The situation then affords a perfect example of a condition dealt with by the courts under what is known as the de facto doctrine. The condition may be abstractly described as follows: A certain office exists de jure, being the office of third member of the budget commission; an unconstitutional law fixes the manner of filling the office, and constitutes an amendment to a valid law providing a different manner for filling the same office; prior to the adjudication of unconstitutionality, the person fixed upon by the unconstitutional amendment assumes the duties of his office and without hindrance, acts as such officer.

I refer the commission, generally, to chapter 15 of Constantineau on the de facto doctrine wherein this situation is exhaustively described, and the rule is laid down that one acting under such circumstances possesses all the characteristics of a de facto officer. The Ohio cases of ex parte Strang, 21 O. S. 610, Gitsky vs. Newton, 17 C. C. 484, and Kirker vs. Cincinnati, 48 O. S. 507, which may be examined with profit, are cited by the author in support of his text.

Of course the rule is that the acts of a de facto officer are valid. This principle is founded on the fundamental consideration that the law contemplates that the office, as such, shall function and imparts to acts of the office, so to speak, validity in disregard of the mere official title of one or more incumbents of the office.

The same author has a chapter (26) on the subject of the application of the de facto doctrine to the acts of officials having to do with the assessment, levy and collection of taxes. He states the prevailing rule in the opening section of that chapter, which is section 322, and justifies the statement that he makes by discussing decisions from practically all the states including certain cases from Ohio. He states the prevailing rule to be that there is no distinction between the subject matter of taxes and other matters with respect to the application of the de facto doctrine.

This rule seems to me to be founded in reason, and to have peculiar application to the matter of levying taxes, as distinguished from that of assessing given property or collecting a particular tax. Government cannot exist without the making of tax levies; and if the validity of the tax levy is to depend upon such a consideration as the official title of the persons who make the levy, when such title may depend, in turn, on such facts as failure to take an oath or to give a bond, the ridiculous consequences of departing from the de facto doctrine in such cases, at once appear.

I am of the opinion, therefore, without further discussion, in answer to your first question, that where a given Budget Commission had completed its work, made its official certificate, and adjourned before the decision in state ex rel Pogue vs. Groom, above referred to, its acts must be regarded as, in all respects, valid, notwithstanding the fact that one of its members served as such by reason of an unconstitutional amendment to the law providing for such budget commission.

Indeed, I am not sure that the de facto doctrine need even be involved in such a case. The original Smith law which, under the court's decision is to be regarded as having been the law all the time, provided in section 5649-3b thereof, as to the budget commission, that; "two members shall constitute a quorum."

It is apparent, therefore, that the mayor and the county auditor, if they concurred in the determinations made by the budget commission, would have constituted a sufficient commission, and their concurrent action would have been the action of the commission under the Smith law regardless of the participation of the city solicitor or president or member of the board of education, and regardless, also, of the non-participation of the prosecuting attorney.

For both reasons, then, I am clearly of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that tax levies certified to the county auditor, under the circumstances mentioned by you, are, in all respects, valid.

Your second question is more difficult of solution. Section 5649-3c, General Code, which was not involved in the case under discussion, provides in part that:

> "When the budget commissioners have completed their work they shall certify their action to the county auditor, who shall ascertain the rate of taxes necessary to be levied upon the taxable property therein of such * * * * taxing district, returned on the grand duplicate, and place it on the tax list of the county.

This statute is plain and unambiguous. The budget commission is not to fix rates, but amounts. Of course, in fixing amounts the budget commission must ascertain rates because it is the duty of the budget commission to enforce certain rate limitations. The purpose of having the budget commission determine the amounts instead of the rates is clear, when other provisions of the Smith law are taken into consideration. In all probability the amount of the duplicate in a given year will not be finally and absolutely fixed until after the time when the budget commission is supposed to complete its work. Therefore, a rate fixed by the budget commission might not produce the amount approved by the commission. In other words, the auditor is to figure such a rate as will produce the amount which the budget commission certifies.

So, if the tax commission, as you state in your second question, has before it tables showing tax rates which purport to have been determined by the budget commissions, as such, it is clear that this fact affords no criterion to what has actually been done. What the commission has is undoubtedly estimates made by the county auditor based upon the work of the budget commission. This point, however, is not so very material to the question at hand, and I mention it only in passing.

Section 5649-3b of the original Smith law (as well as the amended section which is not different in that respect), provides that:

> "The auditor shall be the secretary of the budget commissioners and shall keep a full and accurate record of their proceedings."

Section 5649-3c, already quoted, provides, in addition to what has already been mentioned, as follows:

> "The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purposes. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law."

I call attention to the following facts:

(1) The budget commission is to revise the levies in the several taxing districts.

(2) It is to keep a record of its proceedings.

(3) Its certificate to the county auditor is to be made when the budget commission has completed its work.

Considering all these factors together I have arrived at the conclusion that the budget commission does not perform a single function, so that nothing is complete, in the legal sense, until the certificate has been made for all; but that there are different steps and processes in the work so that it is possible for final action to be taken on a given levy, for example, and a record of such a proceeding made before the final certificate is issued.

Therefore, in a given case if, prior to September 15th the budget commission had fixed the county levy, finally, such act would stand as a valid act of the budget commission. When the prosecuting attorney supplants the other third member of the commission, acting under the Kilpatrick law, the commission may, of course, reconsider any action by it taken prior to its certification and adjournment, and the prosecuting attorney is entitled to participate in such reconsideration. This consideration might go to the full extent of the commission's powers. That is to say when the prosecuting attorney takes his seat on the board he may, in conjunction with another member of the board, secure a reconsideration of all that has been done, if such two members are so disposed. But unless there is such a reconsideration I would be of the opinion that such levies as had been finally fixed prior to the prosecuting attorney's entrance into the board would stand as valid actions of the budget commission and could be certified as such to the county auditor.

Answering the various branches of your second question, specifically, then, I am of the opinion that the fact that the tax commission has a supposed table of tax rates or certificate respecting the work of the budget commission is not conclusive either way as to whether or not the work of the budget commission is so complete that the prosecuting attorney cannot, by securing reconsideration or otherwise, have any practical participation therein. If prior to the sending of the certificate to the commission the budget commission has made its certificate, under section 5649-3c, to the county auditor, and has adjourned, then if the tax commission finds no flaw in the levies, the prosecuting attorney can have nothing whatever to do with the work of the budget commission for this year. If, however, under such circumstances, the commission finds that excessive levies have been approved by the budget commission then, in my opinion, the certificate and adjournment of the budget commission have been premature and the commission has not "completed its work" within the meaning of section 5649-3c, for the reason that it has not discharged the positive duty cast upon it by that section. Under such circumstances the budget commission would have to reconvene for the purpose of correcting such levies as are shown to be excessive. When reconvened for that purpose the budget commission might unquestionably reconsider any other action that it had theretofore taken, but unless such other action were reconsidered, the work already done would stand as final.

If, on the other hand, the county auditor's certificate to the tax commission represents merely tentative figures adopted by the budget commission, and no certificate to the county auditor, under section 5649-3c, has been made, then, of course, the prosecuting attorney would be entitled to participate in such proceedings of the commission as might necessarily intervene before adjournment of the budget commission, even though all the levies, as tentatively determined upon, were approved by the tax commission. He could, therefore, whether the tax commission approved the tentative figures of the budget commission or not, insist upon a reconsideration, if another member of the budget commission should join with him; and under such reconsideration could assert his right to participate in the fixing of all the amounts to be levied. But without such a reconsideration the action of the budget commission, insofar as it was final, preceding the certificate, would stand as such without his participation, and he would be entitled to sign the certificate to the county auditor as to work done by the budget commission prior to his assumption of membership therein.

I have tried to cover, in the above somewhat hastily prepared opinion, the various situations which you have in mind. I trust that no difficulty will be encountered by the commission and the local taxing officers in adjusting circumstances to the recent decision of the supreme court.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF MAYOR OF A CITY HAVING NO POLICE FORCE TO ISSUE A WARRANT IN A STATE CASE, DIRECTED TO THE SHERIFF OF A COUNTY—RIGHT OF THE SHERIFF, CALLED ON BY CHIEF OF POLICE TO ASSIST IN MAKING AN ARREST, TO A FEE—COMPENSATION OF ASSISTANTS USED BY CHIEF OF POLICE—AUTOMOBILE HIRE—POLICEMEN MAY RETAIN FEES RECEIVED IN STATE CASES.

The mayor of a city having no police force cannot legally issue a warrant in a state case directed to the sheriff of the county, for the reason that section 13500, General Code, makes special provision for a warrant issued by an officer of a municipal corporation. The same rule applies to an ordinance case.

If the chief of police called on the sheriff to assist in making an arrest in a state case the sheriff is not entitled to an assistant's fee, if the arrest was on view of the person violating such law. If not on view, the sheriff goes in his private capacity as assistant only, and would, therefore, be entitled to receive and retain the fee allowed for an assistant. The same rule applies as to ordinance cases.

If three assistants are used by the chief of police in the arrest of six people at the same time, the total amount of assistants' fees, to-wit: $4.50, must be divided among the defendants whose arrest made the employment of such assistants necessary.

If $6.00 was paid for the use of an automobile to bring into court said six persons arrested at the same time and place and for the same offense, the mayor cannot legally allow $6.00 in each case for transportation of prisoners, but is restricted to an allowance of such expenses only as are actually incurred, and because of such transportation, the amount should be divided among the six cases.

If $36.00 was collected of said six defendants, but only $6.00 disbursed for such transportation, recovery cannot be made by other than the party who paid the money.

The amount to be allowed for transportation of persons is one that rests within the discretion of magistrates, and it is not necessary that the chief of police or marshal use the cheapest, practical method of transportation, if the magistrate deems other method of transportation proper.

Policemen, which likewise include chief of police, are permitted to retain fees received for service in state cases. The rule is otherwise relative to ordinance cases by reason of section 4213, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 15th, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"First.—May the mayor of a city having no police court legally issue his warrant in a state case directed to the sheriff of the county? If said sheriff is required by law to serve said writ, would he be required to account to the sheriff's fee fund for the fees received for such service?

"Second.—May the mayor of a city having no police court legally issue his warrant in an ordinance case directed to the sheriff of the county, and if said sheriff is required by law to serve same, shall he account to the sheriff's fee fund for the fees received for such service?

"Third—If the chief of police calls on the sheriff to assist in making an arrest in a state case, is he entitled to an assistant's fee and must it be accounted for to the sheriff's fee fund if received?

"Fourth—If the chief of police calls on the sheriff to assist in making an arrest in an ordinance case, is he entitled to an assistant's fee and must it be accounted for to the sheriff's fee fund if received?

"Fifth—If three assistants are used by a chief of police in arresting six people at the same time, may $4.50 ($1.50 for each assistant) as assistants' fees be legally taxed against each defendant in case of conviction?

"Sixth—If $6.00 was paid for the use of an automobile to bring into court said six persons, arrested at the same time and place, and for the same offense, may the mayor legally allow $6.00 in each case for 'transportation of prisoners?'

"Seventh—If $36.00 was collected of said six defendants but only six dollars disbursed for such transportation, can finding for recovery be enforced against the parties receiving and retaining said moneys?

"Eighth—Is a chief of police, or marshal, required to utilize the cheapest practical method of transportation in conveying a prisoner from the place of arrest to the magistrate, or may he legally be allowed for a swifter and more expensive (automobile) method of transportation? If allowed by the magistrate, in the absence of a gross abuse of discretion on the part of said magistrate in fixing the amount, can recovery be made by defendant who has been assessed and paid for same?

"Ninth—If the city ordinances specifically permit all policemen to retain their fees (fixed same as constables') will that include the chief and permit policemen to tax costs in state and ordinance cases and retain same for their own use when collected of defendants?"

With respect to your first question, the following sections of the General Code have bearing:

"Section 13496. When an affidavit charging a person with the commission of an offense is filed with a justice of the peace, mayor or police judge, if he has reasonable ground to believe that the offense charged has been committed, he shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused.

"Section 13500. The warrant shall be directed to the sheriff or to any constable of the county, or, when it is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, to the marshal or other police officer thereof and, by a copy of the affidavit inserted therein or annexed and referred to, shall show or recite the substance of the accusation and command such officer forthwith to take the accused and bring him before the magistrate or court issuing such warrant, or other magistrate of the county having cognizance of the case, to be dealt with according to law."

Section 13500 makes special and, therefore, exceptional provision for an officer of the municipal corporation by directing a warrant issued by such to be directed to the marshal or other police officer of such municipal corporation. This provision is in keeping with the general plan of the statutes, to confine, as far as possible, the administration of such corporation. I am, therefore, of the opinion that a mayor is without authority to issue a warrant, in a state case, to the sheriff. If a sheriff has performed such services therefor, he is not legally entitled to any fee therefor.

Second Question. The answer to your second question follows from the argument applicable to the first question a fortiori. There is no authority, whatever, for the issuance of a warrant by a mayor to a sheriff in an ordinance case, and there is, nowhere, any provision for a fee for the performance of such a service.

Third Question. There is no statutory authority allowing any fee, whatever, to the sheriff, as such officer, for assisting another officer in making an arrest. A chief of police, however, is entitled, under section 4534 of the General Code, to the same fees as are allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases, when such chief of police is acting for the mayor's court. This, by reference to section 3347 of the General Code pertaining to constables' fees, would entitle the chief of police to $1.50 per day for an assistant in making an arrest in a state case.

In this connection, section 13492, General Code, is of interest. This statute is as follows:

> "A sheriff, deputy sheriff, constable, marshal, deputy marshal, watchman or police officer, shall arrest and detain a person found violating a law of this state, or an ordinance of a city or village, until a warrant can be obtained."

It being the duty of a sheriff, officially, to arrest anyone found violating a law of the state, it follows, since the greater includes the less, as a necessary consequence, that it is the duty of the sheriff to assist any officer in making an arrest, on view of the perpetrated act, when such sheriff is present at the time. In brief, if a sheriff is obliged to make the arrest in such instance, when acting merely as an assistant, he is performing the same substantial duty, only in a less degree. I see no reason why, when the sheriff acts as such assistant, he should be excluded from receiving the fee prescribed for acting as an assistant, from the chief of police. It is fundamental that an officer may not receive compensation in excess of his prescribed salary, for an act clearly within the scope of his duties. I am, therefore, of the opinion, that the sheriff in such case would not be entitled to retain, as his own, the fee prescribed for acting as such assistant.

Section 2977 of the General Code requires all fees received by law, as compensation, for services by a sheriff, to be paid into the fee fund. Since such a fee would be received by the sheriff for compensation for a service enjoined upon him by law, I am of the opinion that in such instance, he should be required to pay such fee into the fee fund.

However, I find no authority in the statutes, anywhere, requiring a sheriff to respond to the call of a chief of police, when serving a warrant in a state case. There is no official duty resting upon the sheriff, to act as assistant to a chief of police, when making an arrest not committed within the actual view of the sheriff. When a sheriff, therefore, is called upon to act as an assistant to a chief of police in such case, he is responding, merely, to an obligation resting upon him as a private individual. In such a case, I am of the opinion that he would be entitled to receive and retain the fee allowed for an assistant.

Fourth Question. The same argument applies, in this connection, as I have presented in answer to your third question, section 13492 having equal application to ordinance cases as well as state cases. My answer to your fourth question is, therefore, the same as my answer to your third question, to wit, the sheriff is required to pay into his fee fund, the fee received for acting as assistant in a case of violation on actual view, but entitled to retain the fee when acting as an assistant in a case of violation which was not committed in his presence. The fees received for this service, however, must of course be prescribed by ordinance.

Fifth Question. A chief of police, by virtue of sections 4534 and 3347, above referred to, is entitled to $1.50 per day for each assistant used. By no mode of construction, therefore, in the case presented by you, could a chief of police be allowed more than $1.50 for each of the three assistants, and costs, in excess of this amount, in behalf of the chief of police, would be illegal. Each defendant, therefore, should be taxed that portion of the actual costs assessed, as may be proportionally attributed to him. In other words, the total amount assessed for assistants' fees, to wit, $4.50 must be divided among the defendants whose arrest made the employment of such assistants necessary. I have so stated, in an opinion on similar facts, rendered to the village solicitor of Lisbon, Ohio, under date of October 6, 1911, which opinion appears on page 375 of the annual report of the attorney general, for the year 1911. I am assuming, in answering this question, that each of the defendants was separately tried.

Sixth Question. The authorization of law for allowance by a mayor, of cost of transportation of defendants, by reference of section 4534 to section 3347 of the General Code, is as follows:

> "Section 3347. * * * Transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate. * *."

By this authorization, the magistrate is manifestly restricted to the allowance of such expense only as is actually incurred in transportation, it being left to his judgment to allow even less if he thinks the cost unnecessarily excessive. It is incumbent upon the mayor, therefore, to divide the actual cost of transportation, when he sees fit to allow the total amount incurred among the defendants making such cost necessary.

Seventh Question. If thirty-six dollars was collected against six defendants, when only six dollars was disbursed for their transportation, it is manifest that the amount, which was assessed in excess of that stated in your sixth question, was illegally assessed. Recovery can be had, of this excess amount however, only by the parties entitled to the same, to wit, the defendants against whom it was taxed, since no other party can establish a claim thereto. It has been suggested that section 286 of the General Code, authorizing recovery of public moneys illegally received by officials, and defining such public money to include all money received or collected, under color of office, under authority of law, ordinance or otherwise, has bearing as amounting to a possible authorization of recovery of such illegally received moneys as those in question. I am of the opinion, however, that such a construction of the definition of the term "public money," in the statute, would operate to disregard, entirely, the word "public," as herein used and that such is not the intention of this statute.

Eighth Question. The question of the amount to be allowed for transportation is one which rests within the discretion of the magistrate, and his judgment must be allowed to prevail, in the absence of a clear case of gross abuse of discretion on the part of such magistrate in fixing such amount. The question of whether or not an automobile is a proper method of transportation, in a particular case, therefore, is to be determined by that official, and his judgment must be exercised with reference to the particular facts and circumstances attending the case.

Ninth Question. In former opinions I have advised that policemen are permitted to retain fees received for services in state cases and this ruling, of course, included a chief of police, where that official himself performed the services. In ordinance cases, all fees received by either the chief of police or a patrolman must be paid into the city treasury by virtue of section 4213 of the General Code, providing that all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES TO SELL GOODS TO A CITY—RIGHT OF A PERSON WHO OWNS STOCK IN A CORPORATION TO SELL TO A CITY, TO ACT AS SINKING FUND TRUSTEE.

1. A member of a board of sinking fund trustees, who acts as agent of a corporation selling goods to the city, may or may not act in violation of section 12910, General Code, depending upon the special facts of the case.

2. It is a violation of law for a person who owns stock in a corporation that sells to a city, to act as sinking fund trustee.

3. This is also true with respect to a person who is a director in a corporation that sells to the city and at the same time is a member of the sinking fund trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. A. J. LAYNE, City Solicitor, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 20th, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Whether it is a violation of the law for sinking fund trustees to act as agents of a corporation selling goods to the city; and

"2. Is it a violation of the law for a person, who owns stock in a corporation that sells to the city, to act as a sinking fund trustee, without his being an active agent of the corporation; and

"3. Is it a violation of the law for a person who is director in a private corporation that sells to the city to act as a director of said corporation without his having any other official relationship to the corporation, and at the same time to act as a member of the sinking fund trustees of said city?"

Sections 12910 and 3808 of the General Code are as follows:

"Section 12910. Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years.

"Section 3808. No member of the council, board, officer or commissioner of the corporation, shall have any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation. A violation of any provision of this or the preceding two sections shall disqualify the party violating it from holding any office of trust or profit in the corporation, and shall render him liable to the corporation for all sums of money, or other thing he may receive contrary to the provisions of such sections, and if in office he shall be dismissed therefrom."

There can be no question that a member of the board of sinking fund trustees of a city holds an office of trust in a municipality. The statute in its terms has a very broad and sweeping meaning. The acts comprehended by it, however, were held invalid under common law rules, and there is some question as to whether or not the provision is to be deemed much more than declaratory of the common law. Under the common law rule interests of a certain nature were deemed to be excepted as not presenting a situation which might be deemed contrary to public policy.

15 Amr. Eng. Enc. 977.

While to my mind there cannot be much doubt that a person who acts as agent of a corporation whilst occupying the position of sinking fund trustee must necessarily be pecuniarily interested in the sale of the goods, nevertheless, the word "interested" may cover such a range of shaded meanings, and the word "agent" being a term of such broad comprehension, I hesitate to give a definite and sweeping answer to your question without knowing the exact facts of the situation. If the agent in question has a pecuniary interest in the deal, your question clearly must be answered in the affirmative. If such is not the case, however, I would prefer to have the knowledge of the situation preliminary to drawing a definite conclusion.

In answer to your second question, I beg to say that this department has always held to the opinion that a stockholder in a corporation which sells to a city, has such an interest in the sale as amounts to a violation of section 12910, when said stockholder holds an office of trust in the municipality. I am, therefore, of the opinion that your second question must be answered in the affirmative.

A fortiori, since a director in a corporation must hold stock in a corporation, your third question must also be answered in the affirmative. I am also of the opinion that section 3808 would also be violated in each of the last two questions submitted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION—RIGHT TO PURCHASE REAL ESTATE FOR THE PURPOSE OF REFORESTATION AND FOR ESTABLISHING GAME PRESERVES.

In the absence of an appropriation therefor, the state agricultural commission is without legal authority to purchase real estate for the purpose of reforestation and for establishing game preserves under the so-called agricultural commission act, and the hunters' license act, which said acts are found in 103 O. L., 304 and 117.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. BENJ. F. GAYMAN, Secretary Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 13th you submitted to this department for an official opinion, the following request:

"The agricultural commission of Ohio is working out a forest policy for the state of Ohio, and among other things it desires to do is to purchase land for the purpose of reforestation and for establishing game preserves under the so-called 'hunter's license law.'

"The agricultural commission act evidently intended to give the agricultural commission of Ohio authority to purchase lands for such purposes as may be necessary in the development of the forest and agricultural resources of the state.

"Will you kindly give the commission an opinion at the earliest possible date whether it has legal authority to purchase real estate under the so-called agricultural commission act and the hunter's license act?"

Under date of April 15, 1913, the general assembly of Ohio passed the agricultural commission act. This act is found at page 304 of the 103rd volume of Ohio laws. Section 1 thereof provides that there shall be an agricultural commission of Ohio and provides the manner of the appointment of the members thereof. Section 11 of said act provides that the agricultural commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers now exercised by certain boards, as follows:

"The agricultural commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers now exercised by the state board of agriculture, the secretary of the state board of agriculture, the board of live stock commissioners, the board of control of the state agricultural experiment station, * * * the commission of fish and game * * *. The commission shall also succeed to and be in control of all records, land, moneys, appropriations and other property, real or personal, now and hereafter held for the benefit of said respective departments of the state government, the same to be held in trust for the state of Ohio * * *, and the commission is further authorized and empowered to establish such other bureaus and departments as it deems necessary."

Section 93 of said act provides for maintenance of the Ohio agricultural experiment station, as follows:

"The agricultural commission shall maintain a state agricultural experiment station for the prosecution of practical and scientific research in agriculture and forestry and the development of the agricultural resources of the state. It shall be known as the 'Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.' "

Section 110 of said act provides that the agricultural commission shall investigate into and assist in the development of the forests of the state, as follows:

"The agricultural commission shall carefully inquire into the character and extent of the forests of the state, the causes of their waste and decay, and methods for their preservation and development. It shall conduct investigations in the several sections of the state, determine the species of valuable trees best suited to grow on the various kinds of soil, and ascertain the best methods and cost of the propagation, planting and cultivation of wood lots and plantations. It shall determine the average rate of growth of the various species of trees and the relative values of different kinds of timber for domestic and commercial purposes, and conduct experiments for the purposes of increasing durability of the various kinds of wood; determine the kind of trees and shrubs best suited to different localities for wind-breaks and shelter, and for beautifying grounds, and ascertain the best method of planting and managing them."

Section 111 of said act provides that the agricultural commission may co-operate with the department of agriculture of the United States as follows:

"The agricultural commission may co-operate with the department of agriculture of the United States in conducting such portion of the work mentioned in section 110, as may be agreed upon by the agricultural commission and such department of agriculture."

For promoting any part of the public welfare that comes under the supervision and control of the agricultural commission, section 13 of said act provides as follows:

"The agricultural commission may accept and hold on behalf of Ohio any grant, gift, devise or bequest of money or property made to or for the use of the commission or for promoting any part of the public welfare that shall be under the supervision and control of the commission. The agricultural commission shall have full power to contract for and carry out the terms and conditions of any devise, grant, gift or donation that may be made for the purpose of carrying out the objects and purposes of this act."

Section 96 of said act provides that the title of all lands for the use of the experiment station shall be conveyed to the state in fee simple, as follows:

"The title of all lands for the use of the experiment station shall be conveyed in fee simple to the state, but no title shall be conveyed for such purposes unless the attorney general is satisfied that it is free from defects and incumbrances."

The foregoing quoted sections relate to the duties and power of the agricultural commission in the matter of making prosecutions of practical and scientific research in agriculture and forestry and the development of the agricultural resources of the state.

Section 1390 of the General Code, as amended in the act creating the agricultural commission of Ohio, above referred to, and found at page 329 of the 103 Ohio Laws, provides for the protection, propagation and preservation of birds, animals and fish as follows:

"The agricultural commission shall have authority and control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of song and insectivorous birds, game birds, game animals and fish within the state and in and upon the waters thereof. It shall enforce by proper legal action or porceeding the laws of the state for the protection, preservation and propagation of such birds, animals and fish; shall establish fish hatcheries and propogate fish therein or in any other manner for the waters of the state, and, so far as funds are provided therefor, shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties."

Section 3 of the hunter's license law, passed April 18, 1913, and found at page 717 of the 103 O. L., provides that the quarterly report of licenses issued, shall be made by those issuing the same to the commissioners of fish and game, and further provides as follows:

"* * * the moneys received as license fees other than the amounts paid to clerks as their fees, which shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund which is hereby appropriated for the use of the commissioners of fish and game in the preservation and protection of birds, game birds, game animals and fish. At least fifty per cent. of the money arising from all such licenses shall be expended by the commissioners of fish and game for the purchase and propogation of game birds and game animals to be used in restocking sections where a scarcity of such birds exist and for establishing game preserves, and the commissioners of fish and game are hereby empowered with the consent of the owners, to organize such lands so bounded that the same may be conspicuously posted as such, into state game preserves under rules and regulations to be adopted by the said commissioners and employ on such preserves a keeper or warden at such salaries and with such duties as may be prescribed by the said commissioners. And it shall be unlawful for any person at any time on any such game preserves, conspicuously posted, or with knowledge that the same is a game preserve, to hunt, kill or pursue any game birds or game animals."

By way of summary, it is to be noted that the foregoing sections authorize the agricultural commission of Ohio to establish such bureaus and departments as it deems necessary for carrying out the purposes of the agricultural commission act. Two of the principal purposes of said act as specified in section 93 thereof, supra, provides for the prosecution of practical and scientific research in agriculture and forestry and the development of agricultural resources in the state. For carrying into effect such purposes, section 13, supra, of said act, distinctly empowers the commission to accept and hold any grant, gift, device or bequest made to or for the use of the commission for promoting any part of the public welfare that shall be under the supervision and control of the commission. Further, the agricultural commission shall have full power to contract for and carry out the conditions of any device, grant, etc., that may be made for carrying out the objects and purposes of this act. Section 96, supra, of said act, distinctly provides that the title of all lands for the use of the experiment station shall be conveyed in fee simple to the state, etc. Section 13, supra, specifically says that the commission may accept grants for the accomplishment of the purposes enumerated in the agricultural commission act. Section 1390 of the act, supra, relating to the protection, etc., of birds, animals and fish, does not carry any provision relating or looking to the accepting of grants or the taking of title of lands and likewise section 3 of the hunter's license act, which is above quoted, does not provide for acquiring any grants of or title to lands, but on the contrary, merely provides that privately owned lands may be organized into game preserves for the propogation and protection of wild game and wild animals.

However, coming to the matter of appropriations for the purchase of lands, I find that the legislature has failed to make any appropriation to the state board of agriculture for that purpose. Prior to the installment of the budget system, detailed appropriations were made for the purchase of land by the legislature to the respective state boards or departments, when such boards or departments were desirous of purchasing land. Now under the present budget system, such appropriations are made in bulk and as before stated, such appropriation has not been made by the legislature to the state agricultural board for the purchase of any land whatever, to say nothing concerning the matter of any appropriation for purchase of lands for the purpose set forth in your inquiry.

Therefore, in the absence of such appropriation, in answer to your specific question, I am of the opinion that the agricultural commission is without legal authority to purchase real estate under the so-called agricultural commission act and the hunter's license act referred to in your inquiry.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF WATER FILTRATION PLANT—BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—CONTRACT—PAYMENT OF ATTORNEY'S FEES BY VILLAGE—CONTRACTOR'S SURETY.

Where the board of trustees of public affairs of the village, acting under the authority of the village council entered into a contract for the construction of a water filtration plant, and where later an abandonment of the contract by the contractor, the board of trustees of public affairs entered into a contract with an attorney to pursue the rights of the village against the contractor's surety, that the fees of said attorney are to be paid out of the general funds of the village, and not out of the fund created by the issue of bonds for the construction of the water filtration plant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. F. H. PELTON, Solicitor for Village of Willoughby, Society for Savings Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of August 11, 1914, asking opinion of me on question stated by you as follows:

> "The village of Willoughby, through its board of public affairs, entered into a contract for the construction of a water filtration plant; the council giving the board full power to handle the entire matter. The board, because of the contractor throwing up the work was compelled to employ an attorney who rendered considerable service. Has the board authority to pay for these services out of the fund raised to build this plant, or must they be paid for out of the general fund of the village?"

By later communication from you I am advised that the money for the construction of the filtration plant, mentioned by you in the statement of the above question was raised by a bond issue authorized by a vote of the people. You also advise that an ordinance was then passed by the village council authorizing the board of trustees of public affairs to advertise for bids and enter into contract for and on behalf of the village for the construction of the plant, and the purchase of machinery and power therefor. Said ordinance further provided as follows:

> "and said board is hereby authorized to do all things necessary for and in the name of said village for the completion and operation of said water filtration plant."

With respect to the circumstances under which the attorney, the payment of whose fees is here in question, was hired, you say:

> "On August 1st, of last year, the general contractor drew his July estimate of several thousand dollars and left town between two days, leaving the work at a standstill, and immediately following which, about $6,000.00 of liens were filed against the funds in the hands of the village. The bonding company did not show any inclination to do anything until forced to do so by the attorney who was employed. These circumstances required the attorney to take over practically the entire account and payments of balances of money; participation in several suits growing out of the matter, in one of which a considerable sum of money was obtained from the bonding company because of the expenses incurred; the whole matter being so handled that the village was put to no extra expense by reason of said abandonment of the contract by the contractor, except the fees of the attorney as aforesaid."

You state that there is no dispute or question about the amount of the attorney's fee, nor as I interpret your question, is there any question made with respect to the validity of the attorney's employment by the board of trustees of public affairs. This being so, it is not necessary for me to enter into any consideration of the question of the legality of such employment by the board, or concerning the power of the village council to delegate to such board the right which the council undoubtedly had to employ an attorney under the circumstances mentioned in your communication, under section 4220, General Code, which provides as follows:

"When it deems it necessary, the village council may provide legal counsel for the village, or any department or official thereof, for a period not to exceed two years, and provide compensation therefor."

The power of a municipality to construct a water filtration or purification plant is included within its power to construct water works generally, and in addition to statutory authority for the construction of water works, section 3939, General Code, provides that municipal corporations may issue and sell bonds for certain specific purposes, subdivision 11 of said section providing as follows:

"for erecting and purchasing waterworks for supplying water to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

The money raised and placed in the fund by the issue and sale of bonds under this section for any of the specific purposes therein mentioned, must be used solely for the particular and specific purpose for which the bonds were issued and sold. In this case the bonds were issued and sold for the specific purpose of raising money for the construction of a filtration plant and the purchase of machinery and power therefor

Section 3804, General Code, provides as follows:

"When any unexpended balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which bonds are still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the bonds."

It therefore follows, that if there is now any money in the fund created by the issue and sale of bonds for the construction of this water filtration plant, which has not been expended, and which is not needed for the primary purpose for which the same was raised, such unexpended balance should be turned over to the trustees of the sinking fund to be held by them and applied to the payment of the bonds. It follows from this, that there is no authority for paying the attorney's fees from the fund created by the issue and sale of bonds for the construction of this plant, and this conclusion likewise follows from a consideration that the board of trustees of public affairs is but an authorized agency of village government, and that the conditions which called for the employment of an attorney affected the interest of the village as a whole. That this is true, under circumstances of this kind, is a matter of legislative recognition in the provisions of section 4220, General Code, which authorizes the village council to appoint legal counsel for any department or official thereof.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that there is no legal warrant for paying the attorney's fees in question, other than out of the general fund of the village.

As before indicated herein, no opinion is here ventured as to the power of the board of trustees of public affairs to enter into the contract for the legal services rendered, nor as to the validity of said contract in any other respect, but assuming the validity of the contract, I am of the opinion that the fees of the attorney can only be paid out of the general fund of the village.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A PERSON APPOINTED AND ACTING AS HEALTH OFFICER IN A VILLAGE MAY BE APPOINTED SUPERINTENDENT OF WATER WORKS OF SUCH VILLAGE—RIGHT OF THE HEALTH OFFICER OF A VILLAGE TO BECOME SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS ON TERMINATION OF HIS SERVICE AS HEALTH OFFICER.

1. A person who has been appointed and is acting as health officer in a village, is not ineligible because of that fact to appointment as superintendent of the water works of such village.

2. A health officer of a village is not precluded by the provisions of section 12912, General Code, from accepting an appointment as superintendent of the public works of said village immediately upon the termination of his service as such health officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. NEWTON O. MOTT, City Solicitor, Geneva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 1, 1914, in which you inquire whether C. D. Adams, who was appointed health officer of the village of Geneva January 1, 1914, may resign that office and accept appointment or employment as superintendent of the village waterworks under the board of public affairs.

In your opinion you call attention to section 12912, General Code, and State vs. Wichgar, 27 C. C., 743. Section 12912 reads:

> "Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

This section was formerly 6976, R. S., was under consideration in the Wichgar case, and my predecessor on January 21, 1910, (see opinions of attorney general, 1910-1911, page 1032) expressed himself as follows:

> "On the familiar grammatical principle that qualifying words and phrases should be regarded as modifying the next preceding word or phrase susceptible to qualification, it would have to be decided that the last mentioned phrase was the one to which the general assembly intended limitation as to time to apply. In other words, the prohibition against acting as commissioner, architect, etc., is not limited to one year after the expiration of the term but it is against so acting in any work undertaken within the year."

He further states: It is, therefore, my opinion that present section 6976 should be read as follows:

"An officer or member of the council of any municipal corporation * * * who is interested, directly or indirectly, in the profits of any contract * * * for a corporation shall be fined. And if such officer, etc., acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in any work which, during the term for which the officer was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, is or has been undertaken or prosecuted by the corporation, he shall be fined."

There being no substantial change in the last codification and section 12912 being a substantial copy of 6976, construed by Mr. Denman, I can see no reason for reviewing his opinion especially as the construction given Mr. Denman seems to be in all respects correct. However, this does not specifically answer your question.

The first part of section 12912 cannot be considered as covering your query as it is limited to being interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation, and it is sufficient to say that this paragraph refers and refers only to an interest in profits of the character mentioned while acting as a municipal officer, and that the phrase "or for one year thereafter" has application to acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by the corporation during the term for which the office was held.

Attention is called to the language "undertaken or prosecuted," as applicable to the matter in hand. Assuming that the waterworks of the village of Geneva were installed and in operation prior to January 1, 1914, it cannot be concluded that they were either "undertaken" or "prosecuted" after that date. They were "operated" after that date; their construction had been undertaken and prosecuted prior thereto.

Again taking into consideration the objects of section 12912 and the relationship between a health officer and the village waterworks, or its management, and we can see no incompatibility between the two positions, no condition wherein the person holding the one office might arrange for the securing of the other to the injury or disadvantage of the city, and cannot conceive any reason why the holder of either of these offices should be precluded from taking or accepting the other for one year after the expiration of his term of office.

There being no reason for a law to cover this matter and the language used as above quoted not clearly covering the situation presented, as would have been the case had the word "operated" been used instead of "undertaken" or "prosecuted" or as an addition thereto, I am constrained to the conclusion that section 12912 does not prohibit Mr. Adams from resigning as health officer one day and accepting an appointment as waterworks superintendent immediately.

Believing this will answer your question, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA IS NOT LEGAL IF THE PERSON WAS NEVER A MEMBER OF A HIGH SCHOOL OR NEVER PERFORMED THE WORK WHICH WOULD ENTITLE HIM TO A DIPLOMA.

A high school diploma is not legal which is granted to a person who was never a member of the high school which granted the diploma and if the person had never performed the work required by the curriculum of the said high school, or any part of it, or its equivalent, and never did any regular school work beyond the grade schools.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. R. H. PATCHIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of May 13, 1914, you submitted for an opinion the following request:

> "A situation has arisen in our county which appears to demand an opinion from your department, and inasmuch as I have been requested to present the matter for your consideration, will you kindly inform me if a regular high school diploma granted in this state under the following conditions is legal?
> "1. The person to whom the diploma was granted was never a member of the high school which granted the diploma, nor of any other high school.
> "2. This person had never done the work required by the curriculum of the high aschool nor any part of it, nor its equivalent, having done no regular school work beyond grade work.
> "3. The grantee was a member of the board of education which granted the diploma.
> "4. Two members of the board of education did not know of the granting of the diploma for more than a year and a half after it was granted.
> "5. The person to whom the diploma was granted must have been one of the three necessary for a quorum.
> "6. The person to whom the diploma was granted was clerk of the board of education at the time the diploma was granted, but the diploma does not have his signature as clerk, but that of another member who signed as clerk pro tem."

I take it for granted that your request concerns diplomas which were granted under the section of the General Code relating to the subject-matter of schools and attendance, as the same existed prior to the recently adopted school code. The sections of the General Code relating to the subject-matter of schools and attendance embraces sections 7644 to 7761 of the General Code, inclusive. Many of these sections were amended and supplemented by the general assembly at the special session thereof, commencing January 19, 1914, and are found in 104 O. L. Said amended sections, however, have not been in existence a sufficient length of time to have had any diplomas granted or issued thereunder, and I will therefore consider said sections as the same existed prior to their last amendment.

Section 7649 of the General Code, defines a high school as follows:

> "A high school is one of higher grade than an elementary school, in which instruction and training are given in approved courses in the history of the United States and other countries; composition, rhetoric, English and American literature; algebra and geometry; natural science, political or mental science, ancient or modern foreign languages, or both, commercial and industrial branches, or such of the branches named as the length of its curriculum makes possible. Also such other branches of higher grade than those to be taught in the elementary schools, with such advanced studies and advanced reviews of the common branches as the board of education directs."

Section 7656 of the General Code, prior to its last amendment in 104 O. L., provided as follows:

"A diploma must be granted by the board of education to any one completing the curriculum in any high school, which diploma shall state the grade of the high school issuing it as certified by the state commissioner of common schools, be signed by the president and clerk of the board of education, the superintendent and the principal of the high school, if such there be, and shall bear the date of its issue."

Section 7657 of the General Code provides that an additional certificate shall be issued to the holder of each diploma, as to the grade of the high school, etc., as follows:

"A certificate shall also be issued to the holder of each diploma in which shall be stated the grade of the high school, the names and extent of the studies pursued and the length of time given to each study to be certified to in the same manner as set forth for a diploma."

The case of board of education vs. State, 80 O. S., 133, throws some light on the subject-matter under discussion. In that action the relator, State ex rel. W. H. Wickam, sought to obtain a writ of mandamus to compel the board of education to promote a son of the relator to enter the 7th grade of the village schools and further sought to compel the teachers to receive said relator's son into said grade and to give him instruction in the prescribed work of that grade. The son of the relator held a certificate which promoted him to the 6th grade. As indicated, the relator sought to have his son skip the 6th grade and pass from the 5th grade to the 7th grade of the schools. One of the rules of the board of education relating to promotion of pupils from one grade to the next higher, or succeeding grade, provided as follows:

"Promotions shall be made on the basis of fitness only, and not on account of the size or age of the pupil, or the wishes of the parents. * * * Pupils will be promoted at the close of the school year if they have obtained an average of 75 per cent., with not less than 60 per cent. in any branch * * *.

"No pupil shall be promoted during the year except upon the approval of the board and with the recommendation of the teacher and superintendent."

As to pupils, the board of education had adopted the following rule:

"Pupils between the ages of 6 and 21 years, residing in the district, are entitled to attend the schools, receive like instruction and be promoted from grade to grade on the ground of merit and proficiency only."

Under the rules of the board above quoted, the court held in the 4th and 5th syllabus of said case, as follows:

"4. A pupil who has favorably passed examination, and been given a proper certificate authorizing him to enter the next higher grade, is without right, in the absence of authority, from the board of education, to omit such grade to which he has been promoted and passed to a higher one.

"5. Where, by direction of the parent of the pupil thus promoted, the pupil without authority of the board, enters the room of such higher grade for the purpose of remaining there, it is the right and duty of the superintendent to refuse to allow the pupil to remain and direct him to go to the room of the grade to which he has been promoted."

The rule to be drawn from the above case is that pupils are entitled to certificates which cover the work that such pupils have actually performed. The certificate of the pupil certified that he had completed the work of the 5th grade satisfactorily and that said certificate of promotion entitled him to enter the next higher grade which was the 6th grade, and that he was not entitled to enter the 7th grade because he had not completed the work required in the 6th grade.

These conclusions follow by virtue of the provisions contained in the rules adopted by the board. If a pupil cannot receive a certificate of promotion because he has not performed the school work of a certain grade, as required by the rules of the board, it would certainly seem to follow that a board of education would be without authority to grant a diploma to a person who has not completed the course of study in accordance with statutory rules. It is to be noted that said section 7656 of the General Code, containing provisions that a diploma must be granted to any one completing the curriculum in any high school, and you state in your inquiry that the person to whom the diploma in question was granted, was never a member of the school which granted the diploma and never did the work required by the curriculum of the high school, nor any part of it, etc.

Curriculum is defined by the century dictionary as follows:

"A fixed course of study in a university, college or school."

By Funk & Wagnall's dictionary:

"A course of study as in a college."

By Webster's dictionary:

"A specified fixed course of study, as in a university."

The curriculum or course of study of a high school must be based upon section 7649, supra, which said section specifies the subjects upon which instruction and training must be given. As stated in your inquiry, the person to whom the diploma inquired about was granted, was never a member of the high school which granted the diploma, and therefore could hardly come within the provision of said section 7657, which provides that a certificate shall be issued to the holder of each diploma, in which said certificate the grade of the high school shall be stated, together with the names and extent of the studies pursued and the length of time given to each study. If the party inquired about was never a member of such high school, he certainly could have given no time to the studies imposed in the curriculum or the course of study of said high school.

Bouvier's law dictionary, in speaking of the term "diploma" says:

"It is usually granted by learned institutions to their members or to persons who have studied in them."

Certainly it follows that if the person to whom the diploma in question was granted was never a member of the high school which granted said diploma, then it follows that it could not possibly be said that he had studied in such high school.

You will notice that up to this point I have discussed only the first two conditions under which said diploma was granted, as set forth in your inquiry. In respect to the 3rd, 4th and 5th conditions under which said diploma was granted, section 7656 makes it mandatory upon a board of education to issue or grant a diploma to any one completing the curriculum in any high school, for the reason that said section specifically says that in such case a diploma must be granted by the board of education. This being true, the fact that the person who received the diploma was a member of the board of education which granted the same, would have no effect upon said diploma, provided he was otherwise entitled to receive such diploma, and it is not necessary that such diploma be granted by a quorum of the board, for as above stated, if a person is entitled to such diploma, then the board must grant and issue such diploma, as provided by said section 7656, supra.

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that a diploma granted under the conditions which you state in your request, is not legal.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF CITY SOLICITOR TO REPRESENT CITY OFFICERS IN PROCEEDINGS TO RESTRAIN THE CERTIFICATION AND COLLECTION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—CITY SOLICITOR MAY NOT BE APPOINTED BY COUNTY OFFICERS TO REPRESENT THEM IN SUCH ACTION—COMPENSATION.

Where council has by resolution made it the duty of the city solicitor to represent the city auditor in a suit against the county treasurer, county auditor and city auditor to restrain the certification and collection of special assessments, the city solicitor cannot be employed by the county officials to represent them in such action. No additional compensation can be paid the prosecuting attorney for representing the county officials involved in such suit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, City Solicitor, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 4, 1914, as follows:

> "After special improvements are made by a municipality, if the assessment levied therefor is not paid by the time fixed, the same is certified by the city auditor for collection by the county treasurer as a part of the general tax. In an action brought by a property owner, seeking to restrain the city auditor from certifying any further installments, and to restrain the county auditor from placing the same upon the books, and to restrain the county treasurer from collecting future assessments as well as those placed upon his books prior to the time of the bringing of such action, may attorney fees be paid by the county treasurer and county auditor to an attorney-at-law who is also solicitor of the municipality for defending the said officials in such suit?
> "May the prosecuting attorney receive compensation in such an action? From the opinion rendered by you under date of May 6, 1911, to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, department of state, I presume that in your judgement he may not."

Section 3905 of the General Code reads:

"The council may order the clerk or other proper officer of the corporation to certify any unpaid assessment or tax to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount of such assessment or tax so certified shall be placed upon the tax list by the county auditor and shall, with ten per cent. penalty to cover interest and cost of collection, be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes, and credited to the corporation. Such ten per cent. penalty shall in no case be added unless at least thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the ordinance making the levy and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection."

In a letter under date of May 29, 1914, you suggest that section 5700, General Code, may authorize employment of counsel by officials of the county in defending these. This section reads:

"When an action has been commenced against the county treasurer, county auditor, or other county officer for performing or attempting to perform, a duty authorized or directed by statute for the collection of the public revenue, such treasurer, auditor, or other officer, shall be allowed and paid out of the county treasury reasonable fees of counsel and other expenses for defending the action. The amount of damages and costs adjudged against him, with the fees, expenses, damages and costs shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor among all the parties entitled to share the revenue so collected, and be deducted by the auditor from the shares or portions of revenue at any time payable to each, including as one of the parties, the state itself, as well as the counties, townships, cities, villages, school districts, and organizations entitled thereto."

This section was formerly section 2862, Revised Statutes, and was originally part of an act passed April 8, 1881. On March 31, 1906, an act was passed amending section 1274 of the Revised Statutes, and this section as amended later, became section 2917, General Code, which now reads:

"The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

Section 2412, General Code, referred to in the above section, reads:

"If it deems if for the best interests of the county, upon written request of the prosecuting attorney, the board of county commissioners may employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards, in their official capacity."

From a reading of section 2917 which was passed after section 5700, it is clear that it is primarily the duty of the prosecuting attorney of your county to defend the county auditor and county treasurer in the suits referred to, but if he deems it for the best interest of the county, he may request the county commissioners to appoint counsel to assist him in these cases, and the commissioners may employ such counsel by virtue of section 2412. The prosecuting attorney himself may not receive any additional compensation for such services.

The next question is, since the county commissioners at the request of the prosecuting attorney may employ counsel in these cases to assist the prosecuting attorney, may the solicitor of the municipality involved in the action, be employed.

Section 4308, General Code, reads:

"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

This section makes it the duty of the city solicitor to defend such suits as you refer to, when council by resolution or ordinance so directs. I assume that in the case submitted the city solicitor will appear for and on behalf of the city of Elyria and the city officials named in the statutes referred to, and this, to my mind, would make it improper from the standpoint of public policy, for such official to receive further compensation for appearing in the same suits on behalf of the county. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the city solicitor of the city of Elyria may not be employed to defend county officials in the suits brought in the special assessment cases referred to.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 4744-1, GENERAL CODE, WITH REFERENCE TO THE SALARY OF COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS —RIGHT OF THE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION TO FIX THE SALARY OF A COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT AT AN AMOUNT IN EXCESS OF $1,200.00—TO FIX THE SALARY AT AN AMOUNT GREATER THAN $2,000.00.

There is nothing in section 4744-1, General Code, which prohibits a county board of education from fixing the salary of the county superintendent at any amount in excess of $1,200.00 per year it may deem proper.

When the board of education fixes the salary of the county superintendent in an amount greater than $2,000.00, the county district is to pay the balance remaining after deducting the $1,000.00 to be paid by the state and such balance is to be apportioned and certified as provided in sections 4744-1, 4744-2, and 4744-3, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 21, 1914.

HON. CYRUS LOCHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 18, 1914, I gave you an opinion that under section 4744-1, General Code(104 O. L. 142), the salary of county superintendents could in no event exceed the annual sum of $2,000. This opinion was prepared in great haste, and, at the request of many members of the legislature, the superintendent of public instruction, and the prosecuting attorneys of different counties, I consented to reconsider the question.

Your original request, dated July 29th, was:

> "Section 4744-1 provides that the salary of a county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education; that one-half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district, and that in no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than $1,000.
> "The question, therefore, arises whether or not section 4744-1, General Code, limits the salary to be paid the county superintendent to $2,000."

The answer to your request involves a construction of said section 4744-1, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education, to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help. The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

This statute provides, in substance:

(a) The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education.

(b) Such salary shall not be less than $1,200.00.
(c) Such salary shall be paid out of the county board of education fund.
(d) Half of such salary shall be paid by the state.
(e) The balance shall be paid by the county school district.
(f) The amount paid by the state shall in no case be more than $1,000.00.
(g) The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district.

Taking the provisions from (a) to (e), inclusive, we have a rational statute; add provision (f) and ambiguity arises; add provision (g) and we have ambiguity, confusion and contradiction.

If it were the intent of the legislature that the salary should in no event exceed $2,000.00, why was this not said? A minimum is provided definitely, "the salary shall be fixed * * * to be not less than $1,200.00 per year." No maximum is named. It is provided that half the salary is to be paid by the state, the balance by the county school district. It is then provided that the amount to be paid by the state in no case shall be more than $1,000.00. This is in a separate sentence. Nothing is said about the amount to be paid by the school district except "the balance by the county school district." If the maximum salary is to be $2,000.00, then, as the legislature has not so said, after limiting the amount to be paid by the state to $1,000.00 it should also limit, in the same way, the amount to be paid by the county school district. This is not done. Can it be inferred that because the provision is for the state to pay one half of such salary, and in no case to pay more than $1,000.00, the salary is limited by law to $2,000.00. I do not think so; for the following reasons:

First. A definite minimum of $1,200.00 is provided.
Second. No maximum is provided.
Third. Limitation is expressly placed on the amount the state may pay.
Fourth. No limitation is placed on the amount to be paid by the county school district.

Thus, it is expressly provided for a minimum salary and for a maximum amount to be paid by the state. There is no provision for a maximum salary or for a maximum amount to be paid by the county school district. The maxim expressio unius applies, the minimum and maximum having been fixed in two instances, expressly, inference that they are fixed in the other instances is excluded.

It is contended that the provisions "half of such salaries shall be paid by the state," coupled with the limitation of $1,000.00 placed on the state by the next sentence, fixes the maximum salary at $2,000.00. The most obvious answer to this is that no maximum salary is fixed by the act, and, as a minimum is fixed, cannot be inferred.

Second. After the words "half of such salaries shall be paid by the state" occur the words "the balance by the county school district." If the salary in no event was to exceed $2,000.00, then this provision should have read: "the other half by the county school district, and in no case shall such salary exceed $2,000.00." In short, if it were the intent to limit the salary to $2,000.00, then such intent cannot be inferred from the limitation on the state to $1,000.00. This very sentence, "in no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than $1,000.00," necessarily imports cases in which half of the salary would amount to more than $1,000.00.

The first two paragraphs of the syllabus in the case of Slingluff et al. vs. Weaver et al. 66 O. S. Rep. 621, are as follows:

> "The object of judicial investigation in the construction of a statute is to ascertain and give effect to the intent of the law-making body which enacted it. And where its provisions are ambiguous, and its meaning doubtful, the history of legislation on the subject, and the consequences of a literal interpretation of the language may be considered; punctuation may be changed or disregarded; words transposed, or those necessary to a clear understanding and, as shown by the context manifestly intended, inserted.

"But the intent of the law-makers is to be sought first of all in the language employed, and if the words be free from ambiguity and doubt, and express plainly, clearly and distinctly, the sense of the law-making body, there is no occasion to resort to other means of interpretation. The question is not what did the general assembly intend to enact, but what is the meaning of that which it did enact. That body should be held to mean what it has plainly expressed, and hence no room is left for construction."

The above syllabus is an excellent guide to statutory construction and, as stated by Judge Spear, both in the syllabus and in the opinion, "the question is not what did the general assembly intend to enact, but what is the meaning of that which it did enact. That body should be held to mean what it has plainly expressed, and hence no room is left for construction."

In the present statute the legislative body evidently meant to provide for the salary of the county superintendent, and that his salary in no event should be less than $1,200, and also that the state should pay half of such salary up to the amount of $1,000. That much is expressed with reasonable plainness. What is intended and meant in addition is in darkness.

It is contended, on one hand, that by providing that the state shall pay half of such salary, and in another sentence providing that in no case shall the amount paid by the state exceed $1,000, that the amount of the salary is limited to $2,000; on the other hand, as I have pointed out, no maximum salary is fixed by the act, and the language used in limiting the state to $1,000 necessarily recognizes cases in which, were it not for this limitation, the state's share would be more than $1,000. Therefore, the provisions of this statute, upon this subject, are exceedingly ambiguous and doubtful, and it is our duty, if we can, to give the statute the intent of the law-making body which enacted it.

The language used gives very little light as to the intent; that is, whether it was the intent of the legislature to limit the salary to $2,000; or to place no limitation on the amount of the salary except that the state was to pay not to exceed $1,000 on account of the same. It seems to me the reasonable interpretation to put upon the statute, in this regard is that the legislature did not intend to limit the salary to $2,000. If it had so intended it would have been a very simple matter to have so stated, and it is only by forced construction and by inference that such a meaning can be placed upon the statute. On the other hand, while there is a definite minimum amount of salary fixed, there is no express maximum.

Nor is there any reason, which has been suggested to me, which would impel the legislature to place a limitation of $2,000 on the salary. On the contrary, it is well known that in many counties of the state a satisfactory superintendent could not be obtained for a salary of $2,000.00.

From all the above, I feel compelled to give this statute a liberal construction; that is, as the legislature, itself, has refrained from saying that the maximum salary is to be $2,000.00, I cannot feel warranted in holding that the statute says this by inference.

In brief, my holding is that the salary of the county superintendent is to be not less than $1,200.00; that the state is to pay half of this salary so long as the same does not exceed $2,000.00.

That there is nothing in the act which prohibits a county board of education from fixing the salary of the county superintendent at any amount in excess of $1,200 per year it may deem proper.

Much difficulty is caused, as you suggest, by the last sentence of section 4744-1 which provides:

> "The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

The difficulty arises, as you show, in a case such as Cuyahoga county where the salary of the county superintendent has been fixed at $3,000.00, $1,000 of this to be paid by the state, leaving a balance of $2,000 to be paid by the county school district. This would be perfectly consonant with the provision in the act which provides:

> "Half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars."

But the difficulty is occasioned by the last sentence of the section which I have quoted above. The half of the salary would be, of course, $1,500.00, and if that is all the county school district is to pay, instead of the balance of the salary, there would be a deficit of $500.00. These provisions are practically irreconcilable, and it seems to me, in case of conflict, the first provision, namely, that the balance of such salary shall be paid by the county school district, should control, which salary, as stated in the section, to be paid out of the county board of education fund. This fund is provided for by sections 4744-2 and 4744-3, General Code, which sections are as follows:

> "Section 4744-2. On or before the first day of August of each year the county board of education shall certify to the county auditor the number of teachers to be employed for the ensuing year in the various rural and village school districts within the county school districts, and also the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation and the compensation of the county superintendent; and such board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents.
> "Section 4744-3. The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents as may be certified by the county board. Such amount shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the "county board of education fund." The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate, he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount, which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

You ask "if 'the half paid by the county school district' shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district, means in this case two thousand dollars of the three thousand dollars, how is the county board of education to proceed against the village and rural school districts who refuse to pay more than one half of the salary, namely, fifteen hundred dollars?"

While in these sections, the only method of providing for this "county board of education fund," is the amount retained by the auditor for paying the portions of the salaries of the county and district superintendents, still there must be other sources from which revenue can be made for this fund; for there are other expenses which must be paid out of the fund; for instance, the expenses of the county superintendent authorized by section 4744-1. It is not stated explicitly that these expenses are to be paid out of the "county board of education fund," but they are to be allowed by the county board and unless they can be paid out of this fund they cannot be paid at all. I think they can be paid from this fund.

Section 4734 provides that the expenses of the county board of education shall be paid from "the county board of education fund."

Therefore, if this fund consisted only of the amounts necessary to pay the salaries of the county and district superintendents there would be no fund out of which the expenses above noted could be paid. Section 5653 (104 O. L., p. 145) provides an additional source of revenue for this fund, namely, the excess, or surplus of what is called the "sheep fund." There may be other sources of revenue for this fund, but I do not find it necessary to determine this at this time. I have called attention to the fund and to other expenditures from it than for salaries of county and district superintendents, merely to show that it is in reality a fund at the disposal of the county board of education and not simply a lump sum from which only salaries can be paid.

Section 4744-1 provides that the salary of the county superintendent, as fixed by the county board of education, shall be paid from this fund. If there is sufficient money in the fund to pay the salary as fixed, the question you suggest would not arise.

Under section 4744-2 it is the duty of the county board of education to certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents, and under section 4744-3 it is the duty of the county auditor to retain the amounts so certified, for the purpose of paying the salaries of the county and district superintendents out of the school funds due to the various village and rural school districts when he makes his semi-annual apportionment.

As I view it, there is no necessity for any action against the village or rural school districts. If it is claimed that, by the last sentence of section 4744-1, only one equal half of the salary fixed by the board of education can be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts, and the "county board of education fund" is insufficient to pay the salaries in full unless the entire balance is pro-rated among said districts; then the question might be raised by an action in injunction against the county board of education from certifying to the auditor an apportionment greater than the exact equal one-half of the salary so fixed. Such action would depend entirely on the last sentence of section 4744-1—it may be suggested that the word "half" does not necessarily mean one of two exactly equal portions. It may mean simply a part; in this section there is a conflict in the language used by the legislature; but taking the section as an entirety and reading it in connection with sections 4744-2 and 4744-3, it seems to me the only reasonable construction is that, when the board of education fixes the salary in an amount greater than $2,000.00, the county district is to pay the balance remaining after deducting the $1,000.00 to be paid by the state, and that such balance is to be apportioned and certified as provided in sections 4744-1, 4744-2 and 4744-3.

In any event I cannot see that this alters the main question; that is, that the salary is not limited by the act, to $2,000.00. Even if it were true that not to exceed half of the salary is to be paid by the county district, the fact still remains that nowhere in this statute does it say that the half to be paid by the county school district is not to exceed $1,000.00.

As stated above, this statute is most troublesome and unsatisfactory; upon first reading it, one at once gains the impression that a limitation of $2,000.00 is placed upon the salary, but upon carefully considering it, from every angle, it is perfectly plain that this is not the case, and whether it be by design or not, the statute carefully refrains not only from placing any maximum limit upon the amount of the salary of the county superintendent, but also from placing any maximum limit upon the portion of the salary which the county district is to pay.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney Oeneral.

RIGHT OF THE COUNTY TO MAKE A CHARGE AGAINST THE CITY FOR THE CARE AND TREATMENT OF A PAUPER IN THE COUNTY INFIRMARY, WHEN THE CORPORATE LIMITS OF THE CITY ARE IDENTICAL WITH THOSE OF THE TOWNSHIP.

When a city, whose corporate limits are identical with those of the township, sends a resident pauper to the county infirmary, it is not lawful for the county to make a charge against such city for the care and treatment of such pauper at such infirmary. It is also unlawful for such city to impose a charge against the county for food and lodging furnished a non-resident pauper by such city, after the officers of the county infirmary have refused to afford relief, since it is the duty of the director of public safety of a city to furnish all temporary outside relief to the poor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1914.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 26, 1914, as follows:

"1. The city of Akron has no city infirmary. The county of Summit has a county infirmary located within Summit county. In the case of a pauper who has a permanent residence in the city of Akron, and who is sick; in the event that he is sent to the county infirmary is it lawful for a charge to be made against the city of Akron for the care of such pauper while he is at the county infirmary?

"2. In the case of a pauper who is a non-resident of the city of Akron, being provided with two or three meals or a night's lodging, and assuming further that the county infirmary refuses to receive such pauper, is it lawful for the city to impose a charge against the county for the care furnished such pauper?

"The total tax duplicate of Summit county is about $212,000,000.00. Of this amount $133,000,000.00 is the city's share. It appears then that the city's duplicate is 60 per cent. of the entire county. Of course, you are aware of the fact that this county infirmary is supported by a general levy on the entire county. It seems a curious situation that after the city is taxed to the extent I have indicated, to support the infirmary, that it should be called upon to pay an additional sum for every poor patient sent to that institution. Will you please bear these facts in mind in coming to your conclusion?"

Section 2544 of the General Code reads as follows:

"In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

This section seems to relate only to the duties of the township trustees with reference to the poor, but section 3512, General Code, provides that when the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of the township, all township offices are abolished and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village and that "all rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation."

Section 4089, General Code, designates the public safety director as the officer of the municipal corporation, whose duty it is to care for the interests of the poor, so that if the city of Akron has no township trustees because of the fact that the corporation limits are identical with the limits of the township, then the duty prescribed in section 2544, General Code, to be performed by the township trustees, will fall upon the director of public safety. It is equally clear, from a reading of this section, that after the destitute person is received by the county infirmary, the liability of the municipality for the support of such person is at an end.

I am therefore of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that when a resident of the city of Akron is being cared for in the county infirmary, no charge can be made against the city by the county authorities for such care.

Sections 3476, 3480 and 3481, General Code, read as follows:

"Section 3476. Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it.

"Section 3480. When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the service of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees or proper municipal officer. If medical services are required, and no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance, to such poor, the physician called or attending shall immediately notify such trustees or officer, in writing, that he is attending such person, and thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable for relief and services thereafter rendered such person, in such amount as such trustees or proper officers determine to be just and reasonable. If such notice be not given within three days after such relief afforded or services begin, the township or municipal corporation shall be liable only for relief or services rendered after notice has been given. Such trustees or officer, at any time, may order the discontinuance of such services, and shall not be liable for services or relief thereafter rendered.

"Section 3481. When complaint is made to the township trustees or to the proper officers of a municipal corporation that a person therein requires public relief, or support, one or more of such officers, or some other duly authorized person, shall visit the person needing relief, forthwith, to ascertain his name, age, sex, color, nativity, length of residence in this county, previous habits and present condition and in what township and county in this state he is legally settled. The information so ascertained shall be transmitted to the township clerk, or proper officer of the municipal corporation, and recorded on the proper records. No relief or support shall be given to a person without such visitation and investigation, except that in cities, where there is maintained a public charity organization, or other benevolent association, which investigates and keeps a record of the facts relating to persons who receive or apply for relief, the infirmary directors, trustees, or officers of such city shall accept such investigation and information and may grant relief upon the approval and recommendation of such organization."

These sections make it the duty of the director of public safety to furnish all temporary outside relief to the poor and for this relief the municipality is liable. It is therefore my opinion that when the city of Akron furnishes temporary relief to a needy non-resident, such city cannot impose a charge against the county for such relief so furnished.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney Geueral.

UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 3585, GENERAL CODE, A PLAT OF GROUND SUBDIVIDED FOR SALE WHEN RECORDED BECOMES A SUFFICIENT CONVEYANCE TO VEST IN A MUNICIPAL CORPORATION THE FEE OF THE GROUNDS DESIGNATED FOR STREET OR OTHER PUBLIC WAYS.

Where a proprietor of grounds subdivides the same for sale and causes an accurate map or plat of such subdivision, designating therein the grounds laid out for streets and other public ways, and causes the same to be recorded in the office of the recorder of the county in conformity to the provisions of section 3584, General Code, by virtue of the provisions of section 3585, General Code, such map or plat when recorded becomes a sufficient conveyance to vest in the municipal corporation wherein such grounds are located, the fee of the grounds so designated for streets or other public ways, yet said streets and other public ways so designated and dedicated do not become public streets or ways under the care and control of the council of the municipality, unless the dedication is accepted and confirmed by an ordinance especially passed for this purpose, in conformity with the provisions of section 3723, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1914.

HON. F. H. PELTON, Solicitor for Willoughby, Society for Savings Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 11, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion as to whether or not it is necessary for a village to accept a street otherwise than by accepting recorded plat under section 3585, General Code.

As pertains to the question here presented, sections 3584 and 3585, General Code, provide as follows:

"Section 3584. A proprietor of lots or grounds in a municipal corporation, who subdivides or lays them out for sale, shall cause to be made an accurate map or plat of such subdivision, describing with certainty all grounds laid out or granted for streets, alleys, ways, commons or other public uses. Lots sold, or intended for sale shall be numbered by progressive numbers, or described by the squares in which situated, and the precise length and width shall be given of each lot sold, or intended for sale. Such map or plat shall be subscribed by the proprietor or his agent, duly authorized by writing, acknowledged before an officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, who shall certify the acknowledgment of the instrument, and recorded in the office of the recorder of the county.

"Section 3585. The map or plat so recorded shall thereupon be a sufficient conveyance to vest in the municipal corporation the fee of the parcel or parcels of land designated or intended for streets, alleys, ways, commons, or other public uses, to be held in the corporate name in trust to and for the uses and purposes in the instrument set forth and expressed, designated, or intended."

However, section 3723, General Code, provides as follows:

"No street or alley dedicated to public use by the proprietor of ground in any corporation, shall be deemed a public street or alley, under the care or control of the council, unless the dedication is accepted and confirmed by an ordinance specially passed for such purpose."

On a consideration of sections 3585 and 3723, General Code, with respect to the question here presented, I am unable to see any inconsistency in the provisions in these sections, nor do I know any reason why full force and effect cannot be given to the provisions of both sections. Section 3585 provides that the map or plat recorded in the provisions of section 3584 shall be sufficient conveyance to vest in the municipal corporation the fee of the land designated or intended for streets, etc. The map or plat providing for the dedication of land for streets and other public uses like any other instrument of conveyance is not effective to vest title to the land conveyed until it has been accepted. The procedure outlined in section 3584, General Code, is one of the provided means of statutory dedication and like a common law dedication such statutory dedication is not effective until acceptance by the municipality through corporate authority.

Armstrong vs. village of St. Mary's, 21 C. C., 16, 17.
Railroad Company vs. Roseville, 76, Ohio State, 108, 116.

In the case of Wisby vs. Bonte, 19 O. S. 238, it was held that the intent and purpose of the provisions of this section (3723) is to prevent proprietors who may lay out land into lots within the corporation from vesting in the corporation the title to streets and alleys and thus charge the corporation, without its consent, with the duty of keeping them open and in repair.

In the case of Lough vs. Machlin, 40 O. S., 332, it was held that a plat dedicating certain land as a public way was not effective for the purpose until an acceptance thereof by the municipality in the manner provided by the provisions in this section.

On the consideration before noted, I am of the opinion that the filing and record of the plat provided for by section 3584, General Code, although it is a sufficient instrument of conveyance without more to convey to the municipality land thereby dedicated to the municipality for public uses, does not become effective for such purpose until it has been accepted by the municipality in the manner provided by section 3723 General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ANNEXATION OF A VILLAGE TO A CITY—EFFECT OF PLUMBERS' LICENSES ISSUED BY THE VILLAGE ANNEXED.

When a village is annexed to a city, plumbers holding licenses issued by the village will not be able to operate in the city until licensed as required by the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1914.

HON. WALTER M. SCHOENLE, City Solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 28, 1914, you write this department as follows:

> "I wish to inquire if you have rendered an opinion covering the following:
> 1. "Can plumbers holding licenses issued by a village now annexed to a city continue their work within the former corporate limits of such village during the term for which their license is granted without undergoing an examination for a master plumber's license?
> 2. "Can such plumber carry on work without the corporate limits of such former village and within the limits of the city to which such village is annexed without undergoing an examination for a master plumber's license?
> "I ask if your office has rendered an opinion upon these subjects in order that the ruling in Cincinnati may be in accordance with the ruling of your department, but if no such opinion has been previously rendered by you, I would request one at your earliest convenience."

The annexation of a village to a city is governed by sections 3566 to 3574, General Code. Of these provisions, section 3574 is as follows:

> "When the annexation is completed, the two former corporations shall be governed as one, embracing the territory of both, and the inhabitants of all such territory shall have equal rights and privileges. The annexation shall not affect any rights or liabilities existing at the time of annexation, either in favor of or against the corporations, and suits founded on such rights and liabilities may be commenced, and pending suits prosecuted to final judgment and execution, as though the annexation had not taken place."

Under this provision the annexed territory becomes part of the city and all the inhabitants thereof must be governed in the same manner, having purely equal rights and being subject to equal obligations. Such an import operates against the practice of permitting individuals of different qualifications from exercising privileges of the same nature. Thus it is clear that a plumber, who had registered under the rules operating in a village and received his license from a show of qualification less exacting in its nature than that required of plumbers receiving a license from the city, might surely be pointed to as an individual who is enjoying rights and privileges not accorded to less fortunate followers of the same trade who happen to reside within the limits of the city previous to the annexation of the village.

In brief, the permission of one individual to exercise the privileges conferred by a plumber's license under terms less rigorous and less arduous than those imposed upon former residents prior to annexation, or future residents of the city within the limits after annexation, which license confers the same privileges on one and all, cannot be regarded as a distribution of equal rights and privileges.

The right of government in the exercise of its police power to revoke or rescind a license to engage in a particular profession or occupation, and to impose generally upon all parties alike new and different obligations for the procurance of a future license of like nature, is well settled. 8 L. R. A. n. s., page 1272.

Such an exercise of the police power is justified. I am of the opinion, therefore, that the clear provisions of section 3574, of the General Code, above quoted, require all licensees within the limits of the city as it exists to procure their licenses upon equal terms. The licensees of the village received their license subject to the law as it existed, which contemplated a right on the part of the two corporations to annex and thereby require the annullment of the village licenses and the procurement of a new license under the regulations prescribed by the city government. In so providing the statutes are clearly within the police power of the state and city.

This view makes a categorical answer to your questions unnecessary.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPOINTMENT BY PROBATE COURT OF A WOMAN AS SPECIAL PROBATION OFFICER TO CONVEY A GIRL TO THE GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL AT DELAWARE, OHIO—COMPENSATION.

When the probate court commits a girl to the girls' industrial school at Delaware, Ohio, the court may appoint a woman as special probation officer to convey such girl to such institution and the court may allow such woman so appointed such compensation as it sees fit within the limits provided by section 1662, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1914.

HON. H. C. WILCOX, Probate Judge, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 4, 1914, as follows:

> "Will you kindly inform me at your earliest convenience the fees to be paid persons appointed by the court, for conveying girls to the Girls' Industrial Home at Delaware, and also who should be appointed for this purpose.
> "Section 2108 of the General Code provides that the court must appoint a suitable woman for this purpose, and section 2109 provides that the costs incurred in the proceeding shall be the same as are paid in similar cases. If conveyance of boys to Lancaster might be considered similar proceedings, section 2093, which provides for the compensation of delivering youth to that school, might apply; however, by the law passed April 29, 1913, and found at pages 864 to 914, in volume 103, Laws of Ohio, sections 2108 and 2109 referred to, are repealed, and I find no other provisions therein designating who should be appointed to convey girls to the Delaware Industrial Home, and the fees for the person in whose custody they are taken."

Sections 2108 and 2109, General Code, to which you refer, read as follows:

> "At the time named in the order, the probate judge shall hear the testimony presented before him in the case. If it appears to his satisfaction that the girl is a suitable subject for the industrial home, he shall commit her thereto, and issue his warrant to some suitable woman to be appointed by him, commanding her to take charge of the girl and deliver her without delay to the superintendent of the home. If the judge deems it advisable so to do, he may designate the sheriff or other male person to accompany such girl and her custodian. This section shall be construed to apply to all courts having authority to commit to the Girls' Industrial Home."

"Section 2109. The fees of the probate judge, sheriff, and other costs incurred in the proceedings shall be the same as are paid in similar cases, and be paid by the proper county in the same manner."

These sections were repealed by senate bill No. 18, passed April 28, 1913 (103 O. L., p. 864 to 913), defining the powers and duties of the juvenile courts relative to delinquent and dependent children.

Section 1662 of the General Code was amended by this act referred to (103 O. L., 874) to read as follows:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character; one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as probation officer and there may be first, second and third assistants. Such chief probation officer and the first, second and third assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed thirty-five hundred dollars per annum, that of the first assistant shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and of the second and third shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum, each payable monthly. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

Section 1663 of the General Code, defining the duties of a probation officer, reads in part:

"Section 1663. * * * He may make arrests without warrant upon reasonable information or upon view of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, detain the person arrested pending the issuance of the warrant, and perform such other duties incident to their offices as the judge directs. * * *"

Since section 1662, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., p. 874, authorizes the appointment of a woman as probation officer and provides that probation officers shall serve "during the pleasure of the judge," it is clear that the judge may appoint a woman as probation officer to serve the period of time required in conveying a girl to the Girls' Industrial School at Delaware; and since under section 1662, General Code, it becomes the duty of a probation officer to "perform such other duties incident to their offices as the judge directs," it is equally clear that the court may, by an order to such specially appointed woman officer, make it her duty to convey to the Girls' Industrial School a girl sentenced to that institution by the court.

It is therefore my opinion, that when a girl has been sentenced to the Girls' Industrial School at Delaware, the juvenile judge may appoint some suitable woman as special probation officer, to convey such girl to the Girls' Industrial School, and such probation officer may receive such compensation for such service as the court sees fit within the limits provided by section 1662, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A RESIDENT OF THE STATE OF OHIO, WHO IS APPOINTED TRUSTEE UNDER A WILL OF A DECEDENT OF ILLINOIS, MUST LIST SHARES OF STOCK FOR TAXATION IN THE OHIO COUNTY IN WHICH HE RESIDES, THOUGH CERTIFICATES THEREOF ARE KEPT IN MICHIGAN.

An individual resident of the state of Ohio, who is appointed trustee under a will of a decedent of Illinois, the estate of whom was administered in that state, and holds stock in a Michigan corporation, for the purpose of paying the income therefrom to certain beneficiaries, one of whom resides in Ohio, without general power to re-invest, must list the shares of stock for taxation in the Ohio county in which he resides, though the certificates thereof are kept in Michigan.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 27, 1914, you requested my opinion upon the following question:

> " 'A' is a trustee under the will of 'B,' who at his decease was a resident of Chicago, Ill., and whose estate was there administered. 'A' is a resident of Ohio. The terms of the trust are that the trustee shall pay the annual income of the estate up to a certain amount to one beneficiary who lives at Chicago, and the surplus to another beneficiary who resides in Ohio. The corpus of the estate so held in trust consists of stock in a certain Michigan manufacturing corporation, and the income consists of dividends on such stock (although the stock is at present not paying any dividends whatever).
> "Question. Should 'A' as trustee list the shares of stock belonging to the trust for taxation in the Ohio county in which he resides?"

Having been referred to counsel for the trustee I addressed a letter to them on August 5th, inquiring with respect to possible facts in addition to those submitted by you, but have received no answer.

Therefore, the answer which I shall give to your letter, in order to avoid further delay, will cover more than one possible state of facts.

The statutes which are applicable to the situation are phrased in very general language, viz.:

> "Section 5370. Each person of full age and sound mind shall list the personal property of which he is the owner and all moneys in his possession, all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him as agent or attorney, or on account of any other person or persons * * *. The property of * * * person for whose benefit property is held in trust (shall be listed) by the trustee.

"Section 5328. All real or personal property in this state * * * and all moneys, credits, investments and bonds, stocks or otherwise, of persons residing in this state shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom."

On the face of these statutes a serious question seems to arise, whether intangible property, such as stocks, bonds, moneys and credits, held by a resident of this state for the use and benefit of a person residing outside of the state, is subject to taxation in Ohio at all. However, this question seems to be settled by the decision in Tafel vs. Lewis, 75 O. S., 182, wherein it was held in the language of the syllabus that:

"Bonds coming in this state into the possession of a resident executor who derives his authority under the will by appointment of the probate court of the county of his residence, are taxable in this state, notwithstanding that the will was executed and probated in a foreign country and the testator was at the time of his decease a non-resident of this state, and all beneficiaries are likewise non-residents."

This decision is authority for the proposition that a resident executor having possession of bonds must return them for taxation, although neither the decedent nor the beneficiary were residents of the county or state. No distinction was made, nor could have been made in that case between the duty of an executor to list and the duty of any trustee in the premises, although the language of section 5370, supra, with respect to the duty of executors and administrators is somewhat clearer than that with respect to the duty of trustees. I think, therefore, that all questions arising out of the fact that the decedent was a non-resident, and that one of the beneficiaries, whose rights are preferred to the rights of a resident beneficiary, is also a non-resident, may be eliminated.

In Tafel vs. Lewis, however, the record shows two facts which may have been material, one of which does not exist in the present case, and the other of which does not appear from your statement, viz.:

1. The executor in Tafel vs. Lewis acquired his authority to act as such in Hamilton county from the probate court of that county.

2. The executor had actual physical possession of the bonds in Hamilton county.

Of course, in the case submitted by you no Ohio court has any direct jurisdiction or control over the trustee; but it does not appear whether or not the trustee has actual and physical possession of the shares of stock in the Ohio county in which he resides, or elsewhere in Ohio. This is one of the facts concerning which I wrote to his counsel.

There is still another fact which may be gleaned from the record in Tafel vs. Lewis, which does not appear in your statement. It appeared that by reason of his office as executor the plaintiff in Tafel vs. Lewis had possession and control of the bonds in question with a view to administering the estate in a managerial way, i. e. the court, which was a Hamilton county tribunal, could order the executor to dispose of the estate and convert it into other forms which might seem best for the beneficiaries under the will. This fact did not seem to be regarded by the court as material (and, in fact, neither of the other two facts which I have noted were commented upon in the court's opinion), but it may serve to create distinction between Tafel vs. Lewis and the case which you submit, as well as to emphasize whatever importance may attach to the fact that no Ohio court exerts any direct control over the trustee which has already been mentioned. The distinction might arise should it appear that the terms of the trust are such as to vest in the trustee or the court no discretion with respect to the reinvestment of the trust funds, that is, the trustee is merely to hold the actual shares of stock and to pay the dividends thereon to the designated beneficiaries, under no circumstances being empowered to convert the estate into other forms or kinds of property. Should that be the case there would be a difference between the facts which you present and those presented in Tafel vs. Lewis. Counsel for the trustee relied upon the case of Hawk vs. Bonn, 6 C. C., 452. The syllabus of the case (though not official) amply states the facts and the conclusion of the court therein as follows:

> "H, a resident of New York, died in that state testate, having appointed four executors of his last will and testament, who were also to some extent made testamentary trustees. Three of the persons so appointed lived in New York. One had domicile in Erie county, Ohio, though spending about two-thirds of his time, his family with him, in New York, where he had business interests. One executor failed to qualify, one qualified and subsequently resigned on account of ill health—leaving the other two, who duly qualified, in charge of the estate—one residing in New York and the other in Ohio, as aforesaid. The property of the estate was all held in New York by the executors, none of it being brought into Ohio.
> "The executors qualified before, and reported to the Surrogate's court of New York.
> "Under these circumstances the auditor of Erie county, Ohio, claimed the right, and attempted to place at least one-half of the personal property of the estate, consisting of bonds, stocks and securities, upon the tax duplicate of said county, for taxation.
> "Held: That he could not rightly do so.
> "Held, also. That plaintiff had a remedy by injunction to prevent him from doing so."

In the oral opinion of Judge Haynes, liberal quotation is made from numerous authorities from other states, among them,

Lewis vs. Chester County, 60 Pa. State 235, 119 N. Y. 137, 50 Md. 379.

In these decisions, as quoted by Judge Haynes, I find intimations to the effect that a state has no jurisdiction to tax property in the hands of a trustee answerable to a court of another jurisdiction, the reason being that such a trustee is not really a "trustee" under the law of the state of his residence at all. But Judge Haynes further comments upon the case of Grant vs. Jones, 39 O. S. 506, and particularly certain language of the opinion in that case, as follows:

> "Our statute clearly adopts that rule. Whenever the person holding such choses in action resides in Ohio, he must list for taxation such credits, whether he holds them as owner, guardian, trustee or agent. If they are held within the state in either capacity, they are within the—jurisdiction of the state for purposes of taxation."
> (The italics are those of Judge Haynes.)

Referring again to the Pennsylvania case, Judge Haynes says:

> "It will be perceived that the supreme court of that state held that where the trustee (who derived her power from a will probated in the state of New York and under the laws of New York, and none whatever from Pennsylvania), had brought the property within the state, had loaned it and held the notes and mortgages in her own name, that the property was so far under the jurisdiction of its laws that it should be taxed within the state and the property not brought within the state was not subject to taxation."

From this language it would seem that the pivotal point in the case in the judgment of Judge Haynes was not that the trust estate was created under the laws of the state of New York, and that the trustees were answerable to the courts of that state, but rather that, as stated in the syllabus, "the property of the estate was all held in New York by the executors, none of it being brought into Ohio."

Judge Hayne's conclusion, as stated in the opinion, is as follows:

"In the case at bar, the facts of the case clearly show that the evidence of indebtedness, stocks and bonds, were never brought into the state of Ohio, never came within its jurisdiction in any manner or form, never came within its jurisdiction and laws. Mr. Moss does not hold the property by virtue of the laws of Ohio, never brought it here for investment, never invested it here in any manner or form, and we think that there is a broad distinction between a party who holds property in his own right, invested in personal securities in another state, and thereby subjects it to the laws of his domicile, and a party who holds property in trust, which is situated or invested in another state and is under the control of the laws of the other state. It would seem to be unjust to an estate of this kind, to subject it to the rule of taxation of this state.

"Mr. Hawk became acquainted with Mr. Moss in the state of New York, Mr. Moss residing there at least half of the time—perhaps more than half of his time—he kept house there, his family was there; he spent his winters in New York, his summers here. For purposes of his own, either as a matter of taste, or because it was his birthplace, or something of that kind, he chose to consider Ohio as his residence, and voted there. He might, without any change of situation, as far as he was concerned, have elected to vote in New York; if he had chosen to have New York as his domicile, he could have done it by saying so and acting accordingly.

"Under this condition of affairs, Hawk appointed him as one of his executors. I suppose it is the last thing he thought of doing to place his property within the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio for any purpose whatsoever, and it seems to us that the true law, the case, the equities of the case, the right of the case is with the plaintiffs in this action, and we therefore hold that the plaintiff is entitled to his injunction.

"It is said that the property was not taxed to the full value of the property within the state of New York. We think that makes no difference in regard to the question that is to be decided here. The property is, as we hold, subject to taxation in the state of New York. If they do not tax it to the full amount they ought to tax it, or to the full amount to which they have the right to tax it, it is the fault of the authorities there and does not at all vary or change or alter the question of jurisdiction over the property or the right to tax it, or the place where it should be taxed."

Another case relied upon by counsel for the trustee is Goodsite vs. Lane, 139 Fed. 593. While the facts in this case are somewhat similar to those in Hawk vs. Bonn, a careful examination discloses that certain distinctions between the two cases exist. In Hawk vs. Bonn, the resident of Ohio through whom the right to tax was claimed, was one of two executors, and in that capacity and under the direction of the New York court, was acting at the time the litigation arose with his co-executor, and maintained an office in the city of New York on behalf of the estate where the affairs of the estate were managed in every way.

In Goodsite vs. Lane, the resident of Ohio, through whom the right to tax was asserted, was one of two testamentary trustees acting under the will of a resident of the state of Connecticut for the benefit of a citizen of New York and a citizen of Ohio, who were the joint beneficiaries. As such trustees they were appointed by a probate court in Connecticut to fill vacancies in the trusteeships occurring some nineteen years after the death of the testator.

Subsequent to their original appointment an arrangement was made whereby the two trustees resigned their joint trust, the trust estate was divided and each was appointed for one-half the estate, the resident of Ohio being trustee for the beneficiary who had originally resided in Ohio, but at the time the litigation arose had removed to Connecticut and there resided. The corpus of the estate consisted of stocks and bonds in Connecticut and New York corporations. These securities were kept deposited in a bank and trust company in the city of New York. The trustee had power under the will to reinvest, but as a matter of fact, never made any reinvestment except, after personal consultation with the beneficiary or her agent in the city of New York or at her home in Connecticut. No part of the estate or its income had ever been brought into the state of Ohio.

The reasoning of Judge Richard's opinion is succinctly stated in the following paragraph:

> "As stated in the leading case of state tax on foreign held bonds, 15 Wall. 300, 319, 21 L. Ed. 179, 'the power of taxation * * * is necessarily limited to subjects within the jurisdiction of the state. These subjects are persons, property and business.' The question here is, was either this Connecticut estate, or its trustee, as such, within the jurisdiction of Ohio? The statute of Ohio provides that 'all property, whether real or personal, in this state * * * and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation,' section 2731, Revised Statutes, 1890. As construed by the supreme court of Ohio, 'the first clause evidently embraces the tangible property, real or personal, situated in this state, irrespective of the residence of the owner, and the second clause embraces all intangible property of persons residing in this state, irrespective of where the subject of the property may be situated.' Myers vs. Seaberger, 45 Ohio St. 232, 235; 12 N. E. 796. Applying the rule mentioned, supra, the state of Ohio taxes tangible property located in the state, because of its jurisdiction of the property; and it taxes intangible property located without the state, because of its jurisdiction of the persons residing in the state who hold it. The property involved in this case had never been brought within the state of Ohio, and, therefore, could not be taxed upon the ground that it was tangible property within the state. The tax must be sustained, if at all, upon the ground that the estate was the property of a person residing in Ohio, who, being within the jurisdiction of the state, and owing it an obligation, might be compelled to contribute to its support out of his property, wherever located. Kirtland vs. Hotchkiss, 100 U. S., 491, 498; 25 L. Ed. 558. The exaction must find its justification in the privileges and protection enjoyed in the state, under its laws, by the person taxed, in the capacity in which taxed. The person taxed must therefore be in the jurisdiction of the state not only personally, but officially, in the capacity in which he is taxed, and in that capacity must be enjoying the benefits referred to. In the case of a trustee, he must be exercising his office of trustee within the state, and be enjoying, as trustee, privileges of value to the estate, for which it is just the estate should pay. An examination of the cases will show that, where this tax has been sustained, either the trust estate or the beneficiary, or the trustee, as trustee, was receiving benefits from the state, for which it was only fair the trustee should pay. Price vs. Hunter (C. C.), 34 Fed. 355, 356; borough of Carlisle vs. Marshall, 36 Pa. 397, 402; Lewis vs. county of Chester, 60 Pa. 325, 330; Guthrie vs. Ry. Co., 158 Pa., 433, 439, 27 Atl. 1052; Mayor of Baltimore vs. Stirling, 29 Md., 48; Appeal Tax Court vs. Gill, 50 Md., 377, 396; Mackay vs. San Francisco, 128 Cal., 678, 61 Pac., 382; Trustees vs. City Council, 90 Ga., 634, 17 S. E., 61, 20 L. R. A., 151. But where the estate and beneficiaries were outside the state, and the trustee only resided, and did not act as trustee within the state, the tax was not sustained. Hawk vs. Bonn, auditor, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. R., 452; People ex rel. Darrow vs. Coleman, 119 N., Y. 137, 23 N. E., 488, 7 L. R. A., 407. In the case of Gallup vs. Schmidt, 154 Ind., 196, 56 N. E., 443, an estate was held taxable in Indiana, where the trustee was appointed, although he was a resident of New Hampshire; the court holding that, having been appointed in Indiana, he was to be regarded, in his capacity of trustee, as a resident of that state. Page 200 of 154 Ind., page 443 of 56 N. E. In the present case neither the trust estate nor the beneficiary nor the trustee in any proper sense, was within the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio. The trust estate was in New York. The trustee was appointed in Connecticut and acted wholly outside of Ohio. The fact that as an individual he resided in Ohio could not authorize the taxation of this foreign estate, which had received no benefit whatever from the laws of Ohio."

This case being compared with Hawk vs. Bonn and Tafel vs. Lewis, supra, suggests certain other distinctions. It will be noted that Judge Richards does not decide whether shares of stock (of which the case before him consisted) are tangible property, so that if the certificates thereof are physically present in a state, the jurisdiction to tax them attached. He does not decide whether a trustee, as such, must be appointed by or under authority of a tribunal of the state in order to be a "trustee" within the meaning of the statute. He does not decide whether, in a given case, a trustee appointed by a court of another state, and executing his trust for the benefit of a non-resident beneficiary, would become amenable to the taxation laws of the state in which he resides, should he actually act as trustee in that state, i. e., manage and control the estate from his residence in the state.

Judge Richards does not decide whether or not the residence of the beneficiary is a material fact upon which the jurisdiction of the state may depend. He merely decides that where none of the conditions just discussed exist, i. e., where the certificates of stock are not brought within the state, the beneficiaries do not reside within the state, the trustee does not perform any of his official functions in the state, the jurisdiction of the state does not attach to the trust estate merely by reason of his residence in the state.

Goodsite vs. Lane, then is like Hawk vs. Bonn, in that all jurisdictional elements found lacking in the former by Judge Richards were likewise lacking in the latter, as a comparison of the facts will show. It was unlike Tafel vs. Lewis in that three elements of jurisdiction, presented in the latter, were lacking in Goodsite vs. Lane, viz.: the jurisdiction of an Ohio court; the physical presence in Ohio of the securities constituting the estate, and the activity of the executor in his official capacity in the state of Ohio.

Goodsite vs. Lane is unlike either of the other cases discussed in that the person to whom the jurisdiction of the state asserted in the two cases as an executor, whereas in Goodsite vs. Lane, he was a testamentary trustee.

One other fact remains to be noticed before these decisions, for the moment, are left, viz.: although the jurisdiction and control of the court were the facts commented upon in Hawk vs. Bond, nothing is said about this matter in Goodsite vs. Lane. This was because, principally, the trustee in that case, although appointed by the probate court of Connecticut, was governed primarily by the will rather than the court with respect to the management of the estate, having power to invest and re-invest at his discretion.

These three cases themselves do not furnish a satisfactory answer to the question submitted. They do no more than suggest the tests for determining whether, in a given instance, a state acquires jurisdiction to tax a trust estate, or any part of it, by reason of the fact that the trustee is a resident of the state. The test must be furnished by considering the existence of certain facts additional to the mere residence of the trustee, which I venture to state as follows:

1. The physical presence of the evidences of indebtedness or muniments of title in the taxing estate.
2. The nature of the property held by the person.
3. The jurisdiction of the court appointed or having authority over the person who acts in a representative capacity.
4. The capacity in which the representative acts, i. e., whether as administrator, executor, trustee, receiver, etc.
5. The residence of the beneficiary.
6. The actual investment of the trust estate, or any part of it, in the taxing state.
7. Whether or not the representative acts in his official capacity in the taxing state, i. e., conducts the business of the estate, or otherwise manages its affairs at his residence.

The first two of these possible criteria may be considered together. As stated in the above opinion of Judge Richards in Goodsite vs. Lane, supra, the physicial presence of trust property in the taxing state is a material fact, when that property is such as to possess a situs of its own for purposes of taxation independently of the residence or domicile of the legal owner thereof. Thus, if the property in question (as it is not) were tangible, personal property, and it were present in the state of Ohio it would be taxable here; and its absence from the state of Ohio would be sufficient to defeat Ohio's jurisdiction to tax it, even though other jurisdictional facts might exist. The distinction between tangible and intangible property, for purposes of taxation, is rather clearly drawn, especially so under the Ohio statutes. I think Judge Richards has correctly concluded that moneys, credits and investments in bonds, stocks or otherwise, are to be regarded as intangible property and distinct from other species of personal property under our laws.

As to such intangible property, the general rule is that it is taxable at the residence of its owner on the maxim "mobilia sequntur personam," but where such property is held in trust for the use and benefit of another, this maxim does not universally operate as to fix the situs of such property in accordance with the residence of the mere legal owner, as the cases already discussed disclose. In such cases it may be questioned as to whether or not the physical location of the tangible evidences of the intangible rights represented by stocks, bonds and securities, is material. Upon examination of numerous authorities, I am of the opinion that this fact is immaterial. It is true the question is mooted in Goodsite vs. Lane and Hawk vs. Bonn, supra, and that a suggestion along this line is found in Tafel vs. Lewis. That is to say, in all of these cases the presence or absence, as the case may be, of the credits sought to be taxed from the state of Ohio, was commented upon, but in none of them was this fact made determinative. On the other hand, authorities quoted with approval in the cases already cited clearly establish the opposite conclusion. Thus in Mackay vs. San Francisco, 128 Cal., 678, the subject of the taxation consisted of certain bonds, which at the time of the assessment, were kept in New York City. The supreme court of California held that that state might lawfully impose a tax upon the interest in such bonds of one of two trustees who was a resident of that state, the other trustee being a resident of the state of Nevada. In Guthrie vs. Railway, 158 Pa., St. 433, the Pennsylvania trustee of the estate of a decedent of the District of Columbia kept the securities belonging to the state, consisting of certain railway bonds, in the District of Columbia, but was nevertheless held taxable on their account in the state of Pennsylvania.

I think a careful reading of the decision in Hawk vs. Bonn, supra, will disclose that when Judge Haynes speaks of property being "brought within the jurisdiction of the state," he means something more than merely transferring the physical things that constitute muniments of title or evidences of indebtedness to a location within the territory of the state. At any rate, whatever may be the true rule, I am satisfied that the mere absence of such evidences of title or indebtedness from the taxing state will not defeat the jurisdiction of that state, other circumstances sufficient to confer jurisdiction being present.

Nor have I any doubt that shares of stock, or rather certificates of such shares are to be classed with other kinds of intangible property, such as moneys, credits and investments in bonds, for the purpose of the present question. Much might be said as to the exact nature of a share of stock and that of a certificate thereof. It is sufficient to state however, that a share of stock in a corporation is personal property, and is more than a mere interest in the capital and property of the corporation itself; so that it constitutes a distinct subject of taxation.

But as personal property, it is intangible, i. e., it is a right, or rather, a bundle of rights consisting of the right to participate in the management of the corporation, in its dividends and in the distribution of the corporate property upon the dissolution of the corporation. This right exists upon subscription and payment of the amount prescribed, whether a certificate has been issued or not. The right, however, is an assignable one, and in order to facilitate assignment certificates are issued. These certificates are not negotiable, as in the case of bonds, nor are they evidences of indebtedness, as in the case of bonds, notes and credits, but in my opinion they sustain the same relation to the substantive right which they represent as is sustained by such securities as notes and bonds.

It is probably true that certificates of stock, as such, are subject to certain process in rem, but for purposes of taxation I do not see how any distinction can be drawn between such certificates and other securities. All are alike and should be classed as intangible property, and I am of the opinion, notwithstanding the intimations found in the decision already made (and which may be explained on other reasons which I shall hereinafter point out) that mere physical possession of certificates of stock is of itself neither sufficient, on the one hand, to confer upon Ohio jurisdiction to tax them in the hands of a trustee, nor, when lacking, is that fact alone sufficient to defeat the jurisdiction of the state.

Therefore, I have reached the conclusion that, in the case mentioned by you, it is immaterial whether the actual certificates of stock, representing the shares constituting a trust estate, are held in Ohio or not.

The next two points likewise may be considered together. It seems that a different rule with respect to the significance of the jurisdiction of the court who appoints the person who acts in a representative capacity, may obtain in the case of executors and administrators on the one hand, and that of testamentary trustees on the other hand. This distinction is exemplified in the two cases of Lewis vs. County of Chester, referred to in Hawk vs. Bonn, supra, and Guthrie vs. Railway, supra. It is also found very sharply drawn in Mackay vs. San Francisco, supra. The rule as exemplified in these authorities is that where the estate of a deceased person is still in process of administration, it may be regarded as in the custody of the court of probate; so that unless under the direction of that court a part of the estate is before settlement invested in another state and there managed by the executor or administrator who resides in such other state, the situs of the intangible assets of the estate is fixed by the jurisdiction of the appointing court.

See also Gallup vs. Schmidt, 154 Ind., 196.

But as to testamentary trustees deriving their authority to act from the will and taking as distributees from the executors or administrators, they are not regarded as officers of the court in the same sense as are such executors or administrators. The estate coming into their possession is no longer regarded as in the custody of the court, but is in their custody, and subject to their management and control, and this too although the approval of the court may be required to certain of their official acts. In such cases the testator is deemed to have intended that the estate should come into the full possession of the trustee during the life of the trust, and if the trustee happens to reside in a foreign state, his intention is deemed to be tantamount to transferring the estate from the state of probate to that of the trustee's residence. This rule, however, must be qualified as is at once apparent when Goodsite vs. Lane, supra is considered. The mere residence of the trustee, or one of them, if there are more than one, is not to control if the estate as such does not actually come into the foreign state. So where, as in that case, the beneficiary resided in Connecticut and the trustee actually conducted all the business of the estate in Connecticut or New York, and the corpus of the estate in a physical sense never came into Ohio, it was held that this state possessed no jurisdiction to tax the resident trustee.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that in the case of a trustee, as distinguished from an executor, jurisdiction of the court of probate is immaterial as affording a criterion by which to test the power of a given state to tax the estate in the hands of a trustee.

Is the residence of the beneficiary over a criterion of jurisdiction? It is clear upon the authorities already cited, and especially Tafel vs. Lewis, supra that the non- residence of a beneficiary is not sufficient to defeat jurisdiction, whether the officer is an executor or trustee, if securities are in his possession, and he derives his authority from an Ohio court, but in the opinion of Richards J., he mentions the residence of the beneficiary as being a possible ground of jurisdiction. This fact was regarded seemingly as material, although not necessarily controlling, in Guthrie vs. Railway supra as it is especially mentioned by the court in its statement of facts and referred to again in the opinion. It is, of course, true that the residence of a beneficiary in Ohio does not render the beneficiary, as such, liable for taxes on account of his beneficial interest in the estate. It is the trustee who is liable if anyone is liable. However, the fact that a trust is created for the benefit of an Ohio beneficiary, and vested in an Ohio trustee, is some ground, at least, upon which to found the jurisdiction of Ohio to tax the estate in the hands of the trustee.

In this connection I point out that in Guthrie vs. Railway, supra, the terms of the trust were quite similar to those stated by you with respect to the residence of the beneficiary, that is to say, the first or preferred was a non-resident, and the other beneficiaries were residents of Pennsylvania, while in the case you submit the preferred beneficiary was a resident of Illinois, and what might be termed the residuary beneficiary resides in Ohio. So that to the extent that the residence of some beneficiaries in Pennsylvania was material in the Guthrie case, the residence of one beneficiary in Ohio is material in the case submitted by you.

While I am not entirely clear as to the significance of the fact of the beneficiary's residence, I incline to the view that it may be considered in connection with other facts hereinafter to be commented upon as tending to establish Ohio's jurisdiction in the case you submit.

I have mentioned the actual investment of the trust estate or part of it in the taxing state, because this is a circumstance dwelt upon in all of the authorities which

I have cited. For example, in Lewis vs. County of Chester, supra, the actual investment of part of the trust estate in Pennsylvania by the executrix was held sufficient to confer upon Pennsylvania jurisdiction to tax that part, although as to the remainder of the estate the jurisdiction was held to be lacking on account of the fact that the estate was in probate in the state of New York. But, under the facts as you submit them, I take it that this question is immaterial. I gather that the trust estate was created in and to certain shares of stock, and that the trustee has no authority to invest and reinvest. That being the case, the question of business situs as exemplified in the decision already cited, and in cases like,

Grant vs. Jones, 39 O. S. 506.
Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S. 252.
Catlin vs. Hull, 21 Vt. 152.
Walker vs. Jack, 88 Fed. 576.

and other similar decisions, is not present. That is to say there being no "investment" whatever the question as to the jurisdiction of the state to tax growing out of the investment of the trust fund within its borders, is absent from the case. There remains one element which I think is material, and which is made so by reason of the nature of the securities of which the estate consists. I refer to the fact that regardless of where the shares of stock are kept, all that could be done with reference to them by the trustee must be done in the state of Ohio. That is to say he is not the trustee of the fund, but rather the trustees of certain shares of stock. To be sure these shares of stock are in a Michigan corporation, and stockholders' meetings are doubtless held in that state, but lacking the power to dispose of the stock, or having it and not exercising it, his function with respect to the shares is precisely that of any resident of Ohio who might have shares in the same corporation. That is to say, as trustee, he is entitled to draw the dividends on the stock whenever they are declared; in his person he holds legal title to the shares. The laws of Ohio protect him in the ownership of such shares to the same extent that they protect any other citizen in the ownership of the shares of stock in a foreign corporation. Therefore, it is reasonable to hold that his obligation to the state as trustee growing out of his legal title to the shares and his residence in Ohio should be the same as that of any other owner of stock in a foreign corporation, especially since he is acting as trustee, and not as executor; since he is not required to discharge any managerial duties or functions with respect to the fund represented by the shares, but merely to act as the legal custodian of them, and since one of the beneficiaries for whom the estate was created is a resident of Ohio.

In short, then, I find the case to be more nearly like that of Guthrie vs. Railway, supra than it is like any of the other cases above cited and discussed. The only element which that case possesses, which is absent in the case you present, is the fact that the bonds which comprised the estate therein were those of a Pennsylvania corporation; but the court did not consider this fact material.

Even if the trustee in the case cited by you does possess the power of re-investment (though obviously he has not exercised it) the jurisdiction of Ohio to tax the estate in his hands could not be defeated except upon a showing of facts fully equivalent in importance to Goodsite vs. Lane, supra, viz.: that the stocks had never been brought into Ohio, that the business of managing the estate had always been carried on outside of Ohio, and that the beneficiary was a non-resident of the state.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that upon any interpretation of the facts which you submit "A" should pay taxes upon the stock held by him in trust in the Ohio county in which he resides.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM.

Since preparing the above opinion I have received an answer to the letter which I addressed to counsel for the trustee in question, from which it appears that the stock certificates representing the stock held by the trustee are located at Detroit, Mich., and that the trustee does not have power under the will to convert the shares of stock into money and to reinvest the fund, except in the event of the termination of the corporation, in which case, of course, he is empowered to invest the share of the corporate assets which would come into his hands as the legal owner of the shares of stock.

On these facts I am of the opinion, for reasons already stated, that the trustee should list these shares of stock in the county of his residence in Ohio.

HOW PROSECUTIONS BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH FOR VIOLATION OF STANDING ORDERS MUST BE INSTITUTED—ENFORCEMENT OF SANITARY RULES AND REGULATIONS OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—PROSECUTION OF OFFENDERS FOR VIOLATION OF RULES AND REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD.

A prosecution by the state board of health for the violation of standing orders or regulations made by it must be instituted by the secretary of the state board of health on the direction of the president thereof.

Under the provisions of section 1238, General Code, local boards of health, health authorities and officials, police officers, sheriffs, constables and other officers and employes of the state, or of the county, city or township, are required to enforce the sanitary rules and regulations of the state board of health, the local officers and authorities named in said section are likewise authorized to prosecute offenders for violation of the sanitary rules and regulations of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1914.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, City Solicitor, Niles, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 12, 1914, you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "I wish to submit for your opinion the following case which bears upon the rules and regulations of the Ohio state board of health, governing the construction, installation and inspection of plumbing and drainage, as adopted July 23, 1913:
> "Contrary to sections 18, 67 and 102, 'A' installs certain plumbing fixtures in his house. The work shows for itself that in violation of section 18 joints are not wiped, and contrary to section 67 a sink trap has no vent pipe. The local board of health has appointed the sanitary policeman to inspect plumbing work, but contrary to section 102 he had no notice from 'A' to inspect the job until after a part of it had been covered over.
> "The local board of health has never regularly adopted rules to govern work of the above nature. However, it has received copies of the state board's rules and regulations and has gone on record as a board to respect said rules and regulations.

"As to the authority of the state board to pass such rules and regulations, I believe this is properly acquired through section 1237 of the General Code of Ohio. The question then arises as to the manner of enforcing and punishing for violations.

"In the case above cited can any person make complaint against 'A' as in ordinary cases of misdemeanor, or is the action confined to the state board through its proper officers making complaint?

"Where the local board has adopted a code of rules and regulations covering these requirements, the question above would not arise because action would properly be brought for a violation of the local rules."

By section 1237, General Code, the state board of health is given power to make special or standing orders for such sanitary matters as it deems best to control by a general rule, and undoubtedly it was in the assertion of this power that the regulations mentioned in your communication were adopted by said board. However, no question is made by you as to the power of the state board of health to adopt the regulations mentioned, nor as to their validity in any other respect. The sole question presented is as to the proper person or authority to file complaint and institute prosecution for the violation of the regulations.

You state that the local board of health has never regularly adopted rules to govern work of the above nature, but that it has, however, received copies of the state board's rules and regulations and has gone on record as a board to respect the same. It is plain that this action on the part of the local board of health with respect to the rules and regulations of the state board is in no wise effective to make the same regulations of the local board. This conclusion follows from the consideration that section 4413, General Code, provides with respect to local boards of health that orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded and certified, as are ordinances of a municipality, and it follows that regulations of local boards of health intended for observance by the general public can be made effective in no other way than as directed by this section of the General Code.

As pertinent to the question presented section 1247 provides:

"* * * The laws prescribing the modes of procedure, courts, practice, penalties or judgments applicable to local boards of health, shall apply to the state board of health and the violation of its rules and orders. * * *"

Applicable to the violation of orders and regulations of local boards of health, section 4414, General Code, provides as follows:

"Whoever violates any provision of this chapter, or any order or regulation of the board of health made in pursuance thereof, or obstructs or interferes with the execution of such order, or wilfully or illegally omits to obey such order, shall be fined not to exceed one hundred dollars or imprisoned for not to exceed ninety days, or both, but no person shall be imprisoned under this section for the first offense, and the prosecution shall always be as and for a first offense, unless the affidavit upon which the prosecution is instituted contains the allegation that the offense is a second or repeated offense."

By the provisions of section 1247, General Code, above quoted, the penalties provided in section 4414 apply in cases involving the violation of the orders and regulations of the state board of health, and with respect to prosecutions for such violations, said section 1247 further provides as follows:

"All prosecutions and proceedings by the state board of health for the violation of a provision of this chapter which the board is required to enforce, or for the violation of any of the orders or regulations of the board, shall be instituted by its secretary on the order of the president of the board. * * * All fines or judgments collected by the board shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of such board."

It, therefore, follows from a consideration of the provisions of this section that the only person authorized to institute a prosecution on behalf of the state board of health for a violation of the regulations mentioned in your communication, is the secretary of said board, and he is only authorized to do so on the order of the president of the board. However, the state board of health is not the only authority charged with the duty of enforcing rules and regulations adopted by it, and in this behalf section 1238 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Local boards of health, health authorities and officials, officers of state institutions, police officers, sheriffs, constables and other officers and employes of the state of any county, city or township, shall enforce the quarantine and sanitary rules and regulations adopted by the state board of health."

It is not apparent how the local officers and authorities named in this section can in all cases effectually enforce the rules and regulations of the state board of health without the right to institute prosecutions for violations of said rules and regulations, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the local authorities of your city charged with and assuming the duty of enforcing the regulations of the state board of health noted in your communication, have the authority to institute the prosecution for its violation. By virtue of the provisions of section 1247, General Code, such prosecutions should proceed as to the court and procedure in like manner as if the prosecution were for a violation of an order of the local board of health.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A DEMAND UPON A COUNTY AUDITOR AND TREASURER FOR ADVANCE PAYMENT OF MUNICIPAL TAXES, BEFORE SETTLEMENT, MAY BE MADE ONLY BY THE CITY TREASURER.

Demands upon the county auditor and treasurer for advance payment of municipal taxes before settlement, may be made only by the city treasurer. No board or officer whatever has authority to control the distribution among the several municipal funds so drawn from the county treasury and placed in the municipal treasury; such moneys belong, pro rata, to the several funds in the proportion determined by the municipal levies. The county commissioners have no function whatever to discharge with respect to such advance drafts; the trustees of the sinking fund of the city have no authority to make demand upon the county auditor and treasurer for advance payments on account of the city sinking fund levies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 5th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "1. Who are the proper local authorities to represent the city in making a demand upon the county auditor for municipal funds, particularly as to the distribution of such advances between municipal funds?
> "2. If a board of county commissioners, by resolution, make distribution of such advance, giving to the sinking fund commission of a city its proportionate share of said advance, may such action of the county commissioners be disregarded by the city auditor and city treasurer, and the sinking funds of the city be denied any portion thereof?
> "3. Have the trustees of the sinking funds of a city the authority under section 2692 to make demand upon the county auditor, by passing the proper resolution, for an advance due to the sinking funds?
> "4. May the county auditor, or city auditor and city treasurer credit to any municipal fund more than its proportionate share (as shown by the levy) of the amount collected at the time the advance payment is made "

Section 2692, General Code, properly interpreted furnishes, I think, a complete answer to all of your questions.

It is as follows:

> "When the local authorities so request, the county auditor may draw, and the county treasurer shall pay on such draft to township, city and village treasurers, and the treasurer of any board of education, from June twentieth and December twentieth to the date of the semi-annual distribution, each year, any sum not exceeding two-thirds of the current collection of taxes for such local authorities, respectively, in advance of the semi-annual settlements."

It is obvious that this section is ambiguous. The term "local authorities" as therein used seems to designate the "township, city and village treasurers" who are the only such authorities mentioned in the section, but this conclusion is by no means certain.

Regarding the section then as ambiguous and tracing its legislative history, I find that the term in question has been in the statute since it was incorporated in the Revised Statutes of 1880 as section 1123 thereof. Looking to the code of 1880, I find that the section 70 O. L., 183, is given as the source of that section.

The said act is in full as follows:

"Be it Enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

"Section 1. That the treasurer of each county in this state shall, between the fifteenth and thirtieth days of December, and fifteenth and thirtieth days of June, annually, pay, upon the warrant of the county auditor, to each township treasurer, city treasurer, treasurer of incorporated village. and treasurer of each city or village board of education in his county, a sum equal, as near as may be, to two-thirds of the current collection of taxes assessed and collected for and in behalf of these several corporations, townships or boards, which shall be held and treated as advance payment in behalf of the several township, city, village and school funds.

"Section 2. That the county auditor of each county in this state shall, upon demand being made by the several township treasurers, city treasurers, treasurers of incorporated villages, and treasurers of school boards, issue his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of such officers, for a sum as aforesaid of two-thirds, as near as may be, of the current collections in behalf of said townships, cities, villages and school boards, specifying in said warrant the amount belonging to each of the several funds.

"Section 3. The auditor and treasurer of each county shall keep a just and accurate account of the money paid to each township, city, village and school board, for final adjustment of the semi-annual and annual settlements with the same officers."

It is apparent from an examination in the foregoing act that the legislative intention was that the proper authorities to make demand upon the county treasury for advancements should be the treasurers of the local subdivisions.

Of course, the verbal changes made merely in process of codification are presumed not to have evinced an intention to change the law. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that what little evidence of intention is actually apparent on the face of section 2692, General Code, in its present form is borne out by the legislative history of the section and that the local treasurers are proper local authorities to make demand upon the county auditor for advancements on account of local tax distribution.

Therefore answering your first question in part, I am of the opinion that the proper local authority to represent the city in making a demand upon the county auditor for municipal funds is the city treasurer.

But your first question also asks as to where authority is lodged to distribute such an advancement between municipal funds.

This question assumes that there is authority to make at will a given distribution of an advancement. I am not so sure that this is the case, and shall first, therefore, examine the question as to whether or not any officer has authority, or discretion, to control the distribution of advance payments as among the several municipal funds.

Section 2692, General Code, in its present form is almost perfectly ambiguous on this point, unless presumptions are indulged in. Putting it in another way, there is ground for the conclusion that section 2692 is simply silent on this point; and that the question must be answered upon the assumption that it is so silent.

Let this angle of view then be developed. The proceeds of the collection of taxes in the hands of the county treasurer constitute an undivided fund. When a tax payer, pays his taxes to the county treasurer, he is contributing pro rata to all the governmental purposes for which levies have been made. This is true, I think, without statutory provisions, but in the case of real property taxes, it is made plain by the provisions of section 2655, General Code, which is as follows:

> "If a person desires to pay only a portion of a tax charged on real estate otherwise than in such installments, such person shall pay a like proportion of all the taxes charged thereon for state, county, township or other purposes, exclusive of road taxes. No person shall be permitted to pay one or more of such taxes without paying the others in like proportion, except only when the collection of a particular tax is legally enjoined."

Now the money comes into the possession of the county treasurer, it is held by him before settlement or advance payment in a commingled mass, which consists of the fruits of the several levies. The relation of the levy to the fund is well understood, the one being the source to the other. Inasmuch as the undivided tax fund consists of a conglomeration of the proceeds of the collection of all levies, it follows that the money in it at a given time to the extent that any portion thereof may be said to belong to a municipality as the fruit of its levies, may likewise be said and to the same extent to belong equitably to the several municipal levies themselves. That is to say if at a given time there is in the undivided taxes in the hands of the county treasurer money which by calculation can be ascertained to belong to the municipality in an amount of say ten thousand dollars, it must be equally true that of that ten thousand dollars, three thousand dollars, for example, belongs to the sinking fund, three thousand dollars to the general fund, etc.

It will be borne in mind that I am discussing the hypothesis that the statutes are absolutely silent with respect to any power to apportion an advance payment as among the several municipal funds. Without elaborating the discussion further, I may say that I am of the opinion that if the statutes are silent in this particular, there is no such power, so that if the city treasurer makes demand upon the county auditor for an advance tax warrant, he has no right to specify that the draft shall be credited to a particular municipal levy, but must take on account of the municipality generally, and the money which he receives must be divided in proportion to the municipality's levies among the funds created thereby, unless a statute can be found expressly authorizing some other distribution.

What has been said rests upon two hypotheses:

1. That section 2692 is impossible of interpretation so as to furnish an answer to this part of your question.

2. That no other section of the General Code supplies an answer thereto.

The legislative history of section 2692 does furnish an answer which is quite consistent with the statement of the law, as it would exist in the absence of express provision of statutes, as I have above outlined it. It will be observed that section one of the original act in 70 O. L., 184, provided that the sum paid by the county treasurer to the city treasurer should be "held and treated as advance payment in behalf of the several * * * city * * * funds."

Furthermore, section two of the original act provided that the county auditor's warrant should specify "the amount belonging to each of the several funds" without conferring upon the city treasurer, or any other officer, or board, any power to control this specification. Of course, the county auditor in this transaction clearly acts in a ministerial capacity; so that any specification of the amount belonging to the several funds, which he would be required to make, would be on the basis of a mere mathematical calculation.

I am clearly of the opinion then that under the original law, which has in this respect never been amended, save in process of codification, no city authorities had any power or right to control the distribution among the city funds of advance payments from the tax collections, but that such advance payments were required to be credited pro rata to the several municipal funds for which levies had been made.

I think then that when the legislature omitted this machinery which was found in the original statutes in codifying the statute law of the state in 1880, the omission must have been due to the belief that such machinery was unnecessary because the automatic proportional distribution of advance payment among the several funds would be required by necessary implication in the absence of any express provision of statute.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that having regard to its legislative history, the necessary implication from present section 2692, General Code, is that there is no authority on the part of any one to control the distribution of advance payments of taxes to the city treasurer as between municipal funds.

Of course, section 2692, which is an old statute, would yield in this particular to more recently enacted provisions should this implication prove inconsistent with such other statutes, but I find no such inconsistent provisions. One would expect to find them, if at all, in the Municipal Code. They are not there, but on the contrary the following provisions and considerations consistent with what has already been said are found:

> "Sec. 3795. The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council.
> "Sec. 3797. At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof.
> "Sec. 5649-3d. At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Section 3795, supra, makes the city treasurer a mere ministerial officer with respect to the distribution of taxes of the corporation among the several funds. Sections 3797 and 5649-3d which provide for appropriations do not lodge in the council any authority to control the distribution of money belonging to the several funds, because appropriations are made from funds in the city treasury and not from the undivided taxes. In fact, the moment the tax moneys reach the city treasury they are automatically distributed to the several funds therein and council cannot act with respect to them at all until this distribution takes place.

This fact is further emphasized by the provisions of section 3799, General Code, which formerly authorized the transfer of one fund or part thereof to another fund. This section has been so amended as somewhat to limit its scope (see 103 O. L., 522), but in its present, as well as in its original form, it presupposes an automatic distribution in the first instance.

With respect to the sinking fund to which some of your questions relate, no distinction is observable. Section 4512, General Code, defines the relation of the sinking fund trustees as custodians of the sinking fund to the municipal treasurer in this respect which is as follows:

> "Sec. 4512. Upon demand of the board, the city auditor or village clerk shall report to it balances belonging to the city or village, to the credit of the sinking fund, interest accounts, or for any bonds issued for or by the corporation, and all officers or persons having them shall immediately pay them over to the trustees of the sinking fund, who shall deposit them in such place or places as the majority of such board shall select."

It is obvious that the sinking fund trustees have the right to have paid to them only such balances as belong "to the credit of the sinking fund," etc. The city auditor could then only certify as being to the credit of the sinking fund such portion of an advance demand on account of municipal levies as belongs to that fund.

I may mention that the bookkeeping with respect to the several municipal funds devolves upon the city auditor, or village clerk, as the case may be. His function in the premises is prescribed by section 4276, which provides as follows:

> "The auditor shall keep the books of the city, exhibit accurate statements of all moneys received and expended, and of all property owned by the city and the income derived therefrom, and of all taxes and assessments."

It is obvious that the auditor has no discretion in the premises.

From all these considerations then, I am of the opinion that no authorities either of the county or of the city have any discretionary power with respect to the distribution of advances between municipal funds.

Your remaining questions are perhaps answered by the discussion already indulged in.

As to your second question, I may remark:

1. That the county commissioners have absolutely nothing to do with the matter of advance drafts, so that their resolution would have no effect in the case.

2. That the city auditor and city treasurer have no authority to deny to the sinking fund of the city its proper proportion of an advance draft.

As to the third question which you ask, I am of the opinion that the trustees of the sinking fund have no authority to make demand upon the county auditor for an advance due to the sinking funds. The demand must be made by the city treasurer, and the payment of him belongs proportionally to all the funds. When payment has been made, then the trustees of the sinking fund under section 4512, General Code, may demand the sinking fund's share as therein provided.

Your fourth question may be generally answered in the negative upon the basis of the previous discussion.

I may add that your question does not require me to consider whether or not the city treasurer, who alone can be recognized by the county auditor in making a demand for advances on behalf of the city, could be compelled to make such a demand at the behest of the council on the theory that such control of the treasurer's acts is implied from council's power to "have the management and control of the finances * * * of the corporation," except as may be otherwise provided (section 4240, General Code); or at that of the trustees of the sinking fund, on the theory that the power to order the treasury to make an advance draft results from the power of such trustees to "have the management and control of such sinking fund." Accordingly, I express no opinion on this question, contenting myself with the statement, sufficient for the purposes of your communication, that at all events the council, or the trustees of the sinking fund, as the case might be, would have to reach the county officers through the city treasurer.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NUMBER OF TIMES THAT A TEACHER'S CERTIFICATE COVERED BY SECTIONS 7845 AND 7846, GENERAL CODE, AS AMENDED, MAY BE RENEWED.

Under the provisions of section 7845, and 7846, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 108, constituting a part of the recently adopted school code, the certificates covered by said sections may be renewed more than twice for the reason that there is no limitation in said sections as to the number of times such certificates may be renewed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1914

HON. W. D. FULTON, Member of House of Representatives, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 24th, you submitted the following request:

> "I am writing at the request of a number of teachers of this city in regard to the new school law, sections 7844, 7845 and 7846.
> "I understand that our superintendent here has told the teachers that no certificate could be renewed more than twice, even if the teacher has had five years' experience of successful teaching. They seem anxious for your opinion and I would greatly appreciate it if you will write me; I have my own views about it and think there is no question."

In reply thereto section 7844, as amended 104 Ohio Laws, page 108, provides as follows:

> "Each city board of school examiners may grant teachers' certificates for one year and three years from the first day of September following the examination, which shall be valid within the district wherein they are issued. But certificates granted for one year or three years must be regarded as provisional certificates and shall be renewed only twice each."

Section 7845 of the General Code, as amended 104 Ohio Laws, page 108, provides as follows:

> "All five year and eight-year certificates now granted shall continue in force until the end of their terms and shall be renewed by the superintendent of public instruction upon proof that the holders thereof have taught successfully until the time of each renewal. Each application for renewal shall be accompanied by a fee of fifty cents and shall be filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction."

Section 7846 of the General Code, as amended 104 Ohio Laws, page 108, provides as follows:

> "All two-year and three-year primary, elementary and high school certificates now granted shall continue in force until the end of their terms and may be renewed by the city boards of examiners on proof of five years' successful teaching experience."

It will be noted, under the above provisions, that all five-year and eight-year certificates now granted shall continue in force until the end of their terms and shall be renewed by the superintendent of public instruction upon proof that the holders thereof have taught successfully until the time of each renewal. This provision is contained in section 7845, General Code, supra. There is no limitation in said section as to the number of times that such certificates may be renewed, such as the limitation contained in section 7846, General Code, supra, to which I will later refer.

Section 7846, General Code, supra, provides that all two and three-year primary, elementary and high school certificates now granted shall continue in force until the end of their terms and may be renewed by the city board of examiners on proof of five years' successful teaching experience. There is, likewise, no limitation, in this section, as to the number of renewals that may be granted under such certificates.

Section 7844, supra, refers to certificates which may be granted by a city board of school examiners for one year and three years from the first day of September following the examination. Said section specifically says that these certificates are to be regarded as provisional certificates and shall be renewed only twice each. If the legislature had intended to apply this same limitation as to the number of times other certificates could be renewed, then surely the legislature would have specifically provided for such limitation by expressly stating same in section 7845 and 7846, supra.

In answer to your question I am of the opinion that the certificates covered by sections 7845 and 7846 may be renewed more than twice for the reason, as above stated, that there is no limitation as to the number of such renewals that may be granted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT BONDS—SUPPLEMENTED TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS FOR AN ISSUANCE OF BONDS BY THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, LORAIN COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $17,000 AND $20,000.

Supplemented transcript of the proceedings of an issuance of road improvement bonds by the board of county commissioners of Lorain county, Ohio, in the sum of $17,000 and $20,000, respectively, shows that said proceedings are in all respects in conformity to law, and said bonds would constitute a legal and valid indebtedness of Lorain county, subject to payment as therein provided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Majestic Bldg., Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I transmit to you, herewith, supplemented transcripts of the proceedings for the issuance of bonds by the board of county commissioners, Lorain county, Ohio, for the improvement of two roads, one of which lies in Avon township of said county and the other of which lies within Sheffield township thereof, the amounts of said issues being, respectively, $20,000 and $17,000.

I have examined the said transcripts, and upon facts thereby disclosed, as well as certain inquiries respecting tax rates made of the taxing officer, I am of the opinion that the said proceedings are, in all respects, in conformity to law, and that said bonds, if accepted by the industrial commission, would constitute a valid and legal indebtedness of Lorain county, subject to payment as therein provided, in accordance with law.

I may add that upon a previous examination I felt obliged to recommend the amendment of the resolution of issuance. This amendment necessitated making certain alterations and interlineations on the face of the bonds. This, I am advised, has been done, and I am told that the treasurer of state now holds the bonds amended as aforesaid.

I hereby certify, therefore, that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the county of Lorain, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TORRENS LAND ACT—EXAMINERS NOT SUBJECT TO CIVIL SERVICE REGULATIONS.

Under the provisions of section 8572-3, General Code, the examiners authorized by section 3 of the Torrens land act, are not in the service of the state, counties or cities thereof, within the meaning of the civil service act, and are not subject to civil service regulations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 16, 1914, you inquire whether or not the examiners authorized by section 3 of the act of 103 Ohio Laws, 914, the Torrens land registration act, are in or out of the classified service.

Section 3 of said act, section 8572-3, General Code, provides:

> "The common pleas court in each county shall appoint, subject to removal at any time by and at the will of said court, one or more examiners of title who shall be officers of the court and who shall be competent attorneys at law with skill and experience in the examination of titles to real estate, each of whom before entering on the discharge of his duties shall give a bond payable to the state of Ohio for the use of whom it may concern in an amount and with such sureties as shall be approved by a judge of said court, but in no case less than one thousand dollars, conditioned for the honest and faithful performance of his duties and the faithful accounting for and turning over of all papers, documents, money or property which may come into his possession by virtue of his appointment, which bond shall be filed with the clerk of said court and duly recorded and shall then be deposited with the treasurer of the county who shall receipt to the clerk therefor by endorsement on the record of such bond. Said examiners shall have authority to administer oaths, take testimony and other evidence and generally to exercise all powers and perform all duties of masters in chancery. No examiner of titles shall in any way act as attorney for or represent any party or person in interest, in any matters in any way relating to proceedings to register title to land or any interest or estate therein or lien or charge thereon or in any suit or proceeding relating to registered land."

These examiners are officers of the court and generally have all the powers and duties of masters in chancery.

The compensation of these examiners is not paid from state, county, or other public funds. They are paid by fees and these are chargeable as costs against the parties to the action for registration of title as the court may determine.

Section 112 of said act, section 8572-112, General Code, prescribes and fixes the fees to be paid. Said section provides in part:

> "Examiners of title shall receive for examining title on original reference and making report on all matters arising under the application, including final certificate as to all necessary parties being made and properly brought before the court and to the proceedings being regular and legal, $5.00 for each separate and distinct parcel or body of land included in the application appraised for taxation at $2,000.00 or less, and on such parcels so valued at from $2,000.00 to $5,000.00 one-half of one per centum of such value, and where the court for special reasons, may so order, an additional one-tenth of one per centum in the excess value above $5,000.00 up to $30,000.00, the fee in no case to be in excess of $50.00 nor in ordinary cases in excess of $25.00 for each separate body or parcel of land although made up of more than one tract.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"Costs as herein provided may in any case be taxed and by the court ordered to be paid by the parties in such manner as to it may seem just and reasonable."

In section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, the term "civil service" is defined:

"1. The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof.

"2. The 'state service' shall include all offices in the service of the state or the counties thereof, except the cities and city school districts."

It will be observed that the statute does not fix the number of examiners to be appointed. This is left entirely within the discretion of the court, and such examiners are subject to removal at the will of the court.

The statute further provides that these examiners "shall have authority to administer oaths, take testimony and other evidence and generally to exercise all powers and perform all duties of masters in chancery."

The nature of the office of master in chancery is defined at page 429 of volume 16 of Cyc., where it is said:

"There were in the English chancery, and there are still in most American jurisdictions, officers known as masters in chancery, who act as assistants to the court, performing both judicial and ministerial functions."

The examiners in question are in effect assistants to the court and are required to take the evidence on cases referred to them and report their findings to the court as is required of a master in chancery.

Section 19 of the Torrens act, section 8572-19, General Code, reads in part:

"If, in any case, an answer is filed raising an issue, the cause shall be set down for hearing on the motion of either party. The court may refer the cause or any part thereof to one of the examiners of titles as master, to hear the parties and their evidence, and make report thereof and his findings thereon to the court. * * *"

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the examiners authorized by the Torrens land registration act are not in the service of the state, or of the counties, cities or city school districts thereof, within the meaning of the civil service law, as above defined, and such examiners are not subject to civil service regulations.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CHIEF OF POLICE IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE, UNDER THE NEW CIVIL SERVICE LAW—RIGHT OF MAYOR TO APPOINT CHIEF OF POLICE—PROMOTIONAL APPOINTMENT.

The chief of police of a city is in the classified service under the new civil service law.

The mayor cannot make a permanent appointment to fill a vacancy in the position of chief of police without notifying the civil service commission and securing from them names from the eligible list to be secured by examinations.

In promotional appointments, all examinations shall be competitive, and only one name is certified by the civil service commission for appointment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 28, 1914, Hon. George. J. Carew, city solicitor of Youngstown, Ohio, submits the following inquiries:

> "First. Are the chiefs of police under the civil service law?
> "Second. If they are, has the mayor the right to make a permanent appointment without the civil service commission holding examinations for the position?
> "Third. If it is necessary to hold examinations, should they be the competitive for promotion? What I mean by that is, does the civil service commission certify one name only to the appointing power?"

The chief of police of a city is in the classified service under the new civil service act. It has been so held in a former opinion to you.

When a vacancy occurs in that position, no valid permanent appointment can be made except in the manner provided by the civil service act.

Section 13 of the civil service law, section 486-13, General Code, reads in part:

> "The head of a department, office or institution in which a position in the competitive classified service is to be filled shall notify the commission of the fact, and the commission shall, except as provided in section 15 hereof, certify to him the names and addresses of the three candidates standing highest on the eligible list, for the class or grade to which said position belongs. * * * The appointing officer shall notify said commission of each position to be filled separately, and shall fill such position by appointment of one of three persons certified to him by the commission thereof."

Section 15 of the act, section 486-15, General Code, which is referred to in section 13, provides for promotions, as follows:

> "Vacancies in positions in the competitive class shall be filled as far as practicable by promotions. The commission shall provide in its rules for keeping a record of efficiency for each employe in the competitive classified service, and for making promotions in the competitive classified service on the basis of merit, to be ascertained as far as practicable by promotional examinations, by conduct and capacity in office, and by seniority in service; and shall provide that vacancies shall be filled by promotion in all cases where, in the judgment of the commission, it shall be for the best interest of the service so to fill such vacancies. All examinations for promotion shall be competitive. In promotional examinations efficiency and seniority in service shall form a part of the maximum mark attainable in such examination. In all cases where vacancies are to be filled by promotion, the commission shall certify to the appointing power only the name of the person having the highest rating. The method of examination for promotions, the manner of giving notice thereof, and the rules governing the same shall be in general the same as those provided for original examinations."

By virtue of this section vacancies in position "shall be filled so far as practicable by promotion." It is further provided that the civil service commission "shall provide that vacancies shall be filled by promotion in all cases where, in the judgment of the commission it shall be for the best interest of the service so to fill such vacancies."

By virtue of this provision the civil service commission is to determine what positions shall be filled by promotions. Examinations for promotions are required to be competitive.

It is further provided in this section that "In all cases where vacancies are to be filled by promotion, the commission shall certify to the appointing power only the name of the person having the highest rating."

By virtue of this provision only one name is certified to the appointing power where vacancies are filled by promotion.

In answer to the specific question:

First. The chief of police of a city is in the classified service under the civil service law.

Second. The mayor cannot make a permanent appointment to fill a vacancy in the position of chief of police without notifying the civil service commission and securing from them names from the eligible list to be secured by examinations.

Third. In promotional appointments all examinations shall be competitive and only one name is certified by the civil service commission for appointment.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEMBERS OF THE COUNTY BOARD OF SCHOOL EXAMINERS NOT SUBJECT TO THE CIVIL SERVICE LAW.

The members of the county board of school examiners authorized by section 7811, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 102, are not subject to the civil service law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of September 12, 1914, is received, in which you inquire:

"The state civil service commission desires your opinion as to whether or not county school examiners under the recent school legislation are in or out of the classified service."

Section 7811, General Code, as amended in 104 Ohio Laws, 102 provides for the appointment of the county board of school examiners as follows:

> "There shall be a county board of school examiners for each county, consisting of the county superintendent, one district superintendent and one other competent teacher, the latter two to be appointed by the county board of education. * * *"

The county superintendent is one of the examiners by virtue of his office and the county board of education appoints the other two examiners.

County school districts have been created by section 4679, General Code, as amended in 104 Ohio Laws, 133. This section reads:

> "The school districts of the state shall be styled, respectively, city school districts, village school districts, rural school districts and county school districts."

Section 4684, General Code, as amended in 104 Ohio Laws, 133, provides:

> "Each county, exclusive of the territory embraced in any city school district and the territory in any village school district exempted from the supervision of the county board of education by the provisions of sections 4688 and 4688-1, and territory detached for school purposes, and including the territory attached to it for school purposes, shall constitute a county school district. In each case where any village or rural school district is situated in more than one county such district shall become a part of the county school district in which the greatest part of the territory of such village or rural district is situated."

Each county is to have a county board of school examiners and these examiners are appointed by the county board of education. This board acts for the county school district. Certificates issued by these examiners are valid in all village and rural school districts of the county wherein they are issued.

Section 7821, General Code, as amended in 104 Ohio Laws, 104, reads in part:

> "County boards of school examiners may grant teachers' certificates for one year and three years which shall be valid in all villages, and rural school districts of the county wherein they are issued. * * *"

These certificates are not valid in city school districts.

The civil service act applies only to city school districts. It does not apply to village, rural or county school districts.

Section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, reads in part:

> "The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

The county school examiners are not, therefore, subject to the civil service act.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF ONE PENSIONED BY THE PEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO DRAW BLIND RELIEF—OHIO BLIND RELIEF LAWS.

The words "and such relief shall be in place of all other relief of a public nature," as found in section 2967, G. C., do not preclude a pensioner of the federal government from drawing blind relief, nor does the drawing of a federal pension affect the right of a blind person to relief under the Ohio blind relief laws.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

HON. THOS. L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 19, 1914, in which you inquire whether the language of section 2967, G. C. (103 O. L., p. 60), where it reads, "and such relief shall be in place of all other relief of a public nature," will preclude its recipient from receiving a soldier's pension from the federal government?

Ordinarily, as a matter of law, a pension is classed as an allowance of money granted by the government for services rendered in the past, and while in some instances based on indigency, cannot be classed as relief.

I am of the opinion that two reasons exist why the drawing of a soldier's pension or widow's pension from the federal government may not affect the right of such person to receive blind relief, or the receipt of blind relief cannot affect the right to receive such pension. They are:

1st. The federal pension is not "relief" in the sense of the language used in section 2967.

2nd. The language of 2967 has no application to relief furnished by another government than the state of Ohio, or some of its subdivisions.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF AUDITOR OF STATE TO ISSUE WARRANTS TO PAYMASTERS OF THE RESPECTIVE STATE DEPARTMENTS FOR EMPLOYES THEREIN.

Under sections 242 and 243, General Code, the auditor of state may issue warrants to paymasters of the respective state departments to whom has been assigned the pay of the employes therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 7, 1914, wherein you state:

> "Enclosed you will find a certificate that I desire to employ and attach to the pay rolls issued by this department to the several boards and commissions of the state.
> "I wish you would render me an opinion as to whether this certificate is sufficient and will fully protect the auditor of state and be a substantial compliance with sections 242 and 243 of the General Code."

The certificate, so called, enclosed in your letter, is a form of assignment by the employes of a state department to a person named as paymaster of the department, of their pay, and contains the authorization of such employes to the paymaster to receive and receipt for warrants in his own name in the amount of the pay roll, or one or more warrants for the aggregate, as to the paymaster may seem convenient and be satisfactory to the auditor of state. There is also space for the writing in of the names and titles of the employes of the department, and their signatures.

Sections 242 and 243, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Sec. 242. The auditor of state shall keep an account of all appropriations made by law and of the warrants drawn on and moneys paid out of them. No money shall be drawn from the treasury except on his warrant and he shall keep an account of the number, date, and amount of each warrant, in whose favor it was drawn, on what fund, and on what account, and his books shall at all times show the exact amount of money which should be in the treasury, the amount thereof belonging to each particular fund, the balance remaining of each appropriation and the amount of bonds, stocks, securities and other property which should be in the treasury.
> "Sec. 243. The auditor of state shall examine each claim presented for payment from the state treasury, and, if he find it legally due and there is money in the treasury duly appropriated to pay it, he shall issue to the person entitled to receive the money thereon a warrant on the treasurer of state for the amount found due, take a receipt on the face of the claim for the warrant so issued, and file and preserve the claim in his office. He shall draw no warrant on the treasurer of state for any claim unless he finds it legal, and that there is money in the treasury which has been duly appro priated to pay it."

I am of the opinion that said form is in substantial compliance with sections 242 and 243. The requirement of section 243 that the auditor shall issue warrants to persons entitled to receive the money on them, is met by the issuance of warrants in favor of the paymaster, because by virtue of the assignment to him he becomes the person entitled to receive the money on the pay roll voucher.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH A CHANGE IN THE PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS OF A BRIDGE SUBSTRUCTURE INVOLVING ADDITIONAL COST MAY BE MADE—AGGREGATE COST OF STRUCTURE MAY NOT BE EXCEEDED.

A change in the plans and specifications of a bridge substructure, involving an additional cost, exceeding in the aggregate the amount in the estimate for such substructure, may not lawfully be made. In the event that the necessity to make an addition arises in the course of construction, the necessary addition must be regarded as a separate improvement, and the additional materials and labor must be furnished and performed under plans, specifications and estimates with advertising and competitive bidding in the manner provided by law for the making of changes to county bridges.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of September 19th, previously acknowledged, requests my opinion as to whether or not changes in the plans and specifications of a bridge substructure can be made during the course of construction, in such manner as to cause the total cost of the work to exceed the original estimate.

Section 2358, General Code, provides as follows:

"No contract shall be made for a public building, bridge or bridge substructure, or for any addition to, change, improvement or repair thereof, or for the labor and materials herein provided for, at a price in excess of the estimates required to be made by the preceding sections."

Section 2343, General Code, provides as follows:

"When it becomes necessary for the commissioners of a county to erect or cause to be erected a public building, or substructure for a bridge, or an addition to or alteration thereof, before entering into any contract therefor or repair thereof or for the supply of any materials therefor, they shall cause to be made by a competent architect or civil engineer the following: Full and accurate plans showing all necessary details of the work and materials required with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics or other builders in the construction thereof, so drawn as to be easily understood; accurate bills, showing the exact amount of the different kinds of material, necessary to the construction, to accompany the plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed showing the manner and style required to be done, with such directions as will enable a competent builder to carry them out, and afford to bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense, and of the aggregate cost thereof.

"Nothing in this section shall prevent the commissioners from receiving from bidders on iron or reinforced concrete substructures for bridges the necessary plans and specifications therefor."

Section 2350, General Code, provides as follows:

"If the plans, drawings representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates relate to the building of a bridge, they shall be submitted to the commissioners, county auditor and county surveyor. If approved by a majority of them, a copy thereof shall be deposited with the county auditor and kept for the inspection of parties interested."

It will not be necessary to quote other provisions of the related statutes. Suffice it to state that they contain on the one hand, no express authority, and on the other hand, no explicit prohibition relative to making changes in the plans and specifications after the work has been begun, which, of course, would necessarily involve a change in the total cost of the improvement.

Similar provisions with respect to municipal and state contracts do provide for such cases. With respect to said contracts, the provision is that of section 2320, General Code, which is as follows:

"After they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, which increase or decrease the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, shall be made or allowed unless approved by the governor, auditor and secretary of state. When so approved, the plans of the proposed change, with descriptions thereof, specification of work and bills of material shall be filed with the auditor of state as required with original plans."

With respect to municipal contracts, the provision is that of sections 4331, et seq., General Code, the first of which sections provides as follows:

"When it becomes necessary in the opinion of the director of public service, in the prosecution of any work or improvement under contract, to make alterations or modifications in such contract, such alterations or modifications shall only be made upon the order of such director, but such order shall be made of no effect until the price to be paid for the work and material, or both, under the altered or modified contract, has been agreed upon in writing and signed by the contractor and the director on behalf of the corporation, and approved by the board of control, as provided by law."

The question, then, is as to power to make a change in the specifications so as to increase the total cost in the absence of explicit authority, and in the face of a statute limiting the original contract to the estimate.

On the one hand it appears that the statutes relative to the making of changes or modifications in state and municipal contracts are not grants of power, rather they are limitations upon the exercise of a power, the existence of which seems to be assumed.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, as a matter of statutory interpretation, as well as upon the principle which is discussed in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, volume 2, section 813, that the power to contract for an improvement implies the power to stipulate in that contract for the making of changes in the specifications, and for the manner in which such changes shall be authorized.

So, in a sense, it follows that work done under changed plans and specifications is virtually work done under the contract, where the right to make such change is reserved in the contract.

The question then arises as to the effect of the first of the above quoted sections, viz., 2358, General Code. Primarily, of course, this section operates upon the contract itself and prohibits it from being entered into at a price in excess of the estimates. Nevertheless, I think it operates also upon the power to order changes in the plans and specifications involving an increase in the cost of the improvement, especially where that power exists by implication and may be effectively exercised only through stipulations of the contract itself. Indeed, the statute is at least, susceptible to an interpretation which would practically forbid such changes, the question being dependent upon the meaning of the word "change" as used in the statute.

It appears that the change considered necessary is to leave the sheeting around the concrete piers in the bed of the river to remain in place instead of being removed as originally contemplated. This sheeting is valuable to the contractor and he will not consent to leaving it in place except in consideration of the payment of a sum so much in addition to the contract price as to cause the estimate to be exceeded.

To obviate the difficulty I would suggest that the placing of the sheeting be looked upon as a separate improvement and that all proceedings as upon such a separate improvement be gone through with. Inasmuch as the sheeting is in place, so that what is really to be done is the purchase of it, and inasmuch too as the county surveyor is in position to know how much the contractor who is doing the work will require to leave the sheeting in place, his estimate, and the surrounding conditions would doubtless be such as in effect to preclude bidding upon the separate contract except by the contractor who is now prosecuting the main work. The result arrived at would be the same as if the additional material were furnished merely under an order for a change in the specifications, and the only disadvantage would be the length of time required to advertise the letting of the separate contract.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF THE INSPECTOR OF BUILDINGS IN THE CITY OF COLUMBUS TO APPROVE THE PLANS OF BUILDINGS OF THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND TO ENFORCE THE STATE BUILDING CODE WITH REFERENCE THERETO—APPLICATION OF COLUMBUS ORDINANCE RELATING TO THE CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS OF THE OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY.

An ordinance of the city of Columbus requiring the issuance to the owner or his agent of a permit for the construction of a building involving the installation of sanitary plumbing is not applicable to construction work at the Ohio state university. It is the power and duty of the inspector of buildings in the city of Columbus to approve the plans of buildings of the Ohio state university, and to enforce the state building code with respect thereto.

The ordinance of the city of Columbus for licensing master and journeyman plumbers and prohibiting work at the trade of plumbing in the city of Columbus by unlicensed plumbers, is applicable to persons working on the installation of plumbing at the Ohio state university, whether employes of the university or not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

HON CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 18, enclosing the letter addressed to you by Hon. Joseph Dauben, inspector of buildings of the city of Columbus and requesting my opinion as to the application to Ohio state university building work of two ordinances of the city of Columbus, the ordinance numbers being 23,377 and 25,356, respectively.

You also inquire generally as to the authority of the inspector of buildings of the city of Columbus to supervise building operations at the University.

Ordinance No. 23,377, of the city of Columbus which is published in pamphlet enclosed in your letter provides, generally speaking, that it shall be unlawful for any person, persons, firm or corporation to construct or repair any sanitary plumbing within the city of Columbus, without first obtaining from the inspector of buildings, of the city, a permit and paying certain fees therefor. The ordinance further provides that before work of construction or repair affecting sanitation shall be begun, plans shall be filed in the office of the inspector by the "owner or agent of the owner," such plans to be drawn upon blank forms furnished by the inspector and to be accompanied by specifications. If the inspector approves the plans, a permit to do the work shall be issued, which permit expires by limitation within six months of the date of approval, unless work is begun within that time. Changes in plans or specifications must be submitted to and approved by the inspector as in the case of original plans and specifications. When the plumbing work is installed, it must be left uncovered and convenient for examination until its installation is approved.

The original ordinance then specified in detail numerous regulations relative to the installation of sanitary plumbing. These regulations were to have been enforced by the inspector in approving plans and inspecting the installed work, but they are not printed in the pamphlet submitted to me, for the reason that they are covered by the state plumbing code.

The state plumbing code, so called, consists of a set of regulations applicable to all sanitary plumbing and adopted by the state board of health on July 23, 1913, under authority of sections 1237 and 1238, General Code, which may be quoted here as follows:

> "Sec. 1237. The state board of health * * * may make special or standing orders or regulations for preventing the spread of contagious or infectious diseases, for governing the receipt and conveyance of remains of deceased persons, and for such other sanitary matters as it deems best to control by a general rule. * * *
> "Sec. 1238. Local boards of health, health authorities and officials, officers of state institutions, police officers, sheriffs, constables and other officers and employes of the state or any county, city or township, shall enforce the quarantine and sanitary rules and regulations adopted by the state board of health."

In this connection, I cite section 1247, General Code, which provides as follows in part:

> "* * * The laws prescribing the modes of procedure, courts, practice, penalties or judgments applicable to local boards of health, shall apply to the state board of health and the violation of its rules and orders. * * *"

The statute referred to in the section which is quoted is quite evidently section 4414, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Whoever violates any provision of this chapter, or any order or regulation of the board of health made in pursuance thereof, or obstructs or interferes with the execution of such order, or wilfully or illegally omits to obey such order, shall be fined not to exceed one hundred dollars or imprisoned for not to exceed ninety days, or both, but no person shall be imprisoned under this section for the first offense, and the prosecution shall always be as and for a first offense, unless the affidavit upon which the prosecution is instituted, contains the allegation that the offense is a second or repeated offense."

Returning now to ordinance No. 23,377 of the city of Columbus, I observe that it further provides that any person, firm, or corporation violating any of the provisions of the ordinance, or failing to comply with any of the requirements thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction be fined.

Inasmuch as some at least of the requirements of the ordinance relative to the securing of permits, etc., enjoin duties upon the owners or builders, it is obvious that these penalties would be visited upon them.

Still in connection with ordinance No. 23,377, I beg leave to point out that the so-called state plumbing code, which may properly be described as the standing orders of the state board of health, does not constitute the sole, or controlling state legislation applicable to the question. I refer you to the so-called state building code, being sections 12, 600-1, et seq., General Code, and having been enacted 102 O. L., 586. The act establishing the state building code is entitled as follows:

"An act, establishing a building code, regulating the construction of, repair of, alteration on and additions to public and other buildings and parts thereof; regulating the sanitary condition of public and other buildings providing for fire protection and fire prevention, and providing for the construction and erection of elevators, stairways and fire escapes in and upon public buildings."

Generally speaking, the state building code so far as completed and enacted into legislation comprises a set of specifications for the construction of buildings used for the assemblage or betterment of the people, i. e., public buildings, or private assembly buildings. Part two, title three, of this code beginning with section 12600-44 as found on page 619, 102 O. L., is entitled "school buildings," and the classification is defined as follows:

"Under the classification of school buildings are included all public parochial and private schools, colleges, academies * * *"

I may say at this point that there seems to be no doubt whatever that this classification of the state building code applies to the Ohio state university.

Section 22 of this title of the state building code designated as 12600-65, General Code, relates to the subject of sanitation of what are designated as "school buildings." This is supplemented, however, in the state building code by a general title called "sanitation," section 12600-137, et seq. This is part four of the code, and it relates to all buildings to which the building code relates, among them, of course, "school buildings" as defined under the proper classification. I have not carefully examined the so-called state plumbing code promulgated presumably by the state board of health to see whether it is identical in specifications with that part of the state building code enacted by the general assembly, which is entitled "sanitation." It is certain that the two sets of regulations are substantially, if not actually the same. The purpose of the promulgation of these specifications by the state board of health as its orders or regulations is obvious; namely, to extend their scope to buildings not covered by the state building code. As to the buildings actually covered by the state building code including those of the Ohio state university, the statute governs, and not the rules of the state board of health, unless the rules of the state board of health contain regulations additional to and not inconsistent with those of the statutes themselves.

The situation then with respect to the substantive regulations or specifications relative to the installation of plumbing at the Ohio state university as distinguished from the sanctions by which such regulations are to be enforced is as follows:

There are detailed statutory regulations especially applicable to the Ohio state university and embodied in the so-called state building code, enacted by the legislature.

There is a general standing order of the state board of health substantially identical with the state building code and popularly known as the state plumbing code. In so far as the latter applies to sanitation, the provisions additional to those of the state building code, found in the state plumbing code unquestionably apply to the Ohio state university.

There is ordinance No. 23,377, of the city of Columbus, which seems to make no substantive requirements not embodied in the state plumbing code. This being the case, then, it would seem clearly to follow that the substantive requirements of the ordinance, in so far as their subject-matter is covered by the state building code, and the state plumbing code, respectively, have no application to the Ohio state university, or indeed to any building work.

Coming now to the sanctions by which these several distinct regulations are to be enforced, I note the following:

The state building code is enforced by the sanction of sections 12,600-274, 12,600-275, 12,600-279 and 12,600-280, General Code, as enacted 102 O. L., 586, as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any owner or owners, officers, board, committee or other person to construct, erect, build, equip or cause to be constructed, erected, built or equipped any opera house, hall, theater, church, school house, college, academy, seminary, infirmary, sanitorium, childrens' home, hospital, medical institute, asylum, memorial building, armory, assembly hall or other building used for the assemblage or betterment of people in any municipal corporation, county or township in this state, or to make any addition thereto or alteration thereof, except in case of repairs for maintenance without affecting the construction, sanitation, safety or other vital feature of said building or structure, without complying with the requirements and provisions relating thereto contained in this act.
> "It shall be unlawful for any architect, builder, civil engineer, plumber, carpenter, mason, contractor, subcontractor, foreman or employe to violate or assist in violating any of the provisions contained in this act.
> "Whoever being the owner or having the control as an officer, or as a member of a board or committee or otherwise of any opera house, hall, theater, church, school house, college, academy, seminary, infirmary, sanitorium, childrens' home, hospital, medical institute, asylum, memorial buildings, armory, assembly hall or other building for the assemblage or betterment of people in any municipal corporation, township or county in this state, violates any of the provisions of the foregoing act or fails to conform to any of the provisions thereof, or fails to obey any order of the state fire marshal, chief inspector of workshops and factories or building inspector or commissioner in cities having a building inspection department, or the state board of health in relation to the matters and things in this act contained shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars and stand committed until said fine and costs be paid or secured to be paid or until otherwise discharged by the due process of law.

tractor, subcontractor, foreman, or employe who shall violate or assist in the violation of any of the provisions of this act or of any order issued thereunder shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars and to stand committed until said fine and costs are paid or secured to be paid or until otherwise discharged by due process of law."

It will be observed that an officer whose power and duty it is to construct a public building and who constructs, or permits the same to be constructed, added to, or altered in violation of the substantive requirements of the building code is punishable as for the violation of a state law constituting a misdemeanor, in common with the architects, builders, and other workmen who may contribute to such violation.

The state building code further provides as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the state board of health or building inspector or commissioners, or health departments of municipalities having building or health departments to enforce all the provisions in this act contained, in relation and pertaining to sanitary plumbing. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any other officer or department from the obligation of enforcing all existing laws in reference to this act."

It will thus be seen that the intention to make the health or building department of the city the proper agency to enforce the state law is very clearly expressed; but if any doubt should exist, the same would be resolved by consideration of section 12,600-278, Genral Code, which is as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall not apply to the construction or erection of any public building or to any addition thereto or alteration thereof, the plans and specifications of which have been heretofore submitted to and approved by the chief inspector of workshops and factories. The provisions of this act shall not apply to the construction, erection or equipping of any public building, addition therto or alteration thereof, the contract for the construction, erection or equipping of which has been let or entered into prior to the date at which this act takes effect."

It is clear that the legislature contemplated that in certain cases the effect of the state building code act would be to transfer from the state inspector of workshops and factories to some other authorities (in this case, if such a transfer is effected, the municipal health or building department) the duty and power to see that the state laws are enforced.

Inasmuch then as the state building code clearly applies to the state university and is to be enforced in the city of Columbus by the proper municipal authorities, it is apparent at once that if the city building inspector is under the ordinances and regulations of the city the proper authority to enforce sanitary law, he has the power, and it is his duty to enforce the state building code in its application to construction work at the Ohio state university.

As to such orders of the state board of health embodied in the so-called state plumbing code which may (if this is the case) be in addition to the requirements of the state building code, the statutes of the state already cited show that the violator is subject to prosecution as for a misdemeanor.

As to the city ordinance, should it have any application, it appears that it prescribes no penalty whatever for a violation of the substantive provisions which must be held applicable. The sanction of the municipal ordinance is the indirect one of license or permit, and the ordinance punishes the "owner" for failing to comply with its requirements by taking out a permit.

But proceeding further with the discussion, I should consider, I think, section five of the state building code therein denominated section 12,600-277, General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the council of municipalities from making further and additional regulations, not in conflict with any of the provisions in this act contained nor shall the provisions of this act be construed to modify or repeal any portions of any building code adopted by a municipal corporation and now in force which are not in direct conflict with the provisions of this act."

The question might be mooted as to whether or not the "further and additional regulations" of municipalities which are preserved by the section, contemplate anything more than substantive regulations, i. e., specifications as to the quality and manner of installation of sanitary plumbing. I am by no means certain that this proviso is intended to preserve such requirements as the taking out of a permit for the doing of work covered by the state building code, inasmuch as the state building code itself contains ample provision for the enforcement of its substantive regulations, but I do not deem this question material here and express no opinion upon it. On the contrary, I assume for the purpose of the argument that such requirements of municipal ordinances as are embodied in the provision of the Columbus ordinance relative to the taking out of permits, are intended to be preserved by the section now under discussion.

But it is clear to me that section five is not operative to add to a city building code any force, which it would not otherwise have. The provision is that nothing contained in the building code shall limit, modify, or repeal existing municipal codes, or impair the right of municipal corporations to adopt consistent and additional regulations; but if an existing building code does not apply to a given subject-matter, or if a municipality in the absence of the building code would not have power to legislate with respect to that subject-matter, I do not believe that section 12,600-277, General Code, extends the scope of the municipal building code so as to comprise subjects not theretofore within it, or gives to the municipality as such the power to make future regulations which it would not theretofore have been authorized to make.

This being the case then, I am of the opinion that in so far as the Columbus ordinance adds requirements to those of the state legislation and in part requires the issuance of a permit and the payment of a fee, the application of such provisions and requirements to construction work at the Ohio state university is to be tested by principles operating without reference to the state building code. That is to say upon the question, as to the right of the city of Columbus to require the trustees of the Ohio state university, or any state officer to take out a building permit, the state building code exerts no influence whatever. This question then must be answered in the light of statutes and principles which have not yet been cited or discussed.

In the first place, it is not clear to me that the ordinance itself purports on its face to apply to installation of plumbing work at the Ohio state university. It provides that it shall be unlawful for "any persons, firm, or corporation" to do certain things without first obtaining a permit. It also provides that the "owner or agent of the owner" shall before commencing the work file plans and specifications upon the basis of which the permit is to be issued. Therefore, it appears that the permit issues to the owner, or his agent, as such.

act and visits upon him penalties should he fail to do so. Now the owner of the buildings at the Ohio state university is the state of Ohio, or in a liberal view, the board of trustees of the state university having custody and management of the state's property. The ordinance being penal, it might be asserted against its application to state officers, that phraseology appropriate to that end has not been incorporated in the ordinance. Not being certain, however, that the ordinance is to be given a strict interpretation, I pass this question with the remark that there is in my opinion grave doubt as to whether or not the ordinance on its face even attempts to apply to the officers having the management and custody of state buildings and the duty to provide for their construction.

This question being put aside, the more fundamental question as to the city's power to license the construction of a state building by requiring the issuance of a permit, therefor is encountered. Let it be borne in mind that the license is not under the ordinance to be issued to the contractor or plumber, but to the owners, or his agent, and the license fee which is required to be charged is payable so far as the ordinance itself is concerned by the owner, although as a matter of contract between the owner and the builder, this burden might in practice be shifted to the latter.

I am of the opinion that under the statutes as they exist, the city has no authority, or at least had none when this ordinance was passed in 1907, to license the construction of state buildings within its corporate limits.

I am mindful of the general municipal power conferred in sections 3636 and 3639, respectively, General Code. The first of these two sections provides in part as follows:

> "To regulate the erection of buildings and the sanitary condition thereof, the repair of, alteration in and addition to buildings, and to provide for the inspection of buildings or other structures, and for the removal and repair of insecure buildings.
> "Sec. 3639. To regulate by ordinance, the use, control, repair and maintenance of buildings used for human occupancy or habitation, the number of occupants, and the mode and manner of occupancy, for the purpose of insuring the healthful, safe and sanitary environment of the occupants thereof; to compel the owners of such buildings to alter, reconstruct or modify them, or any room, store, compartment or part thereof, for the purpose of insuring the healthful, safe and sanitary environment of the occupants thereof, and to prohibit the use and occupancy of such building or buildings until such rules, regulations and provisions have been complied with."

Of these two sections, the latter may be, I think, eliminated from consideration. Manifestly, it applies to residences only and authorizes the regulation of housing conditions. It could have no application to buildings used for assembly purposes, such as university buildings.

The first section above cited must be considered with respect to its scope and effect in connection with other statutes which might operate within the same field, the question being as to whether or not it authorizes a municipal corporation to regulate the sanitary condition of state buildings, that question must be resolved by observing whether or not there are other statutory provisions (aside from the state building code, which has already been determined not to be a factor in the situation) which throw light upon the question.

I think there are other such statutes and beg leave to point them out as follows:

> "The board of trustees (of the Ohio state university) shall have general supervision of all lands, buildings, and other property belonging to the university, and the control of all expenses therefor, but shall not contract a debt not previously authorized by the general assembly of the state."

This statute is of itself unimportant, save in so far as it discloses the nature of the control exercised by the board of trustees of the Ohio state university over the lands and buildings belonging to the university. It does not, of course, operate to vest in the board of trustees exclusive power with reference to the manner in which the buildings shall be constructed and maintained, particularly the power to prescribe sanitary regulations, as against any paramount legislative power.

Section 2314, 2315, 2320 and 1031 are other statutes which relate to the public health and safety and are as follows:

"Sec. 2314. Before entering into contract for the erection, alteration or improvement of a state institution or building or addition thereto, excepting the penitentiary, or for the supply of materials therefor, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thousand dollars, each officer, board, or other authority by law charged with the supervision thereof, shall make or cause to be made the following: Full and accurate plans, showing all necessary details of the work, with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, so drawn and represented as to be plain and easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact amount of different kinds of material necessary to the construction to accompany such plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed; showing the manner and style required with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof.

"Sec. 2315. The plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of cost in detail and in the aggregate, required by the preceding section, shall be submitted to the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state for their approval. If so approved, a copy thereof shall be deposited and safely kept in the office of the auditor of state.

"Sec. 2320. After they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of plans, descriptions, bills of material or specifications, which increases or decreases the cost to exceed one thousand dollars, shall be made or allowed unless approved by the governor, auditor and secretary of state. When so approved, the plans of the proposed change, with descriptions thereof, specifications of work and bills of material shall be filed with the auditor of state as required with original plans.

"Sec. 1031. The chief inspector of workshops and factories shall cause to be inspected all school houses, colleges, opera houses, halls, theaters, churches, infirmaries, childrens' homes, hospitals, medical institutes, asylums and other buildings used for the assemblage or betterment of people in the state. Such inspection shall be made with special reference to precautions for the prevention of fires, the provision of fire escapes, exits, emergency exits, hallways, air space, and such other matters which relate to the health and safety of those occupying, or assembled in, such structures.

"Sec. 1035. The plans for the erection of such structure, and for any alterations in or additions to any such structure, shall be approved by the inspector of workshops and factories, except in municipalities having regularly organized building inspection departments, in which case the plans shall be approved by such department.

"Sec. 1036. Whoever, being an architect, builder or other person, alters the plans so approved or fails to construct or alter a building in accordance with such plans without the consent of the department that approved them, shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both.

"Sec. 1037. Whoever, being a person, firm or corporation or member of a board, and being the owner or in control of any building mentioned in section ten hundred and thirty-one of this chapter, uses or permits the use of such building in violation of any order prohibiting its use issued as provided by law, or fails to comply with an order so issued relating to the change, improvement or repair of such building shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars, and each day that such use or failure continues shall constitute a separate offense."

It seems to me that these sections in and of themselves provide a complete scheme for the preparation of plans and specifications for state buildings, their inspection with regard to sanitation, and the manner of enforcing compliance with their object. Under them it is the duty of the board of trustees of the Ohio state university to secure the approval of the governor, auditor and secretary of state, and of the building inspector of the city of Columbus, before engaging in any work of construction, whether the same affects sanitation or not. It is the duty of the building inspector to pass upon the plans so submitted to him without charging any fee for his services. It seems to me that these provisions are inconsistent with the idea that the municipality under its power to regulate the construction of buildings may authorize the building inspector to charge a fee for the inspection of plans and the issuance of the permit, when his duty to inspect the plans is fixed by statute and when he is required to approve or disapprove of them without issuing any license or permit.

I concede that the question, if regarded as purely one of statutory interpretation, is involved in a great deal of doubt; but the statutes are such in my opinion to give rise to the operation of a principle, which I find in certain decisions of courts of other states, which principle whether or not it operates as a rule of constitutional law, at least may be accepted as a guide in statutory interpretation.

In Kentucky Institution, Education for Blind, vs. Louisville, 8 L. R. A., n. s., 553, the court of appeals of the state of Kentucky, held that a municipality was without power to compel the erection and the maintenance of fire escapes on state buildings located within the corporate limits of the city, although the city had undoubted power to legislate generally upon the subject of fire escapes on buildings. The reasoning of the court per O'Rear, J., goes further than I find it necessary to go in the discussion of this question, but on one point it is directly applicable. I quote the portion of the opinion which I have in mind.

"The state will not be presumed to have waived its right to regulate its own property, by ceding to the city the right generally to pass ordinances of a police nature regulating property within its bounds * * *. The principle is, that the state when creating municipal governments, does not cede to them any control of the state's property situated within them, nor over any property which the state has authorized another body or power to control."

As I have intimated, I accept this principle with reservation. In order that it may apply, I think it must appear that the state has committed to some agency other than the municipal corporation the exercise of police power with respect to the subject-matter in question as well as the mere custody and management of the state's property, but as has been seen the state has provided fully by legislation for the exercise of police regulatory power with respect to sanitation and installation of sanitary plumbing in its own buildings of the character now under discussion, and also with respect to the inspection and approval of plans for the erection of such buildings. It is inconceivable to my mind that when the state has provided agencies for the protection of public health against improper conditions which might exist in the sanitation of its own buildings, the city can assume the power to legislate generally on similar subjects and can exercise similar regulatory power by way of exacting the issuance of a license. For example, section 3636, General Code, under which the city's power is claimed provides that the city may "regulate the erection of buildings" whether with respect to their sanitary condition or not (although the particular ordinance relates only to sanitary plumbing). Suppose the city should attempt to exert its power to regulate the erection of buildings within its corporate limits under this section and claim the right to inspect the plans of state buildings and to make changes in them either before or after they had been approved by the governor, auditor of state and secretary of state. Certainly it would appear that no such right could be asserted. The case is not different with respect to the regulation of the sanitary conditions of buildings where the power to regulate is asserted through the medium of a license, and where it appears that the state has fully provided for safeguarding the public health against dangers arising from unsanitary plumbing in its buildings, both by direct legislation and by laws providing for the submission of plans to and for the approval of the building inspector.

These considerations then make it unnecessary for me to distinguish further the cases of Pasadena School District vs. City of Pasadena, 47, L. R. A., n. s., 892, and Palmer vs. District of Columbia, 1, L. R. A., n. s., 878. In neither of these cases did it appear that jurisdiction of the subject-matter involved had been committed to any tribunal or authority other than the municipality seeking to exercise the power.

It is, therefore, unnecessary, as I have stated, to lay down any broad and general principle respecting the power of a municipality to restrain officers of the state with respect to their management and control of property entrusted to them, in the exercise of the local police power. It is sufficient to state that where the evil sought to be remedied is dealt with by direct legislation of the state, the city may not under the guise of exercising the police power condition the action of the state officers by requiring them to take out a license.

It is not even necessary, therefore, to go to the extent of holding that the municipal regulations involved here are inconsistent with those of the general law governing the state officers. If they were so, the question would be plain; but even if they are not inconsistent, the license requirements of the city ordinance must fail of application to the state officers and the property under their custody, because the license not being necessary to enforce as to the state officers and buildings, any substantive requirement of law, becomes simply an unwarranted interference by the city with the state officers in the discharge of their duties.

In other words, the substantive requirements of law being those of the statutes, it follows that the requirement of the ordinance, if it be held to be applicable to the state university, that the "owner" secure a permit rests upon no substantial foundation and becomes a mere demand upon the funds of the university not related to the accomplishment of any public purpose.

Without discussing the matter further, I am of the opinion that ordinance No. 23,377, of the city of Columbus in so far as it requires the taking out of a plumbing or building permit does not and cannot apply to work done at the Ohio state university; but that the building inspector of the city of Columbus has the right to inspect the plans of all buildings of the college, used for ordinary college purposes and must approve them before construction work begins; also that the building inspector of the city of Columbus has power to see that the building code of the state is enforced and for this purpose may inspect construction work while it is in progress and may prosecute any member of the board of trustees of the university, or any other person guilty of violating or contributing to the violation of the provisions of that law.

Lest my opinion be misunderstood, I beg leave to call attention to 1261-1, et seq., General Code, providing for the office of state inspector of plumbing under the direction and supervision of the state board of health. Without deciding the question, I may say that these sections appear to repeal by implication so much of section 1031, et seq., General Code, above cited as relate to the continuing power of inspection of public buildings with regard to their sanitary condition by the chief inspector of workshops and factories. The state inspector of plumbing seems to have exclusive power in this field. I observe that section 1261-3, General Code, provides that > "Such inspector shall not exercise any authority in municipalities or other political subdivisions wherein ordinances or resolutions have been adopted by the proper authorities regulating plumbing or prescribing the character thereof."

As already stated, I do not think the legislation of the city of Columbus does regulate plumbing or prescribe the character thereof in buildings of the Ohio state university and in my opinion, therefore, the above quoted provision does not operate to deny to the state plumbing inspector authority to inspect such plumbing. Be that as it may, however, the question which you submit relates to the taking out of a permit for original construction work, or repair work, in the buildings of the Ohio state university; whereas the power to be exercised by the state inspector of plumbing is a continuing one, not contingent upon the making of any contemplated repairs, or the doing of any particular construction work. That is to say the building inspector's functions are to be exercised when the plans are prepared and the work is about to be undertaken; whereas the plumbing inspector's duty is to inspect plumbing that has already been installed. Inasmuch then as practically the only portion of ordinance No. 23,377 of the city of Columbus which is left, when the matters covered by the state laws and regulations of the state board of health are eliminated, is the part relating to the obtaining of a permit, I conclude that practically this ordinance has no application whatever to the installation of plumbing in the buildings of the Ohio state university.

As to ordinance No. 25,356, I beg to state that this ordinance requires the licensing of master and journeymen plumbers, but prohibits the doing of any plumbing work in the city of Columbus by unlicensed plumbers. The municipality has undoubted power to pass such legislation under section 3637, General Code, which I need not cite. No legislation of the state serves to withdraw work on state university buildings from the application of such legislation. The requirement that plumbers are licensed in no wise conflicts or interferes with the board of trustees of the Ohio state university, or any other state officer in the management of the state property; in fact the ordinance does not seek to impose any duty or restraint whatsoever directly upon the university authorities. In my opinion this ordinance applies as well to the doing of work upon the university buildings as to the doing of any other plumbing work within the corporate limits of the city of Columbus; and as well to regular employes of the university, as to those who contract with it independently.

Closing I may say that I have not considered the affect of article eighteen, section three of the amended constitution upon the question at hand, for the reason that the ordinances of the city of Columbus involved here were both passed prior to January 1, 1913. My conclusion then is that the ordinance of the city of Columbus requiring the owner of a building to take out a permit for its construction, or repair, covering the installation of sanitary plumbing therein, does not apply to the doing of work at the Ohio state university; but that the building inspector of the city of Columbus under the general law of the state must approve plans for buildings on the university campus used for ordinary university purposes and must enforce the state building code which applies to the university buildings; though as to the correction of unsanitary conditions if any, and the power to order the installation of different or additional fixtures, such power is lodged in the state inspector of plumbing. I am further of the opinion that the ordinance of the city of Columbus providing for the licensing of plumbers is effective to prohibit any person working as a plumber on construction or repair work on buildings of the Ohio state university, unless he is licensed as therein required.

I am indebted to the city solicitor of Columbus for a copy of his opinion to the inspector of buildings of this city relative to this matter and regret that I am compelled to disagree partially with him.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTHORITY OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES TO REFUND SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS ERRONEOUSLY CHARGED AND PAID.

Sinking fund trustees have no authority to refund special assessments erroneously charged and paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1914.

HON. E. M. BELL, City Solicitor, Piqua, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 12th, previously acknowledged, requested my opinion as to the power of the trustees of the sinking fund to refund special assessments erroneously certified to the county auditor.

Waiving the question of voluntary payment which is encountered at the threshold of the consideration of your query, I am of the opinion that the sinking fund trustees are without authority to refund such assessments. As is made clear by section 4517, General Code, trustees of the sinking fund, who have undoubted control of the moneys in that fund, without appropriation by council, may, nevertheless, not pay out any moneys except in the payment of bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon, and in the payment of judgments final against the corporation. The grant of power to the sinking fund trustees will be strictly construed.

Of course, any assessment, on account of which bonds have been issued, when paid into the municipal treasury goes into the sinking fund by virtue of statutes which need not be quoted. Furthermore, the sinking fund, as a fund, is the proper source of payment of municipal liabilities for which no appropriation is made, but the manner in which it shall be drawn on is clearly indicated by the section just cited which shows that a claim must be reduced to final judgment before it can be presented to the sinking fund trustees, and honored by them.

I may add that the statutory provisions for the levying and collection of special assessments do not cover the case of payment of erroneous assessments and recovery thereof from the city. Therefore, the general principles above stated apply, and one who has paid such an erroneous assessment stands in no different relation to the city from any other person who has a claim against it.

If the claim amounts to a legal or moral obligation, council may make a direct appropriation to pay it, which, however, must come from the general funds of the city other than the sinking fund, that not being subject to appropriation by council. If the claim is, in every sense, a legal obligation, as distinguished from a mere moral obligation, council may, instead of appropriating money to pay it, authorize the city solicitor to confess judgment in a suit brought by the holder of the claim, which procedure will have the effect of making the claim payable from the sinking fund; or if the council refuses to act, and the claim is a legal one, as distinguished from a moral obligation, the owner of it may sue the city and secure judgment, which will entitle him to be paid out of the sinking fund; but he cannot have payment from the sinking fund without judgment, and he cannot have payment from the city, otherwise, without action of council.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF TRUMBULL COUNTY RELATIVE TO THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS OF SAID COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $160,000.

The proceedings for the issuance of bonds by the county commissioners of Trumbull county are in accordance with the law, and said bonds are a legal and valid obligation of said Trumbull county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners of Trumbull county relative to the issuance of bonds of said county in the amount of $160,000.00 for the payment of the county's assumed portion of the total cost and expense of improvement of part of intercounty highway Number 322, situate in said county; such portion being all of said cost and expense, excepting five hundred dollars ($500.00) thereof to be paid by the state.

I hereby certify that in my opinion the proceedings for the issuance of said bonds are in all respects in accordance with the law and that said bonds are a valid and legal obligation of said county of Trumbull to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE VILLAGE OF WEST CARROLLTON, OHIO, IN THE MATTER OF THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF CERTAIN STREETS THEREIN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of proceedings of the council of the village of West Carrollton, Ohio, in the matter of the issuance of bonds for the improvement of certain streets therein, as follows:

One bond for the sum of $450.00, due September 15, 1916, interest at 5½% payable semi-annually, for the improvement of Smith street. (Ordinance No. 254.)

One bond for the sum of $550.00, due September 15, 1918, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Burns avenue. (Ordinance No. 255.)

One bond for the sum of $400.00, due September 15, 1920, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Locust street. (Ordinance No. 256.)

One bond for the amount of $425.00, due September 15, 1919, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Cottage avenue. (Ordinance No. 257.)

One bond in the sum of $300.00, due September 15, 1919, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Elm street. (Ordinance No. 258.)

One bond in the sum of $125.00, due September 15, 1917, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Poplar street. (Ordinance No. 259.)

One bond in the sum of $350.00, due September 15, 1921, with interest at 5½%, for the improvement of Rusby street. (Ordinance No. 260.)

I hereby certify that the issue of these bonds is in accordance with the laws of Ohio governing the issue of bonds for the purpose for which said bonds purport to have been issued and that the proceedings taken by the council of the village of West Carrollton are in accordance with the provisions of the statutes of Ohio in such case made and provided, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the village of West Carrollton to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Transcript of proceedings to which is attached the financial statement of the village of West Carrollton, and a blank form of bond are transmitted herewith.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF HURON COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE MATTER OF THE ISSUANCE OF CERTAIN BONDS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE STATE HIGHWAY LAW.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under separate cover I hand you herewith transcripts of the proceedings of the county commissioners of Huron county, Ohio, in the matter of the issuance of the following bonds, all under the provisions of the state highway law, section 1223, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 459:

"One issue in the sum of $28,000 for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 142 in Hartland and Fitchville townships, in said county.

"One issue in the sum of $9,000 for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 455, Peru township in said county.

"One issue in the sum of $6,500 for the improvement on intercounty highway No. 290 in Wakeman township in said county.

"One issue in the sum of $14,500 for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 290 in Townsend township in said county.

"One issue in the sum of $10,000 for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 289 in Ridgefield township in said county."

The bonds themselves have not been submitted to me. I have seen fit to require as a conditon of the acceptance of the first two issues of bonds above referred to, the amendment of the resolution of issuance in certain particulars.

Supplemental transcripts have been furnished showing that my recommendations have been complied with. In this connection, however, the bonds themselves should be corrected by the commissioners on their respective faces so as to refer to the amended resolutions as being the resolutions under which they were respectively issued, before being accepted by the commission.

This statement does not apply to the other three bond issues, viz., Wakeman, Townsend and Ridgefield townships. The proceedings for the issuance of these bonds do not present the question referred to.

Subject to the foregoing qualifications I am of the opinion, and hereby certify, that all of said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law and that the same constitute good and valid obligations against the county of Huron, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein respectively. A certificate of the prosecuting attorney is attached to the transcript in each case.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES FOLLETT,

First Assistant Attorney General.

COMPLIANCE WITH THE LAND REGISTRATION LAW IN ACTIONS IN PARTITION INSTITUTED ON OR AFTER JULY 1, 1914—COMPLIANCE WITH THIS LAW WHEN AN ELECTION HAS BEEN MADE.

In an action in partition, instituted on or after July 1, 1914, it is necessary to have title to the realty registered under the land registration act, 103 O. L., 914, when one of the parties elects to take the real estate at the appraised value. Section 64 of said act requires the registration of titles before any order of partition shall be entered, and such order must be entered before any of the parties can elect to take. This compels compliance with the registration act when there has been such election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1914.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 26, 1914, you submit the following:

> "I write you at the request of the county recorder relative to the fact that there was a deed presented to him by a party who had secured the same from the sheriff in an ex parte petition case and the county recorder refusing to accept and record said deed, unless said real estate was registered as provided in section 64, page 945 of 103 Ohio Laws.
> "It appears that on August 24, 1914, a partition suit was filed and on the same day the answer, praecipe for writ, writ of partition and entry were also filed.
> "When appraisement was made of the real estate involved, a report was made that no partition could be made of said real estate; whereupon one of the parties in the proceeding elected to take the real estate and the sheriff of the county made a deed to the party electing to take said real estate, which was ordered by the court of common pleas.
> "The county recorder is of the opinion that this is a judicial sale or a sale made through court procedure as defined by your letter of July 15, 1914, and therefore he insists that said real estate be registered, but the attorney presenting the deed demands that it be recorded without being registered and insists that this is not a proceeding that comes within section 8572-64."

Section 64 of the land registration act, 103 O. L., 945, provides:

> "In all suits to sell an estate in fee in the whole of unregistered land, brought by an assignee * * * and in all suits to partition unregistered land held in fee, proper allegations and parties necessary to a decree for original registration of the title to said estate, shall be made in the petition * * * and said title, before any order of sale or partition shall be made or entered in the case, shall be registered, as provided in this act. * * *"

Section 12029, providing for the partition of real estate, provides among other things that if the court finds that the plaintiff has a legal right to any part of the estate, it shall order partition thereof and appoint commissioners to make such partition. This writ is directed to the sheriff. When the commissioners are of the opinion that the estate cannot be divided without manifest injury, they return that fact to the court together with an appraisement of the estate. If the court approves of the return, one or more of the parties may elect to take the estate at such an appraised value, whereupon it is adjudged to him upon his paying the amount of the appraisement.

From your statement it is apparent that a report, showing that no division of the realty could be made, was filed, whereupon one of the parties elected to take the realty at the appraisement. It is, therefore, manifest that the writ and order of partition were issued, because it was only by virtue of this that the commissioners made their return that there could be no division without manifest injury to the estate. Under such circumstances it seems to be clear that the fact of election to take in no way prevents the application of the land registration act. You will observe that before any order of sale or partition can be made the title must be registered. From this it must follow that there could not be a valid election and deed without registration, as there is no question that there could have been no election until the order was made, under the state of facts set out by you. It is, therefore, my judgment that the county recorder is correct in his position that the action comes within the purview of section 64 of the land registration act, which is mandatory, and, therefore, the title should be registered as provided in said act.

You do not ask whether such discretionary power is vested in the recorder as to authorize him to refuse to receive for record an instrument purporting to be a deed made under the order of court, and hence this question is not answered. I would suggest, however, that the matter be taken up with the court before the instrument is received.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RULES APPLICABLE TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO FURNISH BLANKS TO APPLICANTS TO REGISTER LAND TITLES.

The county commissioners should not furnish to applicants to register titles, at the expense of the county, blanks designed solely for the convenience of such applicants. They may supply at the county's expense such blanks as are provided for use by the officials charged with the administration of the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1914

HON. HUGH H. GILMORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 21, 1914, you ask the following question:

> "Under the Torrens land law may the county pay the cost of blanks purchased by the probate judge and county clerk, to be used in proceedings in their respective courts under such law?"

Under section 91 it is the duty of the county commissioners to furnish, at the expense of the county, all books, blanks, papers and other things necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, but it does not seem to me that this section should be so broadly construed as to authorize the county commissioners to put the county to the expense of furnishing blanks which are solely for the benefit of the applicants for registration. There is, I think, a distinction between those blanks which are for the office use of the various officials charged with the administration of the registration law, and blanks by virtue of which those desiring to take advantage of the act invoke court procedure.

It would extend this opinion to an unreasonable length if I were to specify what particular blanks should be furnished by the county and those which should not. Consequently, I will herein endeavor to lay down a general rule which may be applied to the situation as it arises.

You will observe that many of the forms pertain to the clerical work of officials and others are provided as part of the court machinery after the proceeding has been filed; and in this class of cases it may properly be said that they are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act and come properly within the classification of office supplies, and are in the nature of official instruments. This, however, is not true of petitions and such other forms as are to be prepared by suitors. This is especially true of petitions which, I agree with you, should not be supplied by the county or any of its officers at public expense. As you suggest, there is no more reason for furnishing these than there would be to furnish blank petitions for any civil action.

Trusting that this answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROPERTY PURCHASED BY CHURCH NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXES WHERE A CONTRACT WAS ENTERED INTO FOR THE PURCHASE, PRIOR TO THE DATE ON WHICH A TAX LIEN ATTACHES, BUT NO ACTION TAKEN THEREON.

Where a church society is in need of a larger building and seeks to acquire a vacant lot adjacent to that on which its existing building is situated, with a view to building an addition to the present structure, and a contract of purchase entered into prior to the day preceding the second Monday in April, 1913, but no action taken thereunder until May, 1913, when a deed was executed to the church; under these facts the property is exempt from taxation, the lien of which attached in April, 1913.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 25th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The Central Congregational church of Toledo was the owner of an improved church property in the residential section of the city, and such property was at the time hereinafter mentioned used for church purposes. The First Congregational church of Toledo was originally the owner of a church property in the business section of said city.

"The two churches consolidated, and an order of court was taken authorizing the sale of the down town property and the purchase of a vacant lot immediately adjacent to the property in the residential district for the purpose of constructing an addition to the Central church building which would make it adequate to accommodate the consolidated congregation.

"In the month of January, 1913, and in pursuance of the authority above mentioned, the consolidated church entered into an agreement with the owner of the vacant lot in question for the purchase and conveyance to the church of said lot. The examination of the abstract and the execution of a deed by the grantor, who was a non-resident of the city, consumed so much time that the actual transfer of title, by the execution and delivery of the deed, did not take place until May, 1913.

"Was the property exempt from taxation on the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1913?"

I am indebted to Messrs. Doyle & Lewis of Toledo, for a full and complete statement of the facts concerning which you inquire and an able presentation of some of the law questions involved.

I find myself in accord with counsel upon a proposition of law which may be stated thus:

Where a house of public worship is inadequate in size to accommodate its congregation, and adjacent vacant land owned by the church society is held with a view to the immediate erection of an addition to the building, which will rest upon said land theretofore vacant, the additional land becomes thereby "attached to such buildings necessary for the proper occupancy, use and enjoyment thereof," within the meaning of section 5349, General Code.

But I am not so sure that this proposition is decisive of the question presented. In my opinion, the ground does not become attached to a house used exclusively for public worship within the meaning of the statute at least until some degree of title, either legal or equitable in and to such ground, is vested in the proprietor of the church building. For example, to use the facts of the case as an illustration, the ground in question did not become attached to the building at the instant of time when the necessity arose for its acquisition; because at that time it did not appear that the owner of the additional ground would be willing to part with it; and should he have proved unwilling to do so it would have been impossible for the trustees of the church ever to make use of the ground for any purpose whatever.

I think, therefore, that the attachment of which the statute speaks does not take place until the church society, or the proper representative thereof, acquires at least some degree of dominion over the property to be attached. What degree of dominion, then, is necessary under the law? The statutes relative to the assessment of real property for taxation as they existed in the year 1913 furnish, in my opinion, an answer to this question. The scheme then in vogue provided, generally, for the quadrennial appraisement of real property, and the last such appraisement was made in the year 1910 under the following statutes:

"Sec. 5348. The auditor of each county * * * in every fourth year * * * shall make and deliver * * * to the board of assessors of each city in the county, an abstract from the books of his office containing a description of each tract and lot of real property * * * with the name of the owner thereof * * * as it appears on his books. * * *

"Sec. 5554. The assessor, in all cases, from actual view, and from the best sources of information within his reach, shall determine as near as practicable, the true value of each separate tract and lot of real property in his district, according to the rules prescribed by this chapter for valuing real property. He shall note in his plat book, separately, the value of all dwelling houses, mills, and other buildings, which exceed one hundred dollars in value, or any tract or plat of land not incorporated, or on any land or lot of land included in a municipal corporation, which shall be carried out as a part of the value of such tract. He shall also enter therein the number of acres of arable or plow land, meadow and pasture land, and wood and uncultivated land, in each tract, as near as possible.

"Sec. 5570. The assessor at the time of making the assessment of real property subject to taxation, shall enter in a separate list pertinent descriptions of all burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions of purely public charity, and public buildings and property used exclusively for any public purpose, with the lot or tract of land on which such house, institution or public building is situated, and which are exempt from taxation. He shall value such houses, buildings, property and lots and tracts of land at their true value in money, in like manner as he is required to value other real property, designating in each case the township, city or village, and number of the school district or the name or designation of the school, religious society, or institution to which each house, lot, or tract belongs. If such property is hold and used for other public purposes, he shall state by whom or how it is held."

The property in question, then, under these statutes, must have been listed and valued by the joint action of the county auditor and the board of assessors on the general tax list and not on the exempt list.

In order to be placed on the exempt list through correction of the duplicate, as provided in section 2568, General Code, or otherwise, such property must be shown to the proper officer, in this case the county auditor, to have suffered a change of status in some manner or other. It is clear, of course, that where the property is necessary for the proper use and occupancy of a church building and has actually been purchased for such use and legal title taken involving a transfer on the tax books, as provided in section 2573, General Code, that such a change of status would take place, and the auditor in making the transfer, should take the property from the tax list and place it on the exempt list.

Of course it is not necessary that in order that property of this kind may become exempt from taxation, such a change in the legal title as I have referred to should take place. Thus, property held under a lease by a church society, and so used by it as to be either a house used exclusively for public worship, or grounds attached thereto, would be exempt from taxation notwithstanding the ownership of the legal title thereof.

Church of the Epiphany vs. Raine, 21 Bull., 180.
Kenyon College vs. Schnably, 8 N. P., n. s., 160.

But use for the favored purpose is after all the ultimate criterion of exemption from taxation. In order that ground may become so attached to a house used exclusively for public worship as to be entitled to exemption, there must be such dominion over the ground under color of title or right to use as will constitute that degree of user which is implied from the employment in the statute of the word "attached."

The facts presented to me by you and Messrs. Doyle and Lewis fail to show that what I regard as the necessary degree of dominion over the property in question existed in April, 1913. It is not claimed that at that time the church had leased the ground in question; it is not claimed that the church had in any way entered into possession of the ground prior to the day at which the lien for taxes attached. For aught that appears, then, the original owner of the ground, notwithstanding the contract of sale, retained perfect and exclusive dominion thereof until the delivery of the title deed and at least until after the month of April, 1913.

The church not possessing the legal title to the property or any leasehold interest therein at the time stated, I cannot reach the conclusion that the land which had theretofore been properly regarded as taxable had changed in character by reason of use or dominion to such an extent in April, 1913 as to justify its removal from the tax list.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that on the day preceding the second Monday in April, 1913, the vacant lot, subsequently acquired by the First Congregational church of Toledo, and described in the above statement of facts, was not exempt from taxation, and that the lien of the state having attached on that date, the same can be discharged only by the payment of the taxes charged against the entry on the tax list.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL OF THE VILLAGE OF WEST CARROLLTON, OHIO, FOR BOND ISSUE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF STORM SEWERS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I hereby certify that I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of council of the village of West Carrollton in the issuance of bonds in the amount of $3,200.00 for the construction of storm sewers, and that such bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law, and that the same constitute a good and legal obligation against the village of West Carrollton, to be paid in accordance with the provisions therein.

My apologies to you on this behalf are due because this transcript was examined at the time another transcript from the same village was examined, and the certificate given to you at that time should have covered both issues, but through inadvertance mention was not made therein of the issue concerning which the present opinion is given.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

CONDEMNATION OF A SCHOOL BUILDING BY THE STATE BUILDING INSPECTOR—LEVIES FOR THE NECESSARY REPAIRS ARE NOT ENTITLED TO EXEMPTIONS.

In case of the condemnation of a school building by the state building inspector, levies for the necessary repairs are not entitled to exemption from all limitations under sections 7630-1 and 5649-4, General Code, unless bonds are issued by a vote of the people, in which event the interest and sinking fund levies will be exempt from the limitation. Simple repair levies made under these circumstances are subject to all the limitations of law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. C. C. CRABBE, Prosecuting Attorney, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of August 28th, previously acknowledged, requests my opinion upon the following facts:

> "Some three years ago the Central school building of London was condemned and its use prohibited by an order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and it became necessary to build a new building, and bonds were issued by a vote of the people for that purpose, and the building is nearing completion but the board lacks about $6,000 of having sufficient funds to complete and equip said building.
> "I desire to know whether or not under section 7630-1, G. C., the taxing authorities of said district may levy a tax amounting to $6,000 in order to complete and equip said building, irrespective of the limitations placed upon said taxing authorities by statute. In other words, in preparing the budget can a levy of $6,000 be made in addition to the ten mills?
> "The same question also arises in the West Jefferson school district, and in preparing their budget they have levied a tax of $1,500 to repair the school building which has also been condemned by the inspector of workshops and factories."

Section 7630-1, General Code, as enacted in 103 O. L., 527, and its companion section, 5649-4, as amended by the same act are as follows:

> "Sec. 7630-1. If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds, and on the bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law.

"Sec. 5649-4. For the emergencies mentioned in sections forty-four hundred and fifty, forty-four hundred and fifty-one, fifty-six hundred and twenty-nine, seventy-four hundred and nineteen and 7630-1 of the General Code, the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor irrespective of any of the limitations of this act."

It is to be observed that section 7630-1 requires the issuance of bonds upon the approval of the electors in order that the special levy which it authorizes may be made. In other words, the levy is an interest and sinking fund levy and not a general repair levy. The mere fact that a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, etc., is not sufficient to authorize the levy which section 7630-1 mentions. The only levy provided for therein is the levy for the payment of the principal and interest on bonds issued by a vote of the people under the circumstances mentioned.

It will also be observed that the casualty need not have occurred after the act referred to was passed in order to entitle bonds issued on that account to the benefit of the special levy referred to in the section.

I am of the opinion that section 5649-4 referring as it does to section 7630-1 means and embraces the special levy referred to in the latter section and that only. It is not any levy made for the purpose of restoring a school building destroyed by fire or condemned by the state building inspector that is entitled to exemption from the limitations of the law, but only the levy provided for in section 7630-1 which is purely a sinking fund levy.

Accordingly I am of the opinion that neither of the levies described by you can be made outside of the limitations of the law, and that both must be made subject to all the limitations of the law unless the electors of the respective school districts approve bond issues for these purposes in which event the interest and sinking fund levies for the retirement of such bonds may be made outside of the limitations.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION TO PAROLE A PRISONER WHO HAS BEEN PREVIOUSLY CONVICTED IN ANOTHER STATE, OR SENTENCED FOR AN OFFENSE WHICH IS A FELONY IN OHIO.

The Ohio board of administration is without power to parole a prisoner who has previously been convicted in another state or sentenced to an institution of another state for an offense which is a felony in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 21, 1914, as follows:

"Will you kindly interpret that portion of section 2169, General Code of Ohio, page 474, Ohio Laws, 103, reading as follows:

" 'And who had not previously been convicted of felony or served a term in a penal institution.'

"The question has been raised, that it applies only to convictions for felonies, and sentences served in penal institutions in the state of Ohio, and that one who has been convicted of a felony or served a term in a penal institution in another state is not ineligible to consideration for parole."

Section 2169, General Code, reads in part:

"Section 2169. The board of managers (now the Ohio board of administration) shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner * * * not previously convicted of a felony or not having served a term in a penal institution * * * may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary."

In the case of People vs. Caesar, 1 Parker's Criminal Report (N. Y.), 645, it was held that the statute declaring a second offense of petit larceny to be punishable in the state prison, is not applicable to a case in which the first conviction took place in another state. In that case the court said at page 647:

"The statute under which the prisoner was indicted is expressed in very general language, and is not, in terms, confined to a first conviction in this state. It provides that every person having been convicted of petit larceny, who shall be subsequently convicted of petit larceny, shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for a term not exceeding five years. Although this expression is broad enough to apply to cases where the first conviction took place in another state, yet I think no such meaning was intended by the legislature. Crimes are local. We have no cognizance of crimes committed in another state or country. Each state exercises exclusive jurisdiction over all cases of crime committed within its limits. In this respect the different states of the Union stand in the same relation to each other as foreign states (citing cases). And the better opinion, as drawn from these cases, seems to be that a conviction in one state of an infamous crime does not render the person convicted incompetent as a witness in another state, but only goes to his credibility.

"The penal statutes of each state, therefore, must be construed as being applicable only to offenses committed within its own borders, unless it appear affirmatively that the intention was otherwise."

In the case of People vs. Becker, 138 N. Y., Sup., 771, the statute provided that in certain cases an indeterminate sentence should be imposed on a person never before convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in a state prison, and the court held that where a defendant had been previously convicted in Ohio of two crimes, for which he would have been punishable by imprisonment in a state prison in New York, had they been committed there, he would not be entitled to an indeterminate sentence. The court said at page 772:

"The relator insists that the fair meaning of this provision of the law is that the former convictions must have been within the state of New York, else they could not have been punishable by imprisonment in a state prison, to wit, a state prison in the state of New York.

"I do not think this position is sound. The language 'convicted of a crime punishable by imprisonment in a state prison' seems to me to have been adopted as a generic description of the crime and to have been used irrespective of the locality of the conviction or the place of punishment."

And again at page 773:

"What reason could the legislature assign for saying that a man convicted of an infamous crime in a sister state, the crime on the conviction of which in this state he would have been sentenced to imprisonment in a state prison in this state for a long period, and later convicted of a serious crime in this state, should receive punishment as though he never had been before convicted of a crime, and be a participant of all the consideration of a first offense."

"Is it probable that the legislature intended to permit a person who had been convicted of a felony in a sister state, to enjoy the privileges of this institution founded for the purpose of reforming its inmates and to deny such privileges to a person who had been convicted of a felony in the state of New York? It seems to me not?"

The view taken by the court in the case of People vs. Becker, just quoted is, I think, the correct one. The parole law was written upon the statute books for the purpose of assisting worthy prisoners to reform and the legislature, I am sure, in using the words "not previously convicted of felony or not having served a term in a penal institution," meant to withhold the privileges of this law from prisoners whose previous record would prove them to be unworthy of further assistance. It would be ridiculous to say that a prisoner previously convicted and imprisoned in another state, would be worthy of parole, while one previously convicted and imprisoned in this state could not be safely released.

Section 2192 of the General Code, relating to the duties of the clerk of the Ohio penitentiary, reads in part:

"Section 2192. * * * who shall keep a register in which shall be entered the name of each convict * * * and, if known, whether he has been previously confined in a penitentiary in this state or elsewhere and when and how he was discharged."

Provision has also been made for the establishment of a Bertillon department at the penitentiary.

These provisions have made it possible for the Ohio board of administration and the warden of the penitentiary, to gain a knowledge of the previous record of all the inmates of the penitentiary, and giving to section 2169, General Code, the natural and ordinary meaning of its language, it is my opinion that the board is without power to parole a prisoner who has previously been convicted in another state of, or sentenced to an institution of another state for, an offense which is a felony in Ohio.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT TO SELL ARTICLES MANUFACTURED BY PRISONERS OF THE OHIO PENITENTIARY TO OTHER STATES, OR POLITICAL DIVISIONS THEREOF, OR PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS, OWNED BY SUCH STATES.

Articles manufactured by prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary may not be sold to other states, or political divisions thereof, or to public institutions owned, managed or controlled by such states, or such political divisions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 17, 1914, as follows:

> "Will you kindly advise me if, under the law in this state, the products of the labor of prisoners in this institution, may be disposed of to states other than Ohio, or political divisions thereof, or to a public institution owned or managed and controlled by a state or a political division thereof, other than the state of Ohio.
> "We find a ready market for many of our prison made articles among the institutions of other states, and if permitted under the law to dispose of such articles to these institutions, it will naturally greatly increase our manufacture and sales department, and provide employment for a great many more of the inmates."

Section 2228 of the General Code reads in part:

> "Sec. 2228. * * * Convicts in such institution (Ohio penitentiary) may work for and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter."

Section 2230, General Code, reads:

> "Such labor shall be for the purpose of the manufacture and production of supplies for such institutions, the state or political divisions thereof; for a public institution owned, managed and controlled by the state or a political division thereof; for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or in the work of such construction or repair; for the purpose of industrial training and instruction, or partly for one and partly for the other of such purposes; in the manufacture and production of crushed stone, brick, tile, and culvert pipe, suitable for draining wagon roads of the state, or in the preparation of road building and ballasting material."

These sections authorize the employment of prison labor in the manufacture of such articles as are now being manufactured at the Ohio penitentiary. Nowhere in the statute is the board or warden given any authority to dispose of such products in the open market such as is given them with reference to the disposition of crushed stone in section 2235-1, which provides that such product may "be sold by the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary (now the Ohio board of administration) in the open market." Neither can it be argued that sections 2228 and 2230, General Code, authorize the sale of prison made articles to state institutions in other states, since the words "public institution owned, managed and controlled by the state or political divisions thereof," clearly indicates an intention that the sale shall be to institutions in the state of Ohio.

It is, therefore, my opinion that articles manufactured by prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary may not be sold to other states or political divisions thereof, or to public institutions owned, managed or controlled by such states or such political divisions.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSFER OF TERRITORY FROM ONE RURAL OR VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT TO ANOTHER— DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS WHEN SUCH TRANSFER IS MADE—APPORTIONMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS WHEN SUCH TRANSFER IS MADE.

When territory is transferred from one rural or village school district to another, the equitable division of funds or indebtedness required by statute to be made shall be determined upon at the time of the transfer, by the county board of education, which, under section 4736, General Code, has exclusive power to make such transfer.

The indebtedness apportioned to the transferred district in accordance with the statute becomes a general indebtedness of the whole district, and does not attach only to the transferred territory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. FRANK W. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 21st, previously acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "(1) When territory is transferred from one school district to another, the equitable division of funds or indebtedness shall be determined upon at the time of the transfer.
> "Who has the authority to make this equitable division of funds or indebtedness?
> "(2) Section 4736 gives to county boards of education the authority to transfer territory from one village or rural district to another.
> "If the township has a bonded indebtedness and additional territory without indebtedness is attached to it for school purposes, shall the indebtedness be pro rated upon both the original township and the added territory?"

Prior to the series of amendments to the school laws made by the eightieth general assembly at its first extraordinary session in the year 1914, there were two methods of transferring territory from one school district to another, viz.: By the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts (original section 4692, General Code), and by proceedings in the probate court (original sections 4693-4695, inclusive, General Code).

Under the present laws there is only one way to transfer territory from what is properly known as one "school district" to another, viz.: by the action of the county board of education under section 4736, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The county board of education shall as soon as possible after organizing make a survey of its district. The board shall arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. To this end the county board shall have power by resolution at any regular or special meeting to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. A map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor. In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation. In no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles."

Original sections 4692-4695, inclusive, of the General Code have all been repealed, the first of them by the act found in 104 Ohio Laws, at page 133, and the remaining three by the act found in 104 Ohio Laws, at page 225.

A new section 4692, General Code, was enacted, which differs from the original section so vitally as to make it rather a substitute therefor than an amendment thereof. It now provides as follows:

> "Part of any county school district may be transferred to an adjoining county school district or city or village school districts by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts. To secure such consent, it shall be necessary for each of the boards to pass a resolution indicating the action taken and definitely describing the territory to be transferred. The passage of such a resolution shall require a majority vote of the full membership of each board by yea and nay vote, and the vote of each member shall be entered on the records of such boards. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, is placed upon the records of such boards and copies of the resolution certified to the president and clerk of each board together with a copy of such map are filed with the auditors of the counties in which such transferred territory is situated."

So that at the present time section 4692, as amended, is not applicable to a transfer of territory between school districts, in the sense that the term is used in section 4736, and in the sense that the term was used in original sections 4692-4695, General Code; but only to what is called a transfer of territory from one county school district to another, or to (but not from) a city or village school district not a part of the county district. Inasmuch as the county school district is not a school district in every sense of the word but is, more properly speaking, a supervision district, and inasmuch as section 4696, directly involved in your inquiry, has not been materially changed in the process of amendment, and inasmuch, too, as it related, originally at least, only to a transfer of territory as between two school districts, in the exact sense, I mention section 4692 solely for the purpose of observing that nothing in this opinion is to be interpreted as applicable to the kind of transfer contemplated by that section. That is to say, my opinion will relate, solely, to the application of section 4696, as amended, to a transfer of territory made by a county board of education, under section 4736.

Said section 4696, General Code, provides in full as follows:

> "When territory is transferred from one school district to another, the equitable division of funds or indebtedness shall be determined upon at the time of the transfer. When territory is transferred from one district to another by the annexation of territory to a city or village, the proper division of funds in the treasury, or in process of collection, of the board of education of the school district from which the territory is detached, shall, upon application to the probate court of the county in which such territory is situated by either board of education interested, be determined and ordered by such court. If such board of education is indebted, such indebtedness, together with the proper amount of money to be paid to such board by the board of education of the school district to which the territory is transferred, annexed, or of the district created, shall be in like manner determined and ordered by the court."

It will be observed that the method of determining the equitable division of funds or indebtedness, in case of transfer, is expressly provided for in respect to such transfer of territory as takes place through the annexation of territory to a city or village, but that the agency which shall make the determination when the transfer is not so effected, is not specified. Obviously, that agency is not the probate court of the county, because that court is to act only "when territory is transferred * * * by the annexation of territory," etc.

It is clear to me that, in the absence of a requirement that the equitable division of funds and indebtedness shall be otherwise determined, the authority to make such determination resides where the authority to make the transfer is found.

It is, therefore, my opinion that in case of a transfer made by the county board of education, under section 4736, General Code, the equitable division shall be made at the time of the transfer by the county board of education.

If section, 4696, General Code, applies to the transfer spoken of in section 4692, a matter which as already stated is not passed upon in this opinion, it would follow, upon the principle above laid down, that the equitable division should be made by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of the districts mentioned in section 4692, and would be an essential element in such transfer, without agreement upon which no such transfer could be made. But in this connection I must reiterate that this point is not herein decided.

In answering your second question I assume that when speaking of the bonded indebtedness of the "township" you mean that the rural school district, which was formerly a township school district, rests under a bonded indebtedness. Of course, if the indebtedness is that of the township, as such, it is not within the scope of section 4696 at all, as the words "funds or indebtedness," as therein used, refer to school funds and school indebtedness, only.

I shall also assume that in speaking of attaching territory to a township for school purposes you mean that the boundaries of what was formerly a township school district, are to be altered by the county board of education, under section 4736, General Code, necessitating a transfer of territory from one rural or village school district, to another. The situation presented, then, is that the rural district as orginally constituted, has no bonded indebtedness, whereas the district from which the territory is transferred is burdened with an indebtedness.

In such a situation the statute requires that a proportional part of the indebtedness of the old district, from which the territory was transferred, shall be assumed by the new district. What proportion shall be thus assumed depends upon various factors. If, for example, a school house, on account of which a bonded indebtedness has been incurred, is located in the transferred territory, then the new district should assume the entire indebtedness, allowance being made for the exclusion from the territory transferred, of any territory formerly tributary to such school house. If, on the other hand, the indebtedness is not on account of any building which is located in the transferred territory, the assumption of indebtedness, if deemed equitable, should be made only on the basis of the fact that the new district will reap some benefit from the use of public buildings, i. e., that territory in the former township district and outside of the territory transferred will be served by the school house thus acquired. If no school building is acquired by transfer, then such portion of the bonded indebtedness of the old district should be assumed by the new district to which the transfer is made as will be equitable, having regard to the tax duplicate of the transferred territory, as compared with the tax duplicate of the original indebted district as it existed prior to the transfer, due allowance being made for whatever economy in the administration of the schools of the indebted district may be affected by detaching that territory from it and whatever additional burden the new district to which the transfer is made will assume by reason of the addition of such territory, in the administration of its schools.

In any event, if the school district which is indebted has accumulated money in a sinking fund for the retirement of the bonds, such portion of such sinking fund should be paid to the board of education of the new district to which the transfer of territory was made, as corresponds to the proportion of the indebtedness assumed.

The indebtedness so transferred becomes an indebtedness of the whole district thus formed, and is not to be met by levies upon the transferred territory, only.

In all such cases, there is no hard and fast rule to be applied. The statute requires an equitable division of property and indebtedness; and this requirement has the effect of reposing in the county board of education making the transfer, a sound discretion with respect to the determination which it is required to make, which will only be disturbed by the courts, in case of its abuse. The above discussion is intended merely to indicate some of the factors which should be taken into consideration by the county board of education in arriving at the determination.

I am of the opinion, therefore, in answer to your second question, that such portion of the indebtedness as is determined, should be apportioned to the former township district, under circumstances mentioned by you, becomes an indebtedness of such district as reformed and not merely an indebtedness of the territory transferred thereto.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE BOARD OF HEALTH UNDER BENSE ACT TO AUTHORIZE INSTALLATION SYSTEM OF SANITARY SEWERS AS A PERTINENT TO A SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT.

The board of health, under the Bense act, may authorize the installation of a system of sanitary sewers as appurtenant to a sewage disposal plant, and the funds necessary to pay for a village's portion of the cost of installing such sanitary sewers may be procured under the special limitations of the Bense act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. C. B. NEWTON, Village Solicitor, Kent, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 21st you submit certain facts relative to the present outstanding bonded indebtedness of the village of Kent, and the tax duplicate, with the general statement that the village has been ordered to construct a sewer system and sewage disposal plant by the state board of health, with the approval of the governor and attorney general, and you desire an interpretation of the "Bense act," relative to the issuance of bonds.

I take it that you desire an opinion as to whether under the legislation above referred to a municipal corporation which has been ordered by the state board of health, with the approval of the governor and attorney general to install a sewer system and sewage disposal plant, may issue bonds up to 5% of the tax duplicate in addition to the total bonded indebtedness otherwise permitted by law, and without a vote of the electors. At any rate I shall limit my opinion to this question. In so doing I shall not consider the questions arising out of the tax limitations under the Smith law, so-called, or questions arising under art. XII, section 11; nor could I consider such questions, the facts necessary therefor, not being stated in your letter.

Section 1259, General Code, is that provision of the "Bense act," so called, which provides for the issuance of bonds, and is as follows:

> "Each municipal council, department or officer having jurisdiction to provide for the raising of revenues by tax levies, sale of bonds, or otherwise, shall take all steps necessary to secure the funds for any such purpose or purposes. When so secured, or the bonds thereof have been authorized by the proper municipal authority, such funds shall be considered as in the treasury and appropriated for such particular purpose or purposes, and shall not be used for any other purpose. The bonds authorized to be issued for such purpose shall not exceed five per cent. of the total value of all property in any city or village, as listed and assessed for taxation, and may be in addition to the total bonded indebtedness otherwise permitted by law. The question of the issuance of such bonds shall not be required to be submitted to a vote."

I am of the opinion that this relates to the raising of revenues for any purpose with respect to which the state board of health, with the approval of the governor and attorney general, may make an order under the remaining provisions which originally constituted the "Bense act" (99 O. L., 74), viz., those provisions of the General Code now comprised in sections 1249 to 1261, inclusive.

In my opinion, therefore, it applies to the securing of funds for the installation of a means for disposing of sewage or other wastes within the meaning of section 1251, General Code, as well as to means of securing a water supply. That is to say, where the contamination of a source of water supply exists it may be corrected in either or both of two ways, viz., the prevention of further contamination or choice of another supply. The evident intention and purpose of the "Bense act" is to authorize the correction of the evil by the state board of health with the approval of the governor and attorney general, by either means. To that end the following provisions of section 1250 and 1251, General Code, appear to be appropriate:

> "Sec. 1250. If the state board of health finds that the source of public water supply of a city, village or community is subject to contamination, or has been rendered impure from the discharge of sewage or other wastes, or in any other manner by a city, village, corporation or person, that such sewage or other wastes have so corrupted a stream, water course, lake or pond as to give rise to foul and noxious odors, or to conditions detrimental to the health or comfort of those residing in the vicinity thereof, it shall notify such city, village, corporation or person causing such contamination or pollution of its findings and give an opportunity to be heard.
> "Sec. 1251. After such hearing, if the state board of health determines that improvements or changes are necessary and should be made, it shall report its findings to the governor and attorney general, and, upon their approval, the board shall notify such city, village, corporation or person to install works or means, satisfactory to the board, for purifying or otherwise disposing of such sewage or other wastes, or to change or enlarge existing works in a manner satisfactory to the board. Such works or means must be completed and put into operation within the time fixed by the board, which time shall be subject to the approval of the governor and attorney general. But no city or village discharging sewage into a river which separates the state of Ohio from another state shall be required to install sewage purification works so long as the unpurified sewage of cities or villages of another state is discharged into such river above such city or village of this state."

It seems from your statement that the state board of health, the governor and attorney general have assumed that these provisions confer upon them the authority to order the installation of a system of sewerage and a means of sewage disposal. As already indicated, such an assumption is correct; and for reasons already stated the funds necessary on the part of the municipality itself to comply with the order may be secured, so far as any debt limitation is concerned, by acting under section 1259, General Code, supra.

It appears that $102,000 is less than 5% of $4,600,000. Therefore, as the limitation found in section 1259 clearly applies to the bonds issued on account of the particular improvement in question, no other bonds being counted in ascertaining the limitation therein referred to, I am of the opinion that in so far as section 1259 is concerned the village of Kent may lawfully issue bonds which it finds necessary to issue in order to install the improvements ordered by the state board of health.

As already indicated, however, this opinion is not to be taken as a positive holding that the village may issue bonds in the amount stated. Tax levies for the retirement of bonds must be made within all the limitations of the Smith 1% law, and under article XII, section 11 of the constitution provision must be made for such levies at the time the bonds are issued. As hereinbefore stated, however, there is no showing in your letter of facts on which any expression of view respecting the operation of these in direct limitations upon the borrowing power can be based.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF A MAYOR TO REMOVE MEMBERS OF COUNCIL OUTSIDE OF A PROVISION OF SECTION 4238, GENERAL CODE—REMOVAL FOR MISCONDUCT IN OFFICE.

Outside the provisions of section 4238, General Code, the mayor has no power to remove members of council. Members may be removed for misconduct in office, through the probate court, or through the common pleas court, upon filing of a petition by twenty per cent. of the electors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. A. A. GEORGE, Village Solicitor, Crooksville, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 8th, you request my opinion, as follows:

> "As solicitor for the village of Crooksville, Ohio, I desire to know if there is any provision by which the mayor can remove members of council for nonattendance aside from the provision of G. C., sec. 4238, which provides for removal after two months' nonattendance. Under such provision a councilman can miss six weeks, then attend one and miss six weeks more and still hold his place, and that is what they are doing in Crooksville and interfering with our municipal work to a great extent.
> "Only two members of council have been playing this sort of business but that takes away a two-thirds vote necessary in many cases. These two men were both adjudged by the state examiner to have drawn illegal fees for last term and they recently paid it back. Would that fact render them ineligible to hold their present positions?"

Section 4238, General Code, is as follows:

> "Council shall determine its own rules and keep a journal of its proceedings. It may punish or expel any member for disorderly conduct or violation of its rules, and declare his seat vacant for absence without valid excuse, where such absence has continued for two months. No expulsion shall take place without the concurrence of two-thirds of all the members elected, and until the delinquent member has been notified of the charge or charges against him, and has had an opportunity to be heard."

It is clear that council's power to expel for absence, under this statute, is confined to a continued absence for two months. The situation presented by you, therefore, does not authorize council to proceed under this section.

Sections 4263, et seq., General Code, authorize the mayor to bring charges before the municipal council against officers guilty of misconduct in office. These statutes, however, do not apply to members of the council.

(Illuminating Co. vs. Hitchens, 30 N. P., n. s., 57.)

Under sections 4670, et seq., General Code, however, provision is made for complaint under oath against municipal officers, before the probate judge of the county and expressly against a member of council who has received compensation contrary to law, or who has been directly or indirectly interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or service, or is or who has been acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by the corporation, contrary to law; or who has been guilty of misfeasance or malfeasance in office. Under the proceedings contemplated by these statutes, where the facts justify, a councilman may be removed from office.

Also, on page 851 of 103, O. L., provision is made for the filing, with the common pleas court, of a complaint signed by 20% of the electors from the district wherein a councilman is elected, against a councilman charging him with neglect of official duty, gross immorality, drunkenness, misfeasance, malfeasance, etc. Further than these presented I am unable to point to any provisions of law which have application to the situation presented.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSFER OF UNEXPENDED LIGHT FUND TO WATER FUND OF A VILLAGE—CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH SUCH TRANSFER MAY BE MADE—VILLAGE WATER WORKS.

An unexpended fund in the light fund of the village, for which there is no further use, cannot be transferred to the water fund of the village at all, if the said unexpended fund consists of the proceeds of a special tax levy or bond issue; otherwise, such transfer can be made, but only by proceedings in the common pleas court, under sections 2296, et seq., General Code.

The Longworth act is authority to issue bonds for the purpose of putting down new wells in connection with the village water works.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. F. B. MCCONNELL, Legal Counsel, Osborn, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Light and water plant conducted by village; light plant, excepting real estate recently sold to highest bidder. Water plant still operated by village through board of public affairs.
> "Can an unexpended fund, now in the light fund, for which there is no further use, be transferred to water fund by act of this board?
> "Assuming that sufficient funds cannot be raised by taxation to open new wells needed to maintain water plant and for fire protection by what method can such funds be secured?"

Answering your first question I beg to state that the board of trustees of public affairs have no authority whatever to transfer funds. Whatever authority there is in the premises is reposed in council. Council does not possess such authority with respect to the transfer you mention under section 3799, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 522, providing for transfer by vote of three-fourths of the members of council, and the approval of the mayor, because their power to make such transfer is limited to transfers "among funds raised by taxation upon the real and personal property in the corporation."

I assume that neither the light fund nor the water fund are funds so raised.

Again, if the unexpended fund in the light fund represents the proceeds of a special bond issue, the section cited prohibits its transfer and section 5654, General

Code, as amended 103 O. L., 521, requires that the surplus be transferred to the sinking fund.

The only other provision for transferring funds is that of sections 2296, et seq., General Code, some of which are amended by the act already referred to. These sections contemplate a proceeding in the common pleas court for the purpose, and the right to transfer is not limited, as in the case of section 3799, to transfers among funds raised by taxation.

However, there is another limitation in these sections which may have application here, viz., that the transfer shall be among funds under the supervision of the council or "other board having the legislative power of a municipality."

Inasmuch as it cannot be successfully contended that the board of trustees of public affairs is a board having legislative power, it follows, I think, that the council is the only village "board" which has the right to proceed under section 2296; and the question then becomes one as to whether or not the light fund and the water fund are both funds under the supervision of the council.

The question here is to be answered, I think, by consideration of section 3960, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Money collected for water works purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

Of course, under section 4361, as amended, 103 O. L., 561, the board of trustees of public affairs is expressly given the powers of the director of public service existing under section 3960. In fact section 4361, as amended, seems to go further and to provide that the board of trustees of public affairs shall have and exercise, with respect to electric light, power and gas plants, and other similar public utilities, all the powers and duties of the director of public service relating to water works.

Giving to this language its full effect, it would seem that in villages the electric light fund should be treated as the water works fund is required to be treated by section 3960, General Code. However, for the purpose of the present question, these matters are of slight importance. While the water works fund and perhaps the electric light fund in a village is to be deposited and kept as a separate and distinct fund, subject to the direct order of the trustees of public affairs, without the intervention of a village clerk, yet it is not so subject to order without appropriation by council.

The proper reading of this section requires, I think, the holding that the council shall make a general appropriation rather than a detailed and specific appropriation. Be this as it may, however, it is certain that the power of council to appropriate the fund is sufficient to give it that degree of supervision over the fund which will entitle it to bring an action in the common pleas court for the purpose of transferring to such fund, from another fund under its supervision, or vice versa.

Accordingly, in answer to your first question, I am of the opinion that unless the unexpected balance in the light fund consists of the proceeds of a special tax or bond issue, the same can be transferred to the water works fund, not by action of the trustees of public affairs, and not by council itself, but by the common pleas court in a proceeding instituted by council under the section above cited.

Answering your second question, I beg to state that in my opinion wells needed in connection with the water works plant of a village may be obtained by the issuance of bonds under section 3939, General Code, and particularly the following two paragraphs thereof:

"2. For extending, enlarging, improving, repairing or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it.

"11. For erecting or purchasing water works for supplying water to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

Such bonds must, of course, be issued under all the limitations of the related sections, but the form of your question does not require consideration of such limitations.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INTERPRETATION OF THE TERMS OF A WILL FOR THE PURPOSE OF DETERMINING INHERITANCE TAX.

The fact that a devise is founded upon a valuable consideration is immaterial as affecting the question of the exemption of the same from the inheritance tax.

Where a bequest to an individual is a charge upon an estate, other interests are to be appraised by deducting the first individual's legacy from the value of the estate devised to them.

Where separate exemptions exist, the interest of each individual is a separate inheritance for the purpose of the inheritance tax law.

The interest of the first individual, not being taxable, and being deducted from the interests of other individuals, neither of the latter is taxable, as both are reduced to $500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. MEEKER TERWILLIGER, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 23rd, previously acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following question:

"T., a decedent testate in his will made the following devise: 'I give, devise and bequeath to F. and E. my home place, * * * consisting of two acres and all the buildings thereon, for the consideration of five hundred dollars to be paid by them to my niece M., as her share of my estate and for the further consideration that they shall furnish me with board, washing, nursing, care and attention during my natural life.'

"The devisees named in the foregoing item of T.'s will, did care for T., during the last years of his life. In like manner the legatee M., referred to therein, assisted in nursing and caring for decedent.

"The property devised is appraised at $1,500.00. The services rendered by F. and E., are asserted by them to be worth at least $750.00. Is the inheritance, to the extent of its value above $500.00 taxable, F. and E., not being related to T.?

No discrimination between devises and legacies founded upon a consideration, and those which are gratuitous appears in our inheritance tax law, at least by express provision.

Section 5331, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 463, provides in part as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein * * * which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, etc., shall be liable to a tax. * * * All administrators, executors and trustees, and any such grantee under a conveyance made during the grantor's life, shall be liable for all such taxes. * * *"

It will be observed that under the plain terms of this provision the passing of interests in property by will or by the intestate laws of this state to or for the use of persons other than those expressly excluded, is sufficient to make the estate taxable.

I find no language in the related sections in any way qualifying the general meaning of the sentence which I have quoted so far as the question submitted by you is concerned.

Section 5332, General Code, adds to the list of exemptions by excepting from the operation of the statute interests in property transmitted to certain public subdivisions or institutions.

Section 5334, General Code, contains specific provision for a case somewhat similar to that which you submit and yet easily distinguishable therefrom.

> "Sec. 5334. When a decedent appoints one or more executors or trustees, and instead of their lawful allowance makes a bequest or devise of property to them which would otherwise be liable to such tax, or appoints them his residuary legatees, and said bequests, devises, or residuary legacies exceed what would be a reasonable compensation for their services, such excess shall be liable to such tax, and the probate court having jurisdiction of their accounts shall fix such compensation."

It was under this section that the case of In Re Hooper, 4 N. P., n. s., 186, was decided. No general principle is therefore deducible from that decision whatever its authority on other points.

Hagerty vs. State 55 O. S., 613, is an interpretation of the word "sale" as used in the section. The language of the syllabus on this point is:

> "2. The property 'which shall pass by sale' within the meaning of the act is such only as passes in transactions which are in fact gifts, though in form sales, and the act does not restrict the right to dispose of property by sale for a valuable consideration, which the parties in good faith, deem adequate."

It is obvious that this decision does not go to the extent of limiting the force and effect of the statute upon inheritances created by will to such as are in the nature of gifts as distinguished from those which rest upon a valuable consideration.

This being the state of the statute law, then, I am of the opinion that the principles laid down in the cases of In Re Gould 156 N. Y., 423; State Street Trust Co. vs. Stevens, 209 Mass., 373; In Re Kidd, 188 N. Y., 274; Ransome vs. U. S.,

Federal Case, 11574 and In Re Perry, Mass., Middlesex Co., Probate Court, July, 1911, apply. All these cases hold that in the absence of explicit statutory provisions to the contrary, an inheritance tax applies as well to a devise or bequest upon a valuable consideration as to one which is intended merely as a gratuity. Some of them even go so far as to hold that even where there has been a definite contract to make a will founded upon a valuable consideration, and the contract was executed on the part of the devisee or legatee, and the will made, the devisee or legatee is subject to the tax without reference to the contract. In such case the devisees or legatees may renounce their respective devises or bequests and elect to claim from the estate of the decedent as creditors thereof, but they may not, so these decisions hold, take under the will except upon the terms upon which all other persons, except those expressly exempt, take under the will, viz., subject to the tax.

In a word, a very clear distinction is made by the authorities between the taxability of property passing by will, founded upon a consideration, and property passing by deed, grant or sale intended to take effect after the death of the testator, and founded upon a consideration. For a deed intended to take effect at the death of the testator or other similar instrument is only conventionally an inheritance, and the convention which the statute constructs will be limited to the purpose of the statute, which is to guard against the evasion of the tax by the expedient of making sales, grants or deeds intended to take effect at the death of the testator; so that where the sale, grant or deed is in reality founded upon a valuable consideration it is not permitted to stand upon a different foundation from any other similar transaction merely because it happens to be so made as not to take effect until after the death of the testator, and is, therefore, not to be regarded as within the purview of the statute. But the real subject of the tax is the privilege of inheriting property. This is regarded as in a sense something other than a natural right, whereas the right to dispose of property by grant, sale or deed is a natural right inherent in the very idea of property itself. Therefore, no reason exists in the view of the authorities for making any such distinction as to taxation of inheritances created by will as is made with respect to conventional inheritance created by grant, sale or deed intended to take effect after the death of the testator.

These considerations are, under the Ohio law, emphasized as already hinted, by the fact that section 5334, General Code, expressly provides that the excess over the reasonable compensation of an executor to whom a bequest or devise is made shall be liable for the tax. In the absence of such provision the rule would clearly be, as already stated, that the whole devise or bequest made to such an executor or trustee would be so liable.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the fact that the devises in the legacies were both made on a valuable consideration does not affect the question which you submit. But this conclusion does not answer your question. The $500.00 to be paid to M., regarded as a bequest, is not subject to the tax because legacies of $500.00 or less in amount are exempt therefrom. This department has held that the $500.00 exemption attached to each inheritance and not to the whole estate. And this conclusion, it is believed, necessarily follows from the language of section 5331, General Code, as well as upon the principles established by decisions in other states under similar laws.

In like manner, the respective interests of F. and E., though joint, are entitled to an exemption of $500.00.

Section 5331, General Code, provides that:

> "All property * * * and any interest therein * * * which passes * * * to a person * * * shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of $500.00."

F. and E., are separate persons within the purview of this language, and what passes to each of them is an interest in property; therefore, if their respective interests in the aggregate are to be valued for the purpose of the tax at but $1,000.00, no tax is payable on behalf of their respective estates. On the other hand, if for the purpose of the tax, the value of their estates in the aggregate is $1,500.00, then the tax should be assessed on the sum of $500.00 or $250.00 for each of them.

The ultimate question involved, then, is as to whether or not the $500.00 required to be paid by F. and E., to M., is to be deducted from the value of the estate devised to F. and E., jointly?

I think it is obvious that this question is to be solved by considering exactly what is the "interest" possessed by F. and E., jointly, in and to the estate devised to them. The rule seems to be that a gift by will to one, coupled with a direction that the devisee shall pay a specific legacy to another, constitutes the legacy a charge upon the land without express words to that effect. In Clyde vs. Simpson, 4 O. S., 445, and particularly in the opinion of Ranny J., will be found an exhaustive discussion of the law on this point. It would be impracticable to quote the whole opinion, which is interesting, but the following paragraph well shows the principle involved:

> " 'When Moore Simpson accepted the devise and took possession of the estate he became absolutely bound to pay these legacies as a part of its purchase price. The testator intended that he should have the property only upon paying so much of a consideration for it. If he had taken the title by deed, an undoubted equitable lien for these payments would have attached; and I am wholly unable to see how a doctrine resting upon the broad foundation of justice and conscience, and which will not permit one to keep the estate of another until full consideration is paid * * * can be made to depend upon the manner in which the title is derived. But whether the lien in this case, might rest upon this doctrine or not, it derives a strong support from the analogy; and I think it very clear, that the actual knowledge and contemplation of such a lien by the testator, are no more important to its existence, than in the case of a vendor of real property."

Now if the lien is one that is created by the will itself, as appears in this case, then I think it logically follows that the interest of the devisees in the estate, passing by will, is something less than the whole estate.

A distinction may be observed between a devise of land encumbered by mortgage, and a devise of land thus encumbered by charging a specific legacy upon it. There may be some doubt as to whether in the former case the interest passing should be regarded as the whole estate or only the testator's equity therein, although there is authority to the effect that the equity only is to be appraised and taxed.

In Re Sutton, 149 N. Y., 618.

But in the case submitted, the thing which cuts down the quantity of the interest devised is the will itself by the operation which it has in making the legacy a charge on the real estate. In other words, one inheritance is a charge upon another inheritance. The closest analogy is perhaps afforded by the right of dower under the intestacy law. Here the value of the estate passing to the heirs is cut down by the interest of the widow or widower in the real property. One inheritance by being a charge upon the other affects the value of the latter.

While I have not encountered any authorities directly in point, I am of the opinion that upon principle the interest of F. and E., in the estate, subject to appraisement and taxation, is limited in value, on the facts submitted to $1,000.00; F. and E., then being entitled to a separate exemption of $500.00 each, the whole estate is exhausted by the exemptions and there is nothing to tax.

Attorney General.

DUTY OF COUNTY AUDITOR WITH REFERENCE TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF SCHOOL FUNDS FOR THE USE OF THE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—COUNTY AUDITOR MUST MAKE SETTLEMENT ON THE BASIS OF CERTIFICATE REQUIRED TO BE MADE BY THE COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION UNDER SECTION 4744-2, GENERAL CODE.

It is the duty of county auditors to obtain from the distribution of school funds the amounts set apart under section 4744-3, General Code, for the use of the county board of education fund, regardless of the fact that such retention was not taken into account by the rural boards of education in making their 1913 tax levies. Such retention is to be made out of all the moneys to be distributed to the several districts including the proceeds of local levies, as well as the amount to be apportioned to the district as its portion of the state common school fund, and is not to be charged against any one particular fund or levy.

The county auditor cannot make any valid settlement, except on the basis of the certificate required to be made by the county board of education by section 4744-2, General Code, respecting the number of teachers employed by the various school districts under its jurisdiction, etc. If the county board fails to make proper certificate until after the usual period of settlement and the settlement is made, the error should be corrected under section 2597, General Code, in the next succeeding semi-annual settlement, and in the meantime the county board of education fund must get along without the moneys belonging to it, and the county and district superintendents must serve on one-half pay until the next settlement time, when the arrearages in their respective salaries will be made up.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. BENJAMIN OLDS, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 17th, previously acknowledged, you request my opinion upon certain questions arising under the new school laws. Your questions are as follows:

> "Under section 4744-3, General Code of Ohio, would the county auditor be authorized to retain the amounts necessary to pay the portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents of the respective village and rural school districts, from the 1914 semi-annual August apportionment, the county board of education having complied with the requirements of section 4744-2 of the General Code; the said apportionment having been raised by a levy of taxes under a budget which did not include said salaries, and said levy having been made before sections 4744-2 and 4744-3 of the General Code were enacted.
> "If the county board of education has not complied with the requirements of section 4744-2, G. C., but on the 11th day of September, 1914, said board did make the certificate required by said section, the county auditor having at that time completed his August settlements with the various school boards, would it be legal for the various school boards to return to the county treasurer their respective apportionments for the purpose of creating the 'county board of education fund,' and if so could they be compelled to do so should they refuse?"

The first question involves consideration of section 4744-3, General Code, as enacted in 104 O. L., 133-143.

"Sec. 4744-3. The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents as may be certified by the county board. Such amounts shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund.' The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipts by the state auditor of such certificate, he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount, which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

A preliminary question arises as to the meaning of the italicized words in the above section, viz., "school funds." Do these words mean and refer to the taxes locally levied or do they mean and refer to the state common school fund, or both?

In my opinion the meaning of the phrase is indicated by the provisions of section 7600, General Code, as amended at the same session of the General Assembly (104 O. L., 159) by an act passed one day later than the act enacting the above quoted section. Said section 7600, so amended, provides as follows:

"After each annual settlement with the county treasurer, each county auditor shall immediately apportion school funds for his county. The state common school funds shall be apportioned as follows:

"Each school district within the county shall receive thirty dollars for each teacher employed in such district, and the balance of such funds shall be apportioned among the various school districts according to the average daily attendance of pupils in the schools of such district. If an enumeration of the youth of any district has not been taken and returned for any year and the average daily attendance of such district has not been certified to the county auditor such district shall not be entitled to receive any portion of that fund. The local school tax collected from the several districts shall be paid to the districts from which it was collected. Money received from the state on account of interest on the common school fund shall be apportioned to the school districts and parts of districts within the territory designated by the auditor of state as entitled thereto on the basis of thirty dollars for each teacher employed and the balance according to the average daily attendance. All other money in the county treasury for the support of common schools and not otherwise appropriated by law, shall be apportioned annually in the same manner as the state common school fund."

It will thus be seen that the function of apportioning school funds includes distribution of the local school tax and the state common school fund as well.

It appears, therefore, that the fund from which the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents as may be certified by the county board is to be retained by the county auditor, is the undivided fund, so to speak, consisting in part of the proceeds of local levies and in part of the distribution of the state common school fund.

The only difficulty encountered in reaching this conclusion lies in the fact that section 7600 requires an annual apportionment, while section 4744-3 refers to a semi-annual apportionment. This difficulty, however, is more apparent than real. While section 7600 provides only for an annual apportionment, yet in so far as it covers the actual distribution of taxes, and at least in so far as it applies to the payment to the several districts of local school taxes levied by them, it covers the discharge of a function which must be exercised semi-annually. Formerly I have held in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices that while the apportionment of school funds, meaning thereby the distribution of the state common school fund among the districts is to be fixed annually, the actual distribution is to take place semi-annually.

Consideration of section 7744-3, General Code, shows that it fits into the scheme of things thus defined, and further justifies my previous interpretation of section 7600.

The fact that no specific levy of taxes was included in the 1913 budget of any school district on account of supervision is, in my opinion, immaterial. There is, of course, a general principle that the proceeds of a tax levy constitute a trust fund which cannot be diverted to any extraneous purpose. This principle is inherent in article XII, section 5 of the constitution, which provides that every law imposing a tax shall specify the object to which only it shall be applied. But this principle cannot be applied too strictly. Otherwise no new function could ever be imposed upon public officers or subdivisions as such, in such a way as to involve the expenditure of money, without providing a specific tax for the discharge of that function.

Now, the local school levies are divided into those for tuition, those for contingent purposes, those for building purposes and those for interest and sinking fund purposes. All of these are, generally speaking, school purposes. So is supervision, and for the legislature to require moneys already raised for these general purposes to be applied in part to supervision would, in my judgment, not be violative of any constitutional limitation. Indeed, there are many other instances of legislation of the same character. Thus fees of the county treasurer and county auditor are payable out of the undivided taxes and are to be retained by these officers from that source; while sections prescribing the payment of such fees were in force when the 1913 levy was made, so that it might be said to have been made in contemplation of the excision from their proceeds of the fees of these officers, yet so far as the strict language of the constitution is concerned the same violence would be done thereto by these statutes as by the one under consideration here.

A case closer in point is the compulsory workmen's compensation act, 103 O. L., 77. Section 19 thereof provides for the retention by the county auditor out of the undivided taxes ultimately payable to the various taxing district of an amount sufficient to pay into the state insurance fund the amount levied by law upon the various subdivisions for the support of that fund. This act went into force on January 1, 1914, and did not become effective as a law under the referendum provisions of the constitution until about June 15, 1914; both dates therefore being after the time for levying taxes in the year 1914. Nevertheless, in January, 1914, under the terms of this act, it was the duty of the county auditor to withhold from the distribution to be made to the various taxing districts an amount to pay state insurance premiums which had not been contemplated, in the legal sense, at the time of the levy.

ready stated that they are—they clearly evince a policy to the effect that the time of taking effect of a statute requiring retention of moneys from the undivided taxes is not, in the practical sense, postponed until after the taxing authorities have had an opportunity to levy specifically for such purposes or at least to take such retention into account in fixing the amounts which they will levy for other purposes. But for reasons already stated it is not entirely clear that the real burden of the exaction under section 4744-3 will fall wholly upon the proceeds of the local levies. In all probability (though your question does not require me so to decide) all the funds when apportioned to the local district must share in the excision made under section 4744-3. That is to say, the amount of which the section speaks is to be retained from the total amount due to the district and the state common school fund distribution, the tuition fund, the building fund, the contingent fund and the sinking fund must suffer on that account pro rata. In short, it is not in the first instance taken from the funds as such at all, but from the undivided moneys in the hands of the county treasurer. It is not taken out of the treasury of the school district, for it never reaches that treasury.

For these reasons it is clear that no appropriation under section 5649-3d, General Code, need be made by the local school boards on this behalf; and further that the prohibition in the same section against making an appropriation "for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget" is not inconsistent with the operation of section 4744-3.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion, notwithstanding the fact that the budgets of the various village and rural school districts constituting the levies producing the moneys settled for in August, 1914, do not contemplate the payment by the district, in the sense resulting from the operation of section 4744-3, of any portion of the salaries of county and district superintendents, the county auditor is authorized to retain from that settlement the amounts referred to in section 4744-3 of the General Code.

> "On or before the first day of August of each year the county board of education shall certify to the county auditor the number of teachers to be employed for the ensuing year in the various rural and village school districts within the county school district, and also the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation and the compensation of the county superintendent; and such board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents."

Is the provision for time, as found in this section, directory or mandatory? In my opinion it is directory merely. There is a well settled principle that unless a contrary intention is clearly manifested, provisions respecting the time within which an official act is to be performed are to be regarded as merely directory. Particularly is this true where the intention of the whole law is that the thing commanded to be done shall at all events be done rather than that it shall not be done at all unless done prior to a given date.

Without quoting extensively from the related sections of the amended school laws, I may say that upon a consideration of these laws as a whole, or as a system, I am satisfied that the legislature intended that there should at all events be a county board of education in each county and a county superintendent of schools in each county, as well as district superintendents therein. Compulsory supervision is the keynote in this respect of all these measures.

Inasmuch as compulsory supervision is required it follows, I think, that the legislature must have intended that adequate provision for the salaries of county and district superintendents should be made at all events. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the intention of the legislature, as clearly manifested, is that the certificate required by section 4744-2, General Code, must in all events be made.

I am further of the opinion that the county auditor should not make his settlement with the school districts until the certificate provided for in section 4744-2 is forthcoming from the board of education. In fact without this certificate he would have no proper basis upon which to make a settlement, not only on account of the provisions of section 4744-3, but also on account of the influence of the facts stated in the certificate required by section 4744-2 upon the ratio of distribution of the state common school fund among the various districts under section 7600, General Code, supra.

It appears, therefore, from your statement, that the county auditor has made an unauthorized and premature settlement. Nevertheless, it is a settlement, and I am seriously in doubt as to whether or not the local districts could be compelled to return to the county treasury their respective apportionments for the purpose of creating a county board of education fund or otherwise to return the money which they have received for the purpose of a proper division of the state common school fund. If there is a liability in the premises it would seem to be that of the county auditor, who by his act or neglect, has failed to provide the county board of education fund with a portion of its revenue.

I suggest, however, as the best way out of the difficulty, that the matter be adjusted under section 2587, G. C., at the next semi-annual settlement in March, and that pending such adjustment, the county and district superintendents be induced to serve without receiving their full compensation, and yet without prejudice to their right to receive the same when the county board of education fund shall have been properly reimbursed at the March settlement.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ASSESSMENT OF CANAL LANDS—ASSESSMENT OF ELECTRIC RAILWAY WHOSE LINES PARALLEL IMPROVEMENTS MADE UNDER SECTION 7407, GENERAL CODE—FARMERS' LAND MAY NOT BE ASSESSED FOR SUCH IMPROVEMENT—COLLECTION OF COSTS FROM ABUTTING OWNERS.

The state of Ohio, as the owner of canal lands abutting on a road improvement made under favor of sections 7407 and 7463, General Code, inclusive, may not be assessed for any part of the cost of such improvement.

An electric railway whose lines parallel such improvement and abut thereon may be assessed for such improvement, but not in excess of the benefits derived therefrom.

Farmers whose lands lie across either the canal or railroad cannot be assessed for such improvements, where such railroad or canal deprives such land owner of full, free and lawful access to the improvement. (31 O. S., 514; 43 O. S., 190.)

The amount of cost of an improvement, under the above mentioned sections, which, but for the rules laid down in this opinion, might be collected from the state of Ohio, or from farmers across the railroad or canal or from the railroad on account of benefits not equaling the same, cannot be charged against or collected from the abutting owners on the residue of said improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

HON. J. HOWARD JONES, Prosecuting Attorney, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 21, 1914, enclosing a letter to you from your county commissioners in which it is stated that they are making a road improvement under sections 7407 to 7463, General Code, and inquire:

> "1. Whether the state may be assessed because of the fact that the canal abuts on the road being improved?
> "2nd. Whether the Ohio Electric railway which also abuts on the side opposite the canal may be assessed for such improvement one-half, if the state may be assessed, otherwise for the full cost assessable?
> "3rd. Whether the farmers across either the canal or railroad may be assessed?
> "4th. Whether, if the state or electric railway may not be assessed, the full amount of ten per cent. of the improvement may be charged against the remaining frontage?"

Section 7413, General Code, reads:

> "The county commissioners shall assess not more than twenty-five nor less than fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement on said abutting land. Not to exceed ten per cent. of said levy may be used for making sidewalks or bicycle paths."

This makes no specific direction as to the manner of assessment, or other direction, than it shall be assessed "on said abutting land." The question of the power to assess property belonging to the state will be first considered.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations, volume 4, section 1446, lays down the rule:

"The principle which makes property of the state or of any of its political or municipal subdivisions nontaxable under general statutory provisions and in the absence of a positive direction therefor, according to the great weight of authority, also precludes the imposition of a special assessment for a street or other local improvement upon such property unless there is positive legislative authority therefor. But property of a municipal corporation is not excepted by implication from the operation of laws authorizing the imposition of special assessments when it is not held for public use. In some states the implied exception is not recognized, and a statute authorizing the imposition of special assessments upon property abutting on an improvement or benefited thereby is held to authorize the imposition of special assessments upon the property of municipalities and other civil divisions of the state."

This, as I take it, answers your first question in the negative and the canal property may not be assessed.

The question whether the electric railway may be assessed, rests upon an entirely different basis. Section 3812 of the General Code, reads:

"Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of a municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of and expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, dock, wharf, pier, public road, or place, by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, water courses, water mains, or laying of water pipe, and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon by one of the following methods:

"1. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed;

"2. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement;

"3. By the foot frontage of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement.

"Council, having been conducted upon a rule which excluded the consideration of the question of benefits, and placed the burden upon the land on a theory inconsistent with such consideration, the assessment is, therefore, an illegal one. This conclusion is further shown by the language of the majority opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan. At page 278 these words: 'But does the exclusion of benefits from the estimate of compensation to be made for the property actually taken for public use authorize the public to charge upon the abutting property the sum paid for it, together with the entire costs incurred in the condemnation proceedings, irrespective of the question whether the property was benefited by the opening of the street?' " (61 O. S., 8, Shroder vs. Overman, Clerk.)

Norwood vs. Baker was also cited and quoted in Walsh vs. Barron, Treas., 61 O. S., 24. On page 26 of this opinion will be found:

"It must, therefore, be held that all assessments under this law must be limited to all benefits conferred, or, it must follow that the legislature designed a palpable invasion of the rights of private property, which is not admissible. In other words, in authorizing an assessment to pay for improvements under the law, the legislature had special reference to such assessments as would be no more than the proper proportion of the costs based on the benefits received."

These authorities limit the power of assessment in all instances to benefits conferred and their application to the question of assessment against the electric railway property raises the question of fact not here presented, as to the character of title held by the railway company; that is, whether in fee or as a mere easement. If held in fee, it is land and abuts on the improvement but it cannot be assessed in any amount in excess of the benefits conferred by the improvement, which must be based upon benefits to this land other and different from such as are conferred upon the general public.

To conclude, therefore, upon this question, I am of opinion that the right of way of the Ohio Electric railway may be assessed for this improvement to the extent but not beyond the benefits conferred by the improvement upon such lands of this company as it owns in fee and is so specially benefited by the improvement.

Your third question must be answered in the negative upon the ground that they are not abutters upon the improvement. It seems clear to me that these farmers are cut off from the improvement by the canal on one side and the electric railroad on the other, as to deprive them of full, free and lawful access to the improvement. See Richards vs. Cincinnati, 31 O. S., 514 and 43 O. S. 190.

Your fourth question is whether, if the state, canal and farmers across both may not be assessed, whether the total cost of the improvement may be charged against the land owners abutting on the balance of the improvement? To do this would, at first glance, appear to be manifestly unjust, and in the absence of express authority to do so, I would not feel authorized in coming to such conclusion.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE VILLAGE OF GRANDVIEW HEIGHTS IN THE MATTER OF BONDS ISSUED FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined at your request the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of Grandview Heights in the matter of the issuance of bonds in the sum of $38,000 in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of several streets in said village; also an issue of bonds in the amount of $3,000 in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of Lincoln Road in said village; also the issue of a bond in the sum of $150 to pay the village's portion of the cost and expense of certain street improvements therein.

In the course of my examination I came to the conclusion that the ordinances authorizing the issue of these bonds should be amended so as to comply with article XII, section 11 of the constitution. I am this day in receipt of a supplemental transcript of proceedings showing the amendment of such ordinances by an ordinance passed October 7, 1914. Technically this ordinance does not go into effect until completion of the period prescribed by law, viz., ten days (section 4227, General Code). I am clearly of the opinion that the bonds having been corrected on their face so as to refer to the amendatory ordinance, they would, if purchased not earlier than October 18, 1914, be in all respects valid.

Subject to the foregoing qualifications, I am of the opinion, and hereby certify, that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law, and that the same constitute a good and valid obligation against the village of Grandview Heights, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS INCLUDING ORDINANCE AND RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY VILLAGE COUNCIL OF MASON, OHIO, IN REFERENCE TO BOND ISSUE IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 9, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I return herewith transcript of proceedings, including ordinances and resolutions adopted by the village council of Mason, Ohio, relative to the issuance of bonds of the village in the amount of $14,000 for the purpose of constructing an electric light plant.

Upon the examination of such transcript I am of the opinion, and hereby certify, that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the village of Mason, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

In this connection, however, I observe one question; the ordinance issuing the bonds was published in but one newspaper, the clerk certifying that there is but one newspaper published in the village.

The Court of Appeals of Muskingum county, held, in the case of Vermillion vs. Village of New Concord, that such publication was insufficient. This holding of the court of appeals was contrary to the practice and to the general impression throughout the state. Subsequently to this decision, September 2, 1914, I was called upon by the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices to express my opinion in the premises. I investigated the decision in question and found that the court of appeals in deciding the case cited had overlooked certain provisions of law having obvious bearing upon the questions involved. I ascertained further, by conversation with counsel who were engaged in the case, that these statutes had not been called to the attention of the court, and that the village of New Concord had acquiesced in the decision, and reformed its proceedings instead of seeking to secure a review of the decision of the court of appeals by appropriate action in the supreme court of the state.

It is only under exceptional circumstances that I do not follow the decisions of courts of appeals but in this instance I felt so sure that the court had reached an erroneous conclusion, and furthermore that it would have come to the opposite conclusion had its attention been called to all the statutes bearing upon the subject, that in my opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices I expressed the view that notwithstanding the decision, ordinances and resolutions should be published in one newspaper, published and of general circulation in a municipality, if there were but one such newspaper published therein, and that such publication would be sufficient.

I have carefully weighed the propriety of certifying to you my opinion as to the legality of these bonds in view of the circumstances above outlined, and have come to the conclusion that the bonds are valid and should be purchased by the industrial commission, feeling that the question made by the erroneous decision of the court of appeals is not serious enough to warrant contrary advice.

I feel, however, that I should qualify my certificate by a full statement of the facts so that if the industrial commission deems it wise to refuse the bonds on account of the existence of a question of this sort the commission may be governed accordingly.

The bonds, however, should be corrected on their face, so as to refer to the ordinance of August 18, 1914, as well as to the other ordinances mentioned therein, before being delivered to the commission and accepted by it.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE FOR OHIO UNIVERSITY, ATHENS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 13, 1914.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title to the following described real estate:

> "Fifty-five (55) feet off of the north side of in-lot 556, in the city of Athens, Ohio, subject to a right-of-way 6 feet wide off the east end thereof for street purposes."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title to said real estate as disclosed thereby, except that there does not appear to be a governor's deed therefor. There are no liens or incumbrances against said real estate, except the taxes for the year 1914, the amount of which is as yet undetermined.

Subject only to the foregoing exceptions, I am of the opinion that the abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in William Hoover to the real estate in question.

The abstract is returned to you under separate cover.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE, OHIO UNIVERSITY, ATHENS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 13, 1914.

DR. AUSTIN ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of abstract of title and deed from Levi A. Sprague and wife, to the president and trustees of the Ohio university for the following described real estate, situate in the city of Athens, Athens county, Ohio, to wit:

> "First Tract. All that part of in-lot No. sixty-four (64) as lies west of a line north and south one hundred and twelve (112) feet west of the east line of said lot.
> "Second Tract. In-lot No. one hundred and forty-two (142).
> "Third Tract. Beginning at the northwest corner of in-lot No. one hundred and forty-two (142) in said city; and thence running south 28 deg. east, 2.23 1/3 chains; thence east 25 links; thence north 33½° west; 2.33½ chains to the place of beginning and containing 24/1000 of an acre, and being an addition to said in-lot No. 142.
> "Fourth Tract. In-lot No. two hundred and one (201) lying west of and adjoining said in-lot Number 142."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title to the said real estate as disclosed thereby, except that no governor's deed for the third tract above described is abstracted. There are no liens or incumbrances against said real estate except the taxes for the year 1914, the amount of which is as yet undetermined.

Subject only to the foregoing exceptions, I am of the opinion that the abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in Levi A. Sprague, to said premises. The deed is in proper form, is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and conveys to the state of Ohio a title in fee simple to the above described real estate.

The abstract and deed are sent to you under separate cover.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE, OHIO UNIVERSITY, ATHENS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 13, 1914.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title and deed from Charles A. Cornwell and wife, to the president and trustees of Ohio university, for the following described real estate:

Situated in the city of Athens, Athens county, Ohio, to wit:

> "First Tract. Fifty-two (52) feet off of the south side of in-lot numbered sixty-nine (69) in said city, subject, however, to the right-of-way six (6) feet wide for street purposes over and across the east end thereof as conveyed to Margaret A. Martin and others by the said Charles A. Cornwell and wife by their deed dated June 25, 1909, and recorded in Deed Book 110, at page 76.
> "Second Tract. A permanent right of way for the purpose of a private alley, as an appurtenance to the foregoing first tract, over and along a strip of land thirteen (13) feet in width along the north side of said first tract and extending eastward from University Terrace the whole length of said in-lot No. sixty-nine (69)."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title of said real estate as disclosed thereby, except that there does not appear to be a governor's deed therefor. There are no liens or incumbrances against said real estate except the taxes for the year 1914, the amount of which is as yet undetermined, and an uncancelled mortgage from Charles A. Cornwell and wife to Kate Hoskinson for $2,000 dated January 23, 1914, and abstracted at page 41.

Subject only to the foregoing exceptions, I am of the opinion that the abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in Charles A. Cornwell to said premises. The deed is in good form, is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and conveys to the state of Ohio a title in fee simple to the real estate above described.

The abstract and deed are sent to you under separate cover.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS AND COPY OF RESOLUTION IN FORM OF BOND FOR BOND ISSUE FOR RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP, ROSS COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Majestic Bldg., Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am herewith returning to you transcript of proceedings, copy of resolution and form of bond, also certain additions to the transcript which this department requires.

On the transcript as it now appears, I am of the opinion that the bond issue is legal as a valid and binding obligation of the rural school district of Springfield township, Ross county, Ohio, and hereby approve the same, provided, however, that the bonds should contain on their face section 5a of the resolution, which does not appear on the form submitted, for the reason that it was an amendment to the original. I am making this suggestion to the prosecuting attorney.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VANDALIA RAILROAD COMPANY NOT LIABLE FOR THE PAYMENT OF EXCISE OR FRANCHISE TAX—ROLLING STOCK USED BY THIS RAILROAD COMPANY IN OHIO ON THE TRACKS OF ANOTHER RAILROAD TAXABLE AS PROPERTY—SUCH RAILROAD COMPANY TO REPORT AS A RAILROAD COMPANY AND A PUBLIC UTILITY TO THE TAX COMMISSION OF OHIO.

The Vandalia Railroad Company is not liable for the payment of any excise or franchise tax, but its rolling stock so used in Ohio is taxable as property, and for that purpose it should make a report as a railroad company and a public utility to the tax commission of Ohio, which should ascertain the total value of all the rolling stock of the Vandalia Railroad Company, and give to Ohio such a proportion thereof as is represented by the number of miles of main track over which the Vandalia runs cars in Ohio, as compared with its total mileage within and outside of Ohio, including said Ohio mileage; and the value so apportioned to Ohio shall be further apportioned among the taxing districts in Ohio through which the tracks used by it run in proportion to the mileage located in each.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 21st, submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

> "The Vandalia Railroad Company has a contract with the Wabash which gives them simply the right to run their trains over the tracks of that company between Butler, Indiana, and Toledo. Ohio, which prohibits them from doing any business between those points or between those points and intermediate Wabash stations. Under an agreement with the Lake Shore they use that company's station in Toledo for their passenger trains. Under another arrangement with the Toledo Terminal Railroad Company they use the tracks of that company between Gould, O., and the tracks of the Pennsylvania Company and the freight facilities in Toledo of the last-named company. They claim to have no property located in the state and have earned no income from business handled exclusively in Ohio. All their earnings are derived from interstate traffic alone.

"QUERY: Is the Vandalia Railroad Company liable for a tax of any kind? If so, what? If not, are the companies over whose tracks the cars are operated liable for a tax upon said cars?"

These facts and the question which you submit thereon require consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

"Section 5415. The term 'public utility' as used in this act means and embraces each corporation * * * herein referred to as * * * railroad company * * * and such term 'public utility' shall include any plant or property owned or operated, or both, by any such companies, corporations, firms, individuals or associations.

"Section 5416. Any person or persons, firm or firms, copartnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated. * * *

"When engaged in the business of operating a railroad, either wholly or partially within this state, on rights-of-way acquired and held exclusively by such company, or otherwise, is a railroad company.

"Section 5420. Each public utility, * * * shall annually, * * * make and deliver to the tax commission * * * a statement, with respect to such utility's plant or plants and all property owned or operated, or both, by it wholly or in part within this state.

"Section 5422. Such statement shall contain: * * *

"(13) In the case of * * * railroad companies, such statements shall also give:

"(a) The whole length of their lines and the length of so much of their lines as is without and is within this state, * * * which shall contain lines and branches such companies control and use under lease or otherwise. * * *

"(c) Such statement as to character, classes, number, amounts, values, locations, ownership or control and use of rolling stock, as the commission may require.

"Section 5423. * * * The commission shall ascertain and assess, at its true value in money, all the property in this state of each such public utility, subject to the provisions of this act * * *

"Section 5424. In determining the value of the property of each such public utility to be assessed and taxed within the state, the commission shall be guided by the value of the property as determined by the information contained in the sworn statements made by the public utility to the commission and such other evidence and rules as will enable it to arrive at the true value in money of the entire property of such public utility within this state, in the proportion which the value of such property bears to the value of the entire property of such public utility.

"Section 5429. The commission shall ascertain all of the personal property * * * and real estate necessary to the daily running operations of the road, moneys and credits of each railroad company * * * having any line, or road, or part thereof in this state * * * and also locomotives, motors and cars not belonging to the company, * * * but hired for its use or run under its control on its road by a sleeping car company or other company. * * *

"Section 5430. The value of such property * * * of each of such * * * railroad companies * * * shall be apportioned by the commission among the several counties through which the road * * * runs, so that to each county and to each taxing district shall be apportioned such part thereof * * * that the rolling stock, main track, * * * supplies, moneys and credits of the company shall be apportioned in like proportion that the length of the road in such county, bears to the entire length thereof in all the counties, and to each city, village and district or part thereof therein.

"Section 5445. When a * * * railroad company has part of its road in this state and part thereof in another state or states, the commission shall take the entire value of such property, moneys and credits * * * so found and determined, * * * and divide it in the proportion the length of the road in this state bears to the whole length * * * thereof." * * *

The quotation of the excise tax statutes is unnecessary, as you say that the company concerning which you inquire does no intrastate business whatever but is exclusively engaged in transporting interstate commerce. That being the case, the principles outlined in the opinion to the commission in the matter of the Connecting Gas Company apply, and the corporation is not liable for the payment of any excise or franchise tax, whatever.

I shall first discuss, then, the question arising under the statutes as I have quoted them, viz., as to whether or not the Vandalia Railroad Company constitutes a railroad company and a "public utility" within the meaning thereof. If the answer to this question is to be given in the affirmative, then that company would be required to be assessed on the value of so much of its property as is localized in Ohio by the operation of those statutes.

The first subordinate question which arises is as to whether or not the operation which you describe satisfies the definition of a "railroad company;" for it is apparent, I think, that if it does, then the operation of trains in the state would constitute "property * * * operated," within the meaning of the definition of the term "public utility," embodied in section 5415, General Code. Now the business of operating a railroad is not defined at all. The situation is presented of a definitive section using terms which, themselves require definition. The exact language is "when engaged in the business of operating a railroad * * * on rights-of-way acquired and held exclusively by such company, or otherwise." The inference is that the mere fact that a railroad may be operated upon rights-of-way not acquired and held exclusively by the company does not deprive the operation of the character which the statute contemplates. It is well known, of course, that many railroads in this state are operated over rights-of-way which are not owned by the operating companies, but are merely leased by them. It is also true that in many instances railroads in this state operate trains over rights-of-way which they do not even lease, under contracts similar to that described by you, but so far as I am informed, the instance which you mention is the only one in which such an operation is the only kind of operation which the company carries on in the state.

I think we may, therefore, eliminate the question as to exclusive ownership or use of the right-of-way as reflecting on the application of the statutory definition. In other words, it is not essential in determining whether or not a given company satisfies the definition of a "railroad company," in section 5416, General Code, that the company have exclusive control of any right-of-way, either as owner or lessee. The statute, itself, precludes any such consideration by the use of the language "own rights-of-way acquired and held exclusively by such company, or otherwise." Therefore, the mere fact that the Vandalia Railroad Company has not the exclusive use of any right-of-way in Ohio, does not deprive it of the character of a railroad company.

As already stated, once the conclusion is reached under section 5416, that a given operation constitutes a company a railroad company, the property operated by such company becomes a "public utility" within the meaning of the second definition of section 5416, General Code. In the case submitted, the property operated would, as you suggest, be the locomotives and cars and only such property.

But it must be admitted that all the related statutes must be read together, and that if any inconsistencies appear in other sections of the General Code, which I have quoted, they may be properly used to modify what would otherwise be the primary meaning of the definition found in section 5416.

Section 5422, General Code, in prescribing the substance of the property statement to be made to the tax commission by railroads, assumes, at least, the control and use under lease or otherwise, of lines and branches within this state. Just what is meant by the term "control and use under lease or otherwise" is perhaps a difficult question. Evidently something less than ownership is here contemplated, so that the length of lines so required to be reported is not the length of those lines which the company owns only. So much is obvious. If then something less than ownership is all that is required, the question arises as to whether or not exclusive control and use under lease is contemplated. This can certainly not be the case because of the failure of the statute to use the word "exclusively," and because of its use of the phrase "and otherwise." On the whole, I think that the particular phraseology now under consideration, standing by itself, is at least, very susceptible to a meaning which would include lines which a railroad might control and use under contract for the purpose of the regular operation of certain trains over the same.

I have reached this conclusion not alone on the language under review, itself, but also in view of the purpose for which the report of the length of track is required. Anticipating a little, the trackage is reported that the commission may make a certain apportionment of the entire value of the railroad after deducting therefrom the value of certain localized property such as terminals, station houses, real estate not used in operation, etc., as between Ohio and the rest of the world, and as among the various taxing districts in Ohio, respectively. That is to say, assuming that a railroad may have property which Ohio has power to tax and that property is not definitely localized in any one place in Ohio, the intention of the statute is that its value shall be shared in, so to speak, by the duplicates of the various taxing districts in Ohio, for the extension of taxes thereon, according to a fixed formula which, in turn, is based upon track mileage. It would, accordingly, be immaterial for the purpose of making such an apportionment, whether the track itself were owned by the railroad company or not, provided its rolling stock were operated over that track; for the value of the rolling stock, assuming the statute to apply to such a case, would then be distributed among the various taxing districts in which it might move, proportionately to the number of miles of track over which the same was operated, located in the various taxing districts of the state, regardless of the ownership of that track.

So I have reached the conclusion that paragraph "a" of subsection 13 of section 5422, General Code, above quoted, is at least susceptible to the meaning that a railroad company shall report the number of miles of track in Ohio which the company controls and uses regularly under lease or otherwise, for the operation of trains whether such control is exclusive or not.

Of course it is obvious that paragraph "c" of the same section might have application to the facts as stated by you. That is to say, the Vandalia Railroad Company is controlling and using rolling stock in the state of Ohio, and if it is required to make any report at all, is in position to make the report required by this provision.

Coming now to sections 5423 and 5424, I note that the subject of the tax commission's determination, under these sections, is the value of the property of the public utility "in this state." If the Vandalia Railroad Company has any property at all, in this state, such property consists solely of rolling stock which is operated across a part of this state in the transportation of interstate commerce, and which presumptively is not localized definitely at any one point in this state, but is kept, at all times, occupied in moving such commerce.

Anticipating again, I may say, on this point, that the mere fact that this kind of property constitutes the only property which the Vandalia Railroad Company could be said to have in this state, cannot be regarded as of importance if it appears that as to railroads actually having fixed property within this state, such as road bed, and right-of-way, wires, poles and rails, the rolling stock thereof, whether moving in interstate commerce or not, is to be regarded as property in this state, for the purpose of the related sections. That is to say, taking as an example the case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, which owns a very short line of railroad in this state over which it moves no trains save those engaged in carrying on interstate commerce, if it appears that the law now under consideration applied to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, would so result as to assign to Ohio a proportionate part of the value of its rolling stock, then, so far as the question of rolling stock being regarded as "property in this state" is concerned, that of the Vandalia Railroad Company must be likewise considered; for though the two cases differ with respect to the location of fixed property in this state, they are alike in their essential particulars. They are alike with respect to the situs, or rather the lack thereof, of their respective rolling stocks.

The answer to the question just suggested is, in my opinion, found in sections 5429, 5430 and 5445, above quoted. Without analyzing these sections in detail, it is sufficient to state, I think, that they contemplate that so much of the value of the entire property of a railroad company, subject to assessment in Ohio, as is attributable to rolling stock, main track, supplies, moneys and credits, etc., and in short to all other property not definitely localized, such as real estate, structures and stationary personal property, is to be divided between Ohio and the rest of the world, and, in Ohio among the various taxing districts through which the road runs, in proportion to the track mileage. That being the case, it is clear at a glance that rolling stock is regarded as property taxable in Ohio weather it is used in interstate commerce or not; and accordingly rolling stock is "property in this state, within the meaning of sections 5423 and 5424.

In connection with section 5429, General Code, I observe the use of the phrase "having any line or road or part thereof in this state." Standing by itself, this phrase would have a natural meaning which would, at least, exclude lines, roads or parts thereof not exclusively controlled and used by a railroad company, so that upon such a strict interpretation of the phrase, the Vandalia Railroad Company, which does not have the exclusive use of any line or road in this state, would not be within the purview of the statute. But I do not think that the phrase can be so interpreted. This section must be taken in connection with all the related sections of the same act, and it being apparent upon the consideration of sections 5416 and 5422, that the act is intended to apply to railroads controlling and using lines in this state, whether such control and use is exclusive or not, the phrase "line or road or part thereof," as used in section 5429, must be regarded as descriptive of such control and use of a line of railroad in this state, as is contemplated by such other sections.

In addition to the foregoing consideration, I think it is obvious that the public utility assessment statutes, and especially those relating to railroads, require such an application as will reach to the full extent of the state's taxing power respecting property. Without singling out any particular phrase or clause, it may be said of these statutes, generally, I think, that they are very comprehensive, and that they evince clearly a legislative intention to reach every subject of taxation within the taxing power of the state.

Now it has been held in such leading cases as Pullman's Palace Car Co. vs. Pa. 141 U. S., 18, and P. C. C. & St. L. Ry. Company vs. Backus, 154 U. S., 421, that rolling stock used in a state by a railroad company, whether engaged wholly or partly in the transportation of interstate commerce is a proper subject of taxation as property by such state, provided the power to tax the same is not so exerted as to reach the whole value of the rolling stock so taxed, but equitably assigns to the taxing state a fair proportion thereof. As said by Mr. Justice Gray in the opinion of the first of these cases, at pages 25 and 26:

> "The cars of this company within the state of Pennsylvania are employed in interstate commerce; but their being so employed does not exempt them from taxation by the state; and the state has not taxed them because of their being so employed, but because of their being within its territory and jurisdiction. The cars were continuously and permanently employed in going to and fro upon certain routes of travel. * * * The fact that, instead of stopping at the state boundary, they cross that boundary in going out and coming back, cannot affect the power of the state to levy a tax upon them. The state, having the right, for the purposes of taxation, to tax any personal property found within its jurisdiction, without regard to the place of the owner's domicile, could tax the specific cars which at a given moment were within its borders. The route over which the cars travel extending beyond the limits of the state, particular cars may not remain within the state, but the company has at all times substantially the same number of cars within the state, and continuously and constantly uses there a portion of its property. * * *
> "The mode which the state of Pennsylvania adopted, to ascertain the proportion of the company's property upon which it should be taxed in that state, was by taking as a basis of assessment such proportion of the capital stock of the company as the number of miles over which it ran cars within the state bore to the whole number of miles, in that and other states, over which its cars were run."

Citing several decisions Mr. Justice Gray points out that the right of a state so to appropriate a part of an entire value and make it subject to its taxing power as property, is sustained by authority.

It appears, therefore, that upon the highest authority, rolling stock moving in interstate commerce within the confines of the state is "property in the state" so far as the state's power to tax it is concerned; and that that power may be exercised by taking the value of all of the property of this kind operated by a given company, and assigning to the taxing state such proportion thereof as is represented by relative mileage of routes of travel. Now it is clear that the Ohio statute at least is susceptible to the interpretation that routes of travel are to constitute the basis of its apportionment. It is also clear that the state intends that its property taxation laws shall apply to all property in the state, by which, I think, is meant all property which the state has the power to tax as property in the state. That being the case, I am of the opinion that the rolling stock of the Vandalia Railroad Company, under the circumstances mentioned by you, or rather so much thereof as may be appropriately assigned to Ohio, constitutes property in this state, within the meaning of the related statutes.

But I am led to this conclusion by other fundamental considerations as well as those which have been mentioned. The state, as has been seen, has the power to tax this rolling stock. If such rolling stock is not reached by the statutes now under consideration, then some other statute must be looked to as exerting the state's power. There is no other statute which would be regarded as applicable here, unless it be sections 5404 and 5405 of the General Code, applicable to corporations, generally. These statutes need not be quoted. It is sufficient to say of them that they require the property of a company located in a county to be reported to the county auditor, valued by him and apportioned among the various taxing districts of the county in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property therein. While it might be true, in the academic sense, that rolling stock could be reached under this statute, the practical difficulties in the way of determining what amount of rolling stock happened to be located, on the day of the assessment, in a given county in the state, when all the rolling stock was undoubtedly on that day in continuous motion through several counties in the state, are insurmountable in the way of any actual application thereof. Furthermore, sections 5404, et seq., must fail of application because the apportionment of the property in a county among the taxing districts therein must be based upon the value of the real estate and fixed property situated in each; whereas, upon the facts stated by you, the Vandalia Railroad Company has no real estate or fixed property anywhere in Ohio.

Therefore, if the Vandalia Railroad Company's rolling stock is not taxable, under the public utilities sections of the taxation act, it is not taxable at all, despite the fact that the state has the power to tax it, and despite the fact, also, that the state taxes the rolling stock of other railroad companies.

In passing I may refer to the sections for the taxation of sleeping cars, freight lines and equipment companies, as evincing in the state's policy, to the effect that railroad rolling stock shall contribute to its revenue.

There is such a thing, of course, as accidental exemption from taxation, but I am not aware of any principle of construction which would favor such accidental exemption while strictly construing express exemptions. True, taxation statutes are said to be subject to a strict interpretation, but this principle, I take it, does not go to the extent of producing an entire exemption from taxation, especially in the face of the constitutional requirement that laws shall be passed taxing, by uniform rule, all real and personal property.

I think it is fair, therefore, to interpret the related sections of the statutes in the light of these principles, and to hold that where the statutes can be made applicable to a given class of property, and where the consequence of failing so to apply them would be to exempt such property from taxation entirely, that interpretation of such statutory provisions will be adopted which will subject the property in question to the same burdens that are imposed by the laws of the state on other similar property.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the property of the Vandalia Railroad Company, consisting of rolling stock which can be, under the statute, assigned to Ohio, is taxable here, and is to be assessed for taxation by the tax commission of Ohio, under the public utilities provisions of the statutes.

The manner in which this assessment should be made is not difficult to determine. That is, the statutes are easily applied to the situation. The first thing that must be done is for the commission to ascertain from the report made by the company, the whole value of the Vandalia Railroad wherever located. From that value must be taken, as factors not entering into the Ohio assessment, the whole value of all real estate, fixed property, the right-of-way, etc. In short, practically everything except the rolling stock itself. Such rolling stock, when the value thereof is thus ascertained by elimination (or in my judgment, it would be perfectly proper to ascertain the whole value of all the rolling stock by direct assessment without going through such a complicated process), must be apportioned between Ohio and the rest of the world, on the basis of the relative mileage of track used by the Vandalia Company in Ohio as compared with all the main track used by it, wherever situated. The result will be the value in Ohio, which in turn, is to be apportioned among the various counties through which the lines used in Ohio by the Vandalia Railroad Company are located, in proportion to the respective miles of mail track located in each. In short, for the purpose of apportionment, the tracks used by the Vandalia Company in Ohio are to be regarded as the "length of the road," for the purposes of sections 5430 and 5431, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I return to you herewith a letter addressed to the industrial commission by Hon. Walter Boulger, prosecuting attorney of Ross county, in the matter of the bond issue for Springfield township rural school district.

Enclosed in Mr. Boulger's letter is an amended form of bond which I have examined, and I hereby certify that the same is satisfactory to me and desire to supplement my former opinion to this extent.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY IN THE MATTER OF A BOND ISSUE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of the commission I have examined transcript of the proceedings of the commissioners of Columbiana county in the matter of the issuance of bonds in the amount of $51,000, in anticipation of the collection in Unity township of said county of taxes and assessments for the payment of fifty per cent. of the total cost and expense of the improvement of a certain section of the main market road, number 14, situated in said township, under the state highway law.

I have also examined a form of bond which has been sent to me by Hon. Lewis P. Metzger, attorney-at-law, Salem, Ohio, and which I have caused to be attached to the transcript and enclosed herewith.

In my opinion, the proceedings for the issuance of the bonds in question are, in all respects, regular. Objection might be taken to the language of one of the preliminary resolutions of the trustees of Unity township shown at pages 11 and 12 of the transcript from which the inference arises that the intention of the trustees is that the assessment against abutting property shall be to reimburse the township, and that taxes shall be, in the first instance, levied on all the taxable property of the township to pay the township and property owners' portion together.

This defect, if it be such, is however, in my opinion, remedied by the later resolution of the trustees shown at pages 12 and 13 of the transcript, which is in strict conformity to law, and by the amended resolution of the county commissioners shown in the appendix to the transcript also enclosed herewith, being a resolution of the commissioners passed October 5, 1914, wherein provision is made for the collection of taxes and assessments, in a manner which conforms to the law. Therefore, I regard the language of the first resolution above referred to as not constituting a defect in the procedings, and as in no way bearing upon the validity of the bonds.

With respect to the form of bond I beg to advise that the form should be amended so as to refer to the amendatory resolution passed October 5, 1914, and heretofore referred to in this letter. By comparing the printed bonds with the form enclosed herewith, the industrial commission will be in a position to determine whether or not this change has been made. Otherwise the form of the bond is, in all respects, proper.

Subject to the foregoing qualifications then, and repeating the admonition that the form of the bond should be examined to see that the same refers to the amendatory resolution of October 5, 1914, as well as to the original commissioners' resolution of July 27, 1914, I hereby certify that, in my opinion, the above mentioned bonds of Columbiana county in the amount of $51,000 have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the county of Columbiana, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein, from the proceeds of the taxes and assessments therein referred to.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS OF SANDUSKY COUNTY, OHIO, AND A FORM OF BOND ISSUE IN PURSUANCE THEREOF.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I herewith certify that I have examined the transcript of the proceedings for the issuance of bonds of Sandusky county, Ohio, in the sum of $25,000.00, and a form of bond issued in pursuance thereof, all of which are enclosed herewith; and that I find that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against Sandusky county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

I must make one qualification with respect to the form of bond. There should be inserted therein, after the date of the resolution referred to in the second paragraph thereof; the date of the amendatory resolution shown at page one of the supplement to the transcript, to wit, October 14, 1914, so that the bonds will appear on their face to have been issued in accordance with the amended resolution. I am advised that the bonds have been returned by the treasurer of state to the county commissioners for this purpose. The face of the bonds should be examined by the commission to see that this amendment is made, and the commission should be officially advised that the same has been done upon the order of the county commissioners before the bonds are accepted for investment.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ISSUANCE BY COUNCIL OF CITY OF NILES, OHIO, OF BONDS IN ANTICIPATION OF THE COLLECTION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS IN SAID CITY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of the commission I have examined the transcript of the proceedings for the issuance by the council of the city of Niles of bonds in the amount of $3,216.50 in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of West Church street in said city.

I have also examined the bonds themselves which are on deposit in the office of the treasurer of state.

The transcript which I have examined is enclosed herewith but no form of bond is attached thereto.

I hereby certify that in my opinion the said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the city of Niles, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Yours very truly,

CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

UNDER THE PROVISION OF SECTION 12556, GENERAL CODE, IT IS NOT NECESSARY THAT THE TWENTY-FIVE MILES THAT AN ENGINE MAY RUN WITHOUT CARS AND WITHOUT TRAIN CREW BE IN ONE DIRECTION; IT MAY BE CALCULATED AS GOING TO AND RETURNING FROM A GIVEN POINT.

It is a violation of section 12556, General Code, to send an engine, without cars, and without the train crew prescribed in said section, to run under one order and as one trip a distance of more than twenty-five miles from the starting point, and it is not necessary that the twenty-five miles be in one direction; it may be calculated as going to and returning from a given point to which the engine is sent, with directions to return as part of the same order.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 26, 1914.

The Public Utilities Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 14, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "The public utilities commission of Ohio has requested that you give them an official opinion construing that part of section 12556, General Code, which makes it an offense to run a light engine on a railroad without cars a distance of more than twenty-five miles from the starting point, with less than a full crew in charge."

Section 12556 reads:

> "Whoever, being a superintendent or other employe of a railroad company, sends or causes to be sent outside of yard limits, on a road over which are run more than four freight trains in every twenty-four hours, a through freight train with less than one engineer, one fireman, one conductor and two brakemen, or a light engine without cars, to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from starting point, with less than one engineer, one fireman and one conductor or flagman, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars for each offense."

This section is of comparatively recent origin, having been first passed May 2, 1902 (95 O. L., 337), which act was repealed May 10, 1902 (95 O. L., 532). The repeal and re-enactment in so short a time is attributable to the fact that as originally passed, section 2 was so worded in the original act as to probably fail to prescribe any penalty for disobedience.

The amended section 2 prescribed a penalty for sending outside of the yards a through freight train, omitting a penalty as to sending a light engine without cars to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from the starting point.

The codification is found in section 12556, above copied, and a penalty is affixed for a violation of either of the requirements of the section.

Under the rule laid down in State vs. Toney, 81 O. S., 130, the change brought into the law by the codifiers is valid and a general discussion of the effect of a codification is unnecessary, and it therefore follows that a determination of the meaning of section 12556 is all that is now needed.

This determination is left to a choice between holding that the language "to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from starting point" applies to a going distance only and should be construed as though it read to run to a place more than twenty-five miles from the starting point and without considering the matter of "running distance" or "distance traveled" as a controlling factor in construing this section. Taking the section as an entirety, and we have "Whoever * * * sends or causes to be sent * * * a light engine without cars, to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from starting point * * * shall be fined, etc."

When we consider this entire section as applicable to a light engine without cars, we see the offense is the "sending" or "causing to be sent" to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from starting point." Dropping the last three words and there is nothing to construe; it is the distance to be run or traveled under the "sending" that controls, and no one would think of limiting the distance run to the going, and leave out of sight the distance traveled in returning. Does the addition of the words "from starting point" modify "limit" or even change the meaning in any regard? Running a distance does not necessarily mean a going in one direction only, but may easily be held to mean both going and returning. I regard "sending," "running" and "distance" to be the controlling elements in construing this section, and cannot understand that when an engine is sent out to a point more than twelve and one-half miles from starting point to there perform some work and then return light, it is not sent out to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from the starting point.

Another consideration presents itself: the prohibition as to a through freight train is as to sending it outside of yard limits. Yard limits may in some instances, include a distance of five miles or even more, and these words as we find them at the close of that part of the sentence under consideration, doubtless were inserted to avoid the construction of this part of the section as applying to twenty-five miles outside of yard limits and not from the point of starting within the yards.

Consequently, I am of the opinion that to properly construe this section, we must consider the "sending" or "causing to be sent" as the primary element in construing the sections, and when considering this language, we are confronted with the question, how is such an engine sent. The answer is plain—by an order from the superintendent or some other employe. Such being the case, we cannot lose sight of the fact that an order is necessary, nor that such order may be a direction to run to a certain point, perform certain services and await further orders, or to return on fulfillment of the mission as directed. Therefore, it is plain that if such engine is sent to perform a duty at a point more than twelve and one-half miles from the starting point, and return light, it is sent out to run a distance of more than twenty-five miles from the starting point, while if ordered to go to a point say twenty-four miles from the starting point and there perform certain duties and await further orders, it was not sent out to run more than twenty-five miles, as the movements of the engine while complying with the order should not be calculated.

To conclude, therefore, I am of the opinion that where a light engine without cars, is sent out under one order and on one trip to run more than twenty-five miles, including both going and returning, it must carry the prescribed crew, and the distance traveled is not confined to the distance reached when farthest away from the starting point, but includes actual distance traveled under the order or in fulfilling its mission.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY, ISSUED IN ANTICIPATION OF THE COLLECTION OF TAXES AND ASSESSMENTS LEVIED IN FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP ON ACCOUNT OF IMPROVEMENT OF INTERCOUNTY HIGHWAY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I hereby certify that I have examined, in accordance with your request, the transcript of the proceedings for the issuance of bonds of Columbiana county in the sum of $43,100.00, issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments levied in Fairfield township, said county, on account of the improvement of section 2 of intercounty highway No. 86, situated in said township and county; and also that I examined the bonds themselves which are on deposit in the office of the treasurer of state; and that in my opinion said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the board of county commissioners of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

In this connecton I observe a discrepancy, already referred to in a letter written to you recently, between your resolution of September 26, 1914, and the facts disclosed by the transcript. Your resolution accepts, subject to my opinion, bonds of the general description above set forth in the sum of $40,000, falling due in certain series on the first of August annually between the years 1915 and 1922, inclusive. The transcript shows the entire issue to have been in the sum of $43,100. Bonds numbered 1 to 85, inclusive, to be of the denomination of $500 and bond number 86 to be of the denomination of $600. Said bonds are to fall due in series but not exactly corresponding to those described in your resolution. Thus, the first series which falls due August 1, 1915, as described in your resolution consists of bonds numbers 1 to 11, inclusive, whereas, as issued said series consist of bonds numbered 1 to 9 both inclusive. Bond No. 80 of the series described in your resolution is the last one of the series falling due August 1, 1922; whereas, bond No. 80 in the resolution of the commissioners belongs in the series consisting of bonds numbered 73 to 81 both inclusive, and falls due on September 1, 1923.

I am verbally informed by a representative of the commissioners of Columbiana county that the commission has agreed to take $40,000 of these bonds. This could be done by accepting bonds numbered 1 to 80, inclusive, and these are the bonds which have been delivered to the treasurer of state.

As above stated I am clearly of the opinion that the proceedings are in all respects regular and that the bonds are in all respects valid, but I call your attention to this possible immaterial variation between your resolution and the issue as made in the interest of accuracy, and with a view to permitting the commission to correct its own records or to review the entire matter as may be desired.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE FOR THE VILLAGE OF HUDSON, OHIO, FOR PAVING OF STREETS IN SAID VILLAGE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 2, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In accordance with your request, I have examined the proceedings for the issuance of bonds of the village of Hudson, Ohio, in the sum of $3,150.00 (thirty one hundred and fifty and 00/100 dollars), in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement, by paving, of Church street in said village.

It affirmatively appears by supplement to the transcript attached thereto that the proceeding for the improvement was initiated by filing with the council a petition therefor, signed by the owners of the majority of the foot frontage abutting upon the improvement. This being the case, the fact that fewer than thirty days elapsed between the date of the passage of the resolution of necessity, or that of the passage of the ordinance determining to proceed, is rendered immaterial.

Section 4227-3, General Code, or part of the proceedings for the municipal initiative and referendum stipulates that:

> "Ordinances or other measures providing * * * for street improvements petitioned for by the owners of the majority of the feet front of the property benefited and to be specially and especially assessed for the cost thereof, as provided by statute * * * shall go into immediate effect."

The original transcript furnished me did not make this fact clear and accordingly gave rise to a question which is rendered somewhat doubtful in view of the decision of the common pleas court of Cuyahoga county in the case of Drum vs. Cleveland, 13 n. p. n. s., 281, and that of the court of appeals of the same county in the same case, in an opinion which has not been reported.

The form of the bond is attached to the transcript.

No other question appearing upon the face of the transcript, I hereby certify that in my opinion said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the village of Hudson, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MANNER IN WHICH THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE MAY MAKE CONTRACTS INVOLVING MORE THAN FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS IN THE PURCHASE DEPARTMENT OF A CITY.

The director of public service of a city must make contracts involving more than five hundred dollars in the department of purchase, the same as other contracts are made by said director.

Sections 4278, 4334, 4402 and 4403 are to be read and construed together with sections 3626 and 3627, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of May 16, 1914, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First. If the council of a city, under the powers granted to municipalities to be exercised through council has created and established a department of purchase, construction and repair (sections 3626 and 3627), must contracts for gravel for street repairs, involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars be made by the purchasing agent in charge of said department of purchase, etc., or must said contracts be made by the director of service having charge of the repair of streets upon bids advertised and submitted to said director of service, as provided by sections 4328 and 4334, the same to be opened in the presence of the city auditor, or his deputy, as provided by section 4278, and award thereof approved by the board of control, as provided by section 4403?
> "Second. In view of the fact that section 4278, 4334, 4402 and 4403, specifically enumerating the duties of the city auditor and board of control, were enactments subsequent to sections 3626 and 3627, creating the department of purchase, etc., will the provisions thereof prevail over the previous legislation on said subject, as found in section 3626 and section 3627, and thus relieve such purchasing agent of such duties.
> "Third. If the ordinance creating said department of purchase, construction and repair be specific in its terms defining the scope, powers and duties of such department, must such contracts in such service department be awarded to the purchasing agent, if said ordinance so provides?
> "Fourth. What, if any, are the duties of the city auditor, director of service and board of control in regard to the making of such contracts, if vested in the purchasing department?"

The sections creating the office of director of public service and the department of purchase, construction and repair in municipalities and defining their respective duties, although they seem at first glance to be somewhat in conflict, will, if read and construed together, harmonize so as to define clearly the duties of said department.

Section 4323 creates the department and director of public service, and reads in part as follows:

> "In each city there shall be a department of public service which shall be administered by a director of public service. * * * He shall make rules and regulations for the administration of the affairs under his supervision."

Section 4328 and section 4334 define the duties of the director of public service with reference to the letting of public contracts, and are as follows:

"Sec. 4328. The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city.

"Sec. 4334. All contracts made by the director of public service shall be executed by him in the name of the city, and a duplicate copy shall be filed in his office and a copy with the auditor of the city. No liability shall be created against the city as to any matters under the supervision of such director except by his express authority. * * *"

Sections 3626 and 3627, General Code, give to council of municipalities the right to establish the department of purchase, construction and repair, and also limit and define the extent of its powers. These sections are as follows:

"Sec. 3626. To establish and furnish the necessary equipment for a municipal department to be known as the department of purchase, construction and repair. Such department shall be under the management and control of the director of public service, who shall purchase all material, supplies, tools, machinery and equipment, together with all construction, alterations and repairs of every kind and thing in each of the departments of the municipality, whether established by law or ordinance.

"Sec. 3627. No purchase, construction, alteration or repair shall be made except, either upon requisition by the director or officer at the head of the department for which it is to be made or done, or upon the order of council, nor shall any purchase, construction, alteration or repair for any of such departments be made or done except on authority of council and under the laws as to competitive bidding if the cost thereof exceed five hundred dollars."

You will observe from the reading of those sections that the creation of the department of purchase, construction and repair does not take the letting of public contracts within such municipality from the jurisdiction of the director of public service. On the other hand section 3626 specifically states that such department shall be under the management and control of the director of public service.

It is evident that the legislature did not intend to take from the director of public service the power of making such contracts as referred to in your letter, but that it gave to council the right to create the department of purchase, construction and repair as a subordinate department of the department of public service and thus facilitate its work.

Section 4328 also provides that when an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars is made, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council and when so authorized and directed the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder, after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city.

Section 4334 provides that all contracts thus made by the director of public service shall be executed by him in the name of the city, and a duplicate of it shall be filed in his office and a copy with the auditor of the city.

Section 4278 provides that all bids required to be filed for the letting of contracts by the director of public service or public safety shall be opened in the presence of the city auditor, or his chief deputy.

Sections 4402 and 4403 create the board of control of municipalities and define their powers and duties, and are as follows:

> "Sec. 4402. The mayor, director of public service and director of public safety shall constitute the board of control. The mayor shall be ex-officio president. All votes shall be yeas and nays and entered on the record, and the vote of a majority of all the members of the board shall be necessary to adopt any question, motion or order.
> "Sec. 4403. No contract in the department of public service or the department of public safety in excess of five hundred dollars shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract. The members of the board shall prepare estimates of the revenue and expenditures of their respective departments to be submitted to the council by the mayor, as provided by law."

Section 4403 provides that no contract in the department of public service or public safety shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract.

Construing together all the sections above referred to, I will say that the contracts for gravel for street repairs by a municipality in which council have established a department of purchase, construction and repair, must be let by the director of public service through the said department of purchase, construction and repair, and if said contract involves the expenditure of more than five hundred dollars, the same must first be authorized by an ordinance of council, approved by the board of control and then let to the lowest bidder, as provided in section 4328. Said contract shall also be executed by the director of public service as provided in section 4334.

In answer to the second question, it is my opinion that although sections 4278, 4402 and 4403 were enacted subsequent to sections 3626 and 3627, they are not entitled to prevail over the previous legislation, but should be read and construed together with the same so as to bring them into harmony rather than to conflict.

As your third question has been answered with the first, I will pass on to the fourth question and say that the duties of the city auditor, with reference to the contracts for gravel referred to, would be to attend and assist at the opening of the bids after such contracts have been advertised as provided in section 4278; the duty of the director of public service is to make such contracts, through his subordinate department of purchase, construction and repair, and the duty of the board of control is to approve the making of such contracts and to direct the said department to enter into them.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO BOARD OF CENSORS IS NOT REQUIRED TO FURNISH LEADERS OR STAMPS OF APPROVAL BEFORE MOTION PICTURE FILMS ARE PUBLICLY EXHIBITED.

The Ohio board of censors is not required to furnish leaders or stamps of approval to be projected upon screens before motion picture films are publicly exhibited. If, however, such stamp or leader has been attached to the film, it becomes a part thereof and its ownership passes to him who owns the film.

If said board of censors furnishes a leader as its stamp, such leader becomes the property of the person for whose film it is used as a stamp, and the leader may be projected upon the screen, if he desires to do so.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

MR. H. E. VESTAL, Chairman, Board of Moving Picture Censors, 175 East Rich St., Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 15, 1914, you submit the following:

> "The following is a copy of a resolution adopted by the board:
> " 'Whereas, The Ohio board of censors has found that its leaders, designations or stamps of approval, bearing the words "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors" have been misused, mutilated, destroyed and misappropriated, thereby causing serious complications; therefore, be it
> " 'Resolved, That the board ask the attorney general's department for a formal opinion as to the legal ownership of said leaders, designations or stamps of approval and as to the board's jurisdiction over same.'
> "We shall appreciate it if you will render us a decision on the above point at your earliest convenience."

Section 4 of an act providing for a board to censor motion picture films and prescribing its powers and duties, 103 O. L., 399, reads thus:

> "Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board. They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words, 'Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors' and the number of the film."

Section 6 of said act provides that:

> "Ninety days after this act shall take effect no films may be publicly shown or exhibited within the state of Ohio unless they have been passed and approved by the board or the censor congress and stamped and numbered by such board, or congress, as provided for herein."

Section 7 prescribes the penal sanction for the act in the following language:

> "Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the state of Ohio unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Ohio board of censors or the congress of censors shall upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than twenty-five dollars ($25.00) nor more than three hundred dollars ($300.00) or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both, for each offense."

I can find nothing in these sections, or in any other provision of the law, which requires the board of censors to provide a "leader" for projection upon the screen on which moving pictures are exhibited. The duty of stamping the films does not seem to require that such stamp shall be exhibited. There is nothing in the law to show that it must be of such character or style as would require its exhibition. The object to be attained is that the film may be designated as having been approved, but this does not carry with it the implication that such designation should be shown upon the screen. It is true that the statute says that before the picture film shall be publicly exhibited there shall be projected on the screen the words "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors," but there is nothing whatever to lead one to the belief that this does not mean that the exhibitor of the film may, in any form he sees fit, cause this approval to be shown at the time the picture is exhibited. The language of section 6 prohibits the showing of films unless they have been passed, approved, stamped and numbered by the board, but the mere numbering and stamping of the film does not require that such stamp and number appear on the film itself, or on any leader stamped by the board of censors. This matter, in so far as the statute goes, seems to be left to the exhibitor of the pictures, the requirement being that he shall show upon the screen that the film which he is exhibiting has been approved by the board of censors, the number being given.

The penal section adds force to this in that it penalizes the exhibition of a motion picture which has not been "passed, approved and stamped." Nothing is said about failure to show the stamp upon the screen.

Such being the situation it seems to me that the exhibitor cannot be compelled to use a leader prepared by the board of censors. If, however, the only stamp of approval that is used by the board is one that is attached to the film, then it would appear that such stamp would become part of the film, and its legal ownership would vest in him who owned the film. The object to be attained by the statute is that no film be shown which has not been approved, and in order to accomplish this result the statute requires the exhibitor to project upon the screen the words "Approved by the Ohio Board of Censors" and the number of the film. When this has been done the statute has been complied with in the respects which you discuss in your resolution. Whether your board and the industrial commission would have the right to prescribe rules covering the situation is not before me at this time, and consequently I do not pass upon this question.

Of course, if your board adopts a "leader" as its stamp, then such "leader" would pass to him to whom the film belongs and if he desires to project it upon the screen he may do so.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE HAS NO RIGHT TO REMIT THE ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS PENALTY EXACTED FROM A CORPORATION WHOSE ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OR CERTIFICATE OF AUTHORITY TO DO BUSINESS HAS BEEN CANCELLED.

The penalty of one hundred dollars exacted of a corporation, the articles of incorporation or certificate of authority to do business of which has been cancelled, may not be remitted or waived by the secretary of state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 14th, in which you submit for my opinion the following question:

> "May the secretary of state remit the penalty of $100 provided for in section 5511, General Code, as a condition precedent to the reinstatement of a corporation, the articles of incorporation or certificate of authority to do business of which has been cancelled for failure to make reports or pay fees or taxes as required by law?"

Said section 5511, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Any corporation whose articles of incorporation or certificate of authority to do business in this state, has been cancelled by the secretary of state, as provided in section one hundred and twenty (G. C., sec. 5509) of this act, upon the filing, within two years after such cancellation, with the secretary of state, of a certificate from the commission that it has complied with all the requirements of this act and paid all taxes, fees or penalties due from it, and upon the payment to the secretary of state of an additional penalty of one hundred dollars, shall be entitled again to exercise its rights, privileges and franchises in this state, and the secretary of state shall cancel the entry made by him under the provisions of section one hundred and twenty (G. C., sec. 5509) of this act, and shall issue his certificate entitling such corporation to exercise its rights, privileges and franchises."

The section itself does not authorize the secretary of state to remit the penalty. Authority of this kind cannot be implied but must appear in express statutory language. In fact I am not aware of any language in the section, or the related statutes, upon which any contention with respect to the existence of implied power might be based.

Section 5524, General Code, which is a part of the same act in which section 5511, General Code, originally appeared, provides as follows:

> "With the advice and consent of the commission, the attorney general may, before or after any action for the recovery of fees, taxes or penalties certified to him, as delinquent, under the provisions of this act, compromise or settle any claim for delinquent taxes, fees or penalties so certified.

"And all claims compromised or settled as herein provided shall be set forth in the annual report of the tax commission to the general assembly and governor, giving in detail the terms and conditions of such compromise or settlement."

This section pertains by its own terms only to the compromise or settlement of penalties certified to the attorney general for collection. Inasmuch as the penalty of $100.00 provided for by section 5511 is not certified to the attorney general, but is payable to the secretary of state, it is obvious that said section 5524 does not authorize the remission of the penalty in question.

Section 191, General Code, authorizes the secretary of state to remit certain penalties, but this authority does not extend to the penalty described by section 5511, General Code. Indeed, strictly speaking, the payment of $100.00 exacted from a corporation, the articles of incorporation or certificate of authority to do business of which has been cancelled, is not a penalty, but rather a condition precedent to the revivor of the articles or certificate. This consideration merely strengthens the view that in the absence of explicit authority no state official is empowered to waive it.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—CHIEF OF POLICE AND CHIEF OF FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The same person cannot serve as chief of police and chief of the fire department, although serving as chief of the fire department without salary, for the reason that the two offices are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

THE HON. EDWARD A. BINYON, City Solicitor, East Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 22, 1914, you inquire as follows:

"The law of this state provides by separate sections that there shall be a chief of police and there shall be a chief of fire department. For a long time previous to February, 1912, when the village of East Cleveland became a city, James H. Stamberger had been doing the duties of marshal, chief of the fire department, building inspector, etc. After the village became a city, the council passed an ordinance establishing a police department, and also an ordinance establishing a fire department. In the police ordinance, it made provision to the effect that nothing in that ordinance should preclude the chief of police from serving as chief of the fire department without salary. So that since that time, said Stamberger has been occupying these two offices and drawing a salary of $1,800.00 per year as chief of the police department and receiving no salary as chief of the fire department. It is my opinion that the duties of the two offices conflict. When the chief of the fire department is engaged in directing the department in suppressing fires, he is unable to perform his duties as chief of the police department, and when he is performing his duties as chief of the police department he is not in a position to perform properly his duties as chief of the fire department. Under the law I take it that both of these officers are of necessity on duty at all times.

"Will you kindly, at your earliest convenience, have your department furnish me with an opinion as to whether or not it is lawful for one individual to hold the office of chief of police and the office of chief of the fire department at the same time."

Under the law, offices are considered incompatible when one acts as a check over the other, or when the incumbent of one is required to supervise or inspect the duties of the other, or when the holding of both offices at the same time would act in contravention of public policy, or when the duties of the office are so conflicting as regards time for performance, that it would be impossible for one man to perform both at the same time.

In the present case I agree with your statement that it is a practical impossibility for a man to attend to the duties of the office of chief of police while he is engaged in performing the duties incumbent upon him as chief of the fire department, and vice versa.

Indeed to the above grounds of incompatibility, I think another might be added, to wit: offices wherein the incumbent is expected to give his entire time to the performance of the duties, and this ground, I think, clearly applies to the case at hand.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the rules of law do not endorse the holding of both of these positions at the same time by a single individual.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PERSONS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF AUDITOR OF STATE IN THE UNCLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE.

The deputy auditor of state and the three deputy inspectors and supervisors of public offices are deputies within the meaning of subdivision 8 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, and are in the unclassified service.

In addition to the above deputies, the auditor of state is entitled to have two clerks, or two assistants, or one clerk and one assistant, to be designated by him, in the unclassified service, under subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 20, 1914, Hon. A. V. Donahey, state auditor, submits the following inquiry:

"Kindly give me your written opinion as to whether or not the following are under civil service:

"Deputy auditor;

"Chief clerk to state auditor;

"Heads of the departments in the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices;

"Chief clerk in the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices."

As this concerns the civil service law the opinion is addressed to the state civil service commission.

Subdivisions 7 (a) and 8 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places the following positions in the unclassified service:

> "7. Two secretaries or assistants or clerks for each of the elective and principal executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such a secretary, assistant or chief clerk.
> "8. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act generally for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

Section 237, General Code, authorizes the appointment of a deputy auditor:

> "The auditor of state shall appoint a deputy auditor of state whose appointment shall be in writing under the official seal of the auditor and recorded in the office of the secretary of state."

Section 238, General Code, provides:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the deputy auditor of state shall give a bond to the auditor of state in the sum of ten thousand dollars, with two or more sureties approved by the auditor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office."

Section 239, General Code, reads:

> "The deputy auditor of state shall have the power conferred by law upon a deputy and perform the duties assigned him by the auditor of state. Such deputy shall not serve upon any board or commission of which the auditor of state is made a member by law."

These sections make the deputy auditor of state a deputy within the meaning of subdivision 8 (a), supra.

Section 274, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 246, provides:

> "There shall be a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in the department of auditor of state which shall have power as hereinafter provided in sections two hundred and seventy-five to two hundred and eighty-nine, inclusive, to inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state offices, including every state educational, benevolent, penal and reformatory institution, public institution and the offices of each taxing district or public institution in the state of Ohio. Said bureau shall have the power to examine the accounts of every private institution, association, board or corporation receiving public money for its use and purpose, and may require of them annual reports in such form as it may prescribe. The expense of such examination shall be borne by the taxing district providing such public money. By virtue of his office the auditor of state shall be chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and as such appoint not exceeding three deputy inspectors and supervisors, and a clerk. No more than two deputy inspectors and supervisors shall belong to the same political party."

The deputy inspectors act generally for and in place of the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices. In order to be a deputy it is not necessary that the deputy may act for the state auditor in all things. In the present case the deputy inspectors act for and in place of their principal as to the duties of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices. This makes them deputies within the meaning of the civil service act.

Section 2249, General Code, provides in part:

> "The annual salaries of the appointees herein enumerated of elective state officers shall be as follows:
> "Deputy auditor of state, three thousand dollars; chief clerk to auditor of state, two thousand four hundred dollars. * * *"

This section would authorize the auditor of state to appoint a chief clerk.

By section 274, General Code, supra, the auditor of state is authorized to appoint a clerk in the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices.

Section 276, General Code, provides in part:

> "The chief inspector and supervisor shall appoint such assistants as he deems necessary, who shall be known as state examiners, and such other assistants as he deems necessary, who shall be known as assistant state examiners. * * *"

The state examiners are assistants within the meaning of the civil service act.

In addition to the deputies, the state auditor may have two clerks, or two assistants, or one assistant and one clerk in the unclassified service under subdivision 7 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act. The auditor of state may determine which two of his clerks or assistants shall be placed in the unclassified service.

The deputy auditor of state and three deputy inspectors and supervisors of public offices are in the unclassified service. Two clerks, or two assistants, or one clerk and one assistant, to be selected by the auditor of state, are also in the unclassified service.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF THE SURPLUS IN A ROAD IMPROVEMENT FUND CREATED BY A BOND ISSUE—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO RIGHT TO TRANSFER A SURPLUS IN A SPECIAL OR ESTABLISHED FUND IN A COUNTY TO A FUND FOR THE BUILDING OF A NEW ROAD.

A surplus in a road improvement fund, created by bond issue, must go to the sinking fund for the retirement of such bonds or any other bonds of the county. Such surplus cannot be transferred to a fund created for the building of other roads.

The county commissioners may not transfer a surplus in any special or established fund of the county to a fund for the building of a new road and then levy taxes for the total cost of the improvement, in this way borrowing money from the surplus funds instead of issuing bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. J. B. TEMPLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have heretofore acknowledged receipt of two letters from you under date of September 9th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "(1) A new road is built and bonds issued by the county for its payment and when such road is paid for in toto there is an excess in that fund from such bond issue. Can the commissioners use this money for building new roads in the county thereby saving a new bond issue for such new roads?
> "(2) May commissioners transfer money from any fund having a surplus to a fund for building new roads for the purpose of saving a bond issue, and then levy the tax to pay for the roads the same as if a bonds issue had been made?"

The answer to your first question is found in the provisions of section 5654, General Code, as amended 103 Ohio Laws, page 521, which is as follows:

> "The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or of the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used, or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

From this section it is apparent at a glance that if there is a surplus in a special road improvement fund, the same must be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the county. In the case you submit it appears very likely that there are outstanding bonds of the county, and indeed that the surplus of which you speak is the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of such bonds.

The answer to your second question is not fully dependent upon the provisions already considered. If the funds from which it is desired to make the transfer constitute proceeds of special levies, loans or bond issues, then of course on that account alone the authority to make the transfer must be denied.

But if the fund from which it is desired to make the transfer is a regular fund of the county, such as the pike repair fund or the bridge fund, the question requires further examination. I may say, generally, that it would depend in a given case upon two facts, viz.: (1) the authority to transfer from the first fund and (2) the authority to use the transferred money in the second fund, and then to levy taxes as if a bond issue had been made.

The only authority of the county commissioners to transfer money by their own action is that found in section 5654, General Code, above quoted. This section in its original form, together with section 5655, General Code, contained the only authority of county commissioners to make such transfer. By amending section 5654 and repealing section 5655, the general assembly in the act above cited, has destroyed the general power of the county commissioners to transfer from what was formerly designated by section 5655 as an "established fund or division of the funds." The only authority now to be found for the transfer, by the commissioners, of money from one regular or established fund to another, is that of section 2296, et seq., General Code, as amended by the act already cited. These sections contemplate a special proceeding in the common pleas court, so that the commissioners cannot take the action contemplated on their own initiative except by applying as petitioners to that court.

I do not believe, however, that the general or established funds of the county can be transferred by court proceedings with a view, so to speak, of making a temporary loan to some other special road improvement fund. You do not advise me as to what road improvement statute or statutes the commissioners desire to avail themselves of, but I am aware of none which authorize the use of surplus county funds in this way, although some of them, I believe, do authorize the use of any unexpended balances in a county road fund, in defraying a part of the total cost of the improvement; but in that event, the subsequent levying of tax on account of the improvement and the use of the proceeds pro tanto to reimburse the fund is not contemplated nor permitted. If the proceedings which you have in mind is under some such statute, the commissioners might, by the use of the procedure above referred to, transfer money to the general county road fund and then use it as a part of that fund in defraying a part of the cost of the improvement; but the tax on account of the road would be reduced proportionately. In short, there is no authority of law, of which I am aware, for the borrowing of money from a standing county fund for the use of a road improvement fund and the reimbursement of the former fund from the proceeds of the special road tax.

Of course, there could not conceivably be any authority to use the proceeds of special assessments or taxes in a road district smaller than the county to reimburse a county fund, for this would constitute the diversion of a trust fund and the use of special taxes levied in one district for a purpose not pertaining to that district, in violation of settled constitutional principles.

I would prefer not to be positive nor specific, in answer to your second question without being advised as to what road improvement law the commissioners are proceeding under; so that if a more definite answer is wanted, I should have to request that this information be furnished. I have no hesitancy in saying, however, upon general principles, that the exact thing which you describe in your second question cannot lawfully be done.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NECESSITY OF ORDINANCE FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SIDEWALKS IN CITIES AND VILLAGES—SUCH ORDINANCE NEED NOT BE PUBLISHED—NOTICE TO ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS.

Ordinances providing for the assessment of the cost of construction of sidewalks are not required in villages, but are necessary in cities under section 3857, General Code.

Such ordinances not being of a general nature, nor providing for improvements, need not be published.

Notice of the proceedings requiring the construction of pavements must be given abutting owners under sections 3854, 3855, 3856 and 3857, General Code, in order to authorize the assessment of the cost of construction of sidewalks against abutting owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. WALTER M. SCHOENLE, City Solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 1, 1914, as follows:

"There has been referred to this office for an opinion the question as to whether it is necessary to publish by advertisement in a newspaper an ordinance assessing the cost of construction of sidewalks where the owners are nonresidents and have failed to maintain a walk in front of their respective premises and the city has let the work to a contractor for completion. It has been suggested that your office has rendered an opinion upon this subject, but I have been unable to locate same and would be pleased to have you advise me with reference to the matter."

The sections for consideration, in answer to your question, are:

"When the council of a municipal corporation declares by resolution that certain specified sidewalks, curbing or gutters shall be constructed or repaired, the clerk of council shall cause a written notice of the passage of such resolution to be served upon the owner or agent of the owner of each parcel of land abutting on such sidewalk, who may be a resident of of the corporation, in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in a civil action, and shall return a copy of the notice with the time and manner of service indorsed thereon, signed by the officer serving it, to the director of public service in cities, and to council in villages which shall file and preserve it.

"Section 3854. When the council of a municipal corporation declares by resolution that certain specified sidewalks, curbing or gutters shall be constructed or repaired, the clerk of council shall cause a written notice of the passage of such resolution to be served upon the owner or agent of the owner of each parcel of land abutting on such sidewalk, who may be a resident of the corporation in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in a civil action, and shall return a copy of the notice with the time and manner of service indorsed thereon, signed by the officer serving it, to the director of public service in cities, and to council in villages which shall file and preserve it.

"Section 3855. For the purpose of such service, if the owner is not a resident of the corporation, any person charged with the collection of rents or the payment of taxes on such property or having general control thereof in any way, shall be regarded as the agent of the owner, and the return shall have the like force and effect as the sheriff's return on summons in a civil action.

"Section 3856. If it appears in any such return, that the owner is a nonresident of the county, or that neither such owner, agent, or his place of residence could be found, publication of a copy of the resolution in a newspaper of general circulation in the corporation, in the manner provided for service by publication of resolutions for street improvements, shall be deemed sufficient notice to such owner, but no publication of the resolution shall be necessary in the case of construction or repair of sidewalks, curbing and gutters where the notice is served upon the owner or agent as provided in the preceding two sections.

"Section 3857. If such sidewalks, curbing or gutters are not constructed within fifteen days, or not repaired within five days from the service of notice, or completion of the publication, the director of public service in cities may do or have it done at the expense of the owner, and all such expenses shall be assessed on all the property abounding or abutting thereon. Such assessments shall be collected in the same manner with a penalty of five per cent. and interest for failure to pay at the time fixed by the assessing ordinance, as in cases of improvement.

"Section 3858. No other or further proceedings for the construction or repair of sidewalks, curbing or gutters and levying assessments therefor, shall be necessary by the director of public service, than the proceedings required under this and the preceding four sections. In any case in which special assessments have been made on the property for all the cost of the construction or repair of sidewalks, curbing or gutters under such sections, such assessments, within the limitation of benefits and the limits of thirty-three per cent. of the taxed value of the property shall be valid assessments upon such property.

"Section 3859. If such sidewalks, curbing or gutters are not constructed within fifteen days, or not repaired within five days from the service of the notice, or completion of the publication, the council in villages may have it done at the expense of the owner and report the cost thereof to such owner. Such cost shall constitute a lien on the property abutting on such sidewalks from the date it is so reported to the owner, and shall be paid by him to the treasurer of the municipality. If it is not paid within ten days from the time it was reported to such owner, the clerk in villages shall certify it, with a penalty of five per cent. thereon to the county auditor, who shall place it on the tax duplicate and collect such costs and penalties in the same manner as other taxes are collected."

These sections, as I understand them, do not call for an assessing ordinance in the ordinary sense of that term. Section 3854 very clearly implies that a resolution declaring the necessity or determination to construct certain sidewalks, shall be passed; that the clerk shall give notice thereof in the manner provided by law for the service of summons, which can only be complied with by serving a copy of the notice of the passage of the resolution on the lot owner or leaving a copy thereof at his usual place of residence.

Section 3855 authorizes such service on an agent as defined in such section. If the owner is a nonresident and no agent upon whom service may be made can be found, then publication of notice of the passage of such resolution may be made as provided in section 3856.

From a consideration of these sections, I think it clear that no assessing ordinance in the ordinary sense of that term is required, and the only requirement as to publication is found in section 3856. This conclusion, to my mind, is made clear by section 3858, where it provides that "no other or further proceeding * * * shall be necessary under this and the four preceding sections.

While this probably raises the question whether proper notice of the preliminary proceedings has been given in your case rather than giving a categorical answer to the question propounded, yet I feel reasonably certain that it will meet all your wishes.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES TO BORROW MONEY TO REPLENISH THE TOWNSHIP POOR FUND.

The township trustees may not borrow money to replenish the township poor fund. Expenditures for the temporary relief of the poor are of such a character as to constitute an exception to section 5660, General Code, commonly known as the Burns law, so that when an obligation is thus created, a valid debt is incurred for the payment of which money may be borrowed under section 5656, General Code, by the trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. GEORGE D. KLIEN, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 10th you requested my opinion as to whether or not township trustees may borrow money to replenish the poor fund.

Replying thereto I beg to state that I know of no authority in the township trustees to borrow money for this purpose. The county commissioners have such authority with respect to the county poor fund under section 2434, General Code, but like authority does not seem to have been given to the township trustees who may only borrow money and create funds for specific improvements. However, the township is liable for the temporary support or "out-door relief" of all persons having a legal settlement in the township, and otherwise qualified to receive such relief. This is made plain by sections 3476, 3478 and 3480, General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Sec. 3476. Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it.
> "Sec. 3478. In an action to compel the support or relief of a pauper, or in an action based upon the refusal of such officers to afford support or relief to any person, it shall be a sufficient defense for the township trustees, or proper municipal officers to show that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein has been supported in whole or in part by others with the intention to thereby make such person a charge upon such township or municipal corporation. The fact that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein, has been supported in whole or in part by others shall be prima facie evidence of such intention.

"Section 3480. When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. If medical services are required, and no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance to such poor, the physician called or attending shall immediately notify such trustees or officers in writing that he is attending such person and thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable for relief and services thereafter rendered such person, in such amount as such trustees or proper officers determine to be just and reasonable. If such notice be not given within three days after such relief is afforded or services begun, the township or municipal corporation shall be liable only for relief or services rendered after notice has been given. Such trustees or officer, at any time may order the discontinuance of such services, and shall not be liable for services or relief thereafter rendered."

So that it appears that the relief or support of the poor which falls properly to the lot of the township, as distinguished from the county, is an obligation fastened by law upon the township and not merely a matter within the discretion of the township trustees. In other words, it is a duty and not a power.

Under these circumstances I am of the opinion that it is competent for the township trustees, when the township has been made liable for medical and other relief given to persons in straightened circumstances, qualified to receive poor relief but not proper inmates of the infirmary, to borrow money under the provisions of section 5656, General Code, which provides as follows:

"The trustees of a township, the board of education of a school district and the commissioners of a county, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation such township, district or county is unable to pay at maturity, may borrow money or issue the bonds thereof, so as to change, but not increase the indebtedness in the amounts, for the length of time and at the rate of interest that said trustees, board or commissioners deem proper, not to exceed the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

In other words the relief and support of the poor constitute activities for which township trustees may lawfully make expenditures of such public moneys without being subject to the provisions of section 5660, General Code. That is to say, it would not be a defense against an action to compel the support of a pauper that there is no money in the treasury of the township available for that purpose for section 3478 specifies what shall be a sufficient defense, and section 3480 specifies the circumstances under which liability arises; so that any expenditures contracted for by the township trustees after the township has been made liable by proper proceedings under section 3480, General Code, cannot be avoided because of failure of the clerk to certify that the necessary money was in the treasury as required by section 5660 for contracts generally.

One distinction must be carefully observed in borrowing money under section 5656. The trustees may not create a fund and then disburse it as occasion requires; they must become indebted to particular individuals on account of specific transactions; then to pay these debts the trustees may borrow money under the section cited.

While, therefore, I can find no authority in the township to borrow money to replenish the poor fund as such, I am of the opinion that any liabilities which the township has incurred by proceedings under the poor law, may be discharged by borrowing money under section 5656, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE STATUTES AUTHORIZING TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES, UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES, TO LEVY CERTAIN TAXES FOR ROAD PURPOSES REMAIN IN FORCE GENERALLY.

The statutes authorizing the township trustees, under certain circumstances, to levy certain taxes for road improvement purposes, remain in force generally, notwithstanding the enactment of the Smith law, although the special limitation upon the tax authorized by the original statute has been supplanted by the Smith law limitations; and in particular that this tax must be levied subject to the ten-mill limitation law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 3rd, previously acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Under favor of section 7019 of the General Code, is the six-mill levy therein referred to still in force in view of the Smith tax law? If it is in force, may the levy be within the ten mills or over the ten mills provided by that act?"

Said section 7019, General Code, provides as follows:

> "The board of trustees of a township may levy and assess upon the taxable property of such township, a tax not exceeding six mills in any one year upon the dollar valuation of the taxable property therein, in addition to other taxes authorized by law, for the purpose of improving by macadamizing and graveling the public highways in the township, as it deems expedient or necessary."

The Smith one per cent. law, consisting of sections 5649-1 and 5649-5b, inclusive, was enacted after section 7019 and its companion sections, the one group of sections being last amended in 1904 and the other being enacted in 1911 and last amended in 1913.

Under section 5649-3a of the General Code, a part of the Smith law, the limitation upon the rate of taxation for township purposes is two mills; under other sections of the same law the aggregate limitation for all purposes in any taxing district is ten mills, exclusive of interest and sinking fund levies of a certain kind, and fifteen mills for all purposes excepting certain state levies and certain emergency levies.

I think it is clear that there is an irreconcilable inconsistency between the Smith law and section 7019, General Code, which can only be resolved by regarding the latter as impliedly amended. I do not think that the Smith law had the effect of repealing section 7019, General Code. To say that the Smith law, by implication, repealed all sections authorizing the levying of taxes which were partially inconsistent with it, would be to hold that it destroyed every vestige of levying power committed to local agencies by statutes previously enacted. Such was obviously not the legislative intention which is evinced particularly by section 5649-3 of the Smith law since repealed. Said section provided in effect that the maximum limitations existing under previously enacted statutes should be reduced or changed so that the limitation under the Smith law should be the amount that would have been produced by a levy on the 1910 duplicate at the rate formerly in force.

In other words, the purpose of the Smith law was not to destroy the levying power but to impose new limitations. Therefore, the former statutes are not to be regarded as repealed but merely as amended so as to strike out the former limitations and to substitute those imposed by the Smith law.

I am of the opinion that section 7019, General Code, is still in force in so far as it authorizes township trustees to levy a tax for the purpose therein stipulated, and under the circumstances referred to in the related sections; but I am further of the opinion that the levy thus made must be brought within the ten mill limitation of the Smith law which in present section 5649-2 (103 O. L., 552) is provided for as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

I think there is no question that this language is comprehensive, and that it is intended to, and does, embrace levies for purposes, such as those referred to in section 7019, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NOTES MAY NOT BE ISSUED BY A VILLAGE IN ANTICIPATION OF THE COLLECTION OF THE SPECIAL TAX AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 4362, GENERAL CODE, TO DEFRAY PARTIALLY THE EXPENSES OF OPERATING A MUNICIPAL WATERWORKS PLANT.

Notes may not be issued by a village in anticipation of the collection of the special tax authorized by section 4362, General Code, to defray partially the expense of operating a municipal waterworks plant. No authority whatever exists to borrow money for the purpose of paying the running expenses of a waterworks plant, or supplying a deficiency in the waterworks fund, otherwise than through the issuance of deficiency bonds upon a vote of the electors, which is not considered in the opinion.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. T. B. WILLIAMS, Village Solicitor, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 12th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. May a levy made by a village council for the running expenses of a municipal waterworks system, which is not self-sustaining, be made the basis of the issuance of notes in anticipation of the collection of taxes under section 3913, General Code?

"2. In case money can be borrowed in this way on behalf of the corporation, should the notes be issued by the council or by the board of trustees of public affairs; or is the board of trustees of public affairs authorized to borrow money for the purpose of supplying deficiencies in the waterworks fund independently of the authority found in section 3913, General Code?

"3. In case council has authority to borrow money in the manner referred to, may the money so borrowed be placed in the waterworks fund to be disbursed by the trustees of public affairs?"

Authority to make the levy in question is found in section 4362, General Code, which provides as follows:

"When waterworks and electric light plants or either of them are owned and operated by a village which receives its street lighting and fire protection therefrom and the proceeds from the operation of such plant or plants is insufficient to pay the expenses of operating such plants or either of them, the council may levy a tax not to exceed five mills on each dollar valuation of the taxable property listed for taxation in such village, real and personal, to pay the running expenses and extensions made thereto after applying the proceeds therefrom, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law."

Section 3913, General Code, about which you inquire, provides as follows:

"In anticipation of the general revenue fund in any fiscal year, such corporations may borrow money and issue certificates of indebtedness therefor, signed as municipal bonds are signed, but no loan shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be recived from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances. The sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity. The certificates shall not run for a longer period than six months, nor bear a greater rate of interest than six per cent., and shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest."

The first question encountered is as to whether or not the special tax provided for in section 4362 constitutes a part of the "general revenue fund" within the purview of section 3913. This question has not been, so far as I am able to ascertain, determined by judicial interpretation. In the absence of such interpretation I think section 3913 should be given a rather strict and literal construction.

It will be observed that the section, by clear implication, recognizes the existence of tax collections other than for the general revenue fund, for it speaks of the "tax collections for such fund," referring to the general revenue fund which has been previously mentioned in that section. Therefore, it cannot be said that any and all taxes which might be levied on the general duplicate of a municipality would constitute sources of the "general revenue fund" referred to in the section.

Surely, then, if there are taxes other than taxes for the general revenue fund, the tax authorized by section 4362, General Code, is such a tax. This is a special tax in every sense of the word. It is limited by a special rate limitation and its application is specifically provided for. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the proceeds of the tax authorized by section 4362, General Code, do not constitute a part of the general revenue fund of a municipality; in consequence of which holding it follows that the special tax authorized by section 4362, General Code, cannot be anticipated by the issuance of certificates of indebtedness under authority of section 3913, General Code.

This conclusion disposes of all the questions which you ask except the one with respect to the power of the board of trustees of public affairs to borrow money for the current expenses of the waterworks, which, as you state it, does not involve an interpretation of section 2913, General Code. This question for the present purpose may be extended so as to embrace the question as to whether or not there is any authority in any municipal tribunal to borrow money to meet deficiencies in the waterworks fund.

From a consideration of this question section 3931, General Code, may be eliminated for your purposes. It provides for the issuance of deficiency bonds, but such bonds can only be issued upon the approval of the electors at a regular or special election. The manner in which you have asked your question indicates that you wish to be advised as to the existence of authority to issue bonds or notes otherwise than upon the approval of the electors. Section 3974, General Code, which I need not quote, refers to borrowing money to defray the expenses of the management of a waterworks, but does not itself confer authority to borrow such money.

In short, I am unable to find any authority whatever to borrow money on behalf of the village for the purpose about which you inquire.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE, OR A COUNCIL OF THE MUNICIPALITY, TO CONTRACT WITH A PROPERTY OWNER FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A SANITARY SEWER FROM HIS PROPERTY.

A contract may not be made by the director of public service, or the council of the municipality, with a property owner for the construction of a sanitary sewer from his property, and for its benefit, the same to be paid out of the general fund of the municipality, or a bond issue thereof, unless it be out of a bond issue for the share of the municipality or in anticipation of the collection of assessments, made as provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. FRANK J. DOORLEY, City Solicitor, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 6, 1914, you inquire:

> "Would it be proper for the director of public service to contract with a property owner so that the property owner is to install a sewer in the street so as to benefit his property. The property owner agrees to pay for the cost of putting in the sewer but to hold said cost as a charge against the city, the city to pay it from either a proposed bond issue or from the general fund of next year?"

You state in your letter of October 14, 1914, that the cost will be under $500.00.

There are two insurmountable difficulties in the way of doing this in the manner suggested. The first is, there being no money in the treasury to meet the obligation of the proposed contract, it will not be possible to make and file the certificate required by section 3806, G. C. The second is that under your statement "to contract with a property owner so that the property owner is to install a sewer in the street so as to benefit his property." This would be nothing more or less than the construction of a private sewer at public expense, for which there is neither precedent nor authority.

It has been suggested that the city is acting under section 3647, G. C., and not under section 3871, and that the action of the city is justified by the case of R. R. Co. vs. City, 40 O. S., 155.

Section 3647 is a general grant of power without any direction or provision as to how it may be carried out. Section 3871 designates the manner in which this may be done.

The case presented in 40 O. S., 155, was very different from that now for consideration; in that case a sewer was constructed as, or as part, of a street improvement prior to the adoption by the council of Hartwell of a sewer system, and the court held that it might be done; that is, that the adoption of a sewer system was not a condition precedent to the construction of a sewer as part of a street improvement, and assessing the cost of the same against abutting owners.

An examination of this case will develop that it holds that the council of Hartwell, to use the language of Nash, J., "proceeded to exercise the power conferred by paragraph 21, section 199, and in substantial compliance with the provisions of chapter 49, Municipal Code." 40 O. S., 156.

Being of the opinion that the sewer as you describe it is not a public but a private matter, I am of opinion that the cost thereof may not be paid out of the general revenue fund of the city nor out of a bond issue, except it be a bond issue to pay the city's share of, or issued in anticipation of assessments, as provided by our Municipal Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A MUNICIPALITY MAY NOT ADVERTISE FOR BIDS ON A PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT, AFTER HAVING OFFERED BONDS FOR SALE, AND RECEIVING NO BIDS THEREFOR, AND WHERE THE CONTRACTOR WOULD AGREE TO TAKE THE BONDS AS A PART OF HIS CONTRACT.

A municipality having offered bonds for sale and received no bids therefor, may not advertise for bids on the proposed improvement and enter into an agreement with the lowest bidder to take such bonds or procure a purchaser for the same, as a condition or part of his contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. WM. J. MEYER, City Solicitor, New Boston, Ohio, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 8, 1914, in which you state and inquire:

> "Several months ago, at an election on the question of issuing $42,000.00 bonds for the purpose of installing a water supply system, there was a majority of votes cast in favor of the proposition to issue bonds. Thereupon, council advertised the bonds for sale, and the advertisement called for bids about the first of August, at which time, as matters turned out, the bond market became unsettled, with the result that no bids were received by the village. Attempts to dispose of the bonds at private sale have proved fruitless so far.
> "The plan which council is now considering is that of going ahead, advertising for bids for the work, and then when the time comes, state to the contractor who puts in the lowest bid that the work can be awarded to him only on condition that he arrange for the sale of the bonds either to himself or to some other person. The plan outlined was suggested to the council by a local contractor, who says that he is willing to put in a bid on the work with the understanding that if he is the low bidder he will arrange for the sale of the bonds through some of the banks here."

In my opinion, to advertise for bids on a contract for construction of the contemplated waterworks in the usual and formal manner, and after receipt of the bids to attach a condition that the contractor should either take the bonds himself or arrange for their sale to a third person, would be beyond the power of the village council and result either in taking advantage of the contractor if he was ignorant of what was coming, or if he knew of it, giving him the opportunity to formulate his bid for the work so as to compensate him for trouble in taking and handling, or selling the bonds.

Looking at the matter in the first light and it falls little, if any short of deceiving bidders and from the second point of view, it works out a sale of bonds in a manner unauthorized by law, and permits a sale for a sum less than par and accrued interest, which is the minimum fixed in the statutes.

From any point of view suggesting itself to my mind, I cannot indorse the course suggested and feel well satisfied that great trouble might be encountered in any attempt to sell the bonds other than by advertising in the usual way, to the industrial commission.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION TO BORROW MONEY UNDER SECTION 5656, GENERAL CODE, TO PAY OBLIGATIONS INCURRED FOR FURNISHING THE TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS, WHICH THE LAW REQUIRES TO BE FURNISHED.

A board of education may borrow money under section 5656, General Code, to pay obligations incurred in furnishing the transportation to pupils which the law requires to be furnished, such expense being a charge against the district, regardless of the existence of sufficient funds in the district treasury, and the contract for transportation being at least the nature of an employment contract.

It is not a condition precedent to the exercise of power under said section that previously incurred floating or funded indebtedness has been created under the same section, that is, it is not necessary that the one debt shall be extinguished before the time of payment of the other is extended.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. CHEEVER W. PETTAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of your letter of September 24, describing the situation in certain school districts in your county and requesting my opinion upon two specific questions of law as follows:

> "1. May a board of education borrow money under section 5656, General Code, to pay for the transportation of pupils?
> "2. May a board of education, which has in the past been obliged by its limits of taxation to borrow money to pay the salaries of teachers, continue to borrow money for this purpose without paying the loan already made?"

You refer in your letter to my opinion to the effect that under section 5656, General Code, money may be borrowed by the board of education to pay its teachers. This opinion is founded upon the fact that a board of education may enter into a valid contract for the employment of a teacher without the presence of the money in the treasury as required for other contracts by section 5660, General Code. In other words, under the provisions of section 5661, General Code, contracts authorized to be made by boards of education "for the employment of teachers, officers and other school employes," are exempt from the prohibition against entering into any contracts involving the expenditure of money unless the clerk first certifies that the amount required for the payment thereof is in the treasury, etc., which prohibition is made in section 5660, General Code.

Having the power, then, to make a valid contract regardless of the presence of the necessary funds in the treasury, it follows that when services are rendered under such a contract a valid indebtedness against the school district arises. The power to borrow money under section 5656, General Code, is broad enough to provide for any case in which an indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation, the school district is unable to pay at maturity, exists.

Whether or not the money may be borrowed to pay for the transportation of pupils depends, therefore, upon the further question as to whether a contract for such transportation is a contract for the employment of a "school employe" within the meaning of section 5661, General Code, as well as upon any other fact that might make such transportation a legal obligation of the district, notwithstanding the limitations of section 5660, General Code.

The sections requiring transportation are sections 7730 and 7731, General Code, as amended 104 O. L., 139. They provide as follows:

> "7730. The board of education of any rural school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and in such rural school district shall provide for the conveyance of the pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. * * *
> "Sec. 7731. In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. The transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the most direct public highway shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided, the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the respective residences of all pupils, except when such residences are situated more than one-half mile from the public road. When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district."

I would be of the opinion that if transportation were provided for by the hiring of a team and driver, the contract would be only for the employment of a school employe within the meaning of section 5661, General Code. It is at least clear that if the local board of education neglects or refuses to provide transportation and the same is provided by the county board of education and the cost thereof is charged against the local school district, the charge against the district will constitute a legal indebtedness of the district within the meaning of section 5656, General Code.

It being at least clear, then, that the board of education may borrow money to pay a charge against the district on account of transportation when the same is made by the county board of education, and it being reasonably clear at least that a contract for furnishing transportation would be a contract of employment, I am of the opinion that a local board of education has power under section 5656, General Code, to borrow money for this purpose to the extent that transportation may be required by law. However, as pointed out in my opinion respecting the exercise of the borrowing power for the purpose of paying teachers, it is not competent under this section to borrow money and thus to create a fund in advance. The contract must be made with the person who is to provide the transportation and a liquidated liability, under the contract, must be incurred before section 5656 becomes available. This distinction should be carefully observed.

In answer to your second question I may say that the authority of a board of education to borrow money or issue bonds for the purpose of funding a floating debt is not expressly, at least, made to depend upon any condition other than that such a debt exists. It is not required of the board of education that it first pay one debt before it extends the time of payment of another. Nor could such a requirement be effective in the nature of things so long as boards of education are required to conduct schools according to a certain standard, and are permitted in so conducting them to incur obligations without regard to their financial ability to pay them. There would seem to be no public policy which would require an arbitrarily forced interpretation of the statutes authorizing the refunding of the indebtedness so as to make power to refund one indebtedness contingent upon the payment of an earlier indebtedness which had been previously refunded or funded. If it were the policy of our statutes to avoid cumulative extension and refunding of indebtedness, that policy would be expressed in a statute denying the authority to create an original indebtedness until a previously existing funded indebtedness had been provided for, or in a statute elevating tax limitations so as to permit the payment of such a previously funded indebtedness. We do not have any such statutes, however, but on the contrary the statutes requiring a certain standard of efficiency in the conduct of public schools tend, under the tax limitation statutes, to a precisely opposite result.

I know of no constitutional provision or implied limitation that would either make the joint effect of the statutes commented upon unconstitutional or compel such a forced construction of them as to deny the power to refund a valid debt simply because a debt of a similar nature previously incurred and then funded or refunded, had not been paid. If there should come a time when a school district should find itself in an impossible situation, financially speaking, the legislature would doubtless afford appropriate relief and at the present time all that can be said is that it is presumed that such relief will be forthcoming at the proper time. In the meantime other remedies are available for the alleviation of the situation. The aid which the state affords a weak school district, the new school supervision laws enabling county boards of education to adjust boundaries of rural and village school districts, and the new tax assessment laws providing means of bringing local tax duplicates up to the standard contemplated by the constitution, would seem to point a way to a solution of such problems without recourse to the extreme remedies hereinbefore mentioned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN LANDS WERE SOLD AT JUDICIAL SALE IN THE MONTH OF MARCH, 1914, THE TAXES FOR 1914 ARE NOT PAYABLE FROM THE PROCEEDS OF THE SALE.

When lands were sold at judicial sale in the month of March, 1914, the taxes for the year 1914 are not payable from the proceeds of the sale, but must be paid by the purchaser.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. HOMER E. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of October 12th, previously acknowledged, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "A parcel of real estate was sold on the 25th day of March, 1914, by an administrator, under proceedings to sell real estate to pay the debts of the decedent. Should the taxes for the year 1914, which under the statute are a lien against the real estate as of the first Monday of February, 1914, be paid by the administrator or by the purchaser at the judicial sale?"

The lands being sold by the administrator in the proceeding above described, the statute which governs the distribution of the proceeds of the sale is section 5692, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When lands so held by tenants in common are sold upon proceedings in partition, or taken by the election of any of the parties to such proceedings, or real estate is sold at judicial sale, or by administrators, executors, guardians, or trustees, the court shall order the taxes and penalties, and the interest thereon against such lands, to be discharged out of the proceeds of such sale or election."

In Hoglen vs. Cohen, 30 O. S., 436, this statute was interpreted, and it was held that the annual taxes levied upon real estate, payable out of the proceeds of judicial sale thereof, are those taxes which stand charged upon the duplicate of the county; and that as to taxes, the lien of which has attached prior to the date of sale, but as to which no charge has been made on the duplicate, a judicial sale has not the effect of discharging the lien and the purchaser must take the land subject to the lien for taxes. This decision was followed in Makley vs. Whitmore, 61 O. S., 587, and must be accepted as the present law of the state, the phraseology of the statutes involved not having been altered in the mean time.

Therefore, upon the question submitted by you, I am of the opinion that the administrator should not pay the taxes on the real estate in question and that the same constitute a charge against the land itself which the purchaser at the judicial sale must discharge in order to protect his property.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF MUNICIPAL BOARD OF HEALTH TO REGULATE THE KEEPING OF POULTRY.

1. A municipal board of health has power to regulate and control coops and houses for keeping and sheltering domestic fowls and preventing them from becoming nuisances.

2. Whether it has power to prevent domestic fowls from running at large in the streets, lanes and public places of the municipality, but it has not power to prohibit domestic fowls from running at large on the owner's premises, or on another's premises with his consent.

3. Where the legislature affixes a penalty for a violation of an order or regulation of the board of health, such board has no power to prescribe a different penalty, and if it attempts to do so, its effort is void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1914.

HON. R. D. WICKHAM, City Solicitor, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 24, 1914, enclosing a copy of a resolution of your board of health, together with an inquiry as to the power of such board to pass and enforce the same.

The resolution is as follows:

"A RESOLUTION

"Regulating the keeping of fowl or fowls.

"Be it Resolved by the Board of Health of the City of Norwalk, Ohio, as follows, to wit:

"Section 1. That the board of health regulations of the city of Norwalk, O., heretofore adopted by the council of general ordinances of said city, passed and approved March 21, 1911, be supplemented by the sections following and designated sections 553a, 553b, 553c.

"Sec. 553a. No person shall, without obtaining a permit from the board of health, allow any domestic fowl or fowls to occupy any building, enclosure or place as a coop, or roosting place within fifty feet from any well, residence, church or school building, or any building which is used or occupied as a workshop, office or factory, or within twenty-five feet of any public street, avenue or any public grounds of the city, or within ten feet of any barn or stable occupied by any other person than the owner of said fowl or fowls except as herein is further provided.

"That when in the judgment of the board of health of said city, the public health will not become jeopardized, a permit may be granted by the proper committee to keep poultry as aforesaid and hereinafter provided, within less distance than fifty feet; but every permit so granted under this standing order, shall expire on the 31st day of December next after date of issue, unless sooner revoked by said board of health for cause which was not apparent at the time of issuing said permit, and all permits issued under this standing order must be placed in a frame and tacked in a conspicuous place in which said fowls are kept.

"Moreover, without reference to distance limitation, no person shall allow any domestic fowl or fowls to occupy any building, enclosure or place as a coop or roosting place until the location of such coop or roosting place has been approved by the board of health; provided that the restrictions of this standing order shall not be held to apply to a temporary coop, occupied by a single brood of very young poultry while under the care of a brooding fowl, or to the parent fowl while rearing her young; but every temporary coop shall, during occupancy, be either removed to a new location or thoroughly cleaned once each week, and as much oftener in any case as the board of health may require, and no person shall permit any such fowl or fowls to run at large either on his or her premises or on the premises of any other person, or on the streets, avenues or other public grounds of the city between the dates of April 1st and November 1st.

"Sec. 553b. Whoever violates the provisions of the next preceding three sections shall be fined in a sum not exceeding ten dollars nor less than one dollar for each offense.

"Section 2. That this resolution shall be in force upon its passage and publication.

"Passed July 28, 1913.

"EDGAR G. MARTIN,
"President of Board of Health.

"Attest: GEO. H. MARTIN, Clerk."

It will be observed that this resolution is to supplement former action of the board "by the sections following and designated as sections 553a, 553b, 553c," and that no such section as 553c is found in the resolution.

The code sections necessary to consider are sections 4413, 4414 and 4421, which read as follows:

"Section 4413. The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record thereof shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances.

"Section 4414. Whoever violates any provision of this chapter, or any order or regulation of the board of health made in pursuance thereof, or abstructs or interferes with the execution of such order, or wilfully or illegally omits to obey such order, shall be fined not to exceed one hundred dollars or imprisoned for not to exceed ninety days, or both, but no person shall be imprisoned under this section for the first offense, and the prosecution shall always be as and for a first offense, unless the affidavit upon which the prosecution is instituted, contains the allegation that the offense is a second or repeated offense.

"Section 4421. The board of health may also regulate the location, construction and repair of yards, pens and stables, and the use, emptying and cleaning thereof, and of water closets, privies, cess pools, sinks, plumbing, drains or other places where offensive or dangerous substances or liquids are or may accumulate. * * *"

These sections very clearly authorize the board of health to pass regulations of the character of the one in question, because it will be conceded that while all chicken coops and houses are not nuisances, they may readily become so by lack of care and attention. Generally speaking, therefore, the resolution is authorized. However, this resolution does not end with provisions as to location and cleanliness of houses in which fowls are kept or roosted, but goes further to the extent of prohibiting "such fowl or fowls from running at large either on his or her premises, or on the premises of any other person, or on the streets, avenues or other public grounds of the city, between the dates of April 1st and November 1st."

That there is power to prohibit fowls from running at large, although doubted, may be conceded, this resolution does not stop with a prohibition of running at large, i. e., off the owner premises, but also prohibits them from running at large on the premises of the owner or on that of any other person. So long as each individual has a right to so use his own property as he desires, and such use does not interfere with the rights of others, the latter inhibition is doubtful, to say the least.

I am of the opinion that so long as the rights of the public and adjacent proprietors are not interfered with, that it is not within municipal power to prohibit an owner of property from permitting his fowl to run at large on his own premises.

The policy of this state in regard to animals running at large, is found in sections 5806 to 5823, G. C., inclusive. From them may be ascertained the character of animals prohibited from running at large and the places where they may not be permitted and the history of these sections develop the fact that with the exception of geese, domestic fowls are not to be found in the prescribed list, and no effort has ever been made by the legislature to prohibit an owner from allowing his animals to roam at large on his own premises, or upon the premises of another, with such others consent.

I do not feel like sending this opinion out without calling attention to the fact that the word "inclosed" as used in section 5809, is an apparent typographical error; in the revised statutes and in all enactments prior to the General Code, the word used was "uninclosed," "off the owner's premises" or other words of similar import.

Section 553b provides a penalty for violation of the preceding regulations. Section 4414, supra, does the same. The legislature having acted on the subject, is it within the power of the board of health to affix a penalty also? It will be observed that section 4414 presents a penalty of a fine not to exceed $100.00, or not to exceed 90 days' imprisonment, or both. This regulation prescribes a fine of not more than $10.00, nor less than $1.00, for each offense, thereby eliminating the imprisonment found in the statute and fixing a minimum of $1.00 fine where the statute provides no minimum. This resolution in prescribing a minimum, not to be found in the statutes, and in eliminating imprisonment, fails to conform to the statutes, and I am of the opinion, therefore, that section 553b is invalid and cannot be enforced.

This, it must be observed, does not let offenders against the regulation go free, but leaves their prosecution to the board, and punishment as prescribed by the legislature.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A COUNTY AUDITOR IS NOT ESTOPPED FROM RECOVERING MONEY PAID OUT BY HIM ACCORDING TO THE RULE OF THE BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES WHEN A DIFFERENT RULE IS SUBSEQUENTLY DECIDED BY THE SUPREME COURT.

If a county auditor, in making settlement when the salary law was enacted, does so in accordance with the ruling of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, and the supreme court subsequently decides that a different rule should be adopted which would have entitled auditor to retain for himself a greater amount of money than he did, he is not estopped from recovering the difference.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1914.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 24, 1914, you wrote as follows:

"Under date of January 4, 1913, we called your attention to the case of Will R. Lewis vs. State, ex rel., Stilwell (No. 12881 in the Supreme Court) in which it was held that county auditors in office February, 1907, were entitled to three-fourths of the fees accruing on the February, 1907, settlement, and that one-fourth of such fees should be paid into their respective fee funds. We inquired whether, applying the principle laid down in this case, a county auditor whose term expired the third Monday of October, 1904, was entitled to a pro rata share of the fees accruing on the February, 1905, settlement, based as the time from August 15th to the third Monday of October, 1904, is to the time from the third Monday of October, 1904, to February 15th, 1905. In answer to this question, you replied in an opinion to this department, dated May 19, 1913, that such claims are barred by the statute of limitations.

"We now desire your opinion as to whether or not a county auditor in office in February, 1907, is entitled to receive any payments due him, in accordance with the decision in the above case, over and above what he actually received, settlement having been made by dividing the February, 1907, settlement fees pro rata as the time from the third Monday of October to January 1, 1907, is to the time from January 1, 1907, to February 15, 1907 (that being the ruling of the fee commission which considered the February, 1907, settlement fees to be compensation for the one-half of the official year beginning the third Monday of October), provided he commenced suit against the county for the recovery of such payments within six years after February 15, 1907."

The right of the county auditor in question to three-fourths of the fees accruing on the February settlement, such amount being the portion which the period from August 15th to January 1st, bears to the period from August 15th to February 15th, is settled by the decision, above referred to, of Lewis vs. State, ex rel.

According to your statement of facts the auditor received a less amount by reason of the fact that he was paid, in accordance with the custom then in vogue, such portion of the fees of the February, 1907, settlement, as the period from the third Monday of October to the first day of January, bore to the period from the said third Monday of October, 1906, to the third Monday of April, 1907.

In my opinion of May 19th, I held that claims of this nature are subject to the bar of the statute of limitations. In the case in question, however, the auditor brought suit within the six-year limitation, and the question of bar by the statute of limitations, is, therefore, avoided by him. It has been suggested to me, however, that a question arises by reason of the auditor's acquiescence with respect to the custom then in vogue, and that, by voluntarily paying the balance, which, in accordance with the supreme court's decision, was due to him, into the fee fund, he thereby estopped himself from claiming such balance and is now precluded, by reason of his voluntary payment, from recovering this balance.

I am unable to find any authority whatever which is precisely in point upon the situation presented. The following cases, however, may be presented as having some bearing:

"Inspectors of customs are appointed by the secretary of the treasury, at a designated compensation of less than $3.00 per day. When paid they are compelled to receipt in full therefor.

"I. When a statute (Rev. Stat., Sec. 2733) creates an office, prescribes its duties and fixes its compensation, the appointing power has no control over compensation, either to increase or diminish it.

"II. The Revised Statutes (Sec. 2733) fixed the pay of inspectors of customs, and of 'others performing the duties of inspectors of customs' (Sec. 2738) at $3.00 'for every day he shall actually be employed;' and an inspector, or person acting as such, may recover this, though by the terms of his appointment he was to receive less.

"III. A public officer may recover the lawful compensation of his office, notwithstanding that he accepted a less amount and receipted in full therefor."

(Adams vs. U. S., 20 Ct. Claims, 115.)

"The decedent while an employe of the United States coast and geodetic survey at a salary of $2,400 a year is appointed a member of the Mississippi river commission at the same salary. Later his salary is reduced by the secretary of the treasury to $1,600 a year.

"I. Where a statute creates an office and fixes its compensation the appointing power cannot diminish or increase it.

"II. A public officer may recover the lawful compensation of his office though he accepted a less amount and receipted therefor in full.

"III. Where a statute provides that government officers shall discharge duties additional to those of their regular office and that they 'shall receive no other pay or compensation than is now allowed them by law,' the pay at the time of the appointment fixes the amount to be paid in the new position."

(Whiting, Administratrix, vs. The United States, 35 Ct. Claims, 291.)

In People, ex rel., Miller vs. The Board of Auditors, 41 Mich, page 4, the per curiam of the court is as follows:

"Per Curiam. The board of auditors cannot change action that they have once taken in fixing a salary except by further action spread upon their records. They cannot change it by parol. The fact that relator received less than he was entitled to does not amount to a waiver of his rights. Other legal questions in the case need not be passed on. Mandamus granted.

"Where the compensation of an employe of the state is fixed by statute, it cannot be reduced by the state officer under whom he is employed.

"The fact that the employe takes, for a time, the reduced compensation, does not estop him from claiming the residue.

"The provision of the appropriation act of 1875 (chap. 634, Laws of 1875), fixing 'the compensation of the men employed as firemen in the capitol' had reference to the old capitol; it was not confined to firemen in service in 1875, but was prospective in its character and was in force in 1881.

"Accordingly held, that plaintiff, who was employed as fireman in May, 1880, by the superintendent of the old capitol, and who continued to serve in that capacity until about December, 1881, but who had been paid during the summer months but one-half the daily allowance fixed by said act, was entitled to the balance; and that a decision of the board of audit rejecting his claim therefor was error."

These authorities are all harmonious in so far as they hold that when a compensation is fixed by statute, the officer or employe is entitled to the amount fixed, notwithstanding he has accepted a less amount from the paying authority and notwithstanding, furthermore, that he gives a receipt in full for the amount. They differ from the case in question in that the officer himself, in these cases, did not have the payment of his own compensation under his control. I am of the opinion, however, that the situation presents no material distinction and offers no grave reason under the circumstances why recovery should be disallowed in this case. The payment was made in accordance with a universal custom and was furthermore taken, not solely in the specific instance of computation, upon the authority and conclusion of the auditor alone, but in conjunction with the authority and conclusions of the treasurer.

It is true the auditor pays the money into the fee fund, but in effect this, in reality, is a mere transfer of the funds from the county general fund to the fee fund, and show, virtually, not so much a voluntary payment to the county as a failure to draw out funds of the county.

I cannot bring myself to believe that the auditor's action in the case in question was of any more effect than was the acceptance of lesser sums and the giving of a receipt in full by the individuals in the cases above presented. I am, therefore, of the opinion, that the auditor's action, in view of the authorities above quoted, may not be regarded as a waiver to recover the balance legitimately due to him, and that he is not estopped from recovery.

I do not enter into the question of the mistake of law in this connection, for the reason that I find the authorities do not give consideration to this phase, in cases of like nature. In the above authorities such factor was entirely ignored, and, indeed, a review of the authorities, under this head, seems to disclose that the consideration of that question is confined to dealings of a contractual nature and to the construction of instruments of writing.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE TO RECEIVE ONE DOLLAR FOR SITTING IN A TRIAL IN A CRIMINAL PROCEEDING WHERE NO DEFENSE IS INTERPOSED—WHERE A JUDICIAL EXAMINATION IS HELD.

Under section 1746, General Code, which provides that a justice of the peace may receive one dollar for sitting in a trial in a criminal proceeding where a defense is interposed, the justice of the peace is not entitled to that fee in any case where a plea of guilty is made, for the reason that in such case it may not be said that a defense is interposed.

Under section 3346, General Code, however, providing the fee of one dollar for a constable for attendance at criminal trials, it is held that where defendant pleads guilty, and the justice enters into a judicial examination for the purpose of determining the amount of fine as based upon the gravity of the offense, the constable may receive his one dollar for attendance upon such hearing. Trial is defined by statute as a judicial examination of the issues, and it is held in the opinion that the question of the amount of fines and gravity of offense is a material issue in a criminal proceeding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 1st you request my opinion as follows:

"By request of Mr. M. J. Penty, justice of the peace, Cleveland, we submit the following questions:

"First. In a criminal action wherein the justice has final jurisdiction and a plea of guilty is entered, is the justice entitled to the fee of one dollar for sitting at the trial?

"Second. In a similar action is the constable entitled to the fee of one dollar for attendance at trial?

"We might add that your department answered both of these questions in the negative in an opinion rendered to this department under date of July 28, 1913.

"Mr. Penty accompanies his questions with reference to the case of Palmer vs. State, 42 O. S., 596, and the United States court in the case of United States vs. Winslow Curtis, 4 Mason's Reports, page 232. He also refers to an opinion of the attorney general under date of November 27, 1911, as bearing on the question as to what constitutes a trial."

Section 1746 of the General Code provides in part:

"* * * Justices of the peace, for the services named, when rendered, may receive the following fees * * * sitting in the trial of a cause, civil or criminal, where a defense is interposed, whether tried to the justice or to a jury, one dollar."

Section 3347 of the General Code, provides in part as to fees of constables:

"For services rendered * * * constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees * * * for each day's attendance before a justice of the peace on criminal trial one dollar."

In both of the former opinions referred to by you, the case of Palmer vs. State, 42 O. S., 596, was cited as defining a trial to be a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or facts, in an action or proceeding.

The case of Railway Co. vs. Thurston, 44 O. S., 525, may be cited to the same effect. These cases adopt the definition found in the statutes of the same language, to wit: Section 11376 of the General Code. To receive the fees prescribed, therefore, a justice of the peace must be sitting in a proceeding having for its object a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of facts, wherein some defense is interposed, and a constable must be attending at such proceeding having a like object, but without the necessity of a defense being interposed.

In the former opinions referred to in your request attention was not paid to the phase of the matter which I understand is entertained by the party desiring a solution of the questions presented. In the particular view entertained reference is had especially to occasions wherein it is necessary, after plea of guilty is entered, for the justice to consider matters pertaining to gravity of the offense. In brief, where a defendant pleads guilty to an offense punishable by a fine, the question of the proper amount of a variable fine which may be assessed, becomes a very material issue, and it is essential to have facts introduced in evidence which may tend to mitigate or aggravate the nature of the case. The question at hand, therefore, is whether or not such an examination of facts by a magistrate amounts to a judicial examination of an issue in a proceeding.

In the case of Railway vs. Thurston, above quoted, the court has regard to the sections of the Code immediately following section 11376 for the purpose of defining the meaning of the word "issue" in this statute. These statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 11377. Issues arise on the pleadings where a fact, or conclusion of law, is maintained by one party and controverted by the other. They are of two kinds: (1) Of law; (2) of fact.

"Sec. 11378. An issue of fact arises:

"1. Upon a material allegation in the petition denied by the answer.

"2. Upon a set-off, counterclaim, or new matter, presented in the answer and denied by the reply.

"3. Upon material new matter in the reply, which is to be considered as controverted by the adverse party, without further pleading.

"Sec. 11379. Issues of law must be tried by the court, unless referred as hereinafter provided. Issues of fact arising in actions for the recovery of money only, or specific real or personal property, shall be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial be waived, or a reference be ordered as herinafter provided.

"Sec. 11380. All other issues of fact shall be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any issue to be tried by a jury, or referred."

These statutes have primary reference, it is clear, to civil proceedings, and seem to imply that all issues must be clearly set forth and controverted in the pleadings filed. In the case at hand, however, the proceeding is criminal and the same exactness cannot be accorded an application of the statutes to the situation. The plea of not guilty, or of guilty, in a criminal proceeding takes the place of pleadings in a civil proceeding, and all issue of the trial are raised by the trial of such a case.

It is true the primary issue is of presence or absence of guilt, but the question of gravity and the problem of mitigation or aggravation will surely be viewed as an issue, even though it must be considered more or less of a secondary nature. In this connection section 13696 of the General Code is of interest. This statute is as follows:

> "When a person is convicted of an offense punishable, either in whole or in part, by a fine, the court, by motion, may hear testimony in mitigation of the sentence. The court shall hear such testimony at the term at which the motion is made, or may continue the case to the next term on like terms as the case might have been continued before verdict or confession. The prosecuting attorney shall attend such proceedings on behalf of the state, and offer testimony necessary to give the court a true understanding of such case."

Here by express authorization of statute the court is authorized to make a judicial examination and to hear testimony for the purposes in mind. I am of the opinion that such an examination partakes just as much of the nature of a trial as is the main trial for the purpose of determining the question of presence or absence of guilt. In brief, the determination of the amount of the fine is quite as important as far as issues are concerned as is the question of whether or not any fine at all should justly be assessed.

Having this view, therefore, of the issues in a trial, the distinction between the provision for payment of one dollar to the justice for sitting in a trial where a defense is interposed, and the provision for $1.00 for the constable for each attendance before a justice on trial, is of interest. In brief the former provides for payment only where a defense is interposed, and the latter makes no mention whatever of the interposition of a defense. When a defendant pleads guilty it is clear that there is no defense interposed, and yet if the justice is required to examine into the material fact of gravity of the offense, there takes place what is clearly to be classed as a trial, in accordance with the reasoning of the above. Some importance must be attached to the difference in the statutory provisions above referred to, and the legislature clearly must be presumed to have had a definite intent in requiring a defense to be interposed as a condition precedent to the justice receiving his fee, while omitting such condition precedent in the case of a constable's fee. The only sensible import which can be given to the provision relating to the justices' fee is that no fee is to be paid where a plea of guilty is entered, since in that case no defense is interposed.

In answer to your questions, therefore, I am of the opinion that the use of the words "where a defense is interposed" precludes the justice from receiving his fee in very case where a plea of guilty is entered, notwithstanding the necessity of making an examination for the purpose of determining the gravity of the offense. In the case of a constable, however, no such condition is imposed, and since the justice when investigating for the purpose of determining gravity and hearing both sides, is engaged in the trial of material issues, he is conducting a trial within the meaning of the statute, and the constable should be entitled in such case, under section 3347 of the General Code, to $1.00 for attendance.

In coming to this conclusion it will be understood that the holding in no wise changes the conclusion of the former opinion of this department rendered under date of July 28, 1913, which opinion has reference solely to a plea of guilty when no examination is made for the purpose of determining degree of guilt.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A VILLAGE MAYOR IS REQUIRED TO ENFORCE AN ORDINANCE PASSED BY COUNCIL OF A VILLAGE TO PROHIBIT THE RUNNING OF DOGS AT LARGE, WITHOUT PERMITS, SECURED BY THE OWNERS OF THE DOGS, FROM THE MAYOR.

Where council of a village enacts an ordinance to prohibit the running of dogs at large without a permit secured from the mayor, and the village marshal is required to enforce such ordinance by catching dogs without a permit, keep them for forty-eight hours and then kill them if the owner does not call for them, such, marshal is entitled to the extra compensation thereafter fixed by council for the performance of such additional duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1914.

HON. C. B. MCCLINTOCK, Solicitor of Village of Brewster, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your favor of August 21, 1914, is received in which you set forth the following:

"The village of Brewster passed an ordinance in November, 1913, fixing the salary of all of the officials for the ensuing two years and said ordinance also fixed the duties of each official.

"A short time ago, and since the passage of that ordinance, another ordinance was passed relative to the running of dogs at large in this village. Amongst other things this ordinance provided that all dogs should be tagged and each person desiring to keep a dog should first secure a permit from the mayor of said village. The ordinance further provided that any dogs found running at large violating this provision and certain others named therein, should be taken up by the village marshal and kept for a period of forty-eight hours and if the owner did not call for the dog at such time said marshal was authorized to kill him. The ordinance further provided that any dogs that were taken up by the marshal in violation of said ordinance before the owner could secure the same he was to pay a certain sum of money.

"By the terms of this ordinance the duties of the marshal of the village would be very much increased. The council thereafter passed a resolution fixing a sum of money to be paid to the marshal for each dog caught by him and for each dog fed by him and killed by him. These sums of money would be in addition to his regular salary and in addition to his duties prescribed by the ordinance passed when his salary was fixed.

"I desire your opinion as to the right of the marshal to receive this additional compensation."

Section 3633, General Code, grants power to municipal corporations,

"_____; to regulate or prohibit the running at large of dogs, and provide against injury and annoyance therefrom, and to authorize the disposition of them when running at large contrary to the provisions of any ordinance."

Section 4219, General Code, provides:

"Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor.

The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

By virtue of this section the compensation of an officer or employe when fixed cannot "be increased or diminished during the term" for which he may have been elected or appointed.

Sections 4384, et seq., General Code, fix the term and prescribe the duties of a village marshal.

Section 4384, General Code, reads:

"The marshal shall be elected for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after his election, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. He shall be an elector of the corporation. When provided for by council, and subject to its confirmation, the mayor shall appoint all deputy marshals, policemen, night watchmen and special policemen, and may remove them for cause, which shall be stated in writing to council."

The marshal is elected for a definite term.

Section 4385, General Code, provides:

"The marshal shall be the peace officer of the village and the executive head under the mayor of the police force. The marshal, the deputy marshals, policemen or night watchmen under him shall have the powers conferred by law upon police officers in all villages of the state, and such other powers not inconsistent with the nature of their offices as are conferred by ordinance."

Section 4386, General Code, provides:

"He shall suppress all riots, disturbances and breaches of the peace and to that end may call upon the citizens to aid him. He shall arrest all disorderly persons in the corporation and pursue and arrest any person fleeing from justice in any part of the state. He shall arrest any person in the act of committing any offense against the laws of the state or the ordinances of the corporation, and forthwith bring such person before the mayor or other competent authority for examination or trial, and he shall receive and execute any proper authority for the arrest and detention of criminals fleeing or escaping from other places or states."

Section 4387, General Code, provides:

"In the discharge of his proper duties, he shall have like powers, be subject to like responsibilities and shall receive the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases, for services actually performed by himself or his deputies and such additional compensation as the council prescribes. In no case shall he receive any fees or compensation for services rendered by any watchman or any other officer, nor shall he receive for guarding, safekeeping or conducting into the mayor's or police court any person arrested by himself or deputies or by any other officer a greater compensation than twenty cents."

In the performance of the duties prescribed in these sections the marshal deals with persons and not with animals.

Section 5809, General Code, provides:

> "A person or corporation being the owner or having the charge of horses, mules, cattle, sheep, goats, swine, dogs or geese, shall not permit them to run at large in the public road, highway, street, lane or alley, or upon inclosed land or cause such animal to be herded, kept or detained for the purpose of grazing on premises other than those owned or occupied by the owner or keeper thereof, except as provided in section fifty-eight hundred and eleven."

Section 5910, General Code, provides:

> "Whoever violates the provisions of the next preceding section shall forfeit and pay for each violation not less than one dollar nor more than five dollars. Continued violation, after notice of prosecution, shall be an additional offense for each day of such continuance."

The offense in violation of these sections is committed by the owner and the penalty is against the owner.

In section 4216, General Code, it is provided, among other things:

> "* * * From time to time the council may provide such employes for the village as they may determine, and such employes may be removed at any regular meeting by a majority of the members elected to council."

It would have been within the power of council to create a position of "dog catcher" to enforce the provisions of the ordinance and to have fixed his compensation. The council in the present case has seen fit to pass an ordinance for the taking up of stray dogs and has placed this duty upon the village marshal.

Is the marshal entitled to extra compensation for these additional duties, as fixed by council?

At section 525 of McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, it is said:

> "Where an officer performs duties imposed by law he is entitled to the compensation therefor fixed by law and no other. He is not entitled to extra compensation for services performed in the line of his official duty. The fact that the salary or compensation may be recognized as inadequate remuneration for the services exacted and actually performed does not change the rule. And the principle is the same although his duties are greatly increased."

Also at section 526:

> "Extra pay may be allowed in some cases for the performance of additional services, but, of course, this must depend on the law and the nature of the duties of the office. While as mentioned, a public officer may not receive extra pay for services rendered by him for which compensation by way of salary is allowed by law, sometimes he may recover pay for other services which he may render outside of and in addition to his ordinary official duties which could as well be performed by other persons as by the officer."

In the present case the village marshal is required to catch and keep the stray dogs; to feed them and if not called for by the owner, he is required to kill them.

These duties in my opinion are in addition to the duties prescribed for a village marshal and the council may therefore grant to the marshal additional compensation for performing such additional duties.

This would not be increasing his compensation as village marshal but would be giving him a compensation for his services required in enforcing the ordinance prohibiting the running of dogs at large. Council might have created a new position the encumbent of which would be required to enforce this ordinance.

It is my conclusion that the marshal is entitled to the additional compensation.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE TAX COMMISSION TO REQUIRE FOREIGN CORPORATIONS TO REPORT TO THE COMMISSION A LIST OF THEIR OHIO STOCKHOLDERS, AS A PART OF THEIR ANNUAL REPORT.

The tax commission may require foreign corporations to report to the commission a list of their Ohio stockholders, as a part of their annual reports to the commission, under the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 6, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 6th, enclosing a copy of a blank form prescribed by the tax commission for the report of a foreign corporation under the franchise tax sections of the laws which the commission is required to administer, and directing my attention to the requirement on the third page thereof in the following language:

> "Attached herewith is a true and correct list of the stockholders in this company residing in Ohio, showing the name, address and number of shares held by each."

You mention in your letter several particular cases, which I will not discuss in this letter, as my opinion is requested upon a single proposition, viz.:

> "May the commission require foreign corporations, filing annual reports with it, to furnish lists of stockholders resident in Ohio?"

My attention is called to section 12924-1, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Whoever, being an officer, agent or employe of any public utility, company, firm, person, co-partnership, corporation or association, subject to the provisions of any law which the tax commission of Ohio is required to administer, shall fail or refuse to fill out and return any blanks, as required by such law, or shall fail or refuse to answer any questions therein propounded, or shall knowingly or wilfully give a false answer to any such question where the fact inquired of is within his knowledge, or who shall, upon proper demand, fail or refuse to exhibit to such commission or any commissioner or any person duly authorized, any book, paper, account, record or memorandum of such public utility, which is in his possession or under his control, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars for each offense."

Analyzing this section, the following facts are to me clearly apparent:

1. A violation of this penal statute can be committed only by a corporation, person, etc., subject to the provisions of a law which the tax commission is required to administer.

2. The blanks in which the question, refusal to answer which is penalized, are found, must be blanks required by law to be filled out and returned; and the law requiring the filling out and returning of such blanks must be a law which the tax commission of Ohio is required to administer.

3. The same principle applies to failure or refusal to answer questions propounded in such blank. That is to say, in order for an offense to be committed under this head it is necessary that a law which the commission is required to administer shall require blanks to be filled out and returned. It is not sufficient that some law which the commission is not required to administer shall require the filling out and returning of blanks.

I mention this fact because your letter refers to the Warnes law, so-called, 103 O. L. 786. In a way this law is one which the tax commission of Ohio was required to administer because section 1 thereof provides that the tax commission shall "direct and supervise the assessment of all real and personal property in the state;" and certain other statutes impose specific duties upon and vest specific powers in the tax commission with respect to the assessment or taxation of real and personal property generally in the state, but this law, i. e., the Warnes law, does not require foreign corporations or any other corporations to fill out and return any blanks to the tax commission of Ohio.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the Warnes law may be eliminated from consideration in answering your question, and as a consequence of such elimination it follows, of course, that authority to require answer to a question of the kind concerning which you inquire must exist, if at all, by virtue of the provisions of law relating to foreign corporations as such, or at least by virtue of the provisions of what is known as the Hollinger law, which is part of the same legislative act.

The provisions of this law particularly applicable to foreign corporations are as follows:

"Sec. 5499. Annually, during the month of July, each foreign corporation for profit, doing business in this state, and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state, and subject to compliance with all other provisions of law, and in addition to all other statements required by law, shall make a report in writing to the commission in such form as the commission may prescribe.

"Sec. 5500. Such report shall be signed and sworn to before an officer, authorized to administer oaths, by the president, vice-president, secretary, superintendent or managing agent in this state, and forwarded to the commission.

"Sec. 5501. Such report shall contain:

"1. The name of the corporation and under the laws of what state or country organized.

"2. The location of its principal office.

"3. The names of the president, secretary, treasurer and members of the board of directors, with the postoffice address of each.

"4. The date of the annual election of officers.

"5. The amount of authorized capital stock, and the par value of each share.

"6. The amount of capital stock subscribed, the amount of capital stock issued, and the amount of capital stock paid up.

"7. The nature and kind of business in which the company is engaged and its place or places of business, both within and without the state.

"8. The name and location of its office or offices in this state, and the name and address of the officers or agents of the corporation in charge of its business in this state.

"9. The value of the property owned and used by the company in this state, where situated, and the value of the property owned and used outside of this state, and where situated.

"10. The change or changes, if any, in the above particulars, made since the last annual report."

Standing by themselves these sections do not authorize the commission to require information of the kind specified in your inquiry. But these sections must be read in connection with sections 1465-18 and 1465-19, General Code, which are a part of the same legislative act in which the former sections are found.

"Sec. 1465-18. Each company, firm, corporation, person, association, co-partnership or public utility, shall furnish the commission in the form of returns prescribed by it all information required by law and all other facts and information, in addition to the facts and information in this act specifically required to be given, which the commission may require to enable it to carry into effect the provisions of the laws which the commission is required to administer, and shall make specific answers to all questions submitted by the commission.

"Sec. 1465-19. Any such company, firm, corporation, person, association, co-partnership or public utility, receiving from the commission any blanks with directions to fill them, shall cause them to be properly filled out so as to answer fully and correctly each question therein propounded, and in case it is unable to answer any question, it shall, in writing, give a good and sufficient reason for such failure."

It will thus be seen that the Hollinger act directly authorizes the commission, in the blanks to be prepared by it for the reports of foreign corporations, to incorporate questions relative to facts and information other than such facts and information as the law itself requires to be furnished in such report, provided such additional facts and information relate to laws which the commission is required to administer.

I think then that for the purpose of section 12024-1 information of a proper character, requested by the commission in addition to that which the law itself requires the commission to request in the blanks prepared by it, constitutes the subject matter of a question propounded in a blank required by the Hollinger law. That is to say, an answer to a proper question of this sort would be an answer to a question required by the Hollinger law, which in turn is the law which requires the report to be made out and returned by foreign corporations.

But this conclusion does not decide your question. It still remains to be determined whether or not information respecting the stockholders of a foreign corporation, resident in Ohio, is information enabling the tax commission "to carry into effect the provisions of * * * laws which the commission is required to administer" within the meaning of section 1465-18.

While I have stated that the Warnes law must be eliminated from consideration as the law requiring the report, for the purpose of giving to section 12924-1 its proper interpretation, I do find it necessary to consider the Warnes law in answering the question which is now raised. It is at least clear that the administration of the Hollinger law, relative to the taxation of domestic and foreign corporations, public utilities and banks does not involve the use of information of the character inquired about by you; but as already stated, the Warnes law is a law which, in a sense at least, the tax commission is required to administer. True it was passed after the Hollinger law was passed, but the principle is well established that a statute which applies to a genus is not limited to the species constituting that genus at the time such law is passed, but has equal application to other species brought within that genus subsequently to the passage of the original law by the enactment of other laws or otherwise. Therefore, the mere fact that the Warnes law was passed after section 1465-18 was enacted is not sufficient, in my judgment, to deprive the former of the character of a law which the commission is required to administer if it partakes otherwise of that character.

Turning now to the Warnes law, I observe in section 1 thereof, not only the language already quoted, but also the following:

> "Such district assessor shall, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, be the assessors of real and personal property for taxation, within and for their respective districts, * * *".

I find in section 4 thereof the following:

> "The district assessor shall, annually, under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, list and value for taxation all real and personal property subject to taxation in the county constituting his assessment district * * *".

Section 49 of the Warnes law (103 O. L. 798) provides as follows:

> "The tax commission of Ohio, district assessors and district boards of complaints shall notify the prosecuting attorney of the proper county of any wilful violations of the laws relating to the assessment of real and personal property for taxation, by persons, firms, partnerships, associations or corporations, for which a penalty, either civil or criminal, may be provided by law, and shall sign and verify affidavits or petitions with respect thereto when prepared by the prosecuting attorney."

The implication of this section is that the tax commission in some manner or another may acquire knowledge of the violation of the tax assessment laws by private individuals.

Section 42 of the Warnes law gives to the local taxing officers authority to examine public records, presumably with a view to ascertaining facts bearing upon the listing of property for taxation. This section also provides that the tax commission of Ohio shall have the same power, and at the end of the section is found the following proviso:

> "Nothing in this act shall be construed or held to authorize the tax commission, or any of its agents or employes, to examine the accounts or records of any banking or financial institution which is subject to the official inspection under the laws of the state of Ohio or of the United States, nor to demand or receive any list of depositors, stock depositors, members or others who transact business in or with such institutions."

The proviso last above quoted indicates clearly to my mind that the general assembly at least supposed that without this language in the statute the tax commission would be authorized to exercise inquisitorial powers in respect to bank deposits. But as will more fully appear I do not think that it is necessary to rely upon such evidence as this in order to sustain such a view.

Section 57 of the Warnes law provides as follows:

"The tax commission of Ohio may require district assessors, deputy assessors and members of district boards of complaints to meet and confer with other district assessors, deputy assessors, members of district boards of complaints, or with the commission on any matter relating to the assessment and valuation of property for taxation, at such times and places as may be prescribed from time to time by the commission."

Section 67 of the Warnes law provides in part as follows:

"Any expense incurred by the tax commission of Ohio, with respect to the annual assessment of real and personal property in any taxing district, shall be paid out of the treasury of the county in which such taxing district may be located, upon presentation of the order of the tax commission of Ohio certifying the amount thereof to the county auditor, who shall thereupon issue his warrant therefor upon the general fund of the county, directed to the county treasurer, who shall pay the same. * * *"

The cumulative effect of all these provisions read together produces, in my mind, the conviction that the tax commission of Ohio is required to administer the Warnes law, and that furthermore it is required to administer that law by way of securing such information as it may be able to secure with relation to taxable property which ought to appear on the tax list in Ohio.

The foregoing discussion is, as already hinted, upon the assumption that the phrase "the laws which the commission is required to administer," as found in section 1465-18, refers to and embraces laws passed subsequently to the enactment of the Hollinger law as well as to laws in force when the Hollinger law was enacted and to that law itself.

I am satisfied that the principle upon which this discussion is based is well founded, but it is not necessary to rely exclusively upon this principle in order to sustain the position which I have taken. The Hollinger law itself, in its original form, contains provisions which indicate clearly to my mind the scope of the legislative intention evinced in the use of the phrase under examination. I refer to sections 5617-1 and 5617-2, General Code, which were sections 146 and 147 of the Hollinger law. They provide as follows:

"Sec. 5617-1. The commission shall require county auditors to place upon the tax duplicate any property which may be found, for any reason, to have escaped assessment and taxation.

"Sec. 5617-2. The commission may raise or lower the assessed value of any real or personal property, first giving notice to the owner or owners thereof fixing a time and place for hearing any person or persons interested to the end that the assessment laws of the state may be equitably administered."

The irresistible inference from the first of these sections is that the tax commission shall in some manner or other find property which has escaped assessment and taxation. How the commission could find such a fact to exist, save by accident, without conducting such investigation as might enable it to make such discoveries in some systematic way, I am unable to understand.

Again, the second of these sections, while it may involve the idea of a proceeding before the commission, instituted by some interested party, is certainly not limited to that scope but includes within its purview the thought that the commission in some manner or other will have knowledge of the improper administration of the assessment laws of the state, and that it is to interpose its powers under this section for the purpose of securing the proper administration of those laws.

These sections, then, in and of themselves were sufficient, in the original Hollinger law, to give to the tax commission some degree of administrative power with respect to all the property taxation laws of the state. They were not of ambiguous import. They conferred power upon the tax commission, with respect to ordinary property taxation, far greater, in my opinion, than that possessed by any other single taxing board or officer. The tax commission, under the Hollinger act itself, stood upon the apex of the taxing machinery of the state, not only with respect to the matters and things within the field of its exclusive jurisdiction, such as the administration of the franchise and excise tax laws, the equalization of the value of bank shares, and the valuation of public utility property, but also to the administration of the general property tax laws themselves. These sections, in a word, were sufficient to show that at the time when the Hollinger law was enacted, and by virtue of that law itself, the tax commission was "required to administer" in a sufficient sense all of the tax laws of the state.

Now it must be acknowledged that the sections upon which I have been commenting have been repealed. This fact does not alter the case. When the Hollinger law was enacted the phrase upon which I have been commenting acquired a certain meaning embracing the administration of the property tax laws of the state. The repealing question was effected by the Warnes law itself, and as I have already pointed out the tax commission's powers and duties under the Warnes law did not differ substantially from the powers and duties which the commission had under the Hollinger act. The difference between the two laws might be summed up by the statement that under the Hollinger act the commission was to act independently, and it was under the necessity of instituting proceedings to compel local officers to comply with its independent orders; while under the Warnes law the commission is given direct charge and control over every act of the local assessor, and in addition is given such inquisitorial power as to make it clear that the commission is to aid and assist the local officers, by securing whatever information as to the existence of taxable property, which it may, by exercising any power which the statutes give to it, properly secure.

So, I think, it is clear that ever since the enactment of the Hollinger law (and as a matter of fact I think the same thing was true under the Langdon law of 1910 creating the commission, the tax commission has been required to administer the general property tax laws of the state in one degree or another and in one manner or another. It must have been in the contemplation of the legislature in using, in section 1465-18 of the Hollinger law, the phrase "the laws which the commission is required to administer," that the commission might find it desirable to use the power to propound additional questions in the reports required of corporations and public utilities, with a view to securing a more perfect administration, by and through the tax commission, of the general property tax laws of the state.

For all the foregoing reasons, therefore, I conclude that within the intendment of section 1465-18, General Code, the Warnes law is a law which the tax commission is required to administer, and that any information respecting the existence in Ohio of taxable property, is information which the commission may require to enable it to carry into effect the provisions of the Warnes law. Being such information, it is of the character which the commission may require in the form of returns prescribed by it.

Therefore, the requirement which the commission has made is properly included in the blank form which it has prescribed for the report of foreign corporations, and failure to comply with such requirement constitutes a violation of section 12924-1, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY TREASURER HAS NO AUTHORITY TO EMPLOY AN ATTORNEY TO MAKE COLLECTION OF TAXES UNDER SECTION 2667, GENERAL CODE—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY NOT ALLOWED ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR MAKING SUCH COLLECTIONS.

A county treasurer has no power to employ an attorney, other than the prosecuting attorney, to make collection of taxes under section 2667, General Code.

When actions are brought by the prosecuting attorney to collect taxes under section 2667, General Code, he is not entitled to an allowance of compensation therefor, in addition to his salary as prosecuting attorney.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1914.

HON. A. A. SLAYBAUGH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 16th, in which you inquire:

> "I would like an opinion as to whether or not the county treasurer has the right to employ an attorney in actions commenced by him under the provisions of section 2667, General Code, and if so, would the provisions of section 2672 govern the amount of the fees for such attorney?
> "Is the prosecuting attorney compelled to act as attorney in cases commenced under section 2667 without compensation? What is meant by the word 'expenses' in sections 2672 and 2673?"

The sections to which you call attention read:

> "Section 2667. When taxes or assessments, charged against lands or lots or parcels thereof upon the tax duplicate, authorized by law, or any part thereof, are not paid within the time prescribed by law, the county treasurer in addition to other remedies provided by law may, and when requested by the auditor of state, shall enforce the lien of such taxes and assessments, or either, and any penalty thereon, by civil action in his name as county treasurer, for the sale of such premises, in the court of common pleas of the county, without regard to the amount claimed in the same way mortgage liens are enforced.
> "Section 2672. When lands or lots or parcels thereof, advertised for and offered at both delinquent and forfeited tax sales and returned as unsold at both, have become forfeited to the state by reason of the unpaid taxes thereon, the county treasurer may contract with a suitable person to collect the taxes or assessments thereon at a compensation deemed just and proper, subject to the approval of the county commissioners, but not to exceed twenty-five per cent. of the amount collected and shall be payable therefrom. Such allowance shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor, among the funds entitled to share in the distribution of such taxes, and the expense of collection under the contract shall be borne by the person so contracting, who may proceed under this and the preceding sections, or as otherwise provided by law.

"Section 2673. When requested so to do by the auditor of state, if a county treasurer refuses or neglects to enforce a lien for such taxes and assessments, or either, and penalty thereon by civil action as hereinbefore provided, the auditor of state may direct the prosecuting attorney of the county to enforce such lien, in a civil action in the name of the state. Such suit shall be brought and prosecuted as hereinbefore provided. For such services the prosecuting attorney shall be allowed by the county commissioners from the amount collected not to exceed twenty-five per cent. thereof. The expense of such collection shall be borne by the prosecuting attorney, and all allowances shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor, among all the funds entitled to share in the distribution of such taxes."

In answer to the last part of your inquiry, it is necessary to consider section 2917, which reads:

"Section 2917. The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

From a consideration of all these sections, and especially when considered in the light of section 2912, which reads:

"Section 2912. If a vacancy occurs in the office of prosecuting attorney, the court of common pleas shall appoint a prosecuting attorney. In case of sickness or other disability of the prosecuting attorney, preventing him from discharging his duties, the court shall appoint an assistant prosecuting attorney to perform the duties of the office until the disability is removed or a prosecuting attorney is elected or appointed and qualified. A person appointed prosecuting attorney or assistant prosecuting attorney, shall give bond and take the oath of office prescribed for the prosecuting attorney, and the assistant prosecuting attorney shall receive such compensation as the court fixes and the county commissioners allow."

I am constrained to hold that the county treasurer has no right to employ an attorney to prosecute actions brought under section 2667, G. C. Such being my conclusion, an answer to that part of your question reading "would the provisions of section 2672 govern the amount of the fees of such attorney" is rendered unnecessary. I take it that by your question "is the prosecuting attorney compelled to act as attorney in cases commenced under section 2667, without compensation," you intend to inquire whether if such suits are brought by the prosecuting attorney, he must prosecute them without compensation in addition to his salary, and an attempt will be made to answer your question as so understood.

To answer this question it becomes necessary to consider section 3003, the last paragraph of which reads:

> "No prosecuting attorney shall receive a salary in excess of five thousand five hundred dollars. Such salary shall be paid in equal monthly installments, from the general fund, and shall be in full payment for all services required by law to be rendered in an official capacity on behalf of the county or its officers, whether in criminal or civil matters."

and to further call attention to that part of section 2673, supra, which reads:

> "For such services the prosecuting attorney shall be allowed by the county commissioners from the amount collected, not to exceed twenty-five per cent. thereof."

The last paragraph of section 3003 as above copied, is first found in the codification of 1910, although similar provision is found in the act of March 31, 1906, 98 O. L., 161, where the matter is dealt within the following language:

> "Such salary is to be paid in equal monthly installments, out of the general fund. Such salary shall be in full and in lieu of all compensation consisting of salaries and fees heretofore paid to prosecuting attorneys for their services as such, and in full payment for all services required by law to be rendered in an official capacity on behalf of the county or its officers, whether the same relates to either criminal or civil matters."

This language is clear, free from all doubt or ambiguity, and of such character that it must be concluded that if the language last above copied from section 2673 was then in the Revised Statutes, its provisions were superseded by the amendment of section 1297, made March 31, 1906. So far as I have been able to ascertain, the language above quoted from section 2673 first found a place in our laws in section 1104, R. S., when amended on April 23, 1904, 97 O. L., 402.

This makes the language of the act of March 31, 1906, as codified in 3003, G. C., the later enactment and controlling, which compels the conclusion that the prosecuting attorney is not entitled to an allowance, in addition to his salary for prosecuting actions brought by the county treasurer, under favor of section 2667.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE FOR OHIO UNIVERSITY, ATHENS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 11, 1914.

DR. ALSTON ELLIS, President Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of abstract of title and deed from Adda P. Phillips and husband, to the president and trustees of the Ohio university, for the following described real estate, situate in the city of Athens, Athens county, Ohio, to wit:

"Beginning at a point in the east line of inlot No. 74, and 96 feet south of the northeast corner thereof, being the southeast corner of the lot conveyed June 17, 1882, to Augusta F. Warden by John Welch, by deed recorded in Vol. 53, page 81 of the Records of Deeds of said Athens county; thence west along the south line of said Warden lot to the west line of said inlot No. 74; thence south to a point 9 feet north from the southeast corner of inlot No. 75 in said city; thence west 24 feet; thence south 4½ degrees, west 39½ feet, more or less, to the northwest corner of that part of inlot No. 77 in said city conveyed by John Welch and wife to Della B. Sleeper by deed dated April 9, 1886, and recorded in Vol. 61, page 64, Athens County Deed Records; thence east 59 feet, more or less, to the southeast corner of that part of said inlot No. 77, conveyed by Della B. Sleeper to John Welch by deed dated April 9, 1886, and recorded in Vol. 64, page 349, of the Records of Deeds of said county; thence north 3½ feet; thence east along the north line of the lot conveyed February 28, 1882, by John Welch to Della B. Sleeper by deed recorded in Vol 52, page 172, of said records, to Court street; thence north along said Court street to the place of beginning.

"Excepting from said premises a right of way 10 feet wide over the west end of that part of inlot No. 74, herein conveyed, and an extension of the same south across that part of inlot No. 77, herein conveyed, as an appurtenance to those parts of said inlot No. 77, and inlot No. 170 lying south of that part of inlot No. 77 hereby conveyed."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title to said real estate as disclosed thereby. There are no liens or incumbrances against said real estate excepting the taxes for the year 1914, due December 20, 1914, and June 20, 1915, respectively, the amount of which is as yet undetermined.

Subject only to the payment of said taxes, I am of the opinion that the abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in Adda P. Phillips to said premises. The deed is in proper legal form, is duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, and conveys to the state of Ohio a title in fee simple to the real estate therein described.

The abstract and deed are herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF COUNCIL OF THE VILLAGE OF NILES, OHIO, IN THE MATTER OF THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS IN SAID VILLAGE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 12, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the commission's request I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of Niles, in the matter of the issuance of bonds in the aggregate sum of $10,500 in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of Arlington street in said village from Water street to Williams street. I have also examined the original bonds which are in the possession of the treasurer of state.

I am of the opinion and hereby certify that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the city of Niles, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF DIRECTORS OF LONGVIEW HOSPITAL TO PAY FOR PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN, RELATIVE TO BOND ISSUE, FROM FUNDS AT THEIR DISPOSAL.

It is not legal for the directors of Longview hospital to pay from funds at their disposal for publicity campaign carried on by them relative to a bond issue.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 12, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of November 7, 1914, in which you ask opinion of me as follows:

> "The directors of Longview hospital before the election of 1912 published newspaper advertisements in all the Cincinnati papers appealing to the voters to authorize a bond issue of $500,000.00, the proceeds of which bond issue were to be used for new building and for other improvements at Longview hospital.
> "Kindly give us your written opinion as to the legality of the expenditure made by the directors for such advertisement."

The statutes provide for the government of Longview hospital by a board of five directors, and other officers appointed by said board. The funds at the disposal of said board of directors for the purposes of said institution are derived from various sources (section 2033, G. C.); but however derived such funds are in every sense public moneys, and as other public moneys, can only be expended in some manner authorized by law. It is sufficient to know as a predicate to the only possible answer to your inquiry that the said board of directors of this institution are nowhere in the law authorized to expend public moneys coming into their hands for the purposes indicated in your communication. The authorization by the voters of Hamilton county of the bond issue in question was undoubtedly a matter of vital interest to the welfare of the institution and any interest taken by the directors in securing a favorable vote on this bond issue was entirely proper and laudable. But, inasmuch as there is nothing in the law pertaining to the affairs of this institution, or elsewhere, authorizing the board to expend money for the purpose of publicity in the then proposed bond issue, the answer to your question must be that there was no authority for any action of the directors expending public money for this purpose, and if this was done, said action on the part of the directors was clearly illegal.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER THE EXEMPTION PROVISION OF THE INHERITANCE TAX LAW, NIECES AND NEPHEWS MUST BE OF THE BLOOD OF THE DECEDENT.

Under section 5331, General Code, prior to amendment 103 O. L., 465, nieces and nephews must be of the blood of the decedent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

HON. FRANK P. ANDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have previously acknowledged receipt of the letter of Messrs. Brandon & Ivins, attorneys at law, embodying the request in which you join that I advise you on the following questions:

> "1. When did senate bill No. 13, section 5331, passed April 15, 1913, approved May 5, 1913, and filed with the secretary of state May 8, 1913, Laws of Ohio, 103, pages 465 and 456, become effective as a law of this state?
> "2. Under the repealed section 5331, which exempted nieces and nephews from the collateral inheritance tax, must nieces and nephews necessarily be of the blood of the testator? In other words, if A and B are husband and wife, would a devise from A to a child of B's sister be exempted from the collateral inheritance tax under the former section, provided it exceeded $200 value?"

With respect to the first question I beg to state that the same is answered by my opinion to the Hon. Thomas L. Pogue, prosecuting attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio, a copy of which is enclosed herewith. You will observe that it is my opinion that the act referred to became a law on the day on which it was approved by the governor, viz., May 5, 1913.

Your second question is, I think, answered by the cases of in re Wolf, 48 Bul. 211 and in re Bates, 7 N. P. 625. Both of these cases hold, as you will observe, that the nieces and nephews, in order to be exempt as to their inheritances from the operation of the law, must be of the blood of the decedent.

Accordingly, I so hold.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ALL PERSONS COMMITTED TO ANY INSTITUTION UNDER THE CONTROL AND MANAGEMENT OF THE OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION SHALL BE CONSIDERED AS COMMITTED TO THE CONTROL, CUSTODY AND CARE OF SUCH BOARD—COMMITMENT BY JUVENILE COURT OF DELINQUENT BOYS TO THE BOYS' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL SHALL BE MADE AS BEFORE THE PASSAGE OF THE JUVENILE RESEARCH ACT—SECTIONS 1841-1, ET SEQ., 2087 AND 2093, GENERAL CODE, APPLY AS BEFORE THE PASSAGE OF THE JUVENILE RESEARCH ACT.

By reason of the provisions of section 2 of the act of the legislature, passed April 9, 1913, providing that all persons committed to any institution under the control and management of the Ohio board of administration, shall be considered as committed to the control, custody and care of such board. Commitments by juvenile courts of delinquent boys to the boys' industrial school shall be made as before the passage of the juvenile research act, section 1841-1, et seq., General Code. Sections 2087 and 2093, General Code, providing for the manner and cost of transporting boys to the boys' industrial school, apply as before the passage of the juvenile research act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

THE HON. GEORGE S. ADDAMS, Judge Juvenile Court, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 2, 1914, you write asking my opinion with respect to the cost and expense of transporting boys committed to the boys' industrial school at Lancaster, Ohio. You inquire particularly as to the present application of section 2087, General Code, in view of the act of the legislature passed March 25, 1913, authorizing and directing the Ohio board of administration to provide for and maintain a "bureau of juvenile research."

Said section 2087, General Code, above noted, and section 2093, General Code, the provisions of which are likewise pertinent to the question at hand, provide as follows:

> "Section 2087. Any youth upon being sentenced to the boys' industrial school, within five days after such sentence, unless the court giving such sentence shall otherwise order, shall be conveyed to the school by the sheriff of the county in which the conviction was had, or by a suitable person designated by the court giving the sentence, and deliver into the custody of the superintendent of the school, with a statement of the offense for which he was convicted, his age, and a copy of the sentence.
> "Section 2093. The person other than the sheriff, deputy sheriff or other officer receiving a fixed salary from the county, shall receive as compensation for delivering a youth to the school, two dollars, two cents per mile each way from his home to the school by the usual route of travel and in addition thereto his actual and necessary expenses incurred, to be paid out of the county treasury upon the certificate of the proper officer of the court which committed him and the warrant of the county auditor, unless convicted of a crime the punishment of which is confinement in the penitentiary, in which case the costs in the case and the expense of his transportation upon a like certificate shall be paid out of the state treasury."

Sections 1841-1, 1841-2 and 1841-3, General Code, as enacted by the act above referred to, provide as follows:

> "Section 1841-1. All minors who in the judgment of the juvenile court, require state institutional care and guardianship shall be wards of the state, and shall be committed to the care and custody of 'the Ohio board of administration,' which board thereupon becomes vested with the sole and exclusive guardianship of such minors.
> "Section 1841-2. The 'the Ohio board of administration' shall provide and maintain a 'bureau of juvenile research' and shall employ competent persons to have charge of such bureau and to conduct investigations.
> "Section 1841-3. The 'the Ohio board of administration' may assign the children committed to its guardianship to the 'bureau of juvenile research' for the purpose of mental, physical and other examination, inquiry or treatment for such period of time as such board may deem necessary. Such board may cause any minor in its custody to be removed thereto for observation and a complete report of every such observation shall be made in writing and shall include a record of observation, treatment, medical history and a recommendation for future treatment, custody and maintenance. The 'the Ohio board of administration' or its duly authorized representatives shall then assign the child to a suitable state institution or place it in a family under such rules and regulations as may be adopted."

The question made by you with respect to the present application of section 2087 and, I infer, of section 2093 as well, arises out of the consideration that said section 1841-1 requires minors, who, in the judgment of the juvenile court, require state institutional care and guardianship, to be committed to the care and custody of the Ohio board of administration, while the act is entirely silent with respect to the commitment of said minors to either the boys' industrial school at Lancaster, or the girls' industrial home at Delaware, and upon the consideration that the provisions of said section 2087, with respect to the transportation of boys to the boys' industrial school, seems to be predicated on the fact of their being sentenced to that institution.

I note, however, that section 2 of the act passed by the legislature April 9, 1913, provides that "all persons committed to any institution under the control and management of the Ohio board of administration, shall be considered as committed to the control, custody and care of such board."

Upon consideration of all of the foregoing statutory provisions, I am of the opinion that boys may be sentenced and committed to (i. e., delivered to) the boys' industrial school at Lancaster the same as before the enactment of the so-called "juvenile research act." Upon such commitment the statutory provision above noted will operate to vest the Ohio board of administration with the care and custody of such boys. Likewise, I am of the opinion that with respect to the manner, cost and expense of transporting boys so committed to said institution, said sections 2087 and 2093 govern as before the enactment of said "juvenile research act."

As pertinent to the matter of the transportation of girls committed to the girls' industrial home at Delaware, I herewith enclose a copy of an opinion lately rendered to the Hon. H. C. Wilcox, probate judge at Elyria, Ohio.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROVAL OF THE PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ISSUANCE BY THE VILLAGE OF CORTLAND, OHIO, OF CERTAIN BONDS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER PLANT.

Approval of the proceedings for the issuance by the village of Cortland, Ohio, of certain bonds for the construction of an electric light and power plant. The so-called Todd law, 102 O. L., 262, being a revision of the entire Longworth act, should be regarded under the circumstances of its enactment as subsequent to senate bill 281, 102 O. L., 153, amending section 3939, General Code, a part of the old Longworth act. Both were passed on the same day; senate bill 281 was signed last in the senate; the Todd law was approved last by the governor, but the opinion is not based upon the order in which the bills were signed or approved, but rather upon the nature of their subject-matter in connection with the other circumstances.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of the commission I have examined the transcript of the proceedings for the issuance by the council of the village of Cortland of bonds in the amount of $5,000 for the purpose of purchasing the necessary labor for and erecting an electric street lighting system in the village and supplying electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof.

The first question which is raised by the transcript is suggested by the purpose for which the bonds are issued, which has just been stated. The general assembly at its regular session in 1911 passed two bills amending section 3939, General Code, which specifies certain purposes and improvements for which bonds may be issued by a municipal corporation. These two bills were designated, respectively, senate bill 281, which is found in 102 Ohio Laws, 153, and senate bill 131, which is found in 102 O. L., 262.

Both these bills were passed on the same day, viz.: May 15, 1911; but the senate journal shows that both were signed last in the senate, and that senate bill 281 was signed after senate bill 131 was signed. However, both bills were presented to the governor and signed by him in the inverse order of their signature by the presiding officer of the senate; that is to say, senate bill 131, which was first signed by the president of the senate, was approved by the governor on May 22, 1911, while senate bill 281, which was signed last by the president of the senate, was approved by the governor on May 26, 1911.

The pertinent provisions of the two sections, as so amended, differ as will be seen from the following:

The section as amended, 102 O. L., 153 (the bill last signed by the presiding officer of the senate and first approved by the governor) authorized the issuance of bonds "for erecting or purchasing gas works or electric light works and for supplying light to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

The corresponding provision of the other bill was as follows:

> "For erecting or purchasing gas works or works for the generation and transmission of electricity for the supplying of gas or electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof."

That the difference is material arises out of the fact that a strict construction of the one clause leads to the conclusion that bonds may not be issued under it for the purpose of supplying electricity to the inhabitants of a corporation for a purpose other than light; whereas, the other authorizes bonds to be issued with a view to supplying electricity generally; that is, for power as well as for light purposes.

Although the purpose for the issuance of the bonds, as stated in the ordinance shown on the transcript, does not exactly correspond to the language of either of the above statutory provisions, it is well within the power granted by senate bill 131, and possibly in excess of the power granted by senate bill 281.

Ordinarily, the above facts would present a very difficult question, namely, as to which of two laws passed in one order and approved by the governor in the inverse order of their passage, both pertaining to the same subject, and it being clear that it was not the intention that both should remain in effect, is the law. However, I have not stated all the facts surrounding the enactment of this legislation. The relative time of the affixing of the signature of the presiding officer to a bill passed by both houses of the general assembly is a possible criterion by which to determine which of two acts is the later in point of enactment, but as governing the question of legislative intention, it is only one of several rules of statutory interpretation. In the present case, the legislative intention is made clear by considerations which I have not yet mentioned. Senate bill 281 was in form, an amendment of section 3939, General Code. It was introduced, considered and presented by the general assembly on the obvious theory and understanding that there was a section in force designated as section 3939, General Code, the intention being to amend that section, as such.

Senate bill 131, on the contrary, was a re-enactment of the body of laws familiarly known as the Longworth act, and formerly consisting of sections 3939 to 3954, inclusive, of the General Code, but the revision which the legislature desired to make of this statute, considered as a whole, was not worked out, by repealing and re-enacting and so formally amending the sections named, but by repealing all of them and enacting an entirely new act with serial section numbers beginning with section 1 and ending with section 15. The section numbers affixed to the various sections of this act in the present General Code were chosen by the attorney general under authority at that time reposed in him, and not by the general assembly, itself.

So it is that if senate bill 281 be regarded as the later law in point of enactment, it is at least defective in that it purports to be an amendment of section 3939, General Code, whereas at the time, and on this theory, section 3939, General Code, had been absolutely repealed, as such.

Therefore, the only consistent theory to adopt is to hold that the general assembly at least intended that its revision of the whole body of the law should be its last word on the subject, and that senate bill 131, which effected that revision, should repeal section 3939, General Code, as it then stood, including the amendment which had just been made thereto.

I think, therefore, that the only hypothesis upon which the two legislative acts can be made consistent and harmonious is to regard senate bill 131 as the later and controlling law, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, without necessarily considering the more fundamental question as to whether the date of approval by the governor, or the time of signature by the presiding officer, determines which of the two laws is the last in point of enactment.

For these reasons, then, I conclude that the purpose of the issuance of bonds being within the purview of section 3939, as amended by senate bill 131, 102 O. L., 262, section 1, is proper.

The transcript presents another question similar to the one passed upon by this department, in the matter of the bonds of the village of Mason, Ohio, an opinion with respect to which has heretofore been given to the commission. That is to say, the ordinance for providing for the issuance of the bonds was published in but one paper. The transcript shows that the paper in which publication was made is the only paper printed and published in the village. For the reason set forth in the other opinion referred to, I deem this publication sufficient, notwithstanding the decision of the court of appeals of Muskingum county, therein referred to.

No other questions being suggested by the transcript, I am of the opinion and hereby certify that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law, and that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the village of Cortland to be paid in accordance with the terms specified therein.

I may add that while no form of bonds is attached to the transcript, I have examined the bonds themselves on deposit in the office of the treasurer of state, and find that the form thereof is proper.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY TO RECEIVE A SALARY AS CLERK IN THE PUBLIC SAFETY DEPARTMENT.

A director of public safety may not also receive a salary as clerk in the public safety department. Such director of public safety, however, may act in the capacity of clerk of the board of public service and clerk of the waterworks department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

HON. HARRY W. KOONS, City Solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 6th, you request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "W. is clerk of the board of public service, the board of public safety and the waterworks department of this city; while holding these clerkships W. was appointed director of public safety by the mayor.
> "Query: Can W. continue to draw salary for the clerkships and also receive a salary as director of public safety?"

Offices are considered incompatible when one operates as a check upon the other, or when the incumbent of one is expected to supervise or superintend the functions of the other; or when the duties are so numerous and conflicting as to render it impossible for one individual to perform the functions of both, or when considerations of public policy prohibit the holding of both positions by a single individual. To these conditions might be added those offices of which the particular provisions of statute relating thereto show a contrary intention, such as the requirement of the devotion of all time to the duties thereof, or for some other palpable reason.

In your case, while W. is acting as director of public safety, it is clear that he cannot also receive a salary as clerk in the same department, for the manifest reason that the director acts as supervisor and is indeed the ruling head over the clerks. As respects the other positions, however, I know of no reason why a single individual may not fill each and all of them at the same time, providing that the duties are such that they will not conflict with respect to time and possibility of performance.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RULES TO BE FOLLOWED IN DETERMINING THE VALUATION OF AN ESTATE FOR INHERITANCE TAX WHERE THE VALUE OF THE SEPARATE INTERESTS IS SUCH AS TO MAKE EXEMPTIONS EXHAUST THE ESTATE.

When the prosecuting attorney on behalf of the state asks for a valuation of an estate for inheritance tax purposes, and appraisers are appointed, and it subsequently develops that the value of the separate interests is such as to make the exemptions exhaust the estate, leaving nothing to tax, the fees of the appraisers are to be paid in the first instance from the county treasury. Such fees so paid constitute expenses of collection of inheritance taxes, 75 per cent. of which in the aggregate, the county is entitled to deduct at the next semi-annual settlement from the share of the inheritance taxes due to the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

HON. THOMAS L. POGUE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of Mr. Jacobs' letter of October 19th, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In a proceeding under the statute for the appraisement of an estate for collateral inheritance tax purposes it is ascertained that the value of the separate interests and the cost of administration are such as to bring into play the statutory exemptions and to leave nothing subject to taxation. From what source are the fees of the appraisers to be paid in such a case?"

Your question invites consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

> "Sec. 5343. The value of such property, subject to said tax, shall be its actual market value as found by the probate court. If the state, through the prosecuting attorney of the proper county, or any person interested in the succession of the property, applies to the court, it shall appoint three disinterested persons, who, being first sworn, shall view and appraise such property at its actual market value for the purposes of this tax, and make return thereof to the court. The return may be accepted by the court in a like manner as the original inventory of the estate is accepted, and if so accepted, it shall be binding upon the person by whom this tax is to be paid, and upon the state. The fees of the appraisers shall be fixed by the probate judge and paid out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor. * * *"

There is no limitation of the foregoing language and I am of the opinion that the fees of the appraisers are to be fixed by the probate court and paid out of the county treasury as therein provided in all cases whether the estate proves to be productive of taxes or not.

In order fully to answer your question, however, I think other provisions of the related statutes may be considered. I call attention to section 5646, General Code, which is as follows:

> "The fees of officers having duties to perform under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, shall be paid by the county from the county expense fund thereof, and shall be the same as allowed by law for similar services. In ascertaining the amounts due the state, seventy-five per cent. of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of such taxes, shall be charged to the state and deducted from the amount of taxes to be paid into the state treasury."

This section should of course have been amended when the act in 103 O. L., 463, changing the distribution of the collateral inheritance tax in conformity to article XII, section 7 of the constitution as amended, was passed, in order to produce a harmonious system of legislation. The legislature, however, failed to enact such an amendment, and I am unable to reach the conclusion that there is sufficient implication of legislative intention from which to construct an implied amendment thereof.

In my opinion the fees of the appraisers constitute a portion "of the cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of such taxes" for the purpose of section 5346.

The only question is, then, as to whether or not fees which have been paid by the county to the appraisers, in case of an estate which was not productive of taxes, are deprived of this character by reason of such nonproductiveness. In my opinion they are not so deprived of that character.

Section 5340, General Code, which, while not expressly amended when sections 5331 and 5333 were amended, may be regarded as impliedly amended so as to make the distribution for which it provides in part correspond to that required under amended sections 5331 and 5333, provides that the county treasurer shall collect the inheritance taxes, make proper distribution on his books, and pay the proper proportion thereof "into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund at the time of making his semi-annual settlement."

Thus it appears that the inheritance taxes are to be settled for as between the state and the county semi-annually the same as other taxes. In such settlement I do not believe that it is required that the expense of each separate collection be referred to and deducted from the state's portion of each separate tax collection. In other words, I deem it proper under section 5346 for the county treasurer to compute and ascertain at settlement time the aggregate "cost of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection" of inheritance taxes during the preceding six months, and to deduct 75 per cent. of such aggregate sum from the amounts which would otherwise be due to the state.

This being the case, I am of the opinion that a cost of collection or a necessary and legitimate expense incurred by the county in attempting to collect inheritance taxes should be treated as other costs and expenses incurred in the successful collection of such taxes, for the purpose of the division of expenses between the state and the county, particularly in view of the fact that under the present laws the county officers are charged with the duty of collecting the taxes while the county, as such, receives no benefit therefrom.

I conclude, therefore, that the fees of appraisers appointed under a proceeding under the collateral inheritance tax law which terminates without the collection of any taxes, are to be paid, in the first instance, out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, and that when so paid they are to be considered as a part of the costs of collection and other necessary and legitimate expenses incurred by the county in the collection of inheritance taxes. 75 per cent. of which aggregate amount is to be deducted semi-annually from amounts due the state on settlement.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TAXES CHARGED AGAINST REAL ESTATE CONDEMNED BY THE STATE FOR PENITENTIARY PURPOSES AFTER THE DATE OF THE ATTACHMENT OF THE TAX LIEN AND BEFORE MAKING UP OF THE DUPLICATE.

Taxes charged against real estate condemned by the state for penitentiary purposes after the date of the attachment of the tax lien and before the making up of the duplicate are not collectible from the original owner and the lien therefor is extinguished by the superior title taken by the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 21st, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In the early part of this year the state condemned a farm in Madison county for a site for a new penitentiary. The commission desires your opinion as to whether or not the former owner of said farm, against whom condemnation proceedings were had, is liable for the taxes upon the farm which became a lien in February, 1914. If not, is the state liable for such taxes, and if so how are they to be paid?"

The land in question was acquired by the state sometime after February, 1914, under the provisions of an act of the general assembly passed April 19, 1913, 103 O. L. 247, and particularly in pursuance of section 10 thereof which requires the attorney general under certain circumstances to proceed in the manner provided by law for the appropriation of property by municipal corporations, "to appropriate said property for the state" and to "exercise all the power and discharge all the duties as representative of the state of Ohio which are imposed by law upon the city solicitor with regard to such proceedings on behalf of such municipal corporations."

It is further provided in said act that "All the provisions of sections 3681 to 3697, inclusive, of the General Code, shall, in so far as the same are appropriate and applicable, govern the proceedings herein."

Sections 3681 to 3697 inclusive, of the General Code, need not be quoted here; suffice it to state that they provide a procedure to be instituted by the city solicitor for the assessment by a jury of compensation to be paid for the interest condemned and distribution by the court of the amount assessed in accordance with the rights of the claimants of the property taken. These sections are silent upon the subject of taxes, therefore they have none of the following three possible effects:

1. They do not impose upon the person whose land is taken any liability for taxes other than that which would ordinarily exist.

2. They do not of themselves fasten upon the land as taken by the municipality or other agency of the state any lien or liability in rem which would not otherwise exist.

3. They probably do not authorize unascertained taxes to be distributed out of the assessed compensation.

The last point may be involved in some doubt as Hoglen vs. Cohen, 30 O. S. 436, is not exactly decisive of the case, being founded upon the interpretation of a statute. At all events, however, it appears from your letter that taxes have not been paid, although the land has been taken and presumably distribution has been made, therefore, this question seems to be out of the case.

Coming now to the liability of the original owner of the premises about which you first inquired I beg leave to point out that the land was assessed presumably in his name, that is it was so entered on the duplicate between the time when the assessment was made and the time when the taxes in question were charged against the assessment. The land must have been and undoubtedly was transferred on the duplicate to the state of Ohio, and the duplicate would then show a charge, if any, not against the owner personally, but against the state itself.

Whether or not under present Ohio statutes taxes charged on real estate constitute a personal liability of the owner of the land is a doubtful question; but at all events the person liable would be, as held in Creps vs. Baird, 3 O. S. 278, the person "in whose name the lands stand listed when the taxes accrue." So that if there were any personal liability it would be a personal liability disclosed by the duplicate placed in the hands of the treasurer for collection, for the treasurer must sue on his duplicate, and in this case the treasurer's duplicate presumably does not show any charge against the original owner.

Coming now to what may be termed, to avoid difficulty of expression, the liability of the state, I am of the opinion that such liability does not exist. The case is not to be determined upon principles arising out of the exemption of property from taxation after the attachment of the state's lien for taxes does not defeat the collection of the taxes against the land, for though property may be held, for example, by a publicly charitable institution, yet if the lien of the state for taxes properly attached to that property it could be taken in satisfaction of the taxes notwithstanding its exemption from subsequent taxes.

But another principle comes into play and determines the answer to this question. This is what is known as the doctrine of merger. The state's lien for taxes is a species of title or interest in the property, created as a means of enforcing collection of the taxes, and whenever the state acquires a title superior to that title in a given tract of real estate the inferior title is merged into the superior one. An individual cannot have full legal title to real estate and an inferior lien therein at the same time; the one extinguishes the other. The state is governed by the same rules which govern individuals in this particular.

Foster vs. Duluth, 48 L. R. A. n. s. 707, and cases cited in the notes.

Now it is true that the states lien for taxes represents taxes other than those which come to the state itself. Thus, in the case mentioned by you there are doubtless county and township taxes charged against the property; but this fact is immaterial. The power of taxation is an attribute of sovereignty and emanates from the state. All taxes in this sense are state taxes, and this is especially true under Ohio laws. There is but one lien for taxes—that of the state; there is no separate lien in the county or township or any other local subdivision, therefore for the purpose of the doctrine of merger the distribution of taxes on account of which the lien exists, is immaterial. The title or interest represented by the lien is that of the state and the state only.

On this point I refer the commission to the case of Wasteney vs. Schott, 58 O. S. 410, wherein it was held that the right of action for the recovery of personal taxes resides in the state and is not attributable to the different local and municipal governmental agencies on behalf of which the taxes are levied. As stated by Williams, J., in the opinion at page 416:

"Through county, township, municipal, and other organizations, they are paid out in the administration of public justice, the maintenance of the public order and security, the support of the public schools and other purposes of a public nature pertaining to the state government. Hence, for all such taxes levied on real property the lien thereon provided by statute is declared to be in favor of the state; and while it was probably deemed impracticable to create a lien on personal property for the taxes laid against it, the fund derived from them is expended in common with that arising from real estate taxes, and for the same purposes."

In conclusion, then, I am of the opinion, first, that the original owner of the land is not personally liable for the taxes which have been charged on the duplicate against the land mentioned by you, and, second, that the lien of the state for these taxes as charged against the land has been merged into the higher title taken by the state so that lien can no longer be effectively asserted.

In short, then, the taxes, though properly charged, are wholly uncollectible. The only manner in which the treasuries of the local subdivisions can be reimbursed for the loss is by legislative appropriations; and this is a matter which technically, at least, rests upon the conscience of the general assembly of the state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JURISDICTION OF JUVENILE COURT OVER BOYS UNDER EIGHTEEN YEARS OF AGE ARRESTED FOR VIOLATION OF THE HUNTING LAW.

The juvenile court, and not the justice of the peace, has jurisdiction over boys under eighteen years of age arrested for violation of the hunting law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1914.

HON. HOMER E. JOHNSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your letter of October 12, 1914, asking whether the justice of the peace or the juvenile court has jurisdiction over boys under eighteen years of age, arrested for violation of the hunting laws, I beg to submit the following opinion:

As a violation of any state law by a minor under eighteen years raises the same question relative to the respective jurisdictions of the justice of the peace and of the juvenile court, I have attempted to make this opinion sufficiently broad to cover any case.

The law establishing the juvenile court, defining its powers and determining the extent of its jurisdiction, is found in General Code, sections 1639 to 1683 inclusive, and the amendments thereto, as found in Ohio Laws, Vols. 101 to 103.

Section 1642, General Code, Vol. 103 Ohio Laws, page 868, provides:

"Such court of common pleas, probate court, insolvency court and superior courts (as may have been designated juvenile courts, as provided by section 1639, General Code), within the provisions of this chapter shall have jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors under the age of eighteen years not inmates of any state institution, etc."

Section 1644, G. C., Ohio Laws, Vol. 103, page 869, defines a delinquent child and is as follows:

"For the purposes of this chapter the words 'delinquent child' include any child under eighteen years of age who violates a law of this state or any city or village ordinance, etc."

It is not necessary to elaborate upon the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, as it is conceded that he has jurisdiction in criminal cases throughout the county in which he is elected, either to recognize the party complained of to the proper court or, in cases in which he is given final jurisdiction, to render judgment. Therefore, we will assume that in the case to which you refer the justice of the peace would have jurisdiction to try the same and assess a fine unless his authority is otherwise abridged.

Section 1644, G. C., heretofore referred to, undoubtedly gives to the juvenile court authority over minors under eighteen years of age who violate a state law or any city or village ordinance; therefore the question arises, is the jurisdiction conferred on the juvenile court exclusive or concurrent, and does it limit and abridge the jurisdiction and authority heretofore vested in the justice of the peace?

The purpose and intention of the legislature in creating and establishing the juvenile court are nowhere better or more clearly stated than in the case of Travis vs. State, 21st Ohio Circuits, page 494, a portion of which I herewith quote:

"It is not the purpose of the act to punish the child, but to take it out of environments which, if continued, would result disastrously to it as well as to society, and thereby become a standing menace to the state; and to supply it with opportunities for good moral training and physical comforts and support. The parent, guardian, or any one having the custody and control of either, who in any way contributes to the delinquency, or in any respect is responsible for the neglect of any such child, may at the same time be brought into court under arrest. If the charges against such person are sustained, he may be punished, but not the child."

It seems to me that section 1659, G. C., Vol. 103 Ohio Laws, page 874, admits of only one construction, and that is that the legislature intended to take from the justice of the peace, police judges and mayors of villages, although mayors are not expressly named, jurisdiction and authority over minors under eighteen years of age, and to give the exclusive jurisdiction over such minors to the juvenile court. Section 1659 is as follows:

"Section 1659. When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officer having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child had been brought before the judge in the first instance."

There seems to be only one case in which the legislature provided for the jurisdiction of any other court than the juvenile court over minors under eighteen years of age. That provision is found in section 1681, G. C., which says that when a delinquent child is charged with the commission of a felony, the juvenile judge may bind such minor over to the court of common pleas to be proceeded against there in the same manner as any other person charged with a felony. Where such minor under the age of eighteen is charged with a felony, the case would first be brought before the juvenile judge; and it seems to me that such judge has the exercise of a sound discretion whether the case should be transferred to the court of common pleas.

Therefore, it is my opinion that the state of Ohio, in the valid exercise of its police powers, intended by the act creating what is known as the "juvenile court" to give to and vest in such court the exclusive jurisdiction over and with respect to minors under the age of eighteen years of age, with the exception in regard to felonies, as provided in section 1681, G. C. If the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, judges of the police court and mayors of villages were made concurrent with the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, the purpose and spirit of the act would be defeated. It therefore follows, that in the case referred to in your letter, the justice of the peace had no authority to retain and hear the same.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO DESIGNATE NEWSPAPERS IN WHICH THE REPORT OF SUCH COMMISSIONERS SHALL BE PUBLISHED.

The county commissioners have the power to designate the newspapers in which the report of such commissioners under section 2507, General Code, shall be published in accordance with section 2508, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1914.

HON. A. A. SLAYBAUGH, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 6, 1914, requesting my opinion on the following question:

> "Who causes the report of the county commissioners to be published in accordance with section 2508, General Code? That is to say, who has the power to designate the papers in which such publication shall be made?"

It is a well settled proposition that the county commissioners must make and file each year, a report of their financial transactions as provided by section 2507, G. C., and that the same must be published as provided by section 2508, G. C. If the commissioners fail to make such report, mandamus will lie.

State vs. Commissioners, 12th C. D., page 316.

Section 2508, G. C., provides for the publication of the report of the county commissioners, and imposes certain conditions upon the newspapers, which must be complied with to entitle them to publish such report; but it does not expressly state who has the authority to designate in which papers, of those having the necessary qualifications, such publication shall be made.

A question similar to this has arisen with reference to the publication of village ordinances. Section 4228, G. C., provides that all ordinances shall be published a certain number of times in newspapers having certain qualifications, etc., but it does not expressly give to any officials the right to designate the papers in which the publication shall be made. In that case the council enacts the ordinances; in this the county commissioners make the report; and in neither instance is the power to select the newspapers in which the ordinances or reports shall be published, expressly delegated.

In the case of Davis vs. Davis, 6 N. P. (n. s.), page 281, the court held that the council of a village has the authority to select the newspapers in which its ordinances and resolutions shall be published, subject to the provisions of R. S. 1536-619 (G. C., 4228), and to direct where all other publications shall be made, except where the statutes expressly provide for the same being done by some other official. These seem to me to be similar cases, and therefore it follows that unless the statutes expressly provide for some other official to select the papers in which the report of the county commissioners shall be published, the commissioners have the power to choose for themselves.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the county commissioners have the authority to designate the papers in which their report, required to be published by section 2508, G. C., shall be published.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE EFFECT OF THE STATUTE REQUIRING THE FURNISHING OF A TRANSCRIPT BY A MUNICIPALITY OR OTHER PUBLIC BODY ISSUING BONDS TO THE SUCCESSFUL BIDDER OF THE BONDS.

The statute, 103 O. L., 179, requiring the furnishing of a transcript by a municipality or other public body issuing bonds to the successful bidder of the bonds affects the rights of the purchaser of the bonds as to make a distinction between him and those purchasing from him without notice and in reliance upon recitals upon the face of the bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision Public Offices, Department Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In an opinion of recent date to your department I found it necessary to comment upon the rules by which a municipality may become liable upon bonds issued in violation of the Longworth act. I held, broadly speaking, that under certain circumstances, a municipality might be liable to a bona fide holder of such bonds; and in defining a bona fide holder no distinction was made as between the original purchaser of the bonds and a subsequent taker.

It was not my intention then, nor is it now, to cover every possible circumstance which might arise in attempting to answer such a general question. However, I think in order to complete even the general observation which I was making in that opinion, I ought to refer to the act of April 23, 1913, 103 O. L. 179, which is in full as follows:

> "Section 1. It shall be the duty of the clerk, or other officer having charge of the minutes of the council of any municipal corporation, board of county commissioners, board of education, township trustees, or other district or political subdivisions of this state, that now has or may hereafter have the power to issue bonds, to furnish the successful bidder for said bonds, a true transcript certified by him of all ordinances, resolutions, notices, and other proceedings had with reference to the issuance of said bonds, including a statement of the character of the meetings at which said proceedings were had, the number of members present, and such information from the records as may be necessary to determine the regularity and validity of the issuance of said bonds; that it shall be the duty of the auditor or other officer, having charge of the accounts of said corporation or political subdivision, to attach thereto a true and correct statement certified by him of the indebtedness, and, of the amount of the tax duplicate thereof, and such other information as will show whether or not said bond issue is within any debt or tax limitation imposed by law.
> "Section 2. Any such clerk or officer, or any deputy or subordinate thereof, who shall knowingly make or certify a false transcript or statement in respect to any of the matters hereinbefore set forth, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than twenty-five ($25.00) dollars, nor more than five hundred ($500.00) dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both."

As to bonds issued and sold since the date when this act became effective, which would be some time in July, 1913, it is clear that the act has a powerful influence upon the rights of the original purchasers. On the one hand, should they accept the issue without any transcript at all, they would buy at their peril and could not be bona fide holders; again, if the information is sufficient to "show whether or not such a bond issue is within any debt or tax limitation imposed by law," and itself discloses the invalidity of the bonds, the original purchasers cannot have the status of bona fide holders, and while the bonds were in their hands they could not be regarded as valid obligations of the municipality.

On the other hand, if the transcript should be false and should show that an issue of bonds, in point of fact invalid because of the violation of the debt limit, was valid, then, in my judgment, such a recital, except possibly as to the facts described in the former opinion (as being those, with notice of which all persons are charged) would be one upon which the original purchaser could rely.

It is not my purpose to analyze the statute nor to state in detail what its effect in any conceivable case might be. I wish merely to point out its existence and to state that it evidently creates a distinction between the original purchaser of bonds and those who purchase from them; for, of course, the transcript required by the statute is not attached to each bond but is merely furnished to the successful bidder.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LAKE VIEW CEMETERY ASSOCIATION OF CLEVELAND, OHIO, NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION UPON LANDS WHICH IT HOLDS AND WHICH ARE BEING USED WITH A VIEW TO PROFIT—RESIDENCE OF CEMETERY SUPERINTENDENT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION.

The Lake View Cemetery Association of Cleveland, Ohio, is not exempt from taxation upon lands which it holds and which are not being used with a view to profit, but which have never been laid out and allotted or otherwise prepared for use as a burial ground.

A building for the residence of the cemetery superintendent, constructed by the association upon the lands set apart and actually used for burial purposes and otherwise conceded to be exempt, is itself exempt from taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1914.

The Honorable Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 13th, enclosing letter addressed to you by a member of the board of district assessors for Cuyahoga county and submitting, for my opinion, the following questions:

The Lake View Cemetery Association of Cleveland, Ohio, owns about three hundred acres of land contiguously situated, of which approximately one hundred acres is allotted and prepared for use as a cemetery; while the remaining two hundred acres has never been allotted and has been permitted, since its acquisition a number of years ago, to lie idle without being used for any purpose whatever. That is to say, on the one hand, no part of the unallotted land has ever been leased or otherwise used with a view to profit; while, on the other hand, it has never been used, either directly or indirectly, for cemetery purposes, or prepared for use for such purposes, unless the mere holding of the land, with the intention and purpose ultimately to prepare them for use for burial purposes, constitute such a use or otherwise affects the question submitted.

On these facts the question is made as to whether or not the two hundred acres of unallotted land, so owned and held, is taxable.

Again, the cemetery association in question has, within the last year, erected a building to be used as a residence by the superintendent of the cemetery. The building has been erected upon that portion of the cemetery which is otherwise devoted to burial purposes.

Is the building, together with the grounds upon which it is located, taxable?

The correspondence enclosed with your letter discloses that the district assessors rely upon section 10093 of the General Code as ground for the conclusion that in no event may the cemetery association in question hold more than one hundred acres of land exempt from taxation (or for any other purpose); that the cemetery association claims the right to hold the three hundred acres in question, all of it exempt from taxation, under authority of an act passed April 6, 1870, supplementary to the then existing act providing for the incorporation of cemetery associations (corresponding to sections 10093, et seq., of the General Code), and conferring upon cemetery associations "in any county containing a city of the first class" authority to hold five hundred acres of land (other similar corporations being limited to one hundred acres) "three hundred acres of which shall be exempt from all taxation;" and that the district assessors take the view that the said supplementary act is unconstitutional.

In the view which I take of the question which is submitted, on the facts as stated to me, I do not find it necessary to determine whether or not the act of April 6, 1870, is constitutional. This is a question which appears to me to be somewhat doubtful in view of the decision in Norton vs. Township Trustees, 8 C. C., 335, affirmed by the supreme court, 54 O. S., 682, on the one hand, and the familiar later decisions of which State, ex rel., vs. Jones, 66 O. S., 453, is a type, on the other hand. While inclined to the view that regardless of the question as to the title of the Lake View Cemetery Association to the land which it holds in excess of one hundred acres in extent, its claim of special exemption, as founded upon the act of April 6, 1870, cannot be maintained for constitutional reasons, I do not express an opinion on this point, because I find it sufficient, for the purposes of the question submitted, to consider what result would follow from the application of said act of April 6, 1870, assuming it to be constitutional.

In German Evangelical Protestant Cemetery vs. Brooks, Treasurer, 8 C. C., 439, there is presented a case arising under this very act, which then constituted section 3581, R. S. The circuit court of Hamilton county, interpreting the language "for the sole and exclusive use of a cemetery * * * three hundred acres of which shall be exempt from taxation" per Smith J., says at page 442:

> "This section was intended to limit the number of acres which should be exempted, and not to allow its use for other than cemetery purposes. It must still be for the sole and exclusive use of a cemetery."

In other words, the mere fact that a cemetery corporation in a county containing a city of the first class, might own three hundred acres of land would not be decisive as to the question of exemption from taxation. Only such land so owned and held as might be "for the sole and exclusive use of a cemetery" would be entitled to exemption.

Elsewhere in the opinion of the court the meaning of what was then section 2732, R. S., and is now section 5350 of the General Code, is considered. The court seems to regard the two statutes as substantially identical in meaning. Indeed this view seems to be the only one which can be accepted. Said section 5350 of the General Code, as it is at the present time, provides as follows:

> "Sec. 5350. Lands used exclusively as graveyards, or grounds for burying the dead, except such as are held by a person, company or corporation with a view to profit, or for the purpose of speculating in the sale thereof, shall be exempt from taxation."

It is, of course, obvious that the phrase "used exclusively as graveyard or as ground for burying the dead" is synonomous with the phrase "for the sole and exclusive use of a cemetery."

The facts before the court in Cemetery vs. Brooks, supra, were as follows:

The cemetery association in June, 1889, purchased a tract of about twenty-eight acres of land with the view and intention of thereafter using them for cemetery purposes, in connection with other lands adjoining the same, then actually in use as a graveyard or grounds for burying the dead. After such proper steps were taken toward the actual improvement for cemetery purposes of this particular tract of twenty-eight acres by surveying, etc., in the summer of 1891, the platting of the ground was finished.

During the summer of 1890 the association rented the twenty-eight-acre tract for pasturage.

The county auditor placed the tract in question upon the duplicate for the year 1891. During that year the use for pasturage has been discontinued and it is clear, from what is said at page 441, that the fact that it had been previously used with a view to profit, did not determine the question of exemption in the mind of the court, the language being:

> "In the year preceding that for which the tax was levied, it was used for a pasture. This, of course, would not, of itself, make the land liable for taxation the following year, but it only shows that at that time, at least, it had been set apart and used for burial purposes."

The real test employed by the court to determine when lands acquired by a cemetery association, with a view to using them for the interment of the dead become exempt from taxation, is disclosed by the following language:

> "We are of the opinion that on the day on which the lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes for the year 1891, attached to all real property subject to such taxes, viz., the day preceding the second Monday in April of that year, this tract of twenty-eight acres was not being used exclusively as a graveyard or grounds for burying the dead. At that time, although the title to the same was in the cemetery, it had not, in fact, been appropriated to that purpose. Though some preliminary work had been done on the grounds, the platting was not completed until the summer of 1891, and presumably no lots had been sold therein until after the platting was completed, and certainly no interment had been made therein, and before this the lien of the state, for the taxes, had attached to the land, and could not be avoided for that year by the subsequent use of the land for burial purposes.
> "There are quite a number of cases in Ohio which explicitly declare that statutes exempting property from taxation must be construed strictly, and that where language is used in such a statute, exempting from taxation property used exclusively for certain purposes, or like terms, that to justify such exemption in a given case, it must certainly come within the terms of the statute; see 8 Ohio 89; 19 Ohio, 110; 25 Ohio St., 229; 29 Ohio St., 201; 36 Ohio St., 253. * * *
> "If at that time the land had been prepared for burial purposes, lots sold or offered for sale, we think it would have presented a different case, and we would, in that event, have been unwilling to hold that the mere occupation of the old house upon the premises, by the workmen engaged in caring for and protecting it, even if something was deducted from their wages for the use of it, would have made the whole or that part of the property liable to taxation. We think that these views are supported by the cases cited in argument: See 118 Mass., 358; 60 Iowa, 717; Cooley on Taxation, 203; 86 Ill., 336; 50 Md., 352; 3 Ex. Rep., 344; 120 Mass., 212; 8 Kan., 344. * * *"

It is clear, therefore, that upon a consideration of what is now section 5350 of the General Code, together with the act of April 6, 1870, the circuit court, in the case cited, held that land purchased and held by a cemetery association, with a view to its ultimate use for cemetery purposes, does not become exempt from taxation until it is prepared for such use by the making of such improvements, as the necessity of the case may require, and particularly by platting and laying out the grounds; and that this conclusion is not affected by the fact that between the time when the lands are acquired and the time when they are prepared for use, they are not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, but are held in a state of idleness with the continued intention that they shall be ultimately devoted to the use which would exempt them from taxation.

So far as I am able to gather from your letter and the correspondence enclosed, the two hundred acres of land held by the Lake View Cemetery Association, concerning which inquiry is made, has been, as stated by the council for the association, "held exclusively for cemetery purposes," but it has never been "used exclusively for cemetery purposes," which is necessary to satisfy the requirement of the statute. This appears from the fact apparent in the letter of counsel that this portion of the land of the association is "unallotted;" and that it is in such condition that "on several occasions people have applied for leases," which applications have been refused on the ground that such leasing would render the land subject to taxation. The fact that the land is unallotted and in a condition suitable for use other than for cemetery purposes, although no such use is actually made of it, together with the admitted fact that no part of the land in question is actually used for the interment of the dead, indicates quite clearly, to my mind, that within the rule laid down by the decision cited, the two hundred acres in question is not exempt from taxation. Accordingly, I so hold.

This conclusion is reached in full view of the provisions of section 5362, General Code, which is as follows:

> "Real estate held or occupied by an association or corporation, organized or incorporated under the laws of this state, relative to soldiers' memorial associations, monumental building associations, or cemetery associations or corporations, which in the opinion of the trustees, directors or managers thereof, is necessary and proper to carry out the object intended for such association or corporation, shall be exempt from taxation."

While I am inclined to doubt the constitutionality of this section as apparently going beyond the grant of power in article XII, section 2 of the constitution, to exempt from taxation "burying grounds," I am of the opinion that it is clearly inconsistent with section 5350, supra. The one seems to grant exemption from taxation to all real estate held or occupied by a cemetery association, which, in the opinion of the trustees thereof, is necessary to carry out the object intended for such association; the other limits the exemption of burying grounds to "lands used exclusively as graveyards or grounds for burying the dead." I do not believe the attempted exemption of section 5362 can be regarded as cumulative of that expressed in section 5350, General Code. Inasmuch as section 5350, General Code, has been amended and re-enacted repeatedly since section 5362 was enacted in its original form, I am of the opinion that to the extent that they are inconsistent, section 5350 controls and should be regarded as the law applicable to such associations.

The case of Cemetery vs. Brooks is also decisive of the other question submitted through you by the district assessors. The following is found in the opinion of the court, page 441:

> "While this is so, we suppose that it should have a reasonable construction in other respects—for instance, that if a cemetery association has land prepared for and set apart for the burial of the dead, that it is not essential to make it exempt from taxation, under our law, that the whole of it be used in this way. It would seem that there might be necessary and proper buildings thereon, as chapels, offices, etc., and it may be even a place of residence for those in charge; and that the fact that a very considerable part of the ground was not used for the mere purpose of burial, but was used for avenues and plats, useful or ornamental, if not used for profit, would not render the whole or any part of the land liable to taxation."

This statement is purely dictum. However, authorities are cited from other states at page 442 which support the view here announced. I am of the opinion that the phrase, "lands used exclusively as graveyards or as grounds for burying the dead," read in connection with the phrase "lands for the sole and exclusive use of a cemetery," includes a building situated in a cemetery if used as a residence for the custodian or superintendent, and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A MEMBER OF A CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION RESIGNING HIS OFFICE MAY NOT BE REAPPOINTED FOR THE UNEXPIRED PORTION OF HIS TERM.

A member of a city civil service commission, who resigns because of the inadequacy of the salary attached to the office, could not be reappointed for the unexpired portion of his term, the council after his resignation having raised the salary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1914.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of June 27, 1914, Hon. R. Clint Cole, city solicitor of Findlay, Ohio, inquires:

> "When our civil service commission was first established here, the members were given a salary of $25.00 per year.
> "The laws have so enlarged their duties as to make that sum entirely inadequate. The council last fall in passing the salary ordinance for officers for the succeeding two years, raised the salary of the members of the civil service commission to $100 per year, but by reason of the fact that the members had already been appointed for a term certain they could not under the statute take advantage of that raise.
> "One of the members recently resigned because of the inadequacy of his salary. The query now is, if that member were to be reappointed, would he be entitled to the increase in salary."

It is admitted by Mr. Cole that the salary of a civil service commissioner for a city cannot be changed during the term for which he was appointed. This is in keeping with the holding of this department in an opinion recently given to the state civil service commission. The sole question in the above inquiry is the right of a member of the civil service commission to resign and then to be appointed for the unexpired term at an increased salary.

The rule is stated at page 1427 of volume 29 of Cyc., as follows:

> "But where the compensation is fixed by the constitution, or where there is a constitutional provision prohibiting such change during the term of an incumbent, no change of salary during such term is permissible, and, where a similar provision is contained in a statute, the powers of municipal corporations are subject to the same limitation. * * * Such a limitation may not be avoided by the resignation of an incumbent and his reappointment at an increased salary."

In support of the proposition italicized, the case of Greene vs. Hudson County, 44 N. J. L., 388, is cited.

To permit an employe or officer who is appointed for a definite term to resign his position and then to be reappointed for the unexpired term at an increased salary, would be doing indirectly what the statute provides shall not be done directly.

Therefore, a member of the municipal civil service commission who has resigned cannot be reappointed for the unexpired part of his term at an increase in salary.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH IT IS THE DUTY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO REPAVE APPROACHES TO BRIDGES AND RELAY SIDEWALKS IN A CITY WHERE SUCH BRIDGES WERE DESTROYED BY A FLOOD—CITY MUST PAY FOR DAMAGE TO ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS WHERE GRADE OF THE BRIDGE IS CHANGED.

When certain bridges within a city have been washed out and destroyed by a flood and the city determines to straighten, deepen and widen the river channel on account of which the county commissioners enter into contracts for the construction of bridges to replace those destroyed, and upon the basis of said proposed river improvement, and include in their contracts for construction of bridges the construction of the necessary approaches and the relaying of the sidewalks thereon, and the matter has progressed to such extent that it is expedient on the part of the city to repave such approaches and relay such sidewalks, it is the duty of the county commissioners to repave said approaches and relay said sidewalks, because of said above stated facts.

In making a river improvement where it becomes necessary to extend the new bridges, beyond where the old ones connected with the streets, and in doing so the bridge floors are elevated above the level of the floors in the old bridges, thus necessitating a change in the established grades of such streets and the council makes such changes, any damages accruing to abutting owners on account of such change of established grade is payable by the city and not by the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 14, 1914.

HON. CLYDE C. PORTER, City Solicitor, HON. RUSSELL M. KNEPPER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your several communications of September 11st, 5th, 10th and 11th, 1914, with enclosures, in which my opinion is asked upon certain differences arising between the city of Tiffin and the commissioners of Seneca county, concerning the widening and deepening of Sandusky river through said city, the construction of bridges across the same at Sandusky, Market and Perry streets, the change of grades of said streets and damages to abutting property owners on account of changes of grade in front of their properties. The facts, as I have them from your correspondence, the papers submitted, and a conference with both of you on September 15, 1914, are:

"First. Prior to the year 1913, the city of Tiffin by proper proceedings, established street grades on said named streets; said streets were graded, paved and sidewalks laid thereon to conform to such established grade and abutting owners improved their property in like conformity thereto.

"Second. The county of Seneca built bridges on said streets across Sandusky river, with the approaches thereto, at such elevation as to be readily accessible from said streets as so improved.

"Third. The flood of 1913 destroyed each of said bridges, a great deal of nearby and adjacent property and left the channel of said stream badly encumbered with driftwood, debris, parts of said bridges, and the like, so as to very materially hinder and impute the flow of water down said stream.

"Fourth. The city of Tiffin concluded, in order to avoid a repetition of the injuries occasioned by said flood to improve said Sandusky river by deepening and widening the channel thereof, removing obstructions, and generally improving the bed of said stream.

"Fifth. In the prosecution of this improvement, the city secured the services of competent engineers, who prepared plans, specifications and drawings for the same together with plans of bridges to replace those washed away. These plans were reported to and approved by the council; the attention of the county commissioners was called to the same; they concurred in the improvement and it contracted for the bridges in conformity to the plans and specifications furnished by said engineers, including therein the grading, pavement and pavement on the bridge approaches, and the removal of obstructions from the channel. The widening of the bed of the stream necessitated the construction of the new bridges of greater length than were the old ones which had been washed away.

"Sixth. Whether the increased length of the bridges and change of location of abutments compelled the changing of the street grades, may or may not be important, but in any event, while there was power in the commission to fix the level of the bridges and the grade of the approaches thereto, it was bound to act reasonably in so doing and while so acting, its right or power to act is not the subject of question. It did so act. No question is made as to their good faith, neither is it charged that they acted wantonly, unreasonably or regardless of the rights of abutting owners, or the interests of the city. To the contrary it must be conceded that the city acquiesced in the elevation of the bridge floors, by changing the street grades at all bridge ends but one, to conform to the increased height of the bridge floors, and in other ways. The council further recognized the power of the commissioners to act as they did and the validity of their actions by passing a resolution on July 24, 1913, as follows:

"'Resolved, By the city council of the city of Tiffin, state of Ohio, that the mayor and city auditor be and are hereby authorized and directed to execute and deliver to the commissioners of Seneca county, Ohio, a bond in the name of the city of Tiffin, in the sum of sixty thousand dollars ($60,000), providing that the city of Tiffin shall, will and truly indemnify and save harmless the said county of Seneca from any and all damages, liability, costs, charges and expenses, including attorney's fees, and defend all actions and suits brought against the said county and county officials, on account of the lengthening of the bridges and making such bridges of greater length across the Sandusky river.'

"Prior to this (on July 17, 1913), a resolution was passed by the city council as follows:

"'Resolved, By the council of the city of Tiffin, state of Ohio, that the county commissioners of Seneca be hereby authorized to proceed with the erection of a bridge at Washington street, in the city of Tiffin, Ohio, according to their own bridge plan as in their best judgment seems to be fit and proper, and that the city of Tiffin declare the necessity of widening the river and to purchase whatever private property be necessary for the proper erection of said bridge either by condemnation proceedings or otherwise, and that the clerk serve a copy on the county commissioners.

"'Adopted July 17, 1913.'

"Seventh. The city passed a resolution and the necessary vote was taken authorizing the issue of $300,000 of bonds to pay for this improvement, of which, one-half has been sold.

"Eighth. Still later, some difference arose as to the dividing line between the liability of the city and that of the county, the city solicitor presented a question as to whether the city or council should pay for replacing pavements on the sidewalks and repaving the streets on approaches to the bridges; this question was answered June 8, 1914, and the prosecuting attorney, Mr. Knepper, not being in accord with its conclusions, asks that it be reconsidered and the city solicitor asks for an opinion covering all or nearly all the phases of the case."

The primary rights of the parties are not difficult of ascertainment. It is the duty of the county to construct all bridges, together with the necessary approaches, and the city to construct sidewalks, or cause the same to be done, and to pave streets within the corporation, where its council once determines to do so.

The city fixes street grades and is liable in damages to abuttors for any charge of an established grade.

While there is no provision of law requiring a county, when it rebuilds a bridge, to make the level of the ends conform to street grades, nor to reinstate the street to its former condition of usefulness, yet it is only fair, if acting on their own initiative when a bridge is so built, as to necessitate the repaving and regrading of a street and the relaying of pavements or sidewalks leading to the bridge, that it should render access to such bridges and egress from it to the street, substantially as good as before the raising of the level of the bridge.

This seems to have been the attitude of the commissioners when dealing with this matter and making contracts for these bridges. Indeed, it seems clear that the making of the improvement in its broadest and greatest sense rested with the city council, when it determined to widen, deepen and improve the channel of the Sandusky river, and fixed upon the plans which should control the doing of the same, it took the initiative in so far as the length of the bridges was concerned; the length of the bridges necessitated their extending beyond the abutments of the old bridges and into the streets of the city, as theretofore existing. In other words, while the language of one of the resolutions of council as above copied, would indicate a belief on the part of the council of its right to dictate to the commissioners as to the character of bridge they might build at Washington street, it does not follow that the council possessed any such powers, or that such idea, if it existed, or the passage of that resolution, had any effect upon the legal standing of the parties. From an examination of all the papers presented and statements made, it would seem that at all times prior to the arising of the difference now existing, the city council and the county commissioners were acting in harmony, each with a full and clear understanding of what the other was doing and the legal rights of each in regard to the same; while so acting in harmony, the deepening and widening of the river channel was regarded as the paramount undertaking and the commissioners undertook to act in conformity to the plans and specifications of the river improvement. As provided by council, while so doing it made its bridges longer than the ones destroyed, located the abutments and piers so as to comply with the changed width of the river, and made a contract for the construction of one of the bridges, at least, to include the replacing of street paving and sidewalks on the approaches. This action cannot be taken as fixing the legal rights of the parties or as doing more than controlling the matters to which they were directly applicable.

Matters in connection with this improvement progressed to such extent that a suit was brought in the U. S. court in Toledo, in which it was stated in a memorandum opinion, filed by Judge Killitts:

> "The county commissioners, we may assume, were trespassers. As such they were beyond all question, acting at the suggestion of the city and were the agents of the city * * * the fact remains that what has been done was clearly for the city's benefit, and was so greatly to the injury of the Baldwin property that it were grossly inequitable to permit the city to escape responsibility."

This statement of Judge Killitts is in harmony with what has been said in regard to the relative relation of the city and county. The facts as now before me are much more in detail than when I rendered the opinion to Mr. Porter on June 8, 1914, yet the change is not of such character as to call for a change or modification of that opinion based as it was, upon the assumption that "the pavement on the approach to the bridge was not destroyed by the flood, and the paving in question was not made necessary by the flood, but by the action of the commissions in raising the level of the bridge."

I am, therefore, constrained to hold that the legal rights, duties and obligations of the city and county are to prevail with the exception of paving the approaches to the bridges, and replacing sidewalks thereon, which has been assumed by the commissioners in their contracts to construct the bridges. To restate the matter, the city is liable for all damages to property because of the river improvement and the change of street grades. The county must build the bridges and approaches, repave the approaches and reconstruct the sidewalks on the approaches.

This opinion must not be construed as a general rule, applicable to what may be considered similar cases, but only applying and controlling in this particular case and because of the peculiar circumstances surrounding or connected with it.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

NOTARY FEES ARE PROPER ITEMS OF COST IN CASES IN WHICH THE PLEADING IS FILED.

The fees of a notary public for administering an oath on an affidavit of verification to a pleading are taxable as costs in the case in which the pleading is filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of May 7th asks my opinion on the following questions:

> "Is the charge of a notary public for making the affidavit verifying a pleading a proper item of costs in the suit or action on which said pleading is filed?"

In numerous decisions the supreme court and other courts of this state have held that in the absence of statute the right to tax expenses of litigants as costs in the case for which judgment may be recovered against the opposite party does not exist.

State vs. Auditor, 77 O. S. 333.
Farrier vs. Cairns, 5 O. 45.
Railway vs. Bartram, 11 O. S. 457.
McDonald vs. Page, Wright, 121.
State vs. Commissioners, 6 O. D. N. P. 240.

It is true enough that statutory authority for the taxation and recovery of costs must exist, but I have found it impossible to give a literal application of the language of Judge Summers in State vs. Auditor, supra, when he says:

> "Costs * * * may be defined as being the statutory fees to which officers, witnesses, jurors and others are entitled for their services in an action or prosecution, and which the statutes authorize to be taxed and included in the judgment or sentence."

The difficulty which I have encountered arises out of the fact that there is no statute or group of statutes prescribing what items shall be taxed as costs. It is true that the taxation of some items as costs is expressly authorized, but if the principle laid down by Judge Summers be literally applied it would follow, upon the maxim that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others, that unless one could point to a statute authorizing a particular item to be taxed as costs, the power to tax such an item as costs does not exist, and if this be the fact, all the more important items of cost which are being taxed and have been taxed for years without question as costs in cases, would have to be eliminated.

For example, no one disputes the statement that the fee of the clerk of courts for filing a petition, and other services incidental thereto, may be taxed as costs. Such fees are prescribed by section 2900, General Code, but this section will be searched in vain for any provision authorizing the taxation of any of the fees therein provided for as costs. The same may be said of section 2901, which perhaps should be read in connection with section 2900. Although section 2901 refers to taxing costs of certain kinds it contains no direct authority to tax the more important items of cost such as docketing the cause, indexing the cause, filing the pleadings, etc.

Turning now to the chapter on fees and costs, and still having in mind the fee of the clerk of the court as costs, it appears that sections 3005 to 3024 inclusive, fail to make any provision for taxing the fees of the clerk as costs.

Sections 3025 and 3026 provide for taxation of costs generally, as follows:

> "Section 3025. In all actions, motions and proceedings, in any of the courts of this state, the costs of the parties shall be taxed and entered of record separately.
> "Section 3026. On the rendition of judgment, in any cause, the costs of the party recovering, together with his debt or damages, shall be carried into his judgment, and the costs of the party against whom judgment is rendered shall be separately stated in the record, or docket entry. No party in whose favor judgment for costs is rendered in a cause, may release, satisfy or discharge, in whole, or in part, any of such costs, unless previously paid by him to the clerk of the court, or to the person entitled thereto, or they shall have been legally assigned, or transferred to such party by the person, or persons in whose name or names such costs stand taxed upon the record or docket."

These sections provide for taxing costs, but they do not define what are taxable costs.

In fact, I find no statute authorizing the court to tax any fees of the clerk of court (with possibly a few minor exceptions) as costs.

Therefore, if such an explicit statute is necessary, it would follow that the clerk of the court is not entitled to have his fees taxed as costs in the case, unless some statute expressly authorizes a particular item to be so taxed.

There are, as already stated, some statutes authorizing specific items of expense to be taxed as costs. For example, legal advertising is authorized to be taxed as costs by section 3005, General Code. Compensation of appraisers, commissioners or arbitrators is expressly authorized to be taxed as costs by the provisions of section 3006-1. Allowance by the court to a sheriff, coroner or constable for removing and preserving personal property taken in replevin is to be taxed as costs by virtue of the express provision of section 3009, General Code. The fee of the police officer required by an examining court to take charge of the defendant during examination, except as officer of the examining court, is to be taxed as costs under the express authority of section 3010. Fees of witnesses in civil causes are to be taxed as costs under the express authority of section 3012.

Section 2845 specifying the fees of the sheriff payable otherwise than from the county treasury affords an interesting study in this connection. It is lengthy and practically complete in itself as a provision for the subject which it is intended to cover. It contains no provision applicable to all the fees provided for therein to the effect that they, or any of them, shall be taxed as costs, but it does contain certain specific provisions applicable to specific fees. But at the end of the section it is provided that:

> "When any of the foregoing services are rendered by an officer or employe whose salary or per diem compensation is paid by the county, other than from the sheriff's fee fund, the legal fees provided for such services in this section shall be taxed in the costs in the case and when collected shall be paid into the general fund of the county."

Obviously a strict application of the dicta found in the decisions would lead to the conclusion that no sheriff's fees could be taxed as costs except when the services are rendered by an officer or employe whose salary or per diem compensation was paid by the county, other than from the sheriff's fee fund; and such a holding would create a distinction between the taxability of costs made by a deputy sheriff, whose compensation is paid from the sheriff's fee fund, and the sheriff's fees otherwise earned, as by the sheriff himself.

I cannot bring myself to the conclusion that taxable costs are to be limited to those items of expense, direct and specific authority for the compensation of which can be found in the statutes. The practical result of the application of such a principle would be grotesque.

It is obvious to me, therefore, that the principle as it is found in the decisions must be interpreted before it can be applied. It being admittedly true that there must be statutory authority for the taxation of costs, the inquiry must be pursued a step further and directed to the solution of the question as to what constitutes such statutory authority. The answer to this question can be suggested by assuming that there is statutory authority for the taxation of the ordinary clerk's fees as costs and inquiring what that authority is.

Without quoting numerous sections, which are familiar, I point out that in order to maintain an action in a court of law or equity and secure the remedy to which he is entitled, an aggrieved party is required by law to file a petition. He is also required by the law to pay or become obliged to pay to the clerk a certain sum for the service of filing the petition and recording its filing. This is not a matter of contract between the clerk and the litigant. The clerk is an officer and the charge he exacts is an official fee.

To my mind the provision of statute which the courts say is necessary in order to support the taxation of the clerk's fees as costs is found in the statutory requirement that a certain specific fee be paid to a certain specific officer as such, for a service, the rendition of which is a necessary condition to the maintenance of the action or defense.

Without taking up other cases, such as fees of the sheriff, I deem it sufficient for the purposes of your inquiry to lay down certain principles by which in a given case it may be determined whether a given item of expense is taxable as costs, such principles being derived, so to speak, from the above consideration of the case of the fees of the clerk. They are as follows:

(1) There must be no statute making a direct provision for or against the taxation of items of the kind or class as costs. For if there were such statutes the principles which follow would not apply at all.

(2) The recipient of the money expended, or as to which a liability is incurred, must be an officer.

(3) The service of the officer or some similar officer having like powers must be required as a condition of the prosecution or protection of the substantive rights of the litigant in the courts.

(4) The fee of the officer must be fixed by law.

The fees concerning which you inquire satisfy all of these conditions. No statute expressly or by implication either authorizes or prohibits taxation of any item of cost on account of the verification of pleadings. Pleadings are to be verified, else the relief prayed for cannot be obtained or the defense interposed cannot be maintained. As to the effect of failure to verify the pleading the decisions of the lower courts of the state seem to disagree, but it is at least clear that on motion a pleading without verification must be stricken from the files. Therefore, in the sense in which I have defined the principle, verification is a required thing.

Moreover the affidavit of verification must be sworn to before a person authorized to administer oaths. Clearly such a person acts in the capacity of an officer for the purposes of the case. Clearly too, the clerk of the courts, for example, is in the same category with a notary public, and if the right of the notary to have his fees taxed be denied, the denial must extend also to that of the clerk.

Again the compensation of the notary is fixed by law, being in this respect "the same fees as are allowed by law to justices of the peace for like services." Section 127, General Code.

Inasmuch, therefore, as the law imposes upon the litigant the necessity of invoking the services of the notary or some other officer having similar power; inasmuch as the law itself fixes the fee of the notary, thus depriving the notary's compensation of any contractual character; inasmuch as the notary fulfills every practical and legal criterion of a public officer, I am of the opinion that the statutes provide for his fees as necessary incidents in the prosecution or defense of a civil action, just the same as they provide for the fees of the clerk or sheriff as such; and that within the principle laid down by the decision the statutes do authorize taxation as costs of the notary's fees in connection with an affidavit verifying a pleading in the suit or action in which such pleading is filed.

This opinion is, of course, intended to cover the exact question submitted by you, and nothing else. It must be obvious that each specific kind of service that a notary public or any other officer might be called upon to perform in connection with litigation must be considered with respect to the question of taxable costs, by itself.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNCIL HAS THE RIGHT TO DELEGATE TO HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS AND TO COMMITTEES OF COUNCIL THE RIGHT OF APPROVING CLAIMS.

The duty of approving claims is ministerial and administrative in its nature, and council by virtue of its statutory duty to control the finances, and by virtue of its legislative power, may delegate the performance of the duty of approving claims to the heads of departments, and to committees of council.

The appointment of cemetery trustees by the village is discretionary with the mayor and the terms of section 4175, General Code, respecting the appointment of such trustees as directory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 1st, you request my opinion as follows:

> "The village of Bay, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, has in its appropriation ordinance provided that the clerk of said village shall draw his warrant in payment of claims presented to him if approved by the head of the department for which the indebtedness was incurred, or if approved by certain committees of council. The solicitor of said village holds that such approval is sufficient and the council is not required to act upon same. We submit his brief in support of his contention and would ask your written opinion upon the question.
> "Is it mandatory upon the council of a village owning a cemetery to appoint cemetery trustees, or is the matter simply discretionary with the council and may they appoint an employe (sexton or superintendent) and vest him with the powers of allowing bills, etc?"

It will not be disputed that the approval of a claim must be viewed as an administrative act, rather than a legislative act. The legislative power of a village is vested in council by section 4215 of the General Code, and the executive power is vested in the officers and heads of departments of a village by section 4248 of the General Code. Unlike cities wherein the administrative power is expressly excluded from council by virtue of section 4211, General Code, council in a village is not expressly prohibited from exercising administrative duties. By virtue of section 4240 of the General Code council in both cities and villages is expressly given the management and control of the finance and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and it follows, therefore, with reference to villages that in the absence of any other provision of relinquishment or delegation of its power by council that the proper body to contract and to expend moneys where the statutes themselves do not expressly provide otherwise, is the village council.

See Davis vs. Davis, 6 O. N. P., n. s., 281.

For the same reasons council of a village, since it is given control of the finances of the village, may undoubtedly under the exercise of its legislative power, require claims presented against the village to be submitted to the council for approval before payment. A careful search of all relative provisions, however, fails to convince that there is anything in the statute which expressly makes it incumbent upon council to so approve all claims.

The case of Knauss vs. Columbus, 13 Ohio Dec. N. P., 200, presents authority for the conclusion that where a duty is expressly required by statute to be performed by a designated officer or board, such officer or board is without power to delegate such duty to another department. Such a rule is based upon the well recognized form of construction that the "expression of one is intended to exclude the other." It is logical to conclude that the statutes when placing a duty on a designated officer intend that the duties shall not be performed by another. Such a rule, however, does not operate against another well recognized rule that officers are permitted to delegate ministerial and executive duties incidental to their office, but which are not expressly required by statute to be performed by the officers themselves.

Hitchcock vs. Galveston, 96 U. S., at p. 348.
Harcourt vs. Park, 62 N. J. L., 158.
Kamrath vs. City, 53 Hun., 206.

The definitions universally distinguish the legislative from the executive power by confining the former to the making of the law and the latter to its carrying out or its execution. The council of a village is expressly made the legislative power, and it seems manifest that by virtue of this legislative power council may enact a legislative provision wherein it authorizes the execution or administration of the details to a delegated officer or committee, and the above quoted authorities settle such a proceding upon these grounds.

In this connection section 4285 of the General Code, is entitled to consideration. This section is as follows:

> "The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

Here by express provision of statute the auditor, or in a village the clerk, by virtue of section 3795, General Code, is encumbered with the primary responsibility of investigating the claims presented, and of seeing to it that they are valid and proper. This statute, however, by its terms, cannot be construed to make the auditor the exclusive investigating authority. It does, however, support the argument that the statutes do not unalterably require council itself to approve claims. Furthermore the provisions of section 4284 and 4286 of the General Code requiring the clerk in villages and the auditor in cities to examine and audit the accounts of all offices and departments, and requiring all offices and departments to make reports of receipts and expenditures to the auditor, also clearly indicate that the control of accounts is readily contemplated by the statutes to rest with the offices and departments themselves, rather than exclusively with the council.

In conclusion, therefore, I am of the opinion that by virtue of this authority to control the finances, as well as by virtue of its general legislative power, council is empowered to work out the administration of expenditures and the keeping of accounts by legislative rule as it best deems fit, and in so doing may reserve the power of approval of claims to itself, or if it deems it to better advantage, may delegate the power of approving such claims to the committees, officers or other individuals.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the plan of the ordinance submitted by you is one that is authorized by the statute and must be viewed as a valid enactment.

Answering your second question:

Section 4175, General Code, provides in part as follows:

"The mayor of a village owning a public burying ground or cemetery may appoint a board to be known as the board of cemetery trustees. Such board shall consist, etc. * * *"

When it will support the manifest legislative intent, it is well recognized that the word "may" may be construed as mandatory. A consideration of these statutes, however, fails to convince that in the present instance such construction is the proper one to abide by. Circumstances may readily be imagined which would fail to justify the appointment of a board of trustees. The village may be small, the functions pertaining to the cemetery may be meagre and simple, and it is quite possible that the appointment of a board of trustees would be regarded as entirely unnecessary and superfluous. This view is quite substantially supported, however, by the language of section 4177 of the General Code, which provides that "the mayor of a village, where a board of cemetery trustees is so appointed, may remove from office any member of such board for misconduct, neglect of duty, or malfeasance of office." The language of this provision clearly recognizes the possible existence of a village where a board of cemetery trustees has not been so appointed, and which nevertheless maintains a cemetery. The language "where a board of cemetery trustees is so appointed," in this provision, would be entirely superfluous in the absence of such assumption, and had the legislature intended that every village having a cemetery would necessarily have a board of trustees the words "where a board of cemetery trustees is so appointed" would most naturally have been substituted by the words "not having a cemetery."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the appointment of a board of cemetery trustees is discretionary with the mayor.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF INTEREST ON THE PROCEEDS OF A BOND ISSUE FOR THE PURPOSE OF CONSTRUCTING A COUNTY MEMORIAL BUILDING.

The proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building is a trust fund and all accretions or anything by way of profit on a trust fund belong to that building; consequently, a depository interest upon the proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of constructing a memorial building follows the fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO November 17, 1914.

HON. CHARLES E. BALLARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Clark County, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 17, 1914, I gave an opinion upon the following question:

> "What disposition shall be made of the depository interest upon the proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building?"

In that opinion I held that such moneys are county moneys and are in the possession of the county treasurer and required to be deposited in the county depository under section 2736, of the General Code.

Upon the urgent request of General J. Warren Keifer I have reconsidered the question discussed in that opinion. At the time the opinion was issued there was not unanimity of opinion amongst counsel in the office, and I was not free from doubt myself when I concurred in the opinion as written by the distinguished attorney who prepared it.

Indeed, the opinion work in this office has been so unusually heavy and at times I have had to work under such great pressure that it has been exceedingly difficult for me on a few occasions to do justice to myself. I reversed only a very few of the opinions issued from this office and these usually have been in cases where the situation was unusual and I had not a fair chance to hear from both sides to the controversy, but I believe in being right rather than in being obstinate.

General Keifer was kind enough to submit to me the brief that he proposed for relator on application for a mandamus and withheld filing a suit in this case until I might have a full and fair opportunity to come to a conclusion free from the usual pressure of the office. I have considered both carefully the opinion prepared by Mr. Laylin of my own department, and I have likewise heard fully from counsel who entertained Mr. Laylin's views, and the brief prepared by General Keifer to which I have referred, and believing that its reasoning is absolutely sound I follow it and adopt it as my own.

The memorial building fund of Clark county, arising from the sale (December 30, 1912) of $250,000.00 of bonds as required by law to "be placed in the county treasury to the credit of a fund to be known as "memorial building fund." Such fund to "be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees, certified by the chairman and secretary." G. C., section 3063.

It will be noted that neither the auditor nor the commissioners of the county have any duty to perform with reference to or any control over this fund. It is the proceeds of the sale of $250,000.00 of bonds previously (1912) authorized to be issued by the county to provide a

"Memorial Building to commemorate the services of the soldiers, sailors, marines and pioneers of the county." (General Code, 3059.)

The board of trustees was appointed by the governor and its powers are defined by sections 3059-3069 of the General Code.

Not until the memorial building has been completed have the county commissioners any authority over it. They must levy a tax to create a sinking fund to pay the bonds, etc., General Code, sections 3068, 3063.

If, on its completion, any "Unexpended balance of the fund remains in the county treasury it shall be placed and kept to the credit of such sinking fund." G. C., Sec. 3063.

As showing that the fund is not county funds to be treated, controlled, divided and disbursed by direction of the county commissioners, we call attention to the fact that the said "board of trustees" may turn the entire fund so raised over to the "state armory board" to be expended by it, in large part for state purpose, G. C., section 3663-1.

DEPOSITORIES—COUNTY.

In a chapter relating to county treasurers there is a subdivision relating to a "county depository," General Code, sections 2715-2745. The provision for depositories was made with no reference to funds other than those usually and ordinarily arising for political purposes. The money authorized to be deposited in any depository is "the money of the county;" that is, arises on and after a tax levy for the county and its political divisions. General Code, section 2715.

The law clearly shows that the deposits in active or inactive depositories must be money controllable by the usual county officials and must be such as may be drawn on (principal or interest) "for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county." This is the pertinent language used:

"The deposits in active depositories, as provided for in the next preceding section shall at all times be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county. The deposits in inactive depositories shall remain until such time as the county treasurer is obliged to withdraw a portion or all of same and place it in the active depositories for current use." General Code, 2715-1.

No inactive depository has been designated in Clark county under section 2715 of the General Code. There is only provision for depositing money accumulating in the county treasury, not needed for immediate use, arising from taxation. The withdrawal of only such money is provided for. General Code, section 2751-1.

This memorial building fund is a trust fund, and the general rule is that all accretions or anything by way of profit on a trust fund belongs to such fund. This applies to public funds, and, doubtless, no public fund or any benefit or profit therefrom can be transferred to any other fund, unless by express authority of law. For specific provisions relating to procedure for transfer of public funds, see sections 2296, et seq., G. C. These sections contemplate transfers from one fund to another fund, both of which are under the control of the same board. (Infirmary Directors vs. Commissioners, 6 N. P., n. s., 347; 18 O. D., 403.)

The only provision for applying or apportionment of interest on funds deposited in county depositories is in section 2737, General Code. In this section it is first provided how the interest on "undivided tax funds" shall be apportioned. The only other provision relates to "interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county." This provision, following the provision as to the "undivided tax funds" evidently means the county's share of the tax funds after the division of it. "Funds belonging specifically to the county" is not applicable as a description of the proceeds of a sale of bonds issued expressly for and completely set aside for the purpose of a "memorial building fund." Section 3063, G. C. In the absence of a clear and positive declaration that the interest on this fund shall go to another fund that has no connection with this fund, the interest should stay with the fund from which it was raised. Particularly is this so since the "memorial building fund" is entirely separate from all the ordinary business and funds of the county, especially the "general fund of the county." Moreover, the interest belongs in that fund because the unexpended balance thereof goes to the sinking fund created to pay the bonds from which the fund was realized. Section 3063, G. C. In no other way can this interest be as properly applied as by keeping it in the "memorial building fund" from which it was derived. There ought to be a strong reason based on a clear and positive requirement of law to send it to the "general fund of the county."

Different rates of interest are provided for deposits in active and inactive depositories. And deposits may be made for a long term in an inactive depository which would take the control of the "memorial building fund" from the board of trustees. G. C., 2716.

It must not be overlooked that the provisions of law (G. C., 2737) for the apportionment of interest to the county general fund arising from the deposit of "funds belonging specifically to the county" applies alone to funds arising from taxation belonging to the county and not to funds which are solely applicable to a particular purpose wholly outside of a political governmental purpose. Public funds arising directly from taxes may be called county funds.

Before or after the fund is deposited neither the county commissioners nor any of its officers could authorize the expenditure of any of it, as we have seen, and the board of trustees alone could expend and draw it out of the county treasury, or, as we have also seen, turn it bodily over to the state for armory purposes, and to be expended by state authority in connection with other state funds. (G. C., 3063-1, 3063-3.)

It was never contemplated that any moneys coming into the county treasury for particular uses not derived from taxes duly levied for ordinary county purposes, and controlled and expended by special statutory authority, wholly independent of the general county authorities, should be deposited on interest to build up the county expense fund.

The commissioners are required by law to levy a tax to raise money for such purposes, and they can only be expected to do this in contemplation of interest that might be received on the ordinary funds derived from taxation. As the memorial building fund is to be paid out only on "the order of the board of trustees" it cannot be classified as a county fund for deposit at all under the statute. (G. C., 3063; also 2715, 2715-1.)

That a debt contracted by law in pursuance of a vote of the people and ultimately to be paid through taxation does not make it a county fund or a fund raised by taxation within the meaning of the Ohio depository law. G. C., 2715-1. Nor "money of the county" as mentioned in G. C., 2715. Money arising from the sale of bonds to be applied to a particular use is not county money because it is to be paid by taxation on the property of the county. The bonds themselves draw interest.

The provision of law making "deposits in active depositories * * * at all times to be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county" conclusively shows that only moneys which by law, may be so used, can be treated as within the meaning of the depository law. G. C., 2715-1.

Of course, no part of the "memorial building fund" could "at all times be subject to draft" to pay "current expenses of the county." It, until the memorial building is completed and turned over to the county, is only paid out on the order of the board of trustees. G. C., 3063. The funds deposited—the principal thereof —must at all times be subject to be drawn on for current uses. No deposit can legally be made by the commissioners that would place the memorial building fund beyond the control of the board of trustees, and applicable for such uses.

Public funds of different kinds may be transferred from one to another provided they are each under the control of the commissioners. G. C., 2296. (Infirmary Directors vs. Commissioners, 6 N. P. (n. s.) 347.)

This tends to show that the county commissioners have no authority to call a fund for a specific purpose, especially a purpose outside of any governmental political division or district, a county fund for any purpose. As well might it be claimed that money going to the state arising from taxes levied on the people of the county be called a part of the county fund, and deposited at interest for the county.

The provision of law (G. C., 3063) directing the memorial building fund to be deposited in the county treasury was only one of convenience and not because it was subject to any control by the treasurer, auditor or commissioners, or would in any way produce revenue for the county. It might have been deposited in any other safe place. Its deposit, wherever that might be, would not change its purpose or authorize any accumulations derived therefrom to be appropriated for any other use.

Plainly, the apportionment required to be made by the county auditor of interest is only such as accrued from the principal of each political fund to the proper use. (G. C., 2737.) The required apportionment of accrued interest leaves no room to doubt as to what, and only to what, funds of the county treasury (authorized to be placed in a depository) the accruing interest to become a part of. (G. C., 2737.)

First, the county auditor is required to apportion "all such interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided tax funds" to the > "State, cities, city school district and county taxing or assessing districts in the proportion that the amounts collected for the respective political divisions or districts bear to the entire amount collected 'for such undivided tax funds and deposited,' etc."

So far it is difficult to see that the auditor is required to apportion any interest to the county general fund. But the same section further provides:

> "All interest apportioned as the counties share together with all interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county shall be credited to the general fund of the county."

How can it be said, in reason, that the memorial building fund, raised from the sale of bonds, and specifically designated in the law as such fund, belong "specifically to the county?" Is it now specifically declared a fund for a particular use or purpose, clearly distinguishable from funds "specifically belonging to the county," raised for general purposes? Is it not more specifically designated as a fund outside of funds "specifically belonging to the county" than township, city, village, road, bridge and other public funds?

The manifest use of the phrase, "belonging specifically to the county" was to distinguish public funds raised by taxation for particular public county purposes and uses from other funds, likewise so raised, for general county uses, exclusively controlled and expended by county authorities and commonly known as county general expense funds. The funds raised by separate county tax levy for bridges, roads, etc., are applied to general public uses, yet they are not treated as funds "specifically belonging to the county" or regarded as belonging to the county general expense fund.

For the foregoing reasons it is my opinion that the interest follows the fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATUS OF MUNICIPALITIES AND TOWNSHIPS IN COUNTIES VOTED DRY UNDER COUNTY LOCAL OPTION LAW—HOME RULE AMENDMENT.

1. Status of municipalities and townships in counties voted dry under the county local option law, after the going into effect of the so-called home rule amendment, is the same as though no county local option law election has been held; and local option elections can be held in such townships and municipalities under existing statutes providing therefor.

2. The so-called home rule amendment, by virtue of article II, section 1b of the constitution, takes effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1914.

HON. ARTHUR VAN EPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of November 5, 1914, assuming the adoption of article 15, section 9a, commonly called the home rule amendment, you state:

> "Prior to the election, this county was dry by virtue of an election held under the county local option law—Rose law. Prior thereto, elections had been held in various municipalities and townships under provisions of the municipal and township local option law. Most of them at that time voted dry, so that when an election was held under the county local option law, the latter only effected two townships and one municipality.
> "The question now arises as to the status of the last mentioned places, in the event of the adoption of the home rule amendment, as well as the status of all other municipalities and townships in the county, on this question.
> "Further, can township and municipal elections now be held on the wet and dry question in those municipalities and townships? Also, when does the home rule amendment, if carried, go into force and effect?"

In an opinion to the Home Rule Association of Cincinnati, under date of August 8, 1914, construing the so-called home rule amendment, I held:

> "That the adoption of the proposed constitutional amendment would not interfere with or repeal either the Sunday law, sales to minors law, the sales to drunkards laws or similar regulatory laws, nor prevent the passage of similar laws in the future.

"Furthermore, it is my opinion that local options for municipal corporations and residence districts, as well as local option for townships, applicable to each township in the state, whether it contains a municipal corporation or not, is not interfered with by the amendment. In fact, the only so-called local option law affected is the Rose county option law."

You state that two townships and one municipality of your county were "wet" and were voted "dry" by the county local option law. The effect of the amendment, since it repealed the county local option law, was to place the two townships and one municipality in the same condition that they were prior to the county local option law. All townships and municipalities in your county which were voted "dry" under the Beal municipal local option law or by the Beatty township local option law, remain dry unless otherwise determined at a proper election. Since the so-called home rule amendment did not effect in any way the township and municipal local option laws, they are in the same position as they were prior to the adoption of the amendment, and in such townships and municipalities, elections can be held on the "wet" and "dry" question, under the existing statutes providing therefor.

Answering your last inquiry, I would say that the so-called home rule amendment to the constitution, by virtue of article II of the constitution, takes effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved. At the expiration of thirty days the license law will apply, and the territory that was not made dry theretofore by regulatory laws, outside of the Rose county local option law, will be in the same situation at the end of thirty days as all wet territory is. You understand, of course, that since the license law applies, there could be no traffic in intoxicating liquors unless the persons desiring to engage therein received licenses therefor under the provisions of the law.

Trusting this answers your inquiry, I am,

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE EXPENSE OF PRINTING OR MAILING OF COPIES OF A PROPOSED CHARTER FOR THE CITY OF CINCINNATI IS NOT ILLEGAL, IF AUTHORIZED BY COUNCIL.

An expense for printing more copies of the proposed charter for the city of Cincinnati than were necessary to supply the electors who had voted at the previous election is not illegal, if authorized by council.

The expense for mailing copies to women electors, who had voted for members of the board of education at the previous election is illegal, if undertaken by the city auditor or any other executive officer without authority of council, but council may authorize such or other reasonable distribution of such public documents by mail.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 19th submitting for my opinion thereon the following question:

"Copies of the proposed charter, submitted by the charter commission of the city of Cincinnati, were mailed to women voters who had voted for school board members at the previous election. If this expense is illegal may findings for recovery be enforced against the board, or official, directing such expenditure, including the cost of printing said extra copies and the postage on same?"

Article XVIII, section 8 of the constitution, self-executing in this respect, provides as follows:

"* * * Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration books of the last regular or general election held therein. * * *"

Of course it is clear that the word "elector," as used in this sentence, means one having the qualifications of an elector, determined by article V, section 1 of the constitution. Women having the right to vote for candidates for members of the board of education are not "electors," although their names may appear upon the poll books of the last regular election.

While I have generally characterized section 8 of article XVIII of the constitution as self-executing, in order that its mandate may be complied with, it is necessary for the council of a municipal corporation to appropriate the necessary money. In any such appropriation or other essential legislation the council may lawfully, I think, provide for and authorize the printing of as many copies of the proposed charter, as in the exercise of reasonable discretion the council may deem advisable. That is to say, there is no limitation in the constitution, or otherwise, to the effect that there shall be printed any definite or limited number of copies of the proposed charter, and council, or the proper officer, is vested with some discretion in this particular.

Therefore, I am of the opinion, that merely because certain copies of the charter were sent to women it does not follow that there could be a finding for recovery on account of printing that many copies. If the officers whose duty it was, under the ordinance providing for the printing of such copies, to let the contract or to make or audit payments on account thereof, have exceeded their authority, as defined by such ordinance, then a different question might arise. The facts necessary to support a final conclusion upon this phase of your question are not stated by you.

With respect to the expense on account of postage, however, the question is somewhat different. I am of the opinion that so far as article XVIII, section 8 of the constitution is concerned council is without power to authorize any municipal agent to mail copies of a proposed charter to any persons other than those specifically referred to therein. However, in spite of the rule that a municipal corporation has only those powers which are expressly granted, and those which are to be necessarily inferred from the grant of powers, I am of the opinion that it is competent for the council, by making proper appropriations, to authorize any reasonable expenditure for postage for the purpose of bringing to the notice of the citizens of the municipality or other interested parties generally, any matter of public interest. For example, the annual report of the city auditor or the sinking fund trustees or other public documents of a similar character might be distributed among the citizens, and such other interested parties as municipal bond buyers, and council might authorize and direct the city auditor or clerk of council or other proper officer to incur postage expense on such behalf.

Wherefore, while the section of the constitution is itself the measure of the right of the "clerk" (in the case of a city, the auditor; section 4283, General Code, and related provisions) to incur any expense on account of postage in the absence of appropriate legislation on the part of council, I am of the opinion that if council, in which is vested the local legislative power, authorizes for distribution by mail all the copies of the proposed charter ordered to be printed, such legislation would be valid and would constitute sufficient authority to the officer in question.

I am clearly of the opinion that the power to authorize such additional expenditure rests exclusively in the council. No other board or official has authority to direct the same. But if in the case you mention it is found that council has not acted, I would advise against a finding for recovery against the city auditor or the official actually making the expenditure, unless it appears that he has not acted in good faith.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A PERSON SERVING AS PROBATE JUDGE, WHO HAS BEEN ELECTED COMMON PLEAS JUDGE FOR A TERM BEGINNING JANUARY 1ST, 1915, MAY CONTINUE TO ACT AS JUDGE OF THE PROBATE COURT UNTIL IMMEDIATELY PRIOR TO HIS ENTRANCE UPON THE TERM AS COMMON PLEAS JUDGE.

One serving as probate judge, who has been elected common pleas judge for a six-year term, beginning January 1st, 1915, is not required to resign upon receiving a commission, and taking oath as common pleas judge, but may continue to act as judge of the probate court until immediately prior to his entrance upon the term for which he has been elected as common pleas judge. He cannot hold both offices and must resign as probate judge before beginning the term to which he was elected as common pleas judge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1914.

THE HON. ELI SPEIDEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 13th, 1914, you write that the Hon. W. A. Joseph, who is at present probate judge of Clermont county, was on November 3d elected common pleas judge of the county for the six-year term beginning January 1, 1915, and that you and he are uncertain as to whether he will have to resign the position of probate judge within twenty days from the receipt of his commission issued by the governor, or whether he can hold the position of probate judge until January 1, 1915.

It is upon this state of facts that you ask my opinion.

Section 1690 of the General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 417, provides:

> "Each commission issued by the governor to * * * a judge of the common pleas * * * shall be transmitted by the secretary of state to the clerk of the common pleas court of the county wherein such judge resides. Such clerk shall receive and forthwith transmit it to the person entitled thereto. Within twenty days after he has received such commission, such person shall take the oath required by the constitution and statutes of this state and transmit a certificate thereof to such clerk signed by the officer administering such oath."

Section 140, of the General Code, requires the deputy state supervisors of elections of the proper county to forward by mail to the secretary of state a certificate of election of an officer such as the one in question together with the requisite fee which is to be paid by the person demanding the certificate. Upon receipt of such certificate and fee by the secretary of state, the governor shall issue and forward the proper commission to the clerk of the court of common pleas who shall deliver the same to the officer entitled thereto. The fact that action is to be taken immediately by the deputy state supervisors of elections indicates that it is the intention of the statute that all the actions required by the sections referred to shall be taken at the earliest convient moment. If this is done it is apparent that Judge Joseph will take oath some time prior to January 1st, 1915, and consequently it will be seen that the question for determination is whether he can receive the certificate and take oath as a common pleas judge while he is still acting as judge of the probate court.

Section 14, of Article IV, of the constitution provides that judges of the common pleas court

> "Shall receive no fees on perquisites or hold any other office of trust or profit under the authority of this state or of the United States. All votes for either of them, for any elective office, except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void."

It will be observed that under the language last quoted the common pleas judge cannot hold any other office of profit or trust under the authority of the state or of the United States, which, of course, would include within its inhibition service as probate judge, but although the person qualifies and takes the oath of office, it does not necessarily follow that he is such officer within the meaning of the constitutional language. In order that he may be the common pleas judge within the meaning of this section, he must have entered upon his term of office. It is the intent of the constitution to preclude him from holding both offices at the same time, and as he does not enter upon his service as common pleas judge until January 1st, 1915, I see no objection to his continuing to act as probate judge until that date. The predecessor of Judge Joseph will act as common pleas judge until January 1st, 1915, and therefore it must follow that the latter cannot be serving in the same capacity at the same time. He will not be common pleas judge until the date last named, even though he should qualify and be prepared to act at the expiration of the term of whom he has been elected to succeed. The qualification and taking of oath is merely a step preparatory to entrance upon office and serving therein. Of course, it will be necessary for him to resign as probate judge prior to serving as judge of the common pleas court, as he could not hold these two positions under section 14, of article IV, of the constitution, as these two offices have not been combined in your county under the provisions of section 7, of article IV.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A PERSON CONTRACTING TO OVERSEE A PARTICULAR PIECE OF WORK CONSTRUCTED BY STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT NOT WITHIN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—THE SAME RULE APPLIES TO DAY LABORERS.

One contracting to act as superintendent or resident engineer to oversee a particular piece of work constructed by the state highway department is an independent contractor and not within the classified civil service of the state. If such superintendent is regularly employed the year around, to serve wherever and whenever directed by the state, he would then become an employe of the state within the classified civil service.

Day laborers employed for a few days on a particular piece of work, with no idea of permanency in employment or continuity of service, whose employment discontinues with the completion of such piece of work, are not within the classified civil service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1914.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 21, 1914, you state that the state highway commissioner has submitted to your department the question of whether or not those performing labor in the building of new state highways are within the classified civil service of the state.

Enclosed with your communication is a letter from the secretary of the state highway department, together with form of contract and bond used by such department. It seems that under this contract a superintendent is employed for the purpose of superintending and directing the construction of the highway which the state is engaged in constructing. He pays all bills and keeps accurate account of the disbursements, together with the cost of the improvement. It is not stated whether the work that is done is under independent contract or directly by the state, which is to employ the men and pay them. I assume, however, that the latter state of affairs exists, as, if the work were done by an independent contractor, there would be no question raised as to civil service, because the employes of such contractor would not in any event be in the service of the state.

Under subdivision 1, of section 1, of the civil service act, the term "civil service" is construed to include mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state. The superintendent himself, if he merely be hired for the one contract or by the job, may also be said technically to be in the service of the state, but his employment is more in the nature of an independent contract than otherwise, and I do not believe that it was the intention of this act to include independent contractors within the classified civil service. As they are employed only for a particular piece of work and their time of service is limited with no definite idea of re-employment or continuous service, they do not seem to come within the spirit of the act or within its terms with reference to the eligible list.

In defining classified service the competitive class is treated as inclusive of all positions and employments now existing or hereafter created in the state for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. The use of the words "existing" and "created" indicates that there must be some permanency about the position, and the words "positions" and "employments" in this connection seem to refer to work having a fixed character in the administration of the government.

Section 9 of the act in question requires the putting into effect of rules for the classification of offices, positions and employes in the classified service. If an employment be in the nature of an independent contract it would seem that this section would not be applicable, because it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to classify service under a contract of that character.

Section 16, with reference to transfers and reinstatements, would also be applicable, because that provides for the reinstatement of one who has been separated from the service without delinquency or misconduct on his part. This would result in the continuous application for reinstatement in service by one who had contracted to do a particular piece of work and who had completed the same. It is not reasonable to surmise that the general assembly had any such intention as this.

The same argument may be adduced with reference to section 17, prohibiting discharge. When the work is done there is no further reason for the existence of the employment. Of course, if the superintendent is continuously employed to work on any highways that the state may be constructing and he is not hired for a particular piece of work, then, of course, this rule would not obtain, as he would be holding a regular position in the state service.

As I take it, however, your main question is with reference to the laborers employed by the superintendent. As they are paid by the state, even though the money comes directly from the superintendent, who merely acts as a state agency in distributing the same, this would not prevent the application of the civil service act to such employes. If, however, the laborer is merely employed for a particular piece of work, with no idea of continuity or continuance in service, I do not believe that he comes within the spirit of the civil service act, and I think he should be exempt from inclusion within the classified civil service. One who is regularly employed to do this character of work by the state would still be within the classified service, even though he was at times laid off, if the state could call upon him and require his services at any time it so desired; but when his employment is for a particular piece of work in a particular locality, or where he is hired merely as a transient for a few days, I do not think that he comes within the law. There must be some degree of permanency about the nature and scope of the employment in order that the provisions of the civil service act shall obtain with reference to such employment.

In addition to this, it seems to me that it is not practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examination for day laborers who are only to be hired for a few days in a particular capacity, at the end of which time their services are to be discontinued with no idea of re-employment.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF COUNCIL BY ORDINANCE OR RESOLUTION TO LEGALLY PAY FROM CITY FUNDS JUDGMENTS MADE AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS THROUGH FALSE ARRESTS—REGULAR PATROLMEN MAY RECEIVE ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION WHERE THEY HAVE WORKED MORE THAN THE NUMBER OF HOURS STIPULATED BY THE DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SAFETY.

1. While council cannot by ordinance or resolution legally pay from city funds judgments rendered against police officers because of false arrest, and cannot legally reimburse a police officer from city funds for expenses incurred in defending damage suits for such false arrests, nevertheless, in view of the uncertainty of the law, no finding should be made where payments have been made. The holding herein should be given prospective effect. In the future findings should be made and actions instituted to recover such payments hereafter made. Such recovery may be had against the officers who have been reimbursed from city funds for judgments and expenses. As to whether recovery may be had from a police officer when council directly pays the judgment creditor, quaere.

2. Regular patrolmen, who have worked the number of hours stipulated by the director of safety may receive extra compensation for overtime, when council in fixing the compensation of such officers specifies that they shall be paid at the rate of so much per diem. Such overtime should be paid proportionately to the number of hours' work as compared with the number of hours designated by the director of safety as a full day's work. Council should, however, by ordinance definitely and specifically fix the number of hours which shall constitute a day's work for such patrolmen.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago you submitted the following inquiry:

"1. May council, by ordinance or resolution, legally pay from city funds judgments rendered against public officers through false arrest?

"2. May council, by ordinance or resolution legally reimburse the police officer from city funds for expenses incurred in defending a damage suit for false arrest?

"3. May regular patrolmen be legally compensated for overtime when the ordinance fixing the compensation of said patrolmen specifies a per diem compensation, but does not state the number of hours that shall constitute a day or make any mention of overtime? Printed rules of the safety department designate the regular hours of each department, and extra pay has been made to patrolmen for time served in excess of the number of hours designated in the rules.

"4. If city funds have been disbursed on the above three accounts, can recovery be had against said police officers?"

Your first and second questions may be discussed together. As a general rule, it may be stated that where a municipal officer incurs a loss in discharging a duty imposed upon him by law, in a matter in which the corporation is interested, the municipal corporation has power to appropriate funds to reimburse him, provided he acts in good faith, unless such action on the part of the municipality is forbidden by statute. There are decisions which have gone so far as to state that even if the officer exceeded his legal rights and authority, the same rule should obtain, and it has been held that if a mayor, in the performance of the duties of his office, in good faith, exceeds his authority, and as a result judgment has been rendered against him for false imprisonment, it is proper for the city to indemnify him for the expense of such judgment. It seems to be generally recognized, however, that the test in such cases is whether the act done by the officer is one in which the city had an interest—that is, it must affect municipal rights or property, as well as be in good faith.

"McQuillan on Municipal Corporations, Sec. 514, pp. 110-113.
"Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th Ed., 307."

The true rule is very well stated by Mr. Mecham in section 879 of his work on "Public Offices and Officers." After saying that it is well settled that towns or cities have power to indemnify their officers against liability incurred in the bona fide discharge of their duties, and may raise money for this purpose or appropriate to it money raised for general purposes, even though the result may show that the officers exceeded their legal authority, the learned author states that the subject must be one concerning which the municipality has a duty to perform, an interest to protect, or a right to defend, and in which it has a corporate interest. He says:

> "Where, however, the subject-matter is one in which the municipality has no interest, and in reference to which it has no duty or authority; where it has no direction or control over the officer, it is not responsible for his fidelity, gains nothing by his diligence and loses nothing by his want of care; where the duties are imposed specifically upon the officer by statute, and the municipality has no duty to perform, no right to defend, and no interest to protect, in such cases the right to indemnify does not exist, and any attempt to do so, or any vote or contract to that effect, will be void."

In Miller vs. Hastings Borough, 25 Pa. Super Ct., 569, the facts presented showed that a jury in acquitting a borough policeman of the charge of assault and battery imposed half of the costs upon him. While the suit was pending the council moved

> "That our police be supported with all that counsel command in case now pending in court."

The court held that this motion was not a sufficient basis for a suit by the policeman to recover his costs and attorney fees. The salient feature of the case is, however, the statement that the borough authorities had no power to expend public money in defense of borough officers indicted under the law, when the borough itself was not involved. This holding is based upon the theory that police officers in the preservation of peace are not agents or servants of the borough, their powers and duties being derived from the state to which they are primarily responsible.

The New Hampshire cases very well illustrate this. The following are typical:

"Cove vs. Epping, 41 N. H., 539.
"Merrill vs. Plainfield, 45 N. H., 126.
"Gilbert vs. Berlin, 84 Atl., 235."

The same line of distinction is to be found in Massachusetts:

"Flood vs. Leahy, 183 Mass., 232.
"Vincent vs. Nantucket, 12 Cushing, 103.
"Minot vs. Roxbury, 112 Mass., 1.
"Dunn vs. Framingham, 132 Mass., 436.
"Leonard vs. Middleborough, 198 Mass., 221.
"Hixon vs. Sharon, 190 Mass., 347."

The following is taken from the last case cited:

> "The cases in which it is held that a town cannot expend money to reimburse its officers or agents for losses are those in which the expenditure relates to objects concerning which it has no duty to perform, no interest to protect, and no right to defend."

In Chapman vs. New York, 168 N. Y., 80, the court of appeals of New York held that the payment from the funds of the county or city of expenses incurred by a police officer in successfully defending charges preferred against him for official misconduct would constitute their application to an individual, and therefore the statute authorizing such application was unconstitutional and void as violative of that provision of the constitution prohibiting a city, county, town or village from incurring indebtedness for other than county, city, town or village purposes. The following language from the opinion is pertinent:

> "When a citizen accepts a public office he assumes the risk of defending himself against unfounded accusations at his own expense. Whoever lives in a country governed by law assumes the risk of having to defend himself without aid from the public even against unjust attempts to enforce the law, the same as he assumes the burden of taxation. As it was said in the matter of Jensen, it is 'a part of the price he pays for the protective influence of our institution of government.'"

The court say that asking for aid to pay the expense of a defense already made from one's own resources is like asking for aid in the payment of taxes or in the discharge of any public burden. It is not a city or county purpose, but a mere gift.

The doctrine justifying payment under circumstances similar to those set out in your questions, is, perhaps, as well stated in Sherman vs. Carr, 8 R. I., 431, as anywhere. This is one of the leading cases on the subject. Judge Bradley in that decision gave as a reason justifying the payment of compensation the fact that if the power to indemnify the officer did not rest in the municipality, the said officials would perform their duties at the peril of individual responsibility for all their mistakes, no matter how honest and intelligent they might be, and also at the peril of the possible mistakes of a jury. As a result of this the officer would naturally become too cautious, if not timid, in the exercise of his powers. The answer to this reasoning is obvious. The case itself recognizes the very great evil of imposing upon the municipality the duty of reimbursing the officer, and consequently leaves it to the discretion of the governing body of the city. If it be a discretionary matter, the officer cannot, with any degree of confidence, act in the belief that he will receive compensation. The whole matter will be left to the whim and caprice of those in charge of the municipal finances, and therefore the policemen would have from the municipality, but an unsubstantial prop, and, to paraphrase a well-known quotation, his hopes would oft prove dupes and his fears would not be liars. One cannot conceive of an officer more efficiently performing a duty which he is paid to do because a municipality might in its generosity reimburse him for the loss which he has incurred in endeavoring to do that work.

It is suggested in the foregoing case that the municipal officer is put at the peril of the possible mistakes of a jury. While this may be true, we have no more right to assume that the jury has made a mistake in rendering judgment against him, than we have to assume that the municipality would make a mistake in reimbursing him. When judgment has been rendered against him for false arrest or false imprisonment, there must necessarily have been a finding that he violated statutory or common law. If he did this, it would seem that it would not be right for a political subdivision of the state to pay him for his breach of duty.

Another matter to be taken into consideration in this connection is that the salary of the officer is supposed to compensate him not only for the work that he does, but for the risks that he runs—in other words, his liability to actions for false arrest or false imprisonment are perils incident to the position which he occupies, and at the time he accepts his office or employment he is presumed to bear this in mind, and his wages are supposed to be fixed with this consideration in sight.

The case of city of Chicago vs. Williams, 182 Ill., 135, holds that a city is not liable for torts committed by its officers in the exercise of police power, and that it is not the duty of the corporation counsel to defend at the city's expense a suit to recover damages for false imprisonment brought against police officers. It is true that in this case there was only a discussion of the legal liability of the city, and the question of its moral obligation was not considered, but nevertheless the reasoning seems to sustain the view here taken.

It has been contended that the right to pay claims of this character rests upon the equitable duties of a municipality—upon its moral obligation—to protect its officers in the faithful discharge of their duties. It must be remembered that in Ohio municipalities have only those powers expressly granted or necessarily implied, and in this respect they differ from the cities of many other states. In addition to this, in maintaining a police department, the municipality acts as an agency of the state, and not in its private corporate capacity. These officers act for the state, and on its behalf in making arrests, especially in state cases, which in their very designation present the state as prosecutor. The decisions are uniform in this state upon this question, and it has been repeatedly held that the municipality, when it acts as a state agent, is not liable for the torts of its officers. If it is not liable for the torts of its officers, how can it be said that there is a moral obligation upon it to pay damages arising out of delicts of such officers. While it is true that there are certain moral obligations resting upon municipal corporations, which may be recognized by payment, nevertheless those decisions must not be extended beyond their terms. They were based upon peculiar circumstances, and no general rule can be deduced therefrom.

Observe that the municipal mayor's and police courts have criminal jurisdiction throughout the county and arrests made under their authority may and frequently do occur beyond the limits of the municipality. Under such circumstances, if false arrests take place, why should the municipality have the right to reimburse the officer mulcted in damages. He is not acting for or on its behalf in making such arrest. That surely cannot be a corporate function.

The direct question has been decided in Lunkenheimer vs. Comptroller et al., 23 W. L. Bull., 433, wherein an action was brought by a taxpayer to enjoin the payment of $200.00 to one Hewitt, who was employed as attorney to defend the chief of police in proceedings in contempt, also in testing the constitutionality of the law, and in defending the chief of police in an action for damages growing out of false arrest. In holding that a perpetual injunction should be granted, Judge Bookwalter says:

> "In the damage suit it was also an individual burden he had assumed. The municipality is not liable in damages for the neglect or wrongdoing of a police officer. Moreover it would be unreasonable to imply that funds raised by taxation for police purposes should be used in the defense of an officer prosecuted individually for neglect or misconduct."

Section 3784, of the General Code, provides that each municipal corporation shall have special powers to levy and collect taxes upon real and personal property within the corporation "for the purpose of paying expenses of the corporation, constructing improvements authorized, and exercising the general and special powers conferred by law."

Now it cannot be contended that the payment of the expenses referred to in your first and second questions is the payment of expenses of the corporation. On the contrary, the matter was one with which the corporation had no concern. It was not a party to the action wherein the officer was mulcted in damages, and the judgment against him was no corporate expense, nor was the expense of defending him. It was not the construction of an improvement, and the only general or special power conferred by law with reference to the police department is that to be found in section 3617, authorizing the municipality "to organize and maintain police and fire departments." I cannot see how the payment of the judgment for false arrest is a direct or implied exercise of the power either to organize or to maintain the police department. Section 3800 provides for the erection of a contingency fund to provide for any deficiency in any of the detailed appropriations which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. If there was no authority to appropriate moneys for purposes such as those referred to in your letter, there would be no authority for paying such expenses out of a contingent fund, and as we have before stated, we can find no such authority in the statutes.

Section 4383, of the General Code, provides in part:

> "Council may provide by general ordinance for the relief out of the police or fire funds of members of either department temporarily or permanently disabled in the discharge of their duty."

We cannot assume that the general assembly used this language without reason or necessity, and consequently it must have been the legislative idea that this power was not vested in the municipality in the absence of statute. Otherwise, there would have been no necessity for the enactment of the law. Yet there is just as much reason for saying that this implied power rested in the municipality as to contend that cities have the power to pay judgments rendered against their police officers. If the latter tends to make officials more courageous and efficient in the performance of their duties, so would the former. What reason can be advanced for reimbursement for financial damage that cannot be advanced for compensation for personal injuries? If the one did not exist in the absence of statute, it would seem clear that the other cannot. There being no statute authorizing financial relief against judgments for false arrest or false imprisonment, it follows, in my judgment, that council cannot by ordinance or resolution legally pay from city funds judgments rendered against police officers by reason of their having made false arrests; nor may it reimburse the police officer for the expense incurred in defending a damage suit for false arrest, when judgment has been rendered against the officer.

I understand that the third question which you ask is based upon a state of facts arising in the city of Columbus, and consequently I have obtained the ordinance and rules of the director of public safety in that city, in order that I might have the concrete facts before me in answering the question.

The eighth paragraph of section 1 of the ordinance of May 19th, 1911, reads thus:

> "One hundred and thirteen patrolmen, each of whom shall receive a salary at the rate of $2.75 per day, and shall give bond in the sum of $1,000.00."

The language of this ordinance is peculiar in that it provides for compensation at the rate of $2.75 a day. The word "rate" is used in this connection as a relative term—it is the measure of a thing by its relation to some standard. It establishes a basis upon which the value of the service is to be estimated. The standard in this case is a day, and therefore the next question to be determined is what is the meaning of a day as used in the ordinance. Without any further specifications or description it would, no doubt, be held to mean all of the time during which the policeman was on duty, regardless of the number of hours—that is to say, it might be defined to be the whole or any part of a twenty-four hour day within which he was ordered to work. This ambiguity, however, has been removed by the following order of the director of public safety:

> "That ten hours work in any twenty-four hours will constitute one day's work for any member of the division of police, except as to those who are specifically designated to work fewer hours or on different shifts for the good of the department."

The chief of police states that this general order was issued during the first part of January, 1912, and is the same regulation that has been in force since 1905. In the absence of any designation by council in the ordinance as to what shall constitute a day, it seems to me that the director of public safety has authority to make a rule such as the one here quoted, and that such rule may be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining what shall constitute the policeman's day. Construing the ordinance and the rule together, I am of the opinion that a policeman is entitled to pay for the time he works at the rate of $2.75 a day, and that the day upon which this computation is to be made shall consist of ten hours. As the ordinance does not specifically state that his per diem compensation is to be in full of all services performed in any twenty-four hours, and as the director of public safety has specified that ten hours' work shall constitute one day's work, the policeman is entitled to extra compensation for all services performed in excess of the aforesaid ten hours. This compensation is to be fixed at the rate of $2.75 for ten hours' work. The words "at the rate of" indicate clearly to my mind that the ordinance contemplates payment for overtime, in case the director fixes the hours of labor, and that such overtime is to be computed in the manner herein specified.

Of course, you must understand that the director of safety would have a right at any time to change this order, or to make an exception thereto with reference to a certain class of patrolmen. With these latter class of cases this opinion cannot deal, as we have not any rule before us except the general order hereinbefore quoted.

Succinctly stated my position upon this question is that when the regular patrolman have served the time prescribed for their day's work, such work was ended, and they were entitled to their regular per diem compensation. If at the expiration of such day they were called upon by the proper official to perform further police duty, there being no alteration or change, suspension of or exception to such rule, the policemen are entitled to extra compensation for the time served by them, under such direction, in excess of the number of hours designated by the rule, such extra compensation to be computed for the time actually served at the rate of $2.75 per diem.

The difficulty of the whole question arises from the failure of council to fix the number of hours constituting a day's work for patrolmen, and it is really the governing body which should determine this. Therefore, I would suggest that council should by ordinance definitely and clearly legislate upon this matter, so that all doubt and ambiguity may be removed.

In reply to your fourth inquiry, I desire to say that the supreme court of this state has held, in

"Walker vs. Dillonville, 82 O. S., 137."

That an action may be brought to recover money illegally paid out of the public treasury. See also lower court's report of the same case in 30 C. C., 623.

The rule is stated in section 527, of McQuillan on "Municipal Corporations:"

> "Usually compensation illegally paid to an officer or employe may be recovered by the public. Thus money paid by a municipal corporation to one of its officers in excess of his lawful salary or fees may be recovered by the corporation in an action against the officer for money had and received to its use, although the payments were made on the order of officials properly charged with such duty with a full knowledge of the facts and without fraud. The defense of involuntary payment is not available in such case, for the knowledge of the officer of the authority of the officials who made illegal payments must be presumed. Such illegal acts are ultra vires, outside of the agency of the officials, and are not binding on their principals, the people. Therefore, such unwarranted payment of excessive compensation or fees cannot be ratified."

As there is no authority to reimburse police officers for judgments and expenses paid by them in cases wherein juries have returned verdicts against them for making false arrests, it follows that such payment constitutes an unwarranted diversion of public funds and action lies to recover such funds for the municipality. In view, however, of the difference of opinion heretofore obtaining regarding this question, and the fact that payments were made in good faith and with reason for treating them as authorized, I do not think it would be equitable or just to make findings against those who have so acted. Hence, this opinion should be treated as prospective in its operation upon this subject, and officials should be warned that payments of this character hereafter made will be not only improper, but will result in findings being made and actions instituted to recover money spent in this manner.

You will observe that in the foregoing opinion I have not answered the quesiton of whether recovery can be had against police officers when council has paid judgments rendered against them. From this question I infer you have in mind a state of affairs where the person who recovered judgment has been paid out of the municipal treasury. My reason for not answering this question is that cases of this kind cannot properly be answered in general, as the varying facts of each case should be presented before asking that I rule thereon. If you have in mind any particular case of this character you may submit same and I shall give you my opinion in regard to that concrete case.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PETITION FOR MUNICIPAL LOCAL OPTION ELECTION UNDER THE BEAL LAW—WHEN SUCH PETITION MAY BE ENTERTAINED.

A petition for a municipal local option election under the Beal law may be entertained before the repeal of the county local option law by the recent constitutional amendment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1914.

HON. KENNETH G. COOPER, City Solicitor, Bellaire, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your communication of November 23, 1914, in which you state:

> "On or about December 18, 1911, Belmont county was voted dry under the Rose law. The city of Bellaire is in Belmont county.
> "As I understand it, the home rule amendment does not go into effect until December 3, 1914, and that until that date the Rose law is in effect.
> "I am informed that a petition under the Beal law will be filed with the Bellaire city council on Tuesday evening, November 24, 1914.
> "The question I desire to ask is whether council has jurisdiction to receive petitions for a Beal law election, said petition being filed before the home rule amendment goes into effect, and Belmont county being now dry?"

I infer from your statement that the city of Bellaire has not voted under the municipal option law and is dry by virtue of the provisions of the county local option law.

I have heretofore held that the home rule amendment upon its adoption goes into effect thirty days after the election at which it is voted upon, by virtue of the specific provisions of section 1b of article II of the constitution.

Section 6115, General Code (99 O. L. 37), being part of section 8 of the so-called "Rose county local option law", reads:

> "After three years from the date of an election held under the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter, another election may be petitioned for and shall be ordered by the county commissioners or common pleas judge, as provided therein."

Section 6116 of the General Code, also a part of section 8 of the "Rose county local option law," provides:

> "The foregoing sections of this subdivision of this chapter shall not affect, amend, repeal or alter in any way any other law or ordinance which prohibits throughout a municipality, township or residence district the selling, furnishing or giving away of intoxicating liquor as a beverage or the keeping of a place where intoxicating liquor is sold, furnished or given away as a beverage."

It is readily apparent upon reading these two sections, in connection with the fact that the county local option law, the municipal local option law and the township local option law are all separate and distinct acts, that the election spoken of in section 6115, General Code, is a county local option election, and after the holding of one election under the county local option law a period of three years from the date of that election would have to elapse before another county local option election might be petitioned for.

Section 6127 of the General Code provides that when qualified electors in a number equal to forty per cent. of the number of votes cast at the last preceding general election for state and county offices petition the council of a municipality divided into wards for the privilege to determine by ballot whether the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage shall be prohibited within the limits of such corporation, such council shall order a special election to be held therein not less than twenty days nor more than thirty days from the filing of such petition with the mayor or from the presentation of such petition to the council. The filing of such petition confers jurisdiction upon council, and it is their duty to proceed under the law. The fact that the repeal of the Rose county local option law has not become effective would not in any way militate against the duty of the council to order the election. Section 6115 of the General Code does not prevent the filing of a petition of any kind within the three years; it only prohibits the petitioning for another county local option election.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that your council has jurisdiction to receive petitions for a Beal law election at this time; and that the fact that the Rose county local option law may still be considered in effect would not prevent the reception of such petitions. In fact, since the two laws are entirely separate and distinct, even if the county local option law would continue to be in effect, I can conceive of good reasons why the electors of a municipality might desire to vote upon the question of whether the municipality would also be dry under the Beal law—for instance: it might be desired to conduct prosecutions under the municipal local option law rather than under the county local option law.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ORDINANCE OF CITY OF TOLEDO, PROVIDING THAT EMPLOYES OF THE DEPARTMENTS OF THE CITY GOVERNMENT SHALL BE PAID THE PREVAILING WAGE RATE EXTANT IN THE CITY, DOES NOT COMPLY WITH SECTION 4214, GENERAL CODE.

An ordinance of the city of Toledo, which provides that employes in any of the departments of the city government shall be paid the prevailing wage rate extant in the city does not comply with section 4214, General Code, requiring council to fix the compensation of all employes in the city government, since the same is not sufficiently definite and certain, and such ordinance operates as a delegation of power to fix such compensation, to the heads of the departments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of August 25th you request my opinion as follows:

> "The council of the city of Toledo, Ohio, has fixed the compensation of employes in all the departments of the city of Toledo, Ohio, known as laborers, in the following language:
> "'That all employes hereafter employed in any of the departments of the city of Toledo, and paid by the hour or day, be paid at least the current and prevailing rate of wages paid in the city of Toledo by private individuals and corporations, and the officers of the city of Toledo so employing said persons, are hereby authorized and directed to place such employes upon the pay roll of the city of Toledo at not less than such prevailing rate of wages. Passed August 3, 1914.'

"Does the phraseology of said ordinance comply with the requirements of the law that council shall fix the compensation to be paid in the various city departments?"

Section 4214, General Code, is as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

By this provision the legislature expressly makes council the specific body which is to fix the respective salaries and compensation of the employes in the city government. By a well settled rule of construction the requirement of statute which places a duty upon a specifically designated officer or board requires the particular officer or board to perform the duty in question and operates as a prohibition against a delegation of that duty to any other officer or board. The rule is founded upon the well-known principle that the expression of one excludes all others.

I am of the opinion that the method followed by the council of Toledo necessarily operates in part as a delegation of the determined duty of fixing compensation to officers other than the city council. The prevailing wage may or may not be a fixed quantity in the city of Toledo. Under the plan attempted, the duty of determining what is the prevailing rate is left to the officers of the city employing the persons in question. Such a plan clearly cannot be accorded recognition as a definite fixing of compensation by the council and by the council alone. The statute above quoted is intended to impose upon council a clean-cut and specific jurisdiction over the matter in question.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the method attempted to be followed by the adoption of a blanket establishment of a general rule of wage lacks the definiteness and certainty which the plan of the statutes comprehended.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN THE COMMISSIONERS OF A COUNTY FILE THEIR FINANCIAL REPORT WITH THE COMMON PLEAS COURT, THE COURT HAS FULL CHARGE OF SUCH REPORT—NO PROVISION IS MADE FOR THE DISPOSITION OF SUCH REPORT.

When the commissioners of the county file a report of their financial transactions with the common pleas court, in accordance with section 2507, General Code, such report becomes part of the files of the court, and there is no duty whatever incumbent upon the court with reference to such report. The statutes nowhere provide what shall be done with such report after the same is filed with the court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

HON. OTWAY J. COSGRAVE, Presiding Judge, Court of Common Pleas, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 20th, wherein you set forth that the county commissioners have filed with the court of common pleas, in accordance with section 2507 of the General Code, a detailed report of their financial transactions during the year preceding; and inquire what disposition must be made by you of this report.

Sections 2507, 2508 and 2509 of the General Code are as follows:

"Sec. 2507. On or before the third Monday in September of each year, the county commissioners shall make to the court of common pleas of the county a detailed report of their financial transactions during the year next preceding such date. Such report shall be in writing, and itemized as to amount, to whom paid, and for what purpose.

"Sec. 2508. Such report shall be published immediately in a compact form one time in two newspapers of different political parties, printed and of general circulation in such county. If two such papers are not so published, the publication shall be in one paper only. In addition to such publication, the report shall be published in the same manner in one newspaper, if there be such, printed in the county in the German language and having a bona fide general circulation of not less than six hundred among the inhabitants of such county speaking that language.

"Sec. 2509. Each county commissioner shall forfeit and pay into the county treasury five dollars for each day that the making and filing of such report is delayed after the third Monday in September."

These provisions make clear that it is mandatory upon the county commissioners to file such report with the court of common pleas, and to publish the same in accordance with section 2508, under penalty prescribed by section 2509.

Sections 2510 to 2516, General Code, as they existed prior to the enactment appearing on page 111 of 103 Ohio Laws, which repealed them, provided for the submission of such report to a committee for purposes of investigation. These sections were repealed, no doubt, for the reason that the auditor's office is now required, by statute, to make examination of the commissioners' accounts.

The sole purpose which can be ascribed to the provisions of the statute as they now appear, in the requirement of a report, would seem to be the presentation of the same to the public.

I nowhere find any provision whatsoever for disposition of the copy of the report which is filed with the court of common pleas, under section 2507. The only possible conclusion, therefore, is that the court of common pleas has nothing whatever to do with such report other than to make the same part of its files.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF AN INTERCOUNTY BALANCE STANDING TO THE CREDIT OF A TOWNSHIP OR DISTRICT BOARD OF EDUCATION —COMPENSATION THAT MAY BE ALLOWED TOWNSHIP CLERK FOR TIME EXTENDED BY HIM WITH STATE EXAMINER—HOW COMPENSATION OF TREASURER IS COMPUTED.

1. Where a balance standing to the credit of a township or school district in a depository or ordinary bank account, made in the name of such township or school district, exceeds the balance with which the clerk and the treasurer have charged the latter, and the same cannot be accounted for, the difference belongs to the township or board of education in the name of which the deposit has been made.

2. The township clerk may be allowed special compensation by the township trustees for time spent by him with the state examiners at the time of the examination of the accounts, providing a fixed annual salary has not been fixed for the clerk by the trustees to cover all miscellaneous township services, and provided the account so allowed does not cause the total compensation of the clerk from the township treasury to exceed $150 in any one year. A township treasurer whose lawful compensation is wholly on the fee basis may not be allowed any such additional compensation for like services.

3. In computing the compensation of the township treasurer, which is based upon moneys paid out by him on the allowance of the trustees, prior payments to him by way of partial compensation are not to be considered as "moneys paid out" upon which his percentage is computed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

HON. CYRUS LOCHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of a letter, under date of October 23d, from Hon. Frederick W. Green, assistant prosecuting attorney, in which my opinion is requested upon the following questions:

"1. The township funds have been deposited in the name of the township and in accordance with the township depository law. The school funds have been deposited in the name of the board of education, but not in accordance with any depository provision, although disbursements are made in accordance with the provisions of section 4768, General Code. The state examiners have been unable to reconcile the amount on deposit with the balance disclosed by the accounts of the clerk and the treasurer, i. e., the actual bank balance exceeds the ledger balance. In such condition, is the excess on hand to be deemed a part of the public funds, or may the treasurer retain it as his own?

"2. By order of the township trustees, both the township clerk and the township treasurer have been allowed special compensation for time spent by them with the state examiners at the time of the examination of their accounts. In case of the clerk, such compensation is in addition to the annual salary which has been fixed by the trustees and in the case of the treasurer, such compensation is in addition to the two per cent. allowed by statute. Is such special compensation allowable?

"3. In computing the compensation of the township treasurer, are prior payments to him by way of partial compensation to be considered as 'moneys paid out', and therefore included in the aggregate upon which to compute the two per cent. to be allowed to him?"

In stating your first question you do not make plain whether the discrepancy exists in the township account or in the account of the board of education or both. However, to my mind this is immaterial. Funds deposited in a bank in the name of a public subdivision, whether under the depository law or not together with all increments thereof, belong to the subdivision in the name of which they are deposited. Eshelby vs. Board of Education, 66 O. S. 71.

It might be that from error or otherwise the treasurer has deposited in the name of the subdivision, and with its money, some money which belongs to him; if so, he must suffer the consequences, at least, unless he can separate the amounts and identify that which is his by showing the source from which it came. The fund in the meantime is a trust fund and the doctrine applicable generally to the commingling of other funds with a trust fund applies.

In short, I am of the opinion that under no circumstances may a public treasurer retain as his own the difference between a bank balance in an account carried by him in the name of the subdivision which he serves and the account with which he stands charged as treasurer on the books of the subdivision; such difference belongs to the subdivision itself.

Your second question is answered by consideration of sections 3308 and 3318, General Code, which provide for the compensation of the township clerk and township treasurer respectively as follows:

"Sec. 3308. The clerk shall be entitled to the following fees, to be paid by the parties requiring the service: twenty-five cents for recording each mark or brand; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and repaired by the parties; ten cents for each hundred words of records or copies in matters relating to partition fences, but not less than twenty-five cents for any one copy, to be paid from the township treasury; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and kept in repair by the superintendents; for keeping the record of the proceedings of the trustees, stating and making copies of accounts and settlements, attending suits for and against the township, and for any other township business the trustees require him to perform, such reasonable compensation as they allow. In no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars.

"Sec. 3318. The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees."

The question with respect to the clerk under the foregoing section is not quite the same as that with respect to the treasurer. The two questions will, therefore, be considered separately.

Section 3309, supra, authorizes the trustees to allow reasonable compensation to the clerk for any township business the trustees require him to perform. The possible intent of this section is that an annual compensation shall be fixed to cover all possible services. I do not believe, however, that the statute can be construed so narrowly; and it is my opinion that the trustees may allow compensation to the clerk for particular services as well as fix an annual compensation for all services.

Much depends upon the manner and form of the allowance by the trustees to the clerk of an annual salary such as that described by you. If the allowance proves to be for all services in attending to miscellaneous township business and is made, so to speak, in advance or by standing order, then I would be of the opinion that it would not be lawful for the trustees to allow special compensation for any particular township business. If, however, the form of the order is such as to indicate clearly that the compensation allowed is intended to cover certain kinds of services only, or is not intended to cover services of the kind inquired about by you, then it would be lawful for the trustees to make an additional allowance for such services, provided they may be regarded as constituting "township business."

I am of the opinion that the assistance rendered to the state examiner is in the nature of "township business," and if the clerk were ordered by the trustees to render such assistance, he would be entitled to special compensation therefor, unless on the principles already stated all services of the kind were covered or provided for in a general allowance.

It is true that in a sense it is incumbent upon the clerk for his own protection to assist the examiner in going over his own books, which constitute practically the only books of the township; but if the examination is made, as it generally is, of all the offices of the township, its scope would be wider than a mere auditing of the clerk's books, and would affect the acts of the trustees, the treasurer and other township agents. So that if the trustees require the clerk to attend at the examination and assist the state examiner, I would be of the opinion that the services rendered by the clerk might be considered as township business for which special compensation might be allowed unless a general order provides compensation for this class of services.

Of course, if by your question you mean to intimate that the allowance made to the clerk for his services in question was in excess of the sum of $150.00 referred to in section 3308 the answer is obvious. In such event the allowance is illegal on that account alone.

As to the treasurer, it is clear that section 3318, which is the only one authorizing any compensation to be paid to the treasurer, does not permit special compensation of this sort. Debolt vs. Trustees, 7 O. S. 237.

I am of the opinion, in answer to your third question, that the treasurer may not be allowed fees under section 3318 upon moneys retained by himself or allowed to himself as fees thereunder. Such retention or allowance would not constitute the "paying out" of "moneys belonging to the township treasury" within the meaning of the section; but at all events the fees of a public officer are not to be computed upon his own fees as a general principle.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 4782, GENERAL CODE, IN REFERENCE TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPOSITORIES FOR SCHOOL FUNDS OF SCHOOL DISTRICTS AND THE DISPENSING OF THE TREASURERS OF THE SCHOOL MONEYS.

Construction of section 4782, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 159, relative to the establishment of depositories for school funds of school districts, and the dispensing of the treasurers of the school moneys belonging to such school districts, when such depositories are established. Said section further provides that the clerk of the board of education of such district shall thereupon assume the duties of such treasurers.

If the board of education fails to establish a depository as required by said section 4782, supra, then an action of mandamus lies against such board to compel such board to comply with the provisions of said section, and any person interested in the schools may bring such action in the name of the state, as provided in sections 12296 and 12287, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 10, 1914, your department submitted for an official opinion thereon, the following request:

> "If a board of education fails or refuses to pass a resolution dispensing with its treasurer, as required by section 4782, what action, if any, should be taken against it for failing or refusing to pass such resolution?
> "What official should bring the action, if one is brought?"

Under date of August 26, 1914, this department in an opinion rendered to Hon. Clare Caldwell, city solicitor, Niles, Ohio, construed said section 4782 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 159. I am enclosing herewith a copy of that opinion as bearing somewhat upon the question which you submit in your inquiry for an opinion. The opinion holds that said section as so amended, makes it mandatory upon the respective boards of education of the state to dispense with their respective treasurer upon the creation of depositories for school funds. The original section, prior to its last amendment, employed the word "may" in place of the word "shall" and therefore was merely directory in its operation, and it was then optional with the board of education whether or not it should dispense with its treasurer of the school moneys belonging to its respective school district, when a depository was established for such school funds, as authorized by law. By virtue of said change, however, it is apparent that it was the legislative intention to make said section mandatory in case a board of education established a school depository for school funds. Said section 4782 as amended, 104 O. L., page 158, now reads:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts."

Your question is, what action, if any, should be taken against a board of education for failing or refusing to pass the resolution provided for in said section. My answer is that an action for a writ of mandamus should be brought, compelling a board to comply with the provision contained in section 4782, supra. Section 12283 of the General Code, defines "mandamus" as follows:

> "Mandamus is a writ issued, in the name of the state, to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board, or person, commanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station."

You further ask what official should bring action, if any is brought. Replying thereto, section 12286 provides that the application for such writ of mandamus must be by petition in the name of the state, on the relation of the person applying, as follows:

> "The application for the writ must be by petition in the name of the state on the relation of the person applying, and verified by affidavit. The court may require notice of it to be given to the defendant, or grant an order to show cause why it should not be allowed, or allow the writ without notice."

Section 12287 of the General Code, provides that:

> "* * * It may issue on the information of the party beneficially interested."

From the foregoing quoted sections relating to the subject-matter of "mandamus," it is apparent that any person interested in the schools may bring such action in the name of the state, as provided in sections 12286 and 12287. While the city solicitor in city school districts, and the prosecuting attorney in all other school districts except city school districts, is made the legal adviser and counselor of all boards of education of their respective districts, nevertheless, I doubt whether it is the official duty of such solicitor or prosecuting attorney to bring actions in mandamus for the enforcement of the provisions contained in said section 4782, supra. It is, however, the duty of such legal advisers to advise their respective boards as to their respective duties under and by virtue of the provisions contained in said section 4782, supra. The duty of bringing such action does not devolve upon any official, for the reason that there is no statutory provision requiring any official to bring such action, unless such duty devolves upon the legal adviser of the board of education as above pointed out, in case the board of education refuses or fails to pass such resolution in accordance with said section 4782, supra, and the opinion rendered to Hon. Clare Caldwell, above referred to.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTIONS 2746 AND 2749, GENERAL CODE, IN REFERENCE TO THE TIME WHEN TAXES SHALL BE COLLECTED BY THE COUNTY TREASURER.

The dates fixed by sections 2746 and 2749, General Code, for the receiving of taxes are directory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 21st, in which you state:

> "We are enclosing you herewith letter received from the treasurer of Stark county, Ohio, and we would respectfully ask your written opinion as to whether the dates fixed by section 2746 and section 2749, General Code, are mandatory or directory."

The letter enclosed and referred to, states that because of the delay in securing the tax duplicates, the treasurer will be unable to comply with the provisions of law in regard to making collection of taxes outside of his office, in the manner and within the time provided by sections 2746 and 2749, General Code, and asks whether, if collection under these sections was deferred until January, the bureau would criticise the delay of the treasurer.

The evident desire of the treasurer is to accommodate the taxpayers in the manner prescribed by law, and to know in advance of action whether he would be subject to future criticism. This is not only a proper position to take, but is highly commendable, as many officers might be inclined to place the burden upon those responsible for the delay and compel all payments to be made at the office of the treasurer, thus depriving a great many taxpayers the privilege of making payment of taxes at a much more convenient place, and saving them the trouble and expense of a trip to the office of the county treasurer.

Sections 2746 and 2749, General Code, read:

> "Sec. 2745. When, in his opinion, necessary, the county treasurer may open not to exceed one office in each township for the receiving of taxes. Such office shall be in a city or village in which is located a bank of deposit. The treasurer, his deputy or clerks, may attend at such office and receive taxes on any day or days prior to the twentieth day of June and the twentieth day of December of each year. They may remove from the county treasury to the place of collection records necessary for the receiving of taxes upon the day or days so fixed for that purpose.
> "Sec. 2749. On or before the tenth day of January and the tenth day of July each year, the county treasurer shall file with the county commissioners an itemized statement of expenses incurred in the receiving of taxes, as herein provided, as follows: Transportation to and from the place of collection, office rent, and publishing, printing and posting of notices. When allowed by the county commissioners, such expenses shall be paid from the county fund, but the total expense so paid in any year shall not exceed one hundred dollars."

These sections, together with sections 2747 and 2748, constitutes the act of March 12, 1909, 100 O. L., 76, and it was enacted for the benefit and accommodation of taxpayers; and the doing of the same was left to the opinion of the county treasurer as to its necessity. Opinion here is nothing more nor less than discretion, and no discretionary act is mandatory in any sense; the only part of these sections possessing mandatory features, is that prescribing the time within which the treasurer shall present his expense account, but as there are no extraneous conditions requiring these accounts to be presented on or before the tenth of January and July, nor any penalty attaching for non-performance, no sufficient reason can be found for holding this law to be mandatory.

To my mind, a law enacted for the accommodation of any portion of the citizens of a state, to be put in operation at the discretion of an officer, can never be construed as mandatory unless there are requirements of law necessitating the doing of the thing at the time or in the manner prescribed, in the absence of which such laws must be held permissive or directory.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HUGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY NOT BE EMPLOYED AS TEACHER BY SUCH BOARD.

Construction of section 7705, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 144; also section 4747, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 139.

Said sections prohibit a clerk of the board of education from being employed as teacher by the board of which such teacher is the clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1914.

HON. G. A. STARN, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 8, 1914, you submitted to this department an inquiry for an official opinion thereon, which may be stated as follows:

> "Can a teacher or principal of a high school, as designated in section 7705 of the General Code, as amended volume 104 Ohio Laws, at page 144 thereof, be elected and act as clerk of the board of education, as provided for in section 4747 of the General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., at page 139?"

Replying to your inquiry, I wish to say that section 4747 of the General Code (104 O. L., page 139) provides as follows:

> "The board of education of each city, village and rural school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president, one as vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. The president and vice-president shall serve for a term of one year, and the clerk for a term not to exceed two years. The board shall fix the time of holding its regular meeting."

Section 7705 of the General Code, as amended (104 O. L., page 144), provides as follows:

> "The board of education of each village, and rural school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of the district, for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. The local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located, except by a majority vote. In all high schools and consolidated schools one of the teachers shall be designated by the board as principal and shall be the administrative head of such school."

None of the provisions contained in the foregoing sections, nor are there any other statutory provisions which expressly prohibit the clerk of the board of education from being employed as teacher by the board of which such teacher is the clerk. The positions are not inconsistent unless there is a conflict between the duties of the two positions. Under the provisions of section 7786 of the General Code, supra, it is made the duty of the clerk of the board of education to require teachers employed by the board, to make the reports therein enumerated, and to file the same with him before an order may be drawn by such clerk for the payment of the salaries of such teachers. The clerk is the sole judge of the performance of this duty and it would be within his power to draw an order for the payment of his own salary without having made such report, and thereby violate the plain provisions of said section 7786, supra.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that one person may not be clerk of the board and teacher at the same time.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REQUIREMENT OF AN INITIATIVE PETITION CALLING FOR AN ISSUANCE OF BONDS FOR HOSPITAL PURPOSES UNDER SECTION 3947, GENERAL CODE—TWO-THIRDS VOTE REQUIRED.

When an initiative petition is filed calling for the issuance of bonds for hospital purposes, and under section 3947, General Code, a two-thirds vote of the electors would have been required, the mere fact that section 4227-1, General Code, provides that an ordinance approved by a majority vote shall not be subject to the veto of the mayor, does not obviate the requirement of the two-thirds vote.

When the requisite number of electors of a municipality file an initiative petition calling for an election to determine whether bonds shall be issued for a statutory purpose, it is proper to submit the question of an issuance of such bonds directly to the people without the enactment of a preliminary resolution directing such submission. The filing of the initiative petition takes the place and stands in lieu of such resolution by counsel, and it is unnecessary for the electors to pass by the initiative such resolution submitting the ultimate question to them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

THE HON. C. A. LEIST, City Solicitor, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 18, 1914, you enclose an initiative petition addressed to the city auditor of Circleville, Ohio, proposing to the electors of said city for approval or rejection a certain ordinance which is for the purpose of issuing bonds in the sum of $35,000.00 for the purpose of purchasing real estate and erecting thereon a municipal hospital.

You call attention to section 3939, General Code, providing for the issuance of bonds for hospital purposes, and section 3947 which requires a two-thirds vote on a question of this character. You then ask whether said last named section or section 4227-1, providing for municipal initiative proceedings should obtain, the latter only requiring a majority vote.

You also state that you are uncertain whether the ordinance to be initiated should be one establishing a hospital or providing for the issuance of bonds.

Section 4227-1, as amended 104 O. L. 238, provides in substance that ordinances and other measures providing for the exercise of any and all powers of government granted by the constitution or delegated to municipal corporations by the general assembly, may be proposed by initiative petition which must contain the signatures of not less than ten per centum of the electors of the municipality. When a petition of this sort has been filed the city auditor is to certify it to the deputy state supervisors of elections, who shall submit the ordinance to the electors for approval or rejection. An ordinance approved by a majority voting thereon shall not be subject to the veto of the mayor.

Section 3947, as stated in your question, requires a two-thirds vote on the question of the issuance of bonds for purposes specified in section 3939 of the General Code, which latter includes within its provisions the erection of hospitals. It does not seem to me that it was the intent of the general assembly in enacting section 4227-1 to render inapplicable section 3947 providing for the two-thirds vote. That section is in the nature of a special provision governing a particular power vested in the municipalities, and should not be regarded as having been superseded by the grant of initiative power. The language that no ordinance or other measure proposed by initiative petition, and approved by a majority of the electors shall be subject to a veto of the mayor, was not, in my judgment, intended to repeal by implication those provisions of law requiring a two-thirds vote in specified cases.

The more important question involved in this case is whether the ordinance for the issuance of bonds may be submitted directly to the people, the question being whether section 4227-1 does not require that the initiative petition shall, in cases such as that submitted by you, merely embody a resolution declaring it necessary to issue and sell bonds, which would result in compelling the vote first on the passage of that resolution, which would merely put the question up to the people for another vote as to whether the bond issue should be passed.

You will see from this that if such view were adopted it would result in the electors of the municipality twice passing upon the question, the resolution requiring the majority vote and the bond issue requiring a two-thirds vote of the people.

Under section 1-f, article II, of the constitution the initiative powers are reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized to control by legislative action, such powers to be exercised in the manner provided by law. In carrying this mandate into execution the general assembly enacted section 4227-1, which has been hereinbefore explained. The power of issuing the bonds in question has been vested in council which, to my mind, is the same as a grant to the municipality as the council is the body through which it speaks in matters of this character. This is an absolute power in the municipality subject to the exception that the total indebtedness created in any fiscal year shall not exceed one per centum of the total value of all property as listed and assessed for taxation; the net indebtedness created or incurred by council under section 3939 shall never exceed four per centum of the total value of all the property in the municipality as listed and assessed for taxation. Under section 3942, however, in addition to the authority granted in section 3939, the council may issue and sell bonds for any of the purposes set forth in section 3939 upon the approval of the electors in the manner specified. From this it will be apparent that there can be no doubt that the issuance of bonds for the erection of a hospital was an absolute power vested in the municipality, subject, however, to the limitation that in certain contingencies a vote of the people must be required. The sole object, however, of such limitation is to enable the electors of the municipality to determine whether they are willing to pay for the improvement—whether they deem it a proper and reasonable expenditure, and whether they are willing to accept the burden which it imposes upon them. When the authorization and its exception are read together it will be very apparent that under its powers of government the municipality could issue the bonds without a vote of the people unless those bonds so increased the indebtedness as to bring them within the exception requiring a vote of the people. When the power of initiative was vested in the people of the community it was the obvious intent of the general assembly and in conformity with the spirit of the constitution that they should have the right to legislate for themselves upon this question. When the petition, signed by the requisite number of electors, is filed, it is apparent that they demand that they be permitted to exercise the legislative powers reposed in them. While under the circumstances set out by you it is true that this power was eventually in them, provided the council submitted the matter, it cannot be said that it was not the intent of the constitution and the general assembly to enlarge those powers. The real power of government was to be placed in their hands.

Sections 3942-3946 were really in the nature of a referendum. The statute we here have under consideration provides for the initiative. In any event under sections 3942 et seq., the real power of determining whether the expenditures were to be made was in the people. To say that the enactment of the initiative would require the people to act in the place of council and vote upon the question as to whether or not they should have a proposal submitted to them for passage by their suffrage would be to reduce this measure to an absurdity, which I cannot believe the spirit or letter of the statute and constitution require. As the sole object, under the old law, of the passage of the resolution was to give the electors an opportunity of determining whether the expenditure should be made, I cannot conceive of any reason why this object has not been subserved when the people by an initiative petition are given the opportunity directly of voting upon the adoption of the ordinance. The whole question is presented to them in the ordinance calling for the issuance of bonds. If they adopted that by a two-thirds vote, it is very apparent that they would have voted to submit the question to themselves. The object to be attained by section 4227-1 is to give them an opportunity of expressing their will in regard to the governmental measure, and not to have them decide whether they want to vote on that particular proposition. The sole question in which they are interested is the issuance of the bonds; when they decide that this purpose and object is a desirable one and have by the requisite two-thirds enacted the bond ordinance, they have exercised a governmental power and their action should be sustained. The object of the initiative is to enable the people themselves to have the question presented to them. In this respect the requirement of the filing of a properly signed and verified petition is the sole statutory requisite to enable them to pass upon the ultimate question involved. The initiative supersedes and takes the place of the action of council in passing the preliminary resolution. In other words, the initiative petition is to be treated the same as the resolution of council referred to in section 3942, General Code. The sole object of that was to give the people the opportunity to vote. The aim, purport and scope of the initiative petition is the same, and consequently when the latter is invoked the former does not obtain. From this it follows that when the people petitioned for the issuance of bonds in the manner set out in your inquiry, they have, by such petition, obviated the necessity of any preliminary measure to bring the matter before them. Their call for a vote on the main question has been in lieu of a resolution enacted by themselves to submit the question to themselves.

To sum the whole matter up, it is my judgment that the electors of the municipality have the right by initiative petition to have the question of the issuance of bonds directly submitted to them, and if two-thirds of those voting upon such question cast their ballots in favor of such issuance, the issuance is a valid enactment, and the bonds may issue.

While as we have herein said it would seem that the most expeditious and proper way of presenting to the electors a question of this character is in the manner outlined in your ordinance, nevertheless, I see no objection to the electors of the municipality initiating a resolution authorizing the submission to them of the ultimate question. If such course were adopted, the preliminary measure to submit the matter to the electors would only need be passed by a majority vote, and when the question was submitted to them for their final determination, then it would require a two-thirds vote wherever the statutes provide thereof.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MEANING OF THE WORDS "WELL SECURED" AS USED IN SECTION 9735, GENERAL CODE, IN REFERENCE TO SECURITY FOR A DEBT.

The words "well secured" as used in section 9735, General Code, mean that the debt must be secured in such manner that in case the principal debtor should prove worthless, the entire debt could be collected from the security. In other words, that the security is such that one could say the debt would be paid without regard to the financial ability of the principal debtor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Some time ago you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Please give us a legal construction of the words 'well secured' as found in section 9735, paragraph 4, House Bill No. 572."

The section to which you refer, as amended, is found in 103 O. L., 270, and is as follows:

> "The board of directors of such corporation may declare a dividend of so much of its net profits as they deem expedient. Before such dividend is declared, not less than one-tenth of the net profits of the company for the preceding half year, or for such period as is covered by the dividend, shall be carried to a surplus until fund amounts to twenty per cent. of its capital stock.
> "In order to ascertain the net profits from which such a dividend may be made, in the amount of profit and loss there shall be charged and deducted from the actual profits:
> "1. All ordinary and extraordinary expenses, paid or incurred, in managing the affairs and transacting the business of the corporation.
> "2. Interest paid, or then due, on debts which it owes.
> "3. All taxes due.
> "4. All losses sustained by the corporation. In computing its losses, debts owing to it which have become due and which are not in process of collection and on which interest for one year or more is due and unpaid, unless same are well secured, and debts upon which judgment was recovered, but has been more than two years unsatisfied, and on which also for said period of two years, no interest was paid, unless same are well secured, shall be included."

The particular words to which you refer are found in paragraph 4, specifying what shall be deducted from actual profits in order to ascertain the net profits from which a dividend may be made by a corporation. I have been unable to find any definition by a court of these words, but they are words so well known, and so commonly used that it seems to me the only interpretation possible is what the words themselves import.

"Well," used as an adverb, means "in a good and proper manner, justly, suitably for a certain purpose."

The Century Dictionary, among other definitions gives, "In reality, fairly, practically, fully."

The word "secure" as defined by the Century Dictionary means in certain senses "to make sure of payment, as by bond, surety, etc., warrant or guarantee against loss, as to secure a debt by a mortgage; secure a creditor; firmly; in such manner as to prevent failure or accident."

"Well secured," therefore, means that the debt must be secured in such manner that in case the principal debtor should prove worthless, the entire debt can be collected from the security. In other words that the security is such that one could say the debt would be paid without regard to the financial ability of the principal debtor.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF A BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATION TO REGULATE INITIATION FEES TO BE PAID BY PERSONS BECOMING BORROWING OR NON-BORROWING MEMBERS.

A building and loan association may provide that an initiation fee shall be paid by persons desiring to become borrowing members of such association without requiring such initiation fee from persons who desire to become non-borrowing members.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

HON. JAMES A. DEVINE, Inspector of Building and Loan Associations, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of November 10, 1914, you make the following request for my opinion thereon:

"A certain building and loan association provided in its by-laws that an initiation fee of $1.00 per share shall be paid by every member, borrowing as well as non-borrowing. Later this section was amended so as to provide that this initiation fee of $1.00 per share shall be paid by borrowing members only.

"It is claimed by a borrowing member that the association had no right to relieve the non-borrowing member of this payment and at the same time continue to assess this charge against the borrowing members, his contention being that both borrowing and non-borrowing members must be treated alike."

The powers of building and loan associations are defined in sections 9648 et seq., of the General Code. I find no section bearing directly upon the matter of initiation fees.

Sections 9649 and 9650, of the General Code, are as follows:

"Sec. 9649. To issue stock to members on such terms and conditions as the constitution and by-laws provide. Each member may vote his stock in whole or fractional shares, as the constitution and by-laws provide, but no person shall vote more than twenty shares in any such corporation in his own right, nor have the right to cumulate his votes. But every subscriber for stock in accordance with the constitution of the association, may vote the amount of stock so subscribed for, in no event to exceed twenty shares.

"Sec. 9650. To assess and collect from members and others, such dues, fines, interest and premium on loans made, or other assessments, as may be provided for in the constitution and by-laws. Such dues, fines, premium or other assessments shall not be deemed usury, although in excess of the legal rate of interest."

I think under section 9649 building and loan associations would have the power to make a distinction in the matter of initiation fees as between borrowing and non-borrowing members. These two classes of members in a building and loan association are distinct and well known; and so far as the requirement is general as to the class to which it applies, I know of nothing to prevent it.

A borrowing member is not allowed a credit on his loan for the initiation fee he pays; nor would a non-borrowing member be given credit for the same upon his stock payment. As was stated in Meroney vs. Atlanta, etc., Ass'n., 116 N. C., 882:

"These entrance fees are more properly applicable to the discharge of the ordinary expenses of the association, and are not properly to be considered an accumulation of money to be afterwards allowed to the members on any future loan."

It may be that the association considers the privileges granted to a borrowing member, and therefore an initiation fee might be exacted on this ground. This is merely a supposition to illustrate that it is perfectly proper to make a distinction between the classes of members in an association if any reasonable ground therefor exists. In addition, the payment of the initiation fee is optional, that is, a person is not compelled to borrow from an association which has this requirement, but if he does desire to become a member, he cannot complain of the exaction so long as the same exaction is made from all persons in his situation.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE INSURANCE FUND—RIGHT OF THE TREASURER OF STATE TO PAY DUPLICATE VOUCHERS ISSUED BY THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

Since the state insurance fund is to be disbursed by the treasurer of state as its custodian, under rules adopted by the Industrial Commission of Ohio, the industrial commission may adopt a rule that duplicate vouchers may be issued in place of originals lost or destroyed, and the treasurer of state may pay such duplicate voucher.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of May 1st, 1914, you submitted to this department a request for opinion as follows:

> "This department, in payment of awards, issues a warrant (similar to a check) drawn directly against the state insurance fund.
> "A number of such warrants have been lost in transitu, so that the claimant in a number of instances is without his compensation. For a while the department issued duplicate warrants, first giving notice to the treasurer of state not to honor the original. The treasurer of state for some time honored such duplicate warrants, but now refuses to do so.
> "Is the treasurer of state justified in thus refusing payment of duplicate warrants?"

Under date of January 15, 1914, this department rendered an opinion to the treasurer of state to the effect that there is nothing in the statutes providing for the issuance of duplicate warrants and that, therefore, the payment thereof by the treasurer of state would be at his own risk. The request for such opinion was submitted to this department by the treasurer of state, and he did not at that time advise us of any rule or regulation adopted by your board covering the subject of disbursement of the state insurance fund. However, I am now informed that before any duplicate vouchers were issued by your board an entry relative to the same was made by your board and a copy thereof sent to the treasurer of state.

Section 8 of the act to further define the powers of the state liability board of awards (103 O. L., 75), (the duties of which liability board of awards are under statute being administered by your commission) contains the following language:

> "The state liability board of awards shall adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund."

And under section 9 of said act the treasurer of state is made the custodian of said fund "and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers authorized by the state liability board of awards."

From the above it can readily be seen that it was the intention of the legislature to make the treasurer of state the custodian of the fund, but that as such custodian he was to be guided in the disbursement thereof by the rules and regulations of the industrial commission.

Section 25 of said act (103 O. L., 75) provides:

> "The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premium applicable to the classes to which they belong, who have been injured in the course of their employment."

It was, therefore, the intention of the legislature that the injured employes who were entitled to share in such fund should be paid at all events as soon as the industrial commission had determined the amount due, and, therefore, placed in the power of said commission the right to determine for itself the method of disbursement. The treasurer of state, therefore, is not governed by the statute rules of law applicable to his duty as state treasurer, but is governed by the rules as promulgated by the industrial commission, he being by law constituted the custodian of the fund. It is to be understood that the state insurance fund is not in any sense a part of the state funds, but solely a trust fund administered by the state on behalf of the injured and dependents of killed employes.

In view of the fact, therefore, that the treasurer of state is solely the custodian of such funds under rules and regulations adopted by your board, and in view of the fact that your board by proper entry authorize the issuance of duplicate vouchers to replace those which had been lost or destroyed, I am of the opinion that the treasurer of state in paying such duplicate vouchers (as termed by the statute, but which in law amount to warrants) should honor the same, provided, of course, that before presentation to him of said duplicates the originals have not as yet been presented and paid, furthermore, that after the board has notified him of the issuance of the duplicate the original should not be paid at all.

I understand that the board has since adopted a rule that all warrants issued on the state insurance fund bear on the face thereof that the same are void after a certain definite time, and that there are but few duplicate vouchers now outstanding by reason of the foregoing stated rule. That being the case, I am of the opinion that the treasurer of state should honor the duplicate vouchers issued by the industrial commission on the state insurance fund.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE OFFICIAL YEAR OF THE STATE FIRE MARSHAL.

The official year of the state fire marshal closed on November 15th, 1914.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

HON. E. R. DEFENBAUGH, State Fire Marshal, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have inquired by verbal request when the fiscal year for the state fire marshal closes.

Section 260, General Code, prior to amendment (103 Ohio Laws, 662) provides in part as follows:

> "In all the departments, institutions, public works and buildings of the state, the fiscal year shall close on the fifteenth day of November of each year, and all annual reports from such departments and institutions shall be made with reference to that date."

Section 843, General Code, provides as follows:

"The state fire marshal shall make an annual report to the governor, containing a detailed statement of his official action and the transactions of his department."

The law provides that the governor shall appoint a state fire marshal, who shall hold his office for a term of two years and until his successor is appointed and qualified, but has not specified when the term of such state fire marshal shall begin. The state fire marshal's department is, as I construe it, fully within the term of section 260, General Code, supra, and, therefore, it is clear that the fiscal year is closed on the fifteenth day of November of this year, and the report required under section 843, General Code, supra, should be made as of that date.

I refer in this opinion to section 260, General Code, prior to amendment in 103 Ohio Laws, 662, for the reason that it is provided in said act that such amendment shall take effect and be in force on and after June 30, 1915. I therefore am of the opinion that you did not intend to inquire relative to the amended section 260, General Code.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROPRIATION MADE FROM SUNDRY APPROPRIATION BILL TO THE CITY OF COLUMBUS FOR THE PAVING AND REPAVING BEFORE A STATE PROPERTY—WHEN SAME SHALL BE PAID.

The appropriation made in the sundry appropriation bill to the city of Columbus for paving and repaving before state property is not a lump sum appropriation, nor the setting aside of a lump sum out of which the state's proportionate share of the improvement is to be paid. Therefore, the same should not be paid until it is determined what the state's share of the total improvement is, such determination to be made in the same manner as the amount to be paid by the abutting property owners is determined; when so determined, such amount should be paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 18th you state:

"On page 8 of the sundry appropriation bill passed by the general assembly February 16, 1914, appears the following appropriation:

"CITY OF COLUMBUS.

"Repaving of High street from Broad to State in front of state ground ---------- $5,000 00
"Paving Eleventh avenue along State Fair Grounds---------- 9,500 00
"Cement walks on Eleventh avenue along State Fair Grounds--- 2,500 00

"The city of Columbus has not gone forward with this improvement as contemplated by this appropriation, on Eleventh avenue, by reason of the fact that the street railway company cannot furnish the necessary funds to do its share of the work.

"It is likely that the unpaid appropriations on February 15, 1916, will be repealed and lapsed into the general revenue fund before the city can certify vouchers on this appropriation. Therefore, I desire an opinion from you as to whether or not it would be the duty of the state auditor to issue vouchers to the city of Columbus for the amounts specified above, before these appropriations lapse."

The appropriation which is made for the city of Columbus as set forth in your letter does not contain any restriction as to the method of paying the same further than is found on page 221, 104 Ohio Laws, at the end of such act. The language therein reads:

"The moneys herein appropriated shall be paid upon the approval of a special auditing committee, consisting of the chairman of the senate finance committee, the chairman of the house finance committee and the auditor of state, and said auditing committee is hereby authorized and directed to make careful inquiry as to the validity of each and every claim herein made, and to pay only so much as may be found to be correct and just."

Under familiar rules of law it has been decided that there is no authority to make a valid assessment against property belonging to the state, or at least that there is no method of payment other than by appeal to the legislature.

Such being the case it is apparent that the legislature has decided to recognize the moral obligation of the state to bear its proportionate share of the cost of the improvements referred to, and for that purpose has set aside the amounts as specified heretofore. However, the moneys so appropriated are to be paid out in accordance with the last clause of said appropriation act, to wit: Upon approval of the special auditing committee which is authorized and directed to make careful inquiry as to the validity of the claim and to pay only so much as may be found to be correct and just. The legislature having determined, as it appears to me, that the state should stand its proportionate share of the assessment upon the improvements specified it should only pay the same after the amount thereof has been determined in the same manner as the amounts to be paid by other abutting property owners are determined and that as soon as the same is so determined the claim should be presented to the special auditing committee, which committee should go over carefully and allow the same. It does not appear to me that it was the intention of the legislature that the amounts set opposite the various items hereinbefore referred to were to be paid at all events even though said amounts should exceed the proportionate share of the improvement to be borne by the state, but the same should be paid as soon as it is definitely ascertained what the various amounts are.

Since the amounts so appropriated are contained in a sundry appropriation bill, I do not believe that the legislature will undertake to repeal such a bill, and if not repealed the amounts so appropriated will, of course, be available for two years.

Yours truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE, CITY OF ATHENS TO STATE OF OHIO, ARMORY SITE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1914.

COL. BYRON L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 16th, enclosing for my consideration and approval an abstract of the title to, and deed from the city of Athens to the state of Ohio for, certain real estate, which is to be donated to the state as a site for an armory, and described as follows, to wit:

> "Beginning on the south line of in-lot No. 230 at a point 25 feet east of the southwest corner of said in-lot No. 230; thence east along the south line of in-lots Nos. 230, 229 and 228, one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence north parallel with the east side of in-lot No. 228, one hundred and fifty (150) feet; thence west parallel with the north boundary of in-lots Nos. 228, 229 and 230, one hundred and twenty-five (125) feet; thence south parallel with the west side of in-lot No. 230 to the place of beginning, the said above described premises being a portion of in-lots Nos. 228, 229 and 230 in said city of Athens."

The objections to the title as disclosed by the aforesaid documents are the following:

The deed from the Athens Brick Company is made subject to the payment of Ohio University rents, the lien of which has not been extinguished. I understand the Athens Brick Company has paid to the treasurer of the university the accrued rents, together with interest, and a deed from the state of Ohio to said company for the above described real estate is in course of preparation in the office of the auditor of state. When this deed is executed and delivered to the brick company the latter should make another warranty deed to the city of Athens, free from the incumbrance of the university rents. This deed should be authorized by resolution of both the stockholders and directors of the corporation.

After the city of Athens receives a proper deed from the brick company it should execute a deed to the state of Ohio. While the present deed to the state is in form a fee simple, duly signed, acknowledged and witnessed, the city at the time of its execution did not have a fee simple title, hence, had no power to make such deed. In order to remove all doubt of the sufficiency of the title to be acquired by the state, I have made the suggestion that another deed be procured from the city of Athens to the state.

The certificate of the abstractor is incomplete, in that it does not show whether an examination has been made of the records of the courts of common pleas and appeals of Athens county, Ohio, nor of the United States district court, to determine the pendency of suits, judgments or liens therein against the city of Athens or the Athens Brick Company. However, if it is inconvenient for him to come to Columbus and make an examination of the records of the United States court, a certificate of the clerk of said court, covering the pendency of suits, judgments and bankruptcy proceedings therein, should be attached to the abstract.

The taxes due and payable December, 1914, amount not stated, are listed as a lien against the property. The second installment of taxes, due June, 1915, is also a lien. Both installments should be paid before you accept a deed for this property, and the treasurer's report should be attached to the abstract.

When the above suggestions are complied with I will pass upon the abstract and deed further.

I have forwarded the abstract and deed direct to Hon, S. M. Johnson, Athens. Ohio, for correction in the several respects above indicated.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CLERK ACTING AS TREASURER BOARD OF EDUCATION—THE STATUS OF TEACHERS OF RURAL SCHOOLS HIRED BEFORE SECTION 7705, GENERAL CODE, AMENDED, WENT INTO EFFECT.

1. The clerk of the board of education when acting as treasurer of said board because of the dispensing of the latter, shall keep two sets of books, one as clerk, and one as treasurer.

2. Teachers who were hired by township boards of education before the new law, section 7705, General Code, as amended, went into effect, for a term which extends beyond such time that said section went into effect, were legally hired, and the rural board of education is now bound to respect such contracts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1914.

HON. CLARK GOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 19, 1914, you submitted a request for an official opinion upon the following questions:

> "First. Is the clerk-treasurer of the board of education entitled to any additional compensation for his services as treasurer?
> "Second. Should clerk-treasurer keep two sets of books, one as clerk and one as treasurer?
> "Third. Has the township board of education any authority to hire teachers? Assuming that they have hired teachers before the new law went into effect, is the county board of education now bound to respect that contract?"

In answer to your first question, permit me to say that I have just rendered an opinion to Hon. B. F. Enos, prosecuting attorney of Guernsey county, Cambridge, Ohio, under date of September 12, 1914, which fully answers your first question, and I am accordingly enclosing a copy of said opinion herewith.

Answering your second question, section 4764, of the General Code, provides that each school district treasurer shall execute a bond with sufficient surety, for a sum not less than the amount of school funds that may come into his hands, etc., before entering upon the duties of his office, as follows:

> "Thereafter such treasurer may be required to give additional sureties on his accepted bond, or to execute a new bond with sufficient sureties to the approval of the board of education when such board deems it necessary. If he fails for ten days after service of notice in writing of such requisition, to give such bond or additional sureties as so required, the office shall be declared vacant and filled as in other cases."

When a depository is established, then by virtue thereof the treasurer of the school moneys is dispensed with under secton 4783 and the clerk of the board of education of the district shall perform the duties of the treasurer, as follows:

> "When the treasurer is so dispensed with, all the duties and obligations required by law of the county auditor, county treasurer or other officer or person relating to the school moneys of the district shall be complied with by dealing with the clerk of the board of education thereof. Before entering upon such duties, the clerk shall give an additional bond equal in amount and in the same manner prescribed by law for the treasurer of the school district."

Section 4773, of the General Code provides that the treasurer of the school funds at the expiration of his term of office, shall deliver to his successor in office, all books, papers, money and other property in his hands belonging to the district, as follows:

> "At the expiration of his term of service, each treasurer shall deliver to his successor in office, all books, papers, money and other property in his hands belonging to the district, and take duplicate receipts of his successor therefor. One of these he shall deposit with the clerk of the board of education within three days thereafter."

The fact that the last quoted section carries the provision that such dispensed treasurer shall deliver to his successor, which is the clerk, all books, papers, money and other property, etc., leads me to the conclusion therefore, that the clerk when so acting as treasurer because of the dispensing of the latter, shall keep two sets of books, one as clerk and one as treasurer.

Answering your third question, section 7705, of the General Code, as amended 104 O. L., p. 144, provides as follows:

> "The board of education of each village, and rural school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of the district, for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. The local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located except by a majority vote. In all high schools and consolidated schools one of the teachers shall be designated by the board as principal and shall be the administrative head of such school."

The only material change made in the amendment of said section was to include a provision to the effect that the local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located, except by majority vote, etc. The original section, giving the local board of education of each village, township or special district the power and authority to employ teachers in the public schools of such district, the relationship between a board of education and its teachers being that of a contractual nature, to wit, employer and employe, therefore such contracts of employment come within the purview of section 28 of article II of the constitution of Ohio, which provides as follows:

> "The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws or laws impairing the obligation of contracts."

I note that your third question refers to the county board of education, and I assume that you mean to say the rural board of education, so that your question would read as follows:

> "Has the township board of education any authority to hire teachers? Assuming that they have hired teachers before the new law went into effect, is the rural board of education now bound to respect that contract?"

Inasmuch as I can find no statutory provision which anywhere refers to the county board of education having any control over or anything to do with the hiring of teachers in township or rural districts, I therefore make the above assumption that you meant rural in place of county board of education. As based upon said assumption and for the foregoing reasons, it is my opinion that teachers who were hired by township boards of education before the new law, to wit, section 7705 as amended, went into effect, for a term which extends beyond such time that said section went into effect, were legally hired and the rural board of education is now bound to respect such contracts. In other words, teachers cannot be employed under said section 7705 until the terms of such before mentioned teachers are terminated under the contracts made prior to the date of the going into effect of the new school code. Township boards of education still retain their authority to hire teachers, subject to the limitation set forth in section 7705, as amended, supra.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY USE ITS DISCRETION IN DETERMINING WHETHER OR NOT IT IS NECESSARY IN CHANGING RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS TO HAVE THE COUNTY SURVEYOR CHANGE THE LINES.

Under the provisions of section 4736, General Code, it is discretionary with the county board of education to determine whether or not there is any real necessity for calling upon the country surveyor for his aid in changing rural district school lines and transferring territory from one rural or village school district to another. If the county board determines that it is necessary to call in the assistance of a surveyor, then such board must call the county surveyor, and it is mandatory that the county surveyor shall make a survey for such board and prepare a map so designating the changes made in the changing of rural district lines and in the transferring of territory from one rural or village school district to another upon receiving a formal request to do so from such board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 2, 1914.

HON. CARL SCHULER, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 1, 1914, you submitted to this department for an official opinion thereon, the following request:

> "According to the provisions in section 4736, General Code, must a survey be made by the county board through the county surveyor before districts can be thus rearranged or territory transferred? In other words, is the statute on this subject directory or mandatory?"

Relative to the matter about which you inquire, I desire to say that section 4736, of the General Code, as amended 104 O. L., page 138, specifies the powers and duties of county boards of education, as follows:

> "The county board of education shall as soon as possible after organizing make a survey of its district. The board shall arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. To this end the county board shall have power by resolution at any regular or special meeting to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. A map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor. In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation. In no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles. In changing boundary lines and other work of a like nature the county board shall ask the assistance of the county surveyor and the latter is hereby required to give the services of his office at the formal request of the county board."

The first sentence of said section provides in effect that the county board of education shall, as soon as possible after organizing, make a survey of its district. The term "survey" as employed in this part of the section, means a general survey or examination of the districts making up the county school district, by the county board of education, and does not mean a technical detailed survey of the entire district in the sense of a survey as made by a surveyor. However, I assume that your question is in regard to the proposition of whether or not a survey must be made by the county board through the county surveyor, before the county school boards can change district school lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. Said section contains a provision in the third sentence thereof, to the effect that the county board shall have power by resolution, at any regular or special meeting, to change school district lines or transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. A map designating such change shall be entered on the records of the boards and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor.

It further provides in changing boundary lines, that the board may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation.

The power of determining property valuation is somewhat discretionary on the part of the board, but must be made as nearly equal as possible. The act of changing school district lines and transferring territory from one district to another, may be done by resolution on the part of the board of education. However, a map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board and a copy of such resolution and map filed with the county auditor. These are all acts that may be done by the board of education, as pointed out by the section above quoted, to wit, 4736 of the General Code.

The only limitation in said section governing the above mentioned powers of such boards is contained in the last sentence of said section, which provides in effect that such county board of education in changing boundary lines and other work of a like nature, shall ask the assistance of the county surveyor, and the latter is thereby required to give the services of his office at the formal request of the county board.

The language employed in the last sentence of said section, seems to indicate that it is somewhat within the discretion of such county boards as to whether or not they shall call upon the county surveyor for his assistance by formally requesting the same. That is to say, if such county board resolves to change school district lines and transfer territory as provided in said section, and can do so without having to formally request the assistance of the county surveyor, then the mere act of the adoption of such resolution to so change district boundary lines and transfer territory from one district to another, makes effective such change provided a map designating such change is entered on the records of the board and a copy of the resolution and map are filed with the county auditor. However, if such board of education, after exercising its reasonable discretion, comes to the conclusion that it is necessary to have the assistance of the county surveyor in making a survey, before changing school district lines or transferring territory, and preparing a map designating such change or transfer, then it can call for the assistance of the county surveyor by formally requesting the same. Up to the point of determining whether or not there is real necessity for calling upon the county surveyor for his aid in changing rural district school lines, and transferring territory from one rural or village school district to another, I would say that section 4736 is directory rather than mandatory, and the board may forego making any formal request upon the county surveyor for his assistance. On the other hand, if such county board determines that it is necessary to call in the assistance of a surveyor, such board must call the county surveyor, and I would say as my legal view of the matter, that the section is mandatory in the requirement that the county surveyor shall make a survey for such board and prepare a map so designating the changes made in the changing of rural district lines and in the transferring of territory from one rural or village school district to another, upon receiving a formal request to do so from such board.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO STATUTORY PROVISION FOR DISSOLUTION OF BOYS' HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

There is no provision of statute whereby joint high school districts may be dissolved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1914.

HON. J. J. WEADOCK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 24, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

> "The Auglaize township school district, the school district of the village of Harrod, and the special school district of Westminster, Ohio, four years ago formed a joint high school. This summer, by a vote of the people, the village school district of Harrod, Ohio, was dissolved and became a part of the Auglaize township school district. The Auglaize township school district now desires to do away with the joint high school; whereas, the special school district of Westminster desires that the same be retained as heretofore. Kindly advise me how this school district can be dissolved. If a vote were taken by the special school district of Westminster and the township school district of Auglaize, the Auglaize township school district would be unanimous for doing away with the joint high school and the Westminster school district would be unanimous for retention of the high school. I am unable, in our General Code, to find any provision for the dissolution of a joint high school. This high school was formed under the provisions of section 7669 of the General Code. I have examined this matter very carefully and am unable to find any section of the General Code or any decision which decides this proposition."

Section 7669, General Code, mentioned by you, provides:

> "The boards of education of two or more adjoining township school districts, or of a township district and of a village or special district situated partially or wholly within the township, or of any two or more of such school districts, by a majority vote of the full membership of each board, may unite such districts for high school purposes. Each board also may submit the question of levying a tax on the property in their respective districts, for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting a building, and issue bonds, as is provided by law in case of erecting or repairing school houses; but such question of tax levy must carry in each district before it shall become operative in either. If such boards have sufficient money in the treasury to purchase a site and erect such building, or if there is a suitable building in either district owned by the board of education that can be used for a high school building it will not be necessary to submit the proposition to vote, and the boards may appropriate money from their funds for this purpose."

While the statute provides a clear method whereby adjoining rural school districts or a rural and a village school district may unite for high school purposes, there is no provision whereby such districts can be dissolved after forming such union.

There being no statutory provision for this purpose, the only thing that can be done is to look to the legislature for a legislative enactment providing for such dissolution, such as is provided for the decentralization of district schools in centralized township districts.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE DISTRICT TAX ASSESSOR TO RECEIVE PAY, AS PROPRIETOR OF A NEWSPAPER, FOR PUBLICATION UNDER SECTION 6252, GENERAL CODE.

There is no statute prohibiting a district tax assessor as a proprietor of a newspaper accepting and receiving pay for publication under section 6252, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1914.

HON. T. M. POTTER, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 7, 1914, as follows:

> "Section 6252 of the General Code provides, in reference to the publication of the sheriff's proclamation of elections, that the proclamation shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat.
> "We desire your information as to the following matter: Two newspapers of opposite politics are published at New Lexington, the county seat of Perry county. The proprietor of one of the newspapers is now the deputy district tax assessor of Perry county, Ohio, holding said position by appointment under the act creating the same.
> "The question is, can the district tax assessor, as proprietor of said newspaper, accept said publication and receive his pay for it?"

Sections 12910 and 12911 of the General Code, provides that any person holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance, for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or public institution, with which he is or is not connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than ten years.

These sections dealing only with contracts for the purchase of property, supplies and fire insurance, are clearly without application in this case.

Section 12912 forbidding certain officials to be interested in contracts, applies only to officers of a municipal corporation, members of council or township trustees, so that section too fails of application in the case submitted by you.

A careful examination of the statutes fails to reveal any other section or sections applying to the situation presented, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the district tax assessor, as proprietor of a newspaper, can accept legal advertising and receive pay for the same.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY IN THE MATTER OF BOND ISSUE FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF INTERCOUNTY HIGHWAYS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of the commission I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners of Columbiana county and the township trustees of Perry township in said county in the matter of the issuance of bonds of Columbiana county in the sum of $3,900.00 for the purpose of providing funds for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 86 in said township and county.

I hereby certify that I am of the opinion that the proceedings taken by the board of county commissioners of Columbiana county and the said board of township trustees of Perry township in said county are in accordance with the provisions of the statutes of Ohio in such case made and provided, and that said bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of law and constitute a good and legal obligation against the county of Columbiana in accordance with the terms specified therein.

The bonds themselves have been submitted to me and this opinion constitutes an approval of the form of the bonds as well as of the proceedings which have been taken in the matter.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION—AUTHORITY OF THE GOVERNOR AND THE DIRECTING COMMISSIONER TO TAKE FULL CHARGE OF THE OHIO EXHIBIT AT THIS EXPOSITION.

Under the provisions of an act of the general assembly, dated May 31, 1911, the governor and the directing commissioner of the Panama-Pacific international exposition are the sole and exclusive judges of the manner and method of exhibiting the live stock, agricultural products, resources and opportunities of the state at the exposition, and they may in their discretion install such exhibits as they deem proper. The matter of adequately representing the state at the exposition rests entirely with them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1914.

THE HON. D. B. TORPY, Directing Commissioner, the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 3, 1914, you submit the following:

> "At a meeting of the Ohio commission to the Panama-Pacific international exposition, held at the office of Governor James M. Cox, December 2, 1914, the writer was requested to ask for your written opinion as to the proper interpretation of the following statute passed by the last general assembly of the state of Ohio at its extraordinary session—being part of a bill to make sundry appropriations:

"'Panama-Pacific international exposition:

"'Exposition commissioner for the purpose of installing, maintaining and exhibiting the live stock, agricultural products, resources and opportunities of this state at the Panama-Pacific international exposition in San Francisco in the year 1915.....$25,000.00.'"

In order that the question involved may be clearly understood, it will be well briefly to refer to the history of the legislation creating the commission to have charge of the installation and maintenance of an exhibit of the products and resources of the state of Ohio at the Panama-Pacific international exposition.

On May 31, 1911, the general assembly passed an act for this purpose providing that the governor of the state was appointed a commissioner to be known as the Panama-Pacific international exposition commissioner, for the purpose of installing, maintaining and exhibiting the products and resources of this state at the international exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915. This act contains the following language:

"as such commissioner he shall have full and exclusive charge and control of said exhibit, and the maintenance and installation thereof, with power to appoint and employ deputy commissioners, and all other persons necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, upon such terms and salaries as he shall deem to be fair and reasonable."

In the same act an appropriation was made for the purpose of paying the expenses of the commissioner.

On January 28, 1914, another act was passed to make further provision for the purposes outlined in the first statute. This may be found in 104 O. L. 4. After reciting that the governor had been authorized to act as Panama-Pacific exposition commissioner for the purposes named, with power to have full and exclusive charge and control of the exhibit and its maintenance and installation and the power to appoint deputy commissioners, and that a board of deputy commissioners and a directing commissioner had been so appointed, it provided that the governor was authorized and empowered to appoint a special commissioner as directing commissioner with such exclusive powers and duties as the governor might confer upon him. The sum of $100,000.00 was appropriated in this act for the purpose of erecting a building. The board of deputy commissioners and the directing commissioner were required to make a report of their proceedings and expenditures to the governor monthly, to be by him transmitted to the general assembly with such suggestions as he might deem important regarding the provisions for complete and creditable representation of the state at such international exposition. At the same session of the general assembly an appropriation was made in the language specified in your question.

It seems clear to me from a reading of these statutes that the governor as exposition commissioner was to have the sole and exclusive charge and control of the exhibit and its installation; and that he was later vested with authority to appoint a directing commissioner upon whom he might confer such powers and duties as might be deemed expedient and proper by the governor.

Under language such as this, it seems to me that the governor and the directing commissioner under him are the sole and exclusive judges of the manner and method of exhibiting the live stock, agricultural products, resources and opportunities of the state at the Panama-Pacific international exposition, and that they may, in their discretion, install such exhibits as they deem proper. In other words, they are vested with the discretionary power of determining what is best to exhibiting resources of the state of Ohio, and their judgment in matters of this kind is absolutely final. What they deem proper to exhibit should be exhibited and what they think improper and inadvisable to be shown cannot be made part of Ohio's exhibit. The matter of adequately representing the state at the exposition rests entirely in them.

Trusting that this fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIABILITY OF COUNTIES IN CASE OF SUIT BROUGHT AGAINST THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS IN THEIR INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY FOR DAMAGES.

A county is not liable for the costs in suits brought against county commissioners in their individual capacity for damages, nor for the fees of attorneys employed by the commissioners to defend them in such suits. Claims of this character cannot be paid from the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1914.

HON. A. M. HENDERSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 3d, which reads as follows:

> "Sometime ago suit was instituted by David E. Griffith, former probate judge of this county, against each one of our commissioners individually for damages which Judge Griffith claimed on account of the commissioners refusing to permit Judge Griffith to issue from his office certain documents in connection with marriage licenses for which he was charging a personal fee. The commissioners in this connection acted as they supposed within their power as commissioners and these suits have recently been withdrawn it appears at defendants' costs. The costs in each action amount to about $12.75. At the time of preparing for a defense in these cases, there being three of them, the commissioners felt, owing to the local situation, that it would be better to employ outside counsel rather than have the prosecuting attorney handle the matter, which was done, this incurring attorneys' fees. As I understand the matter no resolution was adopted by the commission concerning any part of this transaction in view of the fact that the action was taken on or about the time that two members of the old commission retired. The commissioners feel that under the circumstances they ought not to be required to pay these charges from their personal funds and believe they should be paid by the county.
> "Kindly consider this question and advise what position I may consistently take on this question in view of the statutes governing claims upon the county."

Under section 2408 of the General Code county commissioners are liable in their official capacity for damages received by reason of their negligence or carelessness in not keeping any road or bridge established by them in proper repair. It has been held by our supreme court that the liability against county commissioners in their official capacity, for damages, cannot be extended beyond the plain terms of the statute creating it. See Ebert vs. Commissioners, 75 O. S. 474; and Commissioners vs. Storage Company, 75 O. S. 244. In view of these holdings the county commissioners would not be liable in their official capacity in damages on account of their action in refusing to permit the probate judge to issue certain documents from his office; and it follows from this that the county is not liable for the payment of these costs; and the same should not be paid from the county treasury.

The prosecuting attorney is by statute constituted the legal adviser of county officers. If it is necessary to employ additional counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney this can be done under the provisions of section 2414, General Code, by the county commissioners upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney. The services of counsel so employed are limited to assisting "the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards, in their official capacity."

Since the suits in question were brought against the commissioners in their individual capacity, and not in their official capacity, they would not be authorized to pay the fees of the attorneys employed to defend them from the county treasury, even though the prosecuting attorney had made a written request for such assistance, and a resolution providing for the employment of counsel had been duly passed by the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE CANNOT DELEGATE POWER OF EXECUTING CONTRACTS TO HIS SECRETARY.

The director of public service cannot delegate to his secretary the power of executing contracts because the statutes expressly stipulate that he shall execute them, but if he adopts a signature and directs his secretary to affix it to vouchers or other official papers, which do not bind the municipal corporation, the same is legal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of September 1st, wherein you ask the following question:

> "May the director of service of a city authorize his secretary to attach the signature of the director to contracts, vouchers, and other official papers, or must the official signature of said director be attached by him in order to make legal his allowance or approval of bills and contracts?"

In reply thereto I beg to say that section 4323, General Code, provides for the appointment of a director of public service in the following words:

> "In each city there shall be a department of public service which shall be administered by a director of public service. * * *"

Section 4324 provides that:

> "The director of public service * * * shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. * * *"

Section 4334 provides as to how contracts shall be made, namely:

*"All contracts made by the director of public service shall be executed by him in the name of the city. * * "

The director of public service is the appointed and delegated agent of the municipal corporation and as such he cannot redelegate those powers and duties which strictly pertain to his office and through him bind the city.

In the case of Knauss vs. Columbus, 13 O. D. (N. P.) 200, the second paragraph of the syllabus reads as follows:

"Where a particular public agent or official is charged with the performance of certain duties, these duties cannot be voluntarily assumed by any other person nor delegated to to any other person by him who is charged with the discharge of the duty."

This is the rule that applies to public officers in those cases in which the proper execution of the office requires on his part the exercise of judgment and discretion, the presumption being that he was chosen because of his competency and fitness to exercise judgment and discretion, and unless power to substitute another in his place has been given to him, he cannot delegate his duties to another. This would be strictly true in reference to the execution of contracts which bind the municipal corporation of which the director of public service is the agent.

I appreciate, however, that there is a relaxation of this rule in reference to ministerial or mechanical duties where it can make no difference to anyone, and is no risk to the city, who does the physical act of signing "vouchers or other official papers." Mechem's Public Offices and Officers, section 568 says:

"The rule * * * is that the performance of ministerial duties may, unless expressly prohibited, be properly delegated to another.

"Where, however, the law expressly requires the act to be performed by the officer in person it cannot, though ministerial, be delegated to another."

If the director of public service has adopted a signature and with his permission his secretary affixes the same to certain official papers, I can see no irregularity or illegality in that performance. In fact, I believe it would be well nigh impossible for a director of public service in a large city to give the actual time daily to the perfunctory signing of official papers and this ministerial duty could legally be done by his secretary. As to "other official papers" which you mention in your letter I assume that you mean those which would not bind the corporation as would contracts, and as the statutes do not touch upon them it is my opinion that they are in the discretionary class which the director of public service can delegate to his secretary for execution, and the same would be legal.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that as section 4334 expressly provides that the director of public service shall execute all contracts, he is without power to delegate this duty and the same must be performed by himself, and for the reasons stated above I am of the opinion that the "other official papers" which, I take it, do not bind the city, may legally be signed by the secretary of the director of public service.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ISSUANCE OF BONDS FOR THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF MONTGOMERY COUNTY FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT PURPOSES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the commission's request I have examined the transcript of the proceedings for the issuance of bonds by the county commissioners of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the following amounts:

"Improvement of Troy Pike No. 61, $21,600 (of which the commission, as I understand it, is to take $6,480).

"Improvement of Salem Pike No. 62, $24,000 (of which the commission is to take $4,000).

"Improvement of Covington Pike No. 63, $24,000 (of which the commission is to take $14,400)."

So far as the proceedings for issuance of the bonds are concerned I hereby certify that the same have been legal in all respects, and that the bonds constitute a good and legal obligation of the county of Montgomery, to be paid in accordance with the terms therein specified.

The industrial commission has authority to purchase a portion of a bond issue as well as an entire issue, and by amendment to the resolution of issuance in each of these cases it is made clear that the present offer of the bonds to the industrial commission is antecedent to the advertisement of the same for public sale; therefore there can be no objection to the purchase by the commission of a part only of each issue.

The transcripts, which I return herewith, should be corrected and supplemented in certain details. In the first place, those which I hand you consist, in part, of the original papers which belong in the files of Montgomery county and must be returned thereto. Certified copies of these papers should be substituted by the commissioners of Montgomery county so that the transcript on file with the bonds in the office of the treasurer of state may be kept complete.

In the second place, the certificate of the county auditor as to the financial condition of Montgomery county and Harrison township covers the entire issue, as does the opinion of the prosecuting attorney and this opinion. Copies of these three papers should be made so that the transcript of each separate issue will show their presence.

The bonds themselves have not been examined since the passage of the amendatory resolution of November 27, 1914 (see transcript). This resolution which makes certain material changes in the terms of the original resolution, providing for the issuance of bonds, authorizes the bonds to be altered on their face so as to conform to the amendment. The bonds should be examined to see that this has been done before they are finally accepted by the commission.

Subject to the foregoing qualifications, my advice is that the bonds in question may be accepted for investment by the commission.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES FOLLETT,
First Assistant Attorney General.

ORDINANCE FOR THE PURPOSE OF A BOND ISSUE IS INEFFECTIVE WHERE IT IS SUBMITTED FOR AN INITIATIVE PETITION AND FAILS TO RECEIVE A TWO-THIRDS VOTE IN ITS FAVOR.

Where an ordinance for the purpose of issuing bonds is submitted to the electors by initiative petition, and fails to receive a two-thirds vote in its favor, it is ineffective as an act of final legislation. If the ordinance proposes to provide for the issuance of bonds, it must be regarded as an attempt at final legislation and not as a mere resolution of necessity; such ordinance which fails to provide for the levy and collection of taxes to pay the interest and sinking fund charges on account of the indebtedness which it is proposed to create, fails to specify the length of time which the bonds shall run, the par value of the bonds, the interest they shall bear, etc., is on these accounts alone invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HON. FRED W. WARNER, City Solicitor, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of a letter from Hon. Fred L. Carhart, assistant city solicitor, requesting my opinion as to the validity of an ordinance of the city of Marion to issue bonds in the sum of $500,000.00 "for the purpose of providing the city * * * and its inhabitants with water," proposed by initiative petition, submitted to the electors at the November, 1914, election, and receiving thereat a majority of affirmative votes, less than two-thirds of the entire number of electors voting thereon.

There are a number of reasons why this attempted legislation is ineffective. It will not be necessary, however, to dwell upon all of them. In the first place, there is considerable doubt as to the joint effect of the municipal initiative and referendum law and the so-called "Longworth act," section 3939 et seq., General Code. I have arrived at the conclusion, which you will find expressed in the enclosed opinion, to Hon. C. A. Leist, solicitor of the city of Circleville, Ohio, that an ordinance may be initiated for the purpose of issuing bonds under the Longworth act; but that such ordinance requires for its passage an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the electors voting on the proposition, in order to authorize the bonds to be issued.

The proposed ordinance of the city of Marion does not purport to be a mere resolution of necessity, such as council might have passed under the Longworth act, and could not be sustained as such; it must stand or fall as an act of final legislation, and as such it must fail, for the reasons stated.

There are other reasons tending to the same conclusion, as that the ordinance does not provide for the annual levy and collection of taxes in an amount sufficient to meet the interest and sinking fund charges of the bond issue, as required by article XII, section 11, of the amended constitution; nor does it even fulfill the formal requirements of an ordinance issuing bonds by stipulating the denominations in which the bonds shall issue, the time for which the bonds shall run, the installments in which they shall fall due, the rate of interest which they shall bear, and other essential matters pertaining to any bond issue.

For all these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that the ordinance is of no effect.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE ASSISTANT ADJUTANT GENERAL AND THE ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTER GENERAL ARE EACH ENTITLED TO PAY FOR THE RANK OF COLONEL WHEN CALLED INTO ACTUAL SERVICE.

An assistant adjutant general and an assistant quartermaster general, each ordered to report to a brigadier general, to perform such duties as shall be assigned them by such brigadier general, in actual service, are each entitled to pay prescribed for the rank of colonel in actual service.

Should such officers have received their regular compensation as assistant adjutant general and assistant quartermaster general they may be paid the difference between such regular compensation and compensation as officers in actual service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 18th you submitted for my opinion the following:

> "Attached you will find a voucher submitted to this department by the department of adjutant general, purporting to pay two employes of the adjutant general's department extra compensation for services rendered during the flood.
> "Also attached you will find payrolls showing that they received their regular compensation as state employes at the time of the service for which they ask pay in the present voucher.
> "Kindly advise me whether or not they are entitled to this extra compensation."

The voucher submitted to you is one submitted on behalf of the assistant adjutant general and assistant quartermaster general respectively and called for the difference between the salaries of such two officers as assistant quartermaster general and assistant adjutant general respectively, and the salaries which said officers would be entitled to by reason of their rank as "Colonel" and their years of service when in actual service.

The facts presented to me disclose that Col. E. M. Peoples was appointed as assistant adjutant general and Col. J. M. Bingham was appointed assistant quartermaster general and the term of service of Col. E. M. Peoples in the Ohio national guard is five years and the term of service of Col. Bingham in the Ohio national guard twenty years.

Col. Peoples was appointed under section 83 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The assistant adjutant general shall serve in the office of the adjutant general and aid him by performing such duties as the adjutant general assigns him. In the absence or disability of the adjutant general, he shall perform all or such portion of the duties of the adjutant general as the latter may expressly delegate to him."

and Col. Bingham was appointed under section 84 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"The adjutant general shall have an assistant quartermaster general of the grade of colonel, who shall be appointed and commissioned by the governor and serve in the office of the adjutant general and shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges and allowances of other officers of corresponding rank and grade of the Ohio national guard. The assistant quartermaster general shall perform all duties devolving upon an assistant quartermaster general, and aid the adjutant general in the performance of such duties as the adjutant general may assign him. Under the direction of the adjutant general, he shall have charge of all ordinance and quartermaster stores and of the military property of the state."

Section 2249, General Code, fixes the salary of the assistant adjutant general at $2,000.00, and the salary of the assistant quartermaster general at $2,000.00.

During the flood of 1913 and while Col. Peoples was acting as assistant adjutant general and Col. Bingham as assistant quartermaster general a certain order was issued by the adjutant general by command of the governor, being special order No. 61, dated March 25, 1913, of which the following, in part, is a copy:

"Par. 35. Colonel Evart M. Peoples, assistant adjutant general of Ohio, and Colonel John M. Bingham, assistant quartermaster general of Ohio, are directed to report to Brigadier General John C. Speaks, second brigade, O. N. G., in command of the troops, Ohio national guard, under the provisions of paragraph 10, S. O. No. 61, c. s.

"They will perform such duty as may be assigned to them by General Speaks in connection with this service. They will perform such duty as pertains to their regular offices as can be performed without interference with this detail.

"This service will continue until relieved from duty.

"The travel enjoined and expense incurred are necessary in the military service."

In pursuance of said order both Col. Peoples and Col. Bingham served under Brigadier General Speaks twenty-four total days from said March 25th to April 17th inclusive.

During said time said Col. Peoples and Col. Bingham received and receipted for the regular salary due to each of said officers respectively as assistant adjutant general and assistant quartermaster general. They claim, however, that since they were ordered into actual service and placed under the command of Brigadier General Speaks they should be entitled to the pay due their rank and years of service provided for such rank and service when in actual service, and, therefore, should be entitled to the difference between the amount which each has received and the amount which each should have received for compensation while in actual service.

Section 83, General Code, above quoted, provides that the assistant adjutant general shall serve in the office of the adjutant general and aid him by performing such duties as the adjutant general assigns him.

Now it is to be noted:

First: That in contemplation of section 83 of the General Code the assistant adjutant general is to serve in the office of the adjutant general, and he is by virtue of his position to aid the adjutant general by performing such duties as the adjutant general assigns him. In other words, that it is only contemplated that the assistant adjutant general shall perform the ordinary duties of the adjutant general which the adjutant general decides to place in his charge, and it is not contemplated by said section that the assistant adjutant general shall go into actual service as assistant adjutant general. Therefore, when the special order ordering him to report to Brigadier General Speaks was issued and he was directed to perform such duties as said General Speaks should assign him, he went into actual service not as assistant adjutant general but with the rank of colonel in actual service. I do not think that the fact that he was required to perform such duties as pertains to his regular office "as can be performed without interference with this detail" would in any respect change the fact that when he was in the field he was in actual service as colonel and not as assistant adjutant general.

Second: In regard to the assistant quartermaster general, section 84 of the General Code prescribes that he "shall perform all duties devolving upon an assistant quartermaster general and aid the adjutant general in the performance of such duties as the adjutant general may assign him." As I understand the facts when Col. Bingham, the assistant quartermaster general, was ordered into the field in actual service he was not performing the duties of an assistant quartermaster general, nor in any way aiding the adjutant general in the performance of his duties, but was, as was Col. Peoples, performing those duties as a field officer in actual service, and the mere fact that he too was ordered to perform such duties as pertains to his office as assistant quartermaster general "as can be performed without interference with this detail" would not in any way change the fact that he too was acting as colonel under the command of Brigadier General Speaks.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that both Col. Peoples and Col. Bingham would have been entitled to have demanded compensation as colonel in actual service.

As before stated both Col. Peoples and Col. Bingham accepted the regular compensation attached to their offices during the period when they were in actual service, and the question arises as to whether or not in so doing they have elected to accept the regular compensation pertaining to the office as assistant adjutant general and assistant quartermaster general instead of the compensation due them for actual service, and thus estopped themselves from claiming anything in addition to their regular compensation. Since Col. Peoples and Col. Bingham are only claiming the difference between the two salaries and are not claiming both salaries I do not think it just that the doctrine of estoppel should be invoked in order to prevent their receiving what I consider in law to be justly due them, and I, therefore, think that it would be right and proper for you to pay the voucher calling solely for the difference in the compensation. As I understand the matter the national guards were called upon in aid of the civil authorities as prescribed in section 5292 of the General Code, and that the amount figured in the voucher as the compensation for said officers when in actual service is the same per diem "as allowed commissioned officers of like grade in the army of the United States."

I am herewith returning the voucher which you handed me.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DEFINITION OF THE TERM "LIBRARY STAFF," AS USED IN SUBDIVISION 6 (a) OF SECTION 8 OF THE CIVIL SERVICE ACT—PUBLIC LIBRARY IN CITY OF CINCINNATI IS A COUNTY INSTITUTION.

The term "library staff" as used in subdivision 6 (a) of section 8 of the civil service act, does not include all the employes of a library. It applies to those who are engaged in the handling of the books; it means more than a janitor or porter. The duties of each position must be considered to determine whether it comes within the term "library staff."

The public library in the city of Cincinnati is a county institution, and the employes thereof, who are in the classified service, are subject to the jurisdiction of the state civil service commission.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 24, 1914, Hon. Walter M. Schoenle, city solicitor of Cincinnati, Ohio, submits the following inquiry:

> "The question has arisen whether or not the employes of the public library located in this city are subject to the jurisdiction of the municipal civil service commission or the state civil service commission. It is claimed on one hand that the employes of the public library should be considered employes of the board of education of the school district of the city of Cincinnati, while on the other hand it is claimed that the public library is a county institution and its employes are therefore subject to the state civil service commission.
> "As the rights of the state are involved in this question, I take the liberty of asking you to pass upon the matter."

Under date of October 1, 1914, Hon. Washington T. Porter, a member of the board of trustees for the library, gives a comprehensive history of the laws under which the library in question has been organized and under which it is now operated.

Section 8 of the civil service act, section 486-8, General Code, places ten classes of positions in the unclassified service. In subdivision 6 (a) the following are placed in the unclassified service:

> "All presidents, superintendents, directors, teachers and instructors in the public schools, colleges and universities; the library staff of any library in the state supported wholly or in part at public expense."

The library in question is supported at public expense. This is shown by section 14995, General Code, hereinafter quoted.

Therefore, by virtue of section 8, subdivision 6 (a) of the civil service act the "library staff" of the public library in Cincinnati is in the unclassified service.

The term "library staff" is not defined by the civil service act. It must be given its ordinary meaning.

In section 8 of the civil service act, the legislature has used the words "employes" "clerks" and "officers," and it is to be presumed that the legislature had in mind these terms when it adopted the provision as to a "library staff." If the legislature had used the word "employes" or the words "employes and officers," there could be no doubt as to the intention.

The term "library staff" does not necessarily mean all the employes of the library, and if the legislature had intended to exempt all the employes of a library, it could have easily so expressed it.

It is my conclusion that the term "library staff" does not include all the employes of a library. It includes those employes who have to do with the handling of the books. It means something more than a janitor or a porter.

It would be difficult to make a general rule applicable to all the positions. Each position would have to be considered separately.

As some of these employes are in the classified service it will be necessary to determine under whose jurisdiction they are.

The act under which the public library in question is operated is an old one, and was passed at a time when special acts as to classification of municipalities were considered valid. The act as now in existence contains a reference to this former classification.

It is not necessary, however, to this opinion to determine the validity of the act. It has been in operation a large number of years and property rights secured thereunder. The validity of the act will not be considered.

Section 15060, General Code (3999 Bates), provides for the manner of appointment of the trustees of this library.

This section reads in part:

> "Provided, that in cities of the first grade of the first class upon the expiration of the terms of office of the trustee of the public library therein, heretofore, appointed under this section, as amended April 30, 1891, there shall be appointed as successors to said board, a board of trustees of said library consisting of seven person, as follows: Two by the board of education of the school district within which such city is situated, two by the board having charge of the high schools of such city, two by the directors of the university in such city, one of each of said appointees shall hold his office for two years, and one for three years; and one by the judges of the court of common pleas of the county within which such city is situated, who shall hold his office for a period of three years; and thereafter said boards and said judges shall, upon the expiration of the terms of office of said appointees, and each three years thereafter, appoint successors to said trustees."

Section 14993, General Code (3999a Bates), provides:

> "Each and every resident of the county within which is situated any city of the first grade of the first class, having therein established a public library, shall be entitled to the free use of such library, reading rooms and any branch or department of the same, and all the privileges thereof, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent herewith, as the board of trustees of such library may prescribe."

By virtue of this section every resident of the county of Hamilton is entitled to the free use of the library.

Section 14995, General Code (3999c Bates), provides for a tax levy for the library. Said section reads:

"For the purpose of increasing, maintaining and managing the public library in cities of the first grade of the first class, for which a board of trustees shall have been appointed, as provided in section 3999 (Bates R. S.), the said board of trustees may levy annually a tax of not exceeding five-tenths of a mill on each dollar valuation of the taxable property of the county wherein is situated such city, to be assessed, collected and paid in the same manner as are other taxes levied throughout the county. Said levy shall be certified by said board of trustees to the auditor of the county in which said city is situated, and shall be placed by said auditor on the tax duplicate and collected as other taxes. The money realized from said levy, and all moneys received or collected by said trustees for the library, shall be placed in the treasury of said county, subject to the order of said board of trustees of said library. Said fund shall be known as the library fund of said county, of which the county treasurer shall be the custodian, and no money shall be drawn therefrom, except upon the requisition of the board of trustees of said library, certified by the president and secretary of said board, directed to the county auditor, who shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer therefor. Any part of said funds unexpended during any year shall remain to the credit of said library fund."

The funds for this library are raised by the county. The use of the library is co-extensive with the county. These determine the nature of the library and make it a county institution.

The fact that a majority of the trustees are appointed by the boards of the school districts does not change the nature of the institution.

Under the civil service act, the state civil service commission has charge of the "state service." This term is defined in subdivision 2 of section 1 of the civil service act, section 486-1, General Code, as follows:

"The 'state service' shall include all such offices in the service of the state or the counties thereof, except the cities and city school districts."

The employes in question are paid from funds raised by taxation throughout the county, and are therefore in the service of the county. The funds are not raised by the city or by the city school district.

Therefore, the employes of the library in the city of Cincinnati, who are in the classified service, are subject to the jurisdiction of the state civil service commission.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

UNDER WHAT STATUTE THE SALARIES OF FORMER TOWNSHIP BOARDS OF EDUCATION ARE TO BE PAID FOR THE YEAR 1914.

Members of former township boards of education take their salaries for the year 1914 under the statute prior to amendment. After that they take under the amended statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HON. OLIN M. FARBER, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of August 29th, wherein you request my opinion, as follows:

> "A member of a township board of education during the year 1914, attended a regular meeting of the board on the first Monday of January, February, March, April, May, June, July and August. Presuming that he will attend four more regular meetings of the board during the year 1914, what compensation will he be entitled to for such services performed during the year 1914?"

Section 4715, General Code, prior to its amendment in 104 Ohio Laws, was as follows:

> "Each member of the township board of education shall receive as compensation two dollars for each meeting actually attended by such member, but for not more than ten meetings in any year. The compensation allowed members of the board shall be paid from the contingent fund."

This section now appears on page 135 of 104 Ohio Laws, as follows:

> "Each member of the board of education of rural school districts, except such districts as contain less than sixteen square miles, shall receive as compensation two dollars for each regular meeting actually attended by such member, but for not more than five meetings in any year. The compensation allowed members of the board shall be paid from the contingent fund."

The former township school districts, under the new law, will constitute rural districts. The members of boards of education of the township districts remain in office, however, and their powers and duties are preserved to them by section 4735, General Code, until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified. This section appears on page 138 of 104 Ohio Laws, as follows:

> "The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

Your question presents an entanglement of legal difficulties. Whatever theory of solution is adopted in answer to the difficulty presented meets with an obstruction of serious legal consequence, and I am unable to arrive at any conclusion which presents a clearly smooth and satisfactory legal answer. I, therefore, feel urged to present that solution which has the best appearance of fairness and logical practicability. To my mind, the best construction that the conflicting provisions can be given would be the holding that the officers in question be permitted to draw the salaries prescribed by statute prior to the amendment above referred to, for the entire year of 1914. I, therefore, advise that the officers be permitted to draw their salaries for the year 1914 under section 4715, General Code, under assumption that said statute remains in force and effect until the first Monday of January, 1915. The officers, therefore, will receive $2.00 per meeting for each meeting actually attended during the year 1914, but for not more than ten meetings in the year. After that time, the compensation prescribed by the amended statute above quoted may, in equity and fairness, be permitted to control.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICATIONS—IN MUNICIPALITIES WHERE NOTICES MUST BE PUBLISHED IN PAPERS OF OPPOSITE POLITICS, A NEWSPAPER IS ENTITLED TO PUBLICATION SO LONG AS IT DOES NOT DEMAND MORE THAN THE LEGAL RATE.

In matters requiring publication in two newspapers of opposite politics in municipality, if one of such newspapers being the only newspaper of opposite politics in such municipality, and fully meeting all other requirements, refuses to print such matters except at the maximum legal rate, such refusal is not within the meaning of section 4676, General Code, and such newspaper is entitled to the publication so long as it does not demand more than the legal rate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HON. ELMER E. BODEN, City Solicitor, Barberton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of October 22d with references to the legal advertising received. The statement of facts as given in your letter reads as follows:

> "There are two republican and one democratic newspaper published in Barberton, Ohio. At the beginning of the present year we entered into contract with one of the republican newspapers to do our legal advertising at 50 cents per square for the first insertion and 25 cents per square for each subsequent insertion. The democratic newspaper refuses to print the two paper matter except at the maximum rate of $1.00 per square for the first insertion and 50 cents per square for each subsequent insertion.
> "The Akron Times, a democratic paper, has a large circulation in the city of Barberton and is published in Akron, which is in the county. The Times sends a reporter here every day, and one section on one page is headed Barberton News.
> "Can we, according to law, publish our ordinances and resolutions in the Akron Times?"

In answer to the above, would say that in an opinion given to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of September 2, 1914, I held:

That if two or more newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in the municipality and at least one side of such newspapers is printed therein, then publication must be made in two of such newspapers of opposite politics; section 4229, General Code, requiring that if two or more newspapers of opposite politics are published and of general circulation in the municipality and at least one side of such newspaper is printed therein, then publication must be made in two of such newspapers of opposite politics; section 4229, General Code, requiring publication and general circulation, and section 6255, General Code, requiring printing of one side therein. (Copy of opinion inclosed herewith.)

If the democratic newspaper published at Barberton meets the requirements just quoted, and is the only newspaper of opposite politics from the two republican papers you mention, then publication should be made in said newspaper, unless its refusal to contract at less than the maximum legal rate can be considered a "refusal" within the meaning of section 4676 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "Where in this title a notice is directed to be published in a newspaper, and no such paper is published at the place mentioned, or if such newspaper is published at the place, but the publisher refuses on tender of his usual charge for a similar notice, to insert it in his newspaper, a publication in any newspaper of general circulation at such place shall be sufficient. Nothing in this section shall be construed to dispense with posters where they are provided for." (R. S., Sec. 1537.)

I am of the opinion that the fact that the democratic newspaper will not contract at less than the maximum legal rate does not constitute a refusal as contemplated in said section. In other words, that so long as the democratic newspaper does not demand more than the legal rate, it is entitled to the publication.

Therefore, my opinion is that you would have no legal authority for publishing in the Akron Times.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOND ISSUE UNDER LONGWORTH ACT FOR THE PURCHASE OF AUTOMOBILE HOSE TRUCK.

Bonds may be issued under the Longworth act for the purchase of an automobile hose truck.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

HON. LEONARD S. WISE, Village Solicitor, Chicago Junction, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have acknowledged receipt of your letter of November 21st, requesting my opinion upon the question as to whether or not a village may issue bonds under the "Longworth act," so-called, for the purpose of purchasing an automobile hose truck.

I assume that your question relates solely to the interpretation of the statute as bearing upon the power to issue bonds for the specific purpose mentioned and does not involve any question as to the limitations upon the borrowing power imposed by other sections of the same act.

While section 3939, General Code, which is the operative section of the "Longworth act," is in terms limited to a grant of power to issue bonds for the purpose of purchasing fire engines (sub-section 27 of section 3939), yet, when this specific provision is read in connection with sub-section 2 of the same section, authorizing the issuance of bonds for "extending, enlarging, improving * * * or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it," the provision seems in effect to be enlarged so that the power to borrow money for fire department equipment is not to be strictly limited to the purchasing of fire engines and the other particular kinds of apparatus mentioned in sub-section 27, but extends to all apparatus used by a fire department whether, strictly speaking, the same is a fire engine or not. Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66.

It follows, therefore, that the village may issue bonds under the "Longworth act" for the purchase of the apparatus in question.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE LIQUOR LICENSE COMMISSION TO INCREASE COMPENSATION OF MEMBERS OF THE COUNTY LIQUOR LICENSE BOARD.

When the state liquor licensing commission has provided monthly compensation for members of the county liquor licensing boards to continue until further action of the board, such state board has the right and authority to increase the aforesaid compensation at a subsequent date, and before the expiration of the term for which said members were appointed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1914.

THE HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 29th, 1914, you inquire:

> "May the salary of a member of a county liquor licensing board be legally increased or diminished during his term of office?"

In this connection you refer to section 20 of article II of the constitution, reading as follows:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

Section 8 of the act to provide for the license to traffic in intoxicating liquors, 103 O. L., 216, provides that the salary of the county licensing commissioners shall be fixed in the case of each county board by the state liquor licensing board, subject to the approval of the governor, but in no case shall it exceed five thousand dollars per annum for each commissioner, payable monthly.

Whether the section of the constitution referred to by you is applicable to county liquor licensing boards, is not here material in view of the facts which I shall hereinafter present, but it may be argued with great force that the words "office" and "officers," as used in the constitution, have reference to constitutional and not statutory offices and officers.

"See State ex rel. Ferry vs. Board of Education, 21 C. C., 785.
"State vs. Kalb, 50 Wis., 178.
"County vs. Timms, 32 Neb., 272."

The facts to which I have referred as altering the situation have been presented by the state liquor licensing commission upon request therefor. They show that on September 2, 1913, "it was moved by Mr. Secrest, and seconded by Mr. Clendening, that the monthly salary of each commissioner should be fixed as follows: (Here follow the various amounts fixed) said salaries to be subject to the approval of the governor and to begin September 1st and to continue until further action of this board."

This resolution was unanimously adopted upon roll call. From this it is very clear that there was no annual salary fixed for the county licensing commissioners, but, on the contrary, the amount specified in the resolution was to be paid monthly, and was to continue until the board saw fit to change the same. From this it is very apparent that the action of the state liquor licensing commission was in this respect only tentative, as at the time it was impossible to ascertain exactly what the commissioners were earning. Temporary compensation was provided for them until such time as the commission had sufficient facts upon which to determine what would be proper as a regular salary.

This method of providing for the payment of the commissioners could not possibly bring the situation within the purview of section 20 of article II, even if it were applicable here. There is a vast difference between the fixing of a permanent salary, and the providing of monthly compensation which may be altered at any time at the pleasure of the appointing board. That it was not the view of the state commission that the salary first fixed should be permanent, will be apparent from a resolution adopted by it on November 29th, 1913. It was moved by Mr. Clendening, and seconded by Mr. Secrest, that "the monthly compensation of each county licensing commissioner of the following counties be increased $20.00 per month, said increased salary to be subject to the approval of the governor, to begin with the month of December, and to continue until further action of the board: (Here follow the counties.)"

This resolution was unanimously carried.

From the foregoing state of facts, I have not the slightest doubt that the so-called salary fixed on September 2, 1913, was properly altered on November 29, 1913, and that the action of the liquor licensing commissioners in their original resolution was not only proper, but highly commendable in view of the fact that it was impossible at that time to determine the amount of work which would devolve upon the various county liquor licensing commissioners, and hence it would not be possible to provide compensation commensurate with their services until experience had shown the requirements placed upon them by their position.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE OF A CITY, UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTIONS 4167, 4171 AND 4172, GENERAL CODE, TO SELL CEMETERY LOTS—DISPOSITION OF MONEY RECEIVED FOR SAID LOTS.

The director of public service of a city, under favor of sections 4167, 4171 and 4172, General Code, has power to sell cemetery lots, receive the money therefor and expend the same for authorized purposes without an appropriation of the same being first made by the city council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 9th, in which you inquire:

"Must proceeds arising from the sale of lots owned by a city for cemetery purposes, be appropriated by council prior to their expenditure by the director of service, or has said director the authority to expend such moneys as he deems to be necessary?"

Section 4167 of the General Code reads:

"The director of public service shall have entire charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots, and of the laying off and embellishing the grounds. He may receive donations by bequest, devise, or deed of gift, or otherwise, or money, or other property, the principal or interest of which is to be used for the enlargement, improvement, embellishment, or care of the cemetery grounds generally, or for any particular part or parts, lot or lots therein, as the donor directs, or as the director may from time to time determine if no direction is given. He shall sell lots, receive payment therefor, direct the improvements, and make the expenditures, under such rules and orders as he prescribes, and invest, manage, and control property received by donations and surplus funds in his hands from any source whatever."

Sections 4171 and 4172 of the General Code, read:

"Section 4171. On the first Monday of January, each year, or as soon thereafter as is practicable, the director shall report in writing to the council, the number of lots sold, to whom sold, and the amount received therefor, during the year preceding, and a detailed statement of the expenditures during the same period, showing the time and purpose of each payment, and to whom made.

"Section 4172. The report shall also contain a pertinent statement whether the funds, if any on hand, are invested, and the character of the securities therefor, and such other matters as the director deems expedient or the council requires."

From a consideration of these sections, it is apparent that the director of public service may not only sell lots and receive the purchase price thereof, but may make expenditures in connection therewith, his duty being to report to council on the first Monday of January of each year the number of lots sold, to whom sold, the amount received therefor, together with a detailed statement of his expenditures during the period covered by his report.

Section 4172 provides that the director of public service shall also set forth in his report whether any of the funds on hands are invested, and if they are the manner of investment, showing clearly that while he reports to council as to his doings, he sells lots, collects proceeds, make expenditures and invests funds on his own initiative, and without previous action by council.

I am of the opinion that the director of public service may make expenditures of money arising from the sale of cemetery lots, without a previous appropriation therefor by council.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE TERM "GROSS PREMIUM RECEIPTS," AS USED IN SECTION 841, GENERAL CODE, PROVIDING FOR SO-CALLED FIRE MARSHAL TAX.

The term "gross premium receipts" as used in section 841, General Code, providing for the so-called fire marshal tax, includes all premiums received by an insurance company on business transacted in Ohio, and no deductions whatever can be made therefrom.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1914.

HON. PRICE RUSSELL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On May 22, 1914, I gave you an opinion upon the construction of section 841 of the General Code, to the effect that the tax commonly called the "fire marshal tax," provided for by said section, was to be computed upon the gross premium receipts of fire insurance companies on all business transacted by them in Ohio during the year next preceding the day specified for the payment of such tax.

This opinion has been questioned by some of the fire insurance companies, and Hon. J. W. Mooney, of Columbus, has filed with me a very able brief in support of the contention that "gross premium receipts," as used in section 841, General Code, means the amount of moneys received by the companies after deducting premiums returned upon canceled policies and upon policies void at inception; also upon premiums received by a reinsuring company.

Mr. Mooney calls attention to the rule of construction, which is admitted, that if the meaning of an act passed by the legislature, imposing a tax, is doubtful or ambiguous the doubt must be resolved in favor of the party taxed. He then contends that the words "gross amount of premium," as used in section 841, must be held to mean the premiums after deducting the amount returned for cancellation and the amount returned for policies which never took effect; in other words, that the statute only covers premiums which have been received and retained by the company for writing and issuing contracts of insurance.

Mr. Mooney's argument is very strong, and I think I would, on the strength of the authorities he cites, agree with his contention if there were no legislative history, which amounts to interpretation as I view it, connected with our statute; that is, if this so-called "fire marshal statute" stood alone, had never been interpreted in any way, and the question were now raised for the first time, I think the weight of authority supports Mr. Mooney's contention.

The question submitted by you to me was this:

Section 841 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "For the purpose of maintaining the department of state fire marshal and the payment of the expenses incident thereto, each fire insurance company doing business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of insurance in the month of November each year, in addition to the taxes required by law to be paid by it, one-half of one per cent. on the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business transacted by it in Ohio during the year next preceding, as shown by its annual statement under oath to the insurance department. The superintendent of insurance shall pay the money so received into the state treasury to the credit of a special fund for the maintenance of the office of state fire marshal. If any portion of such special fund remains unexpended at the end of the year for which it was required to be paid, and the state fire marshal so certifies, it shall be transferred to the general revenue fund of the state."

was passed April 16, 1900, as part of the act establishing the state fire marshal department (94 O. L. 386), and for the purposes of the question under consideration may be said never to have been changed. The tax under this section, from the time of the passage of the act until April 29, 1902, was calculated on the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business transacted by them in Ohio; and, without any amendment to this act, since the date of April 29, 1902, and up to the date of your request of May 8, 1914, this fire marshal tax was calculated on the balance of the gross premium receipts after deducting return premiums and considerations received for reinsurance, as shown by the next preceding annual statement. Your exact question, was, why, if it was proper to calculate the tax on the gross premium receipts, without the above mentioned deductions, prior to 1902, as there was no change in the law at that time nor since, was it not logical to use the same basis of calculation for the one-half per cent. fire marshal tax since that date.

My answer in effect was that I knew of no reason for the change, that is, of no reason which was apparent from the statutes bearing upon this tax.

The reason for the change in calculating, it seems, is this: that prior to April 29, 1902, under sections 5432 and 5433, General Code (R. S. 2745), all foreign insurance companies were compelled to pay a tax of 2½% on the gross premium receipts of such companies as shown by their annual statements, and that this had been held to mean actual gross premiums without the reductions now claimed; on April 29, 1903, section 2745, Revised Statutes, was amended so as to provide for the payment of the 2½% on the gross amount of premiums received after deducting such returned premiums and considerations.

Though this definite change was made in the law providing for the 2½% tax, no such change was made in the fire marshal tax, and yet, for some reason, from the date of April 29, 1902, the fire marshal tax was calculated as though the gross premium receipts named in the section providing for such tax had been defined to be the amount remaining after the deductions specifically allowed by the amendment to the section providing for the 2½% tax. As the words "gross receipts" or "gross premium receipts" are used in both sections the matter resolves itself into the question as to the definition of the word "gross" as used in these sections. If the word "gross," as used in these sections imposing a tax upon the premiums received by insurance companies, has the meaning contended for on behalf of the insurance companies, the query arises as to the necessity for the amendment to section 2745, R. S., expressly providing for the reduction.

The question also arises, as this term was used in both sections and in both at one time was given the same meaning by the companies and by the superintendent of insurance, does it follow that a modification of its meaning in one section by amendment to the statute carries the same amendment by inference to the other section? Is it not more logical to say that if these terms originally had the same meaning in two separate statutes, and that meaning had been determined by the legislature and the court, then, it was so fixed that only legislative action could change the meaning in either or both sections; and that the very fact that the meaning of the term in one section was changed while the other section was untouched would lead to the conclusion that no change was intended in the statute which was not amended?

The history of sections 5432 and 5433, General Code (Sec. 2745, R. S), upon this is as follows:

The first provision as to the taxation of insurance companies is found in section 16 of the act passed April 8, 1876, 73 Ohio Laws, 138. This section, as to insurance companies, provided:

> "* * * Every agency of an insurance company, incorporated by the authority of any other state or government, shall return to the auditor of the county in which the office or agency of such company may be kept * * * the amount of the gross receipts of such company, which shall be entered upon the tax list of the proper county, and subject to the same rate of taxation for all purposes that other personal property is subject to at the place where located."

This section, in this form, was before the supreme court of Ohio, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Reinmund, decided June 7, 1887, 45 O. S. 214. In this case no contention was raised as to the construction of the term "gross receipts" of such agency, or that the word "gross" had any other meaning than its usual meaning, except that, on page 221, it appears from Judge Spear's statement that the tax in Ohio was based upon the gross receipts of the company without any deductions.

By the act passed April 11, 1888, 85 Ohio Laws, 183, section 2745, R. S., was amended so as to provide that every foreign insurance company should return to the auditor of each county in which such company "does" business, annually,

> "the amount of the gross premium receipts of such agency, for the previous calendar year, in such counties, which shall be entered upon the tax list of the proper county and be subject to the same rate of taxation for all purposes that other personal property is subject to, at the place where located, for the year in which such premiums are received. * * * And it shall be the duty of the county auditor * * * to certify to the superintendent of insurance the amount of receipts returned under this act by each company, with the rate charged against the same; and it shall be the duty of the superintendent of insurance * * * annually, to charge and collect from all such companies such a sum as, added to the sum payable to the county treasurers, will produce an amount equal to two and one-half per cent. on the gross premium receipts of such companies, as shown by their annual statement, under oath, to the insurance department."

By an act passed April 12, 1889, 86 Ohio Laws, 274, section 2745, Revised Statutes, was again amended, but the amendment had no bearing upon the question under consideration, as the language used was the same as in the prior act, namely:

"gross premium receipts of such agency" and "gross premium receipts of such companies"; and there was nothing said as to deductions.

This section was again amended April 19, 1893, 90 Ohio Laws, 201; the amendment providing that every foreign insurance company should return to the auditor of each county in which it did business, annually,

> "the amount of the gross premium and assessment receipts of such agency for the previous calendar year in such counties; provided, however, that in the case of regular companies, wherein policy holders participate in the surplus and earnings of the company, dividends or surplus from previous payments allowed and used in the payment of current premiums, cancellation or surrender values, and commissions paid to the citizens of this state during the same period for which receipts are recorded, shall be deducted from such gross receipts, and the net amount after such deductions shall be the basis of taxation for such companies under this section; which shall be entered upon the tax list of the proper county, and be subject to the same rate of taxation, for all purposes, that other personal property is subject to at the place where located * * *. And it shall be the duty of the superintendent of insurance * * * annually, to charge and collect from such companies or associations such a sum as, added to the amount paid to the county treasurers, will produce an amount equal to 2½% on such receipts of such companies and associations, as shown by their annual statements, under oath, to the insurance departments; * * *"

It will be noted that this is the first provision for any deduction from the gross receipts for taxation purposes. It will further be noted that under this amendment the term "gross receipts" is only used in the portion of the statute which provides for taxes payable in the counties, and that the term "gross" is not used in that portion of the statute which provides for the tax to be imposed by the superintendent of insurance in addition to the county tax.

On the first day of January, 1893, prior to this amendment, the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company filed with the superintendent of insurance of Ohio its statement showing the gross premiums collected by it in Ohio during the year 1892 without any deduction. After the passage of the above amendment, on April 19, 1893, the same company presented to the superintendent of insurance a supplement to its annual statement, setting out the deductions to which it claimed to be entitled under said amendment, viz.: "dividends or surplus from previous payments allowed and used in the payment of current premiums, cancellation or surrender values and commissions paid to citizens of this state" for the year 1892, claiming that the superintendent of insurance could only compute the 2½% tax upon the balance of said gross premium receipts after making the said deductions. It also offered to pay the amount of taxes represented by such calculation. The superintendent of insurance refused to allow said supplementary statement to be filed, refused to allow said deductions and insisted on the payment of the 2½% on the gross premium receipts without deductions. The company brought an action in mandamus to compel the superintendent of insurance to receive and permit the filing of such supplementary statement and to accept the sum tendered (being the amount claimed to be due after making said deductions), in full of all demands against it. The case was entitled State ex rel. vs. Hahn, and is reported in 50 O. S. 714.

The court in said case decided that the insurance company was liable to pay as taxes an amount equal to 2½% of the gross premiums received during the year 1892. The court say, at page 717:

"Section 2745 provides, among other things, that certain dividends, cancellations, values and commissions 'shall be deducted from such gross receipts and the net amount after such deduction shall be the basis of taxation, for such companies, under this section'. This seems favorable to the claim of the relator, and, if it stood alone, would be conclusive.

"Further along in the same section it is provided that, 'it shall be the duty of the superintendent of insurance, in the month of December, annually, to charge and collect from such companies or associations such a sum as, added to the amount paid to the county treasurers, will produce an amount equal to two and one-half per cent. on such receipts of such companies and associations, as shown by their annual statements under oath to the insurance department.' It will be noticed that, by this latter provision, the two and one-half per cent. is to be calculated on such receipts of the company as are shown by the annual statements under oath to the insurance department.

"The only annual statement to the insurance department of the relator is the statement filed within sixty days after January 1, 1893, which showed the amount of premiums, without deduction, that is the gross receipts. There is no sworn statement of the company in the office of the insurance department showing the net receipts of the various deductions claimed, and there is no law requiring or authorizing the filing of such supplemental statement, as was presented by the relator to the defendant, and he therefore did right in refusing to allow the filing of the same. It follows that, as to the taxes to be paid for the year 1892, the superintendent is right in calculating the tax on the gross receipts of the company as shown by its sworn statement filed within sixty days after January 1, 1893. Whether the same rule would apply for the years following 1892, it is not now necessary to decide."

Evidently, there was some doubt after this decision as to whether or not, for the year 1893 and subsequent years, the claim of the relator in the above case was well founded, for the reason, as I have heretofore pointed out, that the legislature omitted the word "gross" in providing for the tax to be assessed by the superintendent of insurance.

We find, therefore, that this act was again amended by an act passed the following year, viz.: on March 27, 1894, the act being found in 91 Ohio Laws, 91. This amendment follows practically the language of the act which I have last quoted and makes exactly the same provisions for deductions in the tax to be paid in the counties; but in the portion of the section which provides for the tax to be charged and collected by the superintendent of insurance the word "gross" is again inserted. This portion reads:

"And it shall be the duty of the superintendent of insurance, in the month of December, annually, to charge and collect from all such companies such a sum as, added to the sum paid to the county treasurers, will produce an amount equal to 2½% on the gross premium receipts of such companies as shown by their annual statements. * * *"

In view of the contention raised in the case of State ex rel. vs. Hahn, above referred to, this amendment is conclusive as to the intention of the legislature, and from the time of the passage of said amendment, up to April 29, 1902, all said foreign companies doing business in Ohio paid on the basis of 2½% on their gross premium receipts without any deductions. On April 29, 1902, this section was again amended, so as to make explicit provisions for the deduction in the tax to be assessed by the superintendent of insurance. (95 Ohio Laws, 290.) This amendment provided that,

"Every foreign insurance company * * * shall, in its annual statement to the superintendent of insurance, set forth the gross amount of premiums received by it in the state during the preceding calendar year, without deductions for commissions, return premiums or considerations paid for reinsurance, or any deductions whatever; and shall, also, therein set forth, in separate items, return premiums paid for cancellations, and, also, considerations received from other companies for reinsurance in this state, during such year. Every such company shall, annually, in the month of November, pay to the superintendent of insurance, an amount equal to two and one-half per cent. of the balance of such gross amount, after deducting such return premiums and considerations received for reinsurances, as shown by its preceding annual statement."

This is substantially the form in which the statute appears at present.

After the passage of the amendment found in 91 Ohio Laws, 91, to which I have above referred, making definite that the two and one-half per cent. tax was to be calculated on the gross premium receipts, and while said amendment was in force, the department of the state fire marshal was created, by an act passed April 16, 1900, found in 94 Ohio Laws, 386. By section 7 of said act provision was made for what is known as the "fire marshal tax," and the language used in said section is substantially the same as appears in present section 841 of the General Code, as pointed out in my previous opinion.

This act provided that such companies should pay a tax of one-half of one per cent. "on the gross premium receipts of such companies on all business done in Ohio the year next preceding"; the act then in force as to the 2½% tax provided "2½% on the gross premium receipts of such companies"—the language in both sections being identical, as shown above. At the time this language was incorporated in the fire marshal tax act it had a meaning which had been made plain by the legislature and the supreme court of Ohio, that is, it meant gross premium receipts without the deductions afterwards allowed.

Subsequently, section 2745, Revised Statutes, providing for the 2½% tax, was so changed as to allow the deductions which are now claimed for the fire marshal tax, but the fire marshal tax was in no way changed. The meaning having been fixed, I am therefore compelled to hold that the action of the legislature was intentional. It had the subject of taxation of insurance companies before it, was familiar with the history of section 2745, knew that the basis provided for the computation of that tax, in regard to gross premium receipts, was the same as that provided by the fire marshal tax; and when it changed one section without changing the other, we are forced to the conclusion that no change was intended.

The conclusion that the legislature has itself placed a construction upon the term "gross premium receipts" is borne out by the last enactment upon this subject—103 Ohio Laws, 713, passed April 18, 1913—which is entitled "An act defining, for the purpose of taxation, the term 'gross premiums' as applied to mutual fire insurance companies * * *." The first section of the act shows that it applies wholly to franchise taxes assessed against such companies; and as the fire marshal tax is not a franchise tax, it is not included in this section.

It may be asserted that the legislature, by mere inadvertence, failed to provide for deductions from the gross premium receipts in computing the fire marshal tax, when it authorized such deductions in computing the 2½% tax, and also when it passed the general act last referred to authorizing such deductions when computing on franchise taxes; but I cannot assume this; on the contrary, I am bound by the presumption that the legislature was fully cognizant of all the laws on this subject, and that when it failed to authorize such deductions in computing the fire marshal tax it did so advisedly.

This opinion has been prepared entirely upon the basis of statutory construction; necessarily so, because if the statutes are plain and unambiguous themselves we are precluded from making deductions or inference as to the meaning of words or terms used in the statutes.

My attention has been called forcibly to the two cases reported in 97 N. W. Reporter, 1063, particular emphasis being placed upon the case of State ex rel. Palmer vs. Fleming, reported on page 1068 et seq., of said report; it being claimed that the question decided in that case is identical with the one now before us. With this contention I cannot agree.

The cases of State ex rel. vs. Fleming and State ex rel. Palmer vs. Fleming are reported together and both cases decided by the supreme court of Nebraska on the sixteenth of December, 1903.

Section 58 of the Session Laws of Nebraska, 1903, provided that foreign insurance companies should report the gross amount of premiums received by them for insurance written upon property in Nebraska during the preceding year, and that such gross receipts were to be taken as an item of property of that value. Nothing was said about deductions.

Section 61 of the same Session Laws applied to domestic fire insurance companies and required them to report the gross amount of premiums received for all business done within the state during the preceding calendar year, less the amount ceded to other companies as reinsurance and less premiums returned on canceled policies.

It was claimed in the first case reported that the law, in so far as it allowed domestic companies to make said deductions from their gross receipts and did not allow such deductions to be made by foreign companies, imposed an undue burden upon the property of the foreign corporations and was therefore unconstitutional. The court, upon this point (there were other points involved in this case) said:

> "Without at this time stopping to construe these two sections and determine their exact meaning, we are of opinion that the foreign companies, if discriminated against, may successfully contend that the discriminative provisions are invalid, and that the law must be enforced without them."

In the syllabus of the case it is stated:

> "A general revenue law will not be declared unconstitutional on account of discriminative provisions if such provisions may be rejected and the law enforced without them."

In the second case—that of State ex rel. Palmer vs. Fleming, the question which was touched upon, but not decided, in the first case was squarely faced by the court, and the court was called upon to decide whether in fact there was discrimination against foreign insurance companies and in favor of domestic insurance companies by the laws of Nebraska allowing deductions from the gross receipts of the latter and not allowing such deductions from the gross receipts of the former. If such discrimination existed the act would be unconstitutional, for, as stated by the court, on page 1069:

> "When dealing with the taxation of property the legislature cannot discriminate in favor of the resident against a non-resident. Each are to be treated alike and each is to pay a tax in proportion to the value of the property."

The insurance companies in this case evidently took the position that, the statute having failed to authorize deductions from the gross receipts of foreign companies, it meant just what it said; all receipts were to be returned and no deductions were authorized. This contention on behalf of the companies is, of course, the opposite of what is made here. The court proceeded to harmonize the statutes and thus avoided declaring the act unconstitutional, by holding that foreign insurance companies were entitled to make the same deductions as were authorized to be made by domestic companies. This was the gist of the case. The court was forced to do one of two things—either to declare the act unconstitutional, or to give a construction to it which, though not asked for by the foreign insurance companies, would be favorable to them and save the act. In other words, the court was in extremis and I cannot believe that this case is very strong authority for the interpretation of the word "gross." In any event, the case is by no means analogous to the case we now have before us. In section 841 there is no discrimination; it applies to all fire insurance companies domestic as well as foreign.

The case of the German Alliance Insurance Company et al. vs. James R. B. Van Cleave et al., reported in 191 Ill., 410, would be an authority directly in support of the contention of the insurance companies if section 841 stood alone and the term "gross premium receipts" had received no construction by the legislature, or the courts, or the insurance department, or the insurance companies of this state. In that case the court, while stating that there was no dispute as to the meaning of the word gross," that it was conceded to mean the whole or entire amount of premiums received for business done in the state during the year, and that the word "gross" is opposed to the word "net," that its ordinary meaning is the entire amount of the receipts of the business while the net receipts are those remaining after deductions for the expenses and charges of conducting the business—goes on to state that the view of the court was that, though the legislature used the words "gross receipts," its real intention was to levy a tax on the gross income. No authority whatever was cited by the court in support of its view.

This case, with whatever weight it carries, is an authority for the proposition that gross premium receipts mean net premium receipts.

The Van Cleave case was quoted with approval and followed in People ex rel. Continental Insurance Company vs. Miller, Court of Appeals of New York, 70 N. E. Rep., 10. The New York statute provided:

> "* * * The term 'gross premiums' as used in this article shall include, in addition to all other premiums, such premiums as are collected from policies subsequently canceled and from reinsurance."

The court held that under the term as defined by the statute the word "gross" was intended to include all premiums that remained in the treasury of the company and to exclude any deductions for the commissions of agents or the expense of doing business; that the gross amount collected from canceled policies means the gross amount collected and retained by the company. The court also held that the reinsurance premiums must be included in the term "gross premiums" and that no deduction could be made therefor.

The authority of this case and the Van Cleave case would, I think, justify me in giving the construction to our statute which is claimed by the insurance companies were it not for the fact that I feel myself precluded from so doing on account of the difference between our statutes and the other statutes, and on account of the different question which is necessarily presented by the construction of the term as used in providing for the so-called "fire marshal tax" in Ohio.

The authorities, however, are not uniform. The case of Fire Insurance Association of Philadelphia vs. Love, decided by the supreme court of Texas in 1908, 108 S. W. 158, is directly contrary to the above cases.

The contention that premiums received by reinsuring companies are not subject to the tax, I think, is disposed of by what I have already said. The statute make no allowance for deductions of this kind. The proposition that reinsuring companies should not be taxed upon such premiums, because the contracts are almost entirely made outside of this state and do not constitute business transacted in Ohio, cannot be considered in this opinion. If the business is not transacted in Ohio, then, the tax would not attach; but whether the business is transacted in Ohio is a question between the companies and the insurance department, and would depend, of course, upon the facts in each particular case.

For the above reasons I am compelled to adhere to my opinion issued May 27, 1914.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM.

Since the above was dictated I have received an additional brief, citing the opinions of several attorney generals on this question.

The statute of Wisconsin providing for a tax similar to ours for maintaining the department of the state fire marshal provided for a tax of one-fourth of one per cent. on the gross premium and assessment receipts of such companies on all business done in Wisconsin * * *. The attorney general, upon the authority of the Van Cleave case and the Miller case, held that such term did not include the amount paid by fire insurance companies as return premiums; he held, however, that the term "gross premiums" should include the amounts paid for reinsurance and in this holding he called attention to the fact that the laws of Wisconsin, by an amendment, provided that money paid for reinsurance should be deducted from gross receipts in determining the amount upon which license fees should be paid, while the act providing for the fire marshal tax did not make any such provision. This seemed to have determined the attorney general's ruling as to reinsurance and the reason is analogous to that which has determined my ruling in the question now before me.

The attorney generals of North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana have all held that under the terms "gross amount of premiums received," "gross receipts" and "gross premiums collected," as applied to life insurance premiums, the companies should be allowed to make deductions for the amount of dividends paid or allowed on the policies.

These opinions all bear upon the construction of the word "gross," as applied to the method of calculating taxes to be assessed against insurance companies, and they are all authority for giving such word the construction asked by the insurance companies. I cannot, however, for the reasons which I have several times stated, feel justified in giving our statute the broad construction which is claimed; to do so would be to ignore entirely the construction placed upon it by the legislature of the state and by the court. If the statute is unjust it should be changed; but as it stands this change should be made by the legislature.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPLICATION OF THE STATE BUILDING CODE WITH RESPECT TO THE SUBJECT OF SANITATION, INCLUDING THE MANNER OF SANITARY PLUMBING APPLYING TO BUILDINGS BEING ERECTED BY THE CITY OF CINCINNATI AT GLENDALE, OHIO, FOR USE AS A BOYS' REFUGE HOME—CINCINNATI PLUMBING CODE HAS NO APPLICATION OUTSIDE OF CINCINNATI.

The provisions of the state building code, with respect to the subject of sanitation, including the matter of sanitary plumbing, apply to the buildings here in question, to wit, those now being erected by the city of Cincinnati at Glendale, Ohio, for the purpose of being used as a boys' refuge home, and so applying the provisions of the state code as to sanitary plumbing, operate to exclude the conflicting provisions of municipal ordinances and of the plans and specifications with respect to plumbing in said buildings. The provisions of the Cincinnati plumbing code, being governmental in their nature, have no operation outside of the corporate limits of the city of Cincinnati.

The duty of enforcing the state building code in this case, is in the state board of health, and inasmuch as the observance of the provisions of the state building code is procured by the sanction of penalties, no other remedy than the invocation of these penalties can be resorted to to enforce its provisions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1914.

HON. E. F. MCCAMPBELL, Secretary Ohio State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion has been asked with respect to certain situations presented by the erection, by the city of Cincinnati, of a certain refuge home for boys at Glendale, Ohio, which is outside the corporate limits of the city of Cincinnati.

I am informed that the plans and specifications for the construction of the buildings of this refuge home require the plumbing therein to be installed in accordance with the Cincinnati plumbing ordinance, the provisions of which are in some particulars in direct conflict, in regard to construction, quality of materials and tests, with part four of the Ohio state building code on the subject of sanitation.

The precise question presented is whether the provisions of the state building code, with respect to sanitary plumbing, or those of the Cincinnati ordinance, or either, apply to the situation at hand. With respect to this question it is evident that in so far as the provisions of the ordinance of the city of Cincinnati, relating to plumbing, are in conflict with the provisions of the state building code, relating to the same subject, the provisions of the ordinance must yield to the provisions of the state code. This conclusion follows upon consideration of the familiar rule that, where the provisions of a state statute and those of a municipal ordinance are in conflict, the conflicting provisions of the ordinance are void and of no effect. This rule is recognized by the legislature in the enactment of the state building code, as appears by section 5 thereof, which has been carried into the General Code as section 12600-277, which provides as follows:

> "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the council of municipalities from making further and additional regulations, not in conflict with any of the provisions in this act contained nor shall the provisions of this act be construed to modify or repeal any portions of any building code adopted by a municipal corporation and now in force which are not in direct conflict with the provisions of this act. * * *"

Aside from the question just noticed, it is apparent that the provisions of the Cincinnati ordinance can have no application by force of their own terms and the sanctions therein imposed to buildings erected outside of the municipal limits. The provisions of the ordinance with respect to the subject of sanitary plumbing are governmental in their nature, rather than proprietary, and as to such regulations it is clear that they can have no operation outside of the city limits in the absence of express statutory authority giving such regulations extra territorial operation

City of Coldwater vs. Tucker, 36 Mich. 474.
Donable vs. Harrisonburg, 104 Va. 533.
Decker vs. LaCrosse, 99 Wis. 414.
Snyder vs. Menasha, 118 Wis. 298.

Of course, aside from the effective operation of laws governing the situation, it would have been entirely competent for the parties to the contract for the construction of the plumbing work in these buildings to accept the provisions of the Cincinnati ordinance as a standard regulating the civil obligations of the parties in the execution of the work under this contract. But it is likewise clear that it was not competent for the parties, in the plans and specifications or otherwise in the contract, to provide that the plumbing work should be installed according to regulations which are in conflict with statutory provisions on the subject.

From the foregoing it is apparent that the plans and specifications for the erection of the buildings of this home, calling for the application of the provisions of the Cincinnati ordinance as to sanitary plumbing, are of no effect and can afford no protection to those installing plumbing in these buildings according to said provisions, in so far as the same are in conflict with provisions of the state code on this subject, if the provisions of the state code apply to the buildings in question.

With respect to this question, I note that the preamble to the building code act, found in part two thereof, under the heading of "Special requirements," provides as follows (102 O. L., 588; Sec. 12600-1, G. C.):

"Under part two which follows, will be found under their respective titles, the various classes of buildings covered by this code together with the special requirements for their respective design, construction and equipment.

"The classification of the various buildings will be found under the following titles, viz.:

"Title 1. Theaters and assembly halls.
"Title 2. Churches.
"Title 3. School buildings.
"Title 4. Asylums, hospitals and homes.
"Title 5. Hotels, lodging houses, apartments and tenement houses.
"Title 6. Club and lodge buildings.
"Title 7. Workshops, factories and mercantile establishments.

"Buildings or parts of buildings used only for the specific purposes mentioned under their respective title and classification shall be designed, constructed and equipped as called for under all of the sections coming under such title and classification.

"Buildings used for two or more different kinds of occupancy and combining the classifications covered under two or more different titles shall be designed, constructed and equipped according to all of the various sections of the different titles affecting such building or parts of such building.

"The detailed requirements of the above mentioned special requirements, together with standard devices will be found in subsequent parts of this code."

From a consideration of the provisions of this section of the act, just quoted, as well as all the provisions of the act as a whole, it is apparent that the general scheme of the act was to make specific provisions and special requirements with reference to the construction of the particular kinds of buildings designated in the preamble or section of the act quoted above, and also to make certain general provisions as to certain other matters of construction and equipment applicable equally to all of the kinds of buildings designated in the act.

Among the general provisions relating to construction and equipment, applying to each and all of the kinds of buildings above designated, are those relating to the subject of sanitation, found in part four of the act. As to the special requirements in construction and equipment, covered by part two of the act, only title 1, covering the subject of theaters and assembly halls, and title 3, covering school buildings, were enacted into the law. It follows, therefore, that the building code as enacted makes special requirements with reference to the construction only of theaters, assembly halls and school buildings; but with respect to sanitation, which includes the matter of plumbing, it makes provisions applicable to each and all of the particular kinds of buildings before mentioned. Among the buildings particularly designated are those of asylums, hospitals and homes; by which latter term is meant not private residences but public institutions of the kind here in question. I therefore conclude that the building code, in so far as it pertains to and provides for the matter of sanitation and plumbing, is applicable to the buildings now in process of erection for the boys' refuge home at Glendale, Ohio.

That the building code in these particulars so applies is to my mind further evidenced by section 2 of the act (Sec. 12600-274, G. C.) which provides as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any owner or owners, officers, board, committee or other person to construct, erect, build, equip or cause to be constructed, erected, built or equipped any opera house, hall, theater, church, schoolhouse, college, academy, seminary, infirmary sanitorium, children's home, hospital, medical institute, asylum, memorial building, armory, assembly hall or other building used for the assemblage or betterment of people in any municipal corporation, county or township in this state, or to make any addition thereto or alteration thereof, except in case of repairs for maintenance without affecting the construction, sanitation, safety or other vital feature of said building or structure, without complying with the requirements and provisions relating thereto contained in this act."

Though juvenile refuge homes of the kind and character of the one in question are not specifically mentioned in this section, the buildings of this home are of a kind similar in their use and purpose to some of the institutions specifically named, and are to be used for the assemblage and betterment of the particular persons for whom it is intended; and refuge homes of this kind are, in my opinion, clearly within the purview of the penal section above quoted.

It having been here determined that the state building code, with respect to plumbing and other matters of sanitation, applies to the buildings of this particular institution, it follows, upon the considerations before noted, that all provisions of the ordinance of the city of Cincinnati or in the plans and specifications for the erection of said buildings in conflict with the provisions of the state building code, on the subject of plumbing and sanitation, are void and of no effect.

The only remaining question suggested by the situation at hand is that concerning the duty of enforcing the provisions of the state code. With respect to this question section 1 of the act (Sec. 12600-281. G. C.) provides in part as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the state board of health or building inspector or commissioner, or health departments of municipalities having building or health departments to enforce all the provisions in this act contained, in relation and pertaining to sanitary plumbing. But nothing herein contained shall be construed to exempt any other officer or department from the obligation of enforcing all existing laws in reference to this act."

From a consideration of the provisions of this section, it is apparent that whatever questions may be raised respecting the duty of enforcing the provisions of the state building code in municipalities having building or health departments, it is clear that outside of such municipalities the duty of enforcing the provisions of the state building code is cast upon the state board of health. In this connection, as before stated, the proper observance of the provisions of the code is secured by the sanction of the criminal penalties therein provided for, and this consideration makes it plain that the invocation of these penalties is the only remedy for violation of the provisions of this act.

AWARDING OF CONTRACT BY STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER IN A CASE WHERE THE COUNTY HAS NOT CONTRIBUTED ANY PART OF THE COST OF A ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

The state highway commissioner in a case where a county is not contributing any part of the cost of a road improvement, may award a contract for the construction of such an improvement to members of the board of county commissioners as individuals, providing bids are advertised for and they are the lowest bidders, and all provisions of the law relating to contracts of that nature are complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 11, 1914.

THE HON. JAMES R. MARKER, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 11th, which reads as follows:

"I find that the county commissioners of Brown county, Ohio, did not make use of the apportionment of the highway fund, to Brown county within the statutory time, as required under the provisions of section 1185, General Code. Whereupon we proceeded under the provisions of this same section to survey, prepare plans and make an estimate of the cost of the construction of a certain inter-county highway.

"We have offered for letting the contract for this construction, wherein the state is to pay the entire cost and expense of the improvement. No bids were received at this particular letting, and it is our intention to readvertise the work for letting at an early date. Two members of the board of county commissioners have requested that they be given consideration as contractors, and the question confronting us is whether or not we would be entitled to award the contract to these two members of the board of county commissioners, acting as individuals, should they be the lowest responsible bidders."

Section 1185, of the General Code, as amended, 1913 (103 O. L., p. 449), provides for the application by county commissioners on or before January 1st of each year for state aid in the construction, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, and that if the county commissioners have not made use of the apportionment of the state money allotted to the county on or before the first day of May succeeding the making of the application, the state highway commissioner

> "Shall enter upon and construct, improve, maintain or repair any of the inter-county highways or parts thereof of said county, either by contract, force account, or in such manner as the state highway commissioner may deem for the best interests of the public, paying the full cost and expense thereof from the said apportionment of the appropriation to said county so unused as aforesaid."

In a case where the state is paying the whole cost of an improvement, the county commissioners are not required to adopt a resolution that the highway be constructed under the provisions of the state highway law; they have nothing to do with the selection of the road or roads to be improved, nor is it necessary that they approve contracts for construction as is the case where the county is contributing a portion of the cost.

Consideration of the various statutes governing your department leads to the conclusion, and it is my opinion, that there is nothing to prevent you from awarding the contract to the two men who are on the board of county commissioners, providing they are the lowest bidders, and the requirements of law relating to advertisement for bids, awarding of contracts, and giving of bonds are complied with.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY CORONER NOT JUSTIFIED IN HOLDING INQUESTS OVER BODIES OF PERSONS WHO LOST THEIR LIVES IN THE FLOOD OF 1913.

A county coroner is not justified in holding inquests over the bodies of persons who lost their lives in the flood of March, 1913, nor to receive fees from the county treasury for holding such inquests, unless there was a good reason to believe that such persons came to their death by violence or unlawful means.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 11, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 19th, wherein you request an opinion upon the question set forth in a letter addressed to you by Mr. T. W. Jones, one of your examiners, which letter was enclosed in your communication to me.

Mr. Jones states that the coroner of a certain county in this state held inquests over the dead bodies of persons who lost their lives in the flood of March 24, 1913, for which services he charged and received the statutory fees. Mr. Jones inquires whether, under these circumstances, the coroner was justified in holding the inquests and in drawing from the county treasury fees therefor.

The authority for a coroner to hold an inquest is found in section 2856, of the General Code, which provides:

> "When informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, the coroner shall appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, administer to them the usual oath, and proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, whether by violence from any other person or persons, by whom, whether as principals or accessories before or after the fact, and all circumstances relating thereto. The testimony of such witnesses shall be reduced to writing, by them respectively subscribed, except when stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, and, with the finding and recognizances hereinafter mentioned, if any, returned by the coroner to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county. If he deems it necessary, he shall cause such witnesses to enter into recognizance, in such sum as may be proper, for their appearance at the succeeding term of the court of common pleas of the county to give testimony concerning the matter. The coroner may require any and all such witnesses to give security for their attendance, and if they or any of them neglect to comply with his requirements, he shall commit such person to the prison of the county, until discharged by due course of law."

Section 2857, of the General Code, provides:

> "The coroner shall draw up and subscribe his finding of facts in writing. If he finds that the deceased came to his or her death by force or violence, and by any other person or persons, so charged, and there present, he shall arrest such person or persons, and convey him or them immediately before a proper officer for examination according to law. If such persons, or any of them, are not present, the coroner forthwith shall inform one or more justices of the peace, and the prosecuting attorney, if within the county, of the facts so found, in order that the persons may be immediately dealt with according to law."

Before the codification of 1910 these sections were known as sections 1221 and 1222 of the Revised Statutes. They were construed in State ex rel. vs. Bellows, 62 Ohio St. 307, as

> "Within the meaning of section 1221, Revised Statutes, providing for inquests by the coroner, a dead body 'is found within the county' when it is ascertained to be in the county; and death is supposed to have been caused by violence whenever the coroner from observation or information has substantial reason for believing or surmising that death was caused by unlawful means." (Syl.)

After quoting from the foregoing sections the court on page 310, says:

> "It is thus indicated that the inquest is intended to aid in the detection of crimes and in the punishment of those who perpetrate them. Construed with this purpose in view, and with reference to their natural meaning, the sense in which the words and phrases of the statutes are used should not be the subject of serious doubt. A death 'caused by violence' is a death caused by unlawful means, such as usually call for the punishment of those who employ them. A body 'is found' within the county when it is ascertained by any means that it is in the county. 'Death is supposed to have been caused by violence' whenever from such observation as he may be able to make, and from such information as may come to him, the coroner is for reasons of substance led to surmise or think that the death has been so caused.

"It is the duty of the coroner to hold an inquest and to perform the other duties enjoined upon him by these sections of the statute whenever a dead body is found within his county and he knows or may reasonably believe that death was caused by unlawful means. For such service he is entitled to the compensation which the defendants propose to pay."

The court then approves the opinion of the circuit court in the same case, as reported in 8 Circuit Decisions, 376. The syllabus in the circuit court report reads:

"Meaning of the words 'found' and 'violence' as used in section 1221, Revised Statutes:

"The word 'found' in this section is jurisdictional, and means being present in the county. 'Violence' means the unlawful use of physical force or other agency to cause death. It does not include mere accident or casualty.

"The coroner is authorized and required to hold an inquest upon a dead body lying in his county, when he knows, or has reason to suppose, the death was caused by unlawful means."

On pages 378 and 379 of the opinion Shearer, C. J., says:

"Of course, it is not in every case of death from unknown causes that the coroner would be authorized to hold an inquest, but if he knows, or has reasonable ground to believe, the death was the result of violence, or unlawful means, the coroner not only may, but is required to hold an inquest. Violence, in the sense used in the statute, means force unlawfully exercised, as distinguished from mere accident or casualty.

"We are, therefore, of the opinion that where a person has come to his death by violence, as hereinbefore defined, whether in the presence of third persons or not, it is the duty of the coroner to hold an inquest, not only to ascertain the cause of the death, but whether a crime has been committed, who the perpetrator is, and to secure and preserve the evidence to the end that justice may not be defeated.

"The word 'supposed' in the statute does not necessarily imply doubt, uncertainty or ignorance of the cause of the death. It is broad enough to include both suspicion and knowledge. If the coroner either knows or suspects the death to have been by violence, he may act."

By virtue of section 2856, General Code, above quoted, the coroner is authorized to hold an inquest over the body of a person "whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence;" and the court, in State vs. Bellows, supra, says: "A death caused by violence is a death caused by unlawful means, such as usually call for punishment of those who employ them."

The coroner, therefore, can only hold an inquest when he knows or has reasonable grounds for believing that death has been caused by violence, by the use of unlawful means, as defined in the Bellows case, supra.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said coroner had no legal right to hold inquests over the bodies of persons whose death was caused by the March, 1913, flood, unless there was good reason to believe that such persons came to their death by reason of violence that would call for the punishment of those who employed it. Death by accidental drowning in that flood certainly would not be death caused by violence, so as to justify the coroner in holding an inquest. In such cases the coroner was without right or authority in law to hold an inquest or to receive from the county treasury the fees so charged therefor.

Very truly yors,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTHORITY OF THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION OF OHIO TO TAKE MEANS OF EXTERMINATING RABBITS FOR THE PURPOSE OF PREVENTING THE SPREAD OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES AMONG LIVE STOCK.

Under the provisions of section 30 of the act of April 15th, 1913, creating an agricultural commission of Ohio, the commission is given express authority to use all proper means to prevent the spread or infection of contagious diseases among live stock, and under this delegated authority it has the authority to make all such rules and orders having any relation to the authorized end to be attained.

Where rabbits are now or may become an agency in any degree in the spread of the hoof and mouth disease, the board may lawfully take such measures as will secure relief from such danger.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 11, 1914.

The Agricultural Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—My opinion is asked with respect to a condition rising out of the fact that during the hunting season which is now about to close, the hunting and killing of rabbits has been prevented in large part by the precautionary order of your commission prohibiting hunting on account of the existence of the hoof and mouth disease in cattle and other live stock.

As I understand it, the quarantine heretofore established has been entirely lifted in a large number of the counties, and that in other counties now subject to absolute or qualified quarantine, a large amount of free territory as far as the question of hunting is concerned has been declared. The question presented is what, if anything, your commission may do in order to secure the destruction of rabbits in this free territory in order to prevent such rabbits from becoming an agency in the spread of this disease either now or in the immediate future.

In answer to this it seems obvious that your power to take measures for the destruction of rabbits which may become a menace on the reason above stated rests upon the same ground which authorized your board to prohibit promiscuous hunting. By section 30 of the act of April 15th, 1913, creating the agricultural commission of Ohio, this commission is empowered to use all proper means in the prevention of the spread of dangerously infectious and contagious diseases among domestic animals and providing for the extermination of such diseases. Your commission is an administrative body, and as such it has no power to make laws, nor is it within the power of the legislature to delegate to this commission any power to make laws. By the section above noted, however, the commission is given express authority to use all proper means to prevent the spread of infectious and contagious diseases among live stock, and under this delegated authority it has the authority to make all such rules and orders having any relation to the authorized end to be attained, and if rabbits are now or may become an agency in any degree in the spread of the existing hoof and mouth disease, or in preventing or retarding its extermination, an order to your board contemplating and providing for the destruction of rabbits would be an order having proper relation to the end in view, and for this purpose it is my opinion your board may lawfully take such measures as will secure the result desired.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF OHIO—NO AUTHORITY TO HOLD AN APPLICATION FOR AN AWARD BARRED BY COMPROMISE WHERE THE CONTRACT OF RELEASE WAS FOR A LESS SUM THAN THAT TO WHICH THE EMPLOYE WAS ENTITLED UNDER SAID ACT.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio has no jurisdiction or authority to hold that an application for award has been barred by a compromise and release entered into subsequent to the filing of such application between the employer and his employe, who has been injured in the course of his employment, when such claim for award has been made by the injured employe under section 27 of the workmen's compensation act; such contract of release being for a less sum than that to which the employe was entitled under said act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 1st, 1914, you write that a claim has been filed with your commission, under the provisions of section 27 of the workmen's compensation act, by an employe against his employer, for the determination of the amount of compensation to which he is entitled by reason of an injury sustained by him on June 23d, 1914.

It seems that after filing the claim, the applicant on December 18th, 1914, signed a release prepared and presented to him by the employer against whom he claimed compensation, releasing such employer from any or all claims for damages and the payment of medical services rendered in connection with and growing out of the accident. The amount of compensation to which applicant would be entitled under the law would exceed the amount which he received from the company. The question is whether the release signed by the applicant is a bar to the award to him of compensation to which he would be entitled under the provisions of section 27 of the workmen's compensation act. As the form of release is not presented, I am unable to answer the question as to whether it covers the release of claims made under the workmen's compensation act, and therefore, shall assume that it was so drafted as to constitute a waiver of such claim provided a contract of that sort would be valid.

This reduces the question to the determination of whether an employer has the right to contract with his employe to release such employer from the claim for award which is pending before the industrial commission.

An examination of the act and its history will show that one of its purposes was to render the payment of compensation certain to those who were injured in the course of their employment, and to obviate unconscionable advantage of employes being taken by their employers. This object would not be subserved if contracts such as the one here referred to were permissible, and the act should not be construed so as to authorize such violation of its spirit if there is to be found therein language justifying a contrary interpretation. In other words, statutes of this character should be liberally construed in favor of the employe, and the broad, humanitarian purpose which they are designed to accomplish.

Section 27, which is referred to in your inquiry, provides in substance that when an employer is not insured in the state fund his employe may, in lieu of action for damages, file an application for compensation with the board of awards (now the industrial commission), whereupon the board shall bear and determine the application in the same maner as other claims before the board. It shall ascertain and determine the amount due the injured employe, and in case of the failure of the employer to pay the award within ten days after receiving notice thereof, an action shall be instituted by the general on behalf of the injured employe to recover the amount found due the employe, the amount of compensation to be a liquidated claim for damages. The following language constitutes the concluding sentence of this section:

> "Any suit, action or proceeding brought against any employer, under the provisions of this section, may be compromised by the board, or such suit, action or proceeding may be prosecuted to final judgment as in the discretion of the board may best subserve the interests of the persons entitled to receive such compensation."

This language shows it to be the clear purpose of the act to preclude compromise between the employer and employe, without the approval of the board. While the quoted sentence may be said to be applicable after action has been instituted by the attorney general, nevertheless, it indicates the intent of the statute. Furthermore, when the claim is filed with the commission, it has sole jurisdiction over the same and any agreement for the purpose of barring it of the right to make an award should be subject to its approval. The practical effect of this section is to place the employer who is not insured on a parity with him who is insured in so far as the rights of the injured employe are concerned, in that the latter is allowed compensation on the same theory as if the employer had contributed to the state fund; the only distinction being that in the one case the compensation is paid from the state insurance fund, and in the other directly by the employer. Therefore, it would seem that any attempt to reduce the amount by compromise would be without consideration and therefore voidable unless it could be shown that the employer had a defense before the commission, which would only be in the event that the injury did not occur in the course of employment, that it was purposely self-inflicted, or that the employer or employe did not come within the purview of the workmen's compensation act. Of course it would be immaterial whether or not these defenses were meritorious if they were advanced in good faith, in so far as the question in consideration is concerned. This question, however, is one that I do not regard as essential to a determination of your inquiry.

Recurring again to the original discussion, I desire to call your attention to the fact that after the employe elects it is provided that the board shall hear and determine the application and ascertain the amount of compensation which shall constitute a liquidated claim for damages. The only qualification is that the application shall be heard and determined in like manner as other claims before the board. When such claims are made the only duty of the board is to decide whether the premiums have been paid, and whether the employe has been injured in the course of his employment, and whether such injury has not been purposely self-inflicted. Applying this to section 27 it will be readily seen that the only question for the board is that above stated. There is no provision vesting it with jurisdiction to determine whether the claim has been barred. The board is to hear and determine the application and decide it in the same manner as other claims: section 27. No compromise, release or bar may be considered by it when such other claims are heard, but, on the contrary, as will be shown infra, the amount of award must be that called for by the law. The employer who is permitted to carry his own insurance must pay the amount required by the statute. He cannot relieve himself from responsibility by the payment of loss, nor can the industrial commission permit him so to do. Hence, if claims under section 27 must be allowed in like manner, it seems patent that the board of awards has neither power, authority, nor jurisdiction to decide questions arising under section 27 in a different manner from that adopted in the hearing of other applications under the act. The necessary corollary to this is that a question such as that submitted would not be within the province of your board or commission.

Subdivision 2 of section 14 construes the terms "employe," "workman" and "operative" as meaning

> "every person in the service of any person, firm or corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment. * * *" and section 21 provides that

> "every employe mentioned in subdivision 2 of section 14 hereof, who is injured and the dependents of such as are killed in the course of their employment * * * provided the same was not purposely self-inflicted * * * shall be entitled to receive either directly from his employer, as provided in section 22 hereof, or from the state insurance fund, such compensation * * * as is provided by sections thirty-two to forty inclusive of the act."

These sections indicate the manifest policy of the act to afford compensation under the act to all employes of all employers of the class named, the evident theory being that all such employers would comply with the law and insure in the state fund or carry their own insurance as allowed by the statute. Those who obeyed the law could not compromise, and if they carried their own insurance could not legally provide for the payment of less compensation than that paid out of the state fund to employes of those who contributed to the state fund. See sections 22 and 25. Can it be said to comport with sound public policy to permit one who disobeys the law by failing to insure, to do that which one who complies with the law is not permitted to do, thus penalizing obedience to law and rewarding violation of it? To state the question is to answer it in the negative.

Under section 54 contracts to indemnify employers from loss or damage on account of injuries to their employes shall be void unless they provide for payment to the injured employe of such compensation as is provided by the act. This reveals intent to secure to the employe the amount required to be paid by the statute.

All of the foregoing is in harmony with the first sentence of section 47 which contains the following language:

> "No agreement by an employe to waive his rights to compensation under this act shall be valid."

While this section may be said to have reference to agreements made prior to the injury, nevertheless, it seems to add force to the theory which I have taken of the law to the effect that it should not be read so as to justify the release of legitimate claims through an agreement entered into between the employer and the employe by virtue of which the latter receives less than he would have been entitled to under the statute. Any other construction would result, as I have before suggested, in the object of the statute being nullified, and its purpose ignored. Therefore, I am of the opinion that your commission is authorized to consider this case and make such order as you deem proper in the premises, on the theory that the release spoken of is no bar to the right of the injured employe to receive compensation in the manner provided by section 27.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DUTY OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REFERENCE TO PROVIDING RELIEF FOR BOYS UNDER FIFTEEN YEARS OF AGE AND GIRLS UNDER SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE WHO ARE UNABLE TO SUPPORT THEMSELVES AND STAY IN SCHOOL.

It is the duty of the board of education to provide for relief out of its contingent fund for any boy under fifteen years of age and any girl under sixteen years of age, who is unable to attend school because absolutely required to work at home or elsewhere in order to support himself or herself or help to support or care for others who are unable to support or care for themselves, upon the report of the truant officer that he is satisfied of such necessity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1914.

HON. GEO. J. CAREW, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 6, 1914, you submitted for an official opinion thereon the following inquiry:

> "A dispute has arisen in this city between the board of charities and the board of education as to the construction of section 7777 of the General Code, which provides for relief to children of school age in order to facilitate their attendance at school.
> "The board of charities claim that under a proper construction of this statute, the school board is required to provide, out of its contingent fund, necessary relief to children of school age required to work at home or elsewhere in order to support themselves or help to support others legally entitled to their services who are unable to support or care for themselves, no matter what the age of such child may be between the ages of eight and sixteen. The board of education contends that they are required to provide for only such children, between the ages of eight and sixteen, as under the existing statutes are permitted to work, and that since as the law stands now, no boy under sixteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age is permitted to be employed by any person unless they can show schooling certificates, showing that they have passed the sixth grade, if a boy, and the seventh grade, if a girl, there are no children who are entitled to this relief."

Section 7777 of the General Code, referred to in your letter, provides for furnishing relief to enable children to attend school, as follows:

"When a truant officer is satisfied that a child, compelled to attend school by the provisions of this chapter, is unable to do so because absolutely required to work at home or elsewhere in order to support itself or help to support or care for others legally entitled to its services who are unable to support or care for themselves, such officer must report the case to the president of the board of education. Thereupon he shall furnish text books free of charge, and such other relief as may be necessary to enable the child to attend school for the time each year required by law. The expenses incident to furnishing books and relief must be paid from the contingent funds of the school district. Such child shall not be considered or declared a pauper by reason of the acceptance of the relief herein provided for. If the child, or its parents or guardian, refuses or neglects to take advantage of the provisions thus made for its instruction, it may be committed to a children's home or a juvenile reformatory, as provided for in the next three preceding sections."

The above quoted section comes under the section of the General Code entitled "Compulsory education."

Section 7765 provides for age and schooling certificates for girls and boys who are employed, as follows:

"No child under sixteen years of age shall be employed or be in the employment of any person, company or corporation during the school term and while the public schools are in session, unless such child presents to such person, company or corporation an age and schooling certificate herein provided for as a condition of employment, who shall keep the same on file for inspection by the truant officer or officers of the department of workshops and factories."

Section 7766 of the General Code provides in substance by whom such age and schooling certificates shall be approved and what such certificates shall contain.

The last two mentioned sections, to wit, 7765 and 7766, relate merely to the matter of permitting school children to work or be employed, and specifies the method whereby they may be so permitted to work or be employed.

Section 7777 supra, in effect provides that when a truant officer is satisfied that a child, compelled to attend school by the provisions of this chapter, is unable to do so because absolutely required to work at home or elsewhere in order to support itself or care for others legally entitled to its services who are unable to support or care for themselves, such officer must report the case to the president of the board of education, etc.

The term "absolutely required" as employed in said section, is used in the sense of necessity or want. That is to say, when a child is unable to attend school because he is absolutely wanted or required, or it is absolutely necessary for him, to work at home or elsewhere in order to support himself or help to support or care for others who are unable to support or care for themselves—if this condition of necessity, want or need exists in the child's home, and his services therefore are required at home, then, within the meaning of the terms employed in section 7777, supra, such child is entitled to relief under said section. There is all the more reason for taking this view of the provisions contained in said section, when you consider that in every instance no boy under sixteen years of age and no girl under eighteen years of age, is permitted to be employed by any person unless they can acquire an age and schooling certificate showing that they have passed the sixth grade, if a boy, and the seventh grade if a girl. In other words, boys and girls are now barred from employment unless they can acquire an age and schooling certificate as provided for in sections 7765 and 7766, supra. Section 7777 supra, provides in substance that after the report has been made to the president of the board of education by the truant officer, thereupon such president shall furnish text books free of charge and such other relief as may be necessary to enable the child to attend school for the time each year required by law, such expenses incident thereto to be paid from the contingent fund of the school district. This duty is clearly imposed upon the president of the board, when the situation arises that a child is absolutely required, needed, or it is absolutely necessary for such child to work at home or elsewhere in order to support itself or help to support or care for others legally entitled to its services, etc.

Section 12981 of the General Code provides that whoever, being an officer, teacher, principal or other person, neglects to perform a duty imposed upon him in relation to enforcing the laws providing for compulsory education, shall be punished as follows:

> "Whoever, being an officer, principal, teacher, or other person, neglects to perform a duty imposed upon him by the laws relating to compulsory education or employment of minors, for which a specific penalty is not provided by law, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars for each offense."

For the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the board of education to provide relief out of its contingent fund for any boy under fifteen years of age and any girl under sixteen years of age, who is unable to attend school because absolutely required to work at home or elsewhere in order to support himself or herself or help to support or care for others legally entitled to his or her service who are unable to support or care for themselves, upon the report of the truant officer that he is satisfied of such necessity.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF DISTRICT ASSESSORS IN INCREASING OR REDUCING TAX VALUATIONS—BOARD OF COMPLAINTS—POWER AND DUTIES OF BOARD OF COMPLAINTS IN INCREASING OR DECREASING TAX VALUATION—POWER OF STATE TAX COMMISSION.

1. A district assessor, acting under section 5401, General Code, and exercising the powers and duties formerly vested in the county auditor by said section, may not reduce valuations for previous years; but if in the course of the investigation of a return on the current duplicate, he is satisfied that a reduction ought to be made, he may make such reduction, with the consent of the auditor of state, unless the board of complaints has acted upon the same matter.

2. A taxpayer who fails to appeal to the board of complaints, may, nevertheless, be the beneficiary of a reduction in valuation made by the district assessor under section 5401, General Code, but is without other means of relief, judicial or otherwise.

3. Where the board of complaints has acted upon a complaint made to it by a taxpayer, and the taxpayer is not satisfied with its decision, but fails within thirty days of its decision to perfect an appeal to the commission, no relief can be afforded to him under section 5401, General Code, nor can the tax commission entertain an appeal from the decision of the board of complaints; in short, a taxpayer can have no relief whatever under such circumstances.

4. The substance of section 5401, General Code, is still in effect, and the district assessor may exercise the powers and duties formerly imposed by that section upon the county auditor, notwithstanding the seeming inconsistency of having the district assessor review and correct his own action.

5. The tax commission is not substituted for the auditor of state under section 5401, General Code.

6. Section 5401 does not apply to the correction of real property valuations.

7. The tax commission has no power to grant relief in individual cases other than through an appeal from the decision of a board of complaints.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 26th, requesting my opinion upon the following questions: .

"1. Can a taxpayer whose property has been listed and carried on the duplicates in past years and the triplicate for the current year now receive any relief from the said valuation under section 5401, General Code?

"2. Can any relief be had by a taxpayer who failed to appeal to the district board of complaints?

"3. Is a person who failed to file an appeal within the thirty days from the date of decision of the board of complaints estopped from any further relief than that granted by that board?

"4. Do the provisions of the Warnes law operate a repeal by implication of section 5401, in that it would be a reviewing of a matter which had already been passed upon by the district assessor when he certifies the abstract of the county to the tax commission or transmits the duplicate to the county auditor?"

Your questions arise out of a seeming incongruity, apparent on the face of the statutes providing for the machinery of the assessment of personal property for taxation. Said statutes are as follows:

"Section 4 of the Warnes law, so-called, 103 Ohio Laws, 787. The district assessor shall, annually under the direction and supervision of the tax commission, list and value for taxation all real and personal property subject to taxation in the county constituting his assessment district, except as otherwise provided by law. * * * Wherever in the General Code, excepting in (certain sections) the words 'assessor' * * * are used, the same shall be deemed to mean the district assessor * * * and the offices held by such officers shall be deemed to be and are hereby abolished. The district assessor or his deputy shall, unless otherwise provided by law, perform or cause to be performed all the duties, exercise all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities and penalties devolved, conferred or imposed by law upon such officers."

Section 7 of said act:

"On or before the first Monday of July, annually, the district assessor shall compile and make up * * * separate lists of the names of the several persons * * * in whose names real or personal property has been listed in each * * * district in his assessment district, placing separately * * * opposite each name * * * the aggregate value of the personal property as listed therein and revised by him * * *. Such lists shall be prepared in triplicate. On or before the first Monday in September in each year the district assessor shall correct such lists in accordance with the additions and deductions ordered by the tax commission of Ohio and by the board of complaints and shall certify and deliver two copies thereof to the county auditor. The copies delivered to the county auditor shall constitute the auditor's tax list and treasurer's duplicate of real and personal property for the current year. * * *"

Section 9 of said act:

"Before making out and compiling the tax lists and duplicate the assessor shall examine and revise the statements and returns of all property, both real and personal, to see that the valuations thereof are equal and uniform throughout the assessment district, and that all property and each and every class, kind or description thereof, is valued for taxation through his district at its full and true value in money. If he finds any statement or return to be erroneous, either in the amount of property listed in the name of of any person, company, firm, partnership, association or corporation, or in the valuation of any item or items thereof, he shall correct such statement or return."

Section 14 of said act:

"It shall be the duty of the board of complaints to hear all complaints relating to the assessment of both real and personal property. It shall have power to lower or raise the assessments of all property submitted to it for review, or it may order a reassessment by the original assessing officer. At any hearing before the board, the assessing officer may appear to defend his assessments. Either party may appeal to the tax commission of Ohio from the decision of the board. If the board has reason to believe or is informed that any property subject to taxation in its assessment district has been omitted from the tax list, or has been improperly valued or assessed, it shall notify the district assessor to that effect and furnish him any facts and information within its knowledge bearing theron."

Section 18 of said act:

"The district board of complaints shall have power to investigate all complaints against assessments on the tax list, with respect to the amount of property listed as well as with respect to the valuation at which the same is listed. The power of the board shall extend to all cases in which real estate or personal property has been assessed for taxation for the current year, and to addition and corrections made during the next preceding year to the tax lists of previous years, but not to assessments, additions or corrections made by the tax commission of Ohio."

Section 21 of said act:

"On or before the first day of July, annually, the district assessor shall give ten days' notice, * * * that the tax lists for the current year have been completed and are open for public inspection in his office, and that complaints against any valuation or assessment * * * will be heard by the district board of complaints. * * *"

Section 24 of said act:

"Complaints against any valuation or assessment on the tax list for the current year may be filed with the county auditor before the meeting of the district board of complaints or thereafter during its session. Any taxpayer may file such complaint as to the valuation or assessment of his own or other's property, and the county commissioners, the prosecuting attorney, county auditor, county treasurer or any board of township trustees, any board of education, mayor or council of any municipal corporation in the county shall have the right to file such a complaint."

Section 25 of said act:

"The county auditor shall lay before the district board of complaints all complaints filed with him. The board shall investigate all such complaints and may increase or decrease any valuation or correct any assessment complained of, and no other."

Section 27 of said act:

"The district board of complaints shall not increase any valuation complained of without giving reasonable notice to the person in whose name the property affected thereby is listed, and affording him an opportunity to be heard. * * *"

Section 29 of said act:

"The district board of complaints shall certify its action to the district assessor, who shall correct the tax lists and duplicates according to the deductions and additions ordered by the board, in the manner provided for by law for making corrections thereof. If the tax list and duplicate have been delivered to the county auditor, the district assessor shall certify such corrections to him and he shall enter such corrections on his tax list and the treasurer's duplicate."

Section 31 of said act:

"An appeal from the decision of a district board of complaints may be taken to the tax commission of Ohio, within thirty days after the decision of such board, by the district assessor, or by any complainant, as provided in section twenty-four of this act. Such appeal shall be taken by written notice to that effect filed with the tax commission and with the county auditor, who shall thereupon certify to the commission a copy of the record of the board of complaints, pertaining to the original complaint, together with the minutes thereof, and all evidence, documentary or otherwise, offered in connection therewith. Upon receipt of notice of appeal, the county auditor shall notify all parties interested, and shall file proof of such notice with the tax commission of Ohio."

The foregoing sections lead to the following general statements:

The district assessor is the assessing officer (section 4). He is also the equalizing officer (section 9), and as such he is presumed to examine each statement or return of property to see that the amount and valuation thereof is correct before completing his work in that capacity. The completion of his work as an assessing and as an equalizing officer is to take place on the first of July, and does take place in contemplation of law when he has made up his tax list (section 7) and given public notice that the same is complete (section 21). The board of complaints is primarily the reviewing board, before which all complaints of taxpayers and public officers are to come. It is a tribunal in which the district assessor may appear, so to speak, as the adversary of any complainant. It is given ample power to grant relief against the action of the district assessor.

Nevertheless, on the face of the above statutes as they stand, without considering any other statutes, it appears that the power of the district assessor as an assessing officer is not wholly at an end when he has completed his work by making up his tax lists and duplicates and giving notice thereof; and that the power to make changes in valuations does not from that date forth in an assessing year reside exclusively in the board of complaints; for it is provided by section 14 that the board of complaints may order a reassessment by the original assessing officer and that the same board shall notify the assessor of the omission of any property from the tax lists, or of the improper valuation or assessment of any property, when knowledge of such fact comes to its notice. The meaning of this last provision is not exactly clear, in the light of the fact that the board of complaints has power to act upon its own initiative in the increase or reduction of any valuation on the tax list or the listed amount of taxable property thereon (section 28). If there is an explanation it is found, I think, in the supposition, which the legislative history will bear out, that the original draft of the measure from which the above sections are quoted did not provide for action by the board of complaints on its own initiative; so that, if the board of complaints should acquire knowledge of an erroneous assessment otherwise than through a direct complaint, it was the intention of the original bill that that knowledge should be imparted to the district assessor, who was to make the necessary assessment. As the law is actually passed, however, there is conflict at this point.

Of similar import is section 65 of the act above referred to, which provides as follows:

"When the district board of complaints discovers or has its attention called to the fact that in the current year or in any year since the year 1910 any taxable land, building, structure, improvement, minerals, mineral rights or personal property in the county, has escaped taxation or has been listed for taxation at less than its true value in money, it shall forthwith notify the district assessor of such fact. The district assessor shall make such inquiries and corrections as he is authorized and required to make by law in other cases in which real or personal property has escaped taxation, or has been improperly listed or valued for taxation."

At the risk of anticipating, I may state here that I think that this section, and especially the last sentence thereof, constitutes sufficient foundation for the conclusion that section 5401 of the General Code, as affected by other provisions of the Warnes law, was not repealed by implication, as inquired about in your fourth question.

I need not refer to section 64 of the Warnes law, which gives to the district assessor authority to correct clerical errors in the valuation of personal property after the tax list and duplicate has been made up, for the reason that I have assumed that your inquiries do not relate to errors of this sort.

So far, then, certain inconsistencies do appear in the Warnes law, but the supposed inconsistency to which your inquiries more particularly relate is disclosed by the following provisions of that law, and of the General Code as affected thereby:

Section 5 of the Warnes law, 103 O. L., 788:

"* * * whenever the county auditor is by any existing provision of law charged with any duty or vested with any power * * * in listing and valuing any property which has been omitted from the tax list, or in correcting any returns or statements of property for taxation, either with respect to its valuation or amount, such duty shall devolve upon and be performed by the district assessor, and such power shall vest in him and be exercised by him; provided, that if the county auditor has reason to believe or is informed that any property subject to taxation in his county has been omitted from the tax list, or has been improperly valued or assessed, he shall notify the district assessor to that effect, and furnish him any facts and information within his knowledge bearing thereon."

Section 5401 of the General Code provides:

"The county auditor, if he shall have reason to believe, or is informed that a person has in the year nineteen hundred and eleven or in any year thereafter, given to the assessor a false statement of the personal property, moneys or credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, that the assessor has not returned the full amount required to be listed in his ward or township, or has omitted or made an erroneous return of property, moneys, or credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, which are by law subject to taxation, shall proceed, in said year nineteen hundred and eleven or in any year thereafter at any time before the final settlement with the county treasurer to correct the return of the assessor, and charge such persons on the duplicate with the proper amount of taxes. To enable him so to do, he may issue compulsory process, and require the attendance of any persons whom he thinks have knowledge of the articles, or value of the personal property, money or credits, investment in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and examine such persons, on oath, in relation to such statement or return. The auditor, in all such cases, shall notify every such person before making the entry on the tax list and duplicate, that he may have an opportunity of showing that his statement or the return of the assessor was correct. The auditor, in all such cases shall file in his office a statement of the facts or evidence upon which he made such correction; but, he shall not reduce the amount returned by the assessor, without the written assent of the auditor of state, given on a statement of facts submitted by the county auditor."

It seems to me to be very clear that the general assembly intended that the group of powers vested in the county auditor by section 5401 of the General Code should be preserved intact and devolved upon the district assessor in his stead; in fact, I cannot imagine how the intention could have been made clearer than it has been made by the explicit provisions of section 5 of the Warnes law. But as if to make the matter sure, section 65 of the same law speaks of the powers of "inquiry and correction vested in the district assessor by law"; and aside from the provisions of sections 5398 to 5401, inclusive, and related sections, I know of no provisions of law which vest in the district assessor such powers as are referred to in said section 65.

I think, therefore, that I am ready to answer your fourth question at this point in this opinion by saying that however incongruous the idea of having the district assessor exercising the powers of the auditor, inquiring into and correcting his own acts as an assessing and equalizing officer, may be, such was the obvious intention of the legislature. So far from there having been an implied repeal of section 5401, there is an express adoption of it by reference—that is, the reference is express in all respects save the mere mention of the section number. In other words, the legislature has seen fit to repose in one officer the seemingly inconsistent functions of original assessment and equalization on the one hand and revision and correction on the other hand. But, as we shall see, this meaning inconsistency is not a novel one in our tax legislation.

Another inconsistency which seems to exist lies in the fact that the board of complaints has ample power to grant relief to a taxpayer, both against overvaluation of his own property and against undervaluation of another's property, as well as with respect to the listing of erroneous amounts, yet the district assessor, under section 5401, seems to have similar power; so that an instance is presented of similar power being vested in two tribunals which might, conceivably, act at the same time upon the same subject-matter.

Without discussing the question as to whether the inconsistency is as great as it seems at first blush, I may state now that this feature of our taxation law is not a new one by any means.

I refer the commission to the laws as they existed before the Warnes law was passed. So far as they related to the assessment of personal property they provided that the original listing should be made through the assessors elected in the different townships and municipal wards in the county. These made their returns to the county auditor, whose duty it was to receive them and then to "lay them before the annual county board of equalization" (Sec. 5590, General Code, now repealed). This annual county board of equalization consisted, for the county outside of any city therein, of the county commissioners and county auditor; while in cities it was known as the board of review and consisted of three members appointed by the state board of appraisers and assessors, and the auditor was its secretary, subject in all proper respects to the orders of the board. (Sec. 5623, General Code, now repealed.)

Now, under the old scheme of things, when the returns of the assessors were laid before the annual county board of equalization or the board of review, as the case might be, it was the duty of the board to equalize such returns, hearing complaints (Sec. 5582, General Code, now repealed) and to go over the lists returned by each assessor (Section 5586, General Code, now repealed), with the power to add to or deduct from the valuation of personal property, moneys and credits of any person returned by the assessor or county auditor, or which may have been omitted by them. (Sec. 5591, General Code, now repealed.)

At the same time, of course, section 5401, as above quoted, with its original force and effect, was extant.

Under these provisions the county auditor, as a member of the county board of equalization, might directly participate in the finding and determination with respect to the amount that should be returned by an individual as his personal property, or he might have acted as county auditor, under section 5401, with the same effect. There is, therefore, practically the same inconsistency in the old statutes as is found in the new. Two remedies, at least, exist on the part of the public against the taxpayer for the correction of the same wrong, and so far as the inference deducible from the last clause of section 5401 is concerned it would appear that under the old law the taxpayer might in a proper case have his assessment reduced by the auditor, even though he had failed to go before the board of equalization.

Nor did this situation seemingly creep into the law in an accidental way. Our present taxation statutes date from the act of April 5, 1859; and it may be remarked that most of the sections of the General Code, as they stood prior to the adoption of the Warnes law, and as many of them still stand, have not been amended in substance or form since the date last mentioned. The act in question will be found in 56 Ohio Laws, 175. I call attention to section 34 of that act. It will be found, I think, to be almost verbatim the same as present section 5401, General Code, with the exception that the limitation to the year 1911 is not, of course, found therein.

In this connection see section 46 of that act, which provided for the annual county board of equalization. At that time there were no boards of review.

It is fair, then, to say that from the inception of our present system of taxation practically the same inconsistencies have existed in the machinery of making corrections that are found in the present law. In fact, the only difference between the present statutes and the old statutes is that the district assessor is substituted for the equalizing function of the old annual county board of equalization, and the board of complaints is substituted for the reviewing function of that board. The old county board of complaints, of which the auditor was a member, was supposed to perform exactly the same functions which the district assessor is required to perform by section 9 of the Warnes law, which is the section which really gives rise to your question, it being the provision requiring him, before he makes up his tax list, to examine the statements and returns and to see that the valuations are equal and uniform throughout the district and to correct any statement or return if it appears to be erroneous either in the amount of property listed or in the valuation of any item or items thereof. If it were not for the imposition of this duty on the district assessor, the inconsistency between the functions exercised by the district assessor antecedent to the making up of the tax lists and the functions which he is authorized to exercise under section 5401, as adopted by reference, would not be so great.

It appears, therefore, that this seeming inconsistency, which, as I shall hereinafter point out, is not so great as it appears to be, has been in one degree or another a feature of our taxing machinery since its inception. Therefore, I cannot hold that on account of its existence there has been any implied repeal of section 5401 or any part thereof through the adoption of the Warnes law.

My answer to your fourth question is therefore in the negative.

Your first three questions may be considered together. They involve an interpretation of all the provisions of law which have been quoted, and particularly of the last clause of section 5401, which, by necessary implication though not directly, authorizes the district assessor, exercising the powers formerly possessed by the county auditor, to reduce the amount returned by the assessor with the written assent of the auditor of state. In my opinion, the implication which appears here cannot be avoided, and if the district assessor, proceeding in the manner and form which the section stipulates, has acquired, so to speak, jurisdiction of given returns or statements, and the necessity or propriety of a reduction, rather than an increase is made clear to him, he may make such reduction if the written assent of the auditor of state is forthcoming.

In this connection I must point out that section 5401 is not a remedy available to the taxpayer as such; it provides for an exparte proceeding on the part of the district assessor, the successor of the county auditor in this respect. That official does not act on complaint but on his own initiative. In order to move him to action it must appear that the assessor (in this case the district assessor himself or one of his deputies) "has omitted or made an erroneous return." Though that fact may be made to appear to him by informal complaint, yet, the proceeding is not of the character of one before the board of complaints and it does not partake of the nature of a remedy in the sense that the taxpayer is required to exhaust it before receiving relief in the courts. But once the district assessor has determined to proceed with his inquiry, upon information that an erroneous return has been made, he must notify the taxpayer and give him a hearing. He must make up a statement of facts, and if this statement of facts shows the necessity or propriety of a reduction, rather than an increase, he must transmit the same to the auditor of state and secure his consent before such reduction can be made.

Now, this power can be exercised at any time before the final settlement in August of the year following the year in which the assessment is made. So far as express provision in the law is concerned, the failure of the taxpayer to complain to the board of complaints is no bar to the exercise by the district assessor of the powers reposed in him by this section. In fact, it could not be a bar; otherwise, there never could arise an occasion for the exercise of the power to reduce the assessment.

Whether or not the making of the complaint to the board of complaints and the failure of that board to afford relief to the taxpayer would be a bar to relief by the district assessor, under section 5401, is a question which it is not necessary to answer in considering the queries submitted in your letter, and no opinion is expressed thereon.

With these considerations in mind, then, your questions may be answered directly. Coming to your first question I beg to advise that the action of the district assessor, under section 5401, relates exclusively to the correction of the duplicate of the current year and does not apply to corrections for previous years. (Patton vs. Bank, 7 N. P. 401.) Corrections for previous years are to be made under section 5398 and section 5399 of the General Code, neither of which authorizes any reduction. The only remedy for reduction on personal property assessments for previous years is that found in section 18 of the Warnes law, supra, which gives the district board of complaints power to relieve upon complaints against additions and corrections made during the next preceding year to the tax lists of previous years; and it will be observed that this power does not extend to assessments on duplicates for previous years except such as have been made by way of corrections and additions.

Therefore, answering your first question, I am of the opinion that a taxpayer, whose property has been listed and carried on the duplicate in the past years and on the triplicate for the current year, may receive relief from the valuation for the current year only under section 5401, General Code, provided he has not complained to the board of complaints respecting said valuation; if such a complaint has been made to the board of complaints I would be of the opinion that the same is a bar to proceedings by the district assessor under section 5401. But, as already stated, no final opinion is expressed here upon this point.

Answering your second question, I beg to advise that in my opinion the taxpayer who fails to appeal to the district board of complaints may be relieved by the district assessor under sections 5401 of the General Code. This section has been held to be mandatory upon the county auditor (when it applied to him), in the sense that when informed as to omissions it was his duty to proceed to correct them. State ex rel. vs. Crites, 48 O. S., 142. But it is my opinion that the section cannot be held to be mandatory with respect to the making of reductions, and that in this respect it does not constitute a remedy from the standpoint of the taxpayer. Therefore, if a taxpayer should fail to make complaint to the board of complaints with respect to a valuation on the current tax list, he is not entitled as of right to any action on the part of the district assessor under section 5401. If the district assessor chooses to reopen the matter of the taxpayer's return, for the purpose of correcting it, he may do so, but he need not take such action unless upon complaint that property has been omitted from that return, in which event mandamus will lie to compel him to make the necessary corrections. So, if a taxpayer fails to apply to the board of complaints for a reduction, all other remedies intended for his benefit are foreclosed to him, and upon the principles laid down in Mills vs. Board of Equalization, 1 C. S. C. R. 566, and other cases of similar import, the taxpayer's right to question the assessment by injunction proceedings or by resisting the collection of the tax is foreclosed.

In answering your third question I shall assume that some action has been taken upon a taxpayer's complaint by a board of complaints, but that the taxpayer is dissatisfied with the action of the board and desires further relief. Certainly, such relief cannot be obtained through the district assessor acting under section 5401, General Code, for the reason that his function under that section extends only to the correction of the returns, and when the returns have been supplanted by the determination of the board of complaints any proceedings on the part of the district assessor, under section 5401, would be in reality a correction of the work of the board of complaints. So that, while I have declined to pass, as a general proposition, upon the question as to whether a mere appeal to the board precludes action under section 5401, I do not hesitate to express an opinion that, where the board has actually acted on complaint made to it, the right of the district assessor to act under section 5401 in the matter of the assessment thus made by the board of complaints is destroyed.

Your third question involves consideration of section 31 of the Warnes law, as above quoted. This section stipulates that the appeal from the district board of complaints to the tax commission shall be made within thirty days after the decision of the board. In my opinion a taxpayer who has allowed thirty days after the decision of the board of complaints to elapse has no appeal to the tax commission therefrom. Not having any remedy by way of moving a district assessor to action under section 5401, and his right to an injunction being defeated by reason of his failure to exhaust the remedy that was open to him, or his laches in prosecuting that remedy, he may have no relief whatever.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ADDENDUM.

Since the above opinion was dictated it has been stated to me that by your first three questions you intended to inquire concerning points that have not been passed upon therein, viz.:

> "1. Is the power which section 5401, in terms, vests in the auditor of state now vested in the tax commission of Ohio?
> "2. Does section 5401 apply to real property valuation?
> "3. In the cases suggested by your second and third questions may a taxpayer, who has neglected to pursue the specific remedies afforded by the Warnes law, receive any relief from the tax commission?"

The first of these three questions involves consideration of section 1465-33 of the General Code, which provides in part as follows:

> "All powers, duties and privileges imposed and conferred upon any state board, which board was abolished or its powers in whole or in part conferred upon the tax commission of Ohio, by an act of the general assembly, passed May 10, 1910, or any power or duty theretofore conferred upon any state or county officer or board, which power and duty by such act was conferred upon such commission, is hereby imposed and conferred upon the commission created by such act. * * *"

I think it is obvious that this section is a mere adoption by reference of the provisions of the prior act therein mentioned, and has no independent force and effect of its own save to carry into the act of which it was a part the provisions of the earlier act; therefore, we must turn to the act of May 10, 1910, for an answer to the question. That act is found in 101 Ohio Laws, 399. Seeking in that act for a provision which would have the effect of transferring, so to speak, from the auditor of state to the tax commission, the power to approve reductions made by the county auditor under section 5401, General Code, the following are encountered, and their effect in this respect may be considered:

> "Sec. 12. (Designated as section 5456, General Code, but since repealed as such.) The commission shall adopt reasonable and proper rules and regulations to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all valuations of real or personal property, apportionments, investigations, inspections and hearings not otherwise specifically provided for."

The commission's power to adopt reasonable and proper rules and regulations is limited, I think, to the government of the mode and manner of proceedings authorized by law and does not extend so far as to authorize the commission, by rule, to assume to itself jurisdiction over a given subject-matter which the statutes specifically confer upon some other officer.

> "Sec. 115. (Designated as section 5542-17, but since repealed as such.) All powers, duties and privileges imposed and conferred upon any state board, which board is by this act abolished or its powers and duties in whole or in part conferred upon this commission, or any power or duty which has heretofore been conferred upon any state or county officer or board, which power and duty is hereby conferred upon the commission, is hereby imposed and conferred upon the commission created by this act; * * *"

The auditor of state not being a "state board," it is apparent that the second half, so to speak, of the above quoted provision is the only part thereof which could be applicable to the situation presented by your question. If the power or duty of the auditor of state, under section 5401, is a power or duty which the act of May 10, 1910, confers upon the commission, then, the effect of this section is to deprive the auditor of state of jurisdiction in the premises and to confer the same upon the commission. It is obvious, however, that section 115 of the act of 1910 does not of itself determine the question, because the act of which it is a part must be searched for other provisions which have the effect of conferring upon the commission the power or duty which section 5401 formerly at least imposed or conferred upon the auditor of state.

In this connection it may be said generally that many of the powers and duties formerly imposed by law upon the auditor of state are expressly vested and imposed by the act in the tax commission; thus, the auditor of state was formerly required or authorized to instruct the county auditors relative to their duties under the taxation laws; while section 81 of the act of 1910 expressly devolved that function upon the tax commission; it vested in the commission power to remit taxes and penalties illegally assessed and to correct errors on the tax duplicate, which function was formerly vested in the auditor of state, who was required in certain instances to call to his assistance the governor and the attorney general. Upon these express provisions the operation of section 115 of the act of 1910 is clear and its effect, as already stated, is to deprive the officers formerly exercising such functions of the power to exercise them and to impose the same exclusively upon the commission.

In addition to these powers, however, the commission was vested with certain functions which were at the time new in our taxation laws. Section 81 of the act directed the commission to "see that all laws concerning the valuation and assessment of all classes of property and the collection of taxes thereon are faithfully obeyed." I do not think that this function of the commission, taken in connection with section 115 of the act, has any effect upon the auditor's power under section 5401, because it is apparent from the context in section 81 that the function itself is to be discharged by the commission by the issuance of "such orders and instructions * * * as will carry into effect the provisions of law relating to taxation." The power to issue orders and instructions to a subordinate officer, for the purpose of seeing that the laws are properly administered, is readily distinguished from the power to approve an act of such an officer with reference to a matter of judgment and discretion.

The same section directs the commission to "require county auditors to place upon the tax duplicate any property which may be found to have, for any reason, escaped assessment and taxation."

This power of the commission would have some effect upon section 5401, because it would authorize the commission to move the auditor to action under section 5401 at the very least; indeed, it might have the extreme effect of giving to the commission the power to make investigations and corrections such as that possessed by the auditor under the section named, and, when read in connection with section 115 of the act, to deprive the county auditor of that power. I do not, however, believe that this extreme result can be sustained; that is, I think that the commission's power in this connection was intended to be merely supplementary to that of the county auditor and not to be a substitute for it. My reasons for this conclusion will not be stated in full, but the consequence of the opposite conclusion may suggest some of them. That consequence would be that the tax commission would have the sole power under the act of 1910 to make inquiries and corrections such as were formerly made by the county auditor, and that the county auditor would have no power to do so. As already stated, I do not believe that the act of 1910 had such far-reaching effect. Certainly, it was not so interpreted in practice.

Further in this connection, however, it is to be observed that the power of the commission to order county auditors to place omitted property on the duplicate is not a power that was formerly possessed by the auditor of state, but is a new power. Therefore, I do not think that any effect can be claimed for this provision, read in connection with section 115 of the act of 1910, such as to divest the auditor of state of the power expressly imposed in him by section 5401.

Another power which the commission had under the act is created by the same section, viz., section 81, and is that of raising or lowering the assessed value of any real or personal property, to the end that the assessment laws of the state will be equitably administered. This action could be taken only upon notice and after hearing; it was a power quite separate and distinct from any which had formerly been exercised by any state officer; therefore, it could not be regarded as a power "which has heretofore been conferred upon any state or county officer or board" within the meaning of section 115.

Now, it might be contended with much force that the spirit of the act of 1910 was such as to force the conclusion that the legislature intended that all the functions of the state government relative to the assessment of property for taxation should be vested in the tax commission; so that section 115 should be given a liberal construction for the purpose of accomplishing this result; and that when the section is given such a construction the result of its application would be that the power of the auditor of state under section 5401 is transferred to the commission.

Unfortunately, such a vital substantive thing as a power cannot be taken from one officer and vested in another by such a remote inference as this. It would have been very easy for the legislature, in passing the act of 1910 and that of 1911, to amend section 5401 so as to accomplish this result. So far from doing so, however, the legislature, on the very same day on which it passed the act of May 10, 1910, amended section 5401 in other respects and left in it the same language which had theretofore been incorporated therein relative to the approval of the auditor of state. (101 O. L. 434.) Were there a direct conflict between the provisions of amended section 5401 and any provision of the tax commission act, passed on the same day, I would be of the opinion that the latter would prevail, especially in view of the fact that section 5401 was not amended in the particular respect of which I am speaking; but, as already pointed out, I can find no such direct conflict; so that, in the absence thereof, the re-enactment of section 5401 contemporaneously with the passage of the tax commission act of 1910 takes on a considerable degree of significance.

For all these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that it is the auditor of state and not the tax commission whose approval is required under section 5401.

Answering the second question above mentioned, I may say that section 5401 clearly relates only to personal property. State ex rel. vs. Akins, 63 O. S. 183. I think that the section as a whole clearly discloses the correctness of this conclusion and I do not believe that it is necessary for me to elaborate my reasons therefor.

The third question above mentioned requires further consideration of the Warnes law, so-called. Formerly, as already pointed out, the tax commission had the original power to raise or lower the assessed value of any real or personal property, first giving notice to interested parties, etc. This power, which first arose under section 81 of the act of 1910, was carried into the act of 1911, as section 147, and became section 5617-2, General Code. This section, however, was repealed expressly by the Warnes law. (See 103 Ohio Laws, 803, section 68.) So that the commission no longer has independent power to act upon property valuations. Whatever action it takes must be under some specific provision of the statutes now in force.

One set of provisions is, of course, that for appeal from the decision of the board of complaints to the tax commission. As observed in the main opinion, the right of such an appeal is forfeited by the taxpayer upon failure on his part to perfect the same within thirty days after the decision of the board of complaints. It would seem reasonable to hold that where the right had been thus forfeited the same result could not be attained in some other way; otherwise, there would be no reason whatever for inserting the thirty-day limitation in section 31 of the act.

In like manner, section 5617-4, General Code, has been repealed. This is the section providing for the remission of taxes illegally assessed. The evident intention of the Warnes law is that the sole remedy of the taxpayer for the correction of errors shall be by application to the board of complaints and appeal from its decision to the tax commission. I think this intention is very clearly effected by the whole law, and it is not inconsistent therewith to hold that the county auditor may incidentally reduce a valuation of personal property by proceeding under section 5401; for, as I have pointed out, section 5401 is not in its essence a taxpayer's remedy at all, but rather a remedy of the public as against the taxpayer.

Without discussing the subject more elaborately, I may say I am clearly of the opinion that under the circumstances mentioned in your second and third questions the tax commission can afford no relief whatever to the taxpayer.

I have not dealt, however, in answering this question with the subject of reassessment power, to make which is expressly preserved by sections 62 and 63 of the Warnes law. The effect of an order for reassessment, however, is to subject all property of a given class within a taxing district to such reassessment. I assume that your questions relate to individual complaints, where the necessity for reassessment does not exist. Therefore, I do not consider the seemingly difficult question as to whether a reassessment may be ordered at any time, or only prior to the commission's approval of the abstract of property; though I should be inclined to the view that after the commission has approved the abstract it is too late to order a reassessment.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOLS LOCATED AT COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—CONTROL OF SUCH SCHOOLS PLACED WITH BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF SUCH HOMES—MEANING OF THE TERM "ORPHANS' ASYLUM" AS USED IN SECTION 7676, GENERAL CODE.

Sections 3085 and 3088, General Code, vest the control of schools located at county children's homes in the board of trustees of such homes and they maintain control of the same until such time as schools are established by the respective boards of education of the districts wherein such county or orphans' homes are located, upon the request of the board of trustees of such homes to such board of education to so establish such schools. There is no statutory provision whereby the schools of county homes can be brought uniformly under the supervision of the boards of education of the respective districts, except that it be done in accordance with the provisions of sections 7676 and 7677, General Code, supra.

Schools in county homes may be established and maintained independently of the boards of education of the respective districts wherein such homes are located, until such time as such schools may be brought under the control of the boards of education of such respective districts by the boards of education establishing schools at such homes in accordance with sections 7676 and 7677, General Code, here before mentioned.

The phrase "or orphans' asylum established by law," as employed in section 7676, General Code, does not include an institution incorporated for the purpose of caring for dependent children, and which is not maintained in any manner by funds derived from governmental sources. The phrase "established by law" means those children's homes or orphans' asylums which are established and maintained by the state or some political subdivision thereof, and cannot be said to apply to institutions incorporated for the purpose of caring for dependent children, which are privately managed institutions and which do not derive support from the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 6, 1914, you request my opinion as follows:

> "By section 7676 of the General Code, as amended in April, 1913, O. L. Vol. No. 103, pp. 896, 897, 'the board of education in any district in which a children's home or orphan asylum is established by law, when requested by the board of trustees of such children's home, when no public school is situated reasonably near such home or asylum, shall establish a separate school in such home or asylum, so as to afford the children therein, etc., the advantages and privileges of a common school education * * *.'
> "Section 7677 of O. L. Vol 103, supra, states that all schools so established in any such home or asylum shall be under the control and management of the respective boards of education of the school districts in which such homes and institutions are located * * *.
> "What, in your opinion, is the meaning of the phrase as above worded, 'all schools so established in any such home or asylum, etc.', that is, does the control and management of the board of education of the school district in which a children's home is located extend to the school in such children's home under all conditions, or does it extend only to such children's homes as maintain schools which have been established by the board of education at the request of the trustees of the home? In other words, was it the intent of the law to place the schools in all county homes under the supervision of the boards of education of their respective districts, or was it the intention to make such supervision possible only in those cases where the boards of education of the districts had established such schools at the request of the board of trustees?

"If the latter is the interpretation, can you find any other way whereby the schools of county homes can be uniformly brought under the supervision of the boards of education of their respective districts?

"Is there, in your opinion, under present statutes, authority whereby schools in county homes may be established and maintained by the trustees independently of the boards of education of the school districts in which such homes are located? That is, does section 3088, G. C., as amended in April, 1913, and found in O. L. Vol. 103, p. 890, give the trustees power to maintain a school in the home independently of the board of education of the district, as to establishment of the school and as to supervision and management after it is so established?

"Or, in other words, we seek to inquire whether the recently enacted school code does not place the inmates of the county children's homes of Ohio under the same scheme of county supervision as for other children who are educated at public expense? If this is not the case upon what sections of the law do you base the exemption from the application of the general school laws?

"In some sections of the General Code relating to children's homes occurs the expression 'or orphans' asylum established by law.' Does such expression include an institution incorporated for the purpose of caring for dependent children and which is not maintained in any manner by funds derived from governmental sources?"

Section 7676, General Code, as amended, Vol. 103 Ohio Laws, 896, provides as follows:

"The board of education in any district in which a children's home or orphans' asylum is established by law, when requested by the board of trustees of such children's home or orphans' asylum when no public school is situated reasonably near such home or asylum, shall establish a separate school in such home or asylum, so as to afford to the children therein, as far as practicable, the advantages and privileges of a common school education. Such schools must be continued in operation for such period as is provided by law for public schools. If the distributive share of school funds to which the school at such home or asylum is entitled by the enumeration of children in the institution is not sufficient to continue the schools for that length of time, the deficiency shall be paid out of the funds of the institution or by the county commissioners."

Section 7677, General Code, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws, 896, provides as follows:

"All schools so established in any such home or asylum shall be under the control and management of the respective boards of education of the school districts in which such homes and institutions are located, and courses of study, length of school term, and all other school matters shall be uniform in the respective school districts. Teachers employed in such homes or institutions must have a teacher's elementary school certificate as provided by section seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code."

It is to be noted that only schools established in the manner provided by section 7676, in any such home or asylum designated in said section, shall be under the control and management of the boards of education of the respective school districts in which such homes and institutions are located, as specified by section 7677. The provisions of the sections just quoted seem to indicate, therefore, that schools which are not so established in accordance with said sections are left outside of the control of the boards of education of the respective districts wherein such homes and schools so established are located, unless there is some other statutory authority which authorizes or warrants the board to take charge of schools which are not so established.

At first it might be thought that section 7690, General Code, might have some application to the situation about which you inquire. Said section provides as follows:

"Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best interests of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings, and such other employes as it deems necessary, and fix their salaries. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

It is to be noted that the section just quoted applies only to public schools. In this case the schools established at county homes or orphan asylums, by the trustees of such homes or asylums, are not strictly public schools, because they are solely and only for the purpose of educating the children or pupils living in such homes or asylums and are not open to the public generally, and do not even come under the control of the boards of education of the respective districts wherein such homes or asylums are located unless such boards assume the control and management of the same in accordance with sections 7676 and 7677, above quoted.

Section 3085, General Code, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws, 889, seems to indicate that schools located at county children's homes shall remain under the control of the trustees unless they come within the control of the board of education by virtue of sections 7676 and 7677, above quoted. Said section 3085 provides as follows:

"Subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees prescribe, the superintendent shall have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein. Upon the recommendation of the superintendent, the trustees may appoint a matron, assistant matron, teacher or teachers whose duties shall be the care of the inmates of the home, and to direct their employment giving suitable physical, mental and moral training to them. Under the direction of the superintendent, the matron shall have the control, general management and supervision of the household duties of the home, and the matron, assistant matron, teacher, or teachers, shall perform such other duties, and receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct. They may be removed by the superintendent or at the pleasure of the trustees, or a majority of them. A licensed physician may be employed who shall at least quarterly make a physical and mental examination of all the inmates of such home, and a record of such examination shall be kept. When necessary, experts may be employed to give the proper treatment, or a child may be sent to a suitable institution for treatment at the expense of the county."

Section 3088, General Code, as amended, 103 Ohio Laws, 889, provides the particular method whereby funds shall be provided for the support of the school in such county homes, as follows:

"During the two weeks ending on the fourth Saturday in July, the clerk of the board of trustees shall take and return to the county auditor the names and ages of all youth of school age in such home. The state common school fund, not otherwise appropriated by law, shall be apportioned in proportion to the enumeration of youth, to such home and other districts, subdistricts and joint subdistricts within the county. The amount of money due such home under such apportionment shall be set apart by the auditor of the county, and shall become a part of the children's home fund and used to maintain a common school in such home, and shall be paid out on certificate of the trustees, stating in the certificate, the amount and the purposes thereof. Thereupon the county auditor shall issue his warrant on the treasurer for the amount so certified. This section shall not apply to children's homes in counties where such children attend the public schools. When in their judgment advisable, the trustees may employ a teacher to teach the school in any such home, as provided by law, but such teacher must have a 'teacher's elementary school certificate' as provided for by section seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code."

By way of summary, it appears from the foregoing that sections 3085 and 3088, just quoted, vest the control of schools located at county children's homes in the board of trustees of such homes, and they maintain control of the same until such time as said schools come under the control of the respective boards of education of the districts wherein the same are located, by the board of trustees of such homes requesting the respective boards of education to so assume control of the schools therein. This answers your first question.

As to your second question, I am unable to find any statutory provision whereby the schools of county homes can be uniformly brought under the supervision of the boards of education of the respective districts except that it be done in accordance with the provisions of sections 7676 and 7677, General Code.

Answering your third question, it is my judgment that schools in county homes may be established and maintained independently of the boards of education of respective districts wherein such homes are located, until such time as such schools may be brought under the control of the boards of education of such respective districts in the manner heretofore pointed out. This follows as a conclusion from the reasoning set forth in the answer to your first question.

The recently enacted school code does not place the inmates of county children's homes attending schools maintained by the trustees under county supervision. This is in answer to your fourth question. I have already indicated the sections of the General Code which exempt the inmates or the children of county children's homes from the operation of the general school laws.

In answer to your fifth and last question, the phrase "or orphans' asylum established by law," as employed in section 7676, does not include an institution incorporated for the purpose of caring for dependent children, and which is not maintained in any manner by funds derived from governmental sources. The phrase "established by law" means those children's homes or orphan asylums which are established and maintained by the state or some political subdivision thereof, and cannot be said to apply to institutions incorporated for the purpose of caring for dependent children, which are privately managed institutions and which do not derive support from the state.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION IN REFERENCE TO EMPLOYERS CARRYING THEIR OWN INSURANCE UNDER SECTION 22 OF THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—MEDICAL ATTENDANCE, HOSPITAL AND NURSING SERVICE.

The industrial commission has authority to permit employers carrying their own insurance under section 22 of the workmen's compensation act to require employes of such company to receive medical attendance and hospital and nursing services from the physicians, surgeons and hospitals maintained by such company. If the employe calls upon physicians other than those employed by such company, the employer is not liable for the expenditure so incurred by such employe. This is a general rule and is subject to modification under exceptional circumstances, such as those which might arise when the company surgeons or physicians were unable by reason of absence or from some other cause to furnish the necessary medical attendance to the employe in case of emergency. This is especially true when the employe has first resorted to one of the company physicians and has later gone to another physician not in the employ of the company, for no valid reason.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1914.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 25, 1914, you write as follows:

"This commission has before it at the present time a claim involving the following set of circumstances:

"A certain company has been authorized by the commission to pay compensation and medical expenses direct in accordance with the provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation act.

"Said company maintains at its plant several regularly equipped emergency hospitals and employs under salary a number of surgeons to care for injuries sustained by its employes.

"On July 2, 1914, an employe of said company was injured and on July 7th said employe received treatment for his injury at the hands of one of the company's regular surgeons. This surgeon also rendered treatment for said injury from July 8th to July 27th, on which day he was discharged as cured.

"On July 5th, which was the first Sunday after the date of said employe's injury, he went to a doctor who is not connected with the surgical staff of said company, who dressed his injury. Said doctor has presented to said company a bill for $3.00, covering the services rendered by him, as above mentioned, which bill the company refuses to pay, on the ground that their employes are compelled to accept the services of their regular surgeons in the treatment of injuries sustained in the course of their employment, and that in the event of the refusal of any employe to accept the services of a regular surgeon of the company, the company is not required to pay the fee of any outside physician from whom the employe may receive treatment.

"The commission is therefore desirous of obtaining your opinion as to whether an employer operating under the provisions of section 22 of the compensation act is required, under the provisions of said act, to pay for medical fees incurred by employes injured in the course of their employment, when such services are rendered by physicians other than the regularly appointed physicians of the employer."

Section 22 of the workman's compensation act, 103 Ohio Laws, 72, provides that,

"such employers who will abide by the rules of the state liability board of awards and as may be of sufficient financial ability or credit to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes or to the dependents of killed employes, and the furnishing of medical, surgical, nursing and hospital attention and services and medicines, and funeral expenses equal to or greater than is provided for in this act, or such employers as maintain benefit funds or departments or jointly with other employers maintain mutual associations of such said financial ability or credit, to which their employes are not required or permitted directly or indirectly to contribute, providing for the payment of such compensation and the furnishing of such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention and funeral expenses, may upon the finding of such facts by the state liability board of awards elect to pay individually or from such benefit fund department or association such compensation, and furnish such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital service and attention and funeral expenses, directly to such injured or the dependents of such killed employes; and the state liability board of awards may require such security or bond from said employers as it may deem proper, adequate and sufficient to compel, or to secure to such injured employes, or to the dependents of such employes as may be killed, the payment of the compensation and expenses herein provided for, which shall in no event be less than that paid or furnished out of the state insurance fund in similar cases * * *."

The board of awards is further authorized to modify its findings in order to secure strict compliance with the provisions of the act in reference to the payment of compensation and the furnishing of medical, nursing and hospital services and medicines and funeral expenses.

An explicit provision may be found in section 42 of the act authorizing the board to disburse such amount for medical, nursing and hospital services and medicines as it may deem proper, not, however, to exceed two hundred dollars; and the board is given the power to adopt rules and regulations with regard to furnishing medical, nursing and hospital services and medicine.

From this last it will be seen that the board itself is given wide discretion as to the manner in which disbursements of this character may be made; but there is no such explicit provision contained in section 22 authorizing employers directly to compensate their injured employes. It seems that the language with reference to the furnishing of medical, surgical, nursing and hospital attention and services and medicine would permit the employer to provide such services and attention, and in so doing he would have the right to select his own physician or surgeon, and provide for nurses and a hospital of his own selection, subject to the approval of the board of awards—or at the present time the industrial commission, which has superseded said board of awards. It is nowhere directly stated in the section that the employer must pay the injured employe the expenses to which he has been put in providing himself with medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services; although he is required to furnish funeral expenses.

In those parts of the section above quoted it will be found, however, that the employer may be required to give bond to secure "the payment of the compensation and the expenses herein provided for." From this one might infer that the word "expenses" had reference not only to funeral expenses but to sums expended for medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services. The fact that express mention is made of payment of compensation and expenses would seem to imply that this was to cover all of the expenditures to which the employer was to be put under the act. It would not seem reasonable to require bond simply for the payment of compensation and funeral expenses and to omit the furnishing of medical, surgical and hospital services. It is as important to the employe that he receive one as the other. Therefore, it may be assumed that the act may be so construed as to require reimbursement of the employe for such sums as he has expended in the treatment of his injuries. On the other hand, as we have before suggested, it may with great force be argued that when the employer has provided a corps of nurses, physicians and a hospital for the care and treatment of his injured employes, he is complying with the spirit of the act and his employe should be compelled to receive treatment from those whom the employer has provided for this purpose; provided, of course, the industrial commission has sanctioned the action of the employer in this regard. Under these circumstances it would seem manifestly unfair for the employe to put the employer to the additional expense of paying compensation for medical attention in addition to that which he had furnished the employe and which was adequate.

With these considerations in mind I incline to the belief that this is an administrative matter, which should be taken care of by your commission at the time it authorizes the employer directly to pay compensation and medical expenses in lieu of insuring in the state fund. If it finds that the hospitals, surgeons and nurses maintained and employed by the employer are efficient, and that injured employes will receive proper medical care and attention therefrom and therein, it may permit such employer to require his employe to be treated by its surgeons, and cared for by its nurses in its hospitals. When this is done I do not think that the employer can be made liable to other physicians who may be employed by the injured workman, except under exceptional circumstances, under which it might be impossible to secure the attendance of the regular surgeon of the employer.

Directly answering your question, it is my opinion that if the employer is permitted by your commission to furnish medical attention by his regular physicians to his injured employes, and, further, if your commission authorizes such service to be exclusive, then such employer cannot be compelled to pay for medical services rendered by physicians other than the regularly appointed physicians of the employer. I think I have fully outlined the circumstances under which this condition of affairs may arise.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

LAND REGISTRATION ACT—ENTRIES CLERK OF COURTS SHOULD MAKE—EXPENSE OF REGISTRATION—COUNTY RECORDER—COSTS ARISING OUT OF REGISTRATION.

1. The clerk of courts should in ordinary cases enter upon his journal the entire decree of registration in actions brought under the land registration act of Ohio, but where there is no special reason for so doing the court might, under authority of section 11605, General Code, authorize the waiver of the making of the final record. Requirements of this law may be met by the clerk's entering the orders and decrees on the minutes of the journal and carefully collecting and binding all papers and transmitting them to the recorder's office. A certified copy of the entry must be furnished the recorder by the clerk.

2. Applicants for registration should deposit a sufficient amount of money to pay the cost of mailing registered letters and the posting of notice.

3. All papers dealing with registration of title should be filed with the recorder.

4. Costs arising out of the registration cause of action should be taxed and paid in the manner provided in that act; while costs covering cause of action to sell realty should be paid under the statutes governing them. Registration is separate and distinct from partition or the selling of lands to pay debts and legacies. The statutes referring to the latter have not been superseded by such registration act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 18th you submit the following questions, asked of you by the clerk of courts of Delaware, Ohio:

> "1. Is the clerk of courts expected to journalize all of this complex decree of registration and also furnish recorders with certified copies of the same? In ordinary cases a single copy of these plats and descriptions would cost more than the three dollars.
> "2. What record is the clerk compelled to make in the above suit?
> "3. Is a defendant who files a pleading in answer to the first cause 'to sell lands to pay debts, etc.,' but does not in any way answer the second cause 'registration,' required to pay the three dollars mentioned in section 112 of the registration law?
> "4. Who pays the cost of notifying defendants as required in section 15?
> "5. What should be the final disposition of papers in above cause?
> "6. Is the clerk required to journalize all the orders of the court in the registration cause?
> "7. How should costs be taxed in above suit?"

1. While in ordinary cases the court is to enter upon his journal the entire decree of registration, nevertheless, I think that it is competent to waive the making of final record in cases where there is no special reason for so doing, and this should be done under order of the court, by authority of section 11605, of the General Code. The real requirements of the law will be met by the clerk's entering the orders and decree of the court on the minutes of the journal and carefully collecting and binding all the papers together and transmitting them to the recorder's office where they will be permanently filed. If this course is adopted the decree settling title and also the decree of registration will be of record in the minutes of the court; and the certified copy of the decree of registration, which under the law becomes the first certificate of title, will be of record in the recorder's office. The clerk must furnish the recorder with a certified copy of the entry. This is manifest from the provisions of section 23, of the land registration act, 103 O. L. 914 et seq.

2. Your second question has been answered in the reply to your first question.

3. This question is too indefinite for answer. A statement should be made as to how the defendant has been made a party and what interest he has in the matter. You will remember that under section 64, in a suit embodying two causes of action, one for registration, all the parties are to be brought before the court in the manner provided for original registration. If the defendant is brought into court for this purpose it would seem that he comes within the purview of section 112 of the registration law and should pay the fee.

4. While the statute is very vague as to the payment of the cost of notifying defendants, as required by section 15, I think it would be proper for the court to provide that the applicant for registration should deposit a sufficient amount to pay the cost of mailing registered letters and the posting of the notice. The service of summons is taken care of by the next to the concluding paragraph of section 112.

5. As has been before suggested, all papers dealing with the registration of title should be filed with the recorder. The following language from section 23 of the act in question is decisive of this:

> "The clerk shall at once in every cause make a final record thereof and immediately thereafter deliver to the recorder all papers in the case, taking his receipt therefor, which papers the recorder shall file, index and carefully preserve and note on the original certificate in his office such filing and the number or other designation under which they may be found."

6. Your sixth question has been covered in my answer to your first question. Orders of the court should be entered on the minutes.

7. The registration costs should be taxed and paid in the manner provided in the registration act; and costs provided by the statutes governing the second cause of action should be taxed and paid in the manner heretofore obtaining. The registration is separate and distinct from partition or the selling of lands to pay debts and legacies. The statutes with reference to the latter have not been superseded by the former.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EXEMPTION OF PROPERTY OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS IN OHIO UNDER SECTION 192, GENERAL CODE.

The stock of a foreign corporation, some of the property of which is taxed in a foreign country, can, under no circumstances, be exempt from taxation in Ohio, under section 192, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1914.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 7th requesting my opinion on the following question:

> "Suppose a corporation pays as a fee for the privilege of exercising its franchises in Ohio the same percentage upon its entire authorized capital stock that is required by law to be paid by a domestic corporation on its subscribed or issued capital stock, and unquestionably has two-thirds of its property taxed in Ohio but has a comparatively insignificant part of the remainder taxed in a foreign country, would the stock of such company be taxable in the hands of the owners thereof residing in this state?"

In connection with this request I have been favored with an exhaustive brief prepared by Hon. E. L. Savage, representing a certain corporation which falls within the class suggested by your question. I take this opportunity to state that this brief has been of great assistance to me in reaching the conclusion at which I have arrived. The question hinges upon the proper interpretation of section 192, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "No person shall be required to list for taxation a share of the capital stock of an Ohio corporation; or a share of the capital stock of a foreign corporation, the property of which is taxed in Ohio in the name of such corporation; or a share of the capital stock of any other foreign corporation, if the holder thereof furnishes satisfactory proof to the taxing authorities that at least two-thirds of the property of such corporation is taxed in Ohio and the remainder is taxed in another state or states, provided such corporation, as a fee for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, pays annually the same percentage upon its entire authorized capital stock that is required by law to be paid by a domestic corporation on its subscribed or issued capital stock."

The exact question is as to whether or not the phrase "in another state or states" as used in this section means and embraces states of the United States only or applies to foreign countries. At first blush it would seem natural to me that the phrase is limited in its scope to other states of the United States. It is true that a foreign country or province is in a sense a "state" but it is not "another state" like Ohio. There was evidently in the mind of the legislature a comparison between Ohio and other states, meaning, of course, other states of the United States.

But Mr. Savage, by an exhaustive discussion of the related statutes, has convinced me that the meaning of this phrase is ambiguous. He points out that a corporation organized under the laws of a foreign country is a foreign corporation within the meaning, for example, of sections 178 and 183, General Code, and may be admitted to do business in Ohio the same as a foreign corporation organized under the laws of another state of the Union. With this I agree; and I agree too that it would be most reasonable to extend the comity provisions of section 12 equally, and to hold that "another state" as used therein, means any other sovereign territory having the power to create corporations. But under the peculiar language of section 192, I cannot arrive at the conclusion that the phrase in question is more than ambiguous, i. e., clearly has the meaning for which Mr. Savage contends. Therefore I have followed with him the course of the legislative history of this provision as being the clearest and most likely index to the legislative intent therein embodied.

It appears that prior to the codification of 1910 this section, which was enacted in its then existing form in 97 O. L. 498, used the following language:

> "and the remainder is taxed in some other state or states of the United States."

In process of codification the words "of the United States" were, therefore, dropped. Mr. Savage argues that this verbal change is indicative of an intention to change the meaning of the statute, particularly in view of the fact that such changed meaning would possibly comport more nearly with a consistent legislative policy. He argues further that the words "of the United States" in the original law must have been inserted by mistake and that such mistake was clearly apparent when the policy of the entire law was considered, and constituted a proper subject for a correction in process of codification.

I cannot agree with this theory of the matter. The fundamental principle applicable, is that verbal changes made in process of codification are presumed not to change the meaning of the law; so that where the codified statute is ambiguous, reference to the prior statute for the purpose of resolving such ambiguity is proper, and if upon such reference the original statute is found to be clear in meaning, the meaning thus ascertained will be given to the codified statute. Allen vs. Russell, 39 O. S. 336; State vs. Shockley, 45 O. S. 304; State vs. Stout, 49 O. S. 270; Martin vs. Miller, 70 O. S. 219, and Stevenson vs. State, 70 O. S. 11.

In other words we are not warranted in presuming that the legislation of 1902, which was the deliberate act of the legislature in considering this one subject-matter, contained language inserted by mistake, whereas the General Code of 1910, which was merely a general revision of all the statutes, embodied a deliberate intent to change the meaning of the law. The converse is rather the case, as the authorities hold.

Of course this line of reasoning would not be applicable if it could be said that the words "another state or states" clearly and beyond doubt comprise foreign countries as well as states of the United States. But as before stated, I am unable to bring myself to this conclusion. If these words in the present statute have any clear and unmistakable meaning, that meaning is limited to states of the United States; and when doubt is created, so to speak, by consideration of the hardships and perhaps ridiculous consequences that grow out of such a reading of the statute, it is nevertheless but a doubt, and as such is resolved by consideration of the legislative history as above set forth.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that if a part of the property of a foreign corporation is taxed in a foreign country, the stockholders of such corporation can under no circumstances claim exemption from taxation on account of their shares therein.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE MAYOR OF A CITY OR VILLAGE TO ARREST A PERSON FOUND VIOLATING AN ORDINANCE OF A CITY OR VILLAGE, FOR THE PURPOSE OF HOLDING SUCH PERSON UNTIL A WARRANT MAY BE OBTAINED.

Under sections 4549 and 13492, General Code, the mayor of a city or village may arrest a person found violating an ordinance of a city or village for the purpose only of holding such person until a warrant may be obtained. Such warrant must be founded upon an affidavit, as prescribed by sections 13496, et seq., General Code.

The mayor is disqualified from sitting in trial of the cause and at the same time acting as witness therein, and when a mayor is therefore the only witness of the offense perpetrated, inasmuch as the mayor cannot hear the cause, justice would be denied unless another tribunal is authorized to preside over the same. Such a circumstance, therefore, operates as a disability of the mayor, and under section 4549, General Code, he may, therefore, in such case, appoint a justice of the peace to hear the cause. With such justice of the peace the mayor may file an affidavit upon which warrant may be issued, and in the course of the trial the mayor would be permitted to testify.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1914.

THE HON. J. T. DEFORD, City Solicitor, Minerva, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 2d, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Has the mayor the authority, under section 13492, 4255, or any other section of the General Code, to personally arrest a person whom he sees violating an ordinance of the village? If he has, what should he then do with his prisoner, and what should be the entries on his docket? If he has not, how is process to issue for the arrest of the offender?
> "2. Has the mayor of a village the authority to issue a warrant for a person whom he has seen violating a law or ordinance, without the filing of an affidavit, and direct an officer to serve the warrant? Is the officer justified in serving such warrant? Is it necessary that an affidavit be subsequently filed, and if it is, who can properly sign it?
> "3. If an affidavit is required before warrants can issue in every case, how is the mayor to comply with the provisions of section 4258, G. C., when no one will make affidavit?"

Answering your first question, section 4549, General Code, provides in part as follows:

> "The mayor shall have, within the corporate limits, all the powers conferred upon the sheriffs to suppress disorder and keep the peace. * * *"

Section 13492, General Code, provides as follows:

> "A sheriff, deputy sherif, constable, marshal, deputy marshal, watchman or police officer shall arrest and detain a person found violating a law of this state, or an ordinance of a city or village, until a warrant can be obtained."

These are the only provisions of the statute which I am able to find which in any way confer on a mayor the power to make an arrest, and they can be construed to grant such power only as is given to a sheriff in like instances. Under the latter section a sheriff may arrest a person whom he sees violating an ordinance without a warrant only for the purpose of holding him until a warrant may be obtained. It is, therefore, necessary in such cases that a warrant be obtained before the party arrested may be subjected to trial. Such warrant, of course, must be founded upon an affidavit, as is prescribed for the issuance of all warrants under sections 13496 et seq., of the General Code.

Answering your question directly, therefore, the mayor may arrest an offender found violating an ordinance of the village only for the purpose of holding such an offender until a warrant may be obtained, which warrant must be founded upon an affidavit.

I start with the assumption, which seems to be necessarily justified, that the case you refer to is one where the mayor is himself the only eye witness to the offense and, therefore, the only available witness upon a trial of the offender. For if it were otherwise, it is clear that the situation would present no difficulty since an affidavit might well be filed by the other eye witness, warrant issued thereon and the case proceeded with in the usual form. I see the possibility of a question arising as to the prejudice of a mayor by reason of having viewed the offense and forming thereupon a conclusion of his own. I am convinced, however, that this mere fact in itself would be by no means sufficient to afford a basis for the claim of prejudice on the part of the mayor. There being no provision, however, in the statute for an affidavit of prejudice against a mayor this point need not be discussed in this connection. Carey vs. State, 70 O. S. 124.

In the actual case presented by you, however, of the mayor being the only available witness section 4549, General Code, is of interest. This statute permits a justice of the peace to exercise the jurisdiction of a mayor during his absence or disability. The words "other disability" or terms similar thereto have been defined to include prejudice or bias on the part of an official.

> "Payton's Appeal, 12 Kansas, 398: 'Or otherwise disqualified to act.'
> "Turner vs. Commonwealth, 2 Metcalf (Ky.) at page 628: 'When from any cause.'
> "Williamson vs. Robison, 6 Cushing, 333: 'Other disability.'"

To justify the disqualification of a judge, however, on the ground of prejudice or bias, every bias, partiality or prejudice which he may entertain with reference to the case is not necessarily comprehended. The prejudice contemplated must be of a character calculated to seriously impair his impartiality and sway his judgment. 23 Cyc., page 582.

A mayor in making an arrest is presumed to do so in the performance of his duty, and by such an act it is not contemplated that he thereby disqualifies himself from performing his further duty of impartially judging of any defensive facts or points of law that may be presented in the trial of the cause. I am by no means satisfied, therefore, that the mere fact of making the arrest in a case would of itself disqualify the mayor from passing upon the facts therein involved, providing the case could properly be made out with the aid of other competent testimony.

It is settled beyond dispute, however, that a judge may not act as a witness and at the same time preside over a cause.

> "Rogers vs. State, 60 Arkansas 76, at page 85.
> "Strickley & Co. vs. Morgan, 103 Ga., 158.

"Morris vs. Morris, 11 Barber (N. Y.), 510.
"Maitland vs. Zanger, 14 Washington, 92.
"McMillen vs. Andrews, 10 O. S., 112."

In the case in mind, therefore, the mayor cannot preside and at the same time conduct a trial wherein he was the only material witness. Justice, therefore, must be denied unless some official other than the mayor is permitted to preside over the trial, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that such a contingency disables the mayor from sitting in the cause within the meaning of section 4549, General Code.

In the case of May vs. James, 2 Daily (N. Y.) 437, authority is found for the granting of an injunction against the trial of a case wherein the judge is a witness of unquestionable interest.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that such a case presents foundation for the filing of an affidavit and issuance of a warrant by a justice of the peace appointed by the mayor under section 4549, General Code. Such justice might then hear the case wherein the mayor would be able both to verify the preliminary affidavit and to testify in the case. This conclusion answers your first question.

With respect to your second question, I find no authority for the arrest of a person by means of warrant without a preliminary affidavit.

Your third question is also answered by the conclusion herein drawn.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

OHIO UNIVERSITY LANDS HELD UNDER LEASE PRIOR TO 1843 SUBJECT TO REVALUATION—RENTS FOR SUCH LANDS.

1. Ohio university lands held under leases executed prior to 1843 are subject to revaluation notwithstanding the act of the general assembly of Ohio, passed in that year, and declaring the true intent and purpose of the original acts pertaining to Ohio university to be otherwise.

2. The original act, providing for the leasing of such lands, provided that at the expiration of the principal term of the leases the lands should be revalued and the rent should be fixed upon the basis of the average price of a bushel of wheat in a certain market, for a given number of years. This price was to be determined through the agency of referees, one of whom was to be appointed by the university, another by the lessees and the third by the two thus chosen; but in the event of the failure of the parties to designate one or more referees, the legislature at its next session should appoint such number of referees as the case might require.

(a) On account of the change in the constitution, the legislature may not appoint referees, but without impairing the obligation of the subsisting contracts it may, in a proper case, pass a law providing for the appointment of such referees.

(b) The provisions of the act, which are to be read into the leases executed under it, may now be complied with, notwithstanding the fact that they have been ignored for many years, the laches of the state and the university not being effective to deprive the trust of their benefit.

(c) The revaluation which is to be made at the end of the principal term of the lease would remain effective only until the expiration of the period of twenty years from the time when that term expired.

(d) The action of the legislature need not be "at the next session thereof," this provision being directory, merely.

(e) While the provision for a revaluation at the end of the term and the proceedings therefor are separate and distinct from the provision for fixing the basis of rent, and the proceedings therefor, it should not be assumed by the legislature that the parties have failed to appoint referees until the trustees of Ohio university have taken steps toward a revaluation, and perhaps until they have appointed one referee in accordance with the terms of the original act.

(3) It being suggested that possibly the board of trustees of Ohio university is not at present a legally constituted body by reason of supposed defects in the manner in which the members thereof have been appointed, but such a fact, if true, would not affect the existence of the corporation known as "the president and trustees of Ohio university," and appropriations made by the general assembly for the use of the institution could not be withheld on that account.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Sometime ago you submitted for my consideration certain questions pertaining to the university lands of the Ohio Company of Associates Purchase, and also to school, college and ministerial lands generally. The questions are stated in your letter quite elaborately with a full statement of facts, evincing a very careful and painstaking examination of the legislation involved, and for the purposes of this opinion I shall have to restate them as follows:

"First. Can the legislature now provide for the reappraisement of the lands held under leases executed by the president and trustees of Ohio university prior to 1843?

"Second. Section 12 of the act of February 18, 1804, providing for the leasing of Ohio university lands required that at the expiration of the original period of the lease (90 years or 99 years, dependent upon the date of the lease) three referees shall be appointed by the university and the lessees who shall determine the average price of wheat at the town of Marietta, for the five preceding years to be the basis of rentals for the succeeding twenty years.

"The section further provided that in the event of the failure of the parties to choose referees the general assembly 'at its next session, shall appoint such number of referees not exceeding three, as the case may require.'

"The period referred to under some of the leases, expired about 1886 and under the others about 1895.

"No such procedure as is contemplated by the section referred to has been followed.

"Can the legislature at the present time, on the assumption that the parties have neglected to choose referees, either appoint or provide for appointing them so that such revaluation as is required may be now made? This question assumes, of course, an affirmative answer to the first question.

"Third. Under the original act of incorporation of Ohio university, the trustees were to be appointed by the general assembly. An act of February 20, 1808, limited the members of the board to not less than eleven nor more than nineteen. An act of February 15, 1809, required nine members of the board as a quorum.

"After the adoption of the constitution of 1851, the legislature which had been theretofore appointing the trustees in accordance with the act of incorporation, ceased to exercise this power, and the governor of the state began to appoint the trustees. You say, however, that so far as you are able to ascertain there was no legislative authority whatever for the appointment of the trustees by the governor, but call my attention to sections 2 and 3 of article VII of the constitution of 1851 as possible sources of the power thus exercised.

"You call my attention now to the act of March 1, 1878 (75 O. L. 25), characterizing that as the first act passed by the legislature under the constitution of 1851, relating in any way to the board of trustees of Ohio university. This act has become section 9930, General Code. This law provides for the appointment of 'the required number of trustees' to serve for different periods of time; whereas the act of incorporation of Ohio university created no term of office for the trustees, their tenure being for life.

"You inform me in this connection that the governor has never appointed trustees for Ohio university for any term of years, but that all appointments made by him have been for life. You state further that in the year 1865 the number of trustees appointed by the legislature for Ohio university was reduced, by death, to ten, one fewer than the number required by the act of incorporation. Upon these facts you inquire:

"1st. Whether the present board of trustees of Ohio university is not legally constituted?

"2d. If the board is legally constituted, does the body politic and corporate constituting the president and trustees of the Ohio university, exist in contemplation of law, and may the auditor of state permit payment to the present acting board, of moneys appropriated by the general assembly for the use of that institution?

"Fourth. School, ministerial and college lands throughout the state are now held under lease for terms of ninety-nine years renewable forever, upon annual rental payable, as to college lands, to the college for whose use they were granted, and as to school and ministerial lands, to the state.

"There is no provision of law permitting lessees to mine coal or oil or to use any of the appurtenants to the land except the soil, except in certain ancient so-called waterworks leases wherein the right to run mill races and otherwise use the water power appurtenant to the land is specially granted.

"The statute in all cases, except those just specially excepted, provides for the form of lease ordinarily meant by the use of the term 'deed of lease' or 'lease.'

"Nevertheless certain lessees are mining the coal, oil and gas upon the lands leased to them.

"Is this waste, and can injunction be had at the suit of the state, and recovery made for damages?"

In this opinion I will undertake to answer the first three of the above questions, only.

Your first question involves consideration of the following historical matter:

The Ohio university is located in the tract of land known as the "Ohio Company's Purchase." A corporation known as the "Ohio Company of Associates" bought from the confederation in 1787 all that tract of land known by the name above mentioned through a contract of purchase, which in part provided as follows:

"and also reserving out of the said tract so to be granted, two complete townships to be given perpetually for the purposes of an university, to be laid off by the said parties of the second part, their heirs or assigns, as near the center as may be, so the same shall be of good land, to be applied to the intended object in such manner as the legislature of the state wherein such townships shall fall, or may be situated, shall or may think proper to direct."

Pursuant to the obligation imposed upon the company by this clause of its contract with the treasury of the confederation, the company designated two certain townships to be applied to the intended purpose or object. Soon after the state of Ohio was admitted to the union its legislature enacted a law establishing an university in the town of Athens, passed February 18, 1804, 2 O. L. 193. In addition to incorporating "the president and trustees of the Ohio university" and establishing an educational institution under the name and style of "Ohio university," and providing generally for the performance of the constituent acts of the corporation and its organization the act contained the following provision:

"Section 11. That the two townships, numbered eight and nine, in the fourteenth range of townships, within the grant of land made by congress to the Ohio Company of Associates, be and they are hereby vested in the corporation by this act created, in trust, for the sole use, benefit and support of the said university, forever."

Section 12 of the act directed the trustees to designate one or more of their number to lay off the lands in the townships and estimate the value of the same "as in their original and unimproved state"; and after having thus laid off and estimated the lands, that the trustees should proceed to make out leases of said tracts,

> "to such of the present occupants as shall apply for the same, within three months after such notice is given, and to all persons that shall apply hereafter, for the term of ninety years, renewable forever, on a yearly rent of six percentum on the amount of the valuation so made * * *; the land so leased shall be subject to a revaluation, at the expiration of thirty-five years, and to another revaluation at the expiration of sixty years, from the commencement of the term of each lease; which revaluation shall be conducted and made on the principles of the first, and the lessee shall pay a yearly rent of six percentum on the amount of the revaluation so to be made, and forever thereafter on a yearly rent equal to and not exceeding six percentum on the amount of a valuation to be made as aforesaid, at the expiration of the term of ninety years aforesaid (which valuation the trustees and their successors are hereby authorized and directed to make): Provided, however, that such last mentioned rent shall be subject to the following regulations, to wit: at the expiration of the aforesaid period of ninety years, three referees shall be appointed, the first by the corporation of the university; the second, by the lessees, under the provisions of this section, of this act, and the third, by the two referees thus chosen (or in case either or both of the parties shall neglect to choose such referee or referees, or said referees shall neglect to choose an umpire), the general assembly, at its next session, shall appoint such number of referees, not exceeding three, as the case may require; which referees shall meet within a reasonable time, to be agreed on between them, at the town of Athens, and then and there determine on and declare the medium price per bushel of the article of wheat; which determination shall be grounded on a calculation of the average price of said article at the town of Marietta, for the five preceding years; which declaration shall be made in writing; and entered of record on the books of the corporation; and at the commencement of each and every succeeding period of twenty years thereafter, the amount of rent for such period shall be fixed on and determined by referees, to be chosen upon the principles hereinbefore directed, from a comparison of the aforesaid recorded price of wheat, with its average price at Marietta, for the five years, which shall have been then last past; in which leases shall be reserved a right of distress and of re-entry for non-payment of rent, at any time after it shall have been due two months; Provided always, that the said corporation shall have power to demand a further yearly rent on the said lands and tenements, not exceeding the amount of the tax imposed on property of like description by the state, which rents shall be paid at such time and place to such person and collected in such manner as the corporation shall direct."

Section 14 of the act provided that the annual rents "shall be appropriated to the endowments of the said university."

Section 17 of the act provided that,

> "the lands in the two townships, appropriated and vested as aforesaid, with the buildings which are or may be erected thereon, shall forever be exempted from all state taxes."

On February 21, 1805 (3 O. L. 79), the general assembly passed an act which, among other things, changed the term of the leases thereafter to be entered into to ninety-nine years, renewable forever, and limited the authority to lease thereafter to lands of greater appraised value than $1.75 per acre.

This amendatory act gave rise to the claim that it had effected an implied repeal of the provisions of the earlier act relative to revaluation; the theory being that it was intended as a complete substitute for all the provisions of the act of 1804 with reference to leasing. A revaluation was actually made at the expiration of first period of the thirty-five years of the first leases which were executed, to wit, in 1841, and the claim which I have described gave rise to the litigation which culminated in the case of McVey vs. Ohio University, 11 Ohio, 134. In that case it was held, in the language of Hitchcock, J., first, that, "whether any provision was made in the lease for a revaluation is a matter of no consequence." That is, the terms of the law must be read into each lease executed under it whether expressed therein or not. In the second place, Judge Hitchcock, speaking of the difference between the two laws, that of 1804 and that of 1805, mentions the difference which actually appear, and then says:

> "The two laws are contrary, the one to the other, in the mode of appraisal, in the duration of the lease, and in the quantity of land to be leased. To this extent the former was repealed. We have sought in vain for any other matter in which they conflict. It may have been the intention to have repealed all that part of the former law which related to the valuation and leasing of the land. But such intention cannot be gathered by any known rule of construction, and, of course, we are not authorized to declare that such effect is produced."

The court sustained the demurrer to the complaint filed by the individuals resisting revaluation, and so held that despite the amendment of 1805 the leaseholders which had been theretofore executed were subject to a revaluation.

Thereupon the general assembly on March 10, 1843, 41 O. L. 144, passed an act entitled "An act to declare the true intent and meaning of the first section of the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a university in the town of Athens," passed February 21, A. D. 1805.'" In this act the general assembly attempted to declare that it was the true intent and meaning of the act of 1805 that the leases granted under that act, and the one to which it was amendatory, should not be subject to a revaluation.

You advise me that since the passage of this act no revaluation has been made of any of the Ohio university lands. You question, of course, the constitutionality of the act of 1843 in so far as it attempts to declare the intent and purpose of the act of 1805 as affecting leases executed prior to 1843.

This question involves a nice application of the doctrine of the separation of the powers of government in accordance with the genius of our constitutions. As against the exclusive power of the judiciary to declare what the law is and to apply it to specific cases, there exists the power of the legislature to declare what the law shall be for application to all cases within its purview. Thus, the legislature may pass not only statutes declaratory of the common law but also statutes declaratory of the meaning of prior statutes.

> "A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to doubt as to what is common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been."
> Bouvier's Law Dictionary. "Statute."

As pointed out by Judge Cooley in his work on Constitutional Limitations at page 111,

"As a declaratory statute is important only in those cases where doubts have already arisen, the statute, when passed may be found to declare the law to be different from what it has already been adjudged to be by the courts."

(See People vs. Supervisors, 16 N. Y., 424.)

But it is clear that there must, in the nature of things, be a definite line between the proper exercise of the power to pass declaratory legislation and the exercise of power under that guise amounting in effect to usurpation of judicial functions. Thus, that is clearly a judicial act, and hence beyond the power of the legislature, which attempts to decide controversies which have arisen.

Schooner Aurura Borealis vs. Dobbie, 17 Ohio, 125.

The line must be drawn with exactness for the purpose of answering your inquiry, between the two instances which have been mentioned. For brevity's sake, I may say that the test seems to be furnished by the application of specific constitutional provisions in force in 1843.

The constitution of 1802 contains no express provision against the passage of retroactive laws corresponding to section 28 of article II of the constitution of 1851; but section 16 of article VIII of the constitution of 1802 provided that,

"No expost facto law, nor any law impairing the validity of contracts, shall ever be made."

I think it will readily appear that a law is retrospective in its effect upon vested rights of a contractual nature when it impairs the validity or obligation of a contract entered into prior to its passage. So that inasmuch as the question which you present involves the application of a law to contracts previously entered into, the fact that at the time the law was passed there was no express inhibition against the enactment of retroactive laws is not material. The rule as applied to cases in which the constitution of the state contains no express prohibition against the enactment of retroactive laws is stated generally in 8 Cyc: 1018, as follows:

"In the absence of such express provision a law is not void because retroactive in action, where it is unconstitutional as an expost facto law, as a law impairing the obligation of a contract, or by reason of its violating some constitutional provision not directed against retrospective laws as such."

Lewis vs. McElvain, 16 Ohio, 348, 355.

But the express prohibition contained, both in the federal constitution and in the constitution of 1802, against laws impairing the obligation or validity of contracts, makes provision against retrospective or retroactive laws of this character unnecessary; so that when by later constitutional provision such a prohibition was made the organic law with respect to legislation of this character, impairing the obligation of pre-existing contracts, was not in reality changed.

As suggested, then, I think that the power of the legislature to pass declaratory statutes interpreting prior statutes, asserted as it is only under the general grant of legislative power to the general assembly, and not by specific grant of power in the constitution, is limited by the specific prohibition against impairing the validity of contracts. So that the true distinction under the constitution of 1802 between proper legislation declaratory of the meaning and intent of previous legislation, and legislation that usurps the judicial function as an attempt to adjudicate upon rights that have vested, is, for the purpose of your question, to be drawn between declaratory acts which do not impair the obligation of contracts and those which do. In a word, the principle is that a declaratory act, though in a sense retrospective, since it undertakes to declare what the law was before it was enacted cannot operate retrospectively in the exact sense so as to affect rights which had vested prior to its passage; the right to the performance of an obligation of a contract being protected against legislative impairment by positive constitutional provision is in every sense a vested right, when the contract has been entered into and the obligation has been incurred. Therefore, a statute declaratory of the meaning of a former statute, though it might possibly be sustained as affecting contracts thereafter entered into, and so fixing the obligations thereof, cannot be sustained as applicable to contracts theretofore entered into and so impairing the obligations thereof.

Thus it is seen that though the constitution of 1802 did not impose upon the legislature restraints as effective as those imposed upon it by the constitution of 1851, the limitation with respect to legislation affecting contract rights is equally effective under both constitutions (as indeed it would have to be in view of the federal constitution). This conclusion leaves but two points to be determined, viz.:

1. Did the act of 1843, if construed so as to apply to leases theretofore entered into, affect contractual rights in any way? and,

2. If so was the effect of the act upon the rights so affected that of impairing the obligations thereof?

The first point is seemingly settled by the McVey case cited, which holds, as it has been pointed out, that the terms of the act of 1804 entered into and became a part of every lease executed thereunder prior to 1843. Whatever those terms were, the rights accruing to individuals on the one hand, and to Ohio university on the other hand, became vested, in the contractual sense, when leases were executed. While, therefore, the legislature might, as it did in 1843, declare what the act of 1805 meant, yet in so far as the act of 1805 and its predecessor, the act of 1804, had entered substantially into contracts executed prior to 1843, the legislature was without power, at least to the extent of impairing any obligation of such contracts, to declare what the terms thereof were; that function must necessarily reside exclusively in the courts.

The second question above suggested is answered, it seems to me, by consideration of the case of Matheny vs. Golden, 5 O. S. 361, wherein it was held that an act of the legislature passed April 13, 1852, the effect of which was to subject to state taxation lands held under a lease and belonging to Ohio university, was to that extent unconstitutional as violating the obligation of a contract, to wit, the terms of section 117 of the act of 1804 relative to the exemption of such property from state taxation, which in turn entered into and became a part of every lease which had been executed prior to 1852 at least (McVey case, supra).

Speaking of the contractual nature of the provisions of the act of 1804 in this respect, and the manner in which the obligations arise under it, Brinkerhoff, J., says at page 372 et seq. (Matheny vs. Golden, supra):

> "The state opens the negotiation, and speaking through her legislative act, makes her proposition to the complainant and his associates to this effect: If you lease these lands at a fixed rent, payable to the Ohio university, for ninety-nine years, your lands thus leased shall be perpetually exempt from all state taxes. This is the proposition of the state. The complainant and his associates lease the lands accordingly; they bind themselves to pay, have paid, and must continue to pay, a fixed rent accordingly; a rent fixed, as a matter of course, at a considerably higher rate than they would have been willing to pay had it not been for the proposed exemption. Relying on the faith of the state for the fulfillment by her of a contract based on her own proposition, they take leases; and thus accept the proposition of the state pure and simple without modification; and thus the minds of the parties have met. They have respectively agreed to do particular things, and not to do other particular things.

"Is the recent legislation such as to impair the obligation of this contract? The question, unfortunately, can have but one answer. It has attempted to tax lands which it had solemnly contracted never to tax. Perhaps we ought to presume—and we should certainly be very glad to be able to presume—that this recent legislation complained of was the result of oversight. But—and we feel neither pride nor pleasure in saying it—the languge of that legislation seems to be too explicit, and too direct in its application to these lands, to admit of so charitable a presumption."

So that it is very clear that the clause in the act of 1804, relative to the terms on which the lease should be made and held, when leases were executed in accordance therewith, gave rise to contractual obligations not subject to legislative impairment. But it may be insisted that the protection of the constitution of 1802, and of the federal constitution as well, against the impairment of contracts, was intended to be accorded to the individual, and that the state may pass a law impairing a contractual obligation running to it, and it may be urged that the lease was between the state as custodian of the legal title of the lands, and the lessees, so that the right of the state to a revaluation and the obligation on the part of the lessees to pay rentals according to such revaluation, were matters within the power of the legislature to abrogate because by so doing the rights of individuals would not be deleteriously affected; but on the contrary they would be benefited.

Such an argument may, with some show of reason, be based upon the language of Brinkerhoff, J., in Matheny vs. Golden, supra, wherein he speaks of the contract between the state and the lessee. Yet, when the actual facts are considered, the error thereof becomes apparent. For the state, though it once had the fee did not retain it, but by section 11 of the act of 1804 vested the same in the president and trustees of the Ohio university in trust for the sole use and benefit of the university. The leases, then, were to be made by the trustees themselves and not by the state, and the trustees were not the mere agents of the state but the body politic and corporate.

The obligation of the leases, therefore, accrued substantially in favor of the trustees for the benefit of the university and not in favor of the state in any proprietary capacity. Whatever right, title or interest the state retained in and to the lands situated in the two townships was only such interest as had been vested in it by the contract between the congress of the confederation and the Ohio Company of Associates and it must be apparent that such interest was that of a mere trustee and constituted a moral obligation to see that the lands were properly applied to the support of the university rather than anything in the nature of a beneficial right.

Therefore, it follows that the rights and obligations which have been considered, accrued, in all probability, in favor of the president and trustees of the Ohio university and beneficially in favor of the institution itself. In my opinion such obligations are protected from impairment by the state and federal constitutions as well as the strictly private and individual obligations accruing under the same act to the leases themselves. Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, 4 Wheaton.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that the act of 1843 had no effect whatever upon the fixed rights and obligations of the parties to the leases entered into prior to that year; and upon the authority of the McVey case, supra, which constitutes an adjudication of the question as to what those rights and obligations were, I am further of the opinion that all leases of Ohio university lands, executed prior to the year 1843 are, and at all times have been, subject to revaluation in accordance with the terms of the act of 1804.

Your second question involves consideration of section 12 of the act of 1804 which is lengthy and which has been quoted herein. It is apparent, I think, from the provisions of this section that although the term of the original lease is stated as being ninety years, renewable forever (which term of 90 years was subsequently changed to 99 years) the leasehold interests are, in point of fact, permanent so that no formal renewal of any lease was necessary in order that the conditions attaching to the leasehold interests after the expiration of the original term should be operative. Your question contains no statement with respect to the making of any renewals and I assume that none have been made.

In your statement of facts you have very interestingly explained the object and purpose of the use of the price of a bushel of wheat in a given market as a criterion of value and have shown the historical development of such an idea. These facts, while throwing light upon the meaning and intention of the legislature, are not of importance in the solution of the legal question which you present and therefore they will not be stated here. So I simply assume that it is possible at the present time for the standard of rent applicable at the end of the original period to be determined and applied. It having been already decided that the provision as to revaluation remains as an obligation to the contract of each lease executed prior to 1843, your question requires me to inquire only whether there is any present legal obstacle to the performance of these obligations.

The first question which arises is suggested by the provision of section 12 to the effect that,

> "in case either or both of the parties shall neglect to choose such * * * referees * * * the general assembly at its next session shall appoint such number of referees * * * as the case may require."

There are really two questions here, first, as to whether or not it is essential that the intervention of the state shall be made "at the next session of the general assembly?" In my opinion this is not the case. The language is directory rather than mandatory. The test for ascertaining whether or not such provisions are directory or mandatory is furnished by inquiring whether the manifest intention of the whole act is that the thing commended to be done shall at all events be done, but is particularly commanded to be done at a given time, or whether the intention is that if the thing is not done at the given time it shall not be done at all. In this case the legislation is intended to cover perpetual leaseholds and to furnish a basis for a valuation which is to last for a period of twenty years. It seems to me that the intention clearly is that the revaluation and determination shall in all events be made, and shall be the basis of payment of rent during the next twenty years rather than that if the determination is not made through the intervention of the general assembly at the particular time mentioned it shall not be made at all. The act provides that at the expiration of the period of the lease "the lessee shall pay yearly rent * * * forever therefor * * * equal to and not exceeding six percentum of the amount of a valuation to be made as aforesaid. Provided, however, that such last mentioned rent shall be subject to the following regulations, to wit:"

I am, therefore, of the opinion that assuming the state to be called upon to act at the present time by reason of these provisions such action may now be taken through the "next session" of the general assembly following the failure of the parties to agree upon referees after the expiration of the period of the lease has gone by.

In this connection, however, I would be of the opinion that the revaluation if now made would be effective only during the remainder of the twenty-year period for which it should have been made at the expiration of the original term of the lease. That is to say, assuming a lease to have been executed in 1805 for a period of ninety-nine years, renewable forever, the right to a peculiar kind of revaluation would have accrued in 1904, and the revaluation which should have then been made would have lasted, so to speak, until 1925; so that if such revaluation were now made it would cover the period between the present and the year 1925 at which time another revaluation should be made on the same basis.

Another question is suggested by consideration of the fact that under the constitution of 1851 the general assembly can exercise no executive function, so that it would presumably no longer be competent for the legislature to "appoint" referees. This, and perhaps other questions arising in connection with the general question submitted by you, are, it seems to me, answered by a consideration of two principles, which happen, in this instance, to be related, although they have no necessary relation to each other, in the science of jurisprudence. In the first place, it is generally, if not universally held that the inhibition against the passage of laws impairing the obligation of contracts will not prevent the enactment of legislation affecting matters in connection with such obligations which are of a purely remedial nature. See 8 Cyc. 995.

Inasmuch as the essence of the right corresponding to the obligation in this instance, is that the general assembly of the state shall furnish the means of effecting a revaluation on the required basis, it seems to me that the manner in which the state shall act is of a remedial nature, and so long as the state's action is effective to enforce the right and to discharge the obligation, its legislation looking to that end will be upheld though it may alter the strict terms of the original contract founded upon the law of 1804.

The other principle which I have in mind is that axiom of equity jurisprudence that where the performance of a trust in the precise manner intended by the original donor is rendered impossible, the object of the donor shall be effectuated by means most nearly appropriate thereto and which are within the bounds of possibility. In this case, as has been stated, the state appears in the attitude of a trustee and as a trustee has stipulated that it shall act through certain designated agencies. By force of a change in its constitution these agencies can no longer be employed. Therefore, upon the principle just stated, if the end sought to be accomplished is brought about by agencies which are appropriate to the same object, legislation for that purpose should be upheld.

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that the duty of the state under section 12 of the act of 1804 may be effectively discharged by the passage of a law authorizing the appointment by the governor, or by some other executive officer, of the necessary appraisers.

Perhaps there is another question involved in your second inquiry, as to whether or not it may be assumed that a case is presented for the interposition of the state. Your statement is that no revaluation has been made at any time since 1843, all parties in interest evidently having failed to act upon the assumption that the legislation of that year precluded further action. I do not think that any claim of laches, waiver or estoppel can be made as against the assertion at this time of the rights clearly vested in the state and the corporation as trustee for the benefit of the Ohio university. There can in the nature of things be no such thing as estoppel in such a case for the reason that no intervening rights of third persons could be built up under these leases as every assignee of such a lease would take subject to the provisions of the original lease and the statutes entering into the same. There is no such thing as waiver because a trustee has no power to waive any provision for the benefit of his trust, at least in such a way as to deprive the trust of a substantial right or benefit. There is, it is submitted, no such thing in this case as laches. This principle of equity, founded upon the maxim that equity aids the vigilant, not those who slumber on their rights, does not apply at all, for example, to suit brought against trustees to enforce an express trust. Pomeroy on Equity Jurisprudence, Vol. 1, sections 418, 419.

That is to say, a trustee, by neglecting to assert a right which exists, for the benefit of the trust estate, cannot deprive the trust of the benefit of the exercise of that right. This is particularly true in the case of charitable trusts wherein the cestuique trust being impersonal is not in a position actually to assert a right. Indeed the principle applies to the assertion of all public rights as such where no specific statute of limitation is involved, and where the right of the public is not strictly proprietary.

In this case it is obvious that the right to revaluation inheres substantially in the trust itself which is created for the benefit of the institution known as Ohio university. The trust is a public charitable trust and mere failure on the part of the trustees, such as the president and trustees of Ohio university or the general assembly of the state itself, to assert rights for the benefit of the trust will not prevent the subsequent assertion of those rights.

One fact remains to be mentioned in this connection. The provisions relative to the use of the "medium price per bushel of wheat" found in the act of 1804, relate to the fixing of the rental in terms of that commodity. Before the legislature of Ohio is called upon to act at all there must be provision for a revaluation. This is to be made by the trustees of the Ohio university in the manner provided in the original act and subject to the conditions therein. Therefore, the initial step in the matter of valuation must be taken by the trustees of Ohio university. However, it does not appear that the appointment of the referees for the purpose of determining the basis of the rent is dependent upon the making of a revaluation. The two may proceed at the same time, for the section directs the successors of the trustees of Ohio university to make a revaluation at the expiration of the term, and at the same time directs that at the expiration of the term the three referees shall be appointed thus clearly showing that the trustees of the university are authorized by the original act to initiate the process of fixing the basis of the rent independently of their proceeding to secure a revaluation; although when the rent is fixed and the determination of the referees "entered of record on the books of the corporation" it cannot be used for any purpose until the valuation is made. Therefore, while I adhere to the view as already expressed that the general assembly may, if it chooses, treat the present situation as an instance of neglect of the university and of the lessees to choose referees, yet I would recommend, in order to avoid all question, that the trustees of the university first proceed to have a revaluation made and then offer to appoint a referee, thus placing upon the lessees the obligation of choosing another, failure to discharge which will then clearly establish the right of the legislature to provide for the selection of such referees.

Subject to the foregoing qualification, then, I answer your second question by saying that the legislature may, at the present time, provide for the appointment of referees for the fixing of the rental, but that it would be better not to assume that the parties have neglected to choose referees until the trustees of Ohio university have taken some steps toward securing a revaluation.

In answering your third question I do not deem it necessary to go deeply into the legislative history in question. It is true that your third question inquires specifically whether the present board of trustees is legally constituted, and in order to answer this question with technical accuracy some such inquiry would have to be made. It is possible that the result of such an inquiry will show that by reason of the change in the constitution, and an evident misunderstanding with respect to the proper steps to be taken to adjust matters to that change, the present board of trustees of the Ohio university is not legally constituted. But your second, and I suppose your principal question in this connection is as to whether or not the fact that the present board of trustees is not legally constituted is sufficient upon which to base a conclusion that Ohio university is non-existent as a corporation, so that moneys appropriated for its support and maintenance by the general assembly may not lawfully be paid to it.

This question must be answered in the negative, even upon the assumption upon which it is founded. The corporation known as the "president and trustees of Ohio university" is an eleemosynary body corporate. It was created by the state in pursuance of a duty cast upon it in the nature of a trust. The institution as such, meaning thereby the trust itself, which may be designated as the "university" continues to exist notwithstanding the fact that those individuals who are administering its affairs as trustees may not have been legally appointed as such. The only proper way to question the legality of the incumbency of these trustees is by action in quo warranto. To withhold appropriations made by the state for the uses and purposes of the Ohio university from their intended object on the ground that the trustees of the university were not legally appointed, would constitute a species of collateral attack on the legality of such appointment which could not be sustained. To put it in another way, the trustees are in every sense defacto officers and members of the corporation. The corporation as such must continue to exist whether it has any dejure officers and members or not, and those who assume under color of authority to act as its trustees will be protected, and the validity of their acts sustained, as against any attack other than the direct one which might be made by an action in quo warranto.

Since your fourth question was asked there has been some legislation on the general subject and I do not know whether an answer thereto is still desired by you. If such is the case I will be pleased, upon notice to that effect, to make it the subject of a separate opinion.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH CREDITS ARISING FROM BUSINESS DONE BY FOREIGN CORPORATIONS MAY BE TAXED IN OHIO—GOODS HELD IN STOCK BY SUCH CORPORATIONS.

1. Where a foreign corporation has its manufacturing establishments and principal managerial offices in other states, but maintains in Ohio a selling agency which manages the business of selling products of the corporation, keeping a stock of its goods on hand, directing the activities of traveling salesmen and other solicitors, and extending credit to customers, the credits arising from such business are taxable to the company in Ohio. The fact that the local agents deposit the money collected by them in bank in Ohio to the credit of the company and keep one account from which some expenses of the Ohio business are paid upon checks drawn by agents themselves, considered but not deemed material to the conclusion stated.

2. Under the above facts, and the goods received by the Ohio agency and held in stock by it not being charged to it by the home company, so that there is no relation of debtor and creditor existing on account of the delivery of such goods to the Ohio agency, the debts which the corporation may deduct from the claims and debts payable to the Ohio agency for the purpose of arriving at the amount of the taxable credits, are such debts as are attributable solely to the Ohio agency and its business, and those only; that is, the debts which may be deducted are those which are incurred by the Ohio agents themselves, or by the home office, for and on behalf of the Ohio agency, and with direct reference to the business of the agency. The company may not deduct all debts owing to it from Ohio debtors, as such, nor a proportional share of the entire indebtedness of the company, determined by the amount of sales of Ohio agents as computed with the total sales of the company everywhere.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1914.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On July 31st of this year you transmitted to me a letter addressed to the commission by the board of assessors for the district of Franklin county, enclosing correspondence which, with additional information furnished to me directly by counsel for the corporation concerned, present the following facts and questions arising thereon:

"The H. J. Heinz Company, is a corporation organized under the laws of another state with its principal office in the state of Pennsylvania. The company is engaged in the business of manufacturing articles of food and condiments. It has factories in several states. The company has a selling branch or office in the city of Columbus through which business is transacted in the following manner:

"The Columbus office takes orders for the goods manufactured by the company either directly or through traveling salesmen who report to Columbus. At Columbus there is maintained a stock of goods sent, by order of the main office in Pennsylvania, from the different factories variously located to the Columbus warehouse. The orders taken through the Columbus office are ordinarily filled from this stock.

"Large orders, however, are occasionally filled by requisition on the home office directly from the factory designated by that office. When an order is placed, then the ordinary course of business is that the same is filled directly from the Columbus office which maintains its stock by making requisitions on the home office, which in turn makes requisitions on the various factories. The Columbus office sells goods on credit. The books of account involved in these transactions are kept in Columbus, and collections are made by the Columbus office. The Columbus office pays its own current expenses, such as rent, fuel, light and certain wages, but the salaries of the principal officers of the Columbus branch are paid by the home office.

"The Columbus office is not charged with the goods which it receives from the factory according to any standard of price or value and no relation of debtor and creditor exists between the Columbus branch and the home office.

"The proceeds of the collections are deposited by the Columbus office in a Columbus bank. Two accounts are kept. The statement of counsel for the company is that one of these accounts consists of moneys sent on by the home office for the use of the Columbus office in the payment of its expenses and may be checked on by the Columbus office, while the other into which all the collections are paid can be checked on only from the home office.

"(There appears to be some slight inconsistency between the statement last made, and the statement that the Columbus office pays certain expenses other than salaries. In the view I take of the legal questions involved, however, this inconsistency, if real, is immaterial.)

"Upon the foregoing facts the following questions are submitted:

"1. Are the credits arising out of the business transacted from the Columbus branch of the company taxable to the company at Columbus?

"2. If an affirmative answer is returned to the first question, may the company, for the purpose of arriving at its taxable credits, deduct from the gross amount of all accounts payable to it at the Columbus office, a proportional share, so to speak, of the debts of the company incurred in the purchase of raw material and for other purposes in connection with the process of manufacturing, such debts being those of the corporation in general and not directly, at least, attributable to the Columbus branch, or, is the right of the company to deduct debts limited to such debts as are incurred by Columbus office directly?"

These questions are in effect covered by my opinion to the commission, under date of September 26, 1912. In that opinion I held that a foreign corporation having an agency in this state, with a stock of goods located at such agency, is not entitled, under the tax laws, to deduct from the sum of its legal claims and demands arising from the sale of such goods, the legal bona fide debts owing such corporation, regardless of whether such debts are related to the goods sold and business done in the state of Ohio or not; and in particular that it could not deduct the debts arising from the purchase of such goods or the materials entering into them unless the debts created by the corporation could be directly referred to the specific goods sold through the Ohio office. In that opinion the taxable situs of the credits in Ohio was assumed, largely on the basis of the previous opinion given to the commission in the matter of the Ritter Lumber Company, and the sole question considered was the deduction of the debts.

The opinion of September 26, 1912, was, however, given in answer to a general question, and the previous opinion relative to the Ritter Lumber Company was based upon a particular statement of facts wholly different from those now before me. For these reasons I have deemed it wise to go into the question of situs as well as the question of deduction de novo.

For the purpose of this opinion, however, the discussion which is contained in the two previous opinions referred to, in so far as it is applicable here, may be omitted. That is to say, it is not necessary for me in this opinion to trace the history of the development of the law of the situs of intangible property as applied to a corporation doing business in a state other than that of its origin, nor need I go again over the circumstances under which credits owned by a non-resident of a state may acquire a business situs in the state and thus become localized for the purpose of taxation at a place other than the residence of the owner. It will be sufficient, I think, for present purposes, without citing all the authorities which were considered in the other opinions, to state that the law recognizes the possibility of the establishment of such a business situs for intangible property such as moneys and credits, and that generally speaking, two kinds of circumstances were relied upon by the courts in the case considered in the former opinions as establishing such a separate business situs, viz., first, where the non-resident has sent money into another state and placed it in the care of an agent for the investment with power to collect and reinvest, such as where money is loaned on real estate mortgages, and the local agent has power to reinvest; and, second, where the credits arise out of a business conducted in the state by the agents of the non-resident owners of them.

It is pointed out in the former opinion that in the first case above mentioned it is essential to the creation of a separate situs of the credits that the agent in whose possession the evidence of indebtedness may be, and who may have authority to collect them, shall also possess the authority to reinvest. The former opinions, however, do not cite cases in which the test applicable in the second class of cases above set forth is defined with any accuracy. There is the case of Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S., 252, in which the test is suggested merely. But the facts of the case are so entirely different from the one which is now before me that for reasons pointed out in the opinion of September 26, 1912, it is not of great service in this connection is transacted therein. Such cases are not lacking. I find the following authoris transacted in Ohio all its credits are taxable here.

It has seemed desirable, therefore, to search further for authorities on the question as to the situs of credits referable to the business of a foreign corporation transacted in a state when only a part of the managerial business of the corporation is transacted thereon. Such cases are not lacking. I find the following authorities upon the proposition:

In Armour Packing Company vs. Savannah, 115 Georgia, 140, the facts were as follows:

The packing company was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, but having its principal place of business at Kansas City, Kans. It owned real estate in the city of Savannah in which it did business in its own name through an agent. The business consisted in the selling of food products. The agent at Savannah sold the products to his customers in and around Savannah, delivered the goods, collected the money and deposited it in the Savannah banks to the credit of the Armour Packing Company. Such money was allowed to accumulate for a few days and then was remitted to New York where there was another branch office of the packing company. Money was also on deposit belonging to the packing company in a Savannah bank which was used for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Savannah office of the company. Some sales were on credit and the amounts due appeared on the books.

I am unable to distinguish the facts just stated from the facts in the case submitted by you. The court held that under a statute authorizing the city of Savannah to lay taxes upon "the inhabitants of said city and those who hold taxable property therein, those who transact or offer to transact business therein," and designating as subjects of taxation, "capital invested in said city, stocks in money corporations, choses in action, income and commissions derived from the pursuit of any profession, faculty, trade or calling * * * * and all other property or sources of profit not expressly prohibited or exempted by said law or competent authority of the United States; and under an ordinance taxing "every person or corporation owning or holding any trust or consignment * * notes or other evidences of debt, money, solvent debts, stock in trade and every other kind of personal property whatsoever," the book accounts of the Savannah agency of the packing company were taxable in Savannah.

It is true that the charter of the city of Savannah was very broad with reference to the delegation of the taxing power, but it does not appear to me that the ordinance of the city was any broader than section 5404, of the General Code of Ohio, which taxes all corporations wherever incorporated upon their "credits within this state."

The reliance of the corporation in that case was upon the general principle that the situs of credits for the purpose of taxation is at the domicile of the owner; while the decision of the court was planted upon the proposition that credits might acquire a different business situs, as held in the Ohio case of Hubbard vs. Brush, Supra. Therefore, I conclude that the case cited is in point and if its authority is to govern it leads to the conclusion that the situs of the credits inquired about in your letter is in Columbus, Ohio.

It is interesting to note in connection with this case that the Georgia court refused to follow the case of Vicksburg vs. Armour Packing Co., 24 So. 224 (Miss.), in which upon similar facts the supreme court of Mississippi, had held that the credits of the same corporation attributable to its business at Vicksburg, Miss., did not have a taxable situs in the state of Mississippi. So far as I know the Vicksburg case is the only one which is in conflict with what seems to me to be the otherwise unbroken line of authorities on the point.

The Georgia case just discussed is followed in Armour Packing Co. vs. Augusta, 118 Ga.. 552. The facts in this case were not quite identical with those of the Savannah case. The following differences appear:

In the first place the collections of the Augusta agency of the Armour Packing Co. were remitted daily to the home office of the company instead of being deposited in a bank to the credit of the company for temporary purposes. There did not appear to be any separate bank account in Augusta which could be checked upon for the current expenses of the Augusta agency as was the case in the Savannah case. In the second place no peculiar municipal charter provision was relied upon in whole or in part as a ground of decision in the Augusta case; but the case was decided upon general principles which are stated in the following excerpt from the opinion of Cobb, J.:

> "The ground upon which we rest our decision in this case is that when a non-resident goes into another state for the purpose of doing business, and employs an agent there to transact his business, receive money due him, contract debts for him, purchase property to be used in the business, and exercise a joint management of such business, he cannot escape the burden of taxation, which his property of every description situated in this state ought to bear, by invoking the fiction that intangible property has its situs where the owner resides * * *. To all intents and purposes these notes and accounts are a part of the business being conducted in Augusta. They were received in the course of that business and represent part of the capital employed in the business. They are, in short, as much taxable as is the tangible personal property actually employed in the conduct of the business in that city."

It will be seen that this case goes further than the facts submitted by you require in holding that credits acquire a separate business situs under given circumstances; for in the case which you present the Heinz company keeps money on deposit in Columbus, some of such money being subject only to the check of the Columbus office. Nevertheless, I think that the principle announced by the Georgia court is the correct one, and that the facts which are disclosed by the correspondence laid before me relative to the keeping of bank accounts in Columbus by the Heinz company are immaterial. The Armour Packing Company refused to rest content with the two decisions above cited and in a subsequent case of Armour Packing Co. vs. Clark, sheriff, 124 Ga., 369, sought to have a reconsideration of the entire case, and particularly of the Augusta case. The court refused to reverse its decision in either case, and in the course of the opinion, per Candler, J., the following comment is made with reference to the points of difference between the Augusta case and the Savannah case which I have referred to:

"We do not lose sight of the fact that * * * the authority of the plaintiff's agent in the city of Augusta is much more restricted than that of the agent in the case from which we have quoted; but we fail to see that this alters the principle involved in any degree. The plaintiff ships its meats from Kansas City, but its business was conducted in Augusta. Its agent had only a limited authority; but there is no escape from the important fact that regardless of any considerations as to the point from which it obtained its stock of goods, or the extent to which its agent was authorized to act for it, the plaintiff was engaged in conducting a business in the city of Augusta, and in the conduct of that business the fact of his nonresidence gave him no more favored position than that occupied by resident dealers of like character."

Although the two previous cases had been decided by less than a full bench, the decisions in 124 Georgia was concurred in unanimously.

Other jurisdictions offer cases almost as nearly in point as those above cited.

In the opinion to the commission respecting the taxability of the credits of the Ritter Lumber Company, I commented on the fact that the state of Louisiana, both in the language of its statutes and in the decisions of its courts thereunder, has perhaps gone further than any state in the Union in assigning a separate business situs to the intangible property of non-residents. Possibly for this reason cases from this jurisdiction lack the authority for present purposes which they otherwise would have. However, the case of Monongahela River Consolidated Coal & Coke Co. vs. Board of Assessors, 2 L. R. A. n. s. 637 presents facts so similar to the case about which you inquire that I cannot forbear mentioning it. These facts are as follows:

The plaintiff was a corporation of Pennsylvania, having its main office in that state. It was engaged in mining Pittsburgh coal and in shipping it for sale to various parts of the country. It had a sales agent in the city of New Orleans conducting its business there under the name of the agent. In the course of that business the agent accepted due bills payable on demand for coal sold by the agent to parties in and around New Orleans. These due bills were held by the agent and collected by him. When collected, the cash arising therefrom was deposited in bank and forwarded through the bank to the home office. The court in holding these credits taxable in Louisiana, without relying on any specific statutory provision used the following language, per Breaux, C. J.:

> "The coal of plaintiff is sent here to be sold; it is retained to be sold; it is sold and evidence satisfactory to the agent is taken as the representative of the price; and when payment of this promise to pay is made, the amount thereof is deposited in bank, to be forwarded as above mentioned. The business while here, is under the direction and control of the agent domiciled here * *."

My purpose in citing this case, while acknowledging that Louisiana authorities may not be regarded as strictly in point, is, on account of the suggestion, in the above quoted language, of the test for determining the existence of a separate business situs in cases of this sort, viz., that the business out of which the credit arises is under the management of the resident agent or representative. That is to say, in cases of this kind, as distinguished from others to which I have already alluded, the test is not made by the authority of the agent to deal with the money collected on the claim, but rather to deal concerning the business which gives rise to the claim.

In Piano & Organ Co. vs. Dallas, 61 S. W., 943 (Texas, 1901), the facts were as follows:

The office of the company was located in St. Louis, Mo. It obtained a license to do business in the state of Texas and had established an office or headquarters in the city of Dallas in charge of a manager under whom were a bookkeeper, stenographer and other employes necessary for the dispatch and management of the business of the office. The company employed a number of solicitors and salesmen to canvass the territory adjacent to the city of Dallas, who reported to the manager in charge at Dallas. The company maintained in Dallas a repository or storeroom in which a stock of goods was kept for sale, and from which stock many, though not all, of the orders solicited by the traveling salesmen were filled, the remainder being forwarded by the manager in charge at Dallas to the main office of the company at St. Louis from which the same were filled either from a warehouse in St. Louis or from a factory in Indiana. The company in the usual course of its business, and acting, of course, through its Dallas manager, took notes, usually secured by chattel mortgages upon the musical instrument sold, said notes being made payable to the bank nearest and most convenient to the makers thereof as a matter of accommodation to both parties. The notes were transmitted to and kept by the managing office in Dallas and collected through that office. The Dallas office furnished to the main office in St. Louis schedule of said notes, and as a matter of practice the main office at St. Louis gave directions to the branch office at Dallas as to the management and collection of said notes. The cash arising from such collection, aside from that necessary to pay the current expenses of the business in Dallas, was remitted to the city of St. Louis. The agent at Dallas had no authority to reinvest the proceeds of the notes nor to purchase any stock in trade. The question was as to the taxability in Dallas of the notes referred to in the above statement. The charter of the city authorized it to levy municipal taxes upon "all persons or corporations owning or holding personal property or real estate in the city * * * on the first day of January of each year," and also to levy such tax on the property of corporations, as was provided by state law.

The laws of the state of Texas with respect to the assessment of personal property were strikingly similar to those of Ohio. Without quoting in full it may be said that there was a general provision to the effect that all personal property in the state and all moneys, credits and investments of citizens of the state should be taxed; and that there was also a provision that agents should list moneys "invested, loaned or otherwise controlled * * as agent or attorney, on account of any person, company, corporation whatsoever, etc." So that, as I shall hereinafter point out, the same conditions might have been made with respect to the situs of credits under the statutes of Texas as might be made under the statutes of Ohio with respect to the same subject.

The supreme court of Texas in a very elaborate opinion cited numerous authorities beginning with the old case of Catlin vs. Hull, 21 Vt., 132, commented upon in the opinion in the matter of the Ritter Lumber Company, herein referred to, and held that the credits were taxable in Dallas. The following excerpt from the opinion will show the trend of the court's mind:

> "There is * * an exception to the above rule (that the domicile of the owner controls the taxable situs of intangible property like promissory notes) almost universally recognized * * *, and that is that when a person residing in one state has an agent in another who conducts the business of his principal and has notes in his hands for collection or renewal with a view to keeping up a permanent business, the situs of the notes will be the place of taxation * *."

In Marshall-Wells Hardware Co. vs. Multnomah county, 115 Pacific, 150 (Oregon, 1911), the facts were as follows:

The corporation was organized under the laws of New Jersey; its principal office was in that state, and its principal place of business in Minnesota; a branch business was conducted by the company in Portland, Ore., in charge of a manager. There a large stock of goods was carried and a large amount of accounts had accrued from sales made in various western states and in Canada by traveling salesmen and by mail orders. Orders were ordinarily filled from the Portland stock, but occasionally from the Duluth house. All accounts of sales made by the Portland house were kept only by it. The Portland manager employed, paid and discharged the traveling salesmen and sent them out. Collections were placed in a bank in Portland in a single fund, but when the fund amounted to more than a certain sum the surplus was remitted to the home office, the remainder being retained for the payment of the current expenses of the Portland branch. The question was as to the taxability in Oregon of the book accounts. They were held taxable in an opinion in which some of the cases already discussed in this opinion were cited and followed.

It will be observed that I have selected, as authorities, for the conclusion of law at which I have arrived on the first question of the two into which the general question resolves itself, cases presenting facts almost identical with those stated by you. As I have observed, I find one dissent from this otherwise unbroken line of decisions, viz., the case of Armour Packing Co. vs. Vicksburg, supra. I think it safe to say that as a general proposition a credit is localized in a state for taxation, though owned by a non-resident, when it arises out of a distinct business conducted for the non-resident in that state by an agent. I think it also may be concluded that an agent to sell and to manage all the selling operations of his principal, conducts a business separate from that of his principal within the purview of the rule. That is to say in many of these cases, if not in all of them, the selling end of the business was, so to speak, only a part of the entire business of the non-resident corporation; and that end or part of the business was the only part entrusted to the agent. Nevertheless, the operation of that part of the business was considered by all the courts whose decisions I have cited, as so far separate from the main business of the company as to assign to the credits arising therefrom a distinct business situs of their own. So that in the face of these authorities, it cannot be contended generally that because a corporation is primarily a manufacturing company or a producing company of any kind, so that the sale of its products is merely a part of its business, the business conducted by a selling agent cannot be separated from the general business of the company and considered as a distinct affair.

Before going further, the statutes of Ohio must be considered; for it is clear that though Ohio may have the power to tax credits localized within her boundaries upon the principles above outlined, the credits will not be taxed unless the statutes provide for their assessment.

Avoiding the repetition of what was elaborately presented in the opinion in the Ritter Lumber Company matter, I may state that so far as foreign corporations are concerned, it is now too late to raise such a question with respect to the taxation of intangible property in Ohio. Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, adopts the general principle that credits arising out of business transacted in Ohio are taxable here.

Insurance Co. vs. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611, and other cases of a similar nature, like Western Assurance Co. vs. Halliday, 126 Fed. 257, are authority for the proposition that the corporation tax laws, section 5404, et seq., General Code, are not limited as to foreign corporations by the general terms of section 5328, General Code, to the effect that "moneys, credits, etc., of the persons residing in this state shall be subject to taxation. * *."

So that under the decisions in Ohio, as they stand the state has asserted its right to tax the credits of a foreign corporation, to the extent that under general rules they may be localized within its boundaries, and the test of localization in the case of a business conducted as distinguished from a mere investment is that the credits shall arise out of a continuous business conducted for the corporation on its behalf by the agents within the state. The only thing that is lacking in the Ohio decisions is authority upon the question as to whether or not it is necessary in order to assign a business situs to the credits of a foreign corporation that all of the business of the corporation shall be conducted in Ohio, and this omission is supplied by the cases from other jurisdictions which I have cited.

The Ohio cases just mentioned serve also to justify the distinction which I have drawn in this opinion between credits belonging to a non-resident and in the hands of a resident agent but representing a mere investment of the non-resident rather than a continuous business conducted in his behalf by the agent, and so as to distinguish such cases as Meyers vs. Seaberger, 45 O. S., 232; Grant vs. Jones, 39 O. S., 506; Lee vs. Dawson, 8 C. C., 365, and Walker vs. Jack, 88 Fed., 576.

Commercial credits stand on a footing quite different from mere investment credits.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion, upon the first part of the question under discussion, that the credits arising from the business conducted at the Columbus branch of the H. J. Heinz Company are taxable in Franklin county, Ohio.

Greater difficulty is encountered in answering the second part of the question, and it is this feature of the case which you present that has caused me to give to the question consideration more deliberate than I am usually able to give to similar questions.

The laws of Ohio do not tax claims and demands as credits but merely the excess or difference between the sum of all claims and demands due or to become due in favor of the taxpayer, and the sum of all legal bona fide debts by him owing. It will not be necessary to quote entire section 5327, which defines the term "credits," the foregoing statement of its effect being sufficient for present purposes. Now, if the credits arising from the business conducted by a selling branch of a manufacturing corporation are to be localized where that business is conducted, and if in arriving at the amount of such credits, no account is to be taken of the debts of the company incurred in the purchase of materials, machinery or otherwise in the process of production, as distinguished from that of sale, it will at once appear that a foreign corporation maintaining a selling agency in a state is at a disadvantage as compared with a similar corporation whose entire business in the managerial aspect thereof is conducted in a single state. For instance in Hubbard vs. Brush, supra, and in the Ritter Lumber Company case, the holding was that inasmuch as all the business of the corporation was conducted from an Ohio office, all of its credits were taxable in Ohio and all of its debts could be deducted from the sum total of its claims and demands for the purpose of arriving at the sum total of such credits; but if in either of the cases the facts had been like those which you now present a different question would have been suggested.

The question now under discussion has never arisen in Ohio. There are numerous decisions along similar lines by the court of appeals of New York, as pointed out in the opinion of September 26, 1912, but the laws of that state are so different from those of Ohio that I am unable to apply these decisions in the solution of the present question. The only decision which is at all analogous is that in Barnes vs. Flummerfelt, 21 Washington, 498.

The statutes of Washington with respect to the taxation of credits were substantially similar to those of Ohio. The application of such statutes to the following facts was involved in the case cited:

B. and N. were partners, doing business under a firm name. B. resided in the state of Washington and there conducted the business of broker and money lender in the firm name. N. resided in the Hawaiian islands and there carried on the business of wellboring and dealing in sugar in the firm name. The firm had claims and demands owing to it in Washington to the value of $22,000 in a given year, and owed debts on account of the business conducted in Washington in the sum of $1,200 in that year; at the same time on account of the business conducted in the Hawaiian islands the firm was indebted in the sum of $17,000.

Of course the firm claimed the right to deduct all its debts from its credits which were localized in Washington for the purpose of arriving at its taxable credits. The supreme court of Washington denied the right to make the deduction on the ground that the two businesses were separate and distinct and that the only debts which should be deducted from the business credits taxable in Washington were those debts arising out of the business there conducted.

I think that although there is a wide distinction between the case just cited and the case presented by you, the principle involved in the former may be applied to the latter. As I have pointed out in dealing with the subject of situs, credits can be localized in a state, if belonging to a foreign corporation, only upon the theory that the business conducted by the company, or on its behalf, in the state, can be separated from the main business of the company and considered as a distinct undertaking. Once the separation is made it runs through the entire subject, so to speak, and serves as well to put out of the equation the debts assignable to the main office or manufactory as the credits pertaining to the main office as such. In other words, going back to the case of Hubbard vs. Lynch, "the business it transacts in this state" must be considered as a separate and distinct undertaking as well for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the legal bona fide debts owing on account of the business as for the purpose of ascertaining the sum of the claims and demands due to or to become due to the company on account of that business. Hardship results from this rule; but as pointed out by the Washington court, quoting from a Pennsylvania case,

> "There is nothing poetical about tax laws. Wherever they find property they claim a tribute for its protection, without any special respect to the owner or his occupation, and without reflecting much on questions of generosity and comity."

Or, as stated by Judge Cooley in his authoritative work on taxation,

> "It cannot be too distinctly borne in mind that any possible system of tax legislation must inevitably produce unequal and unjust results in individual instances; and if inequality in result must defeat the general law, then taxation becomes impossible and governments must fall back upon arbitrary exactions. But no such impracticable principle is recognized in revenue laws. While equality and justice are constantly to be aimed at, impossibilities are not demanded. Tax legislation must be practical. * * * The necessity of the state and of reasonable provisions for the security of the individual must be equally considered; the state is no more to be deprived of its revenue, because of individual hardship, resulting from general rules, than is the individual to be stripped of his property without law, because in its necessity the state finds it more convenient to take it thus than by regular proceedings. The incidental hardship or inconvenience must be submitted to in either case."
> (Cooley on Taxation, Vol. 1, page 390.)

Admitting, then, the seeming injustice of the application of the rule to the case at hand, but being unable to find statutory or other ground for assigning to the business of the Columbus branch of the H. J. Heinz Company any part of the indebtedness of the home office of the company for the purpose of deducting such part from the total sum of the claims and demands due to the Columbus office and arising out of the business conducted by it, I am of the opinion that the only debts of the company which may be deducted from such claims and demands, for the purpose of arriving at its credits taxable in Franklin county, Ohio, are the debts which have been incurred in the course of the business conducted at Columbus, considered as a separate undertaking; that is such debts as have been incurred by the Columbus office in or by the corporation itself for and on behalf of the Columbus office in such a way as that the relation between a particular indebtedness and the business of the Columbus office can be definitely shown and ascertained. Inasmuch as the company does not claim the existence of any indebtedness of this class, but asserts merely the right to deduct either all debts of the company owing to persons residents in Ohio or a proportionate part of the debts of the company assigned to the Columbus office on the basis suggested by the sales of the Columbus office, as compared with the sales of all the other branch offices of the company, I am of the opinion that both of these claims of right, should be denied, and that the company should be limited to the deduction of such indebtedness as has been created by or in behalf of the Columbus agency and that only.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

INDETERMINATE SENTENCE—POWER OF THE GOVERNOR UNDER INDETERMINATE SENTENCE LAW.

When the governor commutes the term of a prisoner serving an indeterminate sentence in the penitentiary, his action is a reduction of the maximum term provided by law and does not change the nature of the prisoner's sentence so as to entitle him under section 2163, General Code, to a further diminution of sentence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1914.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 8, 1914, as follows:

> "Section 2163, General Code of Ohio, provides a table governing diminution of time for good behavior from the term of persons sentenced to this institution for a definite term, other than life, the provisions of which naturally do not apply to persons sentenced for an indeterminate period.
> "The governor has commuted a number of sentences from an indeterminate period to a specific or definite term.
> "In view of such commutation, have I a legal right to allow such prisoners the same diminution of time for good behavior as is provided in section 2163 for a definite term equivalent to the definite term to which they have been commuted?
> "Your prompt reply will be greatly appreciated, as the short time on some of these sentences will expire very soon."

The first question presented by your request is: Has the governor of Ohio the power to commute sentences to the Ohio penitentiary, when such sentences have been imposed under the new indeterminate sentence law?

The new indeterminate sentence law, 103 O. L., page 29, reads as follows:

> "Courts imposing sentences to the Ohio penitentiary for felonies, except treason, and murder in the first degree, shall make them general and not fixed or limited in their duration. All terms of imprisonment of persons in the Ohio penitentiary may be terminated by the Ohio board of administration as authorized by this chapter, but no such terms shall exceed the maximum, nor be less than the minimum term provided by law for the felony of which the prisoner was convicted. If a prisoner is sentenced for two or more separate felonies, his term of imprisonment may equal, but shall not exceed, the aggregate of the maximum terms of all the felonies for which he was sentenced and, for the purposes of this chapter, he shall be held to be serving one continuous term of imprisonment. If through oversight or otherwise, a sentence to the Ohio penitentiary should be for a definite term, it shall not thereby become void, but the person so sentenced shall be subject to the liabilities of this chapter, and receive the benefits thereof, as if he had been sentenced in the manner required by this section."

Section 11 of article III of the constitution of Ohio, provides:

> "He shall have power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, for all crimes and offenses, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper; subject, however, to such regulations, as to the manner of applying for pardons, as may be prescribed by law. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of sentence, and report the case to the general assembly, at its next meeting, when the general assembly shall either pardon, commute the sentence, direct its execution, or grant a further reprieve. He shall communicate to the general assembly, at every regular session, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name and crime of the convict, the sentence, its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon or reprieve, with his reason therefor."

While the supreme court of Ohio has not as yet passed upon the new indeterminate sentence law of Ohio, the supreme courts of other states have held that similar indeterminate sentence laws are constitutional, and in so holding they have concluded that the power of the governor to grant pardons and commutations of sentences vested in him by the constitution, was not impaired by the passage of such indeterminate sentence law. And so the holding must be with respect to the Ohio law or our law will fall as being in violation of section 11 of article III of the constitution, as above quoted. So assuming that our law is constitutional, as I believe it to be, you may proceed upon the theory that the power to pardon and commute penitentiary sentences, still rests unimpaired with the governor.

Your next inquiry is as to the nature of a commutation of sentence. In the case of State vs. Peters, 43 O. S., 629, the supreme court at page 651, adopting the definition from Bouvier's law dictionary, defines a commutation of sentence as "the change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned, into a less severe one." This definition seems to have been adopted by the courts generally.

In the case of People ex rel. Patrick, vs. Frost, Warden, 117 N. Y. S., 524, the court said:

"We may define it (commutation) as the power to change a greater punishment to a less punishment, of which both are known to the law. Lee vs. Murphy, 22 Grat. (Va.), 789, 798; Rich vs. Chamberlin, 107 Mich., 383; State vs. Peters, 43 O. S., 657; ex parte Janes, 1 Nev. 321; State vs. State Board, 16 Utah, 478; Ogletree vs. Doxier, 59 Ga., 802; Long vs. Long, 61 Tex., 193."

Having satisfied ourselves that the governor of Ohio retains the power to commute sentences under the indeterminate sentence law, and having defined what a commutation is, it is our duty to next inquire in what manner the governor may make use of this prerogative with respect to indeterminate sentences, in order that his act may come clearly within the definition of "commutation," laid down by the courts.

An essential feature of a commutation is that it changes the punishment under which a person has been condemned into one less severe. Therefore, when the governor presumes to commute an indeterminate sentence, his act, in order to be a commutation of sentence, must change the punishment to which the person has been condemned, into one less severe. This can be done with respect to an indeterminate sentence by reducing the maximum limit, or both the maximum and minimum limits, of the indeterminate sentence imposed upon the prisoner. By this action the governor effects the release of a prisoner prior to the maximum term fixed by the sentence, and his act is therefore a commutation of sentence, since it clearly changes the punishment into which the prisoner was condemned, by the sentence in court, into one less severe. If he sees fit, the executive may reduce the maximum to a term less than the minimum imposed by the court. Ex parte Harlan, 180 Fed., 119, page 127.

In your request you refer to the fact that the governor "has commuted a number of sentences from an indeterminate period to a specific or definite term." This definite term should be treated by you as the maximum term of imprisonment, and the sentence should be treated as an indeterminate one with the maximum so changed by the commutation of the governor. In all respects, save the maximum penalty of imprisonment, the prisoner is in the same position as when sentenced by the court.

Section 2163 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "A person confined in the penitentiary or hereafter sentenced thereto for a definite term other than life, having passed the entire period of his imprisonment without violation of the rules and discipline, except such as the board of managers shall excuse, will be entitled to the following diminution of his sentence: * * *"

Prisoners sentenced to indeterminate sentences, were not "sentenced thereto for a definite term other than life" and do not under this section gain a diminution of sentence; and the fact that the prisoner's maximum term has been reduced by a commutation of sentence from the governor does not, of course, operate to place him in any different position with respect to this section. Such prisoner was not sentenced to a definite term of imprisonment and therefore is not entitled to a diminution of sentence under this section.

In direct answer to your question, it is therefore my opinion that when the governor commutes the term of a prisoner serving an indeterminate sentence, his action is a reduction of the maximum term provided by law and does not change the nature of the prisoner's sentence so as to entitle him under section 2163, General Code, to a further diminution of sentence.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FIXING THE SALARY OF MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF REVIEW WHEN THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FAIL TO FIX SUCH SALARY —WHEN SALARY MUST BE FIXED.

If the board of county commissioners fail to fix the salary of board of review on or before the first Monday of June each year, the salary shall be deemed fixed at amount determined at first meeting of commissioners in June last preceding.

Any attempt to fix salary at any time after first meeting in June of any year is ineffective for any purpose whatever.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of sometime ago you submit the following questions for my opinion thereof:

> "1st. If a board of county commissioners fail to fix the salary of the members of the board of review on or before the first Monday in June of each year, what shall be considered the salary of the members of the board of review for that year?"

"2d. If the salary would be fixed or attempted to be fixed by the board of commissioners one day, or one month after the opening of the session, i. e., after the first Monday in June, would the attempt to so fix, control the salary of the several members for the session at which said attempt was made?

"3d. If the salary was fixed by the board of commissioners during the session, that is, after the first Monday of June of any year, would their action control for the following year if no action was taken fixing the salary the following year?"

In addition to the facts submitted in your communication other facts were submitted by various parties which would probably raise an issue; but inasmuch as boards of review have been abolished, and that the decision in the case will not be a precedent for the future, and further, inasmuch as the auditor has issued vouchers to the various members of the boards of review named, and at the time all of the parties must necessarily have been acting in the utmost good faith, I am constrained to make such a decision as will avoid the making of any findings and feel perfectly justified in so doing for the reasons I herewith state.

In an opinion to the board of review of Norwalk under date of September 30, 1912, attorney general's report 1912, page 1067, the question was submitted as to the right of the commissioners to change the perdiem compensation of the board of review during the current year, and following the decision of the circuit court of Montgomery county in an unreported case (State ex rel. vs. Edwards), wherein the right to change the compensation of the members of the board was involved, I held that the commissioners were without authority to make such change during the year. That case further held that in the event that the compensation was not fixed at the beginning of each year's session in June, the salary as fixed prior thereto at the beginning of the year's session should obtain. Under this decision, and answering your questions seriatim, it is my opinion:

First—If a board of county commissioners fail to fix the salary of the members of the board of review on or before the first Monday of June each year, the salary of such members for that year shall be whatever salary was fixed at the first meeting of the commissioners in June last preceding the year for which the salary is to be determined.

Second—If the salary would be fixed or attempted to be fixed by the board of commissioners at any time after the first Monday in June, such attempt would not avail to fix the salary for the current year, and would be unavailing for any purpose, and it would make no difference whether the failure occurred one month or one day after the opening of the session.

Third—The answer to the second question answers your third, and since the attempt at a later time in the year to fix the salary would be unavailing for any purpose, it would have no effect to control the salary of the following year. Under the decision in the Edwards case, supra, it is the duty of the commissioners at the opening of their session to fix the salary. If it has not been done, the question of the amount of the salary is regulated by the last preceding time when at an opening of a session in June the salary was fixed. Any attempt to fix or change the salary at later times would be ineffectual for any purpose.

Trusting this answers your inquiry, I am,

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF TAX LEVY MADE BY BOARD OF EDUCATION OF A SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT WHERE THE PROCEEDINGS FOR THE FORMATION OF SUCH DISTRICT WERE DECLARED VOID BY THE COURT.

After a tax levy has been made by the board of education of a special school district and the proceedings for the formation of such district were declared void by final judgment of the court of appeals, it is the duty of the county auditor to extend the levies made by the several boards of education of the districts, parts of which compose the special district, within the territory belonging to said special district, upon the duplicate, and to expunge the levy made by the board of education of the special school district, by way of corrections made under section 2588, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1914.

HON. CARL SCHULER, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 1st you request my opinion upon the following facts:

> "Sometime ago by proceedings in the probate court of Holmes county, a special school district was attempted to be created, consisting of parts of three townships in that county, and an incorporated village therein. In accordance with such proceedings a board of education was elected in and for said district, which board assumed to make a levy on all the taxable property therein for the local school purposes of said district. The boards of education of the three township school districts, parts of which have been incorporated in the new reformed special district had (as you put it) 'not levied on the property that was included within the limits of the territory of the special school district.'"

From the form of your statement of facts, however I assume that the board of education of the village district did not assent to the formation of the new district, but attempted to exercise its functions after the supposed creation thereof, if there was such a village district; if there was not such a district then, of course, no difficulty on this point is presented.

> "Meanwhile the validity of the proceedings in the probate court was being tested in the common pleas court and the court of appeals. This litigation terminated a short time ago in a decision of the court of appeals holding that the probate court lacked jurisdiction to proceed upon the application made to it, so that its proceedings were entirely void.
> "Now you state there is a movement to bring about the same result with respect to the formation of the new district under the new school law through the agency of the county board of education in the exercise of its powers to change district lines and to annex and detach territory for school purposes.
> "The duplicate now being made up, how is it possible to secure funds to run the schools in the territory in question, whether the same becomes by action of the county board of education a distinct district or not?"

I start upon the assumption, which I think is a safe one, that the levy attempted to be made by the board of education of the special school district was void. This must be so since the district itself was not in existence, so that the defacto doctrine does not apply. It must be so also, because even if the taxes levied were collected, there would be no place to which to distribute them.

The levy being void, then, it should not be extended upon the tax books, and if such extension has been made, the county auditor should immediately correct the tax list and the duplicate in the hands of the treasurer, by expunging the void levy.

I think you have made one erroneous assumption, viz., that the township boards of education have failed to make any levy on the property in question. Boards of education, like other levying authorities, do not, in submitting their budgets to the budget commission, or in any other of their financial acts in connection with levying taxes, specify the territory to which the levy shall apply. The boundaries of each school district are, or should be, a matter of public record in the office of the county auditor, and when a levy is made for the school district, it is his duty to extend the same on all the taxable property within the boundaries of such district as shown on his records.

In your case the effect of the decision of the court of appeals is to restore the former school district boundaries, defining the various township districts involved (and the village district if there was such a district) so that it became the duty of the auditor, upon receipt by him of a copy of the court's decision, to extend the levies made by the several township boards against the real and personal property located in the parts of the township districts which had been included in the abortive special district. This duty the auditor should now discharge if he has not already done so, and in discharging the same he should correct the duplicate in his office, and the triplicate in the hands of the treasurer for collection.

The authority of the auditor to act in such a case is found in sections 2588 and 2589, General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Sec. 2588. From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment. If the correction is made after the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer, it shall be made on the margin of such list and duplicate without changing any name, description or figure in the duplicate as delivered, or in the original tax list, which shall always correspond exactly with each other.
> "Sec. 2589. After having delivered the duplicate to the county treasurer for collection, if the auditor is satisfied that any tax or assessment thereon or any part thereof has been erroneously charged, he may give the person so charged a certificate to that effect to be presented to the treasurer, who shall deduct the amount from such tax or assessment. If at any time the auditor discovers that erroneous taxes or assessments have been charged and collected in previous years, he shall call the attention of the county commissioners thereto at a regular or special session of the board. If the commissioners find that taxes or assessments have been erroneously charged and collected, they shall order the auditor to draw his warrant on the county treasurer in favor of the person paying them for the full amount of the taxes or assessments so erroneously charged and collected. The county treasurer shall pay such warrant from any surplus or unexpended funds in the county treasury."

In this connection I observe that by virtue of sections 5 and 64 of the Warnes law, 103 O. L. 786, the district assessor is vested with certain powers with respect to the making up of the duplicate and the correction of errors therein, which formerly devolved upon the county auditor, and that these provisions undoubtedly have the effect of depriving the auditor of some of his powers under sections 2588 and 2589. The sections of the Warnes law which I have considered are as follows:

> "Section 5. Whenever any person, company, firm, partnership, association or corporation is by an existing provision of law required to return property to the county auditor for taxation, the same shall be returned to the district assessor; and whenever the county auditor is by any existing provision of law charged with any duty or vested with any powers in making up the original tax list, or in listing and valuing any property which has been omitted from the tax list, or in correcting any returns or statements of property for taxation, either with respect to its valuation or amount, such duty shall devolve upon and be performed by the district assessor, and such power shall vest in him and be exercised by him; provided, that if the county auditor has reason to believe or is informed that any property subject to taxation in his county has been omitted from the tax list, or has been improperly valued or assessed, he shall notify the district assessor to that effect, and furnish him any facts and information within his knowledge bearing thereon.
> "Section 64. The district assessor from time to time shall correct any clerical errors which he discovers in the tax list, in the name of the person charged with taxes, the valuation, description or quantity of any tract, lot or parcel of land or improvements thereon, or minerals or mineral rights therein, or in the valuation of any personal property; or when property exempt from taxation has been listed therein, and after the same has been delivered to the county auditor, and certify such corrections to the county auditor, who shall enter the same upon the tax list and duplicate."

I do not believe, however, that these sections have the effect of depriving the auditor of the power of making the kind of correction which is required in the case you present. Section 5 does not have this effect because the making of the correction is not an act which relates to "making up the original tax list." Section 64 does not have this effect because the error which has occurred is not "in the name of the person" nor "in the valuation, description or quantity * * * of property," nor in the "listing of exempt property," but is in the "amount of such tax" as specified in section 2588.

It is assumed that the duplicate has been delivered to the treasurer for collection. Therefore, the correction should be made in the margin thereof as specified in section 2588. If the necessary readjustment results in charging a given taxpayer with a less amount of taxes than he would have had to pay had the validity of the special school district been sustained, then a certificate should have been given, on demand, to such person under section 2589. If such adjustment results in charging a greater amount of tax against a given taxpayer than would otherwise have been the case, the correction should, nevertheless, be made. The only question of difficulty which arises is that which would be present in the event that any taxpayer should pay the taxes for the entire year before the cerrections have been made, as he would have a right to do. It not being exactly necessary for me to answer this question in passing upon the case which you present, I shall defer a positive opinion thereon, but refer you to the unreported case of State ex rel. Donahey vs. Roose, decided by the supreme court early this year, in which it was held that a county auditor might be compelled to correct his duplicate by extending an omitted levy after the first half of the taxes had been paid, even in face of the fact that some taxpayers had paid the entire amount of their taxes in December.

I enclose herewith a copy of my brief filed in that case, in which you will observe that I express the view that notwithstanding the giving of a treasurer's receipt in full, a tax may be subsequently charged on the same duplicate, before final settlement time, which ought to have been charged thereon in the first instance.

In view of the outcome of this case I do not hesitate to express the view that the right of the various township school districts to have the duplicate corrected so as to make their levies extend to all property within their legal boundaries cannot be defeated, even as to entries on the duplicate, taxes charged against which have been paid in full before the corrections are made, and even when in such case the change will result in charging a greater amount of taxes than would otherwise have been. The result of such corrections will be to provide funds to operate the schools within the territory of the special district if the present township districts retain control of them; if, however, the county board of education changes the boundaries of the districts and in effect recreates the special school districts (assuming its power to do so) then, as pointed out in the enclosed opinion to the superintendent of public instruction, the county board of education should, at the time the transfer of territory is made, determine upon an equitable distribution or division of funds and indebtedness. In this way the necessary funds for the new district may be provided.

I do not, however, express any opinion as to the power of the county board of education to bring about the result of which you speak by the exercise of its power to transfer territory from one district to another under section 4736, General Code, as amended. This question not being directly asked in your letter, and your statement being merely that a movement has been started with this end in view.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT ASSESSOR UNDER THE WARNES LAW —SALARIES OF SUCH ASSESSORS.

District assessors under the Warnes law received their appointments on December 5, 1913. Their salaries are fixed by the tax commission and are payable in monthly installments. Such being the case, although the term is indefinite, yet the salary or compensation being payable in periodical monthly installments must be calculated by the year, payable one-twelfth in each month.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 9, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "Could a district assessor be legally compensated in a sum equaling one-twelfth of his annual salary for the full month of December, 1913, if he was not officially appointed until the fifth day of that month, even though his bond as such had been approved before that date? In the event that he did not file his bond and have same approved by the county auditor until some time after the fifth day of December, 1913, would he be only legally entitled to that portion of the month of December, 1913, as represents the number of days following the date of approval of his official bond by the county auditor?"

You also call attention to my opinion of August 1, 1911, in which I held that under section 2989, G. C., a county officer was entitled to receive a full year's salary for each year of his term, regardless of the fact that he may have served a few days more or less, by reason of the term beginning on a certain Monday of a certain month and ending on the same Monday of the same month. While there is some difference in the conditions, I do not feel there is enough to change the rule adopted in that opinion.

District assessors are appointed by the governor, the first appointment to be made on or before the first day of November, 1913 (103 O. L., 787, sec. 2), to hold his office until his successor is appointed and qualified.

The salary of district assessors is fixed by the tax commission at not less than fifteen hundred dollars (103 O. L., 795, sec. 34), the salaries when so fixed to be paid monthly out of the county treasury (Ibid, sec. 35).

The use of the word "salary" or "salaries," when coupled with monthly payments can only support a yearly compensation payable in monthly installments. It has been said by our supreme court:

> "It is manifest from the change of expression in the two clauses of the section (Sec. 20, Art. 2 of the constitution) that the word 'salary' was not used in a general sense embracing any compensation fixed for an officer, but in its limited sense, of an annual or periodical payment for services—a payment dependent upon the time, and not on the amount of services rendered." Thompson, Relator, vs. Phillips, 12 O. S., 617, 618.

This holding made more than fifty years ago, has never been denied, doubted or questioned, so we may safely conclude that the term "salary" as used in the Warnes law meant an annual or periodical payment for services and in the absence of a fixing of the period, no other conclusion can be reached when we consider that the salaries were to be paid monthly and that the period intended was annual.

The tax commission under the authority granted in section 34 of the Warnes law, fixed annual compensations for the different district assessors, in the doing of which they were fully justified by the statute, the decision above cited and many others in which it is cited with approval.

Outside of your letter, I am advised that the appointees under this act were determined prior to December 5, 1913, and were called to Columbus prior to that date for conference with the tax commission. This was done prior to the qualifications of many of the assessors, who were afterwards duly appointed and qualified. Each district assessor, after qualifying, became entitled to his annual salary provided he served the full year; and regardless of the particular date of qualifying. In payment of annual salaries, where the payment, as in this case is fixed at stipulated periods, parts of periods are not considered unless it be when the term expires before the expiration of some given period.

In other words, and to state the matter more clearly—at the end of the year, which from the books of the governor's office we find to be December 5, 1914, each district assessor is entitled to compensation for a full year; if he has received the amount of salary fixed by the tax commission, he is paid and the matter is at an end; if he has not received his year's salary, he is entitled to such additional sum as when added to the amount he has received, will equal his annual salary.

I think this statement should entirely clarify the matter and dispose of the question without the trouble of figuring or considering the date of the approval of his bond, or anything other or further than when the district assessor has served a year he is entitled to a year's salary and if it has not been paid, he is entitled to have it made up to him.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

STATE BOARD OF ACCOUNTANCY REQUIRED TO PAY STATE MONEYS INTO THE STATE TREASURY.

Section 1378, General Code, allowing the state board of accountancy to pay its expenses and compensation of the members from its own receipts, has been repealed by implication in so far as its provisions conflict with the amendment to section 24, of the General Code, which requires the board to pay its receipts weekly into the state treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1914.

State Board of Accountancy, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 8th you request my opinion as follows:

"The attention of the members of the Ohio State Board of Accountancy has been informally directed to the action of the general assembly last winter, in providing that the receipts of all state boards should be covered into the state treasury, and such expenses as were allowable, paid by warrant through the office of the auditor.

"In the creation of the Ohio State Board of Accountancy, chapter 26, sections 1370 to 1379, inclusive, Codified Laws of Ohio, there were provided the conditions and rules under which this board should operate. Section 1378 specifically provides for the collection of fees and the payment of expenses of the state board. I would respectfully call your attention, however, to the last clause of said section, as follows:

"'In no case shall the expenses of the board or the compensation or traveling expenses of the members thereof be a charge against any fund of the state.'

"Inasmuch as we have been, as stated above, informally notified that our board should cover its receipts for fees into the state treasury, and this requirement appears to us to be contradictory to the section of the statute just referred to, we respectfully request your opinion for our direction in acting, as we have no inclination to violate any statute, but only to carry out the intent of the law."

Section 1378, to which you refer, is as follows:

"From fees collected under this chapter the board shall pay the expenses incident to its examinations and the expenses of preparing and issuing certificates, and to each member of the board for the time actually expended in the performance of his duties a sum not exceeding five dollars per day and his necessary traveling expenses. In no case shall the expenses of the board or the compensation or traveling expenses of the members thereof be a charge against any fund of the state."

However, on page 178, of 104 Ohio Laws, there appears the following later enactment, the same being an amendment to section 24, of the General Code:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio.

"Section 1. That section 24, of the General Code, be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 24. On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, or for the use of any such state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid, during the preceding week, from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed, verified statement of such receipts. Where tuitions and fees are paid to the officer or officers of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid, said officer or officers shall retain a sufficient amount of said tuition fund and fees to enable said officer or officers to make refunds of tuition and fees incident to conducting of said tuition fund and fees. At the end of each term of any college, normal school or university receiving state aid the officer or officers having in charge said tuition fund and fees shall make and file with the auditor of state an itemized statement of all tuitions and fees received and disposition of the same.

"Section 2. That said original section 24, of the General Code, be and the same is hereby repealed.

"Section 3. All sections and parts of sections of the General Code which provide for the custody, management and control of moneys arising from the payment to any state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, college, normal school or university receiving state aid of any fees, taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or other charges or indebtedness and which are inconsistent with the provisions of section 24, of the General Code, as herein amended, are, to the extent of such inconsistency, hereby repealed.

"Section 4. Immediately upon the taking effect of this act all moneys, checks and drafts in the possession of any state officer, state institution, department, board, commission or institution received for the state or for any such state officer, department, board or commission from the sources mentioned in section 24, of the General Code, as herein amended, shall be paid into the state treasury in the manner provided by said section."

In further pursuance of the policy exemplified by this enactment there was appropriated to the state board of accountancy its receipts (104 Ohio Laws, p. 72).

The clear language of section 3 of the act amending section 24, just quoted, is not subject to misconstruction. Its intent is emphatic and its effect is manifestly to repeal the inconsistent provisions of section 1378, of the General Code. That clause of this conflicting section to which you refer must in the best be considered invalid in so far as it attempts to place restrictions upon succeeding legislatures.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that all compensation, traveling and other expenses of your board may be paid only out of the fund which accumulates from the payment of your receipts into the state treasury. This conclusion necessitates the payment of all state moneys which the board has on hand into the state treasury, immediately, and the payment henceforth into the state treasury, on or before Monday of each week, all state moneys which come into the hands of the board from whatsoever source. All vouchers of your board must be paid upon the warrant of the auditor of state, in accordance with section 242, of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 4736, GENERAL CODE, IN REFERENCE TO RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS WHICH GO TO MAKE UP COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

Section 4736, General Code, as amended, 10 O. L., 138, applies to rural or village school districts which go to make up county school districts and does not seem to have application to the internal affairs of the rural school districts, formerly township school districts and village school districts, which go to make up and constitute the respective county school districts of the state.

Local boards of education of rural school districts, formerly township school districts, cannot change boundaries of subdistricts for the reason that such boundaries of such subdistricts no longer exist. However, such boards of education under section 7684, General Code, have the authority to make such assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion will best promote the interests of education in their districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1914.

HON. H. R. LOOMIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 30, 1914, you submitted to this department for an official opinion thereon, the following request:

> "A board of education desires to change the boundaries of the subdistricts of the township district. Do they have authority to do so?"

You further state in your communication that section 4716, of the General Code, which said section formerly conferred authority on township boards of education to change subdistricts, has been repealed. The repeal of said section appears in the 104th volume of Ohio Laws, at page 133. Said section 4716, of the General Code, prior to its repeal, read as follows:

> "The division of township school districts into subdistricts as they exist shall continue and be recognized for the purpose of school attendance, but the board of education may increase or diminish the number or change the boundaries of the subdistricts at any regular meeting. A map designating such changes shall be entered upon the records of the board."

Said section 4716, as above stated, was repealed by the legislature at its special session on February 5, 1914, so that under the new school code rural school districts formerly designated as township subdistricts, are not divided into school subdistricts as they were prior to the enactment of the school code, and there are no longer subdistrict boundary lines.

Section 4736, of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 138, specifies and designates the powers and duties of county school boards, as follows:

> "The county board of education shall as soon as possible after organizing make a survey of its district. The board shall arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. To this end the county board shall have power by resolution at any regular or special meeting to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. A map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor. In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation. In no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles. In changing boundary lines and other work of a like nature the county board shall ask the assistance of the county surveyor and the latter is hereby required to give the services of his office at the formal request of the county board."

Analyzing said section, it appears that the county board in accordance with the last quoted section, shall arrange schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. Furthermore, in order to accomplish this end, the county board has the power by adopting a resolution at any regular or special meeting, to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. Inasmuch as subdistrict lines by virtue of the repeal of section 4716, General Code, are no longer in existence, it necessarily follows that such county board cannot change such subdistrict lines, and therefore the district lines referred to in said section 4736 must necessarily apply to rural or village school districts as the same now exist under and by virtue of the school code. It certainly cannot apply to subdistrict lines when such subdistricts no longer exist as such.

Further along in said section, it appears that the county board in changing boundary lines, may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation.

From the foregoing analysis of the phraseology employed in said section 4736 as amended, it seems to follow that said section applies to rural or village school districts which go to make up county school districts, and does not seem to have application to the internal affairs of the rural school district formerly township school districts, and the village school districts which go to make up and constitute the respective county school districts of the state.

As to the arrangement of the schools within such rural school districts as constitute the respective county school districts of the state, section 7684, of the General Code, which was in nowise amended by the adoption of the school code and which was not repealed, provides as follows:

> "Boards of education may make such an assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion best will promote the interests of education in their districts."

Under and by virtue of this last section, it would seem to be within the power of the respective boards of education of the rural school districts of the state to make such assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion will best promote the interests of education in their districts. While there are no longer subdistricts within the rural school districts formerly township school districts, nevertheless under section 7684 just quoted, it seems to have been left by the legislature to the local boards to arrange and equalize school attendance at the respective schools making up such rural districts, as in the judgment of the local board will best promote education.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question, I am of the opinion that while the local board of education of the rural school districts, formerly township school districts, cannot change boundaries of subdistricts, for the reason that the boundaries of such subdistricts no longer exist, they, nevertheless, under section 7684, supra, have the authority to make such assignment of the youth of their respective districts, to the schools established by them as in their opinion will best promote the interests of education in their districts.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUDGE OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF CINCINNATI—NO FINDING SHOULD BE MADE AGAINST JUDGE OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF CINCINNATI FOR SALARY EARNED BEFORE JANUARY 1ST, 1914.

Although it is doubtful that the presiding judge of the municipal court of Cincinnati was entitled to compensation as such before January 1, 1914, yet in view of the fact that he took such compensation under an opinion of the city solicitor of Cincinnati, no finding for recovery should be made by the board against him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1914.

HON. ARTHUR C. FRICKE, Presiding Judge of the Municipal Court, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I should have replied sooner to your letter of July 23, 1914, but the question about which you write me is one of such importance as that I felt it my duty to consider it with the greatest care, not only personally, but in conjunction with counsel in this department, and this I have done. In your letter referred to you advise me as follows:

> "Several days ago I received a communication from State Auditor Blau in which the question was raised as to my right to compensation as presiding judge of the municipal court of this city from August 2, 1913, to January 1, 1914. Under section 45, of the municipal court act, the governor was given the appointing power to name four judges of this court. Governor Cox did not do this, but after the November election the judges elected and myself held a great many conferences and meetings in which the rules of the court were formulated. During this time it became necessary for me as presiding judge to arrange for court rooms and the necessary funds to construct them. This required considerable time and work. And as a result, the first of January, 1914, the court went into operation without any delay to the litigants.

"I feel that at the time you advised Mr. Blau that there was a question as to my being entitled to the compensation you were not advised of these facts. I also call your attention to Mr. Bettman's letter advising the city auditor and treasurer to pay me this money. He was fully advised in the premises at the time and carefully considered the subject. I feet that owing to these added duties I am justly entitled to this compensation."

On June 19th, 1914, I gave an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices to the effect that you were entitled to the increase of the salary provided for in the act creating the municipal court of Cincinnati, but that inasmuch as the governor did not appoint any of the additional judges and as the court was not organized until January 1, 1914, your increase of salary could not legally commence until January 1, 1914.

I understand that the common pleas court and the court of appeals in Dayton held that the presiding judge there was entitled to the increase of salary. I have not the opinions of these courts at hand, but my information is that my opinion was followed.

After the most careful consideration of the question you present, I have not changed my mind. I think it only fair to tell you that counsel in the office are about evenly divided in their judgment upon the law. Many of the most competent counsel in my department being of the opinion that you are entitled to compensation from August 2, 1913, but after hearing their views, as well as the views of counsel who entertain the opposite notion, I have not been able to change my mind. I think that much of the trouble presented for the solution of this question arises from the uncertainty as to whether the act of the general assembly is constitutional. We have not been guided one way or the other on that proposition, assuming for our purposes that the act is constitutional, but as you know we have trouble in reasoning to a satisfactory conclusion unless the act to be interpreted is one of manifest soundness.

After entertaining the ideas just expressed, I find that Judge Shauck, in speaking for the court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Yeatman, found in 89 O. S., 44, uses this language:

"In the light of the cases cited we see no valid objection to those provisions of these acts which relate to the organization and jurisdiction of the municipal courts in the cities named (Cincinnati and Dayton). If there are invalid provisions with respect to salaries, they do not require consideration here."

I was constrained to hold in your favor for the increased salary from January 1, 1914, quite largely upon the proposition that new and additional duties came to you not germane to the office of judge of the police court and that therefore even though the constitutional inhibition would otherwise apply, the change in character of the service to be rendered would entitle you to the increase of compensation, and this line of reasoning necessarily would preclude you from the increased compensation until the new duties incident to the organization of the court would arise. If we concede the constitutionality of the statutes and the right of the legislature to assume what might appear to be an appointing power a very close question arises. I do not feel that the public welfare would be subserved by the institution of a suit involving the validity of the act. The right of the other judges to sit on the bench is unquestioned. Your right as judge of the police court of Cincinnati is unquestioned. The public welfare, in my judgment, is best subserved, conclusively so, by the raising of no question concerning the validity of the municipal court in all of its branches. You did not draw the salary until advised by the city solicitor that you were entitled thereto. The city solicitor is a man of recognized ability, a lawyer of distinction, and a man of the strictest integrity and good judgment; he acted as the legal adviser for the city of Cincinnati; and you and he acted alike in good faith, although, of course, this alone would not be sufficient warrant for me to make the recommendation which is found hereinafter, but all of these considerations put together impel me to the conclusion that it is my duty to advise the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices to cancel any finding that it may have made against you if one be made, or to refrain from making any finding in case it was the purpose of the bureau so to do. I am accordingly sending a copy of this communication to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, and said copy will be a direction to make the entry accordingly.

Public justice is not subserved by the bringing of an action against the presiding judge of a court for the recovery back of a salary drawn in good faith under the advice of the city solicitor in connection with a statute of doubtful validity unless the attorney general is clearly of the opinion that the amount has been illegally drawn, and the statute is one of general application and similar questions likely to arise in other places. I deem it better to adhere to my own judgment as to the law and waive the disputed claim. The fact that you rendered, as disclosed by your letter, additional service prior to January 1, 1914, adds moral weight to your right to retain the money.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY MEMORIAL COMMISSION CANNOT LEGALLY EXPEND MORE THAN $250,000 FOR THE ERECTION OF A MEMORIAL BUILDING UNDER SECTION 3059, GENERAL CODE.

County memorial commission cannot legally expend more than $250,000 for the erection of a memorial building under section 3059, General Code, even though the fund raised by the bond issue for such purpose is increased above such amount by the interest earned upon the moneys thus created.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1914.

HON. CHARLES E. BALLARD, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 10th you submitted the following inquiry:

> "On November 17, 1914, you rendered an opinion to me upon the following question:
>
> "'What disposition shall be made of the depository interest upon the proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of constructing a county memorial building?'
> "Your opinion held that the interest followed the fund. This has raised another question, on which I request your opinion, to wit:
> "'Can the memorial commission of Clark county, Ohio, legally expend more than $250,000 for the erection of a memorial building, provided for by sections 3059 to 3069, inclusive, General Code?'"

On account of the great importance of the question involved I have given the most careful consideration to your inquiry, aided by your excellent brief of December 10th, a well considered brief of General Keifer of December 17th, and your careful response thereto of December 17th. Every lawyer in this office concurs with me in the conclusion that no more than $250,000 may legally be expended for the purpose of erecting the memorial building.

In coming to this conclusion we follow the line of reasoning contained in your briefs. We think that section 3069 admits of only one conclusion, and that is, that there is a limitation in the amount of money to be expended for the purpose of erecting the building, and that limitation is $250,000.

I still, of course, adhere to my opinion that the interest follows the fund, but when the section providing for the memorial building became law, interest accruing as we have it now in practice was not contemplated and bond issues were ordinarily in the same amount as the amount to be expended. Considerable significance is attached to section 3063, of the General Code, part of which is as follows:

> "If upon the completion of a memorial building an unexpended balance of the fund remains in the county treasury, it shall be placed and kept to the credit of such sinking fund."

Therein it is contemplated that the bond issue and whatever accretions might result may in total exceed the amount to be expended. It is quite impossible in practice to keep the receipts and expenditures exactly together. I do not see how anything could be plainer than this language:

> "and to expend for such purpose an amount not to exceed $250,000 in any one instance."

This occurs to me to be primary.

This conclusion also makes rational the conclusion that the interest follows the fund, otherwise, if the building should not be erected for a still greater number of years than that elapsed in the Springfield case, the limitation placed by the general assembly on the amount to be expended would be very uncertain.

I trust that both sides to this friendly controversy will be satisfied with the final conclusion. Whatever doubts and differences existed among counsel in respect to the former question you had before us, none whatever exists upon the disposition of the present question.

I am sending a copy of this opinion to General Keifer, and on behalf of this department I desire to thank him and you for the great assistance rendered by your respective briefs.

Sincerely yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BUREAU OF INSPECTION AND SUPERVISION OF PUBLIC OFFICES—EXTENT OF FINDINGS THAT MAY BE MADE AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

The Bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices is authorized to make findings against public officials only for public moneys which have been received or collected or illegally expended under color of office. Recovery against an officer is not authorized upon a finding for failing to collect or receive moneys which it was his duty to so collect or receive.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 16th, you request my opinion upon a question which, I believe, may be stated in short, as follows:

> "In cases where the mayor's docket shows that a fine and costs have been imposed in a case of criminal conviction, but where there is no evidence to show that such fine and costs have been collected, or where it is settled that the mayor has taken no steps whatever, as provided by law, for the collection of the same, is the bureau justified in making a finding against the official and subjecting him to liability for the amount of such fine and costs?"

Section 284, as it appears on page 507 of 103 Ohio Laws, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * On examination, inquiry shall be made into the methods, accuracy and legality of the accounts, records, files and reports of the office, whether the laws, ordinances and orders pertaining to the office have been observed, and whether the requirements of the bureau have been complied with."

Section 286 provides in part as follows:

> "* * * If the report sets forth that any public money has been illegally expended or that any public money collected has not been accounted for, or that any public property has been converted or misappropriated, within ninety days after the receipt of such certified copy of such report the attorney general or such prosecuting attorney or city solicitor shall institute, and the mayor of such village shall cause to be instituted, and each of said officers is hereby authorized and required so to do, civil actions in the proper court in the name of the political subdivision or taxing district to which such public money is due or such public property belongs for the recovery of the same and shall prosecute, or cause to be prosecuted the same to final determination. * * *
> "If a report sets forth any malfeasance, misfeasance or gross neglect of duty on the part of any officer or employe for which a criminal penalty is provided by law, a certified copy thereof shall be filed with the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed, and such prosecuting attorney shall, within ninety days after receipt thereof, institute criminal proceedings against such officer or employe. * * *

"The term 'public money' as used herein shall include all money received or collected under color of office whether in accordance with or under authority of any law, ordinance or order, or otherwise, and all public officials, their deputies and employes, shall be liable therefor."

These are the only provisions which I am able to find which, in any way, authorize a recovery against public officials by virtue of the examinations of the bureau. It is clear that these statutes authorize the recovery, only, of public money which has been illegally expended, or which has been collected and not accounted for. Indeed the term "public money" is furthermore defined as money received or collected under color of office. These provisions clearly cannot be employed to authorize a recovery against a public officer for moneys which he should have collected or received, but which he neglected to collect or receive. The fact that such public officer so failed in his duty may, of course, be set out in the report of the examiner; but under the provisions of the statute there is no authority for charging such public officer with a legal, civil disability for the amount of the moneys which he should have collected, but failed so to do.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PRIVATE BANK ACT—WHO MAY USE THE WORDS "BANK," "BANKER," "BANKING," "TRUST" OR "TRUST COMPANY."

Construction of the amendment of 1912 to section 3, article XIII of the constitution and of the act found in 103 O. L., 379, commonly known as the private bank act.

The restriction upon the use of the words "bank," "banker," "banking," "trust" or "trust company" does not apply to corporations organized under the laws of this state not now transacting or desiring to transact a banking business.

Said constitutional amendment and private bank act do not prohibit the use of said terms to any person, partnership or association not now transacting or desiring to transact a banking business in this state.

No corporation, person, partnership or association (except a national banking association) now transacting or hereafter desiring to transact a banking business in this state, may use any of said terms, unless it submits to inspection, examination or regulation by the superintendent of banks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you submitted the following request for my opinion:

"In the case of a certain corporation using the words 'bankers' and 'trust,' and being incorporated as an Ohio institution, I desire to make an inquiry as to whether it can use these words legally under the terms of the Kennedy private bank law, No. 46, without coming under the supervision of the banking department."

On December 6, 1913, I gave you an opinion to the effect that the use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking" or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state, is contrary to law unless the person, partnership, association or corporation using such word or words submit to inspection, examination or regulation by your department, as provided by law, and also pay annually to your department the fees provided by law.

I find that this opinion was too broad. It was sought to restrict the unwarranted use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking" or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state, by amendment to section 3, article XIII of the constitution adopted in 1912. The last paragraph of the amendment to said section provides as follows:

> "No corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank," "banker" or "banking" or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state."

It will be observed that this amendment was intended to reach persons, partnerships or associations not incorporated, and corporations not organized under the laws of this state, and, therefore, omits corporations organized under the laws of this state. It will also be observed that the amendment was not self-executing.

By the act passed April 17, 1913, 103 O. L., 379, entitled "An act to provide for the examination, regulation, supervision and dissolution of certain banking concerns," it was sought to carry this constitutional amendment into effect. The first section of this act is as follows:

> "That no corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or of the United States, or person, partnership or association, shall use the word "bank," "banker" or "banking" or "trust" or "trust company," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language, as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation, as provided in this act. The superintendent of banks shall execute all laws in relation to corporations organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using the word "bank," "banker" or "banking," or "trust" or "trust company," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state."

It will be observed that this section practically follows the language of the constitutional amendment except that the words "trust" and "trust company" are added. It is also provided that the superintendent of banks shall execute all laws in relation to corporations organized under the laws of this state or the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using any of said words as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state.

The first paragraph of section 2 of said act is as follows:

> "Every corporation not organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, or person, partnership or association using the word "bank,"

"banker" or "banking" or "trust" or "trust company" or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state, now transacting or hereafter desiring to transact a banking business in this state, shall, under oath file with the secretary of state a full, complete detailed statement of, * * *."

It will be noted that this section applies only to corporations not organized under the laws of this state and to persons, partnerships and associations using any of said words as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state. It further specifies that the business to be reached by the act is the "banking business in this state."

From the constitutional amendment and these two sections it seems clear, first, that the inhibition against the use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking" or "trust" or "trust company" does not apply to corporations organized under the laws of this state. Second, the use of any of said words as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state, by a corporation not organized under the laws of this state, or a person, partnership or association is prohibited, unless such corporation, person, partnership or association submit to inspection, examination and regulation as provided by the act. Third, the superintendent of banks is to execute all laws in relation to corporations, persons, partnerships and associations using any of said words as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state, without respect to whether such corporations are organized under the laws of this state or of the United States. Fourth, the act only purports to provide for inspection, examination and regulation of corporations not organized under the laws of this state and of persons, partnerships or associations using the word "bank," "banker" or "banking" or "trust" or "trust company" as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state, now transacting or hereafter desiring to transact a banking business in this state.

Before the passage of this act the laws of Ohio provided fully for the regulation of corporations, organized under the laws of this state, which transacted or desired to transact a banking business in the state; but up to the passage of the constitutional amendment there were no provisions of law regulating what is commonly known as the private banking business, that is, banking business transacted by persons, partnerships or associations, and there was no restriction as to the use of the terms specified above. The constitutional amendment and the first section of the act, I think, clearly prohibit the use of any of the terms to a corporation not organized under the laws of this state or of the United States or to any person, partnership or association, unless such person, partnership or association submit to inspection, examination and regulation by the superintendent of banks as provided in the act.

No provision is made for the inspection, examination or regulation of any such corporations, persons, partnerships or associations not transacting or desiring to transact a banking business; it is, therefore, extremely doubtful whether this inhibition applies to such corporations, persons, partnerships or associations, not transacting a banking business for the reasons that until the passage of the constitutional amendment there was no inhibition against the use of any such terms, and the constitutional amendment and the act simply provide that they shall not use any such term unless they submit to the inspection, examination and regulation "as may hereafter be provided for by the laws of this state." It may be assumed that such corporations, persons, partnerships or associations are ready and willing to comply with the laws which may be passed for their inspection, examination and regulation, and therefore until said laws have been passed and they have refused to submit to the same, there is nothing to prevent their using said terms.

This matter should be called to the attention of the legislature, for it was undoubtedly the intention of the people in adopting the constitutional amendment to absolutely prohibit the use of these terms except to corporations, persons, partnerships and associations actually engaged in banking and subject to the inspection, examination and regulation by the banking department of the state.

As to corporations, persons, partnerships and associations engaged in the banking business it is clear that all such corporations, persons, partnerships and associations are now subject to inspection, examination and regulation by the banking department, and none of them can use any of such terms without submitting to such inspection, examination and regulation. This, of course, does not apply to banking associations organized under the laws of the United States and known as national banks.

The inhibition does not apply to corporations organized under the laws of Ohio and not transacting a banking business, for by the terms of the constitutional amendment and the first section of the act, such corporations are excluded. There is nothing in the act which prevents the use of any of these terms by any Ohio corporations; if the corporations are engaged in the banking business then they come under the inspection, examination and regulation of the banking department by section 711, of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "The superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to banking companies, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit companies and trust companies and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. Nothing in this chapter contained shall apply to building and loan associations."

The language used in section 1 of the act, being section 744-1, of the General Code, to the effect that "the superintendent of banks shall execute all laws in relation to corporations organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships and associations using the word 'bank,' 'banker' or 'banking' or 'trust' or 'trust company,' or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business is conducted in this state" can only refer to the laws applicable to such corporations, (other than national banks) persons, partnerships and associations now transacting, or hereafter desiring to transact a banking business in this state.

My construction, therefore, of this matter is as follows:

First. The constitutional amendment and the private bank act restricting the use of the words "bank," "banker" or "banking" or "trust" or "trust company," do not apply to corporations organized under the laws of this state not now transacting or desiring to transact a banking business.

Second. Said constitutional amendment and private bank act do not prohibit the use of said terms to any person, partnership or association not now transacting or desiring to transact a banking business in this state.

Third. All corporations, persons, partnerships and associations (excepting national banking associations) now transacting or hereafter desiring to transact a banking business in this state are forbidden the use of any of said terms unless they submit to inspection, examination and regulation by your department.

I do not deem it necessary to define, in this opinion, what constitutes a banking business. I think this matter is determined by section 711, of the General Code, which plainly indicates that the power to receive, and the receiving of money on deposit, is the essential characteristic of banking in this state.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE BANK NOT SUBJECT TO SUPERVISION OF SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS OF OHIO.

The so-called "foreign exchange banks," meaning the agencies referred to in sections 290 et seq., General Code, are not subject to supervision by the superintendent of banks of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you make the following request for my opinion:

> "Please render to this office an opinion as to whether or not the foreign exchange banks, described in sections 290 and 295, of the General Code, are subject to the supervisions of this department under the provisions of House Bill No. 46, passed April 17, 1913, and approved May 2, 1913."

The sections to which you refer are as follows:

> "Sec. 290. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.
> "Sec. 295. Nothing herein shall apply to drafts, money orders or travelers' checks issued by trans-Atlantic steamship companies or their duly authorized agents or to national banks, express companies, state banks or trust companies."

By section 295 it is made plain that these provisions are not intended in any way to apply to state banks, and that these transportation agencies, though sometimes called foreign exchange banks are not classed as banks. The only power they have for the receiving of money on deposit is for the express purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, and while the power to receive money on deposit is the distinctive characteristic of banking business in Ohio, such deposits, as I view it, must be deposits made generally, at least deposits made for the purpose specified in this act cannot be classed as banking deposits. The act itself provides for the insurance of the deposits by a bond deposited with the auditor of state; it was passed May 1st, 1908, 99 O. L., pages 266 and 267. On the same day, May 1st, 1908, the legislature passed what is known as the Thomas act, 99 O. L., 269, a general act for the regulation and supervision of banking in this state. It is therefore plain that these foreign exchange banks are not regarded by the legislature as in any way under the control or jurisdiction of the state banking department.

I do not think that such agencies became subject to the supervision of the banking department by the provisions of what is known as the private bank act, 103 O. L., 379, to which you refer in your inquiry. This act only refers to corporations not organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, persons, partnerships or associations transacting a banking business in this state; and as I have said I do not regard the receiving of money for the express purpose of forwarding the same, or its equivalent, to another country as a banking business

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 51, OF THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT IN REFERENCE TO COMMON CARRIERS BY RAIL ENGAGED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMING UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Section 51, of the workmen's compensation act, 103 O. L., 72, excludes from the operation thereof all common carriers by rail engaged in interstate commerce, even as to their intrastate work, except when such carriers and their employers elect to insure in the state insurance fund, and such election is not forbidden by congressional legislation.

There should be no distinction made between electric interurban railroads and steam railroads under the aforesaid section, as the federal employers' liability act is applicable to the interurban as well as the steam railroad.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

THE HON. WALLACE D. YAPLE, Chairman, Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A little while ago you enclosed a letter of Mr. F. V. Whiting, general claim attorney of the New York Central Lines, which raised certain questions relative to the construction of section 51, of the workmen's compensation act. You ask for our opinion upon these questions:

In his letter, Mr. Whiting states that the only employes whom he regards as within the workmen's compensation act are those who are engaged in no commerce, and those who are exclusively and continuously engaged in intrastate commerce. Construing your letter and his communication, I think the questions raised may be stated as follows:

1. What employers and employes engaged in intra and also interstate and foreign commerce come within the purview of the workmen's compensation act of Ohio?

2. Should a distinction be made between electric interurban railroads and steam railroads under section 51, of the workmen's compensation act?

I have delayed in answering this question because a similar question was pending before Judge Sater, of the United States district court, in the case of Connole vs. Norfolk & Western Ry. Co., to the decision in which case I have recently called your attention. It was there held that section 51, of the workmen's compensation act excluded from the operation of this law, all common carriers by rail who engaged in interstate commerce even though certain phases of their work were intrastate. Thus it follows that they do not come within the purview of the act in question even as to their intrastate work, unless both employer and employe otherwise elect as to such intrastate work.

2. It is necessary to examine the federal employers' liability act, in order to ascertain whether it is applicable to electric interurban railroads, because if it is not, the state may by virtue of its powers of police regulation pass a compensation act which will affect such railroads and their employes. This is so fundamental that it is unnecessary to cite authorities in support of it, but nevertheless we should like to call your attention to Stott vs. Pacific Coast Co., 205 Fed., 169, wherein a federal district court held that the Washington workmen's compensation act extended to workmen employed in interstate commerce by water, in the absence of congressional legislation on the subject.

Mr. Thornton in both the first and second editions of his work on the federal employers' liability act distinctly states that the present federal law includes common carriers by electric interurban and street railroads engaged in interstate commerce. See pages 43 and 44. In support of the doctrine that street railroads are included, the learned author cites the case of Omaha, etc., Ry. vs. Interstate Commerce Commission, 191 Fed., 40, wherein the commerce court reversed the decree of the circuit court of the district of Nebraska, and dismissed an action to enjoin the enforcement of an order of the interstate commerce commission, reducing street railway rates. The decision of the commerce court was based upon the theory that the statute giving the interstate commerce commission jurisdiction over carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by railroad applied to street railroads. This decision was subsequently reversed in "Omaha, etc., Street Ry. Co. vs. Interstate Commerce Commission, 230 U. S., 324."

In that case the supreme court of the United States, through Mr. Justice Lamar, held that the statute in question did not apply to a street railroad. His reasoning may be briefly stated as follows:

The statute in terms applies to all carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property by "railroad," but in 1887 that word had no fixed or definite meaning, there being a conflict in the decisions of the courts as to whether street railroads were embraced within the provisions of the statute. All of those, however, hold that the meaning of the word is to be determined by construing the statute as a whole, and, if its scope is such as to show that both classes were within legislative contemplation, then the word railroad will include street railroad; while if the act was aimed at railroads proper, then street railroads are excluded from its operation. Ordinarily railroads are constructed upon the company's own property and tracks, extend from town to town, are usually connected with other railroads so that trade may be established, without breaking bulk across the continent. Such railroads are channels of interstate commerce. Street railroads, on the other hand are local, laid in streets as aids to street traffic, and for the use of a single community, even though that community may be divided by state lines, or under different municipal control. When these street railroads carry passengers across a state line, they are, of course, engaged in interstate commerce, but not the commerce which congress had in mind when passing the interstate commerce act in 1887. Every provision of that act is applicable to street railroads, they not being guilty of the mischief sought to be corrected, and the remedial provisions of the statute not being applicable to them, because of the nature and character of their business. It is evident that the case before the court was within those authorities holding that the word railroad cannot be construed to include street railroad. It was contended that since 1887, when the act was passed, a new type of interurban railroad had been developed, which possessed most of the characteristics of the steam railroad. The court distinctly stated that it was not dealing with such a case, but with a company chartered as a street railroad doing a street railroad business and hauling no freight.

This decision of the supreme court would indicate that Mr. Thornton's view may be questioned with reference to those street railroads, which are run entirely as street railroads, and not as electric interurban railways, but such decision does not foreclose inquiry as to the status of the latter class of carriers. The federal employers' liability act is entitled: "An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employes in certain cases." In section 1 it provides that: "Every common carrier by railroad, while engaging in commerce between any of the several states, or territories, or between any of the states and territories, or between the District of Columbia and any of the states or territories * * * * * shall be liable in damages to any person * * * * * *;"

Section 2 refers to: "Every common carrier by railroad in the territories, the District of Columbia, the Panama Canal Zone and other possessions of the United States."

Section 3 contains this language: "That any or all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad * * * * * *."

Section 4 states: "That in any action brought against any common carrier under and by virtue of any of the provisions of this act * * * * * *."

Section 7 makes the term common carrier inclusive of receivers, or other persons or corporations charged with the duty of the management and operation of the business of a common carrier.

Now at the time that this act was passed interurban railroads were doing a great amount of interstate business, and were just as dangerous to the employe, in many respects, as were the steam railroads. Some of them acted as common carriers for express companies, which engaged in interstate business, and almost every reason existing for the regulation of steam railroads was a reason for the regulation of interurban railroads.

Assume that this act was a modification of the common law, and that such statutes in derogation of common law are to be strictly construed, yet, as stated by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in this dogma only amounts to a recognition of the presumption against the intention to change existing law, and such laws should be construed sensibly and with a view to the object aimed at by the legislature. They must not be so construed as to defeat the obvious legislative intent.

There can be no question that it was the intention of congress to deprive the common carriers of certain defenses, and to enable an employe who might be injured, or the personal representative of one who might be killed, to recover in case of such injury or death, such damages as might be regarded by the jury as proper under the circumstances. Its purport was to increase the liability of the carrier for its negligence. In other words, its direct object was the promotion of public welfare by securing the safety of employes, and perhaps the traveling public, and was in this aspect remedial, which is substantially what Mr. Chief Justice Fuller said of the safety appliance act in the foregoing decision. Hence, it would seem to follow that congress intended to include within the federal employers' liability act, all those interstate carriers by railroad, and their employes, while both are engaged in interstate commerce, who would come within the reason of the statute, which is not to be governed by extremely technical rules of construction, its aim being to include rather than to exclude.

In discussing the employers' liability act, which was declared unconstitutional, Mr. Justice White said that it included trolley lines moving wholly within a state as to a large part of its business, and yet as to the remainder crossing a state line. This remark, however, was only obiter, and furthermore would not be in point here, for the reason that the statute he was considering applied to "every common carrier engaged in trade or commerce between the several states, etc." It will be observed that the words "by railroad" were omitted from that act.

The safety appliance act referred to in the case of Johnson vs. Southern Pacific, supra, contains much the same language, with reference to railroads, as does the liability act. As originally enacted, it provided that it should be unlawful "for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad to use on its line any locomotive engine in moving interstate traffic, not equipped with a power driving brake wheel and appliances for operating a train brake system * * *." The other sections of that act refer to "such common carrier."

On March 2, 1903, that act was amended in certain particulars, for the purpose of extending its provisions to common carriers by railroads in the territories and District of Columbia, and to all trains, locomotives, etc. The requirements thereof were made to apply to trains, locomotives, tenders, cars and similar vehicles "used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, * * * * excepting those trains, cars and locomotives exempted by the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1st, 1896, "or which are used upon street railways."

The very fact that the language "or which are used upon street railways" was inserted in the safety appliance act, clearly shows that it was the belief of congress that the words "common carriers by railroad" included street railroads, as otherwise it would not have expressly excluded them from the operation of the act by amendment. This exception was before the court in the recently decided case of United States vs. Railroad, 206 Fed., 988, it being held that the cars used on railways excepted by statute from the safety appliance act, viz., street railways, did not include cars of an interurban line, even though such cars were run on a street car line.

From this the only conclusion that one can derive is that the court in that decision took the view that the safety appliance act governed interurban railroads engaged in interstate commerce. This holding seems to me to be very pertinent to the matter in hand, as the employers' liability act, and the safety appliance act contain practically the same language in defining those to whom each statute is applicable.

With these provisions in mind, it is my opinion that the federal employers' liability act applies to interurban railroads while they and their employes are engaged in interstate commerce. Although this is still an open question and there are no authorities directly in point, I am inclined to the belief that the supreme court of the United States will, if such question comes before it adopt this view, as that court has given those acts providing for the safety of employes the broadest and most inclusive scope possible in order to attain the objects sought to be accomplished by laws of this character.

From this it must necessarily follow that the construction which was given the Ohio workmen's compensation act by Judge Sater will obtain, and should govern your board with reference to interurban railroads. In other words, they will stand on a parity with steam railroads and no distinction should be made between them under section 51, of the Ohio law.

I have not been unmindful in my consideration of these questions that the supreme court of this state has held in a number of cases, that interurban railroads are to be classified as street railroads, but it must be noted that these decisions will not govern when the supreme court of the United States comes to consider a federal statute such as the one in question. In fact in Railroad Co. vs. Lohe, 68 O. S., 101, which is one of the decisions wherein an interurban electric railroad is classified as a street railroad, the court held that such railroad companies are subject to the law of negligence governing steam cars where the question of the standing on the platform of a car by a passenger was involved. The opinion was to the effect that when it came to running such cars in the open country upon a track substantially the same as the track of a steam railroad, it would seem that the same rules of negligence and contributory negligence should prevail as are applicable to steam railroads. This indicates that the court in a proper case will not be bound by the charter powers or statutory classifications of such railroads when its liability for tort is involved. Such being the case, it should follow that when statutes are enacted laying down certain rules for the safety of employes and pertaining to the liability of carriers for tort, interurban railroads would be held by the Ohio courts to be included within the word "railroad." Of course, those interurban railroads not engaging in interstate commerce are to be treated as other employers of five or more workmen, and therefore are to be governed by the workmen's compensation act, section 51, not being applicable to them.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF A TOWNSHIP OR VILLAGE TO INCUR INDEBTEDNESS DURING AN EPIDEMIC FOR THE RELIEF OF DESTITUTE PERSONS OR FOR THE PREVENTION OF THE SPREAD OF DISEASE.

In time of epidemic, either a township or a village, as such, may incur indebtedness either for the relief of destitute persons, or for the prevention of the spread of the disease and bonds may be issued to discharge such indebtedness. Where such obligations are incurred by the township trustees, the bonds must be issued by them, and not by the village council, although in the first instance the village authorities would have had power to act in the premises, and although for years the poor of the village had been relieved by township officers through township levies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 28th, requesting my opinion upon the following facts:

> "The village of East Youngstown in the past has made no levy for the relief and support of the poor, these activities being exclusively discharged by the township trustees. At the present time, however, the trustees have on hand an amount of money sufficient only for the anticipated needs of the poor fund for the coming winter. Meanwhile the township trustees have incurred a large indebtedness arising out of the fact that there has been an epidemic of trachoma. It is now suggested that in view of the fact that the township has been bearing the expense of relieving the poor in the past, the village should assume this indebtedness. May this lawfully be done?"

The nature of the indebtedness described by you is not clearly apparent to me. That is, you do not state whether the epidemic gave rise to the necessity for poor relief, as such, or whether the indebtedness was incurred for the purpose of preventing the spread of the disease by measures which are ordinarily taken by the public health agencies for such purpose. Of course, the township trustees constitute both overseers of the poor and a local board of health; and as a local board of health the trustees have all the powers of municipal boards of health. (Sec. 3394, General Code.) Among these powers, I think, is the power to borrow money in time of epidemic for the purpose of preventing the spread of the disease. This power resides, by explicit provisions of law (sections 4450 and 4451, General Code) in the council of a municipal corporation, which must act upon application and certificate from the municipal board of health. In case of the township, however, the trustees possess the fiscal powers of the subdivision as well as those of a board of health, thus combining in themselves the functions distributed by the municipal code between the council and the municipal board of health; so that I think that in a proper case the township trustees would undoubtedly have the power to borrow money to prevent the spread of a contagious or infectious disease in time of an epidemic.

There is no provision of law by virtue of which direct authority can be claimed to borrow money for the relief or support of the poor, either on the part of a municipal corporation or on the part of township trustees. However, in a recent opinion, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, I held, as you will observe, that where proper proceedings have been taken to charge the township or municipality with the relief of indigent persons in need of medical attention or other proper support, the municipality or township becomes obliged to make the necessary expenditure, and this obligation does not depend for its force upon the presence of money in the treasury of the corporation or township; so that in the event that obligations have been so incurred, they constitute indebtedness of the corporation or township which may be funded by the issuance of bonds under section 5656, General Code (by the township), or under section 3916, General Code (by the municipality).

So that under ordinary circumstances money may be borrowed by a township or municipal corporation, not for the purpose of providing a fund in advance for the relief of the poor, but for the purpose of paying obligations arising from the duty to relieve the poor.

The circumstances mentioned by you, however, are extraordinary in their nature, and the question is raised as to whether or not paragraph 19, of section 3939, General Code, applies. This provision which applies to townships and municipal corporations alike by virtue of section 3295, General Code, authorizes the issuance of bonds "for the payment of obligations arising from emergencies resulting from epidemics or floods, or other forces of nature."

This language is very broad, and in my opinion, from the fact that "epidemics" are therein mentioned along with floods and other forces of nature, the conclusion is suggested that in time of epidemic, flood or other calamity, the township or municipality may incur "obligations" for the relief of the sufferers and the preservation of public order not sanctioned under ordinary circumstances. Therefore, to my mind, it is immaterial under this provision whether the obligations are incurred by way of relieving the suffering of destitude persons or by way of preventing the spread of a contagious disease, when the obligations are incurred in time of an epidemic. In either event the power to borrow money to pay such obligations exists, and inferentially the power to incur such obligations which might, in a technical sense, be regarded as moral obligations only, is implied.

I, therefore, conclude that in a case like that which you mention, obligations may properly be incurred (as they have been incurred), and for their payment bonds may be issued under section 3939, General Code.

The conclusion is thus reached that, upon perhaps more than one ground, either the municipal corporation or the township in a proper case would have power to borrow money to pay the indebtedness which has been incurred.

There remains to be disposed of the question as to whether the municipal corporation, as such, may issue bonds under the facts stated by you.

Without passing upon the question as to whether it was proper for the village to relieve itself in the past of the duty of caring for its poor, or for the township to take upon itself the function of extending temporary relief to the poor of the village; and assuming the legality of the levies that have heretofore been made for poor relief, I am of the opinion that if the obligations which have been incurred in time of an epidemic, whether for the relief of destitute persons or to prevent the spread of the disease, were incurred by the township trustee, they constitute, for the purposes of section 3939, General Code, obligations of the township. I do not believe that section 3939 is broad enough to permit a municipal corporation to issue bonds in payment of obligations incurred by a township, even though the municipality was benefited thereby, and even though the township has been caring for the poor of the municipality. In short, the obligations which may be discharged by the issuance of bonds under section 3939 must be those incurred by the authorities of the municipality or township issuing the bonds. The case is even clearer, of course, if it be assumed that the bonds are to be issued under favor of the other provisions of law above referred to. In short, there is no authority of law whatever for the assumption by one subdivision of the indebtedness of another under such circumstances as these.

Of course, if the bonds should be issued by the township trustee for the purpose stated, all levies to pay them would be extended upon the duplicate of the village as well as upon that of the rest of the township.

In conclusion, I am of the opinion that in the case stated by you the power to borrow money exists, but it must be exercised by the township trustees and not by the village council.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

HOW FUNDS MAY BE PAID OUT OF THE COUNTY TREASURY—RIGHT OF THE JUDGE OF THE COMMON PLEAS COURT TO ORDER FURNISHINGS FOR ROOM IN COURT HOUSE.

Funds in a county treasury may only be paid out on allowance by the county commissioners or some other authority authorized by law so to do. A judge of the common pleas court has no authority to order furnishings for a room in the court house, and if he does so, the auditor is not authorized to issue a warrant on the county treasury for the amount thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 28, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "Can a judge of the court of common pleas legally order furnishings for the room that he uses as an office in the court when the county commissioners have refused to furnish the articles desired, and then place an order on the journal of the court directing that the clerk certify the cost of same to the county auditor for payment; and can the county auditor issue his warrant upon the treasury upon the allowance of said judge without the approval of the county commissioners?"

Section 2570, General Code, reads:

> "Except moneys due the state which shall be paid out upon the warrant of the auditor of state, the county auditor shall issue warrants on the county treasurer for all moneys payable from such treasury, upon presentation of the proper order or voucher therefor, and keep a record of all such warrants showing the number, date of issue, amount for which drawn, in whose favor, for what purpose and on what fund. He shall not issue a warrant for the payment of any claim against the county, unless allowed by the county commissioners, except where the amount due is fixed by law or is allowed by an officer or tribunal authorized by law so to do."

The plain reading of this section points to an answer in the negative, and if no further consideration is made, such answer would be an end to the controversy indicated in the question. However, this matter involves no legal question except the power of the court to furnish its rooms, private or public.

When a judge of a court enters upon a controversy of this character, he does so in a desire to enforce his own views in his own way, and is exercising what by most of such judges would be termed the "inherent power" of the court. What this is may not be susceptible of a clear or well defined statement, as it generally has been considered by the court, as including what was desired where there was no legal way of doing the same pointed out.

In addition to the sections of the General Code above copied, section 2460, G. C., is entitled to consideration. It reads:

> "No claims against the county shall be paid otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, upon the warrant of the county auditor, except in those cases in which the amount due is fixed by law, or is authorized to be fixed by some other person or tribunal, in which case it shall be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor, upon the proper certificate of the person or tribunal allowing the claim. No public money shall be disbursed by the county commissioners, or any of them, but shall be disbursed by the county treasurer upon the warrant of the county auditor, specifying the name of the party entitled thereto, on what account, and upon whose allowance, if not fixed by law."

The language of this section is not susceptible of either explanation or elucidation. It is for the control of funds in the county treasury and to protect them from inroads by persons not authorized by law to make or authorize drafts upon them. It has as much binding effect upon common pleas judges as upon any other person or officer and until the legislature authorizes a judge or a court to provide an office for himself, he can confer no right upon a county auditor to issue a warrant for what he wants or conceives that he wants; he must act through the county commissioners as the legally constituted authority to allow claims against the county, or secure legislative authority to make the purchase and fix the amounts of the same. Until this is done, the county auditor acting as suggested in your question, does so at his peril.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

EMPLOYES OF LIQUIDATING DEPARTMENT OF STATE BANKING DEPARTMENT ARE SUBJECT TO THE PROVISIONS OF THE CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

The employes of the liquidating department of the state banking department are in the employ of the state and are subject to the provisions of the civil service act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 7, 1914, you inquire:

> "The state civil service commission desires your opinion as to whether or not those persons who were employed in the state banking department, in what is commonly called the 'liquidating department,' are in or out of the classified service."

Subdivision 1 of section 486-1, General Code, defines the term "civil service" as follows:

> "The term 'civil service' includes all officers and positions of trust or employment, including mechanics, artisans and laborers in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

The employes in question occupy positions of trust or employment and are appointed by an officer of the state.

Section 742, General Code, provides:

> "Whenever in this act it is provided that the superintendent of banks may take possession of the property and business of any corporation, company, commercial bank, savings bank, safe deposit company, trust company, or any combination of two or more of such classes of business or society for savings, or banking association, doing business under the provisions of the banking laws of this state to liquidate its affairs, the superintendent of banks shall take possession of and administer the assets of such company or association as herein provided."

Section 742-2, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws, 530, provides in part:

> "Upon taking possession of the property and business of such corporation, company, society or association, the superintendent of banks is authorized to collect money due to such corporation, company, society or association, and do such other acts as are necessary to preserve its assets and business, and shall proceed to liquidate the affairs thereof, as hereinafter provided. * * * The superintendent of banks may under his hand and official seal appoint one or more special deputy superintendents of banks as agent or agents, to assist him in the duty of liquidation and distribution, a certificate of appointment to be filed in the office of superintendent of banks and a certified copy in the office of the clerk of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located. * * *."

By virtue of these provisions the superintendent of banks is placed in charge of the liquidation of banks and he may appoint special deputy superintendents of banks to assist him in such liquidation.

Section 742-4, General Code, provides:

"The expenses incurred by the superintendent of banks in the liquidation of any bank in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall include the expenses of deputy or assistants, clerks and examiners employed in such liquidation, together with reasonable attorney fees for counsel employed by said superintendent of banks in the course of such liquidation. Such compensation of counsel, of deputies or assistants, clerks and examiners in the liquidation of any corporation, company, society or association, and all expenses of supervision and liquidation shall be fixed by the superintendent of banks, subject to the approval of the common pleas court of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located, on notice to such corporation, company, society or association. The expense of such liquidation shall be paid out of the property of such corporation, company, society or association in the hands of said superintendent of banks, and such expenses shall be a valid charge against the property in the hands of said superintendent of banks and shall be paid first, in the order of priority."

By virtue of this section the compensation of these employes is paid from the assets of the banks being liquidated. This manner of payment does not alter the status of these employes.

The state places the superintendent of banks in charge of a bank during liquidation. The liquidation is being carried on by the state through its officers and their appointees.

These persons are employed by the state to carry out one of the purposes of the banking act. The fact that their compensation is paid from the assets of the bank does not change their status as employes of the state.

By virtue of section 736, General Code, as amended in 103 Ohio Laws 180, an assessment is made against the persons and companies subject to the banking act in order to pay the expenses of the banking department. This does not make the persons employed in the banking department, employes of these companies. They are in the service of the state.

Said section 736, General Code, provides in part:

"That for the purpose of maintaining the department of the superintendent of banks and the payment of expenses incident thereto, and especially the expenses of inspection and examination, the following fees shall be paid to the superintendent of banks of Ohio."

It is my conclusion therefore, that the persons employed in the liquidating department of the state banking department are subject to the provisions of the civil service act.

I take it from your inquiry that you do not desire that I pass upon the particular positions which are in the classified or unclassified service.

If you desire an opinion upon that question, it will be prepared upon request.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CONSTRUCTION OF ACT OF THE LEGISLATURE CREATING MUNICIPAL COURT OF CINCINNATI—LIMITATION OF THE POWER AND JURISDICTION OF MAGISTRATES OUTSIDE OF CINCINNATI IN SIMILAR CASES.

The act of the legislature in creating a municipal court in Cincinnati limits the power of magistrates outside of Cincinnati, and prevents them from issuing executions on judgments by them rendered to constables within said city, whether such judgments were rendered before or after the taking effect of said municipal court act.

Said act further limits the power and jurisdiction of magistrates outside of said city in criminal cases to offenses alleged to have been committed in the township, city or village, where the action is brought.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

HON. THORNTON R. SNYDER, Member House of Representatives, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letters of July 28th and November 19th, in the latter of which you inquire:

> "1. Has a magistrate outside of Cincinnati, jurisdiction over judgments recovered prior to the time our municipal court act went into effect?"
> "2. Have magistrates concurrent jurisdiction in Cincinnati township with the municipal court of the city of Cincinnati?
> "3. Have magistrates still jurisdiction as formerly in the county in criminal cases?"

I can hardly think you intend to ask whether magistrates have jurisdiction to levy execution upon old judgments, when it is known that magistrates issue and constables make levy of executions, and presume that what you desire to inquire is whether magistrates outside of Cincinnati have power to issue executions to constables within the city of Cincinnati, since the passage of the municipal court law, to which you refer.

By reference to section 10714, General Code, you will observe that authority is granted magistrates to issue executions to a constable of the county. Section 41, of the Cincinnati municipal court act reads:

> "No justice of the peace in any township in Hamilton county, other than in Cincinnati township, nor mayor of any village or city in any proceeding, whether civil or criminal, in which any warrant, order of arrest, summons, order of attachment or garnishment or other process except subpoena for witnesses shall have been served upon a citizen or resident of Cincinnati or a corporation having its principal office in Cincinnati, shall have jurisdiction unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township, village or city in which said proceedings may have been instituted or in a criminal matter unless the offense charged in any warrant or order of arrest shall be alleged to have been committed within said township, village or city."

This being a later and a special act, while section 10417 is general, it must be construed as controlling, and as limiting the power of magistrates outside of the city of Cincinnati, to issue executions to constables except constables outside of the city of Cincinnati and Cincinnati township. This same section controls as to criminal jurisdiction, and, as I construe it, further limits the jurisdiction of magistrates in Hamilton county to criminal offenses committed in their own townships.

I believe this fully answers your question, and hope I have so stated it as it will be fully understood.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

A VACANCY IN THE OFFICE OF PROBATE JUDGE CAN ONLY BE FILLED BY APPOINTMENT UNTIL THE NEXT GENERAL ELECTION, WHEN A SUCCESSOR MUST BE QUALIFIED FOR THE UNEXPIRED TERM.

Inasmuch as the probate judge is elected quadrenially, a vacancy can be filled by appointment only until the next general election, and then the election is for the "unexpired term" of the judge causing the vacancy, and not for the full term of four years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 22, 1914.

HON. CHARLES A. ESTILL, Probate Judge of Holmes County, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor of the 15th wherein you advise as follows:

> "In 1912 Judge Tannehill was elected probate judge of Holmes county, and in July, 1913, he died, and I was appointed to the vacancy by Governor Cox. On November 3d last I was elected as probate judge of this county. Now, does my election hold for four years or only for the unexpired term of Judge Tannehill?"

In reply thereto, I beg to advise that section 1580, of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "Quadrennially, one probate judge shall be elected in each county, who shall hold his office for a term of four years, commencing on the ninth day of February next following his election."

Article IV, section 7, of the Constitution of Ohio, provides:

> "There shall be established in each county a probate court * * holden by one judge who shall hold his office for the term of four years. * *"

Article IV, section 13, of the constitution provides:

> "In case the office of any judge shall become vacant, before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified; and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy * *."

This section of the Constitution of Ohio is so clear and unequivocal that an attempt to make it more lucid could not be successful.

In 1912 Judge Tannehill was elected for a term of four years, which term would not expire until February, 1917; in July following his election he died, and you were appointed by Governor Cox to fill the vacancy until the next general election, which was held in November, 1914, and at that election you were elected as his successor, and in the words of the constitution "such successor shall be elected for the UNEXPIRED term." This means that on November 3d, 1914, you were elected probate judge of Holmes county for the unexpired term of Judge Tannehill, which office you will hold until the ninth day of February, 1917.

I am advised by the secretary of state that the certificate of election for your office as forwarded to him by the deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, specifically states that your election was for the "unexpired term" of Judge Tannehill, so there can be no anticipated irregularity in that connection, and I am further advised by the secretary's office that all certificates of election in such instances are, without exception, made according to the mandates of the constitution for the "unexpired term."

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NEWSPAPERS NOT REQUIRED TO MAKE PROOF OF PUBLICATION IN TRANSCRIPT FOR THE ISSUANCE AND SALE OF BONDS.

In transcripts of the issuance and sale of bonds it is not necessary that the newspapers making the various publications in connection therewith prove same by affidavit and the taxing district is not liable for the charge for such affidavits.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1914.

HON. F. W. GREEN, Solicitor of the Village of Newburgh Heights, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On October 6th you asked whether charge for affidavits made by the publishers of newspapers in connection with advertisements necessary to be attached to transcript of proceedings in issuance and sale of bonds are illegal. By this I apprehend you mean to inquire whether the taxing district issuing the bonds is liable to the newspaper for the charge of such affidavit.

"H. B. No. 121. (Sec. 2295-3.)

"Sec. 1. That it shall be the duty of the clerk, or other officer having charge of the minutes of the council of any municipal corporation, board of county commissioners, board of education, township trustees, or other district or political subdivisions of this state, that now has or may hereafter have, the power to issue bonds, to furnish to the successful bidder for said bonds, a true transcript certified by him of all ordinances, resolutions, notices and other proceedings had with reference to the issuance of said bonds, including a statement of the character of the meetings at which said proceedings were had, the number of members present, and such other information from the records as may be necessary to determine the regularity and validity of the issuance of said bonds; that it shall be the duty of the auditor or other officer, having charge of the accounts of said corporation or political subdivision, to attach thereto a true and correct statement certified by him of the indebtedness, and of the amount of the tax duplicate thereof, and such other information as will show whether or not said bond issue is within any debt or tax limitation imposed by law.

"Passed April 8th, 1913.
"Approved April 23d, 1913."

The foregoing statute provides the procedure for the furnishing of a transcript, and it will be seen that it is not necessary for a newspaper to furnish affidavit with the publication. Consequently, since the going into effect of the above act, newspapers cannot collect for furnishing affidavits of proof of publication of the different publications in issuance and sale of bonds.

Before the above enactment there was no statute on the subject, but on May 2, 1912, in an opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, I held as follows:

> "The statutes concerning issuance and sale of bonds for municipal and city improvements and the duties of the various city officers in relation thereto do not disclose that the bond buyer as a matter of right to receive without payment therefor a copy of such transcript, or that any officer or department of the city government is in duty bound to furnish the same and receive compensation therefor from the city treasurer in addition to his regular salary. The successful bidder at a bond sale takes the bonds at his own risk, and if he deem it necessary to have a transcript of the proceedings in order to determine their validity, the expense thereof must be borne by himself. I conclude therefore in answer to your first question that it is not a legal expense chargeable against the city to furnish a transcript to the purchaser of municipal bonds."

While the matter quoted above was in answer to a question with reference to the issue of municipal bonds, I am of the opinion that the same reasoning applies to charge for affidavits made by the publishers of newspapers for bonds issued by any taxing district, and if there was no obligation to furnish a transcript, of course, there would be no liability on the taxing district to pay for affidavits in proof of publication.

I trust the foregoing furnishes you the information you desire.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION UNDER SECTION 7730, GENERAL CODE, TO SUSPEND SCHOOL WHEN THE AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE THEREOF IS LESS THAN TWELVE—POWERS OF SUCH BOARD UNDER SECTION 7730, GENERAL CODE, AS AMENDED.

Under section 7730, General Code, prior to its amendment, 104 O. L., 139, it was optional with the board of education of a township school district to suspend the schools when the average daily attendance thereof was less or became less than twelve. If a township board of education entered into a contract with a teacher for teaching a subdistrict under its jurisdiction, and such subdistrict was abolished in accordance with section 7730, General Code, such act operated as a termination of the contract, provided such act occurred before the termination of the contract because of the lapse of time such contract was to run. Likewise such contract would be terminated if the school should be suspended in accordance with the mandatory provisions of section 7730, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 139. An expenditure of money upon such contract, after being so terminated under the provisions contained in said section as the same existed both prior to its amendment and since its amendment above referred to would be illegal.

By virtue of section 7684, General Code, a board of education may assign pupils to attend a school which had been previously suspended under section 7730, supra, because of the attendance being less than twelve for the preceding year and such school may again be continued as such school, provided that this course in the opinion of the board, will best promote the interests of education in the district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1914.

HON. CHAS. F. CLOSE, Prosecuting Attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 25, 1914, you submitted a communication to this department, which reads as follows:

> "The enclosed questions were submitted to me by Mr. Charles H. Lewis, of Harpster, Ohio, president of the Wyandot County School Board, and inasmuch as the questions are of such nature as to indicate that they will arise in practically every county in the state, I have deemed it the part of wisdom to refer them to you for answer, so that there may be a decision in reference to them that will be binding in every county and bear the authority of the highest officer in the state."

The questions referred to therein concern section 7730, General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., 139, which in brief provides for the suspension of rural or village school districts when the average daily attendance of any such school for the preceding year has been below twelve. Said questions may be stated as follows:

> "First—Is a township board of education liable on a contract with a teacher made prior to the amendment of said section?
> "Second—Is a township board of education liable on a contract with a teacher made since the amendment of said section?"

Section 7730, of the General Code, prior to its amendment, provided as follows:

> "The board of education of any township school district may suspend the schools in any or all subdistricts in the township district. Upon such suspension the board must provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such subdistrict or subdistricts to a public school in the township district or to a public school in another district, the cost thereof to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Or, the board may abolish all the subdistricts providing conveyance is furnished to one or more central schools, the expense thereof to be paid out of the funds of the district. No subdistrict school where the average daily attendance is twelve or more, shall be so suspended or abolished, after a vote has been taken under the provisions of law therefor, when at such election a majority of the votes cast thereon were against the proposition of centralization, or when a petition has been filed thereunder and has not yet been voted upon at an election."

It is to be noted that the first part of said original section provides that the township board of education may suspend the schools in any or all subdistricts. Such suspension was therein made optional with such board. However, if suspended, then it was mandatory upon the board to provide for the conveyance of the pupils residing in such subdistrict or subdistricts, to a public school in the township district or to a public school in another district, the cost to be paid out of the funds of the township school district. Then follows a provision that the board may abolish all the subdistricts provided conveyance is furnished, etc. This, however, is qualified to the effect that no subdistrict school, where the average daily attendance is twelve or more, shall be so suspended or abolished, after a vote has been taken under the provisions of law therefor, when such election results in a majority against centralization. It was optional, therefore, with the board of education of township districts, to abolish all subdistricts, providing conveyance was furnished, etc., with the exception that if the average daily attendance exceeded twelve, then such board of education was without authority to so abolish such schools, if the election for the abolishment thereof and centralization resulted in favor of not abolishing and centralizing the subdistrict schools. Section 7730, as amended, 104 O. L., 139, now provides as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and in such rural school districts shall provide for the conveyance of the pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. No school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days' notice has been given by the school board of such district. Such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district."

It is to be noted that as said section now reads, it is mandatory upon the part of the board of education of any rural or village school district, to suspend any school where the attendance of such school for the preceding year has been below twelve. Prior to its last amendment, section 7730, supra, although awkwardly worded, made it optional on the part of the board of education as to whether or not a school wherein the average daily attendance was less than twelve, should be suspended.

I will now take up your first question.

In the case of Railroad Co. vs. Defiance, 52 O. S., 262, at page 314 thereof, the court says:

> "When the ordinance (in question) was passed, those statutory provisions were enforced which invest the legislative bodies of municipal corporations with the entire control of the streets and confer upon them power to make improvements thereon from time to time in the public interest, by grading, etc.; and persons and corporations contracting with the municipal authorities must be presumed to contract with reference to the obligations and duties arising under those laws, and subjected to the consequences resulting from their operation and enforcement. Impliedly they enter into and become a part of such contracts as much so as if embodied therein, and such is the presumed intention of the parties."

In the case of Smith vs. Parsons, 1 Ohio Report, at page 239 of the opinion, the court says:

> "As was observed in the argument, contracts are either expressed or implied, or part expressed and part implied. A provision created by law for the government or construction of all contracts made under it, need not be recited or expressly referred to in a contract; it will be considered as implied, and have the same force and effect as if it were set out."

Section 7705, of the General Code, prior to its last amendment, at page 144, of the 104th Volume of Ohio Laws, authorized the board of education of each village and township school district, to employ the teachers of the public schools of such district, as follows:

> "The board of education of each village, township and special school district may appoint a suitable person to act as superintendent, and to employ the teachers of the public schools of the district, for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. But nothing herein shall prevent two or more districts uniting and appointing the same person as superintendent."

Said section was in effect prior to the last amendment of said section 7730, supra, and I assume that the contract referred to in your first question was entered into under sections 7705 and 7730, prior to their last amendment, as above quoted.

When the contract so mentioned was entered into, the party with whom such contract was made, under section 7705, was entered into while said original section 7730, supra, was in full effect. It has been heretofore pointed out that it was optional with the board of education of such township district to suspend the schools under said original section 7730, when the average daily attendance thereof was less than twelve.

The contract with the teacher referred to in your first question was made at a time when the provision contained in said section 7730 was in effect, and it would follow that such provision impliedly became a part of the contract. This follows because the provision of said section 7730, prior to its amendment, applied to section 7705, prior to its amendment. The teacher so employed entered into the contract under the statutory limitation in section 7730, prior to its amendment, that the school by which such teacher was so employed to teach might be suspended by the board of education, provided the average daily attendance for the preceding year was less than twelve. Therefore, in answer to your first question, it is my opinion that if a township board of education entered into a contract with a teacher for teaching a subdistrict under its jurisdiction and said subdistrict was abolished by such board under and in accordance with the provisions contained in section 7730, then this act operated as a termination of the contract, provided such act occurred before the termination of such contract.

In answer to your second question, all of the reasoning employed in answering the first question, also applies to your second. Section 7705, of the General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., page 144, provides as follows:

> "The board of education of each village and rural school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of the district, for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. The local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located except by a majority vote. In all high schools and consolidated schools one of the teachers shall be designated by the board as principal and shall be the administrative head of such school."

It is to be noted that said section vests the employment of teachers in public schools of their respective districts, in the board of education of each village or rural district. If the board of education of such district should enter into a contract with a teacher for a certain term, as provided by section 7705, General Code, as amended, supra, and before the termination of such contract, if the school for the teaching of which such teacher was employed, should be suspended in accordance with the mandatory provision of section 7730, as amended, supra, because the average daily attendance of such school from the preceding year had been below twelve, then such suspension would operate as a termination of such contract. This follows upon the same reasoning as employed in reaching the conclusion to your first question, i. e., because such contract of employment is made subject to the provision contained in said section 7730, supra, as amended.

The communication which you enclose with your inquiry also contains two further questions with reference to the contracts inquired about in your first two questions, which may be stated as follows:

> "Would the payment of such contract be an illegal expenditure of money and would the fact that the teacher in question had knowledge of the suspension of such school effect the contract?"

In answer to this question, it is apparent from my conclusion in answer to your first question, that such expenditure of money would clearly be illegal, and of course if the school had already been suspended and the teacher had knowledge of that fact, certainly there could be no legal contract for teaching a school which had already been suspended, and the knowledge of that fact would clearly render the contract of no effect.

The question as further asked in the communication attached to your letter is, as to whether or not a suspended district may be revived by the addition of resident pupils to the district so as to make certain an average attendance of more than twelve. To answer this question it is necessary to again refer to section 7730, as amended, supra, and to note the language employed therein, which is that "when the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended." Such language seems to make it mandatory that when the average daily attendance for any preceding year has been below twelve, then such fact shall operate as a suspension of such school, after the notice is given as required in the last provision of said section.

This department in an opinion rendered to Hon. B. F. Enos, prosecuting attorney of Guernsey county, Cambridge, Ohio, on August 10, 1914, in construing said section 7730, as amended, held as follows:

> "Section 7730, of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., at page 139 thereof, contains a provision to the effect that when the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. This provision, by virtue of the use of the word 'shall' is mandatory, and it is apparent that it was the intent of the legislature that schools should be suspended when the average daily attendance thereof for the preceding year falls below twelve, and that thereupon the pupils should be transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. The provision that 'no school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days' notice has been given by the school board of such district,' is merely a part of the procedure to accomplish such suspension. Also the provision that 'such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district,' is part of the procedure to accomplish the suspension provided for in said section 7730, supra."
> "When a school is suspended because its average daily attendance falls below twelve for the preceding year, such suspension shall not go into effect or take place until, after sixty days' notice has been given thereof, in the manner provided in said section, to wit, by posting notice in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district. As before stated, it is mandatory upon the board of education, in such situation, to suspend such schools, and it is also mandatory to give the notice required by said section, in the manner therein provided. I know of no reason why this notice should be given, such as the notice required in said section, except that the legislature has seen fit to carry this proviso into the statute as a part of the proceeding in accomplishing the suspension, when the same is required by virtue of said section 7730, of the General Code, above quoted."

The statute provides for but one suspension in such case, such suspension to take place at any time when the average daily attendance of any such school for the preceding year has been below 12. There is no statutory provision for such district resuming, in the event that such number of pupils again move into the district to make the average daily attendance more than twelve. However, section 7684, General Code, may have some application. Said section was not repealed by the recently enacted school code, and provides as follows:

> "Boards of education may make such an assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion best will promote the interests of education in their districts."

Under this section it would seem to be within the power of the board of education to assign pupils to such schools, where the average daily attendance for the preceding year fell below twelve, by increasing the territorial limits of the districts of such schools, to include the pupils so assigned to such schools. In other words, a board of education might assign pupils to attend a school which had been suspended under section 7730, supra, because of the attendance being less than twelve for the preceding year, and such school again be continued as such school, provided that this course, in the opinion of the board, will best promote the interests of education in the district, as provided by section 7684, supra.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that a suspended school district may be continued by the assignment of pupils to such district, provided the board deems this course best for the advancement of education as provided by section 7684, General Code, supra.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF FINES ASSESSED AND COLLECTED BY THE JUDGE OF THE PROBATE COURT OR COMMON PLEAS COURT EXERCISING THE JURISDICTION OF THE JUVENILE COURT.

Fines assessed and collected by a judge of the probate court or common pleas court, exercising the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, must be paid to the county law library association, in accordance with the terms of section 3056, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 21st, you requested my opinion on the following questions:

> "Can fines assessed and collected in a juvenile court be paid to the law library association, under the provisions of section 3056, General Code?"

Section 3056, of the General Code, is as follows:

> "* * * * * In all counties the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas court and probate court for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, shall be retained and paid quarterly by the clerk of such courts as the trustees of such library association, but the sum so paid from the fines and penalties assessed and collected by the common pleas and probate courts shall not exceed five hundred per annum. The moneys so paid shall be expended in the purchase of law books and the maintenance of such association."

Section 1639, General Code, as amended 104 O. L., 176, provides for the powers and jurisdiction of so-called juvenile courts as follows:

> "Courts of common pleas, probate courts and insolvency courts and superior courts, where established, shall have and exercise, concurrently, the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter. The judges of such courts in each county, at such times as they determine, shall designate one of their number to transact the business arising under such jurisdiction. When the term of the judge so designated expires, or his office terminates, another designation shall be made in like manner.

"The words, juvenile court, when used in the statutes of Ohio shall be understood as meaning the court in which the judge so designated may be sitting while exercising such jurisdiction, and the words "judge of the juvenile court" or "juvenile judge" as meaning such judge while exercising such jurisdiction.

"The foregoing provisions shall not apply to Hamilton county, in which county the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter shall be exercised by the court of common pleas, and in 1914 and every sixth year thereafter, one of the common pleas judges to be elected at said times shall be elected as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relation. To him shall be assigned all juvenile court work arising under this chapter, and all divorce and alimony cases, and whenever said judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations, shall be sick, absent, or unable to perform his duties, the presiding judge of the common pleas court shall assign another common pleas judge to perform his duties during his illness, absence or indisposition."

In an opinion rendered to the Hon. Thomas L. Pogue, prosecuting attorney of Cincinnati, Ohio, under date of March 18th, 1914, I used the following language:

"As I see it, the primary question here presented is whether the juvenile court so called, is in a broad and complete sense a court separate and distinct from the several courts mentioned in section 1639, General Code, the judges of which designate the judge of the juvenile court; for if the juvenile court in legal contemplation is a separate and distinct court, I am unable to see any statutory authority for the appointment made. There are no statutory provisions authorizing the appointment of court constables as such, in juvenile courts so called, and section 1692 authorizes the courts therein named to appoint constables for their own respective courts only."

In the case of Mendleson vs. Miller, 11 N. P. n. s. 586, 588, the court (Phillip, J.) says:

"We are dealing with a court. And what is a court? Without attempting to be severely accurate, I will say that a court is a governmental body or tribunal, clothed with a judicial function. To constitute a court, there must be a judge or judges, and he or they must have a defined and delegated jurisdiction. But before we can have judges and jurisdiction, these must be provided for by the constitution or by-laws.

"For the legislature to enact that there shall be a court, for it to fix the number of judges, to define the jurisdiction, and to prescribe the procedure, etc., is to establish a court."

In the case of ex parte Bank 1 O. S., 432, 434, the court, speaking with reference to sections 1 and 10 of article IV, of the state constitution, as they then stood, says:

"Thus all the judicial power of the state is vested in the courts designated in the constitution, and in such courts as may be organized under the first section. But it is perfectly clear that, upon the creation of any additional court by the legislature, the judicial officer must be elected, as such, by the electors of the district for which such court is created; and it is not within the competency of the legislature to clothe with judicial power any officer or person, not elected as a judge."

Measured by the principles above stated, it is apparent that the juvenile court, so called, of Hamilton county, is not in any complete or proper sense, a separate and distinct court, either as to organization or jurisdiction, but is only a form for the transaction of certain distributed business, concurrent jurisdiction of which is vested in the courts first specifically named in section 1639. In recognition of this status of the juvenile court in the case of Travis vs. State, 12 C. C. (n. s.) 374, it is said:

"The judges of courts having like original jurisdiction, may arrange for a proper distribution of the business coming before said courts. * * * * The act in question (juvenile court act) authorizes the judges of the several courts of equal jurisdiction, to designate one who shall hear and dispose of the business in which each is given equal original authority. Jurisdiction consists of the power to hear and determine. The source of this power resides in the legislature. In this act it is conferred upon the several courts named by that authority, and the mere selection by the several judges of one to dispose of the business, is not conferring jurisdiction. For, without such designation, either of the courts named could entertain jurisdiction of the matter specified in the act; whilst if the authority was conferred upon the judges, neither of said courts should exercise the power to hear and determine unless authorized by the judges beforehand. The court first acquiring jurisdiction would hold it until the action was finally disposed of.

"It seems clear that the fact that a particular judge of the common pleas court is designated to sit in a juvenile court, does not in any way change the quality of that particular judge. He is still a common pleas judge and in transacting the business of the juvenile court, he is exercising the jurisdiction of the common pleas court. In the exercising of his judicial functions, he remains the common pleas court of the county as much so as any other of the judges of said court."

While at that time I had in view a situation different from the one now presenting itself, I am of the opinion that the general principles laid down therein apply with equal force to the situation here presented. Throughout the act providing for the exercise of the powers and jurisdiction of the so-called juvenile court, reference is made to the judge exercising the jurisdiction provided by the juvenile court act. See sections 1639, 1642, 1662, 1670 and 1683-1.

The language of the statutes, therefore, establishes clearly a plan which permits the respective judge to all practical intents and purposes to occupy the bench he was originally elected to while extending to him the further jurisdiction and powers provided by this act, and everywhere throughout the act the language clearly bears out the stipulation of section 1639 to the effect that the judges of such courts shall have and exercise the powers and jurisdiction conferred by the juvenile chapter. The fact that section 1640 requires the judge exercising such jurisdiction to attach the seal of the court of which he is a judge to all writs and processes forcibly confirms this conclusion.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the language of section 3056 in so far as it relates to fines and penalties assessed by common pleas and probate courts for offenses and misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, include fines and penalties assessed by a judge of either of such courts when such fines and penalties are assessed in the exercise of the jurisdiction provided by the chapter relating to juvenile courts. When a superior court or a court of insolvency, however, is exercising such jurisdiction, the fines and penalties assessed do not, of course, come within the terms of section 3056 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF CITY COUNCIL TO ACCEPT THE GRATUITOUS SERVICES OF AN ATTORNEY WHERE THE CITY SOLICITOR FAILS OR REFUSES TO ACT.

Council of a city may accept the services of an attorney offered gratuitously to represent the city in certain litigation wherein the city solicitor refuses or neglects to represent the city's interest.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 9th you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the council of a city accept the services of an attorney offered gratuitously to represent the city in certain litigation wherein the city solicitor, in the opinion of council, refuses or neglects to properly represent the city's interests, said acceptance of the special counsel being objected to by the city solicitor?"

Section 4308, of the General Code, provides:

> "When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

As far as is material the statutes were substantially the same when the court rendered its opinion in the case of Dietrich vs. City of Defiance, 1 O. C. C. R. 340. On page 341 the court said:

> "On the first motion to strike the petition from the files it was urged by counsel in this court that the city solicitor did not sign the petition, and to sustain this proposition section 1774 was cited by counsel, which defines simply the duty of the city solicitor, that 'he shall when required bring suit.' Section 1516 provides that a city or village or corporation may sue or be sued in its corporate name.

"Section 1775 simply defines the duties of the city solicitor; it does not authorize suit in favor of the city to be brought in the name of the city solicitor. It just defines his duties as solicitor. The city in another section is authorized to employ other counsel than its solicitor. Section 1152 authorizes suit in its own name. Who shall act as its attorney, whether its solicitor or other counsel, can in no way affect this right to bring action in its name. Who it will pay for its service its council may say. Section 1552 provides that a city may sue or be sued and this power is conferred upon the council, and not upon the city solicitor, and against this motion is absolute. In the opinion of this court the action of the court below in overruling this motion was proper."

Section 1774, referred to in the court's opinion appears in substantially the same form as section 4308, General Code, in Williams' Revised Statutes of 1886. The section referred to by the court, under which the city was authorized to employ other counsel than its solicitor, was section 1781, Revised Statutes. This section was as follows:

"He (the solicitor) shall receive such stated salary, payable quarterly out of the corporation treasury, and such fees or compensation for particular services, as the council may prescribe, and no additional counsel shall be appointed or employed at the expense of the corporation except by resolution of the council adopted for that purpose specifying the case in which such additional attorney is employed, the reasons therefor, and may fix the compensation so paid."

The statutes as they exist at the present time do not contain any specific authorization for the employment of counsel other than the city solicitor, except that it may allow an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, under section 4306, General Code. Neither, however, do the present statutes make any express prohibition against employing other counsel except under prescribed conditions, after the manner of former section 1781, R. S.

From the argument of the court, above referred to, based upon the right of the city to sue and be sued, and upon the predicament in which a city would be placed when its solicitor refused to respond to council's order to prosecute or defend a suit, and upon the further corroborative argument that it was formerly deemed necessary by the legislature to prohibit the employment of extra counsel except under special circumstances and conditions, I am of the opinion that council is to be deemed to have within its legislative authority the power to employ additional counsel when in its discretion it is deemed necessary. The power to employ, of course, includes the power to accept the gratuitous services of an attorney for the purpose of representing the city in litigation.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PAY FINAL DIVIDEND IN THE LIQUIDATION OF A BANK BEFORE THE EXPIRATION OF ONE YEAR.

There is no authority for the superintendent of banks to pay a final dividend in the liquidation of a bank before the expiration of one year from the first publication of notice to creditors. Should he pay a dividend before the expiration of said year, he must do so at his own risk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 10th, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "On the 18th of March, 1914, I closed two private banks; one at Custar and the other at Liberty Center. All claims so far shown by the books or records of the bank have been filed. It seems all assets could be collected or compromised and these banks wound up and the final dividend paid early in next month. The statute seems to require the expiration of one year from the first publication of notice to the creditors before the payment of the final dividend. In this connection I refer you to section 742-7, of the General Code.
> "In view of this provision, please advise me whether I have the authority to pay the final dividend before the expiration of the period of one year, and if so, how?"

The sections of the General Code providing for the liquidation of banking corporations are sections 742-1 to 742-16 inclusive. By section 744-9, of the General Code (being section 9 of the act passed April 17, 1913, 103 O. L., 579), these sections of the General Code are, by reference, made applicable to the liquidation of private banks.

Section 742-3 provides that upon taking possession of a bank, by the superintendent of banks, for the purpose of liquidation, he shall give notice by publication for three consecutive months, calling on all persons who may have claims against such bank, to present the same to the superintendent of banks and make proof thereof at a time not earlier than the last day of publication. The section further provides:

> "Claims presented and allowed after the expiration of the time fixed in the notice to creditors, shall be entitled to be paid the amount of all prior dividends therein if there be funds sufficient therefor and share in the distribution of the remaining assets in the hands of the superintendent of banks equitably applicable thereto."

Section 742-7, of the General Code, is as follows:

> "At any time after the expiration of the date fixed for the presentation of claims, the superintendent of banks may, out of the funds remaining in his hands after the payment of expenses, declare one or more dividends, and after the expiration of one year from the first publication of notice to creditors, he may declare a final dividend—such dividend to be paid to such persons and in such amounts and upon such notice as may be directed by the common pleas court of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located."

When the statute provides a certain method of procedure, the only safe course is to follow the statute strictly.

If you were absolutely certain that all claims had been presented to you, and that no other claims were in existence which would be entitled to allowance by you, or which could be established as valid claims against the bank; then you could make a final distribution before the expiration of the year if you cared to do so; that is, this would be discretionary with you and if you did not feel it necessary for your own protection to allow the period of safety provided by the statute to elapse before paying the final dividend, you could make application to the court, setting forth the facts that all claims had been presented against the bank and asking for authority to pay the final dividend. The court might grant the application, but its order doing so, in view of the statute which I have quoted, would be absolutely no protection to you in case valid claims were presented before the expiration of the year. In short, there is no authority whatever for you to pay a final dividend before the expiration of a year from the first publication to creditors. There is authority for you to pay such dividend after the expiration of said year and, therefore, if you should pay the dividend before the time provided by the statute has elapsed you would do so entirely at your own risk.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

QUALIFICATION OF A FOREIGN TRUST COMPANY TO ACT AS TRUSTEE IN A FOREIGN WILL.

Where a foreign trust company has been appointed trustee under a foreign will and under a deed of trust made by a non-resident, and has been appointed by an Ohio court as trustee to fill a vacancy caused by the death of a trustee named in the will, all that is necessary for such a trust company to qualify in Ohio, so that it may pass title to real estate, is to make a deposit in the manner provided under section 9778, General Code, and pay the fees required under section 736, General Code, paragraph c.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 17th, 1914, you make certain inquiries in regard to a foreign trust company organized under the laws of another state, and having its principal office and place of business in a city in said state. This trust company has been appointed trustee under a foreign will and under a deed of trust made by a non-resident; and has been appointed by an Ohio court as trustee to fill a vacancy caused by the death of a trustee named in another foreign will. The company now desires to qualify in Ohio so that it may pass title to real estate belonging to the above named trusts situated in Ohio. It is stated that the company is satisfied that it must comply with section 9778 of the General Code, which is as follows:

"No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock."

Said company desires to know, first, whether it is necessary for a foreign trust company, under the conditions named above, to comply with section 178, of the General Code. Section 178 is as follows:

"Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate. This section shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

I think a foreign trust company comes fairly within the exception contained in the last sentence of this section, as a trust company in Ohio is considered as a banking corporation. I think the exception is made for the reason that Ohio has special provisions with regard to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan or bond investment companies doing business in this state, for example section 9778 above quoted with reference to foreign trust companies.

The second question is, as to whether or not it is necessary for a foreign trust company, under the above conditions, to comply with paragraph "c," of section 736, General Code (103 O. L., 180). This section is as follows:

"(c) Each foreign trust company desiring and intending to do business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of banks a fee of fifty dollars for issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state. Such fee to be paid before such certificate is issued."

This paragraph is part of section 1 of the act of April 9, 1913 (103 O. L., 180). Section 1 provides in part as follows:

"That for the purpose of maintaining the department of the superintendent of banks and the payment of expenses incident thereto, and especially the expenses of inspection and examination, the following fees shall be paid to the superintendent of banks of Ohio: * *"

Paragraph "a" of said section provides for a graduated annual fee to be paid by existing Ohio banks, such fee to be based upon the total aggregate resources of such bank. Paragraph "b" provides for a fee of $30.00, to be paid by all Ohio banks for the preliminary examination required to be made by the superintendent of banks before being given authority to commence business, and paragraph "c" is as above quoted.

The test, as I take it, as to whether a foreign trust company will be subject to said fee, is whether or not it is doing or intends to do business in this state.

It is difficult to determine this question, and in each instance the particular facts as to the transactions conducted in this state by a foreign corporation must determine whether or not it would be considered as doing or transacting business in this state. There are many authorities on this question, but as I have stated, each case seems to have been decided strictly on the peculiar facts pertinent to it. As near as I can come to stating the general rule, it is this: The term "doing business" has reference to a continuation in some form of the business and does not necessarily apply when a foreign corporation does a single act of business within the state.

In the question propounded by you I am unable, without further information to arrive at the conclusion that the acts intended to be performed by this corporation would not constitute doing business. The acts intended to be performed are certainly among those usually performed by trust companies, and for the purpose of doing which trust companies incorporate. They are acts performed in carrying on a portion of the business of the trust company.

From what is stated, as this particular company has been appointed as trustee under one foreign will and desires to perform certain acts with reference to real estate in Ohio, in performing the trust vested in it by said will, and as it has also been appointed as trustee by an Ohio court under another foreign will and desires to perform certain acts with reference to real estate in this state in the performance of the trust vested in it by said appointment, is it not fair to assume that this trust company intends to and will do, or transact, all business of this character which may be entrusted to it in Ohio?

From the facts given, therefore, it is my opinion that it is necessary for this particular company to comply with paragraph "c" of section 736, and pay the fee therein specified.

The third question is, as to whether in such qualification (meaning the qualification which may be required of a foreign trust company under the above conditions) it is necessary to file a list of stockholders, or whether any reports or accounts will be required by the banking department or any other department of the state?

I know of no provision of the laws of Ohio which would require a foreign trust company, under the above conditions, to file with any department of state a list of its stockholders or any reports of any kind.

In short, as I view it, under the conditions which you have named, all that is necessary, is for a foreign trust company to make the deposit in the manner provided in section 9778, of the General Code, and pay the fee required by paragraph "c" of section 736.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF BOND GIVEN BY DEPOSITARY BANK UNDER SECTIONS 4295, 4296, 4515, 4516, GENERAL CODE.

The legal custodian of a bond given by a depositary bank under sections 4295, 4296, General Code, is the treasurer of the municipality. Also, under sections 4515 and 4516, General Code, the legal custodian of such bond is to be designated by trustees of the sinking fund; they may deposit with the treasurer of the corporation, or with a safety deposit company within the corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you made the following request for my opinion:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question:
> "Who is the legal custodian of bond given by depositary bank under sections 4295 and 4296, General Code; also under sections 4515 and 4516, General Code?"

Sections 4295 and 4296 provide for the manner in which depositaries for public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer of a city or village may be designated and in what manner such deposits may be made. These sections also provide that the bank chosen as a depositary shall give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company, or furnish good and sufficient surety, or secure said deposit by the deposit of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, etc.

Nothing is said in either section as to the custodian of the bond to be given by the bank to secure the deposit, nor as to the custodian of the securities, should such securities be deposited instead of a bond.

Sections 4298 et seq., General Code, provide for the duties of the treasurer of a municipality, among which are the duties of demanding and receiving from the county treasurer taxes levied and assessments made and certified to the county auditor by order of council; and of demanding and receiving from persons authorized to collect or required to pay them, moneys accruing to the corporation from judgments, fines, licenses, costs, etc., and debts due the corporation. In brief, the treasurer might well be called the financial custodian for the corporation; he is accountable for the safekeeping of all funds belonging to the corporation and can only be relieved from responsibility when such funds are deposited in banks in conformity with law; that is, if there were no law authorizing the deposit of funds of the municipality by the treasurer in a bank, then, he would have to keep the said funds in his own personal custody.

As the treasurer is responsible for the safekeeping of the funds, it seems to me that he is the only officer with whom the bond given to secure said funds—that is, the security held by the municipality in place of said funds, should be lodged. While there is no direct statutory authority for his having the custody of such bond, or securities in case securities are deposited instead of a bond, still, as he is responsible for said funds and is required to exercise due care when said funds are deposited with a bank in pursuance of law, I think it would be his right to demand, as treasurer, the custody of said bond or securities.

I have stated that section 4295 provides that instead of a bond or other surety the bank may "secure said moneys by a deposit of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations."

In the absence of statutory direction to the contrary it would undoubtedly be held that the deposit must be made with the officer who is responsible for the safekeeping of the funds of the corporation. My answer to your first question, therefore, is, that the legal custodian of bonds given under sections 4295 and 4296 is the treasurer of the municipality.

As to your second question, sections 4515 and 4516, of the General Code, provide for the deposit of all sums held in reserve in the sinking fund, by the trustees of the sinking fund, in a bank or banks under competitive bidding; and provide that the bank chosen as depositary shall give a good and sufficient bond or furnish good and sufficient surety to secure said deposit.

Section 4518, of the General Code, provides:

> "Money shall be drawn by check only, signed by the president and at least two members of the board, and attested by the secretary or clerk. All securities or evidence of debt held by the trustees for the corporation shall be deposited with the treasurer thereof or with a safety deposit company or companies within the corporation, or, if none exists, then in a place of safety to be indicated or furnished by council, and when so deposited they shall be drawn only upon the application of three members and in the presence of at least two members of the city board, or upon the application and in the presence of at least two members of the village board."

I think it is clear from this section that the legal custodian of such bond is to be designated by the trustees of the sinking fund; they may deposit said bond with the treasurer of the corporation or with a safety deposit company within the corporation; or, if there is no such safety deposit company in the corporation, the trustees may deposit such bond in a place of safety to be indicated or furnished by council. That is, this matter is to be determined by the sinking fund trustees, in the manner provided by the statute.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

FEES RECEIVED BY PROBATE JUDGE FOR TAKING DEPOSITION IN WILL CASE DO NOT BELONG TO FEE FUND.

Where the probate judge of one county appoints a probate judge of another county to act as commissioner to take the deposition of a witness to a will, the fees received by the probate judge for executing such commission do not come to him by virtue of his office and need not be accounted for to the fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 3, 1914, you inquired of me as follows:

> "If a probate judge of one county appoints the probate judge of another county to act as commissioner to take the deposition of a witness to a will, as provided by section 10518, General Code, or if he should appoint a probate judge of another county to act as commissioner to take the election of a widow, or widower, as provided by section 10573, General Code, would the fees of such appointed probate judge, acting as commissioner, be a perquisite within the meaning of section 2977, General Code, to be accounted to the fee fund of his office."

Sections 10518 and 10573, General Code, provide:

> "Sec. 10518. The court may issue a commission with the will annexed, directed to any suitable person or persons, to take the deposition of a witness to a will who resides out of its jurisdiction, or who resides within it but is infirm and unable to attend court. Every deposition so taken, certified, and returned by one or more of the persons named in such commission, shall be as valid as if taken in open court.
> "Sec. 10573. If the widow or widower of the testator be unable to appear in court by reason of ill health, or is not a resident of the county in which such election is required to be made, on an application in behalf of such person, the probate court shall issue a commission, with a copy of the will annexed, directed to any suitable person, to take the election of such widow or widower, to accept the provisions of such will in lieu of the provisions made by law. In such commission the court shall direct such person to explain the rights of such widow or widower under the will, and by law."

Section 2977 requires a probate judge, among other named county officers, to pay into the county treasury all the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law, as compensation for services.

You will observe that a probabte judge acting under sections 10518 and 10573, may direct commissions to any suitable person. He is not limited in the selection of commissioners in those cases, to the appointment of the probate judge of the county in which the commission is to be executed. It is no part of the duty of a probate judge of one county to execute commissions sent to him by the probate judge of another county. When a probate judge is appointed to execute such commission, he does so in his individual capacity and solely by virtue of his appointment by the probate judge of another county.

Since the fees received by the probate judge for executing commissions in the two cases mentioned do not come to him by virtue of his office, they are not perquisites, etc., within the meaning of section 2977, and need not be accounted for to the fee fund.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DISPOSITION OF A LUNATIC HELD UNDER A WARRANT FOR ARREST.

A lunatic held under a warrant for arrest, order or commitment of a proper court, is a prisoner within the meaning of section 2845, General Code, and a sheriff is entitled to jail fees and for taking a prisoner before a court, as provided in said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 11th, in which you inquire:

> "Can a sheriff tax the fees as set forth in section 2845, General Code, viz.: '* * * * jail fees for receiving, discharging, or surrendering each prisoner, to be charged but once in each case, fifty cents; taking a prisoner before a judge or court per day, seventy-five cents; * * *' in a lunacy proceeding to be paid upon the certificate of the court, out of the county treasury? Is a lunatic a prisoner within the meaning of this section?"

You have in your letter all of section 2845 necessary for consideration in answering your question, which must depend upon what is meant by the word "prisoner." To my mind, a distinction will have to be made between jail fees and a taking of a prisoner before a court. Of course, if a prisoner is in jail and is taken before a court, the jail fees and fees for taking before the court must both be allowed. However, if the prisoner is held upon a warrant commitment or order of a court of competent jurisdiction, he may be taken before a court without having been placed in jail, for which reason the above distinction is made.

In Vol. II of Bouvier's Law Dictionary, a prisoner is defined:

> "PRISONER: One held in confinement against his will.
> "2. Lawful prisoners are either prisoners charged with crimes or for a civil liability.
> "3. Prisoners unlawfully confined are those who are not detained by virtue of some lawful, judicial, legislative or other proceeding."

In 32 Cyc., 316, a prisoner is defined as a person deprived of his liberty by virtue of a judicial or other lawful process, which language is substantially copied from the case of Royce vs. Salt Lake City, 15 Utah, 401.

Taking these definitions as correct, and applying them to the plain language of section 2845, and the answer to your question must be, a lunatic held under an order of commitment, an order of the probate court or a warrant for his arrest, is a prisoner within the meaning of this section. If he is confined in jail, jail fees may be charged, otherwise not, but for taking him before a judge or court under a proper warrant or order, the sheriff is entitled to the fee prescribed in section 2845. Of course, as stated in your letter, in a lunacy proceeding these fees are paid out of the county treasury upon a certificate of the probate court.

I believe this answers your question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROCEEDINGS FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF COUNTY ROAD INSTITUTED BY COMMISSIONERS.

Determination of rights of parties in proceedings in county road instituted before the commissioners—Kalebaugh leases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. T. J. KREMER, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 23, 1914, and also one of December 17, 1914, with copies of the Kalebaugh leases. Your inquiry, as I understand, involves a determination of the rights of parties, where proceedings for the establishment of a county road have been instituted before the county commissioners. Viewers have been appointed, have acted and assessed compensation and damages; the commissioners have ordered the road to be established and made the proper order concerning compensation and damages; no appeal was taken; an order to open the road has been made and in doing so it is discovered that some oil or gas pipes, or both, for conveying the oil or gas from or across these premises, are located upon the roadway. The question is—the rights of the owners of the pipe lines not having been taken into consideration—whose duty it is to move the pipes or to pay for moving them. The two leases you enclose are dated November 10, 1894, and August 5, 1895. They both seem to be from N. J. Kalebaugh to C. Thompson & Co., one of them for seventy-six acres of land, with the exception of five acres surrounding the buildings, and the other for the five acres excepted in the first lease.

There is no specific covenant for quiet enjoyment in either of these leases, neither is there any specific grant for the placing of oil or gas pipes on said land. The term of each of the leases is for "three years and so much longer as oil and gas may be produced thereon in paying quantities," and the purpose of the lease is for operating, producing, storing, transporting over and carrying away oil and gas during said term. I have no information as to whether oil is being produced from these premises or not, but assume such to be the fact for the reason that the claim to the pipe lines is made through these leases; while as stated, there is no specific provision for quiet enjoyment found in either of these leases, yet there is sufficient in each to carry that covenant.

It cannot be contended that the owners of the land and the owners of the pipe lines are tenants in common, for the reason that the relation of landlord and tenant under these leases, is made perfectly clear, the only question being as to the character of the tendency and the conditions under which these pipe lines were laid. One thing is clear, however, the commissioners in paying damages are limited to the amount allowed by the viewers, and as there is no provision for notifying an occupant or tenant of lands, the owners of these leases cannot complain because of not having notice. The most serious question, to my mind, arises out of the consideration of the question as to whether it was the duty of the land owner to protect these lesses under the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in these leases. If the lessees were present at or had knowledge of the view being made, and knew that the line of road would interfere with their pipe lines, and knew that the land owner was going to claim compensation and damages, and kept silent, I would be of the opinion that their mouths were closed to further complaint, and that it was up to them to protect their lines as best they might. I have no knowledge of any authority to review the action of the county commissioners in establishing a road, except by the probate court on an appeal under the statute. Therefore, there is no power on the part of the county commissioners to start anew with these road proceedings, which will have to be settled on the basis of existing facts, and, as I view it, without further action upon the part of the county commissioners.

In determining some of the questions which have or may be considered, the fact as to whether these pipe lines were above or below the surface might be of considerable value. If they were above the surface and in plain view, and the land owner was claiming damages, I cannot understand how both the land owner and the viewer should give the matter no attention. If the matter had been called to the attention of the viewers, it would have been a matter proper for their consideration, although the allowance probably could not have been made to the owners of the pipe lines but would have to be made to the land owner in order that he might protect his lessees under the covenants of the lease.

I am of the opinion that the commissioners have nothing further to do with the matter; that the question as to the removal of these pipe lines is between the township trustees, the land owner or owners of the pipe lines and the contractor who is engaged in opening this road, and while I am not at all positive, my better view is that when the matter is fully considered, it will resolve itself into a question between the land owner and his lessees, as to who shall bear the expense rendered necessary by the establishment of the road, and the removal of these pipe lines.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES UNDER SECTIONS 7033-7052, GENERAL CODE, TO PAY PART OF THE COST OF A CERTAIN ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

Township trustees, when improving roads under sections 7033-7052, General Code, may not pay a part of the cost of the improvement of a road designated by them under those sections, out of the ordinary township road fund.

COLUMBUS OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. CHARLES F. ADAMS, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 17, wherein you state:

> "The township of Grafton, this county, was created into a road district by resolution of the trustees under section 7033 to 7052.
> "One of the roads in said district known as Road No. 8, was mentioned in the resolution as a road to be improved. The question of the issuance of bonds to improve this road was submitted to the people and carried, and the bonds sold. During the interval between the sale of said bonds, and before the letting of the contract for the improvement of said road, the trustees, by resolution, authorized the road superintendent to grade a certain portion of this road for which obligations aggregating $150 00 were incurred and ordered by the township trustees to be paid out of the township road fund. The legality of payment of such obligations out of said fund is an issue, and I would appreciate your opinion in this matter."

I am also in receipt of a letter from one of the trustees of Grafton township, who states that the people residing along the line of Road No. 8, in order to secure the improvement of that road, agreed to grade it at their own expense, which was partly done; but after the residents did what they considered sufficient, there yet remained some work to be done in order to complete the grading. The trustees then adopted a resolution instructing the road supervisor to have this work done and fixed the price per day to be paid for labor and teams.

Sections 7033-7052 constitute one of the several methods provided by our statutes for the making of road improvements by township trustees.

The trustees must first create a road district, which may include a whole township or part thereof. After the creation of the district, and before the improvement of any of the public ways therein is undertaken, the trustees must submit to the qualified electors of the district, at a general or special election, the question of the policy of improving the public roads of the district and of issuing bonds therefor. If the proposition carries, the trustees must issue the bonds, and they may levy a tax on all the taxable property of the district to pay the principal and interest on the bonds. It is the duty of the trustees, under section 7045, to determine the order and manner in which the roads are to be improved. You state that all the preliminary steps have been taken and that the road in question has been designated by the trustees for improvement.

The disbursement of the ordinary road fund of a township is governed by section 3274, of the General Code, which provides:

> "When money is received into the township treasury from the county treasury for road purposes, the trustees shall cause such money to be appropriated to building bridges or repairing public roads within the township. After public notice, they shall let by contract to the lowest bidder, such part or parts of any road as they deem expedient, equal to the amount of money to be appropriated, if in their opinion such bidder is competent to perform the work. When such labor is performed in accordance with the contract or conditions of the letting, the trustees shall draw an order in favor of the person who has performed such labor for the amount due therefor."

It is clear, from the action of the trustees above noted, that the work of grading this road is to be regarded as a part of the construction of the improvement thereof rather than a repair of the same.

Since the township road fund may be expended only for the repair of roads, I am of the opinion that payment of the aforesaid obligations, out of the township road fund, would be illegal.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE LEGISLATURE OF OHIO IS THE SOLE FINAL AND ONLY JUDGE OF THE ELECTION AND QUALIFICATION OF ITS MEMBERS.

The legislature of Ohio, under favor of section 6, article II of the constitution, is the sole, final and only judge of the election and qualification of its members and the attorney general is not called upon and will not express an opinion upon such subject in advance of the meeting of the legislature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. GEO. M. MORRIS, Member of the General Assembly, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 4, 1914, in which you inquire:

"Whether or not a member of the general assembly of Ohio may serve as normal school director in any county normal school after January 1, 1915, or as instructor in any state college or normal school?"

I also have your letter of December 7, 1914, in which you state in reference to your former letter:

"I had in mind the act of February 16, 1914, 104 O. L., 252, and wanted an opinion as to whether a member of the general assembly of Ohio would be barred from serving for pay as normal school director (secs. 7654-3 and 7654-4 new school code) since part of the money comes from the state."

The act of February 16, 1914, above mentioned, is an amendment of section 15 of the General Code, and so far as applicable here reads:

"Sec. 15. No member of either house of the general assembly except in compliance with the provisions of this act shall;

"(1) Be appointed as trustee or manager of a benevolent, educational, penal or reformatory institution of the state, supported in whole or in part by funds from the state treasury;"

Section 6 of article II of the constitution, reads:

> "Each house shall be judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its own members; a majority of all the members elected to each house shall be a quorum to do business; but a less number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties, as shall be prescribed by law."

For reasons hereafter made plain, it is not thought necessary to discuss the validity of the act of February 16, 1914, nor whether it was intended to make the same a general law, or a mere rule as to the actions and conduct of the eightieth general assembly.

It has been held, in considering a similar constitutional provision to the one above quoted:

> "It cannot be doubted that either branch of the legislature is thus made the final and exclusive judge of all questions whether of law or of fact respecting such elections, returns or qualifications so far as they are involved in the determination of the right of any person to be a member thereof; and that while the constitution, so far as it contains any provisions which are applicable, is to be the guide, the decision of either house upon the question whether any person is or is not entitled to a seat therein, cannot be disputed or revised by any court or authority whatever."
> Peabody vs. School Committee, 115 Mass., 383; (quoted with approval in Covington vs. Buffet, 90 Md., 569; 47 L. R. A., 622).
> To the same effect see 36 Cyc., 848, and cases cited.

With these authorities in mind, and giving full credit to the fact which cannot be doubted that the incoming legislature may, if it pleases, repeal, change, modify or ignore the act of February 16, 1914, I will not attempt to anticipate its action nor lay down a rule of law by which it would be governed in the case presented other than to say that the legislature, being the sole, exclusive and final judge of the election, returns and qualifications of its own members, is not bound by the act of February 16, 1914, and might, if it deemed proper, hold that a person who held the position of director of a normal school was, or was not eligible to a seat in the general assembly.

Inasmuch as you were a member of the eightieth general assembly and cognizant of the reasons for presenting and passing the act of February 16, 1914, it is thought unnecessary to further discuss this matter or to say more than it is up to you to determine what course to pursue in the light of the fact that there is no law which can be laid down which will control the action of the legislature in the premises, and when once it acts, its action is final and not a subject for review by the courts.

From the foregoing, you can plainly see that from my point of view, any opinion I might give, or rule I might lay down, would be of no value to you.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

A NATIONAL BANK SURRENDERING ITS CHARTER CEASES TO BE A MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK.

A national bank surrendering its charter ceases to be a member of the federal reserve bank, and if the persons in it incorporate as a state bank, then such state bank could become a member bank in the federal reserve system in the manner provided by the federal reserve act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Under the national regency act, governing national banks, could a national bank once entering the federal plan, surrender its charter, taking out a charter under the state banking law of Ohio and yet retain the national features by taking stock in a regency bank?"

First. As to the question whether under the national regency act (by which I presume you refer to the federal reserve act), a national bank which had once entered the federal plan could surrender its charter, this is a question which involves the laws of the United States governing national banks, and as to which I am not authorized to express an opinion. I assume, however, that it is quite possible for a national bank which has entered the federal reserve system to surrender its charter under conditions which may be prescribed by the national laws and authorities.

Second. When such a bank has surrendered its charter and ceased to be a national bank it, or rather the persons interested in it, could incorporate as a state bank.

Third. I take it that when such national bank surrendered its charter as a national bank it would undoubtedly at the same time cease to be a member of the federal reserve bank.

Fourth. If, after surrendering the national charter, the persons interested in the bank incorporated as a state bank, then such state bank could become a member bank in the federal reserve system under the terms provided by the federal reserve act for state banks becoming members; authority for banks of this state to become members of federal reserve banks being expressly granted by the act passed February 6, 1914, 104 O. L. 185.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS OR HIS ASSISTANTS MAY NOT DISCLOSE INFORMATION OBTAINED IN EXAMINATIONS TO CLEARING HOUSE EXAMINERS AND AUDITING COMMITTEES.

Under the provisions of section 12898, General Code, the superintendent of banks, his deputies, assistants, clerks and examiners cannot disclose information obtained in the course of examinations to clearing house examiners and auditing committees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you made the following request for my opinion:

"This office receives from various sources requests for reconcilement or confirmation of representations made by banks to clearing house examiners and auditing companies, such as the adoption of certain banks as reserve depositaries, as to whether or not certain directors have taken the oath of office, as to the number of shares of stock held by directors, etc.

"I would be pleased to have you render to me an opinion as to the rights and privileges of this department in this respect, under the restrictions of section 12898."

Sections 12898 and 12899 of the General Code are as follows:

"Sec. 12898. Whoever, being the superintendent of banks, a deputy assistant, clerk in his employ or an examiner, fails to keep secret the facts and information obtained in the course of an examination, except when the public duty of such officer requires him to report upon or take official action regarding the affairs of the corporation, company, society or association so examined, or wilfully makes a false official report as to the condition of such corporation, company, society or association, shall be fined not more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than five years, or both. Nothing in this section shall prevent the proper exchange of certain valuable information relating to banks and the business thereof, with the representatives of the banking departments of other states or with the national bank authorities.

"Sec. 12899. An official, violating any provision of the next preceding section, in addition to the penalties therein provided shall be removed from office and be liable, with his bondsmen, in damages to the person or corporation injured by the disclosure of such secrets."

This provision is essential to the public welfare and cannot be too strictly followed. The exception in the case of exchanging information between your department and the banking departments of other states and national bank authorities precludes any other exception; that is, you can only divulge facts and information obtained in the course of examinations to representatives of the banking departments of other states, national bank authorities or when your duty as superintendent, or the duty of any of your assistants or examiners, requires you to report to some other state or county official or to take official action which makes necessary the disclosure of such facts.

Clearing house examiners and auditing committees are not representatives of banking departments of other states nor are they national bank authorities; and therefore, though there may be many reasons for the exchange of information, and checking up reports with the representatives of different clearing houses, permission to do so not having been granted by statute, it is prohibited.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHTS OF TRUST COMPANY ORGANIZED PRIOR TO PASSAGE OF THOMAS ACT, WHICH TRANSACTED NO TRUST BUSINESS PRIOR TO PASSAGE OF THOMAS ACT.

A trust company organized prior to the passage of the Thomas act, with a paid in capital of less than $100,000, which transacted no trust business prior to the passage of the Thomas act, cannot perform any of the acts specified in sections 9778, 9779, 9780, General Code, until its paid in capital is at least $100,000, and until it has made the deposit required by said sections with the treasurer of state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you made the following request for my opinion:

"A certain bank and trust company incorporated prior to the passage of the Thomas act with an authorized capital of $75,000.00 and paid in capital of $50,000.00 has not heretofore transacted a trust company business but wishes now to do so by paying in the full authorized capital.

"Our present law provides a minimum amount of $100,000.00 capital stock for a trust company. Please advise me as to whether or not this company, organized prior to the passage of the present banking law, could accept and execute trusts with a paid in capital of $75,000.00 after having of course made the deposit with the treasurer of state as required by section 9778."

Section 9778, of the General Code, is as follows:

"No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least $100,000.00, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash $50,000.00 if its capital is $200,000.00 or less, and $100,000.00 if its capital is more than $200,000.00, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock."

Section 9779, General Code, provides as follows:

"The treasurer of state shall hold such fund or securities deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited. From time to time said treasurer shall permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, on the deposit with him of cash, or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposit as herein provided."

Section 9780, General Code, provides as follows:

"No such corporation, foreign or domestic, authorized to accept and execute trusts, either directly or indirectly through any officer, agent or employe thereof, shall certify to any bond, note or other obligation to evidence debt, secured by any trust, deed or mortgage upon, or accept any trust concerning, property located wholly or in part in this state without complying with the provisions of this and the two preceding sections. Any trust, deed or mortgage given or taken in violation of the provisions thereof shall be null and void."

There is some question, in view of the above sections, as to the right of a trust company incorporated and doing the business of a trust company prior to the passage of the Thomas act, with a capital stock of less than $100,000.00 to continue the trust company business specified in sections 9778 and 9780 without increasing its capital stock.

It was held by the common pleas court of Franklin county that banks incorporated prior to the passage of the Thomas act need not increase their capital stock to the amount required by the act, but this opinion was with reference to the capital stock of banks and did not in any way construe the question raised by sections 9778 et seq.; said opinion might be in entire harmony with a holding that while banks and trust companies incorporated prior to the passage of the Thomas act were not required to increase capital stock to the amount named by the act, still sections 9778 et seq., are special sections referring to trust companies and to specific acts to be performed by such trust companies, and section 9780 seems to me both explicit and mandatory.

I do not consider it necessary to go further into this question at this time, however, for it is clear to me that a trust company which had not performed the acts specified in these sections prior to the passage of the Thomas act and did not have the capital prescribed by section 9778, cannot now, by paying in the full amount of its capital stock, which would bring its capital to only $75,000.00, thus obtain authority to do the acts which by section 9780 are expressly made void if performed by a trust company which has not a capital of $100,000.00, and in addition has made the required deposit with the treasurer of state.

Such a company, incorporated as a trust company, but which has not performed the business of a trust company, must comply with section 9778 et seq., before accepting trusts in any way vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual or court, or certifying to any bond, note or obligation to evidence debt, secured by any trust, deed or mortgage upon, or accept any trust concerning, property located wholly or in part in this state.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF A CORRESPONDENT BANK TO CHARGE OUT OF THE ACCOUNT OF AN INSTALLMENT BANK ANY INDEBTEDNESS OF INSTALLMENT BANK TO CORRESPONDENT BANK.

In case of the insolvency of a bank, its correspondent bank may charge out of account of the insolvent bank any indebtedness such correspondent bank may have against such insolvent bank to the account of bills payable held by it, whether the same are due or not due.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you make following request for my opinion:

> "First. In the closing of a bank by this department, correspondent banks have been in the habit of charging out of the account of the defunct bank any indebtedness they might have against the defunct bank in the case of bills payable. Can they do this legally, where bills payable are not due, the same as where they are due?
> "Second. Can a bank holding bills payable against another bank charge the bills payable into the account of a correspondent bank before the note is due, while the bank is a going concern?"

Answering your first question, it is well settled that a bank has a general lien on all of the moneys and funds which have been placed in its possession, and may use the same to cancel any matured debt owing by the debtor to the bank, unless the deposit is for some specific purpose or impressed with some trust.

In the case of Wheaton vs. Daily Telegraph Co., 124 Fed. 61, it was held that where at the time of the appointment of a receiver for a corporation it was indebted to a bank in a sum largely exceeding the amount of the corporation's deposit, the bank was entitled to set off such deposit against the corporation's indebtedness to it.

In the case of Thomas vs. Exchange Bank, 99 Iowa, 202, it was held that a bank may offset as against an immatured debt of an insolvent debtor any sum which it may be owing to the debtor; except in the case of trust deposits.

The general rule is that a correspondent bank, indebted to an insolvent bank on an open account, is entitled to apply the amount thereof on the indebtedness due to the correspondent bank from the insolvent bank: and it has been held (Union National Bank vs. Hunt, 7 Mo. App. 42) that as between the correspondent bank and the initial bank between which an account current has been kept, in which each bank mutually credited the other with the proceeds of all negotiable paper transmitted for collection when received, and accounts were regularly transmitted from the one to the other and settled and balances remitted when called for, and where upon the face of the paper transmitted it always appeared to be the property of the respective banks, and the collecting bank had no notice that the transmitting bank did not own the paper, and such paper was transmitted by each of the two banks on its own account, that there is a lien for a general balance of the account no matter who may be the real owner of the paper.

It seems clear to me, therefore, that in a matter of bills payable, the corresponding bank having a lien on the same, or the proceeds thereof, for the amount due to it from the initial bank, in case of insolvency of the initial bank, it would be entitled to charge out of the account of the defunct bank any indebtedness it might have against such bank, to the amount of the said bills payable held by it, whether the same were or were not due.

Your second question would be a matter for the banks themselves to settle. As stated in my answer to your first question, one bank has a lien upon bills payable transmitted to it by another bank (unless there is some special reason which frees such paper from the lien, on account of third parties), to the extent of the debt owned by the initial bank, and, therefore, if it deemed it necessary to protect the debt due to it, might charge the bills payable into the account of the correspondent bank before the debt was due; or hold the proceeds until its debt was secured or paid off; but I presume it could be compelled to credit the initial bank with interest on the amount of such bills payable from the time they were charged to the account of the initial bank. This matter, however, is essentially a business transaction between the two banks which they must settle themselves.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION MAY NOT HOLD PROMOTIONAL EXAMINATION WHERE ONLY ONE PERSON IS ELIGIBLE FOR SUCH EXAMINATION.

The civil service commission cannot hold a promotional examination whereby its rules or classification of positions, only one person is eligible for such examination. The rule or classification should be broadened so as to make it possible for more than one person to take a promotional examination.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of December 14, 1914, is received, in which you inquire:

> "A question which we desire you to answer is as to whether or not we can hold a promotional examination that complies with section 15 of the civil service act where there is only the one person entitled to take the examination.
> "We have cases confronting us from time to time in which promotion seems to be the natural and logical thing to do, but in many cases, under our classification, there will be only one person eligible to take the promotional examinations."

Section 486-15, General Code, provides:

> "Vacancies in positions in the competitive class shall be filled so far as practicable by promotions. The commission shall provide in its rules for keeping a record of efficiency for each employe in the competitive classified service, and for making promotions in the competitive classified service on the basis of merit, to be ascertained as far as practicable by promotional examinations, by conduct and capacity in office, and by seniority in service; > and shall provide that vacancies shall be filled by promotion in all cases where, in the judgment of the commission, it shall be for the best interest of the service so to fill such vacancies. All examinations for promotions shall be competitive. In promotional examinations efficiency and seniority in service shall form a part of the maximum mark attainable in such examination. In all cases where vacancies are to be filled by promotion, the commission shall certify to the appointing power only the name of the person having the highest rating. The method of examination for promotions, the manner of giving notice thereof, and the rules governing the same shall be in general the same as those provided for original examinations."

By virtue of this section "all examinations for promotion shall be competitive." The civil service commission is required to make rules providing for making promotions. The commission is also required to classify positions.

There can be no competition where only one person is eligible, under the rules of the commission or by its classification, to take an examination. Competition means a contest or controversy between two or more.

The word "competitive" is defined in the New Standard Dictionary:

> "Of, pertaining to, or characterized by competition."

"Competition" is defined:

> "The act or proceeding or striving for something that is sought by another at the same time; a contention of two or more for the same object or for superiority."

To have competitive examination it is necessary to have a contest between two or more.

The rule of the commission must be made so as to make it possible to have two or more persons eligible to take an examination for promotion. If the rule is so made so as to permit only one person to take a promotional examination, then such rule prevents competitive examination, as required by the statute. The rule of the commission is adopted to carry out the terms of the statute, not to make them ineffective.

If the rule of the commission makes it possible for two or more to take a promotional examination and only one person appears for such examination, such person may be examined and if he passes, may be placed in order for promotion.

In such case it is not the fault of the commission or of the applicant that there is no actual competition.

I am of opinion, therefore, that your commission cannot hold a promotional examination, where, under the rules of the commission, only one person is entitled to take such examination. The rule or classification should be broadened so as to make it possible for more than one person to take a promotional examination.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ACCEPTANCE BY RELIGIOUS CORPORATION OF GIFT IN RETURN FOR AN ANNUITY, NOT CLASSED AS INSURANCE.

The acceptance of a gift by a religious corporation of this state in return for which it agrees to pay to the donor an annuity, does not bring such corporation within the provisions of the insurance law of the state—Such contracts cannot be classed as insurance.

COLUMBUS OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. PRICE RUSSELL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On November 19, 1914, you submitted to me, with a request for my opinion, the following inquiry, which had been submitted to you:

> "At a recent meeting of the board of trustees of a religious corporation of this state, a proposition was made to accept from a donor a sum of money upon the agreement that the society would pay to the donor an annuity during the balance of the donor's life. A well-versed insurance man, a member of the board of trustees, was of the opinion that the acceptance of such a gift might bring the society within the provisions of the insurance laws of the state of Ohio and require a deposit to be made with you, etc. We find nothing in the statutes that seems to us to support this view.
> "Will you kindly advise us whether your department holds that the acceptance of a gift by a religious corporation of this state in return for which it agrees to pay to the donor an annuity, brings such corporation within the provisions of the insurance laws of the state? If your department does so hold, will you be kind enough to refer us to the sections of the General Code upon which such holding is based?"

Section 665, of the General Code, is as follows:

> "No company, corporation, or association, whether organized in this state or elsewhere, shall engage either directly or indirectly in this state in the business of insurance, or enter into any contracts substantially amounting to insurance, or in any manner aid therein, or engage in the business of guaranteeing against liability, loss or damage, unless it is expressly authorized by the laws of this state, and the laws regulating it and applicable thereto have been complied with."

The only question to be determined, therefore, is whether the transaction outlined in the above request is insurance, or substantially amounts to insurance.

The briefest and perhaps the most satisfactory definition of insurance is that given by Mr. May, in his work on insurance (Sec. 1, chapter 1):

> "Insurance is a contract whereby one, for a consideration, undertakes to compensate another if he shall suffer loss."

The contract to which you call my attention does not in any way fall under the terms of this definition; there is no indemnity agreement; no agreement, direct or implied, to compensate for any loss, or to make any payment subject to any contingency. Contracts of this character, it is true, are often made by insurance companies but, as stated before, in my view they are not such contracts as can be classed as insurance.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

PROPER INVESTMENT FOR AN INSTITUTION HAVING COMMERCIAL AND SAVINGS BANK, SAFE DEPOSIT AND TRUST COMPANY POWERS.

The stock of a building company whose paid dividends for more than five consecutive years next prior to the investment, would be a proper investment for a savings bank and for an institution which has acquired through its charter commercial and savings bank, safe deposit and trust company powers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you made the following request for my opinion:

> "I would be pleased to have you render to me an opinion as to whether or not the common stock of a building company would be a legal investment for an institution which has acquired, through its charter, commercial and savings bank, safe deposit and trust company powers. It is represented that this stock has paid dividends for more than five years past, and that the proposed purchase will carry with it the control of the building in question."

You state in your request that the corporation to which you refer has, among other powers, the powers of a savings bank. Section 9765, General Code, provides for investments which may be made by savings banks and seems to cover the question submitted by you. This section provides:

> "A savings bank may invest the residue of its funds in, or loan money on, discount, buy, sell or assign promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt and also invest its capital, surplus and deposits in, and buy and sell the following: * * * * * *.
> "b. Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds and promissory notes of corporations, when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of such savings bank. No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter. The superintendent of banks may order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months. * * * * * *"

It would appear, therefore, that stock of a building company, which has paid dividends for more than five consecutive years next prior to the investment, would be a proper investment for a savings bank; and so for the corporation to which you refer.

The fact that the proposed purchase of stock would carry with it the control of the building would not affect the question, except that, in my opinion, the purchase of such stock should be made as an investment in the regular course of banking business, and should not be made for the purpose of obtaining control in another corporation.

The provision which gives the superintendent of banks authority to order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months should be a sufficient safeguard on the exercise of the privilege granted by this section.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DEPOSITORY LAW — RULES GOVERNING THE DEPOSITING OF MONEY WHERE TWO BANKS FURNISH A BOND.

Where two banks join in signing a bond for county money, and the bid was made in the name of one bank, and that bank desires to turn over a certain amount of the money to the bank joining in the bond, the bank acting as a depository and furnishing the bond would be the only bank responsible to the political subdivision making the deposit.

COLUMBUS OHIO, December 28, 1914.

HON. EMERY LATTANNER, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On September 28, 1914, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Two banks joined in signing a bond for county money; the bid was made in the name of one bank and that bank desires to turn over a certain amount of the money to the bank joining in the bond. The question arises —how will the bank which received the money carry this? Should they carry it as 'public deposit,' as 'due another bank' or as 'borrowed money?'"

Under the depository laws the bank which was selected as a depositary, and furnished the bond or surety or securities, to secure the deposit of the public funds, would be the only bank responsible to the political subdivision making the deposit. If it in turn redeposited a certain amount of the money so received in another bank, no matter whether the other bank had joined with it in the bond or not, that bank should carry the deposit as a deposit due to another bank; or, if it had borrowed the money from the bank which had been chosen as the depositary, it should be carried, of course, as borrowed money.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE CITY AUDITOR TO SUBSCRIBE FOR THE PUBLICATION OF THE NEMAR PUBLISHING COMPANY, TO WIT, THE DEPARTMENT REPORTS.

It is within the discretion of the city auditor to subscribe for the publication of the Nemar Publishing Company, to wit, the department reports, and pay for the same out of its incidental appropriation in the same manner as in the purchase of supplies generally, and the same would be legal.

COLUMBUS OHIO, December 28, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 19, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "May a city auditor legally pay from his 'incidental' appropriation for service rendered by the Nemar Publishing Company? Said company furnishes special information as to the official actions of state departments, and also issues a weekly publication of official interest to the city auditor, at a cost of $10 per annum.
> "May any or all public officials, city, village, school and township, subscribe and pay from their appropriations for such publication and service?"

After careful consideration and consultation with counsel in this department, I am of the opinion that I should go no further than to answer your first inquiry.

As to what a city auditor may legally purchase and pay for under his appropriation is largely a question of good common sense and economic consideration. I am told that the city, through the auditor and solicitor, purchases publications appropriate to the departments, and that the same are paid for out of the incidental funds. To illustrate: Legal publications are bought through the city solicitor's department for the use of that department, remaining the property of the department. This is entirely appropriate, and of course such purchases should be limited to those publications that contain matter of direct benefit to the department. The city auditor, of course, may do likewise.

I just inquired of the city auditor of Columbus, who advises me that his department has been purchasing an engineering publication, that after he is through with it he passes it on to the city engineer. This seems to be proper and legal.

It is largely a question of situation and conditions as to how many publications may be purchased for a given municipality. Certainly for the smaller cities one issue of a publication would be sufficient and could be passed around; larger cities might need more. Your bureau should determine each situation upon its own facts and conditions.

I have examined several copies of the Nemar Publishing Company's Bulletin and, in my judgment, as at present published it contains information very useful to a city auditor and city solicitor, as well as to the county auditor and the prosecuting attorney. The city solicitor advises all city officials and city boards of education and the prosecuting attorney advises all county officials as well as township officials and boards of education in counties outside of cities. So long as the prosecutors and city solicitors have the publication, the general public in their respective jurisdictions have the means of procuring the benefit of them, but inasmuch as much of the matter contained in this publication is more directly beneficial to the auditor and is not legal in its nature, I think it not altogether inappropriate that the city auditor have the same benefit as the solicitor and the county auditor the same as the county prosecutor. The village clerk might also be permitted to purchase the same without criticism.

It is difficult to lay down a hard and fast rule. The chief suggestion I would make to your department is to see that no abuses are permitted and no purchases made simply to favor the publishing company. The same rule would apply in this as in the purchase of necessaries and supplies generally.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

SCHOOLS—DEFINITION OF THE TERM "SUPERVISOR" AS EMPLOYED IN SECTION 7811, GENERAL CODE.

The term "Supervisor" as employed in section 7811, 104 O. L., 102, is intended to apply to teachers who have had experience in overseeing or have had charge of schools with authority to direct or regulate matters in connection with the schools, either as an actual superintendent or in a supervisory capacity. The term "exempted village school district" as employed in said section 7811, applies to village school districts which are exempt from county school districts by virtue of sections 4688 and 4688-1, General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., 134.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1914.

HON. B. F. ENOS, Prosecuting Attorney, Cambridge, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On November 6, 1914, you requested an official opinion as follows:

> "There is a young man in this county who would like to be appointed school examiner. He has had several years' experience as a teacher in a special school district. He is now superintendent in a village school district, which is in this county. He spends one-half of his time superintending and the other half in teaching.
> "Section 7811, of the School Laws, as found in O. L., 104, at page 102, reads as follows:
> "Sec. 7811. 'There shall be a county board of school examiners for each county, consisting of the county superintendent, one district superintendent and one other competent teacher, the latter two to be appointed by the county board of education. The teacher so appointed must have had at least two years' experience as teacher or superintendent, and be a teacher or supervisor in the public schools of the county school district or of an exempted village school district. Should he remove from the county during his term, his office thereby shall be vacated and his successor appointed.'

"You will note that said above quoted section says in part:

"'The teacher so appointed must have had at least two years' experience as teacher or superintendent, and be a teacher or supervisor in the public schools of the county school district or of an exempted village school district.' What does the word 'supervisor' in this section mean? What does the term 'exempted village school district' mean?

"Now, I would like to have your written opinion at your very earliest convenience, as to whether or not the county board of education would have any right to appoint this young man, and also your opinion as to the meaning of these words that I have indicated."

The term "supervisor" as employed in section 7811, which you quote in your inquiry, relates to supervisory or supervision work on the part of teachers who are or have been teaching in the public schools.

Section 4744-4, 104 O. L., page 143, specifies qualifications of persons who shall be eligible as county superintendents, and among other qualifications mentions experience in supervision, as follows:

"Only such persons shall be eligible as county superintendents who shall have:

"(1.) Five years' experience as superintendent and a high school life certificate; or

"(2.) Six years' experience in teaching, two years' additional experience in supervision, and at least a three-year county high school certificate; or

"(3.) * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"(4.) Five years' teaching experience with one year's professional training in school administration and supervision in a recognized school of college or university rank, and a high school life certificate; or

"(5.) Five years' teaching experience with one year's professional training in school administration and supervision in a recognized school of college or university rank, and a county high school certificate, and be a graduate from a recognized institution of college or university rank."

Section 4744-5 specifies the qualifications of persons who shall be eligible as district superintendents, as follows:

"Only such persons shall be eligible as district superintendents who shall have:

"(1.) Three years' experience in school supervision, and at least a county high school certificate; or

"(2.) Four years' experience in teaching, one year's additional experience in supervision or one year's training in supervision in an institution of college or university rank and at least a county high school certificate; or

"(3.) * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *"

I take it that the term supervision as employed in the last two quoted sections, does not mean that such persons in order to be qualified as either county or district superintendents, must have experience in supervision as actual superintendents, but that on the contrary they may acquire such experience in supervision by doing supervisory work in fact. That is to say, if a teacher has had experience in supervision work in the schools, even though not acting in the capacity of an actual superintendent of the schools, nevertheless they can qualify as eligible candidates for county or district superintendents under said section 4744-4 and section 4744-5, provided they have had a sufficient amount of work in supervision and also meet the other requirements set forth and specified in said sections. It would seem to follow, therefore, that the term "supervisor" as employed to section 7811, is intended to apply to teachers who have had experience in overseeing or have had charge of schools with authority to direct or regulate matters in connection with the schools, either as an actual superintendent or in a supervisory capacity. The term "exempted" village school district applies to village school districts which are exempted from the county school districts by virtue of sections 4688 and 4688-1 of the General Code, as amended 104 O. L., page 134. Section 4688 provides what village districts may become exempt from supervision of county boards, as follows:

> "The board of education of any village school district containing a village which, according to the last federal census, had a population of three thousand or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof not to become a part of the county school district. Such village district by notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, shall be exempt from the supervision of the board."

Section 4688-1 provides that when a census of the population of a village district is taken, if such census shows a population of three thousand or more in the village school district, then such district shall be exempt from the supervision of the county board of education, as follows:

> "The board of education of a village school district shall upon the petition of one hundred or more electors of such district, or upon its own motion may at any time order a census to be taken of the population of such district. One or more persons may be appointed by the board to take such census. Each person so appointed shall take an oath or affirmation to take such census accurately and to the best of his ability. He shall make his return under oath to the clerk of the board, and certified copies of such return shall be sent to the county auditor and superintendent of public instruction. If the census shows a population of three thousand or more in the village school district, and such census is approved by the superintendent of public instruction, such district shall, upon notification by the board of education of such village school district, be exempt from the supervision of the county board of education. "

You state that the party about whom you inquire is now superintendent of a village school district. You do not state whether this school district is now in the county school district or whether it is an exempted school district by virtue of the last two sections just quoted. However, if such village school district is in the county school district, or is an exempted school district by virtue of said sections, nevertheless the party in question would be eligible to be appointed by the county board of education as a member of the county board of school examiners, for the reason that he is a supervisor, either in the public schools of the county school district or of an exempted village school district, provided, of course, that the party in question meets the other requirements of said section, to wit, that he has had at least two years' experience as teacher or superintendent, which you say he has had for the reason that for several years past he has been a teacher in the village school district mentioned.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

THE COUNTY AUDITOR SHALL ISSUE A WARRANT UPON THE COUNTY TREASURER FOR THE PAYMENT OF MOTHERS' PENSIONS, AS PROVIDED IN SECTION 1683-9, GENERAL CODE.

Section 1683-9, General Code (103 O. L., 879), is the only provision for the disbursement of the mothers' pension fund and provides that the county auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of the allowance and any other method of disbursement would be illegal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of December 21st, 1914, wherein you state:

> "We are sending you herewith letter received by this department from Hon. O'Brien O'Donnell, judge of the juvenile court of Lucas county, Ohio, setting forth his ideas as to the proper disbursement of pensions allowed to mothers, and we would like your written opinion as to the legality of Judge O'Donnell's method of handling said funds."

Judge O'Donnell's letter is, in part, as follows:

> "The law providing for mothers' pension, as now enacted, among other matters provides:
>
> "'The county auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of such allowance as may be ordered by the juvenile judge.' (Sec. 1683-9, 103 O. L., 879.)
> "This is the only provision in the law referring to the paying of the allowance so made by the court. A few judges in Ohio, who have been interested in the passage of the mothers' pension act and who are anxious to see the best results obtained therefrom, find that we can carry out the intents and purposes of the law by having the court certify to the county auditor the names, together with the amounts awarded the widows, that thereupon the county auditor shall issue his check direct to the juvenile judge for the entire sum so certified, who in turn shall cause the money to be paid to the widows or the persons through whom the court shall direct it to be expended and take their receipts therefor.
> "The reasons for asking that it be done this way are, briefly:
> "First, all papers, including the receipts from each of the individual parties are preserved in the office of the court that issues the order where a complete record from the filing of the application to the granting and paying of the pensions should be kept and thereby expedite matters.
> "Second, it frequently happens that widows having children to support and entitled to a pension, have no conception whatever of the manner of expending the money; in other words, some are unfortunately like a great many men who, as heads of families buy for cash what is not necessary and have to go in debt for the actual necessities of life, and at the same time they may be very good people. Consequently, when we find a case of that kind we propose that the money shall be ordered expended through some person in whom the court has confidence and who is aiding in looking after the case. * *

"The plan to bring the best results will be for the court to certify to the county auditor the names of the widows and the amounts awarded each, for which the county auditor can remit a check for the total amount and the court in turn to pay to the widows who are capable of handling the same in the most economical manner, or pay it to some person who may be selected by the court to expend it for them. * * *

"Bear in mind, I am asking permission to do it in this way to the end that the mothers' pension law may be best administered, and I know we can accomplish what we are after. * *"

I have examined the mothers' pension law and I find that the only provision contained therein in reference to the disbursement of the pension is found in section 1683-9, 103 O. L., page 879, and is as follows:

"The county auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of such allowance as may be ordered by the juvenile judge."

I have incorporated this statutory provision at the expense of repetition because it is the only provision of its nature in the act, and too much stress cannot be put on its plain and unambiguous terms which can leave no doubt in the mind as to the intention of the legislature. It is clear that it was intended that the county auditor should issue a warrant upon the county treasurer for the payment of the allowance ordered by the juvenile judge directly to the beneficiary and not to the juvenile judge or to any one designated by him as custodian.

I agree with you that in some cases that have come to your attention that the law can be better carried out as to all intents and purposes by having the court certify to the county auditor the names of and the amounts awarded to the widows, that thereupon the county auditor shall issue his check direct to the juvenile judge for the entire sum so certified, who in turn shall cause the money to be paid to the widows or the persons through whom the court shall direct it to be expended and take their receipts therefor; that by this arrangement all papers, including the receipts are preserved in the office of the court that issues the orders where the complete report should be kept: and also that the expenditure of the award for the benefit of the widow and her children can be made more judiciously by the juvenile judge as a sort of financial guardian, but in the face of this statutory mandate so plain and concise and simple I cannot advise you to follow any procedure that would not be in strict conformity to this legislative command.

In our previous correspondence I expressed a willingness that the procedure which is outlined above be followed temporarily, with the advice and consent of your department, until the general assembly meets again, when the law might be amended to conform with the said procedure; that I was in hearty sympathy with the mothers' pension law and would be pleased to co-operate with any court to the end that its beneficient operation be not thwarted by anything short of illegal procedure, but the language of the statute is so plain as to entirely disable me from advising or approving a plan other than that the auditor shall issue a warrant upon the county treasurer and the allowance be paid direct to the beneficiary and not to the juvenile judge or any person designated by him.

I am therefore of the opinion that the method of handling the mothers' pension fund as outlined above is contrary to the wording of the statute and therefore illegal.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT—AN OFFICER WHO IS APPOINTED FOR A DEFINITE PERIOD FIXED BY THE APPOINTING POWER, IF IN THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE, HIS EMPLOYMENT DOES NOT TERMINATE AT THE EXPIRATION OF HIS APPOINTED TERM OF OFFICE.

A provision of statute fixing a definite term for a position in the classified service is not repealed by implication by the civil service act.

Where an employe or officer is appointed for a definite period fixed by the appointing power and not by statute, such employe or officer, if in the classified service, continues in his employment or office for an indefinite period by the civil service act; his employment or office does not terminate at the expiration of his appointed term of office.

PREFACE.

It is with reluctance that I come to the conclusion that a statute fixing a definite term for a position in the classified service is not repealed by implication by the civil service act. I feel constrained to follow the path blazed out by Judge Pugh, of the superior court of Cincinnati, in reference to those holding office. This holding by Judge Pugh, in my judgment, is clearly not necessary to determine the result in the Schneller case.

Schneller's term of office expired on December 31, 1913, and the civil service act did not take effect until January 1, 1914. It was, therefore, apparent that Schneller was not entitled to hold over after December 31, 1913, but, nevertheless, Judge Pugh planted his conclusion on two grounds—one of which is, that where the statute fixes the term of an officer or employe, his term ends by operation of law at the conclusion of the statutory period.

This department is required to follow the decision of the supreme court whether we think them right or wrong; and as to courts of appeals and reviewing courts, there would have to be a conflict of such courts or manifest error before this department would be free to disregard the holding; and as to common pleas courts we must be satisfied that such decision is erroneous before advising an administrative body to proceed contrary to such holding.

It being admitted that the appointee must come from the eligible list when the term of the officer or employe whose term is fixed by statute expires, it is absurd to make any difference in the application of civil service between the person whose term of office is fixed by the appointing officer and one whose term of office is fixed by the general assembly.

The rationale of the civil service would suggest that the same rule should be applied to all kinds of appointive officers and employes, and the Ohio act, in my judgment, goes further than the acts of the other states looking to the spirit of continuance of persons in office. But, as stated, I must yield to the decisions of the courts.

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 2, 1914, you submit the following inquiry:

"Our board desires your instructions as to whether or not a superintendent of a county infirmary or a superintendent of a children's home, having been chosen by contract or election for a definite term expiring after January 1, 1914, is continued in position by virtue of the civil service law, or, is his position vacant at the expiration of his contractual term?

"If his position does become vacant at the end of his contractual term, must his successor be selected from an eligible list prepared by the state civil service commission, and is the term for which the person selected may serve to be determined by mutual agreement between the person so selected and the appointing board or officer?

"We desire your further instructions as to our duty where the law fixes a statutory term for a position or employment and that term expires after January 1, 1914. The point we desire your instruction upon is that if a given position is in the classified service and the term of the incumbent is fixed by law, does the civil service act take precedence over previous statutes fixing the terms and the officer or employe continued in the service, or, must the position, at the expiration of the term be filled from eligible lists for the statutory term?"

By an arrangement with you an opinion upon these questions has been deferred awaiting a decision by the court of appeals of Hamilton county, Ohio. It now appears that the case in question was not taken to the court of appeals.

Your inquiry involves two classes of positions.

First—Those for which the statutes fix a definite term;

Second—Those where the appointing power has fixed a definite period of service by contract or appointment.

Only positions in the classified service under the civil service act are involved.

The following are the provisions of the civil service act to be considered:

Section 2 of the civil service act, section 486-2, General Code, provides in part:

"* * * and on and after January 1, 1914, no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service under the government of this state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

Section 10 of the civil service act, section 486-10, General Code, reads in part:

"The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service, except those holding their positions under existing civil service laws, shall, whenever the commission shall require, and within twelve months after the rules adopted by the commission go into effect, be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service. * * *"

Section 17 of the civil service act, section 486-17, General Code, provides in part:

"No person shall be discharged from the classified service, reduced in pay or position, laid off, suspended or otherwise discriminated against by the appointing officer for religious or political reasons. In all cases of discharge, lay off, reduction or suspension of a subordinate, whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise, the appointing officer shall furnish the subordinate discharged, laid off, reduced, or suspended with a copy of the order of discharge, lay off, reduction, or suspension, and his reasons for the same, and give such subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. * * *''

In case of State ex rel. vs. Schneller, 15 Nisi Prius, N. S., 438, it is held:

''The civil service act of May 10, 1913 (103 Ohio Laws, 698), in so far as it relates to incumbents of offices and places mentioned in the third paragraph of section 10 thereof, went into effect January 1, 1914.

''The terms of such public offices and positions as are fixed by statute, remain unchanged by the civil service act of May 10, 1913, and an incumbent on January 1, 1914, of such office or position, while protected from removal, suspension, reduction or transfer except for cause as therein provided, is not thereby given a new term of office, nor is his existing term thereby lengthened or extended.

''Incumbents of offices and positions whose statutory terms expired December 31, 1913, are not continued in office or position thereafter by the civil service act aforesaid.''

This case involved the employes of the council of the city of Cincinnati, whose terms expired December 31, 1913, and whose successors were elected on the morning of January 1, 1914. Judge Pugh in his opinion holds that these employes were not incumbents on January 1, 1914, and did not, therefore, come within the terms of section 10 of the civil service act. This conclusion was sufficient to decide the case and it was not necessary to consider the effect of the civil service law upon terms of office as fixed by statute.

On page 446 of the opinion, Judge Pugh, says:

''The two year terms for which they were elected on January 1, 1912, expired at midnight, December 31, 1913, and when the new law took effect January 1, 1914, they were not incumbents of any public office or position at all and the section (10) invoked could be of no assistance to them.''

This view of Judge Pugh is supported by the opinion of the court of appeals of Franklin county, Ohio, in case of Sullivan vs. Commissioners of Clark county. This case involved the position of superintendent of the county infirmary. The court found that Sullivan had been appointed for a term fixed by the commissioners at one year, which expired December 31, 1913. The court held that he was not an incumbent on January 1, 1914. Sullivan's successor, however, was appointed prior to January 1, 1914, to take effect on said date.

The case of State ex rel. vs. Schneller, supra, did not involve employes whose terms had been fixed by the appointing power.

Judge Wright of the common pleas court of Hocking county, Ohio, in a case which involved an employe whose term, as fixed by the appointing power, expired after January 1, 1914, has held that under the civil service act such employe was continued in the service for an indefinite period. The opinion in this case is not now available.

Judge Pugh in his opinion, supra, cites a number of authorities from other states. These cases will be reviewed, but in considering them the provisions of the civil service acts of such state must also be considered.

In Rodigue vs. Boyer, 4 Cal. App. 257, the provisions of the charter of San Francisco were under consideration. The charter provided for appointment under civil service regulations and it also authorized the appointing board to "designate the service to be rendered by such assistants and the time for which they shall be employed." These provisions and the civil service provisions were in the same act of the legislature and it was properly held that a regular appointee was protected only during his term.

In McNeil vs. Chicago, 93 Ill. App. 124, the court relies upon Mather vs. Kerfoot et al., in Chicago Law Journal of June 8, 1900, p. 130, as to term and it is therein held that the civil service act does not change the term. The patrolman in this case was a "hold-over," and in State vs. City of Chicago, 98 Ill. App. 105, nothing is said about a term, but Justice Sears reviews McNeil vs. Chicago, supra, and says at page 107:

> "Relator as a 'hold-over' was not within the protection afforded by section 12 of the civil service act, which regulates the manner of discharge of persons holding as appointees under the act."

There is no provision in the Illinois civil service act about continuance in office or position.

In Robertson vs. Coughlin, 196 Mass., 539, it is held that the appointing power has the right to fix a reasonably definite term where the statute does not fix the same. In this case it is held:

> "St. 1904, p. 266 c. 314, which protects persons holding office in the classified service of the commonwealth or in any municipality thereof from arbitrary removal during their term does not apply to an officer whose term of office has expired."

This case involved an employe whose term was fixed by the appointing power. Massachusetts is the only state in which I have found any authority upon the question where the appointing power has fixed the term. The civil service law of Massachusetts is so radically different from that of Ohio that these cases cannot be considered as authority in this state. In Massachusetts the civil service commission determines the positions which shall be subject to civil service regulations. This is not fixed by statute as in Ohio. (See section 6 of chapter 19 of Revised Laws of Massachusetts of 1902.)

In case of Attorney General vs. Trehy, 178 Mass., 186, it is held:

> "The civil service commissioners have power to require offices involving confidential relations between the incumbent and his superior, which are not by statute exempted from their rules, to be filled under the rules, or so may classify them that they will be free."

In Matter of Tiffany, 179 N. Y., 455, it is held:

> "The civil service act (L. 1899, ch. 370) does not prevent an office from becoming vacant by operation of law through the expiration of the term fixed by statute, and when his term expires an incumbent is not 'removed,' within the meaning of section 21; that provision, therefore, of the charter of the city of Jamestown (L. 1886, ch. 84, tit. 2, sec. 2) providing that the term of a policeman 'shall be one year,' is not so inconsistent with the later act that a policeman whose term of office had expired and who was not reappointed, is entitled to a mandamus compelling his reinstatement upon the ground that he was a veteran and had been 'removed' from such office in violation of the civil service act."

In a per curiam opinion the court say:

> "The aim of the statute was to protect the incumbents of those positions which previously had been of indefinite tenure, and, hence, subject to arbitrary removal by the appointing power. * * * Its primary object was to make merit and fitness, as ascertained by competitive examination, the basis of appointment to office and to protect the appointee to an office, with no fixed term, from removal without cause shown after an opportunity to be heard."

This decision is limited to terms fixed by statute. The civil service act of New York has a provision as to removal but not as to continuance in office.

Cases from Texas are also cited. But in these the constitution fixes the term.

The civil service act of New Jersey upon the matter of continuance in the service is more nearly like that of Ohio than the law of any other state.

Section 2 of the New Jersey act, page 3795 of volume 3 of Compiled Statutes of New Jersey of 1910, provides:

> "All officers, clerks and employes now in the employ of the state or any municipality adopting this act, coming within the competitive or non-competitive class of the civil service, shall continue to hold their offices or employments, and shall not be removed therefrom except in accordance with the provisions of section 24 hereof, it being the intention hereby to include any and all such officers, clerks, employes and laborers within the classified service of the state or municipality, as the case may be, and to be subject in all respects to the provisions of this act."

Section 24 herein referred to is like section 17 of the Ohio act, except that it does not contain the clause "whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise."

The New Jersey act divides the civil service act into classified and unclassified service, but the civil service commission is authorized to arrange the classified service into four classes, "to be designated as the exempt class, the competitive class, the non-competitive class and the labor class, which classification may be changed from time to time as the commission shall deem proper." The exempt class does not depend upon the practicability of competitive examinations.

This power of classification granted to the civil service commission distinguishes the civil service act of New Jersey from that of Ohio, and it is upon this power of classification that certain conclusions reached in the New Jersey cases are based.

In case of Hisp vs. Civil Service Commission, 84 Atl. 614 (Sup. Ct. of N. J., 1912), Grimmer, C. J., says at page 614:

> "Under the civil service act (3 Comp. St. 1910, p. 3795, et seq.) all officers, clerks and employes in the service of the state, or of any municipality in which the statute is in force, who are properly placed in the classified service by the civil service commission, are entitled to hold their offices and employments indefinitely, and are not subject to removal therefrom except for cause; * * *
> "It follows, therefore, that, as the office of warden of the county penitentiary in a county of the first-class is one the term of which is fixed and established by law, the incumbent thereof is not affected by the provisions of the civil service law, and cannot, by any action of the civil service commission, be retained in his office after the expiration of his fixed term."

In Attorney General ex rel. vs. Elliott, 77 N. J. L. 43, it is held:

"Section 2 of the civil service act of 1908 (Pamp. L., p. 235) refers only to officers whose term was not previously fixed by law.

"The classified service under the civil service act of 1908 (Pamp. L., p. 235) does not include officials with a fixed statutory term who are appointed by the board of chosen freeholders of a county."

"By section 12 the civil service commission is directed to arrange offices, positions and employments in the classified service in four classes, one of which is called the exempt class, in which appointments may be made without examination. Two other classes are called, respectively, competitive and non-competitive. In these classes appointments can only be made after an examination and section 2 enacts that officers, clerks and employes now in the employ of the state or any municipality adopting the act, shall continue to hold their offices or employments and shall not be removed therefrom except after a written statement of the reasons for removal and an opportunity to make a written answer, from which it may fairly be inferred that a hearing upon the charges is contemplated. The right of an officer to continue in his place indefinitely depends therefore upon whether he comes within the competitive or non-competitive class of the classified service, or whether he comes within the exempt class, and since the commission is authorized to change the classification from time to time as it deems proper the necessary result that the indefinite continuance in office of one, whose term has been definitely fixed by act of the legislature, is committed to the decision of the commission, which may vary it as it sees fit. * * * I have quoted section 2, which relates to removals, I think this section refers only to officers whose term was not previously fixed by law. It was this class which needed the protection of the act in order to secure them against removal for political causes. The word 'removal' naturally applies to one whose term is indefinite; it does not naturally connote the case of an officer whose statutory term has actually expired."

The act of New Jersey and that of Ohio are the only civil service laws which have provisions as to continuance in office. In the New Jersey act it is provided that,

"All officers * * * now in the employ of the state * * * coming within the competitive or non-competitive class of the civil service shall continue to hold their offices and shall not be removed therefrom except in accordance with section 24 hereof."

Section 24 is the same as section 17 of the Ohio act, except as above stated. Section 10 of the Ohio act provides that,

"The incumbents of all offices and places in the competitive classified service * * * shall * * * be subject to non-competitive examinations as a condition of continuing in the service."

And by virtue of section 2 of the Ohio act,

"No person shall be * * * removed * * * in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act."

The manner of removal is fixed in section 17 which is the same as section 24 of the New Jersey act.

These provisions from the New Jersey act and the Ohio act are substantially the same. In New Jersey these provisions are construed to mean an indefinite term and they should have the same meaning in Ohio, as the Ohio act follows that of New Jersey.

It does not follow that in Ohio, as in New Jersey, where the statute fixes a definite term the position is taken out of the competitive class. The Ohio act does not follow New Jersey in this regard and this probably explains the phrase in section 17 of the Ohio act, "whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise."

In New Jersey the commission takes employes from the exempt class to the competitive and non-competitive class and by placing them in the latter class an indefinite term is fixed. And where the statute fixed a definite term there was a conflict between a statute and a rule of the commission. The statute, of course, in such case, controls, and the rule of the commission falls. That is the New Jersey ruling.

In Ohio the statute itself places the employes in the competitive classified service, and the only power of the commission is to determine whether or not it is practicable to determine merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations.

Therefore, if there is a conflict between the civil service act as to tenure, and a statute fixing a definite term, it is a conflict between two statutes and not a conflict between a rule of the civil service commission and a statute, as in New Jersey.

The principle upon which civil service is based is to take the appointment of employes from the "spoils system" and to secure for the public the benefits of experience and efficiency which comes from permanency in position and certainty of tenure. Whether or not these have been carried into law must be determined by the provisions of the civil service act.

In an early opinion in New York, Justice Peckham says at page 180 of Rogers vs. Common Council of Buffalo, 123 N. Y., 173:

"The full benefits of such a system have not yet, it is said, been given by the legislation in question because it does not go far enough. But it is claimed that even such as has been enacted tends to give permanency of tenure to the appointee, and thus to relieve him from constant anxieties as to his future means of livelihood, and to give him on that account more inclination and ambition to discharge his duties well and efficiently. As to the appointing power, it is also said that its tendency is to leave him at leisure to attend to the important duties of his own office without a constant drain upon his time and his temper in attending to the claims of office seekers."

And in People vs. McCullough, 254 Ill., 9, Justice Dunn says at page 25:

"The act provides for the classification of all offices and places of employment in the public service except those mentioned in section 11, the standardizing of employment in each grade, and the keeping of a record of the relative efficiency of each officer and employe in the classified service. It is based on the principle that positions in the public service are not the personal or political perquisites of any officer or party, and ought not to be divided, after a political campaign, as so much loot of actual warfare, but that competency, merit and fitness ought to be the standard for all appointments or promotions in the public service."

The civil service act of Ohio contains the idea of securing the benefit of experience obtained in the public service when it provides for promotions in section 15 of the act. Also in section 16 wherein provisions are made for reinstatement where an employe becomes separated from the service without fault, or when the number of positions is reduced.

However, repeals by implication are not favored, and both the civil service act and the statute fixing a definite term should stand if possible. Judge Pugh has held that the two may stand together and that the civil service act does not change a term when fixed by statute.

Therefore, where the statute fixes a definite term, that is controlling and the civil service act does not continue the term of an officer or employe after the expiration of his term as fixed by statute. The vacancy created by the expiration of the term must be filled from the eligible list, if the position is in the classified service.

The right of an appointing power to fix the time of service, when the statute does not fix it, is based upon the principle that the appointee serves at the will of the appointing power. Under the civil service act the appointee does not hold at the will of the appointing power, but he is protected in his tenure by the civil service act, and he cannot be removed, except as therein provided.

Where an appointing power appoints for a definite term the conflict is between a statute, the civil service act, and the rule of an executive officer. In such case the statute must prevail.

If the civil service act does not make an indefinite term for all incumbents who were appointed prior to January 1, 1914, and whose terms were not fixed by statute, then it does not fix an indefinite term for those appointed after January 1, 1914, and the appointing power may still appoint for a definite term.

Such a ruling would nullify the provisions of the civil service act as to removals, as to promotions and as to reinstatements.

Therefore, where an employe has been appointed for a definite term fixed by contract or by the appointing power, and not by statute, such employe, if in the classified service, is continued in his employment for an indefinite term by the civil service act. His position is not vacant at the expiration of his term as fixed by contract or the appointing power.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF THE STATE LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD TO DESIGNATE ONE OF THE COUNTY LICENSING COMMISSIONERS AS SECRETARY OF THE COUNTY LIQUOR LICENSING BOARD.

The state liquor licensing board has the right to designate one of the county licensing commissioners as secretary of the county liquor licensing board in case the latter fails to appoint a secretary, and if such action be taken by the state board, it has the right to allow the commissioner who acts as secretary additional compensation for his services in the latter capacity.

A member of the county liquor licensing board, who has been designated by the state board as secretary of the county board, should give a separate bond as such secretary, in addition to that required of him as a member of such board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 19, 1914, you write at follows:

> "In the event a county liquor licensing board does not deem it necessary to appoint a secretary for its board, and, in fact, does not make such appointment and the state liquor licensing board designates one of the members of said county board to act as its secretary, may such acting secretary draw a salary in addition to his compensation as a member of said board?
> "Must a member of a county board thus designated as secretary give a bond as such, in addition to the bond required of him as a member of said board?"

Your question is too vague definitely to answer without the assumption of certain facts which I have learned are correct, and to which I shall refer in this opinion. You have failed to state whether either the state board or the local licensing board has fixed any additional compensation, and consequently I do not see how the question of paying such compensation without its being fixed could arise. Therefore, I am assuming that the state board did provide extra compensation for the secretary of the local board.

Section 12 of the act to provide for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors, 103 O. L., 216, provides that the county board may appoint a secretary and fix his compensation, such appointment and compensation to be first approved by the state board. It is then said:

> "In the event no secretary is appointed, as herein proved, the state board shall designate one of the members of said county board to serve as secretary thereof.
> "Before entering upon his duties the secretary shall give a bond, payable to the state of Ohio, in the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, with surety to the approval of the state board, the premium for which, if the same is a surety bond, shall be paid as other expenses of the board are paid."

Section 8 of the act requires the state liquor licensing board to fix the salary of the county licensing commissioners subject to the approval of the governor, but in no case to exceed $5,000 per annum for each commissioner.

It is apparent from the foregoing that there is no statutory objection to the secretary being a member of the county board, but the statute seems to contemplate that when the county board appoints a secretary it must also fix his compensation; therefore, one would infer that when the appointment is not made by the county board it would not be authorized to fix compensation for an appointment made by the state board, which is to act in case the county board fails to appoint. As the state board has authority to fix the compensation of the members of the county board it would seem to follow that if it places upon one of those members the additional duties of secretary, it should also have the power to provide for additional compensation for the extra services performed. If the salary of the county licensing commissioners were definitely fixed by statute the result might be otherwise, but viewing the statute as a whole, and considering the broad powers vested in the members of the state board with reference to the fixing of this compensation it would seem that if the state board in its discretion decided that it was proper to fix additional compensation for the member who acted as secretary, such action on the part of the state board would be proper, and the person for whom extra compensation had been provided is entitled to receive the same.

As the duties of the licensing commissioners are separate and distinct from the work performed by the secretary, and as the secretary is required, under the quoted statute, to give bond, it seems that the member who is designated to act as secretary should give a separate bond as such, which is to be in addition to the bond required of him as a member of the board.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF JUVENILE COURT TO RECALL CHILDREN PREVIOUSLY COMMITTED BY IT TO A CHILDREN'S HOME—POWER OF TRUSTEES OF CHILDREN'S HOME TO REMOVE A CHILD FROM A FOSTER HOME.

The juvenile court can, at its pleasure, recall a child previously committed by it to a children's home, without any specific instructions as to future disposition of such child.

The juvenile court which has committed a child to the children's home, can recall such child after it has been placed in a foster home by the trustees, under section 3100, General Code.

The trustees of county children's homes may remove a child from a foster home without giving any cause for such removal to the foster parents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1914.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 16, 1914, as follows:

"1. Can the juvenile court at its pleasure, recall a child which was previously committed by that court to a children's home without any specific instructions as to the future disposition and who is still an inmate of such home? (See Sec. 1643.)

"2. Can the juvenile court which has committed a child as above recall the child after it has been placed in a foster home, as permitted by Sec. 3100 of the General Code?

"3. Have the trustees of a county children's home the legal right to remove a child from a foster home without giving any cause whatever for the removal to the foster parents?" (See Sec. 3096 and 3103.)

Section 1643, General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., page 869, reads:

"When a child under the age of seventeen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attains the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age."

Section 1653, as amended, 103 O. L., 872, provides in part:

"Section 1653—When a minor under the age of eighteen years, or any ward of the court under this chapter, is found to be dependent or neglected, the judge may make an order committing such child to the care of the children's home if there be one in the county where such court is held, * * *"

Section 3093, of the General Code, provides in part:

"Section 3093. All inmates of such home (the county children's home) who by reason of abandonment, neglect or dependence, have been admitted * * * shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home, until they are eighteen years of age, and if such child is placed out, indentured or adopted, such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age."

At first glance it might seem that section 3093, General Code, relates only to those children in the children's home who have been admitted by the trustees themselves and not to those children committed by the juvenile court. This theory, however, is dissipated by section 3090, General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 890, and reads in part:

"Section 3090. They shall be admitted by the superintendent on the order of the juvenile court or by a majority of such trustees, * * * *"

This section just quoted, clearly shows that in using the word "admitted" in section 3093 and in other sections of the county children's home chapter, as amended in 103 O. L., page 889 to 893, the legislature meant to include those children committed to the children's home by order of the juvenile court, as well as those admitted by order of the trustees.

It will be noted that section 3093, General Code, vests in the trustees of the county children's home the sole and exclusive guardianship of children "during their stay in such home" only. The juvenile court in committing children to the county children's home does not fix any definite time for them to remain there, and inasmuch as section 1643, of the General Code, provides that "the power of the court, over such child, shall continue until the child attains such age," it is clear that if the court decides it is for the best interest of the child to terminate its confinement in such home, it may do so without invading in any manner the powers conferred upon the trustees with reference to such child.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the juvenile court can, at its pleasure, recall a child from the children's home which had previously been committed by it to such institution.

Answering your second question, section 3095 of the General Code, authorizes the trustees of the county children's home to place children in private families, and section 3096 provides in part "for the purpose of securing the well being and progress of such children in enforcement of the agreement, the trustees shall have control and guardianship of such children until they become of age." It is clear that the trustees of the home cannot grant to private individuals any greater authority over children so placed out than they themselves have acquired, and in view of my answer to your first question, it is my opinion in reply to your second question, that the juvenile court can recall a child from a private home in which it was placed by the trustees of the children's home.

In reply to your third question, I beg leave to call your attention to section 3098, General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The trustees shall visit, or cause to be visited, each child placed out by them, at least once in each year and as much oftener as the welfare of the child requires, until it is evident that it is permanently and happily established in such home, and thereafter such visits may be discontinued. The trustees may at any time vacate any agreement or indenture when the welfare of the child may demand it, and replace in another family home or return it to the institution."

From this section it is evident when the trustees deem it for the best interest of the child, they may withdraw such child from any private home without giving any reason to the foster parents for such action. If such foster parents or any other persons have reasons to believe that such transfer will militate against the child's best interests, the matter can be presented to the juvenile court if the child was committed by juvenile court. And that court can, if it sees fit, withdraw the child from the children's home and return it to the private home from which it was taken by the trustees. This by virtue of its power over such child, until it becomes of age, for the purpose of discipline and protection, and the authority of section 1653, General Code, which authorizes the juvenile court to place dependent and neglected children in "the care of some reputable citizen of good moral character."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

VILLAGE AND TOWNSHIP TREASURERS CONTINUED TO ACT AS TREASURERS OF SCHOOL FUNDS UNTIL THEY ARE SUPERSEDED BY THE COUNTY TREASURER BY VIRTUE OF SECTION 4763, GENERAL CODE, MAY DRAW COMPENSATION FOR THEIR SERVICES.

Village and township treasurers continued to act as treasurers of the school funds of their respective village and township school districts until they were superseded by the county treasurer by virtue of section 4763, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 159, and such treasurers continued to draw whatever salary they were entitled to until so superseded by the county treasurers at the time said section became effective.

The clerk of the school district, however, would continue to act as the treasurer of such village and township school districts if a depository had been previously provided and the treasurer dispensed with by the respective boards of education. Under said section 4763, supra, the county treasurers continue to act as the treasurers of the respective village and rural school district funds until such time as a depository is established for such funds, in accordance with section 4782, General Code, 104 O. L., 159.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 30, 1914.

HON. JOHN J. WOOLLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 28, 1914, you submitted to this department for an opinion thereon, the following request:

> "I am in receipt of your copy of opinion rendered to Hon. Clare Caldwell, city solicitor of Niles, Ohio, in answer to his inquiry as to whether inserting the word 'shall' instead of 'may' in section No. 4782, leaves it optional with the board as to whether or not it shall dispense with the office of treasurer of village and rural boards of education.
> "My inquiry is if such boards have not by resolution dispensed with the treasurer, should present treasurers act and receive pay between the time that amended section 4782 (104 O. L., p. 159) became effective and the time the board passed its resolution as provided by amended section 4782 of the General Code of Ohio."

In reply thereto section 4763, General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., page 159, provides as follows:

> "In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

Section 4782, of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 159, provides as follows:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts."

By the provisions of the above sections, it appears that in all rural or village school districts which do not provide depositories in accordance with sections 7604 to 7608, inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of of such districts, and when a depository has been provided for the school money of the district, as provided by law, then the board of education by adopting a resolution to that effect, shall dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to said school district and in that case the clerk of the board of education shall perform the services required by law of the treasurer of such school districts.

Section 4763 prior to its amendments, provided that in each city, village and township school district, the treasurer of the city, village and township funds, respectively, shall be the treasurer of the school funds. Where depositories had been established before the amendment of said section 4763 and 4782, then the clerk of the board of education would continue as such treasurer without any interruption, because of the enactment or passage of said sections. However, if no school depository had been established, then by virtue of the amendment of section 4763, in village or rural school districts, the county treasurer becomes the treasurer of the school funds and succeeds the village or township treasurer of such funds, as the case may be. It is still optional with a board of education as to whether or not it shall provide for a depository, and in such case, until a depository is provided for, then in such school district the city treasurer shall act as the treasurer of the school funds; and in village and rural school districts the county treasurer shall act as the treasurer of the school funds of such district. The act amending sections 4763 and 4782 was passed February 6, 1914, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 19, 1914, and became effective ninety days after being so filed in the office of the secretary of state. Therefore, in all village and rural school districts which had not theretofore provided for a depository, the county treasurer became the treasurer of the school funds when said act became effective and would continue to act as such treasurer until such time as depositories are established for the school moneys of the respective village and rural school districts of the state.

In answer to your question, it is my opinion that village and township treasurers continued to act as treasurers of the school funds of their respective village and township school districts until they were superseded by county treasurers as hereinbefore pointed out, and they would continue to draw whatever salary they were entitled to until so superseded by the county treasurers. This applies, however, only to districts which had not previously provided a depository. Such county treasurers continue to act as the treasurers of the respective village and rural school district funds until such time as a depository is established for such funds, as herebefore stated.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE WORD "TOBACCO" DEFINED.

The word "tobacco" as used in section 12965, General Code, includes chewing tobacco.

HON. W. G. PALMER, City Attorney, Middletown, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 15th, wherein you request my opinion as to whether or not the word "tobacco" used in section 12965, General Code, includes chewing tobacco.

Section 12965, General Code, is as follows:

> "Whoever sells, gives or furnishes to a person under eighteen years of age a cigarette, cigarette wrapper or substitute for either, or a cigar or tobacco, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than two days nor more than thirty days, or both, and for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than three hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than five days nor more than sixty days."

The New Standard Dictionary defines tobacco as:

> "The leaves of the tobacco plant prepared in various ways for smoking, chewing, snuffing and for medical use."

The rule governing the interpretation of statutes is laid down in Black on interpretation of laws, page 45, as follows:

> "If the language of the statute is plain and free from ambiguity and expresses a single definite and sensible meaning, that meaning is conclusively presumed by the meaning which the legislature intended to convey, in other words, the statute must be interpreted literally. * * *"

I do not believe that section 12965 is ambiguous, consequently the word "tobacco" used therein should be given its ordinary meaning; giving it that meaning, it would include not only chewing tobacco but every form of tobacco not otherwise enumerated in the statute.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the word "tobacco" used in section 12965, General Code, includes chewing tobacco.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THE AUTO INSURANCE COMPANY, NORWALK, OHIO.

The proposed articles of incorporation of The Auto Insurance Company, Norwalk, Ohio, not approved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am unable to approve the proposed articles of incorporation of The Auto Insurance Company, of Norwalk, Ohio, enclosed herewith for the following reasons:

The company being not for profit, and having no capital stock, must be organized, if at all, under the provisions of sections 9593 and 9594, of the General Code. These sections do not authorize insurance against theft, insurance against loss by fire is authorized, but it is provided that the articles of incorporation of such a company shall specifically state that one of its objects shall be "to enforce any contract * * entered into whereby the parties thereto agree to be assessed specifically for incidental purposes and the payment of losses which occur to its members."

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AN APPLICATION BY OR ON BEHALF OF THE HUMANE SOCIETY FOR APPOINTING GUARDIAN UNDER SECTIONS 10081, ET SEQ., GENERAL CODE, IS A CIVIL AND NOT A CRIMINAL PROCEEDING —WITNESS FEES.

An application by or on behalf of a humane society for the appointment of a guardian under sections 10081, et seq., General Code, is a civil and not a criminal proceeding, and witnesses subpoenaed to appear before the probate court in such proceeding, may demand their fees as in civil cases. If not demanded, or demanded and not paid, and no order is made by the probate court as to payment of costs, the witness is liable to lose his costs as in other civil cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. H. C. WILCOX, Probate Judge, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 25, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "Will you kindly advise whether upon application by an officer of the humane society to the probate court for guardianship of a child, under sections 10081 et seq., of the General Code, there is any provision for the payment of fees of witnesses subpoenaed upon the hearing of such application?"

Sections 10081 and 10084 of the General Code, inclusive, to which you refer, deal with the taking of a child from its parents by an officer or agent of a humane society and the appointment of a guardian for such child by the probate court.

Section 10081 reads:

> "When an officer or agent of a society organized under this chapter deems it for the best interest of a child, because of cruelty, inflicted upon it, or of its surroundings, that it be removed from the possession and control of the parents, or persons having charge thereof, such officer or agent may take possession of the child summarily."

Section 10076, reads:

> "For this service and for all services rendered in carrying out the provisions of this chapter, such officers, and the officers and agents of the association, shall be allowed and paid such fees as they are allowed for like services in other cases, which must be charged as costs, and reimbursed to the society by the person convicted."

It will be observed that no provision is made for witness fees in the sections to which you refer, neither is there any general provision as to costs incurred in such cases.

Section 11204 provides that witnesses before the probate court shall have the same fees as witnesses in the court of common pleas.

Section 3012 fixes the fees of witnesses in civil cases and provides that they shall be paid on demand by the party who summons the witnesses.

Proceedings under sections 10081 to 10084 are not criminal actions but civil proceedings, and therefore the witnesses when called before the probate court under those sections, are entitled to the fees prescribed by section 3012. If the witnesses fail to demand their fees and there is no other made as to costs in the case, the witnesses lose their fees, just as in other civil cases.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that witness fees under the sections mentioned in your letter, are payable on demand by the person who asks the attendance of the witness, and if the witness fails to make a demand for payment in advance, there is no provision of law under which he can enforce payment.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR A BOND ISSUE FOR INSTALLATION OF PURE WATER SYSTEM ORDERED BY STATE BOARD OF HEALTH, NOT SUBJECT TO REFERENDUM WHEN BOND ISSUE IS TO CARRY OUT AN ORDER OF THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

When a city has been ordered by the state board of health to install a pure water supply, and the council, under the approval of the state board, determines to install a filtration plant, bonds may be issued for the purpose without submitting the question to a vote of the people.

An ordinance for such purpose would be subject to a referendum if the action of council was with respect to a matter as to whether council could make a choice of means; but if council's action was limited to carrying out a specific order of the board of health, without making a choice of means, the referendum would apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. E. W. NEWKIRK, City Solicitor, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of November 25th, you request an early opinion on the following questions:

> "When a city has been ordered by the state board of health, under sections 1249 and 1261, General Code, to install a pure water supply, and the city council, under approval of the state board of health determines to install a filtration plant, has the city the right under section 1259, of the General Code to sell bonds for the purpose without submitting the question of issuing bonds to a vote of the people?
> "Also, would the ordinance therefor be subject to referendum vote on petition signed by the requisite number of voters?"

I regret that I was unable to give you an answer by return mail as you requested, but in view of your evident desire for haste I shall state my conclusions very briefly.

I am clearly of the opinion that under section 1259, General Code, a city may issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a filtration plant under an order of the state board of health and install a pure water supply without submitting the question to a vote of the people. Indeed the section expressly so states.

I am also of the opinion, on the facts stated by you that the ordinance in question would be subject to referendum vote. It is true that section 1259 states that "the question of the issuance of such bonds shall not be required to be submitted to a vote." However, this section was passed before the municipal initiative and referendum provisions were enacted. At that time the intention was to do away with the necessity of submission to a vote of the people arising out of the existence of certain debt limitations. The legislature did not have it in mind to exempt such questions from the operation of requirements like those which have been embodied in the municipal initiative and referendum statutes, because at that time such requirements were unknown. So that when the purpose and intent of the earlier provision is understood, it becomes clear that it is by no means inconsistent with the municipal initiative and referendum law, so that the effect of such inconsistencies need not be considered. Indeed, legislation which is subject to the referendum is not required to be submitted to a vote of the people in the sense in which the term is used in section 1259, because it may be passed and become fully effective without such vote unless a referendum is ordered.

But I do not believe in every case the financial legislation necessary to carry out an order of the state board of health is subject to the referendum. It is only where, as in the case you submit, the state board of health has merely ordered the installation of a pure water supply without specifying the means that shall be used to this end; so that some choice in the matter is left to the legislative power of the municipality, that the power to order a referendum exists. In such case the people in my judgment, have the same right that the council has, viz., to choose either by initiative or referendum the appropriate agency for securing a pure water supply and complying with the order of the state board of health. Indeed, were the bonds to be issued merely for the general purpose of constructing a waterworks, I would hold that the ordinance issuing them would not be subject to a referendum at all, but inasmuch as the ordinance goes further and stipulates that the proceeds of the bonds shall be used in the construction of a filtration plant, thus making a choice of means, I would be of the opinion, as already stated, that the right to a referendum exists.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REGISTRAR OF VITAL STATISTICS SUBJECT TO PROVISIONS OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT—IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE—VILLAGE REGISTRARS NOT IN CIVIL SERVICE.

Local registrars of vital statistics in cities are in the employ of the state and are subject to the provisions of the civil service act. They are in the classified service and are under the jurisdiction of the state civil service commission.

Local registrars in village and townships are not subject to the civil service act for the reason that the statute makes the village clerks and township clerks the local registrars in their respective districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 22, 1914, you inquire:

> "Each city has a registrar of vital statistics who is primarily an employe of the city. We are informed that this registrar of vital statistics furnishes statistical information to the state of Ohio, for which information the county in which the city is located pays. Is he in the classified service?"

It appears from the letter of Mr. Keegan, attached, that in many cases the secretary of the city board of health, who is in the unclassified service of the city, is the local registrar of vital statistics. In other cases an employe of the city board of health, who is in the classified service of the city, is the local registrar by appointment.

Section 197, General Code, provides:

"A state system of registration of births and deaths is hereby established, which shall consist of a central bureau of vital statistics and primary registration districts. The central bureau shall be maintained at the capitol of the state. Each city, village and township shall constitute a primary registration district. The secretary of state shall have charge of such system, and general supervision of the central bureau."

Section 201, General Code, provides:

"In villages the village clerk and in townships the township clerk shall be the local registrar, and in cities the city board of health shall appoint a local registrar of vital statistics, and each shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the state registrar, the provisions of this chapter and to the penalties provided by law. With the approval of the state registrar, each local registrar shall appoint a deputy who, in case of absence, illness or disability of the local registrar, shall act in his stead. Acceptance of such appointment shall be in writing and such deputy shall be subject to the rules, regulations and provisions governing local registrars."

Section 230, General Code, provides in part:

"Each local registrar shall be entitled to be paid the sum of twenty-five cents for each birth and each death certificate properly and completely made out and registered with him, and correctly copied, and duly returned by him to the state registrar; provided, in cities, in which the local registrar receives a fixed salary, in lieu of fees, he shall be entitled to fees based upon a sliding scale, according to the population of the last federal census, and said local registrar shall be entitled to be paid the following fee for each birth and death certificate properly and completely made out and registered with him, and correctly copied and duly returned by him to the state registrar. * * * * * All amounts payable to registrars under provisions of this section shall be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the registration districts are located, upon certification by the state registrar. * * * * *"

By virtue of these sections the state is divided into registration districts, and a local registrar provided for each district. These local registrars, as such, are in the employ of the state and not of the city, village or township. The bureau of vital statistics is in charge of the secretary of state who is a state officer. These local registrars are not deputies, assistants, clerks or secretaries of principal executive officers or boards within the meaning of section 8 of the civil service act.

The statute makes the village clerks and the township clerks the local registrars for their respective districts. These clerks hold elective offices and are not therefore subject to civil service regulations.

In cities the city board of health is authorized to appoint the local registrars. The statute does not determine who shall be appointed but leaves the appointment to the discretion of the board. The board may appoint its secretary, or other employe, or it may appoint an outside person.

The fact that the present holders of these positions of local registrars are also holding positions in the classified or unclassified service of the city, does not alter their status as state employes. They are in fact holding two positions and must secure a separate appointment to each.

As the local registrars of vital statistics in cities are in the employ of the state, they are subject to the provisions of the civil service act. They are in the classified service and are under the jurisdiction of the state civil service commission.

Respectfully,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF MIAMI UNIVERSITY—LEGAL TRANSACTION OF BUSINESS BY SUCH TRUSTEES.

But seven members of the board of trustees of Miami university are required to transact business legally.

Trustees of Miami university are not entitled to a per diem compensation, but are entitled to actual expenses incurred as trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 19, 1914, you submitted to this office for a written opinion, the following request:

> "1st. How many members of the board of trustees of the Miami university are required to transact business legally? (See section 4, page 184, O. L., Vol. 7, and section 4, page 94, O. L., Vol. 8.)
> "2nd. Are the trustees of Miami university entitled to per diem compensation and expenses? (See O. L., 7, page 184, and Vol. 66, page 73.)
> "3rd. In the absence of statutory law or appropriations by the legislature, are they entitled to either compensation or expense actually incurred?"

The original act providing for the establishment of the Miami university, was passed by the state legislature on February 17, 1809, and is found in the seventh volume of Ohio Laws, 184. Said original act has been amended several times and the said amendments are found in the following volumes of the Ohio laws:

8 Ohio Laws, at page 94;
12 Ohio Laws, at page 83;
19 Ohio Laws, at page 140;
20 Ohio Laws, at page 51;
22 Ohio Laws, at page 68;
66 Ohio Laws, at page 73.

In the original enactment, 7 O. L., page 184, section 4 thereof provides as follows:

"Be it further enacted, That the said trustees shall have power and authority to elect a president, who shall preside in the said university; and also to appoint a secretary, treasurer, collector, professors, tutors, instructors, and all such officers and servants in the university, as they shall deem necessary for carrying into effect the design of the institution, and shall have authority, from time to time, to establish the name and number, and prescribe the duties of all the officers and servants to be employed in the university, except herein otherwise provided, and may empower the president or some other member of the corporation, to administer such oaths as they shall authorize, for the good government and well ordering of the said university: Provided, That no business of the corporation shall be transacted at any meeting, unless seven of the said trustees shall be present."

Said act was first amended on February 6, 1810, 8 O. L., page 94, and section 4 of said act so amending the original act to establish the Miami university, provides as follows:

"Be it further enacted, That the trustees shall meet at the town of Hamilton, in the county of Butler, on the first Monday of March next, for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into operation; any five of whom shall have power to transact business, and any less number to adjourn from time to time."

The three subsequent amendatory acts do not contain any statutory provisions which in any wise affect section 4 of the original act, or section 4 of the first amendatory act which appears at page 94 of 8 O. L. In other words, these three amendatory acts contain provisions which concerned subjects other than those contained in the sections just mentioned.

The last act entitled an act "to amend the act establishing the Miami university, passed February 17, 1809, and of the several acts amendatory thereto," appears in the sixty-sixth volume of the Ohio Laws, at page 73. It is well at this point to note the title of this act in that it specifically says that it is an act to amend not only the original act establishing the Miami university, passed February 17, 1809, but also the several acts amendatory thereto. The last act changes the number of trustees constituting the board of trustees of the Miami university, and changes the method of their appointment by providing that such trustees shall be appointed by the governor rather than by the legislature. Section 1 of said act provides as follows:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of Ohio, That there shall be hereafter twenty-seven trustees of Miami university. Immediately after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, to appoint three trustees of said university to serve for three years, three trustees to serve for six years, and nine trustees to serve for nine years from the first day of March, 1869; who, with the twelve trustees whose terms of service have not yet expired, shall constitute the board of trustees of said university. As the terms of service of said trustees expire, the persons appointed in their place shall hold their offices for the term of nine years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified. In all other cases of vacancy, the person appointed to fill the same shall hold his seat until the term of the former trustee would have expired, and no longer."

It is to be noted that section 4 of said act specifically repeals the act passed

February 7, 1814, and so much of the act passed February 10, 1824, as regulates the appointment of trustees of said university. Nothing is said in the last act concerning the number of trustees that shall constitute a quorum.

Section 1 of said act quoted is carried into the General Code as section 7939 in the following language:

> "The government of Miami university shall be vested in twenty-seven trustees, to be appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate. Nine trustees shall be apopinted every third year, for a term of nine years, beginning on the first day of March in the year of their appointment. Vacancies in the board of trustees shall be filled for the unexpired term in the same manner."

It is to be noted that section 4 of the original act (7 O. L., page 184) contains the specific provision "that no business of the corporation shall be transacted at any meeting unless seven of the said trustees shall be present."

The first act amending the original act (8 O. L., p. 94) was enacted by the legislature for the purpose of authorizing the trustees to lay off a town to be called Oxford. Such purpose is expressed in section 1 of said act in the following language:

> "Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the trustees of the Miami university shall cause a town to be laid off, on such part of the land described in said act, as they may think proper, to be known by the name of Oxford; etc."

Again reverting to section 4 of said last mentioned act, which section is above quoted, it is to be noted that said section provides that the trustees shall meet at the town of Hamilton, county of Butler, on the first Monday of March next, for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into operation, and closes with the specific proviso that any five of such trustees shall have power to transact business and any less number to adjourn from time to time. By reason of the phraseology contained in the last mentioned section, it is apparent that the quorum therein fixed of five members applies only to the specific provision as expressed therein in section 1 of said act, to wit, for the purpose of establishing a town to be laid off and to be known as the town of Oxford. A quorum of seven members for the transaction of business of the corporation, as provided in the original act (7 O. L., p. 184) is for the transaction of the general business of the corporation. The provision for the transaction of business by five members as provided in section 4 of the first amendatory act (8 O. L., page 94) is for a specific purpose as above stated. Inasmuch as section 4 of the original act, supra, has never been changed, amended or repealed, I am therefore of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that seven members of the board of trustees of the Miami university are required to transact business legally.

I find no statutory provision that warrants the payment of a per diem compensation to the trustees of said Miami university. As to actual expenses, however, I am of the opinion that such trustees are entitled to such expenses incurred in performing the duties imposed upon them by the trusteeship.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO DIRECTLY DISSOLVE RURAL TOWNSHIP SCHOOL DISTRICT AND ATTACH TERRITORY TO VILLAGE DISTRICT.

County boards of education do not have the power under section 4736, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 138, to directly dissolve a rural township school district and attach the territory of the same to a village district lying within such rural township school district.

A rural school district, or a portion of the same, may be detached and attached to an adjacent district or adjacent districts in the manner discussed in the answer to the second question.

County boards of education are not empowered to transfer territory from an established rural township school district to an established village district, and thereby leaving the township school district of an area materially less than fifteen square miles, but such board must add territory to such township rural district so that its area will be at least not less than fifteen square miles.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. IRVING CARPENTER, Attorney at Law, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 31, 1914, you submitted a communication to this department containing three requests for an opinion thereon, as follows:

> "1. Has a county board of education power to dissolve a rural township school district and attach the territory of such district to a village district lying within such rural township school district?
> "2. If so, what procedure should be followed to effect such transfer?
> "3. Does section 4736 empower a county board of education to transfer territory from an established rural township school district to an established village district, leaving the township district of an area materially less than fifteen square miles?"

Section 4735 of the General Code, as amended 104 O. L., at page 138 thereof, provides as follows:

> "The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

I assume at the outset that the village school district referred to in your inquiry relates to a village district which constitutes part of the county school district and is under the control of the county board of education.

Analyzing said section, it is to be noted that its provision is clear that present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education. The word "change" as employed therein, does not necessarily mean to abrogate or dissolve such districts, but merely means that such districts may be changed only. This view is strengthened by the language employed that such existing township or special school districts shall constitute rural school districts; that is to say, they shall continue as rural school districts as they existed at the time of the adoption of said section, and shall so continue to exist until such time as the county board of education sees fit to change them. It does not seem that the language so employed in said section is sufficient to authorize the board of education to dissolve or abrogate such districts.

> "The county board of education shall as soon as possible after organizing make a survey of its district. The board shall arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. To this end the county board shall have power by resolution at any regular or special meeting to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. A map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor. In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation. In no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles. In changing boundary lines and other work of a like nature the county board shall ask the assistance of the county surveyor and the latter is hereby required to give the services of his office at the formal request of the county board."

It is to be noted that this section concerns only the right to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another. Such county board can so change the district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another for the purpose of arranging school districts according to topography and population, in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils. There is absolutely no mention of the power or authority to entirely dissolve or abrogate a school district in said section 4736, supra. The methods provided for dissolving rural districts and joining same to other contiguous districts, are provided for in section 4735-1 and 4735-2 of the General Code, respectively, as amended in 104 O. L., page 138. Said sections respectively provide as follows:

> "Section 4735-1. When a petition signed by not less than one-fourth of the electors residing within the territory constituting a rural school district, praying that the rural district be dissolved and joined to a contiguous rural or village district, is presented to the board of education of such district; or when such board, by a majority vote of the full membership thereof, shall decide to submit the question to dissolve and join a contiguous rural or village district, the board shall fix the time of holding such election at a special or general election. The clerk of the board of such district shall notify the deputy state supervisors of elections, of the date of such election and the purposes thereof, and such deputy state supervisors shall provide therefor. The clerk of the board of education shall post notices thereof in given public places within the district. The result shall be determined by a majority vote of such electors.
> "Section 4735-2. The legal title of the property of the rural school district, in case such rural district is dissolved and joined to a rural or village district as provided in section 4735-1, shall become vested in the board of education of the rural or village school district to which such district is joined. The school fund of such dissolved rural district shall become a part of the fund of the rural or village school district which it voted to join. The dissolution of such district shall not be complete until the board of education of the district has provided for the payment of any indebtedness that may exist."

Therefore, in answer to your question, I am of the opinion that a county board of education has not the power to dissolve a rural township school district and attach the territory of the same to a village district lying within such rural township school district, but that such dissolution must be accomplished in the manner provided for in sections 4735-1 and 4735-2. This answer to your first question, also answers your second. However, a rural school district, or a portion of the same may be detached and attached to an adjacent district or adjacent districts in the manner hereinafter discussed.

Now answering specifically your third question, it is not necessary to further analyze said section 4736, supra. All the powers vested in and that may be exercised by a county board of education, are subject to the limitation that in no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles.

As heretofore pointed out, the county board of education can make a survey of its district, arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils, change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another; may proceed without regard to township lines, shall provide that adjoining rural disticts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation, and may ask the assistance of the county surveyor by formal request, in doing same.

It is clear under section 4735, supra, that present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education. It is also clear under section 4736 that a county board of education can take territory from an existing district of less than fifteen square miles, and attach it to an adjacent district, thereby making the district to which such territory is attached, of larger area than fifteen square miles; but in order to avoid leaving the other remaining district less than fifteen square miles, it then seems to devolve upon such county board to add to the latter district sufficient territory from one or more adjacent rural districts so as not to leave the latter less than fifteen square miles. Or, if this is not done, to add such latter or remaining district to an adjacent rural district or adjacent rural districts, so as to avoid said limitation contained in said section 4736, supra. However, if such county board has the power to take part of a district in changing rural district lines, why, therefore, cannot it take all of the territory so long as such heretofore mentioned limitation is avoided? In fact, the only way in most instances that a county board can exercise its powers as enumerated in said section 4736, supra, and also avoid the limitation as therein enumerated, it is absolutely necessary to work out the readjustment of rural district lines in some such manner as hereby pointed out.

Therefore, in direct answer to your third question, it is my judgment that a county board of education cannot transfer territory from an established rural township school district to an established village district, thereby leaving the township district of an area materially less than fifteen square miles, but that such county board must further readjust rural district lines and add territory to the resulting township district so as to make this district of an area of not less than fifteen square miles, when territory is so transferred from such township rural district to an established village district.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST PROVIDE SUITABLE CASES FOR SAFE KEEPING AND PRESERVATION OF BOOKS—ALSO FURNISH NECESSARY STATIONERY TO PROBATE JUDGE.

Under section 1583, General Code, it is incumbent upon the county commissioners to provide suitable cases for the safe keeping and preservation of the books and also to furnish such blank books, blanks and stationery as the probate judge requires in the discharge of his official duties.

Under section 1595, General Code, it is the duty of the county commissioners to furnish blank books for keeping the records enumerated in section 1594, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. WILLIAM MOFFETT, Probate Judge, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 10, 1914, you submitted a request to this department as follows:

> "The commissioners of Carroll county passed a resolution and placed same upon their journal, requiring any county official before purchasing any stationery or blanks for his particular office to first obtain a requisition from them in writing, signed by at least two of their number so to do.
> "What I want to know is, if such a resolution is binding on me as probate judge, or can I proceed and purchase the necessary stationery, blanks, etc., for my office without obtaining such requisition and bind the county for payments?"

Replying thereto, section 1583 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "A probate court is established in each county which shall be held at the county seat. Such court shall be held in an office furnished by the county commissioners, in which the books, records and papers pertaining to the court shall be deposited and safely kept by the judge thereof. The commissioners shall provide suitable cases for the safe keeping and preservation of the books and papers of the court, and furnish such blank books, blanks and stationery as the probate judge requires in the discharge of official duties."

Section 1594 provides what books shall be kept by the probate court. Section 1595 of the General Code provides that county commissioners shall furnish certain blank books, etc., as follows:

> "To each record required by the preceding section, an index shall be attached securely bound in the volume. Each index shall be kept up with the entries therein and refer to such entries alphabetically by the names of the parties or persons in which originally entered, indexing the page of the book where the entry is made. On the order of the probate judge, blank books for such records and indexes shall be furnished by the county commissioners at the expense of the county."

By virtue of section 1583, supra, it is incumbent upon the county commissioners to provide suitable cases for the safe keeping and preservation of the books and also to furnish such blank books, blanks and stationery as the probate judge requires in the discharge of his official duties.

Under section 1595, supra, it is clearly the duty of the county commissioners to furnish blank books for keeping the records enumerated in section 1594, together with proper indexes. While it is the mandatory duty of the commissioners to furnish such books, papers, blanks, stationery, etc., as specified in said sections, nevertheless the method or manner of furnishing the same, I take it, is left to the discretion of the county commissioners. The commissioners may desire to maintain a check upon expenditures, as a matter of business policy, and inasmuch as it is their duty to furnish such books, blanks and papers, I can see no objection to their adopting such methods as will enable them to better maintain such check as a matter of business.

Therefore, in direct answer to your inquiry, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners can legally adopt such resolution as stated in your letter of inquiry, and that the same is binding on you as the probate judge of your county.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN A SCHOOL MAY BE SUSPENDED BECAUSE THE AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE DURING THE PRECEDING YEAR WAS LESS THAN TWELVE.

When a school has been suspended because the average daily attendance during the preceding year was less than twelve, in accordance with section 7730, General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., 139, and the territory comprising said district has been annexed to a contiguous district, then the board of education would be compelled to furnish conveyance or transportation to such pupils in accordance with the provisions of section 7731, and such board will be required to transport or furnish conveyance only to those pupils residing in such suspended district who live more than two miles from the school to which they are assigned.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. ALLEN THURMAN WILLIAMSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 23, 1914, you request of me an official opinion, as follows:

> "1. Under section 7730 and 7731, General Code, where a school has been suspended because the average daily attendance during the preceding school year was less than twelve, and the territory comprising said district has been annexed to contiguous districts, is the board of education compelled to transport all pupils within the suspended district regardless of the distance they may reside from the school to which they are assigned, or is the board required to transport only those pupils residing in such suspended district where they live more than two miles from the school to which they are assigned?"

Replying thereto, section 7730, of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 139, provides as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and in such rural school districts shall provide for the conveyance of the pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the local board may direct. No school of any rural district shall be suspended or abolished until after sixty days' notice has been given by the school board of such district. Such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district."

Section 7731, of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 140, provides as follows:

"In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. The transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the most direct public highway shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided, the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the respective residence of all pupils, except when such residences are situated more than one-half mile from the public road. When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district."

Analyzing said sections, I find in the first part of section 7730 that the board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools, in such village or rural school district. Immediately following said provision, I find the further provision that upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and such rural school district shall provide for the conveyance of pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. Following these provisions, there then follows a further provision to the effect that when the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school or schools as the board may direct.

There is no reference in said section relating to or requiring conveyance when a school is suspended, because the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve. The provisions as to conveyance in said section relates only to the occasion when the schools are suspended by the board of education.

Said section 7731 provides in effect that in all rural or village school districts, where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such schools, and that transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house by the most direct public highway, shall be optional with the board of education. It would seem to follow, therefore, that when a school has been suspended because the average daily attendance during the preceding year was less than twelve, and the territory comprising said district has been annexed to a contiguous district, then the board of education would be compelled to furnish conveyance or transportation to such pupils in accordance with the provision laid down in section 7731, supra. That is to say, such board would be required to transport or furnish conveyance only to those pupils residing in such suspended district who live more than two miles from the school to which they are assigned.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

REPEAL OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENT LEGISLATION FOR IMPROVEMENT OF STREETS—UNLAWFUL TO USE MONEYS DERIVED FROM SALE OF BONDS FOR SUCH IMPROVEMENT.

The repeal of the special assessment legislation for the improvement of a street makes it unlawful to use moneys derived from the sale of bonds for the city's share of such improvement, if the same have been issued under section 3821, General Code, and not if the same have been issued under section 3939, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. C. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 18th, you requested my opinion upon the following question:

> "In August, 1912, a resolution, based on plans and specifications on file and approved, was offered in council, to pave Simpson street with concrete. Notice was given the property owners that this street was so to be constructed of concrete, and resolution was published. No objections were filed or claims made for damages. After the proper time had elapsed an ordinance was passed to proceed with the improvement, and bonds sold to pay the city's share of the cost, and those funds deposited to the credit of this fund.
> "For several reasons the construction of the street has been delayed to this time and now a new council has been elected.
> "It is now proposed to repeal all the legislation for the construction of this street; start in with new resolution and new ordinance, and pave the street with another material. There is no doubt of the right to repeal all the legislation of the former council, but the question now comes up, can the director of public service give an order, and can the city auditor issue warrant for the payment of the construction of pavement on the same street, but of different material than that which the bonds were sold to build?
> "The bond ordinance recites, among other things, the purpose of the issue and sale of the bonds, and the proceeds shall be used for no other purpose. Does the repeal of the legislation to build a concrete street, by implication, repeal and annul the right to use this fund for the construction of pavement on the same street but of a different material?"

I am afraid I cannot give you a very positive answer to this question. Had the outstanding bonds been issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, the answer would be clear. In that event, I would be of the opinion that the repeal of all of the legislation looking toward the improvement would make it unlawful to use the proceeds of the bonds for the purpose of another improvement of the same street, and the only thing which could be done with such proceeds would be to pay them into the sinking fund where they should be made to accumulate in order to retire the bonds as they might fall due.

But the power of a municipal corporation to issue bonds to pay its proportion of the total cost of a given improvement is not so intimately connected with the legislation made necessary by the intention to assess the remainder upon the abutting property. A city may, if it desires, pay the entire cost of paving a street by general tax levy, and issue bonds therefor. In that event, various measures and ordinances necessary to complete a valid assessment need not be enacted at all. The bond ordinance in such a case may be the initial one. (Trust Company vs. Cleveland, 1 N. P. n. s., 493.)

Even when the improvement of a street by special assessments is contemplated, provision for the payment of the proportion of the cost of the expense thereof, which the city intends to assume, may be made by the issuance of bonds under section 3939, General Code, by a separate and independent proceeding. It was held in the sixth paragraph of the syllabus in Heffner vs. The City of Toledo, 75 O. S., 413, that under section 2835, Revised Statutes (now section 3939, General Code), the council of the city may by a resolution or ordinance, passed by the affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of a specific improvement before the passage of a resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement. The court, in the syllabus and in the opinion in the case cited, seems to distinguish between the nature of the power granted under section 3821, General Code, to "issue and sell bonds * * * to pay the corporation's part of any such * * special assessment and improvement," and the general power of borrowing money, possessed under the Longworth act, section 3939, et seq., General Code. In fact, the distinction seems to be drawn so as to be directly in point in determining the answer to your question. As stated by Summers, J., at page 430:

> "If this (referring to what is now section 3821, General Code,) was the only authority to issue bonds for this purpose, it might be that there was power only to meet the city's part of the cost * * and, as the latter could not be made until an ordinance to proceed with the improvement had been passed, that counsel's contention is sound that is a prerequisite to the issuing of the bonds. But, as has been shown, the authority already existed in the Longworth law, and the provision in section 53 is not to be construed as limiting the power conferred by the Longworth law, but as a grant of additional power. Attention to the provisions of the Longworth law will disclose that, as there conferred, the power was not limited to the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of improvements that had been provided for by ordinance, but might be exercised when they were merely contemplated. It was not necessary that a resolution should have been passed declaring the intention to make the improvement, but the statement in the ordinance providing for the bonds, that they were to be issued for a specific purpose, was sufficient evidence of the intention."

Accordingly, I am of the opinion that if the bonds, of which you speak, were issued under section 3821, General Code, the power to issue them depends upon the existence of legislation looking toward an assessment, so that the repeal of such legislation would impliedly work a repeal of the ordinance issuing the bonds, in so far as the same constitutes authority to use the bonds for the purpose for which issued; and that in such event the proceeds of the bonds would have to be paid into the sinking fund, in the manner already described; but if the bonds were issued under section 3939, General Code, the repeal of the assessment legislation would in nowise affect the status of the proceeds of the bonds issued and sold thereunder, and the fund could be maintained intact until subsequent legislation looking toward an assessment had been perfected and the proceeds applied to the payment of the city's portion of the total cost of the improvement when made.

The proceedings of the council will readily show, I think, whether or not the bonds were issued under section 3821 or under section 3939, General Code.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AMENDMENT TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF ABSTRACTING COMPANIES IN ORDER TO FORM TITLE GUARANTEEING AND TRUST COMPANIES—SUCH AMENDMENT NOT PERMISSIBLE—RULE.

Inasmuch as many title guarantee and trust companies have become such by amendment to the articles of incorporation of abstracting companies, the same rule should be followed in the future although technically such an amendment is not permissible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have verbally resubmitted to me the question considered by me in my opinion to you under date of June 26, 1914. The question is as follows:

> "May a corporation organized with original power to promote the purpose 'of searching land titles and land and other records; preparing, procuring and furnishing abstracts and certificates of title to real property; preparing, procuring and furnishing abstracts and certificates of title to bonds, mortgages and other evidences of indebtedness and affecting investments in the same; purchasing and owning real estate as a place for carrying on its business, and doing any and all things necessary or incidental to such business' by amendment to its articles of incorporation acquired power to guarantee titles?"

In the former opinion referred to I gave a negative answer to this question. As the opinion itself discloses I then considered and still consider the question to be a very doubtful one. Nevertheless, upon a careful reconsideration of the question as an abstract proposition of law, I incline to the same view which I expressed in the other opinion.

However, other considerations have been suggested to me which make the ultimate question to be decided somewhat different from the one which was then considered. It appears that section 9850, of the General Code, which was interpreted in the former opinion, and which defines the powers of a title guarantee and trust company, was passed in 1902, prior to which date, of course, there were no companies of this class in Ohio. At that time there were in existence companies organized as abstracting corporations under charters similar to that considered by me in the former opinion. These companies, of which there were not many in the state, were permitted, without question, to acquire the newly created franchise by amendment to their several articles of incorporation. In this way, a majority, if not all of the title guarantee and trust companies now doing business in this state acquired their present charter powers.

It is true, as a general rule, that when the law is plain, an erroneous official interpretation thereof by administrative officers whose duty it is to apply it will not be binding upon the courts nor even upon the successors of such administrative officers; but where the question is doubtful, as it is in this case, facts like those which I have stated are entitled to some weight even in a court, and in my judgment should be given great and determining weight from the administrative point of view. To deny to the particular company which now seeks to amend its articles of incorporation in the manner referred to, the privilege of doing what other companies in a similar situation have been permitted to do, would be to impose a hardship upon that company which could scarcely be justified unless the former administrative rulings had been clearly and palpably erroneous. Moreover, while it is quite proper from the viewpoint of the state, which would have the right to question the exercise of ultra vires powers, for the secretary of state to decline to file articles of incorporation or an amendment therto which attempted to confer powers greater than those authorized by statute to be conferred upon a given corporation, yet it must be admitted that the issuance by the secretary of state of a certificate of incorporaion or amendment confers but the color of authority upon the corporation; so that if the exercise of a given franchise is properly questioned either by action brought in the interest of the dissenting stockholders or on the relation of the attorney general in proceedings in quo warranto, the validity of the charter as a whole or the amendment thereto may be determined by the courts notwithstanding the issuance of your certificate.

These considerations then bring me to the conclusion that in a case like this where other corporations have been permitted without question to do that which the particular corporation now desires to do, and the question is doubtful, the ultimate decision should be left to the courts or to the legislature; and while courts might be called upon to act by proceedings in mandamus to compel the secretary of state to issue a certificate as well as by proceedings in quo warranto or by action of dissenting stockholders, yet the administrative officers of the state would be justified morally and legally in following the procedure laid down by the previous action of the state officers in similar cases.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the certificate of amendment presented to you, and upon which my opinion of June 26, 1914, was rendered, should be filed in your office notwithstanding that I incline, as already stated, to adhere to the technical view of the law expressed in that opinion. The case affords an instance wherein substantial justice is to be preferred to the observance of the technicalities.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN A CORPORATION GOING OUT OF BUSINESS IS NOT LIABLE FOR EXCISE TAX.

An express company, which goes out of business on midnight of June 30th in a given year is not liable for excise taxes on the basis of its report of gross receipts for the year ending on that date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 14th requesting my opinion upon the following facts:

"The United States Express Company within the time limited by section 5449, General Code, filed with the commission a statement of its property and business in this state and elsewhere, setting forth various items specified in section 5450, General Code. That is to say, among other things the statement filed by the company exhibited the value of the property in Ohio as of the thirtieth day of June, 1914, and the company's gross receipts from intrastate business in Ohio for the year ending on said date.

"The company's report, however, (or else an informal statement made by the company to the commission) advised the commission that the company went out of business at midnight on the thirtieth of June, and that since that date up to the time of filing the report, the company had done no business in Ohio or elsewhere, and did not intend to carry on the express business in the future at all.

"Thereupon in September the commission assessed the value of the property of the company on the basis of the statement above referred to, and about the same date ascertained and determined from said statement the gross intrastate receipts of the company for business done for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June as authorized and required seemingly by section 5477, General Code. Thereupon on or about the first Monday of October the commission certified its determination to the auditor of state, and in due course of events the auditor of state computed 2% taxes upon the amount so determined and certified the same for collection to the treasurer of state.

"The company admits the propriety of assessing its property as that of an express company on the basis of the statement above referred to, and its obligation to make the report which it did make for the purpose of such assessment, but claims that it is not liable for any excise taxes for this year because it ceased to do business at midnight on the thirtieth of June, 1914, has not done business in the state since that date, and has gone out of business altogether.

"Is the excise tax properly charged against the company on the facts stated and what should be the commission's course in the matter?"

I may say by way of preface to the discussion of the main question that the company was, as it concedes, certainly under obligation to make the report in question; and that the commission certainly had the right, and it was its duty to assess its property as that of an express company for simple taxation upon the various duplicates for the year 1914-1915.

Express companies, together with telephone and telegraph companies are placed in a class by themselves for the purpose of making reports to the tax commission. Other public utilities, except sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies are required to make two reports to the commission, one relating to property and the other relating to receipts or earnings; the property report being used as the basis of the property assessment and the receipts or earnings report being used as the basis of the determination of the excise tax. Express, telephone and telegraph companies, however, are authorized and required by law to combine these two reports in one, and with respect to express companies at least some of the facts which are used by the commission in ascertaining property valuations are also used in determining the basis of the excise tax, for section 5450, prescribing the form of the report, requires express companies to report not only an inventory of their real and personal property within and outside of Ohio, a statement of the market value of their shares of stock and the amount of their bonded indebtedness, but also the gross intrastate receipts in Ohio and the gross receipts from whatever source of each office in the state. The receipts are used in making the apportionment of the property valuation in the following manner: The value of all the property of the company is divided between Ohio and the rest of the world, so to speak, upon the basis of the length of lines of rail and water routes over which the company did business on the thirtieth day of June, in Ohio as compared with the total length of such routes everywhere; but the basis of apportionment of this value in Ohio among the various taxing districts therein is the relative amounts of the receipts of the offices of the company in Ohio. (Section 5457, General Code.)

It is true that no use in arriving at property valuations or apportionment can be made of the gross intrastate receipts as such. So that the company might, to be perfectly consistent, have insisted upon the right to omit from its statement a report of such receipts as are required generally by paragraph 15 of section 5450, General Code. But this consideration is immaterial and the fact that the company actually reported its gross intrastate receipts does not in the view which I take of the case estop it from disclaiming liability for excise taxation; while on the other hand the fact that there was but a single report or statement to be made, and that statement was required of all companies subject to the obligation to report for any purpose whatever, affords, to my mind, a sufficient reason for the company's action in including in its report or statement the amount of its gross intrastate receipts.

The report then being properly made and before the commission, together with the information therein, or otherwise conveyed to the commission, that the company went out of business at midnight on the thirtieth day of June, what were the powers and duties of the commission in the first instance with respect to the ascertainment of the gross receipts of the company for the year ending on that date, and the certification thereof to the auditor of state?

This inquiry requires consideration of the fundamental nature of the excise tax and the identification of the exact subject of that tax.

On their face the sections providing for the exaction of the excise tax bear evidence which is material in the solution of these questions.

Section 5485 describes the tax which is to be charged for collection upon the basis of the gross receipts of an express company for a year ending on the thirtieth day of June as "an excise tax for the privilege of carrying on its intrastate business."

So that it is apparent that the receipts themselves are not taxed as property, but are merely used as the basis of the tax upon a privilege. The privilege is that of carrying on a certain kind of business in the state. Now at this point a sharp distinction must be made I think between occupation income taxes on the one hand and privilege taxes on the other hand. An occupation income tax is laid upon receipts of persons pursuing the occupation as such, and upon the theory that the conduct of the occupation is a natural right and is not controlled as such by the legislative power; privilege taxes are essentially license taxes. (Cooley on Taxation, Vol. 1, p. 31.)

As said in Bank vs. Apthorp, 12 Mass., 252, when a tax is laid upon a privilege the legislature has in effect "assumed a right to sell" the privilege at a reasonable price. (See Southern Gum Co. vs. Laylin, 66 O. S., 576.)

The fact that a privilege tax assumes the form of an excise rather than a license does not change its fundamental nature. The effect is the same. Ordinarily a license fee is exacted as a condition precedent to the doing of the thing in the future, but this is not necessarily the case. It may be conceded that the privilege may be taxed after its exercise if the law will bear that interpretation, or that the privilege may be valued and taxed as a thing in being on a certain day, subject to indefinite prolongation rather than as the privilege of doing the thing contemplated for any definite period of time, as a year.

But when the privilege tax assumes the form of an excise it is manifest that it must be based upon past receipts, income or other ascertainable facts. So that the mere fact that such is the case does not establish the conclusion that the privilege is taxed after its exercise rather than as a condition precedent to its continued exercise.

There are other sections of the related statutes which seem to indicate that the subject of taxation in this case is the privilege of doing business in the future rather than the already exercised privilege of doing business in the past. I refer generally, without quoting them, to sections 5509 and 5512, General Code, which provide for the cancellation of articles of incorporation of incorporated public utilities, and for injunction to restrain doing business on the part either of incorporated or unincorporated public utilities, as means for enforcing compliance with the taxation laws. But these sections to my mind are not conclusive because they afford remedies for the violation of other provisions of the act which relate to property taxation as well as for the enforcement of those provisions which relate to excise taxation.

The most satisfying test, I think, for determining whether the privilege taxed, is that of continuing in business or that of connecting business already transacted, is afforded by the legislative history of the act rather than by anything fully apparent on the face thereof. If when the law went into effect it required a report of gross receipts for the past year on the basis of which a tax was then immediately to be laid, a strong presumption would be afforded to the effect that the subject of the tax was intended to be the privilege of conducting the business for the succeeding year. If, on the other hand, when the law was enacted its effect was postponed so as not to require the making of a report and the payment of taxes, based upon the receipts reported, until after the expiration of a year from the date when the act became effective, then a contrary presumption would be suggested. For it is at least not reasonable to assume that the legislature would in the first instance declare that to have been a privilege and tax it as such, which had been exercised without any idea of privilege. That is to say, if at a given time an express company had been doing business in this state for a period of one year, say, and if prior to the expiration of that year the legislature declared that the express business in this state constituted a privilege, and imposed a tax upon it as such, based upon receipts for the past year, a constitutional question would be suggested as to whether or not that could be taxed as a privilege which has been exercised as a matter of common right.

The present tax upon the privilege of carrying on intrastate express business in Ohio was enacted in 1911, 102 O. L., 224. It became effective on or about the first of June, 1911, and required, as has been stated, reports to be made on the first of August "annually" of the business done for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June next preceding. That is to say, standing by itself, this law was passed and became effective near the end of the "year ending on the thirtieth day of June" and required that in that year there be reported gross receipts upon the basis of which a tax for the privilege of doing business was to be assessed. If this law, standing by itself, were to be interpreted as declaring that the express business done during the year then about to end was a privilege, and if there had been no prior law of a similar nature, then the fundamental and constitutional question above referred to would immediately arise.

But the law of 1911 was a mere revision of the preceding law of 1910, 101 O. L., 399, known as the "Langdon law." This act was passed May 10, 1910, and went into effect by its own terms on July 1st, 1910.

Section 47 of that act, 101 O. L., 409, provides that

> "Each public utility except railroad companies doing business in this state shall, annually, on or before the first day of August * * * make and file with the commission a statement * * *."

Section 49 of the same act provided as follows:

> "In the case of express companies, such statement shall also contain the entire receipts, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for business done within this state, giving the name of the office, for the year then next preceding the first day of May, for and on account of such company including its proportion of gross receipts for business done by such company within this state in connection with other companies, excluding therefrom all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. * *"

The sections of the act of 1910 corresponding to those of the General Code with respect to the determination by the commission in the month of September, the certification by it of its determination to the auditor of state, the computation by that official of the amount of the tax, etc., were substantially the same as those of the present law, and section 63 of the act of 1910 characterizes the nature of the tax in the same words as are now used in section 5485, General Code.

Without going into a detailed statement of the legislative history it may be sufficient at this time to state that the act of 1910 may be regarded as the first tax ever imposed upon the particular privilege in question. Prior to that time there had been an excise tax on express companies, but the same was based upon the entire receipts from business done in Ohio without any deductions, and presumably the privilege, whether anticipatory or not, was that of doing business in Ohio generally as distinguished from doing an intrastate business in this state.

The interesting point which is disclosed by comparison of the law of 1910 with that of 1911 is that under the former the year in question began on the first of May, while in the latter the year ended on the thirtieth of June. While this point may be material, I do not rely on it in support of the conclusion at which I have arrived.

It is clear that the law of 1910, considered as an initial act, so to speak, required that about a month after it should take effect, viz., July 1st, 1910, a report should be made by each express company of its business done during the year ending on the preceding thirtieth of April, and that on the basis of such a report a tax should be assessed upon a privilege. If the privilege thus referred to was the privilege of doing business during the year ending on April 30, 1910, then the effect of the law was to declare that to be a privilege which presumably had not been so regarded in the eye of the law at the time it was exercised, and to tax it as such. If, however, the opposite interpretation of the nature of the privilege be followed, then the receipts for the previous year were merely used to determine the value, so to speak, of the privilege of doing a like business during the following year, so that in such event the tax would not be laid on a privilege which was not in existence at the time it was exercised.

These facts make applicable the decision of the supreme court of this state in the case of Express Co. vs. State, 55 O. S., 69. This case is interesting for more than one reason. In the first place it shows the history of excise taxes upon express companies which preceded that of 1910; so that even if the act of 1910 be not regarded as initial legislation on the ground that the privilege of doing an intrastate business had been previously included in the wider privilege of doing business generally, yet when the legislative history is traced a step further back, the same situation is encountered, and it is discovered that it became the subject of a claim of right under the constitution.

The case in question involved the constitutionality of the act of May 14, 1894, 91 O. L., 237, imposing an excise tax on the privilege of carrying on the express business in Ohio. It directed that between the first and thirty-first days of May in each year (which would include the year 1894) every express company doing business in the state should make a report to the auditor of state of its business "for the preceding year." It then became the duty of the auditor of state "to charge and collect from each express company * * a sum in the nature of an excise tax to be computed by taking two per cent. of the * * gross receipts of such company for business done within the state of Ohio for the year next preceding the first day of May."

The express company resisted an action brought by the state against it to recover the excise tax and penalty assessed in the year 1894, principally upon constitutional grounds, but also on the following ground stated in the brief of counsel for the company in the supreme court (page 72):

> "The act (which was passed May 14, 1894,) should not be construed, and cannot constitutionally be construed, as authorizing an assessment on the gross receipts for the year ending May 1, 1894; any year which had only expired before the act was passed. Bermier vs. Becker, 37 O. S., 72. Brexel vs. Commonwealth, 46 Pa. St., 31."

In answer to this contention, Burket, J., says in his opinion at page 81:

> "The tax is not laid on the gross receipts for the year 1894, but those receipts are taken as the standard by which to determine the amount of the excise tax to be paid for the privilege of doing business in the state for the year 1895."

While this part of the opinion was not carried into the syllabus it was necessary to a decision of the case, and constitutes, in my mind, an authority directly in point on the question which you submit.

Answering generally, then, I am of the opinion that the privilege of doing an intrastate express business in Ohio, which is subject to taxation under the statutes above referred to, is the privilege of doing business in the future and not the privilege of having done the business during the year for which the receipts are reported.

Applied to the facts stated by you, this conclusion makes necessary the further conclusion that the United States Express Company is not liable for any tax based upon the gross receipts reported by it. I do not find it necessary, in answering the specific question, to determine when or as of what date the privilege starts, save to hold that it must be exercised after June 30th of a given year. That is to say, I do not find it necessary to determine whether, if the company had done business for a few days after June 30th, but had gone out of business on the date on which the report was required to be filed, viz., the first of August, it would have been liable for the tax. I incline, however, to the view, without officially stating it as such, that the division point is the thirtieth day of June; so that if a company continues in business after the thirtieth day of June it is exercising the privilege and is liable for the tax. In such a case the mere fact that after a few days have elapsed the company may go out of business does not change the result if the company had the privilege of doing business for a year or indefinitely in the future, and asserted that privilege by doing some business after the division date; so that if of its own volition it abandoned the exercise of the privilege before the year elapsed, this would not detract from the value of the privilege.

The date, June 30th, is to be regarded, I think, as the last day of the preceding year, and not as the first day of the succeeding year. So much is apparent on the face of the statute.

The commission being advised that the company had gone out of business at midnight of June 30th, 1914, should have withheld any action in the premises with respect to excise taxes. The commission having determined, however, the amount of the excise tax, and the tax now standing charged upon the duplicate of the treasurer of state, the proper way in which it may be discharged would be for the claim of the state against the company, which now is technically delinquent, to be transmitted to this department for collection, and in that event I should advise, of course, that the claim is uncollectible in law. I see no reason, however, why these formalities may not be dispensed with in the interest of expedition, and suggest that upon receipt of this opinion the treasurer of state and the auditor of state be advised of my decision to the end that they may make proper notations on their records to show that the charge against the United States Express Company for excise taxes for the year 1914 is not legally collectible.

Yours very truly,

APPORTIONMENT OF TOTAL COST AND EXPENSES OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENT IMPROVEMENT—DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

The ascertainment of the estimated total cost of a special assessment improvement devolves upon the service department. In the absence of special legislation by council it is not the duty of any particular administrative department or office of the municipality to make computations necessary to apportion such total cost and expense among the lots and lands to be assessed. Such apportionment must be made in the assessing ordinance and it is incumbent upon council to see that either the city engineer or director of public service or the clerk of council shall assist council in making the assessment. When assessments are payable in installments and what is termed interest is charged on the deferred installments, such interest, which is really a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement, should be computed by council or under its direction by the department of public service or the clerk of council, and the amounts of the various installments carried into the assessment ordinance. The interest which the assessment bears, if not paid when due, should be calculated by the county auditor and by him placed on the duplicate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 21st requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is it the duty of the city engineer, clerk of council or city auditor to compute the assessments against abutting property in special assessment improvements?
> "2. Whose duty is it to compute the interest of the installments of assessments if the same are to extend over a period of years?"

The assessments against abutting property in case of special assessment improvements are made by the council itself, as a general rule, as is evinced by section 3812, General Code, and other sections in pari materia. Exceptions to this rule are found in cases of assessments according to the proportion of benefits in which event council may appoint three disinterested freeholders to report the estimated assessments; and in case of objections to the assessments, council must appoint an equalizing board. (See sections 3847 and 3850, General Code.)

The general rule above laid down is further emphasized by section 3851, which provides that,

> "Every such assessment shall be a lien on the lands charged from the time council determines the amount assessed against each parcel of land."

Primarily, then, the determination of what amount shall be assessed against each parcel of land liable for assessment for an improvement is a matter for the council. The computations necessary to apply any of the three rules according to which assessments may be levied upon particular tracts are, generally speaking, two in number: First, the ascertainment of the total cost and expense of the improvement, which, without passing upon the question, I may say is a function which apparently devolves upon the department of public service or the city engineer in that department. Second, the division or apportionment of such total cost and expense among the specially benefited tracts of land.

I take it that your inquiry is directed to the second process and not to the first and shall write this opinion accordingly.

Inasmuch as council is the assessing body, and inasmuch as the ordinance assessing the different lots and apportioning the cost among them is a legislative act, I am of the opinion that in the absence of special provision by the council itself, it is not the duty of any executive or administrative officer to compute the apportionment of an assessment among the several lots and tracts to be assessed. It is incumbent upon the council itself to do this. Practically speaking, this means that the member of council who introduces the assessment ordinance must make the computations himself in the first instance; if not satisfactory or correct council may change them either in committee or by action of the whole council.

But what I have said relates to the situation in the event that council by a permanent ordinance or by special provision in the course of legislation with reference to a particular improvement has not otherwise provided. I am of the opinion that the legislative power of council is such as to enable it to require services of this character from the clerk of council or city engineer or director of service. Certainly this is true of the clerk of council whose duty it is to perform any and all services of a clerical nature which the council may require to assist it in performing its legislative functions. It is also true, in my opinion, of the city engineer where such a position exists. That is to say, council may require the engineer (or the director of public service) to assist its committees in the formulation and consideration of assessment ordinances. Section 4326, relating to the department of public service clearly vests in council the authority to provide for "matters * * * in connection with the public service of the city" (of which the director shall have the management); so that in this instance the authority to exact services of this character from an executive officer is founded upon specific statutory authority other than that implied from the grant of all legislative power.

The case of the city auditor affords, perhaps, the most doubtful question. Council by virtue of the general grant of powers implied in section 4211, General Code, has general legislative power and as such may require specific administrative duties of the administrative officers of the city not inconsistent with the frame work of government outlined in the General Code. Thus in McCormick vs. City of Niles, 81 O. S., 246, it was held in the language of the syllabus that:

> "When the statute has not prescribed the person who shall execute such a contract in behalf of a municipal corporation, it is consistent with section 1536-653, Revised Statutes, for the council, by ordinance or resolution, to authorize the clerk thereof to execute such contract according to the directions of the council."

In the opinion, per Price, J., at page 254, appears the following:

> "By virtue of the latter section (referring to the section of the General Code above cited) the powers of the city or village council are legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever. * * *
> "It would seem that council may authorize, by resolution or ordinance, the board or department of public service to contract for the public printing, and we see no objection to giving the clerk of council the authority to make such contracts. The council appears to be the source of authority to contract, and it is the authority to make the necessary appropriations."

In Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, Summers, J., discussing the authority of council with respect to the approval of an expenditure authorized by it, and holding, generally, that it is a sufficient compliance with the law if council merely authorizes the department of public service or safety to enter into the contract without approving the contract and expenditure when made, says:

> "If the directors do not have or retain the confidence of the council, it is in the power of council to be more specific."

This case, however, held merely that where a given function is one which may be appropriately performed by one or more officers, council may so legislate as to designate the particular officer which shall perform it. With respect to the city auditor, however, I do not believe that it could be said that the function of assisting council in doing its legislative work is appropriate to his position. The question is not free from doubt and I am aware of arguments which might be made to the contrary. I think, however, that the better reasoning supports the view that the auditor may not be charged with this duty, and I so hold.

Of course I do not mean to hold as to the clerk or engineer that council's legislation may adopt a rule only, and may delegate to any of these officers the power to apportion an assessment. I do not suppose that your question requires me to consider such a case; but I am of the opinion that the assessment must at all events be made finally by the council, and that the computations which are necessary must precede council's legislation.

Answering your first question in full, then, I am of the opinion that in the absence of action on the part of council, it is not the duty of any of the officers which you name to make the computations of which you speak; but that council clearly had the power to require its clerk to assist its committees or itself in making such computations; and that there seems to be specific provision of law upon which the authority of council to require such services of the engineer may be based; and that upon general principles, though the question is doubtful, council may not require such services of the city auditor.

In answering your second question I shall assume that the same relates to assessments made when bonds have been or are to be issued in anticipation thereof, because in the first place it is now almost the universal practice to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of assessments, and in the second place the very statement of your question suggests that such is the case in the instance which you have in mind, because the assessments would not be payable in deferred installments unless the fund to pay the total cost and expense of the improvement had been provided by the issuance of bonds.

Certain statutes make specific and peculiar provision with respect to assessments when bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Section 3817, General Code, requires that in such cases the interest on the bonds shall be treated as a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement. Pausing to consider the effect of this provision as it is worked out in practice, I beg leave to point out that so-called interest on deferred installments of assessments when the same are made payable in this manner is in reality not interest on the assessments as such but interest on the bonds. In other words this interest is computed on the total bond issue, and the sum thus ascertained is apportioned among the property owners just as is any other item entering into the total cost and expense of the improvement. I am of the opinion, as already hinted, that it is incumbent upon the engineering department in the department of public service to compute and ascertain the total cost of the improvement. That being the case it is the duty of the city engineer or the director of public service to compute the interest on the bonds as such. When it comes to dividing the total cost of the improvement among the assessed properties the answer to the first question which you ask governs the division of the interest just as it governs the division of all other items entering into the cost of the improvement.

Another special provision relative to assessments when bonds have been issued in anticipation thereof is section 3892, General Code, which provides that:

> "When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other person. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

It is apparent that when the assessment is certified under this statute to the county officials for collection on the tax duplicate it has passed out of the control of the city authorities. (See State vs. Carter, 8 N. P. 482; 67 O. S. 422.) That being the case, when the time arrives for the annual certification, the assessments, whether "due" or not, must be certified to the county officials, and it is then too late for the property owner to discharge the same by the payment of anything less than the amount so certified.

As has been stated, the interest on the bonds must be treated as a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement and, therefore, enters into the amount certified for collection to the county officials. Hence it follows that it becomes a part of the principal of the assessment and cannot be treated as interest thereon.

The proper and usual practice is for council, in order to afford to the property owners an inducement to pay the assessment in cash, to provide in the assessing ordinance that if the same is paid within a certain period of time, say thirty days (which must elapse before the second Monday in September), the amount of the assessment shall be less than the aggregate of the deferred installments by such amount as will represent the interest on the bonds. In other words, in order to legalize cash payments for anything less than the sum of the deferred installments the assessment should be made in the alternative. Payment in cash for a less sum is perhaps technically a discount rather than payment of principal without interest; for the reason that the assessment as such did not bear interest until due, as I shall hereinafter point out, and if not due until the date of the deferred installment, no interest, of course, accrues; so that if a cash payment is allowed the same is really a discount, though spoken of as payment without interest. The authority of council to exclude, by means of the acceptance of a cash payment, from any assessment any proportionate part of the total cost and expense of the improvement might be doubted on technical grounds; but the long established practice is to the contrary and your question does not require me to pass upon this point.

With these observations as to the nature of the proceeding, the answer to your question, properly interpreted, becomes clear. The so-called interest on deferred installments, which is really not interest on such installments at all, is a thing which consists really of a difference between the amount of a cash payment and the aggregate amount of the deferred installments and must be fixed by council itself, as must the installments themselves. The general principle laid down in answering your first question being that whatever things must be determined by council must be done by that body in the first instance or under its delegation and direction by the clerk of council or by the director of public service or city engineer as council may choose, it follows that this principle applies to the computation of the "interest on deferred installments" if by your question you mean the interest on the bonds which is apportioned to each assessment as a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement, but which is excluded from the optional cash payment. Accordingly, my answer to your second question thus interpreted is the same as my answer to your first question with the qualification only that the aggregate amount of interest which the bonds are to bear, and which is to be apportioned as a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement is in the first instance ascertainable as a matter of law by the department of public service.

But your second question may bear another interpretation as referring to the real interest on assessments if not paid when due. When assessments are payable in deferred installments they are not due until the several installments are due.

Section 3817, General Code, provides explicitly for this interest in the following language:

> "* * * If such assessment or any installment thereof is not paid when due, it shall bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as bonds issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, and the county auditor shall annually place upon the tax duplicate the penalty and interest as therein provided."

This statute is unambiguous and forces the conclusion that in the event that the installments of assessments are not paid when due to the county treasurer, the county auditor must make the computations necessary to charge on the duplicate, in addition to the assessment itself and likewise in addition to the statutory penalty, which presumably is the same as that upon delinquent taxes generally, interest at the rate stipulated in the assessing ordinance, which, must, under the statute, be the same as that which is borne by the bonds. That is to say, the duty to make this computation of interest, which is quite a different thing from the computation just discussed, devolves by law upon the county auditor and not upon the city officials.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY AND VILLAGE BOARDS OF HEALTH NOT AUTHORIZED TO ESTABLISH CHILDREN'S WELFARE DEPARTMENT.

The statutes do not authorize city and village boards of health to establish a child's welfare department for the care and instruction of mothers in the event of childbirth.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1914.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 11th you request my opinion as follows:

"We would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

"May a child's welfare department be established by a city board of health through which care and instruction may be given by visiting nurses in such cases as may be determined necessary by rule of the board of health?

"If such department may be organized by said board, may they furnish the necessary supplies and provisions to families in need of same, or should the medical and other supplies, provisions, etc., be furnished to said indigent families through the outdoor relief department?"

I am informed further that the plan to which you refer contemplates the employment of a staff of nurses and assistants, under a departmental head, with the chief object of extending instruction to female residents of the community expecting to become mothers; and also, wherever possible, to administer the necessary care and attention in all cases of childbirth where it is deemed that such care and attention is necessary.

The provisions of statute which alone appear to be material are as follows:

"Sec. 4408. The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary.

"Sec. 4409. The clerk of the board shall keep a full and accurate record of proceedings of the board, together with a record of cases of contagious diseases, reported to the health officer * * *. Among the books to be procured and kept shall be a suitable book or books for the registration of cases of infectious or contagious diseases.

"Sec. 4410. Each ward or district physician shall care for the sick poor and each person quarantined in his ward or district when such person is unable to pay for medical attendance, and for all persons sent from his ward or district to the municipal pest house when such persons are unable to pay for medical attendance.

"Sec. 4411. The board may also appoint * * * as many persons for sanitary duty as in its opinion the public health and sanitary condition of the corporation require, and such persons shall have general police powers, and be known as the sanitary police, but the council may determine the maximum number of employes so to be appointed.

"Sec. 4411-1. The board shall determine the duties and fix the salaries of its employes; but no member of the board of health shall be appointed as health officer or ward physician.

"Sec. 4413. The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances * * *."

These statutes endow the board of health with an unquestionably broad power. Its object is manifestly the protection of the public health. This power, though permitting to the officials in question the exercise of a broad discretion, must nevertheless be strictly confined to its correct sphere; it must be confined to the object which the statutes have in view, to wit: the public welfare as opposed to individual welfare.

Thus, in 21 Cyc. 387, it is said:

"The powers of boards of health or other sanitary authorities are generally regulated and prescribed by the legislature, either by direct statute or indirectly through municipal ordinance. While boards of health are frequently given authority over things which are not injurious to the public health but merely offensive to the senses or injurious to property, yet, in the absence of such statutory authority, they cannot take cognizance of matters not affecting the public health. * * * Boards of health cannot by the operation of their rules and regulations enlarge or vary powers conferred upon them by the legislature, and any rule or regulation which is inconsistent with the statute creating the board and defining its powers, or which is antagonistic to the general laws of the state, is invalid. So the power to make rules and regulations must be exercised reasonably and without discrimination."

It is fundamental that powers conferred upon officers by statute must be confined strictly to the clear authorizations of the legislature, and ambiguities must be resolved against the grant of the power.

The distinction between a public benefit or protection which affects the public as such only by being brought to bear upon individuals singly and a public benefit or protection which is general in its effects is too essential a difference to require comment or elaboration. To adopt a rule that a board of health might use all the means of benefiting the public health in caring for its distinct individual citizens would authorize a breadth of power the scope of which would be infinite and palpably illogical. The statutes when viewed as a whole clearly bear out this principle.

The organization of the board of health authorized by the statute is confined to a health officer, district physicians, a clerk and such persons for sanitary duty as in the board's opinion the public health and the sanitary condition of the corporation require. No mention is made of nurses in the statute, nor does the statute in any way authorize the employment of persons whose special functions would be the assistance of individuals suffering from disease or impairment of health, except those provisions which authorize ward or district physicians; and ward or district physicians are clearly confined in their duties to attendance upon sick poor, or persons afflicted with a contagious disease. Two public functions, and two only are recognized by the statute, to wit: prevention of contagious disease and care of the sick poor.

A review of the sections relating to boards of health, in their entirety, bears out the object of the statute to confine the offices authorized to measures of health which affect the public generally, as in the case of contagious diseases or nuisances which are liable to breed unhealthy conditions.

The Ohio statutes, however, extend to the board of health the further duty of caring for the sick poor, through the ward or district physicians. It is well settled that the proper municipal authorities in charge of "poor relief" have concurrent power in this connection, but there can be no question, under the statutes cited, that the board of health has the requisite authority to attend to cases of destitute patients.

Thus the board is only authorized to make orders and regulations for the public health, for the prevention or restriction of disease and for the prevention or suppression of nuisances. Applying the doctrine noscitur a sociis and reviewing the statutes which set out in detail what the board of health may do with reference to these specific subjects, the legislative intent is clearly outlined. However beneficial may be the object of the "child's welfare department" which is contemplated, or however worthy and meritorious the motives of its instigators may be, the question, nevertheless, must be met as to whether the people, through their representatives, have expressed in law the desire to shift the responsibility of obtaining these benefits from the shoulders of the individual, where it belongs, to the community. To permit such would manifest an example of that excessive governmental regulation of the private affairs and interests of the people and that undue solicitude on the part of the central government for the protection of the people and their interests which tends to obscure the distinction between proper governmental activity and paternalism.

Construing the language of the statutes, therefore, guided by principles of fundamental law, as well as the legal rules of construction above set forth, I am of the opinion that the statutes do not authorize a board of health to establish a child's welfare department after the manner suggested by you.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 6257, GENERAL CODE, CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS, SOCIETIES OR INSTITUTIONS FOR THE CARING OF CHILDREN UNDER THEIR CARE OR CONTROL ARE EXEMPT FROM LICENSE.

The provisions of section 6257, General Code, exempting charitable organizations, societies or institutions for the caring of children under their control, duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio, from the provisions requiring maternity boarding houses or lying-in hospitals to be licensed, apply only to institutions which but for the exemption would be subject to the provisions of the act solely by reason of their receiving into custody or control infants under the age of two years in the manner defined by section 6257, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

The Board of State Charities, 1010 Hartman Bldg., Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of August 21, 1914, in which you refer to my opinion to Hon. E. F. McCampbell, secretary of the Ohio state board of health, of the date of August 18, 1914, and submitting for my opinion certain questions calling for a construction of certain provisions of section 6257, General Code, in their application to concrete situations presented, as to which you say:

> "1. A certain Cleveland institution, incorporated in 1912 for profit with a capital stock of $40,000 for the 'purpose of erecting, maintaining and operating and conducting a sanatorium and lying-in hospital for receiving and caring for patients and their medical treatment and the instruction of nurses.'
> "This institution has never been licensed by the state board of health under the provisions of section 6259, et seq., yet it is doing a large maternity work and has been violating section 6272 of this statute, by engaging in the finding of homes for children, without the knowledge or approval of any reputable child-caring agency. The question arises, must this institution be licensed under the maternity hospital law or is it possible that being 'duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio' it falls in the class of institutions which are made exempt from its provisions, as stated above, in the latter part of section 6257? Being an institution incorporated, not as a charitable organization, society or institution, but for profit and having nothing in its articles of incorporation to indicate that one of its incorporate purposes is the care of children, does it, in your opinion, come within the group of institutions intended to be controlled by the provisions of this law?

"2. What, in your opinion, is the exact meaning of the words 'charitable organization, society or institution having the care of children under its control duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio or under the care of a juvenile court,' i. e., do all organizations, societies and institutions incorporated for charitable purposes, fall within the class of exempted institutions or does the exemption refer only to charitable organizations, societies and institutions incorporated for the express purpose of caring for children or whose purpose embraces incidentally the care of children? For example, is it the intent of this law to control the work of the Florence Crittendon homes, rescue missions, etc., incorporated mainly as maternity hospitals, for the care of unfortunate girls during parturition, and for their reformation, and only incidentally planned to care for children, the offspring of these girls?

"3. Must the articles of incorporation, stating the purpose of the institution, determine whether or not such an institution falls in the class of institutions regulated by the maternity hospital law or in the group of those exempted?"

Section 6257, General Code, provides as follows:

> "Whoever receives for care or treatment within a period of six months, more than one woman during pregnancy, or during or after delivery, except women related by blood or marriage; or has in his custody or control, at any one time, two or more infants under the age of two years, unattended by parents or guardians, for the purpose of providing them with care, food and lodging, except infants related to him by blood or marriage, shall be deemed to maintain a maternity boarding house or lying-in hospital. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any county, or district children's home, charitable organization, society or institution having the care of children under its control duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio or under the care of a juvenile court."

It will be noted that the provisions of this section except from the definition and meaning of the terms "maternity boarding house or lying-in hospitals," certain public and private institutions, organizations and societies.

Section 6258 makes further exceptions therefrom, as follows:

> "Nothing in this chapter shall prevent a nurse from practicing her profession under the direction of a physician in the home of a patient, or in a regular hospital other than a lying-in hospital."

Section 6259 provides for the granting of licenses by the state board of health to such maternity boarding houses and lying-in hospitals, as follows:

> "The state board of health may grant licenses to maintain maternity boarding houses and lying-in hospitals. An application therefor shall first be approved by the board of health of the city, village or township in which such maternity boarding house or lying-in hospital is to be maintained. A record of the license so issued shall be kept by the state board of health, which shall forthwith give notice to the board of health of the city, village or township, in which the licensee resides, of the granting of such license and of the terms thereof."

The remainder of the particular chapter of the General Code, of which the sections above quoted are a part, makes provisions of a regulatory nature with respect to the conduct of persons or institutions who are within the definition and meaning of the terms "maternity boarding house or lying-in hospitals," while section 12789 of the General Code provides the penal sanction for the observance of the above noted provisions with respect to the licensing and regulation of such persons or institutions, as follows:

"Whoever violates any provisions of law relating to the establishment, maintenance and inspection of maternity boarding houses and lying-in hospitals, shall be fined not more than three hundred dollars."

It is clear from the above statutory provisions, as noted in my opinion to Hon. E. F. McCampbell, above referred to, that all persons and all institutions, whether incorporated or not, coming within the definition of a maternity boarding house or lying-in hospital, as defined in section 5267 of the General Code, are required to obtain from the state board of health the license provided for in section 5269, except only such persons and institutions as are made exempt by the provisions of sections 6257 and 6258.

The questions presented by you arise and are to be determined upon the construction of the language contained in section 6257, General Code, as follows:

"The provisions of this section shall not apply to any county or district children's home, charitable organization, society or institution, having the care of children under its control, duly incorporated under the laws of Ohio or under the care of the juvenile court."

With respect to the Cleveland institution mentioned in the statement of your first question, it is noted that it is not a county or district children's home; and inasmuch as it is a corporation organized for profit, it is not a charitable organization, society or institution, although it may be incorporated under the laws of Ohio, and although as incident to the transaction of its business, it may have to some extent, the care of children under its control. Being a corporation organized for profit and operated as such, it retains this essential character, notwithstanding it may do a certain amount of charitable work incidental to and in keeping with its corporate purpose. Inasmuch as the institution in question is not a charitable organization, society or institution, it is obvious that it is not within the exempting provisions of section 6257, General Code, but on the contrary is an institution subject to the license and regulatory provisions of the section above noted, provided of course (as I infer from your communication to be the fact) that this institution comes within the definition of a maternity boarding house or lying-in hospital, as these terms are defined by section 5267.

With respect to the Cleveland institution in question, the above conclusion follows without reference to the other questions presented by you with reference to the proper construction of the provisions of section 6257 here under consideration. As pertinent, however, to each and all of the several questions presented by you, I note that section 6257 was originally enacted as section one of an act passed February 17, 1908 (99 O. L., p. 13). As originally enacted, this section did not contain the particular provisions here under consideration, exempting the institutions therein named from the license and regulatory requirements of the section above noted. These particular provisions of what is now section 6257, were incorporated therein by the amendatory provisions of an act passed April 13, 1910 (101 O. L., p. 121). As throwing some light on the questions at hand, I note that sections 9 and 10 of the original act (99 O. L., p. 15) provided as follows:

> "Sec. 9. No child under two years of ago, whether inmate of such house or hospital, or born therein or brought thereto, or otherwise, shall be given out for adoption, except by and with the consent of a charitable organization, society or institution having the care of children under its control duly incorporated under the laws of the state of Ohio, or juvenile court.
> "Sec. 10. No parent or guardian shall give to any person an infant under two years of age for the purpose of placing it for hire, gain or reward under the permanent care and control of another person, and no person for hire, gain or reward, shall receive such infant for the purpose of placing it under the permanent care and control of another. The provisions of this section shall not apply to any charitable organization, society or institution, incorporated under the laws of the state of Ohio, or any of the officers or agents thereof."

Said section 9 of the original act remains as it is now found in the provisions of section 6272, General Code, while section 10 of the original enactment was amended by the act of 1910 above referred to, to read as it is now found in the provisions of section 6273. With respect to the questions at hand, it will be noted that the language of section 6272, General Code, defining the institutions whose consent was necessary to the giving out for adoption of certain children born in or brought to the maternity boarding houses or lying-in hospitals, regulated by the act, is quite the same as the language of section 6257 under consideration; while the language of section 6273, exempting said institutions from the provisions of said sections, is as follows:

> "The provisions of this section shall not apply to any county or district children's home, charitable organization, society or institution for the care of children, incorporated under the laws of Ohio, or to the officers or agents thereof."

Looking to the provisions of section 6257, it will be noted that a person, natural or artificial, may come within the definition of said section, as a person conducting a maternity boarding house or lying-in hospital, in two ways: First, by receiving women during parturition in the manner defined by the section, and second, by receiving into custody or control infants under the age of two years, in the manner therein defined. On consideration of all of the statutory provisions above noted, I am of the opinion that the particular language of section 6257 here under consideration, exempting certain institutions from the provisions of the act as to license and regulation, expends its force in exempting from the provisions of the act as to such license and regulation, institutions which but for the language in question, would be subject to the provisions of the act solely by reason of their receiving into custody or control infants under the age of two years, in the manner defined by section 6257, and that the particular provision of section 6257 here brought in question, has no reference to institutions, whether incorporated under the laws of Ohio or otherwise, or whether charitable or not, whose main purpose and principal business is that of receiving for attention, women during parturition and whose care of children is such only as is or may be incidental to the care of the mothers of such children while in such institutions. This conclusion follows from the obvious consideration that the "care of children under its control" which exempts a charitable organization, society or institution incorporated under the laws of Ohio from the requirement of a license, means such independent care of children as that offered and given in county or district children's homes.

This conclusion disposes of the specific question suggested by you with reference to the Florence Crittendon homes and necessitates the holding that such institutions, though organized for charitable purposes, are not exempt from the provisions as to license. The conclusion here reached as to these institutions, follows from the consideration that it is not their primary purpose to exercise control and care of either children generally or those born in said institutions, but on the contrary, their purpose and aim is to take care of unfortunate women who are received in such institutions for purposes of parturition.

With reference to the third question presented by you, it is to be observed that inasmuch as it is a general rule applicable both to corporations for profit and those incorporated for charitable purposes, that their business must be such as is expressly declared in its articles of incorporation or incidental thereto. Only such charitable institutions are to be considered in the exempting provisions of section 6257 above considered, as are able to show that the care and control of children are within the authorized purposes of their organization.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

WHEN TAXABLE BONDS DEPOSITED BY FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY WITH SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE ARE TAXABLE IN FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

Taxable bonds deposited by a foreign insurance company with the superintendent of insurance are taxable in Franklin county, unless the insurance company has a principal office elsewhere in the state, in which event they are taxable there. It is the duty of the insurance company to list the same for taxation, section 5437, General Code, being unconstitutional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 3d you request me to furnish to the commission my opinion as to,

> "whether or not bonds deposited by foreign insurance companies with the state commissioner of insurance of this state are taxable in Franklin county or in any other county of the state in which such insurance company may have its principal office."

The general assembly has apparently sought to exempt such property from taxation in this state, as property, at least indirectly. I refer the commission to section 5437, General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Neither insurance companies and associations, incorporated by the authority of another state or government, nor the superintendent of insurance, shall be required to make returns for taxation of the deposits of such companies or associations, made as required by law, with the superintendent of insurance, for the benefit and security of policy holders; nor be governed with respect to such deposits by the provisions of law relating to the listing of personal property or to the making of tax returns by corporations."

This section was formerly a part of section 2745, Revised Statutes, imposing a gross premium tax "upon the business done by it (a foreign insurance company) within said state for the period as shown by (its) * * * annual statement." (See section 5433, General Code.) The proceeds of such franchise or occupation tax when collected by the superintendent of insurance were and are to be paid by him into the treasury of the state to the credit of the general revenue fund thereof, and no part of said tax was or is distributed to local subdivisions. The rate of said tax was 2½% upon the basis thereof (consisting of gross premiums on Ohio business after certain deductions were made), and the same rate was applicable throughout the state.

The legislative history of said section 2745, Revised Statutes, is material to the present inquiry and I shall briefly outline the same:

Section 16 of the taxation act of 1859, which is the basis, so to speak, of all our property taxation laws, was the section which from its inception provided for the taxation of the property of incorporated companies. The main part of this section was that which subsequently became section 2744, Revised Statutes, and is now found in sections 5404 to 5406 inclusive of the General Code.

Going back to the original act it will be found that it was entitled "An act for the assessment and taxation of all property within this state, and for levying taxes thereon according to its true value in money." (56 O. L., 175). Section 1 of the act which corresponds to present section 5328 provided that:

> "All property, whether real or personal, in this state, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise, of persons residing therein, the property of corporations now existing or hereafter created, and the property of all banks or banking companies * * * except such as are hereinafter expressly exempt, shall be subject to taxation; and such property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise or the value thereof, shall be entered on the list of taxable property for that purpose in the manner prescribed by this act."

Section 16 of the act above referred to provided in effect that:

> "The president, secretary, or principal accounting officer of every canal or slack water navigation company, railroad company * * * insurance company, * * * or other joint stock company, except banking or other corporations whose taxation is specifically provided for in this act, for whatever purpose they may have been created, whether incorporated by any law of this state or not, shall list for taxation * * * all the personal property * * * moneys and credits of such company or corporation within this state at the actual value in money, in the manner following: * * *"

Return was to be made to the several auditors of the respective counties in which the property was situated, otherwise the procedure was the same as that found in present sections 5404, et seq., General Code, with certain immaterial differences. At the end of the section was found the following:

> "Provided, that every agency of an insurance company incorporated by the authority of any other state or government, shall return to the auditor of the county in which the office or agency of such company may be kept, in the month of May annually, the amount of the gross receipts of such agency, which shall be entered upon the tax list of the proper county, and subject to the same rate of taxation for all purposes that other personal property is subject to at the place where located."

The same act provided the definition of the term "personal property" which is now found in section 5325, General Code (section 2).

Without attempting at this time to interpret the act of 1859 as it then stood I may venture to express the belief that all the property of foreign insurance companies located in this state was made subject to taxation thereby, and that the gross receipts tax provided by the last clause of section 16 of the act was additional to the ordinary or simple property tax. In the revision of 1880 the last clause of section 16 of the act of 1859 became section 2745 of the Revised Statutes. Intermediate amendments had been made but they do not affect the present question.

The first material amendment of section 2745 occurred in 1888, 85 O. L., 183. The amended section provided that the return by the agency of its gross receipts should be made in February instead of in May and that the whole of the locally levied tax thereon should be payable on the twentieth of December next ensuing. Then the section provided that the county auditor in the month of March should certify to the superintendent of insurance (an officer whose functions had been created in the meantime) the amount of receipts returned under the act in each county with the rate charged against the same. Then it was provided that the superintendent of insurance, in the month of April annually, should charge and collect from all foreign insurance companies such a sum as added to the sum payable to the county treasurer would produce an amount equal to 2½% of the gross premium receipts of such company as shown by its annual statement under oath to the insurance department. This act contained a retaliatory provision similar to that which is now found in section 5436, General Code. It did not, however, contain any provision with reference to the duty to list for taxation the deposits made by such companies as required by law similar to that now found in section 5437, General Code, and which forms the principal subject of this discussion.

This remained substantially the state of the law, despite amendments not material to the present question, until 1902, when in an act found in 95 O. L., 290, the section was so amended as to dispense with the return of gross premiums for property taxation by the agencies to the several county auditors and to substitute the substance of the present law exacting a state revenue tax upon the doing of business in this state, and based upon the gross premium receipts with deductions at the rate of 2½%. It was in this act that the substance of the present section 5437, General Code, was first enacted as a part of section 2745, Revised Statutes.

Meanwhile section 2744, Revised Statutes, providing for the taxation of property of insurance companies, whether domestic or foreign, by the same rules applicable to the taxation of property of other companies, remained unchanged substantially. In fact, this section was not substantially amended between the date of its original enactment in 1859 and the year 1911 (102 O. L., 60).

At all times during the legislative history of section 2745, Revised Statutes, as above outlined, section 2744, Revised Statutes, applied to insurance companies the same rules of property taxation as it applied to other incorporated companies. So that if section 2744, Revised Statutes, was in 1902 effective to tax the deposits required to be made with the superintendent of insurance by foreign insurance companies then the proviso of amended section 2745, as then enacted, and which is now section 5437, General Code, seemingly constituted an exception to its provisions and resulted practically in returning with one hand, so to speak, what was taken with the other.

I mention these facts to show that if the general corporation tax law, which was section 2744, Revised Statutes, had the effect of taxing the securities deposited by foreign insurance companies with the superintendent of insurance, it could not be held that there was any exemption of such securities from taxation by reason of mere failure to pass laws submitting them to taxation. It is well known, of course, that under a constitution like ours, requiring all property to be taxed at its true value in money by uniform rule, what may be called "accidental exemptions" are of necessity sustained. The theory is that the constitutional mandate is, after all, in a sense directory in that it is not self-executing; and that if the legislature, in attempting to execute the constitution, so frames its laws as seemingly to omit some kind of property which the constitution would permit or require to be taxed, such omission does not have the effect either of invalidating the whole body of the property assessment laws of the state or of impliedly subjecting to taxation the kind or class of property, provision for the taxation of which has been omitted.

But if section 2745, as amended in 1902, and particularly that provision of it which is found in present section 5437, General Code, be regarded as effecting practically the exemption from taxation of securities deposited by a foreign insurance company with the superintendent of insurance, it cannot be claimed in the face of the legislative history which I have outlined that it constituted or that it now constitutes an exemption by mere accident or omission; because as already stated section 2744, Revised Statutes, being now section 5404, General Code, if sufficient to tax such property in Ohio was itself a provision for such taxation, so that the latter part of section 2745, Revised Statutes, now section 5437, General Code, must be regarded as a direct exemption (if it is an exemption at all), and not as having the effect of an exemption by accident or omission.

This discussion opens the way for two inquiries, first, as to whether or not section 5437, General Code, and its predecessor in the Revised Statutes does amount to an attempt to exempt the property of which it speaks from property taxation; and, second, as to whether or not section 5404, General Code, and its predecessor, section 2744, Revised Statutes, did have the effect of subjecting such property to taxation. If both these questions are answered in the affirmative, the constitutionality of section 5437 becomes involved. If either of them are answered in the negative, then the constitutional question is not reached.

The first of these two suggested questions may be resolved into two subordinate inquiries, viz.:

1. Does the section standing by itself have the effect of exempting property of which it speaks from ordinary property taxation in the usual manner; and

2. If so, is the tax upon such securities, that would have been collectible in the ordinary way, merged into some other tax which may be regarded as a commutation of such property tax or as a substitute for it?

The present form of section 5437, General Code, has been quoted. In the Revised Statutes it reads as follows:

> "Insurance companies and associations, incorporated by the authority of another state or government or the superintendent of insurance, shall not be required to make returns of deposits of such companies or associations, made as required by law with such superintendent of insurance for the benefit and security of policy holders, and shall not be governed, in respect to such deposits, by the provisions of section 2744, or of section 2734 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio."

I cannot escape the conclusion that these very explicit provisions have the effect, practically, of exempting or attempting to exempt the securities to which they refer from property taxation in Ohio.

Section 2744, referred to in the original form of the provision, has already been discussed. Section 2734 of the Revised Statutes was the provision requiring every person to list all moneys in his possession or invested, loaned or otherwise controlled by him as agent or attorney on account of any person or persons, company or corporation whatsoever, and requiring the property of every person for whose benefit property is held in trust to be listed by the trustees, and requiring the property of every company, firm or corporation to be listed by the principal accounting officer, partner or agent thereof.

Securities deposited by a foreign insurance company with the superintendent of insurance would have to be regarded either as property of the corporation to be listed by it or as its property in the hands of the superintendent of insurance as agent or trustee for such company; so that the effect of withdrawing the listing of such securities from the provisions of the sections of the Revised Statutes named in the amended section 2745, Revised Statutes, and referred to in section 5437, General Code, seems to be to make doubly sure, so to speak, the positive provisions of the first part of the same clause and effectively to withdraw such securities from the reach of the taxation laws of the state.

Of course, your question is at once answered in the affirmative if it appears that section 5437 does not have the effect which I have just stated. For in that event the property should be listed for taxation in some other way than through the agency of the corporation itself or that of its agents or through the superintendent of insurance; and its taxability would not be impaired by the fact that listing by them is dispensed with. However, I am unable to reach the conclusion that this is the effect of the statute and am forced to the consideration of the other questions which I have suggested.

Does then, a provision that all the persons whose duty it would otherwise be under the law to list property for taxation, shall not be required to do so, amount to an exemption of that property from taxation?

It must be admitted that the conventional way in which to exempt property from taxation is to enact a statute providing that the property shall not be subject to taxation or shall be exempt from taxation, in hoc verba. It is true also that the general rule is that exemptions from taxation are not favored and must be granted by explicit statutory authority.

From these considerations it would seem to follow that section 5437 is not to be considered as an exemption from taxation, and that the property of which it speaks should be regarded as subject to taxation; but I am constrained to adopt the other view, at least for the purpose of the argument. The dilemma is presented, which may be phrased thus: either section 5437, General Code, is not an exemption of the deposits of a foreign insurance company with the superintendent of insurance, in which event the assessors would be authorized and required to list such deposits for taxation, even though it is not the duty of any individual or corporation to return them for taxation; or the statute does amount to an exemption, in which event the other questions which I have suggested must be discussed.

Coming now to the second of the two questions last above stated, I beg to state that in my opinion section 5437 is neither a provision, which read in connection with other provisions of law, shows that another tax is accepted by the state in commutation of the tax on securities; nor is it a provision regulatory of the methods of assessment for the purpose of avoiding double taxation. It is not part of a commutation tax scheme, because as I have pointed out, for several years prior to 1902, when it first appeared in the statutes, foreign insurance companies were liable to the same property tax as other incorporated companies, and in addition thereto were liable for a tax on gross premium receipts from business done in Ohio, with certain deductions. There was an element of commutation in the tax as it formerly existed, in that the amount levied on the receipts of the agencies were deducted from the gross premium taxes payable to the superintendent of insurance, so that the former were accepted by the state in substantial commutation of the latter. But there was never any commutation either way, so to speak, of general property taxes as such for the gross premium taxes. The latter was imposed upon a separate and distinct subject of taxation and was in addition to property taxes as such. This will more fully appear from consideration of decisions which I shall hereinafter cite.

The laws of the state having provided at one time, then, for a gross premium tax in addition to all property taxes, the intent to receive the former in lieu of the latter or any part of them, cannot be imputed to the legislature because of the provisions of present section 5437, General Code. Indeed there is grave question as to whether or not a commutation tax of this character could be sustained as against constitutional objection. Article XII, section 2 of the constitution of 1851, declares that the taxation of property shall be by uniform rule at its true value in money. Other property in the state is taxed as property on the duplicates of the various counties and subject thereto to local rates of levy. Whether or not particular classes of property may be taxed at a flat rate throughout the state, either directly or by acceptance of some such flat rate taxes in lieu of the simple tax is a question which has not been decided under our constitution, and as to which I express no opinion, save the suggestion that I entertain grave doubt as to the constitutionality of a statute so construed. We have no such statute in the state, viz., the so-called excise tax on sleeping car, freight line and equipment companies, which is accepted by the state in lieu of all property taxes; but this class of property has no situs in any particular place in the state, and the peculiar difficulties in listing and valuing such property may be said perhaps to justify an apparent deviation from the constitutional rule for the taxation of property.

For all these reasons, and others which might be suggested, I am of the opinion that the gross premium tax is laid upon a separate and distinct subject of taxation which is now expressed very clearly in section 5433, General Code, and that no element of property tax is or ever has been embodied therein. See on this point, however, Insurance Co. vs. Bowland, Post.

Nor is the provision under discussion an effort on the part of the state so to regulate its methods of assessment as to avoid double taxation. This may be done, as pointed out in Lee vs. Sturgess, 46 O. S. 153, Lander vs. Burk, 65 O. S., 532, and other important cases with which the commission is familiar.

But the legislation now under discussion bears no evidence of embodying such an intention, nor is it appropriate to the accomplishment of such a purpose. The exemption (if it be an exemption) extended to foreign insurance companies under section 5437 is offered to them whether their stock is owned in Ohio or not; therefore it cannot be said that the legislature intended to exempt (practically) a certain class of the personal property of such corporations on the ground that the taxation of their shares of stock is substituted therefor. Nor can it be held, upon the reasoning above stated in discussing this question of exemption, and the authorities therein referred to, that this assumed partial exemption of the personal property of foreign insurance companies is an effort to avoid double property taxation resulting from the imposition of the gross premium tax; for that tax is in no respect a property tax.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion in answer to the first of the two general questions which I have myself suggested, that section 5407, General Code, considered as an exemption from taxation, is effective as such, if it is valid at all, and cannot be considered as a part of a commutation scheme or as a regulation for the avoidance of double taxation.

The second of the two general questions which I have suggested is now encountered. For in answering the first of them I have assumed, but not decided, that section 5404, General Code, and the other general property taxation provisions of our statutes are effective to tax deposits of foreign insurance companies with the superintendent of insurance. It now devolves upon me to decide this question.

The suggested question is not even doubtful, in view of the decisions of the state and federal courts in Sims vs. Best, 1 C. C. n. s. 41; Assurance Co. vs. Halliday, 110 Fed. 259; Same vs. Same, 156 Fed., 257; Same vs. Same, 126 Fed., 830, and Insurance Co. vs. Bowland, 196 U. S., 611.

As stated by me in an opinion to the superintendent of banks, a copy of which is enclosed herewith, these decisions dispose of practically every question which might be raised in connection with the main question now under discussion. Some of these questions have already been suggested, such as that respecting whether or not foreign insurance companies are within the purview of section 2744, Revised Statutes, now section 5404, General Code; whether or not the gross premium tax is a substitute for or commutation of the property tax; and whether or not a foreign corporation is required to return its "investments" for taxation in Ohio under the sections referred to.

The first two of these questions are answered by the decisions in the negative, and the third in the affirmative. Indeed, the case in 110 Fed., which was decided under the statutes as they existed before the amendment of 1902, held that the gross premium tax then in effect which, as has been stated, was levied particularly in the counties upon the premiums themselves as property, was not inconsistent with the taxation of the bonds or securities required to be deposited by foreign insurance companies, or a substitute for that taxation. It is interesting to note in this connection that the case in 110 Fed., was decided on June 4, 1901; Sims vs. Best, supra, was decided in April, 1903; the case in 126 Fed. was an affirmance of that in 110 Fed., and was decided November 3, 1905, by the circuit court of appeals of the United States; the case in 127 Fed., seems to be the same case as that in 110 Fed., but the opinion covers a point not material in the present connection and not passed upon in the first case. So it appears that the question was in the courts when the legislature acted in 1902 and doubtless the initial decision in the 110 Fed. persuaded the legislature to take the action which it did take in 1902, viz., the enactment of the substance of what is now section 5437, General Code.

So it is, that I regard as practically settled the question respecting the application of section 5404 and the other general taxation sections of the laws of the state to property like that concerning which you inquire. Were it not for the provision of section 5437 it is clear that such property would be taxable in Ohio and should be returned for taxation either by the superintendent of insurance or by the company itself.

The settlement of these two preliminary questions leaves the matter in this condition; the laws of the state, but for the positive provision of section 5437, General Code, would subject the property of which you speak to taxation. Therefore if section 5437 has the effect of an exemption it is a direct exemption and not a mere accidental omission. Assuming that such is its effect, is it constitutional?

While this is the most fundamental question involved in your inquiry, it is, after all, the simplest one. Under article XII, section 2 of the constitution, the legislature of Ohio does not have the general power to exempt property from property taxation. Its power is limited by necessary implication to the subjects which it is authorized by that section of the constitution to exempt. The constitutional provision is that laws shall be passed taxing all property, real and personal, and all moneys, credits and investments but that the legislature, by general law, may exempt certain kinds of property or the property of certain designated owners from taxation. Property of the kind and character mentioned by you does not fall within any of the classes which the legislature is authorized to exempt from taxation; therefore it is perfectly plain that if section 5437 constitutes an exemption from taxation it is unconstitutional and void, and the assistance of authorities is not necessary to support this conclusion.

Ordinarily I decline to express an opinion upon the constitutionality of a statute. Every intendment supports the validity of a legislative act when the same is assailed in the courts. Our own constitution now limits the power of the supreme court of the state to declare statutes unconstitutional by requiring that save in cases of affirmance of the lower court all but one of the members of the supreme court shall concur in such a judgment. Therefore, as I have said, in an ordinary case in which there is any element of doubt whatsoever I have felt constrained, upon considerations of propriety, not only to decline to express an opinion as to the constitutionality of a statute, but also to defend, to the best of my ability, enactments of the legislature when questioned on constitutional grounds, regardless of my personal opinion.

The case presented by you, however, is not an ordinary one. It is a species of special legislation for the benefit of a single class of business enterprises. This legislation if given the effect assumed, is so plainly and palpably repugnant to the constitution that it would be doing violence to one's conscience to express the view that its invalidity was even doubtful. Moreover, the question involves the revenues of the state and the exercise of her taxing power for the benefit of local subdivisions and the state itself; and where a statute has the effect of depriving the public of a right which would otherwise exist, and is passed solely for the benefit of private interests, I do not think the same proprieties should be observed in considering its validity and expressing views thereon as would ordinarily be adhered to.

For these reasons I freely express my opinion that if section 5437 be given the effect of an exemption statute it is unconstitutional. This conclusion reduces your question to a mere matter of procedure. As I have stated the dilemma which is developed by the situation is such that if section 5437 is not an exemption statute, the property is taxable at any rate; and if it is an exemption statute then it is unconstitutional. Let the first horn of the dilemma be taken. The effect of the statute then would be merely to relieve the superintendent of insurance and the companies themselves from returning these deposits, but the property being taxable it would simply devolve upon the district assessor, exercising the powers formerly exercised by the county auditor, or the board of equalization or review, to place the property on the duplicate, and for this purpose to call before him the treasurer of state and examine him under oath as to the amount of such deposits in taxable bonds which he might have on hand on the day on which the property is required to be listed.

If the statute is unconstitutional, it is wholly void, and despite its plain provisions it would be the duty of the corporation (not the superintendent of insurance) to list the property for taxation, either in Franklin county, Ohio, where the assets are held, or in some other county in Ohio if the company has its principal defacto managerial office in Ohio. On this point it was held in the case in 110

Federal, supra, that it was the duty of the superintendent of insurance as trustee to return the securities for taxation. The United States circuit court of appeals expressed no opinion on this point, observing that when the county auditor had placed the property on the duplicate as omitted, the question as to whose duty it was to list it in the first instance was immaterial, provided it should have been listed by some one.

In Insurance Co. vs. Bowland, supra, however, Mr. Justice Day expressed a positive opinion to the effect that it is the duty of the company under section 2744, Revised Statutes, now section 5404, General Code, to make the return, and this opinion seems to be sustained by the better reasoning and emanates from the highest authority.

In Sims vs. Best, supra, however, an exception is made as to a foreign insurance company actually having a business domicile in Ohio. In that case the insurance company, though organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, in point of fact and under its articles of incorporation had its principal place of business in Cincinnati, Ohio, and the bonds deposited with the treasurer of state in Columbus were held taxable in Cincinnati. This case is authority, then, for the proposition that where a foreign insurance company has a business domicile in Ohio, the situs of the taxable securities deposited with the treasurer of state is at that domicile, and not necessarily in Franklin county.

The only practical difference, then, between the two possible theories applicable to the answer to your question is that if section 5437 is constitutional, then a foreign insurance company cannot be penalized for failing to list the securities deposited by it with the treasurer of state. There could be no proceedings for previous years, under sections 5398 and 5399, General Code, to place such property on the tax duplicate, for the reason that under both of these statutes the authority of the auditor (now the district assessor) to act depends upon a finding to the effect that some person or corporation required by law to list property for taxation has failed to do so. Proceedings for the correction of the duplicate for the current year under section 5401 could, however, undoubtedly be sustained, but these proceedings involve no penalty of any kind.

On the other hand, if it is the duty of the insurance company to list the securities for taxation, notwithstanding section 5437, General Code, then in the event of the company's failure to do so all the remedies provided for by statute, in case of failure of a taxpayer to list all of his or its taxable property, would be available.

I think your question requires me, however, to choose between the two theories which I have mentioned. In fact, I have already done so. In spite of all that has been said relative to the possibility of working out a means of getting such property on the duplicate, if the insurance company and the superintendent of insurance are absolved from the duty to list it, I entertain after all grave doubt as to whether or not this view could be sustained. That is to say, I believe that section 5437, General Code was intended by the legislature to be, and is an effective exemption, if it is valid at all. Looking through the mere form to the substance this convention is forced. I am satisfied, therefore, that the statute is to be regarded as an attempt at an exemption, and being so, it is clearly unconstitutional.

Therefore, it is my opinion that it is the duty of a foreign insurance company (but not that of the superintendent of insurance) to list for taxation all taxable bonds deposited by it with the superintendent of insurance as required by law, and that said bonds should be listed and taxed in ordinary cases in Franklin county, Ohio, but in cases in which the foreign insurance company has a business domicile elsewhere in the state, then in the county and taxing district in which such domicile is located.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

LEASE GRANTED BY BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS FOR WATER RIGHTS RENEWAL CLAUSE.

A lease granted by the board of public works for water rights contains a renewal clause which is valid and is authorized by section 14009, General Code, section 20 of act of March 23, 1840, 38 O. L., 87, and authorizes the grant of leases "either in perpetuity or for a limited number of years."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 12, 1914, you inquire as follows:

"Herewith I transmit a copy of a water power lease which is similar to a great many others which were made years ago. The T. & H. Co., have two leases for water power, one of which expired May 1st, 1914, and the lessees have applied for a renewal. This department finds itself handicapped in its efforts to secure an adequate rental for these and other water powers along the canal, by reason of the provisions in the lease which I have noted with an asterisk on the second page thereof.

"This paragraph provides 'That at the expiration of this agreement the party of the second part shall be entitled to a renewal of the lease, for a like term of years, for such annual rent as may be offered by the highest responsible bidder, who shall also agree to purchase of said party of the second part, all permanent and valuable buildings necessarily erected by said party for the convenient use of the water power hereby leased, at such price as such buildings shall be adjudged to be worth by three judicious, disinterested freeholders, to be chosen as hereinbefore specified; provided such buildings shall be erected on land belonging to the state, or land which can be purchased by said bidder at a reasonable price, to be determined by said appraisers. And if no such bid shall be made on the terms aforesaid at a higher rent than is herein specified, said party shall be entitled to such renewal on the terms of this lease.'

"This to all intents and purposes gives the lessee perpetual rights to such water powers without any regard to the interests of the state and is certainly against public policy, since the state must furnish the water, even at an actual loss to the state.

"The original leases for most of these powers were granted between 1830 and 1840, and have been renewed from time to time, upon precisely the same terms as the originals, and the result is that the state is only receiving about one-third as much rental for its water powers as it should.

"In all of these leases, no rental is mentioned for the use of the land upon which the water power is used, and in some cases 6% upon the value of the land would exceed the rental now received for both land and water power.

"The question that we would like to have solved is, whether or not we can ignore the clause in these old leases that provides for a renewal for a like term of years, for such annual rental as may be offered by the highest responsible bidder, who is willing to purchase the buildings, equipment, etc., of the lessees at a price to be fixed by disinterested freeholders."

The delay in giving you this opinion was by arrangement with you.

In addition to the part quoted by you the lease submitted contains the following statement which must be considered in this opinion:

> "This lease is given in renewal of a lease given to Gates and Gregory on July the first, 1864, for thirty years with an additional quantity of water of 950 cubic feet per minute as was ascertained to be necessary for the business of manufacturing, and which additional quantity has been used on the premises in the past."

As stated in your letter many of these leases have been renewed one and two times. Each renewed lease contains a further option for renewal. When a lease is renewed there is usually a statement therein that it is a renewal, similar to that above quoted. This is notice that it is a renewal of a former lease.

These leases also contain a provision that they cannot be assigned or transferred without the written consent of some authorized agent of the state.

Two questions will be considered in connection with this option.

First: The validity of the option.

Second: The right to successive renewals by having the renewal option inserted in the renewed lease.

These questions may be considered together as some of the authorities herein cited apply to both questions.

Options to renew leases are valid when founded upon sufficient consideration and are certain and mutual in their terms.

It is also the rule of law that unless words showing perpetuity are used, one renewal of a lease satisfies the option to renew.

At section 332 of Taylor on Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) it is said:

> "A general covenant to extend or renew implies an additional term equal to the first, and upon the same terms, including that of rent, except the covenant to renew; to include which would make the lease perpetual."

At section 338 he says further as to the option for renewal:

> "As every contract depends upon the consideration for its validity, it is necessary that there be a sufficient and reasonable consideration, on the part of the lessee, to support this covenant; and if an agreement for renewal be unequal, unjust, or inserted by mistake, specific performance will not be decreed."

Also at section 333:

> "A covenant 'to let' the premises to the lessee at the expiration of the term without mentioning the price for which they are to be let; or to renew the lease on such terms as may be agreed upon; or, as is held by some courts, for such further time as lessee shall elect; or to renew upon the basis of a valuation of the premises as at the end of the lease, without any provision for determining that valuation; does not amount to a covenant for renewal but is void for uncertainty. Nor will a general covenant 'for renewal' be construed to imply a perpetual renewal; the most a lessor is bound to give on such a covenant is a renewal for one term only. A covenant to renew a lease 'under the same covenants contained in the original lease' is satisfied by a renewal of the original lease for another term, omitting the covenant to renew; for if the continued grant of successive leases and not a single renewal only had been intended, words would naturally have been used indicating such an intention. A different construction would virtually lead to a grant in perpetuity; and where no consideration appears for a grant of so extensive a nature, such cannot be a reasonable construction."

The option in question gives the right to renewal "for a like term of years," and if no higher bid is received as provided in said option the lessee "shall be entitled to such renewal on the terms of this lease."

These provisions make the terms of the renewed lease certain. But upon the happening of certain conditions the rental to be paid may be increased. That contingency is that such renewal shall be granted

"For such annual rent as may be offered by the highest responsible bidder, who shall also agree to purchase of said party of the second part, all permanent and valuable buildings necessarily erected by said party for the convenient use of the water power hereby leased, at such price as such buildings shall be adjudged to be worth by three judicious, disinterested freeholders, to be chosen as hereinbefore specified; provided such buildings shall be erected on land belonging to the state, or land which can be purchased by said bidder at a reasonable price, to be determined by said appraisers."

The conditions imposed upon a prospective bidder are such that it is almost certain that no one will meet the terms, and consequently there will be no bidder. The actual effect of this provision is that the renewal will be granted for the same rental and upon the same terms as the first lease. The lease submitted is for a term of thirty years. A renewed lease will be for a like term, making a period of sixty years at the same rental regardless of changed conditions.

As to the lease submitted the rental was fixed in 1864 and that rent will continue until 1924, and if the renewal clause therein is valid it will run for another period of thirty years, making a period of ninety years at a rental fixed when the original lease was granted.

Such a right is a valuable right and should be founded upon a sufficient consideration.

There is at least an inference in this optional clause that implies an increase in rent, but this is nullified by the conditions surrounding it.

In case of Gelston vs. Sigmund, 27 Md. 334, it is held:

"Every agreement to merit the interposition of a court of equity to enforce it, must be fair, just, reasonable, bona fide, certain in all its parts, mutual, etc., and if any of these ingredients be wanting courts of equity will not decree a specific performance.

"An agreement by A to let B retain possession of certain property from the first of July, 1866, to the first of July, 1867, upon his giving the same rent that A 'might be able to obtain from other parties' is not such an agreement as a court of equity will enforce. It lacks certainty and mutuality."

On page 343, the court say:

"Now the alleged contract as it is stated in the bill seems to us to be wanting in two essential qualities, viz., certainty and mutuality.

"The rate of rent to be paid is not certain or definite. It was 'as much as any one else would pay.' That could not be certainly ascertained; it was not practicable to know how much another would give. In Bromley vs. Jefferies, 2 Vernon, 415, it was held that such a stipulation in an agreement rendered it void for uncertainty. See also Abell vs. Radcliff, 13 Johns, 297."

In Hayes vs. O'Brien, 149 Ill., 403, it is held:

"The earlier doctrine that the want of mutuality of obligation would render an optional contract incapable of specific enforcement, has been so modified that such agreements to convey, without any corresponding obligation or covenant to purchase, will now be specifically enforced, in equity, if made upon sufficient and valuable consideration. And so, when the agreement to convey is a part of a lease or other contract between the parties, for which the agreement to convey forms the true consideration, the want of mutuality will not avoid the contract."

"A lease for a term of ten years reserved to the lessor the right to sell the demised premises at any time after date, and then provided: 'But no such sale of said land shall be made by said first party without first having given said second party the privilege of purchasing said land upon such terms and at the same price per acre as any other person or purchaser might have offered therefor.' The lessor made sale of the premises without notice to the lessee, who, upon learning the fact, offered to pay the price at which the lessor sold the same, and demanded of the lessor and his purchaser a conveyance of the land. Held: That the lessee did all that the law required of him, and was entitled to the specific performance of the contract to sell and convey to him on his acceptance of the option."

It will be observed that in the Maryland case no method of fixing or determining the rent was provided for, while in the Illinois case a method of fixing the sale price was provided for. This distinguishes the two classes of cases.

In Pray vs. Clark, 113 Mass. 283, it is held:

"An agreement in a lease to renew at its expiration, the 'rent to be proportioned to the valuation of said premises at said time,' but with no provision made for determining that valuation, is too vague to be enforced in equity."

In Arnot vs. Alexander 44 Mo. 23, it is held:

"Leaving the amount of rent for the renewal term of a lease to be ascertained by what 'responsible parties would agree to give for the use of the premises' fixes the rent with as much certainty as though it were to be determined by a board of appraisers to be selected by the parties to the lease; and a court of chancery may in either case hear evidence and determine for itself the rentable market value of the premises where the appraisement fails. What 'responsible parties will agree to give' for the use of the rentable business property is nothing more than its full or highest rentable value.

"Where by the covenant for renewal of a lease the lessee is entitled thereto, 'provided that parties can agree upon terms, or that said lessee is willing to give as much as any other responsible party will agree to give,' it is in every way reasonable and just that the lessee should elect his remedy and either take damages at law or have a specific performance in equity."

In Folsom vs. Harr, 218 Ill., 369, it is held:

"A provision in a lease that 'should the party of the first part conclude to sell this property, then the second party is to have the first chance to buy the same,' no price being stated nor any method provided for ascertaining the price, is too uncertain to be specifically enforced as an agreement to convey to the party of the second part."

In this case Hayes vs. O'Brien, supra, is distinguished.

In the optional clause under consideration the terms of the new lease are fixed and these are certain. Such renewed lease shall be "for a like term of years" and "on the terms of this lease" if no higher bid is received.

It is possible but not probable that a higher bid will be received. The conditions upon which such bid shall be made are specified and these conditions are certain.

The optional clause when inserted in the first lease would be founded upon a sufficient consideration, as this clause could not be separated from the other terms of the lease.

While the optional clause is not a good one for the state, yet it cannot be ignored for that reason only. The right to grant such an optional clause by the agents of the state will be considered in a later part of this opinion.

The optional clause in the original lease is satisfied by one renewal and the lessee is not entitled to a second renewal without additional consideration.

In Kollack vs. Scribner, 98 Wis., 104, it is held:

"A general covenant to extend or renew a lease does not imply a continuation or renewal of the special covenant, because that would have the effect, by construction, to make the lease perpetual, or to call for renewals in perpetuity. Such interests in land are not favored in the law, and are not, therefore, upheld by construction or deduction from general language."

Also in King vs. Wilson, 98 Va., 259:

"A general covenant for renewal of a lease binds the lessor to renew for one term only, and if the tenant holds over without renewal he becomes a tenant from year to year, * * *.

"If a contract of lease for a term of years provides that it shall be renewable, or that the lessor shall pay for the improvements, the renewal for one term satisfies the contract to pay for the improvements, and, at the expiration of the second term, the lessor is entitled to recover the premises and the improvements."

The same rule is stated in Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, supra.

The optional clause in question does not contain words of perpetuity. It does not give a continued right of renewal. The word "renewal" is used in the singular. This clause, therefore, calls for only one renewal. The original consideration was for one renewal, and when that was granted that consideration was satisfied.

The insertion, therefore, of the renewal option in the renewed lease was not in compliance with the original contract. Unless the renewal option contained in the renewed lease, was upon a further consideration, then such renewal option would be without consideration and would be void.

The proper remedy to enforce such an option would be by the equitable proceeding of specific performance. Equity will not enforce such an option unless founded upon sufficient consideration.

In volume 3 of Pomeroy Equity Juris. (3d Ed.) at section 1293, the rule is stated:

> "Equity will never enforce an executory agreement unless there was an actual valuable consideration; and, unlike the common law, it does not permit a seal to supply the place of a real consideration. Disregarding mere forms, and looking at the reality, it requires an actual valuable consideration as essential in every such agreement, and allows the want of it to be shown, notwithstanding the seal, in the enforcement of covenants, settlements, and executory contracts of every description."

In Crandall vs. Willey, 166 Ill., 233, it is held:

> "To entitle a complainant to a decree for specific performance the contract sought to be enforced must be founded on a sufficiently fair consideration.
> "Equity will inquire into the real consideration of a contract, notwithstanding it bears a seal and recites a consideration."

In Davis vs. Pelty, 147 Mo., 374, it is held:

> "An agreement, in writing and under seal, by the owner of land, granting an option to purchase the same for a certain price, will not be enforced, where the agreement for such option is without any consideration to support it."

The granting, therefore, of a renewed lease by virtue of the option in question upon the same terms and conditions as the first lease, but without the optional clause, would be a satisfaction of such renewal option and would complete the contract between the parties thereto.

The insertion of a renewal clause in the renewed lease, merely because it was contained in the original lease would be without consideration and could not be enforced in equity. Such a clause would be invalid without an additional consideration to support it. The burden of showing such consideration would be upon the party seeking to enforce it.

These leases for water power are granted by agents of the state and their authority is fixed by statute. The authority to insert a renewal clause in a lease must be by virtue of the law as it existed at the time the original lease was granted. The original of the lease submitted was granted July 1, 1864.

The authority to grant such a lease was by section 20 of the act of March 23, 1840 (38 Ohio Law, 87), and now known as section 14009, General Code. This section is also found at page 206 of volume 1 of S. & C., Revised Statutes of 1860 and also of 1870.

This section reads:

> "Whenever, in the opinion of the board of public works, there shall be surplus water in either of the canals, or in the feeders, or at the dams erected for the purpose of supplying either of said canals with water, or for the purpose of improving the navigation of any river, and constructed at the expense of the state, over and above the quantity of water which may be required for the purpose of navigation, the said commissioners may order such surplus water, and any lands granted to, or purchased by the state, for the purpose of using the same, or such part thereof as they may deem expedient, to be sold for hydraulic purposes, subject to such conditions and reservations as they may consider necessary and proper, either in perpetuity or for a limited number of years, for a certain annual rent, or otherwise, as they may deem most beneficial for the interests of the state."

By virtue of this section the board of public works could grant a lease for water power in perpetuity, or it could grant for a term certain, with an option for renewal for a like term. This would authorize the insertion of the option in question in the original lease.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the optional clause in question as inserted in the original lease is valid and is good for one renewal only. If the renewed lease contains a like optional clause and there is no further consideration for such option, then such optional clause as contained in the renewed lease is invalid and is not binding upon the state. It is without consideration.

As per your request enclosed find the lease submitted. Enclosure.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

HUMANE AGENTS—POWERS AND DUTIES.

Humane agents may not make arrests unless their appointments have been approved under section 10071, General Code. They can receive no other compensation than under section 10072, General Code, from any treasury.

Humane agents, if they are also officers or members of the humane society, have such powers as are conferred upon other members and officers of such societies.

Attorneys employed by the humane society cannot be paid out of the county treasury for their services in prosecutions under section 12493, General Code, but may be paid for services under section 13012.

An auditor may not issue his warrant in payment of attorney's fees in such cases until they have been properly allowed by one of the tribunals authorized to make such allowances under section 13440, General Code. There is nothing in the law to prevent the cases all being brought before the same justice.

The authority to arrest, conferred upon an humane agent, seems to be only a power and not a duty and he cannot be compelled to make arrests, nor can he be reimbursed for expenses incurred.

Considered as a matter of policy and good business principles, at least, the prosecuting attorney should look after all such cases taken upon error, unless for good cause the humane society employs its own attorney.

A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction under sections 13008, 13009 and 13012, General Code, as these sections authorize commitment to the penitentiary.

> "1. Under section 13439, G. C., may the magistrate remit the costs and afterwards collect them from the county?
> "2. When the magistrate tries and convicts under sections 13008, 13009 and 13012, G. C., may he suspend sentence until the provisions of sections 13010 and 13013, G. C., have been complied with?
> "The practice is to sentence to jail or workhouse for a definite period and to remain until fine and costs are paid—then, upon the verbal promise of the defendant to pay a stipulated amount to the humane society as trustee (see sections 13016 and 13017) or live with and properly provide for his family, the magistrate suspends sentence and remits the costs.
> "Under this arrangement many of these delinquent husbands and fathers are brought into court the second and third time.
> "3. If it is not legal for the county to pay the costs which have been remitted, shall findings be made for recovery?"

All of these questions assume that the magistrate has jurisdiction to render judgment in prosecutions for violations of sections 13008, 13009 and 13012. This assumption I am convinced is unfounded. Each of these sections makes possible a sentence to the penitentiary for violation of its terms.

Section 12372, of the General Code provides:

> "Offenses which may be punished by death, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, are felonies; all other offenses are misdemeanors."

Under the clear terms of this statute it is impossible to conclude otherwise than that the offenses set out in sections 13008, 13009 and 13012 must be regarded as felonies. Therefore, with respect to offenses coming within the terms of these statutes, the magistrate has only such jurisdiction as that provided by section 13511 of the General Code. In short, the magistrate has no further power than to cause the arrest of a violator of these statutes, and to examine him for the purpose of binding him over to the grand jury in the event he is justified by the facts in assuming that there is probable cause to believe the accused guilty.

Since the magistrate has no jurisdiction over the offenses mentioned by you, an answer to these three questions is rendered impossible.

I assume that in the fourth question, wherein you ask whether an attorney may be compensated for prosecuting cases under section 12492, you mean section 12493. If I am wrong in this assumption, and some other section is intended, I would be pleased to take the matter up again.

I am returning herewith the correspondence submitted by you.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

DITCH PROCEEDINGS—COMPENSATION AND EXPENSES TO BE ALLOWED COMMISSIONERS IN SUCH PROCEEDINGS—ONE HUNDRED DAY LIMIT.

When acting under the ditch proceedings prescribed by sections 6763-1, et seq., General Code, county commissioners may be allowed their expenses and the sum of three dollars per day for every day they work in such proceedings. The limitation of three dollars per day for one hundred days, prescribed by section 3001, General Code, has no application when the commissioners are working under these special statutes.

If the commissioners decide not to go on with the improvement upon filing of the petition, the costs, in accordance with section 6563-10, General Code, are paid by the petitioners and they are liable for the same upon their bond. The compensation and expenses of the commissioners in such event will be so paid.

Under section 6563-14, General Code, when the commissioners determine to abandon the proceedings after the report of the surveyors, such costs and expenses will be paid out of the treasury of the county.

When the work is proceeded with and the improvement accomplished, under sections 6563-38 and 6563-35, General Code, the commissioners may make their compensation and expenses payable either out of the county treasury or out of assessments levied against the property holders.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 14th, 1914, you request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "Can county commissioners charge their expenses while acting as members of boards in all joint county ditch proceedings, or can they only be paid their expenses when acting under the provisions of sections 6563-1 to 6563-48, inclusive, General Code, which are special sections relating to a particular kind of proceeding as definitely set forth in section 6563-1, General Code?
> "Section 6563-44 provides: '* * * * * and said commissioners shall receive the sum of three dollars a day and their expenses while employed under this bill.'
> "While acting on this particular kind of work, are the days so employed to be considered as coming within the limitation of one hundred days in any one year, as provided in section 3001, General Code, or is the per diem fixed by section 6563-44 to be regarded as being an additional allowance?
> "Section 6563-44 does not show how these per diems and expenses are to be paid. Do sections 6563-36, 6563-37 and 6563-38 solve this point and make such compensations and expenses a part of the cost of the improvement to be assesed against the benefited property?
> "Should these compensations and expenses be paid out of the treasury of the county when the sessions of the joint board are held, or out of each county treasury?"

Answering your first question, section 3001 is as follows:

"The annual compensation of each county commissioner shall be determined as follows:

"In each county in which on the twentieth day of December, 1911, the aggregate of the tax duplicate for real estate and personal property is five million dollars or less, such compensation shall be nine hundred dollars, and in addition thereto, in each county in which such aggregate is more than five million dollars, three dollars on each amount of such duplicate in excess of five million dollars. That the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115% of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911. In counties where ditch work is carried on by the commissioners, in addition to the salary herein provided, each commissioner shall receive three dollars for each day of time he is actually employed in ditch work; the total amount so received for such ditch work not to exceed three hundred dollars in any one year. Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner and shall not in any case exceed four thousand dollars per annum. Such compensation shall be in equal monthly installments from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 6563-44 of the General Code is as follows:

"Said surveyors named in section 8 (G. C., section 6563-8) shall meet with the joint board of county commissioners whenever required by said board and said surveyors and auditors shall be paid their necessary expenses while employed under this act and shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed in ditch work generally and said commissioner shall receive the sum of three dollars a day and their actual expenses while employed under this bill."

The provision of section 3001 with reference to compensation for ditch work is general in its character, and applies by its terms to all manner and form of ditch work undertaken by the county commissioners and is intended rather to reimburse the commissioners for expenses incurred than to operate as a compensation for duties performed.

Section 6563-44 of the General Code, however, is manifestly special in its application, being confined by its terms to ditch work done under the provisions of the act contemplated only. This section provides both the compensation and an additional reimbursement for actual expenses while employed under the act in question. Under the well established rule of construction, the latter statute must be regarded in its application as an exception to the general terms of section 3001. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the latter provision holds and that when acting under this statute the commissioners are not restricted by the three hundred dollars maximum of compensation provided by section 3001, and as a condition to such compensation they may when so acting under section 6563-44 receive their actual expenses incurred.

In your second question you ask whether such compensation and expenses are to be paid from the county treasury, or whether they are to be regarded as a part of the cost of the improvement to be assessed against the benefited property.

Of the provisions making part of this act, section 6563-10 provides that the petitioners shall be liable on their bond to pay costs incurred in the event that the commissioners decide not to go on with the improvement. In this event, of course, the expenses and compensation of the commissioners will be paid neither from the county treasury, nor will it be deemed part of the costs of the improvement to be paid from the proceeds of the bond issue and assessed against the property.

Section 6563-14 provides that in the event the commissioners determine to abandon the proceedings after the report of the surveyors the expenses incurred shall be paid by each county equally out of the treasury of the county. This provision clearly answers your question as to source of payment of county commissioners' expenses and compensation incurred when the proceedings are abandoned at this stage. If the surveyors' report is accepted and the commissioners determine to go on with the work, section 6563-33 becomes material. This section provides for issuing the bonds of the county for the amount apportioned to it as provided by the preceding section.

Section 6563-35 provides that the commissioners of each county to which part of the cost is apportioned may pay such part of that amount as they deem fit from the general taxes, causing an annual levy to be made for the purpose of retiring such bonds as are made chargeable against the county, and leaving the balance to be paid by assessment against the benefited property.

Section 6563-38 is as follows:

> "All of the costs and expenses connected with ordering and granting said improvement shall be taken as a part of the cost thereof and shall be included in the amount ordered to be paid by each county, except their costs of aribtration as provided in section 29 (section 6563-29, G. C.)"

From this provision it is manifest that it is discretionary with the commissioners whether all or part of the costs of the improvement are to be made assessable against the benefited property, or chargeable against the county generally.

Section 6563-38 would seem on its face to be practically conclusive of the determination that the compensation and expenses of the commissioners are to be determined part of the costs of the improvement which are to be those provided for. This conclusion is strengthened by a reference to the special requirement of section 6535 of the chapter relating to single county ditches. The statute, of course, can have no reference to the sections under consideration, but the fact that in this case the legislature deem it necessary to specifically require that such costs should be paid from the county treasury enforces the conclusion that without such provision the costs would be considered in no wise different as regards their manner of payment from any other costs entailed by the proceedings.

In answer to your second question, therefore, I am of the opinion that the compensation and expenses of the commissioners provided by section 6563-44 may be paid either out of the treasury of the county or made assessable against the benefited property in accordance with the will of the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

NOT NECESSARY FOR ADMINISTRATOR TO FILE APPLICATION TO REGISTER TITLE TO REALTY WHEN PROCEEDINGS ARE INSTITUTED UNDER SECTION 11922, GENERAL CODE.

It is unnecessary for an administrator to file an application to register title to realty when he institutes proceedings under section 11922, General Code, to complete a contract entered into by his decedent during the life time of the latter for the sale of such real property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

HON. H. F. CASTLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 11, 1914, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is it necessary for an administrator to have the title to real estate registered before he can complete a land contract, that is, in a case where the decedent owned the whole interest in real estate and had sold it upon land contract and the administrator has to bring an action to complete said land contract?
> "2. Is it necessary to record the whole case in a real estate? If so, would the probate court be entitled to fees for the whole record?"

1. No, if the proceeding is instituted under section 11922, General Code.

2. This question has been answered in an opinion addressed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of December 14, 1914, a copy of which opinion I am enclosing you herewith.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPALITY NOT LEGALLY BOUND TO PAY FOR SERVICES TO FAMILY PHYSICIAN WHO RENDERED SERVICES TO QUARANTINED PERSONS, WITHOUT CONTRACT WITH THE MUNICIPALITY.

A municipality is not legally bound to pay for the services of family physicians rendering medical attendance to quarantined persons without orders from the board of health, even though such family was unable to pay.

Although the city is not legally bound to pay, it may do so if no district physician has been appointed, or if one has been appointed and is paid for his services in each case, and not a specific salary, and the board believes the bills of the family physicians to be just and reasonable.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

HON. C. E. RUBLE, City Solicitor, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date, as follows:

"Where a family has been quarantined and the family physician continues to render medical attendance without consulting or having orders from the board of health, and afterwards puts in his bill to the health board for his services and the bill of a doctor called in consultation by said physician, is the health board liable? The family are not able to pay.

"The boy in this family took sick and the family doctor was called. Later the house was quarantined by the health officer. The family doctor still continued to make his calls until the boy died, which death occurred during the time of quarantine. The consultation took place also during the time of the quarantine, and the consulting physician was called in by this family doctor. After the death both physicians rendered their account to the board of health. The health board never requested the services of either physician.

Section 4408 of the General Code provides:

"The board of health shall appoint a health officer, who shall be the executive officer. He shall furnish his name, address and other information required by the state board of health. The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

Section 4410 of the General Code reads:

"Each ward or district physician shall care for the sick poor and each person quarantined in his ward or district when such person is unable to pay for medical attendance, and for all persons sent from his ward or district to the municipal pest house when such persons are unable to pay for medical attendance."

Section 4436 of the General Code provides:

"When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel, and all other necessaries of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses, when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined."

From these sections it is clear that when a district physician is appointed by the board of health, it is his duty to "care for the sick poor and each person quarantined in his ward or district when such person is unable to pay for medical attendance." It is also clear from these sections that it is the duty of the board of health to provide medical attendance and medicine for persons quarantined, and that it is the duty of the municipality, when the persons quarantined are unable to pay, to meet such expenses, also, that when the board of health must furnish such medical attendance and medicine, they do so through the district physician, whose duty it is under section 4410, to "care for the sick poor and each person quarantined in his ward or district, when such person is unable to pay for medical attendance.

In the case of Patrick vs. Town of Baldwin, 109 Wis., 342, 53 L. R. A., 613, it was held:

> "Where a law imposes on a municipality the duty of maintaining poor persons, and designates officers thereof to act in its behalf in the performance of such duty, their mere neglect will not operate as an implied request to a private party to supply a needy person's wants upon which such party can act and hold the municipality liable, as upon an implied contract."

In McQuillan on Municipal Corporations, Vol. 5, section 2453, the following doctrine is stated:

> "A municipal corporation will not be held liable on an implied contract to pay for relief furnished a pauper or indigent person, without solicitation on the part of a municipality, unless the statute so provides. 'Towns are liable for the support of paupers because the statute has imposed that duty on them. There was no such liability at common law. The duty of discharging this obligation is devolved by statute upon the overseers of the poor, and it is only through their action that the town can be made liable to a person who furnishes relief to a pauper.'"

Many cases are cited by the author in support of this proposition.

From a consideration of these authorities, it is my opinion that the board of health of your city is not legally bound to pay for the services of the physician referred to. However, if no district physician has been appointed in your city, or, if one has been appointed and is paid for his services in each case, and not a specific salary, it is my opinion that the board of health may, if they believe the bills reasonable and just, certify them for payment under section 4436, and that when they have so certified them, such bills may be paid by the municipality.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

THE COST OF A CULVERT TO CARRY WATER ACROSS THE STREET TO BE CONSIDERED A PART OF THE COST OF STREET IMPROVEMENT.

A culvert to carry water across a street is such a part of a street improvement that its cost is to be considered as a part of the entire cost thereof, and it is within the power of the council to assess its cost to abutting owners so long as the assessment is not in excess of benefits conferred or more than one-third of the value of the assessed property after the improvement is completed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 15, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "May the council of a city assess the entire cost of the construction of a culvert against abutting property owners if such culvert was necessary to provide for a run or creek flowing across said street being improved by paving? Said street is not a county or state road, or main thoroughfare, leading into, or through, the city.

"The cost of such culvert is about $300.00 and the property owners' contention is that such cost for thus providing for a natural waterway must be assumed as a part of the city's portion of the improvement."

Provision is made in various instances for the construction of bridges and culverts, but none specifically applying to the situation you describe has been found.

Section 3812 reads:

"Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, dock, wharf, pier, public road, or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, repaving, repairing, constructing sidewalks, piers, wharves, docks, retaining walls, sewers, drains, watercourses, water mains or laying of water pipe and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon, and any part of the cost and expense connected with or made for changing the channel of, or narrowing, widening, dredging, deepening or improving any stream or watercourse, and for constructing or improving any levee or levees, or boulevards thereon, or along or about the same, together with any retaining wall, or riprap protection, bulkheads, culverts, approaches, flood gates, or waterways or drains incidental thereto, which the council may declare conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, by any of the following methods:

"First. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.

"Second. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or "Third. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

From this it is seen that it is within the power of the council to assess "any part of the entire cost on abutting owners." That the construction of a culvert, made necessary to carry water across an improvement, is a part of the entire cost, cannot be questioned.

Section 3820, General Code, reads:

"The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections."

Council is limited in its assessments to thirty-three and one-third per cent. of the value of the property after the improvement is made, within any period of five years. (Sec. 3819, G. C.)

This, of course, limits any one assessment in the same manner and to the same extent. The same section, 3819, G. C., limits assessments to benefits conferred. Consequently, while council under section 3812 may determine whether it will (1) assess by a percentage of tax value, (2) in proportion to benefits, or (3) by the foot front of bounding or abutting property, yet its assessments must be limited to the value of such special benefits, or one-third of the actual value of the property after the improvement is completed, and must, under section 3820, G. C., pay from the general fund for intersections and one-fiftieth of the entire cost. It is, therefore, within the power of council to assess this culvert to the property abutting on the improvement, provided the assessment is based upon either system found in section 3812, the city pays one-fiftieth of the cost and for street intersections, and the assessment in no instance exceeds the amount of benefit conferred or one-third of the value of the property after completion of the improvement.

The contention that the city must bear the entire cost of the culvert cannot be sustained, although it is clear that the council may charge it to the city as a portion of the share of the city under section 3820. This, however, is within the discretion of the council, as it cannot be compelled to charge the city with more than one-fiftieth of all cost, and the cost of intersections.

If this culvert was on a county or state road, it would have to be built by the county commissioners (see sections 2421, G. C., et seq.), but being upon what might be termed a cross street, its improvement will have to be paid for by the property owners of the city, as council may determine.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS NOT AUTHORIZED TO READJUST THE RENTAL RESERVED IN THE UNION GAS & ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY'S LEASED PROPERTY CONSISTING OF PART OF THE CANAL IN CINCINNATI.

The grant by the state of Ohio to the city of Cincinnati of a part of the canal in Cincinnati, upon which, with other canal lands, the Union Gas & Electric Light Company has a lease from the state for the purpose of maintaining a pole line, does not authorize the superintendent of public works to readjust the rental reserved in such lease and said company is required to pay the full amount of the rental stipulated for in said lease.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 4, 1915.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You again submit to this department for opinion the request of the Union Gas & Electric Company, of Cincinnati, to reappraise the value of its lease for pole line rights along the canal in Hamilton county, Ohio.

The facts are stated in a letter from said company as follows:

> "Under the terms of a lease between the state of Ohio and the Union Gas & Electric Company, the company pays a rental of $600 per year for the privilege of occupying for pole line purposes the outer edge of the tow path at Canal and Plum streets, Cincinnati, to a point known as Sharon Road, in Springfield township, Hamilton county.
> "By act of the general assembly passed May 15, 1911, to provide for leasing a part of the Miami and Erie canal to the city of Cincinnati as a public street that part of the canal between Elm and Plum, and Mitchell avenue in the city of Cincinnati passed to the control of the city. As the Union Gas & Electric Company has a franchise authorizing it to erect poles and maintain lines along the public streets of said city free of charge, we respectfully request that your board reappraise the value of the remainder of the property occupied and readjust the rental to be paid."

The original request was withdrawn and you now ask for a reconsideration of the matter.

The lease to the Union Gas & Electric Company contains several provisions which are controlling.

These are as follows:

"Said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to remove its poles, wires and fixtures altogether or to remove its poles and other fixtures from the surface and place its wires under ground, whenever, in the opinion of the board of public works of the state, the maintenance of such poles, wires and fixtures on or above the surface of the ground is inconsistent with the use of such ground under any other lease hereafter made by the board of public works, or whenever the lands herein leased cease to be used for canal purposes.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"Said party of the second part further covenants and agrees to remove its poles, wires and fixtures altogether or to remove its poles and other fixtures from the surface and place its wires under ground, whenever the city of Cincinnati, by ordinance duly passed, requires other overhead wires on neighborhood or adjacent streets to be removed or placed under ground; said removal to be within sixty days after the passage of said ordinance unless a longer time shall be fixed by the terms of the ordinance. Failure to remove said poles, fixtures and to remove said wires or place them under ground within the time fixed shall terminate and operate as a surrender of all right of the party of the second part under this lease and the board of public works of the city of Cincinnati may thereupon cause such poles, wires and fixtures to be removed at the sole cost and expense of the party of the second part.

"Said party of the second part further covenants and agrees to remove its poles and fixtures and to remove its wires or place them under ground on such portions of the canal property as may hereafter be leased or otherwise disposed of to the city of Cincinnati for the purposes of a public park, drive, boulevard or parkway, said party of the second part to remove its poles and fixtures, to place its wires under ground, and to thereafter maintain and keep in repair the conduits, wires and fixtures under ground, all under the direction and to the satisfaction of the board, officer or officers of the city of Cincinnati having charge of such park, drive, boulevard or parkway and under such regulations, permits, etc., as may be required by such board, officer or officers."

These provisions show that the lease or sale of this part of the canal or a portion thereof was in contemplation at the time the above lease was executed. There is no provision in this lease calling for a revaluation in case of a lease or sale to the city of Cincinnati.

The land has been leased, or a portion thereof, to the city of Cincinnati for "public street or boulevard, and for sewerage, conduit and if desired for subway purposes."

By the terms of the lease to the Union Gas & Electric Company, such company may be required to place its wires underground. Nothing is said about a revaluation or a readjustment of the rental value of the rights granted.

The lease to the Union Gas & Electric Company covers the canal for a distance of 76,680 feet, more or less. Only a part of this has been leased to the city of Cincinnati by authority of the act of 102 Ohio Laws, 168.

Section 1 of said act reads:

> "Permission shall be given to the city of Cincinnati, in the manner hereinafter provided, to enter upon, improve and occupy forever, as a public street or boulevard, and for sewerage, conduit and if desired for subway purposes, all of that part of the Miami and Erie canal which extends from a point three hundred feet north of Mitchell avenue to the east side of Broadway in said city, including the width thereof, as owned or held by the state, but such permission shall be granted subject to all oustanding rights or claims, if any, with which it may conflict, and upon the further terms and conditions of this act."

The lease to the electric company granting it the right to place its poles on the bank of the canal is "an outstanding right" which may conflict with the rights granted to the city of Cincinnati by the later lease.

The fact that the electric company has a franchise which permits it to construct its poles in the streets of Cincinnati free of charge does not determine its rights under its lease with the state of Ohio.

Suppose the grant to the city of Cincinnati had been made to a private corporation which desired to use the canals for private purposes, and under the same terms of the grant to the city of Cincinnati. In that event the electric company would be seeking to enforce its rights under its lease, and it could enforce them.

The city of Cincinnati takes its grant subject to the rights of the Union Gas & Electric Company to maintain a pole line on said canal lands as granted by the state to it or to have its wires maintained underground as provided in the lease.

The lease to the electric company grants rights in canal lands in addition to that leased to Cincinnati. The company does not seek a cancellation of its lease, but asks for a readjustment of the rental reserved therein.

The lease is one entire instrument which covers a certain specified distance and the rental is fixed at a gross amount for the entire privilege.

The lease is an entirety and must either be enforced as a whole, or it must be abandoned or cancelled. If there was a readjustment of the rental, it would in effect constitute a new lease.

There is no obligation upon the part of the state to readjust the rental provided for in this lease. The state has granted certain rights to the Union Gas & Electric Company, and it has protected those rights in the grant made to the city of Cincinnati. The state is fulfilling the obligations of the lease and is entitled to the full amount of the rental stipulated for therein.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the Union Gas & Electric Company is required to pay the full amount of the rent reserved in its lease from the state and that the superintendent of public works is not authorized to readjust such rent.

Respectfully,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE SHOULD NOT BE DETERMINED, UNDER SECTION 7730, GENERAL CODE, AT A TIME WHEN THERE IS AN EPIDEMIC PREVAILING IN THE SCHOOL.

School attendance should not be determined under section 7730, General Code, at a time when there is an epidemic prevailing in the school, or rather in the district wherein such school is located. Such average daily attendance should be determined during the year when the school attendance is normal or not affected by an epidemic.

When the average daily attendance of a school during the preceding year has been below twelve, because of an epidemic, and such average daily attendance for the succeeding year would be more than an average of twelve, the board could legally employ a teacher and continue such school, and the payment of such teacher would be legally authorized under the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1915.

HON. GUY O'DONNELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 9, 1914, you submitted to this department a request for an opinion, as follows:

> "Section 7730, Ohio Law 104, page 139, in part provides:
> "'When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below twelve, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to such other school, or schools, as the local board may direct.'
> "A school whose average daily attendance during the preceding year had been below twelve because of an epidemic of measles, or other sickness, and which during this year would have more than an attendance of twelve, if the board of education should desire to employ a teacher and continue this school, would the payment of such teacher be an authorized payment under the law?"

In reply thereto I desire to say that under date of December 23, 1914, in an official opinion which was rendered to Hon. Chas. F. Close, prosecuting attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, upon the question as to whether or not a suspended district may be revived by the addition of resident pupils to the district so as to make certain an average attendance of more than twelve, it was held that a suspended school district may be continued by the assignment of pupils to such district, provided the board deems this course best for the advancement of education, as provided by section 7684, General Code, supra.

I am enclosing a copy of said opinion and believe that it covers the request set forth in your letter of inquiry. However, in your letter you state the average daily attendance for the preceding year had been below twelve because of an epidemic of measles and other sickness, and that the school during the present year would have more than an attendance of twelve. While it is doubtful whether it could be said that a school did not have any certain daily average attendance, because some of the scholars were detained from attending school because of sickness, nevertheless, I feel that the opinion to which I above referred and a copy of which I am enclosing, covers your question without discussing any forced absence of scholars on account of sickness.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.

RIGHT OF TITLE GUARANTEE AND TRUST COMPANIES TO ACT AS DEPOSITARIES OF COUNTY FUNDS—MUST RECEIVE DEPOSITS GENERALLY IN THE SAME MANNER AS A BANK—NOT AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE ORDINARY CERTIFICATES OF DEPOSIT—MAY ISSUE CERTIFICATES OF SHARES IN MORTGAGE NOTES HELD BY SUCH COMPANY.

Title guarantee and trust companies may be designated as and act as depositaries of county funds under sections 2715, et seq., General Code, and secure the funds deposited with them in the manner provided by said sections.

These companies have not the power to receive deposits generally, in the same manner as banks, but the power given such companies "to make loans for themselves or others" implies the power to receive the money with which to make such loans and to that extent to receive deposits; that is such companies can only receive deposits for the purpose of loaning the money deposited for the benefit of the person making the deposit.

Title guarantee and trust companies are not authorized to issue ordinary certificates of deposit which would circulate in the same manner as cashier's checks, but they may deliver a proper acknowledgement or certificate for the receipt of money deposited with them.

Title guarantee and trust companies may issue certificates of shares in mortgage notes held by such companies; in the manner specified in the request for this opinion; they may also receive money deposited with them for the purpose of purchasing such certificates, in small payments, such payments being evidenced by entries in pass books; in the manner specified in the request for this opinion.

Only such part of the securities belonging to title guarantee and trust companies as are deposited with the treasurer of state must be in conformity with sections 9518 and 9519, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1915.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On November 12, 1914, you requested my opinion upon the following questions with reference to title guarantee and trust companies:

> "First. May such companies act as depositaries of county funds under the provisions of the county depositary law and hypothecate their securities, taken under the provisions of sections 9851, 9518 and 9519, G. C., to secure the signers of the depositary bond against loss?"

Your first request raises the question of whether a title guarantee and trust company is such a trust company as may be designated as a depositary for county funds under sections 2715 et seq.

Section 2715 is as follows:

> "The commissioners in each county shall designate in the manner hereinafter provided a bank or banks or trust companies, situated in the county and duly incorporated under the laws of this state, or organized under the laws of the United States, as inactive depositaries, and one or more of such banks or trust companies located in the county seat as active depositaries of the money of the county. In a county where such bank or trust company > does not exist or fails to bid as provided herein, or to comply with the conditions of this chapter relating to county depositaries, the commissioners shall designate a private bank or banks, located in the county as such inactive depositaries, and if in such county no such private bank exists or fails to bid as provided herein, or to comply with the conditions of this chapter relating to county depositaries, and the commissioners shall designate any other bank or banks incorporated under the laws of this state, or organized under the laws of the United States, as such inactive depositaries. If there be no such bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States, located at the county seat, then the commissioners shall designate a private bank, if there be one located therein, as such active depositary. No bank or trust company shall receive a larger deposit than one million dollars."

You will note that the language is, "shall designate * * * a bank or banks or trust companies, situated in the county and duly incorporated under the laws of this state, or organized under the laws of the United States." The county depositary law, the first section of which is quoted above, constitutes a part of the depositary laws now applicable to the state and to its political subdivisions; I think the first depositary law applied only to state funds. As first passed it was optional, but afterwards was made mandatory; it is perhaps the most complete in its provisions of any of the depositary laws, but the main features of all of them are similar; and the language used in all as to the kind of banks or trust companies which may be designated as depositaries is similar. Thus, the state depositary law now provides for the deposit of state funds in "such national banks within the state, and banks and trust companies doing business within this state, and incorporated under the laws thereof, as the board deems eligible to be made such depositaries."

The language as to the bank's eligibility as a depositary for county funds is contained in section 2715, which I have quoted above. The language used as to what banks or trust companies may be depositaries for municipal or other funds is very similar. That is, there is no qualification contained in any of the sections as to the powers which must be possessed by any given bank or trust company; and it is now provided by law that building and loan associations and private banks may be chosen as depositaries in certain cases; it was also held by the common pleas court of Franklin county, prior to the enactment making private banks eligible, that a private bank could lawfully be designated as a depositary for school funds. (State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 15 O. D., N. P., 720.)

I am also informed that in the unreported case of Schmidt, a taxpayer, vs. County Commissioners of Franklin county, Case No. 51,448 in the court of common pleas, Franklin county, Ohio, the direct question was raised as to whether a title guarantee and trust company could be designated to act as a depositary for county funds under the act passed April 2, 1906, 98 O. L., 274. This act provided that the county commissioners should designate,

> "a bank or banks or trust companies situated in such county, and duly incorporated under the laws of this state, or organized under the laws of the United States as a depositary or depositaries of the money of the county."

This act has been amended since, and is now embodied in section 2715 of the General Code which I have heretofore quoted in this opinion, and it will be noted that the language as to what banks or trust companies shall be designated as depositaries is practically identical. In this case the common pleas court allowed a mandatory injunction to compel county commissioners to recognize title guarantee and trust companies as eligible, within the meaning of this statute. Since that decision I am informed the Guarantee Title and Trust Company of Columbus has continuously been designated as a depositary for county funds, and has acted as such depositary, and I have no doubt that the same is true with similar companies in other parts of the state.

On April 22, 1909, Hon. D. S. Creamer, treasurer of state, requested the attorney general of Ohio for an opinion as to whether the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of Columbus was such a trust company as might be designated as a depositary for state funds; on said date the attorney general rendered an opinion which may be found in the report of the attorney general for the years 1909-1910, at page 256. This opinion is as follows:

> "Complying with your request as to whether the Title Guarantee and Trust Company of Columbus is such a trust company as may be designated as a depositary of state funds by the depositary board, I beg to advise that in my opinion the board is authorized under the statute to designate this company as one of the state depositaries if the company's financial condition is such as, in the opinion of the board, will warrant the same.
> "Section 200-3 of the Revised Statutes provides that:
> " 'It shall be the duty of said board of deposit to meet on the first Monday in October of each year, or any time after the annual meeting, upon the call of the chairman, and designate such banks, and trust companies within this state, as they may, under the provisions of this act, deem eligible to be made state depositaries for the purpose of receiving on deposit funds of this state.'
> "This statute just quoted controls in the matter and leaves the board free to select any bank or trust company which the board may deem financially responsible and properly managed as a state depository."

I feel, therefore, that by the decision of the court of common pleas of Franklin county, which has been continuously and in good faith acted upon by the county officials and the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, and by the opinion of Attorney General Denman, which I have quoted above, this question should be considered as settled, and, therefore, I shall not go into the question of the power of title guarantee and trust companies to act as such depositaries; but upon the strength of the former opinion of the attorney general, and the decision to which I have referred, answer that it has been settled thus far that such companies may be designated to act as such depositaries.

As to the power of such companies to hypothecate their securities taken under the provisions of sections 9851, 9518 and 9519 of the General Code to secure the signers of a depositary bond against loss, it is sufficient to say that section 9851 simply provides that the securities deposited with the treasurer of state by title guarantee and trust companies must be those permitted by sections 9518 and 9519, and expressly provides that except such deposit, the capital of such companies may be invested as the board of directors prescribes. Of course the $50,000 in securities deposited with the treasurer of state cannot be hypothecated; but if the company chooses to invest the rest of its capital also in securities specified in sections 9518 and 9519, there is no reason why such securities cannot be so hypothecated. The fact that a title guarantee and trust company may be designated as a depositary necessarily implies its right to secure the deposit of public funds in the manner provided by the statute.

Your second question is as follows:

"May such companies receive deposits and issue ordinary interest bearing certificates of deposit therefor?"

Section 9850 of the General Code, which specifies the powers of title guarantee and trust companies, is as follows:

"A title guarantee and trust company may prepare and furnish abstracts and certificates of title to real estate, bonds, mortgages and other securities, and guarantee such titles, the validity and due execution of such securities, and the performance of contracts incident thereto, make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and guarantee the collection of interest and principal of such loans; take charge of and sell, mortgage, rent or otherwise dispose of real estate for others, and perform all the duties of an agent relative to property deeded or otherwise entrusted to it."

As a corporation only has those powers which are expressly granted or necessarily implied, it follows from the above section that a title guarantee and trust company has no power to receive deposits unless such power can be implied from the language used, as it is not expressly granted. It will be noted that it has the power to make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and I think it must necessarily be implied that the power to make loans for others necessarily implies the power to receive the money with which to make the loan, that is to that extent to receive deposits; but I do not believe that this power can be broadened into a power to receive deposits generally or in the manner in which deposits are received by banks; but that it can only receive deposits for the purpose of loaning the deposits for the benefit of the person depositing it. In other words, title guarantee and trust companies are not granted banking powers; and as pointed out in a former opinion to you, dated December 1, 1913, they are not expressly, or by implication, included in the catalogue of corporations which come under the supervision of the superintendent of banks.

It is difficult to determine exactly what is meant by "ordinary interest bearing certificates of deposit." If it is meant that such certificates are negotiable and such as are commonly used in banking business, then I would say that the issuance of such certificates is improper. But a certificate of deposit properly is nothing more than an evidence of indebtedness; that is, it is a written acknowledgment delivered by a bank or trust company that it has received from a certain person a certain sum of money on deposit. Such certificates have been held to be in effect equivalent to promissory notes.

My holding, therefore, is that a title guarantee and trust company may not issue certificates of deposit which would be negotiable and could circulate in the same manner as cashier's checks; but that the power given to "make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others and guarantee the collection of interest and principal on such loans" gives such company the power to receive the money with which to make the loan and necessarily to deliver a proper acknowledgment of its receipt.

Your third question is as follows:

"May such companies issue mortgage certificates in the form shown herewith, marked exhibit 'A'?"

The mortgage certificates to which you refer, in substance is an evidence of indebtedness, the payment of which is guaranteed, by the Guarantee Title and Trust Company; the company, for example, has notes aggregating $47,700 due to it. These notes are secured by mortgages on real estate; the company deposits these notes and mortgages with a certain trust company and issues its mortgage certificates of varying denominations for aliquot parts of the total sum deposited with the trustee. The aggregate of the different certificates may equal the total amount deposited with the trustee; in other words, these certificates are issued by the title guarantee and trust company and are secured by the deposit of the notes and mortgages in question, and each holder of the certificate has as security his proportionate share of the notes and mortgages so deposited.

I think this transaction is fairly within the power granted to such companies by section 9850, viz.:

"Making loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and guarantee the collection of the interest and principal of such loans."

Your fourth question is as follows:

"May such companies accept deposits and issue pass books therefor under contracts of which the following is a copy:

"'CONTRACT AND RULES AND REGULATIONS.

"'Respecting partial payment contracts to which all who accept this book assent.

"'I HEREBY purchase from the Guarantee Title and Trust Company one (1) _____ dollar ($_____) five per cent. (5%) guaranteed first mortgage bond. I agree to pay for this bond as follows: _____ dollars ($_____) herewith and _____ dollars ($_____) on or before the 10th day of every month hereafter until full payment is made, and the conditions of the purchase, delivery rate of interest, due date, privileges and penalties are all as hereinafter set forth, and are hereby agreed to by the purchaser, and accepted by the company when it receives and retains the first installment on account of such purchase.

"'Name _____
"'Street_____
"'City and County_____
"'State_____
"'Date _____, 19_____

"'CONDITIONS.

"'1. Payments are to be made at the rate of _____ dollars ($_____) per month and are to be received by the Guarantee Title and Trust Company on or before the 10th day of each month in which they are due.

"'2. The partial payments on this contract shall bear interest at the rate of four per cent (4%) per annum computed semi-annually on the 1st days of January and July. All payments made after the 5th day of the month shall bear no interest until the 1st of the following month. No interest will be allowed upon this contract as long as payments are in arrears.

"'3. If the payments remain in arrears at any time for three consecutive months, the company may cancel this contract, assume the ownership of the bond and return to the purchaser the amount paid in less three per cent. (3%) of the face value of the bond contracted for and accrued interest.

"'4. When the face value of the bond contracted for has been paid in, as evidenced by the books of the company, the company will deliver to the purchaser the bond above mentioned.

"'5. Monthly payments may be anticipated and will be entitled to the interest from the date of their payment. The bond will not fall into arrears until all monthly payments made in advance are exhausted.

"'6. The company agrees that in the event of the death of the purchaser of this bond, it will, upon request of his legal representatives purchase from them for the full amount paid in, with interest as provided by the contract, the share of the purchaser in said certificates.

"'7. The interest on the bond will be paid semi-annually after its delivery. The interest earned by the payments will be paid with the first payment of interest that is made on the bond.'"

I think this transaction is also embraced within the powers granted the company by section 9850. The depositor here is, in fact, a purchaser of a share in a mortgage loan; the company has the right to make the loan, and has the right to sell the same, and I think the method of selling, by allowing the purchaser to make small payments and allowing him interest on the payments as made is incident to the general powers granted.

Your fifth question is as follows:

"Must all securities taken by said companies be in conformity with sections 9518 and 9519, G. C., or only such part of them as are deposited with the treasurer of state?"

Section 9851 of the General Code provides:

"No such company shall do business until its capital stock amounts to at least one hundred thousand dollars fully paid up, and until it has deposited with the treasurer of state fifty thousand dollars in securities permitted by sections ninety-five hundred and eighteen and ninety-five hundred and nineteen. Except such deposit, the capital shall be invested as the board of directors of such company prescribes."

Sections 9518 and 9519 specify the securities in which the capital and surplus of insurance companies, other than life insurance companies may be invested.

As to title guarantee and trust companies, the provision only covers the securities which must be deposited by said companies with the treasurer of state; that is the securities deposited by title guarantee and trust companies with the treasurer of state must be those specified in sections 9518 and 9519; and the investment of the funds of the company in securities other than those to be deposited with the treasurer of state is controlled entirely by the board of directors.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO POWER TO REGULATE CHATTEL LOAN LICENSE.

There is no power to revoke a license to conduct the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property, etc., other than for cause specified in section 6346-6, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. CHARLES H. GRAVES, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of December 31st, 1914, you ask my opinion upon the following question:

> "May the secretary of state revoke a license to conduct the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property, or salaries or wage earnings upon any ground other than that of conviction of an offense against the laws regulating such business, as provided in section 6346-6, of the General Code?"

This question requires consideration of the following provisions of law:

> "Sec. 6346-2, General Code, provides in part as follows:
> "* * * Each license granted shall date from the first of the month in which it is issued and shall be granted for the period of one year, subject to revocation, as provided in this act, and such license shall be kept conspicuously displayed in the place of business of the licensee."
> "Sec. 6346-6, General Code, provides as follows:
> "Any person, firm or corporation, or any agent, officer, or employe thereof, violating any provision of this act, or that carries on the business of making loans upon chattels or personal property of any kind whatsoever, or of purchasing or making loans upon salaries or wage earnings without first obtaining a license as provided in this act shall, for the first offense, be fined not less than fifty dollars ($50.00) nor more than two hundred dollars ($200.00); and for a second offense not less than two hundred dollars ($200.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00), and it shall thereupon become the duty of the secretary of state upon such second conviction to revoke any license theretofore issued to such person, firm or corporation."

The power to revoke a license is of a nature such as that its existence must depend upon explicit grant. Such revocation can only be for cause, and the cause must be stated in the statute. That being the case, and the only cause mentioned in the statute being that referred to in section 6346-6, General Code, I am of the opinion that the secretary of state has no power to revoke a license, save upon the grounds therein referred to.

This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that section 6346-2, in speaking of revocation, uses the language, "subject to revocation, as provided in this act;" it being apparent therefrom that no power to revoke exists save under the provisions of the act.

I therefore repeat my opinion, which is that the power to revoke such a license is limited to revocation for the cause specified in section 6346-6, General Code.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NO POWER IN MUNICIPALITY TO COMPEL ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY TO PERMIT SUCH MUNICIPALITY TO USE POLES OF THE LIGHT COMPANY FOR CARRYING WIRES.

A municipality has no power to compel an electric light company to permit such municipality to use the poles of the light company for carrying the wires of the municipal light company when such light company uses the street of the municipality under a franchise which does not provide for such use.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. ARTHUR MORRIS, City Solicitor, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 1st, 1914, you wrote asking my opinion as follows:

> "Is there any law whereby a municipality may compel a light company to permit the municipality to use the poles of the light company for carrying wires of the municipal light company?"

Section 9195, General Code, provides that a company organized for the purpose of supplying electricity for power purposes and for lighting streets and public and private buildings of the city or village, may, with the consent of the municipality, and under such reasonable regulations as it prescribes, construct lines for conducting electricity for power and light purposes through the street and other public places of the municipality by the erection of the necessary fixtures including posts, piers and abutments necessary for the wires.

Section 3637, General Code, provides that municipal corporations shall have power to regulate the construction and repair of wires, poles, plants and other equipment to be used for the generation and application of electricity.

Under favor of the foregoing provisions, and in accord with the general rule that a municipality on granting a privilege to use a street, has the power in its legislative discretion to impose reasonable conditions, I am of the opinion that a municipality in the grant of a franchise to an electric light company, may stipulate as a condition of said grant that the electric light company shall permit the municipality to make a reasonable use of the poles of such company for municipal wires.

Postal Telegraph Co. vs. City of Chicopee, 207 Mass., 341.
St. Louis vs. Western Union Telegraph Co., 148 U. S., 92; 166 U. S., 388.
Railroad Co. vs. Railroad Company, 36 O. S., 239.
Toledo, etc., Ry. Co. vs. Western Electric Light Co., 10 C. C., 531.

Columbus vs. Columbus Gas Co., 76 O. S., 309.
Columbus Citizens Telephone Co. vs. Columbus, 88 O. S., 466.

By a communication of later date from you, however, I am advised that your inquiry has reference to a condition where the electric light company, under a franchise unconditional in this respect, has been in operation for a number of years, and has erected and now has in use poles which the municipality now desires to use.

In the case of Toledo, etc., Ry. Co. vs. Western Electric Light Co., supra, the court held that the power of municipal authorities under the act of 1886 (Sec. 9195, G. C.) to impose reasonable regulations governing the erection and maintenance of lines for the transmission of electric light and power within the limits of the municipality, is a continuing power, and that under it a requirement made subsequent to the grant of a franchise that the poles of the company receiving the franchise may also be used to support electric light wires of parties other than the company receiving the franchise and owning the poles, was reasonable and valid, where such added use does not materially interfere with the business of such company.

The decision in the case just noted, however, was reversed by the supreme court without report on the authority of Railroad Co. vs. Railroad Co., 36 O. S., 239 and Street Railway Co. vs. Street Railway Co., 50 O. S., 603 (51 O. S., 633).

The case of Railroad Co. vs. Railroad Co., supra, which was one involving the right of one street railroad company to use the tracks of another upon compensation to be fixed by council, the court in its opinion says:

> "What we have already said in refutation of an exclusive right in the plaintiff to use the route upon which its tracks were laid for street railroad purposes, does not in the least conflict with its right of private property in the material of which this road is constructed. Such material, in place, is as strictly the private property of the corporation as it was before it was placed, save in this only, that having been placed in a public street, it was thereby dedicated to the ordinary use of the public; but, as a railroad company, such material remains the private property of the company, and for such purpose it is subject to the use and control of the owner exclusively. When, therefore, a right of way for street railroad purposes is granted over the same route to another company by the municipal authorities, the private property of the former cannot be appropriated by the latter company until compensation is first made by the latter to the former company. And in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, it is quite clear to our minds that the municipal authorities have no more power to fix the amount of compensation that should be paid by the latter to the former company for the right to the joint use of such material than it has to determine compensation to be paid to other owners of private property taken for the same public use. In such case, if no agreement be made between the companies as to the matter of compensation, or the same be not assessed by a jury, as in other cases of the condemnation of private property to public uses, the latter company should be enjoined from forcible appropriation."

In the case of Street Railway Co. vs. Street Railway Co., supra., the court in its opinion on this point says:

> "So that, to make effective the grant of the municipal authorities to one company to occupy the tracks or structures of another, it becomes necessary to obtain the consent of or waiver of damages by the owner; or, if that cannot be done, then to appropriate tracks or structures to such use by judicial proceedings in which compensation may be assessed."

Undoubtedly it was on a consideration and application of the principles just noted that the supreme court reversed the circuit court in the decision reported in 10 C. C., 531. Although the poles and wires of an electric light company in the streets of a municipality are subject to the reasonable regulation of the municipality with reference to the manner of their use in so far as the right of the public in the streets are concerned, yet nevertheless as between the electric light company and the municipality such poles and wires when placed in position are the private property of the electric light company; and as stated by the supreme court in the case of Railway Co. vs. Railway Co., supra, it is quite clear that the municipality, in the absence of a stipulation in the franchise to the contrary, has no power to take to itself or grant to another company the right to use such poles without the consent of the company owning and operating the same.

The poles in question being private property, it is quite clear that the proposed use of the same by the municipality would constitute a taking within the provisions of section 19 of article I of the state constitution, which provides that when private property shall be taken for public use, compensation therefor shall first be made. This consideration suggests the only remaining question which is, whether the city has the power to appropriate by condemnation the use of the service company's poles for carrying the wires of the municipal plant. As to this question it is to be borne in mind that neither the general provisions of section 19 of article I, nor those of section 5 of article XIII of the state constitution applying to corporations are to be considered as granting the power of eminent domain. The power is one inherent in the state, and which passes to the legislature by virtue of the general grant to it of legislative power. The constitutional provisions above noted simply prescribe in a measure modes for and limitations upon the exercise of the power when granted. Giesy vs. C. W. & Z. R .R. Co., 4 Ohio, 308.

Upon the foregoing considerations it follows that the power of the city to appropriate the poles in question for its own use must be found, if at all, in the provisions of some statute authorizing such appropriation, and making provision for compensation to the owner in the mode prescribed in the constitution, for with respect to matters of this kind the constitution does not execute itself.

McArthur vs. Kelly, 5 Ohio, 140.
Lamb vs. Lane, 4 O. S., 167.

By sections 3677 and 3678, of the General Code, power is granted to municipal corporations to enter upon and hold real estate both within and without their corporate limits among other purposes for electric lighting, heating and power plants and for supplying the product thereof.

By section 3990 the council of a municipality is given power to erect electric light works, and to purchase electric works already erected therein; and by this same section the council of villages is given the power, if it is unable to agree as to compensation with the owner of an existing electric light works, to appropriate the same by condemnation proceedings.

Section 3995, General Code, provides, among other things, that for the purpose of erecting and maintaining poles whereon to attach wires to carry and transmit electricity, a municipal corporation may enter upon private land and appropriate so much thereof as may be necessary for erecting such poles and wires.

I am unable to find any other statutory provisions germane to the question under consideration, and as it is quite evident that none of the statutory provisions just noted, conferring upon municipal corporations the power of appropriating by condemnation, with respect to electric works or the transmission of electricity, are broad enough in their terms to confer upon them power to appropriate the use of the poles of a public service company for carrying the wires of municipal plants, I am constrained to the opinion that such power does not exist, and that your question should be answered in the negative.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

AUTHORITY OF AUDITOR OF STATE TO CHECK OUT AND EXAMINE DEPARTMENT OF SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS.

The auditor of state should check out and examine the department of superintendent of banks with relation to the liquidation department, under section 273-2, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 2, 1915, you submit for my opinion the following:

> "Section 273-1 and section 273-2 provide for examination of departments when changes have been made, or officers retire. Taking into consideration these two sections, I desire to know whether or not the auditor of state is compelled or should check out and examine the department of superintendent of banks with relation to the liquidation department. See sections 737 to 744, G. C."

Section 273-1 to which you refer, refers to the inventory which shall be made by the accountant sent by your department to the office of the retiring state official, and refers, as I take it, solely to the state property. Section 273-2 provides as follows:

> "It shall be the further duty of such accountant to check over the transactions of such state official during his term in office, and shall make a statement thereof, in writing, to be included in such report as hereinbefore provided. Such statement shall show what sum or sums of money remain in the hands of such retiring state official at the time of the expiration of his office, which said sum or sums of money it may be his duty to turn over to his successor in office, or pay into the state treasury as provided by law."

There is no doubt in my mind that the transactions of the liquidating department of the superintendent of banks is such a transaction as referred to in said section, and that therefore the accountant who examines the department of the superintendent of banks should likewise make a statement of the transactions of the liquidating department.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPROVAL OF ACTS BY THE GOVERNOR INVOLVING EXPENDITURE OF MONEY BY THE AGRICULTURAL COMMISSION.

Since section 9 of the agricultural commission act, 103 O. L., 306, provides that: "* * * all similar acts involving expenditures of money shall be subject to the approval of the governor, * * * the expenditure by such commission with relation to exhibits and attendance at different national organizations of members and employes of the agricultural commission are proper, the record showing that the minutes in which was the resolution authorizing attendance, were approved by the governor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 20th, in which you state:

"Enclosed you will observe resolution of the agricultural commission of Ohio with relation to exhibits and attendance at different national organizations of members and employes of the agricultural commission.

"Kindly advise me whether or not these expenditures are proper and in conformity with the laws governing this department."

The resolution submitted with your inquiry reads as follows:

"Mr. Williams moved, Mr. Strode supporting, that J. W. Hammond and E. C. Schwan be authorized to make an exhibit at the international live stock exposition to be held in Chicago in December, 1914, the exhibit to consist of twenty-five lambs from the southeastern test farm, the expense for attendance at said meeting to be borne by the department of animal husbandry, experiment station division; that Messrs. J. W. Ames, E. B. Forbes, George N. Coffey, B. E. Carmichael and Director Thorne be authorized to attend the meeting of the association of American agricultural colleges and experiment stations to be held at Washington, D. C., November 9, 10 and 11, 1914; that J. W. Ames be authorized to attend the meeting of the official agricultural chemists at Washington, D. C., following the above meetings."

Section 9 of the agricultural commission act, 103 O. L., 306, provides:

"The agricultural commission is authorized to employ a secretary, heads of bureaus, experts, clerks, stenographers and other assistants and employes, and to fix their compensation and these and all similar acts involving expenditures of money shall be subject to the approval of the governor. The commissioners, secretary, experts, clerks, stenographers and other assistants and employes that may be employed, shall be entitled to receive from the state their actual and necessary traveling expenses while traveling on the business of the agricultural commission. Such expenses shall be itemized and certified to by the person who incurred the expense, and allowed by the agricultural commission."

The adoption of said resolution was an act involving the expenditure of money within the meaning of section 9. I am informed that the resolution was approved by the governor; and I am of the opinion that payment from the state treasury of the expenses in question would be legal and proper.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DAY SCHOOL AT OHIO PENITENTIARY—PRISONER NOT REQUIRED TO REMAIN IN ONE GRADE FOR THE FULL PERIOD OF FORTY WEEKS BEFORE TAKING PROMOTIONAL EXAMINATION.

The act providing for day school at the Ohio penitentiary, 103 O. L., 273, does not require that a prisoner remain in one grade for the full period of forty weeks before becoming eligible to take a promotional examination and earn a month diminution of sentence, but on the other hand, authorizes the superintendent of schools of the Ohio penitentiary to hold promotional examinations at such times as he sees fit and allow prisoners to earn a month diminution of sentence each time they pass from one grade to the next higher one.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 4, 1914, as follows:

"Referring to section 2195, General Code of Ohio (page 273, Laws of Ohio, 103).

"Section 5 thereof provides for examinations to be held for promotion from one grade to the other.

"Section 7 thereof provides for one month's diminution of sentence of prisoners for each advancement in grade.

"Section 6 provides that school shall be held not less than two hours each day, Sundays excepted; that of four school weeks; that a course of study shall consist of not less than four recitations a week, continued for a period of forty weeks.

"Instead of holding school two hours each day as provided for, same has been held for four hours each day.

"Query: In view of the fact that by holding school for four instead of two hours, as provided for in said law, the same result has been accomplished in twenty weeks, as was intended to be accomplished in forty weeks, as provided for, have I legal authority to grant one month's diminution of sentence to those who have received a passable grade on examinations held at the expiration of such period?

"You can readily see that this question is of vital importance to the man confined here, who had only six or seven months to serve at the time the school was opened. If forty weeks of schooling is required before they are entitled to any credits, as provided for, their terms will expire before the time has arrived at which I will be permitted to give them any credit."

House bill No. 233, entitled "An act providing for the establishment and maintenance of a day school for prisoners at the Ohio penitentiary," reads in part:

> "Section 4. The superintendent, having regard to previous education and intellectual capacity, shall designate the prisoners who shall attend such school. He shall prescribe a graded course of study in branches named in section 2, and classify and regulate, and prescribe tests for the promotion of prisoners according to attainments from one grade to another. He shall assist and direct the teachers in the performance of their duties and perform such other functions as the board may determine; and he shall, with the approval of the board, prescribe rules and regulations for the management and government of the school.
> "Section 5. Examinations may be held for promotion and the questions for examination for such promotion shall be uniform and prepared under the direction of the superintendent. Only such prisoners as receive, on examination, an average grade of seventy percentum, with no grade less than fifty percentum, in any branch, shall be passed.
> "Section 6. Such school be held not less than two hours each day, Sundays excepted. A school week shall consist of six days and a school month of four school weeks. A course of study shall consist of not less than four recitations a week, continued for a period of forty weeks. The school shall be classified into such number of grades as the superintendent shall prescribe.
> "Section 7. A prisoner, other than one sentenced for life, attending such school, shall be entitled to one month diminution of his sentence for each advancement in grade, which diminution shall not be forfeited or taken away because of a violation of any rule of discipline or for any other cause. The record in the school of a prisoner sentenced for life shall be given special consideration in any application for pardon, parole, or commutation of sentence."

It will be noted that section 4 of the act above quoted provides in part that the superintendent "shall prescribe a graded course of study in branches named in section 2, and classify and regulate, and prescribe tests for the promotion of prisoners according to attainments from one grade to another." Section 6 of the act provides in part: "that a course of study shall consist of not less than four recitations a week, continued for a period of forty weeks." Section 5 provides "that examinations may be held for promotion and the questions for examinations for such promotion shall be uniform and prepared under the direction of the superintendent." Section 7 provides for one month diminution of a prisoner's sentence "for each advancement in grade." It will be noted that no provision is made in the act as to when promotional examinations shall be held or how often, and from a reading of the entire act, it is my opinion that these examinations for promotion from one grade to another may be held at such times as the superintendent of the school sees fit. When a prisoner passes such examination and earns a promotion from one grade to the next higher one, he is entitled to a one month diminution of sentence regardless of how long he has been a pupil in the grade from which he is promoted. The act, as I read it, does not require the prisoner to remain in one grade for the entire period of forty weeks before he can be advanced to the next higher grade and earn a month diminution of sentence. However, it might be well to add that since examinations may be held at such times as the superintendent of schools sees fit, and a month diminution of sentence granted for each promotion, great care should be exercised by the superintendent when enrolling a prisoner as a pupil in the school, so that such prisoner will be placed in that grade which his education merits. If this is done, there will be little chance of the prisoner gaining time by promotional examinations other than that which application to his studies in the prison school has earned for him.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JURISDICTION OF JUVENILE COURT OVER A BOY CEASES WHEN HE IS COMMITTED BY THE COURT TO THE BOYS' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

When a boy is committed to the boys' industrial school by the juvenile court, the jurisdiction of the juvenile court ceases and such boy can only be released from the industrial school by the board of administration, upon the recommendation of the superintendent.

If the juvenile court desires to grant a rehearing, in the case of a boy committed to the boys' industrial school, it must do so within the time laid down by the rule of the court, provided the same is within the term at which the boy was committed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. R. U. HASTINGS, Superintendent of the Boys' Industrial School, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 19, 1914, as follows:

"As managing officer of the boys' industrial school, I am frequently called upon by the juvenile courts to return boys to the court for rehearing. Of course, this rehearing always terminates in the dismissal of the case by the court and such action uniformly acts as a release from the school. We have proceeded under the understanding that the court might, for proper reasons shown, grant a new hearing, but we are not clear as to what period of time might elapse before such right to grant said hearing becomes inactive.

"I am enclosing herewith copy of communication from the juvenile officer of Hamilton county which will probably explain our difficulty a little more clearly.

"I respectfully request your opinion as to the limitations of the court's authority over boys committed to and in the hands of the school, whether in cases of juvenile delinquents there is a right at any time for a new hearing, and if so, limitations as to time granting same?"

Section 2084 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., 879, reads:

"Male youth, not over eighteen nor under ten years of age, may be committed to the boys' industrial school in the manner provided by law on conviction of an offense against the laws of the state."

Section 2083 of the General Code reads as follows:

"The reform school, situated in the county of Fairfield, shall be known and designated as the boys' industrial school. Its object shall be the reformation of those committed to its charge. All youth committed thereto shall be committed, until they arrive at full age, unless sooner reformed."

Section 2083 makes it clear that a boy committed to the boys' industrial school on the conviction of an offense against the laws of the state, must stand committed to such institution until he arrives at full age, unless sooner reformed. If sooner reformed, in the judgment of the institution officials, he may be paroled by the Ohio board of administration upon the recommendation of the superintendent.

It has been suggested, however, that boys committed to the boys' industrial school by the juvenile court, are not committed in the sense in which that word is used in section 2083, since they are not convicted of an offense against the laws of the state, but merely committed as delinquent children, and for this reason it is urged that the provisions of section 2083 do not apply. In view of the fact that there was no juvenile court at the time section 2083 was originally adopted, there seems to be some merit in this claim, and conceding for the purpose of argument that the point is well taken, I will endeavor to reach a solution of the question submitted without reference to section 2083, above quoted.

"When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age."

Section 1652, G. C., as amended, 103 O. L., page 871, provides:

"In case of a delinquent child, the judge may continue the hearing from time to time, and may commit the child * * * to a training school for boys, or, if a girl, to an industrial school for girls * * *. In no case shall a child committed to such institutions be confined under such commitment after attaining the age of twenty-one years. * * *"

Section 1652-1 and other sections of the juvenile court act, clearly indicate that the boys' industrial school is included in the term "training school for boys" used in section 1652, supra.

It will be noticed that section 1643 provides that "when a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court" such child shall "continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years." The boys' industrial school at Lancaster is a reform school, the object of which is to bring about the reform of the boys committed to it. Owing to this fact, it seems to me that when a boy is committed to the boys' industrial school by the juvenile court, it is no longer necessary for the juvenile court to retain jurisdiction over the child, since the child could be properly disciplined and protected by the authorities of the boys' industrial school. Therefore, inasmuch as the two reasons mentioned in section 1643 for the continuing jurisdiction of the juvenile court do not exist after the boy's commitment to Lancaster, it is my opinion that the jurisdiction of such court terminates when the boy is committed to the boys' industrial school.

Section 2092 of the General Code provides for the parole by the trustees (now the Ohio board of administration) of inmates of the boys' industrial school and delinquent minors committed by the juvenile court when once received at the boys' industrial school, are certainly inmates within the meaning of this section. It is, therefore, my opinion that the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, though a continuing one in cases where minors are placed in children's homes or private homes, is not such in cases where boys are committed to the boys' industrial school, and that when a boy is committed to the boys' industrial school by such court, the court's jurisdiction ceases and the boy can be released from the institution only by the Ohio board of administration upon the recommendation of the superintendent.

As to the juvenile court granting a rehearing, it is my opinion that the court may grant such rehearing provided the motion for such rehearing is filed within the time required by the rule of the court; and provided further, that such rehearing is granted by the court within the term at which sentence was passed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MANNER IN WHICH STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES MAY ASSUME CHARGE OF PLACING OF INMATES WITH THE TRUSTEES OF COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME.

If the trustees of a county children's home desire the board of state charities to assume charge of the placing of any of its inmates, they can so arrange only by transferring the guardianship of such inmates to the board of state charities, and when such children have been committed to such home, by the juvenile court, such court must first consent to such transfer. When this is done, the expense of such placing and subsequent visitation, together with one-half the amount of board, if any, paid by the board of state charities on account of a child, shall be charged by such board to the county in which the child had a legal residence when received by such board, according to the provisions of section 13524, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 28, 1914, as follows:

> "A query has come to our attention in connection with section 3000 of the General Code.
> "Two counties have requested the board of state charities to act as placing and visiting agents of wards of the children's homes in these counties. We desire to know whether the principles of section 1352-4 are to be applied in such instances. In other words, will the county be required to pay to the state the necessary expenses for supervising the placing of children which have not been committed to the care and custody of the board?
> "Certain humane societies have sought to transfer children to the board of state charities without further court procedure. Can they be accepted in that manner and will the expenses for such children be chargeable to the county in the manner directed in section 1352-4?"

Section 1352-3 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 866, provides as follows:

"The board of state charities shall when able to do so, receive as its wards such dependent or neglected minors as may be committed to it by the juvenile court. County, district, or semi-public children's homes or any institution entitled to receive children from the juvenile court may, with the consent of the board, transfer to it the guardianship of minor wards of such institutions. If such children have been committed to such institutions by the juvenile court, that court must first consent to such transfer.

"The board shall thereupon ipso facto become vested with the sole and exclusive guardianship of such child or children. The board shall, by its visitors, seek out suitable, permanent homes in private families for such wards; in each case making in advance a careful investigation of the character and fitness of such home for the purpose. Such children may then be placed in such investigated homes upon trial, or upon such contract as the board may deem to be for the best interests of the child, or proceedings may be had, as provided by law, for the adoption of the child by suitable persons. The board shall retain the guardianship of a child so placed upon trial or contract during its minority, and may at any time, if it deems it for the best interest of the child, cancel such contract and remove the child from such home. The board, by its visitors, shall visit at least twice a year all the homes in which children have been placed by it. Children from whom on account of some physical or mental defect it is impracticable to find good, free homes, may be so placed by the board upon agreement to pay reasonable board therefor not to exceed $3.50 per week, which shall be paid out of funds appropriated to the use of the board by the general assembly. When necessary any children so committed or transferred to the board may be maintained by it in a suitable place until a proper home is found.

"So far as practicable children shall be placed in homes of the same religious belief as that held by their parents."

Section 1352-4 provides:

"The actual traveling expenses of such child and that of the agents or visitors of said board in connection with placing such dependent or neglected child in a home and of subsequent visitation of such child, together with half the amount of board, if any, paid by said board on account of the child to the owners of such home shall be charged by the board of state charities to the county in which the child had a legal residence when received by such board. The treasurer of each county shall pay the quarterly draft of the board of state charities for the amount so chargeable against such county for the preceding quarter. The sums so received as well as payments for board as provided by sections 1352-5 and 1653 of the General Code, shall not be turned into the state treasury but shall be credited to a fund to be known as the child placing fund to be used to maintain the child placing work of the board as provided by this chapter, but such money received for children's board shall be used only to pay the board of the child for which it may be paid by the individuals liable therefor."

Section 3099 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., page 892, provides:

"Unless a children's home places its wards through the agency of the board of state charities, the trustees shall appoint a competent person as visiting agent, who shall seek homes for the children in private families, where they will be properly cared for, trained and educated. When practicable, the agent shall visit each child so placed not less than once in each year, and report from time to time to the trustees its condition, any brutal or ill treatment of it, or failure to provide suitable food, clothing or school facilities therefor in such family. The agent shall perform his or her duties under the direction of the trustees and superintendent of the children's home for which he or she is appointed, and may be assigned other duties not inconsistent with his or her regular employment as the trustees prescribe. His or her appointment shall be for one year, or until his or her successor is appointed, and he shall receive such reasonable compensation for his or her services as the trustees provide."

Under section 3099, the trustees of the home must appoint a competent man or woman to act as visiting agent. They cannot, under this section, arrange with the board of state charities to have its visiting agents act in the interest of children in charge of them (the trustees). This is clear from the provision of section 3099 that "the agent shall perform his duties under the direction of the trustees and superintendent of the children's home for which he is appointed, and may be assigned other duties consistent with his regular employment as the trustees prescribe."

If the trustees of any county children's home desire the board of state charities to assume charge of the placing of any of its inmates, they can so arrange only by transferring the guardianship of such inmates to the board of state charities, and when such children have been committed to such home by the juvenile court, such court must first consent to such transfer. When this is done, the expense of such placing and subsequent visitation, together with one-half the amount of board, if any, paid by the board of state charities on account of a child, shall be charged by such board to the county in which the child had a legal residence when received by such board, according to the provisions of section 1352-4.

This, I think, fully answers your question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

POWER OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE TO MAKE RULES AND REGULATIONS TO INSURE COLLECTION OF WATER, GAS OR ELECTRIC RATES.

The director of public service has power to make reasonable rules and regulations to insure the collection of water, gas or electric rates, and an assessment of ten per cent. penalty is not unreasonable nor so drastic as the rule approved in 82 O. S., 216.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1915.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 15, 1914, in which you inquire:

"Under section 3959, G. C., can the director of public service fix the rate (say $2.00 for each quarter) if paid on or before a certain date? And if not so paid, can he assess a penalty of 10 per cent., or any other reasonable sum, for non-payment?"

An inspection of the section you mention shows very clearly that it is not the one you desire construed, and I conclude that the section for consideration is 3958, which reads:

> "For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. When more than one tenant or water taker is supplied with one hydrant or off the same pipe, and when the assessments therefor are not paid when due, the director shall look directly to the owner of the property for so much of the water rent thereof as remains unpaid, which shall be collected in the same manner as other city taxes."

I think the case of the city of Mansfield vs. Manufacturing Company, 82 O. S., 216, fully answers your question. In that case it was held that a regulation authorizing the director of public service to cut off the water in case of non-payment and not to turn the same on again until all back dues had been paid, and the additional sum of $1.00, was a reasonable regulation. I think this a very much more drastic regulation than the one you state, and therefore that the case considered fully answers your question. The only question that I can have in mind would be whether or not a rule like that found in 82 O. S. would not be very much better and more efficacious than any rule made in the line indicated in your question. But that is not a question of law, but one for the determination of the director of public service.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LIBRARY FUNDS MAY NOT BE RECEIVED AND DISTRIBUTED BY THE TRUSTEES OF A CITY OR VILLAGE LIBRARY, UNDER PROVISIONS OF SECTION 4300, GENERAL CODE.

The codification of the statutes in 1910, where it omitted that portion of section 152 of the municipal code of 1869, and of section 1768, of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the council of a municipality to provide for the distribution and paying out of funds belonging to a municipality, when considered in connection with section 4300, General Code, effects a repeal of such authority, and library funds may not be received and distributed by the trustees of a city or village library.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. HARRY W. KOONS, City Solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 2, 1914, in which you inquire as to the right of the trustees of your public library to receive and disburse the funds raised by taxation for its support and maintenance, the controversy being whether this fund should be paid over to the library trustees, or be paid into the city treasury and handled as are other funds.

Upon the general phase of your case, an opinion I gave to Hon. O. R. Wade, city solicitor of Fostoria, Ohio, on July 7, 1914 (of which I enclose you a copy), is in point, and I can see no reason for reviewing or modifying it. However, and as you suggest, your city library was not wholly organized and built from public money, but to the contrary has its foundation in a deed made by F. L. Fairchild and others, to the city of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, about March 17, 1884, and accepted by an ordinance passed March 24, 1884, and amended December 10, 1888.

The conveyance, so far as I am able to find, contained no provision as to the handling of the library funds, but the ordinance of March 24, 1884, provided:

> "Section 3. Be it further ordained that the city council shall, when said building has been repaired and put in proper condition and is occupied as a library and reading room, defray the expenses of a janitor therefor, and the expense of lighting and heating said building and keeping the same in repair, upon bills presented therefor approved by said trustees, out of the funds of said city, other than the funds received by said city as contributions or donations made for the purpose of said library and reading room."

Section 2 of the ordinance of December 10, 1888, reads:

> "Section 2. Notwithstanding the provisions of said section three of said ordinance, as soon as the money raised from the tax referred to, section one of this ordinance, has been placed to the credit of said city, and including the money now on hand for that purpose, the city clerk shall, and is hereby authorized to issue an order upon the treasurer for the full amount thereof, in favor of the treasurer of the board of trustees of said library and reading room to be disbursed by said board for purposes aforesaid."

The provisions of this ordinance have been followed ever since it came into effect, but an examiner from the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices criticises this course and insists the money should be handled as stated in the Wade opinion enclosed.

Section 4300 referred to and copied into the Wade opinion, first found its place in Ohio Laws, in the codification of 1902, 96 O. L., 65, sec. 136.

Section 152 of the Municipal Code of 1869 (66 O. L., 174) reads:

> "Section 152. He shall demand and receive from the county treasurer, all taxes levied and assessments made and certified to the county auditor by authority of the council, and by said auditor placed on the tax duplicate for collection, and from all persons authorized to collect or required to pay the same, all moneys accruing to the corporation from judgments, fines, penalties, forfeitures, licenses, and costs taxed in the mayor's and police courts, and all debts, of whatever kind, due the corporation, and disburse the same on the order of such person or persons as may be authorized by ordinance to issue orders for the same."

This section was almost, if not quite, literally codified in 1880 and became section 1768 of the Revised Statutes, which law was retained and kept in force by section 135 of the codification of 1902; but the provisions thereof in regard to the control of the city council over city funds and its power to order the same disbursed on the order of such person or persons, as it might name, was omitted from the codification of 1910. This change was of such character and so material as to repeal the old law and do away with the power of council as found in the act of 1866. State vs. Toney, 81 O. S., 130.

This leaves the only matter for determination to be—whether the repeal and taking away of the power held by council for so long operated as a repeal of the ordinance of 1888.

I am forced to the conclusion that the taking away from council the power granted by the act of 1866 and the enactment of section 4300, which now reads:

> "The treasurer shall receive and disburse all funds of the corporation including the school funds, and such other funds, as arise in or belong to any department or part of the corporation government.", operated as a repeal of the ordinance of 1888, and your statement that consideration should be given the fact of the funds being handled under the ordinance of 1888 for twenty-five years, is answered by the fact that such ordinance was valid and in full force until the codification of 1910 became effective.

I am of the opinion that the conclusion reached in the opinion given Mr. Wade is correct, that it is applicable to your case, controlling, and that the course indicated by section 4300 should be followed.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NOT LEGAL FOR A PERSON TO RESIGN AN OFFICE AND THEREAFTER BE APPOINTED TO FILL HIS OWN VACANCY.

It is not legal for a person to resign an office, have council increase salary and thereafter be duly appointed to fill his own vacancy and receive increase.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 22, 1914, you requested an opinion on the following:

> "May the salary of an officer of a municipality be increased during his term of office by said officer resigning the position, having council (if agreeable thereto) increase the salary, and thereafter be duly and legally appointed to fill said vacancy, and thus receive the increase of salary during that portion of the term which he fills by appointment?"

Section 4213 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

It is well settled, as a principle of law, that that which is prohibited from being done directly, may not be done indirectly. The situation you present affords an example of a very manifest attempt to evade this principle, and I am of the opinion that such action is prohibited by the statute above quoted.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

NOT NECESSARY FOR SCHOOL DEPOSITARY BANKS TO GIVE NEW BONDS TO BIND SURETIES—BONDS.

It is not necessary for school depositary banks to give new bonds in order to bind sureties in districts where school treasurers have been dispensed with under section 4732, 104 O. L., 158, in case the bonds held by the respective boards of education bear a date prior to the date of the resolution dispensing with the school treasurer, and the terms of such bonds have not as yet expired.

It is necessary for the clerk of the school board to give a new bond when such clerk assumes the duty of the treasurer of the school funds.

It is not necessary for a county treasurer to give a bond as school treasurer, when he becomes the treasurer of the school funds of village or rural districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of July 9, 1914, you submitted a request for an opinion upon the following:

"First. Will it be necessary for school depositary banks to give a new bond in order to bind sureties in a district where the school treasurer has been dispensed with under section 4782, O. L., Vol. 104, in case the bond held by the district bears a date prior to the date of the resolution dispensing with the school treasurer?

"Second. Will it be necessary for a school clerk to give a new bond in order to bind sureties in case said clerk assumes the duties of the treasurer under section 4782?

"Third. Will it be necessary for a county treasurer to give a new bond to bind sureties in case he acts as school treasurer under section 4763, O. L., Vol. 104?

"Fourth. When a county treasurer is acting as school treasurer under section 4763, O. L., Vol. 104, can he deposit school funds, after distribution, in the county depositary?

"Fifth. Section 7604, General Code, provides that boards of education must establish depositaries for school funds. Section 4782, O. L., Vol. 104, provides that when such depositaries have been established that boards of education shall, by resolution adopted by a majority vote, dispense with the treasurer. Section 4735, O. L., 104, reads as follows:

" 'The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified.'

"When boards of education have complied with both of the above-mentioned sections, when will the terms of office of the treasurers affected be ended?

"Sixth. If treasurers will continue to hold office under section 4735 after the board of education has adopted the resolution provided for in section 4782, dispensing with them, will it be necessary in special school districts for boards of education to elect a treasurer, or will the treasurer, serving at the time of the adoption of the resolution, continue to serve indefinitely?"

I will consider each one of these questions which you submit, separately, and in the same numerical order as that in which they are submitted in your request.

Section 4782 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 158, which you cite in your first question, provides as follows:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted, by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts."

In order to construe said section, it is necessary to consider it in connection with section 4763 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 158. Said section 4763 as amended, provides as follows:

> "In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositaries as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

The section last quoted refers to sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, of the General Code, which said mentioned sections provide for the establishment of legal depositories for the deposit of school funds of the respective school districts of the state. Section 7504 provides for the establishment of such depositories as follows:

> "The board of education of any school district by resolution shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer. But no bank shall receive a deposit larger than the amount of its paid in capital stock, and in no event to exceed three hundred thousand dollars."

Section 7605, General Code, provides that such depositories of school funds shall be made upon competitive bidding and that the bank or banks receiving such depositories shall give good and sufficient bond or other security such as bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, etc., as follows:

> "In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein, that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent. for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give a good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education in the sum not less than the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond."

Section 7606 of the General Code provides in substance for the method and manner whereby bids for such depositories shall be received. Section 7607 provides, in substance, that in school districts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located, and which offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not in any event be less than two per cent. for the full time that such funds or part thereof are on deposit, and also carries a further provision that such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond or security; and that the treasurer of such school district must see to it that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond. Section 7609 of the General Code provides that when a depository is so lawfully established, and the funds are deposited therein, according to the provisions of the so-called school district depository law, the treasurer of the school district and his bondsmen shall be relieved from any liability occasioned by the failure of the bank, etc., as follows:

> "When a depository is lawfully provided, and the funds are deposited therein, the treasurer of the school district and his bondsmen shall be relieved from any liability occasioned by the failure of the bank or banks of deposit or by the failure of the sureties therefor, or by the failure of either of them, except as provided in cases of excessive deposits."

The only change made in said section 4782 as amended, supra, was to change the word "may" as provided in the original section, to the word "shall" as employed in said section as amended. Otherwise, said section as amended, is identically the same as the original section prior to such amendment. Sections 7604 to 7609 inclusive, relative to the creation of school fund depositories, have not been amended or changed and consequently there is no change by way of legislation in reference to the bonds which are required to be given by the bank or banks which become depositories for school funds, in accordance with sections 7605 and 7607 of the General Code, supra. I take it that the change made in said section 4782 as amended, supra, has no effect upon unexpired bonds given by banks as depositories for the security of school funds, which said bonds were given in accordance with sections 7605 and 7606, supra. If it were otherwise, then said section 4782 would be retroactive in its operation.

In Rairdin vs. Holden, Adm., 15 O. S., p. 207, it is held as follows:

> "1. The act of April 7, 1854, 'concerning suits on the bond of executors and administrators' (4 Curwen's Stat. 2571), is not in conflict with the provision of article II, section 28 of the constitution, which declares that 'the general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws.'
> "2. A statute purely remedial in its operation in pre-existing rights, obligations, duties and interests, is not within the mischiefs against which that clause of the constitution was intended to guard, and is not, therefore, within a just construction of its terms."

It is also held that:

> "A bond is simply a contract or suretyship and the same rules apply in its construction that apply to contracts generally." Fancher, as Assignee vs. Kaneen, et als., 5 O. N. P. Rep. (n. s.) p. 614.

If such retroactive legislation had been enacted, then the same would come within the proviso of said section 28 of article II of the constitution, which provides that:

"The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive law or laws impairing the obligation of contract."

However, it is not necessary to further consider the question of retroactive legislation in reference to such bonds for the reason that there has been no legislation in any wise affecting bonds heretofore given under sections 7605 and 7607 of the General Code, supra, which takes away, impairs or attaches any new liability to the bonds heretofore given prior to the amendment of said section 4782, supra. Section 4782 as amended, supra, only relates to the dispensing of the treasurer of school funds when depositories are provided for in the future in accordance with law, to wit, sections 7604-7609 of the General Code, inclusive, and does not affect bonds accordingly given, when school district treasurers were dispensed with under said section prior to its last amendment.

I have gone into this aspect of the question for the reason that possibly your question might have been instigated because of the change made in section 4782, and that the same might have some effect upon such depository bonds which were given and executed prior to the amendment thereof in 104 O. L. In other words, I wish to convey the idea that it will not be necessary for banks which have heretofore been made depositories of school funds, to give a new bond, because of the change made in section 4782 supra, but that such bonds will continue in full force and effect until the end of their designated term. However, on the other hand, if your question relates to a construction of section 4782 as amended, standing alone, with reference to the time when such bond is to be given, then I wish to say that said section, in the first part thereof, specifically carries the provision that when a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, then after that has been done, the board of education of such district, by resolution adopted by a vote of the majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district, etc. That is to say, that before such treasurer can be dispensed with, there must have been theretofore established a school depository for the deposit of school funds. The action establishing a depository must have first been taken before the board of education of such district can proceed to the next step, that of dispensing with the treasurer of the school moneys. In order to establish a depository, as part of the establishment thereof a bond must be given by the bank or banks acting as such depository or depositories, before such depositories can be said to have been established. In other words, school boards which have heretofore established depositories, for the deposit of school funds, without dispensing with the treasurer of the board in accordance with the directory provisions of sections 4782, General Code, prior to its last amendment, must now dispense with such school board treasurer, which dispensing is now made mandatory under section 4787 of the General Code, as last amended.

In an opinion rendered to Hon. Clare Caldwell, city solicitor of Niles, Ohio, I have held that when a depository is created by a board of education, then the dispensing with the treasurer of such school board is now made mandatory under the recent amendment of said section 4782 of the General Code. I am herewith enclosing a copy of said opinion. This change, however, in said section 4782, supra, does not necessarily require the establishing of new depositories and the giving of new bonds in so establishing such depositories, as provided for by said sections 7604 to 7609, General Code, supra. Such depositories must be re-established and bonds given in accordance with said last mentioned sections, only when the terms expire for which such depositories were established and such bonds were to run. Therefore, the date of the bond so given must, of necessity, precede the date of the resolution provided for in said section 4782 of the General Code, as amended, supra.

Regardless of whichever reason prompted the submission of your first question, I am, nevertheless, of the conclusion, in direct answer to your first question, that it is not necessary for school depository banks to give new bonds in order to bind the sureties in districts where school treasurers have been dispensed with under section 4782 (104 O. L., p. 158) in case the bonds held by the respective boards of education bear a date prior to the date of the resolution dispensing with the school treasurer, and their terms have not expired.

In answer to your second question, section 4783 of the General Code provides that when the treasurer is so dispensed with, and the clerk assumes the duties of such treasurer, in accordance with said section 4782, as amended, supra, then before entering upon such duties, the clerk shall give an additional bond, etc., as follows:

> "When the treasurer is so dispensed with, all the duties and obligations required by law of the county auditor, county treasurer or other officer or person relating to the school moneys of the district, shall be complied with by dealing with the clerk of the board of education thereof. Before entering upon such duties, the clerk shall give an additional bond equal in amount and in the same manner prescribed by law for the treasurer of the school district."

Said section, without further comment, answers your second question to the effect that it is necessary for the school clerk to give a new bond when such clerk assumes the duty of the treasurer under said section 4782, supra.

In answer to your third question, while said section 4763 provides that a village and rural school district which do not provide legal depositories under sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, of the General Code, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such district. Nevertheless there is no statutory provision requiring such county treasurer in such case to give the additional bond in acting as such treasurer, as in the case of the clerk of the board of education giving an additional bond when he assumes the duties of the treasurer of a school board, when the treasurer of such board is dispensed with as provided in sections 4782 and 4783, supra. Therefore, I am of the conclusion, in answer to your third question, that it is not necessary for a county treasurer to give a bond as school treasurer, when he becomes the treasurer of the school funds of the village or rural districts, in accordance with section 4763, as amended, 104 O. L., p. 158.

Your fourth question involves a consideration of the so-called county depository act. The county depository act is contained in sections 2715 and 2745, inclusive, of the General Code. Section 2715, in brief, provides the manner in which county depositories shall be established. Section 2715-1 provides that the deposits in active depositories shall at all times be subject to draft for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the county. Section 2716 of the General Code in brief provides that the county commissioners shall publish a notice for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics, inviting sealed proposals from all banks or trust companies, which said proposals shall stipulate the rate of interest not to be less than two per cent. per annum on the average daily balance, on inactive deposits, and not less than one per cent. per annum on the average daily balance, on active deposits, that will be paid for the use of the money of the county.

Section 2722 of the General Code provides in brief that no award shall be binding on the county nor shall money of the county be deposited thereunder, until there is executed by the bank or banks, or trust companies, selected as such county depositories, a good and sufficient undertaking, payable to the county in such sum as the commissioners direct, etc.

Section 2723 provides what the undertaking shall contain, as follows:

"Such undertaking shall be signed by at least six resident free-holders as sureties or by a fidelity or indemnity insurance company, authorized to do business within the state and having not less than two hundred and fifty thousand dollars capital, to the satisfaction of the commissioners, conditioned for the receipt, safe keeping and payment over of all the money with interest thereon at the rate specified in the proposal, which may come under its custody under and by virtue of this chapter and under and by virtue of its proposal and the award of the commissioners, and conditioned for the faithful performance by such bank or banks or trust companies of all the duties imposed by law upon the depositary or depositaries of the money of the county."

Section 2729 of the General Code provides when and for what term banks become depositories, as follows:

"Upon the acceptance by the commissioners of such undertaking, and upon the hypothecation of the bonds as hereinafter provided, such bank or banks or trust companies shall become the depositary or depositaries of the money of the county and remain such for three years or until the undertaking of its successor or successors is accepted by the commissioners."

Section 2737 of the General Code provides for interest on daily balances, as follows:

"All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month or at any time such account is closed, such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, * * * ."

I have cited and quoted the sections providing for county depositories at some length in order to show that the provisions thereof relate solely and alone to the money or funds of the county. Nevertheless, when the funds of village or rural school districts come into the hands of the county treasurer in accordance with section 4763, G. C., supra, who likewise has control of the county funds, it is my opinion that such county treasurer could deposit the balance of such school funds after distribution, in the county depository, the same as any other funds coming legally into his hands as such county treasurer.

In answer to your fifth question, section 4763, General Code, as amended in 104 O. L., page 159, provides as follows:

"In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

Section 4782 of the General Code, as amended, 104 O. L., page 159, provides as follows:

"When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts."

By the provisions of the above sections, it appears that in all rural or village school districts which do not provide depositories in accordance with sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts, and when a depository has been provided for the school money of the district, as provided by law, then the board of education by adopting a resolution to that effect, shall dispense with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to said school district and in that case the clerk of the board of education shall perform the services required by law of the treasurer of such school districts.

Section 4763 prior to its amendment, provided that in each city, village and township school district, the treasurer of the city, village and township funds, respectively, shall be the treasurer of the school funds. Where depositories had been established before the amendment of said sections 4763 and 4782, then the clerk of the board of education would continue as such treasurer without any interruption, because of the enactment or passage of said sections. However, if no school depository had been established, then by virtue of the amendment of section 4763, in village or rural school districts, the county treasurer becomes the treasurer of the school funds and succeeds the village or township treasurer of such funds, as the case may be. It is still optional with a board of education as to whether or not it shall provide for a depository, and in such case, until a depository is provided for, then in such school district the city treasurer shall act as the treasurer of the school funds; and in village and rural school districts the county treasurer shall act as the treasurer of the school funds of such district. The act amending sections 4763 and 4782 was passed February 6, 1914, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 19, 1914, and became effective ninety days after being so filed in the office of the secretary of state. Therefore, in all village and rural school districts which had not theretofore provided for a depository, the county treasurer became the treasurer of the school funds when said act became effective and would continue to act as such treasurer until such time as depositories are established for the school moneys of the respective village and rural school districts of the state.

In answer to your question, it is my opinion that village and township treasurers continued to act as treasurers of the school funds of their respective village and township school districts until they were superseded by county treasurers as hereinbefore pointed out, and they would continue to draw whatever salary they were entitled to until so superseded by the county treasurers. This applies, however, only to districts which had not previously provided a depository. Such county treasurers continue to act as the treasurers of the respective village and rural school district funds until such time as a depository is established for such funds, as herebefore stated.

The foregoing answers your sixth question, which, therefore, need not be specifically answered.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL, ONLY, HAS POWER TO FIX SALARY OF CLERK OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES.

The municipal council, and not the sinking fund trustees, has the power to fix the salary of the clerk of the sinking fund trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. JONATHAN TAYLOR, City Solicitor, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 15, 1914, in which you inquire whether the sinking fund commissioners were within their rights in fixing the salary of the clerk of the commission, which seems to have been criticised by the board of accounting, sometime back.

General authority to fix the number of employes of a municipality and their salaries, is found in section 4214, which reads as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

Section 4509 reads:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund, immediately after their appointment and qualification, shall elect one of their number as president and another as vice-president, who in the absence or disability of the president, shall perform his duties and exercise his powers, and such secretary, clerks or employes as council may provide by an ordinance which shall fix their duties, bonds and compensation. Where no clerks or secretary is authorized, the auditor of the city or clerk of the village shall act as secretary of the board."

I think that the plain reading of these two sections answers your question to the effect that the council, and not the commission, fixes the salary of the clerk.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT OF THE CHAMPION REGISTER COMPANY COVERING FINANCIAL LOSS SUSTAINED BY FIRE AMOUNTS TO INSURANCE.

The contract made by the Champion Register Company (submitted) since it undertakes to compensate the purchaser of a "Champion Complete Accountant" for financial loss sustained by fire, amounts to insurance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. PRICE RUSSELL, Superintendent of Insurance, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 31, 1914, you submitted to me the following contract with a request for my opinion as to whether or not it amounted to insurance under the provisions of section 665 of the General Code:

"$500.00 THE $500.00

"CHAMPION REGISTER COMPANY

"Authorized Capital Stock $500,000.00

"Incorporated under laws of Ohio

"(Cut of Buildings)

"HOME OFFICE

"CLEVELAND, OHIO.

"THE CHAMPION REGISTER COMPANY hereby guarantees that the CHAMPION COMPLETE ACCOUNTANT, a style _____, serial number _____, this day sold to _____ City _____ (hereinafter called the purchaser) is FIRE-PROOF; that is to say, that while in good repair and securely closed and locked, it will protect the purchaser's account slips therein contained from destruction by fire; and

"THE CHAMPION REGISTER COMPANY is by these presents bound unto the said Purchaser in the sum of FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS to indemnify the Purchaser against any direct financial loss that he may sustain through the failure of said accountant during the period of ten years from this date to protect his account slips as above guaranteed.

"This guaranty and bond shall be operative only while this accountant is located in Purchaser's store or office in the place where it is customarily used; and no recovery shall be had hereon in excess of the sum of five hundred dollars; and no recovery shall be had for damages to the accountant itself.

"The Purchaser, by the acceptance of this guaranty and bond, agrees to give the Champion Register Company written notice of any claim arising under this instrument within three days after the fire from which said claim arises, and within thirty days after any such fire to furnish the company detailed proof of the amount and nature of such claim.

"The Purchaser further agrees that as soon as possible after any such fire the accountant shall be allowed to cool and shall immediately thereafter be carefully opened in the presence of two disinterested witnesses, one of whom shall be a justice of the peace or judge of a court of record, and both of them shall make a sworn statement in writing to the company stating that the accountant was so opened and described the condition of the accountant and its contents. The Purchaser further agrees to make every reasonable effort, both before, during and after any such fire to prevent and reduce the damage to the account slips and the loss arising therefrom.

"Full compliance by the Purchaser with the above agreement and with the terms and conditions of the contract of sale of said register by the company to the Purchaser (being contract number _____) are conditions precedent to any recovery upon this instrument; and it is especially understood that in case any payment for said accountant stipulated in said contract shall become twenty days in arrear, then this instrument shall become null and void.

"In WITNESS WHEREOF, The Champion Register Company has caused its signature and seal to be hereto affixed by its President and Secretary thereunto duly authorized, at Cleveland, Ohio, this _____ day of _____, 19_____.

"_____President.

"Gold corporate seal.

"_____Secretary."

Section 663 of the General Code is as follows:

"No company, corporation or association, whether organized in this state or elsewhere, shall engage either directly or indirectly in this state in the business of insurance, or enter into any contract substantially amounting to insurance, or in any manner aid therein, or engage in the business of guaranteeing against liability, loss or damage, unless it is expressly authorized by the laws of this state, and the laws regulating it and applicable thereto, have been complied with."

"Insurance is a contract whereby one, for a consideration, undertakes to compensate another if he shall suffer loss."

May on Insurance, section 1.

In the contract submitted by you to me the register company undertakes to compensate the purchaser of an accountant for any direct financial loss that he may sustain through the failure of said accountant to protect the purchaser's account slips therein contained from destruction by fire; the consideration for this contract is the purchase of an accountant from some register company.

It seems to me, therefore, that this contract has all the necessary elements of a contract of insurance and substantially amounts to insurance and, therefore, would not be authorized unless the company issuing such a contract of indemnity is licensed under and complies with the laws of Ohio relative to fire insurance.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

CITY OF YOUNGSTOWN MAY NOT BORROW MONEY TO REIMBURSE HOSPITALS FOR CARING FOR SICK POOR.

The city of Youngstown, Ohio, may not borrow money to reimburse certain hospitals for losses incurred by them in caring for the sick poor of the city, under a certain contract, the effect of which is considered.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. GEORGE J. CAREW, City Solicitor, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 28th and its enclosures, and your subsequent letter of January 2, 1915, all referring to and presenting the following question:

"The council of the city of Youngstown for a number of years last past has had an arrangement with certain private charitable hospitals in the city for the care and treatment of indigent persons for and on behalf of the city. The arrangements have taken the form of proposals made to the city by the hospitals which have been accepted by ordinance.

"Prior to the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law, so called, the proposal of the hospitals was that the work in question would be undertaken by them in consideration of the receipt by them of the proceeds of a levy of 5/10 of a mill to be made by the council.

"After the Smith law went into effect and tax rates were rendered for the time being somewhat uncertain, the hospitals then in existence proposed to the city that they would do the work and accept in full compensation therefor 'our proportionate part of the money appropriated by council for this purpose in the following proportion and manner to wit: That each hospital receive such proportion of the money so appropriated by council for this purpose as the number of hospital days' treatment by each hospital shall bear to the total number of days of hospital treatment rendered by all * * *.'

"The proposal containing this offer also set forth the following stipulation on behalf of the hospitals:

"'We will keep an accurate account and report showing the names of persons admitted, time when such persons were discharged, the character of the disease or injury, the number of days treated, and such other reasonable information as you may desire to have, and will furnish to you abstracts of such accounts and reports * * *.'

"This last proposal being accepted by ordinance, the council has been levying and appropriating from year to year substantially the same amount as had been formerly levied and appropriated under the previous ordinance, viz., the substantial equivalent of a levy of five-tenths of a mill on the duplicate as it existed prior to 1911. The increase in the duplicate has been such as that such an amount would be the equivalent of a levy of very much less than five-tenths of a mill on the duplicates for the years since 1911.

"The amounts received by and apportioned among the several hospitals since 1911 have been very materially less than the actual cost to the hospitals of caring for the sick poor of the city. It is the desire of the city council to enter into a new arrangement with the hospitals which shall not only adequately compensate them for caring for the city's hospital cases in the future but shall also in a measure make up the loss of the hospitals during the last few years.

"It is suggested that the implications arising from the several ordinances of the past and the course of mutual dealing thereunder are such as to create a legal obligation on the part of the city to reimburse the hospitals for the difference between the amount actually received by them since 1911 and the actual cost of caring for the city's hospital cases.

"Is there such a legal obligation as will justify the borrowing of money under section 3916 of the General Code for the purpose of paying such an amount to the various hospitals in the proper proportions?".

In support of the idea that a legal obligation does exist, you state in your several letters that the understanding always has been that the hospitals should receive the fruits of a half mill levy. This understanding, however, was not only not expressed in the ordinance of 1911 above quoted, but the terms of that ordinance were such as to effectively negative any such understanding, and I am of the opinion that the hospitals under that ordinance were not, as a matter of right, entitled to the proceeds of a half mill levy as a consideration for the services to be performed by them.

Waiving this point, you suggest that the stipulation in the agreement of 1911 to the effect that the hospitals should furnish certain reports, etc., show an intention on the part of city and the hospitals that the city should be acquainted with the actual cost to the hospitals of performing the services in question and should appropriate an amount of money sufficient to reimburse the hospitals for such actual cost. I do not find that any such inference arises from the terms of the agreement in question. The stipulation is to the effect that certain reports and accounts are to be kept and furnished showing the names of persons admitted, the time when they were discharged, the character of the disease or injury and the number of days treated. None of these facts would disclose the cost of caring for the cases, and the necessity for furnishing such facts is easily referable to the provision above quoted which cares for the matter of apportionment of the total amount to be appropriated by council among the various hospitals, which is to be on the basis of the "number of days' treatment by each hospital."

To be sure there is a provision to the effect that in addition to the information just mentioned "such other reasonable information" as the council may desire to have shall be furnished. But there is no intimation whatever that such other information shall relate to the cost of the services, and the very fact that the furnishing of such information is made contingent upon the wishes of council is of itself sufficient to establish the conclusion that council was not to be bound to appropriate such a sum of money as should equal the cost to the hospital of rendering the services agreed to be furnished.

On the contrary the purport and intent of the ordinance in question is that the hospitals shall furnish the services in question in consideration of the receipt by them of the proportionate share of such gross amount of money as council may see fit to appropriate.

For all these reasons, and others which I have not mentioned, I am of the opinion that the city of Youngstown does not rest under a legal obligation to pay to the hospitals in question an amount representing the difference between the moneys received by them during the past few years and the actual cost to them of rendering services to the city. It therefore follows that money may not be borrowed to discharge such supposed obligation under sections 3916 et seq., General Code, it being clear from these sections, which I need not quote, that a legal obligation is necessary in order to support the exercise of the borrowing power.

I herewith return the papers submitted to me. Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS SHOULD BE PAID OUT OF SINKING FUND—ATTORNEYS' FEES.

Judgments against municipal corporations should be paid out of sinking funds. Attorneys' fees should be paid out of general funds.

If not enough funds in general fund to pay attorneys' fees, money may be borrowed in anticipation of tax collection to pay same.

Money to pay the judgment may be borrowed either under section 4520, General Code, or under sections 3916 et seq., General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. GEORGE W. SHEETZ, Village Solicitor, New Washington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 31st you requested my opinion on the following questions:

> "1. Out of what corporation fund or funds should a judgment, costs and attorney's fees be paid?
> "2. The judgment, costs and attorney's fees will amount to about $500 and when the appropriation was made in July no provision was made for the payment of this and there is not money enough in the general fund nor in the contingent fund for the satisfaction of this claim. Section 3799, G. C., provides as to the transfer of funds and that only funds brought into the treasury by taxation can be transferred and then only when the object of the fund has been accomplished or abandoned. As I understand it the moneys in the general fund came to us from the liquor tax and not by taxation, and cannot be transferred. Is this right? Could a village borrow this money and give its note until the next appropriation is made in January, 1915? If so, upon what authority?"

You have further informed me that the judgment you have in mind was in the case of Akers vs. Village of New Washington, and that the plaintiff's petition alleged that she was injured by falling upon a board walk in the village and recovered judgment for $150, also that Finley & Gallinger, attorneys, were employed by council by resolution to defend the village before you had been employed as village council and that you were afterwards associated with Finley & Gallinger in the trial and hearing of the case and that the attorney's fees mentioned are the attorney's fees contracted for by the village counsel and that the amount thereof is approximately $158.

Answering your first inquiry would say that the method of payment of judgments against municipalities is found in code sections 4506, 4513 and 4517, which read as follows:

> "Sec. 4506. (Tax for creating a sinking fund.) Municipal corporations having outstanding bonds or funded debts shall, through their councils, and in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, levy and collect annually a tax upon all the real and personal property in the corporation sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts and for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases, and the taxes so raised shall be used for no other purpose whatever.

"Section 4513. (Report of trustees to council; duty of council.) On or before the first Monday in May of each year, the trustees of the sinking fund shall certify to council the rate of tax necessary to provide a sinking fund for the future payment of bonds issued by the corporation for the payment of final judgments, except in condemnation of property cases, for the payment of interest on bonded indebtedness, and the rents due on perpetual leaseholds of the corporation not payable from a special fund, and the expenses incident to the management of the sinking fund. The council shall place the several amounts so certified in the tax ordinance before and in preference to any other item and for the full amount certified. Such taxes shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law. (96 v. 55, Sec. 108.)

"Sec. 4517. (Payment of obligations.) The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession. (97 vs. 517, Sec. 110; 96 vs. 55, Sec. 110.)

It will be seen from the foregoing sections that the judgment and costs should be paid out of the sinking fund except in condemnation cases and your statement shows that the judgment you inquire about is not one of such cases.

The attorney's fees mentioned come within the general expense of the village for legal counsel and while there is no specific statutory provision providing out of what fund legal counsel for a village should be paid yet a contemplation of the nature of the various funds will show that the legal counsel for the village should be paid out of the general fund.

The answer to the first question disposes of your inquiry as to the payment of the judgment and costs out of the general and contingent funds. Specifically answering your inquiry as to whether money received from liquor tax can be transferred would call your attention to Code section 5669, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 5669. Any surplus in the treasury of a city, village, county or township, arising from taxation upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt or other intoxicating liquor which is not needed for the purposes named in the statutes providing for the distribution of such taxes, may be transferred to any other fund, including the school fund, by an order of the proper authorities entered upon their minutes. (R. S., Sec. 2834d.)

It will be seen from the quoted section that transfer can be made.

Answering your inquiry as to whether the village can borrow the money in anticipation of collection of taxes would say that clearly the village could borrow money to pay the attorney's fees under the authority of Code Sec. 3913, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 3913. (Anticipation of general revenue fund; limitation.) In anticipation of the general revenue fund in any fiscal year, such corporation may borrow money and issue certificates of indebtedness therefor, signed as municipal bonds are signed, but no loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances. The sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity. The certificates shall not run for a longer period than six months, nor bear a greater rate of interest than six per cent., and shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest. (96 vs. 51, Sec. 95.)

If the sinking fund is not sufficient to provide for the payment of the judgment in the case two methods of raising money to pay the same are open. In the first place the sinking fund trustees have the authority under section 4520, General Code, to refund, renew or extend the bonded debt of the municipality at a lower rate of interest, if this can be secured. In this way moneys held in the sinking fund to retire bonds falling due might be released for use in paying the judgment.

I assume, however, that this method of relief is not available for the reason that at the present time it is impossible to secure rates of interest lower than those which have been current. Therefore, the municipality would, in all likelihood, be relegated to the alternative remedy which is found in the authority of council under section 3916, General Code, to borrow money for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity. Notes or bonds may be issued under this section and the succeeding sections and when sold the proceeds should be applied to the sinking fund and through it to the extinguishment of the judgment debt.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

RIGHT OF VILLAGE TO ISSUE BONDS TO PAY FOR CONSTRUCTING POLE LINE.

Under the express power given to municipalities to purchase electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or its inhabitants by the provisions of section 3809, General Code, as amended 103 O. L., 526, such municipality, as an incident to the express power thus granted, has implied power to do all things that may be reasonably necessary in order to obtain the desired current.

By express statutory power municipal corporations have the right to establish and maintain poles and wires outside of the municipality for the purpose of transmitting electricity and have the power to do so for the purpose of transmitting purchased current; such power, however, must be reasonably exercised.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1915.

HON. WARREN THOMAS, Village Solicitor of Cortland, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of April 23, 1914, in which you ask my opinion on a question which may be concretely expressed as follows:

"Has the village of Cortland the right to issue bonds to pay for constructing a line of poles and wires to Warren, Ohio, a distance of eight or nine miles, for the purpose of purchasing electric current from a public service company in Warren, Ohio, to be used in lighting the streets of said village?"

The question presented by you is one of considerable difficulty. Pertinent to its consideration, section 3809, General Code, as amended April 28, 1913 (103 O. L., 526), provides as follows:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, land, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation * * * or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment * * * of any person, firm, company or municipality, or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years."

I am inclined to the opinion that the power of a municipality to purchase electric current is as broad as is its power to lease the electric light plant and equipment of any person, firm, company or municipality, and that the authority of the municipality to purchase such current for the purposes designated in the statute is clearly not limited to purchases from persons or concerns producing such commodity in the municipality. The exercise by a municipality of its right to purchase electric current from a person, firm or company producing the same at some point distant from the municipality results, of course, in the necessity of erecting or constructing poles, wires or conduits for the purpose of carrying the electricity from the plant to the municipality purchasing the same. The question, then, is, May such a municipality in the purchase of electric current pursuant to the authority given it in section 3809, construct the necessary poles and wires needed for the purpose of conveying the current? There is nothing in the provisions of section 3809, before noted, which expresses any legislative intention with respect to this question.

In reference to this question, I note that section 3995, General Code, provides, among other things, that for the purpose of erecting and maintaining poles whereon to attach wires to carry and transmit electricity, a municipal corporation may enter upon private land and appropriate so much thereof as may be necessary for erecting such poles and wires, while section 3996 provides that a municipal corporation, by agreement with the county commissioners, township trustees and the council of municipal corporations, may erect such poles and wires for the purpose of transmitting electricity along public roads and streets.

The clear implication from these provisions is that a municipal corporation may condemn, or by agreement with other public authorities, otherwise secure a right of way for a line of poles and wires for transmitting electricity outside of its corporate limits. Section 3995, General Code, is so phrased that it is at least not clear that the power to secure a right of way for a line of poles and wires is dependent upon the existence of a municipal light plant outside of the corporate limits. In fact the contrary inference is more readily afforded by its language. It being clear that the general rule, that a municipal corporation may not exercise its powers outside of its own boundaries, is at least relaxed to some extent by the express provisions of law just referred to, it is pertinent to inquire as to the extent to which the rule is done away with. Surely if a municipality has the power to appropriate land for the purpose of erecting poles and wires and transmitting electricity, it must have, by inference, the power to construct such a line of poles and wires for the purpose of transmitting electricity outside of the corporate limits. So also if the power to appropriate for this purpose is dependent upon the existence of a municipally owned plant outside of the corporate limits, the power to construct a line of poles and wires cannot be held to be so dependent, if the construction of poles and wires as an activity of the municipal corporation can be justified in pursuance of any other municipal purpose than the operation of a municipal electric light plant.

Now, it is clear from section 3809, General Code, above quoted, that municipal corporations have the power to purchase electric current for certain purposes. If the municipality may purchase electric current as such, then it must necessarily follow that the corporation may provide itself with means of transmitting that current, which can only be transmitted by means of wires and conduits.

The situation, then, is this, the corporation has the incidental power to erect poles and wires for the purpose of transmitting electricity purchased by it, and to be furnished for light, heat or power to the municipality. The municipality has also the power to appropriate a right of way for a line of poles and wires outside of the corporate limits. There is no limitation, implied or otherwise, upon the power to purchase electricity with respect to the place at which delivery shall be made. Under all these facts, then, the power to construct poles and wires outside of the corporate limits, for the purpose of receiving electric current purchased outside of a municipality seems clearly to follow.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that power to go outside of a municipality in order to purchase current and construct a line of poles and wires for such purpose exists. That being the case, bonds may be issued under sections 3939 et seq., General Code, to secure funds with which to make the improvement. The fact that the village in question proposes to purchase the current at a point nine miles from its corporate limits and to construct a line of poles and wires of that length is not material as affecting the mere question of naked power. A power of this sort may not, as against the objection of taxpayers or other persons in interest, be arbitrarily or unreasonably exercised. Schneider vs. Menasha, 118 Wis., 298.

So that in the case which you present, other facts not apparent from your letter might exist, which would render the proposed action so unreasonable as that it might be restrained by action of a court of competent jurisdiction. Upon this question I do not pass for lack of sufficient facts. But as to the question of power I am satisfied that the conclusion as I have expressed it is the correct one.

This conclusion is, however, based upon the assumption that a contract has been, or prior to the issuance of bonds, will be made, for the purchase of the current in question.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

APPLICATION OF SECTION 1008, GENERAL CODE, REGULATING HOURS OF LABOR FOR WOMEN.

Section 1008, General Code, regulating the hours of labor for women, does not apply to persons doing office work for factories, workships, millinery and dressmaking establishments, restaurants and mercantile establishments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1915.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 31, 1914, you submit the following inquiry:

> "Will you kindly advise this commission whether or not section 1008 of the General Code regulating the hours of labor of women, applies to persons doing office work in connection with the class of establishments enumerated therein?"

The pertinent language of section 1008, as amended 103 O. L., 556, reads thus:

> "Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than ten hours in any one day, or more than fifty-four hours in any one week * * *."

In view of the fact that this language expressly enumerates telephone or telegraph offices, one would infer that there was no intention on the part of the general assembly to include offices of any other character, although the words "in connection with" would ordinarily be broad enough to comprehend any character of work which had connection with a factory or workshop and other establishments in said section.

It will be noted, however, that the quoted language is not used with reference to the business of the employer as a whole, but rather to a particular establishment, and I do not believe that the ordinary office work done for the owner of such establishment can be said to have been in connection with the factory under the language of this statute. It more particularly deals with the business of the manufacturer or owner of the establishment, and really has more direct connection with that part of the manufacturer's operations which deal with matters not directly pertaining to the factory, etc. It seems to me that it is the object of the statute to cover those who were engaged as operatives or in a similar capacity, rather than to those who were doing merely clerical work.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the statute should not be applied to those who are doing office work for the establishments named in said section, with the exception, of course, of telephone or telegraph offices.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

LOT OWNER CAN ONLY BE ASSESSED FOR ACTUAL FOOT FRONTAGE ABUTTING ON IMPROVEMENT.

A lot owner can only be assessed for actual foot frontage abutting on such improvement and no assessment can be levied for a portion of the improvement abutting upon land leased from the state either against the state or the lessee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1915.

HON. G. T. THOMAS, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 21, 1914, as follows:

> "H. B. Carver is the owner of lot No. 157, in this city. His lot abuts on Oxford street and the engineer claims that it is 93 feet, and therefore liable for assessment on the street for that distance.
> "Mr. Carver insists that he is assessed for a portion if not all the land owned by the state which he holds under lease from the state executed to him July 9, 1909. Map attached gives further details.
> "Is Mr. Carver liable for assessments for improvements as the lessee?"

It appears from the facts presented, that the lot owned by Mr. Carver is wider a distance back from the improvement than where it abuts thereon. The claim is made by the owner that he should only be assessed for the actual frontage, while on the other hand it is claimed that he should be assessed to a point on the improvement where a line at right angles thereto and extending away from it, would intersect his property, which would increase this assessment and charge him with the cost of the improvement where it actually abuts on property owned by the state, at least to the lot owner.

In reply to your letter, it is my opinion that Mr. Carver can only be assessed for his acutal foot frontage on the improvement and that no assessment can be levied for that portion of the improvement abutting upon the land leased from the state, either against the state or against Mr. Carver, the lessee.

Very truly yours,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

TUITION OF PUPILS ATTENDING DISTRICT SCHOOL—APPORTIONMENT OF DISTANCE.

Where a pupil lives less than one and one-half miles from the school house of the district wherein such pupil lives, there is no liability on the part of the board of education of such district to pay the tuition of pupils attending school in another adjoining district, in the absence of any agreement to pay such tuition in accordance with section 7734, General Code. In the absence of any contract for the payment of tuition, the father of such child may be held for a reasonable amount in payment of such tuition.

The distance between the home of the pupil and the school house of the district wherein such pupil resides, should be determined by the nearest route from such home to such school house as determined by section 7735, G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1915.

HON. T. B. JARVIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 10, 1914, you submitted a request for an opinion thereon, as follows:

> "Since I was elected prosecuting attorney at the recent election, I have been asked some questions which will have to be answered very soon in my administration, and since you are authority recognized everywhere, I want to ask your opinion concerning section 7735 of the General Code.
> "This condition arises in one of our school districts. The pupil is attending a village school in a grade below high school from an adjoining district, and said pupil resides less than one and one-half miles from her district school house, no agreement having been made either by the school board of her district, nor with her parent with the school board where she is now attending for the payment of tuition. Can the father of the child be held for tuition up until the present time, if no demand has been made upon him or contract had with him for the payment of said tuition?
> "The distance measured from the residence of the child to the school house of the district in which she lives is in this manner: From the house to the public road down a lane to the east of the house striking the public road at that point makes it 1⅝ miles, while following the same lane which continues to run west from the house and then to the north, the lane open at both ends, and striking the public road at this place, makes it 1⅜ miles to the school house in the district in which she lives, and according to the 58 O. S., page 390, I would like to have your opinion according to which route—from which end of the lane the child should approach the public highway—the one going farthest way around or the one nearest the school house in measuring the distance.

"For thirty years heretofore the scholars have used the nearest lane, which is equally open and susceptible to travel as the other part of the lane which is the farthest from the school house. The lane in question from one end to the other goes through the farm owned by the landlord where the tenant resides and the only way to the public road is either going east from the house or west from the house. Going east is the farther distance and west is the nearest distance.

"Can the parent say by going east he is, therefore, more than one and one-half miles from the school house, or should he be expected under the law to go the nearest route to the school house with equal facility? I should like an early reply, if you please."

Section 7735 of the General Code, provides as follows:

"When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils without an agreement to that effect. But a board of education shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education of the district where the pupils reside. Nothing herein shall require the consent of the board of education of the district where the pupils reside to such attendance."

When a pupil lives more than one and one-half miles from the public school in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or, if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the residence district must pay the tuition of such pupils, provided the other provisions of the section are complied with as to notice, etc.

In the first question you state that the pupil lives less than one and one-half miles from the district school house, therefore there is clearly no liability on the part of the board of education of the residence district to pay such tuition under the circumstances you state, there also being an absence of any provision on the part of such residence board of education to pay such tuition by contract, in accordance with section 7734, which provides in effect that the board of any district may contract with the board of another district for the admission of pupils into any school in such other district, on terms agreed to by such boards. Since no liability for such tuition attaches to the board of education of a residence district of a pupil, the question arises as to whether or not the father of the child can be held for the tuition up until the present time, even though no demand has been made upon him or contract had with him for the payment of such tuition. There is no statutory provision requiring a demand to be made upon a parent for the payment of the tuition of such parent's child, when attending a school other than the one in which such child resides, nor is there any provision by statute, requiring that a contract should be made for the payment of such tuition. I am of the opinion that in the absence of any contract, therefore, that the father of such child can be held for the tuition thereof, up to the present time, so long as the amount of such tuition is reasonable.

In answer to your second question, the court in the case of Board of Education vs. Board of Education, 58 O. S., 390, in construing said section 7735 of the General Code, formerly section 4022a, Revised Statutes, says:

> "The legislation provides for the convenience of children in attending school, and the distance is to be taken as they travel along the most direct public highway from the school house to the nearest portion of the curtilage of their residence."

Applying this decision of the court to the circumstances set forth in your second question, I am of the opinion, therefore, in answer to the same, that such parent should be expected under the law, to send his children to such school by the nearest route to the school house.

Yours very truly,
TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,
Attorney General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—JURISDICTION OVER PUBLIC UTILITIES.

The director of public service of a city has the same power as to a municipal public utility as it has in regard to public utilities privately owned and operated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1915.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 18, 1914, in which you inquire:

> "Has the director of public service in cities the authority to require that all services be metered and that the cost of the meters be paid by the consumer?
> "If the consumer refuses to pay for meter, and the director installs same, may he, by order on his journal, and under the authority of Hutchins vs. City of Cleveland (9 C. C. N. S., 229), make an additional charge against said consumer for maintenance of meter, or for meter service?"

To my mind, the case you cite answers your question in the affirmative. The second paragraph of the syllabus in that case, reads:

> "The power to assess and collect water rents in cities is vested in the directors of public service, and the manner in which they exercise this power is not subject to the control of the city council."

This case found in 10 C. C. (n. s.) 226 was affirmed without opinion in 79 O. S., 478. It cannot be thought that utilities owned by a city are subject to any different rules or more greatly restricted in powers than are those privately owned, and whatever may be done as to them in order to secure payment for service, may be done by a public service utility owned by a city.

This, I think, answers your question as to charging for the maintenance and repair of the meter and for meter services, without going into a discussion of the power of the director of public service. I do not believe that the directors of public service in cities are required to meter all services furnished, but it is naturally the easiest and best method of coming to a settlement with the consumers.

Yours very truly,

TIMOTHY S. HOGAN,

Attorney General.
