required to be made in each borough, 'or in such subdivision of the city as may appear to the board of public improvements and the municipal assembly to be for the best interest of the city.' The contracts must be for the term of one year and be awarded to the lowest bidder.

"These seem to be the principal statutory provisions bearing upon the plaintiff's cause of action, unless it is affected by the following clauses of section 413 of the charter:

"'Except as herein otherwise provided, any public work or improvement within the cognizance or control of any one or more of the departments of the commissioners who constitute the board of public improvements, that may be subject of a contract, must first be duly authorized and approved by a resolution of the board of public improvements and an ordinance or resolution of the municipal assembly. * * * When a public work or improvement shall have been duly authorized as aforesaid, then but not until then, it shall be lawful for the proper department to proceed in the execution thereof in accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of this act.'

"If the pharse 'any public work or improvement' in this section was intended to comprehend service rendered and supplies furnished in carrying on the ordinary functions of a municipality whenever carried on through the agency of a contract, then the learned judge at special term was right in continuing the injunction. In our judgment, however, section 413 of the Greater New York charter relates rather to public works in the nature of betterments and does not refer at all to such a matter as public lighting, which must constantly be provided for from day to day and month to month in the administration of the affairs of the city."

In view of this authority and the construction herein above given, as to the meaning of public works, I am of the opinion that the statute in question does not apply to employes of waterworks departments of cities, and that section 3 of the act has the effect of postponing the application of section 2 until July 15, 1915, and then to contracts for public works as herein defined only.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WARNES TAX LAW—EFFECT OF TAXATION ON BANK SHARES

The Warnes tax law does not affect taxation of bank shares in any material respect as heretofore existing under sections 5672 and 5673, General Code, as amended; the bank pays only as agent of stockholder, the stockholder being ultimately liable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You inquire in your letter of April 10th, whether banks should "under the new Warnes law" pay taxes on their shares of stock owned by their stockholders. You state that there is some question with reference to the right of a bank paying taxes in this manner to deduct such a payment as a part of its expenses for the purposes of the federal corporation income tax.

Permit me to call your attention to two opinions that you will find in the annual report of the attorney general for the year 1911-1912, pages 592 and 610. These opinions discuss generally the theory of the taxation of national banks under the permissive federal statute, and show, I think, that for convenience the state has adopted the same scheme of taxation with reference to state and private banks as the one necessarily followed in the case of national banks.

The opinion in question, however, do not state the present law with respect to the question which you ask. Since their rendition, sections 5672 and 5673 have been so amended as to make the bank primarily liable for the payment of the tax, although the tax is not assessed against the bank as such, but rather against its shares of stock as the property of the shareholders. (102 O. L., 91). The sections in full are as follows:

> "Section 5672: Taxes assessed on shares of stock, or the value thereof, of a bank or banking association, shall be a lien on such shares from the first Monday of May in each year until they are paid. It shall be the duty of every bank or banking association to collect the taxes due upon its shares of stock from the several owners of such shares and to pay the same to the treasurer of the county in which such bank or banking association is located, as other taxes are paid, and any bank or banking association failing to pay the said taxes as herein provided, shall be liable by way of penalty for the gross amount of the taxes due from all the owners of the shares of stock, and for an additional amount of one hundred dollars for every day of delay in the payment of said taxes.
> "Section 5673. Such bank or banking association paying to the treasurer of the county in which it is located, the taxes assessed upon its shares, in the hands of its shareholders, respectively, as provided in the next preceding section, may deduct the amount due on such shares, and shall have a lien upon the shares of stock and on all funds in its possession belonging to such shareholders, or which may at any time come into its possession, for reimbursement of the taxes so paid on account of the several shareholders, with legal interest; and such lien may be enforced in any appropriate manner."

These sections themselves answer your question. It is the duty of a bank to pay the taxes assessed upon its shares and to charge a proportionate amount to the account of each stockholder. In law, therefore, the bank pays only as an agent of its stockholders and has an efficient remedy for reimbursement from its stockholders. Ultimately, therefore, the bank does not pay the tax at all, in contemplation of law, any more than it could be said to pay a check presented to it against an account of one of its depositors.

The "Warnes" law, so called, 103 O. L., 786, does not affect the taxation of bank shares in any material respects so far as your question is concerned.

I trust I have made plain to you the meaning and purport of the Ohio Statute. I beg, however, to be excused from expressing any opinion with respect to the interpretation of the federal statute to which you refer. Such a matter is scarcely within the scope of my authority, and does not appear to be one in which the state is interested.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES — BOARD OF EDUCATION — SURPLUS FUNDS.

Township trustees are not authorized to loan the township board of education surplus funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1914.

HON. CHARLES M. MILROY, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 9th, requesting my opinion upon the following facts :

> "A certain school district not qualified to receive state aid has until the present been unable to secure from taxation sufficient funds to meet its current expenses on account of the salaries of its teachers, because of the operation of the 1910 tax limitation of the 'Smith one per cent. law;' anticipating relief in the future by reason of the enactment of the Kilpatrick law doing away with the 1910 limitation, the board of education desires to borrow money in anticipation of its increased returns from taxation.
> "It so happens that the civil township, roughly corresponding in a territorial way to the school district, has in its treasury an amount of money sufficient to enable the board of education to pay its past due and anticipated claims on account of teachers' salaries. This fund constitutes a surplus not needed for the current purposes of the township. The trustees of the township are willing to loan this money temporarily to the board of education of the school district at 4 per cent. interest, that being the rate now received by the township trustees for the use of this fund by the township depository.
> "May the proposed arrangement be lawfully carried out?"

There is no doubt of the right of the board of education to borrow money. Section 5656, et seq., permits money to be borrowed for the payment of any valid indebtedness which cannot be paid at maturity; and section 5661, General Code, exempts contracts for the employment of teachers from the requirement that a certificate be issued that money for the obligation is in the treasury, as provided by the preceding section. Hence, teachers may be employed whether money is in the treasury to meet their contracts or not; so that by rendering services under a contract of employment a teacher acquires a valid claim against the district.

But as to the power of the township trustees to lend money I confess that I cannot conceive of any legal justification for such a course. The statutes certainly do not authorize it; and the board of trustees being a creature of the statutes, with no powers excepting those which are expressly conferred upon it by law, it necessarily follows that absence of authority is equivalent to a prohibition.

However just, reasonable and practically sensible it may seem, therefore, to use a surplus public fund produced by the levy of taxes upon a given territory, temporarily for another purpose pertaining to the same territory, in substance, although under the name of another political subdivision, I cannot as a matter of law advise that the contemplated arrangement may be entered into.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION—CITY ELECTRICIAN.

A member of the board of education may be employed as city electrician; there is no incompatibility existing.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1914.

HON. CHARLES W. CHEW, City Solicitor, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 23, 1914, as follows:

> "Our city electrician is also a member of the school board. I would like to have your opinion as to whether he can hold both of these positions."

Throop on Public Officers, section 33, says:

> "Offices are said to be incompatible and inconsistent, so as not to be executed by the same person, when from the multiplicity of business in them they cannot be executed with care and ability, or when, their being subordinate and interfering with each other, it induces a presumption that they cannot be executed with impartiality and honesty."

And in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, in a note to section 419, it is said:

> "Incompatibility in office exists where the nature and duties of the two offices are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for one incumbent to retain both."

There is nothing in the statutory law of this state that prohibits a member of the board of education from being employed as city electrician, nor does the rule of common law incompatibility, as laid down above, prohibit such employment.

I am therefore of the opinion that a member of the board of education may be employed as city electrician.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—INCUMBENTS UNDER SECTION 10 OF THE CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

1. Persons, who under color of title, are occupying positions, which were in the classified service under the old municipal civil service law, in cities where no civil service commission had been appointed, are incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act.

2. Persons, who under color of title, are occupying positions, which were in the classified service under the old civil service law, in cities where the appointing power did not make requisition on the civil service commission for certification of eligibles, are incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 1, 1914, you inquire:

> "Are the officers below designated 'incumbents' within the meaning of section 10 of the civil service act?
>
> "First. Persons occupying offices in the service classified under the provisions of the old law in municipalities where no civil service commission has been appointed.
>
> "Second. Persons occupying offices in the service classified under the provisions of the old law in municipalities where a civil service commission has been appointed but where no competitive examinations had been held.
> "Third. Persons occupying offices in the service classified under the provisions of the old law in municipalities where the appointing power did not make requisition on the civil service commission for certification of eligibles."

Section 10 of the civil service act, 103 Ohio Laws 703, to be known as section 486-10, General Code, provides in part:

> "The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to noncompetitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service."

It will be observed that this section excepts those who are holding their positions under existing civil service laws. Section 31 of the act specifically covers these positions. This section reads, in part:

> "All officers and employes in the classified service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall when this act takes effect, be deemed appointees under the provisions of this act."

By virtue of this section persons in the classified service holding their positions "under existing civil service laws" are deemed as appointees under the new law. These persons are not required to take any examination. In each of the three cases submitted the persons are not holding their positions under "existing" civil service laws as these laws were not complied with. They are not therefore appointees under section 31. Their status must be determined by the provisions of section 10 of the act.

Are they incumbents within the meaning of this section?

The word "incumbent" is defined in 22 Cyc. at page 72:

> "Incumbent. A person who is in present possession of an office; one who is legally authorized to discharge the duties of an office."

The persons in question are in possession of the office or position and I assume are discharging the duties thereof. While their appointments were not made in compliance with the terms of the old civil service law, yet I assume that they were appointed by the officer or person who had the authority to appoint to such positions or offices. In such case the employes or officers are acting under color of title and would be considered de facto employes or officers. One of the requisites of a de facto officer is possession of the office under color of title. Possession and performance of the duties of the office, under color of title, makes him an incumbent of the office.

That in my opinion is the meaning of the word "incumbent" in section 10 of the civil service act. That is, an incumbent is one who, on January 1, 1914, is in possession of an office or position and performing the duties thereof under color of title.

Answering your specific questions:

First. Persons who, under color of title, are occupying positions which were in the classified service under the old municipal civil service law, in cities where no civil service commission had been appointed, are incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act.

Second. Persons who, under color of title, are occupying positions which were in the classified service under the old civil service law, in cities having a civil service commission but where no competitive examinations were held, are incumbents within the meaning of section 10, supra.

Third. Persons who, under color of title, are occupying positions which were in the classified service under the old civil service law, in cities where the appointing power did not make requisition on the civil service commission for certification of eligibles, are incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE—APPOINTING POWER—CITY ENGINEER—JANITOR.

If the city engineer is the head of a city department created by the director of public service, his appointment would by virtue of section 4350, General Code, be made by the mayor. The janitor would be appointed by the director of public service. Both the engineer and janitor in question were holding their offices January 1, 1914, and therefore, are incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act, and are required to take non-competitive examinations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Hon. David R. Gilbert, city solicitor of Warren, Ohio, inquires of this department as follows, under date of December 23, 1913:

> "We have a new mayor, a new city auditor, and almost an entirely new council. The new mayor desires to appoint a city engineer and also a janitor. My interpretation of the law is that the mayor does not appoint these officers, but the director of public service who is himself appointed by the mayor.
> "The present incumbents, that is, the city engineer and janitor would like to hold their jobs. I assume that neither have ever passed a competitive examination before the city board of civil service commissioners. We have had such a board in Warren, heretofore. Granting that they have never passed such examination, are they entitled under section 10 of this act, (the civil service act), and as incumbents in these offices, to demand a non-competitive examination before the commission and passing such examination, to the satisfaction of the commission, entitled to continue to hold their positions as being protected by the civil service law?"

Two questions are to be considered:

First. Who has the power of appointing the city engineer and a janitor?

Second. Is a city engineer and a janitor who have taken no civil service examination incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act?

Section 4250, General Code, provides:

> "The mayor shall be the chief conservator of the peace within the corporation. He shall appoint and have the power to remove the director of public service, the director of public safety and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law."

The city engineer is the head of the subdepartment of engineering under the department of public service, if the director has created such subdepartment. Under section 4250, General Code, the mayor has the authority and power to appoint the city engineer.

Section 4246, General Code, provides:

> "The executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in a mayor, president of council, auditor, treasurer, solicitor, director of public service, director of public safety, and such other officers and departments as are provided by this title."

Section 4247, General Code, provides:

"Subject to the limitations prescribed in this subdivision such executive officers shall have exclusive right to appoint all officers, clerks and employes in their respective departments or offices, and likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, shall have sole power to remove or suspend any of such officers, clerks or employes."

By virtue of these sections the director of public service has the power to appoint employes in the department of public service, unless otherwise provided by law. The heads of subdepartments are otherwise provided for in section 4250, General Code, supra.

The appointment of a janitor in the department of public service is not otherwise provided for, and therefore, the director of public service has the power to make such appointment.

Are the city engineer and the janitor to be considered as incumbents under section 10 of the civil service act?

Said section 10, provides in part:

"The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service. * * *"

It appears that these persons were occupying the positions on January 1, 1914, and were discharging the duties of such position. You assume that they have never taken an examination. I assume, however, that they were appointed by the proper appointing authority, or that the appointment has been ratified by such authority.

Even though they were required to take an examination under the old law, which is not necessary to be here determined, they would nevertheless be incumbents within the meaning of section 10 of the civil service act, if they were appointed by the proper authority, or the appointment ratified by such authority. That is, they must be holding their positions under color of title.

If they are incumbents as above defined they would be required to take a non-competitive examination as a condition of continuing in their positions.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

KENT STATE NORMAL SCHOOL—CONTRACT—ARCHITECT—APPROPRIATION.

Where a contract between the board of trustees of Kent State Normal School and its architect providing that the architect must prepare all necessary sketches, etc., for buildings and improvements to be erected by the trustees under the present appropriation of 1913 and 1914; such contract was entered into May 2, 1913, and the appropriation bill of 1914 was repealed and a budget bill enacted, it is necessary to enter into a new contract with the architect for buildings to be made under the appropriation provided for in the budget bill.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1914.

HON. JOHN A. MCDOWELL, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Kent State Normal School, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 9, 1914, you submitted for an opinion the following request:

> "I am writing you for your opinion on contract our board of trustees made with Mr. Geo. F. Hammond, architect, in 1913. I am enclosing copy of contract herewith. We want to know if the contract is valid.
> "The contract was made with reference to the use of funds appropriated by the legislature in regular session in 1913. The legislature appropriated funds to be available in 1914. The special session repealed the 1914 appropriation and made a new appropriation. In the recent appropriation the funds are not specifically appropriated. For instance, in the former appropriation a certain amount was appropriated for powerhouse, etc. In the latter appropriation no amount is named for powerhouse, and if we proceed to build the agricultural and training building as planned we would not have sufficient funds to build a powerhouse. The real question with us is, does the action of the special session of the legislature make it necessary, or advisable, that we should have a new contract with our architect?"

Under date of April 18, 1914, by virtue of a request from this department, you submitted further information regarding the contract referred to in your former communication, as follows:

> "Referring to your letter relative to the contract our board of trustees made with Mr. Geo. F. Hammond, architect, in 1913, will say that it is our plan to pay for the buildings contracted for and to be contracted for, out of appropriations made in 1913, and also in 1914. The architect would be paid out of the same funds.
> "The general assembly in 1913, appropriated so much available in 1913, and a further amount available in 1914. The special session repealed the act appropriating a certain amount to be available for specific buildings in 1914, and reappropriating a sum for building purposes. Under the present appropriation we cannot undertake to build all the buildings enumerated in the contract with the architect. We cannot proceed to contract for a powerhouse. The architect's contract includes this building."

Under date of April 28, 1913, the 80th general assembly at its regular session passed a general appropriation bill for the year 1914, which was approved by the governor May 9, 1913. That bill carried the following items for the Kent State Normal School.

KENT STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

Salaries of teachers and officers, $37,500.00, raised by a special levy and appropriated, and	$18,500 00
Current expenses	9,000 00
Driveways, walks and improvements to grounds	8,000 00
Library	4,000 00
Apparatus	3,000 00
Farm and experiment field	3,000 00
Field work (extension teaching)	6,000 00
Pianos and musical equipment	1,000 00
Auditorium, library, gymnasium and office building	50,000 00
Agricultural building and training school	50,000 00
Powerhouse and equipment	20,000 00
Powerhouse connection with four buildings	5,000 00
Expenses board of trustees	1,500 00

As stated in your last communication, this act appropriated a certain amount to be available for specific buildings in the year 1914. At its recent session, the legislature passed an act entitled, "An act to make general appropriations and to repeal house bill 670, approved May 9, 1913 (103 O. L., 627), entitled an act 'to make general appropriations." The act so repealed was house bill 670, approved May 9, 1913, which is the same act above referred to and which made general appropriations for the year 1914.

The contract between the board of trustees and the Kent State Normal School and the architect, copy of which is attached to your inquiry, was entered into on the 2nd day of May, 1913, and contains the following clause:

> "Witnesseth: That said party of the first part has engaged and agreed with, and hereby does engage the said second party to prepare all necessary sketches, drawings, specifications, details, and estimates for all buildings and improvements to be erected by said first party under the present appropriation of 1913 and 1914, in or near the village of Kent in the state of Ohio, for the purpose of said Kent State Normal School, and to superintend their erection."

This contract was entered into before the general assembly at its special session enacted house bill 47, entitled "An act to make general appropriations and to repeal house bill 670, approved May 9, 1913 (103 O. L., p. 627), 'entitled an act to make general appropriations,'" referred to above, and which said act repealed house bill 670 referred to above. Inasmuch as the contract above quoted from specifically says that the architect, who is therein the second party, was to be paid out of the present appropriations of 1913 and 1914, for preparing all necessary sketches, drawings, specifications, etc., and inasmuch as the general appropriation for this particular purpose so provided by the general appropriation bill enacted in 1913 has been repealed by the act to make general appropriations, which was enacted by the special session of the 80th general assembly, passed February 16, 1914, and which is above referred to as house bill No. 47. I am therefore of the opinion that it is necessary for your board of trustees to enter into a new contract with said architect or such other architect as the board may agree upon, to prepare sketches, drawings, specifications, estimates, etc., of buildings and improvements which are to be made under the appropriations provided for by house bill 47, enacted by the general assembly at its late special session.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CENTRALIZED SCHOOL—BORROWING MONEY WITH WHICH TO BUILD CENTRALIZED SCHOOL.

There is no provision of law other than sections 7626, et seq., General Code, whereby boards of education authorized by vote under section 4726 to centralize schools may borrow money with which to erect a centralized school building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1914.

HON. RUSSELL M. KNEPPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 8th, wherein you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Is there any provision of law other than those of sections 7626, et seq., of the General Code whereby a board of education, which has been authorized by a vote taken under section 4726, General Code, to centralize the schools of the district, may procure funds with which to build a centralized school building?"

If by "procuring funds" you mean the borrowing of money, it is my opinion that section 7626, et seq., General Code, constitute the only authority of the board of education in the premises.

Sections 7629 and 7630, General Code, formerly authorized the borrowing of money for such purposes, but these sections are seriously affected by a decision of the supreme court in the case of Rabe et al. vs. Board of Education of the Canton school district, the full text of which is published in recent issues of the current legal publications. From your letter, however, I assume that you are aware of the provisions of sections 7629 and 7630 and that you intended to ask whether or not here are provisions other than these which might be followed by a board of education under the circumstances referred to.

Of course, a board of education has the right to levy for a building fund from year to year, and in time, by this procedure, a sufficient amount of money might be accumulated for the purpose suggested, otherwise than by levying taxes in this way or by borrowing money under the statutes mentioned, however, I know of no manner in which funds might be procured by the board of education for the purpose of building a structure sufficient for the needs of the centralized schools.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PAID-UP STOCK OF A BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION AND PAID-UP STOCK OF OTHER CORPORATIONS—LEGAL INVESTMENT FOR CORPORATIONS AND SAVINGS BANKS.

The paid-up stock of a building and loan association, not being similar to the paid-up stock of other corporations for the reason that the same is assessable, is not within the meaning of the word "stocks" as used in section 9765, General Code, which authorizes savings banks, or section 9781, General Code, which authorizes trust companies to invest capital, surplus and deposits in "stocks" which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 5, 1914, you write asking my opinion as follows:

> "Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not the paidup stock of a building and loan association which has regularly paid dividends for more than four years past, would be a legal investment for a commercial savings bank and trust company."

Under the provisions of section 9702, General Code, a company may be incorporated as a commercial bank, savings bank, or as a trust company; or such bank may be incorporated to conduct all three of said departments of banking business. The bank here mentioned is a commercial savings and trust company, and in ascertaining its powers, reference must be had to statutory provisions applicable to each of the departments comprising the institution.

Section 9758, General Code, prescribing the manner in which the surplus, capital and deposits in a commercial bank may be invested, makes no mention of corporate stocks as an authorized investment, but section 9765, General Code, applicable to savings banks and section 9781, General Code, applicable to trust companies, authorize said respective companies to invest their capital, surplus and deposits in "stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, * * * when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee."

The question is whether, under the statutory provisions above noted, this bank can invest its funds in the paidup stock of a building and loan association. Unless such right finds support in these provisions, it does not exist, for, independent of statute, a bank incorporated under state laws has no power, as an investment, to subscribe for or buy stock in other corporations.

(Section 9684, General Code.)
Franklin Bank vs. Commercial Bank, (36 O. S., 350).
Nassau Bank vs. Jones (95 N. Y., 115).
Preston vs. Marquette Savings Bank (112 Mich., 696).
Bank of Commerce vs. Hart, (37 Neb., 197).

Section 8683, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A private corporation also may purchase or otherwise acquire, and hold shares of stock in other kindred but not competing private corporations, domestic or foreign. This shall not authorize the formation of a trust or combination for the purpose of restricting trade or competition."

This section however, in my opinion, confers no power on the bank with respect to the question here presented. This section is one, general in its terms, and inasmuch as special provision has been made with reference to the powers of banks to purchase the stock of other corporations, such specific provision must be looked to rather than the section above noted.

It follows, therefore, that the solution of the question here presented depends upon whether paidup stock of a building and loan association is, as a matter of legislative intention, comprised and included within the term "stocks," as used in sections 9765 and 9781, General Code, above noted. There is no statutory provision in this state authorizing building and loan associations to issue paidup stock. In this connection, however, the rule seems to be that such associations have power to issue such stock unless specially prohibited.

The stock of a building and loan association, however, presents a number of features which distinguish it from the stock of ordinary corporations. It is sufficient for the present inquiry to note that the holders of shares of stock in a building and loan association sustain a relation of stock mutuality towards each other. Each shareholder participates alike in the earnings of the association and alike assists in bearing the burden of losses sustained.

Eversman vs. Schmitt, 53 O. S., 174, 184.
Leahy vs. Mutual B. & L. Asso., 100 Wis., 555.

It results from this that the paid-up stock of these institutions is not like the paidup stock of other corporations (except banks)—nonassessable. On the contrary, the mutual character of the association prescribed that the burden of losses must be sustained by the stockholders according to the amount of their stock, and this burden is borne by the holders of paidup stock as well as other members of the association.

The foregoing consideration is sufficient to distinguish the paidup stock of these institutions from the "stocks" contemplated in sections 9765 and 9781, General Code, above noted.

Whatever may be the proper scope and meaning of the word "stocks," as used in these sections, prescribing and defining the authorized investments of savings banks and trust companies, I am of the opinion that it is, in any event, to be limited to such stocks as represent capital stock in its complete and proper sense, and that stock of a building and loan association, whether paid up or otherwise, is not included within the meaning of the term.

It follows that the paidup stock of a building and loan association is not a legal investment for a bank incorporated under the laws of this state.

In conclusion it may be noted that even as to "stocks," which are properly such within the meaning of the term as used in the statute, those only are legal investments for banks which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment. It does not appear that the building and loan stock mentioned in your inquiry has paid dividends for this length of time.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD COMMISSIONERS MAY IMPROVE ROAD THROUGH THE VILLAGE.

Where a road extends from one boundary of a district to another, both wholly in one township of said district, the road commissioners may improve said road through the village under section 7108.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1914.

HON. GEORGE D. KLEIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 11th, in which you state, in substance, the following facts:

Four townships in Coshocton county have formed a special district for the improvement of roads, under sections 7095-7136, inclusive, of the General Code. A road wholly in one of the townships of the district extends from one boundary of the district to another through the village of Roscoe, and is improved to the corporate limits on either side.

You request my opinion as to "whether the county commissioners, under house bill No. 277 (103 O. L., 547), or the road commissioners under section 7108, General Code, may improve said road through the village of Roscoe."

House bill No. 277 purports to supplement section 6956, by the enactment of section 6956b, which provides as follows:

> "Whenever there is a gap of unimproved road of less than a mile in length between two improved state roads or paved street of a municipal corporation where one of the the roads leads into the other, the county commissioners by unanimous action, are empowered to improve such gap of unimproved road, using such material as in their judgment is best suited for the work, the cost of which is to be paid out of the road fund of the county treasury; * * *."

This act can only be invoked when it is desired to improve a gap of unimproved road between two improved state roads, or between an improved state road and a paved street of a municipal corporation.

I am unable to state, from the facts submitted, whether this road is within the provisions of section 6956b, and for this reason I cannot give a direct answer to your first question.

Section 7108, General Code, provides:

> "If a majority of the votes cast at such election is in favor of improvement of the public roads of such district by general taxation, the road commissioners shall each year designate and determine what roads in their opinion should be improved in said year, the extent of such improvement in each township, at what points the improvement shall begin, and how much improvement shall be completed annually. No public highway within the corporate limits of a city or village in such road district shall be improved unless such road extends through such road district continuously."

The foregoing is a part of a chapter of the road statutes providing a method for the improvement of roads within districts formed from not less than two nor more than four adjacent townships, in any county, occupying contiguous and compact territory. Without quoting therefrom, it is sufficient to say that the chapter in which the above section is found evinces an intention to make the district the unit for the improvement and repair of roads rather than the several townships composing it.

The commissioners may not improve a highway within the corporate limits of a municipality within the district, unless such highway extends through the district continuously. The purpose of this limitation was to prevent the expenditure of funds of the district for the improvement of streets of a municipality therein, indiscriminately.

As the identity of the townships composing the district is merged in the district, a road that touches any two boundaries of the district, even though it be wholly in one township thereof, provided there is no break in its continuity, may be improved within a municipality, out of funds of the district.

As the road described in your letter comes within the requirements of the statute, I am of the opinion that the road commissioners may improve the same through the village of Roscoe.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

GIFT OF PROPERTY TO CITY FOR LIBRARY AND OTHER PURPOSES—CITY MAY ACCEPT SUCH GIFT.

Where a person in a city by way of gift executes a deed to the city conveying valuable residence property to certain persons as a board of trustees and directors of the public library of such city, in said deed it is provided that certain rooms shall be used for the welfare league and also certain rooms for literature, charitable and educational clubs, since the primary object of this gift is for a library, which is a public purpose, the mere fact that incidentally certain private clubs are taken care of would not vitiate the gift, and the city may accept the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1914.

HON. R. CLINT COLE, City Solicitor, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor of March 25, 1914, in which you advise that Mr. George P. Jones of Findlay, Ohio, has executed, by way of gift to the city, a deed conveying valuable residence property to certain persons as the board of trustees and directors of the public library of said city; and that a question has arisen as to whether the deed for this property can be legally accepted in view of certain conditions imposed therein by the grantor.

Such of the conditions of said deed as are pertinent to the questions made are as follows:

> "Said premises so hereby conveyed shall be known and designated as 'The Jones Memorial,' which said words will be inscribed upon said premises by said grantor, and the same shall forever remain and be maintained by grantees and their successors in office as thereon inscribed.
> "The first floor of said building shall be used as a public library and reading rooms to and for the citizens and inhabitants of the city of Findlay; to be open to the public each week day according to the rules and regulations of the library board.

"Said public library and reading rooms shall also be open to the public on each and every Sunday between the hours of one o'clock, p. m. and six o'clock, p. m.

"The second floor of said building shall be used as follows: one room, to be designated by said library board, shall be reserved and used exclusively for said library board. One room, to be designated by said library board, shall be reserved and used exclusively for the welfare league of the city of Findlay. The balance of the rooms on said second floor shall be used exclusively for the clubs in the city of Findlay, organized for literary, charitable and educational purposes, and also for a rest room, provided, however, that at all times the same shall be under the supervision and control of the library board and shall be used and occupied in accordance with the rules and regulations adopted and provided by said board. The third floor of said building shall be used exclusively as a curio room, and for such entertainments as the library board shall permit. Upon said third floor shall be constructed, by the grantees, glass cases, kept locked and well equipped for lighting, within which shall be placed and preserved the curios accompanying said deed of gift from said grantor.

"All the expenses of the maintenance and operation of said grounds and buildings, as given for such purposes, as hereinbefore mentioned, must be paid by the grantees and their successors in office. And said premises must be kept and maintained at all times in good condition and repair.

The precise question with reference to the right of the grantees to accept this deed arises on the consideration that the grantor has imposed as a condition that a part of said building shall be used exclusively for the welfare league of the city of Findlay and a part reserved for the exclusive use of the clubs in the city organized for literary, charitable and educational purposes, and for a rest room; the deed provides, as a condition thereof, that all the expenses of the maintenance and operation of said grounds and buildings are to be paid by the grantees and their successors in office—and this, of course, out of public funds derived from taxation.

In view of the fact that municipal corporations have only such powers as the legislature expressly confers and such as are necessarily or fairly incident to its express powers, the rule seems to be that in the absence of express prohibitory statutes, or of statutes which in terms confer and limit, and therefore define and measure, the power, the capacity to acquire and hold property real or personal, must be fairly incidental to some power expressly granted or absolutely indispensable to the declared purposes of the corporation; and that it has the implied power, unless restrained by charter or statute, to purchase and hold all such real estate as may be reasonably or fairly necessary to the proper exercise of any power specifically granted, or essential to those purposes of municipal government for which it was created. (Dillon Municipal Corporations, Sections 975, 976.)

More immediately pertinent to the questions here presented and involved, the same author says:

"Municipal and public corporations may be the objects of public and private bounty. This is reasonable and just. They are in law clothed with the power of individuality. They are placed by law under various obligations and duties. Burdens of a peculiar character rest upon compact populations residing within restricted and narrow limits, to meet which property and revenues are absolutely necessary, and, therefore, legacies of personal property, divises of real property, and grants or gifts of either species of property directly to the corporation for its own use and benefit, intended to and which have the effect to ease it of its obligations or lighten the burdens of its citizens, are, in the absence of disabling or restraining statutes, valid in law. Thus a conveyance of land to a town or other public corporation, for benevolent or public purposes, as for a site for a schoolhouse, city or town house, and the like, is based upon a sufficient consideration, and such conveyances are liberally construed in support of the object contemplated. (Section 981.)"

"Not only may municipal corporations take and hold property in their own right by direct gift, conveyance, or devise, but the cases firmly establish the principle, also, that such corporations, at least in this country, are capable, unless specially restrained, of taking property, real and personal, in trust for purposes germane to the objects of the corporation, or which will promote, aid, or assist in carrying out or perfecting those objects. So such corporations may become cestuis que trust, within the scope of the purposes for which they are created. And where the trust reposed in the corporation is for the benefit of the corporation, or for a charity within the scope of its powers or duties, it may be compelled, in equity, to administer and execute it. * * *. "'If the purposes of the trust be germane to the objects of the incorporation; if they relate to matters which will promote and perfect those objects;' and the corporation has the legal capacity to take the estate as well by devise as otherwise, and the trust may be assumed and executed by the corporation 'even though the act of incorporation may have for its main objects mere civil and municipal government and regulating powers.'"

Attorney General vs. Parker, 126 Mass., 221.

With respect to the question at hand I note that this property is not deeded to the city of Findlay directly and by name, but is deeded to the library trustees and their successors in office, forever. Nevertheless it is clear that upon the acceptance of this deed, the property conveyed by it will become a city institution and subject to maintenance out of the city's public funds; the trustees being, in contemplation of law, but agents of the city, vested with such powers with respect to the control and administration of the property as a library as is given them by the provisions of sections 4004, et seq., General Code.

Cincinnati vs. Trustees, (66 O. S., 440, 448).
Sadler vs. Porter, (67 O. S., 531).

As far as the questions here presented are concerned, therefore, the proposed conveyance may be considered the same as one made direct to the city by name, and this suggests a consideration of the pertinent statutory provisions with respect to powers of the city concerning public libraries, and concerning its power to take, by way of gift, property for this or other purposes.

Section 3615, General Code, provides as follows:

"Each municipal corporation shall be a body politic and corporate, which shall have perpetual succession, may use a common seal, sue and be sued, and acquire property by purchase, gift, devise, appropriation, lease or lease with the privilege of purchase, for any municipal purpose authorized by law, and hold, manage and control it and make any and all rules and regulations, by ordinance or resolution, that may be required to carry out fully all the provisions of any conveyance, deed or will, in relation to any gift or bequest, or the provisions of any lease by which it may acquire property."

Section 3620, General Code, provides that municipal corporations shall have power "to establish, maintain and regulate free public band concerts, free public libraries and reading rooms, to purchase books, papers, maps and manuscripts therefor, to receive donations and bequests of moneys or property therefor, in trust or otherwise, and to provide for the rent and compensation for the use of any existing free public libraries established and managed by a private corporation or association organized for that purpose."

The property conveyed by this deed if accepted, must, by the conditions of the deed itself, be maintained by the city. This it can do only out of public funds raised by taxation levied for the support of the property as a public institution. The deed provides that certain rooms and apartments of the building conveyed shall be reserved for the exclusive use of the welfare league and clubs in the city of Findlay, organized for literary, charitable and educational purposes, and it has been suggested that these organizations are private affairs, and public moneys cannot be used for the maintenance of the building for their use.

I am not advised as to the declared or practical purpose of these organizations further than is indicated by the descriptive terms of the condition of the deed wherein they are mentioned. I infer from your communication that these organizations are wholly private; but as to the welfare league and the clubs organized for charitable and educational purposes, it may perhaps with safety be assumed that they are engaged in purposes in keeping, if not strictly germane to the purposes of the municipality.

The same assumption cannot be so safely made with respect to literary clubs, inasmuch as the benefits of their activities are probably confined to the members of the organizations.

I do not care, however, to base my conclusions with respect to the ultimate question as to whether the trustees can legally accept this deed upon speculations with respect to the possible general or even public benefit derived from the activities of these organizations or any of them.

Notwithstanding the fact that certain rooms in this building have been reserved for these organizations, it fairly appears that the primary purpose of the grantor in this proposed conveyance is to give to the city of Findlay, as a memorial to his father and mother, a library building to be used for the purposes of a public library.

Pertinent to this consideration just noted, which, I think, is manifest, I note the case of Beurhaus vs. Cole, 94 Wis., 617. In this case certain property was devised and bequeathed by a testator to his wife and son, and the balance of his estate was devised and bequeathed to his executors in trust, with directions that certain of the property so devised in trust should, after the decease of the testator, be conveyed to the city of Watertown in said state, for the purpose of being used and maintained by said city as an old ladies' home. The balance of the property so deeded in trust was to be held by the trustees for the benefit of the wife and son of the testator during their lives, with the direction that after their death, funds or personal securities in the hands of the trustees should be given to the city of Watertown to be used in the purchase of suitable grounds upon which to erect a library and club house building.

The city refused to accept a conveyance, from the trustees, of the property devised in the will for the purpose of an old ladies' home, for the reason that the cost of maintaining the same was more than the city could, at that time, afford.

With respect to the provisions of the will providing that the city should erect a library and club house building out of funds and personal securities to be turned over to it by the trustees and with respect to the right of the city to erect a building of this kind out of the funds and property to be given it, the court held:

> "Although a city may have no authority, either over its charter or at common law, to maintain a business men's club room, yet a devise to it for the establishment and maintenance of a public library and business men's club room is not rendered void by the lack of such authority, where it was primarily the intention to make the library the important element of the trust, and the club room a comparatively unimportant accessory."

In its opinion the court says:

> "The question now arises whether it can establish and maintain a business men's club room, and, if not, whether the trust for library purposes is thereby invalidated. We have found no clause of the charter of the city expressly or impliedly authorizing the city to maintain such a room, nor do we know of any authority holding that such a purpose is germane to any of the objects of the corporation, and we think, upon principle, that it cannot be sustained. But the question whether the library trust is therefore invalidated is a different question, and one upon which we have received but little help from the briefs. The intention of the will seems quite plain that the public library is the important element of the trust, and the club room a comparatively unimportant accessory. It is evidently to be but a room in the building to be erected for the library. Must the library devise fail because the testator has directed that one room of the building, which might easily be provided without appreciable addition to the expense, shall be occupied at times, free of rent, by a business men's club? Such a result would be a reproach to the administration of justice. It has been held that where a devise otherwise valid is inseparably coupled with a void devise, and is a mere accessory thereto, and the amount of the valid part cannot be ascertained, then both must fall together. Chapman vs. Brown, 6 Ves. 404; 1 Jarman, Wills, 336. That, however, is not this case. The illegal part of this trust would require for its purpose an utterly inappreciable additional expense, if indeed it required any at all; and we do not think that, under such circumstances, the valid devise, especially one so greatly for the public good, should be avoided. The courts are always favorably disposed to the establishment of libraries and hospitals, and all of the public institutions whose purpose is to ameliorate the condition of mankind. Gifts for such purposes are supported, if possible. We hold, therefore, that the library scheme does not fail by reason of the fact that the city cannot maintain the club room."

The question here arising upon the conditions prescribed in the proposed deed with respect to the use of certain rooms in the building by private organizations arises from the fact that the building, as a whole and as a city institution, is to be maintained by the expenditure of public funds.

In line with the case last cited and pertinent to the question presented, it has been held that "if the primary object of a public expenditure is to subserve a public municipal purpose, the expenditure is legal, notwithstanding it also involves, as an incident, an expense which, standing alone, would not be lawful; but if the primary object is not to subserve a public municipal purpose, but to promote some private end, the expenditure is illegal, even though it may incidentally serve some public purpose."

Brooks vs. Brooklyn, 146 Iowa, 136.
Bates vs. Bassett, 60 Vermont, 535.
Wheelock vs. Lowell, 196 Mass., 220.

As before noted, I am convinced that the primary purpose of the property conveyed by the deed of Mr. Jones to the library trustees of the city of Findlay is that the same may be used as a public library which on acceptance, would become public property properly maintainable out of public funds; and the fact that as an incident to the primary purpose of this building as a public library it is subject to the occasional use of the organization named in the conditions, does not make the building any the less a public building, nor make the acceptance of the deed imposing these conditions, illegal.

The right of the city to maintain this building, coming into its possession as a gift affected by the conditions here imposed, is as full and complete as would be its right to expend public moneys in the erection of such a building.

As to the expenditure of public moneys in the erection of municipal buildings, it has been held that if a building was designed and adopted to serve the legitimate interests of the municipality, its erection will not be rendered illegal, if, when not wanted for municipal purposes, the municipality permits it to be used for other purposes having no relation to the purpose for which it was built, such as lectures and public entertainments.

Camden vs. Camden, 77 Maine, 530.
Greenbanks vs. Bootwell, 43 Vt., 207.
Bates vs. Bassett, supra.

Upon the foregoing conclusions, I am of the opinion that the deed in question may be legally accepted by the library trustees.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TEACHER'S PENSION—LEAVE OF ABSENCE CANNOT BE COUNTED AS SERVICE FOR THE AMOUNT OF PENSION TO WHICH TEACHER IS ENTITLED.

In order to be entitled to a pension, a teacher must have served thirty years of actual teaching, and a leave of absence granted to such teacher cannot be counted as service for fixing the amount of pension paid to such teacher under the provisions of section 7883, General Code, whether the same be granted because of ill health or not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1914.

HON. HOWARD E. MCGREGOR, City Solicitor, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 3, 1913, you submitted the following request for an opinion:

> "A teacher was employed by the board of education for two years; upon her appointment the teacher requested and was granted leave of absence during the first year without pay and the second year she returned to her work and received compensation. When this teacher after more than thirty years of teaching, retired on pension under section 7882 of the General Code, was the year of leave without pay properly counted as 'service' in fixing the amount of pension to be paid under section 7883?
> "The two-year appointment, given when appointments in general were for one year, was the prevailing method of making a teacher secure in a position on returning to work after absence on leave. Further, at that time, leave of absence was granted only on account of ill health.
> "Would the case be different if leave without pay were granted without specification of ill health as the reason?"

In reply thereto section 7882 of the General Code provides that any teacher may retire and become a beneficiary under the chapter providing for teachers' pensions, who has taught for a period aggregating thirty years, as follows:

> "Any teacher may retire and become a beneficiary under this chapter who has taught for a period aggregating thirty years. But one-half of such term of service must have been rendered in the public schools or in the high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which the district is located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere."

Section 7883 of the General Code provides that each teacher so retiring shall be entitled to receive a pension for the remainder of his or her natural life, at the rate of twelve dollars and fifty cents for each year of service as teacher, as follows:

> "Each teacher so retired or retiring shall be entitled during the remainder of his or her natural life to receive as pension, annually, twelve dollars and fifty cents for each year of service as teacher except that in no event shall the pension paid to a teacher exceed four hundred and fifty dollars in any one year. Such pensions shall be paid monthly during the school year."

Section 7884 provides that no such pension shall be paid until the teacher contributes or has contributed a sum equal to twenty dollars per year for each year of service rendered as teacher, as follows:

> "No such pension shall be paid until the teacher contributes, or has contributed, to such fund a sum equal to twenty dollars a year for each year of service rendered as teacher, but which sum shall not exceed six hundred dollars. Should any teacher retiring be unable to pay the full amount of this sum before receiving a pension, in paying the annual pension to such retiring teacher, the board of trustees must withhold on each month's payment twenty per cent. thereof, until the amount above provided has been thus contributed to the fund."

It is to be noted that section 7883 contains the phrase "each year of service as teacher" and that section 7883, supra, contains the expression "each year of service rendered as teacher." From these expressions it would seem to follow that the aggregate of thirty years as specified in section 7882 of the General Code means thirty years of active service as a teacher. In section 7881 of the General Code the legislature has seen fit to define the term "teacher" and incidentally has specified the manner whereby years of service shall be estimated as follows:

> "The term 'teacher' in this chapter, shall include all teachers regularly employed by either of such boards in the day schools, including the superintendent of schools, all superintendents of instruction, principals, and special teachers, but in estimating years of service, only service in public day school or day high schools, supported in whole or in part by public taxation, shall be considered."

It is to be noted that section 7882, General Code, supra, now provides that one-half of the aggregate term of service therein provided must be spent in the public schools or in the high schools of such school district, etc. Prior to its last amendment, said section 7882, supra, provided that three-fifths of such term of service must have been rendered in the public schools or in the high schools of such school district or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which such district is located, so that the only change that was made in said section by the last amendment was to change the time of service required to be spent in such schools, from three-fifths to one-half of the aggregate time of thirty years.

The court in the case of Venable vs. Schafer, 7 C. C. Rep. (n.s.), page 337, has construed said section 7882 and 7881 of the General Code, supra. At the time the court so construed said sections, section 7881 existed as it is at present and section 7882 differed only in the regard as above pointed out. After quoting section 7881 supra, the court says:

> "It is contended that this sentence inserted in the act of 1902, is interpretative and sheds light upon the meaning of the word in the act of 1900. The contrary conclusion would be required by the usual canons of statutory construction. It is apparent that when the legislature meant to give a restricted meaning to the word 'teacher,' it knew perfectly well how to do so, as it expressly did in the act of a year later. When it did not enact the restricted definition, the word should be given its broader significance. The intention of the legislature in passing the act of 1900 is to be deducted from that which it said. The law does not concern itself with an unexpressed intention or an intention which there has been no effort to express.

"Resolving this question in favor of Professor Venable, we then come to the question, whether or not three-fifths of said period of service was rendered by him in the public schools or high schools of the city of Cincinnati. It appears that he was appointed on June 13, 1889, and served continuously until June, 1900, that for the next succeeding year, 1900-01, he was granted a leave of absence on account of ill health, during which year his son substituted for him, receiving a salary as substitute but contributed nothing toward the pension fund. Did Professor Venable, using the words of the act, render services for twelve years? We think not. The law does not provide for a period upon the teachers' roll of Cincinnati, but for the period of twelve years of actual service."

From the foregoing it would seem to follow that the thirty years required before a teacher can be granted a pension, means thirty years of actual teaching and therefore in direct answer to your question I am of the opinion that the year of leave of absence granted to such teacher could not be counted as service in fixing the amount of pension to be paid such teacher under section 7883, for the reason that such year of absence could not be counted as a year of actual service within the purview of the holding of the court in the case of Venable vs. Schaffer supra.

In answer to your second question as to whether or not the case would be different if leave of absence without pay were granted, without specification of ill health as a reason, I am of the opinion that this would not in any wise affect my views of the matter as above set out and that such fact would not change the same.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TOWNSHIPS MAY NOT JOIN IN CONDEMNING, PURCHASING AND OPERATING STONE QUARRY PROPERTY.

The trustees of a township cannot join other townships in the county in condemning, purchasing and operating certain stone quarry property under the provisions of sections 3282-1 to 3282-3, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1914.

HON. CLARK GOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 28th, which reads in part as follows:

"At the last general election the trustees of Ridge township, Van Wert county, Ohio, held an election for the purpose of issuing bonds for $10,000.00, under sections 3282-1, 3282-2 and 3282-3 of the General Code. How the trustees of Ridge township desire to join with other townships in the county in condemning and purchasing and operating certain stone quarries and property that the same is upon for material benefit of all the townships joining.

"This question arises, by the terms of sections 3282 and 3283 of the General Code what is meant by 'two or more adjoining townships?' Does it mean only those townships that lie along side of each other, or can those townships which only touch at corners be considered as adjoining?"

Under date of March 7th, you also inquire:

"In connection with same subject and the same section I very respectfully request your opinion on the following:

"The land upon which is located a stone quarry, that the township trustees of Ridge township are desirous of purchasing, comprises in all 80 acres. Now they desire to know whether or not the sections above referred to are broad enough to allow them to purchase this full 80 acres, either by themselves or in conjunction with the township trustees of adjoining townships, and then dispose of all of the 80 acres except the part desired to be used by them for the stone quarry."

The statutes cited, insofar as they pertain to the question submitted by you, provide:

"Sec. 3282-1. The trustees of a township may levy a tax in such amount, as they determine, to purchase real property, containing suitable stone or gravel, and the necessary machinery for operating the same, when deemed necessary for the construction, improvement, or repair of the public roads within the township, to be under the control of the trustees or a person appointed by them. The question of levying such tax, for such purpose, and the amount asked therefor shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the township at a general election. Twenty days' notice thereof shall be previously given by posting in at least ten public places in the township. Such notice shall state specifically the amount to be raised. If a majority of all votes cast at such election are in favor of the proposition, the tax therein provided for shall be considered authorized.

"Sec. 3282-3. When such tax has been voted in a township, the trustees thereof, in anticipation of such tax may issue the township bonds, of the aggregate amount not to exceed the tax voted, in denominations of not less than one hundred dollars, bearing interest at the rate not exceeding five per cent. and payable not later than ten years from date. Such bonds shall not be sold below par, and the proceeds shall be used solely for the purchase of such real estate and the necessary machinery for operating the same. Such bonds shall be signed by the trustees, countersigned by the township clerk, and repaid from the tax when collected. * * *

"Sec. 3282. The trustees may purchase suitable stone or gravel, when deemed necessary for the improvement of the public roads within the township. For the purpose of paying the purchase price thereof they may levy and assess upon the taxable property of the township, such rate of taxation as will raise any sum not exceeding one hundred dollars in any one year. The trustees of two or more adjoining townships may jointly purchase such stone and gravel, or may obtain it by condemnation, as provided in the next section.

"Sec. 3283. When the trustees are unable to purchase of, or contract upon fair and equitable terms with, the owner of a gravel bank, gravel bed, other deposit of gravel, or of any stone, timber, or other material, in the judgment of the trustees necessary for the construction or repair of any road, improved road or highway within the township, or in case the owner refuses to sell or contract with the trustees, for the sale of such material, upon the trustees agreeing to allow a just and reasonable compensation therefor, they may condemn for public use such material, in such quantities as, in their judgment, the public needs require, allowing the owner therefor a just and equitable compensation. Such authority to contract, sell, agree and condemn shall extend to all townships within the county in which such trustees are elected or appointed in pursuance of law, or within any township of any adjoining county."

It will be noted that sections 3282-1 and 3282-3 authorize township trustees, upon the approval of the electors of the township at a general election—the form of ballot to be used at such election being prescribed by section 3282-2—to levy a tax in such amount as the trustees may determine, to purchase real property containing suitable stone or gravel, and to issue bonds in anticipation of such tax, while sections 3282 and 3283 provide for the purchase or condemnation by the trustees of a township or the trustees of two or more adjoining townships, of stone or gravel to be used for the improvement of roads, and authorize the levying of a tax for such purpose at such rate as will produce not to exceed one hundred dollars ($100.00) annually.

It seems clear to me that when a tax has been voted in a township, and the trustees have sold bonds in anticipation thereof, for the purchase of land containing stone with which to construct, improve or repair the roads of the township, under sections 3282-1 to 3282-3, the trustees of such township cannot combine with trustees of any other township for such purpose. While the use of the word "next" in the last sentence of section 3282 would seem to indicate an intention to permit adjoining townships to levy a tax and issue bonds to purchase land containing stone, it will be seen, upon careful investigation, that such is not the case. Section 3282 and section 3283 were passed long before sections 3282-1, 3282-2 and 3282-3, and have not been amended since the enactment of the latter.

The "next" section referred to in section 3282 is 3283 and not 3282-1. Sections 3282 and 3283 must be read together, and sections 3282-1 to 3282-2 must be read together.

Therefore, the power granted two or more adjoining townships, under section 3282, to purchase or condemn stone, cannot be extended so as to permit such townships, under sections 3282-1 to 3282-3 to levy a tax and issue bonds for the purchase of land containing stone.

If, therefore, Ridge township has authorized the levy of a tax, and bonds have been issued in anticipation thereof, the funds raised thereby cannot be used in conjunction with the funds of adjoining townships to purchase land containing a stone quarry or to purchase machinery to operate the same. Such funds must be used by the trustees of Ridge township alone. The conclusion I have reached renders an answer to your first question unnecessary.

While sections 3282-1, et seq., authorize township trustees to purchase land containing suitable stone, etc, they do not authorize the trustees, either by themselves or in conjunction with the trustees of any adjoining township or townships, to purchase a larger amount of land than is necessary for this purpose, and dispose of the remainder.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 5, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 25, 1914, you submit the following questions for opinion thereon:

> "First. Is it a legal use of municipal funds to be expended in the payment of services of an attorney, employed by the city council, in contesting the constitutionality of the flood conservancy act?
>
> "Second. Must such employment be made through the city solicitor, and may council also provide for an attorney to uphold the constitutionality of said law?
> "Third. Must the contract of employment of said special counsel be certified to by the city auditor?"

In answer to your first question will say, municipal corporations in their public capacity, possess such powers and such only as are expressly granted by statute, and such as may be implied as essential to carry into effect those which are expressly granted. (See case of Ravenna vs. Penn. Co., 45 O. S., 118.)

The general powers of a municipal corporation are found in sections 3615 to 3676 of the General Code, and none of these sections authorize the employment of special counsel for a city by the city council.

The special powers of a municipal corporation are found in section 3677 as amended May 3, 1913, 103 O. L., 496, and said section contains fourteen subdivisions and none of these subdivisions authorize the employment of special counsel by a city council, expressly or by implication.

The next question would be, does the new constitution which was adopted September 3, 1913, enlarge the powers of municipal corporations?

There is no question but what the new constitution enlarges the powers of municipal corporations in many respects, but I find no provision of the new constitution which enlarges the power of council with respect to the employment of special counsel, unless it would be section 3 of article XVIII of the new constitution. That section is as follows:

> "Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its own government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government."

Under these provisions municipal corporations have the power of self-government and may provide in a charter to be adopted by the people of the municipality the right to employ special counsel regardless of statutory powers heretofore enumerated. If such power is provided for in the new charter, council or a similar governing body would have the right to exercise the power of employing counsel without regard to the decisions of the court heretofore rendered. But before such authority could be exercised, there would have to be a provision in the charter adopted by the municipality and where there is such power expressly exercised or set forth in the charter, it would then govern in respect to the powers of employing special counsel. Otherwise council would be governed by the powers now delegated to them by statute.

Section 4211 of the General Code seems to prohibit the city council from appointing employes of a city. Said section reads as follows:

> "The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no adiminstrative duties whatever, and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matter to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made council shall have no further action thereon."

In view of the statutes and decisions council has no authority to employ special counsel unless such authority is contained in the new charter adopted by each municipality under the new constitution.

Answering your second question would say the latter part of this question, viz., "may council also provide legal counsel to uphold the constitutionality of said law," would have to be answered in the same way as the first question, that is, council has no authority to employ special counsel unless provision is made by a new charter. But the first part of the second question would be, "can council authorize a city solicitor to employ special counsel to assist him in contesting the validity of the conservancy act (house bill No. 19, as amended, house bill No. 38).

In answer to this branch of the question would say the city solicitor, by virtue of section 4305, General Code, is made the legal adviser of all the officers of the city, including members of council in their official capacity. If he should advise council it would be for the best interests of the city to ascertain whether or not the conservancy act is constitutional and that it would be necessary for him to have assistance to present the matter to the courts of Ohio, council could authorize by resolution that the city solicitor contest this legislation through the courts in order to ascertain whether or not such legislation would be a valid enactment, and by virtue of sections 4306 and 4307, as amended May 5, 1911 (vol. 102, p. 131 O. L.) there would be implied authority at least, if not express authority in council to authorize, by ordinance, the solicitor to employ special or assisting counsel for said purpose. Therefore, would say the employment would have to be made through the city solicitor, unless, as before stated, the new charter made express provision for such employment.

In villages, council, by virtue of section 4220, have authority to employ legal counsel.

In answer to your third question would say, by virtue of section 3806 of the General Code and also by the decision of the supreme court, found in 62 O. S., 80, which requires all such ordinances making provision for such expenses must be certified to by the city auditor.

There still remains the question "can city council through its city solicitor, authorize the employment of a special counsel to uphold the constitutionality of the conservancy act?"

In answering this question, would say it would depend largely on the advice of the city solicitor as to whether or not it would be for the best interest of the city to uphold or contest the validity of the conservancy act. But he could not consistently advise both ways and if he decided that the interests of the city would be best served by contesting the validity of the enactment, in order to be consistent, he would have to pursue this method, and therefore would not be authorized, and the council would not be authorized through him, to employ counsel to uphold the constitutionality of the enactment.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DECLARING AN OFFICE VACANT—FAILURE TO GIVE BOND—NOTICE OF ELECTION.

Section 7 of the General Code has no application in the case of a referendum on a resolution declaring the office of member of public affairs vacant, under section 4242, General Code, nor is the referendum provision applicable to municipalities in the application of such an act of council, under section 4242, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 5, 1914.

HON. NEWTON O. MOTT, City Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 13, 1914, you submitted for an opinion the following question:

> "Is a referendum on a resolution declaring the office of member of the board of public affairs vacant under section 4242, General Code, operative, or is the office in question vacant under section 7 of the General Code without a resolution under section 4242, the officer in question failing to give bond within ten days after notice of election?"

Sections 7, 4242 and 4358 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 7. A person elected or appointed to an office who is required by law to give a bond or security previous to the performance of the duties imposed on him by his office, who refuses or neglects to give such bond or furnish such security, within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and in all respects to qualify himself for the performance of such duties, shall be deemed to have refused to accept the office to which he was elected or appointed, and such office shall be considered vacant and be filled as provided by law.

"Section 4242. The council may declare vacant the office of any person elected or appointed to an office who fails to take the required official oath or to give any bond required of him, within ten days after he has been notified of his appointment or election, or obligation to give a new or additional bond, as the case may be.

"Section 4358. When the council, in accordance with the provisions of this chapter, establishes a board of trustees of public affairs, the mayor of the village shall appoint the members thereof, subject to the confirmation of the council. Such appointees shall hold their respective offices until their successors have been elected according to law and such successors shall be elected at the next regular election of municipal officers held in such village."

Your question involves first a construction of the first two statutes above set out, and it is necessary to determine which of these two statutes are to be allowed to govern, if both are not to be permitted operation.

Section 7 applies to persons elected or appointed to an office, who are required by law to give a bond or security as a condition precedent to the performance of the duties of the office. Members of the board of trustees of public affairs are required to give bond by authority of council under section 4219, General Code, and the question presented, therefore, is whether or not a bond required by council is a bond which is required by law, within the meaning of section 7 of the General Code, above quoted.

"The terms 'by-laws,' 'ordinances,' and 'municipal regulations' have substantially the same meaning and are defined to be 'the laws of the corporate district, made by the authorized body, in distinction from the general law of the state.' They are local regulations for the government of the inhabitants of the particular place.

"They are not laws in the legal sense, though binding on the community affected; they are not prescribed by the supreme power of the state, from which alone a law can emanate, and therefore, cannot be statutes which are the written will of the legislature, expressed in the form necessary to constitute parts of the law."

(Rutherford vs. Swink, 96 Tenn., 564.)

"An ordinance is not in the constitutional sense a public law. It is a mere local rule, or by-law, a police or domestic regulation, devoid in many respects of the characteristics of public or general laws."

(State vs. Fourcade, 45 La. Ann., 717.)
(McInerney vs. City of Denver, 17 Colo., 302.)

"An ordinance is not a public or a general law, but a local rule or a by-law. * * *"

(City of Greeley vs. Hamman, 12 Colo., 94.)

In view of these decisions I am of the opinion that section 7 applies only to such officers as are required to give bond by virtue of a state law, to wit: an enactment of the legislature—and that such section has no application to persons who are required to give a bond by act of a municipal legislative board. Such section, therefore, does not have application to the case at hand, and section 4242, General Code, must be allowed to control.

The part of your question remaining to be considered, therefore, is whether when council declares vacant the office in question, such action is subject to the referendum provisions provided in 103 O. L., page 211.

It will not be contended that initiative and referendum provisions are intended to have application to other than legislative acts, section 1f of article II of the constitution reserving the powers of initiative and referendum to municipalities only with respect to all questions which such municipalities "may now or hereafter be authorized to control by legislative action."

Referendum act, 103 O. L., page 211, section 4227-2 of the General Code, extends the referendum provisions of "any ordinance or other measure passed by council."

The term "measure" is defined as follows:

"A specified act or course of procedure designed as a means to an end; an expedient; method; step; specifically a legislative bill; as foolish measures; a party measure. (Standard Dictionary.)

"A determinate action or procedure intended as a means to an end; anything devised or done with a view to the accomplishment of a purpose; specifically, in later use, any course of action proposed or adopted by a government or a bill introduced into the legislature; as measures, (that is, bill or bills) for the relief of the poor. (Century Dictionary, No. 15.)

"Means to an end; viewed as being preparatory steps to the end for which they are to lead; an act, step or proceeding designed for the accomplishment of an object; an extensive signification of the word 'applicable' to almost every act preparatory to a final end, and by which it is to be attained; as legislative measures; political measures; prudent measures. (Webster's Dictionary, No. 9.)"

I am of the opinion that the term "measure," as used in section 4227-2, General Code, is intended to cover only such other legislative acts of council as are not comprehended by the term "ordinance;" thus rules, regulations or resolutions of council may be of a legislative character and yet not necessarily be regarded as ordinances. (See title "legislative" in words and phrases, volume 5.)

The act of declaring an office vacant, like that of appointing an incumbent to an office, is clearly of an executive or administrative character; or it may have in it an element of judicial action. It is clear, however, that such action cannot be in any sense regarded as legislative in its nature. The nature of the act and the necessities of the case require peremptory action such as could not reasonably or consistently be subjected to the delay incident to referendum procedure.

In section 4227-5, General Code, wherein the legislature withdraws the provisions of the act from application to cities, which, by a charter, have provided referendum provisions "for their own ordinances or other legislative measures," it is made clear that the act is not intended to apply to other than legislative measures, since this statute is most manifestly not intended in any way to amplify or restrict the scope of the meaning of section 4227-2. In other words, in the later expression, the legislature most manifestly means the same as it does in the former expression of the ground covered by the referendum provisions.

Stating my conclusion succinctly, therefore, I am of the opinion that section 7 has no application to the case at hand, and that the referendum provisions, applicable to municipalities, have no application whatever to an action of council, under section 4242, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—BOND SALE—ROAD IMPROVEMENT—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES.

Township trustees have no authority to pay to a village out of funds received from a bond sale for road improvement, a sum equal to the amount the township would have been required to pay had it undertaken to improve the street, as it had the right to do, under sections 5976-7018, General Code. The only authority they would have would be to improve said streets themselves.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 5, 1914.

HON. W. J. SCHWENCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 8th, wherein you state:

> "Some twenty years ago the village of New Washington, Cranberry township, this county, improved some of its streets by macadamizing same, and paid for said improvement out of the general revenue of the village. About fourteen years ago, the township including the village of New Washington, voted under what is now sections 6976 to 7018 of the General Code, which carried, and under that authority a good portion of the main roads of the township have been improved by macadamizing as provided by the above sections, and the bonds issued to pay said improvements have been paid by a tax levied on all the real and personal property of the township including all the property of the village.
> "The streets improved by the village prior to the vote under section 6978, et seq., are streets that connect with roads running through the township that have since been improved by the authorities of the township under said sections above mentioned; and are also streets that could have been improved by the township trustees under the law above referred to, had the village not improved them before.
> "The village now desires to pave the streets by it formerly improved, and the question now is, can the trustees legally pay to the village out of a fund received from a sale of bonds for road improvement, a sum equal to the amount the township would have been required to pay, had it originally macadamized those streets?
> "If the foregoing is answered in the affirmative, how could this be done? Would a resolution reciting the facts and appropriating so much, and ordering it paid to the treasurer of the village be the proper way, and would this protect the township officers?"

Sections 6976 to 7018, General Code, provides a method for the improvement of roads within a township by general taxation upon a vote of the people.

As is well known, township trustees are officers of limited jurisdiction and have only such powers as are conferred upon them by statute. All power is expressly granted to the trustees under these statutes to improve streets within a city or village in the township and there is no doubt of their right to expend the money raised by taxation or the sale of bonds for this purpose.

As the statutes do not authorize it to be done, I am of the opinion that the trustees of Cranberry township may not turn over any part of the funds raised by virtue of section 6976 to 7018 to the village of New Washington for the purpose of paving the streets thereof.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE RIGHT OF TRUSTEES AND SUPERINTENDENTS OF CHILDREN'S HOMES TO PLACE CHILDREN UNDER THEIR CARE WITH PRIVATE FAMILIES.

The trustees and superintendents of children's homes have authority to place children under their care in private families either temporarily or permanently without the consent of the living parent or parents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 5, 1914.

HON. WESLEY S. THURSTIN, JR., City Solicitor, Toledo, hOio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 25, 1914, as follows:

> "The question has arisen in my department relative to the authority of trustees and superintendents of children's homes to place children in private families either temporarily or permanently, without the consent of the living parent or parents."

Sections 3093 and 3096 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., read in part:

> "(3093) All inmates of such home who by reason of abandonment, neglect, or dependence have been admitted, or who have been by the parent or guardian voluntarily surrendered to the trustees, shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home, until they are eighteen years of age, and if such child is placed out or adopted, such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age.
> "(3096) The trustees shall require an agreement in a form to be prescribed by the board of state charities, in writing to be entered into, that such child so placed out shall be furnished with good and sufficient food, clothing and a public school education, and if deemed by the trustees to the interest of the child that such provisions be made, that there shall be payment to it of a reasonable amount to be named in the agreement, to be paid in such amounts and times as may be specified. Children may be placed in homes on trial without any written agreement. For the purpose of securing the well-being and progress of such children, and the enforcement of the agreement, the trustees shall have the control and guardianship of such children until they become of age."

Section 3095 of the General Code, reads in part:

"The trustees shall seek homes in private families for all children eligible to be placed out, but before allowing a child to leave the home, they shall cause the proposed foster home to be carefully investigated and satisfy themselves that such persons are suitable to have the care and bringing up of the child."

From a reading of these sections, it is clear that the inmates of the children's home are under "the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees" during their stay in such home, until they are 18 years of age; that the trustees have authority to place the children in private homes and that when so placed the guardianship and control of said children continues to be vested in the trustees until they (the children) are of lawful age.

Under section 3095 it is the duty of the trustees to secure proper homes for the children, and when after a careful investigation they deem it for the best interest of a child to place it in a certain private home, I know of nothing that can hinder them. The law gives them the absolute control and guardianship of the child, and this is sufficient authority to support their action.

It is therefore my opinion that the trustees of children's homes may place children in private families, either temporarily or permanently, without the consent of the living parent or parents.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES—FEE FOR RENEWAL OF LICENSE MUST BE PAID ANNUALLY.

The omission of the words "per annum" in section 886 of the General Code is a mistake and these words must be read into this section and the amounts prescribed in that statute must be paid annually for the renewal of licenses by employment agencies operating in cities and villages of the population respectively enumerated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, HON. M. B. HAMMOND, Commissioner in Charge of Employment Agencies, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of April 24th, you request my opinion as follows:

"Under section 886 of the General Code of Ohio, persons, firms or corporations desiring to open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, in which fees are charged to applicants for employment or applicants for help, are required to obtain a license from the commissioner of labor statistics (now the industrial commission of Ohio) and pay a fee according to the population of the municipality.

"The section as now worded does not state that this license is to be secured annually but it does state that 'the commissioner may refuse to issue or renew a license to an applicant if, in his judgment, such applicant has violated the law,' etc. May I ask you to render an opinion as to whether the commission is warranted in interpreting this section of the act so as to require a private employment agency to renew its license annually and pay the fee stipulated by law? Such has been the custom and is now the practice of the commission. Three agencies, however, have failed to renew their licenses, and, as I understand, the managers claim that under the statute they are not obliged to pay any fee other than that demanded at the time the original license was issued."

Section 886 of the General Code is as follows:

"No person, firm or corporation shall open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, or in which a fee is charged an applicant for employment or an applicant for help, without obtaining a license from the commissioner of labor statistics, and paying to him a fee according to the population of the municipality as shown by the last preceding federal census, viz.:

In cities of 50,000 and upward	$100 00
In cities of 16,000 to 50,000	75 00
In cities of less than 16,000	50 00
In villages	25 00

"The commissioner may refuse to issue or renew a license to an applicant if, in his judgment, such applicant has violated the law relating to private employment agencies, or is not of good moral character."

This statute as first enacted appears in 97 O. L., p. 485:

AN ACT.

To license and regulate private employment agencies within the state of Ohio.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"Section 1. (That) no person, firm or corporation in this state shall open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, or where a fee is charged to either applicant for employment or for help without first obtaining a license for the same from the state commissioner of labor statistics. Such license fee in cities shall not be less than fifty dollars ($50.00) nor more than one hundred dollars ($100.00) per annum. In villages not less than ten dollars ($10.00) nor more than twenty-five dollars ($25.00) per annum. * * *"

It will be seen that the codifying commission made a change in the statute so as to classify the cities and villages as to population and respective amounts to be paid for a license. In making such change however the codifying commission omitted the words "per annum," which appeared in the act as originally enacted. That this omission was the result of a mistake purely and simply is manifested beyond all doubt by reason of the fact that the statute as formulated by the codifying commission still contains a reference to renewal of licenses. The right to correct a palpable mistake in a statute by resorting to legitimate rules of construction for the purpose of uncovering the actual legislative intent is fundamental.

Sections 410-413, Sutherland on Statutory Construction.

Furthermore, the right to resort to original acts in case of revisions and modifications for the purpose of correcting mistakes and clearing up ambiguities is equally well settled.

Sections 450-451-452, Sutherland on Statutory Construction:

> "Under well settled rules of construction 'where the general statutes of the state are revised and consolidated, there is a strong presumption that the same construction which the statute had before revision should be applied to the enactment in the revised form, although the language may have been changed.' In such case the court is only warranted in holding the construction to be changed when the intent of the legislature to make such change is clear and manifest."

Insurance Co. vs. McBee et al., 85 O. S. 161, at p. 1, citing, State ex rel vs. Commissioners 36 O. S., 326; Heck vs. State, 44 O. S., 536; State ex rel. vs. Stockley 45 O. S., 308.

The mistake of the codifying commission in the omission of the words "per annum" is manifest. I am, therefore, of the opinion that these words must be read into section 886 of the General Code, and that the amounts prescribed in that statute must be paid annually for the renewal of licenses by employment agencies operating in the cities and villages of the populations respectively enumerated.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER HOUSE BILL NO. 33, AMENDING SECTION 30, THE BALANCE OF THE FINES AND PENALTIES IS TO BE PAID MONTHLY TO THE TREASURER OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Under a mandatory act passed at the special session of the general assembly fifteen per cent. of all fines and penalties assessed and collected in the Cincinnati municipal court is payable to the Hamilton county law library association.

Also the balance over and above the amount equal to that paid to the judges, clerks and prosecuting attorneys, no matter how much in excess of fifteen per cent. should be paid to the library association.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 31st, you asked my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1st. Under the amendatory act passed at the special session, what part of the fines and penalties assessed and collected in the Cincinnati municipal court is payable to the Hamilton county law library association?

"2nd. To whom is the amount equivalent to the salaries of judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of the Cincinnati municipal court to be paid?"

1. House bill No. 33, amending section 30, 103 O. L., 279, reads as follows:

"Section 30. The clerk of the municipal court shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits and to issue executions upon any judgment rendered in the municipal court, including a judgment for unpaid costs; he shall have power to issue and sign all writs, process and papers issuing out of the court, and to attach the seal of the court thereto; shall have power to approve all bonds, recognizances and undertakings fixed by any judge of the court or by law; shall file and safely keep all journals, records, books and papers belonging or appertaining to the court, record its proceedings and perform all other duties which the judges of the court shall prescribe, and all other duties heretofore enjoined upon the clerk of the police court by section 3056 of the General Code. He shall pay over to the proper parties all moneys received by him as clerk; he shall receive and collect all costs, fines and penalties; and shall pay all costs and subject to the provisions of section 3056 of the General Code, the balance of such fines and penalties monthly to the treasurer of the city of Cincinnati and take his receipt therefor, but money deposited as security for costs shall be retained by him pending the litigation; he shall keep a book showing all receipts and disbursements, which shall be open for public inspection at all times; and shall on the first Monday of each term of court make to the city auditor a report of all receipts and disbursements for the preceding term. He shall succeed to all and shall have all the powers and perform all the duties of police clerks, and as to the selection of the deputy clerks, he shall have the power to appoint a chief deputy and such number of other deputies and assistants as shall be designated from time to time by the council of the city of Cincinnati as hereinafter provided."

The above section evidently was intended to give to the Hamilton county law library association the same portion of the fines and penalties assessed in the municipal court as the law library associations in other counties receive under virtue of Code section 3056, which reads as follows:

"Section 3056. All fines and penalties assessed and collected by the police court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, except a portion thereof equal to the compensation allowed by the county commissioners to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of such court in state cases shall be retained by the clerk and be paid by him quarterly to the trustees of such law library associations, but the sum so retained and paid by the clerk of said police court to the trustees of such law library association shall in no quarter be less than 15 per cent. of the fines and penalties collected in that quarter without deducting the amount of the allowances of the county commissioners to said judges, clerk and prosecutor. In all counties the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas court and probate court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, shall be retained and paid quarterly by the clerk of such courts to the trustees of such library association, but the sum so paid from the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas and probate courts shall not exceed five hundred per annum. The moneys so paid shall be expended in the purchase of law books and the maintenance of such association."

The effect of the amendment to section 30, then, is that not less than 15 per cent. of all fines and penalties should be paid to the library association, with the further provision that in the event the amount paid to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney of said court did not equal the total amount of fines and penalties collected, then the balance over and above an amount equal to that paid to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney, no matter how much in excess of 15 per cent., should be paid to the library association.

As an illustration, should the amount of fines and penalties for one month amount to five hundred dollars, and the amount payable to the judges, clerk and prosecuting attorney be one thousand dollars, then the library association would receive seventy-five dollars, or 15 per cent., and there would be turned over to the city treasurer for the salaries of said officers the balance, or four hundred and twenty-five dollars.

Again, should the amount of salaries of said officials be one thousand dollars, and the total of fines and penalties be two thousand dollars, then there should be turned over to the library association the difference between said amounts, or one thousand dollars.

2. Under house bill No. 33 amending section 30, the balance of the fines and penalties is to be paid monthly to the treasurer of the city of Cincinnati. The fact that Code section 3056 has been by reference incorporated in said section 30 does not require that in the city of Cincinnati the balance should be paid to the county treasurer as in other counties.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PUBLICATION OF LEGAL NOTICE—WHERE SUCH LEGAL NOTICE MAY BE PUBLISHED—RATE TO BE PAID FOR PUBLICATION OF SUCH NOTICE.

Where there is one paper published in a municipality and this paper refuses to publish legal notices, unless it receives the maximum rate therefor, if upon the tender of the usual price for the publication of similar notices in such paper, said paper refuses to publish such notices, publication may lawfully be made in a newspaper of general circulation in a city under section 4676, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 11, 1914.

HON. AMOS C. RUFF, City Solicitor, Canal Dover, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 7, 1914, you inquire:

"Where there is only one paper published in a municipality, and that paper insists in charging the highest maximum legal rate, which rate is from two to three times higher than its regular commercial rate, what remedy, if any, has that municipality?"

This question might be answered without going into a discussion of the laws generally applicable to publication of ordinances and the like in municipalities, but so many questions are being presented that it is thought best to deal in detail with the matter at this time.

In an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, dated October 11, 1911, and found on page 314 of attorney general's report 1911-1912, I called attention to the fact, that section 1536-621, now section 4227, General Code, prior to the revision contained the following language:

> "Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the corporation, if a daily, twice; if a weekly, once before going into operation."

By the codification the words italicized above were left out and the sentence was made to read:

> "Ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into circulation."

In that opinion I held that in order to prevent a great deal of confusion it was necessary that the words found in section 1536-621, and omitted in the codification should be restored, which authorizes publication of the classes named to be published in a newspaper of general circulation, once if a weekly and twice if a daily, thus doing away with the difficulty arising from the fact that no provision is made in the code for the publication of ordinances and the like, where only one newspaper is published in the municipality, which conclusion is not out of harmony with section 4229, G. C., which required publication in two newspapers of opposite politics, "if there are such in the municipality."

The sections of the General Code in reference to publication of ordinances and the like are the following:

Section 4227, which reads:

> "Ordinances, resolutions and by-laws shall be authenticated by the signatures of the presiding officer and clerk of council.
